Mr. STEVENS: I will not dispute that, but I will say that more than 65 per cent of the stock is owned in Canada. Further, I find that there are about 14,000 shareholders in this company, which is a fairly wide distribution of stock. Even more interesting is the fact that over 10,000 of the shareholders are employees of the company. It is true that they do not hold a very large proportion of the stock, but the aggregate is about $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. That is an interesting fact which I think should be taken into consideration by this house.

Who are the people who will be benefited by this issue of stock? It is true that certain large shareholders will benefit; that cannot be disputed, but after when individuals or groups of individuals have given of their best to build up this company and this service and have taken their risks when times were not so good as they are to-day, surely there is nothing sinful or invidious in giving such people a fair chance for a return on their investment. But that is not all; there are over 10,000 employees, and of that number 8,000 are women who, under the distribution of the stock, are subscribers for and owners of stock in the company. These are the people who will benefit by this issue of stock at par.

I merely state these facts in order that we may have before us a picture other than that which has been already drawn. Here is another point. This company can only carry on extensions in two ways, one from the depreciation reserve and the other from new capital. The company must have new capital to make these extensions, and I understand from the evidence produced that the company has in contemplation a very large program of extensions. Surely, in the face of decisions of the railway board and after an examination by a committee of this house, it is not the business of parliament simply because this is a monopoly and a large company to throw obstacles in the way which will prevent the company from carrying on reasonable extensions.

Then there is another point with regard to the railroading of this legislation. I say at once that I do not agree with the method of moving that a bill be reported from the committee of the whole house; frankly I do not agree with it. The only time that power should be exercised is when it has become clearly evident that a certain small group, whoever they may be, are determined unreasonably to block the fair consideration of legislation.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): A statement to that effect was published in the newspapers.

Mr. STEVENS: Surely the hon. member will not suggest that I am trying to block the passage of the bill; I am trying to facilitate it. I simply say that I am not in accord with that method. I was not here the other night; had I been present I would have voted against the proposal, because these facts should be borne in mind. This bill was introduced on February 15 and had its first reading on that day. That was a long time ago, and the bill was reported to the house from the committee on March 29. It has been on the order paper for weeks and weeks. This is my point: the house and the private bills committee exercise a dual function in regard to private legislation, first, judicial, and second, legislative—or the other way about, whichever way you like to put it. I submit that any private legislation has a right to be considered and to be passed through this house, and not to be blocked or obstructed.

Mr. DUNNING: To be dealt with one way or the other.

Mr. STEVENS: To be determined. There is also the question of the consideration of these bills when they return to the house from the private bills committee, or in this case the railway committee. When this bill went before the railway committee, although I was not present I have been informed that it had a normal and fair consideration; there was no attempt to railroad it through that committee, and nobody charges that. There is an old practice of parliament which was most scrupulously observed by the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, by Sir Robert Borden, and by the other leaders of my day, namely, that where private legislation had been referred to a select committee of the house, and was reported by such committee, the house accepted that report as a decision of one of its committees to which had been delegated the consideration of that particular matter. That has been the practice of parliament for many years. It does not mean that all discussion is precluded in regard to the bill, but it does mean that normally parliament is supposed to accept the findings of its own committees appointed for the purpose. It is obvious that other members of the house who are not on these committees cannot hear in the house the evidence and the discussion which the members of the committee heard. The members of the committee are appointed, and it is their duty to determine these matters.

This bill, then, has been before parliament since February 15th. It has been considered by the railway committee. The activities of the company have been considered by the railway board. All of this being before parliament, the bill should receive at least fair consideration. I do not say that hon. members should vote for it—they can vote as they like; that is their privilege. But I do submit that the bill ought to have the opportunity of being determined by the house itself.

I am not going to detain the house further than to say that as far as I am concerned I have given this matter a great deal of thought. It is my intention to support the bill as reasonable legislation, believing firmly that every precaution has been taken by the measures that I have mentioned to safeguard the public interests.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): May I suggest to my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Stevens) that for the most part the points he has raised are points that are not before us at all, points about which there is no controversy. My hon. friend asked whether we were to accept the decision of the railway board only when it happened to please us. No one, so far as my hearing goes, has ventured to dispute the railway board's determination as to rate. The dispute was carried through the proper channels to the governor in council, but the decision was not upset. There is no objection in this house to that decision, however much those of us who have to be consumers of the company's products in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec may object to the price that is being charged.

My hon. friend took occasion to dispute the statement that has been made that this was a stock with a guaranteed 8 per cent dividend, and that that devidend was not a high return to the shareholders, particularly when the risks taken by those who first ventured on the enterprise are considered. Mr. Speaker, this question has nothing to do with the matter under discussion. This company was incorporated and entered into business about 1880. It paid 8 per cent the first or second year of its existence, and has been paying 8 per cent every year since. It is not guaranteed in the sense that there is a sealed and delivered guarantee, but the railway board has clearly intimated that it will allow the earnings of the company to be regulated to permit the continuation of that dividend. We passed through a very severe period of depression during the war years, and the company still continued to pay 8 per cent, although it was before the railway board on three different occasions regarding its rates. There is at this moment no question before the house whether the rates are reasonable. I could detain the house for some time on the question of the reasonableness of the rates.

Just a word regarding the distribution of new stock. There is certainly a wide distribution of stock. It was admitted by the Bell Telephone Company, when it was before the railway board, that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company is the body with control of the Bell company. There are other large shareholders, and I have no doubt a great many employees have been allowed to participate in the purchase of stock, probably on the instalment plan. They are most likely very small shareholders with a share or two apiece, and any dividend which comes to them in the way of an opportunity to subscribe to new stock at par is insignificant. In any case, significant or not, it has nothing to do with the merits of the proposal. It is only put into the discussion in order to draw sympathy for the company's proposition.

Regarding extensions, the money for this purpose comes from two sources. I agree that it comes from the capital of the company. That capital is raised either by an issue of stock or by an issue of bonds. The company also has what is known as a depreciation withdrawal, amounting I think to about five or six per cent of its total gross income. This percentage is turned back into the company, not to be retained in cash, but for use in connection with depreciation and repairs. The practice of this company is not to put that money aside, but to put it back into its plant. I have forgotten how many millions of dollars this five or six per cent of the gross income of the company amounts to, but it is used for financing extensions.

The company has been spending at a very great rate during the last few years on the installation of what is called the automatic system of telephones. It has been necessary to scrap many buildings and much equipment, and the depreciation piled up has probably not been equal to the amount of capital destroyed.

I do not expect, Mr. Speaker, the attention of the members on the other side, but I would appreciate not having all this distraction in the chamber, because it makes it quite difficult to talk.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is the hon. member referring to me?

Mr. GEARY: I just want to carry on, if I may. The conversation is a little disturbing.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I did not think I was disturbing the hon. gentleman.

Mr. GEARY: It is quite all right; I knew my hon. friend did not.

The expenditure of capital has been very serious during the last few years, but the company has maintained this expenditure by dint of certain stock issues, by dint of money got from depreciation, and by dint of certain issues of bonds on the market. The company has, as my hon. friend just stated, some $13,000,000 in unissued stock in its treasury, which will be taken up very readily. But more than that they can issue the same value of bonds as there is stock outstanding. If they issued this $13,000,000 of stock it would make $75,000,000 worth of stock. There are bonds outstanding to the amount of $40,000,000; therefore on a fifty-fifty basis they may issue $35,000,000 of bonds—that is, assuming their capitalization is made up of 50 per cent bonds and 50 per cent stock. This is much more than enough, with the depreciation money that comes in every year, to carry on their estimated extensions for, I should say, five years, three or four years even on the company's own statement. Therefore there is no immediate necessity for any authority to issue new stock. Under all the circumstances it is an extravagant thing for the company to ask that its capital stock be increased from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000. It is an extravagant claim, and I think the house might fairly examine it with caution before allowing it.

The company is in a peculiar position in that it is one of a ring of four companies. The parent company of course is that gigantic holding interest known as the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. It controls the Bell Telephone Company, holding some 32 or 33 per cent of its stock. It owns outright the Western Electric Company of Chicago. The Bell Telephone Company and the Western Electric Company in turn have acquired and own all the capital stock of the Northern Electric Company, of which the house has heard. The Western Electric Company make all the apparatus for the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and the Northern Electric Company make all the apparatus for the Bell Telephone Company. It is idle to say that there is any competition. There is no competition. The Minister of Railways very properly cited a case where certain telephone equipment was bought in the English market.

Mr. DUNNING: Very much of it too.

Mr. GEARY: In the city of Winnipeg one or two exchanges are supplied by the Northern Electric Company and one or two by the English concern, but my recollection, subject to correction—and I think I am quite accurate—is that by an arrangement made by the different manufacturers, the English manufacturer cannot come into the market in Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. DUNNING: That I do not know. I do not know how you are going to prevent it.

Mr. GEARY: They have done it by arrangement. There were some lawsuits over patents that were settled in that way. Let us, however, leave that aside. The Bell telephone apparatus is absolutely standardized. The English company cannot make it; it is not allowed to make it, because the Northern Electric Company and the Western Electric Company own the use of the patents on the Bell telephone apparatus and nobody can make it outside of them. Therefore the Bell Telephone Company, whether it wishes to do so or not, is restricted to purchasing from its own creature, the Northern Electric Company, all its apparatus.

I am not going to enter into a discussion of prices; that will come when another bill is under discussion. But I say that no satisfactory proof has been given of the correctness of the prices charged by the Northern Electric Company to the Bell Telephone Company. The most that I can find in the judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners is that the prices are not unreasonable. I do not know how they found that out, because the railway board, under a certain clause in the act which, they said, forbade them to go into the affairs of the Northern Electric, refused to inquire into the affairs of that company, and no one knows what is the proper price of the articles which are supplied by the Northern Electric Company to the Bell Telephone Company. This is rather lengthy and involved. All I want to say and really the only reason I have for referring to that phase of the situation at the moment is this. There is under public bills and orders a bill to which the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has referred. That bill provides the one thing that the Board of Railway Commissioners found wanting, namely, the power for them to investigate this subsidiary company, the Northern Electric Company, in order to find out whether for the $12,000,000 of money being spent by the Bell Telephone Company over the counter of the Northern Electric Company, the former is getting full value, and whether, if it is not getting full value, it has the value tucked away in the Northern Electric Company, which value should be taken into account by the Board of Railway Commissioners as an asset or as a potential income, which in turn should relieve the consumers of the heavy charges which they are called upon to pay.

Under all these circumstances, and in view of the fact that municipality after municipality, I understand, in Quebec and, I know, in Ontario, have protested and have fought and are not satisfied in regard to the matter,

I submit to the house and particularly to members from other provinces than Ontario and Quebec that it is only fair that we should first deal with this matter by getting the powers of the railway board so extended that it can investigate the affairs, not of a hotel or a steamship company but of a company that subsists only by reason of its connection with and ownership by the Bell Telephone Company, a company that was started by the Bell Telephone Company, that was brought along by the Bell Telephone Company, that had its business given to it by the Bell Telephone Company, that prospered because of its relationship to the Bell Telephone Company, and that is, in conjunction with the Western Electric Company, owned by the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): If the bill which stands in the name of the hon. gentleman is adopted by the house, will it apply in case the capital of the company is increased?

Mr. GEARY: Certainly, if we get it passed. I think it is quite likely that the Board of Railway Commissioners will find, after the investigation which may be authorized by that bill, that there is no need of such capital expenditure as we are now considering and that they will not be called upon to authorize any increase. That really is the ground upon which I think the matter should be considered at the moment. No possible harm can be done by leaving it over if necessary for a year and certainly no harm can be done by leaving it over for a few weeks.

Perhaps at the risk of repetition—of which I am not fond myself and to which I know my hon. friends are not anxious to listen—I might go over once more this feature of the issue of stock that is going to be such a real deterrent to the affairs of the company. The overhead for fixed charges and dividends at present is $7,000,000, and for every $100 you allow to be issued by the company in stock, $8 comes from the consumer. For every $100 that the company gets on a bond, from $4.50 to $5 is borne by the consumer. Is it not therefore essential that those who are consumers and those of us who represent them should consider the matter very carefully? On only two occasions that I know of has the company failed to have any issue of stock taken up by its shareholders, and on those two occasions the company went into the market. On the first occasion the stock was down around par and they got in the market an average of $102.50; that is, for every $100, $2.50 more went into the company's coffers to build up its plant than would have gone had the shareholders taken up the stock. On the other occasion they sold the stock at $125, so that on that occasion $25 more was realized to the coffers of the company than would have been realized had the shareholders taken up the stock. While the stock may be borne down, while the market price may suffer if a large block is thrown on the market, it suffers inappreciably if we consider a recent issue of stock where the rights that accrued to shareholders—that is, the right to subscribe for one new share at $100 for every four shares held—have been sold on the market at a premium. Those rights to-day would easily bring $10 per right. That is an extra dividend to the shareholder of 10 per cent which comes out of the consumer in the year in which the stock issue is made. That has been the practice with many companies, but this is a public utility company which has received great advantages from the parliament of Canada. It is allowed to go here and there at its own will and pleasure, planting its poles and stringing its wires without paying one cent for its right of way. Therefore, not only because of its peculiar situation in that regard, but because of the intimate nature of its dealings with the people and the necessity of the people patronizing it, we are entitled to handle, not too roughly, not too tenderly, that creature of our own so that it may do business in a fair way, and I think the consumer who is obliged to consume its products should be treated as fairly as the company is treated. That, I think, is all anyone can ask, and I would submit that at this moment the fair way to treat this bill is to postpone this discussion.

I do not want to talk any longer. I do not want to run the risk of anyone suggesting that I am talking this bill out. I am doing nothing of the sort; I do not agree with that method; but I think this bill might well stand until the other bill comes up and is disposed of. No harm can possibly come by postponing this discussion, because the company has all the capital it will require, by any stretch of the imagination, for the next few years, and when the time approaches when more money is required and the issue of capital stock is an absolute necessity, then may be the time when we can deal fairly with the matter. I venture this statement, not as an authority on finance, but by every rule that I have heard, that it is good business to arrange your capital on the basis of 50 per cent bonds and 50 per cent capital stock. If 50 per cent is bonds and 50 per cent capital stock, you are doing the fair thing. The people presented to the railway board the proposition, that bonds should be 60 per cent and stock 40 per cent, but leaving it at bonds 50 per cent and capital stock 50 per cent—and the company has not come to that point, for many years at least—the company can then with very great advantage to the consumers raise all the money that is required at 5 per cent, instead of coming here and getting permission to go out and give bonuses to its shareholders and pay 8 per cent on every $100 they raise by issue of capital stock.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): This bill, innocent as it looks, is very far-reaching in its possible effects. It simply asks permission to allow the Bell Telephone Company to increase its capital stock from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000; in other words, to double its stock. I think it is the duty of parliament at this time to inquire carefully into every feature connected with this application before it is granted. This is, in fact, an application by a great American company which, like a vast great octopus, is reaching out to secure a monopoly of the telephone and telegraph business over the whole North American continent. Not only does it seek to control the rates of service to the people, but it has also a monopoly of all the supplies which are used by the parent company. This is being accomplished by the great American Telephone and Telegraph Company of New York, which is practically the chief owner of the Bell Telephone Company. Subsidiaries have been established for this purpose, and it is highly important, I think, that the people should know the full import and purpose of this application.

There is a bill before the House of Commons to compel an investigation into all subsidiary companies controlled or owned by the telephone or telegraph companies, subsidiaries such as the Northern Electric, which are manufacturing for and supplying the parent company. When a private company owns a public utility, it is surely right that the people should have all the data concerning the working of that company, and know whether it owns certain subsidiaries in which it can hide its vast profits, and thus furnish it with an excuse to ask for an increase of rates to bleed the public. It is certainly not in the interests of the people that the stock of any company should be indiscriminately increased. This allows the company concerned to hide its real profits.

In an article that appeared recently in the Toronto Globe, written by one Mr. R. A. Reid, who very vigorously opposed the application of the Bell Telephone Company before the board of railway commissioners for an increase in its rates, and who is also opposing its application for an increase in capital, there is the complaint that with the sanction of the Dominion government and by order of the Board of Railway Commissioners the telephone rates of the Bell Telephone Company were increased to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, putting an additional burden of $2,600,000 a year, through this public utility, on the people who use it. This was done ostensibly through the Bell Telephone Company, but really for the sake of the great American Telephone and Telegraph Company of New York. I think it is time that the people of Canada knew that the Bell Telephone Company is simply a name under which the American Telephone and Telegraph Company of New York is reaching out to exploit the people all over the North American continent. It adopts this method in order to avoid any feeling of prejudice against the parent concern as a foreign company.

This bill, in my opinion, seeks to make the greatest amount of plucking with the least squawking possible. In the matter of the application to raise its rates last year, there was no legal or logical reason, according to Mr. Reid, who has been writing in the Toronto Globe, for granting the increase. It was granted without any specific or definite evidence being presented by the company in the most important issues raised at the hearing before the Board of Railway Commissioners. To me it looked like a typical case where a company holds a charter to own and operate a public utility for the sake of gain. The wonder to me is that the people after all these years will still put up with it. Surely the evil of having a public utility such as the telephone in the hands of private companies is well illustrated in the application contained in this bill.

Another thing which we may well marvel at is that men in this house who at the last election pledged themselves on public platforms before their electors to look after the interests of the people particularly, now seem willing to barter the people's rights to powerful combines and interests in control of these public utilities. The first commercial telephone used in Canada was established in 1877 in the city of Hamilton, and it is rather strange that after all this time, fifty-one years, the ownership and control of a public utility of this kind should be in private hands. One would have thought that public opinion would have expressed itself so strongly before this that it would have been impossible for a bill of this kind to come before parliament. Of course, parliament since that time seems to have existed very largely to find means of fleecing the people in the interests of some private concern or other.

In the west we have for a long time been dealing with this question of public ownership. Really public ownership has been forced on us in the three prairie provinces simply by the failure of private ownership. Looking back over the years since I came to Canada, it does seem to me that not one public utility in private hands has ever been a success; either the people have been fleeced to meet undue profits, or else through incompetency there has been failure. This has been true in western Canada ever since the Canadian Pacific Railway gave to grain companies who would construct elevators on their sidings a monopoly of their cars to handle the farmers' grain. Through that procedure we have suffered all kinds of abuses, and farming in all the western country has been made a most precarious calling down through the years. The people had no way of redress; in weights, grades, dockage and prices they were simply robbed of their earnings. Indeed we can look at other great public utilities too, such as the railways, private ownership of which has landed us in the financial perplexity which we as a nation are not clear of yet. When we talk to-day of the tremendous cost to the country of the Canadian National Railways as a public utility, it should be borne in mind that it was due to their failure under private ownership.

Now, seeing that the telephone business is a public utility, since it can be so readily established by the people themselves, it is a wonder that a bill of this kind is before parliament. I know it will be said that a great sacrifice was made for the sake of western Canada in respect of many public utilities which we now enjoy, particularly the railways; but the west never landed this country in the tremendous amount of debt which we have had to meet on these great public utilities as did eastern Canada. As an example, take the old Grand Trunk Railway Company, which has cost Canada untold loss, which was not all a direct financial loss either, great as that was, but indirectly a loss of national prestige, something that we are now endeavouring to buy back.

But the Canadian National Railway redemption is not all that our railway service has cost the Dominion. If everything be reckoned, the Canadian Pacific Railway has cost the people perhaps more than the Canadian National Railway ever did. This was due to the tremendous mistake away back in the eighties of letting that great public utility fall into private hands. We must count the cost of some twenty-six million acres of the best of our land, to say nothing of railway lines completed and handed over, to which must be added twenty years' taxes on that land, and the tremendous inconvenience to settlers in establishing those essentials of civilization, good roads and schools, on which they had to pay the taxes themselves.

Now, it seems strange that men can be found who will favour these exploiting concerns and grant charters to companies who own public utilities for private gain. When we count the cash paid out for the redemption of what is now the Canadian National Railway system, it is a very little thing indeed compared with the cost of these things. I apologize for even mentioning the railway question, but I do so to show the debacle we are landing ourselves in through private ownership of other public utilities. In Saskatchewan we have had government ownership of our telephones practically from the start, and I would advise the people of Ontario and Quebec to lose no time in securing control of this great public utility, which has become a necessity in our complicated civilization as compared with the days of not very long ago. In that western province, with its much more scattered population than eastern Canada and no big cities, we have a telephone service at a cost that is surprisingly low when it is remembered that we have to go much further to find a subscriber than would be the case in rural Ontario. The installation of a rural telephone line is spread over a number of years, and the debentures are redeemed by a tax rate which is hardly felt. At the present time we pay about $28 for a city telephone. I find that in the city of Ottawa the people are paying $39.60 for a desk phone. Our telephone lines cover practically the whole province. Only in the newer settlements are the people without this utility. I do not think anyone in western Canada to-day would think of going back to private ownership in relation to the telephone service.

If parliament passes this bill it will be another means of robbing the worker of his earnings and concentrating the country's wealth and giving a power obtained by money control, and it will make a still further dividing line between the worker and the government. From the Globe of March 29 last I clipped the following from a letter written by R. A. Reid:

> It was shown and conclusively proved at the recent Bell Telephone rate case hearings that this concern has continuously over a period of years issued its stock at par value of $100 to its shareholders, when that same stock was selling on the market at prices ranging from $125 up to $150 per share.

Will anyone say in the face of this that this bill should be passed? It is rather strange to me, since this statement has been published in a paper like the Toronto Globe, that the people are not even now organizing to promote public or government ownership. If what I have read is true—and I have never seen it refuted—it means that when this stock is selling on the market at $150 per share and is issued to the shareholders at $100, as it usually is, every issue of $10,000,000 worth of stock represents a bonus or a present of $5,000,000 to the shareholders. The result is that every user of telephones on their lines, be he rich or poor, must continue in his sweated labour to pay for it. This is a practice which should not under any circumstances be allowed. The telephone business here, connected as it is with the American Telegraph and Telephone Company of New York, is virtually a monopoly, and to me it is rather a sad fact that a Liberal government of Canada should further a monopoly which has in view the fleecing of the entire public. The company has been able to do as it pleases so far as rates are concerned. In the United States it does over 72 per cent of the telephone business and dominates all the others. The same journal says, further, that it has worked the "holding company" device to an extent unrivalled in any other industry. This holding company device is a legal scheme for confusing the public and investigators and for getting something for nothing.

I trust that even yet the people of this country, and this parliament will see better than to support a proposal of this nature and to pass a bill like this, which is nothing more than an attempt to give power to a great monopoly to fleece the public of its earnings.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) asks that this bill be not read the third time but be referred back to the committee of the whole to be amended by adding section 3 to provide that no issue of capital stock of the Bell Telephone Company Limited shall be made except it is offered to the public for subscription. I may say in connection with this amendment that the whole subject was before the Board of Railway Commissioners and considerable objection was taken to the methods pursued by this particular company. The stock has been quoted at 170 and the company has made handouts to a few favourites within the charmed circle—so much so that in the opinion of many the company is not altogether complying with the law. Let me point out in the first place that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company owns 98 per cent of the stock of the Western Electric. This will give you an idea of the way these various companies are interlocked. In the second place the Western Electric Company owns 48 per cent of the Northern Electric. The third point I wish the house to grasp is that the Bell Telephone Company owns 52 per cent of the Northern Electric. And in the fourth place the American Telephone and Telegraph Company controls them all. In other words, all these these concerns constitute a combine in restraint of trade. That is all they are. They are interlocked and are a part of this gigantic trust—the American trust to which I have referred. We seem to be very fortunate in this country in our trusts; we make it possible for them to flourish in Canada, so that they may exploit the people in connection with telephones, telephone apparatus, pulpwood, power and so on. Canada is the happy hunting ground for speculators from the other side. They come here and by means of agreements drawn up by clever lawyers they get around our financial statutes. The result is that many of these companies are an affliction worse than the family compact.

Let me give a little bit of the history of this corporation to show the way they have been jockeying with the law. Its record justifies the very wide amendment proposed by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). We had a parallel case in the history of the gas company of Toronto, in connection with which an appeal was made to the legislature to prevent the adoption of just such a principle as is laid down in this bill. It would be interesting to know what regulations the Board of Railway Commissioners have over the issue of stock by this company. I fail to see any regulations regarding the sale of this $75,000,000, or any regulations providing for subscription to this stock. Dear knows to what extent the American Telephone and Telegraph Company are interested in this $75,000,000. In view of all that, and in view of the existence of this trust which flourishes in Canada like a green bay tree, I think we should know something of the history of the various issues of stock of this company. The company was incorporated in 1880. They came back to parliament in 1882 asking for authority to issue more stock, and in 1884 they came back again. They seem to have come back every five or six years, after changes of government, looking for amendments to their charter and for authority to issue additional stock. However, I have yet to find that the stock was sold by public subscription, as is proposed in the amendment before the house. In 1892 they again came to parliament and received authority to issue more stock; in 1894 they renewed their application, and returned again after a change of government in 1896. In 1902 they had a new act passed conferring various powers on them. Four years later they returned again and were given power to increase their stock issue, but nothing was said as to how the stock should be issued. Then in 1920 they had another act passed by this parliament giving them power to deal with their stock again. Now they are back again asking leave to increase their capitalization from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000, but they give no intimation of what they propose to do with the stock or why it is necessary to issue these additional shares, although they say they wish to undertake extensions. Is this new stock issue to go to the present shareholders, or is it to be divided up all along the line? When you pay for hydro electric power you simply pay the cost price; in Ontario the rate per kilowatt hour is only 1½ cents as compared with 3½ to 4 cents in Buffalo and Montreal. This company is under the control of the railway commission, who have failed in their duty by not making some regulations to cover the disposal of this stock.

Mr. CANNON: I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman may say whatever he wishes so long as he observes the rules of the house, but under the rules he cannot criticize the Board of Railway Commissioners as he has been doing.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Board of Railway Commissioners is a court of record, and therefore may not be attacked except by way of impeachment. This has been decided twice by this house within my knowledge.

Mr. CHURCH: In order to show that public subscription should be allowed I think it only fair that I should refer to the history of past issues of stock by this company, to show how the stock was sold then. I notice some hon. gentlemen are smiling; this is not going to be a laughing matter to the poor people of Ontario and Quebec who will have to pay an additional charge for the use of their telephones. Some of these gentlemen who are now smiling would do better to stand up and support this amendment in order to prevent the stock being parcelled out among the favourites and insiders of the company.

Now I would like to refer to the way in which previous stock issues have been disposed of. On December 31, 1925, the authorized capital of this company amounted to $75,000,000; of that amount $50,000,000 had been issued. In December, 1899, stock was sold privately to a few favourites at $100 per share while the market price was $193, and the very same thing will be done with this next issue of stock if this amendment is not adopted. In 1900 the company sold $50,000 worth of stock at a net premium of $35,105, and in May of 1902, $1,000,000 in stock was sold to the inside people for $125 per share, although the market price was $176. From these figures the house will see how the people of this country have been held up. Where do the consumers and the general public come in when this sort of thing goes on?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SITTING OF SATURDAY, MAY 19—MEETING AT TWO O'CLOCK

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Before the house adjourns, may I say it has been suggested to me that in regard to the sitting of the house on Saturday next it would meet the convenience of members to a greater extent if instead of meeting at three o'clock in the afternoon and sitting in the evening the house were to sit from two o'clock until six. I have spoken to the leaders of the different parties and to different members of the house and I gather that this would suit the convenience of members better than sitting late Saturday evening. If the house will give its consent I should like to move:

That on Saturday the 19th instant the house shall meet at two o'clock in the afternoon.

That is with the understanding that we will adjourn at six o'clock, and applies to this coming Saturday only.

Mr. SPEAKER: This must have the unanimous consent of the house.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Mr. L. P. BANCROFT (Selkirk) moved that the following bills from the senate be now read a first and second time and referred to the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Bill No. 315, for the relief of Irene Matilda Ballinger.

Bill No. 316, for the relief of John Hare.

Bill No. 317, for the relief of Helena Martyniuk.

Bill No. 318, for the relief of Francis Marmaduke Steele.

Bill No. 319, for the relief of Rose Tlustie.

Bill No. 320, for the relief of Robert Anderson Traill.

Motion agreed to on division.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned (until Friday, May 18) without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 18, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

JUDGES' SALARIES

FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Winnipeg South Centre) presented the second and final report of the special committee appointed to consider the question of the adequacy of the remuneration paid to the judges of the various courts in Canada, as follows:

The special committee appointed to consider the question of the adequacy of the remuneration paid to the judges of the various courts in Canada beg leave to present the following as their second and final report:

Your committee, composed of fifteen members, were appointed on April 15, 1928, in accordance with a resolution passed in the house on March 20, 1928, and were empowered to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath, and to report from time to time, and were further empowered on April 19, 1928, to print their minutes of proceedings and any evidence taken by them, and to sit while the house is in session.

Your committee met for organization on April 19, 1928, and since then have held seven sessions and heard twenty witnesses. Representations were also made to your committee by letters and telegrams from numerous persons who did not appear before them. Your committee also had before them reports of committees of the county courts judges and of the Canadian Bar Association, resolutions from various organizations and information from the Department of Justice and the Bureau of Statistics.

Your committee gave careful consideration to the question referred to them and find that the remuneration paid to the judges in the various courts in Canada as hereinafter mentioned is inadequate and ought to be increased.

Your committee, therefore, recommend:

1. That the salaries of the judges of the district and county courts of the various provinces of Canada be increased by $2,000 per annum each.

2. That the salaries of the judges of the superior courts of the various provinces of Canada, and of the Exchequer Court of Canada be increased by $2,000 per annum each.

3. That the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada be increased by $3,000 per annum each.

A printed copy of the committee's minutes of proceedings and evidence is herewith submitted for the information of the house.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. T. THORSON,
Chairman.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce bill No. 321, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister explain this bill?

Mr. ROBB: This legislation is necessary because of the omission of some words in the revised statutes. The object of the bill is to extend the six months' limit to three years for the reason that it is physically impossible, within the six months, to determine whether or not there has been fraud in the filing.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NEW EDINBURGH MILLS PROPERTY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): The other day I asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) to lay on the table of the house the papers in connection with the proposed purchase of the New Edinburgh mills property. I wanted the order in council and the other papers. I do not think they have yet been tabled. I would ask the minister to add to that return, if he will, the further papers in connection with a proposal, made some three years ago, I believe, for the purchase of this property for the air board. I should like to have these papers, together with certain reports on the valuations that were put on the property at that time. The object in asking for these papers was that they might be brought down before the estimates came up.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): I shall be very glad to lay on the table the papers asked for by my hon. friend. I think some of them have been prepared.

Mr. STEVENS: There are these additional ones which I should like to have.

DECEPTIVE MINING LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): There is a matter to which I wish to direct the attention of the government. It may possibly be slightly out of order, but seeing that the discussion of it is in the interest of the people generally and does not constitute any criticism of the government, I do not think any objection will be taken to my bringing it up at this stage. There have been passing through the mails in the past two or three years various tipster sheets on mining stocks and things of that sort. The other day I was handed a copy of one publication which entered the country freely last year—the Financialistic Debater published in Boston, the editor being one E. T. Morton. This sheet specializes in what are called "mystery stocks," and it is purely a fake, a crooked effort to steal the money of the people of Canada, and also of the people of the United States, for that matter. Of course the people of the United States can look after themselves; but I think some effort should be made by the government, through the Post Office Department, to prevent a sheet of this kind from going through the mails. Last year this same paper, published, I believe, by the same man, came through the mails in large numbers, describing the prospects of so-called "mystery stocks" and holding out the most extravagant promises, most, if not all, of which were proved later by Toronto Saturday Night and other papers to be complete fakes and nothing but a method of wheedling money out of the people. I have no doubt they succeeded in securing a good deal of money from the people of this country, because as we all know many people are gullible when it comes to promises of sudden wealth. I do not know that this publication has ever been barred from the mails, but at that time it was shown to be crooked. The other day I was handed this particular copy I have in my hand, it having been sent to someone in Ottawa. I had intended taking the matter up on the estimates of the Post Office Department, but I thought we might as well dispose of it now so as to afford the government an earlier opportunity to try to deal with the situation. It is true that the publisher has cut down the size of the sheet; it now comes through the mails more in the form of a letter than of a circular. It may therefore be harder to get at. But on the envelope containing the copy which I hold in my hand, there is printed the name of the editor, "E. T. Morton, Unity building, Boston, Massachusetts". I know the government is just as anxious as I am to see to it that the people of Canada shall not be cheated out of their money. It is difficult enough for us to raise money here for the development of our own resources as well as, to a certain extent at least, for the purpose of appeasing the gambling instinct we all possess. There is hope for some return from various mining propositions in Canada, but there is no hope for any return of money sunk in the schemes advertised by the Financialistic Debater. I appeal to the government to put a stop to the carriage of such sheets through our mails.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): In reply to my hon. friend I would say that my attention was drawn to this publication or to a similar one a couple of weeks ago, and instructions were given to have the matter looked into in order to see what could be done. It is hard to detect these letters now that they are being sent in envelopes, but since my hon. friend has stated that the name appears on the envelope we may be able to do something. Would my hon. friend let me have that letter?

Mr. MANION: Yes, and I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that on this envelope at least, and I presume on most of the envelopes containing these letters, the name is on the outside, and I presume it will be there until these people see what action is taken by this government. As I have said, this concern have been shown by the Toronto Saturday Night and other financial papers to be fakers, and I think something should be done to put an end to their activities.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE

MULTILATERAL TREATY PROPOSED BY THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): A day or two ago the Prime Minister was asked a question with regard to the Kellogg peace proposal. I see that the House of Lords have declared themselves in favour of that proposal, but the British government have taken the ground that they cannot act until the dominions are heard from. I wonder if it would not be possible for Canada to express an opinion shortly with regard to this matter?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): From what my hon. friend has just said there would appear to be an erroneous impression with regard to the attitude of the British government, if it is thought that the British government cannot act until the governments of the dominions have been heard from. I understand that the government of Great Britain have expressed the view, and certainly it has been so expressed in the House of Lords, that they are prepared to become a party to the treaty.

As I understand the matter, the United States extended an invitation to the four great powers in the first instance to ascertain whether or not they would become parties to the treaty. The United States took this action before extending a similar invitation to other countries or to any of the British dominions. Now that the British government have expressed their intention of becoming a party to the treaty, I have not the least doubt that Canada also, along with the other dominions, will be asked to become a party to the treaty, and I have no doubt also that when we are asked it will be the wish of this country that we should become a party to it. At the moment, as far as any invitation is concerned, it is a matter which is receiving attention, and we may expect to be in a position to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Does the Prime Minister anticipate that the invitation will emanate from the government of the United States or from the government of Great Britain?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the invitation will come from the government of the United States, and I am sure it will be the wish of the government of Great Britain that all the dominions shall join with the British Government in accepting the invitation. This, I think, will be the result.

Mr. CAHAN. The invitation will come direct from the United States to Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, I so anticipate.

TOBACCO GROWING INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): I would ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) if it is his intention to have a number of copies of the report of the commission which investigated the tobacco growing industry printed and furnished free to the farmers of western Ontario.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): There is an order with the printing bureau now for 10,000 copies of this report, and we expect to be able to give every grower of tobacco one copy.

RAILWAY BELT AND PEACE RIVER LANDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): In view of the recent visit to Ottawa of Hon. T. D. Pattullo, Minister of Lands in British Columbia, I would ask whether the government carried on or completed negotiations relative to the return of the Dominion railway belt and Peace River block in British Columbia, in accordance with the report of the Martin commission.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): There were no negotiations carried on with Mr. Pattullo; we believe that after the session there will be a conference on this matter with members appointed by the provincial government of British Columbia.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health) moved the third reading of Bill No. 289, to amend the Pension Act.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): I do not propose to take up more than a few minutes of the time of the house in connection with one particular section of the bill now under consideration; I refer to section 5. This section was not passed upon and brought to this house by the committee considering this question, but was inserted by the government. Just in passing I would like to say that from what one can hear each individual member of that committee may take to himself the gratitude of a great many returned men, and of course I include in that committee the minister himself. The returned soldiers are grateful for the assiduous manner in which the committee carried out its duties and for the thorough way in which the problems of the returned soldiers were dealt with and solutions recommended to this house. That committee functioned particularly well under the very sympathetic chairmanship of my gallant and honourable friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power).

The section which was inserted by the government however is a retrograde step, I venture to say. I presented my reasons for this statement a short time ago and do not propose to take up the time of the house by repeating them. Section 5 of this bill repeals sections 4 to 8 inclusive of the present act, and substitutes three other sections therefor. Section 4, which it is proposed to repeal, is as follows:

> The commission shall be provided with suitable offices at the city of Ottawa for the commissioners and for the officers and employees of the commission, such branch offices elsewhere as may be required and all necessary furnishings, stationery and equipment for the conduct, maintenance, and performance of the duties of the commission.

Thus the pension commission not only had separate, independent quarters, but also had its own staff and functioned as an independent body. There is no provision in this proposed amendment for the accommodation of the commission and nothing is said which would indicate that it is to have its own staff. Instead of that, it will have to depend upon such assistance as may be given by a department of the government, the department headed by my friend the Minister of Pensions and National Health. Section 5, which it is proposed to repeal, is as follows:

> The commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purpose of the Civil Service Act.
>
> 2. The salaries and other remuneration of the officers, clerks and employees of the commission, and all the expenses of the commission incidental to the carrying out of this act, shall be paid out of moneys to be provided by parliament.

This section is to disappear entirely; the commission will no longer be a deputy head, and if one turns to the Civil Service Act it is easy to see how far-reaching this change really is. Under the Civil Service Act it is the deputy head who organizes the particular branch under him and provides in a general way for appointments, for remuneration, for duties and so on. It strikes me particularly with regard to this section that we are not maintaining the independence of the board of pension commissioners but rather that we are striking at that independence in causing the board to be attached for all purposes to a political department of the government. As I have indicated, this is a matter which has attracted the attention of the officials of various soldier organizations, and which is abhorrent to them. They see that this commission is likely to drift more and more into politics and further and further away from that independence which has been so important in the minds of those who have had to depend upon the board. Pensions should be kept out of politics and should be looked after by a body which is independent and subject to no dictation from or leading by a department of the government. I take it that under the existing act we are functioning in the right way with regard to pensions, but if we let pensions drift into politics in any way we are not carrying on in the proper manner. We do not know how far the removal of the status as deputy head of a department for the purpose of the Civil Service Act may go, but it will go a long way. If you run through the provisions of that act you will see how much its operation depends upon the fact that the spokesman for the department is treated as a deputy head. The Board of Railway Commissioners is a deputy head under the Civil Service Act. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the proper method to engage men to give the attention that should be given to pensions, and then place them under the management and jurisdiction of a department of the government.

The government had a report from Mr. G. W. Scott in October, 1927, and Mr. Scott was asked to make that report because there were certain unsatisfactory conditions with regard to the administration of pensions. Among other things, Mr. Scott recommended that the board of pension commissioners should be given such a staff of medical examiners, investigators and clerks as would enable them to function as an independent body for the purpose of collecting all necessary information and evidence relating to matters relevant to eligibility of ex-service men and their dependents for pensions, rendering decisions thereon, and calculating the pensions payable. I submit that this suggested amendment of the government goes entirely contrary to that very carefully considered opinion and recommendation of Mr. Scott. We are ignoring those recommendations and going in the opposite direction. It seems to me that the full investigation that Mr. Scott gave the matter is entitled to consideration. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Casselman, that in effect old section 5 be re-enacted, or left in the statute. My motion will read:

> That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to add thereto the following sections:
>
> "The commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purpose of the Civil Service Act."
>
> And
>
> "The salaries and other remuneration of the officers, clerks and employees of the commission, and all the expenses of the commission incidental to the carrying out of this act shall be paid out of moneys to be provided by parliament."

This would make it similar to the method in which the railway board gets its money. The railway board is a deputy head, and is independent. I say that the moneys of this commission should be paid by parliament and the commission should be in the position of a deputy head of a department.

One result of the proposed amendment that will be seen at once with relation to medical researches, history reporting, and consideration of questions affecting pensions, will be that these matters will be handled, not necessarily as they have been heretofore under the pension commissioners, but may be done by some official of the department. Under this section, the sole remaining duty of the pension commissioners may be simply adjudicating upon evidence which will be handed to them by a department of the government, which department is not likely to be any freer from political suggestion than any other department of the government.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Will the hon. member allow me to ask a question? Of what department would you make this commission a deputy head?

Mr. GEARY: That does not matter. The deputy head of a department is a person through whom the Civil Service Commission function or collaborate regarding appointments. The Board of Railway Commissioners is a deputy head of a department, but it is not a deputy head of the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. JAMES H. KING (Minister of Health): This section was discussed on two or three occasions when the bill was in committee. At that time I pointed out that we were only confirming the practice that has existed in the department since 1920. In that year, the government of the day, by order in council, brought the officials who had previously been under the control of the pension board into the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment.

Mr. GEARY: Not all of them.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): All but this small section in Ottawa. All the doctors, and outside investigators, except the small staff in Ottawa, were brought within the control of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. I stated the other day that I thought a mistake or an error in judgment had been made at that time, in that the medical service and the investigators carrying on investigations into pension matters should be under the control of the pension board. That is what we are doing in the department to-day.

Following the Scott report, an agreement was entered into with the pension commissioners whereby they would have their medical representatives, one or two or three, whatever they considered necessary, in each of the units. If at times it was found that they required extra assistance in any unit, they merely asked the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment for that assistance, and representatives were detailed from that department to do their work. Those representatives then reported directly to the commission on the matter which they had under consideration.

We do not propose to interfere with the stenographic and clerical staff, but we do think that it is advantageous, and it will be in the interests of economy, that that staff should be paid through our central auditing and accounting board. We are making large savings in reorganizing in this way, and there cannot be any reasonable ground for contending that there should be another staff, with all that goes with a comparatively large staff, to take care of pay and accounting in the same building and under the same conditions.

Personally, I do not see any reason why this section should be amended. The section is broad enough, and it covers the activities of the department in the case of the relationship that exists between the pension board and the department, and puts in the form of a statute conditions that have existed by regulations heretofore.

Mr. IRVINE: Would the amendment as moved by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) interfere with the operation of the act; that is, if this amendment were passed would it hamper in any way the carrying into effect of any important section of the bill before the house?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know that it would interfere, but it has been the practice, irrespective of what my hon. friend has said regarding the railway commission. When this matter was under consideration last week, I was surprised to learn that the railway commission did not act as a deputy head. They are under the Department of Railways, and they act as a judicial body, just as this body will act independently of the department in judicial matters which they have to consider.

The pension commissioners will be working under very much better conditions. The medical officers, upon whom they will depend for the knowledge obtained regarding pensioners, will be under their own control. They will be in a much more independent and better position than they have been heretofore. I see no reason why we should amend the section, as my hon. friend wished to do. At this time I compliment the chairman and the members of the special committee upon their diligence and the thoroughness of their work in amending the present act and I believe these amendments will result in better conditions in regard to those who are interested in pension matters.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): What is the objection to the section as it stands, that is particularly subsection 1 of section 5, which reads:

The commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purposes of the Civil Service Act.

Is it unworkable? Is it objectionable? If not, why was it cut out?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I cannot see any advantage in it. We have amalgamated two departments of government and we have now one deputy head. The pension commission is attached to that department. It has always been attached to one department and it must so be attached. The commissioners will make their requests to the deputy head and those requests will come to the minister in the ordinary way. I cannot see any advantage in lumbering up the bill by including that section. Sections 4 to 8 have been redrafted under the new section and anyone reading those sections carefully and reading the new section will find this a much better draftsmanship. The matter is more clearly expressed than in the wandering sections we had before.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I quite agree with the minister as to the redrafting of those sections. In the bill now before the house the matter is expressed more clearly and in much better language. In effect it puts in a better way what is really the law except as to the omission of subsections 1 and 2 of section 5. By the omission of those subsections the effect of the law is changed. Power is taken away from the pension commissioners. If it is desirable to lessen their powers, well and good, but it does not seem to me well to do so. The minister must have changed his mind somewhat on this subject since the 14th of this month. Then both the Minister of Health and the Minister of National Defence were quite of opinion that those subsections should be left in. If the minister will pardon me for quoting him I will quote from Hansard of May 14, at page 2970, where he is reported as saying:

Or we could insert the old section, which says:

"The commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purposes of the Civil Service Act."

Then follow some remarks by the leader of the opposition to which the minister assented. Following that the leader of the opposition said:

Under those circumstances, I think the minister's suggestion would meet the case.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

That is the suggestion of the minister himself that that subsection be left in and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) said:

We can reinsert the old section.

It was understood that would be done. Why has a change been made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It was understood in this way. A discussion was going on and I advised the committee that I would withhold the section and make further inquiries. It appeared to me while I was in my seat that we might reinsert that section, but after inquiry and consideration I advised the committee the next day that we did not think the new section should be amended and the old section reinserted. That is the way the matter stands. I have nothing more to say. The bill has had very careful consideration by the committee and I see no advantage in having the section amended as has been suggested.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): I think the minister's first thought was the correct one, namely, that the section ought to be re-inserted in this legislation. The minister when speaking a few minutes ago said that he thought the provisions of the new section placed the pension commissioners in a more independent and better position than they are in at present. I take an altogether different view of the matter. It seems to me that the new section is drafted for the purpose of putting the pension commission in a subordinate position to what they were in before. As far as my experience goes the pension commission has been one of the outstanding commissions that we have had of late years in the Dominion. Its work has been well done. The head of the commission is a man with a splendid war record who understands the needs and feelings of the returned soldiers fully as well as anybody can in this country. Now an effort is being made to rob that commission of a certain amount of their standing and position and to make them simply a branch of the Department of Soldiers' Re-establishment. That is my understanding of this section. The minister said that the pension commission has always been attached to that department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Since 1920.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It was attached to that department in 1920. That is correct, but its independent power still remains with the commission under the sections of the old act which the minister now proposes to strike out. Under subsection 5 of section 5 the head of the commission was given all the powers and duties of a deputy head of the department for the purposes of the Civil Service Act and any moneys provided for the purpose of carrying out the work of the commission are provided by parliament itself and not simply as a branch of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. The minister has commented with regard to the railway commission and the fact that they are attached to the Department of Railways and Canals. But the railway commission occupies a special place by itself and the railway commissioners have positions peculiar to their own office. There is in this country no other position, saving that of the Prime Minister himself, higher than that of the chairman of the railway commission. The commissioners have most onerous duties to perform; they are the people's court for many questions, and the chairman and members of the railway commission have a special place assigned to them in the social and public life of the Dominion.

This section that the minister proposes to strike out gives the head of the pension commission the rank of a deputy head. Parliament has given a similar rank to many positions outside of the actual deputy ministers themselves. Now the minister wishes to alter the position of the pension commission. He deliberately says so; by this section as I read it—and if I am wrong the minister will correct me—he undertakes to make the pension commission simply a branch of his department subject to instructions from himself and his deputy head as well. That is not, as I understand the matter, what is wanted by the people or the returned soldiers. The pension commission has been an independent, well-managed commission, absolutely apart from anything political. There is no department of government that can at all times be entirely independent of politics. The minister knows that himself; he is subject to all sorts of influences which he cannot always ignore from his friends and supporters. The pension commission has been doing its work faithfully and well.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Under the Pension Act and it will continue to do so.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Under the Pension Act and the pension commission has had an independent position which is being taken away from it by this legislation. He says:

> The commission shall from time to time make such reports to the minister as he may direct.

As he may direct. I submit that the pension commission knows better how to make its own reports than the minister himself can possibly know.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Read the old section.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It says:

> The commission shall furnish the minister with such reports, statements and information as he may at any time require.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Now which is the better section?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am going through the whole of the changes. I admit that some of the wording is a great deal better in the new sections, but the effect of this change is to take away from the pension board the independent position which it has occupied under the old act, and I do not think the minister can deny that. If that is his purpose, I submit that the first thought that he had the other day when this matter was under discussion was the correct one, and I think this amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary) covers the point admirably. There is no effort made to alter the wording of the proposed new sections whatever, and I agree with the hon. member for South Toronto that the position of the pension board should be maintained intact as it is now; that it should be practically an independent board to consider all these questions under the law without any political favour or influence being brought to bear on them, and attached to the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, but not under that department, as it is the minister's purpose to make it. As I read it, the deliberate intention of this section is to rob the pension board of its independent position and to make it subordinate to the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. They were always attached to the department, and they were under the minister in a sense, and I am sure they always took cognizance of the advice of the minister, but at the same time they were not subject to any political influence whatever, while the minister cannot escape being subject to it. He may at times be strong enough to resist that pressure, but at other times he will find himself unable to do so, and I submit to him that, without changing the wording of this section, he should agree to the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for South

Toronto, which simply restores one of the clauses of the present act, which says:

> The commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purpose of the Civil Service Act.

That preserves the position and independence of the commission. I do not think it is fair for the minister to undertake in this way to place the pension commission under his authority and that of his deputy minister, and to take away from them the independent position which they have always occupied under the act, in which position they have given such great and valuable service to the people of this country.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that I have not given much thought to the amendment which has just been proposed by my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary), nor can I see that his amendment would change very much what is in the act at present, but being proposed by the hon. gentleman, it must mean something, for I know him well enough to know that he would not waste his time and that of the house by making a suggestion which did not mean anything. I have been trying for the past few moments to understand just what the objection is to the section as brought down by the minister. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Sir George Perley) has made reference to the social position of a deputy head. If that is the only reason why we should keep the old section in, I think we are wasting the time of the house in discussing it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Not only his social but his official position.

Mr. POWER: What is the meaning of his official position?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The position he occupies as regards the other officers in the department.

Mr. POWER: I am free to confess that I do not understand what that means either. The position which he occupies as regards other officers in the department? I assume that he is the head of the pensions board, whether he be called a deputy head or not, and that as such he would have under his control the officers of the pension board. What other officers he would have to do with I do not know, but perhaps in the order of precedence at the opening of parliament and at state dinners he would pass in after the deputy minister, but I do not think that would seriously interfere with the efficiency of the administration of the Pensions Act, or that any of the sixty or seventy odd thousand pensioners would find that they had been seriously affected by any such calamity.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Give him a title.

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend from Melfort suggests that we might give him some other title in exchange for that of deputy head.

Coming to the other portion of the amendment with regard to salaries, and so forth, it reads—I am sorry I cannot read my hon. friend's writing, so I will take the section in the old act as printed. It reads:

> The salaries or other remuneration of the officers, clerks and employees of the commission, and all the expenses of the commission incidental to the carrying out of this act, shall be paid out of moneys to be provided by parliament.

The bill which we have before us says with reference to salaries:

> The salaries of its officers, clerks, and other employees shall be met out of the moneys provided by parliament for the purposes of the department.

With all the goodwill in the world I cannot see what difference it makes to the taxpayer whether the money is voted by parliament to the department or is voted by parliament to the board of pension commissioners. The power of appointment of officers is not changed. The power of selection of those who are to fill these positions remains the same as it was before. If my hon. friend would point out what change—

Mr. GEARY: Perhaps if the hon. gentleman would look at the provisions of the Civil Service Act, he would see exactly what being deputy head of a department means. It is scattered all through the act. It is through the deputy head—the Board of Railway Commissioners, for instance—that the Civil Service Act functions in regard to organization, appointments, salaries and that sort of thing.

Mr. POWER: I will come to that in a moment, but does it make any difference to whom these salaries are voted, whether they are voted to the department, and afterwards paid out by the department to the board, or voted direct to the board? It would seem to me that it is only the difference of who shall sign the cheques, the board of pension commissioners or the departmental accountant, and possibly at the present time the same man signs the cheques anyway.

Mr. GEARY: In the one case you have an independent commission with its own budget, so to speak, coming through. It is true that it comes through the estimates of the department, but in the other case the commission has nothing whatever to do with it; they are all officials of the department. That is the only difference.

Mr. POWER: If that is so, in one case these estimates come to the minister and are brought down to parliament under the heading: Department of Soldier's Civil Re-establishment, so many thousand dollars for the board of pension commissioners. In the other case—that which my hon. friend proposes—in the estimates we would have, still under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment; board of pension commissioners, so much—exactly the same amount. But will my hon. friend look at it from this point of view? He knows as well as I do that when an estimate is brought down from the board of pension comimssioners as such, if there has been no change the minister will simply say: This is an estimate of the board of pension commissioners: they are an independent body; I have nothing to do with them; you may just take the estimate or leave it, as you please, I have no control whatsoever over it. In many cases I have heard in this house and outside serious criticism of the board of pension commissioners, of its expenditure and its personnel. Up to the present the minister has been able to say: Why, I am not responsible for this; this is an absolutely independent commission. I am inclined to think that if the minister had gone a little further and taken this commission more under his control, perhaps parliament would have been better satisfied. I remember in the closing days of last session my hon. friends opposite were imploring the minister to do something with the board, to tell the commissioners that they must see to it that their hearts were softened, that they treated the pensioners more generously. One heard from a number of hon. gentlemen accusations against members of the board to the effect that they, being independent of parliament and of the members thereof, would not give proper consideration to cases submitted to them by hon. gentlemen. The general tone of the discussion was such as to lead one to believe that the government should assume greater control in order to be able to give instructions to the board of pension commissioners. Personally I have always opposed that view. I think the board should be an independent body. It was created by the will of parliament to be independent, so far as any body can be, of the control of politics or of the minister of the department. I think the policy then laid down was a good policy. But last session my hon. friends opposite did not seem to agree with that view. There were exhortations from them that so and so, members of the board, had not behaved as they should, that their power should be curtailed, that they should be told they must be more sympathetic in their treatment of pensioners and of applicants. I am somewhat surprised to-day to find the same hon. members asking that the social position of the board should be made higher, if not their powers enlarged.

With regard to the suggestion by my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary) that this has something to do with the Civil Service Act, I am not in a position to discuss in any way, shape or form the workings of that act. I have always been opposed to it as the most iniquitous legislation that was ever enacted, and have always regarded the Civil Service Commission as the stupidest body that has ever inflicted itself on the people of Canada—

An hon. MEMBER: Order.

Mr. POWER: —and I am not prepared to discuss how they might or might not act or who they should or should not consult. But if they do not carry out their duties better with reference to the board of pension commissioners than they do with respect to other departments, I shall be more and more confirmed in my opinion that they should have been abolished before they were created! Whether or not any advantage will be gained by the pensioner through this body consulting with Colonel Thompson or with Dr. Amyot with regard to appointments or promotions, I am unable to say; but it seems to me that if the Civil Service Commission do consult with reference to anybody in the employ of the board of pension commissioners, they would naturally consult the head of the board. The rating would be given by the senior officers of the board.

Mr. CAHAN: Does not the Civil Service Act provide otherwise with regard to consultation?

Mr. POWER: It might very well provide anything. At the time I quit studying the law, I thought it such an iniquity that I did not want to be led into occasions of sin. The language which I would use with reference to it would be somewhat too expressive.

Mr. CAHAN: Might I put my question in another form? In the opinion of the hon. gentleman, is not the commission more independent under the sections proposed to be repealed than it will be under the new enactment?

Mr. POWER: I really cannot see how the commission would be more independent under section 5 of the old act than it would be under the present legislation. This bill provides:

The commission shall be attached to the department—

Section 6 of chapter 157 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, provides:

The commission shall be attached to the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—

So far there is no change. Then this bill continues:

—and the expenses required to be incurred for the discharge of its duties, including the salaries of its officers, clerks, and other employees shall be met out of the moneys provided by parliament for the purposes of the department.

The former act provided:

—and all the expenses of the commission incidental to the carrying out of this act shall be paid out of moneys to be provided by parliament.

That is the situation as it existed, and I think it will remain the same after the passage of this bill as it was before. It is suggested to me by a person far more qualified to judge than I would be that the commission possibly will be more independent. I will leave it to the hon. gentleman who makes the suggestion to explain it to the house. I am free to admit that I cannot see it yet. I am willing to acknowledge that the change will not have any effect whatsoever, and for that reason I do not know why the change is included in the sugestions made by the minister.

Mr. CAHAN: Might I ask the hon. gentleman: Do not the proposed amendments make the commission subject to the deputy of the department, whereas in the other case under the statute as it stands the commission is subject to the minister? Under the amendments proposed is not the deputy of the department intervening to take control of the commission in a way which he cannot do now?

Mr. POWER: The board of pension commissioners is attached to the department in the same way now as before. If the commission is to be under control of the deputy minister now, without having at my disposal the statute creating the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment and defining the powers of the deputy minister, I should be under the impression that the same control would exist if the deputy minister had no control over the different branches of his department. I presume the same control would exist from the moment the commission was attached to the department as will exist under this present legislation.

Mr. CAHAN: I merely am trying to get my own mind clear. The old section 5 which it is proposed to repeal provides that the commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purpose of the Civil Service Act. Does not that section give a different status to the head of the commission, giving him the right of consultation and direction and control in respect of appointees, which he would not have if that control were placed under the deputy head of the department?

Mr. POWER: I am sorry, but I do not think that is the case. It may be, but I cannot see it that way. It seems to me that the powers of the chairman of the board of pension commissioners will be just as great after this act is passed as they were before. Really, I do not know why there was any change in the act unless it was to make it read better, perhaps, with reference to the social position of one or other of the heads. There was a certain amount of departmental jealously which existed and which perhaps will be wiped out now that the social standing of the respective officers has been established. I will admit that there has been perhaps a diminution in the social standing of the chairman of the board; that is as far as I am prepared to go.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I feel somewhat at a loss to follow the facetious remarks of the hon. member (Mr. Power) who has just taken his seat. It is evident that he looks upon the whole discussion as being somewhat irrelevant and humorous. However, he did commit himself to one statement which is worth the consideration of the house, and that is, to the effect that he did not know why this change should be made. But the minister in charge of the matter stated a little while ago that if the change were made nothing would be altered so far as the administration of the board of pension commissioners or of the department was concerned. In the face of both these statements alone there would seem to be very good reason for not making the change. But if we want a further reason than that I will go back again to the point raised with respect to the powers and rights of deputy ministers, and if the hon. gentleman had taken notice of the act so much despised he would have found, first of all, that all organization of the department, all difficulty with respect to personnel of the staff, everything affecting salary increases or decreases, classifications and revisions, are all dealt with directly by the deputy minister with the Civil Service Commission. In the Civil Service Act I find, under the classification of deputy or deputy minister, a provision to which I direct the attention of the house in view of the statement made by the minister that the railway commissioners were not and had not been regarded as deputy heads. That is what the minister stated. He nods his head; he acquiesces. Now I will quote from the Civil Service Act:

(c) "Deputy" or "deputy head" means and includes the deputy of the minister of the crown presiding over the department, the clerk of the Privy Council, the clerks of the Senate and House of Commons, the librarians of parliament, the comptroller of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Superintendent of Insurance, the Dominion Archivist, the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada and, in all cases in which such meaning is not inconsistent with his powers and duties, under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, the Auditor General.

Therefore, so far as the Civil Service Act is concerned, a railway commissioner has the right of a deputy head.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understood that they had not that power under the act, but they have.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister makes an honourable amende. And now that his attitude with respect to the matter is correct, let me ask him to reconsider the position taken by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) with respect to the suggested deletion of section 5 of the old act, which reads:

5. The commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purpose of the Civil Service Act.
2. The salaries or other remuneration of the officers, clerks and employees of the commission, and all the expenses of the commission incidental to the carrying out of this act, shall be paid out of moneys to be provided by parliament.

That classification is deleted and the board of pension commissioners are now deprived of their rank of deputy. They are deprived of direct access to the minister himself, unless by agreement or courtesy, and deprived of direct access to the Civil Service Commission unless, again, by act of courtesy. The whole thing must now be handed directly through the deputy head of the department and not because of any right vested in the board of pension commissioners itself. You have undoubtedly taken largely from the powers of the old board and rendered it completely subject to a department which is now under patronage, a department which does not come within the Civil Service Act.

To sum up the objections to the change. It may be said that the board of pension commissioners will now be definitely attached to the department itself; it will have lost its power of direct approach to the minister unless by courtesy; it will have lost its power of direct approach to the Civil Service Commission unless, again, by courtesy; the appropriations voted by parliament under the old act will now be transferred to the department, thereby transferring the staff of the board of pension commissioners, at present under the board's control, to the pay-roll of the department. Again, the board will have no staff of its own but will be entirely in the hands of the department as to what staff shall be loaned to the board of pension commissioners for the purposes of carrying out the duties of the board. The board's annual report, which heretofore was an independent document and was presented to parliament as such, will no longer be an independent document unless by agreement with the minister, but will be embodied in the annual report of the department, and will form a part of that department's report. But the principal objection I have to the whole change is, in the first place; that the direct contact of the board of pension commissioners itself, both with the minister and with the Civil Service Commission, is abolished; and in the second place the element of merit which did enter into the personnel of the board of pension commissioners is now eliminated, so that the personnel will be placed directly within and under a department which, according to my information, is not under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. I am opposed to the change, and unless the minister or someone else is in a position to correct the impressions I have formed in this matter, and which I have submitted to the house, I am afraid I shall have to suport the amendment that has been proposed.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Geary) negatived on division.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

INTERPROVINCIAL AND INTERNATIONAL TRAFFIC IN INTOXICATING LIQUORS

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 192, respecting interprovincial and international traffic in intoxicating liquors.

He said: I suppose it is in order to give an explanation, and I might tell the house that the only change made by the Senate is in the penalty clause. Under section 5 of the bill the penalty for the first offence was not less than $200 and not more than $1,000, and in default of payment imprisonment for a term of not less than three months and not more than six months. For each subsequent offence the penalty was imprisonment for a term of not less than six months and not more than twelve months. The Senate retained these penalties, but instead of applying them for the first offence and each subsequent offence they have made them apply to the second offence and each subsequent offence. They have also reduced the penalty for the first offence to a fine of not more than $200, and in default of payment imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months. The only change really is that the penalty is reduced for the first offence, and I am willing to accept the amendments.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public works—harbours and rivers, Prince Edward Island—West Point—wharf repairs, $4,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): When these items were being considered the other evening I was directing the attention of the minister to the condition which existed in Kings county, Prince Edward Island, in relation to these estimates, and I was pointing out that with the exception of the amounts recommended by the Duncan commission for warehouses for potato storage, last year $107,000 was voted for harbours and rivers in Prince Edward Island, of which sum only $1,000 was earmarked for Kings county, which does not seem a fair division considering the fact that there are many works in that county which require attention. For instance, at my home town of Cardigan there is a government wharf the central portion of which to the extent of 200 feet has dropped; no repairs have been made, and the structure is in an unsatisfactory state. This is a disgraceful monument to the present government. In other places there are needs equally great; Bay Fortune needs breakwater repairs; Naufrage harbour requires some expenditures to be made; Little Sands breakwater requires repairs, and there are various other places which might be named.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

This year we find almost the same condition with regard to these estimates; we find a total vote of $229,000, and after you deduct $140,000 for wharf improvements and warehouses at Charlottetown you have only $89,000 left for three counties, of which the county of Kings receives only about $13,000. I consider that to be an unfair division of the amounts voted. Then we have the condition which exists at Souris East; $36,500 was voted for the breakwater there in 1925, when the constituency was represented by a Liberal. In 1926, when the county ceased to support the Liberal government and sent a representative to Ottawa who was a member of the opposition, that item of $36,500 was deleted from the estimates and has not been replaced. The need there is very great; the breakwater is in serious danger of breaking away and needs strengthening. A contract was let in 1925, but because of the illness of the subcontractor it was not carried out. The other evening I asked the minister for an explanation with regard to this vote for Souris East, and he gave me a suppositious answer of his own which did not meet the case at all. Now I would like the minister to tell the house why this vote was taken from the estimates. Recently we had a discussion with regard to an item for the Mahone Bay post office; that was a somewhat similar case, with the exception that the member who was able to have the Mahone Bay item struck out was lucky enough to secure another seat in the house and was therefore able to explain why the vote was struck out, and to take the responsibility for advising the minister to remove the amount from the estimates. This candidate was not lucky enough to secure another seat, and he is not here to make any admissions of that kind. The minister knows the facts, and I ask for some reasonable explanation. I do not want to leave the impression that discrimination is practised against the county because of the fact that it failed to elect a supporter of the government, but it will take an explanation on the part of the minister to avoid carrying away that idea.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Macdonald) has referred to the vote that has been given to the other county, in looking over the estimates I think I have just as much reason to complain this year as he has. I find that we had a wharf that was started last year, but, on account of the lateness of the season, the contract was not completed and there is a revote of $8,000 there. But aside from that revote, there is only $13,500 in the total estimates for the county that I represent, so that Kings county has been just as leniently treated as Prince county.

The argument which he has advanced, that for years other counties received more, I do not think is well founded, because the repairs and the work carried on at Summerside last year were also the recommendations of the Duncan commission's report, the same as the work at Georgetown.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I did not include those votes at all.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is where you made a mistake.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): I think the hon. member, in speaking the other night, took the total vote for the other counties.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): No.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): If the recommendations of the royal commission should be eliminated from the total vote, as regards Kings county, then the same reasoning would apply to the other counties.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I eliminated them.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): That clears up that point. I do not think it is wise on the hon. member's part to stress the complaint that his county has not been fairly dealt with. In looking over the estimates this year I find that Kings county has been very generously dealt with by the government, and, in fact, I feel that perhaps we are being discriminated against in the total vote.

The harbour improvements that were put through last year for Summerside were greatly appreciated by the people there. I think it is only fair to the Minister of Public Works that I be permitted to read a letter from R. T. Holman Limited. They are a large firm there who handle the business of the port in connection with outward and inward freight. When a little vote is made for some improvements down in the maritime provinces, the cry is raised in different quarters of the Dominion that it has been made for political reasons. They say that it is just a gratuity that is being given to keep us in line, and suggestions of that kind are always brought forward from some section of the house. I think I should be permitted to read this letter to show how the people there appreciate the work that was done last year. This letter is dated May 2, 1928, and is addressed to myself. In part, it reads as follows:

> We thought possibly you might be interested in knowing just how the sheds and storages on railway wharf have turned out, now that we have had a trial with our first fertilizer steamer.
>
> Everyone appears to be delighted with the layout, and there is not the slightest doubt but that cargoes can be discharged at a very much lower rate than heretofore.
>
> I am confident that there is no place on the island that can now compete with us for economy in unloading. They have been running almost steadily at a cost of less than 50 cents per ton—of course, as they come near the end of the cargo it will be more expensive—but at present indications it leads us to suppose that the cost will not be over 60 cents per ton. When we were operating with the old pier it cost us well over 90 cents, so you will see that the expenditure that you were successful in getting for your county last year is actually money saved.
>
> We are very glad to say that, due to these facilities and the cheapness of unloading, we now have a territory to supply extending from Tignish to Hunter River. Heretofore, this territory only extended from Tignish to Emerald. The farmers beyond Emerald are large consumers of fertilizer, hence it is a very fine thing for this port.
>
> We believe the same thing will apply in the loading of potatoes. One of the representatives of the Potato Growers' Association assured us that this would be so. The whole layout is working just as we anticipated. The farmers are getting their supplies from the western warehouses promptly and without any holdup whatever, and they do not interfere in the slightest degree with the unloading of the ship. They have been loading cars at the rate of 40 per day on the railway, and this is an exceptionally good record.

This letter follows along the same lines, and shows the benefit that this construction work has been to the people of that community, and how it is appreciated by them.

I wish again to express the thanks of the people in that vicinity and from that constituency to the Minister of Public Works for the wharf that he gave us last year, and I hope that when the supplementary estimates are brought down this county will not be forgotten.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I asked the minister a question but I have not received an answer. I think we should have some explanation from him in regard to this vote.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend seems to insist upon having another answer, not merely an answer. I did give him an answer the other evening.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Simply a supposition.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am going to call my hon. friend's attention to the argument that he has made; I think perhaps that is the best answer that I can give him. He speaks of $89,000 as the expenditure made in the province this year, apart from the expenditure at Charlottetown. He refers to that as being an expenditure in three ridings. I ask my hon. friend if he thinks there are only three representatives from the province of Prince Edward Island, and if he thinks it is a fair thing to divide the expenditure there by three, in order to ascertain what each member should be entitled to. I mention that just to impress upon the committee the idea of my hon. friend with regard to fair treatment.

I point out the further fact that last year $54,625 was spent on building a warehouse at Georgetown, in the riding of my hon. friend. He says that was recommended by the Duncan commission. It is true that this warehouse serves other portions of the province but it serves a riding represented by my hon. friend more than it serves any other part of the province.

I just want to call my hon. friend's attention to the discrimination which he suffered last year. In the province of Prince Edward Island the expenditures of this department for all purposes were $156,927.15. This was for the various services, including warehouses. I want the members of the committee to bear that in mind; $156,927.15 for the ridings represented by the four members from Prince Edward Island. A quarter of that amount is $39,231. The expenditure in the riding represented by my hon. friend, who is complaining so bitterly of discrimination for political reasons, was $55,278. That is, he received in his riding over $16,000 more than the average of the total expenditures for the four ridings. That is what he is complaining about. All I have to say to my hon. friend is this, that in view of what I have listened to from him, I do not expect to receive even fair criticism of the expenditure in his riding or in his province and that is not what I am looking for. But in spite of the fact that he indulges in criticism that I think is not justified by the figures, the province of Prince Edward Island, including all the ridings, will receive the best and fairest treatment of which this department is capable and it will get that in spite of the attitude which my hon. friend takes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): When the minister starts to read a lecture to members of the house on fair play and fair treatment, I should like to point out that I have endeavoured as well as I can to be fair in this matter, and I thought that dealing with the local works of the county in connection with these estimates was the only fair way. The warehouse at Georgetown does not serve Kings county only; it is not placed there for Kings county only. The people of Tignish and the western end of Queens county, as the other hon. members for the province will verify, ship their potatoes through Georgetown warehouse. When in the late fall the harbour of Charlottetown is closed up Georgetown is the only outlet in the province. Prior to the 14th day of January last year we were loading steamers in Georgetown and the potatoes for those steamers were coming from Prince and Queens counties. The warehouse at Georgetown is not a county affair at all; it is a provincial affair. But supposing we take the minister's present attitude, what do we find? I am eliminating $140,000 for similar purposes in Charlottetown, Queens county, and at present discussing only the $89,000 voted for the province covering the ordinary votes and not the special vote that was recommended by the royal commission. The minister has no right under these circumstances to charge me, and if he knew what he was talking about he would not charge me, with unfair criticism. I know the other members from Prince Edward Island will bear out what I am saying. As regards dividing the total of these items by four, the other members for the province will agree with me that there is more need for this work in the county of Kings than in all the others, regardless of the fact that Queens county is represented by two members. No one who knows the facts will dispute that, especially in view of the fact that Kings county has open harbours late in the season and has greater needs than the counties which have harbours which are closed in November or the early part of December.

The main point on which I questioned the minister he has not touched at all. I asked him about the Souris breakwater, a work that is in imminent danger of destruction for lack of repair, a work which needs strengthening and supporting and which, if a heavy storm occur, will be carried out and do great damage to Souris harbour. I asked why that vote was deleted two years ago and not reinserted in the estimates. The minister has ignored the question entirely.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings). I have a right to some answer from the minister. I have asked a plain question about the appropriation for the Souris breakwater.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Carried.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The item will not carry. We will not be totally ignored in that way. If the minister is going to treat the committee with contempt, I will promise him that he will not get his estimates through even if I have to speak all day myself. I will ask the minister this: Will he answer or will he not?

Mr. STEVENS: I think the minister would do well at least to give the hon. member an answer to his question regarding the Souris breakwater. It is a matter that is undoubtedly important to the hon. gentleman and those whom he represents. It is one of the first principles of parliament that hon. members shall have the privilege of querying the minister or the government regarding matters of interest to their districts. There is no disposition on this side of the house to treat the minister unfairly. He cannot expect, with this class of business, that everyone is going to be satisfied and heap encomiums upon his head every time a vote is passed favourable to the particular riding represented. On the other hand we are at least entitled to receive fair and frank answers to the questions that are asked.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I can assure the hon. member for Vancouver Centre that I am not expecting or waiting for any encomiums or anything of the kind. I thought I had given the explanation which is the only explanation that I can give with regard to the Souris breakwater. A contract was let some time ago. The matter was considered important; it was urged that the breakwater was in danger of being washed out and that it was in need of repair. Tenders were called for and a contract was let but the contractor was unable to carry out the contract; he fell down completely on it. I was under the impression that the tender was above the estimate but I am advised that it was not. The appropriation lapsed and the work was not proceeded with. It was not the fault of the government that the contractor failed to carry out the contract. When the next estimates were being prepared, I assumed that this particular riding had other things that seemed more important, especially at Georgetown where it was claimed the greatest need of the riding and that portion of the province was a potato warehouse, and money was expended in other quarters where it was thought more necessary. If the breakwater was in bad condition, it is quite certain that it has not improved since that time. But the government assumes the full responsibility for seeing that the Duncan report is carried out and if anything happens to that breakwater before it is improved, that will be the responsibility of the government.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The Duncan commission made no recommendation with regard to the breakwater about which the minister is speaking. The simple question I asked was: Why was the contract not renewed the next year or an item inserted in the estimates either last year or this year to carry out the work? Any reasonable person will understand that if the engineer's report in 1925 was that the breakwater must be strengthened and if nothing has been done since then, it is going to deteriorate still further every year so that a greater expenditure will be necessary. In fact, I am advised that because the work was not done in 1925 or 1926 or 1927, it will require a very much larger expenditure now to put it in anything like reasonable condition, and as time goes on, if the work is not done, the expenditure will be very much greater. Why the government has refused to provide for this work in the last two years is a question I have been continuously putting to the minister but he sidesteps and evades it entirely.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): I happen to know a good deal about this contract and the Souris breakwater, and I wish to bear out everything that has been said both by the minister and by the mon. member for Kings. The contractor for this work lived in my home town. His tender was accepted, and in good faith he entered into a contract with the government to do the work, but owing to circumstances over which he had no control, and which were very unfortunate both for himself and the people of that community, he was not able to go on with the contract. I think perhaps the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) is acquainted with the circumstances. With the contractor there was associated a gentleman from the mainland, by the name of Brown, and a large number of cars of stone were started rolling from the quarries to be transported to Souris. Unfortunately this man Brown lost his health and is now an invalid, and in addition, the barge which was to carry the stone over met with a mishap as it was going off the slips, and after repeated attempts to carry on the work the contractors had finally to abandon the contract, and lose a great deal of money as a result. Just why another contract was not entered into I do not know, but I suppose it is largely because Georgetown was chosen as the site for the warehouse in place of Souris. I am quite willing to support the request of my hon. friend from Kings for some repairs to Souris breakwater this year. I have been asked to do so by parties from his own county, and the minister will bear me out that I have brought these representations to his attention.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): I think every member from the island is anxious to see that attention be given to this work if it possibly can be done. I have also received representations from that county in regard to other works which I have been asked to bring to the attention of the minister, and which I have done along with the other members from the island. Being fully acquainted with the circumstances under which the contract was let, and knowing the difficulties of the contractor and the money he lost, I thought it only fair that I should make this statement. The contractor had to put up his cheque with the department, and he lost the greater part of it. He attempted to carry out the work in good faith, but through no fault of his, and owing entirely to circumstances over which he had no control, he was not able to carry on the work.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I quite agree with what the hon. member for Prince has said. I know all the facts with regard to the contract myself, and while his statement is absolutely correct all the way through, it does not answer the question I want answered, and that is, why was the amount not revoted in 1926 or 1927?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am gong to try and answer my hon. friend until he is satisfied. I thought I had explained that when the Duncan report came out, its recommendations included a potato warehouse at Georgetown and wharf improvements at Summerside and Charlottetown. The potato industry was a great industry of the province, and one that was growing very rapidly, and the fact that it has since grown much more rapidly thoroughly justifies the recommendation of the Duncan commission, and the action of the government in carrying it out. It was considered that this work was more urgent than anything else, and with the limited amount of money at the disposal of the department, the department felt that they were in this way best serving the province and the county of Kings. I must say that I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Kings when he does not see that his riding was certainly not discriminated against when the expenditure in connection with Georgetown, to which I have referred, was made in his riding.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Apparently I can get no answer from the minister to the question I have been asking. He will not give me a reason. What he states as a reason is no reason whatever, and he knows it. He knows further that in the main estimates of last year the vote for the Georgetown warehouse was not in at all, and $1,000 was voted for Kings county. Let me vary my question. Does the minister propose to do anything for Souris breakwater this year in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. CANTLEY: I would like to point out to the minister what I fancy he no doubt knows, that this is an important work. The government considered it important enough to include $36,000 in the estimates for it two years ago, but the work has not been gone on with. The minister tells parliament that if the work goes to destruction, that is a matter entirely for the government. He would lead the house to believe that he and his department will be the only losers if the work goes to destruction, that the country is not going to suffer anything, that the only sufferer will be the government or the reputation of the government. I would remind the minister that that is not quite the position of affairs. If $36,000 were needed for this work two years ago, the situation has not improved in the interval. The work is an important one. Is it to be allowed to go to utter destruction, or are we to wait and then expend $50,000 on it next year because the government is not expending a proper amount on it to-day? That is the situation, and some more satisfactory answer is due than we have yet received from the minister.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to satisfy my hon. friends, and I assure them that I want to do justice to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. CANTLEY: Restore the vote then.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But if my hon. friends think that I can give them a promise now that this work will be provided for in the supplementary estimates, I cannot do it, and I hope my hon. friends are sufficiently interested in that section of the country not to pursue the matter to the extent of making it more difficult for the department to do what is its duty to that riding. I have assured my hon. friends that it is the intention of the department to endeavour as far as it possibly can to hand out justice to the various parts of the province of Prince Edward Island, including the county of Kings. I cannot go any further than that.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister is not giving me very much evidence of that intention just now. There is no doubt that everybody in connection with the Public Works department who has any knowledge of the situation at Souris knows that the breakwater is going to destruction. The government were so convinced of it themselves two years ago that they put an item of $36,000 in the estimates, and awarded a contract for the work. That work was not proceeded with, and the explanation given by the minister does not explain the matter at all. If the contract was awarded I presume the contractors came under certain obligations, and that some persons guaranteed their fulfiment. If the contractor failed to carry it out, why did not the minister insist on the bondsmen completing the work? If this work was necessary two years ago—and it was—it is certainly more necessary to-day. It will not do for the minister to tell us on this side of the house that he is the man who is taking the loss. He is not. The country is bearing the loss, and he is responsible for that loss.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Mr. Chairman, in order not to take up the time of the house with this item, I think we may assume from the minister's last statement that he is at least giving the matter full consideration, and will have an amount in the supplementary estimates for the purpose of restoring the wharf and breakwater.

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 136—harbours and rivers—New Brunswick, $253,800.

Blue Cove—breakwater, $21,600.

Mr. JONES: In what county is Blue Cove, and what is the condition of the work at the present time?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Blue Cove is in Gloucester county. To March 31 there was expended $1,337.

Mr. CANTLEY: By what rule is the minister proceeding with the breakwater at Blue Cove and neglecting the breakwater at Souris?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely we are through with Souris.

Mr. CANTLEY: Oh no. The total amount for Prince Edward Island is $229,800; for New Brunswick $253,800. Why does he proceed with repairs of the one breakwater and not of the other?

Mr. VENIOT: It is not repairs, it is a new work.

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not care whether it be repairs or a new structure. If an important long established breakwater needs repairs, it is a more urgent matter than the construction of a new breakwater. What is the explanation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is work now under contract.

Mr. CANTLEY: The other was under contract as well.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes; but this contract is being carried out. That is the difference between the two.

Mr. CANTLEY: For the other breakwater the contractor fell down. Why did he not compel the bondsmen to carry out the contract?

Item agreed to.

Burnt Church—wharf repairs, $7,000.

Mr. JONES: In what county is Burnt Church?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Northumberland.

Mr. JONES: Is this new work or repairs?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to renew the decayed superstructure of the plank-covered section 941 feet long.

Item agreed to.

Escuminac—breakwater extensions, $52,000.

Mr. JONES: How much has been expended?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $393 under the present contract.

Mr. JONES: How much was expended before?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not any information except with regard to the expenditures for the work that is at present going on. An order in council was passed on March 2, 1928, accepting the tender of Ashley A. Colter of Fredericton, for the construction of a breakwater extension at Escuminac, at the unit prices quoted therein, entailing an expenditure of about $61,729. That was the lowest of four tenders received after advertisement.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the extent and the nature of the traffic?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The engineer reports:

The work is required for the protection of the many boats fishing off this exposed coast, and for landing supplies and shipments of fish and farm produce, the locality being 32 miles from the nearest railway station.

Forty to fifty boats fish for salmon with drift nets off Escuminac, the annual value of their catch being about $90,000, and some 70 boats fish lobsters and herring, of which the catch is valued at about $110,000. Cod and mackerel are abundant, but on account of the lack of shelter and landing facilities, this fishing is not actively engaged in. It is most probable that on completion of the proposed harbour, freezers and factories will be built near the site, and that the increased annual value of the fish products will approximate the total cost of the work.

Item agreed to.

Green Point—breakwater, $44,000.

Mr. JONES: In what county is Green Point?

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Is there any point along this shore where there is not a breakwater or a wharf? I should think there is very little of the shore line free of one or other of these works.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is similar in some respects to the beautiful city of which my hon. friend is a representative. It is not as completely covered with harbour works, but there is an attempt to follow that example.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): There must be wharves or breakwaters to accommodate every little village and town and almost every individual.

Mr. JONES: What is the county, and the expenditure?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Gloucester county; $1,190.

Mr. JONES: Is the contract let? If so, who is the contractor?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The contract is let to the E. F. Powers Construction Company at $39,968. They were the lowest of four tenderers.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $45,000.

Mr. BELL (St. John): What are the items making up this $45,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The only information I can give is to state what amounts have been expended in previous years. Last year the total was $36,882; 1926, $23,351; 1925, $25,577; 1924, $34.049.

Item agreed to.

Leonardville—wharf repairs, $7,000.

Mr. VENIOT: What county is that?

Mr. GRIMMER: As this is the only item under which I can discuss the county of Charlotte I wish to direct the attention of the minister to a few appropriations which, in my opinion, should be made in the interests of people who, in one portion of my county, have been very loyal to this government. May I say that not one dollar appears for any new public works in aid of the fishing industry in Charlotte county, which is one of the best fishing areas on the Atlantic coast. There is no question about the need for this amount which is here provided for wharf repairs; it is absolutely necessary. No doubt it is needed to maintain the wharves in proper shape. But I would remind the government that during the seven years they have been in power not one dollar has been appropriated for any new public works in Charlotte county, with a single exception. That was in the year 1924 when the government themselves decided that, in the interests of the fishing industry in that part of the country, there should be a breakwater at Harrington cove. After looking over other propositions in the island they came to the conclusion that it was most important that a breakwater should be constructed at Harrington cove in the island of Grand Manan. Engineers were sent down for the purpose and plans and specifications were made and submitted to the department. The department approved the plans and an appropriation was included in the estimates for 1925. The people were led to believe that their wants in this regard would be satisfied at once. But for reasons best known to the government the location of that breakwater was changed overnight to Ingalls Head on the island of Grand Manan. The only reason which the people there could conceive for the change was the fact that a provincial election was about to take place in that year, 1925, and there were some rumours of discord within the ranks of the Liberal party. That was the only fact which they could think of that would influence the government in deciding upon the change. I would remind the government that in 1921, and again in 1925, the county was invaded by workers of the Liberal party, who went to Grand Manan, Campobello and Deer island, which is a part of the county of Charlotte and which extends over a considerable coastline, and promised on every occasion that the needs of the people of these islands would be considered so far as breakwaters and wharves are concerned. There are few breakwaters along that coastline, and these Liberal party workers promised the people there that everything necessary would be done to assist them in the industry in which they were engaged. These workers took occasion at that time to inform the people that they had been neglected from 1911 to 1921, although I wish to say to the government to-day that there were then in the Dominion of Canada no people more loyal to the Liberal party. They expected nothing, asked nothing and received nothing during the war period. As I say, the workers of the Liberal party went down there in 1921 and told those people that they had been neglected by the Union government which, they declared, was neither more or less than a Conservative government. And they promised the people definitely that if the Liberal party were returned to power certain public works would be started on Grand Manan. I repeat, these people were loyal to the Liberal party, as they always have been. I plead therefore in this house on their behalf, and I urge my hon. friends opposite to do something for them; the party are under an obligation to these people to fulfil some of the promises made them during the election of 1921 and again in 1925. I also urge that something be done, on the ground that these people are entitled to necessary works to enable them to carry on their enterprise.

In years gone by the island of Grand Manan and Deer island were prosperous fishing centres; there were thriving fishing villages on the coastline. To-day, however, they are in many cases in a dilapidated condition by reason of the fact that the younger men have left the island and gone to the United States where they can carry on their industry under more favourable conditions. If the government intend to enable these people to carry on their industry, then they are entitled to some consideration. I say, they are entitled to consideration because the industry needs it; but they are also entitled to consideration because of the promises made to the people on behalf of the government. Those promises should be fulfilled, and I trust that the minister will pay some attention to these representations. Let him find out for himself what the conditions are in that part of the country.

A breakwater was to be constructed at Harrington's cove but, as I say, the location was changed to Ingalls Head. It was also understood that a breakwater addition was to be made at Woodward cove, and there was to be a breakwater at Castalia, where there was a magnificent foundation for such a structure. Moreover, this is one of the places where it was definitely promised the people that a breakwater would be constructed. There was also to be an addition to the breakwater at North Head. These undertakings are all on file in the Department of Public Works. The engineers were sent down there previous to the elections to which I have referred, and they made certain recommendations. Their findings are on file and these works should be carried out in the interests of the people. I therefore strongly urge the government to give them proper consideration.

While I am on this subject I desire to call the attention of the minister to the fact that White Head, which is a part of the island of Grand Manan, is separated from the island and lies out in the Atlantic. There is a wharf there but the conditions are such that the fishermen can enter the harbour only at high tide. The people of the island desire that a little dredging be done there so that the fishermen may have ample opportunity to moor their boats and, in the event of a storm, to be protected from the winds and weather of the Bay of Fundy and of the Atlantic. I sincerely hope the minister will consider this point. Dredging at that wharf would cost little money and, as I say, it would afford the fishermen an ample opportunity to make a safe mooring. The same remark applies to Deer island, where a day or two of dredging would give splendid accommodation. At present in the event of storms the fishermen are obliged to moor their boats two miles from home, and this makes it very hard for the fishermen. At Stewart Town, at the upper end of Deer island, a wharf or a breakwater was promised years ago, but the people have never been given it. Necessarily, therefore, they are anxious that something shall be done. On behalf of the people of the island, who gave their generous support to the government, I plead that their claims be recognized and that steps be taken to improve the conditions under which the fishing industry is carried on.

Item agreed to.

Point Sapin—breakwater extension, $11,000.

Mr. JONES: Where is this point—in what county?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is not as well up in his geography in regard to this item as he is in regard to the last three. He did not have to ask any question at all about them. This is in Kent.

Mr. JONES: The minister says that I am not as well up in my geography in regard to this place as I am so far as the last three are concerned. May I point out that, as regards those three, one was in Charlotte and the other in St. John, whose representatives are here. It seems that about the only expenditures are in the Postmaster General's county and in Northumberland. I do not think the Postmaster General has been very generous to the rest of his colleagues in the province; some of them have no expenditures at all. As regards the constituency of Royal, comprising the districts of Kings and Queens, there are more wharves in that constituency than in any other in the province and there are only two small amounts included in the whole estimate for New Brunswick, apart from the expenditure to which I have referred. Those items amount to $3,700. It looks like discrimination to me.

Item agreed to.

St. Simon—wharf, $26,000.

Mr. JONES: In what constituency is St. Simon?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is in Gloucester county.

Item agreed to.

Tracadie harbour—breastworks and breakwaters, $20,000.

Mr. JONES: What county is this in? I would like to have some explanation as to these expenditures, as to whether or not this contract has been let and what amount has been expended?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Tracadie harbour is in Gloucester county and this amount of $20,000 is a revote as my hon. friend will see if he looks at the estimates. It is to complete work already under contract.

Mr. JONES: How much has been expended?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Only $124.

Mr. JONES: Last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, last year.

Item agreed to.

Quebec—Beaupre—dredging—Ste. Anne Paper Company to contribute one-third of cost, $122,000.

Mr. POULIOT: In what county is this?

Mr. LUCAS: This is a rather large vote, and I would ask the minister to explain it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is required to provide for the department's share of the balance necessary to complete the dredging contract with the Canadian Dredging Company Limited, which contract has been already let. The contract is for dredging a 14-foot channel 4,060 feet long by 150 feet wide at the upper end and tapering to 200 feet wide at the outer end with a turning basin 14 feet deep at the site of the new wharf of the St. Anne Paper Company.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the total amount of the contract?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The contract is for $218,420.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is it the policy of the government to do work of this kind for private companies?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Where a company is carrying on a business which promises to be extensive, and where they build wharves and make an expenditure of a million dollars it is the policy of the government to do dredging in order to provide access to those wharves.

Mr. SHORT: It depends a good deal upon which province the expenditure is made in.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think that is the policy in all the provinces, as my hon. friend will find if he follows the estimates through.

Mr. EVANS: Does the expenditure have to be a million dollars or over by the private company before the government will help?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not recall that we have aided any company where the expenditure was under a million dollars, but if it were a concern which promised to create wealth and develop business in that particular community, personally I would feel like looking very carefully into the matter to see what could be done to encourage such development.

Mr. EVANS: Is this work done specifically for a private company or is this a public waterway?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend will understand that this is on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. GARDINER: Did the company build the wharves at their own expense?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Then what would be the position of any other person who desired to use these wharves?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have an agreement with the company by which they allow the public to use the wharves.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the public be required to pay any charges?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Item agreed to.

Cap Chat—wharf extension and repairs, $30,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount of $30,000 is required to complete the contract for the construction of an extension to this wharf 500 feet in length by a width of 25 feet at the top and having an average height of 20 feet, to be built in close faced square timber ballasted with stone, covered with a 3-inch flooring and provided with fenders spaced 8 feet apart; and to carry out minor repairs to the approach.

Mr. GEARY: Was this contract let by tender?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: What will be the total length of the wharf when it is completed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This extension is 500 feet in length, and I am advised that the total length will be probably 1,000 feet.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the nature of the business carried on there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Export pulpwood. I think my hon. friend asked if this contract had been let by tender. It was; this was the lowest of eight tenders received after advertisements had been issued.

Mr. GEARY: With regard to these items of $1,000, $5,000 and so on scattered throughout the estimates, would the minister say whether that work is carried on under contract or whether it is done by day labour?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The work under the small votes is usually done by day labour.

Mr. GEARY: Under the control of the department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Cap de la Madeleine—wharf extension and repairs, $58,500.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to complete a contract for the construction of a cribwork extension to the downstream end of headblock 200 feet long by 90 feet wide. This is necessary to provide for the constantly increasing traffic. The present wharfage is entirely inadequate for the growing population, which has increased from 2,101 in 1911 to 6,738 under the 1921 census.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the business increasing in proportion to the increase in population?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Cap Rouge—wharf and dredging—the St. Regis Paper Company of Canada to contribute one-third of cost, $30,000.

Mr. LUCAS: I see this is another paper company. Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a revote; this amount was voted last year. The company had not advanced sufficiently for the department to feel justified in letting the contract, so no contract was let, but it is expected it will be. This wharf and dredging is required in connection with the large pulp and paper mill to be commenced here by the St. Regis Paper Company in 1928, which will employ about 2,000 men, and is expected to increase the population of Cap Rouge from 500 to over 10,000, and contribute a large revenue to the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the vicinity of $277,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will this amount complete it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is just beginning it.

Mr. EVANS: Is this not purely a provincial rather than a national matter? It seems to me that if a paper company in one of the western provinces needed a waterway they would have to provide it, or the province itself would have to do it.

Mr. BANCROFT: That is not the case in Manitoba. I have in mind a lumber company at Black island in lake Winnipeg which built a wharf of their own. The government has done the dredging to that wharf, and that makes an extra harbour on the lake which is very valuable to the fishermen and to those carrying on shipping there. They have this additional harbour of refuge in case of need, and in that way it is a public service.

Item agreed to.

Crabtree Mills—reconstruction of ice breaker, $2,500.

Mr. CANTLEY: What does that refer to?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a balance due, under contract, for the reconstruction of a cribwork and concrete icebreaker in the Quareau river near the village of Crabtree Mills. This icebreaker was damaged in the spring of 1927.

Item agreed to.

Doucet's landing (Ste. Angele de Laval)—wharf reconstruction, $93,000.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is that where the late member landed with the Margaret?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This work is under contract, and the amount is needed to complete the reconstruction and enlargement of the headblock of the Canadian National railway wharf. It is under contract with Messrs. Farley & Grant.

Mr. GEARY: Do the Canadian National Railways own that wharf?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It has been turned over to the government, who now own it. It was formerly a railway wharf.

Mr. GEARY: How many railway wharves has the department taken over?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Four have been taken over, and three are yet under consideration.

Mr. GEARY: Is that a new policy?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. GEARY: I am just wondering how that works out. When we consider the railway estimates the Canadian National Railways would normally have this expenditure.

Mr. ELLIOTT: These were wharves that were owned by the Intercolonial railway. Negotiations have been pending for some time between the two departments for the taking over of these wharves, and in this and three other cases they have been completed. It was thought it was in the public interest to do this.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the department asked that these wharves be taken over?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not this department.

Mr. GARDINER: Did the Railway department approach your department to take them over?

Mr. ELLIOTT: On the request of the Railway department.

Mr. GARDINER: I suppose the railway uses them now.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh, yes, they are public wharves.

Mr. GEARY: They were not getting rid of a very good wharf.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not usually the best wharves that they are most anxious to get rid of.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, will the minister be good enough to tell us the policy of the government in regard to these wharves? I have asked for this information on several occasions. First, I had a denial that they were taking over the wharves; then there was an admission that they were taking over one wharf, and then another one. In the present case we have one in the province of Quebec.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Where there is a wharf that will serve the public for general purposes, the policy of the department is to take it over.

Mr. CANTLEY: For fifty and indeed for sixty years the policy was that the Intercolonial railway built, maintained, repaired and controlled its own wharves. Will the minister be good enough to tell us the reason for the departure from that procedure?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The argument was that if we were furnishing wharves for the use of the public generally there was no reason why they should not be maintained by the government, and serve the purpose of the railway as well.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is hardly answering the question. Railway wharves are railway wharves; they are not public wharves. There are very few railway wharves that could be termed public wharves, in any sense of the term. That point was raised in connection with the wharves at Pictou. They are not public wharves, they are absolutely and entirely railway wharves, always were, and always will be. The real effect of this will be that the Railway department will be relieved of the cost of maintaining and repairing these wharves, and the Public Works department, or the country as a whole, is going to take over a burden that was formerly borne by the railway. I am sorry that the Minister of Railways is not here, his department is to be relieved of that amount, and his accounts will consequently make a better showing than they otherwise would. If this is the correct thing to do in connection with this department, there are other departments that might be relieved as well.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think I am correct in saying that all the wharves in this category were formerly wharves of the government railway, and our instructions are that they are now being used for general purposes.

Mr. CANTLEY: No, no.

Mr. ELLIOTT: And are being taken over for that reason.

Mr. CANTLEY: That story will not wash at all. I have said already, and I repeat, that the wharves to which I have referred are railway wharves pure and simple, not public wharves. Any statement to the contrary is not correct, and I think the minister should admit that. The question of their being public wharves falls to the ground. The point is that you are relieving the railway of a certain amount of work and expense formerly borne by the Intercolonial, indeed from the inception of the road fifty-eight or sixty years ago down to the present time. Why has there been a change of policy?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not know that I can say to my hon. friend that there is any change of policy. That I think has been the policy decided upon for some time past.

Mr. CANTLEY: No, only this year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Whether or not they were formerly used entirely by the railway, they will in the future be public wharves and be capable of being used for any purpose for which the public may require to use a wharf. There is no doubt about what my hon. friend says. The railway department is being relieved of a certain liability which it had before, but we are getting the wharf.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): In view of the fact that the railway is being relieved of the upkeep of its property which is absolutely necessary for conducting its business, has the minister made any arrangement with the Minister of Railway for a reduction in freight rates? If not, I think this is something that should be considered.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no special arrangement in connection with these particular wharves. My hon. friend is aware of certain reductions that have been made in freight rates.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, but of course it takes revenue from the railway and perhaps is one reason why it is entitled to some consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the effect of this policy not likely to be that the deficit which we have on the eastern section of the Canadian National Railways will be much reduced by what the department has taken over in connection with these particular works, and will it not therefore be possible to reduce the rates?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This will affect the rates very slightly, we think.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Let us have the benefit of whatever reduction there may be, whether it be large or small. As I have said before, the upkeep of these wharves is absolutely necessary. If you cut them off, you might as well cut off a freight shed anywhere along the line. If you cut off these freight sheds, the railway cannot carry on its business. If the Public Works department is to relieve the railway of all liabilities in connection with that property, surely we are entitled to a reduction in rates comparable with the cost of the upkeep?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no thought of taking over the railway wharves at Halifax.

Mr. CANTLEY: The matter is becoming more confused all the time. We were told not very long ago that the intention was to take over all the wharves in the Maritime provinces. The minister refers to these wharves being in the future public wharves. The mere taking of them over by his department does not make them public wharves, does not change them in any way so that the public can use them where they have not been using them before. As I have already stated, the two wharves at Pictou are simply railway wharves and they cannot be used for any other purpose. They are just as necessary for the railway as is the track, as are the railway sidings, as are the approaches to the railway property. They are indeed approaches to terminals of the railway property. Coastal boats come in and use them to embark freight and passengers which come over the road. These same boats land freight and passengers which in turn go over the road. All freight handled by the railway is and can be handled only over these wharves, on the freight sheds thereon and no other work is or can be done over them. The real fact, I fancy, is that the president of the road, Sir Henry Thornton, has been shrewd enough to conceive the idea of unloading these wharves on to the Public Works department and so escape the cost of upkeep and maintenance. Let the minister be frank about the matter and tell us whether or not that is true.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What has taken place is this. Requests were made by the Department of Railways in regard to a number of wharves and a list was furnished. The contention was that they were wharves which should be taken over and maintained at government expense. The main reason that was urged for that course was that they were wharves that could be used as public wharves.

Mr. CANTLEY: No, absolutely no.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There may be exceptions. My hon. friend states something of his own knowledge and I am not in a position to contradict him. All I can say is that we are only taking over wharves which our engineers, after going over the list, said could properly be taken over as public wharves to be used by the public.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister has in the estimates, and quite properly so, a sum of $25,000 to repair these railway wharves at Pictou. Those wharves should have been repaired years ago by the Railway department. They allowed them to deteriorate until they are and have been for two or three years actually dangerous to shipping and the public who use them. Now the Department of Public Works are taking them over and are relieving the railway of that amount of expense. All I want to ask of the minister is to be frank enough to say that is being done.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no doubt that is correct.

Mr. CANTLEY: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

Ellis bay harbour improvements, $300,000.

Mr. POULIOT: In what county is Ellis Bay? Is it a big place?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is in Charlevoix-Saguenay.

Mr. STEVENS: What is this for?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount of $300,000 is required towards the completion of the contract with the Canadian Dredging Company, Limited, for dredging a channel 3,950 feet long by 300 feet wide leading to the Anticosti corporation wharves, deepening the berths at the company's commercial wharf and dredging a turning basin, all to a depth of 20 feet below low water. The Anticosti corporation has under way at the present time a scheme for the development of this harbour which involves the expenditure of approximately $2,500,000 exclusive of railroads, dwellings and buildings which it will be necessary to construct on the island. Construction work was commenced by this company on December 1, 1926, and two ship berths were ready on June 1, 1927, new commercial wharf on July 31, and harbour works completely finished by December 1, 1927.

Mr. STEVENS: This may be quite justified, but on the face of it it looks as if it were being done for the benefit of a private corporation. The only justification for anything of this character would be when it is dredging in the public channel or a channel used by the public. If it is dredging around a wharf of a private corporation, there ought to be some very sound reason for doing it. The minister has quite frankly stated in his explanation that a big corporation is spending a large sum of money. If out of the expenditure of that money a distinct benefit accrues to a settlement or to the public generally there is justification for such an expenditure out of the public exchequer. Otherwise I submit that an adequate explanation is required.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is a big construction work, a large development, and the expenditure already has been large.

Mr. STEVENS: How much has parliament voted and how much has been expended already? I see there was a vote of $150,000 last year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amount expected to complete will be $525,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Can the minister give us a little fuller justification. I think he catches my point.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I caught my hon. friend's point, and I must say that it is one that caused me a good deal of concern a year ago.

Mr. BENNETT: Is this on Anticosti island?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. When the company started on this work they interviewed the government to see whether or not the government would feel disposed to assist them, by way of dredging, in getting to their wharves. This is not a work which would have been necessary if the wharf were in the main channel of the river, but it is necessary in order that they can get from the main channel to their pulp mill. As a result of this development, 5,000 people are expected to be furnished with employment. It will be a large concern if the expectations of the company are at all fulfilled, and it is thought that in view of the revenue the government will eventually derive, it is a good business proposition.

Mr. BENNETT: What will the government ever get out of it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: All the shipping that takes place will enure to the benefit of the government.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How?

Mr. STEVENS: There will be no harbour or wharfage dues.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. STEVENS: What, then, can the government get out of the shipping?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Everything that enters into a development of this kind increases the business of the country. We get customs revenue, for instance, and excise revenue.

Mr. STEVENS: For gin, or what?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I should think that the provincial government will benefit most from the sale of timber limits, and so forth, and I would say that the expenditure should be largely undertaken by the provincial government.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not know whether my hon. friend was in before when this matter was being discussed. It is not a work that the provincial government would be expected to carry on; it is not done by provincial governments, so far as I know, in any province. This is to give encouragement to an industry that is coming to the country, investing a large amount of money and engaging a large amount of labour, and expecting a large output of its products.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Who owns Anticosti Island now?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is the Anticosti Corporation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Who are the directors or the controlling influence in the Anticosti Corporation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I could not say.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am informed, perhaps not on reliable authority, but if I am wrong, I should like to be corrected, that this corporation is mostly composed of Americans and that the island of Anticosti belongs altogether to private individuals. Is that true?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no doubt that in practically all these large companies there is a number of Americans. I think this is an amalgamation of three companies; it is a large concern, but I could not give the personnel.

Mr. STEVENS: I was a moment ago drawing attention to the only possible justification for an expenditure of this kind, and unfortunately this does not apparently come within that classification. Where there is a public channel, the channel of a river, stream or bay or harbour, the government is entitled out of the public revenue to put that channel into shape and maintain it in shape so as to serve a community. But here we have a private corporation owning, as I understand, the whole island of Anticosti—the sole owner of the island, I believe—putting in a large industrial plant. We all welcome the establishment of industries; there is no question about that, but in the erection of this plant the company is building wharves, pulp mills and such like, and we are asked to spend $500,000 merely to dredge out from the navigation channel to the private wharves of the company or to the pulp mill, as the case might be. I think that work should be done by the company itself. If there is any part of the construction that is absolutely essential, it is the dredging to the company's own wharves, and certainly they ought to do that work out of their own funds. I understand that there is another item somewhat similar to this in this same vote, where we are asked to vote $100,000 for Manicouagan river. In that case the company is paying one-half of the cost of the work. Is that not so?

Mr. ELLIOTT: One-third.

Mr. STEVENS: Well, a portion of the cost, one-third; and I say that this company on Anticosti Island ought to pay its share of this work. Personally, in the absence of some extraordinary circumstance, I think they ought to pay the whole cost, and certainly the minister has not yet given us any justification for an expenditure of $500,000 for the benefit of this one company. As regards possible revenue to the government, the only revenue there will be will come from the fact of people living in the country—that is all, an indirect benefit.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Income tax, perhaps.

Mr. STEVENS: Let us hope there will be; we hope the company will be successful. But there will be no such thing as harbour or wharfage dues. There is nothing coming to the public from this improvement to navigation. I assume that nothing can be done to stop the contract; it is already let, and the work is going on. All we can do is to call attention to the matter, and certainly offer our criticism of this method of procedure. There is another point. The original vote was for $150,000. I do not know whether we were informed when that $150,000 was voted, whether the total contract was to exceed $500,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I remember stating that that was just a beginning.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not in a position to criticize even that statement, but the original vote was for $150,000, and now we are asked to vote $300,000, and I suppose there will be another vote next year to complete the contract.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This completes it.

Mr. STEVENS: Then there must have been a further vote, because last year's vote and this only makes $450,000, and the total cost is over $500,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The hon. member is right, there will be $75,000.

Mr. STEVENS: There will be another vote next year. Well, I do not think the minister feels very comfortable about this vote. That native honesty which characterizes him is shining out of his face and he looks mighty uncomfortable in supporting this vote. I give him credit at least for a twisted conscience, if nothing else, and I do not know that we can do anything more than give it a little extra twist so that this will not occur again.

Mr. POWER: I join my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) in protesting against votes of this kind. Here are extremely wealthy companies asking the government to do their work for them. Anticosti is in a peculiar situation. I could understand the advisability of giving help at Manicouagan or Bersimis, or at some other point along the lower St. Lawrence where it might be possible that eventually settlement would be developed. These moneys would help in the development of that region. But Anticosti until a few years ago was in the possession of the Menier family of Paris, France. They were granted powers greater than we would think of granting to-day; they had almost the power of life and death over the people of the island.

Mr. LAPOINTE. But they never got one cent of money for public works.

Mr. POWER: I was coming to that. The Anticosti Corporation took over this island from the Menier family. It is composed of three of the largest pulp and paper groups in the province of Quebec—not favourable to the government, I may say. Sir Herbert Holt, who is a director of the corporation, is on the directorate of 130 or 140 companies. There is no question of the Anticosti Corporation settling the island. They are coming to us in the guise of beggars and telling us that they want this particular port developed ,but as soon as they have cut all the pulpwood off the island the works will be abandoned, and the country will have spent that much and be out the interest simply to provide facilities for the corporation to clear off the wood. Personally I do not think there will be a settlement there fifteen years hence.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Morin (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) for the third reading of Bill No. 43, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Garland (Bow River).

Mr. A. J. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park): In offering a few remarks on this question I do so not in the spirit of obstructing the bill. The Bell Telephone Company, like any other company, has the right to come to parliament and ask for legislation, and the only reason I have for objecting to this measure is the fact that, in my opinion, the Bell Telephone Company have very extensive powers which are invoked to the injury and prejudice of many of the users of telephones throughout the Dominion. That fact was particularly emphasized a year ago in an application made by the company for an increase in rates. I believe they have made applications in previous years for similar increases which have not been granted. They claimed that they were not making sufficient from the existing rates and that they required extra money. Their application was opposed by a number of persons, corporations and provinces in the Dominion. I find on the record that the opponents of the application for the increased rates included the government and the Attorney General of Ontario, the city of Montreal, the city of Toronto, the city of Hamilton, the city of Ottawa, the Union of Canadian Municipalities and the city of Brantford. The application was heard in the latter part of 1926 and an order was made early in 1927. The city of which I represent a portion was largely interested in that application, the result of which was very unsatisfactory; and as a representative from that city I feel it my duty to voice what I believe is the prevailing sentiment of the people there.

The company has now a capitalization of $75,000,000, which represents 750,000 shares. Of that amount $63,000,000 has been issued and allotted and there is something in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000 of stock in the treasury at par value. It has been alleged by the company, in making this application, that their reason for asking for this extension to capitalization is an immediate need of $20,000,000 for the purposes of extension and so forth in connection with the company. The $12,000,000 at par value represents simply $12,000,000—that is, 120,000 shares of stock. The Bell Telephone is probably one of the best securities in Canada; there is no difficulty in getting the public to invest in these stocks and securities. When therefore the company says that it requires $20,000,000 immediately, all it has to do is to place that 120,000 shares on the market from time to time as the money is required. If it does so it will be able to get all the money it requires for immediate needs. and that is not for use immediately nor in the next month or two, but over a considerable period.

It may be of interest to point out that the company has not at any one time put on the market 120,000 shares of stock. In 1894 they placed 9,900 shares with their shareholders; they allotted that much at par. They received into the treasury $990,000. During that year the lowest price quoted on their stock on the market was 172 and the peak price that year was 193. As I say, they placed only 9,900 shares at that time. In 1907 they placed 25,000 shares at par with their stockholders and the prices that year ran from 115 to 145. In 1911 they placed another 25,000 at par, the prices ranging from 140 to 153. I could go down the list, to the year 1925, and show that at no time during that whole period was the stock at less than par except in one year, 1921, when the range was from 99¾ to 112. In that year they allotted 57,250 shares to their stockholders, and in 1924 they issued —the largest number of shares in any one year—82,272 shares, allotted to the shareholders at par. At no time have they issued or sold or allotted more stock at par value than in that year. In 1902 they allotted 10,000 at 125; in 1904, 20,000 at 125; in 1905, 10,000 at 125; in 1906, the same amount at 125; and in 1925 they allotted amongst their employees 4,250 shares at 110. The prices have ranged from 99¾ to 193. There has been no difficulty whatsoever in the company selling its stock at any time.

From 1886 this company has been earning more than its dividend requirements of 8 per cent, and since 1895 it has paid continuously a dividend of 8 per cent on its capital stock issue. So the company has had no difficulty in paying the 8 per cent dividend, which as a matter of fact is secured by orders of the railway board which, in fixing rates, always has taken into consideration the necessity of meeting that 8 per cent dividend. In its application to the board last year the company stated that the reason they requested an increase in rates was because they needed the money for extensions and so on; they now come forward and ask to increase their capitalization for the very same reason. I say that if they take the 120,000 shares of stock from the treasury and offer them to the public they can get enough money for their extensions without this additional capitalization. This increase will give them a greater opportunity to hand out stock to their shareholders at par value from time to time as they may see fit, thus giving the stockholders what might be called a melon, or the difference between the par value and the market value of the stock. At present rates this would amount to the difference between $100 and about $170 per share, which would be received by the shareholders. The citizens of Toronto are very much dissatisfied with the result of the application which was made to the board last year; they are opposed to this increase in capitalization. They say, and I think they are entitled to believe, that if the Bell Telephone Company used its revenues economically there would be no need to ask for this increase in capital and there would be no justification for offering stock to their shareholders at par value.

From their revenue accounts they have extracted—and I do not use that word in an offensive manner—very large sums of money which have been used for different purposes and which are not taken into consideration in fixing the rates charged telephone users. I would like to bring to the attention of the house some ways in which this is done. A number of years ago this company established a pension fund, which amounted to $911,777 in 1926. This was built up from the revenues of the company, and did not include any contributions from company employees or officers. This fund was established for the purpose of providing insurance for the employees and officers of the Bell Telephone Company, yet they do not contribute to it.

In 1927 that fund amounted to about $1,200,000, and in order to get rid of that amount so that it would not appear in the accounts of the company the fund was incorporated and is now known as the Bell Telephone Company Benefit Fund. This money was transferred to that fund and does not appear in the accounts of the company, and each year the fund is augmented by contributions from the revenues of the company. When the company applied to the railway board last year those who were opposed to the increase were not permitted to inquire into that fund, as to how the moneys were being used, how they were invested and the income received; that was a closed book. That meant that the users or lessees of telephones throughout Ontario and Quebec were refused information with regard to an amount which is increasing year by year, an amount made up from the revenues of the Bell Telephone Company, which revenues are obtained from the tolls and rates charged.

There is another method by which certain moneys have been taken from the revenue account, as to which the users of telephones have been refused information. About 1895, although I am not sure of the exact date, in order to manufacture articles other than telephone apparatus, supplies and equipment, which they were entitled to do under their original charter, the Bell Telephone Company caused another company to be incorporated, which was known as the Northern Electric and Manufacturing Company. Until that time the Bell Telephone Company manufactured their own supplies and equipment; they had a certain plant for that purpose and they found that the plant was capable of manufacturing other articles but could not do so because the company were not authorized to manufacture anything but telephone equipment. They applied for the incorporation of this company; the application was granted and the company incorporated with a small capitalization. In 1914 certain other amalgamations were effected; up until that year the Bell Telephone Company furnished all the money for the purposes of the Northern Electric and Manufacturing Company, which money came from the revenues of the Bell Telephone Company. In 1914 the assets of the Northern Electric and Manufacturing Company were transferred to another concern known as the Northern Electric Company, which is the present subsidiary of the Bell Telephone Company. The Northern Electric Company is capitalized at $6,000,000; of that amount about $3,000,000 of stock is held by the Bell Telephone Company; 43 per cent of the stock, or less than $3,000,000 worth, is held by the Western Electric Company of Chicago, a concern which manufactures material for the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and which practically controls the manufacture of telephone and telegraph apparatus in the United States. The balance of the stock of the Northern Electric Company is held by the directors of the Bell Telephone Company, and just here I might say that the directors of the Bell Telephone Company are practically the same as the directors of the Northern Electric Company. So it will be seen that the Northern Electric Company is really a subsidiary of the Bell Telephone Company and is controlled by that concern. The Bell Telephone Company purchases all its apparatus and equipment from the Northern Electric Company, at prices which are fixed by the latter company. When the Bell Telephone Company manufactured its own apparatus, that apparatus was furnished at cost; they followed the practice adopted by Henry Ford, who manufactures everything going into the construction of his automobile, even owning iron and coal mines and operating a railway in order that the cost might be reduced to a minimum. The Bell Telephone Company were in that position; they obtained their supplies at cost in the first instance, but since 1914 they have paid whatever the Northern Electric Company charged them.

This latter company has been very successful; it pays a dividend of 8 per cent together with a bonus of 2 per cent, and that dividend and bonus are paid to the Bell Telephone Company. If it stopped at that I would say nothing about it; I would have no particular criticism to offer, but there is another interlocking which takes away from the Bell Telephone Company everything it receives from the Northern Electric Company, and a good deal in addition, namely, the interlocking arrangement between the American Telephone & Telegraph Company and the Bell Telephone Company, to which I will refer a little later on.

A report which was filed in 1926 shows that the Northern Electric Company had a surplus, including buildings and real estate, valued at $5,388,718. Their depreciation reserve set aside to meet depreciation in the plant amounted to $5,564,249. Besides that, they held undivided money amounting to $2,844,821. Counsel representing the opponents in the application of 1926 endeavoured to get at these figures to discover the prices that the Bell Telephone Company were paying the Northern Electric for their materials and the reason why this large amount of depreciation and undivided money was held. This was refused by the Board of Railway Commissioners. I do not know why the Board of Railway Commissioners took this stand, but I believe that they were quite unjustified in this position. When this board was established the intention was that it would be a tribunal different from our courts of law and different from the railway committee of the House of Commons, which formerly had dealt with railway matters. The object was to give to the citizens of this country a tribunal which was composed not of judges but of legal men and laymen throughout the Dominion. The commissioners were at first empowered to adjudicate upon matters which might come under the Railway Act, and afterwards their jurisdiction was extended to the act relating to telephones and telegraphs.

This board claimed that they had not the right to inquire into the financial condition of the Northern Electric Company, and they refused point blank to allow evidence of that character to be produced. The result is that a large part of the capital of the Bell Telephone Company is bound up in this Northern Electric Company, and we have no means of scrutinizing or investigating it.

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company is one of the largest organizations in the United States. It is not incorporated in Canada. It is a peculiar organization; it depends upon a great number of charters for its existence, some forty or fifty, and practically controls all the telephone and telegraph operations in the United States. This American company holds 32 per cent of the stock of the Bell Telephone Company, and practically controls that company. It may be said that 32 per cent is not a majority of the stock, but it is not necessary to have a majority of the stock of a company in order to ensure control; experts have alleged that 20 per cent is sufficient to effect that end. This would not be true if it were a small company where the stock is held by a small number of shareholders, but in a company the size of the Bell Telephone Company, the stock of which is held by many shareholders, 32 per cent in one block is a large amount, and will enable the interests holding it to control the company.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the hon. member be kind enough to tell us the source of his information and statistics?

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): The figures I am giving you were all produced at the application made in 1926, and are there for anyone to see.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The evidence given before the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): The evidence and the arguments and statements were all filed.

I have further authority from a publication issued in New York by the Bell Telephone Securities Company, Incorporated, 195 Broadway, New York City. Their publication of April 1, 1925, stated that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company owns 32 per cent of the capital stock of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. They not only control that stock, but they control the patents under which operations are carried on.

The Western Electric Company, to which I have already referred, owns 43 per cent of the stock of the Northern Electric Company. This company is practically owned by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which holds 98 per cent of the Western Electric stock. In other words, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, through their control of the Western Electric Company, holds 43 per cent of the stock of the Northern Electric Company. The patents, as I have said, belong to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company, under a contract made in 1923, get 1½ per cent of the gross revenue of the Bell Telephone Company. They get this percentage for no other reason than the fact that they have a strangle hold on the Bell Telephone Company. Through the Canadian company being obliged to use their patents, they get 1½ per cent of the total revenue, no matter whether they do anything to increase that revenue or not. They get a portion of the long distance revenue, but they earn that. They get their dividends on the 32 per cent of stock. They also have the right to call for 32 per cent of all new stock that may be issued by the Bell Telephone Company. It has been the practice of the Bell Telephone Company to issue their stock at par, excepting the occasions I have mentioned, and this would mean that the American company would get the stock at par. They would get the difference between the par value and the market value of the stock, simply by being stockholders to the extent of 32 per cent. In 1923 the American Telephone and Telegraph Company obtained from the Bell Telephone Company $330,000; in 1924, they obtained $360,000; in 1925, $390,000, and in 1926, $450,000. In 1926, when the application was heard, it was estimated that if the rates were raised according to the schedule filed, the amount the American company would receive for 1927 would be $510,000.

The following interesting dialogue took place at that application between one of the witnesses and one of the commissioners. The question being discussed was the 1½ per cent of the gross revenues which the American Telephone and Telegraph Company received. Commissioner Lawrence says:

This is self explanatory, and might be of interest to the telephone users of Ontario and Quebec.

What is your service contract expense in 1925?—$390,000.

And in 1926?—$420,000.

That is under the present rates?—Yes.

Under the rates asked for how much would they be in 1927?—$480,000.

That is really on the basis of $32,000,000, is it not?

I worked it out, Mr. Geary, I think it must be that. On the basis of $30,000,000 it is $450,000, and on $32,000,000 it would be $480,000.

So that you note an increase to just $816,000 to get an extra $30,000. You make it $510,000. Is that right?—Yes.

That is, your revenue if you get the proposed increase in 1927 would provide the American Telephone & Telegraph Company with an increase automatically of $30,000?—Yes.

It would entitle the American Telephone & Telegraph Company to that amount of money? Yes.

And bring your receipts within $816,000 of the amount required to give them still another $30,000?—That is right.

The hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) was counsel for the city of Toronto on that occasion. He said:

The point of my question is this: that automatically and without any further growth of business at all, an increase of rates would immediately jump your contract expenses up $30,000?

That is correct. The contract speaks for itself. It says, payment on revenue.

That is without any extra service or anything of that sort?

Commissioner Lawrence: Do I understand that that is without any extra service?

Mr. Geary: If the company was able to get the increase asked there would be $30,000 more payable to the American Telephone & Telegraph Company at once, without their having to take on any extra complexity of plant or anything like that.

Commissioner Lawrence: I think there should be an investigation of the transactions between these companies, for a contract that will automatically without any further growth in business or any extra service, immediately jump the contract expenses up $30,000 is unfair to subscribers of the Bell Telephone Company.

One would have thought that would be sufficient for the Board of Railway Commissioners to recommend to parliament or to the government that an amendment be made to the act in order that such an investigation might be carried out, but I do not know that such a recommendation has been made and so far as I am aware no mention has been made of one. If it has not been made, the Board of Railway Commissioners are to that extent derelict in their duty to the people of Canada. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company is more or less of an octopus. It has a strangle hold not only upon the Bell Telephone Company but apparently upon the people of the United States. I noticed in the columns of a local paper, the Ottawa Journal, of yesterday morning this item:

Directors of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company cut the long expected "melon," to-day by authorizing the issuance of 185,000,000 additional stock at $100 to their 435,000 shareholders.

And in the Journal this morning in the same column I find the following:

American Telephone was in brisk demand throughout the session as a result of the proposed increase of $185,000,000 in capitalization with the issuance of valuable "rights" to shareholders, closing about 12 points higher at 208¼ after having established a new high record for all time at 211.

That stock, which has a par value of 100, was selling yesterday at 208¼ and at one time it reached 211. The difference between 100 and 211 is the melon that is referred to, and the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, on account of their being in the strangle hold of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, is compelled to contribute to that melon. That, I think, is a very important reason why we should know about the doings of that company, which is not a subsidiary but a company which practically owns the Bell Telephone Company.

Another method by which money is taken out of the Bell Telephone Company's revenue has to do with the question of depreciation. A depreciation reserve is quite a proper thing and I have no objection to a depreciation reserve being established. The Bell Telephone Company from 1880 to 1907 did not have any depreciation reserve; they carried on their repairs and renewals out of revenue. But about 1907, when they were about to become regulated in regard to rates by the Board of Railway Commissioners, they established a depreciation reserve, and from 1907 to 1926 they had contributed from the revenues of the company to that reserve the sum of $38,653,552. Of that amount, however, they used for the purpose of renewals and repairs only $13,770,047, leaving in that reserve account $24,883,505 unused. The evidence that was given on the application in 1926 by Mr. Lash, the chief engineer, showed that the plant and equipment of the Bell Telephone Company was 100 per cent efficient. The reason he gave for that was that the depreciation had been made up year by year by prompt renewals and repairs, the total of which, as I said before, was $13,770,047. The plant is 100 per cent efficient. Another officer of the Bell Telephone Company on that investigation stated that the best experience for establishing a reserve fund was the past experience of the company. The past experience of the company showed that from 1907 to 1926 renewals and repairs amounted to only $13,770,047, and that was taken out of the depreciation reserve fund leaving the large amount of nearly $25,000,000 unexpended. It might be well for us to say to the Bell Telephone Company: Why not take that and use it for the purpose of making the extensions, renewals and repairs that you want to make at the present time? That will more than cover the $20,000,000 that you require. It is rather strange that on the application the Board of Railway Commissioners did not take into consideration the question of depreciation. It did not take into consideration either the interest of the Northern Electric Company or that of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company in the Bell Telephone Company. That is a reason why an increase of $75,000,000 in capitalization should not be authorized until some conditions or restrictions are placed upon the Bell Telephone Company in the use of its revenue.

I am heartily in accord with the amendment. I think the stock of the Bell Telephone Company should be placed on the market at a restricted price. The amendment proposes that the stock should not be sold except by public subscription. The Bell Telephone Company, as I have stated before, at no time except on the occasions in 1902, 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1925 sold or allotted their stock at anything more than par. In 1925 they sold a small block at 110 to their employees and in 1902, 1904, 1905 and 1906 they sold stock at 125 to their shareholders. I say that they should be forced at the present time to go into the market and sell their stock at a fair price. If they were not looking to the people of Canada for their revenue in the way they do in the shape of tolls, I would say that we might be interfering with their financing. But in case of a stringency or deficiency of funds they come back and say that they want their rates raised in order to make up that deficiency. In this case they are asking for an increase in capitalization, and I want to cite two or three companies that do not allow their stock to be allotted to their shareholders at par, but that insist upon its being sold to them at a premium. The stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is a par value of $100 and yet I find in their report for the year ended December 31, 1927, on page 7, this statement under the heading of "Issue of Additional Common Stock":

> Pursuant to the authorization given at the last annual meeting, the directors of the company decided to issue 400,000 shares of additional ordinary capital stock, of which 325,000 shares were offered for subscription by shareholders at the price of $150 per share.

In other words, 50 per cent more than the par value of that stock went into the treasury of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and not into the pockets of the shareholders. The report continues:

> And 50,000 shares were offered for subscription by the officers and employees of the company at the same price. As the applications for stock by officers and employees exceeded by 6,290 shares the amount offered, your directors decided to increase the number of shares available for this purpose to 56,290 shares.

Had the 325,000 shares been sold at par, they would have realized $32,500,000; actually they realized $48,350,000. The 6,290 shares if sold at par would have brought in $6,290,000; actually they brought in $9,435,000. There were still left unsold of that issue 18,710 shares, in regard to which the directors say:

> The remaining 18,710 shares will be disposed of in the market when conditions warrant such disposal.

And the market for that stock to-day, Mr. Speaker, is in the neighbourhood of $218.

Now why should not this parliament say to the Bell Telephone Company: You must not issue this stock at par, but you must sell it at the market price or at some other price which will bring into the treasury of the company a large addition to your capital.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I rise to a point of order, Mr Speaker. I understand that, under the rules which govern private bills, any private bill which is under discussion when the hour for discussion of private bills expires goes to the bottom of the list. The bill now before the House was under discussion on Wednesday evening last at 11 o'clock, when the special time allotted to private bills that evening had expired. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the same rule which governs private bills on Tuesdays and Fridays should apply also on a special occasion such as Wednesday evening, especially when as in this case the bill now before the house occupied the entire three hours on Wednesday evening.

Mr. SPEAKER: That rule applies only on Tuesdays and Fridays. On other days it does not apply. I refer to standing order 15, subsection 4.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Garland, Bow River), which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Adshead,	Kennedy,
Allan,	Lucas,
Anderson (Toronto-High Park),	Luchkovich,
Bancroft,	Macdonald (Glengarry),
Beaubien,	MacDonald (Cape Breton South),
Bissett,	MacLean (Prince),
Bock,	Macphail (Miss),
Bowen,	McMillan,
Brown,	Millar,
Campbell,	Milne,
Carmichael,	Neill,
Cayley,	Odette,
Coote,	Pouliot,
Donnelly,	Quinn,
Edwards (Waterloo South),	Robinson,
Evans,	Sanderson,
Fansher (Last Mountain),	Senn,
Fansher (Lambton East),	Short,
Gardiner,	Smoke,
Garland (Bow River),	Speakman,
Geary,	Spencer,
Gershaw,	Spotton,
Glen,	Steedsman,
Goodison,	Stinson,
Heaps,	Stirling,
Hepburn,	Thompson,
Howden,	Vallance,
Irvine,	White (London),
Jelliff,	Woodsworth,
Kellner,	Young (Toronto Northeast).—60.

NAYS

Messrs:

Barber,	Lacombe,
Bell (St. John-Albert),	Ladner,
Bettez,	Laflamme,
Blanchard,	Lapierre,
Bothwell,	Lapointe,
Bouchard,	Letellier,
Boucher,	McLean (Melfort),
Boulanger,	McKenzie,
Bourgeois,	McPhee,
Brady,	McQuarrie,
Cahan,	Morin (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville),
Cannon,	Motherwell,
Cantley,	Perras,
Cardin,	Power,
Casgrain,	Prévost,
Casselman,	Ralston,
Chevrier,	Raymond,
Clark,	Rinfret,
Delisle,	Robb,
Denis (St. Denis),	Ross (Moose Jaw),
Denis (Joliette),	Ryerson,
Descoteaux,	St-Père,
Dickie,	Séguin,
Dunning,	Sinclair (Queens),
Elliott,	Spence,
Embury,	Stevens,
Fafard,	Stewart (Edmonton West),
Fiset (Sir Eugene),	Taylor,
Forke,	Tolmie,
Foster,	Totzke,
Grimmer,	Veniot,
Hocken,	Young (Weyburn).—68.
Jenkins,
Johnston (Long Lake),
Kaiser,
King (Kootenay East),

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. SPEAKER: I declare the amendment lost. The hour for private bills being exhausted, the house will now revert to supply. Third reading of this bill cannot now be moved unless it is by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENS: Question.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Trade and Commerce—administration of the Copper Bounties Act, 1923, $250.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, if the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) will be good enough to ask one of his colleagues nearer the centre of the chamber to exchange places with him it will be a great deal more convenient for all members to keep in touch with his estimates.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. GARDINER: On how many tons was bounty paid last year?

Mr. MALCOLM: On 6,923,476 pounds, at half a cent, amounting to $51,925.

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Chairman, this is an important item and we should like to hear what is going on. If there was less talking we should be able to follow the various items; otherwise they are inaudible to us down here.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Item agreed to.

British and foreign news service, $32,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. MALCOLM: This is the same amount as has been voted in former years to provide Reuter's News Service. The service has been supplied continuously since August 1923 at the same amount per annum. At the end of September 1927 eight monthly payments of $2,666 had been made. There is an agreement covering it. The agreement with Reuter's is dated June, 1923. The service was for three years, commencing August 1, 1923, and terminating July 31, 1926, the payments to be made at the rate of $2,666 per month, or a total of $32,000 per annum. The contract has been extended twice. The first time it was extended two months to the end of September and later it was extended from October 1, 1926, to the end of the fiscal year, both extensions on the same terms as originally. I have a memorandum covering the agreement with Reuters in the matter of publicity. If the committee is anxious to have it I can read it.

Mr. LUCAS: What is nature of the service?

Mr. MALCOLM: Probably it might be easier to read a summary of the service in the past year. That will give the committee a better idea.

During 1927, 4,260 separate news items were sent by cable or mail direct to Great Britain for distribution by Reuters to practically every British publication, as well as for re-transmission, where the news interest justified, to continental and other news agencies. The total number of cabled items was 2,203, of which 624 dealt directly with matters of trade and industrial development in Canada. These items included also the speeches of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales and Premier Baldwin during their Canadian visit, and which constituted the very best possible advertising for Canada. The total cable wordage was 155,748, or approximately 18,000 words in excess of contract requirements. The mail wordage, covering semi-weekly budgets of news and trade items to Great Britain and monthly budgets to the overseas dominions of Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India, totalled nearly 500,000 words. This mail service was distributed, through Reuters, to every leading newspaper in Great Britain and the overseas dominions. A special weekly cable letter was sent, averaging approximately 600 words, dealing especially with a review of Canadian trade and commercial conditions, and this weekly review went to all Reuter subscribers, and also to all Canadian trade agents abroad and to a large list of complimentary recipients designated by the Canadian High Commissioner's office in London.

All important government bulletins dealing with crop reports, employment conditions, immigration statistics and financial and trade matters were cabled to London in sufficient detail to meet all requirements of official Canadian representatives overseas and thus save the expense which previously obtained of special departmental forwarding by cable of these reports.

Mr. SHORT: When this vote was up last year, was it not arranged to reduce it? There was some discussion last year on that item.

Mr. MALCOLM: That reduction was made but the amount was added in the supplementary estimates, so that the item was left as it was in former years.

Items agreed to.

The Canada Grain Act—administration, $1,860,555.

Mr. MILLAR: Is the grain research laboratory included in this vote?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. DONNELLY: What revenue is obtained from the inspection of grain?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Perhaps the minister would give the revenue and expenditure.

Mr. MALCOLM: For the past year I have the revenue up to January 31; I have not the figures for the months of February and March. In 1926-27 the receipts were $1,582,807, and the expenditures $1,580,258. There was a surplus of $2,548. For the past year the receipts, as far as I have them—they are not completed yet—were $1,297,000 and the expenditures $1,421,000. This represents a deficit of $124,000. This was due to the reduction in last year's estimates in the amount asked by the Board of Grain Commissioners for the administration of the act. Subsequently, as hon members will recall, we had to vote an additional sum to make up that deficit.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is some complaint from the millers and bakers in the old country in regard to the grade of grain they are receiving. Has the minister the memorandum in that connection?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have not the memorandum, but it was forwarded to the agriculture committee and was printed in the proceedings.

Mr. COOTE: It would facilitate the passing of the item if the minister would give us the details of the main items in it. There is a considerable increase this year and perhaps the minister will be good enough to explain it.

Mr. MALCOLM: The estimated expenditure for the current year is typical of the expenditure every year. The board are asking this year $1,759,000. They estimate that it will be necessary to have 651 employees, with 308 extra seasonal employees. The estimated expenditure on salaries is $1,584,000—I am not giving the odd dollars—and travelling expenses for the board, $13,300. Rentals amount to $64,843; printing and stationery, $30,000; and general expenses of administration, $67,365. This is about on a par with every other year. There is little change in any item except in regard to the total salary list, which varies according to conditions and the amount of crop handled.

Mr. SHORT: The amount asked for here is $355,955 more than last year's vote. I presume there is a reason for this.

Mr. MALCOLM: The amount asked last year by the Board of Grain Commissioners was reduced by the treasury board, and when I asked the house for the additional amount in the supplementaries I explained that it was a mistake to reduce the vote inasmuch as the crop required all that was estimated. In addition to that there was a further estimate by the board for the next year for the reason that they were short of money. Part of that, I believe, is to be used for additional work in the laboratories in Winnipeg. It is rather a difficult matter to go into exact details as to how they arrive at the estimate, but if they do overestimate, the money comes back to the treasury in the form of a surplus.

Mr. MILLAR: There is a small expenditure I am going to ask the minister to consider. In the select standing committee on agriculture, when we were inquiring into the grading of grain, a very valuable map was presented indicating where strong wheat is grown in the three prairie provinces. It was a map the preparation of which must have taken considerable time and labour, and the committee expressed a wish to have it published. I would ask the minister to see that that is done, because this map would be of great value to the farmers.

Mr. SPENCER: I would like to ask the minister if the administration of this act, heavy though it is, is not met year by year on an average by the charges paid by the producers of grain?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think I can give my friend a favourable answer, because there seems to be a misapprehension in the minds of some people that tremendous surpluses do obtain. Actual surpluses do result, but the equipment and premises of the Board of Grain Commissioners and the cost of civil government here in Ottawa are not charged to this vote; no interest or depreciation is charged on the properties used by the Board of Grain Commissioners, but they have figured it out roughly that the surpluses which have resulted during the past ten or fifteen years would just about provide for the cost of civil government, for a depreciation charge and a fair interest rate on the amount invested. During some years there has been a decided deficit; in other years there have have been surpluses, but the statement by the board is that over a period of years the return from inspection fees charged the producer can be said to cover all charges plus a reasonable interest charge on the equipment.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to support the request made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) that the protein map which has been prepared by Doctor Birchard during the past year should be printed and made available for distribution. In the past too much of the work done by our laboratory has been buried in the files of the Board of Grain Commissioners. The farmers of western Canada would appreciate very much some information in regard to the protein content of their wheat. I know of no better way in which they can get that information than by the printing and distribution of this map.

While I am on my feet I would also suggest to the minister that he urge the Board of Grain Commissioners to give careful consideration to the question of grading garnet wheat. Up to the present time the board have ruled that garnet wheat is not eligible to be graded No. 1 northern, but I think the evidence given before the agriculture committee by the Dominion cerealist goes to show that garnet wheat is equal in quality to marquis wheat, so I think it is time it became eligible to be graded No. 1 northern. I think too much propaganda has been carried on in this country to discourage farmers from growing anything but marquis wheat, because there are some districts that are entirely unsuited to that wheat. Because of that fact and because farmers have stuck to marquis wheat in districts to which it was not suited, we have had a great deal of low grade wheat during late years. They should be allowed to grow the wheat best adapted to their particular locality. I think it must be admitted that we cannot expect one variety of wheat to be suitable all over the large area now devoted to the growing of wheat in western Canada. I think garnet wheat is very suitable in many localities, and if it is equal in quality to marquis wheat it is to be regretted that the Board of Grain Commissioners have not allowed it to be graded No. 1 northern.

I would like to bring another matter to the attention of the minister; I refer to the necessity for providing more commodious quarters for the use of the grain inspector at Calgary. I have been in there several times during the busy season when I have found fifteen or twenty men in that one little room, two men actually grading wheat, several assistants helping them and a great many grain men looking after their car samples. The place is altogether too small; this is a very important matter and I think we could afford to provide better quarters for the grain inspectors. I would also suggest that we need more than two inspectors at Calgary; after all, the grading of wheat is largely a matter of opinion, and I do not think it wise that two men should have to grade 500 cars of wheat in one day. They cannot give it the time it really requires. The additional expense involved in providing one or two other inspectors at that point would be a mere bagatelle.

I would ask the minister to interest himself in the question of the interchange of inspectors between different inspection points. In the past we have had one inspector stationed at Calgary for several years at a time; he was never out of that office during the grading season except for meals and to sleep, and never had another inspector to consult with except possibly the chief inspector, who paid him a visit on an average of once a year. If we are ever to get away from a lot of dissatisfaction which now exists in connection with the grading of grain it must be done by securing uniformity in the grading system, and I do not think we can do that in any better way than by an interchange of inspectors between Calgary, Winnipeg and Fort William. If the inspectors at Calgary were allowed to have two weeks at Winnipeg and two weeks at Fort William during the busy season, while some men from Fort William or Winnipeg took their places at Calgary, I think it would go a long way in securing uniformity in the grading carried on at these points. I would also suggest that the inspectors at some of the terminal elevators at Fort William be sent to Winnipeg and other prairie points and that inspectors from those points take the vacant places at Fort William for a month or so at a time. If possible we would like to see the wheat which is graded out of the terminals at Fort William equal to the average of the grades at the initial inspection points. We are told that that is impossible, but the board should endeavour to come as near to it as possible, and I think that cannot be done in a better way than by an interchange of these inspectors. This will involve some small expense, but I am sure the benefits which would accrue from such an interchange would more than pay for the expense involved. There have been seasons in the past when a good deal of the wheat shipped by the farmers graded one grade higher at Winnipeg than at some other point, and that is what has caused so much dissatisfaction which I am sure the minister is anxious to overcome. I only ask him that he impress this upon the Board of Grain Commissioners because they always say that it will cost a good deal, and they would have to secure the consent of the department. I feel sure that if the minister would assure the board that they could have the extra money to pay travelling expenses, the committee would gladly vote the additional sum required. It has been said that the inspectors would object, but I am sure they would be glad to have the opportunity of securing this added experience, and I am confident that the members of this committee would vote them the money for travelling expenses and pocket money which would compensate them for being away from home for three or four weeks during the rush season. Personally I think this is a very important matter, and I hope the minister will assure the board that as far as the expense is concerned they need not be deterred from at least making this experiment of exchanging the inspectors.

Mr. MALCOLM: I can assure my hon. friend that my attitude towards this act and the administration expenses involved is that it is of interest only to the producers of grain, because it is paid for by them. Parliament provides the money and the producer pays what parliament provides, in the way of fees.

Regarding the quality of grading on garnet wheat, I should like to point out to my hon. friend that the agriculture committee, now studying a reference to it on grain grading, might very well express the views of that committee on this subject to the house. I shall be very glad to give my advice to the Board of Grain Commissioners, and I am very glad to take advice from men in this house who are interested in the grain business, and who are actual producers. We look on this act as a measure to be administered for the interests of the producers and we are guided at all times by what the producers want.

As to the quarters at Calgary not being adequate, I shall be very glad to bring that to the attention of the board.

The question of the interchange of inspectors involves taking the inspectors away from home and paying their upkeep, because they will have to be quartered in the places they are sent to. Whether or not that is a justifiable expense, I think, after all, remains pretty much with the people who pay the expenses, in the form of fees, that is, the producers. I am very glad to have my hon. friend's opinion, because it has always been represented to me that the advantages in the exchange of inspectors would not be commensurate with the expense involved. I see the point that my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) is trying to make. An inspector who has probably spent all his life in the inspection of grain at Calgary might not appreciate the grading of grain as it is done at the head of the lakes or at Winnipeg. If he had a broader outlook on the grades from various areas he might be a better inspector when he returned home. On the other hand, that man might become a specialist regarding the particular districts he was in, and he might know exactly what he could get for the grades from that district. He might be a better inspector, by virtue of his length of service in that particular district, than if he came there from some other district where different conditions obtained. I shall be glad to take that matter up with the board, and if the house feels that the additional expense involved in exchanging these men from the head of the lakes to the prairie points is to the general advantage of the producers, I shall be glad to recommend it.

Mr. BROWN: I am not sure that the producers as such have decided that such a move would be advantageous. Uniformity in grading would be undoubtedly a very desirable thing to secure, but I can see where the lack of uniformity that might result at a given point through the interchange of inspectors would be just as much to be deplored as the lack of uniformity between two given points, say Calgary and Winnipeg. I have no doubt that the hon. member for Macleod has merely been expressing his own personal opinion in regard to that matter. I am not sure that any committee or any organized body has ever come to the conclusion that such an interchange would be desirable. Any result by way of benefit that might be secured from such an interchange is highly problematical at the present time. If it were once determined that such a change would be beneficial and advantageous to the producer, and would bring about greater uniformity in grading, the matter of expense would be entirely a secondary consideration. For myself I have not yet been convinced that such an interchange is desirable.

Mr. MALCOLM: I might tell the hon. member for Lisgar that several of the points taken up by the hon. member for Macleod are now under discussion in the agriculture committee. If this point is discussed in the agriculture committee, I should like to have the guidance of those particularly interested in the administration of the act.

Mr. BROWN: The subcommittee is considering some of the points mentioned by the hon. member for Macleod. He is a member of that committee, and I think the proper way to do would be to allow that committee to come to a conclusion before presenting it in this house.

Mr. DONNELLY: While I have no objection whatever to the printing and publication of the map referred to by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar), showing the protein content of wheat in the different parts of the west, we must all bear in mind that the protein content of wheat during the past year has been very unusual. It was not a normal year and it will not give a correct idea of the protein content of wheat in a normal year. It would be well for the minister to bear in mind that we should have a map of that kind printed from year to year for the information of the growers of wheat, and I think a certain amount should be laid aside every year for the production of a map of this kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DONNELLY: I want to draw the minister's attention to something that was brought out in the agriculture committee regarding the inspection of grain at our transfer houses on the lakes. Both our commissioners and our inspectors hinted that there might be a certain amount of mixing done in these transfer houses, in fact they told us that they thought there was some mixing done. Mixing is legal, and is allowed to be done at Fort William and at our private elevators there, but once the wheat is graded, and it is never graded again, mixing should not be allowed. It would be well for the minister to take the matter up with his commissioners, or with those who are looking after the grading of wheat, with a view to seeing that proper inspectors are put at these lake ports and transfer houses in order to prevent mixing.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I think I would go farther than that. Not only would I put proper inspectors down there, but I would have these people forbidden to do any mixing whatever in those transfer houses. The inspection certificate has already been given when it is graded out from Fort William, and I do not think anyone should be allowed to mix grain in the transfer houses. You will have to have somebody there to watch that it is not mixed, but we certainly should not allow it to be done.

Mr. MILLAR: Has consideration been given to the question of installing the research laboratory at Winnipeg in a building owned by the government? I understand the building rented for that purpose is being enlarged, or altered in some way, and it will seriously interfere with the work of the research laboratory. This same thing may occur again and again. Would it not be wise to have this laboratory installed in a building by itself?

Mr. MALCOLM: At present the laboratory is in the Grain Exchange building, which is a convenient location for all those in the grain business. It is very convenient for the inspection and distribution of samples. The question of erecting a building to take care of this work has been put before us, but after looking into it we found that the expense involved, as well as the inconvenience of location, did not justify it. Therefore we did not recommend it to the house, but rather recommended the enlarging and the perfecting of the offices in the present quarters.

Mr. COOTE: I have a few points I should like to mention to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). He lives in a district where I presume all the grain is shipped to and graded at the same point year after year. In the district in which I live, possibly half our wheat is shipped west and half shipped east. Very often when we ship several cars, knowing it is all the same kind of wheat, the cars going west get a different grade from those going to Winnipeg. It got so bad in one year, I think 1925—I am only speaking from memory—that the farmers held a meeting in one of the towns in my constituency to discuss this very matter, and they passed a resolution stating that they would not ship any wheat west until the grading system at Calgary was remedied. Several farmers there stated that they were willing to take their affidavit that they had taken a sample of wheat, sent one-half of it to Winnipeg and the other half to Calgary, and that in every case the sample sent to Calgary received a grade lower than the sample sent to Winnipeg. Those of us who have had this experience have become firmly convinced that we should have an interchange of inspectors. By the time an inspector has had a month's experience of Winnipeg grading with perhaps fifteen or twenty other inspectors and has had a week's experience at Fort William he will have seen the grade that the great percentage of wheat in western Canada is receiving. He may have been used to grading only Alberta wheat, which is after all of a different type from the bulk of the wheat shipped through Winnipeg. In some of the grades of wheat there is a difference between the average sample at Calgary and at Winnipeg of seven pounds to the bushel, and a man who is grading that heavy wheat all the time is very apt to become more severe in fixing the grade than a man at Winnipeg would be. That is why we are asking for an interchange of inspectors. As long as we are in the position where one-half of our wheat is being graded say at Calgary and the other half at Winnipeg, we see the result of the lack of uniformity, and it is necessary to endeavour to do away with the dissatisfaction which exists in the minds of the farmers in regard to the grading system. We should at least make a trial of an interchange of inspectors to see whether that would bring about more uniformity than we have at the present time. I do not see how we are going to find out what the effect will be, whether it will do any good or not, unless we try it out. I do not see how it can do any harm. I wish to thank the minister for the very fair way in which he has referred to the matter, and I assure him that the great majority of farmers in Alberta at any rate are very anxious to see this given a trial. We firmly believe that it would help to do away with the discrepancy which often exists between the grading at Calgary and Edmonton and the grading at Winnipeg. In one season, not the one to which I referred before, the grading at one of the western points was so much lower than at Winnipeg and they had so many complaints that I understand the chief inspector went out there and stayed a week in an endeavour to get the grading of that office on a par with the grading which was being done at Winnipeg.

Mr. EVANS: The efforts in western Canada seems to be to select a rust-proof wheat and many varieties have been propagated with that end in view. Some of these give very good yields but they have not the quality of marquis or red fyfe wheat. I find that Bill No. 188 provides for a number of other grades like these varieties so that each will have its intrinsic value, but I should like to point out that if these softer wheats are mixed with the harder varieties at Fort William or Port Arthur, the price of No. 1 northern, No. 2 northern, will be still lower in the markets of the world, particularly in Great Britain where it is brought into competition with wheats from other parts of the world. I should like to know if some means will be taken to prevent these other varieties from being mixed with No. 1 and No. 2 northern at Fort William or Port Arthur.

Mr. GARDINER' What progress is being made with the research laboratory? How many employees are there at the present time?

Mr. MALCOLM: Is my hon. friend referring to the grain research laboratory at Winnipeg?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry I cannot give him the details of that because I do not have them before me. My recollection is that the estimated amount of expenditure for the current year is somewhere between $25,000 and $30,000. It is larger than last year. They are extending the service and they are continuing the very work that the hon. member referred to a moment ago, namely, rust research. I might also say that the problem that the national institute of research is going to face is the very problem that was spoken of by the hon. member for Macleod, namely, that of trying to find varieties of wheat that will be suitable to certain soils that exist in Western Canada. Every man who has thought of the matter at all realizes that western Canada no longer means any one small province. The wheat is not all Manitoba wheat. As the map is rolled backward there are conditions existing that did not exist ten years ago and the application of the knowledge acquired by the research department as to what wheat will suit certain areas is of vast importance to the producers and to Canada as a whole. The question of research on rust, like the question of research on any disease, is one that has to be dealt with. I believe the work of the laboratory at Winnipeg will be further supplemented by the work of the national institute here, and everyone in the house and in the country is extremely anxious that further researches shall go on from time to time in connection with this important matter.

Mr. BROWN: The cereal division of the Department of Agriculture is making the research referred to by the hon. member from Macleod.

Mr. LUCAS: Has there been any report by the research laboratory at Winnipeg in regard to the work being done there?

Mr. MALCOLM: There has not been any report since the one received last summer, I think that report was submitted to the agriculture committee and is incorporated in its minutes. There is a new report for circulation now in press.

Mr. EVANS: Is any provision made in the estimates this year for the establishment of stopover and inspection points other than Winnipeg, for instance, Moose Jaw or Saskatoon?

Mr. MALCOLM: Nothing further has been provided in the estimates than for the established points.

Mr. EVANS: Is there a stopover and inspection point at Moose Jaw?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Is there an appropriation in the estimates to carry that on as an inspection point?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think that is included in the general estimate of the board.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. EVANS: Will the minister say why an inspection point has been established at Moose Jaw and who asked for it?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have not the information in front of me, because it is not a subject that comes up ordinarily, but there was a considerable demand for it and there is a considerable demand now for further inspection in Saskatchewan. The Minister of Agriculture has, I think, the correspondence with reference to the matter and he had the correspondence with reference to the establishment of a point at Moose Jaw. It all came up before I was in charge of the department.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I know something of the history of the establishment of an inspection point at Moose Jaw. For some fifteen years the people of the southern part of Saskatchewan, the southeastern part of Alberta and that part of the country north and west of Moose Jaw have been agitating for an inspection point there. That agitation finally came to the House of Commons; meetings were held by several members from western Canada along with the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, and it was decided to establish a grain inspection point at Moose Jaw. Finally, that grain inspection point was established last year. The results have been very satisfactory to all the people in that part of the country. A good deal of grain has been inspected there during the past year, and practically all the united farmer organizations in the country are asking that that inspection be extended at the present time. The wheat pool of Saskatchewan have had all their grain passing through Moose Jaw inspected at the Moose Jaw point, and they have made the statement on more than one occasion that it has been of great value to them, and that they have been saved a considerable amount of money through having that grading done at the inspection point in Moose Jaw. The inspection there is a safeguard against the grain being unloaded into the elevators at the lakes before reinspection can be made. With the faster movement of grain in western Canada to-day, we have found that a car may be inspected in Winnipeg, and before the report on that car can be sent back to the shipper, the car can be landed in Fort William and unloaded. It takes a very short time to move a car from Winnipeg to Fort William. But with inspection further west, the grade can be sent back to the producer or to his agent, and a reinspection can be ordered in plenty of time to have it made at Fort William. The pool have found that this has saved them a great deal of money this year, and all those who have used the Moose Jaw point are very well satisfied with it, and are now asking that all grain passing through there shall be inspected. I believe that the farmers' organizations in Saskatchewan are asking to have the same facilities provided at Saskatoon. The Alberta pool have had practically all their grain passing through Moose Jaw inspected there, and they have had the officers of the Saskatchewan wheat pool act as their agents at that inspection point, and also act for them in the calling for reinspection.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I may say to my hon. friend from Rosetown, on behalf of those whom I have the honour to represent and those in that area, that I have already asked, not only this year but before, that an inspection and order point be established at Saskatoon. I am fortified in that request by the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section. I would also like to say that I agree entirely with what the hon. member for Moose Jaw has just said with respect to what the pool has found at Moose Jaw. It is believed that the inspection of grain at these two points will unquestionably be of great interest to the producers in these areas. While I do not think that this is the time when we need discuss it very fully, I rise just to say that the matter has received and is receiving consideration, and I hope it will continue to receive favourable consideration by those who have finally to deal with it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have no objection personally to an inspection point, compulsory or otherwise, being established at Moose Jaw, provided it applies to the grain of the Saskatchewan people, but until there has been a request from those who are the growers in Alberta I do not think it would be either wise or proper to compel growers like my hon. friend from Macleod or my hon. friend from Acadia or myself to have our grain compulsorily inspected passing through Moose Jaw. The principle is wrong, aside altogether from the economics of it, and I submit that the minister will be well advised when taking into consideration, favourably or otherwise, the representations of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, the hon. member for Saskatoon, or anybody else, to remember that there are also other interests besides those in Saskatchewan. I have no objection whatever to the Saskatchewan producers having their grain inspected at Moose Jaw if they so wish, but so far as Alberta is concerned I think that the question must be submitted to the growers there first.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to say a word on this particular point, because it touches the very principle of the operation of the Grain Act. What my hon. friend from Bow River has just said sounds very plausible until it is examined in its relationship to the practical movement and inspection of grain at the present time. If what my hon. friend says were to be the principle applied, it would also involve that those shippers from Saskatchewan who are now shipping to Vancouver would be able to demand Vancouver inspection instead of Calgary inspection. As things exist at the present time, every grain inspection point is a compulsory inspection point for all the grain passing through there, except with regard to Moose Jaw. With regard to Moose Jaw, for reasons which I need not discuss at this stage, but which the minister can and will explain, the arrangement was made to start with that the inspection there would be voluntary, but during all the years of the Calgary inspection, even prior to the years when Edmonton inspection came into use, all grain passing through Calgary was required to be inspected at Calgary. I have rather a vivid memory of its operation because there were in the early days of Calgary inspection many Saskatchewan shippers who, strange as it may seem, preferred Vancouver inspection, inspection at the port, rather than having their grain inspected at Calgary, but there was no help for them.

I submit that the principle advocated by my hon. friend from Bow River, satisfactory as it may sound, cannot work in practice unless it is universally applied, and if it were universally applied, that is, if every shipper had the right to choose the point at which his particular car should be inspected, that would undoubtedly involve very great difficulties in the matter of transportation and undoubtedly increase the cost of handling the cars. In fact, one of the arguments for changing the present system at Moose Jaw to the system which is in vogue elsewhere is that very fact—the transportation economics of the situation. Under the present system of voluntary inspection a trainload of cars comes into Moose Jaw, and half or three-quarters of those cars are inspected at Moose Jaw. That means that the train must be split, and the remainder of the cars have to be carried on, or else the cars which need not be delayed for inspection at Moose Jaw are in fact delayed there, and delayed again at Winnipeg for the inspection which takes place there. I do not believe it will be practicable from a transportation standpoint very long to operate a voluntary system of inspection anywhere. If we have inspection points we must expect, as a matter of practical transportation economics, that the grain passing through those points will be inspected there. I would go this far with my hon. friend, however, that the reinspection privilege would thereby be widened. The inspection at Moose Jaw of grain coming eastward from Alberta, to the extent that it does come eastward from Alberta, rather increases the chances of the owner of the grain on reinspection. In my own experience in the business I know that very frequently it has happened, with the speeding up of transportation in recent years, that inspections made at Winnipeg in the rush season—the rush, remember, not only in the inspection, but in the offices getting out the slips to the shippers or their agents—would involve your receiving notice that the car on which you are applying for reinspection at Fort William had been unloaded before the request for reinspection arrived there, whereas inspection nearer the point of origin gives the shipper of the grain a greater length of time in which to appeal for reinspection. Surely there would be no more reason why non-compulsory inspection should be practised at Moose Jaw than that there should be compulsory inspection at Calgary, Edmonton or Winnipeg. I think the advocacy of hon. members on this side of the house and in the opposite corner of an interchange of grain inspectors is much more to the point with regard to securing uniformity of grading than any question of compulsory or non-compulsory grading at a particular point. As we look to the future we must of necessity contemplate the possibility of more points in western Canada at which inspection will be made. When the Hudson bay route opens up for traffic, there is no question about it, we must arrange some point for the inspection of grain convenient as a funnel to that route, and there is a great deal to be said in favour of inspection points both at Moose Jaw and at Saskatoon. Naturally the minister desires to go slowly in matters of this kind. I am not one of those who believe we will ever need to go outside of the present points, plus Saskatoon and some point in the future which would be the funnel for the Hudson bay line. I think those points would very naturally comply with all the requirements of western producers; I do not think there would be any necessity to go any wider than that; but I think within the next five years we shall reach that point where there will be inspection at Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Hudson Bay junction, Calgary, Edmonton, and the usual terminal inspection at Winnipeg, Vancouver, Prince Rupert, and Fort William and Port Arthur.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Chairman, as the representative of that portion of the country northwest of Moose Jaw, I can assure the minister that the farmers are looking forward with a great deal of satisfaction to Moose Jaw becoming a compulsory inspection point. I think the reason given by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) are sufficient. We have found on many occasions, just as he has stated, that before we can get word through for reinspection the car has gone forward and it is impossible to secure reinspection. The hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) pointed out to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) the very thing that I was on my feet to tell him. I happen to be situated just on the dividing line, and our wheat goes west or it goes east. If it goes west, we in that part of Saskatchewan have to submit to its being graded at Calgary. When you consider that 50 per cent of the wheat that is grown in the three prairie provinces originates in Saskatchewan, I think it will be conceded that we are at least entitled to some recognition. I am heartily behind the establishment of compulsory points both at Saskatoon and Moose Jaw.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Probably the minister could give us information as to how many cars of wheat have passed through Moose Jaw in a given season, and as to how many of those cars have been inspected, and how many have been reinspected either at Winnipeg or Fort William. Since the load limit of a car has increased during the last few years, it is impossible to inspect some cars of wheat until it is unloaded. If the minister has this information it will be valuable to us in determining whether Moose Jaw has been taken full advantage of as an inspection point.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry that I cannot give my hon. friend the number of cars that have passed through Moose Jaw, but about 16,000 cars were inspected there during the last crop season.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Returning for the moment, Mr. Chairman, to the Moose Jaw inspection division, the Minister of Railways drew an unfair illustration. The situation with respect to Moose Jaw and the situation with respect to Calgary are not analogous. For this reason: if you are shipping your grain east, and you have inspection at Winnipeg, then you have a long distance between Winnipeg and Fort William during which you can receive your certificate and check your grading. The same with Calgary; any grain going through there has to be hauled five or six hundred miles before it reaches Vancouver, and the shipper has a chance to check up. But Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton are the only points on each side of the dividing line.

Now as to the minister's other point, leaving aside for the moment the question of transportation difficulties, personally I would have no objection whatever to Calgary being a voluntary point. If a farmer is foolish enough to want his grain inspected at Vancouver, all right. Of course that raises the problem of storage and holding of cars, which is a serious matter from the transportation point of view. So I say with respect to Moose Jaw, it should not be made a compulsory point; let those who want it have their grain inspected there. Again this other question comes to my mind. Inspection points were asked for at Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Le Pas and everywhere else. Le Pas may be in a different position; it is a final point of inspection before reaching the terminal.

Mr. DUNNING: No, there will be terminal facilities at Churchill exactly as there are at Vancouver.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister knows what I mean. I speak of Winnipeg or Calgary as being the last points at which inspection is made in order to get a check. So Le Pas would stand in the same relation to Churchill as Winnipeg does to Fort William. Inspection at Saskatoon and Moose Jaw is not a good thing until you have more mechanized and made perfect the grading of grain. The more inspection points you have the more you create room for dissatisfaction and discord among the farmers as to whether they are getting fair grades or not. It has been our experience in Alberta that if we ship samples to Calgary, Edmonton and everywhere else we get entirely different grades. The same would hold true with respect to Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, and you would get into a state of hopeless confusion and the whole inspection system would be discredited.

Mr. VALLANCE: How could that occur? If your car was inspected at Calgary westbound or at Moose Jaw eastbound, that same car would not be inspected at Winnipeg.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I was speaking of submitting samples at the various inspection points. Many farmers before shipping a car take the precaution of shipping samples. We get three or four different grades.

An hon. MEMBER: You get them anyway.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes; but why intensify the problem? Let us first improve our grading system.

Mr. VALLANCE: You are assuming that your one car should go through only one point. You are not eliminating the danger.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But you are multiplying the possibility of human error in the grading of grain.

Mr. VALLANCE: Not at all. It goes through one, not two or three.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is quite right; but the hon. member is not as dense as he appears to be by his statement. He knows exactly what I mean.

Mr. VALLANCE: That is pretty smart.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): He wants that inspection at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon.

Mr. VALLANCE: We want it compulsory.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): All right, I say frankly to the minister if these points are absolutely needed to protect the interests of the growers of grain, I for one will raise no objection; but I do ask him to take the greatest precaution before he brings any more new inspection points into being, especially compulsory points. We have a multiplicity of them, increasing on demand from time to time as the trade grows. There were reasons for this when the trade was growing rapidly, but there has to be a limit. I notice that the hon. member (Mr. Vallance) makes an interjection to the effect that he knows what I mean. I am so glad he got the point before I sat down.

Mr. VALLANCE: I absolutely resent the implications of the hon. member for Bow River. He is trying to suggest that by having five or six inspection points instead of three we shall get rid of the evil. But your wheat is inspected if it goes through one point and one point alone. If it were to go through five instead of three, as he would try to make some believe, I could see the logic of his argument. It must go through one—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Certainly.

Mr. VALLANCE: —whether you have five or ten.

Mr. IRVINE: Does the minister know whether or not the Saskatchewan pool has expressed any opinion on the question before the committee?

Mr. MALCOLM: The Minister of Agriculture has received a great many representations on behalf of the producers in Saskatchewan urging that, Moose Jaw be created an order point, which is what this means. I personally have not seen the representations, nor have I as minister, up to the present time, recommended that these various orders points be created. There is one thing that I want to say on this subject, and it is this. I believe that familiarity with grading, if the grading is properly done, does create a certain confidence in the minds of the producers; and the chairman of the board, discussing the subject with me some time ago, made the statement that there was one benefit that did accrue from voluntary inspection during the past season, and that was that the farmers themselves in great numbers were enabled to visit the place and see the inspection of their grain. As a result they did feel that they were getting good inspection. They felt a confidence in the inspectors which they did not have when the inspection was done at points further away.

I thoroughly agree with what my hon. friend from Bow River says. Personally as minister I do not want to see too many inspection points, but I do believe with the hon. member for Macleod that, with an exchange of inspectors, it is not likely that you will have a greater variety of grading at five points than at three. You are just as likely to have irregularities in the human judgment of grain in three points as in five. There is no particular reason to assume that the man you have in Moose Jaw will degrade or upgrade grain any more than the man at Winnipeg or Calgary or Vancouver. I do not believe you can possibly expect to have anything but a variety of standards if you multiply the inspection points to too great an extent. But I believe with the hon. member for Macleod that with a proper exchange you can handle all the principal points we need. And I believe with the Minister of Railways that the day will come—whether that day has arrived or not I am not prepared to say—when we shall probably have to have an inspection point for the outlet of the funnel at Hudson bay and one or two more inspection points in Saskatchewan. Beyond that, however, I do not see any need for more points in Canada.

Mr. COOTE: I think one most important point has been entirely overlooked in connection with the multiplicity of inspection points. If you establish compulsory inspection points at all these places mentioned you will compel all the grain companies and pools to maintain agencies at those various points in order that they might have their own representatives there to inspect the grain. That means considerable expense; it means an increase in the expense of the inspection department. For these two reasons there is an objection to compulsory grading being established at Moose Jaw. There is ground for compulsory inspection at Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton, and when we begin to use the Hudson bay route there will have to be a compulsory point on that line. These are points outside the producing territory and they will get all the wheat that is being sent either to the head of the lakes, or to Hudson bay or to the Pacific ocean. In my judgment it is necessary to have compulsory inspection at those points, so that before the cars reach the terminal elevators the railway company will know the result in regard to each one of the cars. But on account of the expense involved to the people interested, in Moose Jaw particularly, they should be willing to go slow there in this matter. It will mean a great deal of expense, and we know by experience that all these expenses fall ultimately on the producer, and are taken out of the price of his wheat. That is the real basic objection to the establishment of more compulsory points. We cannot very well object to voluntary inspection at these points, and as a matter of fact, the interior terminal elevators are located at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon and there must be one inspector anyway at each of these places. So that no one can object to voluntary inspection there. But we should go slow about establishing too many compulsory points.

Mr. DUNNING: I wonder whether my hon. friend, who has presented his argument fairly, takes into account when considering the question of expense to the grain companies, the fact that that expense goes on whether or not the inspection is compulsory. If the inspection is voluntary, the expense of maintaining the necessary men to check the samples is just as great as if the inspection were made compulsory and all cars passing through were inspected. I know something about the cost of maintaining such a checking system and I can assure my hon. friend that the cost of infinitesimal to the grain company to maintain the checking of its grades at any point where grading is done. There is always an additional expense to the inspection department to the extent to which additional inspectors are required. One would think, to hear this discussion, that inspection at Saskatoon and Moose Jaw was a new thing. Millions of bushels have been inspected at both these places in the last number of years, particularly in seasons of off-grade crops, when both terminal elevators have been required to handle the crops and the farmers have desired inspection there. As a matter of fact, they had to have it for their grain going into storage temporarily in the interior terminal elevators; and if you admit inspection at all, there is very little difference, in the expense to those handling the grain, as between voluntary and compulsory inspection.

My hon. friend from Wetaskiwin asked a question with respect to the pool. The best answer I can give regarding the pool's attitude towards Moose Jaw inspection is the fact that in spite of inspection at Moose Jaw being voluntary, during the last crop season the wheat pool did have all their cars passing through Moose Jaw inspected there. That is the best evidence that they are satisfied of its value to them in actual operation. My hon. friend from Last Mountain asked a question regarding the number of cars inspected there. According to the last record I saw—I do not know whether the minister has it here tonight—there have been, up to three or four months ago, some 16,000 cars inspected at that point, if memory serves me correctly. It was very widely used.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): How many cars have passed through there?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot say; but my hon. friend will bear in mind the fact that the wheat pool of Saskatchewan controls over 50 per cent of the crop and all their cars were inspected there. All the cars going in that direction were inspected there. At least 50 per cent of the grain grown northwest of, southwest of and west of Moose Jaw must have been inspected there last year—because the pool controls that much—and, in addition, some at any rate of that controlled by ordinary companies in the grain trade. Not all of the ordinary grain companies but most of them opposed that innovation, as they have opposed every innovation that has ever been made in the handling of grain since the inception of the practice.

Mr. DONNELLY: With regard to this inspection of wheat at Moose Jaw I have been and am at present a grower of wheat to some considerable extent, and have shipped wheat from western Canada for a good many years. Most of the wheat from the constituency which I have the honour to represent goes through Moose Jaw, and the people of my constituency are anxious to have this made a compulsory grain inspection point. Of late I have received many communications both from the pool directors and others urging that this action be taken. For the life of me I cannot see why the hon. member for Macleod should be so much interested in the financial welfare of the grain trade. He thinks if Moose Jaw were made a compulsory inspection point they would have to have a man there. I have shipped grain from these points and I am not interested in whether or not they have a man there; they never send a man there unless it is to pick out a few good cars of wheat and send them wherever they please. I do not care whether or not they send a man to Moose Jaw to inspect my grain.

Mr. COOTE: The reason I mentioned the expense was not because I am interested in the grain trade but because I am interested in the Alberta pool. So long as it is voluntary I do not think it will be necessary for the Alberta pool to maintain an office to check the cars, but if you make it compulsory you will compel the Alberta pool to maintain an agency there for that purpose.

Mr. DUNNING: My information is that even now, when it is voluntary, the Alberta pool is using Moose Jaw inspection.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister definite information on that?

Mr. DONNELLY: Perhaps I might complete the remarks I want to make, now that this little talk is over. As a grower of wheat I cannot see that these men should object to some compulsion. I ship wheat east and west; every time my wheat goes through Calgary I am compelled to have it inspected there, and every time it goes through Winnipeg I am compelled to have it inspected there. I do not see why these people should object if a little of their wheat happens to dribble through Moose Jaw and they are compelled to have it inspected. That is not fair play. We grow over fifty per cent of the wheat produced in Saskatchewan, and I should not think they would object if we ask to have a little inspection carried on at this point. To me it looks rather like the dog in the manger. I think we are only asking for our share of the business when we ask that the little wheat they grow be inspected at that point in Saskatchewan.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The hon. member for Macleod asked regarding the inspection of Alberta pool wheat. I was informed by the men who were checking the grades for the Saskatchewan wheat pool, which maintains an office in Moose Jaw occupied by two men and some stenographers, that they were handling the grain which came through there for the Alberta pool. The Minister of Railways stated that all pool cars were inspected in Moose Jaw. All pool cars from pool elevators are inspected in Moose Jaw, but although this house passed an act last year saying that the farmer had the right to designate where his grain should be inspected, the grain trade for which my hon. from Macleod wishes to save money—

Mr. COOTE: I protest against that statement. I have already said that I am not interested in the grain trade, and I think the hon. member is not fair.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Very well; I hope the hon. member is not interested in the grain trade.

Mr. COOTE: Would my hon. friend correct that statement?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I will withdraw the statement, if that is what my hon. friend wants. Although this act was passed last year, the grain trade have not been following the act because when a pool farmer has to ship his grain through a line elevator, the line elevator man takes the stand that once the grain is handed over to him he has the right to say where it shall be inspected. He takes charge of the grain until it is handed over to the pool again at Fort William.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is the hon. member correct in stating that the amendment to the act gave the farmer the right to designate the point of inspection? Did it not rather give him the right to designate the terminal to which the grain should be shipped? That is a different matter.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That is a different matter. I did not intend to say it gave him the right to say where the grain should be inspected; I intended to say that the act gave the farmer the right to designate to what terminal elevator it should go; it gave him the right to send his grain anywhere, but the grain trade are not following that act. Once the grain is taken into a line elevator, even though it belongs to the pool, the line elevator man claims the right to handle that grain as he sees fit until he returns it to the pool at the other end. The result is that all pool grain handled through the line elevators is inspected where the elevator man wishes it to be inspected, and though the pools may wish to have it inspected at Moose Jaw, they cannot force its inspection there.

I want to say a word with regard to the multiplicity of inspection points. I think that is an advantage at times, during the heavy run of grain. In regard to inspection anywhere, the farmer has the right to government inspection of grain, and government inspection in one place is the same as government inspection at another place; at least it should be the same, and as a general rule I believe it is the same or at least very similar at all inspection points. The amount of money it will cost the grain trade to check samples at any of these points does not amount to very much and should not be taken into consideration in view of the fact that the people producing the grain want this service in their part of the country. They have been absolutely satisfied with what they have received so far and they want compulsory inspection so that they will be able to go in and see how their grain is inspected. They want to be able to send samples into this point and have them inspected before they ship their grain, and I do not see why they should not be allowed to have that service if they desire it.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Macleod offer such objections to further grain inspection points. I did not expect that this discussion would be precipitated on this item, but I have letters from the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, and also a letter from the pool to that same organization, saying that in their judgment the matter of inspection points in Saskatchewan is of great interest to the producers of this country.

Mr. SPENCER: That is the Saskatchewan pool?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Yes, and I assume that if it is of interest to the Saskatchewan pool it is of equal interest to the farmers who belong to the Alberta pool and who ship their grain eastward. When we consider the question of expense, which has been suggested, that expense is so small that I do not think any hon. member of this house should consider it for one moment, especially if, by having these points at such a distance from the terminal point, it will insure a reinspection. Surely that is a very small thing for the producer of grain to ask—that he have that inspection as near the point of production as possible, so as to give him as much time as he may desire to have the grain reinspected. So I want to say to-night that as far as I am concerned I will support, on behalf of those men who produce the grain the establishment of compulsory inspection points at Saskatoon and at Moose Jaw.

Mr. EVANS: Notwithstanding all that has been said, I have yet to be convinced that a compulsory inspection point is needed at Moose Jaw. Moose Jaw is one of the most unlikely points that any business man would select as an inspection point for Saskatchewan grain.

Mr. McPHEE: Will my hon. friend say the same thing about Saskatoon?

Mr. EVANS: The Minister of Railways has said that the proper point of inspection is where there is a funnel through which all the grain passes. Moose Jaw is very nearly the dividing line between east and west, and consequently there cannot be any funnel there. It would mean shunting the grain back west from where it is grown. It is the most unlikely and unbusinesslike suggestion of anything I have known in the grain trade. Notwithstanding all that has been said, I challenge this statement regarding the United Farmers of Saskatchewan, and the pool. For the truth in this matter I think we had better let this question stand for another day in order to get these people's opinion.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I made the statement that I had a letter from the United Farmers of Saskatchewan, and I want the hon. member to understand that when I said I had it I did have it. I am going to ask him to be good enough to take that statement back.

Mr. BENNETT: The letter must be produced.

Mr. MALCOLM: I should like to appeal to the committee that this discussion is entirely out of order. It is like the young lady who was nervous about where she was going to get the money to buy her trousseau. Somebody asked her if she was engaged to be married, and she answered, no, but she was afraid she might be. The question of providing money for Moose Jaw or Saskatoon inspection is not in this vote, and the whole discussion is entirely out of order.

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Chairman, I submit that you have allowed discussion from one side, and I surely have the right to answer some of these statements. When this matter came up two years ago I wired the board of trade at Saskatoon inquiring if there was any demand for an inspection point there, and there was no one interested. They did not become interested until the manager of the Quaker Oats Company spoke to them, indicating that he was very much in favour of an inspection point. I can see why the millers would like an inspection point possibly right in the middle of the wheat field. It would enable them to skim the crop a little easier than they are doing at present. They are skimming the wheat in Saskatchewan to-day, and the poorest type of each grade is going on the markets of the world, and that is how our price is based. They are getting the cream of the price that is paid for the lowest type of each grade. I may say that I spoke also to the general manager of the Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Company, which post the Minister of Railways has filled, and he could see no possible reason for an inspection point at Moose Jaw.

Mr. McMILLAN: Would you take the same stand with regard to Saskatoon?

Mr. EVANS: I certainly would. For years I have taken the stand in this house that these points have no business to be established. It is only an expense on the grain trade. I objected to the elevators at Prince Rupert, Victoria and Halifax as being drags on the grain trade. This is another source of expense. I spoke also to the Board of Grain Commissioners, and they assured me that before a compulsory point could be established at Moose Jaw a quarter of a million dollars would have to be expended there for that purpose. I say that an expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars for this purpose is not needed, because the natural inspection point for western grain coming east is at Winnipeg. More than that, I want to tell the minister and some of these Saskatchewan farmers that nearly fifty per cent of the grain loaded last year was loaded in cars which were too full to grade.

Mr. VALLANCE: That is a lot.

Mr. EVANS: It is just enough to knock out altogether an inspection point at Moose Jaw.

Mr. VALLANCE: Were the 17,000 cars inspected at Moose Jaw empty?

Mr. EVANS: They may have been bricks, for all they knew.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): This is a wire addressed to myself at Ottawa:

A. MacG. Young, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Establishment of inspection and order point at Moose Jaw has given such general satisfaction to growers of grain shipping through that point we would urge in the strongest possible manner that an inspection and order point be established in Saskatoon, in order that the same satisfactory service may be provided for growers of grain shipping through Saskatoon.

United Farmers of Canada.
Saskatchewan Section, per W. M. Thrasher,
Secretary.

I also have a letter which is subsequent to that. It is addressed to myself, dated May 11, 1928, and reads as follows:

Dr. A. MacG. Young, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Dear Doctor Young:

As per request contained in your letter of the 4th instant, I wired you giving our stand on the establishment of a grain inspection and order point at Saskatoon. I sincerely trust your efforts in this connection will be successful, as we are advised that the inspection point at Moose Jaw has given satisfaction, particularly to wheat pool members. The wheat pool established an office of their own at that point for the purpose of checking up on inspections, and all pool wheat passing through Moose Jaw was inspected.

I am quite certain that anything you can do toward gaining the same beneficial result for shipping wheat through Saskatoon will be appreciated, not only by our organization, but by the wheat pool as well.

Mr. EVANS: Who signed that letter?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): The United Farmers of Canada, Saskatechewan Section, Limited; W. M. Thrasher, Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. EVANS: I have no knowledge of a resolution passing the convention of the United Farmers of Saskatchewan, or that it has ever passed the board. If W. M. Thrasher has signed that letter, he did so on his own responsibility.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): The hon. member for Rosetown has said something about the board of trade at Saskatoon. If he is interested in the matter, I have a letter here from them dated November 25th, 1927, where they are asking that this thing be done.

Mr. EVANS: That must have been after the manager of the Quaker Oats Company had been there speaking to that body.

[Mr. Evans.]

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I rather expected that the hon. member for Rosetown would oppose this, as he has opposed most everything of interest to that part of the country.

Mr. KELLNER: The Minister of Railways pointed out that the railway companies had a lot of trouble in unscrambling cars. Whether you make it a compulsory point or not, it seems to me that the same situation is going to arise when you get to Winnipeg, because east of Moose Jaw the train would naturally be picking up cars.

Mr. DUNNING: The transportation practice is to have a full train movement right through.

Mr. KELLNER: The minister's contention is that nothing but a full train would leave Saskatoon or Moose Jaw?

Mr. DUNNING: The general practice is a full train load, with the exception of the necessary reduction or increase in the number of cars in the various divisions where the engine capacity is greater on account of lower grades, or smaller on account of steeper grades. As far as full train loads leaving Moose Jaw are concerned, that is and has been the transportation practice for years.

Mr. KELLNER: I think the minister will quite readily agree that there are bound to be times when the train is not loaded to capacity at Moose Jaw and will naturally pick up other cars along the way.

Mr. DUNNING: Very rarely.

Mr. KELLNER: Then you have a different situation there from anywhere else on the prairies. When you get to Winnipeg you have the difference that some of the cars are graded and some are not.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend will surely understand that when the inspection is made at Moose Jaw a solid train will go through to Port Arthur or Fort William. When the inspection is made east of Moose Jaw the cars from various points will be made into a local train. The trains at Moose Jaw will be solid trains if Moose Jaw is made an order point. I have just received some information with regard to the inspection which has already taken place at Moose Jaw and it covers the question of the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) as to the number of cars that were overloaded. From August 1, 1927, to February 28, 1928, the total number of cars inspected at Moose Jaw were 19,934. Two thousand cars were unloaded at Moose Jaw, I presume for their own elevator, and the balance was forwarded to Fort William or Port Arthur. There were also included in the total cars reported as inspected, 7,416 cars of grain which were loaded too full to sample properly. Thus 33.7 per cent of the total inspection at Moose Jaw was only provisional.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister give the committee the number of cars that were inspected at Saskatoon last year?

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not have that.

Mr. DUNNING: That would be only local inspection.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In the first place, may I say how glad I was to hear the minister speak so favourably of the suggestion that there should be an interchange of inspectors at the different points? I am convinced, as are, I think, almost all farmers who have considered the question at all, that uniformity of inspection is one of the most vital necessities in the grain business and we believe that that can best be brought about by the different inspectors having an opportunity of familiarizing themselves with the standards and methods at the different grading points.

I should like to say a word in regard to the laboratory of research. I think the people of our part of Canada are thoroughly sold now as to the value of that laboratory and the research work done therein. There are two things which they would like to impress upon the members of the house, the minister and the country. The first is that they would very much like to see adequate salaries paid to the proper men there. They think, and it is a feeling that prevails generally, that there is a danger of our losing some of our best men through the inadequacy of the remuneration paid to them. They are doing valuable work, work that must be done by men of scientific attainment and expert knowledge, and there is such a thing as being penny wise and pound foolish in dealing with matters of that nature. Any movement towards placing their remuneration on a satisfactory basis would meet with the approbation of all the people who are interested.

More and more the farmers, the producers, who, now that the pools are in operation, are taking a greater and more intelligent interest in commercial problems, are asking that they shall be in a position to acquire the knowledge that is derived through that research; in other words, that when problems have been studied and reports have been made, those reports, the result of that research, the knowledge acquired by those men, shall be at the disposal of those interested. I venture to say that it has not been the general practice in the past to place that information at the disposal of the men who are chiefly interested. I know that in speaking of these two points, I am speaking for the large majority of the more intelligent farmers—and they are becoming more and more intelligent—not only in my own province, but I believe in all the prairie provinces.

Item agreed to.

Management, operation and maintenance of elevators, $577,500.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Might I ask the minister if the cost of the inspection point at Moose Jaw comes under this item? He informed us that it did not come under the other.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is not provided for at all in the estimates. It was not considered.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Perhaps I can get the information under this appropriation. I was wondering what has been the cost of Moose Jaw as an optional inspection point.

Mr. MALCOLM: Moose Jaw as it now exists as an inspection point is included in the existing appropriation. Moose Jaw as an order point, as someone suggested, would entail an additional cost and that is not provided for in this appropriation.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Does the minister know what the extra cost entailed upon his department would be if Moose Jaw were used as an order point?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have not the details.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The minister could not tell us what the extra cost would be if it were made a compulsory order point?

Mr. MALCOLM: Of course not, because I have not considered the matter.

Mr. KELLNER: What elevators does this appropriation cover?

Mr. MALCOLM: Does my hon. friend want the list?

Mr. KELLNER: What I am particularly interested in is whether it covers the Vancouver one.

Mr. MALCOLM: Winnipeg, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton, Halifax.

Mr. KELLNER: It does not cover the Vancouver one?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, it covers the Vancouver house too. It is leased.

Mr. KELLNER: Is the old Woodward elevator at Vancouver under this item?

Mr. MALCOLM: No.

Mr. COOTE: Perhaps the minister would tell us whether the elevators are carrying themselves through their earnings?

Mr. MALCOLM: These elevators are more than carrying themselves. The last statement for 1927 is only up to December 31 and is, as a result of that, probably too favourable, but the revenue up to that time amounted to $752,000 and the expenditure only $350,000.

Mr. COOTE: Is any use being made of the Halifax elevator?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, there has been some use made of it. It will probably be taken over by the Halifax harbour commission on transfer or on a lease similar to that made of the Prince Rupert elevator to the commission there.

Mr. COOTE: It has not been paying its way so far?

Mr. MALCOLM: No.

Item agreed to.

Commercial intelligence service, including miscellaneous expenditure in connection with the development and extension of Canada's trade, $500,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. MALCOLM: Just a general enlargement of the service, and the opening of new offices. There is a new office being opened at Lima, Peru, and there are more assistants being sent into the field.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister give us a few words explaining what has been done in connection with this work?

Mr. MALCOLM: It is a subject on which I should like to have made a speech. The success that has attended the work of our men in the field in the last few years, and the number of voluntary compliments coming to them from business houses all over Canada, would make a very interesting story for the House of Commons. I think that the Canadian foreign trade service which was established a good many years ago by a former Minister of Trade and Commerce, Sir George Foster, and which was the model from which the United States established its service, has done probably as much for Canada in the foreign field as any bit of expenditure we have ever made in this country. It is not always easy to make public bits of news that come to the commercial intelligence branch, for the simple reason that they pertain to the success of one particular firm. If we were inclined to make public all the work that our men in the field do, some resentment would naturally spring up in the minds of other firms less aggressive than their competitors who are securing the foreign business. They might feel that our men were partial in their endeavours, though as a matter of fact our men in the field are I think justified in being partial to business firms which show some aggression and a desire to co-operate with them in an endeavour to get business. It is I feel sure well within the truth to say that a further expansion of our trade commissioner service will be of very great benefit to Canada. I am asking this year for only a small increase in this vote because of the fact that we have not the trained men available to send out. If we had, I would ask the house for a larger amount. The Civil Service Commission has just conducted an examination, and some men, I believe, have been accepted, and they will go into training at once. We have also some men going out into the field at the present time. We intend further to provide assistants in some of the offices that are now overworked. I think the house will agree with me that this is not a large increase to ask for this year.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister might tell the committee something of the general scheme under which the various trade commissioners operate. There is just one complaint I have heard and that is that there has been indicated in one or two cases a tendency on the part of some of our agents to show much more consideration for some firms than for others engaged in the same trade. I think the minister knows exactly what I refer to. What can be done to meet that situation?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am informed by my deputy that we have not a single complaint of that kind on the files of the department, or it would be investigated. But as I said a moment ago, I think it is only the logical thing to suppose that if an aggressive firm sends its representative out into a certain field and he asks our man there to assist him in giving him introductions to possible buyers of some Canadian product, our man in the field, being human, will try to support that firm which is aggressive enough to send its representative out in an effort to develop business. I do not believe that there is any genuine complaint that our men in the field have shown any partiality, but naturally they have shown a great willingness to help those who have gone to the foreign field. We have at the present time so many unsolicited favourable comments on the work that has been done by our commissioners that any criticism I might have to offer as minister of the department would seem infinitesimal in comparison with the compliments I would wish to pay to our men in the field.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister give roughly the salaries that are paid to these trade commissioners?

Mr. MALCOLM: The salaries range from $5,760, with a living allowance of $2,000, which is paid to one of our senior men, Mr. Ross, in Melbourne, down to salaries of $2,040, with a living allowance of $1,500.

Mr. MANION: The highest is $7,760.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, that is received by our commissioners in Melbourne, London and Calcutta—salary, $5,760, living allowance, $2,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister would not regard it as too much trouble to place on Hansard a statement showing where they are located?

Mr. MALCOLM: They are located as follows:

Canadian Trade Commissioners

Argentine Republic: E. L. McColl, Buenos Aires.
Australia: D. H. Ross, Melbourne.
Belgium: Jean J. Guay, Brussels.
Brazil: A. S. Bleakney, Rio de Janeiro.
British West Indies: R. T. Young, Port of Spain, Trinidad; J. H. English, Kingston, Jamaica.
Cuba: James Cormack, Havana.
China: L. M. Cosgrave, Shanghai.
France: Hercule Barré, Paris.
Germany, L. D. Wilgress, Hamburg.
Holland: J. C. Macgillivray, Rotterdam.
India and Ceylon: R. H. Pousette, Calcutta.
Irish Free State: F. W. Fraser, Dublin.
Italy: A. B. Muddiman, Milan.
Japan: J. A. Langley, Kobe.
Mexico: C. Noel Wilde, Mexico City.
Netherlands East Indies: R. S. O'Meara, Batavia, Java.
New Zealand: C. M. Croft, Auckland.
South Africa, G. R. Stevens, Cape Town.
United Kingdom: Harrison Watson, London; J. Forsyth Smith, Liverpool; Harry A. Scott, Liverpool: Douglas S. Cole, Bristol; Gordon B. Johnson, Glasgow.
United States: Frederick Hudd, New York City.

I might explain that Mr. Lamontagne, our former trade commissioner at Brussels has been loaned by the Canadian government to the Egyptian government to help in the framing of their new tariff.

56103—200½

Mr. BENNETT: There are no trade commissioners in the United States?

Mr. MALCOLM: Just the New York office.

Mr. SPENCER: Has the minister considered placing more trade commissioners in the United States? I understand that the United States have eighty odd commissioners in Canada.

Mr. FRASER: On page ZZ-20 of the Auditor General's report, under the vote for the commercial intelligence service, I find an item of $4,298.63 for advertising in various newspapers and periodicals. What is the explanation of that?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am informed by my deputy that this covers the small advertisements that may be inserted in local newspapers from time to time giving notification of the location of our offices. There are twenty-four offices included in that amount of $4,000 odd. It is not a publicity vote at all.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Saturday, May 19, 1928

The house met at two o'clock.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have just received a letter containing the report of the twenty-fourth conference of the Interparliamentary Union held in Paris from August 25 to 31, 1927.

PUBLIC WORKS ESTIMATES—QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. F. POULIOT (Temiscouata): I would like to ask a question, for the sake of information, with respect to the estimates of the Department of Public Works. The first few items under the Quebec vote were passed yesterday but I do not see them either in the votes and proceedings or in Hansard, so I would like an explanation of why these items do not appear as being passed.

Mr. SPEAKER: This one vote includes several items; progress was reported yesterday and when all the items under the vote are passed they will appear in the votes and proceedings. This rule is followed in connnection with all the provinces.

IMPORTATION OF ASPARAGUS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of National Revenue to the contents of a message I have just received indicating that at Toronto the market gardeners who produce asparagus have lost their market by reason of importations which have been just received there on consignment from Washington. This message asks me to press upon the government the necessity for taking immediate action under the provisions of section 43 of the Customs Act to prevent their business and their anticipations of possible profit from their enterprise being completely destroyed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I wonder if the consumers are complaining also?

Mr. BENNETT: My friend should have thought of that when Right Hon. W. S. Fielding passed the statute.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 321, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Information or complaint within three years.

Mr. BENNETT: I think I should say that the Minister of National Revenue spoke to me the other day with respect to this measure. Notwithstanding the fact that the government had not intended to introduce further legislation, it was found in administration that there had been some error in the revision of the statutes, in fixing the period of limitations within which proceedings could be taken, and it was very desirable to protect the revenue by this amendment. I am strongly of the opinion that this should be passed at this session.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

HAY AND STRAW INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from May 14 consideration of Bill No. 73, respecting the inspection and grading of hay and straw—Mr. Motherwell—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The CHAIRMAN: When this bill was last before the committee we had advanced to section 5, and had adopted all the sections to that point.

On section 5—Tag to be affixed.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister was going to look into this matter.

Mr. NEILL: I would like to point out that this section will mean considerable expense to the consumers of hay and straw. In the trade it is the custom to buy this hay either tagged or untagged; when it is bought untagged it is shipped by the carload and weighed on the railway, so one can readily see the saving which would be effected in the handling cost, since each bale does not have to be weighed separately. As a result untagged hay can be sold for $1 per ton less than the tagged hay. As a rule the dealers buy the tagged hay for the small trade and buy the untagged hay by the carload, very often reselling it in the car, in which case they are able to sell to the consumer at from $12 to $20 less per carload. This regulation, which will apply to all kinds of baled hay, will compel a dealer to have the hay tagged when he does not want that done, and consequently the price will be increased by about $1 per ton. I think the minister's purpose would be served if he put in a provision that it would only apply in less than carload lots.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I have a letter from the secretary of the Pincher Creek Co-operative Association, with reference to this bill. In part, this letter reads as follows:

> We are in accord with the placing of an identification tag on every bale but are not in favour of that tag bearing the name of the baler. The name of the grower of the hay or straw should be on the bale, then he would have to assume the responsibility for the product. We have practically decided to compel our members to do so in the future, as we realize the necessity of identifying the hay in case of dispute as to quality. The placing of the baler's name would not be of any use and would only complicate matters. I doubt whether we could get men to undertake the baling if they were held responsible for the condition of every bale, considering that the hay might be left exposed to all kinds of weather before sale. It would also lead to endless trouble between baler and grower.
>
> It will be useless to have the weight on the tag as hay may shrink considerably if left some time in the bale. We can also presume that the hay would be sold on the tag weight, especially in the case of small lots, and the purchaser would often pay for more hay than he had owing to the shrink. We allow for three per cent shrink on all hay and set up a reserve to take care of it. Nearly all hay is sold by weight and the tags would not be taken into consideration.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the contention of these growers is quite sound, that if the name of any person is required to appear on the tag it should be the name of the grower rather than the name of the baler. I think the minister, or the advisers whom he has in his department, will agree that baled hay practically always shrinks after it is baled. Sometimes there is a shrinkage of four pounds to the bale, and the placing of the weight on the tag is unsound. I would ask the minister if he would not be willing to amend this section and substitute the name of the grower in place of the baler, as the name to be placed on the tag.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the departmental records show that this act has been on the statute book for nearly twenty years, it being included in the Inspection and Sale Act. When it was first drafted this section made it obligatory on the part of the grower to put his name on this tag for identification purposes. It very often happened that when the hay was baled it was out of the hands of the grower. About twelve or fourteen years ago this section was amended by substituting the name of the presser for that of the grower. It was felt that the presser of the hay would be interested in the operation, and since that time it has been the presser's name together with the weight that appeared on the bale.

In the actual operation of this law it has been found very difficult to get the presser to put his name on the bale, especially when he is doing custom work and is being paid by weight. He goes around from place to place, as you would doing custom threshing, and bales hay at so much per ton. He is not concerned with what kind of hay goes into the bale, but is only interested in turning out as many tons as possible, because he is usually paid on that basis. Why should we hold the presser responsible for the quality of the hay? He will press anything the owner gives him.

Mr. NEILL: Why not say the owner?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is just what I propose to do. We have found great difficulty in getting anyone to put his name on a tag that certifies to the weight, because invariably hay is sold by the ton not by the bale. With these two difficulties this act has been practically inoperative in the past. When we took charge of it two years ago, I was told by the seed commissioner that not 10 per cent of the bales were being marked, because of the difficulty of getting a presser who would feel responsible for the quality of the hay, although he might be prepared to certify as to the weight. The result was that it became a dead letter.

I have a substitute to offer for sections 5 and 6, as a compromise between these two extremes. In the past there has been a disposition to pass on to somebody else the responsibility of putting the name on the bale, because there is no other form of produce which offers itself as readily to deception as does hay. I have never bought very much hay, but whenever I did buy any I always found some of the bales to be rather disappointing on the inside. You cannot expect the presser to put his name on the bale, because he has no interest in the hay except to bale it. You cannot expect the grower to put his name on, because it may be out of his hands altogether, and he has lost control of it. Therefore, I contend that it should be the name of the owner at the time of baling that should appear on the bale. The following is an amendment which I offer for these sections:

> Every owner of baled hay or straw shall, before it is removed from the premises on which it was baled, affix to every bale of hay or straw sold or offered for sale a tag having thereon plainly written and legible his name and address. Such tag shall be securely fastened to the bale and shall be of not less than one and one-half inches in width and three inches in length.

This is not a very big thing to ask for, yet it is sufficient for identification. This section is the only compulsory section in the whole act. There should be some marking on the bale holding some person responsible for the quality of the contents, and it seems to me that the man who owns it at the time of baling is the one who can control the quality of hay going into the bale. He can see whether the top of the stack, or the bottom, goes into the bale when it is soiled. He is the man who pays the presser, and he is the man who controls it. He is the only man who is likely to be responsible and hold himself responsible for the quality of the hay. I would rather have one name, and nothing else, than try to have two markings and not get either. That is the way it has been in the past.

Mr. McMILLAN: As far as our section of the country is concerned the law will be a dead letter unless you compel them to put the name on.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have a case in court up in my hon. friend's part of the country right now with regard to another matter. If we have a law like this which is reasonable in its requirements then we can enforce it.

Mr. NEILL: How are you going to deal with American baled hay? Will that hay be given an advantage over our hay? The American does not have to tag his hay and he cannot be held responsible.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are going to enforce this act, and there will be no preference given to American hay. The preference will be given to the hay that has a guarantee, and that is what we will have if we have a name on the bale to which we can trace back. The American hay will have to comply with these conditions, if it is contended that it is graded at all.

Mr. NEILL: There is nothing there about grading.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is in the section just before.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Has the minister any information as to the quantity of hay that comes into Canada from the United States? I understand that a good deal of American hay comes into British Columbia.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Some, not a great deal. There may be some in certain localities.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I had a letter from the Delta Farmers' Co-operative Association in which they were complaining of the inequality of the tariff in Canada and in the United States. The tariff on hay going into United States is much higher than the tariff on hay coming from the United States into Canada and they are complaining very bitterly about that condition. Has the minister considered that matter at all?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. This year our surplus hay, of which there has been a very substantial quantity, has been exported to both Great Britain and the United States. We cannot deal with the question of the tariff at this time. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni will be interested in section 4 which indicates how imported hay will be dealt with as regards grading and such like in accordance with the provisions in the particular province into which it is imported.

Mr. NEILL: The amendment proposed by the minister reads:

> Every owner of baled bay before it is removed from the premises on which it was baled.

How can that be effected in the United States? There is no provision for the tagging of hay coming in from the United States. If the minister is going to adopt the policy outlined in this amendment he will need to go further and say that United States hay will have to be tagged. It would be impossible to do this because we cannot control the premises in which the hay is baled. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster I may say that a large quantity of alfalfa hay comes into British Columbia from the south.

Mr. CAHAN: The minister might, by a slight amendment to the section, cover all the objections that have been raised. I am suggesting this simply by way of drafting. The sentence should begin:

> Every owner of baled hay or straw shall, before offering the same for sale, affix or cause to be affixed—

And then go on with the rest of the amendment. That would apply to the foreign as well as to the domestic product. It would mean hereafter that before the owner offers hay for sale in Canada he shall cause to be affixed to the bale the information which the minister desires.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was under the impression that section 4 was broad enough to cover that, but possibly it is not. Section 4 reads:

> When hay imported into Canada is inspected, it shall be inspected and graded in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. NEILL: It does not say "tagged"?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right, it does not, but still the tagging is one of the provisions of the act. I think a reasonable interpretation of the section would cover the matter, but there is no reason why we should be running any risks.

Mr. CAHAN: I think the minister will find the words which I have suggested, following section 4 to which he has drawn attention, will cover both classes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Section 4 reads: "When hay imported into Canada is inspected." That implies that it may or may not be inspected. If it is inspected, then the tag will follow. If it is not inspected, it does not come under the legislation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that is right.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I would suggest that the minister leave out the word "when" and make the clause read:

> Hay imported into Canada shall be inspected and graded.

If this is intended for the protection of the consumer in Canada, the consumer is entitled to protection as much against hay coming from the United States as against hay grown in Canada. If it is advisable for the protection of the consumer to have hay that is grown in Canada inspected and tagged, you cannot escape the logic of applying the same provision to hay imported from the United States. It should not be optional in regard to imported hay and obligatory in regard to home grown hay.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The question of grading is quite optional wherever the hay comes from. The only compulsory feature of the legislation is that there must be some mark on the hay. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is remodelling the amendment to clause 5 and that will take care of the point of making it apply to imported as well as to Canadian hay. Section 4 is passed, and while there is no harm in opening it up again, unless some real object is to be gained I would rather not have it reopened. It is rather an involved question and when we have safely passed one shoal we are pretty well advised not to try to run it again.

Mr. MANION: What is to prevent an unscrupulous dealer from importing hay into Canada and affixing these tags himself, or an unscrupulous dealer on the other side doing the same thing? I do not know much about hay, but it seems to me that our laws do not apply to the dealer on the other side. He can affix any tag he likes. He can write down John Jones, Tom Smith, or any name he wishes. If the minister really wants to protect the Canadian consumer, the best way to do so is to have a proper tariff such as the United States impose against our hay.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will refer that question to the tariff board.

Mr. FRASER: I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Fort William. The hay growers of British Columbia are suffering very much from the inequality in the tariff. As a matter of fact they have to accept two dollars a ton less for their hay to-day than they would receive if our tariff were raised to the same level as the United States tariff. The minister by this legislation is increasing the handicap of the hay growers of British Columbia in competing in the Vancouver market. He is imposing on the growers of hay in Canada a certain restriction which he is not imposing on the growers of hay in the Wenatchee valley in the state of Washington. That is an added handicap to the growers of hay in British Columbia. I submit that in this instance the regulations under which the Canadian has to sell his hay should be the same as those under which the American has to sell his hay.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): There is no difference in the regulations as regards American or Candaian hay in this bill, and the act is entirely optional as to inspection. While it might not be proper to discuss a tariff on hay under this bill, I think that as a general thing throughout this country the farmers would be very much against a tariff on hay.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is meant by "every owner"? I suppose that means every original owner. The ownership might pass from one man to another.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Every original owner would be the same as saying the grower.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There may be a variety of owners. Which owner has to put the tag on? Is it the last one?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The question of identification by means of a tag is very important. Might I point out to the committee that two years ago when we were buying some supplies for the British government to be sent to Shanghai, we put in a very large order for hay with parties near Lethbridge. The British government mentioned the grade and kind of hay they wanted, alfalfa and other kinds of hay of such and such a grade. Now if we did not have grades, how could we carry out such an order?. It is very important to have the grade established and the identity marked on the hay. While this bill is not a very exacting one, it is necessary that we should have these grades and their identity established, especially now that our export trade in hay is developing. We shipped a very substantial amount last year overseas and to the United States.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But my point is that there might be a variety of owners.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are getting at the owner who sees the hay going into the bale, for he is the only owner who knows what the contents are.

Mr. CAHAN. The suggestion I have made is that section 5 should read as follows:

> Every owner of baled hay or straw shall before offering the same for sale in Canada affix or cause to be affixed to every bale of hay or straw before the same is sold or offered for sale a tag having thereon plainly written and legible his name and place of business. Such tag shall be securely fastened to the bale and shall be of not less than one and one-half inches in width and three inches in length.

I have simply changed the wording of the first sentence.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am afraid that my hon. friend's amendment omits the time at which and the place where it is to be tagged. We say, "Before the hay is removed from the premises." That is omitted in my hon. friend's amendment.

Mr. CAHAN: I say in my amendment, "before the same is sold or offered for sale".

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But it says here:

Every owner of baled hay or straw shall "before it is removed from the premises"—

Mr. CAHAN: But the minister will see that baled hay imported from the south is baled in the United States, and we have no jurisdiction to compel them to put a tag on the hay when it is baled in the United States or before it is removed from the premises. But we can provide generally that every owner of baled hay or straw shall before offering the same for sale in Canada affix or cause to be affixed to every bale of hay or straw before the same is sold or offered for sale a tag, and that would apply both to United States hay and to hay baled in Canada. I am making the suggestion in good faith.

Mr. BROWN: A little confusion might arise from the words that have been used, as to who is actually responsible for the baling of the hay, good or otherwise. I think what is intended is that the man at whose instance the baling has been done, and who is really in actual possession of the hay, is the man who should be held responsible. That might, of course, be the farmer who grew the hay, and on whose premises the hay was baled. On the other hand, a case might arise where a dealer had made a contract with the farmer for the hay, and had himself become responsible for the baling of it. In such cases it would seem to me that the dealer at whose instance the hay was baled should be the one held responsible. It might be well to insert in the definition clause just what the word "owner" means. I think it ought to mean the man at whose instance the hay is baled.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The owner is the owner.

Mr. BROWN: If you refer to removal from the premises, that might place the responsibility on the farmer, and yet the hay might really be under the control and ownership of a dealer who had bought it from a farmer and was arranging for the baling of it himself.

Mr. NEILL: I think the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George will entirely meet the situation. It defines the man as the owner of the baled hay. There can be only one man who is the owner of the baled hay, and his amendment says that before the owner offers it for sale he must have the hay tagged. That covers the whole situation. It does not matter whether he is the grower or some subsequent owner. If he owns the baled hay, he must tag it before he offers it for sale.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wonder if my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George will accept an addition of four words, so that it will read, "Every owner of baled hay or straw at the time of baling"?

Mr. NEILL: What does that matter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL. Any time means no time.

Mr. CAHAN: The only objection is that the words of the suggested amendment apply to hay that may be baled in the state of Washington and brought up to Vancouver. I am making it apply to every bit of baled hay sold in Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am afraid that what we are trying to do is to embody two different questions in this one section. I suggest that we leave the amendment the way it was introduced, and insert another section dealing with imported hay. I believe it would be better to dissociate the two things; it would only spoil both if we embodied the two in the one section. I do not think that the draft suggested will be as good for Canadian hay, and that represents a very large proportion of what we are dealing with.

Mr. CAHAN: The minister will admit that it applies to every sale or offering for sale in Canada of baled hay, and the owner must put on the tag before he offers it for sale.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He may have the hay in a warehouse. Our inspectors come along and see that the hay is not tagged. The owner might say, "I have not offered it for sale yet", and in that way he would escape any penalty for not having it tagged, but if it must be tagged before it leaves the premises on which it is baled, that difficulty could not arise.

Mr. NEILL: How would you enforce that in the United States.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is why I think there should be two sections dealing with these two different questions. We are dealing here with Canadian hay, and afterwards we can deal with the imported hay.

Mr. ADSHEAD: He might not sell the hay; he might want it for his own use.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How many inspectors are there of this particular class?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We took over this service only about two years ago, and the inspectors we have under the seed branch, who are doing other work, are also taking over this work—for instance, the inspectors of binder twine, insecticides, seed, feedstuffs and fertilizers. So far we have been able to look after the work with the regular staff, although they are not sufficient in number to take care of it. We may require a few more to enforce the act properly.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I assume that the minister would not undertake a matter of such tremendous importance without seeing that the inspection was effectively carried out. According to what he has just said, that means another small army of government officials. A while ago a tourist stopped at a farm house close to the road to get a drink of water. He saw a small army of men around the barn. He asked the farmer, "Are these your hired men?" "Oh no; that one over there is appointed by the government to see that my hay and straw is properly baled and tagged; that other man is an inspector of the turnip field to see that the turnips don't grow too large; that other chap's job is to watch the hens lay and tag every egg as soon as it is laid; the fellow with the scales prevents me from selling apples or vegetables to a wayfarer by the package; they must be sold by weight. I cannot sell onions without cutting off the tops, and other vegetables likewise." This army of government officials, the minister says, is to be added to in the near future, so when the next election comes around about every fifth or sixth man will be a government official.

Now, the minister said he had got safely past the shoals and shallows of section 4 and did not want to go back over those dangerous waters again. I presume he had in mind the chart supplied to him by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). That is the trouble; the Minister of Agriculture has got the wrong chart. We have evidence of this again and again. This bill is another crack at the Canadian farmer, another restriction placed upon him, another handicap, in that every possible facility is offered to his competitor in the United States. That competitor must not be annoyed, he must be given every advantage, while the Canadian farmer is subjected to every disadvantage. If there is a large crop of hay in the United States, and prices are low, why, facilitate the bringing of that hay into Canada. As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) interjected this afternoon: It is better for the consumer in the case of asparagus. That was his little argument. I caught it over here; I hope the reporter also caught it. That was his retort to the point raised by my leader in support of the Canadian asparagus grower: The consumer was getting the benefit, no matter how many others were being ruined there. You are imposing these regulations with respect to tagging, inspection, and so on, to protect the person who is buying hay from the Canadian farmer. I venture to say that practically all hay imported from the United States comes in baled. Why should it not also be inspected? It would be impracticable, for you would have to open up every bale to test the quality. There is no chance of getting at the American farmer; he has that advantage. In addition, he has the advantage of entering our market at the rate of $2 a ton when there is a surplus of hay on his side of the line; on the other hand the Canadian farmer is kept out of the American market by the high protective duty. My hon. friend is consulting the wrong chart—a chart that was put in the platform of the Liberal party for election purposes, and has never been lived up to since that time. It is a variable kind of chart and of no use to guide the political ship without a reliable compass.

I protest against all these restrictive regulations with respect to practically everything that the farmer has anything to do with. They are subjecting him to every possible inconvenience and are a serious handicap on his activities. He cannot go on the market or sell a few vegetables or fruit to his neighbour without conforming to certain regulations, and have a government inspector tagging at his heels to see whether or not he is giving the public what he professes to give them. The public should be given credit for exercising judgment in what they buy. I think I will put a question on the order paper to ascertain the numerical strength of this army of officials which the government has for the protection of the consumer and as a handicap to the farmer. I should like to know how many there are to inspect eggs, butter, cheese, vegetables, roots, hay, straw, —a whole army of government officials, appointed apparently for the purpose of putting every obstacle conceivable in the way of the Canadian farmer making a success of his business. That is what it looks like to me.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know whether my hon. friend was in his seat when I explained that these very sections were in force about twenty years ago; I have not yet been at the head of the department seven years. The very centre and essence of the bill revolves around the question of identification—who put up the hay. If my hon. friend had ever bought much hay he would want somebody to be held responsible for its quality. That is the only compulsory feature of the bill. I do not think he expects us to take his remarks seriously regarding the grading principle. It is conceded by all countries that if you want quality you must pay the price. The empire marketing board is gradually introducing the provision that all goods must be marked. That is becoming the practice all over the world, and unless we want to be tailenders we have to do what we are endeavouring to do under this bill. We are trimming up a twenty-year-old measure to fit modern requirements. We have not appointed any inspectors yet. Perhaps we were remiss in not doing so, but we thought we would first amend the old act so that it may be possible to carry it into effect. We will draft a special section to take care of imported hay which, after all, is not a very large amount. This bill went through the agriculture committee. It does not necessarily follow that it is now perfect, but that committee is composed largely of agriculturists.

Mr. NEILL: Is the committee not largely composed of lawyers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; there are some professional men on it, but it is strongly agricultural. Let me appeal to my hon. friend now: if we had no grading system by which to designate hay, how could the British government have ordered by cable a large amount of hay for Shanghai?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is all right; I am not objecting to that. Let me put myself clear. When Canadian produce has to compete in foreign countries, I recognize that you must take some steps to grade it so that it can compete successfully with the same produce from other countries. But in my opinion the application of the grading principle has been carried to a ridiculous extreme in Canada in our home market where there are a few dozen eggs to be sold, or vegetables, and so on. That is where the thing is overdone. I am not objecting to the proper grading of our produce sold in the old country or anywhere else. For instance, in the case of butter there must be grading to compete with Denmark and New Zealand; I appreciate that. But the thing has gone too far at home. We are putting our own people to needless inconvenience and annoyance. Perhaps I am wrong, but that is the idea I have.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Twenty years ago only two items of information were required to be put on the tag, namely, the weight and the man's name. We have now reduced that requirement by half: only the man's name and address we require; we do not ask for the weight. So that in this respect we are asking for less. Regarding inspectors, does my hon. friend know of any other way of performing the service except through the medium of men—inspectors? How should I have it done? Is there any other method of grading? I should like to get a mechanical method of grading, which would not require the service of individuals. I should like some better way which would require fewer officials, and I should be glad if any hon. gentleman could point out to me one useless official in the whole country with whom I could dispense and secure the same service. If anyone would do that I should regard it as a favour; that would be better than merely complaining about the matter.

Mr. COOTE: Is it necessary to have inspection of hay in Canada itself. In 1919 we had a very hard winter in western Canada and owing to the crop failure of the year before we had to import hay all the way from Ontario. Some of it cost, laid down in Alberta, $60 a ton and I am safe in saying that in the case of some of that hay 50 per cent was refuse; not more than 50 per cent of it was good hay. The hay growers in southern Alberta are anxious to have some grading system whereby hay can be sold subject to inspection, thus obviating any difference between the buyer and the seller. As regards this section, after listening to the amendment suggested by the hon. member (Mr. Cahan), and without taking any exception to the four or five words which the minister wishes to add, I believe it would cover the situation very well, and probably the committee would be willing to accept it. I believe it would meet the wishes of those engaged in the business, and I should be glad to see it accepted.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that it has been arranged to go into supply at three o'clock, and as it is now exactly three I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—REPARATIONS CLAIMS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): I move in amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark):

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"This house regrets the refusal of the government to introduce legislation at the present session of parliament providing for the payment in full or in part of the various sums fixed by James Friel, Esquire, K.C., a commissioner appointed under the Inquiries Act, as losses sustained by the civilian population of Canada during the great war."

It is perhaps unfortunate that a motion of this kind should have to be made as an amendment on going into supply, but the question is one of considerable importance, and this is the only practical way in which it can be introduced into the house. As will be apparent from the wording of the resolution, it refers to what are commonly known as reparations; and in order that we may understand the question, perhaps I might take the house back to the years of the war, back to the signing of the treaty of peace, the treaty of Versailles. That treaty was concluded in 1919. To that treaty this country was a signatory. The treaty was signed by all the allied powers with the exception of the United States, which concluded peace separately by the treaty of Berlin. Three sections of the treaty of Versailles have particular application to the phase of the question raised in the amendment; they are sections 231, 232 and 233. Article 231 of the treaty of peace reads:

The allied and associated governments affirm and Germany accepts the responsibility of Germany and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the allied and associated governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her allies.

Section 232, which is the pertinent article, reads in part as follows:

The allied and associated governments recognize that the resources of Germany are not adequate, after taking into account permanent diminutions of such resources which will result from other provisions of the present treaty, to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage.

The allied and associated governments, however, require, and Germany undertakes, that she will make compensation for all damage done to the civilian population of the allied and associated powers and to their property during the period of the belligerency of each as an allied or associated power against Germany by such aggression by land, by sea and from the air, and in general all damage as defined in annex I hereto.

Annex I sets out some ten categories as applicable to article 232. These categories, with the exception of three, all relate to civilian property damage or to injury to the persons of civilians. The other three relate to separation allowances and pensions as computed on the French scale and the question of under-payment of labourers employed by Germany during the war, nationals of the allied countries. This was one of the provisions of the treaty of peace.

Article 233 provided for the setting up of a commission to be called the Reparations Commission, and I desire for a moment to sketch the history of that commission, which had a checkered career. The method whereby the claims against Germany were to be decided was this: The allied powers were to compute how much was due them under article 232, and having made that computation the Reparations Commission would arrive at the grand total due from Germany. As early as April 27, 1921, it was realized that this was impractical because of Germany's inability to pay, and on that date the Reparations Commission, of its own volition and not as a result of the Spa conference, as suggested in the return brought down by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), abandoned the method of computation theretofore followed. On April 27, 1921, it fixed Germany's liability at 132 milliard, gold marks. Shortly after that the allied powers made a further change and decided that the amount Germany was to pay should be fixed by negotiation and not arbitrarily by the allies. However, we still had two conflicting opinions; the allied powers wanted much and apparently Germany wanted to pay little. Things went from bad to worse; the Ruhr was occupied and in 1924, because of dire necessity, the allied powers called in a commission of experts known as the Dawes commission, which sat at Paris.

It is to be noted that any amount fixed had to be arrived at under article 232 of the peace treaty; that was the only clause under which we could claim one cent from Germany. Whereas we originally intended to collect for all damage done, Germany was in the position of a bankrupt creditor unable to pay one hundred cents on the dollar. The Dawes commission fixed what Germany could be expected equitably and justly to pay. The first of these payments was made in September, 1924. The Dawes commission fixed the amounts to be paid by Germany as follows:

1924-25	£ 50,000,000
1925-26	60,000,000
1926-27	61,000,000
1927-28	87,000,000
1928-29	125,000,000

The last mentioned amount is to be paid yearly for an indeterminate period; in other words, next year and for an unstated number of years Germany is to pay the allied powers the sum of £125,000,000. Of that amount of £125,000,000 the British Empire is to receive 22 per cent, and as her proportion of the share allotted to the empire Canada receives 4.35 per cent. According to returns tabled in the house by the government, to date we have received under the Dawes payments, together with some old reparations before the Dawes scheme came into existence, a total of $10,800,992.91, which money is at present in the consolidated revenue fund. Next year and in the following years we will receive the sum of $5,000,000. In other words, at present there is almost $11,000,000 in the treasury of this country which has been received from Germany, and we will receive each year hereafter an additional $5,000,000.

That, sir, is one side of the question; now let us look at the domestic side. I said the method of computation followed by the reparations commission was to be based on the amounts supplied by the various allied governments. On November 15, 1918, an order in council was passed under which advertisements were inserted in practically every Canadian newspaper of importance, calling upon persons who had sustained civilian property damage or personal loss through enemy acts during the war to place such claims in the hands of the Under Secretary of State, in accordance with article 232 of the peace treaty. On July 5, 1920, quite independent of that order in council, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries sent a circular letter to all shipowners in this country asking what loss they had sustained and enclosing a form which they were to fill out and return. Nothing further was done until 1921.

In passing, I ask the house to note that on April 27, 1921, the reparations commission abandoned that method of computation, yet in October of the same year the then Meighen government appointed Sir Douglas Hazen as a commissioner under the Inquiries Act to inquire into civilian losses and personal damage. He took no action; there was a change of government and in 1923 the Liberal government headed by the present Prime Minister appointed Hon. William Pugsley as commissioner. The order in council appointing Mr. Pugsley asked him to inquire into civilian property damage and personal losses during the war; and he went about the country holding hearings and inviting the people to come before him and prove their claims. A large number of persons appeared before Mr. Pugsley, going to some expense to adduce evidence, and in some cases were represented by counsel in an endeavour to prove their claims. The order in council under which he was appointed was dated March 13, 1923, and reads as follows:

> To investigate and report upon all claims submitted for the purpose of determining whether they were within the categories above referred to, in the first annex to section 1 of part VIII of the said treaty, and the fair amount of such claims, and to make such findings as may be of assistance to the government in determining which, if any, of such claims shall be paid, and the extent of payment thereof.

Mr. Pugsley died before he could complete his work, and in 1925 Mr. Friel of Moncton was appointed by the Liberal administration to carry on the work. The order in council appointing Mr. Friel was dated June 19, 1925, and reads as follows:

> That a considerable number of investigations with respect to outstanding claims still remain to be made and it appears desirable that a commissioner be appointed to continue and complete the investigations made by the late commissioner.

Mr. Friel completed the task left unfinished by Mr. Pugsley; in all some 1,615 claims were submitted and according to returns tabled in this house this year some 1,613 claims were adjudicated upon by Mr. Friel, who fixed the compensation to which he thought these 1,613 claimants were entitled.

This report was placed in the hands of the government by February of this year at the latest. It was confidently anticipated, and the press encouraged that anticipation, that the report would be tabled in parliament this year and that legislation would be introduced to deal with it; it was even rumoured that a draft bill was in the hands of the minister. Be that as it may, the Secretary of State himself encouraged that anticipation. On March 5 I wrote to him personally as follows:

> Dear Mr. RINFRET:
>
> I have had inquiries from several of my constituents respecting the amount of reparations payable on account of their claims. One of these relates to the schooner Lucille Schnare of Lunenburg, which was destroyer by a German submarine.
>
> This claim was presented to Hon. Mr. Pugsley when he was holding a board of investigation at Lunenburg. Are you able to give me any information about it, especially as to whether any award is being made to the owners and if so, when payment may be expected.

On March 6 the Under Secretary of State replied as follows, apparently on behalf of the minister:

> I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, in which you ask for information as to the reparation claims of the persons interested in the schooner Lucille Schnare, which was destroyed by submarine, and to inform you that the report of the commissioner appointed to investigate these claims is now before the government, and that it will be laid before parliament very shortly. It will then be a matter for the action of parliament, to vote moneys from which reparation payments may be made.

That is not the only letter of its kind; many of them may be found scattered all over Canada, holding out a definite promise that the Friel report would be tabled this year and that the necessary legislation would be introduced in parliament. Naturally those of us who are interested in the question were surprised when on March 30 the minister made the statement that the report would not be tabled and that no action would be taken this year.

Now, sir, before we ask what possible reason there can be for delay, let us examine for one moment the nature of the Canadian claim. This country is in a position perhaps unlike that of any of the other British dominions. We were situate on the north Atlantic and our shipping was open to the menace of the submarine campaign. New Zealand, South Africa and Australia were free from that menace, and suffered practically no shipping loss. In Great Britain all the shipping was requisitioned by the state at the beginning of the war, and was operated by the state, so that this question does not arise there. But in this country our ship owners continued to carry on the commerce of the nation, a commerce without which the state would have been hard pressed indeed. It was due to this submarine campaign that a great many losses were sustained, although some are personal claims for loss of life, and for exposure due to being torpedoed. The majority of the claims are shipping claims, and it is a significant fact that of the 1,613 claims adjudicated upon by Mr. Friel, 1,493 are under $5,000 each, the remaining 120 being made up of larger claims.

Of the 1,493 claims, many are the claims of people in necessitous circumstances. In a report brought down by the government last year, in answer to a question, it was admitted that many of the people to whom we allege these moneys should be paid are in necessitous circumstances.

Mr. IRVINE: Does the hon. member know how much money is involved?

Mr. ERNST: Yes; I am coming to that. Many of these people are in necessitous circumstances, and in some cases they are enduring actual hardship because they have not been able to obtain this money. There is one such instance right here in the city of Ottawa, of which the minister must be aware, and there are other instances scattered throughout Canada. Why, under these circumstances, should these people not receive that which is due them under the treaty?

Of the 1,613 claims, 752 are from the province of Nova Scotia, 350 of them relating to my own constituency of Queens-Lunenburg. They represent the losses of fishing vessels due to the submarine campaign. There is a large number in the city of Montreal, a still larger number in the city of Toronto, a number in the city of Vancouver, some in Ottawa, and a large number in the city of Quebec.

The circumstances are that the government has practically $11,000,000 of German money, or had on the 10th of March when the return was made. The total awards recommended by Mr. Friel is $4,246,868.76. The interest to March 10th of this year amounts to $2,042,520.59, making a total of $6,289,389.35. In other words, we have received $11,000,000 from Germany; morally we owe $6,000,000 of it and we are withholding payment. Why? In an answer given by the Minister of Justice in 1925 or 1926 he said that these people had no legal claim for their money, and any payment would be a matter of grace. As a matter of law, I am willing to concede that legally they have no claim. If they had a legal claim they would have a way to enforce it other than through parliament. They have a moral claim of the highest type, due to the provisions of the treaty. Under the treaty, that money was paid for certain purposes. It is true that it was paid to the state, and the state owes no legal responsibility to the individual, but it owes a moral responsibility. That moral responsibility was recognized in England. Sir Austen Chamberlain, who was then Chancellor of the Exchequer, speaking before parliament in 1920 on the British cases, which are relatively less numerous than ours, due to the fact that their shipping was under the control of the state, said:

> His Majesty's government have given careful consideration to the position of individuals in respect of whose losses reparation will be claimed by His Majesty's government. It must be understood that the claims to be made are claims by the British government in respect of a wrong done to the state, and not claims by individuals in respect of private wrongs, and that the government do not act as the agent of any individual to put forward his personal claim. Any payments that may be received from Germany are therefore the property of the nation, and no individual will have any claim in law for any sum which the British government may receive from Germany in respect of reparation.

But His Majesty's government recognize that in particular cases, while there can be no legal claim, a private individual may have a strong moral claim for compensation for sufferings or damage for which it will be the desire of parliament to make provision.

A similar case occurred some years ago in a case which is reported in Queen's Bench division, the case of the Queen vs. Rustomjee. This case arose by way of a petition of right concerning the payment of moneys made by the Emperor of China to the British crown for debts owing by Chinese nationals to British nationals. The amount was some $3,000,000, and in discussing that case, which is practically on all fours from a moral standpoint with the present case, in the court of appeal, Mr. Justice Blackburn said:

I think there is a moral claim that it be given to the right person, which must be investigated in the manner in which Her Majesty is pleased to direct, and the ministers who direct it would probably be responsible to parliament if they did it unjustly.

Chief Justice Coleridge used words even more significant, as follows:

We do not indeed doubt that on the payment of the money by the Emperor of China, there was a duty on the part of the English sovereign to administer the money so received according to the stipulations of the treaty.

So I say that there is, under the treaty itself, apart from any other consideration, the strongest moral claim on the part of these persons who have lost property or have been injured in person during the war. But there is even a stronger moral claim. This government, or its predecessors for whose acts it is responsible, appointed a commissioner who went about this country inviting people to come before him and prove their claims. Does not the fact that he invited them to come and prove their claim involve an implied promise of payment to these people? What other justification can there be in asking people to go to the expense of proving their claims long after the reparations commission had abandoned the method of computation, unless there is involved an implied promise of payment? Further, what justification can there be for expending these public moneys on the appointment of a commissioner and the payment of his salary and expenses, unless it be that his findings are going to be acted on in some respects? I said there was no justification under the treaty, in so far as the method of computation was concerned, because the method of computation had been abandoned by the Reparations Commission before the first commissioner was appointed. The Meighen government once, and the King government twice appointed commissioners to make inquiry What justification can there be for their appointment, for the expenditure of public moneys, unless it be that a report was to be brought in upon which this parliament could act.

Let us consider the question a step farther. There is a moral responsibility on this government to make payment. Consider it from another angle, and you must come to the conclusion that the government has irretrievably committed itself to a policy involving payment, and the people expect payment. Take the action of the government in connection with the promise they made when they appointed the commission; take it in connection with the peace treaty; take it in connection with the expenditure of public moneys, and, one step farther, take it in connection with the resolution of Mr. Copp. In June, 1925, Mr. Copp, who was then Secretary of State, introduced into the house a resolution reading as follows:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to make provision for the payment of claims for reparation for losses suffered by Canadian nationals during the late war, and to provide,

(1) That the report of the commissioner appointed to inquire into and report upon the claims for reparation of Canadian nationals, upon approval by the governor in council shall be deposited with the Secretary of State of Canada in his capacity as custodian of enemy property;

(2) That from time to time, as sums are received on account of reparation under the Agreement of London between the allied and associated powers and Gemany, bringing into force what is commonly known as the Dawes plan, the amount thereof shall be paid by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to the Secretary of State as custodian, until such time as the aggregate of such payments is equal to the total amount of the claims for reparation as determined by the report of the said commissioner and approved by the governor in council.

(3) That the Secretary of State shall, on receipt of such payments, from time to time distribute the same to persons found entitled to claims for reparation in the commissioner's report, by way of pro rata dividend;

(4) That the Secretary of State shall annually lay before parliament, within fifteen days after the meeting thereof, a report of the receipts and expenditures under the proposed legislation.

That resolution was introduced by Mr. Copp on the 19th June, 1925. It is true it was withdrawn and it is true that the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, who was then leading the Conservative party, opposed it; but it is worthy of note that if we examine his remarks we shall find that his reasons for opposing it are these. He said: I do not approve of payment of public moneys in camera on the say-so of the commissioner. Public moneys should be expended only by the parliament of Canada.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Public moneys!

Mr. ERNST: In other words he was asking for exactly what we are asking for this afternoon. That was the stand Mr. Meighen took against that resolution, namely, that the money should not be expended on the say-so of the commissioner. But the government committed itself irretrievably to a policy of payment. I notice the Minister of Justice remarks that I said "public moneys". I say "public moneys" because at the moment the Dawes money have been paid into the consolidated revenue fund. I am not contending that they can be disbursed without legislation, but I am contending that legislation ought to be introduced. Mr. Meighen's stand was simply against the distribution in Canada on the say-so of the commissioner. The Minister of Justice may say: You are asking us now to distribute the money on the say-so of the commissioner. True, but not entirely on the say-so of the commissioner because there may be inserted in the act a provision with regard to distribution to the effect that if either the crown or the individual feel aggrieved by the award which has been made, an appeal may be made to the Exchequer court or some other court. It is not necessary that the money be distributed on the mere say-so of the commissioner; nor do we advocate that it should be, but we advocate that that should be the basis upon which we start and that legislation should provide for an appeal, at the instance of either the crown or the individual, to some court of finality.

That is the situation with reference to reparations in this country and it might be well to examine what has been done in other countries similarly situated. Let us take first Great Britain. Some five years go Great Britain set aside a sum of five million pounds which was devoted to the payment, first, of necessitous claims and, second, of all other claims upon a sliding scale. This was done at a time when her budget was in anything but a satisfactory condition, and I must confess that I admire the qualities of the English people who do not try to avoid a moral claim in order to balance a budget.

What has been done by the United States? The United States case is more closely parallel to ours than any other. Only a few months ago the United States government introduced and had passed legislation providing for payment of their claims on the following basis. They had not enough Dawes money, if you may call it such, so they took some $50,000,000 of their own money; they took money out of the enemy property fund and they put it with the Dawes money so that they could pay all claims under $100,000 in full, all claims for personal injury in full, and all claims over $100,000 are being paid in instalments as the Dawes payments arrive.

Canada is the only country so situated which has done absolutely nothing in the matter and which has neglected its people in that respect. Surely, it is time that we, having the example of these countries in mind, took action and paid our claims, not necessarily in full and perhaps never in full, because it may well be argued that the state is entitled to some portion of the money. At least, however, we ought to pay the claims in part.

In this connection in order to avoid confusion, let me draw attention to the fact that some people think because claims have been paid out of the enemy property fund, the other claims are also legally payable. The enemy property fund was a fund derived from the liquidation of enemy property in this country and debts owing by Canadian nationals to German nationals, and it is under the custody of the Secretary of State as custodian of enemy property. It is not available for payment under section 232 of the treaty, nor do we seek to make it so. It is available for payment on awards made by the mixed tribunal under sections 296 and 297 of the treaty, awards that are different in class and character from the ones under consideration, but not different so far as moral claim is concerned.

For instance, under section 297 of the treaty if property situated in Germany was taken possession of or destroyed during the war by the German government compensation can be claimed as a matter of right, de jure, apart altogether from section 232 of the treaty. An instance of that was the Massey-Harris Company whose plant was taken possession of by the German government during the war and which was handed back to them after the war in good condition, and they received a large amount of compensation. That was an award made not by any government but by a mixed tribunal under section 297. There is a certain doctor in Montreal who had in Belgium a property which was taken possession of by Germany during the war and completely destroyed.

From the legal standpoint this would not come under section 297 and unless such legislation as we are contending for is passed he will get nothing, while other people who are fortunate enough to come under section 297 are paid in full. I might cite for instance the Canadian Pacific which has property in Germany as well as Belgium. The Thompson Steamship Company had a claim for detention of ships in Germany during the war under section 297. Another steamship company surely has a moral claim of the highest character in regard to one of its ships which was torpedoed while doing business of the state on the high seas.

It is nothing new for parliament to recognize moral claims. We have recognized claims far less just than these claims. We recognized a moral claim in the case of the Home bank depositors. Why should we hesitate and delay to pay these people who are justly entitled to the award made by Mr. Friel and in some instances by the late Mr. Pugsley?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member stated that there were 1,493 claims of $5,000 or under?

Mr. ERNST: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What was the total amount of the 1,493 claims?

Mr. ERNST: I cannot give those figures because they are available only in the report and I was fortunate to get as much information as I did, because the report was kept in the hands of the government. The total claim with interest is roughly $6,000,000.

Mr. RINFRET: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CLARK: Mr. Speaker, as I am the seconder of the amendment if I do not speak now I may not have the right to do so, but I am quite willing that the minister should proceed if I am permitted to follow him.

Mr. RINFRET: Go on.

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, after the very comprehensive and lucid statement of the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) I feel that it will be quite unnecesary for me to detain the house at any length on this subject.

I should like, however, to emphasize the type of people who are suffering by reason of the government's neglect in this regard.

There are, first of all, the helpless dependents, the helpless women who lost their providers in the service of this country during the great war; those, for instance, who served in the merchant marine and perhaps were torpedoed. I have an instance in my own constituency of a woman who is now seventy-nine years of age. She was invited to present her claim years ago by this government. She presented her claim. She has no funds. She is dependent absolutely for her livelihood upon charity to-day, and upon her prospective award from this fund. I have every reason to believe that an award has been made in her favour, but in the meantime she is allowed to suffer.

Then there is the other great class, the men who were disabled by reason of service in a civilian capacity during the great war. The moral claim of these people in my opinion is quite as strong as the claim of those who were casualties in military and naval capacities.

The last speaker (Mr. Ernst) has dwelt upon the policy of Great Britain. The policy of Great Britain has been characteristic of that country. It is typical of British justice. It is too late for this government to follow the example of Great Britain and to do justice in the true British style, but it is not too late for them to follow the example of the United States. Great Britain recognized that the moral claim in this regard was just as great as any legal claim. That has been one of the characteristics of that race, that there are occasions when they recognize that moral claims are even stronger than legal claims, and this they recognize as one. Without regard to the receipt of money, without actually receiving the money themselves, they advanced their own money to settle these claims, just as they advanced their own money to pay pensions to casualties of the great war. The United States were not slow to act in this matter when they received the money. They passed legislation this year, and it is not too late for this government to follow the example of that country.

I should like to read some words from an editorial in the Daily Province, of Vancouver, published on April 23rd of this year:

> The government, in a word, prefers to retain this money, which does not belong to it, and to allow the sufferers, some of whom have already been waiting a dozen years, to wait some more. These people suffered first from the illegal actions of Germany in time of war. Now, in time of peace, they are made the victims of an attitude on the part of their own government which can scarcely be regarded as either just or sympathetic.
>
> The action of the Canadian government in regard to this question of compensation for war losses is in curious contract to that of the British government. In the old land, far from retaining the money due claimants after it had been paid by Germany, the government advanced sums from the public funds to those whose claims had been approved, so that claimants who were in poor circumstances received part of the money due them even before it was paid by Germany.

In view of the fact that this country has encouraged our people to expect payment, encouraged them to lay their claims and to go to the expense of having their claims presented before this commission, I think that action should be taken at this session of parliament to see that those claims are met.

Personally, I resent the propaganda that has gone around this house that neither party is anxious that this matter should be dealt with. I feel perfectly certain that so far as this party is concerned, at any rate, I can honestly say that we are only too anxious that this matter should be dealt with, and dealt with now. The only conclusion I can come to is that no action is being taken because of a desire on the part of the government to hold this money to bolster up another fictitious surplus.

I believe Mr. Speaker, that we may justly ask the government why provisions were made in the treaty to meet these claims, why a reparations commission was appointed, why an invitation was held out to these claimants, if there were no claims which could be enforced in this house. I sugest to the minister in charge of this department that his subcommittee should meet again, that recommendations be presented to the government, and that legislation be introduced forthwith; that, although it is late, the example of the American government should be emulated and that regret should be expressed to the claimants that we did not sooner attempt to do what the British have done in their traditional fashion, namely, British justice even to moral claimants.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be to express regret that we should be called upon to discuss this very involved and peculiar question on an occasion of this kind. I believe that if there is one problem with which parliament has to deal which should have been kept non-political, it is this very problem of war claims and reparations. I shall not take issue exactly with the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) for introducing this question in the form of an amendment to a motion for supply, because he may claim that this is one of the few opportunities he may have had to discuss the matter at all.

I am not trying to place blame on anyone, but I do regret the circumstances most sincerely. Having given much time and study to the problem I regret that the hon. member should have brought the matter up in such a way that the house cannot pronounce upon it without, at the same time, according to the custom and rules of the house, expressing its confidence or non-confidence in the general policy of the government.

I say that this matter should be non-political, first because it is a relic of the great war, and as such should be kept out of politics, and also because both parties, not in the sense of political parties, but in the sense of having held power alternately, are more or less connected with the question and responsible for its development. It was initiated in 1918, not by a Liberal government, but by the then Conservative government, which invited these claims in terms that I shall read in a moment. Three commisisoners have been appointed successively to deal with this matter, one of whom was a Conservative appointee, and the other two appointees of Liberal governments. One of the commissioners sat for three or four months when the party opposite held power in the famous year of 1926. Therefore while we on this side admit that we were responsible for the main portion of the development of the question in this country, we do claim that it is a non-political question and one for which both parties alternately have taken their responsibility.

The member for Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) himself admitted that it was unfortunate that he had to bring forward the question in this form, and perhaps the house will keep in mind that this is not a question with respect to which any political advantage should be sought or any political blame apportioned. It is obvious that if this government sought merely political advantage, it would have been easier to grant the claims at once and make payments, because it is acknowledged that it is always more popular for a government to meet claims than to discourage them. That the government has not done so proves that it had the very best of reasons, and I shall try, even if at some length, to demonstrate the difficulties of this problem.

I cannot find fault with my hon. friend for his presentation of the facts. He has done so in moderate language, and has shown much study in the preparation of his case and remarkable skill in its presentation. I can meet him in many of the things he has said, and I congratulate him on the tone of his address. I would have been very sorry if he had made any attempt to direct his argument in political channels, and I am pleased to acknowledge that he has carefully avoided doing so. True, in presenting the facts he has sometimes, inadvertently I am sure, omitted certain points which give a different interpretation to some of the documents to which he has referred; and occasionally he has drawn conclusions at which we have not arrived, and at which perhaps parliament will not arrive after it has heard both sides of the question.

On the first point I shall try to dispel the confusion which has often existed in the minds of practically all people who have approached the department to discuss this matter—the confusion between the different forms of reparations. Different articles of the treaty, as my hon. friend has made clear, relate to outstanding debts between Germany and the allied countries, to sequestrated property, and to these war claims which have been dealt with by our commissioners. It is very important to make this distinction. In the treaty of Versailles these three classes are dealt with under appropriate articles. As regards the outstanding debts between Germany and the allied countries, article 296 established a clearing office through which adjustment could be made. As to the sequestration of property in the different countries, this is dealt with under article 297, and it has nothing to do with the cases referred to by Commissioner Friel.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. RINFRET: The cases which were submitted to the commissioner are dealt with in articles 231, 232 and 233 of the treaty. My hon. friend has read those articles, but perhaps the house will bear with me while I read them again. Article 231 is as follows:

> The allied and associated governments affirm and Germany accepts the responsibility of Germany and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the allied and associated governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her allies.

Article 232 is in these terms:

> The allied and associated governments recognize that the resources of Germany are not adequate, after taking into account permanent diminutions of such resources which will result from other provisions of the present treaty, to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage.
>
> The allied and associated governments, however, require, and Germany undertakes, that she will make compensation for all damage done to the civilian population of the allied and associated powers and to their property during the period of the belligerency of each as an allied or associated power against Germany by such aggression by land, by sea and from the air, and in general all damage as defined in Annex 1 hereto.

As my hon. friend has pointed out, the annex enumerates a certain number of specific cases which come under this article.

[Mr. Rinfret.]

Now, to make clear the difference—and I think this is essential at the outset—between the sequestration of property, the settlement of outstanding debts, and these peculiar war claims dealt with in Commissioner Friel's report, let me illustrate by an example. Suppose, sir, before the war you were the owner of a ship. If that ship had been in one of the German harbours at the outbreak of the war, it would have been sequestrated. According to article 297, after the war was over Canada could, out of the proceeds of German properties in this country, compensate you for the sequestration and the loss of the ship. That is the property clause. If you were the owner of a ship before 1914, and you had sold it to a German firm but had not been paid for it when war broke out, the amount owed you would be outstanding during the war, and you would come under article 296. Canada, through the Department of the Secretary of State, has collected German accounts in this country, and out of the proceeds paid outstanding Canadian accounts against Germans, and adjusted the whole thing through the clearing office. Again, that has nothing to do with the war claims which have been dealt with by Commissioner Friel. But if your ship remained your property, and during the course of the war suffered damages, then your claim would come under the articles which now interest us. The principle is very simple. My hon. friend has said—and here I take issue with him—that the Massey-Harris Company and other particular companies and individuals have received money. It is true, Mr. Speaker, all Canadians who held properties in Germany have been compensated by the proceeds taken from German properties which we held in Canada.

Mr. ERNST: I did not mean to imply that it was a matter of policy that they had been paid. I said they had been paid de jure under 296 and 297. I took care to distinguish between cases falling within those articles and cases coming under article 232. I said I was not dealing with article 296 or 297.

Mr. RINFRET: I know my hon. friend is not confused in the matter; but I am sure he would not wish that someone else should become confused because of his speech. That is my reason for insisting on the point.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be no clearer now.

Mr. RINFRET: These persons referred to have been compensated because they held properties in Germany, and under another article of the treaty they were allowed to be compensated in Canada by German properties held by us. The treaty provided for that by article 297.

Another class of Canadians have been compensated. They held commercial debts against Germany. We have collected in Canada debts owed by German nationals to Canadians, and we have also prepared a list of outstanding accounts by Canadians to German nationals. These have been brought together and paid, one out of the other, and an adjustment made through the clearing office, an adjustment which has not been quite completed, but practically so. But these had nothing to do with the war claims with which we are now dealing. Very often we hear someone asking, "How is it that although Mr. So-and-So has been paid his claims I have not been paid mine?" The answer is that the claims are of a different nature, and it is easy to understand the principle on which this distinction is arrived at in the treaty of Versailles. The explanation is that it was considered that any claim which existed before the war, even though the payment of that claim had been intercepted by the war, should be recognized as a private claim when the war was concluded. On the other hand, any damage resulting from the war—the sinking of a ship or the destruction of property, or any loss of that character—was considered to come under articles 231 and 232. The treaty of Versailles did not provide that these should not be paid. In article 231 it is stated very clearly that the allied and associated governments affirm and Germany accepts the responsibility for such damages. But what follows? It follows—and this is the teaching of the war—that on both sides it had to be agreed that whilst undoubtedly Germany owed the money, she was not able to pay it and therefore these damages must be treated differently from claims that pre-existed the war. Such claims, existing before the war, are not regarded in the same light as are damages suffered during the war, for which Germany is responsible, but the claims in respect of which she is unable to pay. That is the situation.

I do not interpret the treaty as my hon. friend has interpreted it, that—after disposing of article 231 which deals with the general responsibility of Germany and her allies—article 232, wherein Germany undertakes to make compensation for damages sustained by civilians, should be considered to mean that such civilians and only such civilians shall secure the money paid by Germany. Far from it. My interpretation, which is also the interpretation put upon the treaty by the British government, is that the reparation for damages done to civilians, which was the only portion that Germany could accept, inasmuch as she could not pay the rest, would form the basis of payments by Germany to the allied countries. But it does not follow that, because the allies could not be recouped for all classes of damages suffered in consequence of the war, they should deal only with one particular class of payments and distribute to that class of the population the entire payment by Germany.

It is quite important to distinguish between property sequestrated during the war, outstanding commercial debts, and the war claims with which we are now dealing. And we may as well dismiss at once such comparisons as have been made this afternoon—as, for instance, that Massey-Harris having been paid, therefore all claims should be settled. The fact is that they are in different classes altogether and should not be confused. But after the agreement of Versailles was made in the manner indicated by articles 231 and 232, the plan was abandoned and another method resorted to. It was at first contemplated that Canadian claims should be heard, not by a Canadian commissioner in Canada but that they should be sent to London to be heard by a mixed German- British commission together with representatives of the British Empire. That proposal was however changed, and in 1921, at the conference of Spa, instead of taking as the basis of payments by Germany to the allies the amount of damages sustained by civilians, a fixed amount was arrived at of 132,000,000,000 gold marks. That was considered to be the sum for which Germany would render herself responsible to the allied countries.

Mr. ERNST: That was not at the conference of Spa; that was decided upon by the reparations commission. My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. RINFRET: Perhaps we do not agree. However, at the conference held at Spa in May, 1921, the amount of reparations to be paid by Germany was fixed at 132,000,000,000 gold marks, and there was no necessity for assessment of these claims by the reparations commission. The fact I wish to emphasize is this, that instead of requiring Germany to act upon these claims it was agreed that Germany should pay that sum I have mentioned, namely, 132,000,000,000 gold marks to the allied countries generally for distribution in certain proportions. Therefore these claims were not heard at all before the mixed commission in London to which I have referred. As I say, that plan was altogether abandoned. Perhaps I should place on Hansard at this point the apportionment of this 132,000,000 gold marks among the allied countries. The percentages are as follows:

	Per cent
British Empire	22
France	52
Italy	10
Japan	.75
Belgium	8
Portugal	.75

As regards the balance it was agreed that:

6.5 per cent shall be reserved for Greece, Roumania, the Serb-Croat-Slovene state, and for the other powers entitled to reparation which are not signatories to this agreement.

In the month of July, 1921, a conference of representatives of the dominions and of the British treasury was held for the purpose of apportioning among the United Kingdom and the various dominions the 22 per cent of the reparation payable to the British Empire. Several conferences were held. Subsequently the amount payable to Canada was fixed at 4.35 per cent of the 22 per cent apportioned to the British Empire. The apportionment was as follows:

	Per cent
Great Britain	86.85
Minor colonies	.80
Canada	4.35
Australia	4.35
New Zealand	1.75
South Africa	.60
Newfoundland	.10
India	1.20

I submit these figures in order to show that the original proposal, for the allied countries to present, before a mixed commission, their claims for war damages, had been gradually abandoned and ultimately replaced by an agreement whereby Germany was to pay a fixed amount, to be distributed in certain proportions amongst the allies, the apportionment to Great Britain to be again distributed in fixed proportions among the different dominions. Later on the fixed sum of 132,000,000,000 gold marks appeared too considerable for Germany to pay and the Dawes plan superseded that agreement. And it is under the Dawes plan that we have received, upon three successive occasions, amounts which now aggregate $10,175,071. On this point I wish to be thoroughly understood. In the first place, in the treaty itself it was never contemplated for one moment that the basis agreed upon by the allied countries and Germany for the payment of reparations should be binding upon every state; and because Germany was unable to meet a part of the reparations for the damage she had caused the allied countries to suffer, it was decided that when any of the allies should secure reparation in the form of money they were not bound to employ that money in any particular way but might use it for the general welfare of such country. Further than that, in other stages of the negotiations between Germany and the allied countries following the plan of the treaty, if there was a doubt as to the meaning of article 231 and article 232, that scheme was abandoned and a new basis was fixed; under the new agreement the reparations were to be divided among the allied countries. Germany could not meet the whole claim for reparations, but the proportion which Germany was able to pay was to be employed by the different countries for the general welfare of each particular country, and the money was not to be distributed especially to any one class of claimants.

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask a question just there? In so far as the treaty expressly reserved the right to recover for loss and damage from Germany, only and exclusively for loss and damage suffered by the civil population, is there not thereby imposed upon the government receiving compensation for loss to the civilian population an obligation to see that the civilian population are compensated to the extent to which the government have received money as their share of the reparations?

Mr. RINFRET: That is where we differ. I have tried to explain that by article 231 Germany admits and the allies affirm that Germany is responsible not only for the loss suffered by civilians but for the general damages caused by the war, military expenditures and everything else. However, by article 232 the treaty says that since Germany cannot pay for the total loss the allies will be satisfied if she pays a portion of it.

Mr. CAHAN: No, it provides for the payment of the losses sustained by the civil population.

Mr. RINFRET: Perhaps my hon. friend will allow me to illustrate the point in this way: If he had a set of creditors and a set of debtors, could he say, "Because I have not been able to collect more than a part of the money owing by my debtors I am bound to pay only a certain class of creditors"? That is where the difference lies between my hon. friend and myself.

Mr. CAHAN: That is the clearing house scheme.

Mr. RINFRET: Canada is getting a certain amount of money, but by article 231 Canada would be entitled to collect over a billion dollars from Germany. However, Germany says she cannot pay that money but that she is at least willing to meet the losses suffered by civilians. It does not follow because we only get part of the amount owing by Germany that we are bound to pay it to those claimants whose damages served as a basis for the whole claim. Even if there were room for a difference of opinion in this regard, surely there can be no difference on the fact that this scheme has been abandoned and a fixed amount arrived at instead, under which we have received payments according to the Dawes plan.

My hon. friend has read part of a statement made in the British parliament on May 4, 1920, by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Chamberlain. It is not very long and I would like to read it all, since it appears to bear very much on the question. This will be found at page 1874 of the English parliamentary debates:

His Majesty's government are engaged in preparing, for submission to the reparation commission, schedules of claims which they are entitled to put forward against the German government under the various categories specified in annex 1 to the reparation chapter of the treaty of peace. The reparation commission will in due course decide whether and to what extent the claims submitted are admissible. They are required to notify to the German government, on or before 1st May, 1921, the amount of damage for which Germany is liable, and to draw up a schedule of payments prescribing the time and manner for securing and discharging the entire obligation within thirty years.

The British government may not, therefore, know for some time the amount at which their claim in respect of damage done to individuals is admitted. In any case payment may be expected to be spread over a considerable period.

His Majesty's government have given careful consideration to the position of individuals in respect of whose losses reparation will be claimed by His Majesty's government. It must be understood that the claims to be made are claims by the British government in respect of a wrong done to the state, and not claims by individuals in respect of private wrongs, and that the government do not act as the agents of any individual to put forward his personal claim. Any payments that may be received from Germany are therefore the property of the nation, and no individual will have any claim in law for any sum which the British government may receive from Germany in respect of reparation.

That is very clear, and that is the position I have taken this afternoon. I will read further:

But His Majesty's government recognize that in particular cases, while there can be no legal claim a private individual may have a strong moral claim for compensation for sufferings and damage for which it will be the desire of parliament to make provision. They propose, therefore, to set aside a sum of £5,000,000 out of the first receipts on account of reparation which are allocated to the exchequer of the United Kingdom, as distinct from the British empire... . . to be used as a fund out of which payments can be made to individuals as an act of grace on the part of His Majesty's government.

I may say that as a government we fully agree with that declaration. No matter what basis was arrived at under the treaty, any payments made by Germany to the state are the property of the state, and the state has not acted as an agent for any individuals, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer has clearly said.

Mr. ERNST: I did not so contend.

Mr. RINFRET: Well, I am speaking in a general way. Now let us examine the other side of the question, to see what has taken place in Canada. As my hon. friend said, on November 15, 1918, an order in council was passed by the Borden government which read as follows:

The committee of the Privy council have had before them a report dated the 14th of November 1918, from the Secretary of State, stating that during the period of the present war persons residing and carrying on business in Canada have been subjected to loss and pecuniary damage, and have claims arising from the destruction of life and property through the illegal warfare of the enemy, and that, through the operation of the consolidated orders respecting trading with the enemy, persons residing and carrying on business in Canada have been subjected to claims for damages for breaches of contract, which contracts they were prevented from carrying out owing to the operation of the statutory list of persons in neutral countries with whom they were prohibited from trading, and that it is advisable that a list of all such claims should be prepared, for such action as may hereafter be considered advisable.

The minister therefore recommends that Thomas Mulvey, Under-Secretary of State, be appointed an officer to take such steps as may be necessary to obtain a complete list of:

(a) Claims of persons residing or carrying on business in Canada who have been subjected to loss and pecuniary damage arising from the destruction of life and property through illegal warfare of the enemy; and

(b) Claims for damages to which persons residing or carrying on business in Canada have been subjected for breaches of contracts, which contracts were prevented from being carried out owing to the operation of the statutory list of persons in neutral countries with whom such contracts were declared illegal, and examine and report upon all such claims as aforesaid.

The committee concur in the foregoing recommendation and submit the same for approval.

Immediately following that order in council public notice was given to the newspapers, as my hon. friend also said, inviting claims under these two classes and the advertisement added:

> Persons having such claims should immediately file the same. Instructions respecting the method of filing and the proof to be furnished may be obtained from the undersigned. The filing of a claim does not imply an undertaking on the part of the government to put forward such claim at the termination of hostilities or any assurance that the claim, if put forward, will be paid. It is advisable, however, that claims should be made promptly, so as to enable the government to put them forward if occasion arises for doing so.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would say that I am at liberty to state that this was initiated by a former government, a government belonging to another party. In November, 1918, in the advertisement that was put out through every paper, and to which my hon. friend referred, it was stated clearly that the purpose was to file claims, and produce them if necessary, but that the government did not take any responsibility whatever, or did not guarantee that they would be paid. That is a very important point.

Sir Douglas Hazen was appointed commissioner on October 31, 1921, and later on was made a judge in his own province. On May 21, 1923, the Hon. Mr. Pugsley was appointed commissioner, but he only heard a very limited number of cases before he died. It was only on June 19, 1925, that Mr. Friel was made commissioner, and had the opportunity to complete the consideration of the 1,615 cases which were submitted for examination. It was unfortunate that this work could not have been completed by Commissioner Hazen, but I think the house will agree with me that the government of to-day is not responsible for Sir Douglas Hazen's accepting an appointment to the bench and occasioning the first delay. When Commissioner Pugsley died after hearing a certain number of cases, it occasioned another delay. It was only in the month of June, 1925, that Commissioner Friel was appointed by the King government, and began the very extensive work which carried him from one end of this country to the other. He was forced to hear evidence and to pronounce on cases which were greatly involved and which differed in character.

It might be said at this point, "Why carry on this work if it was not intended to make payment?" In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I will say that this government has never indicated that it was not willing to make any payment, but has indicated that it has not sufficient evidence before it to warrant a further declaration of policy. The house will appreciate that although this work was started by order in council in 1918, it was practically the month of June, 1925, when Commissioner Friel took charge, before any practical work was accomplished. He not only had to hear a great number of new cases, but, in many instances, he had to go over the cases that had been started by Commissioner Pugsley but had not been decided.

I would like to say right here that I think Commissioner Friel deserves the very highest praise for the work that he has done. He had practically nothing to guide him outside of what had taken place in other countries, and in no two countries were the conditions absolutely analogous. He had to follow his own judgment and his own guidance to a great extent, but, nevertheless, he has carried the work through, and just on the eve of the present session we had his report before us for our own personal study and perusal.

I would like to put on Hansard some of the opinions that were given by hon. members, not only of the Conservative party, but also of the independent third group we had in this house when Hon. Mr. Copp's resolution was introduced in 1925.

It will be argued and asked, "Was it then the intention of the government to proceed with these payments if a resolution of this kind was introduced?" Upon the day Commissioner Friel was appointed, the resolution was introduced; it was a permissive resolution which would allow the Secretary of State to proceed. Although I was not a member of the government at the time, I would think that it was a resolution brought before parliament in order to find out if there was any sympathy for such a proposal in the House of Commons. I might say that the resolution met with very little approval, in fact with such rebuke that the then Secretary of State thought it advisable to withdraw it. My hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) has read the resolution, and I will not read it again. I would like to point out some of the objections that were made to the principle of the resolution.

The member for Queens-Lunenburg has stated somewhat lightly that Mr. Meighen objected to the thing being dealt with in camera, or something of the kind. He presented objections of a very serious character, and if those objections are still entertained in the minds of the hon. members they will have as much strength to-day as they had three years ago.

One of the objections offered was that the money belonged to the nation and that it should go into the treasury of the nation and should not be paid to any individual. Another objection was that we should not take the dictum of one commissioner appointed by one government. He might happen to be partisan and we should not be satisfied with the decisions of that commissioner, as to how the money would be distributed. Another argument produced was that the report was not available, and that parliament could not pronounce on it until the report was presented.

On this last point, my hon. friends may contend that we had the report and we should have tabled it and given them an opportunity to study it, but I do not think my hon. friends have any idea of what goes with the report. The report is only a schedule of names, with a certain number of arbitrary amounts estimated by Commissioner Friel to the best of his knowledge. I admit that this has been done with great ability, but it is still the dictum of one man, as was put up to us in 1925. To deal with the report properly means that we must study a number of judgments covering 1,615 cases, and, more than that, very bulky evidence piling up higher than this table that is before me.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that all the arguments presented by my hon. friends on all sides of the house on June 19, 1925, still retain all their strength. I will be frank enough to say that this was one of the reasons for the present Secretary of State dealing very cautiously with a matter on which parliament, representing after all the sentiment of the nation, had pronounced so clearly only three years ago.

Let us see what was said on that point by different members in June, 1925. Mr. Meighen, then leader of the Conservative party, stated as follows, Hansard, page 4519:

> I do not know what the nature of these claims is. I do not doubt some of them are good. I am not going to speak arbitrarily on the priority right of these claimants. It may be they have it; I doubt it. I want to say now, I doubt very much if special claims for damages due to the war are in priority to the state itself—the damage of the state. Reparations are not paid in respect of the special damage of the individuals of a country; they are paid in respect of the damage of the nation itself.

I pause to comment on the usual conciseness of statement which was then characteristic of the leader of the Tory party.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister thinks much more of him now than he did then.

Mr. RINFRET: I would not want my hon. friend to think from what I have just said that I would reproach him for lacking clarity of expression, but he usually surrounds his statements with an environment of cheerfulness which was lacking in his predecessor. As reported on page 4524, Mr. Meighen said:

> I should not like to say finally and definitely that they should not have some priority, even priority as is set forth in this resolution until I see what is done by other countries. But there is nothing to put them ahead of the state's claim for pensions, and this resolution, if it passes, gives them the first place all round. Until their claims are fully satisfied, all else has to stand aside.

The hon. member for Fort William, as reported on page 4519 said:

> Hon. R. J. Manion (Fort William and Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it certainly does seem strange that the money we get in our first reparations should be paid out to individuals, no matter who they may be. I must confess that I had the impression that German property which we held in this country was to be used for that purpose. It is absolutely new to me that the reparations which we get for the calamity of the war, for the catastrophe through which we have passed and the suffering which we had sustained, should be handed out to any individuals, be they ever so deserving. It would seem that the money we get in reparations is for the benefit of the taxpayer generally in this country. I say it subject to further thought, because I must say I had not read this resolution until to-day, but it seems to me we should use that money for the benefit of the general taxpayer rather than for any individuals who may have suffered losses and yet who may have been able to stand them a great deal better than those who lost their limbs or were otherwise disabled and perhaps are getting a very small pension, to say nothing of those who lost their lives. I believe the government would be well advised, in a matter of this importance, while accepting the money, of course, to hold it until parliament has had further time to discuss the whole question.

On page 4524, the same hon. gentleman put the matter even more clearly and strongly, as follows:

> Would the hon. member consider for example that the mother of a couple of boys who went over there and were killed, who is barely living on a pension, having a difficult time getting along at all, whereas before the boys went over there she was in good circumstances, has not a better right to get something of this than a shipowner who lost a cargo of grain, who did not happen to have it insured, and who has a claim against Germany? There are thousands of such cases in this country.

That was a good argument and I still believe there was strength in it. I am not reading this at all for the mere sake of having a little pleasure at the expense of some hon. gentlemen opposite, far from it. I want to show that at that time there was an opinion presented in the parliament of Canada by the Conservative party against not only the immediate payment of the money but the very principle involved in paying individuals out of money collected from Germany for war damages. I am glad to bring forward the opinion of a man for whom I have much respect and esteem, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who stated his case rather clearly on that occasion. I am reading from page 4517 of Hansard and again I say there was much strength in his argument:

Mr. Woodsworth: It has been stated that when these claims were filed the purpose of the department was to secure some sort of an estimate as to the amount upon which a claim by Canada could be based, and that it was not originally the idea that these particular claimants should receive anything.

That is the very argument I made a minute ago.

That is, that the amounts should go to the government of Canada, remain with the government and not be passed out to the individuals who had filed claims for reparations. Am I right in my understanding that that was the original idea at the time the claims were filed?

Mr. Copp: My hon. friend is absolutely right.

That states pretty clearly the position of the government in 1925:

Mr. Copp: My hon. friend is absolutely right; the claimants had no legal claim upon the government of Canada for the payment of any of these reparations. These moneys are due to Canada as a whole; but we felt that as there were so many poor people, fishermen and others among the citizens of Canada who made claims, and as reparations to a certain extent were being paid by Germany, claim of those who suffered loss or damage should be paid.

Other hon. gentlemen joined with the leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Fort William, and my good friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, to oppose the resolution. I find that the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) is reported on page 4518 of Hansard as stating his opposition in these words:

Mr. Spencer: I do not see why the taxpayers of Canada should be taxed to collect debts for individuals, when the whole people of Canada in many ways lose so heavily from the war.

I could quote the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) who was then sitting for East Calgary, and who as reported on page 4522, also made his case very clear in these words:

Mr. William Irvine (East Calgary): If we have to depend on receiving reparations from the countries of Europe, I do not think we will be overburdened with moneys to distribute. But even if we were, it does not affect the principle at all; I do not think it is possible for any body of men to arrive at a sure and just decision as to who should be reimbursed for losses during the war. If there are millions to come under the Dawes provisions, I think that money should go against the national debt. If it does not fit in there, there is another place where it would fit in admirably; it should go to augment the pensions of the wounded soldiers and war widows.

[Mr Rinfret.]

And so on. I could quote the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), who is reported on page 4519 as taking this stand:

Mr. Coote: I do not think this house is justified in paying out all the money they may receive from reparations to individuals whose claims have been allowed by this commissioner. At this late stage of the session I do not think there is any use wasting a great many words over it, but there is a question of principle here which should be decided, and speaking for myself I am very much opposed to the principle set forth in the resolution.

I think I have made it abundantly clear that in 1925, when the government presented a resolution to feel out the opinion of the house on the matter, there was strong opposition as regards the very principle of paying to individuals reparation money that in the opinion of these gentlemen should remain in the treasury of the country. Objections were also raised on another point, namely, that the dictum of a commissioner could not be accepted as a decision in regard to distribution. Mr. Meighen also made that very clear as reported on page 4517. That was his first objection:

Mr. Meighen: Does the minister propose that on the report of the late Hon. William Pugsley, he is to be permitted to distribute assets amounting to millions of dollars in cash among those whom Mr. Pugsley thought the money ought to go to?

A couple of pages further on, page 4519, Mr. Meighen says again:

This is merely requesting the government for authority to pay out millions of money as a first charge on reparations, on the mere say-so of him who, unfortunately, now has passed away, but who was for many years a close associate of the government themselves. It is a measure of far-reaching consequence—

And so on. As reported on page 4523 Mr. Meighen once more comes back to the same line of argument. He says:

If I remember rightly, the pensions as respects all the dominions were taken on the French scale it did not matter what scale they were on, so long as they were all on the same scale; the French scale was adopted in order to see how one country compared with another in pension liability. Many more elements entered into the estimate of what the war loss was with a view to each getting his proper share of the reparations. It seems to me astounding that we should now go on the say-so of a commissioner or of anybody else, even of a court, and authorize priority to individuals over the position of the state.

On that same point I could also quote other hon. gentlemen, but I think I have quoted enough to show that strong objection was taken in this house three years ago, not by Liberals, not by members of this side of the house, Mr. Speaker, but by hon. gentlemen opposite, by the very leaders of that party, and also by representative members of the group of independents in the far east corner of this chamber against, first, the principle of paying that money to individuals, and in the second place, of taking the dictum or say so, as Mr. Meighen put it, of a commissioner, and being satisfied with that distributing the money on his decision.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that I was right when I said at the outset that this question is very involved and presents many aspects that should be dealt with, not in a political spirit at all, but rather in a national spirit, in order to try to arrive at the proper conclusion, and that all parties were more or less responsible, both for introducing the question into this country, and later on for blocking its progress. Those are the true circumstances that cannot be superseded by any attitude taken in the House of Commons.

I come now to the pont where this report reached us on the eve of the opening of the session, and as I have said, not merely the report, but a mass of judgments, and a bulk of evidence requiring the most careful study, a study which could not be given to the report at that time when we were occupied with preparing the work of the session. I regret as much as any other hon. member of this house the delay to which we have inevitably been subjected in dealing with this matter, but I am sure that the house will admit, after the exposition of facts which I have made, both as regards the principle of the whole question and the facts which have surrounded it in this country, that the government could not possibly base a policy upon merely a superficial study of the report, merely upon the presentation of a report which required the most intent and careful study. I might add that that delay has been general.

My hon. friend has alluded to the United States. That is twice in so many days that we have had members from the other side of the house pointing out to us the example of the great American republic. First it was on naturalization; now it is in connection with the payment of these claims. I think my hon. friends will admit at last that all the American spirit in this house is not on this side.

Mr. CLARK: We referred to that because we thought you would understand it.

Mr. RINFRET: The fact remains that the United States have just adopted legislation covering war claims, and it is on such a different scale from ours that I cannot understand how my hon. friend could even think of making a comparison. In the United States they are not coming under the Spa agreement or under the Dawes plan of payments, but their claims are being submitted, not to a commissioner of their own country, but to a mixed commission representing the United States and Germany, and the payments are to be made directly by Germany conditional upon a certain priority. That is a different proposition altogether, and it cannot possibly be brought into comparison with the case with which we have to deal in Can ada.

In Great Britain they have done differently and may I say a word as to that? In Great Britain they have fixed the amount of £5,000,000 to be distributed to claimants. They have fixed that sum, instead of having a commissioner to inquire into all the claims coming before him, and then recommending the payment of a certain amount. They have gone at it the other way. They have said: We will pay £5,000,000 towards these claims, and we will appoint a commissioner to distribute that amount to the best of his ability and good judgment.

Mr. CAHAN: But the distribution was made in proportion to the merits of the claims as decided by that commission.

Mr. RINFRET: I am just coming to that. Hon. members may think that £5,000,000 is a pretty huge sum, but let me point out that so far Great Britain has received as her share £45,000,000 in payments from Germany, so £5,000,000 represents only about 10 per cent of what she has received so far from Germany. I do not wish to detract from any merits to which Great Britain is entitled in this case. I acknowledge that Great Britain has distributed the sum of £5,000,000 to meet the most pressing cases, but Great Britain has not distributed any additional amount since. If we in Canada were going to meet the claims amounting to $6,000,000, representing the total awards, plus interest, of Commissioner Friel's report, then instead of distributing a little over 10 per cent to satisfy civilian claims, which is the proportion Great Britain distributed, we should be distributing over 50 per cent of the money that has come to Canada.

My hon. friend will admit that it is true that Great Britain met at once, or at any rate sooner than we have done, the necessitous claims to the amount of £5,000,000, but I fail to see that since that time, although the Dawes payments have been evolved, Great Britain has added to that original distribution.

Mr. ERNST: I do not for one moment ask that the whole of this $6,000,000 should be paid out. The resolution reads, "in whole or in part".

Mr. RINFRET: I will admit that my hon. friend has been very vague in his conclusions. He is in favour of going on a report that he has not seen, and it is indifferent to him whether we pay in full or in part. I do not blame him for being vague, because I know the amendment is not his. I have sat on the other side of the house and I have moved amendments myself that were put in my hand. At the same time the hon. member must take the responsibility for it. My hon. friend's stands is this: I have not seen the report, but I should accept the report in full or in part, whether it means the expenditure of $6,000,000 or $10,000,000 or $500; I am not concerned as to that; we should pay something.

My stand, Mr. Speaker, as a responsible member of the government, is that on account of the questions involved in the report, we are not yet in a position to recommend the proportion of payments to be made, and that perhaps, although we have presented the facts very much in the same way, although on many points we are agreed, is where we differ absolutely as to the conclusions. Instead of taking the attitude taken by my hon. friend, who, not knowing what is in the report, is willing to recommend anything at all, we take the stand that until we have studied fully the report and the evidence in connection with it, we will not as a responsible government make any proposal to the parliament of Canada. That is the stand we take.

My hon. friend has insisted on the fact that we have received a little over $10,000,000. May I pause here to say that that is merely a drop in the bucket when compared with the huge expenditure that has been left to us as a legacy from the war. That amount would not pay one-third of our yearly expenditure on war pensions alone. It would not begin to pay the monthly instalments on the interest which we now have to meet on the public debt of this country. If my hon. friend takes the stand, as he did, that the whole of this money must go to pay these special claims, then he can say: We have more than we need. But that is a stand that I positively refuse to take. It has not been taken in the British parliament. It was not accepted by this house in 1925, nor by any hon. member, not even by the minister who presented the resolution. We take the stand that the money accruing from the Dawes payments belongs to the nation, and in my opinion it is but a very meagre and feeble compensation for the huge legacy of debt that the war has left to this country.

[Mr. Ernst.]

Again I say, it will not be one-third of the war pensions for a year, it will not be one month's interest on the national debt. It is a mere drop of water, and should be so considered if we look upon not only these claims, which are a side issue of the war lagacy, but upon the intolerable burden that has been placed upon the Dominion by our very heavy war expenditure—an expenditure for which Germany accepted responsibility, but which she has been unable to meet in full. And surely because Germany has been able to meet only a very small portion of that expenditure we should not disregard the main portion when we deal with matters of this kind. Perhaps after all it is a lesson of the late war that we should not forget, that in modern times with all the intricate equipment that invention has rendered possible, war is not only a castrophe for the vanquished, but it also involves very serious disadvantages even to the victorious country. It may not be altogether out of place in a debate of this kind to say that it would be well for Canada to ponder over the fact that war as it is staged under modern conditions is disastrous for all the belligerent nations. And when we deal with war claims, instead of devoting our sympathy to a single class of claimants, we should not forget that the whole nation has suffered and should receive consideration.

But, Mr. Speaker, I feel I must conclude, although I have a mass of evidence before me that I have not yet dealt with.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. RINFRET: Now, what was the course open to us? Taking into consideration the fact that this money undoubtedly belongs to the nation, and that although there has been delay in dealing with the matter through the appointment of successive commissioners, yet we are still without sufficient data to introduce a policy for the acceptance of parliament.

Mr. QUINN: May I ask the minister a question? He has impressed upon the house the great burden resulting from war. This being so, why is the government so lavish in voting ten million dollars for the beautification of this city and a million and a half dollars to repair the citadel of Quebec?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not admit that the government is lavish, but I do admit that the government will continue to function. I for one am always ready to commend the policy of any government that leads to the expenditure of the taxpayers' money on works of peace, on the development of the country along sound lines, rather than feel over-enthusiastic in regard to expenditures thrust upon us by a world-wide catastrophe.

Now, what could the government have done when this report was before it in February of this year? We could have presented the report to the house and endorsed in the full the recommendations made by Commissioner Friel; but, as I have said, I believe this would not have been a good policy to follow, and in this view I am confirmed by the opinion of parliament in 1925, which made it very clear that it would not consider the word of a commissioner as sufficient in itself with respect to the distribution of these funds. It might have been possible to table the report and introduce a measure recommending payment of the claims as awarded by Mr. Friel, and also allowing those claims which had been dismissed by him or entertained in part to be reconsidered by an appeal commission. But my hon. friends will at once admit that this would have given to the whole matter a kind of legal recognition by the government. Besides, it must not be forgotten that the amount of the claims put before Commissioner Friel totalled $55,000,000, without interest, which would mean another $20,000,000. We did not deem it advisable to throw open the whole matter again by allowing appeals. Then we could have disregarded payment altogether. In this respect I wish to assure parliament, if it needs reassuring, that we are perfectly willing to stand by the attitude taken by the British government. We do not acknowledge any legal right on the part of these claimants, but in certain cases we are willing to admit a moral right to recognition. But Commissioner Friel's report contains nothing that would allow us to proceed along those lines immediately, and therefore we have decided—and I think our decision will appeal to the judgment of the house and also to that of the country—we have decided to give the matter further study during the recess, to look into the mass of evidence and judgments which accompany Commissioner Friel's report, in order to be in a position next session, not in any haphazard way, not basing our action on the recommendations of the commissioner, but by a very careful study of each one of his decisions, to recommend legislation to this parliament on the basis of the British award. That is to say, not to acknowledge any legal right in any such claims, but as an act of grace and on compassionate grounds to recommend awards to certain classes of claims for a certain amount that we will best be in a position to determine when we have given the question the study it deserves.

That, Mr. Speaker, is our position. I repeat, I think it will commend itself to the good judgment of the house and of the country, and certainly it will bear comparison with the attitude taken by the official opposition, which is equivalent to saying: We do not know what the report is, we have not even seen it, but still we are willing to recommend that payment in full or payment in part, either one or the other, or both perhaps if this course can be entertained, be acceded to by the house.

Mr. BENNETT: That is neither clever nor ministerial.

Mr. RINFRET: I am willing to admit, Mr. Speaker, that the quality of my wit is not at all on the same level with that of the leader of the opposition; but as to that I will leave others to judge.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister permit a question? He will recall that on two or three occasions I asked him when the report would be available. He will also recall that he promised the house that immediately the report was received by the government it would be laid on the table, on one occasion intimating that he expected it in a day or two. Now, I ask the minister: Does he consider that he is justified in taunting us with not having seen the report when we have had no opportunity of studying it?

Mr. RINFRET: I have tried very hard this afternoon to explain the whole matter. It was unfortunate that we should discuss that matter to-day and in such an atmosphere, and I am willing to withdraw from my speech any word that may have offended any hon. gentleman opposite. It was not in my mind at all, and indeed it never is, to give offence. The reason why the report was not tabled I will state. When we found that we could not possibly base legislation upon the report we thought that it was not only useless but inadvisable to table a report which would indicate to 1,600 different persons that they might be awarded certain sums which in the long run they might not receive. That is why we did not table the report. We will table the report when we are in the position to intimate at the same time what we intend to do with it.

Mr. STEVENS: How can the minister justify his condemnation of us for our position in the absence of the very report which enables him to make that statement?

Mr. RINFRET: I am not condemning the opposition, I am merely comparing the attitude taken by the two parties respectively. My hon. friend (Mr. Ernst) might have moved an amendment reproaching the government with not having tabled the report, or with not having dealt with the matter. But the amendment goes further; it declares that we should pay even in full. I say that this is a very dangerous attitude to take on a question of this kind. I admit that it is not the fault of the opposition if they have not all the required information. At the same time, however, as they have not that information, surely I am at liberty to say that their stand is rather radical. If they had seen the report and realized just what it means perhaps they would be more inclined to share our views in the matter.

Mr. CLARK: Is it a fact that this report has been furnished to the press or to a section of the press?

Mr. RINFRET: Not that I know of. So far as I am concerned, I may say that a few copies only have been printed for use of council.

Mr. CLARK: I mean of course with instructions not to publish it until—

Mr. RINFRET: No. In the first weeks of the session some hon. gentleman put questions on the order paper and was given some information, though not in detail, as to the total number of claims, the total amount claimed and the total amount awarded. That information was given officially in the house, and all that I have read in the press has been based thereon, with comments added by the press on its own behalf and for which of course I accept no responsibility.

Now let me sum up. In the first place, reparation money undoubtedly belongs to the country; and in the second place the report of a commissioner, in the opinion of the house itself as presented three years ago, in 1925, cannot be taken as a basis for distribution of any money. Therefore, as I have said, it is our intention during the recess, when the labours of the session are over, to give that report, the judgments and the evidence the fullest care and study in order to be in a position at the beginning of next session to introduce legislation. I cannot now foresee exactly what that legislation will be, but I can say that in principle it will be shaped by and based upon the policy adopted in the British parliament by the British government. It will not admit any legal rights, but the government is willing to meet some of these claims on compassionate grounds and as an act of grace. And I hope that this policy will commend itself to the good sense of the parliament of Canada and of the country.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): I will ask the house to bear with me for but a few minutes. I was not much interested and less convinced by the lengthy speech made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) on this matter. I go back to the resolution before the house in 1925 in which it was declared to be expedient to make provision for the payment of claims for reparations in respect of losses suffered by Canadian nationals during the war. That resolution went on to provide for the appointment of a commission. Those persons interested were asked to submit evidence and they did so at great length and at considerable expense.

I would point out that some of the people of Nova Scotia suffered very greatly. An important corporation in my county lost a large proportion of its fleet, and several other Nova Scotia companies suffered in the conflict. One company in particular, the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, lost close to forty thousands or so of modern high class steamer tonnage sunk by the Germans. Evidence in regard to that matter was submitted to the commission, by whom an award was made. That award was made by Commissioner Pugsley some years ago and is a matter of record. I would point out further that all these vessels, at the time they were torpedoed by the Germans, were engaged in conveying material of one class or another used in prosecution of the war. Early in 1915 a company in New Glasgow entered into a contract to supply the Russian government with 2,000 cars, delivered on the tracks at Vladivostok in working condition. They proceeded to build the cars and the first steamer that sailed for that Pacific port with cars proceeded down to the Panama canal. She arrived there just as an accident had closed the canal to all traffic. That boat was diverted via the Cape of Good Hope and the second boat left, scheduled to go through the Suez canal. She was torpedoed south of the island of Crete and we lost both ship and cargo. The men were thrown into the water on a cold morning in November, their boats were shelled and one capsized, and they were two days adrift. Finally they were able to work their boats to shore at the south end of the island of Crete. That is only one case. We lost a large amount of tonnage of that character.

Several of our Nova Scotian captains lost their ships by torpedo and gunfire; some of them spent several years in German prisons; they lost all they possessed and suffered much in health and estate, and they demand and deserve recompense.

Now the government has received $11,000,000, and some $6,000,000 of claims are admitted. I am not now making any claim on legal grounds; no one on this side of the house has done so, though I will not admit we have no legal claim. But if it were not intended that some compensation should be made, why the resolution to which I have referred? And why did the government act and appoint a commission? Why did we ask people who suffered losses to come forward and give evidence of their losses?

There are hundreds of cases of hardship in regard to which the minister has evidence. He has the report but he refuses to disclose what it calls for. But he asks us to be patient. We have been patient, but he has no right to hold the money. The minister should make payment and I ask him that he do so and meet the reasonable conditions laid down in the resolution, introduced in 1925 into this house, upon which action was taken by the government and a commission appointed. I do not suggest that these claimants have no legal standing; and in any case certainly there is another and a higher claim than that of legal right. I am not prepared, I am not able to follow the Secretary of State in his long speech of technicalities and legal quibbles. I am not interested in that; I care nothing about that. I appeal to the house and to its sense of British justice. The government has received the money for a definite purpose. Let them give to those who suffered losses some proportion of those losses. And let them do it at once.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I congratulate the government on coming to a much more reasonable position than that which is shown by the resolution as introduced in 1925. Very few members of the house will find fault on the whole with the position taken by the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) in the very admirable speech which he has made. Undoubtedly it is difficult to apportion the losses due to the war; I think that is one of the outstanding considerations which we must keep in mind. There were enormous losses of life; there were men who came home permanently disabled; there were homes broken up; there were very large property losses and there is the enormous debt which we must carry to-day. Who is to say just how much each man or each home lost through the war? I should like to urge, however, that property losses have no priority over losses of other kinds sustained by other sufferers; the danger is that in connection with matters of this kind we should think in terms of property lost. A ship may have gone down or it may have been driven ashore on the coast; I can quite understand how keenly such losses were felt by many in the maritime provinces. On the other hand a home in the interior of the country may have been ruined; who is to say that the loss sustained by that home, which is deprived of a relative, perhaps a breadwinner, is less than that sustained by the company which lost a ship? So I think in deciding claims of this character it should be laid down as a fundamental principle that property losses have no prior claims whatever.

The Secretary of State has made it abundantly clear that any claims of this character should not be granted as by right. Undoubtedly the whole legal argument is well sustained that payments from Germany which are due in this connection to this country under the treaty are the property of the state. However, it may be very well that there are certain claims which should have special consideration. I would take it that the general principle should be laid down, and indeed has been laid down by the Secretary of State, that claims should be granted on the ground of compassionate allowance. That, I fancy, would limit very decidedly the scope of the claims which could find any justification.

There is one other position which I should like to put forward—and I am glad to say that I occupy the same ground I did several years ago—that is, that grants of this character should be made only by vote of parliament. I should not like to think that we were giving any plenary powers to a government commission to make large grants in respect of these claims; there should be the most careful scrutiny of all claims, and parliament should pass upon them. I recognize that with a very large number of claims and with a great mass of evidence this may be difficult, but at the same time we are all capable of judging in accordance with general principles. We should have the whole situation very clearly set forth before any definite plan is evolved by the government for the payment of any such claims.

These are matters which I hope the government will take into consideration. As yet we are not committed to any scheme and it seems to me well that now we should carefully decide upon the principles on which any such scheme should be founded.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I think we all agree that in the strict sense of the term these claims which have been filed and proved before the commissioner appointed by the government are not legal claims in the sense that they can be enforced against the government in any court of law. The position is exactly the same as that which arose when, owing to certain depredations of the steamship Alabama, claims were made against England and computed on the basis of the damage and loss caused American citizens by that ship. That loss and damage was recovered by the government of the United States, acting on behalf of the state, and in a similar way we have had many instances where this has been done by the British government. For instance, there is a case now pending in the United States where British citizens have suffered owing to a riot in one of the southern cities which caused loss of life. The British government may press for damages on that account, inasmuch as the damage or loss sustained by individuals can be only recovered by the British government as a government, and when recovered by that government the legal title to the sum so secured is vested in the crown and the money is the property of the crown. But nevertheless the British government have always recognized the principle that they have a responsibility to use such funds so recovered, at least to a certain extent, for the compensation of those British citizens whose loss was the subject of the international negotiation which resulted in the payment of the money.

I think the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) rests under a misapprehension, by reason of the emphasis he gives certain sections of the treaty of Versailles. He referred to certain offsets arising from the sequestration of German property in Canada and the sequestration by the German government of Canadian property in Germany, which were adjusted through a clearing house, if I may say so. That, of course, is not the sort of reparation with which we are dealing in this debate. This reparation arises solely and exclusively under article 231 and the following articles of the treaty of Versailles. Article 231 says:

> The allied and associated governments affirm and Germany accepts the responsibility of Germany and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the allied and associated governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her allies.

That is a recognition of Germany's liability to pay the entire costs of the war, but that was not the basis on which the final agreement was reached. Let me read article 232:

> The allied and associated governments recognize that the resources of Germany are not adequate, after taking into account permanent diminutions of such resources which will result from other provisions of the present treaty, to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage.

Therefore a great volume of the war claims which the allied governments otherwise would have had against Germany were waived. But the claims which were to be paid by Germany out of her reduced resources are set out in the following paragraph:

> The allied and associated governments, however, require, and Germany undertakes, that she will make compensation for all damage done to the civilian population of the allied and associated powers and to their property during the period of the belligerency of each as an allied or associated power against Germany by such aggression by land, by sea and from the air, and in general all damage as defined in annex 1 hereto.

Annex 1 sets out the various classes of damage to the civil population. Subparagraph (1) reads as follows.

> Damage to injured persons and to surviving dependents by personal injury to or death of civilians caused by acts of war.

It was not the losses of the men in the field, but of civilians. Subparagraph (2) reads as follows:

> Damage caused by Germany or her allies to civilian victims of acts of cruelty, violence or maltreatment.

And then subparagraph (3) reads as follows:

> Damage caused by Germany. . . to civilian victims of all acts injurious to health.

I am not quoting these sections in full, to save Hansard. Subparagraph (4) reads as follows:

> Damage caused by any kind of maltreatment of prisoners of war.

And then the final clause, subparagraph (9):

> Damage in respect of all property wherever situated belonging to any of the allied or associated states or their nationals, with the exception of naval and military works or materials, which has been carried off, seized, injured or destroyed by the acts of Germany or her allies on land, on sea or from the air, or damage directly in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war.

This clause covered damages to property owned by civilians. Therefore when this treaty was made, and Canada, as one of the signatories of the treaty and one of the dominions of the British commonwealth engaged in the war, was entitled to reparations, those reparations were largely confined to loss to civilians, and there was also the payment of pensions, which came in under another clause. Canada collects that money as compensation for loss and damage to civilian property, and as compensation for certain pensions paid by her. It seems to me, therefore, beyond any question of doubt, that the government of Canada collecting that fund is morally responsible to see that the fund is appropriated and distributed, not to defray the ordinary expenses of carrying on the war, but for compensating the loss or damage to civilians and civilian property in respect of which Canada recovered these funds from the German state. I think there is a moral obligation. I do not imagine that we shall ever recover from Germany sufficient to pay the loss or damage coming under these various clauses in annex 1 to article 232 of the Versailles treaty.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How does Germany pay her debt to Canada, in gold?

Mr. CAHAN: She is paying it under the Dawes plan.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Through goods sold?

Mr. STEVENS: No, with gold.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Services or goods?

Mr. CAHAN: The money is received by the Canadian government in the form of bills of exchange at the current rate, representing gold coin in this country. But I am not dealing with that.

It was natural, therefore, that the Canadian government should have asked the civilian population of Canada, who had met with loss and damage within the terms of annex 1 to clause 232 of the treaty, to prove their claims, and that they should assume it was the intention of the government to make certain recompense to them for their loss and damage, in so far as the government might recover compensation for such loss and damage from the German government.

I would call attention to the statement made by the Secretary of State on April 11, 1927, in answering certain questions put by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). In replying to these questions, the government, as represented by the Secretary of State, said:

> The commissioner was appointed to investigate and report upon claims of persons residing or carrying on business in Canada who have been subjected to loss and pecuniary damages arising through the destruction of life and property through the illegal warfare of the enemy.

If my hon. friend had said "loss and damages suffered by the civil population", with that modification I think his statement would be more correct. He then went on to deal with losses arising from breach of contract, and he concludes that the commissioner was appointed to investigate and report:

> —for the purpose of determining whether they are within the category set out in the first annex to section (i) of part VIII of the treaty, and the fair amount of such claims, and to make such findings as may be of assistance to the government in determining which, if any, of such claims should be paid, and the extent of payment thereof.

When I heard that statement from the hon. gentleman on April 11, 1927, I assumed that to be a pretty clear statement on behalf of the government that, while they were not committed to the payment of any particular percentage of these claims, they were nevertheless committed to the policy of recognizing the claims and making some recompense in respect thereof. The minister emphasized the fact that there was no legal claim against this government, on the theory that each state itself must make claim for damages caused to its citizens by foreign states. In claiming damages from the foreign state each government asserts such claim as for loss and damage to itself, but its claim is really based on loss and damage to its civilian population and to their property. Nevertheless, in closing his statement on that day, the Secretary of State said.

> The view held by the Canadian government is that claimants for losses above referred to have no claims against either Canada or Germany.

Then he proceeded:

> If there is any claim it is in the right of Canada against Germany under the treaty, and this right is being enforced as set out in answer to questions 8 to 12. This view is also held by the government of the United Kingdom. The Canadian government has under consideration the making of gratuitous payments to claimants, and if it is so decided, parliament will be asked to make an appropriation for that purpose.

Therefore more than a year ago this house was convinced by this statement of the government that the government had the clear intention to make some compensation, which it has since declined and neglected to do. In view of the fact, as the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg has pointed out, that there are some hundreds of claimants in his electoral district, people who can ill afford that their claims should be held in abeyance, it seems that the government has been entirely negligent in its duty in not presenting a decided and considered policy of making payment to those people whose moral claims are undoubted, and particularly so because of the very fact that this government, as one of the allied nations, based its claim against Germany and is receiving recompense from Germany—not by reason of the cost of the war to us, because it has renounced any claim for the cost of the war—but solely on account of and by way of compensation for loss and damage suffered by our own civilian population.

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): I should like to make a few remarks, not that I have anything to say in regard to the legal aspect of the case, but because of a matter which has been brought to my attention by a person living in my constituency. This is a very hard case and I want to put on the record the particulars of the claim. The first letter which I have received in connection with it is dated December 17, 1926, from Lillooet, British Columbia, and reads as follows:

Pardon me for writing to you, but being resident in your constituency I thought you might be able to help me. I was a passenger on the Lusitania when she was torpedoed on May 7, 1915, I was in the water two hours and suffered injuries which neither time nor doctors have been able to cure. I put in a claim against the German government in the year following and since then have sent in certificates and affidavits substantiating my claim. Some weeks ago in reply to a letter, I heard from the commission that my claim had been assessed (they did not mention the amount) and that the matter was to be brought up at the next session (or now). A compassionate vote I believe they call it.

I cannot get to know anything definite, and as I am even now waiting for an operation on my knee, and the trouble is serious and gets worse every day, I thought perhaps you would be good enough to let me know if the vote passes. "Compassionate vote for war claims". I should be more than grateful, as if I could show I would be paid soon, I might be able to borrow the money to take me to the coast for my operation. May I beg of you to return me the enclosed cutting, which I thought might interest you. My husband has gone away to try and get work. He was laid off the roads two months since. Thanking you in anticipation.

Sincerely yours,

INEZ WILSON.

I took the matter up with the department and this is the reply dated Ottawa, March 7, 1927:

Re Mrs Inez Wilson

I have the honour to refer to the matter of the claim for reparation concerning which you had an interview with me this morning.

I am directed to advise that the commissioner has given this claim his consideration and has assessed it. I regret that I am unable to disclose the result of his finding until such time as the commissioner's report is made public.

For your information I may advise that the commissioner filed an interim report with the Honourable the Secretary of State, some two weeks ago, which report has not as yet been made public owing to the fact that the department is giving consideration to the schedules thereto as some rearrangement of them may be found necessary. It is expected. however, that the policy of the government with reference to these matters, will be declared shortly.

I return herewith the correspondence left with me by you.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

J. A. DUFFY,
Secretary.

The first letter she wrote was dated December 17, 1926, and this was the reply. I received another letter from her dated March 15, 1927, as follows:

I received your letter of the 8th, to-day, and I am more than grateful to you for your efforts on my behalf. I appreciate them all the more as you are so busy. I have just been given an opportunity of medical treatment (through friends) in Los Angeles, but I am afraid to go for fear of losing the money. Could you possibly tell me if it would be safe for me to go? I mean that I would not have to come back to Canada to get the money, before my operation on the leg? I am rapidly losing the use of my leg and delay now is dangerous, but I could not go all that way and come back again.

What I wish to know definitely now is, now that my claim has been assesed, would it make any difference where I was residing at the time the claims were paid? If it was to be shortly, I would try to be as patient as I could, but if it is still a long time ahead, I might lose my leg altogether, or at the very least, the use of it. You will I hope understand how serious this is for me, and please forgive me for again troubling you in such a busy season, but if it can be managed, I want to feel absolutely safe in going.

Thanking you again for your kindness, I am,

Faithfully yours,

INEZ WILSON.

Then on November 7, 1927, I have another letter addressed from 972 Palm avenue, Sherman, California, where the lady had gone to receive the medical treatment which she said she might avail herself of by the help of friends. She writes:

Doubtless you will remember me asking your help in Lillooet, re my claim for Lusitania disaster. I heard from Ottawa that the matter would be settled, they thought this winter. Does that mean before Christmas or after? I would be very grateful if you would tell me as far as you know when parliament dissolves and if anything at all has been done and also when the house meets again.

I never see a Canadian paper here, and they do not print any Canadian news much, so I cannot tell if anything is being done or not. I am badly in need of the money, I am better than I was, but have to have a major operation on my leg, and unless I have the money, I cannot have it done. I want to return to Lillooet when I am able and have the means. You were so good to me before that I feel sure you will help me now. Could you possibly (in confidence) tell me if there is really a chance of settlement? This suspense and anxiety is very wearing and I would rather know the worst.

Thanking you in anticipation, I am,

Faithfully yours,

INEZ WILSON.

Then I have another letter dated January 16, 1928:

May I trespass upon your time and kindness, to ask you if you could possibly give me a review of my case and the standing of it, with the Canadian government re my Lusitania claim? Just recently the American Lusitania claimants have been settled and will be paid within the next sixty days. That is why I am asking you again to help me; I am in great need of the money; I require it for a further serious operation and I'm afraid to have it done, unless by a specialist. It is all caused by injuries received in the Lusitania.

They told me it would most probably be settled this last winter, but I've heard nothing further. If you could give me any idea of when the claims will be settled, I would be very thankful. I do not get any Canadian papers here, so I do not hear any parliamentary news. I am grateful for your past interest and remain

Faithfully yours,

(Signed) INEZ WILSON.

There is a further letter dated April 30th, 1928, as follows:

I am writing to advise you of my change of address, and also to thank you for your extremely kind efforts on my behalf.

Thanking you again,

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) INEZ WILSON.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the record of a case which I thought it was only reasonable to put before this house. So far as I am concerned I must say that it seems to me a monstrous thing, in view of her circumstances and the length of time she has been waiting, to keep this woman waiting for the reasonable reparations to which she is entitled. She has been undergoing medical treatment ever since the Lusitania went down. She has used up her own resources and is now dependent upon friends to receive the necessary medical treatment to keep her alive. I repeat, it seems to me a monstrous thing for the government at this time to be refusing to satisfy claims of this kind. I have two or three other cases of exactly the same nature.

It seems to me that the whole trend of the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State this afternoon was that, notwithstanding the fact that there were claims which should reasonably be met, hard cases and all that kind of thing, although the total amount of these claims was $6,000,000 and we have already received from Germany $11,000,000, the government can still go on refusing recognition to these claims, and at the same time spend millions of dollars in beautifying Ottawa and on other schemes of that kind.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I desire to say a few words in regard to this matter. I shall not traverse the ground covered so admirably by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) in presenting this case, nor shall I follow the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) in his lengthy resume of the history of the matter. I wish, however, to reply to some of the observations made by the hon. Secretary of State.

In the first place, the hon. minister taunted the members of the opposition with moving an amendment on going into supply, expressing regret that this subject should have been made, as he termed it, a vote of want of confidence. Then he went on to say that one of the reasons why the government had not acted was because they were unable to come to a decision without a lengthy study of the report. At the same time, during the last two years he has repeatedly assured parliament that in the course of a few days this report would be laid upon the table for the perusal of the members of the house so that we might intelligently study it and take the position upon it which our judgment might dictate, but up until this time, within a measurable time of the end of the second session of the discussion of this subject, we have not yet been vouchsafed a view of the report at all. Then what other recourse is there for the opposition, when they are placed in a position of that character, than to bring it to the attention of the government on a motion to go into supply—the old historic method, constitutional, and indeed, sir, the only method left open to us.

There are certain facts to which I desire to draw attention. In the first place, there is this fact, and the Secretary of State did not attempt to reply to this phase of our grievance, that the government have in the consolidated revenue fund an amount in the neighbourhood of $11,000,000 or $12,000,000 for the purpose of paying the claims of the civilian population of Canada. They have coming this year, so they tell us, some $5,000,000 odd from the Dawes plan, the regular annual payment. Then also for many, many months they have had this report, which sets forth in detail, according to the statement of the Secretary of State, the proven claims of a large number, some 1,600, of Canadian nationals in regard to war damage. Now our position is this: The government being in possession of this fund, why do they not settle these proven claims? That is our question, and we are being importuned on all sides to bring to the attention of parliament not only one but hundreds of claims which are being ignored, as they express it, and they are asking us as their representatives in parliament to demand from the government a recognition and settlement of these claims.

The minister made a very lengthy argument, if I might so style it, to demonstrate that this money was primarily the property of the state. That was the whole burden of an address occupying an hour and a quarter. I want to read to the Secretary of State and to call to the attention of the government the statement made by the government a year ago in regard to this matter. I placed upon Hansard a series of some twenty-five questions dealing with this subject in a fairly exhaustive manner, and in answer to question 4, the government stated in Hansard of 1927, page 2219:

> The right of the Canadian government to reparation is set out in the answer to question 1.

Now what was the answer to question 1? The answer to question 1 was to refer to article 232 of the treaty of Versailles, which reads as follows:

> The allied and associated governments recognize that the resources of Germany are not adequate to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage. Germany undertook to make compensation for all damage done to the civil population of the allied and associated powers and to their property during the period of the belligerency.

That is the basis of the payments by Germany to this country and to other countries, and it is on that basis that we are appealing to the government to settle these claims. I submit that the government cannot escape from the responsibility to disburse this money, through the medium of a vote in parliament, to the claimants from this source to which they refer in this reply they made last year.

I want to refer the government to another position which they took. This was in the year 1925, when the hon. Minister of Defence at that time, Hon. E. M. Macdonald, dealing with this whole question and with the famous resolution referred to a moment ago, known as the Copp resolution, made this statement, at page 4522 of the Hansard of June 19, 1925. Bearing in mind the position which the hon. Secretary of State has taken to-day, and that he is reflecting the present attitude of the government, here is the position which was taken then by the government through the Hon. Mr. Macdonald:

> The moneys which come from the Dawes commission, so-called, are payable under the terms of the treaty of Versailles for certain definite purposes. They cannot be put into the treasury of the country and appropriated for other purposes than those for which they are paid.

Then he gives a series of paragraphs, nine in number, quoted from the treaty itself, and indicates their purpose, to which the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) and other hon. gentlemen have referred. Now our point is this: The Dominion government having received these millions of dollars, more than double the amount required, and with another $5,000,000 coming along this year, and another $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 payable next year, we submit that these claims should be satisfied.

The hon. Secretary of State says: We want carefully to study the findings of Mr. Friel; we are not satisfied that those findings are fair, and we want to study them carefully, and next session we may bring in a measure to pay these claims. A year ago the minister had a still different view. Speaking officially for the government a year ago, he said, and I am quoting from page 2219 of Hansard:

> The policy of the government will be decided when the reparation commissioner has completed his report.

It may be said that that was a vague answer. At the time I did not take it as such, because the minister had repeatedly said, in answer to questions on the orders of the day, that they were expecting the report hourly, and the moment it was received action would be taken on it. Furthermore, the government had itself asked for and received an interim report, which dealt with what might be called non-contentious claims, which were obviously fair and should be settled. The government had that interim report in its hands over a year ago, but no action has been taken. How can the government justly complain of the position that the opposition is now taking in regard to the delay in introducing justifiable measures on behalf of these claimants?

What we are asking is this. In the first place, we ask that the report be laid on the table. This may seem a strong statement, but I make it advisedly: I submit that the government is guilty of a dereliction of duty to this house, indeed it is guilty of a lack of respect, in not long ago tabling the report. The report is not secret; the government must produce it sooner or later in its present form. The government may attach to it whatever it likes, but the parliament of Canada is entitled to the report. The minister says: Oh, what is the use of laying the report on the table; it is simply a long string of names and of figures. Well, give us the names and the figures. But, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that parliament is entitled to the report; and, furthermore, the government is open to severe censure in having suppressed the report up to this time. The report has been in the hands of the government since before the opening of the session, according to the Secretary of State. We have gone through the whole session with repeated requests and references to reparations, and in face of the government declaration of last session I repeat that the failure to table the report is evidence of disrespect to parliament. So we ask that the report be tabled, and we have the right to demand that it be tabled before the close of this session. And, further, we have the right to ask for action on the report. In short, we want the report, and we want action on it. We are convinced from what we are able to learn, not only from the meagre knowledge we can glean from the government about the situation in Canada, but from parallel conditions in the United Sates, in Great Britain, in France and other countries—we are convinced, I say, that some at least of these claims may justly be paid. We know that in a large number of cases the failure to make payment has caused suffering similar to that to which my hon. friend from Cariboo (Mr. Fraser) brought to the attention of the house a moment ago. The case he mentioned is only one of hundreds in this country involving actual privation and suffering. I have in my room a letter from a lady, over eighty years of age, who is suffering severe privation from the lack of funds due to losses during the war incurred through the sinking of the Lusitania or a similar incident. My hon. leader reminds me that she lost her husband, a master mariner. He knows the case as well as I do. These are pathetic cases, there are hundreds of them throughout the country, and we submit that these minor claims—minor in respect to the amount of money involved—should be settled. It may be that in some of the large claims —I understand there are one or two of over a million dollars—time should be taken to scrutinize them carefully. If there are such cases, by all means scrutinize them with the greatest of care; no one objects to that; but we do object to the holding up of claims by individuals who are suffering privation while the government coolly takes time to look into these other matters.

Why is not the government prepared to take action this session? I confess frankly to the Prime Minister and his colleagues that I cannot understand it. I cannot find any conceivable excuse for the delay, and I have studied earnestly to find an excuse. The Secretary of State gave us none this afternoon. He intimated that the government wants to scrutinize the claims. I submit to him that between January and to-day there has been ample time to scrutinize a great many of these claims. Indeed, the major portion of them have been in his hands for two years on the interim report made by Mr. Friel. They have been in his hands long enough for him to go over the investigation three or four times. These claims could very properly be paid. If any of them are of a doubtful character, hold them in abeyance. But let us at least have the privilege of examining the report. Then we will be in a position to judge whether the minister is making a fair interpretation of the report when he says that it is so delicate and so intricate that he must take another year to scrutinize it and determine what action should be taken. I wonder, is it the purpose of the government to look into this report and scrutinize the findings with the expectation that some of the claims may be increased? Or does the government wish to decrease them? Is it the intention to decrease these claims or to increase them? Why the delay? It is rather significant that next session we will be one year nearer an election than we are to-day. The minister asks: Why should we make a political issue out of this, because we ask for a redress of the grievances of the people on going into supply. I ask him now, since he has indulged in implications, am I not justified in drawing this inference, that inasmuch as next session will carry us much nearer the time of an election, is not the government at least inviting designing persons to press for the payment of their claims in return for political support? That may not be so, but I say, is it not a fair inference?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, most unfair.

Mr. STEVENS: Then I say to the Prime Minister it is most unfair for him to deny us our right to see that report. It is most unfair for him to deny the citizens of Canada payment of their just claims out of the moneys which the government has wrongfully put into the consolidated fund, according to an official declaration on behalf of the government by a minister of the crown from his place in the house. It is he whom I quote in support of my contention.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State suggests that the report is for his personal study. I submit that it is not for his personal study. He has no more right to that report than I have. It is a report to parliament, a report for this house to consider and determine what action shall be taken. Why, the ministry itself last session and this session has said, indeed the Secretary of State has repeated the language this afternoon, that the only way effect can be given to the report is by a vote in parliament, by putting in the estimates an item to deal with the claims. It is obvious that the report is the property of parliament, and it is equally obvious that we are denied rightful access to our own property. The minister has no right to say that the report is for his own personal study.

Then the minister made this statement: he said that an appeal to the court would have given a legal air to this matter. That is to say, if they had appealed from Commissioner Friel to the court a legal air would have been given to these claims. Why are the government afraid of "a legal air"? A little while ago they said that there was no legal point at all at issue, that it was an act of grace. While I am not a lawyer I do not agree with that. I believe that under the terms of the treaty these people have an absolute legal claim against this fund—a claim which they cannot enforce because the funds are in possession of the government.

Another statement the minister made was that this report could not be taken as a basis of any payments. But I find, in his replies of a year ago, that he declares that the intention of the commission and of the report was to secure the bases upon which payment could be made. To-day however he says that the report cannot be taken as a basis of payment. I reiterate that what we are asking for is the report, which is the property of parliament, and action upon that report this session.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 5.55 p.m.

Monday, May 21, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

First and final report of the select standing committee on marine and fisheries—Mr. Duff.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

INMATES OF PENITENTIARIES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. How many inmates are there in each federal penal institution of the following ages: (a) 16 years or under, (b) 17, (c) 18?
2. What has been done to remedy the conditions?
3. What became of announced proposed conference with the provinces on the policy, and what action was taken?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Penitentiary	16 years and under	17 years	18 years
Kingston	—	1	5
St. Vincent de Paul	10	38	45
Dorchester	4	13	8
Manitoba	2	1	1
British Columbia	—	1	7
Saskatchewan	—	3	3
Total	16	57	69

2. The matter is receiving consideration.

GOVERNMENT COMMISSIONS

Mr. MAYBEE:

1. What county and high court judges have acted on government commissions during 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926 and 1927, and on what inquiries?
2. What sums were paid them?

Mr. RINFRET:

Department of Finance

1 and 2. Living allowances and travelling expenses paid: Maritime claims commission, Hon. W. B. Wallace, $2,100; Home Bank commission, Hon. H. A. McKeown, $2,558.60; Customs inquiry commission, Hon. J. T. Brown, $10,036; E. Roy, $8,992.62; W. H. Wright, $8,498.73; Sir Francois Lemieux, including expenses of secretary, $1,032.13.

Department of Justice

1 and 2. Athabasca election inquiry, 1922-23, nil; 1923-24, nil; 1924-25, nil; 1925-26, nil; 1926-27, Justice A. H. Clarke, travelling expenses, $829.36. 1927-28, Justice Trueman, commission re Judge Maulson, expenses, $76.

Privy Council

1. Maritime rights commission, His Honour W. B. Wallace, judge of the county court, district No. 1 province of Nova Scotia. Date of appointment, 7 April, 1926.

2. No information.

Department of Immigration and Colonization

1. His Honour Judge Stubbs of the northern division of the eastern judicial district of Manitoba who conducted an inquiry in 1927 in the case of A. M. Graham, dismissed from the office of the soldier settlement board at Winnipeg.

2. No payments made.

Department of the Secretary of State

1. List of county and high court judges who have acted on government commissions from 1922 to 1927 inclusive.

Name—Office—Date

Beck, Hon. Nicholas Dominic; Athabasca election; March 27, 1926.

Brown, Hon. James Thomas; Customs enquiries; January 14, 1927.

Clarke, Hon. Alfred; Athabasca election; July 10, 1926.

Denton, His Honour James Herbert; Operations of Toronto harbour commissioners; June 15, 1926.

Duncan, Sir Andrew (Rae) Wallace, His Honour William Bernard MacMillan, Professor Cyrus; Maritime claims; April 7, 1926.

Lemieux, Hon. Sir François Xavier; Brown, Hon. James Thomas; Wright, Hon. William Henry; Customs enquiry; September 28, 1926.

Lemieux, Hon. Sir François Xavier; Customs enquiry; July 20, 1926.

Maclean, Hon. Alexander Kenneth; contract with P. Lyall & Sons in re-construction work on Welland canal; May 21, 1927.

Maclean, Hon. Alexander Kenneth; Maritime fisheries; October 7, 1927.

Martin, Hon. William Melville; claims of British Columbia in respect of land conveyed to the Dominion under the terms of the union; March 8, 1927.

McKeown, Hon. Harrison Andrew; Home Bank; February 27, 1924.

Roy, Hon. Ernest; Customs enquiry; November 11, 1926.

Stubbs, Lewis St. George; dismissal of A. M. Graham from Soldier Settlement Board; January 31, 1927.

Trueman, Hon. Walter Harley; charges against Judge Maulson; October 7, 1927.

Turgeon, Hon. William Ferdinand Alphonse; Grain enquiry; May 1, 1923.

2. No information.

Department of Trade and Commerce

1. The Hon. W. F. A. Turgeon, puisne judge of appeal court, Regina, on grain enquiry commission during 1923, 1924 and 1925.

2.

	Allowance for living expenses	Travel and sundries
1923-24..	$ 3,156 58	$1,646 46
1924-25..	2,566 50	722 30
1925-26..	9,851 92	238 48
	$15,575 00	$2,607 24

Department of National Revenue—Customs and Excise Division

1. By order in council P.C. 1161, dated 20th July, 1926, the Hon. Sir François Xavier Lemieux, Chief Justice of the Superior Court for the province of Quebec, was appointed a commissioner to continue and complete the investigation of the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise which had been commenced by the special committee of the House of Commons.

By order in council P.C. 1467, dated 28th September, 1926, a judicial commission was appointed to complete the investigation of the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise; and also to enquire into and report on the operation of the treaty made between the Dominion of Canada and the United States of America dated June 6, 1924, for the suppression of smuggling along the international boundary between the Dominion of Canada and the United States of America.

This commission was composed of the Hon. Sir François Xavier Lemieux, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court for the province of Quebec, chairman; the Hon. James Thomas Brown, Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, Saskatchewan and the Hon. William Henry Wright, a justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Subsequently the Hon. Sir François Lemieux was replaced by the Hon. Ernest Roy, a justice of the Superior Court for the Province of Quebec.

2. In connection with his appointment under the first order in council above mentioned, Sir François Lemieux was paid by this department a total sum of $1,032.13 for living and travelling expenses.

No amounts were paid by this department to any of the commissioners appointed under the second order in council above mentioned.

Income Tax Division

1 and 2. Nil.

Department of the Interior.

1. 1922, nil; 1923, nil; 1924, nil; 1925, nil; 1926, nil; 1927, Judge W. M. Martin, investigation under the Inquires Act into the claim of British Columbia for the reconveyance of certain lands conveyed by that province to the Dominion at the time of the union. (Vote 519, supplementary estimates, 1927-1928.)

2. Services, Judge W. M. Martin, $2,750; expenses, Judge W. M. Martin, $915.20.

Department of Marine and Fisheries:

1. Judge H. F. McLatchy, county court judge, Campbellton, N.B., commissioned August 23, 1927, to investigate salmon net privileges at the east end of Eel river bar, Restigouche county, N.B.

Hon. A. K. Maclean, Exchequer Court of Canada, appointed by order in council September 24, 1927, as chairman of a commission to investigate the fisheries of the maritime provinces and Magdalen islands.

2. Judge McLatchy $60 for expenses; Mr. Justice Maclean $2,772.78 for expenses.

Marine Branch

1. Judge Auley Morrison, Vancouver, B.C., was appointed commissioner in June, 1926, to investigate the administration of Captain James F. Tait, former port warden of Vancouver.

2. No remuneration.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—FLINT MICHIGAN STATION

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has a new large railway station been built at Flint, Michigan, by the Canadian National Railways?

2. If so, what was the cost, was parliament asked for funds first, was it built by contract?

3. What sums have been spent on the Canadian National railway station at Hamilton, Ontario, during the past two years, and when was the station built?

4. What is being done to give Hamilton a new Canadian National railway station, and when was the question of a new station there agreed to?

5. Will any concrete action be taken this year to secure a new station there?

6. What sums are proposed to be spent on betterments on the Central Vermont?

7. What amount of (a) cash and (b) credits or bonds of the old Grand Trunk was taken out of the old Grand Trunk Railway in Ontario and invested in the new Grand Trunk Pacific for use by the Grand Trunk Pacific outside of Ontario?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. A new depot was built at South Flint, Michigan, in 1927 by the Grand Trunk Western Railway Company.

2. The cost was $20,656.57 and the building was constructed by contract. The expenditure was charged to the funds voted by parliament in the 1927 budget for works of this character.

3. $11,721. Station was built about 1875.

4. For several years past the railway has been purchasing property for a new station site. The question of station facilities and the closing of certain streets in connection therewith is now under discussion with the city officials.

5. An amount has been included in the budget for this year and if an agreement is effected with the city, and the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners secured, excavation and other work preparatory to the construction of a new station will be started.

[Mr. Rinfret.]

6. As this railway is under receivership appointed by United States court, we are not in a position to advise.

7. No amount was taken out of the old Grand Trunk in Ontario and invested in the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—EQUIPMENT

Mr. CHURCH:

What amount of equipment of the Canadian National Railways during the past five years was purchased, (a) in Canada, and (b) in the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: Years 1923 to 1927, inclusive: (a) in Canada, $56,024,219.49; (b) in the United States (for United States lines), $11,366,810.02, (for Canadian lines), $94,192.89.*

*Four (4) self-propelling gasoline cars not obtainable in Canada.

WINDSOR, ONT., POST OFFICE

Mr. GOTT:

1. Does the government own the post office building in Windsor, Ontario?

2. When was same built?

3. What was the cost?

4. Has an offer for the present site been made to the government?

5. If so, when, by whom, and for how much?

6. Would the government consider a fair offer for same?

7. What is the value of the present property per running foot?

8. How many feet are there on Ouelette avenue?

9. Has any real estate firm or person in the city of Windsor an option of purchase of the property?

10. If so, on what conditions?

11. Has it ever been offered for sale—or instructions given to anyone to sell it at a net price or on commission?

12. If so, when, and to whom?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. Yes.

2. 1879.

3. $44,798.

4. No.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. Yes.

7. No recent valuation has been made. In 1923 it was reported that the city assessor considered $2,500 per foot on a frontage of 200 feet on Ouelette street was a fair price.

8. Approximately 200 feet.

9. No.

10. Answered by No. 9.

11. No.

12. Answered by No. 11.

ISLE AUX GRUES WHARF

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Has the Public Works department built a new wharf at Isle aux Grues, county of Montmagny?

2. Has the old wharf been abandoned?
3. What is the difference in the depth of wharfing between the two wharves?
4. Is the new wharf situated near the public highway, and if so, how near?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. Wharf under construction.
2. Yes.
3. 1.4 feet more water at high tide at outer end of wharf under construction than at old wharf.
4. (a) Yes; (b) Approximately 300 feet.

ISLE AUX GRUES MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Have tenders been called for the transportation of the mail from Montmagny to Isle aux Grues?
2. If so, when?
3. Has contract been awarded, and if so, to whom?
4. Was the lowest tender accepted?
5. At what price was contract awarded?

Mr. VENIOT:

1. Yes.
2. Due at the Post Office Department, 29th April, 1927.
3, 4 and 5. No action has been taken on the tenders received.

ISLE AUX GRUES TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Has the government a telephone system at Isle aux Grues, county of Montmagny, Quebec?
2. If so, how many subscribers has such system?
3. Did any persons apply for telephone connection with such government system, during years 1926, 1927, 1928?
4. Were any such applications refused, and if so, why was such refusal made in each case?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. Yes.
2. Twenty-three.
3. Yes.
4. (a) Yes. (b) This is a grounded circuit and loaded to capacity.

ILLICIT LIQUOR, ARTHABASKA, QUE.

Mr. CAHAN:

1. How many persons in the district of Arthabaska, Quebec, have been found in possession of illicit alcoholic products under the Inland Revenue Act and the Customs Act, during the fiscal years 1926, 1927, and 1928?
2. If any, what are the names of said persons, and what action, if any, was taken in each case, and with what result?

Mr. EULER:

1. Forty-five.
2.

Name and address—Action taken—Result

Alfred Beaudet, St. Christopher, section 185, fined $200 and costs, paid.

John Normand, Victoriaville, section 204, fined $5 and costs, paid.

Amable Houle, Ste. Victoire, section 204, fined $20 and costs, paid.

Louis Tessier, St. Rosaire, no legal action, warned.

Pierre Belliveau, Warwick, no legal action, warned.

J. C. Denoncourt, Victoriaville, section 204, fined $50 and costs, not apprehended.

Fernando Arsenault, Ste. Seraphine, no legal action, warned.

Mrs. H. Chouinard, Victoriaville, section 180E, two months and costs, paid.

Pierre Duval, Victoriaville, section 204, fined $50 and costs, paid.

Mrs. Marie Brisette, Bulstrode Station, no legal action.

Paul Picher, Bulstrode Station, no legal action.

Albert Constant, Ste. Clothilde, section 180E, fined $500 and costs, paid.

Desire Turcotte, St. Albert, no legal action, warned.

Joseph R. Crevier, Victoriaville, section 180E, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Joseph Gagne, Victoriaville, section 180E, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Henri Houle, St. Clothilde, section 180E, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Armand Frechette, Princeville, section 180E, fined $200 and costs, paid.

David Dugal, Princeville, section 204, fined $50 and costs, paid.

Henri Picher, Victoriaville, section 180E, fined $20 and costs, paid.

Louis Denault, St. Christophe, section 180E, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Armand Dupont, St. Norbert, section 185, fined $200 or 6 months, served.

Adelard Houle, Ste. Valerie, section 204, fined $50 and costs, paid.

Napoleon Camire, Ste. Victoria, section 180E, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Delphis Carignan, Stanfold, section 180E, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Desire Trottier, Princeville, section 185, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Ovila Nadeau, Ste. Helene, no legal action, warned.

Clovia Barabe, Ste. Helene, section 204, fined $50 and costs, paid $25.

Ernest Beaudet, Warwick, section 185, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Pierre Chauvette, Ste. Helene, section 204, fined $50 and costs, paid.

Ovida Talbot, Victoriaville, section 185, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Alfred Bolduc, Victoriaville, section 180E, fined $200 or 6 months, served.

Ludger Beaudette, Warwick, section 181, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Louis Lambert, Victoriaville, section 185, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Amedie Mathieu, Victoriaville, section 185, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Thomas Caron, Victoriaville, section 185, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Evariste Desrosiers, St. Louis, no legal action.

Omer Boisvert, Victoriaville, section 176E, fined $200 and costs or 6 months, not apprehended.

Louis Lambert, Victoriaville, action pending.

Egide L'Abbe, Victoriaville, section 176E, pending.

Ludger Lavigne, Victoriaville, section 176E pending.

Moise Lefebvre, Daveluyville, section 206, voluntary penalty, $50, paid.

Henri Boisvert, St. Albert, no legal action

Chas. Beaudoin, St. Louis de Blandford, no legal action, warned.

Hermenegile Gregoire, Ste. Clothilde, no legal action.

Albert Constant, Ste. Clothilde, section 180E, fined $200 and costs, paid.

Note.—Under the heading of "action taken" in the foregoing statement, the words "section 185" indicate that prosecution proceedings were taken under section 185 of the Excise Act against the offender concerned "for having in his possession, whether the owner thereof or not, without lawful excuse, a quantity of spirits of unlawful manufacture or importation".

Likewise, "section 204" indicates action under that section of the act "for having brewed beer without having a license and without having complied with provisions of section 199 of the act".

"Section 180 (e)" indicates proceedings under that section "for possession of an unlicensed still or a quantity of mash".

"Sections 181 and 176 (e)" appearing in the latter part of the statement correspond to sections 185 and 180 as appearing prior to the revision of the statutes which became effective on February 1st.

BEAUPRE, QUEBEC, WHARF

Mr. CAHAN:

1. What amount has been expended by the government upon a wharf at Beaupre, Quebec, since March 31st, 1926?
2. Is the title to said wharf vested in the crown?
3. If not, in whom is said title vested?

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. Nil.

2 and 3. There are two wharves at Beaupre. The one on the right bank of the St. Anne river is owned by the government, and the other on the left side of the east branch of the same river is owned by The Ste. Anne Paper Company.

HARROW, ONT., EXPERIMENTAL FARM

Mr. GOTT:

1. What caused the vacancy in superintendency at Harrow, Ontario, experimental farm?
2. Who was recent superintendent?
3. When did he retire?
4. What salary was he receiving?
5. How will his successor be appointed?
6. Was the recent superintendent a Canadian citizen?
7. Will the position, when filled, be made by the Civil Service Commission?
8. Will the department engage a Canadian citizen for the position?
9. Is there any person employed at the farm capable and desirous of becoming superintendent?
10. Who is filling the position of superintendent at the farm during the vacancy?
11. What salary is he drawing?
12. What salary has been paid the superintendent at the farm in the years 1923-1924-1925-1926-1927?
13. Who was superintendent in each of the aforementioned years?
14. Are there any Canadian government experimental farms in Canada which have other than Canadian citizens as superintendent?
15. If so, how many? What farms?

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. Resignation of the superintendent.
2. H. A. Freeman.
3. April 12, 1928.
4. $2,700 per annum.
5. By the Civil Service Commission.
6. No.
7. Yes.
8. Yes, if a Canadian citizen, capable of filling the position satisfactorily can be found.
9. One employee is, it is understood, desirous of being promoted to superintendent of the Harrow station but the department is not, as yet, quite satisfied that he is capable of filling the position satisfactorily.
10. The experimental farm assistant. Mr. O. G. Williams.
11. $1,920 per annum.
12 and 13.

Year	Salary	Name of Superintendent
1923-24	$2,460	D. D. Digges
1924-25	2,580	D. D. Digges
1925-26	2,700	D. D. Digges (resigned June 16, 1926)
1926-27	2,580	H. A. Freeman (appointed June 16, 1926)
1927-28	2,700	(resigned April 12, 1928)

14. No.

15. Answered by No. 14.

TOBACCO GROWING INDUSTRY

Mr. GOTT:

1. When was the recent tobacco investigating commission appointed?
2. On whose recommendation?
3. When did they complete their work?
4. How many sessions were held, when and where?
5. How many witnesses examined?
6. Who constituted the board?
7. What salary was paid to each?
8. What expense allowance was made each?
9. What was the total cost of the entire investigation?
10. What service did investigation render?
11. Will the recommendations of the commission be implemented?
12. If so, when?
13. If not, why?

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. By order-in-council of February 27, 1928.

2. Minister of Agriculture.

3. May 1, 1928.

4. Chatham, March 2; Tilbury, March 3; Blenheim, March 5; Essex, March 6; Leamington, March 7; Dresden, March 8; Harrow, March 9; Windsor, March 10; Kingsville, March 12; Belle River, March 13; Rodney, March 14; St. Thomas, March 15; London, March 19; Simcoe, March 20; Chatham, March 21; Leamington, March 22; Kingsville, March 23 and 24; Hamilton, March 26; Montreal, March 27, 28 and 29; Quebec, March 30.

5. Impossible to give the number of witnesses examined, because no special witnesses called. At the meetings which were called by the commission, however, large numbers of interested persons were in attendance, and from among those present individuals were questioned, while other individuals volunteered information.

6. E. S. Archibald, director of experimental farms (chairman); E. P. Tellier, Belle River, Ontario; H. B. Archibald, Cooper Leaf Tobacco Co., Wallaceburg, Ont.

7. E. S. Archibald, (no additional salary); E. P. Tellier, $20 per day; H. B. Archibald, $20 per day.

8. $12 per diem for living expenses, plus transportation.

9. Information not yet available, as accounts not yet submitted.

10. Too soon to enumerate nature and extent of services rendered other than that the investigation served to obtain definite information as to conditions as they exist in the tobacco industry, in regard to varieties grown, areas where grown, cultural systems followed, curing systems followed, methods of marketing, etc. A study of all these has permitted the commission to make recommendations looking to the development of the industry and the advancement of the interests of the growers.

11. As far as possible.

12. As opportunity offers.

13. Answered by 11 and 12.

FERTILIZERS, IMPORTS

Mr. GOTT:

1. How many carload lots, or tons, of fertilizer were imported into Canada from the United States during the years 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927?
2. What is the appraised value of same per year to the importer per ton or carload lots as invoiced?
3. To how many sections in Canada was it invoiced or unloaded and at what sections?

Mr. EULER:

Statement showing the Imports of Fertilizers from the United States entered for Consumption in each Province of Canada during the Fiscal Years ended March, 1923 to 1927

Item	Province	1923		1924		1925		1926		1927
		Cwt.	Value	Cwt.	Value	Cwt.	Value	Cwt.	Value	Cwt.	Value
			$		$		$		$		$
Manures, vegetable	Quebec			854	563	161	31	271	93	81	109
	Ontario	11,996	4,547	6,128	4,102	14,091	6,236	16,649	8,127	32,570	0,907
	Totals	11,996	4,547	6,982	4,665	14,252	6,267	16,920	8,220	32,651	11,016
Bone dust, charred bone and bone ash.	Nova Scotia	17,923	38,565	19,636	50,424	14,366	36,149	16,200	40,146	14,371	27,461
	New Brunswick	10,184	52,127	7,545	34,586	15,903	68,338	10,885	44,801	11,066	46,547
	Quebec	42	227	95	473	23	146	1,034	4,385	8,560	37,638
	Ontario	3,059	12,127	4,574	15,729	3,893	18,027	3,104	13,667	2,469	11,972
	Manitoba	45	139							8	59
	Saskatchewan			3	9
	Alberta					11	47
	British Columbia	7,075	23,528	1,432	6,714	465	1,865	11,043	54,243	5,795	15,507
	Totals	38,328	126,713	33,285	107,935	34,661	124,572	42,266	157,242	42,269	139,184
Fish offal or refuse	Nova Scotia		804		1,639
	New Brunswick		2,3.0		2,441		1,250			4	22
	Ontario		5,408		6,663		338	1,224	4,147	1,900	6,987
	British Columbia		328		1,779
	Totals		8,850		12,522		1,588	1,224	4,147	1,904	7,009
Animal manures	Nova Scotia	19,472	33,982	2,746	5,217	4,836	7,304	9,658	11,926	12,747	16,805
	New Brunswick	554	1,103	200	350	14,000	28,388	39,308	79,607	27,436	58,961
	Quebec	840	1,301	1,639	2,415	2,047	3,136	3,801	4,614	2,372	3,476
	Ontario	5,753	8,037	9,319	10,381	9,064	11,495	17,473	22,957	15,804	24,982
	Manitoba			300	396			300	380	607	828
	Saskatchewan									300	286
	British Columbia	3,692	5,705	10	11	1,262	2,810	10,455	22,756	5,528	12,290
	Totals	30,311	50,128	14,214	18,770	31,209	53,133	80,995	142,240	64,794	117,628

Phosphate rock	Nova Scotia	69,440	20,276	34,600	7,325
	Quebec	134,292	26,857	212,660	55,136	200,862	46,765	276,399	60,465	285,120	65,370
	Ontario	14,615	4,716	2,739	1,200	8,177	3,237	1,855	1,577	6,830	4,202
	British Columbia	10,753	4,854	7,698	4,240	3	4	805	167	278	236
	Totals	229,100	56,703	257,697	67,901	209,042	50,006	279,059	62,209	292,228	69,808
Blast furnace slag	New Brunswick		1,545
	Quebec		84				92	1,050	39
	Ontario		730		1,150		5,358	2,898	398	29,923	2,318
	Manitoba							40	34
	Totals		2,359		1,150		5,450	3,988	471	29,923	2,318
Ammonia, sulphate of	Nova Scotia	340	1,099	300	1,308	350	1,259	60	240	1,310	4,999
	New Brunswick	4,426	12,587	4,000	12,006			29,907	81,486	14,397	38,790
	Prince Edward Island									12,023	36,850
	Quebec	884	2,983	792	2,670	296	1,142	352	1,441	1,561	3,941
	Ontario	1,376	5,233	4,188	15,570	4,518	16,124	2,489	9,244	1,286	6,249
	Manitoba	2	9							5	34
	Saskatchewan					2	42
	Alberta			7	39
	British Columbia		4	6	56	88	748	19	184	4	110
	Totals	7,028	21,915	9,293	31,649	5,254	19,315	32,827	92,595	30,586	90,973
Basic slag, crushed or ground	Ontario									900	106
	Totals									900	106
Cyanamid or lime nitrogen	Nova Scotia							180	2,550
	New Brunswick					120	318
	Ontario			40,820	75,000			23	79	453	736
	Manitoba							26	53
	British Columbia			501	1,950			1,508	4,414
	Totals			41,321	76,950	120	318	1,737	7,096	453	736
Kainite and other crude German potash salts for fertilizer	Quebec			12	27
	Ontario	320	430							2,217	1,799
	Totals	320	430	12	27					2,217	1,799

Statement showing the Imports of Fertilizers from the United States entered for Consumption in each Province of Canada during the Fiscal Years ended March, 1923 to 1927—Continued

Item	Province	1923		1924		1925		1926		1927
		Cwt.	Value	Cwt.	Value	Cwt.	Value	Cwt.	Value	Cwt.	Value
			$		$		$		$		$
Potash, muriate of	Nova Scotia	29,976	52,066	3,060	7,964	15,812	30,586	4,521	7,755	4,710	9,680
	New Brunswick	5,567	10,855	80	136	.....	.....	11,590	18,656	20,544	30,570
	Prince Edward Island	400	711	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	44,301	73,322
	Quebec	694	1,444	3,693	5,069	1,579	3,104	4,192	7,779	2,414	4,757
	Ontario	2,284	2,882	2,176	4,008	4,508	7,778	7,556	13,165	13,334	23,659
	British Columbia	5,707	9,956	1,025	1,837	50	118	630	1,213	1,039	1,889
	Totals	44,628	77,914	10,034	19,014	21,949	41,586	28,489	48,568	86,342	143,877
Potash, sulphate of	Nova Scotia	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	200	439	40	130
	Quebec	305	838	226	725	1,090	2,775	1,560	3,637	675	1,905
	Ontario	1,913	4,423	938	2,060	1,000	2,253	907	2,219	4,018	8,413
	Manitoba	1	37	.....	.....	.....	5	.....	.....	.....	.....
	Alberta	.....	9	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
	British Columbia	300	754	724	1,618	1,041	4,531	.....	11	401	920
	Totals	2,519	6,061	1,888	4,403	3,131	9,564	2,667	6,306	5,694	12,728
Soda, nitrate of	Nova Scotia	81,493	211,208	95,244	250,263	63,680	167,901	71,708	193,117	62,553	168,430
	New Brunswick	37,757	98,881	44,081	111,446	42,618	113,095	87,469	237,558	72,866	187,413
	Prince Edward Island	5	23	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	11,924	35,023
	Quebec	102,621	239,540	42,718	35,697	63,323	157,335	45,168	115,373	6,677	8,014
	Ontario	69,087	186,512	76,676	197,424	57,422	143,518	50,921	133,309	41,558	105,037
	Manitoba	1,812	7,821	1,203	5,053	1,458	5,454	1,139	4,084	.....	.....
	Saskatchewan	9	52	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	5	45
	Alberta	650	1,844	1,046	3,701	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
	British Columbia	19,443	49,318	40,686	104,378	8,569	20,862	27,261	70,171	4,948	13,068
	Totals	313,377	795,199	271,654	708,062	237,070	608,165	283,606	753,612	200,531	527,030
Superphosphate or acid phosphate of lime.	Nova Scotia	.....	193,890	176,314	102,915	225,999	117,775	191,055	107,522	271,806	148,547
	New Brunswick	.....	95,675	216,415	115,279	228,460	127,468	435,409	266,553	324,717	220,465
	Prince Edward Island	.....	1,772	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	131,467	85,741
	Quebec	.....	23,832	63,009	40,109	90,386	49,375	118,936	72,741	102,544	65,143
	Ontario	.....	67,818	120,781	57,065	369,411	169,500	631,346	359,509	615,528	359,842
	Manitoba	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	5	13	.....	.....
	Alberta	.....	.....	.....	.....	20	45	.....	.....	.....	.....
	British Columbia	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	7,789	10,604	37,508	20,268
	Totals	.....	382,987	576,519	315,368	914,276	464,163	1,384,540	816,942	1,483,570	900,006

Fertilizers compounded or manufactured, n.o.p.	Nova Scotia	.....	57,569	67,553	122,569	138,112	210,320	57,351	92,289	144,654	221,446
	New Brunswick	.....	74,317	25,315	48,019	5,239	11,234	15,127	27,237	52,923	80,610
	Prince Edward Island	.....	.....	.....	.....	6	168	.....	.....	720	1,670
	Quebec	.....	64,376	56,358	76,199	39,499	67,763	44,404	68,881	62,517	87,384
	Ontario	.....	99,798	105,880	123,017	168,674	167,641	291,912	311,112	340,483	344,696
	Manitoba	.....	1,002	5	149	324	635	39	221	762	730
	Saskatchewan	.....	183	.....	.....	.....	.....	19	422	16	400
	Alberta	.....	330	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
	British Columbia	.....	306	457	2,769	33	232	23,457	18,123	570	1,268
	Totals	.....	297,881	255,568	372,722	351,887	457,993	432,309	518,285	602,645	738,204
Fertilizers unmanufactured, n.o.p.	Nova Scotia	.....	.....	4,907	9,383	.....	.....	7	19	.....	.....
	New Brunswick	.....	3,554	19,925	37,832	7,616	14,307	.....	.....	.....	.....
	Quebec	.....	34	.....	.....	254	612	30	83	.....	.....
	Ontario	.....	5,886	4,842	4,289	14,775	5,131	9	6	.....	.....
	Manitoba	.....	38	2	20	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
	British Columbia	.....	3,698	4,859	7,739	869	1,791	.....	.....	.....	.....
	Totals	.....	13,210	34,535	59,263	23,514	21,841	46	108	.....	.....

LONG TERM FARM LOANS ACT

Mr. BENOIT:

1. Has the government lately received a copy of an act passed by the legislature of Quebec, at its last session, as provided by article 8, chapter 66 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927?
2. If so, does the government intend to put into force the Long Term Farm Loans Act as provided by chapter 66 of the revised statutes, and when?

Mr. ROBB:

1 and 2. Yes.

WESTERN CITIES, POPULATION

Mr. GERSHAW:

1. What is the last recorded population of the cities of Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Regina, Calgary and Edmonton?
2. How many in each city were born in Canada?
3. How many were British born, outside of Canada?
4. How many such were foreign born?

Mr. MALCOLM:

1.

Census 1926

	Population
Winnipeg	191,998
Saskatoon	31,234
Regina	37,329
Calgary	65,291
Edmonton	65,163

2.

	Canadian Born
Winnipeg	107,647
Saskatoon	19,200
Regina	22,625
Calgary	36,502
Edmonton	38,234

3.

	British Isles	British Possessions	At Sea
Winnipeg	46,545	592	33
Saskatoon	7,715	98	2
Regina	8,525	113	9
Calgary	19,883	396	10
Edmonton	16,474	334	9

4.

	Foreign Countries
Winnipeg	37,181
Saskatoon	4,219
Regina	6,057
Calgary	8,500
Edmonton	10,112

[Mr. Euler.]

CELOTEX LUMBER

Mr. McGIBBON:

1. Is a fibreboard marketed under the name of Celotex imported into Canada as Celotex lumber?
2. If so, what is the duty and what amount has been imported?
3. What is the duty on fibreboard?

Mr. EULER:

1. Yes.
2. 17½ per cent general tariff. No information of amount imported, as article is not separately enumerated in import classification.
3. Fibreboard is dutiable according to material, therefore subject to various rates of duty.

CHARLES PINARD

Mr. TUMMON:

1. Is Charles Pinard, who is employed by the Department of Public Works, first deputy reeve of Gloucester?
2. If so, how many days and on what dates was he absent from duty in the said department during the past calendar year, exclusive of sick leave?
3. How many days was he away on sick leave during the said period?
4. For how many days did he draw pay from the said department during the time above mentioned?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. Yes.
2. (a) 3 days.
   (b) January 3, and April 26 and 28.
3. Nil.
4. 365 days.

ROCK BALLASTING

Mr. PRICE:

1. Was there any rock ballasting done between Toronto and Montreal during 1925 and 1926 and 1926 and 1927?
2. If so, how many miles between what points, and at what cost per mile?

Mr. DUNNING: I would like to ask the hon. member what railway he has reference to?

Mr. PRICE: The Canadian National railway.

Question stands.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

SCHOOL LANDS FILE—STEPHEN MCKEOWN

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

For a copy of the school lands file re sale No. 495 and 496 in respect to one Stephen McKeown.

SCHOOL LANDS FILE—JOHN GAIR

Mr. LUCAS:

For a copy of school lands file No. 159518, in respect to the lands bought by John Gair, Killam, Alberta, sale No. 4571, being the N.W. ¼ of 11-43-13-West of the 4th meridian.

SCHOOL LANDS FILE—ROBERT RORERTSON

Mr. LUCHKOVICH:

For a copy of school lands files No. 13380 to 13383, inclusive, with reference to one Robert Robertson, Lanark, Ontario.

SCHOOL LANDS FILE—W. S. FEATHERSTONAUGH

Mr. KELLNER:

For a copy of school lands file No. 78720, sale No. 3818 with reference to one W. S. Featherstonaugh.

SCHOOL LANDS FILE—W. H. KEMP

Mr. SPEAKMAN:

For a copy of the school lands file in respect to section 29-35-28-west of the 4th Meridian, and bought by one W. H. Kemp of Innisfail, Alberta.

SCHOOL LANDS FILE—PETER ALBEES

Mr. KENNEDY:

For a copy of school lands file in respect to section 29-43-22-west of the 4th meridian bought by one Peter Albees, Waterglen, Alberta.

FILE NO. 31458—MRS. ETHEL TRUSCOTT

Mr. SPENCER:

For a copy of file No. 31458 relating to the S.E. quarter of section 11, tp. 50, range 2, west of the 4th meridian, held by Mrs. Ethel Truscott, of Battleford, Saskatchewan.

JOLIETTE POST OFFICE

Mr. CAHAN:

For a copy of the report made upon the inquiry held by the Post Office Department in respect of the administration of the post office at Joliette, Quebec, and particularly in respect of the robbery alleged to have taken place at said post office on or about February 29th last, together with copies of the depositions made by Messrs. Desaulniers, Champoux, the postal employees, and others at said inquiry.

Mr. VENIOT: I would ask that the hon. member allow this motion to stand. For the information of the house, I might say that we have made an arrest in connection with this robbery. Unfortunately, the prisoner escaped, but we are now in a position where we think we can recapture him. The first part of the motion is closely connected with the latter part of it, and I do not like to lay on the table anything which might interfere with the proceedings that we are instituting. I would be pleased to let my hon. friend have a look at these reports.

Mr. CAHAN: I will withdraw the motion for the present.

Motion withdrawn.

PADSTOW POST OFFICE

Mr. KENNEDY:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, petitions, reports, and other documents passing between the Post Office Department and/or the Postmaster General and any other party or parties relating to the change in location of the Padstow post office, and the change of the postmaster of the said post office.

VALUATION OF IMPORTED STRAWBERRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question based on his statement as reported in Hansard, page 3054, that as soon as applications were received invoking the statute, an order in council under section 43 of the Customs Act would be passed authorizing the minister to fix values on produce of a class or kind produced in Canada, and on the fact that the Minister of Agriculture has acknowledged the receipt of three telegrams from the strawberry growers of three different districts in British Columbia invoking the statute and asking for the fixing of values on strawberries from May 21 to July 10. The questions are:

1. Has an order in council been passed?
2. If not, when does he propose to have the applications referred to, considered by the governor in council?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am not in a position to disclose to my hon. friend what takes place in council, but I would say to him that when an application comes before council, it will receive due consideration.

NATURAL RESOURCES OF PRAIRIE PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Now that no feature of the question of the return of their natural resources to the western provinces is before any of the courts, I should like to ask whether the government has any statement to make in regard to the matter.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): It has been mentioned at different times, I do not know whether in direct answer to my hon. friend or not, that conferences have been held between representatives of the western governments and our government with respect to the return of the natural resources. As a result of the conferences it has been definitely arranged that shortly after parliament prorogues a conference will be held first of all with representatives from Manitoba, later with representatives from Alberta or vice versa—I cannot say which will come first—and possibly also with representatives from British Columbia. It is understood by the provinces and ourselves that the conferences will be held after the prorogation of parliament, and I understand that arrangement is as satisfactory to the governments of the provinces as it is to our government.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Might I ask whether the return of their resources to Saskatchewan is not being considered?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said possibly Saskatchewan.

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister said British Columbia.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I meant to say Saskatchewan. I am sorry.

SUPPLY—REPARATIONS CLAIMS

The house resumed from Saturday, May 19, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) for committee of supply, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Ernst:

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"This house regrets the refusal of the government to introduce legislation at the present session of parliament providing for the payment in full or in part of the various sums fixed by James Friel, Esquire, K.C., a commissioner appointed under the Inquiries Act, as losses sustained by the civilian population of Canada during the great war."

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there is so little difference between us with respect to some phases of this question that it is rather difficult to understand why the government has not taken the necessary action to liquidate the claims that have been made against this fund. The Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) the other day referred to the fact that the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) was probably prepared and placed in his hands. That is not a matter of very great importance, but I should like him and the house to know that the resolution was prepared by the hon. gentleman himself, and that with the exception of two or three words which were added in order that the resolution might afford the government an opportunity to pay part of the claims, if it so desired, it represented his views because he was vitally affected owing to the fact that of the 1,613 cases that were considered, some 752 came from Nova Scotia and of those 752 cases, 350 arose in the constituency represented by the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment. You will therefore understand why he is so vitally interested and why he prepared his resolution in the terms in which he did, looking towards the payment by the government of a portion of the claim or at least of those that were, we will say, not large in amount rather than embarrassing the government by pressing for the payment of them all.

The Secretary of State made a rather long statement with respect to the rights under the treaty of those who seek reimbursement out of the fund in the hands of the government. I do not propose to traverse that question. The matter is neither difficult not complicated. The treaty is very clear and plain. the moneys that were derived under the Dawes plan were available for certain purposes; those moneys have been received and they have been paid over. Why has the government kept back the money? Shortly put, that is all there is in the case.

Now let me go a step further. The hon. gentleman also referred to another matter, namely to the different considerations that prevail with respect to the settlement of the claims of the Massey-Harris Company and of the Thompson Steamship Company. Neither of those cases, as he very properly pointed out was similar in character to the cases we are now considering. They arise under another branch altogether of the treaty. The position may be summarized in this form. Germany admitted liability which was limited by the terms of the treaty of peace to injuries or damages sustained by the civil population. As I shall presently show, the government set up a tribunal for the purpose of ascertaining what those claims amount to and they have now considered judgments in their hands as to how those claims should be dealt with. Our contention is that it is their duty to pay over these moneys.

The Secretary of State dwelt at great length upon what he regarded as the legal position of the money and of the government with respect to it. He contended that the money paid under the Dawes plan by Germany—mark you, by Germany!—to this government to satisfy claims of the civil population, because that is what her obligation is, cannot by an action brought by individuals be taken away from the government. We will admit that at once. No subject may maintain an action against his sovereign, against the state itself unless he obtains a fiat granted as requested by a petition of right. In this instance we have what I shall presently show is a legal claim of every individual affected, but a claim not enforceable in law. Let me take the case referred to by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), namely, the Alabama claims because they bear a striking analogy to this particular case. England denied liability; the matter was referred to arbitration and in consequence of the arbitration a finding was made against England to the extent of some $15,000,000. That amount of $15,000,000 was paid by Great Britain to the United States of America and all individuals, shipowners and others, who were affected, were paid their proportion of the money that was paid by Great Britain to the United States after they had established their claim to the satisfaction of the United States.

There are other cases which are doubtless in the minds of many hon. members where governments have received large sums of money which were available for the purpose of satisfying claims of their nationals or citizens against that fund. It does not of course follow that the citizen can maintain an action to recover any part of that money, or to obtain a judgment against his country in satisfaction of his claim; but there is a claim there, a claim which may not be enforced in the courts of law but which, as I shall presently point out to the house, has been conclusively admitted by the high court of parliament and which waits but one thing, the placing in the estimates of sufficient sums to satisfy the claims of those who have justly established their right to those moneys that were paid to Canada by Germany for the purpose of satisfying the claims of the civil population.

Now if we bear in mind the fact that it has nothing whatever to do for the moment with the enemy property question, except to the extent to which if we did not have sufficient money we might by an act of this parliament make that money available to satisfy these claims, as they have done in the United States, it would seem to me that the difficulties mentioned by the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) would entirely disappear. We have nothing to do for the moment with respect to enemy property, with the custody of alien enemy property; we are not concerned with injuries sustained by the nationals of this country to their property in Germany, nor with any injuries to ships that may have been held by Germany in the Kiel canal, nor with any damages that may have arisen by reason of Germany using them during the war. What we have to deal with are claims made by citizens of this country against Germany for injuries sustained by them as civilians—as civilians—during the war.

Now let us see what our position is, according to the admissions made by the government itself on grounds of high policy. We submit to this house that these moneys are in a sense earmarked for that purpose, that they are available to satisfy these claims, that they came into the hands of this government with a trust imposed upon them, and not as part of the general revenues of the Dominion government. In support of that position, you are not in any sense bound to accept my view, but I do submit that the view of the government, this government, the government of which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) was then Minister of Justice, the government of which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister was then the leader, the government of which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) was then a member, is embodied in a statement made by the Hon. E. M. Macdonald, Minister of National Defence, on the 19th of June, 1925. That statement must be taken to be a statement of policy. It is a statement of a member of the government, and according to the well-known principles of cabinet solidarity, there is no question but that that principle enunciated by a responsible minister of the crown as to what the position of this government was in 1925, was accepted, as a matter of fact, by those concerned as being a binding declaration of policy by the government of the country. At page 4522 of Hansard, Mr. Macdonald said this:

> I was not in when this resolution was called—

Then he proceeds.

> The moneys which come from the Dawes commission, so called, are payable under the terms of the treaty of Versailles for certain definite purposes. They cannot be put into the treasury of the country and appropriated for other purposes than those for which they are paid. The compensation is paid in connection with the following list of cases:

Then follows the list of cases mentioned in the treaty, in what we call the annex, which is similar to a schedule of an act of parliament. There follows this list from the schedule of the treaty of the cases under which compensation will be paid when the money is received from Germany. The Right Hon. Mr. Meighen interrupted Mr. Macdonald at page 4523 and asked him what his authority was for making that statement, whereupon Mr. Macdonald continued:

This is a memorandum from the Under-Secretary of State, and it sets out the clause from the treaty of Versailles which provides the lines upon which compensation can be obtained from Germany and the amount of money that is payable to this country as a result of what is known as the Dawes report, on account of damages arising in these various categories.

That I submit is a correct statement of the situation, made by a minister of the crown, speaking, as all ministers do, the view of the government with respect to the matter then under consideration.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It did not impress the house at the time.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. The Minister of Justice is entirely in error as to that. The Hon. Mr. Copp, then Secretary of State, withdrew his resolution, but the resolution was withdrawn for reasons which I think any government would regard as good and sufficient. What was the resolution? The resolution was to pay without knowing what the judgments were, to pay before the commission had reported, and to pay without having before them anything of any definiteness at all. Let us look at what the resolution was. At page 4517 of Hansard, you will find that Mr. Copp's resolution was:

(1) That the report of the commissioner appointed to inquire into and report upon the claims for reparation of Canadian nationals, upon approval by the governor in council, shall be deposited with the Secretary of State of Canada in his capacity as custodian of alien property.

That report had not been made; the commission had not finished its labours; the judgments had not been concluded; but this resolution was to anticipate all that and provide that when the judgments were made they should be lodged with the Secretary of State. Then paragraph (2) provided:

That from time to time, as sums are received—

This is vital; this is a recognition of policy. This is a statement of high policy by the government of this country:

(2) That from time to time, as sums are received on account of reparation under the Agreement of London between the allied and associated powers and Germany, bringing into force what is commonly known as the Dawes plan, the amount thereof shall be paid by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to the Secretary of State as custodian, until such time as the aggregate of such payments is equal to the total amount of the claims for reparation as determined by the report of the said commissioner and approved by the governor in council.

[Mr. Bennett.]

If that is not a recognition of obligation and a promise to pay, I would like to know what would constitute a recognition of obligation and a promise to pay. That is so clear that there can be no getting away from it. Then follows the third submission:

(3) That the Secretary of State shall, on receipt of such payments, from time to time distribute the same to persons found entitled to claims for reparation in the commissioner's report, by way of pro rata dividend.

And then he must lay before parliament his report. In other words, there was a recognition by this government of the fact that the moneys were received with a trust imposed upon them, that they were earmarked to meet certain obligations and liabilities, and that the commissioner was so highly thought of, having been selected by the government itself, that when he made his report, then without any appeal, without any effort at changing it being made, these sums would be paid on the strength of his judgments. That was the position on June 19, 1925, three years ago, within a few weeks. There was a promise made by the government of this country, speaking through two of its ministers, the Secretary of State and the Minister of National Defence, that these obligations would not only be recognized but paid.

But this House of Commons objected to making a promise to pay before judgments were delivered. Sir Henry Drayton objected that the matter was too serious to be considered in the closing days of the session. It is true the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen made observations with respect to payment of property claims before the payment of claims with respect to personal injuries, and other members did the same, but their basis of objection to this resolution was that it put into the hands of the government the power to pay out moneys before the judgments had been delivered, which was in itself a serious departure from principle. In other words, the contention was that the judgments must be delivered, the cases made out before the commissioner, and his report presented to parliament before parliament voted the money, and I shall presently show that upon the application of the very principles that were presented to this house by the opposition at that time, and accepted by the government, these moneys should now be paid.

Let us proceed. That was in 1925. The resolution was withdrawn, and it is a matter of passing interest to know that when the resolution was withdrawn by the Secretary of State he recognized the fact that it was properly withdrawn, for after Mr. Macdonald had made his statement, and after various speakers had presented their views, the resolution was withdrawn by the Secretary of State because, he said, the leader of the opposition and others in their righteous indignation had expressed their views in respect to it. So he clearly recognized that they were right in the contention they made. His words were:

I regret very much that my hon. friends, particularly the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) have risen in righteous indignation because this bit of legislation is brought down in the interest of those who have suffered during the war. If they had the full information that I have and knew the very large numbers of poor people, fishermen particularly, on the different coasts of this Dominion who have suffered—

Sir Henry Drayton: It is a pity the minister would not give us the information.

Mr. Copp: I asked that the resolution be allowed to go into committee, when I would give the information to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Those were the statements of the government, speaking through the Secretary of State, about the suffering that would be imposed upon poor people, particularly fishermen, by this resolution not being passed three years ago.

Now we come to the next year, 1926. There were questions asked in an endeavour to find out what were the facts, but for reasons, which need not be discussed here, nothing was done. But in 1927 the matter was again brought to the attention of this house. I find at page 2218 of Hansard of that year questions were asked by Mr. Stevens with respect to this matter and answered by Mr. Rinfret, in the course of which he reviewed the whole of the circumstances much as he did Saturday. Question 19 asked:

What is the intention of the government with regard to payment of the awards made by the reparations commissioner?

This is the answer:

The policy of the government will be decided when the reparations commissioner has completed his report.

Mr. RINFRET: The report is being considered now.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly; and he completed it some months ago. I shall show presently it is more than that. This session again questions were asked by Mr. Manion, and they will be found at pages 687 to 688 of Hansard of February 22. 1928. One or two of these questions and the answers thereto I should like the house to consider. This is question 15:

Has the reparations commissioner's report been printed?

The answer is:

It is in the hands of the printer.

That is on February 22, 1928. Then comes the next question:

16. When will it be brought before the house for consideration?

To which the answer is:

Under consideration.

Then question 17:

How much has Canada received to date on account of reparations?

This is the answer:

$10,175,071.44.

Then I desire to direct attention to question 9:

Have not Canadian claimants under other articles of the treaty of Versailles been already compensated?

The answer is:

Yes.

To question 10:

If so, what were the total number of claims and the total amounts paid under and by virtue of such articles, and can any reason be given for such preferential treatment?

The following answer was given:

1,009 claims were filed of which 686 were paid amounting to $7,848,824.81. Special provisions were made in the treaty for the payment of claims under articles 296 and 297.

The final question relates to the distribution of the moneys. Now, Mr. Speaker, on February 22, the minister said the report was in the hands of the printer; this is now May 21—three months later. I am credibly informed the report has long since been printed and advance copies of it, in anticipation that it would be tabled, placed in the hands of the press for release when the moment came. But further than that, sir, I have under my hand the letters written by the Under Secretary of State in February last and of the secretary to the commission presided over by Mr. Friel in which, in answer to questions by claimants as to when the claims would be paid, it is said that the report would be submitted to parliament in a few days. It was fully expected by the Under Secretary of State that it would be so submitted. The minister says the report was in the hands of the printer. I say to the Prime Minister and his cabinet: When a public inquiry has been instituted by the government by order in council under the authority of the governor general in council and the Inquiries Act, and a report is made thereon, that report belongs to this House of Commons, and not to the government. And what is more, Mr. Speaker, we propose to insist that that report be brought down in this house. The government may say: You are helpless in the matter; we have our majority behind us, and we will not give the report to you. Well, since the institution of British representative government supply is granted only when grievances are remedied. In fact governments came into being under British parliamentary institutions for one reason, and one only, that there might be a body of men who would present to the sovereign the grievances of the people as expressed in the House of Commons in order that those grievances might be redressed.

Now, what has happened? I submit we have a condition which this house probably has never seen before. The government, by order in council, appointed a commissioner to investigate claims under a treaty, which treaty was a contract between, among other nations, Germany and Canada. The commissioner has made inquiry and has delivered his report. He is through, he has nothing more to do, he is functus officio. Now parliament is told by the government that it cannot have this report which the country is paying for. Surely the government realizes that that position cannot be maintained.

Mr. RINFRET: I thought I made it very plain on Saturday that there was no objection at all to tabling the report, except that the list of names with the amounts opposite might lead a number of persons to conclude that those amounts would be paid to them, when in fact they might not be. Under those circumstances we thought it would not be advisable to lay the report on the table.

An hon. MEMBER: You promised to.

Mr. RINFRET: I say again there is nothing in the report that we do not wish the opposition to know of. We rather want the opposition to agree with us that it would be inadvisable to lay the report on the table under such circumstances.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. Secretary of State has made just one mistake in the use of words when he says there is no objection to the opposition having the report. I am not speaking for the opposition, I am speaking for the people of this country who are affected by this report. It is not a question of the opposition seeing the report. It is a question of the rights of this parliament to have before it a document which the people are paying for. It is a judgment delivered by the commissioner, and it should be laid on the table of this house and so be available for the people. What is more, the report was printed by the government for that purpose.

Mr. RINFRET: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, for what purpose?

Mr. RINFRET: So that a certain number of copies would be available for members of the cabinet privately to consider the report.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman did not put that limitation in the answers he gave early in the session, three months ago. This is an afterthought. I can only say this, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the house, in view of the situation which has developed, must insist as a condition of supply being granted that we have the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I interrupt my hon. friend just for a moment? He said it was an afterthought on the part of the Secretary of State to say that the report had been printed privately for the consideration of the cabinet as a whole. I have in my hand a copy that was printed for the cabinet. It is marked "Confidential", and it is headed "Memorandum for sub-committee of council". It is dated March 13, 1928.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the report. That is a memorandum. Of course, that is confidential. It is a memorandum from the minister to the cabinet. What has that got to do with the report? That is not even a preface to the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It has everything to do with the report. Apart from the report this document is meaningless; and without this memorandum it would be difficult to consider the report.

Mr. BENNETT: It is incomprehensible that the Prime Minster would endeavour to impose on the house by making the statement that he has just made. The Prime Minister knew when he rose to interrupt me that that was not the report of the commissioner.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING. My hon. friend's remark was that what the Secretary of State said was an afterthought. I got up to correct my hon. friend in that regard, and to say that the Secretary of State was perfectly right when he said that the report was not brought down because the cabinet wished to have it considered confidentially in the first instance. I have in my hand the memorandum relating to the report, which is marked "Confidential" as relating to this question.

Mr. BENNETT: That has as much to do with the report as a confidential memorandum with respect to naturalization. Ministers prepare confidential reports for council, in order that council may be apprised of that which they have to consider. When that statement was made to induce this house to think that the right hon. Prime Minister held in his hand the report, I say it was all wrong. He had before him a confidential memorandum, prepared probably by the Under Secretary of State, indicating to his minister, and through him to the cabinet, what should be done with respect to the report on reparations.

Now let us get down to what is involved in this matter. Here is a report submitted by a commissioner appointed by this house—because the governor in council represents this house, it is the administrative side of government, when parliament is not in session. The cabinet of the country, I say, appoint a commissioner, who is paid to conduct a certain inquiry. That commissioner has submitted his report and, his duties having been performed, he has ceased to function. He has delivered several judgments and submitted a final report, and that report we want. That is all; we have a right to it. And, what is more, it has been promised from time to time. The question has been asked on various occasions by different members as to when the report would be delivered and the government have replied, "In a few days". But those few days have become weeks and the weeks months, and nothing has yet been done in the matter. There is no necessity for such a delay, and I am sure that if my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King) were on this side he would be most insistent that a document, prepared by a commissioner appointed to consider and report upon a matter of such great importance, and upon which the country has a right to know his conclusions, should be presented to parliament in order that it might be dealt with.

Mr. Friel, the commissioner, made his report. Now, it well may be that there are those who consider that these judgments should be reviewed, although no suggestion was made to that effect when the commissioner was appointed. The claims filed amounted to over $50,000,000 and, with interest, to over $75,000,000. In answer to what the Secretary of State has said with respect to the difficulties that might arise from people being led to believe that they would get a larger sum than they might afterwards receive, it is only necessary to point out that the commission granted only $4,000,000 without interest, instead of $50,000,000 with interest, or a total including interest of less than $7,000,000—$7,000,000 as against $75,000,000. Obviously therefore he was not overgenerous.

Mr. RINFRET: Does my hon. friend take the stand that the report should be considered as final?

Mr. BENNETT: The report is final so far as this commissioner is concerned; he is through. But whether or not it should be final so far as the government is concerned depends, it seems to me, upon the amount involved. Some of these amounts are trifling; I mentioned one or two the other day. Last year for the first time there was brought to my attention the case of a woman in British Columbia, living on Vancouver island, whose husband, a sea captain, was killed when his vessel was torpedoed. This woman is in dire want and this money is all that she can look forward to. Her claim was considered and, I believe, allowed, although on that point I cannot speak with authority. However, she asks that the matter be disposed of; she should not be allowed to die before her claim is paid. At the time of his death, it is true, her husband was in civilian clothing; nevertheless he was discharging a useful service to his country. But I would point out that this report deals with prisoners of war. This morning I received a telegram which reads:

> On behalf of the Nova Scotia ex-mercantile marine prisoners of war insist on settlement of reparation claims this session. All the mercantile prisoners from Great Britain who were with us in Germany were paid shortly after arriving back to their respective homes while we have been kept waiting for nine years.
>
> Captain R. G. Sprague, of Bridgewater Lunenburg Co., Captain J. E. Roope, Digby, Digby County; Captain C. O. Allen, of Halifax.

I do not think I know any of these gentlemen but, as I say, they sent me this morning the telegram I have just quoted. Now this is not a property loss; nor was it a property loss in the case of the poor woman to whom I have referred. Other cases I have in mind and to which I might refer are of the same character as these. But let us take the case of property loss; let us take the 352 cases in the county of Queens-Lunenburg, nearly one-half of the cases from Nova Scotia, which in turn constitute nearly one-half of all the cases that came before the commission, amounting to 1,609. Who were the persons seeking reparation? Fishermen who owned little vessels and about whom my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) could probably tell us more than anyone else. These men owned their little vessels which were torpedoed, and to-day they are on the verge of bankruptcy. In some cases they are almost bankrupt and in other cases absolutely ruined. And we have money to pay them and yet have held it back all these years. Why should these people not get their money? If the government desire to be further informed with respect to this matter I suggest that they ask my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough. He can tell them a good deal more than anyone else can, for probably he knows every one of the 300 odd. He knows that these men owned fishing boats, sometimes of but a few tons, upon which they depended for their living. And these boats were destroyed by Germany during the war.

In England, I would point out, not only were cases such as these provided for out of the fund, but out of the £5,000,000 advanced by the British government before reparations were paid, payments were made to those who had lost arms and legs and who had otherwise suffered from bombs. Furthermore, property losses suffered in inland Great Britain were also paid. It is not a case of property as against life; it is a matter of injury to persons.

The other day there came to me a young man who had a claim of something over $200. He had lost practically everything he had in the world in the shape of property and he went into uniform although he was not fit. He remained in the army as long as he could. His claim now is only small; I believe it is something like $230. He preferred that claim and was told that it was admitted. But nothing has been done so far in the matter. Another case I have in mind is that of a chaplain who lost his all in the Lusitania. He also preferred his claim, which was allowed, amounting to a few hundred dollars.

Does the government realize what a few hundred dollars means sometimes to people without money? I can recall the time in my youth when a few hundred dollars to me looked like a great fortune. But here is a young man who, ten years ago, preferred a claim amounting to slightly over $200 and who finds it impossible to get any recognition when he needs the money so badly. It is all very well to talk about paying interest at 5 per cent on these claims. But the claims of these fishermen and prisoners of war—men who lost boats, machinery, tackle, and men who suffered injuries of one kind or another —are claims which should be settled without further delay. I am told that in many cases these claims do not amount to $1,000 each. There are those who will correct me in that regard if I am wrong. At any rate, the claims are small. Under all these circumstances, does the government not think that the proper course to pursue is to pay the small claims and, if there are large claims which need to be looked into further, make some payment on account in respect of those? No one will deny the Minister of Justice the right to investigate these claims with respect to large property losses; this house would not for a single moment suggest that he ought not to take further time to consider claims of that character. But should not a payment be made on account?

The former government, I would point out to hon. gentlemen opposite, invited the submission of claims. That is number one. Number two: this government inquired into those claims. Number three: it actually paid persons to assist claimants to come before the tribunal and submit their claims. An answer made by the Secretary of State in reply to a question asked indicates that public moneys were actually paid out to enable certain people, in their poverty, to come before the commissioner and present their claims for consideration. Now having done all that surely my hon. friends opposite will not repudiate their liability in the matter. I would be the last to deny the Minister of Justice or the law officers of the crown sufficient opportunity to look into the larger claims affecting property. Indeed, I try to put myself in the position of the Minister of Justice in relation to the question, and doing so I at once concede that I should like to have an opportunity to see whether the commisioner had proceeded upon the right principles and whether his judgments were based upon a proper recognition of the value of the testimony given. I concede that much; so does every hon. gentleman on this side of the house. But we are faced with a situation in which small claims are not paid and nothing has been paid on account of the larger claims, notwithstanding that these moneys have been in the possession of the government for many years. We might do as has been done in the United States: we might take a portion of the enemy property fund, which now amounts to over $13,000,000, and pay the claims. I am prepared to concede all that. I may tell my hon. friend the Secretary of State that the reason why the words "in whole or in part" were added to the original resolution proposed by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg was to enable the government to consider the larger claims in any way they liked. But the point is that the smaller claims should be disposed of. Whatever the government might consider just in the way of a partial payment on account of the larger claims, I submit that the smaller claims should be dealt with at once; because after all, when men lose their all, by act of war and they know that a fund has been provided by the enemy to pay that liability, it only makes for dissatisfaction when that money is withheld from year to year. I am sure there is no desire on the part of the government to increase the number of dissatisfied people in the country, and when the money is there, the liability small and the necessity pressing, why should we not pay these claims?

That is the reason this resolution is upon the order paper as an amendment to the motion to go into supply. Why was it moved as an amendment to that motion? My hon. friend the Secretary of State understands that very well. He knows that unless this resolution were moved in this way we would be denied any opportunity to present this case to the house this session. The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst), pressed as he is by the 352 men in his constituency who went to sea as civilians but who were discharging useful services during the war and who had their property destroyed by enemy torpedoes, who for years and years have been unable to secure compensation, now knowing that we have received over $10,000,000 while the total of the claims with interest is not over $6,000,000, availed himself of his constitutional right to move an amendment to the motion to go into supply, not necessarily to involve the government in any difficulty but to afford them an opportunity to say that when the supplementary estimates are brought down they will include a sum sufficient to pay in full the claims under, say, $4,000 or $5,000 and a percentage of the claims over that amount. That is all that is sought to be done, and I submit to the house that it is a proper exercise of the power of opposition to present this matter to this parliament for consideration.

There was just one matter to which I had intended to direct the attention of the Secretary of State, one error which he made with respect to the Spa conference. That conference did not set the liability at 132 milliard of gold marks. If he will turn to the History of Reparations, by Bergmann, at page 43 he will find what took place at Spa in these words:

> Whilst no progress was made at Spa in the reparation question itself, and the outlook for an understanding, on the contrary, was rendered less hopeful, the allies at least reached an agreement on one point—how in future to distribute among themselves the skin of the bear—the reparation payments. It was agreed that France should receive 52 per cent, England 22 per cent, Italy 10 per cent, Belgium 8 per cent and all other participants the remaining 8 per cent. Furthermore, Belgium's right to preferential treatment in reparation—the so-called Belgium priority— granted to her in principle by the allies at Versailles, was definitely fixed at 2 milliard gold marks.

At page 72 my hon. friend will find the reference to what was done by the reparations commission, sitting at London, when the matter of the 132 milliard of gold marks was settled, and the question of the payments made from time to time is also dealt with.

That is all I propose to say with respect to this matter. We feel very strongly about it, because it affects those who in large measure cannot press their claims themselves. There is no large claim among the 352 people in Queens-Lunenburg; there are no large property claims there. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff), who represented that constituency in those days, bears me out by a nod of the head with respect to that. These are not large claims, amounting to only $200, $300, $500, $600, $800, $1,000 and up to $5,000; why not pay them in full with the money we have? Why continue to hold that money after Mr. Macdonald, speaking for the government, said that those sums never should have gone into the consolidated revenue fund of the country, and that they belong as of right to the people on whose behalf they were paid? It may be that the government was not the agent of those who suffered, to receive these moneys; no one suggests that the crown is an agent, because when the crown gets money and puts it into the exchequer sometimes it is hard to get it out again unless perchance there is some friend to be taken care of, some public work to be undertaken or something else of that nature to be looked after, which may be of advantage to the administration.

What are the reasons which prevent these people from receiving justice; what are the reasons which prevent them from receiving the money to which they are entitled and which they were promised by contract between the Dominion of Canada and the German empire? No one has stated the reasons. When my hon. friend the Secretary of State says the government want to consider this matter, let us remember how many judgments there are. How long would it take the Minister of Justice to review those 1,600 cases in which judgment has been given? It is true that at the moment he might not desire to pass judgment with regard to the larger claims, but let me state that with regard to the smaller ones this is only a question of justice. We have the money; the claims have been considerd; they are just and proper, and members of this house know them to be such. Let us at least show our sense of trusteeship and our recognition of the services rendered by these men, many of whom, while not in uniform, lost their all. Let us see that the judgments given by the commissioner named by this government as a fit and proper person to determine the extent of liability and to fix compensation, are implemented and the claims paid, in whole or in part, as the government in its discretion may determine.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): The amendment moved by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg reads as follows:

"This house regrets the refusal of the government to introduce legislation at the present session of parliament providing for the payment in full or in part of the various sums fixed by James Friel, Esquire, K.C., a commissioner appointed under the Inquiries Act, as losses sustained by the civilian population of Canada during the great war."

In support of that amendment, if I understand him correctly the leader of the opposition advanced the following argument: First, there is no legal liability on the part of the government, or there is no legal claim on behalf of any citizen of Canada in connection with any of these claims.

Mr. BENNETT: I said there was no enforceable claim.

Mr. CANNON: It is not enforceable because it is not legal.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is like a petition of right. You cannot sue the crown.

Mr. CANNON: I would not like to misquote my hon. friend. Does he contend that these people have any claim at all?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. I read what Mr. Macdonald said, that the receipt of this money imposed a trust upon the government to pay the claims, but inasmuch as no claim may be made against the crown it is not enforceable. That is the whole point.

Mr. CANNON: Mr. Macdonald's statement covered altogether different grounds. If the leader of the opposition takes the position that there is a legal claim, his argument is quite different from that made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) on Saturday afternoon, when he declared in the most positive manner that he admitted there was no legal claim. The contention of the leader of the opposition is altogether different from the argument brought forward in the British House of Commons by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, Right Hon. Austen Chamberlain, who maintained that there was no legal claim in connection with these matters. The argument of the leader of the opposition is also different from and foreign to the stand taken by every one of the governments concerned with these claims, and I do not think my hon. friend seriously contends that any of these claimants have what we call a legal claim against the government in connection with these matters. The hon. gentleman went on to say that the moneys received under the Dawes plan were received by this government for one purpose, the purpose being to pay the civilian claims in connection with war losses; that in consequence these moneys, so to speak, were earmarked; that the government had only one thing to do, and that was to use those moneys for the purpose for which they were paid by Germany and to compensate these Canadians for the losses sustained.

Where does the hon. gentleman get his authority? After all, behind any assertion in this house, no matter how positive it may be, must lie some authority to support that assertion. Where is it? Where is the support for my hon. friend's assertion that this is a trust? Where does he find it? I am very much surprised when I hear that the hon. gentleman does not rely on outside sources, and says that the whole of his claim rests on the authority of Mr. Macdonald, who was Minister of National Defence for some time in the Liberal government.

Mr. STEVENS: Is not article 232 sufficient authority? May I read it to you?

Mr. LAPOINTE: We all know that.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will permit me, I will discuss that in a minute.

Mr. STEVENS: That is authority, without question.

Mr. CANNON: I am dealing with the leader of the opposition, who says that his authority is Mr. Macdonald.

Mr. BENNETT: That is his construction.

Mr. CANNON: Mr. Macdonald may have made an assertion, but, without any hesitation whatever, I will take the same liberty with Mr. Macdonald as the leader of the opposition has taken with his former leader, Mr. Meighen; I disagree with him. I am not bound any more by what Mr. Macdonald might have said in 1925, than my hon. friend is restrained by what his then leader may have said in this house. This is not a matter that can be decided by an isolated statement made by Mr. Macdonald.

An hon. MEMBER: That was a statement by the government.

Mr. CANNON: How can there be ministerial solidarity, as far as a legal opinion is concerned?

Mr. LAPOINTE: On a question of law.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a legal opinion, it is a construction.

Mr. CANNON: How can my hon. friend talk about solidarity when it comes to an interpretation of texts? Solidarity exists in matters of policy, and the statement made by Mr. Macdonald was not a statement of policy; it was an interpretation of a text. That is a distinction which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will appreciate and admit, I have no doubt.

My hon. friend's second argument is that we are trustees. When I ask where is the authority of the hon. gentleman to establish that trust, to make it a trust towards the people of Canada, my hon. friend has no other authority than the isolated statement of a former member of this government.

Mr. BENNETT: And article 232 of the treaty, and the annex.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is shifting his ground.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a bit.

Mr. CANNON: I do not blame him for doing that for he is getting on firmer ground when he talks about the treaty.

In connection with this, I may say that my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst), when he presented his case on Saturday afternoon, in my humble opinion made a much stronger claim and a much firmer argument than his leader did this afternoon.

Mr. BENNETT: I agree with that.

Mr. CANNON: I admired the hon. gentleman's speech. His reputation had preceded him to this house, and on Saturday afternoon he lived up to the very highest expectations that the friendliest member in this house could have for him.

The leader of the opposition opened his argument by saying that there was very little difference between the two parties on this important matter. When you carefully read the speech of the leader of the opposition this afternoon, I think you will come to the conclusion that there is really very little difference. If his speech is summed up in the closing sentences, I do not think there is any reason for the amendment brought forward by one of his supporters in this house. If the question has been clarified to such an extent that there is very little difference between the two parties, I may say that on the one hand we owe it to the presentation of the member for Queens-Lunenburg, and on the other hand to the most remarkable speech on this question made by the Secretary of State. I will repeat, as the Secretary of State said on Saturday afternoon, that this is not a political matter.

An hon. MEMBER: It is becoming one.

Mr. CANNON: It is simply a question of law, and the parties in this house certainly should not make a political issue of it, and ask the members of the house to express their want of confidence in the government, because the government has not brought in legislation at this session to implement the reports made by Mr. Friel since the house met. As the leader of the opposition has just said, it would be only fair and just that the law officers of the crown look into the matter. How can the leader of the opposition conclude his remarks by saying that no policy on this subject should be adopted by the government until, and only until, the Minister of Justice has had time to examine into the claims, and, on the other hand, support an amendment brought forward by one of the members on his side of the house? This amendment would mean the defeat of the government for not doing immediately what the leader of the opppsition has said should not be done now.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what he said.

Mr. CANNON: That is what the leader of the opposition said.

Mr. BENNETT: No, he did not.

Mr. CANNON: I listened to the leader of the opposition very carefully, and he concluded his speech by saying that he did not expect the large claims to be paid, although awards were made by the commissioner, until and unless the Minister of Justice would have an opportunity to examine into these claims and decide whether or not payments should be made. What does the amendment say? The amendment says that this government should be condemned for not having brought in legislation in order to make those payments. Is there any logic in that?

Mr. BENNETT: Three months is long enough.

Mr. CANNON: Is there any logic in the attitude of the leader of the opposition?

An hon. MEMBER: Absolutely.

Mr. CANNON: I am pleased to see that the hon. gentleman is so easily satisfied. But can the leader of the opposition on the one hand conclude his remarks by saying that the matter is of such importance that action should be delayed and on the other say that the house should vote non-confidence in the government because we have not immediately introduced legislation to do exactly what he says should not be done now? The leader of the opposition interjected a minute ago: "Is not three months enough?" Three months enough for the Minister of Justice during the session, because the report was made while the session was on, when the Minister of Justice has to examine into every piece of legislation and also to follow the debates in the house! The leader of the opposition thinks it would be fair for the house to say that the Minister of Justice, notwithstanding all his pressing parliamentary work, should have had the time, within the last three months, to examine into 1,600 different claims in order that legislation might be brought down immediately. This is the position. These are the facts.

I say, first, there is no legal claim, notwithstanding what the leader of the opposition may have stated. I share the opinion expressed by every other government concerned and by the Right Hon. Austen Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer in the British government. Second, I say there is no trust and the moneys received under the Dawes plan are not, as the leader of the opposition has stated to the house, earmarked for a certain purpose.

Mr. CAHAN: Although my hon. friend says that there is no trust, does he also say that there is no duty and obligation on the government?

Mr. CANNON: I will come to that later In order to understand the treaty of Versailles, and in order to give to the different clauses of that treaty a proper interpretation the house must revert to the time when the treaty was made. What was the situation then? When news of the signing of the armistice was received, the idea prevailed in every allied and associated country in the world throughout the military and the civilian population, that Germany would be made to pay every cent of expenditure for war purposes and every dollar of damage caused by the war. That was the feeling which prevailed in November, 1918. To my ears are present to-day the words pronounced by the leaders of France, England, Italy and all the other large countries which fought during the war; not only were full indemnities to be exacted from Germany, but even moral responsibilities were to be met and crimes under international laws were to be punished. Every man in the house recalls speeches delivered at that time by no less a personage than the Right Hon. Lloyd George, Prime Minister of England, who claimed that in Paris not only a permanent basis for peace was to be established but an example would be set for unborn generations and the executions of those responsible for the outbreak of the war would be decided upon and would be carried out. Those were the contentions which prevailed when the plenipotentiaries were making their way to Paris.

After the conference met, when the different delegates from the various countries had to face conditions as they were and had to be awakened from the dream which they had dreamed during the war; when they realized that on account of the conditions which prevailed throughout the world, a hurt inflicted on Germany or on Austria or on any other country in Europe, would react in a very harmful way against every other country, a new attitude was taken. The allies recognized that Germany could not pay everything and at the Peace conference and the other conferences which took place later the principle was laid down that Germany would be asked to pay, in recognition of her liability for the war, only a certain fixed amount. That amount which was to be paid was fixed at 132,000,000,000 gold marks. After further negotiations the method under which those payments were to be made was indicated in the Dawes plan and the moneys that Canada has received so far, amounting to $10,000,000, were paid by Germany under the Dawes plan. But every cent which Germany has paid, not only to Canada but to France and England, is in payment of all damages caused by the war—

Mr. ERNST: Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON: —and the basis for the payment or for the part payment has been the civilian losses sustained. That is a distinction that has to be drawn, that has to be borne in mind when we are discussing the matter. Germany at first was called upon to pay all damages caused by the war. Germany recognized her liability; but when the financial experts went into the situation in Germany they realized that Germany could not be called upon to pay such a huge amount, and they also realized and appreciated the fact that the total bankruptcy of Germany would react against every other country throughout the world. Although the liability of Germany for the losses sustained by war was asserted and acknowledged, she was called upon to pay only part of those losses and the part payment of those losses was established upon the basis of civilian losses, but the amounts to be paid were in part payment of all damages and not only of losses sustained by civilians themselves.

Mr. ERNST: Will the hon. member give his authority for that statement, which is somewhat sweeping.

Mr. CANNON: I am coming to that.

Mr. McGIBBON: You will never reach it.

Mr. CANNON: We have first of all the Versailles treaty in two sections, one acknowledging liability and the other mentioning civilian losses. This treaty was afterwards changed to a certain extent by further conferences, and as I said before, plans were established. But if the contention brought forward by the leader of the opposition were true, if we were trustees for the Canadian people, if we had received those moneys for one purpose and one purpose only, how is it that the British government, which received moneys under the same plan—

Mr. BENNETT: They made an appropriation of £5,000,000, and paid it before they received the moneys.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is not going to divert me from my argument. The British government received 22 per cent of the total moneys paid by Germany under the Dawes plan. The moneys which Canada received represent 4½ per cent of that 22 per cent. Therefore, I have thus proved beyond peradventure, as my hon. friend would say, that the source of the payments is the same; secondly, that the process under which the payments are made is the same, and thirdly, that the object for which the payments are made is also the same, alike in England, alike in Canada. But what did the British government do? Would my hon. friend as the responsible leader of the Conservative party in this house, rise in his place and say for one moment that the British government has acknowledged a trust towards the British nation?

Mr. BENNETT: I will answer the question at once. The British government, not waiting to receive the Dawes payments, advanced out of their exchequer over £5,000,000, which was distributed nine years ago to the very class of people mentioned in the telegram to-day.

Mr. DUNNING. And none since.

Mr. BENNETT: Because they have settled all the claims.

Mr. CANNON: I do not want the hon. gentleman to tell me that the British government paid £5,000,000 in anticipation. I ask my hon. friend, as the responsible leader of the Conservative party in this house, if the British government—I will use a strong expression, because a trustee who does not use funds for the purpose for which he receives them, misappropriates them; there is no other name for it—if the British government was a trustee, as my hon. friend claims, how is is that the moneys which it received under the Dawes plan were not paid over to claimants for damages for civilian losses during the war in their entirety, as he claims we should do? The law is that a trustee has to use the funds which he receives for the purpose for which they are entrusted to him. What did they do in England? In England they appropriated, not out of the moneys received under the Dawes plan—

Mr. STEVENS: In anticipation of it.

Mr. CANNON:—but in anticipation of it, they appropriated £5,000,000 or $25,000,000, and they have not distributed a cent since then. When they paid the $25,000,000 Sir Austen Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, got up in the house and said, "These people have no legal claim," notwithstanding what my hon. friend the leader of the opposition might have said this afternoon.

Mr. BENNETT: Against the British government

Mr CANNON: "This government," Sir Austen Chamberlain said, "is not collecting these moneys as trustees for claimants,"—notwithstanding what my hon friend may have said this afternoon—"but the moneys are paid as an act of grace" Will my hon friend as leader of the opposition, and as a lawyer of prominence in Canada, deny tht the Chancellor of the Exchequer in England could not have made that statement that the payments were made as an act of grace if my hon friend's legal argument this afternoon had any basis at all? Either the Chancellor of the Exchequer was wrong, and nobody ever contended that he was, or my hon. friend was right, which I doubt very much

First, then, no legal claim. Second, no trust. Thirdly, I come to the main point touched on by the leader of the opposition—moral obligation. In dealing with this matter, Mr. Speaker, in order to understand the position which might have been taken by the several governments towards the civilian population in their respective countries, there is one great underlying principle which must not be lost sight of. War is the enemy of individual claims. When war is declared, it is the call of collective interest crushing individual privileges; that is war. War is a state of things where under the old Roman law the dictator used to call out the Roman legions by saying. Salus populi suprema lex." "The salvation of the nation is the supreme law." In war individuals vanish; their claims disappear; personalities have no existence; the law is beyond morality towards the individual; collectivity is supreme. My hon. friend says that this is pointed out in books—

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what I said.

Mr. CANNON: —I know it is, but it is good to read those books when discussing these matters. That is the standing of the individual in face of the state when war prevails.

Moral obligations the government may have towards the individual; that may be so, and the Secretary of State has not denied that the government intended to look into the question and to acknowledge such moral obligations in cases where moral obligation might rightly, without prejudice to the general interests of the country, be acknowledged; but in matters of this kind the only claim that the individual may have, if it is a moral claim, is the weakest kind of claim possible because, as I said before, the sufferings of the individual are the necessary consequence of a state of war The civilian population of the devastated regions of France have a moral claim against Germany. Their houses were destroyed, their families separated, their children killed. But the moral claims of those people against Germany were not recognized—

Mr. ERNST: Oh yes, they were.

Mr. CANNON: —and France herself had to spend millions to rebuild those sections.

Mr. ERNST: She is getting it back.

[Mr. Cannon.]

Mr. CANNON: In connection with this discussion, Mr. Speaker, I think it will do us all good to contemplate the dire consequences of the late war.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. CANNON: I do not know what the hon. gentleman is laughing at. This is no laughing matter. Millions went to war. We all knew that war was a terrible thing; history had taught us so. When peace was declared and the nations went back to their everyday work, humanity discovered that not only was war a terrible thing, it was a useless thing. Germany vanquished is in a better position to-day than victorious France, notwithstanding the moral claims that the millions of Frenchmen who died on the battlefield or the hundreds of thousands of French soldiers who were maimed have against Germany. We have received from Germany ten million dollars. As the hon. leader of the opposition has pointed out, some of the claims are small, claims probably that should be met. But these claims under $5,000 number over 1,400. Speaking for myself, I think the government should take a very favourable attitude towards these small claims. But why should we as a government, why should we as a nation, when we have to bear the tremendous burden of a national debt of 2,000 million dollars entertain the claims of large corporations? When the Canadian people as a whole have such a tremendous moral claim, is this house going to say that the government is derelict in its duty towards the public weal by not bringing in legislation in order to satisfy the large claims which were made before the commissioner? Two kinds of claims have been filed, small and large. As a minister of the crown, I may say that I have not been bothered by any of the small claimants. They have faith in the sense of justice of this country, I have no doubt. But I have been worried by the large claimants, and I have no sympathy for any of them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to sum up. The commissioner's report was put in the hands of the Secretary of State while this session was in progress. A matter of policy of the gravest moment must be decided by the government. Is this house going to say that we should decide it right away in the last weeks of the session? Or are we to be given an opportunity of examining into these claims which, as the leader of the opposition said, it is fair and just that we should be.

Mr. ERNST: Will the hon. minister permit a question? Had the government gone into supply five weeks ago this matter could have been taken up. The report was in the hands of the government at that time.

Mr. CANNON: That is a matter of detail rather than principle.

Mr. ERNST: But it would not have been in the last weeks of the session.

Mr. CANNON: This, as I have said, is a matter of policy of the gravest moment, because the government will have to decide whether there should be a priority of claim recognized. Should the nation have priority over the individual, notwithstanding how favourably his case may be considered? And is the house ready, without having that report before it, without having the information, without having the detail—not of the judgment, as the leader of the opposition has stated erroneously, but of the awards—is the house willing to decide now on that priority that the country should stand second to the individual in the payment of war claims.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the house, but I want to make my position clear before you put the question. This being a motion of want of confidence, and I being a Liberal, I am going to vote for the government. But I say that in my humble opinion these claims should be paid at the earliest possible moment. The Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) said that since he became a member of the government he has heard only from the large claimants. I want to say, sir, that during the last six years I have knocked at the door of the government, both by letters and personally, in an endeavour to have these claims paid even earlier than at the present time, but in vain.

Mr. CLARK: You have opened the door now.

Mr. DUFF: I hope they will pay them.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Ernst) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Bell (St. John-Albert), Bennett, Black (Halifax), Brady, Cahan, Cantley, Chaplin, Charters, Clark, Dickie, Edwards (Frontenac-Addington), Embury, Ernst, Esling, Fraser, Garland (Carleton), Grimmer, Hocken, Jones, Ladner, MacDonald (Cape Breton South), Macdonald (Kings), Macdonald (Richmond-West Cape Breton), Macdougall, McGibbon, Manion, Matthews, Quinn, Rennie, Ross (Kingston City), Senn, Short, Smith (Cumberland), Stevens, Stirling, Tolmie, Young (Toronto Northeast).—37.

NAYS

Messrs:

Adshead, Bancroft, Beaubien, Bissett, Blanchard, Boivin, Bothwell, Bouchard, Boucher, Boulanger, Bourassa, Bourgeois, Bradette, Brown, Campbell, Cannon, Cardin, Carmichael, Casgrain, Chevrier, Coote, Delisle, Denis (St. Denis), Denis (Joliette), Descoteaux, Deslauriers, Donnelly, Duff, Dunning, Elliott, Euler, Evans, Fansher (Last Mountain), Fansher (Lambton East), Forke, Foster, Gardiner, Garland (Bow River), Girouard, Glen, Goulet, Howden, Irvine, Jelliff, Jenkins, Johnston (Long Lake), Kennedy, King (Kootenay East), King, Mackenzie (Prince Albert), Lacombe, Laflamme, Lanctôt, Lang, Lapierre, Lapointe, Lucas, Luchkovich, Macdonald (Glengarry), MacLean (Prince), McLean (Melfort), Macphail (Miss), McMillan, McPhee, McPherson, Malcolm, Millar, Milne, Morrissy, Motherwell, Neill, Perras, Power, Prévost, Ralston, Rinfret, Robb, Robitaille, Ross (Moose Jaw), Sanderson, Sinclair (Queens), Smith (Stormont), Speakman, Spencer, Steedsman, Stewart (Edmonton West), Telford, Thorson, Totzke, Vallance, Ward, Woodsworth, Young (Saskatoon).—92.

PAIRS

(The list of pairs is furnished by the chief whips).

Messrs:

Barber, Edwards (Waterloo), Preston, Peck, Pettit, Hodgins, Tummon, Cowan, Price, Simpson, Perley, McIntosh, Young (Weyburn), Edwards (Ottawa), Morin (Bagot), Benoit, Bowman, Langlois, Allan, Verville, Cahill, Marcil,

Anderson (Toronto),	Fontaine,
Cotnam,	Dussault,
Stinson,	Goodison,
McRae,	Blatchford,
Spence,	Bock,
MacLaren,	Fiset,
McQuarrie,	Fafard,
Quinn,	Donnelly,
Hanson,	Veniot,
MacNutt,	Ilsley,
Smoke,	Cayley,
Harris,	Tobin,
Sinclair (Wellington),	Hall,
Ryckman,	Desaulniers,
Rowe,	Lacroix,
Thompson,	Dionne,
Kaiser,	Lavigueur,
Robinson,	Odette,
Casselman,	Howard,
Arthurs,	Jacobs,
Black (Yukon),	Heenan,
Johnstone,	Baldwin,
Wilson (Wentworth),	Kay,
Hubbs,	Hay,
Boys,	Parent,
White (London),	Gershaw,
Maybee,	St-Père,
Bell (Hamilton),	Mercier (St. Henri),
Geary,	Mercier (Outremont),
Church,	Rhéaume,
Ryerson,	Taylor,
Anderson (Halton),	Bettez,
McGregor,	Séguin,
Bowen,	McKenzie,
White (Mount Royal),	Wilson (Soulanges),
Guthrie,	Dubuc,
Maloney,	Guérin,
Gott,	Rutherford,
Pouliot,	Lennox.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I was paired with the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Desaulniers). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. ROWE: I was paired with the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Lacroix). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. KAISER: I was paired with the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lavigueur). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON: I was paired with the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Odette). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. CASSELMAN: I was paired with the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON: I was paired with the hon. member for Matane (Mr. Dionne). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. PECK: I was paired with the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Morin). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

[Mr Duff.]

Mr. PETTIT: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Benoit). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. HODGINS: I was paired with the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Bowman). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. COWAN: I was paired with the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Allan). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. TUMMON: I was paired with the hon. member for Chambly-Vercheres (Mr. Langlois). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. BLATCHFORD: I was paired with the hon. member for North Vancouver (Mr. McRae). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I was paired with the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. FAFARD: I was paired with the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE: I was paired with the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Bowen). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. BOCK: I was paired with the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. VENIOT: I was paired with the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. ILSLEY: I was paired with the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. MacNutt). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. CAYLEY: I was paired with the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Smoke). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. PRICE: I was paired with the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Verville). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. SIMPSON: I was paired with the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. GOODISON: I was paired with the hon. member for Victoria, Ont. (Mr. Stinson). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. PRESTON: I was paired with the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Edwards). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Post Office—salaries, including amount required to pay allowance to office appliance operators, grade 2, operating Hollerith card punching machines in accordance with provisions of order in council P.C. 156/2521, dated 24th December, 1923—$1,345,379.

Mr GARDINER: Before we proceed further I wonder if the Postmaster General would move down towards the centre of the chamber in order that we might hear him better.

Mr. VENIOT: I can assure my hon. friend that I will speak loud enough so that he will hear me. I prefer to retain my seat.

I might explain to the committee that this amount shows an increase of $40.230, of which $18,450 is due to statutory increases approved by the Civil Service Commission and the balance to staff requirements due to growth of service and new postal developments. In the reorganization and carrying on of the inside service there have been increases amounting to $132,330 gross and decreases amounting to $92,100, making a net increase during the year of $40,230. I have all the details here; for instance, the increase of $40,230 in salaries is made up as follows: 281 statutory increases, totalling $18,450; 28 increases at $120, 250 increases at $60 and 3 increases at $30. There have been 19 new appointments to the inside service during the year amounting to $19,920 in salaries. These appointments include one map draftsman, one clerk grade 4, one clerk grade 3, 7 clerks grade 2, 2 stenographers grade 2, 3 typists grade 1, one truckman and one office boy. To provide for increases to employees now in one of the grade 3 classes who were formerly in one of the senior grades, whose cases are under review by the Civil Service Commission, $9.360; to provide for staff requirements due to growth of service and new postal developments, $3,360, making a total of $51,090. The decrease in the difference between the salaries of employees promoted or who have left the service and the salaries of those who replace them, amounts to $10,860, leaving a net increase of $40,230.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I would like a little information from the minister. He has indicated some causes for the increase in the vote, and I presume one of the causes is the additional appointments which have been made.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes; there were nineteen additional appointments.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then I would ask my hon. friend if these 19 additional appointments were made on the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. VENIOT: Each of these 19 appointments to the inside service was made on the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, or at least by the Civil Service Commission, which issued the certificates.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Will the same answer apply in the case of promotions?

Mr. VENIOT: I might explain that under the rules governing promotions within the inside service, these are made by the merit system through a rating board, whose report is submitted to the Civil Service Commission for final decision.

Mr. GARDINER: Who appoints the rating board? Is it within the service?

Mr. VENIOT: That depends on the position that is being considered. Generally the rating board is appointed from the immediate superiors in the class where the promotion is to be made.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then I would refer to a certain position here in Ottawa, to which attention was called in the columns of a local paper a short time ago. I refer to a man named Hall, who I understand has worked in the Ottawa post office for some twenty years. The minister will correct me if I am wrong in my understanding of the case. This man was found to be perfectly efficient in the position which he occupied, and because of his efficiency and length of service he was entitled to promotion. The Civil Service Commission asked for applications for this position, and in their advertisement they restricted the applicants to members of the permanent service. Mr. Hall, who had been filling the position for about eighteen months, was the logical man to be appointed; he was recommended for appointment and the Civil Service Commission announced his appointment on March 31 of this year. Then I understand that the Civil Service Commission were instructed through the minister to issue another advertisement in which the wording was changed, apparently with the view of shutting out Mr. Hall, who had been fulfilling the duties of this office, and enabling another person, favoured by the minister, to get the appointment.

Mr. VENIOT: I wish the hon. gentleman would not use a term like "favoured".

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I cannot withdraw the word. I should like to do so if I could do it conscientiously, but having had some experience with the minister in my own county, and his activities there, I am afraid I am unable at the present moment to withdraw it. If the minister can convince me by any reasonable argument to withdraw that or any other expression which may reflect upon his merits, I shall be happy to do so. I am most anxious to give him all possible credit in the administration of his department, for I think he stands in need of the most generous consideration that can possibly be given to him. I will be the first to accord him that generous consideration when, as I hope he will be able to do, he proves himself in any degree worthy of it. At present I cannot accord it to him, and I will give him my reasons a little later. I cannot, therefore, withdraw anything I have said.

There were two advertisements issued. On the strength of the first this man Hall, who had been officially conducting this branch, was recommended by the commission, and his appointment was announced on March 31. That was later changed because, as I say, another advertisement was sent out which practically eliminated him. For the time being I will accede the floor to the minister and see what he has to say up to date.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) for having brought this question before the committee. On May 8 there appeared in an Ottawa newspaper an article, under the caption of "The Activities of Mr. Veniot", from which he has been quoting.

First of all, I want it to be distinctly understood that I intend to have efficiency in the Post Office department in all sections of Canada. When I find it is necessary to have people who can speak both languages, I am going to see that those people are appointed, irrespective of the comments or criticism of my hon. friend. That applies to all sections of Canada. I will give you an instance right in the city of Montreal, which is essentially French. In certain branches it is necessary that English also should be known, and applications received from those who can speak only the French language have been refused. Why? Because efficiency is necessary.

Let me explain that this case here in Ottawa was purely a matter of departmental administration. When the vacancy in question occurred the officials of my department, who are not French—the deputy minister is, but he is guided by the superintendents of the branches—advised that it was necessary that a person of bilingual qualifications be appointed to this position. That report was made to me, and I accepted it. I then instructed that an advertisement should be issued calling for the promotion of persons of bilingual attainments. In some unaccountable way the advertisement did not call for what had been ordered. When this was discovered the Civil Service Commission were notified that they should call for bilingual qualifications, and they did so. The matter is now before the Civil Service Commission for its decision.

The position became vacant through Mr. Cherry's promotion from the registration department to a promotion formerly held by Mr. Larue, a bilingual official who was in charge of the letter carriers. Mr. Cherry's promotion was made, notwithstanding the fact that a bilingual employee had been Mr. Larue's assistant during a long period of years. I raised no objection to that, because it was thought necessary that it should be done at the time. When it came to the point where it was necessary to have a bilingual appointee replace the gentleman who had received the promotion over the head of a bilingual man, on the recommendations made by my officials, I issued the order. These are the facts just as they will be submitted to the house when all the documents that have been asked for are laid on the table.

The newspaper that brought this question up makes the following statement:

> Mr. Veniot, judging from some of his past utterances, looks pretty much as though he were more concerned with patronage and with matters of race and language than with the efficiency of his department.

This newspaper is printed here in Ottawa, and has the opportunity of ascertaining whether or not the present Postmaster General is efficiently operating his department. It is singular that a newspaper situated as the Ottawa Journal is, with every opportunity of ascertaining whether the present Postmaster General is capably and efficiently administering his department, is so unfair in its criticism that it has not, during the time I have been at the head of the department, attempted to find out how the business of that department was carried on. Other newspapers have attempted to do so, and I hold in my hand an article which I am sure the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington will accept as being true and genuine, an editorial from the Montreal Star.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I interrupt just for a moment and tell the Postmaster General that at the present moment I do not feel inclined to accept the statement of any paper published in the Dominion of Canada? Or if I do so, it will be with reservations.

Mr. VENIOT: I see it would be useless on my part to try to convince the hon. gentleman.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): You cannot do it with newspapers. I have not said all I intend to say.

Mr. VENIOT: Neither have I, and you will find it out before I get through with the estimates.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Lay on, Macduff.

Mr. VENIOT: I am not reading this article from the Montreal Star for the purpose of praising myself, but when I find an outstanding newspaper like the Montreal Star, in an editorial article entitled "Our Postal Service", saying the things it does, I think this house should be made aware of it. I quote:

> Mr. Veniot, the present Postmaster General, came into office with a reputation for executive ability and the record of a hard worker. He has plunged into the multifarious phases of his official duties with determination, working long hours to acquaint himself with every activity of his department. While he has been handicapped, like his predecessors, by political traditions that are a heritage in his department, he has shown initiative and a capacity for organization. Much remains yet to be done, for there are many barnacles to be cut away before a certificate of first class efficiency can be given to the post office. Yet Mr. Veniot has made a commendable start and the postal service is already reacting to his example and encouragement.

I am surprised that the Ottawa Journal has written and published such a scurrilous article in an attempt to raise racial prejudice in the community. The publication of this article reminds me—and this is the first opportunity I have had to deal with it in public—of another article published by the same newspaper in connection with myself. I refer to a report that it published, and that it implemented by an editorial, of a speech which I delivered in Montreal and in which I referred to the present leader of the opposition. There was absolutely no foundation for the report or the editorial. I took the matter up with the Ottawa Journal; I took the French report word for word of the speech that I delivered in French at that banquet; I called the attention of the Ottawa Journal to its unfair treatment of the case, and I offered to give them the newspaper that contained the verbatim report. They sent for it; they promised to publish it in order to correct what they had done before, but from that day to this—and it is nearly a year—they have not published one word. Therefore I cannot and do not expect any fair treatment at the hands of a newspaper of that stamp.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I have personal reasons for agreeing in part with what the Postmaster General has said regarding the Ottawa Journal. I am not going so far as to agree with him in his accusation that the Ottawa Journal was endeavouring, in reference to this matter, to raise racial cries. In fact I will say that when the question is one of trying to put race against race in this country, the record of the Postmaster General, since he became a cabinet minister, occupies a very prominent place in such records. Mr. Hall, to whom I have referred, worked in the Post Office department for approximately twenty years and for ten years of that time he was in charge of the registered mail division as assistant clerk.

Mr. VENIOT: He was not in charge as assistant clerk. He was an assistant clerk.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): He was assistant clerk in charge of the registered mail division. Does that wording satisfy the minister?

Mr. VENIOT: No, it does not.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, I will say that Mr. Hall was for ten years assistant clerk in charge of the registered mail division.

Mr. VENIOT: No, he was not.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, he was assistant clerk in the registered mail division. Will that do?

Mr. VENIOT: Now the hon. member has it.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Am I correct in saying this, that he was acting as clerk in charge of the registered mail division for some sixteen or eighteen months?

Mr. VENIOT: If he was doing that he never had the sanction of his superiors for it.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, he was acting with or without the sanction of his superiors. It does not reflect to the credit of the department if he dominated the department and acted without their sanction. The minister can get all the comfort out of that he likes, but I cannot see much credit in it for him.

On December 28, 1926, the Civil Service Commission called for applications to fill a vacancy for clerk in charge of the registered mail division. Mr. Hall, who had been serving for some time, forwarded his application in December, 1926, and the Civil Service Commission announced his appointment in March, 1928. He was gazetted and his name published in the Ottawa Citizen, I believe, a certificate of promotion being duly signed and issued to him by the Civil Service Commission. Mr. Hall's certificate was forwarded to the Post Office Department by the Civil Service Commission and it was rejected by the Postmaster General on the ground that the position should be filled by a bilingual employee. This man had been acting apparently efficiently in that position for a matter of some sixteen months, so I take that as very strong ground for the attitude assumed by the Ottawa Journal in supporting the claim of this man to the position to which he was appointed by the commission. In addition to that, after the Civil Service Commission sent forward his appointment to the Post Office Department and it was rejected by the Postmaster General on the ground which I have stated and in which he concurs, the commission sent an investigator to ascertain whether or not the position which had been filled efficiently by Mr Hall for some eighteen months really required a man who could speak both languages. The minister, I venture to say, will not claim that while Mr. Hall was acting in this capacity, his services were not satisfactory. Mr. Hall had been in the position for a year and a half, which was long enough for anyone to ascertain whether or not he could fill the position efficiently. The Civil Service Commission had doubtless taken that into consideration, because they appointed a man to investigate the matter and he reported that the position did not require a bilinguist.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. ST.-PERE: Why would the position not require a bilinguist when there are 40,000 French-speaking people in Ottawa?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): My hon. friend can have his own opinion on that. I have none to offer. I am offering what the Civil Service Commission thought, the reason why they came to the conclusion they did, as backing up the fact that their conclusion was right, namely, that the man had filled the position satisfactorily for a year and a half and that after the Civil Service Commission had sent a man to investigate whether or not the position really required a man who possessed both languages, he reported that the position did not require a man with those attainments.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): My information is that the Civil Service Commission investigated whether the position required a bilinguist and the report was that a bilinguist was unnecessary. If that was the only case where the civil service commission has been overridden by the Postmaster General, I would not take up the editorial in the Ottawa Journal, but it is not the only case, not by any means. The Postmaster General in my own constituency has absolutely disregarded the law of the land and the regulations which should govern his as well as others, has disregarded the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission and made his own appointment over and above the recommendation of the commission. Does my hon. friend deny that?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well then, I will refer my hon. friend to the case of Enterprise—

Mr. VENIOT: I want my hon. friend—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): You sit down.

Mr. VENIOT: I gave my hon. friend the privilege of asking a question, and I want my hon. friend to state his case clearly. He said that I had refused the certificate of the Civil Service Commission and made my own appointment. I want him to stick to that, and then we will know where we are.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I said that the hon. minister had disregarded the law and the regulations in regard to making appointments. That is what I said, and I repeat it. Now I will state the case. I state the case of Enterprise post office in my own constituency, where applications were invited for the position of postmaster to be received up to January 29, 1927. There were seven applications for the office of postmaster in that village, and I believe that every one of the seven was competent. Only one applicant of the seven was a returned soldier. His name was Cooper. The inspector reported on February 22 in regard to these several applicants, and in regard to Cooper—

Mr. VENIOT: What year, please?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): February 22, 1928. Here is the question which was put to the inspector in regard to Cooper:

> Do you consider this candidate sufficiently qualified as to education, experience, personality, character and integrity to meet the needs of the office in question?

I grant at once that a returned soldier, who, under the act, is supposed to have the preference—that is what the act says; not that he may, but that he shall—must possess the necessary qualifications, and the answer of the inspector in regard to Cooper was that from the standpoint of education, experience, personality, character and integrity Mr. Cooper, the only returned soldier applying for the position, was qualified to fill the position of postmaster at Enterprise. I may say that Cooper has served for two and a half years in France, and was gassed over there. He came well recommended. His application was backed up by a petition signed by 229 of the residents of that district who knew him and his qualifications very well. He provided a site which was perfectly satisfactory in the opinion of the inspector, and which was somewhat nearer the station, and consequently there would be a tendency to reduce to some slight extent the cost of transferring the mail to that office. The Civil Service Commission, acting on the inspector's report, notified Cooper of his appointment to the position of postmaster at Enterprise. They also notified the other six applicants that Cooper was the one who had been selected. On the strength of that, Cooper went ahead and got a carpenter to make certain changes and fix up the building which he was going to use for the post office. He went to some expense in that regard. He also disposed of the tools of his trade—he was a tinsmith by trade—and was awaiting word to take over the office.

Now in justification of my statement a moment ago that the Postmaster General disregarded not only the Civil Service Commission but the law, I say that notwithstanding all these facts, the Postmaster General threw to one side the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, disregarded the law giving the preference to a returned soldier who was qualified, and insisted that another man be appointed to the position. The Civil Service Act, referring to those who served in the war, says, in section 29, I think it is, that they shall receive the preference irrespective of the marks obtained. The Postmaster General in this matter, in the correspondence which passed between him and others, referred to Cooper as a man in debt. That was evidently one of the reasons which influenced the Postmaster General to turn down Cooper. Cooper's debt amounted to about $200. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he thought that that was sufficient reason, or that that of itself was one good reason why he should turn down the application of Cooper—because he owed some money. That is the position which the Postmaster General took, and that is one of the reasons he gave as the final say for rejecting Cooper's application.

But the minister says, oh this position was vacant before on one occasion right after the war, in 1920. Cooper was an applicant then but was not accepted at that time. The position was given to a man by the name of Fenwick. That I know is what the minister has in his mind, or part of what he has in his mind. So in that connection I should like to quote to him from a statement of the Civil Service Commission on that particular point. They say:

> In this connection it might be pointed out that the material under consideration at the time of Mr. Fenwick's selection—

That would be in 1920, I think:

> —was entirely of a different nature to that in the present competition. The circumstances surrounding Mr. Cooper's candidature in 1920 were also different inasmuch as he had no place to keep the post office at that time, and was competing against an applicant who lost a son overseas.

Mr. VENIOT: That did not give him any preference.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac):

> This son had won the D.C.M. and prior to enlistment was his father's chief help on the farm. The father, as a consequence, and on account of poor health being unable to get along without his son, was obliged to sell his farm and move to the village.

Those were the circumstances in 1920. The commission continue:

> In the present instance, Mr. Cooper offers a suitable accommodation and location for the post office, and is certified by the inspector as being qualified in all respects. The examining branch, therefore, has no alternative but to recommend his appointment.

That is dated March 23, 1927. In 1920 when Cooper applied for the position, Mr. Fenwick, who had lost a son in the war and was obliged to abandon his farm on that account, applied for the position of postmaster, and the sympathy of the community went out to Mr. Fenwick. Because of that fact, and of the further fact that Cooper at that time had no place for the post office, a decision was given in favour of Mr. Fenwick. Now the Postmaster General seeks to excuse his action by referring to the report of the Civil Service Commission in 1920 as indicating Cooper's lack of qualifications for the position. It does not indicate anything of the kind. The inspector certified that Cooper had the qualifications. The Postmaster General may say that he is not a very good writer. Well, I had a note from the Postmaster General the other day, and a letter from Cooper some time ago, and having taught school for some years, and therefore being somewhat of a judge of handwriting, I would give Cooper more marks than I would the Postmaster General.

Mr. VENIOT: What would you do about your own handwriting?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, I can write better than you; you may bet your life on that. But the Postmaster General gave another reason for turning against Cooper. He said: Oh, this man Cooper is in debt. Now, I ask him if he really thinks he should have put that in? Does the Postmaster General really think that because this returned soldier owed a couple of hundred dollars, this should be advanced as one reason why he should not have the position? Will he answer yes or no?

Mr. VENIOT: You will get your answer at the right time.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): All right, I shall wait for the answer with interest. I refer to that now as one of the reasons advanced by the Postmaster General why this man, who had served his country in the war, the only one of the seven applicants—

Mr. VENIOT: Does the hon. gentleman state there were seven applicants?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, and I will give you their names. They were: P. J. Murphy, W. S. Fenwick, O. B. Jackson, Geo. A. Cooper, Miss Wiseman, W. P. Covert and Mrs. Lockwood.

Mr. VENIOT: Where did you get the information?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): From your own department. That ought to be good enough.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes. If you will look over your files you will see that is correct. Apparently the minister wanted to see only one name in this connection. He had made up his mind that he was going to have efficiency, according to his ideas. Efficiency was the only thing that counted with him. He declared: I am determined, though the heavens fall—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am determined, says the Postmaster General; no matter what happens, law or no law, Civil Service Commission or no Civil Service Commission, I will have my way in running this department; I will dismiss postmasters by the hundred for the efficiency of the service, because Liberal members of parliament say it will be more efficient to put out a man who voted on the Conservative side and give the position to one who voted Grit. That is his estimate of what constitutes efficiency. He estimates efficiency in the public service by the way a man votes at elections. He may be the biggest numskull on earth, but if he votes Grit, then according to the standard of the Postmaster General he is efficient. Now, I should like to get an answer to that question.

Mr. VENIOT: You will get it after you are through.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, it is said the pleasures of anticipation are greater than those of realization. I do not subscribe to that theory. However, we will have to wait. I have another case, but I will leave it in cold storage for a little while.

Mr. VENIOT: Oh, come on.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I know the hon. gentleman—

Mr. DUNNING: You are not going to let him answer before six.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I think it is better to keep everything in chronological order. The other is the Odessa case. Probably the minister will remeber Odessa. I wrote a letter about it.

Mr. VENIOT: I remember it quite well. That is where you certainly did all you could to support the returned soldier.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): We shall see when we come to it. Apparently the hon. gentleman has made up his mind, but we will see if we cannot change it. It is a pretty difficult thing to do. Now I come back to this Enterprise case. Don't forget, Mr. Postmaster General—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): —you can answer me in any order you wish, but don't forget that I asked you if you thought you were playing the game square by putting up the excuse against this man Cooper that he was slightly in debt.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not say slightly.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): You said he was in debt. If you have the information as to the amount of the debt perhaps you will give it.

Mr. VENIOT: Even if I had I would not give it to the hon. member.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Did I understand my hon. friend to say he would not give it to me?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not believe my hon. friend has the information as to the amount.

Mr. VENIOT: You may be quite correct,—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, and in other things too.

Mr. VENIOT: —and you may not.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I hope my hon. friend does not go so far as to say that he will not give an answer to my question whether or not it was proper for him to mention the fact against Cooper that he was in debt as one reason why he should not have the position. The Postmaster General will not deny that he made use of that argument. Now I ask him if he thinks that is just square.

Mr. VENIOT: Go on till six.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Go on.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, the item is not going to carry yet awhile; we have a few other questions we wish to ask the minister. As a matter of fact I think he should answer the question that has just been put to him. Possibly he thinks five minutes to six does not give him sufficient time.

Mr. VENIOT: It is four minutes to six. Had the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) stopped at ten minutes to six he would have given me an opportunity.

Mr. MANION: Call it six o'clock?

Mr. VENIOT: I should like to have it called six o'clock, but I wish to assure my hon. friend I do not need that time to collect my thoughts and reply to him. I have the goods right here.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): If the Postmaster General is not prepared to go on presumably he wants further time to consider this matter.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster General can sidestep as much as he likes, but there is no doubt he wants a little time to look over things and prepare himself before he speaks.

Mr. VENIOT: If the house will give unanimous consent to sit until five minutes after six, I will handle the hon. gentleman. I have called your bluff.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am rather surprised—

Mr. VENIOT: You are.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am rather surprised—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Wait a moment. I am rather surprised at the Postmaster General's tactics. It is not in my power to change the rules, but so far as I am personally concerned I am ready to sit here until eight o'clock to give an opportunity to answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. VENIOT: Call it six o'clock.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): No. I thought the hon. gentleman was going to proceed. I intimated that so far as I am concerned he could go ahead. I am ready to sit here until five minutes after six or five minutes after seven.

Mr. VENIOT: Call it six o'clock.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): No, we are not going to close until six o'clock.

Mr. VENIOT: Go ahead.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The other day in the house when another matter was under consideration I referred to the fact that the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) had given the preference, in the case of an appointment, not to a returned Canadian soldier but to a returned British soldier. The hon. gentleman passed a note across the floor to me asking to what office I referred when I made that statement. I wrote on the bottom of his note, which I passed back, the word "Odessa". The matter that was being discussed then was preference to soldiers. The man who was appointed postmaster of Odessa is, I believe, well qualified for his position; there were several others well qualified also. But the fact is that this man who was appointed to the post office there did not become a resident of Canada until after the war. He came here from the old country after the war, having served in the British army, though not at the front. However, he performed in the British army such service as they thought him best qualified to discharge. Under our interpretation of the law—and I have no fault to find with it personally—he ranks as a returned soldier. There were however returned soldiers, Canadian-born, among the applicants.

An hon. MEMBER: Six o'clock.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Not quite; it lacks about a quarter of a minute. Now, while I would draw no hard and fast line between returned soldiers born and brought up in England and returned soldiers born and brought up in Canada, at the same time, other things being equal, I am free to say that I should be disposed to give the preference to a Canadian soldier who was born and raised in this country. I shall be glad to receive the information I asked for when the minister has had time to prepare it.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering vote No. 20 on page 9 of the estimates.

Mr. VENIOT: When the committee rose at six o'clock the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington had been discussing the question of the appointment of a postmaster at Enterprise. He and I had previously discussed the Ottawa promotion, and I think perhaps sufficient has been said in that connection unless further information is required by the committee, which I shall be glad to give.

In connection with the postmaster at Enterprise let me point out that the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington got a little ahead of the blows which he expected to deliver in connection with that appointment in 1921. This office became vacant in that year through the resignation or death of the postmaster, at the moment I forget which. Three applications were received for the appointment. I interrupted the hon. member this afternoon and asked him if he were not mistaken as to the number of applicants, thinking he was referring to the appointment in 1921. He was right when he said there were six or seven applicants for the position in 1927. In 1921 the report of the inspector touching upon these three men, of which I have both a copy and the original, was as follows:

> Cooper has no place to keep the office, and no means to purchase a building, but his foster father states he will buy one for him. Fenwick on the other hand, owns the premises where the office now is, which is well adapted for the purpose, so no change in site would be necessary if he were appointed.
>
> Both are highly spoken of and there does not appear to be anything against the character of either, but I am bound to say that Fenwick is much the better appearing man of the two, and more fitted for the position. In fact, were it not that Cooper had been overseas, he should not be considered, because he lacks the attributes which the former possesses.

That was the report submitted by the qualifying inspector sent to rate the different applicants. Later on this office became vacant again through the death of Mr. Fenwick, who received the appointment in 1921 through a certificate issued by the Civil Service Commission. That was a case of a civilian being appointed as against a returned soldier, but I have yet to learn that the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington, who to-day stands up as the champion of returned soldiers and who at that time was a member of the government, if I am not mistaken, never raised his voice on behalf of Cooper. In fact, I know he did not.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): When was that?

Mr. VENIOT: That was in 1921, when my hon. friend was a member of the government.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What time in 1921?

Mr. VENIOT: I have not the exact date. I see I was mistaken; it was in 1920 that the vacancy occurred through the resignation of Mr. Wagar. My hon. friend may not have been a member of the government, but he was a leading member of his party at that time. I do not know that he ever raised his voice on behalf of that returned soldier, and he never had anything to say about it until Mr. Fenwick died in 1926. I was then in charge of the Post Office department and applications were asked for, six or seven being received. Among the applicants was this returned soldier, George A. Cooper, the only returned soldier who applied. The inspector who acted in 1920 was again called upon to qualify these applicants for the position, and his report reads as follows:

George A. Cooper is a returned soldier, and on this account has a lot of sympathy from many residents. He does not appear to be very bright and states he is barely able to make a living at his work. He is a tinsmith and does odd plumbing jobs. His education is lacking. . . . It was also ascertained that he was in debt. Mr. Cooper was an unsuccessful applicant for this position six years ago.

When this report was placed before me I went back over the record of Mr. Cooper, and I felt that if he were lacking in education, as is stated in both reports, and in the attributes necessary for such a position as the first report states—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is not what the report said.

Mr. VENIOT: It stated he lacked the attributes possessed by the other gentleman.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is very different.

Mr. VENIOT: The other gentleman possessed the attributes which qualified him for the position, and if Mr. Cooper did not possess the attributes which the other gentleman had certainly he did not possess the attributes necessary for the position. That is a roundabout way of saying it, but that is the fact.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): My hon. friend's logic is very bad.

Mr. VENIOT: It is bad for my hon. friend; no logic presented from this side of the house can find favour with him. We know that, so we do not try to impress our logic upon him. May I further add that in addition the inspector reported that if this man had not been a returned soldier he would not have been in the running at all, and this official, working under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, whose duty it was to state all the facts in his possession, further said that this man was in debt. Under those circumstances I felt it my duty to refuse the certificate from the Civil Service Commission, and I did so.

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I ask a question? Did the man who made that report serve in the war?

Mr. VENIOT: I do not know; I cannot tell my hon. friend that.

Mr. CAHILL: He served in the Tory party, did he not?

Mr. VENIOT: He was appointed by the Tory party. I do not know that being a returned soldier would help him in making a report of this kind. However that might be, the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington stated that I had appointed or named another individual to take the place of this man. That statement is not correct. While the minister has the power to direct his deputy to refuse a certificate—it can only be done through his deputy—the minister has not the power to name a person in the place of the one whose certificate was refused. The refusal of the certificate goes back to the commission and they make their choice from among the other applicants. In this case there were six applicants, and when the commission received the refusal by the department of their certificate they chose the next one who should receive the certificate. That certificate was issued and it was accepted, and that is the whole story.

While I am on my feet I will refer to the case brought up by the hon. member (Mr. Edwards) regarding the appointment to the position of postmaster at Odessa. I might just mention that there are two post offices of this name in the Dominion, one out west and one in the hon. gentleman's riding. The postmaster died and, if I am not mistaken, his son continued to act until the commission could appoint a permanent official.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It was not his son, but a man of the same name.

Mr. VENIOT: In looking over the records I find that the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington was not so anxious to stand up for the returned soldier as he is standing up for him now. There were four returned soldiers applying for the position at Odessa, one of whom was a disability man. If my hon. friend were as honest then in his advocacy of the rights of the returned man as he pretends to be now, he certainly would never have written the letter he did on August 4, 1926, when the shadow government was in power. What do I find in the official records of the department? I find this letter dated at Kingston, August 4, 1926, addressed to L. J. Gaboury, deputy minister of the department:

My dear sir:
I understand that several persons have applied for the vacant postmastership at Odessa.

He knew there were several applying.

I visited Odessa yesterday and made most careful inquiries into the situation there and after mature consideration beg to recommend the appointment of Mr. S. W. Clark for the position. Mr. Clark's son, Percy, has been in the office for the last year and a half and during the past six months has had full charge of this important office. He is competent, courteous and popular with all. If he was 21, I think there would be no question as to this appointment which I feel sure would please the public. He is only 18—

I want you to listen to this, and see what my hon. friend wanted to do with this important office.

He is only 18 and I ask for the appointment of his father, who is well qualified to discharge the duties of the office, and who would be the responsible one. He would no doubt retain the services of his son, who has discharged the work so satisfactorily, as your inspector will testify. This is a very important office—

And yet he wanted to put a boy of 18 in charge of it!

This is a very important office, and I am anxious to have it properly filled.

If you please!

I beg to request that you will give my representations your favourable consideration and that you will show this letter to the Hon. Dr. Manion.

I do not know whether he did that or not.

I remain,

Yours truly,

J. W. EDWARDS.

Mr. DUNNING: Was that a civil service job?

Mr. VENIOT: His party was in power and they did not care about the Civil Service Commission. Now that they are in opposition they are very solicitous for the rights of the Civil Service Commission.

But what do I find? I find that Melville G. Lee was an applicant, a returned soldier. D. O. Frink was an applicant, a civilian. Stanley J. Smith was an applicant, a returned man. W. C. Snider, civilian; R. A. Hamon, civilian; Ross D. Schermeshorn, a returned soldier with disability, and S. F. Hillier, a returned soldier, were also applicants.

When the present government came back into power, and after these advertisements were put out, it was reported to the department that there were two other returned soldiers who desired to have the opportunity of applying. The report of the inspector on the qualifications of those who had already applied had not been received, and I wrote the Civil Service Commission that it would please the department if they would consider the two additional applicants and allow them to apply, and have the inspector look into their qualifications. This was done, and among others who applied was the returned soldier whom the hon. gentleman referred to this afternoon as being an imperial soldier, having been only four or five years in Canada. On the report of the inspector as to his qualifications, approved by the commission, this soldier received the appointment certificate of the commission. When the certificate came to me, feeling that preference should be given in all cases to Canadian soldiers I took the matter up with the commission. There were Canadian soldiers applying, and my hon. friend knew that when he recommended that a young boy eighteen years of age be put in charge of this office. I received a reply from the commission that I had misinterpreted the act. They said that under the act any soldier who had served in any of the commands of the British colonies, and who afterwards came to Canada, would have the same preference as a Canadian soldier. They told me that that was the interpretation of the act. My feeling is that if that is the interpretation, then the act should be changed. Preference should be given to Canadian soldiers in all cases, and not to soldiers belonging to the allied British colonies; it is a privilege that should belong to Canadian soldiers and Canadian soldiers alone. The Civil Service Commission, however, ruled against me, and I had nothing to do but accept their ruling. I will frankly confess that if I could have found a good reason which would have justified my refusing the certificate of that soldier, which was given to him in preference to a Canadian soldier, I would have done so. But I could find no reason, because the law was against me.

Mr. McGIBBON: We thought you were more resourceful.

Mr. VENIOT: I am resourceful, in so far as it is necessary to be resourceful to do what I consider to be fair and just.

Mr. HOCKEN: Why did you not make it a bilingual position?

Mr. VENIOT: Because I knew my hon. friend opposite would raise the race cry. My hon. friend is too good a sport not to take his medicine. He will have his turn and then I shall have mine, which I will take advantage of, to come back at him. Let me go one step further. I should like the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington to explain this to the committee: How is it that when his party are in power, they do not care a snap, as this letter proves, for the returned soldier; but when they are in opposition my hon. friend is the champion of the returned soldier? We hear him to-day fighting in parliament the battles of the returned soldier, but when the occasion arose when he could have done something for the returned soldier, he was as dumb as an oyster and he did not do anything. Where is the consistency of my hon. friend? I do not think I have anything more to say on those two points; I think I have said enough just now to give my hon. friend reason to think over the position in which he has placed himself, and if any more questions come up I shall be only too glad to deal with them.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I can assure the committee and the Postmaster General that I shall not require two hours to get my thoughts into some kind of order. In regard to the Enterprise post office, to which the Postmaster General has alluded, I took up the cudgels, if I might use that word, on behalf of Cooper. The Postmaster General has corroborated what I said this afternoon in regard to Cooper. He has added to what I said. He said that the inspector, who was the same man in 1920 as in 1927, spoke of Cooper as being highly regarded in the community, but he laid considerable stress on the fact that the inspector said that Cooper did not possess the attributes possessed by Fenwick. By a peculiar line of reasoning, or logic, if I might dignify it by that term, the Postmaster General says that the inspector, by saying that Cooper does not possess the attributes which Fenwick possesses, has thereby said that Cooper does not possess the attributes necessary to fill the office. That does not follow at all. I will concede at once that Fenwick was a better qualified man than Cooper, but the records and statements of the inspector in 1920 and 1927 in regard to Cooper indicate positively that Cooper did possess all the requirements necessary to fill the position efficiently.

Mr. VENIOT: Why was he not selected?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I gave the reason and my hon. friend also gave the reason. I will give this illustration to show the Postmaster General how absolutely ridiculous what he would dignify with the name of logic is. The position of postmaster is vacant. Two men apply for the position. The inspector reports that both men are qualified. One man, however, is a university graduate; he certainly has qualifications, and his attributes are superior to those of the other man, but the other man possesses all the qualifications required to fill the position.

Mr. DUNNING: And he was a returned soldier.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Very well, take it that way if you like. The returned soldier in this case was Mr. Cooper. The inspector reports that Mr. Cooper possesses all the qualifications that are required to fill the position efficiently. Mr. Cooper's educatonal standing is not as high as that of Mr. Fenwick. Therefore the Postmaster General reasons that he does not possess the necessary attributes at all. That is contrary to the report of the inspector. The reason why Cooper was not selected in 1920 was given by the commission and I read it this afternoon. There is no need to read it again. The reason was mainly that he did not have any place in which to hold the office and consequently the preference was given to Fenwick—not because of Fenwick's superior qualifications, because both were qualified, but because Fenwick owned the place where the post office had been for twenty years and furthermore because of the fact that he had lost a son in the war and was obliged to give up farming on that account. Those were the reasons which influenced the commission in 1920.

Mr. VENIOT: But does the act not state that the preference shall be given only to a returned soldier and not a civilian who may have lost a son in the war?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It is quite true that the act does not take into consideration the fact that a civilian applicant for a position may have lost a son in the war, but that is what influenced the commission in 1920. I submit to the judgment of the committee whether or not the Civil Service Commission was doing its duty at that time. The minister says that I did not in 1920 appeal on behalf of Cooper. If I understood the minister aright, in 1920 there were three applicants for the position, namely, Fenwick, Cooper and some other person.

Mr. VENIOT. A woman, Mrs. Lockwood.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I may say very frankly that no letter was written to me in regard to the matter and I know why the request was not made. I know that by visiting the place since, in 1926 and 1927. The reason was that the general opinion of Grit, Tory and everybody else in that community was that the position should go to Fenwick because of the sympathy, rightly placed or not, which they had for him on account of his having lost a son overseas. That is the explanation in regard to that.

I take up the other matter, the matter of the Odessa appointment. The minister says that I wrote a letter asking that young Clark be appointed to the position. That is very true. I did write a letter. The minister said that I was not at all concerned at that time about relieving a returned soldier, a well-qualified man who was born in Canada and who went overseas with the Canadian forces. I want to inform the minister—and his files will show that I am correct—that the point he is endeavouring to make falls to the ground because at that time neither Frink nor Lee had applied.

Mr. VENIOT: Frink is not a returned soldier.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): No, he is not. But Lee is a returned soldier and I will mention how the thing happened.

Mr. VENIOT: What about the other returned soldiers who had applied?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The other returned soldiers, as the minister will know by looking at his files, were reported by the inspector as not being qualified, with the exception of Pooke. That is that. I want to say just why I interfered on behalf of Clark. The minister spoke about this letter requesting efficiency and then he threw his arms up in the air and said that I was willing to allow this important office to be filled by a boy of eighteen. If that applies to me, what about the minister himself? He apparently was willing to let the boy fill the office and the boy did fill the office until September 15, 1927, when Pooke took charge. Though the minister holds up his hands in holy horror at the very thought of this boy of eighteen carrying on in this office, trying to make a point out of the fact that I recommended the boy, nevertheless he is so perfectly satisfied with the boy's efficiency that he allows him to carry on in the office for months and months afterwards.

Why did I write my letter on behalf of Clark? I will give the reason. The Civil Service Commission were notified of the vacancy on July 9, 1926. Let me say that the postmaster in Odessa had for nearly a year before that date been a sick man, and this young fellow of the same name, though not his son—I do not know whether they are related in any way—had carried on and been fully responsible for the duties of the office during that year in which the postmaster was sick. After the postmaster died, young Clark still carried on, and carried on apparently with perfect satisfaction to the Post Office department and to everybody else concerned for about a year and a half.

As I said, the Civil Service Commission were notified of the vacancy on July 9, 1926, and applications were asked for in the early part of July to fill the vacancy. Quite a number of persons applied, and a date was fixed when these applications would be considered and an appointment made. Here is a list of those who applied, given in order of merit:

W. C. Snider, not a soldier.
R. A. Hamm, not a soldier.
S. W. Clark, not a soldier.

That is one, two, three, in order of merit, as reported by the district superintendent. The fourth in the list was W. J. Pooke, the man who was later appointed, an overseas man. Then came Smith, then another man by the name of Snider, then Schermeshorn and Hillier. Hillier, by the way, being from Peterborough, was shut out because they said that they were going to give the office to somebody in the locality. Up until that time, August 6—my letter was written on August 4—neither Lee nor Frink were applicants for the position. As a matter of fact, Frink was a very active politician, and pressure was brought to bear on the minister that Frink should be given a chance to apply for the position. I will remind the minister that on November 24th, which was quite a long time after my letter was sent in, the Postmaster General asked the Civil Service Commission to reopen the case and call for new applications in order to give D. O. Frink the opportunity to apply. I said at that time that if the opportunity was to be open for Mr. Frink, who was not a returned soldier, it should also be open for Melville Lee, a Canadian and a returned soldier, whose application had not gone in in the first place. When the government failed to make the appointment after the expiry of the time when the applications were to be considered, as nothing was done I went up to Odessa, which is only a few miles from my home, and made inquiries from the people there, irrespective of party—some of them applicants themselves—about the filling of the position. I venture to say that two-thirds of them said this: "Can't you let this young fellow Clark keep on? Everybody is satisfied with him. He is popular, very courteous and obliging."

Mr. FOSTER: Would the hon. member please tell us whether this Clark family were Liberals or Conservatives?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I realize, of course, that from the hon. gentleman's standpoint, if I said they were Conservatives that would condemn them, but if I said they were Liberals they would be in the proper category, in his estimation. I perfectly appreciate the fact that so far as the hon. gentleman is concerned there is only one way, as I said this afternoon, which he and others have for measuring the efficiency of a man for any position, and that is by his politics.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Now answer the question.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Having obtained the views of the community, having learned that they wanted young Clark to remain on if the government would allow him to do so, I wrote my letter to the department, which had failed to make any decision on the applications they had received—

Mr. VENIOT: I must correct my hon. friend. The department does not make the decision; it is the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well then, the Civil Service Commission. The Civil Service Commission had not made any decision up to that time. I believed that it was in the interests of that community, and that it was what the people of that community wanted, that this young man should carry on. There was only one way in which that could be done, and that was through the appointment of his father until the young man should reach the age of twenty-one. His father had had considerable experience as assistant in the post office, and was a thoroughly competent and thoroughly responsible man. That is the reason I made the recommendation. But let me point out that at that time as the file of the minister will show some of those who applied for the position and others I could mention said that this man Pooke should not be given the appointment because he was not a Canadian.

Mr. VENIOT: That is right.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is the attitude which they took. I am not taking that attitude, but I do say that when the vacancy was reopened at the request of the minister for Frink, Lee should also have been given the opportunity to apply at the same time. I say that Lee was just as competent in every respect as Pooke. He was born in Canada, and was a returned soldier with an honourable record overseas, and I do say that in my humble judgment Melville Lee should have the preference over Pooke, whom I also believe to be a good mon. But the minister is absolutely wrong when he tries to lead the committee to believe that I turned my back on Melville Lee, who was qualified, in favour of Clark or anybody else. At the time I wrote my letter, Lee was not an applicant, neither was Frink an applicant.

Mr. VENIOT: Frink was an applicant, but his application did not appear.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I know just what is in the mind of the hon. gentleman, and the fact that he did not regard him as an applicant is shown by his own letter of November 24, in which he asked the commission to reopen the matter so that Frink could be an applicant. Of course, I know what was said about Frink, that he sent an application in, and that the then Postmaster General, the Hon. Charles Murphy, had overlooked it or something of that sort, but that did not occur to him until after there was a change of government. It did not occur to Frink to put in an application before the government changed. I do not believe that he put in an application up to that time, but afterwards there was a change of government, and Frink says: "I want to apply for that job. I have been doing your dirty work around here for a long while, and I want some reward." The Postmaster General, recognizing that as a strong qualification for any applicant for a position, sent word to the Civil Service Commission, ordering them to ask for further applications so as to open the way for Mr. Frink. However, the pressure was too strong for even Mr. Frink to get the position. I am not saying that Pooke is not qualified; he is qualified. But so far as that is concerned, I say that Lee is equally well qualified. The two men were returned soldiers, the one having been born in Canada and having enlisted in Canada, the other having enlisted in England; the one having served at the front, the other having served in a clerical capacity and having never seen the front. I do feel that when the matter was open consideration should have been given to Lee as a Canadian-born returned soldier rather than to Pooke.

Mr. VENIOT: Surely my hon. friend does not want to blame the Postmaster General. He should blame the commission. He always claims the commission should make appointments; they made this appointment.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac: They made certain appointments after the minister refused to accept the appointments which they had made and intimated that he wanted someone else appointed.

Mr. VENIOT: I never intimated anything of the kind.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman, I wish to correct that right now. In no case have I ever intimated to the commission whom they should appoint.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I state, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. minister that the file will show he did mention Mr. Murphy, for instance, for Enterprise.

Mr. VENIOT: No, sir, I did not.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): You had better look the file over again.

Mr. VENIOT: I have it before me.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It will also be well for the hon. gentleman to look over the file in connection with the Ottawa post office. There is another point I wish to refer to and with respect to which I ask the hon. Postmaster General to speak this afternoon. In seeking an excuse against Cooper being given the position, he did bring up against him that he was in debt.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not; the inspector did.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I assert, Mr. Chairman, that the file will show—I copied it—that the Postmaster General himself did call attention to the fact that Cooper was in debt.

Mr. VENIOT: He called attention to the inspector's report.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It cannot be twisted around.

Mr. VENIOT: There is no quibbling over the facts.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Anyway the Postmaster General this afternoon indicated by what he said that that was one thing, along with others, that did influence him.

Mr. VENIOT: Certainly it did.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I ask the hon. gentleman if he thinks the Postmaster General should be influenced by the fact that an applicant for the position of postmaster is in debt? What does he think, we will say, about a member of parliament being in debt?

Mr. VENIOT: They are all in debt.

An hon. MEMBER: Impossible!

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What does he think about a cabinet minister being in debt?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I should like the minister to ponder over his references in regard to Cooper being in debt. I would presume that anyone who used it as an argument against a returned man that he was a couple of hundred dollars in debt, would need to be very sure of his own position. If cabinet ministers are to bring it up against respectable citizens who apply for positions in the civil service that their applications must not be considered because of the fact that they owe a little money, then I hope all cabinet ministers are not themselves in the position of owing money. I wonder if the Postmaster General ever heard tell of a Lowndes Company in Toronto?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Or a widow down in the maritime provinces by the name of Peters?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes. If, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman wishes to discuss those two points I am ready to wash his dirty linen. If he wants to discuss them, let him go a step further.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, I never had any education—

Mr. VENIOT: We are well aware of that.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): —from a Chinaman, not being accustomed to washing dirty linen. But since the hon. minister has referred to dirty linen, why, there must be something in his mind connected with himself. My query was this: Is it quite consistent for a cabinet minister, in his anxiety to get the man of his choice into a position, to bring up against a man who served in the war, a returned soldier, the fact that he was in debt to the paltry amount of $200? Does that come consistently from a cabinet minister unless his own skirts are clear in that regard? That is my question, and the minister is at liberty to go into the washtub. But it will not be my dirty linen that he will have to wash; it will be the linen he has worn on his own back, let me tell him that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. VENIOT: Let him go on.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): All right, he invites this. When I was a boy—a good many years ago now—my father took me to see a circus—something different from this.

Mr. VENIOT: Something like the one on exhibition now.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In some particulars. In going through the menagerie before entering the circus tent we saw a cage with apparently a very ferocious lion in it. He growled and howled, his mane bristled, and he pawed the bottom of the cage. I asked the keeper with trembling voice if the animal was dangerous. "No," replied the keeper, "he is not dangerous. He is an old fellow and has no teeth. He was accustomed in his more vigorous days to raising Cain, but this is only a bluff he is putting up." Now I am willing to discuss the Postmaster General's estimates with him.

Mr. POWER: There was a mistake made that day.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I might say, since my hon. friend invites it, that next to the lion's cage, by way of contrast, there was a cage of monkeys, and I saw some there looking awfully like the hon. member.

Mr. POWER: Was that in the lion's cage?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am perfectly willing, Mr. Chairman, to discuss these questions on their merits.

Mr. VENIOT: No, you are not.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, I am, absolutely. I have made my points. I want to assure the Postmaster General that I am ready to discuss these with him point by point, but he cannot roar and scare or bluff me.

Mr. VENIOT: Nobody would stoop that low.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): But if he thinks it will give him a little exercise I am quite content; it will afford the rest of us amusement. But I want him to understand that members on this side of the house do not propose to be shunted from discussing the Postmaster General's estimates by his—

Mr. VENIOT: By reading your letters.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): —by his vigorous voice, his energetic action, and so on, which are nothing more nor less than bluff. I do not use that term in any offensive sense, but simply because it expresses his attitude so aptly.

An hon. MEMBER: That is enough.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It is not for the little boy over there to tell me when I have said all I want to say. I am sorry if his supper did not agree with him. I want to make this further charge against the Postmaster General, and it can be substantiated from one end of the country to the other: he is the man who in the house this afternoon raised the racial cry.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): No, I wont sit down. Although I am a lot older than is my hon. friend over there, may I say with all due respect that he cannot make me sit down. Since the Postmaster General assumed the office which he now holds he has degraded the Post Office department of the Dominion to a level never reached before.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I rise to a point of order. No gentleman has the right to use that language in parliament.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): On the point of order I submit that the word "degraded" is used in the proper sense.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is very improper to use it in this way.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): With all deference, observing my hon. friend in the past, I do not think he is a competent judge. He is Minister of Justice, but—

Mr. LAPOINTE: I desire to have my point of order decided.

The CHAIRMAN: I really think the hon. gentleman should define the sense in which he used the word "degraded".

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I proceed to do so and I commend you, Mr. Chairman, on your wisdom. I used the word "degraded" advisedly. I repeat that the Postmaster General, since he took office, has degraded the postal service of the country, or the Post Office department,—well, the service—to a level it has never reached before in the history of the country. How?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): If the chairman tells me to withdraw the word, after I have made my explanation, I shall at once conform and withdraw it. I used the word "degraded" in this sense: that in conforming to the demands of Liberals and Liberal Progressive members of parliament and defeated candidates, in dismissing competent men by the hundred in Canada and in many cases putting less competent men in their places, he has lowered the grade—if you like it that way, although "degraded" is properly used—he has lowered the grade of efficiency of the Post Office Department in this country. Have I used the word properly, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Very well. That is once that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is wrong in his point of order. I hope he will get a lesson from it and in time come to realize that after all he is not omnipotent and that even he may make mistakes the same as others. But what have we seen in Canada since the Postmaster General's return? Look at the record on the table of the house brought down by way of returns in answer to questions. Hundreds of postmasters throughout the country dismissed. Why? Frankly stated by the hon. gentleman, because Liberal members and defeated Liberal candidates asked for their dismissal. That is his attitude, and the records will prove the correctness of my statement, that it is the first time in the history of this Dominion that we have had a Postmaster General who went to the length the hon. gentleman has gone in that regard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, ho!

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, I make that statement and I believe it is correct. I say that in that respect he has degraded the service, or put it on a lower grade than it was before, if that makes it any clearer. Now I suppose the next thing we shall hear is the Postmaster General getting up and saying, with all the fervour at his command, that his one desire since he entered the department and assumed the duties of minister, his sole desire, has been to increase the efficiency of the Post Office department.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I expect the Postmaster General will repeat that assertion.

Mr. VENIOT: It is known.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, there is a difference of opinion on that point; we will leave it at that. But I do not know that the hon. gentleman will be quite safe in taking the applause which emanates from behind him as an indication of what is really in the hearts of hon. gentlemen who sit on those benches. I do not think he has played the game squarely. I do not think he played it squarely in the case of the Enterprise post office, nor do I think that he gave the consideration which he should have given to the matter—although he took lots of time over it—so far as Odessa is concerned.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not like to be on my feet all the time but I have a right to be on my feet just as often as my hon. friend opposite. I am not surprised at the temper shown by the hon. gentleman when he found himself driven to personalities for want of an argument. It ill becomes a member of this house, no matter who he may be, to use as an argument, in defence of himself, personalities regarding the member who has contended against him. Let me say to the hon. gentleman, for his information and the information of this committee, that the reference he made to a certain widow in New Brunswick touches one of the worst cases of blackmail on the part of the husband of that widow, when he was alive, against a man in public life that Canada ever knew. And I resented it and won out. I would not be browbeaten or blackmailed. And as regards the other case to which he has referred, let me say to him that, while it was an honest debt, the attempt to collect it in the manner adopted was resented by me, and when they came down to where they should be and acted decently in the matter the debt was paid. That is what I meant when I said that if the hon. gentleman wanted to wash dirty linen I could wash it for him or, at least, for those who gave him the information.

I am not going to attempt to answer the laboured arguments made by my hon. friend in defence of the Odessa case, and that now notorious letter written by him. The letter is before the public and before the committee. The committee has heard his argument and the public no doubt will read it in the press, and they can judge for themselves whether or not this is the champion of the returned soldiers.

The hon. gentleman said that never in the history of Canada had there been a postmaster general who had degraded the office so much as I did in the matter of dismissals. My hon. friend reminds me of something I read in the press the other day about a professor going into a house of detention for poor people. He asked one of the inmates, "What do you do to put in your time?" The inmate replied, "We sit and think and sometime we only sit". If the hon. gentleman had thought for a moment on the record of his own party he never would have made the argument he has made to-night. Degrading the public service by means of the dismissal of officials! Why, it is enough to make one laugh to think that any Conservative could stand on the floor of this house and accuse any head of a department of degrading the public service any more than they degraded it when they were in power. What is the record? Let me give the record from 1911 to 1917 and may I say to my hon. friend that I did not take any time during the dinner hour to prepare this; I had it already prepared. What do we find? We find that from the first of October, 1911, to the 31st December, 1912, they dismissed 908 postmasters. That is not degrading the service. We find that from the first January, 1913, to the 30th September, 1917, they dismissed 696 postmasters. These are the gentlemen who now say that the Postmaster General has degraded the Post Office department because, forsooth, in the last two years there have been 421 changes—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VENIOT: —in the Post Office department. I use the word "changes" because I wish to place the record of these changes before the committee; I wish to dissect what our friends call wholesale political dismissals by your humble servant. I find there were 56 dismissals for shortages in accounts, abandonment of office, arrest of postmasters for stealing, for farming out post offices and so on. Some postmasters who were appointed under the Tory regime started farming out their post offices, and when I discovered that I dismissed them. Then there were 91 dismissals and changes in sites and in the interests of the service. There were 25 dismissals for political partisanship, so proved after investigation. There you have 243 out of 421 dismissals for stealing, for inefficiency, for irregularities, for absence from the Dominion and for other reasons, and in none of those dismissals is there the slightest taint of political reasons.

Mr. MANION: Might I ask a question just there? How does my hon. friend get that total? As I understand it, he said there were 56 dismissals for shortages, 91 for inefficiency and 25 for political partisanship.

Mr. VENIOT: I will give you the correct figures. There were 56 dismissals for shortages and so on, 49 for change in site.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend said 91 before.

Mr. VENIOT: No; the 91 dismissals were in the interests of the service. Then there were 47 dismissals for unsatisfactory management, which makes the total of 243.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is giving different figures now.

Mr. VENIOT: Then I added 25 who were dismissed for poltical partisanship after investigation. I was keeping the dismissals under the first four groups separate from the others, leaving the difference between 243 and 421 which I was satisfied to allow my hon. friends to parade throughout the country as political dismissals.

The reason I have so closely dissected these figures is that the Conservative press and our friends opposite do not miss an opportunity to point out that the Postmaster General lopped off the heads of 421 postmasters for political reasons. It will be remembered that on one occasion this charge was made across the floor of the house and I interjected the remark that the hon. member was not taking into account those postmasters who had been dismissed for stealing and for other irregularities. In reply to that the hon. member stated that having made that remark I should furnish the details to the house. Now I am in a position to do so; if anyone wishes to know when, why or how a particular postmaster was dismissed for stealing the public funds of the Dominion, I am prepared to give the names if the hon. gentlemen are prepared to take the responsibility.

Let me go further. There have been dismissals from the service other than among postmasters. I regret to have to say this, but I feel that I should do so in order to justify my position. I would rather keep this information secret in the files of the department, but in self-defence I must tell the committee that no less than from 90 to 100 other officials occupying high positions in the Post Office department, have been put in jail or arrested for stealing the public funds. I do not make it public when I dismiss men of that kind; I do not expose their crimes because I feel that perhaps that knowledge should be kept away from the public. But when I do that my friends opposite shout throughout the length and breadth of the country that I am lopping off the heads of these men because they are political opponents. In that respect the record of the Post Office department is very dark, so much so that when I took charge and ascertained these facts we had to institute a secret service in order to protect the revenues of the Dominion, and also to protect these men who are placed in the way of temptation. Everyone knows that there is a great temptation in the handling of public money, and there is not a department of the government which handles a greater amount of public money passing through so many hands. The money handled by the Post Office department amounts to about $37,000,000 a year. This secret service had to be inaugurated in order to eliminate this evil if possible, and it is because of the work we have done in this direction—because of the fact that we try not to be too hard on those who have fallen by the way in order to give them an opportunity of retracing their steps and doing better in the future, without exposing them to public scorn, and instead of putting them in prison where perhaps they deserve to be—that within the last year or two we have been able to cut down the number of thefts and irregularities in the postal service.

As I said a few moments ago, I feel that it might have been better not to have made this statement, but in justice to myself and to the department over which I have the honour to preside I felt I should lay the case before the members of this house in order that they might know exactly what these changes and these dismissals mean.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask a question? I do not make this suggestion in a critical sense, but does not the minister think he is really reflecting on all those people who have been dismissed, since all of them could not have been dismissed for stealing?

Mr. VENIOT: I gave the figures. Certainly it was not my intention to reflect on all those who have been dismissed, as will be readily understood from the fact that I gave the number of dismissals for those causes.

Mr. McGIBBON: But my point is that the public will not be able to distinguish, and every man who has been dismissed will be under suspicion.

Mr. VENIOT: I cannot help that, but if it would help matters at all I will give the names of the persons dismissed for other reasons. That might help out, because certainly it is not my intention to reflect on those people at all.

Mr. ROWE: Just in connection with the point raised a moment ago, and in view of the fact that the Postmaster General has invited questions regarding any particular postmasters and why they were dismissed, I would ask if the postmaster of the town of Orangeville was included in the list of those dismissed for irregularities of any description, or whether his dismissal was included in that larger number in connection with which the minister has made no explanation at all?

Mr. MANION: Before that question is answered, might I offer a suggestion? A few weeks ago the minister made a statement to the house to the effect that a great many of these postmasters were dismissed because of shortages in their accounts, and I made the suggestion that a further statement should be made to clear the names of those who were not dismissed for that cause. Since the direct question has been asked, and the Postmaster General has suggested that he might go further with his list, I say that I do not think he should do that. I do not think he has justified the remark he made some weeks ago, a remark which drew from me the request of further explanation. I cannot give the page in Hansard, as I do not remember the date, but some weeks ago he gave the impression to the house that a much larger proportion than 56 out of 421 had been dismissed for shortages. That was the impression one would naturally draw from his remarks at that time. I suggested then that he should clear those who had their names impugned by that remark. If fifty-six men or women did get in the unfortunate position of being short in their cash, I do not believe it is the duty of the Postmaster General or any of us in this house to name those people and put upon them the brand of a thief. If a man has made a mistake—I doubt if there is any man in this house who has not made a mistake in some way—then it is not the duty of this house to put him down in such position that he cannot get up. Therefore, though I suggest that the minister has not justified the remark that he made, I think he has gone quite far enough with his list.

I took the figures down when he gave them first, but for some reason the minister read a different list the second time. I took the figure as 172, taking the minister's own figure of 243 who were dismissed for shortages, inefficiency, political partisanship after investigation, or for some other reason, it still leaves 200 who were dismissed for unknown reasons, which I assume would be entirely political reasons.

An hon. MEMBER: Was that in 1911?

Mr. MANION: I was not here in 1911; I think I was over there then.

Mr. DUNNING: The minister did not include those dismissed for political partisanship after investigation.

Mr. VENIOT: Will the hon. gentleman permit me to answer the question I was asked, and then I will answer his?

Mr. MANION: I was suggesting that the question should not be answered any more than the other one should.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman asked me about the Orangeville postmaster.

Mr. ROWE: I was merely asking if the Orangeville dismissal was included in those dismissed on account of irregularities.

Mr. VENIOT: Perhaps you would like to know why the dismissal took place?

Mr. ROWE: Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: Come over here and look at it yourself. It is not included among those dismissed for irregularities, but I want you to look at it.

Mr. ROWE: I would be glad to hear the minister give the reason.

Mr. VENIOT: Reported by the inspector as being inefficient.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): When the minister was speaking in regard to Cooper of the Enterprise post office, it did not occur to me that at that time the Enterprise post office was not in the constituency which I represent. The minister asked me why I did not bestir myself on behalf of Cooper at that time.

Mr. MANION: I should like to bring up a case with which I think the Postmaster General will be familiar. I put some questions on the order paper some time ago regarding this case, which appears to be an unjust discrimination. The Postmaster General may have an explanation to offer—there are always two sides to every story—and I should like to hear his explanation. The questions were answered on April 30th, and I will give the questions and answers, and then base my case upon that. The first question I asked was, "What is the name of the postmaster at the village of Brigden, Ontario," and the answer was, "William Howard MacDonald." The second question was, "When was he appointed?" and the answer, "15th September, 1927." "Is he a returned soldier?" Answer, "No." "If not, did any returned soldiers apply for this position?" Answer, "Yes." "Was the appointee recommended by the Civil Service Commission as their first choice?" Answer, "No." There is a straight question and a straight answer. On May 3rd I asked two more questions, which I shall read. The first question was:

Regarding the appointment of William MacDonald to the postmastership of Bridgen, Ontario, why was the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission not favoured?

The answer given by Mr. Veniot at that time was:

Because it was considered that the appointment of the applicant first selected by the Civil Service Commission would not be in the best interest of the public service.

The second question was, "Who did the Civil Service Commission recommend for this position?" and the answer was, "First, John William Such; second, William Howard MacDonald." William Howard MacDonald was the appointee, although he was the second recommendation of the Civil Service Commission. According to my information—I am subject to correction, although I do not think my facts are incorrect; the reasons may be different from those which I shall give, but I think the facts are correct—this post office became vacant through the death of the previous holder of the position. Applications were called for, and among the applicants were Mr. Such and Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. J. W. Such was a returned soldier who had been wounded overseas. I think he had a wife and three children, but at least three if not four people were dependent upon him. It is true that he was associated with a creamery business, and was, on the surface, earning good money. He gave reasons in his application why he required this position. He was recommended by the Civil Service Commission as their first choice, and MacDonald, who got the position, was recommended as their second choice. According to my information, MacDonald had not served in the forces. He had a good financial association with his father—all the facts do not come absolutely home to me—or with some company. He had a good position and in every way was pretty much on the same financial basis as was Such. But Such, although recommended by the Civil Service Commission, was thrown aside; the Postmaster General refused to accept him, and the second choice of the Civil Service Commission was then appointed. This is certainly a case for explanation, and I should like to have the minister give his reasons.

Mr. VENIOT: Regarding the Brigden matter, I may say that the statements made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat are about correct. This position was vacant and Such and MacDonald were the applicants. When the matter came before the Civil Service Commission inspectors were sent out to investigate the qualifications of these applicants and they made their report, which was submitted to the department. On examining the report I found that Mr. Such had come to Canada four or five years ago, having served in the British forces overseas. The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington would, I suppose, have agreed with me if for that reason I had turned Mr. Such down. But that was not the reason. Investigation proved that Mr. Such, on arriving in Canada, was sufficiently well-fixed financially to purchase a one-third interest in a cheese and butter factory; that he became manager of it, and that he was drawing a salary of $2,500 and one-third of the dividends. The office that was vacant carried a salary of $960 a year and neither Mr. Such nor anybody else could make me believe that he would give up a salary of $2,500 a year to take up a position that paid only $960 a year.

I inquired into the matter and I sent for Mr. Such. I had Mr. Such come to my office and in the presence of the president of the soldiers' legion I fully discussed the matter with Mr. Such. Mr. Such asked me whether he would be allowed to carry on the cheese and butter business and at the same time run the post office, and I said no. I asked Mr. Such whether it was not true that he intended to farm out this office and he admitted to me that in anticipation of getting the office he had engaged a young lady at $500 a year and that he would pocket the $460. I then told Mr. Such that under those circumstances he could not get the office and that I would refuse to accept the certificate of the commission. In the presence of the president of the soldiers' legion, who is resident in Ottawa, we discussed the matter fully. I said to Mr. Such: If you leave the business altogether and give up your interest in it as manager and the salary of $2,500, you may retain your interest in the business so far as your capital is concerned, but you will have to give your full time to the post office. Mr. Such told me then that he would do that, and after further consideration and investigation I received a letter from the president of the soldiers' legion asking me how it was that I still refused to accept the certificate on behalf of Mr. Such. I accordingly wrote him this letter dated October 14, 1927:

J. C. G. HERWIG, Esq.,
Canadian Legion of the B.E.S.L.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,

I am in receipt of yours of the 30th ultimo re the postmastership at Brigden and note your inquiry touching the refusal by me to accept the Civil Service Commission certificate in favour of Mr. Such.

If I am not mistaken, you were present in my office when this matter was discussed between Mr. Such and myself, and I distinctly told him I would not consent to any certificate in favour of a returned soldier who, in my opinion, was applying for a post office position in order to farm it out to someone else, and make a profit on the same. It is true that Mr. Such stated that he would retire from the position he now holds and which brings him about $2,500 and give his attention to the postmastership which would only bring him $960, and for which he admitted he had to employ an assistant which would cost him $500. It is also true that Mr. Such set forth in a letter which he forwarded to me later that he is prepared to do this. Mr. Such's letter as well as his interview with me did not convince me that he was acting in good faith. It was impossible for me to believe that Mr. Such was in earnest in applying for this position which would only bring him in after he had farmed it out, the meagre sum of some $400. If I mistake not, I have already discussed with you that I consider it to be an abuse of the preference given to returned soldiers and if ever there was an indication of abuse of this preference, I am convinced that it is to be found in the case of Mr. Such.

Those are the facts. That is the reason why I refused to accept the certificate.

Mr. MANION: I have a copy of the letter which the Postmaster General wrote and which he just quoted. The letter is as he read it. I did not think of course that he would do this, but he might have read and I am going to read some of the letters which preceded it. The letter which he read was to Mr. Herwig, of the war veterans, and it was dated October 14, 1927. The letter from which I am going to read is one written to the Postmaster General by Mr. Such, and in that he disposes of all the arguments which the Postmaster General raised against his getting the position. I do not wish to read the whole letter although I could easily do so, because it would only be cluttering up Hansard. Let me read a couple of paragraphs. The letter states:

May I say that, in the event of my appointment, I would sever active connection with the creamery as soon as it is possible to break in a new man to take over my work. I should give personal supervision to the post office devoting sufficient time to the duties. By this I mean such time as might be required by your department.

The reason for applying for this position is that my disability (spinal) has interfered with my present rather strenuous occupation of butter maker to such an extent that I must give it up as soon as conveniently possible and establish myself in some other.

Mr. VENIOT: The report on Mr. Such does not show that he is a disability man, except that he claims himself that he is a disability man, but he has no medical certificate to show that.

Mr. MANION: I have not any evidence on that, although I rather understood from the correspondence that he was a pensioner and, if he is a pensioner, he is a disability man. At any rate the Postmaster General does not dispute the fact that he is a returned man. That is the letter of Mr. Such and it absolutely disposes of the arguments later put forward by the Postmaster General in the letter which he wrote. Some hon. gentlemen over there shake their heads. The objection which the Postmaster General made to Mr. Such in his letter to Mr. Herwig, which he read a moment ago, was that Mr. Such had a position and therefore he should not get this one. But Mr. Such says that he cannot carry out the duties of that position and he is ready to give it up and to devote as much time to the post office as the department demands.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What is the date of Mr. Such's letter?

Mr. MANION: July 13, 1927, or three months before the letter written by the Postmaster General.

Mr. VENIOT: My letter was written after that.

Mr. MANION: Yes, but I am showing by Mr. Such's letter, which was written previously, that he disposes of the arguments advanced by the Postmaster General in his letter to Mr. Herwig.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend forgets that on the occasion of the interview with the Postmaster General, the man expressed his intention of farming out the work of the post office.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Such absolutely denies that, and Mr. Herwig, who was present at the interview, does not agree with the minister. Mr. Herwig writes on September 30, 1927, about two months and a half after the letter which I have just quoted. He signs himself "For Acting Superintendent, Service Bureau, Canadian Legion of the B.E.S.L.", and he writes to the Postmaster General. Perhaps I had better read the whole of this letter, although there is only one fairly long paragraph that deals with the matter. He says:

We have just been informed that a Mr. H. MacDonald has been appointed postmaster at Brigden, Ont., and that the ex-service applicant, J. W. Such, the selection of the Civil Service Commission, has been rejected.

You may remember that Mr. Such and an officer of this organization interviewed you some time ago, when you indicated that you were contemplating his rejection. It was explained to you that Mr. Such was a disabled ex-service man who found it necessary to change his occupation on account of his war disability.

This is not Mr. Such's statement, but Mr. Herwig's statement.

From your demeanour, it was gathered that your objection to his appointment as one already employed and receiving a salary had been satisfactorily met. At your request a letter was sent you indicating what Mr. Such was prepared to do in the event of receiving the appointment.

Mr. VENIOT: That is the letter which he wrote to the Postmaster General and from which I have just quoted.

Mr. MANION: It goes on:

It was believed that every requirement and objection raised by you had been fully covered therein. It is with surprise, therefore, that we learn of the appointment of Mr. MacDonald, non O.A.S.—

I suppose that means overseas service, but I am not sure:

—who is in charge of his father's flourishing general store—

This is Mr. MacDonald who got the appointment:

—and is certainly in receipt of a good income. In view of what has taken place, we are forced to conclude that the objections which you previously raised regarding Mr. Such no longer apply, and that the reason for his rejection must be entirely new. May we be favoured with the precise reason for the rejection of Mr. Such.

Yours truly,

J. C. G. HERWIG.

The Postmaster General was out of the city at the time the letter was received, but a reply was sent through his secretary, and on October 14, two weeks later, the Postmaster General wrote, repeating the reasons why he did not accept from the civil service commission their recommendation of Mr. Such. Another letter which I have here, written by Mr. Herwig to Mr. Such, and dated January 21, 1928, demonstrates conclusively that Mr. Herwig was not satisfied with the reasons given by the Postmaster General for the rejection of the recommendation of Mr. Such by the Civil Service Commission. He says:

Dear Comrade Such:

I have your letter of the 2nd, regarding your rejection to the Postmastership at Brigden.

I am enclosing letters which I think may be of importance to you, and if you believe there are others, I should be glad to forward you copies. It is a pity that you did not advise me before that you had disposed of your business, because it made it very difficult for me to carry the matter any further with the P.M.G. However, it is hoped that we may be able to refer the matter of rejections to a parliamentary committee, which is to be appointed this year and your case will be brought forward as evidence.

That is the last letter of the correspondence which I have. What I have read shows the pity of this case. Mr. Such had actually disposed of his business in the creamery.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. MANION: I do not know the facts myself, but I do not see how the Postmaster General knows them any better than I do.

Mr. VENIOT: I made inquiries.

Mr. MANION: The minister says he made inquiries. The statement of Mr. Herwig, which I have just quoted, is that Mr. Such had disposed of his business. Mr. Such also makes some statement to the effect that he had disposed of his business. He still retained some interest in it, but he had disposed of it as his occupation, which he says he was not fit to carry on, and he had become prepared to become postmaster. Not only that, but according to his own statement to me he had gone further and rented a building for the purpose of the post office, and he was very much perturbed about it afterwards. Here is the case of a man who was in no better financial position, according to these letters which I have read, than the man who was given the position. One was a returned soldier, with a wife and children. It says three dependents; I said four; I thought it was the wife and three children, but evidently the three includes the wife. An hon. member suggests that the wife counts for two; I am not sure if that is not correct. He has three dependents at any rate to support, while the other man has none. One is a returned soldier, having fought with the British army, and the other is not a returned soldier at all. One is fairly on in years, getting into middle life, possibly, and the other is a young man with no responsibilities, and good connections, as is stated by Mr. Herwig. Certainly I do not find any justification so far for the action of the Postmaster General for refusing this man the position. When the Postmaster General was replying to the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington he stated positively that he preferred to favour the returned soldier. I am one of those, I do not mind saying so frankly, who believe that other people in this country besides returned soldiers have some rights. I believe that the boys who were too young to go to the war have some rights. I believe that the boys who were too young to go to the war have some rights in our country. A young man of twenty-nine to-day could not ordinarily have gone to the front, nor could any young man who is now between eighteen and twenty-nine years of age, and I say frankly that these young men have some rights in our country. At the same time here is a case where a young man did go to the front, and where the other man could have gone and did not—I do not know that I should state that; possibly he was too young to go, but at all events there is one reference here to the fact that he could have gone and did not. I do not know what his age is. Does the Postmaster General know how old he is?

[Mr Manion.]

Mr. VENIOT: I know that MacDonald enlisted and was put in class C, and was retained in Canada.

Mr. MANION: The other man did go overseas?

Mr. VENIOT: He was there. He was not a Canadian soldier.

Mr. MANION: There were plenty of men overseas who were not Canadian soldiers. But if a young man had served even in the French army, had come back wounded and had been honourably discharged, and another man who was old enough to go had not gone; and if the soldier in the French army had dependents and the other had none, I say that the soldier in the French army should get the preference, in spite of what I said a moment ago. This young man had served in the British army, and been wounded, and he had a family to support. True, he had a position, but so had the other. But this man who had served overseas and was recommended as first choice by the commission was sidetracked, and the other man was given the position. I cannot see that there was any justification for such action, and I am placing such action entirely on political grounds, if you will. Though I do not know, this young man states that he took no part in the last election, that nobody knew how he voted, so I do not think in his case there was politics. I admit that some of the letters in this file were written by Conservatives, but that should not make any difference in a case of this sort. I do not wish to delay the committee any longer, but I repeat that in the statement given so far by the Postmaster General he has not justified the action which he took, and unless he can give some better justification than he has, I do not think he would be supported by any fairminded person in the action which he took in regard to this man Such.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): As to what the Postmaster General said before recess with regard to Mr. Hall in the Ottawa post office—

Mr. VENIOT: May I draw the attention of the committee to this fact? I do not want to stop discussion, but the item we are now considering is the inside service of the Post Office department. We have been discussing the outside service all along, and I suggest that there will be plenty of time to discuss the outside service when we reach that item.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Mr. Hall is in the inside service.

Mr. VENIOT: He is in the outside service.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): This discussion was proper before recess, and it should be proper now. Mr. Hall has been twenty years in the registration branch of the Ottawa post office. All of a sudden it occurs to someone that a bilinguist is necessary in that position. I have made some inquiries with regard to the length of time this office has been open, and I find that Mr. Wills was principal clerk in that department for fifteen years. He was followed by Mr. Cherry, as principal clerk, for ten years, and then by Mr. Hall, principal clerk, for some nineteen months. In other words, for twenty-six years and seven months that position did not require a bilinguist, and I claim that there is no more need for a bilinguist now than there has been at any time during the last twenty-five years. Mr. Hall is well qualified to hold this position. He got this position in March, 1928, as per Gazette. He has had twenty years service in the registration branch. He was assistant chief clerk to Mr. Cherry for ten years, and has acted for nineteen months as principal clerk. Something was said before recess with regard to a Mr. Larue who should have been appointed to that position. He had no right whatever to it. He was in charge of the letter carriers' branch, and was appointed superintendent over the letter carriers of the city of Ottawa; then he got another promotion as superintendent over incoming mail. His position as superintendent of letter carriers was filled by Mr. Valiquette, who acted as his assistant. My contention is that Mr. Hall was efficient and quite capable of doing the work. He acted as assistant for five years, and as principal clerk for nineteen months. He tried the departmental examination last fall and got 99 per cent, and at another examination in April he got 97 per cent. There is no reason why Mr. Hall should not be left in that position. He has under him an assistant, a French-Canadian by the name of LeBlanc, to whom I have already referred, who was there when he left. There is no justification whatever for Mr. Hall being removed. I want to know from the Postmaster General if Mr. Hall is going to get remuneration as principal clerk for the nineteen months he so acted?

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Hall will get exactly the salary he is entitled to.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): For the months he was acting?

Mr. VENIOT: He cannot be kept out of anything that the law provides for in his case.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Was there any complaint as to his efficiency in those nineteen months?

Mr. VENIOT: No. But since the hon. gentleman has brought the matter up, I may tell him that the Civil Service Commission were asked to make a ruling in December 1926, and they did nothing until March 1928. That is how Mr. Hall reached the position of acting assistant, or acting clerk, whatever it may be, not because he was appointed or kept there by the department, but because we were awaiting the decision of the commission in making the appointment. It was said this afternoon that they had made a thorough investigation. If so, it never was reported to the officials of the Post Office department, where the report should have gone, and for eighteen months the commission delayed action in this matter.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Is there an employee in the registration branch, a bilinguist, who is able to qualify in the departmental examinations as Mr. Hall was?

Mr. VENIOT: Any official now employed in the service has a right to apply for any promotion, and if he can qualify under the terms of the rating board he is entitled to it. An ordinary postal clerk can apply for that promotion.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Are the departmental examinations no good?

Mr. VENIOT: They are carried out by the rating board.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Twice Hall had 99 and 97 per cent.

Mr. VENIOT: There are case examinations every year, and when a promotion is open the rating board examines the case examinations for a period of years and rate their men accordingly, and also give them a verbal examination. At times when the rating is very, very close, and it is difficult to distinguish which is the superior candidate, a rating examination is sometimes held.

Mr. ROWE: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the Postmaster General sent me over the report to which he referred. I have perused it, and it is clear that there was nothing corrupt in the post office at Orangeville; the substance of the report may be stated in the one word, "inefficiency." The deputy was then appointed postmaster. Is not that right?

Mr. VENIOT: I will get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. ROWE: He was the deputy I believe The late postmaster at Orangeville had filled the position since 1912, and for sixteen years there was not one word of criticism from any of the post office inspectors. Indeed, on each and every occasion that his office was inspected he had been complimented until he felt that he had the most up-to-date establishment in the province. Nor was there any criticism from the patrons. Then after these long years of service he was given six hours' warning and dismissed. Even the inspector himself expressed regret at Mr. Harshaw's dismissal. To my mind the so-called inefficiency is really another term for "Conservative inclinations." In that district it is very hard to find a Liberal, and I feel satisfied that after this it will be still harder to find any.

Mr. VENIOT: You should not complain if that is the case.

Mr. ROWE: I do not. I thank the Postmaster General for keeping up the good work. So far as the new appointee is concerned, I have reason to believe that he will try to maintain the prestige of the postal department and of the government, but he will find it very difficult work in that district. I may say that the late postmaster had served the town very well; in addition to being postmaster he had rural route No. 1, he had also the work of looking after the letter boxes in Orangeville under separate contracts. These contracts were immediately discontinued when he was relieved of the postmastership. I think he must have been a reasonably good servant, for there was never the slightest dissatisfaction from his patrons or from the department's inspector. I may add that the late postmaster in the 1925 election was alert enought, notwithstanding his age, to assume the duties of his deputy in order to permit him to act as returning officer. He did practically all the work of the returning officer, Mr. Parks, Mr. Hay's father-in-law, in addition to his duties as postmaster. So that if there is any question about political sevices rendered, I think that Mr. Harshaw will probably stand on equal ground with the new appointee. Mr. Harshaw had held three responsible contracts for sixteen years without a word of criticism until he was dimissed, without any explanation, on the ground of inefficiency.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I suggest that the chair bring the discussion down to the question at issue. The details in regard to the various post offices are found on page 65, while the details of the vote under discussion appear on page 96. I think it would be well for the committee to confine itself to the particular vote before the chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): The point is well taken. The hon. member would carry out well the duties of chairman.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I wish to direct the attention of the Postmaster General to page 96, with reference to minimum salaries, which I think are altogether too low. We find an office boy—who I assume must be over sixteen, because the government would not employ anyone who could not work in factories —getting only $40 a month. We find truckmen, doing manual labour, and probably married, receiving $80 a month. Further down we find messengers, most of whom I suppose are married, getting $65 as a minimum, and further on typists, and clerks of grade one drawing the same pay, $65. While I am perfectly satisfied with the salaries that are paid the higher officials—I suppose we must call $40 a month wages—it seems to me that these amounts paid to the class of workers I have mentioned are too small. In view of the fact that the Post Office department has had a surplus, I suggest that the Postmaster General increase these minimum wages by five or ten dollars a month. These employees cannot exist on the wages they receive.

Mr. VENIOT: The Postmaster General is guided entirely by the Civil Service Commission in the matter of salaries.

Mr ADSHEAD: What are they guided by?

Mr. VENIOT: "Office boy" is a new creation; the position is for boys up to eighteen. When they pass their civil service examination they are graded and made permanent, entering another class and getting a higher salary.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does the minister think that even a boy of eighteen can maintain himself on $1.50 a day?

Mr. VENIOT: It is not what I think; it is what they allow me to do. I agree that it is not enough, but the commission classify them and they have a right under the law to fix the salaries under these classifications.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Cannot you recommend that the salaries be raised?

Mr. VENIOT: I have this year recommended that salaries in the Post Office department be raised, and my recommendations have been turned down by the commission.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Can the minister not recommend that the minimum salaries anyway be raised?

Mr. VENIOT: It is hardly worth my while doing so if they turn me down all the time.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Better turn them down, then.

Mr. McGIBBON: In view of the Postmaster General's last remarks, which drew sympathy and almost tears from some on this side of the house, there is one thing we must admit: the Postmaster General has brought a new atmosphere into that side of the house, and while I personally do not agree with his methods I recognize his frankness and courage. In that way he differs in a respectable degree from the rest of the cabinet. As the discussion of the afternoon and evening has been proceeding along the lines of the outside service, possibly we might continue until we can get some more information. I want to ask the Postmaster General for the particulars of the dismissal of the postmaster at Rathburn, Ontario.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): I must call the hon. member's attention to the fact that the discussion of the outside service was allowed only until such time as the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Adshead) raised a point of order. I then ruled the discussion out of order. I must ask the hon. member to defer consideration of the Rathburn post office until we reach an item under which it may be discussed.

Mr. McGIBBON: I may be technically out of order, but every speaker, both this afternoon and this evening, has done the same. I think the ruling is rather arbitrary. You will not get anywhere with it. I am not blaming the minister—

Mr. VENIOT: I have not the information here.

Item agreed to.

Outside service—salaries and allowances, including amount required to provide for salaries, reclassification, revision, promotions and increases which may be authorized by the Civil Service Commission, $16,955,934.40.

Mail service, including mail service by air, $15,080,000.

Miscellaneous, including Lucien Pacaud, Secretary of the High Commissioner's office, as the representative of the Canadian government on the Pacific Cable Board, at $1,500; and $5,000 for the payment of compassionate allowances to employees injured while in the performance of their duties, or to dependents of employees killed while on duty, such payment to be made only on the specific authority of the governor in council, $1,126,175.

Yukon Territory, $150,000.

Mr. MANION: This is a rather large item and perhaps the minister will explain it. The first vote calls for salaries and allowances including amount required to provide for salaries, reclassification, revision, promotions and increases which may be authorized by the Civil Service Commission. According to the information which I have received, as to one such reclassification at any rate—the reclassification of carriers, I believe—the Civil Service Commission has refused the increase. May I have an explanation as to what reclassifications there have been and what suggestions are accepted?

Mr. VENIOT: There are four principal items included in this vote. The item for salaries shows an increase of $428,940, of which $187,620 is due to statutory increases, approved by the Civil Service Commission, and the balance, $241,320, to additional assistance, chiefly letter carriers and postal clerks, required to handle an increased volume of mail and to provide for improved postal facilities afforded the public. The increased vote will be offset by a corresponding increase in postal revenue. The other item for mail service, under the first vote, shows an increase of $425,000, of which $100,000 is for mail service by railway and $325,000 for mail service by air and land conveyance, including rural mail delivery. The miscellaneous item is the same as last year, as is also that of the Yukon.

Mr. MANION: I did not hear the minister explain what reclassification has been accepted by the Civil Service Commission. This item provides for an increase and I would like to know what reclassification has been accepted by the commission?

Mr. VENIOT: For instance, we are asked at different times to inaugurate carrier delivery in different towns and cities, and we usually accede to such requests. We have done so on several occasions this year, which necessitates the employment of a considerable number of new letter carriers who, of course, come under the regular classification of the Civil Service Commission and are appointed by the commission.

Mr. MANION: But has any entire class been given a reclassification?

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. HEAPS: Under this item I should like to make a plea on behalf of the mail carriers and the other men who handle the mails. At present they receive approximately from $1,000 to $1,500 per year, and I understand that the Civil Service Commission have refused to grant the reclassification which the Postmaster General requested. To-night we heard the Postmaster General say that several employees of the government have been imprisoned for theft and similar crimes, and while he was making that statement I wondered whether it was not a fact that some of these men were compelled to steal because of the low wages they were receiving. In the postal service we expect men to be of good character, able to meet and handle the public, and we offer such people the magnificent sum of about $90 a month as an incentive to enter the service. It may be all right for the minister to say that the Civil Service Commission have not acceeded to his request, but I think that parliament should in some way express its opinion on this question. I think we all desire to give the men employed in the postal service a salary which will at least guarantee them a decent standard of living. Surely if the Civil Service Commission are not anxious to give these men that to which they are entitled it would be a simple matter to amend the Civil Service Act in order to guarantee them a decent minimum wage. There is nothing to prevent the Postmaster General from doing that, and I think he would have the support of members on all sides of the house. No member of this house, remembering the responsibility which rests on employees of the postal department, can say that they receive adequate remuneration for the services they render. I think even the Civil Service Commission would take cognizance of the opinion of this house if it were supported by all parties. I maintain that these men are entitled to a decent standard of living, but I believe the labourers employed in many of the large cities in Canada receive higher wages than the postal workers employed by the government. I do not see why that should be the case, and I wish the Postmaster General would take this opportunity of expressing his opinion on this question so that the Civil Service Commission might know his feelings in the matter. Then, if the Civil Service Commission will not give these men that which ensure to them the standard of living to which they are entitled, I hope parliament will take such action as is necessary to amend the Civil Service Act by including in it a minimum wage which shall be paid these men who enter the service.

Mr. VENIOT: Would the hon. gentleman give us an idea of what he considers a minimum wage?

Mr. HEAPS: I woull give them the minimum wage which the city of Winnipeg give its permanent labourers, approximately $120 a month.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to ask the Postmaster General if this has anything to do with the Civil Service Act at all. Under that act have the Civil Service Commission the power to set these salaries? Surely that rests with the Postmaster General.

Mr. VENIOT: Parliament delegated that power to the Civil Service Commission, and they are exercising it. If it is desired to alter that provision it will be necessary to change the act.

Mr. CAMPBELL: But the Postmaster General must bring down his estimates to provide the necessary money.

Mr. MANION: May I ask the Postmaster General if it is true that he did recommend an increase in salaries to the Civil Service Commission, who refused his recommendation? The Postmaster General nods his head. Then I would like to endorse the statements made by the hon. member for North Winnipeg, because largely these are trustworthy men, who must do a good deal of confidential work; they carry registered mail and parcels of all kinds and are expected to be honest men. While it is no particular compliment that a man should remain honest, at the same time we should not make that more difficult than is necessary. A man working for $90 a month, with a wife and family to support, has a difficult time. The Postmaster General has stated that he recommended an increase in these salaries; might I ask what increase he recommended?

Mr. VENIOT: I just forget, but I will try to give the answer in this way: The present minimum for letter carriers is $1,080 and the maximum $1,500. In addition to that they are given two uniforms a year.

Mr. BENNETT: And boots and hats.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes. That means about another $100.

Mr. HEAPS: Would the Postmaster General also tell us what is taken off?

Mr. VENIOT: Taken off for what?

Mr. HEAPS: Superannuation.

Mr. VENIOT: Surely they are entitled to pay something for superannuation if they want the benefit of it. I believe 5 per cent of their salary is taken off for that purpose. If I remember correctly we recommended that the maximum be $1,680 and the minimum $1,080. My deputy informs me that we recommended that the minimum of $1,080 be increased by $120, but that request was refused. The minimum for postal clerks is $1,080 and the maximum $1,680, while the minimum for railway mail clerks is $1,080 and the maximum $1,740. We also recommended that the railway mail clerks be reclassified, increasing their minimum and maximum, but that was not done.

Mr. MANION: The Postmaster General having stated to this house that after proper consideration he has recommended that the salaries of all classes be increased, certainly it would appear to me that it is about time parliament had something to say in the matter. I think parliament would be justified, under the circumstances as pointed out by the Postmaster General, in taking it upon itself to pass some sort of act whereby the government in power, supported by the parliament of Canada, could increase the wages of these men.

Mr. VENIOT: The right of governor in council.

Mr. MANION: Yes, probably the right of governor in council; I have not thought that out. At any rate some means should be taken, subject of course to the approval of parliament, whereby the men who are getting the minimum should be given a better wage. One thousand and eighty dollars is $90 a month, and $90 a month is not sufficient for these men to live decently on and support their families. I know practically every postal carrier in my city. They are a very fine group of young men, many of them returned soldiers, and I know they are above reproach. They are decent, clean chaps who are anxious to make a decent, clean living. The cost of living in the north country is much higher than it is in the east, and for that reason I should like to speak strongly on their behalf. I would ask the minister whether there is any difference between the wages paid in the western country and those paid in the east, such as in Toronto or Ottawa?

Mr. VENIOT: It is the same all over.

Mr. MANION: While I believe that they should all get increases, I submit that living is higher in northern Ontario—I cannot speak with equal knowledge regarding the western prairie provinces, but I believe the same applies—the difference running anywhere from ten to twenty-five and in some cases fifty per cent above the cost of living in the cities of eastern Ontario. In some sections of the east rents are lower, and various other expenses are much less than in our part of the country. I believe all these men should get an increase, and I think the Postmaster General would be well advised, and would get the support of the whole house, if he brought in supplementary estimates to provide for increased salaries for these men.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I want to congratulate the Postmaster General on making the recommendation for an increased salary to these officials about whom he has spoken. I have had occasion to learn something of the work done at one point in this country, and I do not think there is a finer class of men working for the government than those in our postal service. In saying that I am not saying one word against those who work in other services. I have been convinced for a long time that the salaries paid to the postal clerks are not sufficient for the work they do. I want to say here, Mr. Chairman, as a member of this house, that if on the suggestion of the Postmaster General, which carries with it the authority of the government, there was a recommendation for an increase in salary to this class of worthy servants and the Civil Service Commission turned it down, something is wrong with our system. The sooner we recognize that fact and change the system, the better for all concerned. Something should be done as soon as possible to remedy that condition of affairs, and to see that these men and women are paid adequate salaries for the services they perform.

Mr. McGIBBON: In the case of employees of the department who have been paying into the superannuation fund for years, and who for one cause or another resign to enter some other business where possibly the prospective remuneration is greater, do they then receive the amount they have paid in?

Mr. VENIOT: If they withdraw voluntarily from the service after being in a certain number of years, they would be entitled to the amount they paid in, but they could not expect to get any more than that.

Mr. McGIBBON: I did not know that was the case.

Mr. FRASER: The Postmaster General has stated definitely that the Civil Service Commission refused his recommendation for an increase in salary. Could he tell us what grounds they submitted for that refusal?

Mr. VENIOT: No reasons were given—simply a notice that they had taken the matter into consideration and had reached that conclusion. I have not the letter here now, but I placed it on the table a week ago.

Mr. LADNER: I happened to be the one who asked the Postmaster General to make a return of the recommendation and the correspondence. I have sent for the correspondence, but I have an idea in my mind—it may be incorrect—that the Postmaster General did make a recommendation for an increase, but that in some way or another in asking for an increase in one way he was pulling it back in another.

Mr. VENIOT: Oh, no.

Mr. LADNER: Will the Postmaster General say that he unqualifiedly and definitely made a specific recommendation to the Civil Service Commission and received a negative reply without any explanation whatsoever?

Mr. VENIOT: I made the recommendation in the only way it could be made, namely, for a reclassification, and the reclassification would bring about the increases that were required.

Mr. BENNETT: That is altogether different.

Mr. LADNER: I have the correspondence now, but I will allow some other member to ask questions while I examine this file.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I should like to ask the minister the weight each letter carrier should have to carry. I have seen postmen in my own city carrying 100 and 120 pounds, and they should not have to carry a weight of that sort. I have taken this matter up with the postmaster in the city and have applied to the department to set some maximum weight above which the postmen should not be asked to carry. I do not know why, but the department seems to be very hesitant about setting a maximum weight. The postmaster in the city told me that he believed that 35 pounds was a very fair weight, beyond which he would not go. In discussing it further, he qualified that remark by saying, "35 pounds on an average." That is a very different thing because a man may carry 5 pounds one day and 100 pounds the next. I submit to the Postmaster General's consideration the setting of a maximum weight beyond which the letter carrier would not have to carry, so that the postal authorities can be absolutely opposed to sending out any man with more than the maximum load. I think you ought to set the weight at 50 pounds.

Mr. VENIOT: The letter distributors are not required to carry anything above 35 or 40 pounds. We have depots and relays in the cities where mail is divided. It is carried by teams to these places, and the carriers can take their proportion for the section in which they are working. It is very difficult to regulate the matter in any other way. I can assure the hon. member that we do not want to overburden our carriers and we make it in every case as easy as possible for them. Where any overburdening is brought to the attention of our officials I know they are always prompt to see that the matter is remedied and additional help provided. I can assure the hon. gentleman that we shall not overload our carriers.

Mr. ADSHEAD: On one occasion I stopped a postman and by actual weight I found that the load he was carrying weighed 120 pounds, and on several occasions where I have stopped postmen I have found the weights they have been carrying to be over 50 pounds.

Mr. VENIOT: A letter carrier has only himself to blame if he is doing that. He is not required to do it, because the very moment the weight would reach anything like that his route would be divided and he would not have to carry any such weight. Any letter carrier who overburdens himself with more than 40 pounds of mail matter has himself to blame for doing it.

Mr. HEAPS: Why?

Mr. VENIOT: Because he has no right to carry it.

Mr. HEAPS: Supposing it is given to him.

Mr. VENIOT: Let him refuse to carry it, and if the official over him does not treat him aright, all he has to do is to report the matter to the department and we will make the official treat him aright.

Mr. THOMPSON: Last year the Postmaster General stated on the floor of the house that if a mail contract price was right and if the mail carrier was doing the work satisfactorily to the department, it was the custom of the department to renew the contract without calling for tenders. I should like to know if that is still the practice of the department?

Mr. VENIOT: We do it in some cases.

Mr. THOMPSON: I should like to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the case of Mr. Hermenegilde Picotte of the town of Penetanguishene, who for thirty years carried the mail to and from the station. The contract price was very low and during the whole thirty years of his service he gave every satisfaction both to the public and to the department. But being a free citizen he is supposed to have voted for me at the last election.

Mr. VENIOT: That is a sin.

Mr. THOMPSON: That is a sin, yes, and a punishable sin too. When his contract was about to expire this spring, the Liberal executive of the town called a meeting in the office of the defeated candidate, and said that because this man had voted for Thompson, Thompson would have to find him a job. So the defeated candidate called upon the Postmaster General not to renew the contract but to call for tenders. This was done and another man was given the contract at a lower price. I want to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that Picotte, who for thirty years had been a faithful servant, is incapacitated by certain disabilities from doing any other work. I have a medical certificate from his doctor under date of March 12, 1928, which states:

This is to certify that I have this day examined Mr. Herman Picotte, and find him ill from the following: Chronic bronchial asthma; high blood pressure, from hardening of arteries; chronic (marked) varicose veins of both legs.

The Postmaster General smiles, I may say for his further amusement that this man suffers so badly from asthma that he has not been able to sleep in bed for the last twenty years. He cannot do any other work, but with his horse he was able to carry on this service to the satisfaction of the public and of the department. Because, however, in the exercise of his right as a free citizen he voted for me, he must be punished and in his old age thrown out of employment. His condition might not be so pitiable were it not for this fact. When war broke out he had two sons both of whom enlisted voluntarily. One son was rejected as being physically unfit, but the second son, Napoleon, enlisted as a private in the 157th Battalion, giving up a good position in the Grand Trunk or the Canadian National service. He was successively promoted from private to corporal and from corporal to sergeant. He received the meritorious conduct medal for bravery on the field of action, but unfortunately one day he was killed in France. He did not come back to support his aged father and now a grateful country turns this man out into the cold.

Mr. SPENCE: The same discussion took place in the house last year that is taking place to-night. I remember taking part in it and advocating the increasing of the salaries of postal clerks and railway mail carriers by $120. It was stated by the Postmaster General that certain classes of the civil service had previously received increases and he could not see why he should grant them to all. In view of the fact that such an increase would mean a satisfied department in face of the increased cost of living I advocated that the increase of $120 be made general, but at that time the Postmaster General refused to grant or to recommend any increase. He said that he would recommend a reclassification. What difference does it make what classification they are in? What could you call a railway mail clerk, except a railway mail clerk? I could not for the life of me see what other name you could give them; they would still be railway mail clerks. I do not think the Postmaster General is very anxious in the matter, but the government should certainly take some action.

Mr. VENIOT: The fact that there can be a reclassification of railway mail clerks is evidenced by the fact that the Civil Service Commission is now considering, on the recommendation of the Postmaster General, a readjustment and reclassification of railway mail clerks by grading them so as to put them in a class where they will get a greater salary than they are receiving to-day.

Mr. SPENCE: It is not a difficult job to regrade them, but you cannot call them anything except railway mail clerks.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, you can.

Mr. SPENCE: You cannot call them butchers. You are just passing the buck.

Mr. THOMPSON: Would the Postmaster General be good enough to inform me why the practice of his department was not followed out in the case which I have cited?

Mr. VENIOT: If the hon. gentleman had called my attention to this matter before I would have been in a position to give him the information, but he cannot expect me to carry in my head the reasons for everything that takes place in the post office. I will get the information and give it to him to-morrow.

Mr. LADNER: I have perused the recommendations and correspondence relative to this question of increased salaries for railway mail clerks. The letter of the 2nd May from the secretary of the Civil Service Commission to Mr. Gaboury, Deputy Postmaster General, sums up the situation, but it does not convey the idea which the Postmaster General conveyed to the committee a moment ago. The letter states:

I am directed to advise you that at a meeting of the commissioners this morning the recommendation for increased compensation for the classes letter carriers, mail porters, postal clerks and railway mail clerks, was given very careful consideration by the commission, and that their decision is that there should be no increase granted in the basic rate for those classes.

I want to ask the Postmaster General two things. Legally and according to the act, is the method of getting an increase that of effecting a reclassification, that is, changing the terminology of the employment, or is it by a straight increase in compensation of the different classes specified here?

Mr. VENIOT: An increase in the minimum and maximum, and therefore carrying with it a yearly increase greater than in the past until they reach that greater maximum.

Mr. LADNER: That would be a reclassification.

Mr. VENIOT: It is both; that is the way I look at it, but perhaps I may not be using the right term. If the hon. gentleman will just read the first part of that letter—

Mr. LADNER: I quote:

I am directed to advise you that at a meeting of the commissioners this morning the recommendation for increased compensation—

Mr. VENIOT: Increased compensation. There is the direct recommendation.

Mr. LADNER: Quite so, but I would judge from that paragraph that there is no authority to grant it, and that you have to do it in some other way. I am asking if there is any other way by which the same result can be achieved.

Mr. VENIOT: No, because if there had been, they would have pointed it out.

Mr. LADNER: They did so.

Mr. VENIOT: Where?

Mr. LADNER: In the next paragraph.

Mr. VENIOT: Read it, please.

Mr. LADNER: I want the Postmaster General to mark carefully the distinction between these paragraphs. The one I have read says that there should be no increase granted in the basic rate for these classes. The next paragraph says:

The commissioners, however, believe there is good reason for considering the suggestion made by your department some time ago that some change should be made in the class of railway mail clerk to provide for increased compensation for the clerks in charge of railway post offices, and would be pleased to receive from the department their views regarding how this provision could best be effected.

That paragraph really indicates that the responsbility is passed back to the minister. What has he done to effect an increase?

[Mr. Ladner.]

Mr. VENIOT: Let us get the record right. The first paragraph refers to mail clerks, postal helpers and letter carriers—

Mr. LADNER: And railway mail clerks.

Mr. VENIOT: One moment, please. They deal specifically with the first three classes, leaving out the railway mail clerks.

Mr. LADNER: They do not. I have read it. I will read it again. It says:

Letter carriers, mail porters, postal clerks, and railway mail clerks.

They are all mentioned in the first paragraph, so how does the ministers' explanation work out?

Mr. VENIOT: It would work out, because they specifically in the next paragraph pick out mail porters, mail clerks, and so forth, and they drop the railway mail clerks and later deal with them specifically and say, "In the case of railway mail clerks, we may reconsider it, because we believe so-and-so, and we would ask you to suggest how it could be done." We have submitted to the Civil Service Commission a proposition of regrading, or grading, if you will, the railway mail clerks. They dismissed the first three entirely.

Mr. LADNER: So far as basic rates are concerned.

Mr. VENIOT: I got in touch with the Civil Service Commission, or my deputy did, and we discussed the interpretation of that clause. The result agrees with what I say now.

Mr. LADNER: What did they say?

Mr. VENIOT: They say they will not recommend any increase.

Mr. LADNER: In what?

Mr. VENIOT: For the mail clerks, mail porters and the other class, just as it is in that letter. The hon. gentleman has the advantage of me; he has the document.

Mr. LADNER: More than that, they say the basic rates.

Mr. VENIOT: A delegation of railway mail clerks went to the Civil Service Commission and discussed the whole matter with them. They came to me and asked my permission, as Postmaster General, to allow them to discuss the matter with the Civil Service Commission. I granted that; there could be no objection. They went. They returned to me, and they told me that the Commission had told them that they were there as the watchdog of the treasury.

Mr. LADNER: When did this take place?

Mr. VENIOT: After the 3rd of May, and they did not care what my recommendations were in that respect, they could not grant the recommendations for increases.

Mr. LADNER: The Postmaster General will note that his suggestion is quite inconsistent with paragraph 2, where they invite him to make recommendations.

Mr. VENIOT: Only in regard to railway mail clerks.

Mr. LADNER: Certainly; that is the subject matter of my comment.

Mr. VENIOT: They refused to consider the first three classes, but in the case of the railway mail clerks they asked us to make a suggestion to them.

Mr. LADNER: The minister knows that they did not refuse increases for the first three classes. They only refused the basic rate.

Mr. VENIOT: The basic rate is the whole thing. The moment you increase the basic rate and raise the maximum, you are giving to the service the right to annual increases greater than they receive to-day. If you do not touch the basic rate it is no use touching anything at all. I am perfectly safe on the ground I am taking. I want the committee to understand that I am not trying to crawl out of anything. I am not trying to make any capital out of the fact that I did make a recommendation to the Civil Service Commission and they did not accept it. I merely wish to state the facts as they are. I may be wrong in my interpretation, but I feel I am not; I have had experience in dealing with this matter for a few years.

Mr. LADNER: I would like to test the bona fides of the minister right here and now With respect to paragraph 2, where the commission invite the minister to make a recommendation for increases in salaries to the railway mail clerks, will the minister make that recommendation as requested?

Mr. VENIOT: That question is very easily answered. I made it eight days ago. Will that satisfy the hon. gentleman? My deputy can give the exact date, but on my instructions he went to the Civil Service Commission and discussed the matter with them. There was a delegation of the railway mail clerks present in my own office; we discussed the matter with them and agreed with the railway mail clerks what their increase or readjustment should be, and we brought that to the attention of the civil service commission. It is now in their hands to act upon it.

Mr. LADNER: As we have gone so exhaustively into the question, will the minister not produce the letter and put it on the record?

Mr. VENIOT: My deputy tells me that he will produce the document. I have not got it here. We have nothing to hide. I will produce anything that I can get in the department.

Mr. LADNER: Do I understand that this letter is a recommendation from the Postmaster General to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. VENIOT: Not from the Postmaster General—from the deputy under my instructions. It is practically the same.

Mr. LADNER: It is virtually from the Postmaster General recommending to the Civil Service Commission an increase in salaries with respect to the railway mail clerks as indicated in the second paragraph of this letter of the 2nd of May?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. LADNER: Where do the watchdogs of the treasury come in? How are they going to bark?

Mr. VENIOT: I do not know. So far as the watchdogs are concerned, I am simply reporting to you what the delegation reported to me.

Mr. HEAPS: From what the minister has stated, I believe that he is quite anxious that all these postal employees, as well as the railway mail clerks, should get $120 per annum more than they are getting at the present time. There has been a fairly unanimous expression of opinion in this house on that matter this evening, and all parties have indicated a desire that that increase should be given. In view of that expression of opinion, I would ask the Postmaster General again to make this request of the Civil Service Commission for an increase. If he does that, and the Civil Service Commission again turn it down, we will know exactly where we stand. If the Postmaster General does that, I am sure the members of the house will be obliged to him.

Mr. VENIOT: I may say for the information of the committee that the government desires to get another department into supply this evening in order to take up an item or two, and when I have finished answering my hon friends I shall move that the committee rise and report progress.

In answer to the hon. gentleman, as an evidence of good faith of what the department desires to do, I may state that I brought the matter before council, and after consideration of the increases of the salaries of these classes an item of $350,000 was slated for the supplementary estimates; but when the Civil Service Commission replied as they did on May 2, that item was withdrawn. It will not now appear in the supplementary estimates unless the commission reconsider their decision and accept our recommendation.

Mr. HEAPS: Will you ask the Civil Service Commission to reconsider their decision?

Mr. ARTHURS: The hon. minister has stated in his last few remarks what purports to have occurred in council. We have on many occasions, and probably this afternoon, inquired as to certain facts or alleged facts, and the answer invariably was that anything that occurred in council could not be divulged. How does the hon. gentleman square himself with that position? As a matter of fact he is giving this information ostensibly for the benefit of the suffering public but really for political purposes.

Mr. VENIOT: My parliamentary experience in the commons has not been as lengthy as my hon. friend's, and I may have forgotten myself in that respect. I admit that perhaps it was a breach on my part, but I think I was doing nothing but right in laying the facts before the committee.

Mr. ARTHURS: I have an idea that the hon. gentleman knew perfectly well what he was doing. He was doing it for the purpose of affecting votes in the country.

Mr. CHURCH: The Postmaster General is quite frank. He believes in the spoils system, and makes no pretence about it whatever. The Post Office department is supposed to be operated for the benefit of the country, not for the benefit of this or any other political party, but there has been politics in the department since confederation. I know that in the Toronto post office a man cannot get a temporary position at Christmas unless he joins the Liberal party. I have seen the list. Who is in control regarding appointments; is it the Civil Service Commission? No, the Civil Service Commission has no more to do with it than the man in the moon. The list is presented to the postmaster, and he must act on it. If the returned soldiers do not vote Liberal they are dismissed, and their places are taken by others who will vote Liberal. The whole thing is ridiculous. That is not the way to operate a public utility. I do not say the present Postmaster General is entirely to blame; I think he stood by the men. I wish to put in a word for the low-paid men in the Toronto post office, the postmen and others. Some of these men were in France for four and a half years. Day after day they have hard beats to walk. They give the maximum of efficiency at the minimum of pay, and there is no public utility using its men in the larger cities the way the low paid men of the Post Office department are used to-day. The Post Office department would have a large surplus were it not for the special rates given to the newspapers, which is equivalent to a cash bonus of seven million dollars. This is given at the expense of the rank and file of the Post Office department, who are getting a miserable pittance of a salary to-day. Some of these men drawing only $700 or $800 are delivering registered mail containing hundreds of thousands of dollars in value. Are we to wait until there is another strike in the post offices throughout the country? The men are long-suffering and patient, and they have put up with a lot from the Civil Service Commission. Last year we had to wait three or four months before we could get this return. I never heard of so much red tape as exists in the Civil Service Commission over the classification of these men. They are a splendid body of men giving excellent service to the public at very low remuneration. I say from the top down they are underpaid. Take the Toronto post office; Mr. Lemon, the very capable head, is paid only about $5,800 a year, although the revenue from that office is six million dollars a year. The rank and file work long hours and are underpaid, and we should do something to relieve the conditions under which they labour to-day.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Item stands.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Item number 10.

Mr. STEVENS: That is immigration and colonization. I do not think it is in order to call another department without reporting progress on these estimates, when there would be a motion to go into committee again.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We are in committee of supply now and the government is free to call any item.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion was made for the Speaker to leave the chair and the house to go into committee of supply. In supply the government can say what department it desires to take up.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has that procedure ever been followed before?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Always.

Mr. STEVENS: With consent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If there is any objection we can take up some other item, but we wish to get the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) into supply to-night.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Immigration and Colonization — salaries, $305,570; contingencies, $45,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): Before proceeding with a discussion of the vote I want to offer a word of explanation. Some time ago, discussing the question of immigration, the leader of the opposition requested that we give the estimates in a more detailed form than we have them on page 22. This has been done, and a more detailed statement will be distributed to-morrow. On page 22 of the estimates it will be found that the whole vote is contained in six different items. We have divided it up into a great many items to make it more easily understood by hon. members, and to-morrow the details will be distributed. As regards the vote now before the house, my deputy is not here, but I may say that the total vote this year for civil government, salaries, is $305,570 in comparison with $279,920 for 1927-28. This makes a total increase in the vote of $25,650. The explanation of this increase is the number of employees for the present year. This increase in numbers is accounted for as follows: 1 chief of records; 1 head clerk; 1 principal clerk; 16 clerks, grade four, promoted from grade three. This makes a total of 19, less 4 of a net decrease in lower grades due to adjustments and promotions. The estimated amount for 1928-29 is $305,570 as compared with $265,850, the amount voted for 1927-28, plus a flat increase of $120, which was granted under vote 535, which brought last year's total up to $279,920. This means that the increase for 1928-29 amounts to $25,650.

Mr. GARDINER: What are the duties of a commissioner of immigration?

Mr. FORKE: There are three commissioners, as explained to the committee the other day. There is one in Vancouver, there is one in Winnipeg and another resident in Ottawa. These are called division commissioners. The Commissioner of Immigration is superior to these, having control of the whole Dominion from sea to sea.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not see the three commissioners mentioned in this item. What are the duties of a commissioner of immigration? What does he do to earn his money?

Mr. FORKE: He has the whole question of immigration under his care. Perhaps one of his most important duties is the supervision of the different ports. Any difficulty arising in Quebec or Halifax where immigrants enter the country is immediately attended to by the immigration commissioner. Internal work is under his supervision.

Mr. GARDINER: And what are the duties of a commissioner of colonization?

Mr. FORKE: The Commissioner of Colonization is more particularly associated with the settling of immigrants after landing in Canada. He also has under his control the different agencies in the United States, but as his title implies he is more particularly connected with the settling of immigrants after they have landed in the country, in contradistinction to the Commissioner of Immigration, who deals with them only in so far as their entry is concerned.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 22, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 322, respecting a certain patent of Jean Baptiste Hurteau—Mr. Prevost.

Bill No. 323, for the relief of Violet Claire McCredie.

Bill No. 324, for the relief of Garnet Britten Walton.

Bill No. 325, for the relief of Rebeina Pearl Bolingbroke.

Bill No. 326, for the relief of Manassa Fretz.

Bill No. 327, for the relief of Charles Henry Clifford.

Bill No. 328, for the relief of Joseph James Harold Graham.

Bill No. 329, for the relief of Bernice Alberta Haight.

Bill No. 330, for the relief of Rose Eadie Harris.

Bill No. 331, for the relief of Mildred Florence McGowan.

Bill No. 332, for the relief of Gabrielle Norton.

Bill No. 333, for the relief of Grace Elizabeth Parker.

Bill No. 334, for the relief of Charles St. Clair Parsons.

Bill No. 335, for the relief of Ivy Reader

Bill No. 336, for the relief of James Ramsey Sloan.

Bill No. 337, for the relief of Harold Wilfrid Vivian Vincent Turner.

Bill No. 338, for the relief of Gordon Thomas Wilson.

On division.

RADIO—CANCELLATION OF LICENSE

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE STUDENTS ASSOCIATION

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): Under the heading of motions may I, at the request of certain of my constituents, present a petition signed by 11,577 people of the city of Vancouver in protest against the action of the government in cancelling the radio broadcasting license of the International Bible Students Association?

DECEPTIVE MINING LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): Has the Postmaster General any statement to make in regard to the tipster sheet which I passed across to him the other day? I thought he might make an investigation into it.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): I was just writing a note to the hon. gentleman. I have made an investigation. No definite conclusion was reached yesterday as a result of the investigation made, but to-day we have been able to arrive at a definite conclusion and an order of fraud in the mails has been issued and will be enforced against these sheets so that circulation in Canada will be prevented.

Mr. MANION: Just in that regard, a friend of mine in the city of Quebec has sent me another group of the same type of sheets and he states that Quebec is being flooded with them. I am going to send them across to the minister for the same purpose.

Mr. VENIOT: I received half a dozen of them this morning from different parties.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE

MULTILATERAL TREATY PROPOSED BY THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Some time ago I directed a question to the Prime Minister as to whether Canada had been asked to sign the peace treaty with the United States which Secretary Kellogg has invited the other great powers to sign. May I to-day receive a reply to that question from the Prime Minister?

[Mr. Forke.]

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Shortly after noon to-day the minister of the United States called at my office and stated that he had been instructed to extend in the name of the government of the United States a cordial invitation to His Majesty's government in Canada to become one of the original parties to the treaty for the renunciation of war which is now under consideration. It was agreed that the text of the invitation should be made public in the United States, Canada and elsewhere in Friday morning's press. An answer has not yet been sent as there has not been an opportunity to have one prepared, but an answer to the communication will be sent very shortly.

TRADE TREATIES WITH GERMANY AND CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): Statements have appeared in some of the papers about a trade treaty being negotiated by this government with Germany, and also about the Cuban trade treaty. Has the Minister of Finance any statement to make to the house as to the progress being made with these trade treaties, and are there any particular items of them that he would like to communicate to the house?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): We did have certain preliminary negotiations with Germany a little more than a year ago, but we did not make much progress because we concluded that what Germany was offering was not advantageous to Canada as compared with what we would be giving to Germany.

As regards Cuba, as my hon. friend knows, there is an agreement at present in force. I think I advised the house early in the session that we have a most favoured nation agreement with Cuba pending negotiations in connection with a treaty.

Mr. MANION: Do I understand the minister to suggest that the German trade treaty is called off altogether at the present time?

Mr. ROBB: There are no negotiations whatever with Germany at the present time. Certain Canadians who have recently been in Germany have returned to Canada and they have represented to me that Germany is prepared to modify her ideas as regards tariffs, but we have been so busy during the session that we have not had time to consider the matter and we are awaiting the next move from Germany.

SUPPLY—STEEL INDUSTRY

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. FINLAY MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): I desire to move, seconded by Mr. Cantley, the following amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance:

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

This house regrets the refusal of the government to implement in full the recommendations contained in the report of the Duncan commission, particularly the recommendation relating to the steel industry.

Those of us, Mr. Speaker, who come from the maritime provinces, and particularly those of us who represent industrial centres, feel that we would not be doing our duty to our constituents if we allowed this session to pass without registering our protest against the non-fulfillment of the recommendations of the Duncan report. It must not be taken from this that we withhold any credit from the government for what they have already done; we do not. We are prepared to give them credit for the increased subsidies they have given to the maritime provinces, for the reduction in freight rates, for the harbour commissions, and for the coking plants, although the latter may be of very doubtful value to the maritime provinces. At the same time we want it distinctly understood that these things are not in any way concessions to the maritime provinces; they are nothing more or less than somewhat belated instalments of justice to these provinces.

In the Duncan report we have a specific recommendation with regard to the steel industry. It is contained in paragraphs 24, 25 and 26. Paragraph 24 reads:

The manufacture of steel has, for many years, now, been closely associated with the coal enterprise of Nova-Scotia. It is, like coal, a matter of very vital moment to the maritime provinces. The representations which were made to us by provincial government witnesses, as well as by the operators of coal and steel, were related not only to the importance of this industry to the maritimes but also to its importance as a national asset. It was pointed out to us that the Nova Scotia steel industry had been fostered and developed for the purpose af making primary forms of iron and steel, and that "it would be unfortunate for Canada if this original purpose were thwarted because, except as regards Nova Scotia, steel manufacture on a basis of national security does not exist."

It may be true that at its inception the steel enterprise of Nova Scotia looked as much to foreign markets as to the home markets for the merchanting of their products, or even more than to the home market. These foreign markets are not now available because of world economic conditions, but the importance was emphasized to us of ensuring a continuance of the production of steel in Nova Scotia—whether for home or for foreign markets—from the standpoint of the dominion ensuring the continuance of an important national "foundation production," carried on, as in the Nova Scotia iron and steel industry, from native sources of supply.

A calculation was given to us to show that as a result of the operations of the customs tariff—if labour employed in the production of iron and steel and its raw products is taken as the unit for measuring protective value—the protection afforded to Nova Scotia labour is only 28 per cent, whereas elsewhere in Canada the protection to labour is between 85 per cent and 100 per cent.

It was not suggested that in a matter of this kind help should be given without regard to efficiency of manufacture, administration and capitalization; but the steel industry in Nova Scotia has been going through very trying times, and is, in a sense, in course of reconstruction. Independent evidence of an expert character was given to us, that if due regard were paid to the "economic unit" of production in steel, there was no reason why it should not be produced as efficiently and cheaply in Nova Scotia as anywhere else in Canada.

The assistance asked for in respect of the steel industry was:—

(a) Appropriate tariff adjustments; and
(b) Bounty.

Paragraph 25 says:

It was submitted that the tendency of the tariff, as affected by successive alterations, has been to lessen the protection upon the primary products of iron and steel and to encourage their importation from other countries as being the raw materials of iron and steel-fabricating and finishing industries in Canada.

In respect of this matter, we do not conceive it to be our duty to express any opinion, since the question is, as we were informed by the chairman of the tariff advisory board, who met us at our request, at the present moment under the consideration of that board. But we do regard it as our duty to record that the significance of this industry to the maritime provinces was forcibly brought home to us, not only in the manufacturing towns we visited in the maritimes but also throughout the agricultural districts of the martimes. We record this in order to emphasize the need for prompt action.

Then, with regard to bounties, paragraph 26 says:

It was pointed out to us that, at its inception, the Nova Scotia steel industry enjoyed national aid in the form of a bounty. This system of bounties prevailed for many years.

We were asked to recommend that a bounty should be again made avilable. In this connection we have thought it right to give consideration to a point which was emphasized in the course of the evidence, vi.—that a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty is given when imported coal is used for metallurgical purposes, and that this is tantamount to giving a bonus of that amount, since it means that the Dominion is yielding up money which otherwise under its general policy in regard to bituminous coal would accrue to it. While there are, no doubt, other angles from which this concession can be regarded, it does in its operation have the effect of a bonus, and it is difficult to see how the same bonus can be denied to native coal.

Having regard to the bounty system previously applied, and to this aspect of the application of the drawback—

Then comes their recommendation:

—we recommend that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture, and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

Here we have a specific recommendation made by this commission, namely, that a bonus should be granted out of the federal treasury to the steel industry, calculated on the amount of coal that it takes to produce a ton of steel.

I read now from the brief supplied to the Duncan commission on which this recommendation was based:

The Steel And Coal Industries

The steady decadence of the steel and coal industries of Nova Scotia in the past four or five years has contributed far more than any other single factor to that general condition of business decline in which the recent movement for maritime rights finds economic sanction. These industries, when operating normally, support wage-earning communities comprising a quarter of the population of the province. Directly vital to six of the eighteen counties of Nova Scotia, they indirectly influence economic conditions in every part of the maritime provinces. The centres of population which have grown up around them have for many years constituted the best and most readily accessible market for the farmers and fishermen of eastern Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, for the fruit growers of the Annapolis valley, for the industries and mercantile houses of Halifax, Moncton and Saint John. Depression of the coal and steel industries must inevitably be reflected in disturbed economic conditions in the whole maritime region.

As has been said, tariff protection to Canadian industries is the approved and accepted national policy of the Dominion. It is not the purpose of this review of the situation either to defend or to criticize that policy. All that is relevant to the case is to point out that, while it is maintained, Nova Scotia industries may fairly claim to be entitled to share in its advantages to the same degree as the major industries of Quebec and Ontario. Protection, or free trade, or an exclusively revenue tariff may be advocated with some show of logic, but surely no reasonable defence, no consideration based on equity or sound public policy, can be advanced in support of a system under which Nova Scotians are compelled to buy what they consume in a substantially protected home market, and to sell what they produce in a virtually unprotected one. Before suggesting a remedy for this anomalous condition, it is important to review the stages and retrace the steps by which it has been reached.

[Mr. F. MacDonald.]

About thirty years ago the iron and steel industry was established in Nova Scotia upon a large scale and, because of its essential relation and vital importance to the coal industry, should be considered in conjunction with it. Like coal mining, the manufacture of steel at its inception was given assistance from the national treasury, both in the form of bounties on tonnage output and protective duties against competing products entering Canada. The compelling reason for the establishment in eastern Canada of a large scale steel plant, was that here, and here alone in the whole Dominion, were the conditions to be found which rendered possible the growth of such an industry, with its three roots in British soil. These three roots are Nova Scotia coal, Nova Scotia limestone, and Nova Scotia or Newfoundland iron ore.

The system of bounties to the steel industry was maintained from 1900 to 1911, when it was discontinued. The duties on steel and steel products, established in 1907, were, like the coal duties, specific amounts per ton. When these duties were imposed, steel prices were such that the industry then enjoyed a tariff protection ranging from 20 to 35 per cent on its various products. To-day those products have a market value of from twice to three times what it was in 1907, but there has been no upward revision of the duties from then till now. The consequence is that the average duty on the output of the Nova Scotia steel industry is to-day less than 10 per cent, while many of its most important products have been placed on the free list in order to assist Ontario industries using steel as a basic material to meet American competition in central Canada.

As is pointed out in this brief, there has been a great decline in the steel industry of Nova Scotia; of that there can be no question. One of the greatest authorities probably in Canada on the steel and coal question is Mr. F. W. Gray, and in Iron and Steel of Canada for January, 1928, there appears an article by him pointing out this fatal decline in the steel industry, and naming the various industries that have declined in production or gone out of business entirely. Let me quote from this article:

In 1913 there were in Canada twenty-two blast-furnaces, of which five had for some years been idle. In the autumn of 1927 there were in blast only four furnaces.

Following is the number and operating condition of Canadian blast-furnaces in 1913—as given by the director of the Mines branch at Ottawa—and the present conditions, as nearly as can be ascertained, viz.—

Dominion Iron & Steel Company, Sydney, Cape Breton. Six completed furnaces, two operated throughout 1913, four for 344, 334, 222 and 140 days, respectively. Condition at end of October, 1927, was one furnace in operation, and prospect of second furnace being blown in during November.

Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Co. Ltd. In 1913, one furnace at Sydney Mines, Cape Breton, operated 365 days. An additional stack was erected in 1918, but was never blown in. Both furnaces have been continuously idle since some time in 1920.

Londonderry Iron & Mining Company, Londonderry, Nova Scotia. In 1913, one furnace, idle throughout that year, and since abandoned.

Canada Iron Corporation Ltd. Two small furnaces at Drummondville, Que., and one at Radnor Forges, Que., all idle throughout 1913. Two furnaces at Midland, Ont., operated for 226 and 172 days respectively during 1913. One of the Midland furnaces was in 1917 sold to the Algoma Steel Corporation, and was re-erected at Sault Ste. Marie. In 1927, all the smaller furnaces have been continuously idle since 1913 and are therefore abandoned. The single stack remaining at Midland, Ont., has been idle for years.

Standard Iron Company of Canada, Deseronto, Ont. One furnace at Deseronto, operated for 220 days during 1913, and one furnace at Parry Sound, operated 92 days in 1913. In 1927 these furnaces stand in an abandoned condition, having been idle for years.

The Steel Company of Canada, Ltd., Hamilton, Ont. In 1913 two furnaces operated, one for 259 days and the other for 309 days. In 1927 these blast furnaces remain without addition to producing capacity, and one furnace only was in operation in October.

The Canadian Furnace Co., Ltd., Port Colborne, Ont. One furnace, operated 95 days. This furnace has been idle since November, 1924.

Algoma Steel Company, Ltd., Sault Ste. Marie, Ont. Three furnaces operated for 361, 365 and 322 days respectively in 1913. In 1927 this company has four furnaces, including the one moved from Midland in 1917. One furnace only was in operation in October, 1927.

Atikokan Iron Company, Ltd., Port Arthur, Ont. One furnace of 100 tons capacity idle since 1911, and now presumably abandoned.

That tells the story of the decline of the steel-making industry in Canada during the last few years. What causes have contributed to this decline? As to this, we are also in possession of the opinion of a leading authority, Mr. Ross H. McMaster, the president of The Steel Company of Canada. In the May issue of Industrial Canada, he writes:

Our adopted form of federal taxation derives the largest share of its proceeds from organized business, so it seems abundantly evident that industry, in manufacturing and other lines, should be preserved in a healthy state.

It should be equally recognized that, when products manufactured in Canada yield almost twenty-five cents in taxes for every dollar of added value produced, it is a poor bargain for this country to admit commodities similar to those produced at home without payment of any contribution to our federal or other exchequers.

A contrary policy, however, has been followed, as an examination of our tariff reveals that there are 55 items which admit steel and iron of various descriptions duty free, or provide a drawback of substantially the entire duty when intended for particular purposes.

I want to put on record the items in the customs tariff relating to the duties on iron and steel. Item 1002 reads:

Rolled iron, rolled steel and pig iron: when used in the manufacture of mowing machines, reapers, harvesters, binders and attachments for binders.

Item 1005 reads:

Steel under one-half inch in diameter or under one-half inch square: when used in the manufacture of locks and knobs.

I would refer the house to the foregoing items and also to items 1006, 1007, 1009, 1015, 1019, 1021, 1026, 1028, 1036, 1045, 1046, 1047, 1048 and 1049. Anyone who cares to look up these items will find out for himself that the steel industry of Nova Scotia has been discriminated against.

In addition to its function of producing revenue, the customs tariff is expected to give equal protection or assistance to working people in the matter of wages and continuity of employment. It is submitted that a ton of steel produced in Nova Scotia, at a cost of $40, represents about twice as much directly in Canadian labour and, indirectly in Canadian material produced by Canadian labour, as a ton of similar steel produced elsewhere in Canada. So much for the decline of this industry, and so much for the cause of it.

For some years the industry fought a losing fight in Nova Scotia and the effect was not confined to the industry itself; it extended particularly to the great coal mining industry with which it is allied. But it was felt also, as is pointed out in one of the articles from which I have quoted, throughout all the industries and all the commerce of eastern Canada. The maritime provinces, as had been frequently stated, had been going behind and for many years had been losing their population. The people, young and old, had been leaving the country; farms were being abandoned; banks were going out of business; and their trust companies and financial institutions were gradually leaving them and going to the larger centres. Then last, but not least, came the threatened collapse of their great industry. It was this prospect that caused many thoughtful people throughout the maritime provinces to get together some few years ago to look into the reasons for this decline with a view to suggesting the remedy to be applied. Out of this welter came the movement which afterwards was known as "maritime rights", a movement which at its inception was more or less an object of ridicule. Many people appeared to affect a sort of laughing attitude when considering this question of maritime rights, and the poor political prophets did not see in that movement a cloud which, while no larger than a man's hand when it first appeared on the political horizon, gradually grew in extent. They did not then recognize it. In 1921 the Liberals swept the province of Nova Scotia from end to end; not a solitary Conservative was elected to this house from that province. In the local election an almost similar result obtained, for in a house of forty-three members there were only three Conservatives. Surely, they thought, under such circumstances they could afford to ignore this movement, which some of their members designated pure propaganda. And they tried to ascribe it to the desperate efforts of some Tories to rehabilitate themselves in political life. But it went a little deeper than that. It was not a political movement at all at its inception, nor did it become so later. But the first indication, or the first sign that should have been an indication, of the growth of this movement came in 1923 when the solid block from Nova Scotia was broken by the election of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Black). Then followed the local elections in 1925. Here, of course, they felt on very firm ground. They had been in power in Nova Scotia for such a length of time that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. For over forty years the Liberals had controlled the destinies of that province, and they got so at last that they could not distinguish between their own money and the people's—with somewhat disastrous results to some of them after the Conservatives came in. However, they went into the election of 1925 with banners flying and with a very confident air of victory. But they came back with the figures reversed: there were forty Conservatives elected and three Liberals. That surely should have been some indication that the movement was gaining ground. Followed elections in the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. It should, I say, have been a lesson to those people who were paying no attention at all to this demand of the maritime provinces for recognition of their rights. But they continued to ignore the growth of that movement, and even the right hon. the Prime Minister himself (Mr. Mackenzie King), when touring the province in 1925, affected a sort of jocular attitude and asked, "What are these maritime rights?" The right hon. gentleman got his answer in the election that followed, because of that solid bloc, elected to support him in 1921 only two returned as a result of the 1925 conflict. But whatever may be said of the right hon. gentleman, no one can discount his resourcefulness; and at the opening of parliament in 1926 he inserted in the speech from the throne the following paragraph which he thought would certainly have some effect in placating those who came from the maritime provinces:

> With a view to affording such remedies as may appear to be practical and appropriate, the government also propose to appoint a royal commission to inquire fully into the claims that the rights of the maritime provinces in regard to the operation of the Intercolonial railway have not been observed, and that in regard to transportation, immigration, and other economic factors these provinces have suffered prejudically, in their position under confederation.

That idea did not commend itself to members from the maritime provinces; the history of previous investigations by commissions of this kind showed them only too well the danger which might result if that course were followed. We did oppose the appointment of any commission. In that we may have been wrong; I am not going to say now that we were not wrong, as it has turned out, but we thought at the time that before a committee of this house we could bring all the evidence of the conditions in the maritime provinces which would justify the house in believing there was something wrong with economic conditions in that part of Canada, and we thought we could suggest remedies for those conditions. The house will remember that during the session of 1926 all those who were opposed to the idea of maritime rights rose in their places and said how sympathetic they were and how much they desired to help us if only someone would tell them what maritime rights were. We thought we could tell them if we had a committee of the house, but the government thought otherwise and appointed Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, Professor Macmillan and Judge Wallace as a commission.

As soon as that commission was appointed our whole attitude changed; we loyally accepted the commission and appeared before it. Our three local governments prepared briefs in which they submitted their case to the commission; those gentlemen went into every aspect of the situation and followed up every clue which they thought might be of benefit. Let me here refer to a remark made by the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) in discussing the findings of this commission. He said this was an ex-parte commission, and I want to correct that impression; it was not an ex-parte commission in any sense of the term. The commission did not confine itself to the evidence laid before it by the interested parties; it went all over the country calling witnesses and seeking in every manner to obtain information which would permit of an honest and just finding. It concluded its work and filed its report with the government in September of 1926.

That report came as a great surprise to many people, who had been led to believe that there was nothing in this cry of maritime rights, that it was nothing more or less than the groans of a number of disgruntled politicians who were looking for office. These people found from the report that there was something very wrong with conditions in the maritime provinces, so we looked with considerable anxiety to the attitude the government would take in connection with the report. On March 18, 1927, the Prime Minister made his statement with regard to maritime claims and the Duncan report. I do not propose to read it all but I will quote that paragraph which is germane to the point now under discussion. He said:

> The recommendation of the commission that the tariff advisory board should be asked to give immediate consideration to the customs tariff in its relation to coal, anthracite and coke has been met. The matter is now before the tariff advisory board. It would appear desirable at this point to recall that at the session of 1925, as a means of assisting coal production in the maritimes, the customs duty on slack coal was raised from 13 cents to 50 cents. The question of protection on the primary products of iron and steel was, as stated in the report, under the consideration of the tariff advisory board at the time of the commission's investigation. Owing to the existing uncertainty of conditions surrounding the iron and steel industry in the maritimes, the government does not feel in a position to make at present any pronouncement with respect to the commission's recommendation of a renewal of the system of granting bounties with respect to steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture.

Then the Prime Minister concluded his statement in the following words:

> In concluding this statement, may I say that the government hopes that, by accepting as we have, the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Maritime Claims, virtually in their entirety, parliament and the country will recognize in the attitude of the government a wish to remove this great question as largely as possible from the arena of sectional discord and party strife, and a desire to give to our Dominion in the sixtieth anniversary of its founding, a renewed expression of the spirit which animated the fathers of confederation in their efforts to construct out of British North America a federal union under a system of government devised "to protect the diversified interests of the several provinces and secure efficiency, harmony and permanency in the working of the union."

That eloquent peroration on the part of the Prime Minister appealed to many of us; we thought the government had dealt fairly generously with us. I am free to confess, however, that there was a difference of opinion among the maritimers on that point; some of us believed that we should give the government credit for what they had done, and also make it clear to them that they were simply carrying out an instalment of the recommendations rather than virtually complying with all of them. Some others, and probably time has proved the wisdom of their prophecy, felt that the government did not intend to implement the Duncan report in its entirety, and they thought it just as well to say so frankly at the time. That difference of opinion continued until the fall of 1927, when the genial and gentlemanly Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) appeared before a meeting at St. John and announced what we considered at the time and what we still consider to be the policy of the government. There he said that when the budget came down there would be good news for the people of the maritime provinces, that everybody would be glad, that the government had already implemented the Duncan report with the exception of the recommendations touching the Valley railways and the steel bounties, and now when the budget came down the people of the maritime provinces would see that this great paternal government here had dealt with these matters in such a way that the people of the maritimes would be glad. I am happy to see that the Postmaster General has just taken his seat. This matter has been brought to the attention of the house several times and his remarks have been quoted here. When the budget debate took place we expected him to make a clear-cut pronouncement as to what he meant at that time, when he gave that news to the people of the maritime provinces. We do hope that he was not speaking entirely without authority, and that he had something up his sleeve. We hope that the hon. gentleman is going to carry out his promises to the maritime provinces before this session closes.

Such is the position at the present time. Those of us who put confidence in the government's promises one year ago were led to expect that when the time came they would fulfil all the recommendations, not only virtually but substantially in their entirety. Here is one clearcut recomendation: a bounty of 50 cents a ton on native mined coal, used in the production of iron and steel.

What is the attitude of the government? I presume we can take that attitude to be defined by our representative in the cabinet, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston). On March 5, when the minister spoke on the budget, regarding this question of the Duncan report, he said:

But there still remain certain things to be done. It seems to me that it is in the interest of this industry and in the interest of the Dominion that—first, there should be unity between the coal and steel businesses. Secondly, there should be a shrinkage of the capital so that the industry will have an opportunity of earning a dividend on some reasonable investment. Thirdly, the unwieldy organization should be simplified. It now consists of some fourteen companies. Fourthly, there ought to be co-operation by the provincial and municipal authorities in the work of building up this great industry. With the litigation ended and these conditions met, the way will be open for serious consideration by the federal government of the presentation of the real and legitimate needs of the industry.

That is very far from implementing the Duncan report with regard to the bounty on steel. The Duncan report calls for a bounty, it does not call for any unity of industry, because they are all united. It does not call for any simplification, because they are all one concern now. The co-operation that the minister asks for has already been accomplished. The city has given the concern a five-year lease at a nominal rental and all these conditions were fulfilled before the minister made his speech. But if they were never fulfilled, they are conditions that should never be imposed on this industry. The Duncan commission made certain specific recommendations, and they should be carried out, or the government will have to take the responsibility.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), speaking on April 16, 1928, referring to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), said:

All he has done recently has been to tell the people of Canada who sometimes complain that this government have not reduced duties to the extent expected—and I am talking more particularly of the people who support this government—that by our trade agreements with other countries we have materially reduced the customs duties on goods coming into this country. I am not backing away from that point. We have materially reduced the duties. When our friends quote the general tariff as the measure of protection, they are all wrong. The duties on most of the items imported are based on the British preference or on the trade agreements which we have made with other countries, and we have exposed our own industries—I admit it frankly—to keen competition with other countries throughout the world. That is the policy of the government and the policy of the Canadian people as determined at the polls. Just as soon as they decide for a higher tariff they will elect by hon. friends opposite to office.

The customs returns for March, 1928, show that over $260,000,000 worth of iron and steel and their products were imported into the Dominion. These goods should have been manufactured here and every dollar of that money kept in the country. I received a telegram which I read in the house before showing the feelings of the men employed in this great industry. This telegram, dated February 19, 1927, is addressed to me and I will read it again:

Elected representatives of three thousand steel workers in conference this date urge that immediate action be taken by your government to adopt the recommendations of the Duncan Royal Commission on Maritime Rights.

J. J. HOLMES,
Secretary
General Works Committee,
Dominion Iron and Steel Co. Ltd.

Our case for remedial legislation with respect to the steel industry is not based on a demand for any particular fiscal policy, but on a claim for equal treatment with other important Canadian industries under any general federal policy approved by parliament. It is repugnant to the federal idea that any province should be compelled to buy in a protected market and sell in an unprotected one. Steel and coal represent to the people of Nova Scotia what the vast chain of industries established throughout Ontario and Quebec mean to the people of central Canada. This industry should be encouraged and conserved for the following reasons:

1. All its raw materials are derived from British sources.

2. It is essential to winter employment in the coal fields of Nova Scotia.

3. Linked up with the coal industry as it is, it is by far the most important enterprise, in an economic sense, in the maritime provinces, where all classes and occupation are directly concerned in its prosperity.

4. There can be no assured, independent industrial future for Canada, unless the basic products of iron and steel, which constitute the raw materials for so large a range of other industries, can be furnished from Canadian sources. No single case can be cited of a great manufacturing country which is dependent for its supplies of iron, steel and coal on the resources of its foreign industrial rivals.

5. It would be difficult to over-estimate the future economic value to Canada of a well established iron and steel industry, deriving its raw materials from native sources, and capable of expansion from time to time to meet the requirements of the home market. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1928, upwards of $260,000,000 worth of iron and steel and their products were imported into the Dominion. Canada is to-day the best outside market the United States has for such products, and it is a market which is increasing in capacity year after year. That the Canadian steel industry should be allowed to languish and decline under such circumstances; that Canadian plants should slow down their production below 50 per cent of their capacity at the very peak of the home market demand, is surely notice to the whole country of the urgent need of some revision of the public policy, under which such conditions are possible.

In view of these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Cantley, the amendment now in your hands.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, a year ago or a little more I called the attention of the house to this same subject. I did so at that time with the full concurrence and support of my then chief, the then leader of the Conservative party on this side of the house. As the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) has stated; some of my friends differed with me in regard to the wisdom of acting as I did. Some of them then had a little more faith in the government than I then had; as a matter of fact I had very little then and I have very little still.

In dealing with the matter a year ago I referred to the various provisions of the report of the Duncan commission and I stated that they might be reduced to eighteen. There has been some little change in regard to some of these as they have to a certain extent been further implemented than they were a year ago, but in the main there is very little difference. The twenty per cent freight reduction in part, has been applied. I say in part because it has been applied only in part. What important feature of the twenty per cent freight reduction has not been implemented? I refer to the international traffic, traffic originating in Canada and destined for points in the United States. So far as that is concerned we are not getting what the Duncan commission suggested we should get, with the result that a large portion of the freight originating in Price Edward Island and the great majority in value and tonnage of the freight originating in New Brunswick and to some extent in Nova Scotia are denied the twenty per cent reduction. I am referring to potatoes and lumber. Another recommendation of the Duncan commission was the enlargement of the scope and power of the railway commission. That has not been implemented. The recommendation in regard to the horizontal war freight increases has not been implemented.

I now come to the Prince Edward Island car ferry and I will refer to what the commission stated in regard to that; they dealt at considerable length with and made some recommendations in regard to the question of transportation for Prince Edward Island Some of those recommendations have been carried out and some have not. A portion of the island railway is still a narrow gauge road and on that portion it is impossible to-day to operate the modern refrigerator or frost-proof railway cars, so that the people in that section of the country are not able during the winter months to take advantage of railway facilities as are their brethren in other portions of the island. That portion of the Duncan commission's report has not been implemented. The commission dealt at length with the question of the car ferry. They said that they had taken the matter up with the railway people and that it was admitted that the boat service was unsatisfactory. They went on to state:

> The railway administration admitted that there was need for supplemental provision being made in the form either of a second ferry boat or a special freight boat. We recommend that the matter be gone into from the point of view of placing at the disposal of the island such satisfactory means of communication as will ensure as regular and complete a service as can reasonably be made. We further recommend that, so far as the ferry boat service is concerned, it should not be run as part of the railway operations—

And so on. That last recommendation is a matter in which I am not particularly interested, but much can be said in regard to the car ferry. I find that some time ago the matter was taken up and a memorial was presented to the Railway department by the producers, merchants and exporters of the province of Prince Edward Island. Among other requests which they made was one that there should at once be built and put upon the connecting route a powerful, icebreaking car-ferry steamer equal in strength, power and capacity to the steamer Prince Edward Island now used as the connecting link, thereby affording better facilities and minimizing the risk of a dislocation of traffic by accidents of navigation. That was some time ago. Then I find that the Prince Edward Island Associated Boards of Trade in August, 1927, went on record and passed a resolution in regard to the need of a second car ferry on the Borden-Cape Tormentine route as recognized by the maritime royal commission.

I find that another resolution was passed on January 18, last, as follows:

> Resolved that the representatives of this county, in the House of Commons, and also the representatives of Prince and Kings counties, and the four Prince Edward Island senators be urged to exert every effort to impress upon the government and parliament of Canada the necessity and urgency that provision be made for the immediate construction of a new steamer for the Prince Edward Island car ferry service

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. Sinclair) was present and agreed with the sentiments expressed in the resolution. Resolutions asking for a second car-ferry steamer have been passed by boards of trade on numerous occasions and sent to Ottawa. In September, 1920, the Maritime board of trade at its annual meeting in Amherst unanimously passed a resolution asking that another car-ferry steamer be provided.

I have under my hand a letter received from a gentleman who is a native of Prince Edward Island, a citizen of Charlottetown, with interests in other sections of the island and intimately connected with business and farming interests throughout the island, a man whose word would be accepted by anybody in the island who knows him. He writes as follows:

Several prominent citizens here have suggested a public meeting to urge on the government the fulfilment of the Duncan report for the island. They seem of the opinion it is better to wait until the estimates are brought down. Then we shall know if the government is serious about a second ferry boat. The Island Farmers' Association—a very large and influential organization here—passed strong resolutions recently requesting, even demanding better transportation. The Associated Boards of Trade have left no stone unterned.

Then he goes on and says further:

Here is an illustration of our need: You know that potatoes are our great commodity. Within the last year or two winter marketing of them has greatly increased because the southern traders who supply the American farmers with our seed stock do not want to keep them in warehouses there. They want them delivered only as the southern farmers need them. Go any day when the thermometer registers 20 or over, one may see hundreds of teams on our country roads. But the great difficulty is a famine for cars. The ferry cannot bring in empties—refrigerators—fast enough nor export loaded cars fast enough. At the present time the shippers are three hundred cars short, and they are half crazy to get their supply away for they fear a slump in prices and some of them would be ruined. Then the southeast section of the island which is served by a narrow gauge line are still worse off. There are no frost proof cars for narrow gauge tracks. They have to ship in ordinary cars and many carloads have been ruined by freezing. Those farmers are moreover discriminated against by the expense of an extra handling of their shipments into broad gauge cars. And yet, John E. Sinclair will say the farmers are satisfied.

I have a further letter, dated May 5, which deals with the same subject, but I shall not burden the house with that, though it is even stronger than the other one.

[Mr. Cantley.]

I have also a resolution which was passed unanimously by the government of Prince Edward Island on the 26th of April last, as follows:

Whereas in this province the production of potatoes for both seed and table stock is becoming annually of greater volume and value;

And whereas there is evidence that the acreage planted with potatoes in 1928 will exceed by 20 per cent the acreage of 1927;

And whereas the transportation facilities as provided were not sufficient to move the 1927 crop of potatoes at a time when they should be marketed.

Then follow a number of other "whereas" clauses, and the resolution concludes:

Resolved that this legislature now assembled hereby strongly urge the federal authorities to take immediate action for the construction of a new and suitable car ferry to be placed on the Borden-Tormentine route at the earliest possible date.

Moved by Horace Wright and P. A. Scully.

I am sorry the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) is not in his place, because I would like to get some information from him in regard to the position and the condition of the three ferry boats—the Prince Edward, and the Scotia No. 1 and the Scotia No. 2. I think the house is now familiar with the situation so far as the ferry service between Tormentine and the island is concerned, and the necessity for that service. I will now refer to the character of the steam ferry boats operated by the railway department. The steamer Prince Edward Island is a boat thirteen years old. She is off that route just now, and will be off it for a month. She has been off the route every year for about the same length of time, due to the fact that she has to dry dock at Halifax and pass her annual survey. It will be within the knowledge of all my friends in the house who are familiar with shipping that all steel vessels, on obtaining the age of ten years, have to pass what is known as their No. 3 survey, and after that undergo an annual survey and overhaul. Some of these surveys are more exacting and take a longer time than others, and in the case of a boat as old as the Prince Edward Island about one month is required to complete the inspection and overhaul. This boat is one of very considerable power. She has three sets of triple engines, two sets aft, and one set forward. She has considerable water ballast, although not as much as she should have in view of the conditions under which she has to work, the total water ballast being 689 tons. This vessel was built under special survey at Lloyd's, so far as her machinery and boilers were concerned, but so far as I can find from Lloyd's register, and I have looked up the last volume available, which is that for the present year, nothing has been done to maintain this vessel's classification. There is no indication on the book that her classification is being maintained. I do not say that it is not; I do not know whether it is or not, but there is no information on Lloyd's register that such is the case.

Now I want to contrast the treatment given this boat, and contrast her record in Lloyd's with the record of the three boats on the Pacific coast—the Prince George, the Prince John and the Prince Rupert, which were built for and operated in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific, now the Canadian National. The record shows that the boilers of all these three boats were inspected, one in January, one in February, and one in March of last year, 1927, but there is no such record so far as the Prince Edward Island is concerned. While this boat is away from the Prince Edward Island service, her place is taken by one of the two boats which are on station at Mulgrave to maintain the traffic between the mainland and the island of Cape Breton. I do not know which of these boats is to-day relieving the Prince Edward. I have not been able to get that information; I have asked for it, but have not been supplied with it. The Scotia I is the older boat of the two; she is twenty-seven years old. She was built at Newcastle by Armstrong, Whitworth and Company. This boat has no classification in Lloyd's. The other boat was built in 1915, the same year as the Prince Edward Island; she is thirteen years old. She is a considerably larger boat than the Scotia No. 1, which I think is the boat relieving the Prince Edward Island at the present time, but her power is less than one-half that of the Prince Edward Island while the oldest Scotia, which is twenty-seven years old, has about one-quarter the power of the Prince Edward Island. One or other of these boats is now attempting to do what the Prince Edward Island, a much larger and much more powerful boat, cannot do, that is to give an efficient service to the province of Prince Edward Island.

The question was asked the Minister of Railways at a meeting of the special committee on railways and shipping, as to whether any arrangements had been made for building this year an additional boat for this service, and I was told by the president of the road, and also I think by the Minister of Railways, whom I now see coming into the chamber, that no provision was being made this year in that respect, and that no amount would be provided in the estimates for this service. Now that the Minister of Railways has come into the chamber I would ask him, will any provision be made in the railway estimates this year for a new island ferry boat to supplement the work that is being done by the Prince Edward?

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend would give me a chance to get into supply, and then we can deal with such matters as are in the estimates.

Mr. CANTLEY: Pardon me, but that is not a straight answer. I will give you all the time you want to answer my question now.

Mr. DUNNING: You are preventing me from answering it.

Mr. CANTLEY: I beg your pardon; I am waiting for an answer now.

Mr. DUNNING: I should be pleased to deal with the railway estimates when my hon. friend permits me to get them before the house, but if it will help him at all, I can assure him that the people of Prince Edward Island are likely to be pleased with the estimates of my department relating to that province.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am glad to know that. I asked a similar question at a meeting of the railways and shipping committee, and received the answer that nothing was going to be done this year in regard to that matter.

Mr. DUNNING: From whom?

Mr. CANTLEY: From yourself, I think, and also from the president of the road. Am I reporting correctly what occurred at that time?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think so.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister be good enough to tell me what answer was given me?

Mr. DUNNING: I shall be very glad to look it up in the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. CANTLEY: I have given the answer that was given to me, and I think it is correct.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will quote from the proceedings of the committee in relation to that matter, then neither of us will have to rely on our memory.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think I am usually able to rely fairly satisfactorily on my memory.

Perhaps the house would like to have some idea of how the Island people themselves regard the matter. I have here a copy of the Charlottetown Guardian of February 11, 1928, in which reference is made to the Canadian Press report from Ottawa of February 8, and it credits the Postmaster General with the following:

Mr. Veniot declared that the recommendations of the Duncan report had been fully implemented with respect to Prince Edward Island, and this fact had already been pointed out by one of the members from that province.

The article continues:

Hon. Mr. Veniot is evidently acting on the previous statement and assurance given in the house by Hon. John E. Sinclair, that he was entirely satisfied with the way the government had carried out the Duncan report recommendations in so far as it was possible to do.

Such an admission as this sent broadcast throughout the Dominion leaves a false impression and will do the case of Prince Edward Island incalculable injury. As an instance, look at the interpretation the Hon. Mr. Veniot has placed on Mr. Sinclair's statement when he announces "that the recommendations of the Duncan report had been fully implemented with respect to Prince Edward Island."

Is Mr. Sinclair advancing the interests of Prince Edward Island by permitting such unjustifiable statements to be sent broadcast absolutely contrary to the facts? Will any prominent shipper, business man, or farmer in this province endorse Mr. Sinclair's statement?

I will not detain the house by reading the remainder of the article. The matter is again taken up on March 11, when reference is made to the second car ferry and information requested. In the main it follows along the same lines as the preceding article from which I have quoted. I find a third article in which the members for Prince Edward Island on the government side are referred to as "rubber stamps." I will not weary the house by quoting it. It is in short a bitter complaint in regard to the way in which the island has been treated with respect to a second car ferry and the further extension of the standard gauge to the island railway.

Now, I cannot get the minister even to suggest that this year the department will provide an additional boat. Perhaps he will remember at this stage that two additional ferries are proposed for lake Michigan in connection with the western Grand Trunk division of the Canadian National Railways. Perhaps he will inform the house if those boats will be built this year, and if he thinks the interests of our American friends which would be served by those boats are more important than the interests of the people of Prince Edward Island.

One of the observations made by the Duncan commission is:

The outstanding fact, it seems to us, is that the maritime provinces have not prospered and developed, either in population, or in commercial, industrial and rural enterprise, as fully as other portions of Canada.

I propose to give hon. members some figures in regard to the increase in the population of the maritime provinces since confederation. I am going to contrast, in this respect, the three maritime provinces with Newfoundland. It is often said, particularly to our people of Nova Scotia: Had you not come into confederation, what would have become of you; what could you have done outside of confederation? Well, I desire to draw the attention of the house to the facts. In 1861, the year of the last census enumeration before confederation, Newfoundland had a population of 124,288; Prince Edward Island, 80,857; Nova Scotia, 330,857; New Brunswick, 252,047. The three maritime provinces combined at that time had an aggregate population of 663,751. In 1868, the year after confederation, it was estimated to be 771,799, and in 1921, 900,000. Now let me contrast with these figures the population of Newfoundland. In 1861, it was, as I have said, 124,288; in 1868, 131,000; and in 1921, 263,038. In other words, the percentage of increase over the same period in the case of Newfoundland was 112 per cent, while in the case of Nova Scotia it was under 60 per cent, and of New Brunswick under 54 per cent. Prince Edward Island actually lost population to the extent of 5 per cent as against Newfoundland more than doubling their population. The aggregate increase of the three maritime provinces was 36 per cent, contrasted with the 112 per cent increase of Newfoundland. Don't you think we could have got along had we of Nova Scotia remained without the Dominion of Canada? I make the assertion that the Dominion could not have been possible without the province of Nova Scotia; but Nova Scotia could have got along and done very well without confederation, measured by the experience of Newfoundland, where their resources are in no way comparable with those of my native province. Sir Andrew Rae Duncan refers to the fact that the people of Nova Scotia were able to take their place in regard to intelligence, energy and ability with the people of any of the other provinces. Reference has been made to the number of leading statesmen and professional men which Nova Scotia has supplied to the Dominion.

Now, a few weeks ago the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) made a considerable hullabaloo with reference to what one of his departments was doing in scientific research in the use of powdered fuels. I then called his attention to the fact that that was an old story in Nova Scotia, where we had been using powdered fuel commercially and in an ordinary manufacturing way for at least fifteen years. Apparently in some directions about all that the minister's department does is to follow up, fifteen years later, work which has been successfully done by commercial companies and manufacturing institutions in other parts of the country. That is notably so with regard to the mining department of this government. A little later some reference was made in this house to a steamer which had made a round voyage from the United States to the old country under powdered fuel. That boat was the first boat in the world to be equipped with boilers fitted to burn powdered fuel. She is owned by the United States Shipping Board, but is operated by a private corporation. Now I hold in my hand a copy of the Morning Chronicle, of Halifax, the Nova Scotia organ of my good friends opposite, in which there appears a report of the trial trip of the steamer Lingan, owned in Nova Scotia by one of the coal companies, and recently equipped with a powdered fuel boiler installation. She is the first boat in the British Empire to have been so equipped, and the second in the world. The first boat so equipped, and to which I have already referred, was equipped by J. F. Page, the manager of the company operating the vessel. J. F. Page was the former superintendent of the Halifax shipyards, and is a son of Captain Page, a well known former shipmaster of River John, Pictou county and at one time in the employ of the Scotia Steel Company, New Glasgow. As I say, he is the man responsible for the first successful operation in the world of such an installation. The outcome of this venture, I have not the shadow of a doubt, will be that the cost of operating these coal boats will be considerably reduced, with this further advantage, that they will be operated entirely on slack coal which, as everyone knows, is today a more or less undesirable product. We use it of course in coking, but for powdered fuel it must be specially treated in exhaust-tube mills and reduced to a very fine powder about the consistency of talcum, with which some of my friends are perhaps familiar. I refer to this matter simply to show that we in Nova Scotia are not backward in any walk of life, and it is not to be suggested that for that cause the maritime provinces have occupied the position which they have unfortunately held for a considerable time.

The Duncan commission made a recommendation in regard to an additional payment, by way of subsidy, of the sum of $870,000. This, they recommended, should be paid forthwith. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) last year told the house that he accepted that recommendation. The house rose in the latter days of April but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), with his Scotch caution, did not pay the amount forthwith; he paid one-half in July and the other half he paid only after some of those participating in the interprovincial conference, which met in the city of Ottawa, had protested against the non-payments of the money. And then, instead of paying the balance which was overdue, he wrongfully, in my judgment, withheld $130,000, being an amount in dispute in regard to a claim which then was and still is sub judice. Are we not justified in Nova Scotia in feeling that we are not fairly treated? I put it to the house, I put it to the minister himself: if he were in our place would he not complain? I take it he would.

My hon. friend from Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) has referred to the iron and steel industry; he has also made some reference to coal and coking plants. I told the house a year ago that the government's proposal in regard to a coking plant was of no use whatever to us. I repeat that statement, and I now wish to point out to hon. members what is taking place in Montreal. A large coking plant is being built there. Now, if the builders of that plant had had any intention of using domestic coal in connection with that installation they would have built the plant in or adjacent to the harbour of Montreal. But what have they done? They have built it on the canal bank where American coal can go directly to the plant, but where it is impossible to bring a ton of maritime coal except by transshipment by barges or railway cars. There is no possible doubt as to what their intention was; they located the plant in a place where it is practically impossible, due to transport charges, to use Nova Scotia coal. And that is all that this legislation will do in the way of assisting the coal industry of Nova Scotia. I pointed that out at the time, and my remarks in that regard have been amply justified by the evidence as stated.

So far as the iron and steel output of the country is concerned, it is unfortunately dwindling. Our March output was about 4 per cent below the output of the previous month. Our entire production of pig iron was only 74,000 tons, and of basic iron only 52,000 tons. In basic iron the amount was 22 per cent less than that of the previous month. The point to be noted is this: foundry iron is used simply for castings of various kinds—machinery castings, stoves and goods of that sort. The progress of the steel industry is measured by the production of basic pig iron, which is used entirely for the production of steel; and the reduction in output of basic pig iron is, as I have stated, 22 per cent. It has been gradually falling off, while the importations of steel from the United States are increasing year by year and month by month.

I wish to make another appeal to the Minister of Finance to remedy the idiotic customs tariff schedule to which I called attention fifteen months ago. We have seventy items on the free list or with a 99 per cent rebate. Now what is the tariff board doing?—this precious tariff board appointed on the same day as the Duncan commission. What have they reported? If they have made a report the minister has not translated it into legislation. Let me point this out. The minister when appointing the Duncan commission told them that they might consider any extraneous related matter, that the door was wide open so fas as their investigation was concerned; they were not to regard it in any narrow or restricted way. They proceeded with the investigation and after it had been carried on for some time in Nova Scotia they came to Ottawa and were told by the then chairman of the tariff board that, so far as tariff matters were concerned, his board had charge of that feature and that the Duncan commission were not to be allowed to investigate anything touching the fiscal phase of the maritime question. I am disappointed that Sir Andrew Rae Duncan submitted to that attitude and to the curtailment of the scope of the inquiry; he should not have done so in view of the terms of his commission. However, he did, with the result that so far we have had no statement of any kind as to how tariff matters have affected the maritimes. We have no report, so far as we know, from the tariff commission to the minister. If they have reported, the minister has not so intimated to the house; and although the Duncan commission's report has been in the hands of the government since September, 1927, we still have no action as regards the iron and steel tariff or bounties as suggested by the Duncan commission. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) made reference to the question of the tariff and the bounty called for by the Duncan commission, which would be equivalent to the rebate of the duty on American fuel used in iron and steel making. Why has not that recommendation been implemented? A great deal has been said about the unrest in Nova Scotia.

[Mr. Cantley.]

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must inform the hon. member that his time is up.

Mr. CANTLEY: Then I want to say that the incident of a couple of days ago—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANTLEY: —is further evidence that there is no intention on the part of this government to treat Nova Scotia as it should be treated.

Mr. T. E. SIMPSON (West Algoma): The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) deals particularly with the implementing of the Duncan report and refers especially to the maritime provinces, but one part of that amendment deals with the iron and steel industry and has a much wider application than the remainder of the amendment. It is that particular section of the amendment to which I desire to refer. I do not intend to detain the house at any length, because I spoke on this question in the early part of the session and placed my views as fairly and as clearly as I could before the government. However, I feel that I would not be properly representing my constituency if I did not take advantage of this opportunity to express my regret that the government have not seen fit to bring in legislation at this session to improve the condition of the iron and steel industry in this country.

Some time ago I directed a question to the Minister of Finance in this connection, and his reply was that the matter was still under investigation by the tariff board. If that is the case it appears to me that it shows an amazing lack of interest on the part of someone in not dealing with this matter more speedily, because it is more than two years since the question of iron and steel was submitted to the tariff board and surely in that period they have had ample time to conduct an investigation and make a report if they propose to do so.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, there are aspects of this question with which the government should be able to deal without waiting for any report from the tariff board. I referred to some of these points when I spoke on the matter earlier in the session. For instance, the question of spring and axle steel is one which could be so considered; that steel is used in the manufacture of automobiles in this country and is being imported in very large quantities. We make spring and axle steel in Canada equal to that made in any other country in the world, but the automobile manufacturers are allowed a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty paid on importations of that article, notwithstanding the fact that they enjoy a protection of from 20 per cent to 27½ per cent on their finished product. Surely it is not necessary to await the report of the tariff board to determine that that situation should be remedied. The minister has already admitted the principle, in speaking on the budget resolutions. The question of a certain grade of cotton yarn was under consideration; it had been free formerly but this year had a duty imposed upon it, and the minister was asked the reason for putting a duty on this article. His answer was that this was the finished product of a certain factory and that finished product was the raw material of another factory in Canada which was enjoying protection, so his point was that this concern manufacturing the yarn should be entitled to a proportion of the protection. Why not apply the same principle to the spring and axle steel which is used in the manufacture of automobiles? That is all we are asking.

Another point which I brought to his attention at that time was the question of structural steel. At present structural steel weighing over 35 pounds to the yard is subject to a duty of 15 cents per hundred pounds, while structural steel weighing under 35 pounds to the yard is subject to a duty of 35 cents per hundred pounds. The steel weighing over 35 pounds is the larger shapes, and at the time that tariff item was framed none of those larger shapes were made in Canada, so we can readily understand the reason for the difference in the duty. To-day, however, several of these larger shapes are made in Canada, and some of our steel plants are prepared to manufacture practically all the larger shapes required in Canada if given reasonable protection. If the same degree of protection is afforded the larger structural shapes that now applies to those under 35 pounds to the yard I think we would speedily see activity in some of our steel manufacturing centres.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is referring now to the Algoma Steel Company, is he not?

Mr. SIMPSON: Yes, for some time they have been making preparations along those lines. I do not think it is necessary to wait for a report from the tariff board in order to determine a matter of this kind. Then there is another question which has been brought to the attention of the government on several occasions in the last few years, action in regard to which would be of material assistance to the steel industry of Canada; I refer to a bounty on iron ore. The tariff board have nothing to do with that; they have not been asked to investigate that matter, but it has been looked into by a commission appointed by the Ontario government, a commission composed of competent and experienced men, who have made their report. I am not going into details at the moment; that matter has been placed before the government on several occasions in the past.

Mr. RALSTON: Would my hon. friend permit a question just there? Some time ago another hon. member mentioned that commission, and I then asked if he could tell us how much had been paid by the Ontario government in bounties under the legislation or under whatever action was taken following that report. That hon. member could not tell me; does my hon. friend know?

Mr. SIMPSON: The legislation was made subject to the Dominion government making provision for one-half the bounty.

Mr. RALSTON: Then no bounty has been paid by the Ontario government?

Mr. SIMPSON: No. Until the Dominion government makes provision for one-half of the bounty I understand that the Ontario legislation does not become effective.

These are some of the conditions under which the steel industry is labouring to-day. One particular instance comes to my mind, that of Baldwin's Limited, one of the largest steel manufacturing concerns in the British Empire, who built a factory at Toronto for manufacturing certain classes of steel. Although they presented their case to the government at different times they received no assistance, and as a result closed their factory. A little later on I will tell you where they are operating to-day.

Let us see what one of our sister dominions is doing in this regard. The Commercial Intelligence Journal of January 7, 1928, has the following article:

Australian Duties on Iron and Steel Products

In Commercial Intelligence Journal No. 1235 appeared a review of the principal Australian iron and steel industries down to a comparatively recent date. These companies have, for some time, contended that competition, particularly from the continent and to a lesser extent from the United Kingdom, was causing it to be unprofitable—under existing labour and wages conditions—to produce iron and steel products on the basis of a fair return for the capital invested.

The companies stressed that at least some of their processes of manufacture must perforce be discontinued, and many operatives thus thrown out of employment at a time when the country was experiencing the utmost difficulty in finding work for large numbers of men at present unemployed. Apparently the claims of the companies have caused the government to impose the very high protective duties as enumerated in the appended schedule. These duties, combined with ocean freights, insurance and landing charges, are—with the exception of some lines and products from Great Britain—considered by importers to be practically prohibitive if Australian industries are sufficiently developed to take care of the orders which must necessarily be placed with them for execution.

On the basis of per ton of 2,240 pounds, or at ad valorem rates (as the case may be), the following Australian customs duties became operative on November 25.—

	British Preferential	Intermediate	General
Bar, rod, angle, tee, in state they leave the rolls	£3 10s	£5 0s	£6 0s
Wire rod in coils	£2 4s	£3 5s	£4 0s
Wire, 15 gauge or finer	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	45 p.c.
Wire, fencing 8 to 14 gauge	free	£5 0s	£6 0s
Iron and steel tubes not over 3 in diameter. ad val.	free	5 p.c.	10 p.c.
On January 1, 1929 ad val.	40 p.c.	55 p.c.	60 p.c.
Steel boiler tubes ad val.	free	5 p.c.	10 p.c.
Steel rails, 50 pounds and over per yard	£2 10s	£4 5s	£5 0s

This means $25 per ton duty, under the general tariff, whereas the duty in Canada is $7 per ton.

	British Preferential	Intermediate	General
Steel rails less than 50 pounds per yard	£2 5s	£5 0s	£6 5s
Rolled iron or steel beams, girders, joists, channels and bridge iron or steel	£3 10s	£5 0s	£6 5s

Or $31.50 per ton, whereas the duty on structural steel entering Canada, weighing over 35 pounds per yard is $3 per ton.

As a result of that increase in the tariff, we find an article in the Commercial Intelligence Journal of May 12, 1928, as follows:

Subject to certain formalities now being completed, Dorman Long and Company Limited and Baldwins Limited, England, two of the largest manufacturers of iron and steel in the British Empire, whose products cover every class of iron and steel, also Howard Smith Limited, of Melbourne, who with associated companies have a very large industrial interest in Australia, have decided to join with Hoskins Iron and Steel Company Limited (the proprietors for the past twenty years of pipe and engineering works in Sydney and Brisbane and of iron and steel works at Lithgow) to establish and develop an iron and steel industry at Port Kembla, New South Wales, sixty miles south of Sydney.

It is proposed to call the company the Australian Iron and Steel Company Limited. It will have a nominal capital of £5,000,000 and take over the whole of the undertakings of the Hoskins Iron and Steel Company and the Australian business of Dorman Long & Company, as structural steel engineers and fabricators (exclusive of the Sydney harbour bridge contract). Baldwins and Howard Smith Limited will have substantial holdings.

As a result of the fiscal policy of the government, we find Baldwins, notwithstanding the fact they had built a factory here and had started operations, have closed their factory and removed their activities to Australia where they were given protection on their product.

The conditions obtaining here are such that imports of iron and steel are increasing at an alarming rate. For the year ending March 31, 1925, the importations of iron and steel and their products amounted to $134,684,441; for the year ending March 31, 1926, they had increased to $181,196,800; for the year ending March 13, 1927, $229,429,485; and for the year ending March 31, 1928, $259,573,668. Take March of this year, as compared with March, 1927. In March, 1927, we imported $4,530,527, under the heading of free; and in 1928, $6,360,751, an increase of almost 50 per cent. In 1927, under the heading of dutiable, we imported $24,042,752, and in 1928, $28,694,721. I have no doubt that a considerable portion of the amount shown under the heading of dutiable has been subject to a drawback.

This is a condition, Mr. Speaker, that will have a very serious effect on the steel industry if permitted to continue. This is a basic industry which a country must consider and encourage if it has hopes of developing industrially.

I would urge upon the government the necessity of taking quick action with respect to relief for the iron and steel industry. So far as structural steel is concerned, I do not think it is necessary to await legislation. My impression is that the government have the power by order in council to apply a duty to structural steel over 35 pounds per yard, the same as is now applicable to steel under 35 pounds per yard. I hope the Minister of Finance will give this matter his serious consideration.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Last evening at the adjournment of the house the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) announced that to-day we would go into supply and that among other departments we would take up the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Railways and Canals. I need not remind hon. gentlemen that the estimates of the Department of Railways and Canals contain some items that are of great importance to the maritime provinces. My hon. friend (Mr. Cantley) who seconded the resolution this afternoon devoted considerable time to finding fault with us for what we had not done and he desired certain information from the Minister of Railways and Canals. In so doing he himself contributed for almost an hour to delaying the securing of the information, because the Minister of Railways and Canals when he comes down with his estimates will be prepared to give the house information that I am sure will not be opposed by the people of the maritime provinces. My hon. friends the mover and the seconder of the resolution laboured long and hard to convince themselves that they really have a grievance. They know better than that; they know that the people in the maritime provinces are not in sympathy with all these continual whinings for something more to be done in addition to what has already been done. I do not think they are helping their position very much with the electors of Canada, if we bear in mind all that we have already done in implementing the Duncan report, to delay continually the proceedings of parliament by harping upon this particular question.

The resolution presented to-day is in striking contrast—and I will come to that later—with the resolution on fiscal policy of the Tory party as presented at the Winnipeg convention. They are bolder to-day than they were when they were out on the prairies and I fancy they are bolder to-day even than they would be when they get down to the maritime provinces. The resolution centres about two particular items. One is an increased tariff, a higher duty on steel. I do not think I am misrepresenting their position when I say that. The other is a bounty on steel and a bounty on coal. I am not very sure whether the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Simpson), who presented, very fairly I am bound to say, the position of the great industry in his part of the country, is altogether in sympathy with the speeches delivered by my hon. friends from Nova Scotia. I am not sure that he is in favour of a bounty on coal going into the manufacture of steel. I should like the hon. gentleman, or someone else speaking for him to come out now and say whether he is in favour of a bounty on Canadian coal going into the manufacture of steel. I should like to have that point cleared up because it might help me later on to reach a conclusion when representatives of the different industries come before the Minister of Finance and the tariff board, as they came before. What did Sir Andrew Rae Duncan say in regard to the tariff on steel and the tariff on coal? Sir Andrew Rae Duncan knew his position; he knew that he was not the tariff commissioner for Canada, and he was very careful to state his position regarding the question of tariffs. I have under my hand the statement made by Sir Andrew Rae Duncan's board and in it I note the following:

> Several features of the customs tariff in its relation to coal were brought to our attention, both by the government of Nova Scotia and by the operators of the coal mines.

Keep in mind that it was the government of Nova Scotia and the operators of the coal mines who brought this to their attention.

> These we feel ourselves precluded from dealing with, since they are a matter properly to be considered by the tariff advisory board; but we may be permitted to say that we are impressed with the need for reconsideration of the customs tariff in its relation to coal, anthracite and coke, and we recommend that the tariff advisory board should be asked to give immediate consideration to the subject.

That is as far as Sir Andrew Rae Duncan went in his report. He recommended that the tariff advisory board should give immediate attention to the question.

Mr. CANTLEY: Have they done so?

Mr. ROBB: I will come to that in a moment. Sir Andrew Duncan stated further:

> It was submitted that the tendency of the tariff, as affected by successive alterations, has been to lessen the protection upon the primary products of iron and steel and to encourage their importation from other countries as being the raw materials of iron and steel-fabricating and finishing industries in Canada.

What did Sir Andrew Duncan say about that? He said:

> In respect of this matter, we do not conceive it to be our duty to express any opinion, since the question is, as we were informed by the chairman of the tariff advisory board, who met us at our request, at the present moment under the consideration of that board.

Mr. HANSON: How long ago was that?

Mr. ROBB: This is from the Duncan report.

Mr. HANSON: That is two years ago.

Mr. ROBB: Two applications were made to the Minister of Finance to consider the iron and steel duties and the coal duties. One was made by that great corporation of the maritime provinces known as Besco, the British Empire Steel Corporation. The other was made by that company in the riding of the hon. member for West Algoma, the Algoma Steel Corporation. Those applications were made to the Minister of Finance in May, 1926, and at that time the first hearing was had on the applications. At the first public hearing the applicants appeared before the tariff board and they represented that they were under severe competition, particularly from overseas countries. Representatives of the tariff board were sent out to inquire into the allegations made before the board by these two great steel companies, the British Empire Steel Corporation and the Algoma Steel Corporation; but what happened? It was not very long after that until the British Empire Steel Corporation got into litigation; they became involved in a lawsuit, and the tariff board realized, from the attitude of the companies, the division of opinion that existed between the different parts of the companies, that they could not get very far and that no good purpose could be served by continuing the inquiry until after the question was settled. The question was prolonged for some time in the courts and eventually it was settled. The British Empire Steel Corporation was put into the hands of a receiver and under the receiver the management of the company has been so much better that the company is making greater progress than it did under the old management. I am not prepared to say that this is all due to the more efficient management because, as operators of the plant in Nova Scotia, they had pretty efficient management; but the receiver employed good salesmen who went out after business, and I am going to be able to show in a few moments that they secured more business. The tariff board has been waiting until this question was settled to have a further inquiry before it on the applications of the two great companies, the British Empire Steel Corporation and the Algoma Steel Corporation.

But they started something larger than they had imagined. When their application for a higher tariff on iron and steel and coal came before the tariff advisory board for a first hearing, then all the other industries throughout Canada that were interested in that question began to send in requests to the Minister of Finance for a hearing before the board, and the result is that there are now throughout Canada 350 firms interested in this application which originated in May, 1926, and they all want to get a hearing before the tariff board. I can quite understand how my hon. friends argue this afternoon that they would like to have this question settled here in parliament, rather than have to go before the tariff advisory board. I think they ars speaking by the book. I think they are speaking perhaps for some of these big corporations, because no later than April 19 of this year the chairman of the tariff advisory board was advised by the receiver for Besco that they were not interested very much in pushing this tariff application at the present moment. That is why the delay is taking place. The tariff advisory board is anxious to go on with the inquiry, and the government are anxious for the inquiry to go on because we want to get this question cleaned up, but the original applicant, the Besco, I say to my hon. friends who come from that part of the country, have declared that they are not just ready to go on with the inquiry, and they are not pressing the application before the board at this moment. That is why the board has not yet reported.

My hon. friend from West Algoma this afternoon presented the situation as it exists in Australia, with regard to the tariffs which they have recently introduced on iron and steel. But Australia has had a high tariff on iron and steel for some years, and the industry of Australia to-day is suffocated because of the high tariff they have on iron and steel and on other products, and the great mining industry of Australia has been practically standing idle for some time. I observe that my hon. friends hope that by higher and higher tariffs they are going to resuscitate this great industry in Australia, but if I read the press of Australia correctly, the Australians are beginning to think that they are top-heavy with tariff, and that their industries are suffering more from high tariff than from anything else.

Mr. SIMPSON: Then can the minister explain why Baldwin's, Limited, have closed their factory in Canada and gone to Australia, if high tariff is a deterring factor?

Mr. ROBB: Baldwin's got hold of a plant in Canada that was used for making munitions; they got it at a bargain. They had made a lot of money out of it during the war, but I do not think they ever opened that plant since. They had bought it for a song, thinking that they might operate it, but after looking into the matter, they decided not.

Mr. WHITE (London): They operated for a year on sheets.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend knows, and I will accept his statement.

The Duncan commission in its survey of the iron and steel industry of the maritime provinces had before them the statistics of that industry for the year 1925, because the commission was sitting during the summer of 1926, and it was only reasonable to suppose that when they were inquiring into that industry they would look up the general statistics of the iron and steel industry of Canada, because my hon. friends must remember that there are other provinces in Canada that are interested in the iron and steel industry besides the province of Nova Scotia. Now, what were the conditions in 1925? I find from the reports of the Bureau of Statistics for the year 1927 that the number of employees in the iron and steel industry increased from 1925 by 15,600; in other words, there are 15,000 more employees in the iron and steel industry throughout all Canada than there were in 1925.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister allow me to correct him? I am quite sure he does not intend to mislead the house, but the figures that he is giving take in all the subsidiary industries that use iron and steel. They do not deal simply with the primary products.

Mr. ROBB: Certainly, and the government has to do with all the iron and steel industries throughout this great Dominion. We cannot legislate for one industry alone.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): You have done it in the past.

Mr. ROBB: Well, we are not doing it now In 1925 the total number of employees in the iron and steel industry, as given by the Bureau of Statistics, was 90,125.

Mr. CANTLEY: That includes all subsidiary iron and steel working and fabricating shops small and large through Canada.

Mr. ROBB: Taking in all the industries, and in 1927 the number was 105,782. The selling value of the products of the iron and steel industry in 1925 was $411,378,640, and in 1927, $515,971,445.

My hon. friend a few moments ago complained of conditions in the coal industry in Nova Scotia. Well, in 1926, when the Duncan commission were considering the coal industry, they had before them the statistics for 1925, and I find that there were engaged in the coal industry of Nova Scotia—I am quoting now the sort of figures that will please my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Cantley)—8,333 employees and in 1927, there were 13,975 employees in that great industry.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): There was a strike in 1925.

Mr. CANTLEY: Quote a normal year.

Mr. ROBB: I am quoting the year which the Duncan commission had before them But I will take another year. The number of employees in that great industry in 1926 was 12,100, and in 1927, 13,975.

Mr. MANION: While my hon. friend is quoting statistics, will he give the importations of iron and steel into this country?

Mr. ROBB: I have not that before me. but my hon. friend will find it on the record; it was quoted a moment ago.

Mr. MANION: I know it quite well. It was $250,000,000 in one year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then why ask the question?

Mr. MANION: The minister is putting on the record figures that suit him, and I would like the other side put on the record at the same time.

Mr. ROBB: There are more people engaged in the iron and steel industry throughout Canada to-day than there were in 1925.

Mr. MANION: And more people engaged in foreign countries producing the same kind of products.

Mr. ROBB: As I said a moment ago, you are getting pretty far away from the Winnipeg convention. You had at the Winnipeg convention a few sane men who were determined not to get the great Conservative party into a position where they would be strangling the industries of this country, and they framed a resolution. I think I know who framed this particular resolution. I did not sit opposite that gentleman for a few years without being able to recognize his style. Here is the resolution:

> This convention desires to record its feeling of pride in the growth and progress and prosperity of Canada, under the historic fiscal policy of the Liberal-Conservative party.
>
> It affirms its adherence to the principles of that policy in its declared objects of stimulating the development of the natural resources of the Dominion; preserving and enlarging the market for Canadian farm products; building up the industries of Canada, and thus creating employment for our workmen, promoting interprovincial trade, and generally providing a diversified economic life which will be effectual in retaining Canada's sons and daughters within our own boundaries.

As to tariff revisions the convention declared:

> In such revisions regard should be had not only to the objects of fiscal policy herein enumerated, but to the welfare of the consumer, and it is desirable in the national interest that in such revisions the cost of living and the cost of the implements used in production, of whatever nature, should be given special and attentive study with a view to the reduction of such costs to the extent practicable.

That is a pretty sound position. Now my hon. friend a moment ago advocated bounties. He said: We want higher duty and bounties, but if we cannot get both we want bounties. I recall the attitude of the Conservative party on bounties. I have before me a speech made by a pretty good minister of finance, Sir Thomas White. In his budget speech of 1914 he said:

> My own view is that bounties are justifiable to call into being new industries where capital, which is always timid as to experimental ventures, requires special inducement to enter upon their development, but after such enterprises have been called into being and firmly established, it is difficult to justify further aid of a direct character.

That was the view of Sir Thomas White when he was Minister of Finance.

Mr. MANION: What was Mr. Fielding's view?

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Fielding introduced bounties for this parent industry to get it started, but as the years progressed he allowed them to lapse, and he had exactly the same view as Sir Thomas White, that when an industry got going it should be able to stand on its own feet.

My hon. friends have referred to the question of reciprocal trade, and although they have not emphasized it very much to-day, I observed from some of the preceding speeches that they were very strong on doing something for the maritime provinces by way of getting larger and better markets for their natural products. I wonder what their policy is to-day. I know the voters in the maritimes are sound on this; they have learned a lesson. But what is the attitude of the Tory party? Is it the same attitude as the party had in 1911? I think it is important that before this debate closes we should know just exactly where the Tory party stand on this question.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I belong to the Liberal-Conservative party.

Mr. ROBB: There were a good many people in the constituency of my hon. friend who were not just sure where he belonged during the election.

Mr. MANION: They know now.

Mr. ROBB: I am not going over the various votes that have been put through to implement the recommendations of the Duncan report, but I observe that the supply bill is practically padded with votes for the maritime provinces.

Mr. HANSON: Not in my county.

Mr. ROBB: I do not know what county my hon. friend comes from; but notwithstanding the complaints made this afternoon regarding certain warehouses down in Prince Edward Island, I observe that for Georgetown we voted $54,000 odd for the reconstruction of a wharf and frostproof warehouse; for dredging $16,448, and for additional dredging $7,650. With respect to Summerside there has been voted for reconstruction of wharf, $58,497, for dredging $4,972, and for additional dredging $5,400. For Charlottetown there has been voted for the reconstruction of wharf, contract now awarded, $136,000 and for dredging $63,000 odd. So I submit to my hon. friends that the little province of Prince Edward Island has not been badly treated by this government. We have gone a long way, as my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) will prove in a few moments, to implement the recommendations of the Duncan report.

What about the recommendations in that report with regard to the ports in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick? Surely hon. gentlemen opposite have not forgotten their own obstruction when my colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) was trying to put through the different bills for harbours.

Mr. HANSON: There was no obstruction.

Mr. ROBB. There was obstruction in dealing with the Quebec harbour bill which delayed us getting down to the bills relating to St. John and Halifax harbours.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): No, no.

Mr. ROBB: Eventually we got down to the ports of the maritime provinces, and there we advanced $500,000 to one and $5,000,000 to the other.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I remind the hon. minister that I have upheld the ruling made by those who have preceded me in the chair, that an hon. member cannot accuse another hon. member of obstructing.

Mr. ROBB: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to use the word "delay". Now, a moment ago my hon. friend complained regarding the additional vote for subsidies to the maritime provinces. As hon. gentlemen will recall, in the estimates last session there were provided additional votes of $875,000 to Nova Scotia, $600,000 to New Brunswick and $125,000 to Prince Edward Island. Similar amounts are in the estimates this year to be again voted. My hon. friend complains because the Department of Finance did not go directly contrary to the statute and pay out these votes in a lump sum. We paid out these subsidies as we always do, semi-annually. We made the first payment regularly, and when the representatives of the interprovincial conference met here in Ottawa I think two of them made this representation to us: Our annual year ends the last of November: We wonder if you could let us have that money before the first of January. They recognized that it was not due until that date. They were reasonable men. We said: Yes, we have the money and we will make the payments a few days in advance to help you out. But those gentlemen recognized that the Dominion treasury was under no obligation to make the payments earlier than we had made the preceding payments.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: What was the wording of the Duncan report in that regard; was it not that an immediate interim lump sum should be paid?

Mr. ROBB: No, the word "immediate" was not there. Another point hon. members from the maritimes might very well keep in mind. At the interprovincial conference to which I have referred not one of the representatives of the larger provinces made any objection to giving this additional grant to the maritime provinces.

Mr. SHORT: Because they had no right to.

An hon. MEMBER: Why should they?

Mr. ROBB: Not one had any objection.

An hon. MEMBER. Why should they?

Mr. ROBB: The government intend to reconsider these subsidies and place them on a proper basis. What more need I say? My hon. friend finds fault because the tariff advisory board have not yet reported. The fact of the matter is that the main industry in his own province is delaying the inquiry by the board. No one could be more anxious to go on with the inquiry and clean up the matter before next session than the members of the government and of the tariff advisory board.

Mr. EVANS: May I ask the minister a question on the steel industry? The Financial Post of April 20 contains a news item that the government had given a promise to the steel industry that if they could get past the gauntlet of western criticism the government would give them something next year on which the industry could be built up.

Mr. ROBB: I read that article, and if my recollection is correct the article did not state it in the words my hon. friend has indicated. It was a "feeler", put out as an ordinary news item; it was a feeler, I admit. But they did not say specifically that the government had made any promise to them, and if they made that statement they are wrong; the government has made no promise to them. The government has referred this steel inquiry to the tariff advisory board. Some 350 other firms throughout Canada have said, "We want to be heard on this; we are interested. We employ more labour in the steel and iron industry than do the two large steel industries, and we want to be heard". As a matter of fact, in the steel and iron industry of Canada, but 4 per cent are employed in the province of Nova Scotia. I ask, has the government to give no consideration to the other 96 per cent? Have we not some interest in doing what we can, what is reasonable, what the country will support, to keep these other industries throughout Canada employing labour, paying good wages, and thus keeping them as prosperous as they are now?

In conclusion, all I have to say is this. The government are sympathetic to the great iron and steel industry of Canada. We have shown that sympathy, having due regard to all other industries in Canada. And the steel industry themselves having elected to go before the tariff board, we say to them, "Gentlemen, you must appear before that board and have this inquiry made before next session".

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is my hon. friend aware that the Halifax Herald advertised and asked us to visit the prosperous province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. R. K. SMITH (Cumberland): It is not my purpose to detain the house very long in the few remarks I wish to make. May I say, first, that I associate myself with the mover and seconder of this amendment.

Before taking up what I had in mind discussing in this connection, may I refer for a minute or two to some observations made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), who has just taken his seat. Towards the end of his address he was asked by the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall) whether the word "immediate" was not in the Duncan report in reference to the lump sum payments recommended to be paid the maritime provinces; and the Minister of Finance said that the word "immediate" was not in the report. I have in my hand a copy of the report and at page 19 I find this:

> And accordingly we recommend that immediate interim lump-sum increases—

The Minister of Finance said the word "immediate" was not there.

Mr. ROBB: Read the whole thing.

Mr. DUNNING: Immediate increases.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Exactly; but the Minister of Finance said that the word "immediate" was not there.

Mr. DUNNING: He said "immediate payment" was not there.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): That is a rare variety of quibbling with which I am not acquainted. The report states:

> We recommend that immediate interim lump-sum increases should be made in the payments to the three maritime provinces as follows:

Mr. LAPOINTE: That was done.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Not only that, but the Minister of Finance misled the house with reference to what the Interprovincial conference did with regard to the non-payment of these subsidies. My information is that the Minister of Finance was called before the conference, because those who were there, from all over the Dominion, resented the fact that these subsidies had not been paid in full.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. ROBB: Will my hon. friend let me nail that right now. It is but fair to the ministers from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to say that there was nothing of the kind. They came to me quietly and wanted to know whether we were in funds and could let them have the money, so that their books would make a beter showing at the end of the year.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I accept the minister's word immediately. My information was to the contrary.

Mr. DUNNING: Where from?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): From those who came representing the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. DUNNING: From the ministers concerned?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): You look at the records, as you said to someone else this afternoon, and you will find the names of those representing Nova Scotia at the Interprovincial conference.

Mr. ROBB: Does my hon. friend say that either Premier Rhodes or Mr. Harrington made that statement?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I have made the statement and I leave it to the Minister of Finance to put whatever interpretation he likes on it. The statement stands.

Now, the Minister of Finance seemed to be annoyed and agitated at the fact that we were holding up the house for a few hours to discuss the question of steel and coal in the province of Nova Scotia. We have been waiting since confederation for fair play in Nova Scotia, and neither the Minister of Finance nor any other member on the other side of the house has any right to get up and complain because we occupy a few hours in order to put our claims before this honourable body. Another point the Minister of Finance made was that we were whining with regard to what had not been done. If we are whining—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Someone on the other side say "hear, hear". If we are whining, the boards of trade all over Nova Scotia are whining. They have sent resolutions to every member from Nova Scotia complaining that the Duncan report had not been implemented in full; and I am sure the house will be surprised to know that one of these resolutions was signed by the president of the Liberal association of Nova Scotia.

If we are doing a little whining in connection with the matter, whining has been done by others in Nova Scotia as well.

The Minister of Finance also went into the question of the high tariff wall on iron and steel in the commonwealth of Australia and stated that they were ready to abandon that high tariff because they thought it was interfering with their business in that country; and he made some odious comparisons between Australia and Canada. If you want to get at the basis of the development of the steel industry in any country, the most glowing example is the United States. When they established their steel industry they put their tariff high enough to shut out all competition. And what are we up against in Canada? A few days ago I saw in the newspaper that we imported $300,000,000 of iron and steel products in the last year, while our own steel industry, one of the primary industries in this country, is idle—the foundries in Sydney and other places in Nova Scotia, for instance. It does not seem to me that the policy of this government is one that is of much benefit to the steel and iron industry or to the Dominion of Canada, when we have to send three hundred millions of our good dollars annually over to the United States, importing steel and iron products into this country.

There is another point in connection with this steel industry. The primary steel industry of Canada enjoys a protection of less than 10 per cent, while the other steel industries—the finished product—enjoy a protection of around 30 per cent. We are trying to struggle along with a protection of under 10 per cent; and the way we are struggling is tragic, sending $300,000,000 a year to other countries for iron and steel products.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Are the dollars there?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I suppose they are there; they were sent there. I think they usually keep what they get.

Mr. ADSHEAD: That is more than all Canadian currency.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): You can suit yourself if you can get comfort out of that. Now, we in supporting this amendment are not merely speaking our own minds when we advocate the implementing of the Duncan report in toto; we are voicing the sentiments of the people of the maritime provinces. We are not at all ashamed to come forward and say that we were promised that this report would be implemented in full, and we certainly know in the maritimes that it has not been implemented in full. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), making a statement in the house last year, implied that the report, with regard to steel and coal, would be implemented in full as soon as the big steel and coal company question was decided and the litagation settled. These things have all taken place, yet we are nearing the end of another session of parliament with no legislation brought down and nothing done to implement the Duncan report in that particular. The Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot), speaking in the city of St. John last fall, said that what the government was going to do for the steel industry in the province of Nova Scotia during the coming sesssion would make every citizen of the maritime provinces proud. Well, we have waited to see what was to be done, but up to the present nothing has been done and from the remarks of the Minister of Finance I judge that nothing will be done, because I rather took it from his remarks that he considered we were getting more than we were entitled to at present.

Mr. QUINN: They will recommend it to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Yes, or perhaps to the tariff board. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have to refer to only one other matter, and that is the question of coal. During the present session I placed a question on the order paper asking if the Canadian National Railways owned a coal company in the United States. The answer was that they did, that it was taken over when the assets of the Grand Trunk Railway were taken over by the Canadian National Railway. In that same answer I found that this company supply coal to Canada to the extent of about 300,000 tons annually. It seems to me that this government has not grasped the true national spirit with respect to coal and steel in Canada. I have given the figures with respect to the money sent to the United States to bring steel to this country, and it is well known that a tremendous sum of money, over $100,000,000 yearly, is sent to that country to bring coal to Canada. It is also a well known fact that many of our coal miners and steel workers are out of employment but still the Canadian National Railways, which is a branch of this government, owned by the Dominion of Canada, operates a coal mine in the United States and sells coal back to our Canadian people; probably it is used on the Canadian National railway. I believe that in justice to the people of this country the Canadian National Railways should be instructed by this government to dispose of property of that kind in the United States, which is being operated in direct competition with our own coal mines and to the detriment of our coal miners in Canada.

Hon. J. A. MACDONALD (Kings): Lest the remarks of the Minister of Finance leave the impression that all the grievances of the maritime provinces have been settled, I feel it necessary to say a few words in connection with the failure of the government to implement the Duncan report particularly as it affects the province of Prince Edward Island. First, however, I wish to express appreciation for what has been done, and to say that in connection with certain important recommendations the government have done very well. However, having in mind the remarks of the Prime Minister when he dealt with this matter a year ago, in which he said that the government were accepting the recomendations of the Duncan commission practically in their entirety, I want to call attention to some very important matters which have not been dealt with.

In connection with the transportation system of Prince Edward Island the Duncan commission reported:

> There are two features of transportation as it affects Prince Edward Island that call for special mention...
>
> The railway administration admitted that there was substantial foundation for much of the complaint we heard in Prince Edward Island with regard to the railway service there. It appears that in view of the character of the roadbed and the succession of heavy curves and heavy grades, the difficulties which railway operations incur, and the inconvenience which the public suffers, cannot be quickly and substantially lessened without a measure of capital expenditure.

Further on they say:

> Such improvements as the railway administration could effect, if they had to be undertaken out of the revenues appropriated to the Atlantic division each year for maintenance, would take a long time to complete.
>
> We recommend that the railway administration should be asked to make a survey of what is required in this connection, and that the department should make capital provision for the improvements to be undertaken within the shortest possible time.

A year ago I placed a question on the order paper in this regard, and the answer I received stated that the question of capital expenditure on the Prince Edward Island railway was dealt with by the Duncan commission, which recommended a survey, and that the situation in this regard was under investigation. More than a year has passed since then, yet we come to parliament again and find not a dollar in the estimates to provide for this work which was recommended to this government almost two years ago.

I would like to call the attention of the minister to some of the handicaps under which we are suffering there, not only with regard to that part of the system which is still on narrow gauge but also to those sections which have been given a so-called standarization For instance, on some of the standardized sections last year the roadbed was in such a condition that even minimum carloads could not be shipped; less than a minimum carload had to be shipped on account of the condition of the roadbed, and the result was that in many cases of which I have personal knowledge shippers were obliged to pay the minimum carload rate for less than a minimum carload of produce. That is one feature in connection with the roadbed, and there are others; traffic necessarily moves slowly and it takes many more cars to carry these small loads than would be the case if the roadbed were put in good condition.

Then consider the part which has not been standardized. The people who have to use the Murray Harbour branch of the railway, which is still on narrow gauge, are handicapped to a very large extent, and certainly they will not agree with the Minister of Finance when he says that redress has been made for all the grievances. Consider the conditions with which these people have to contend. First we find that since a large proportion of the shipments consist of perishable articles such as potatoes and turnips, these people are up against frost conditions early in November. They have practically no protection against that and the result is that when the market becomes really active, in the latter part of November and December, which is the best time of the year for them, as a rule they are unable to ship at all. Then these products have to be transferred to standard gauge cars at Charlottetown, even under the best conditions, which involves delay and extra labour as well as injury to the produce by reason of this extra handling. This is a grievance for which nothing has been done; nothing is provided in the estimates to remedy this condition.

A very serious matter, and one which affects the whole of the island more than anything else, is the car ferry. In this connection the Duncan commission reported that the ferry boat service was unsatisfactory, and they recommended that a second car ferry be placed in the service. They also said:

> We further recommend that, so far as the ferry boat service is concerned, it should not be run as part of the railway operations, but should be run by the railway administration under separate account for the department.

With regard to the need for improved service I would like to give a few figures to show the great increase in traffic which has taken place recently. In 1922 the car ferry carried 11,452 loaded cars; in 1926 that number increased to 15,925 and in 1927 to 19,827, or an increase of about 25 per cent from 1926 to 1927. In addition, it was necessary to ferry over 5,000 empty cars, because as everyone knows, with a seasonable product such as potatoes, you must ferry over empty cars in order to bring them back loaded, as there is no demand for perishable products in Prince Edward Island which would bring the refrigerator cars loaded. The average is about 70 cars per day, and one boat has been obliged to handle this. If the traffic was spread over the whole year, so that there would be only an average of 70 cars per day, the boat would be able to handle them, but the traffic is seasonable and a great bulk of it has to be moved in the months of November and December. The boat operating with a double crew, twenty-four hours per day, every day of the week, including Sundays, has not been able to handle the traffic. The railway management has done everything possible in that regard, and last year there were no complaints with regard to the shortage of refrigerator cars during the fall months, until the middle of February when a shortage occurred.

Mr. DUNNING: And they handled more business than ever.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Yes, I would like to quote from a report given out on April 3 by W. U. Appleton, general manager of the Atlantic region:

From the date of the opening of the shipping season in October last to the 31st of March, this year, the Canadian National Railways car ferry has moved from Prince Edward Island to the mainland over 1,000 more carloads of potatoes than were carried across in the season of 1926-27. Up to March 31st, inclusive, there were 3,832 carloads of potatoes ferried from the island province; for the same period last season there were 2,781, thus an increase of 1,051 carloads. Before the shipments of this season are completed the total will have reached 4,000, if not exceeding that number.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

PORT HURON AND SARNIA BRIDGE COMPANY

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. 42, to incorporate the Port Huron and Sarnia Bridge Company.—Mr. Odette.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have been informed by the hon. member that this bill is to be dropped.

Mr. E. G. ODETTE (East Essex) moved:

That the order for the second reading of Bill No. 42, to incorporate the Port Huron and Sarnia Bridge Company, be discharged and the bill be withdrawn, and that the fees and charges paid thereon be refunded less the cost of printing and translating the said bill.

Motion agreed to and bill withdrawn.

CANADIAN-AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL BRIDGE COMPANY

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. 47, to incorporate Canadian American International Bridge Company.—Mr. Edwards (Ottawa).

Mr. SPEAKER: I have also been informed that this bill is to be dropped.

Mr. A. J. MACDONALD (Glengarry): moved:

That Bill No. 47, to incorporate Canadian American International Bridge Company, be discharged and the bill be withdrawn, and that the fees and charges paid thereon be refunded less the cost of printing and translating the said bill.

Motion agreed to and bill withdrrawn.

ST. CLAIR TRANSIT COMPANY

The house resumed from Friday, April 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Goodison for the third reading of Bill No. 23, to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. 56, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada—Sir Eugene Fiset—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Increase of capital.

Mr. LADNER: This bill has been thoroughly considered by the banking and commerce committee, whose function it is to go into the details of all the sections. Certain compromises were arrived at and the vote resulted in an overwhelming majority for the passing of the bill. The bill was likewise considered in committee of the house on one occasion for nearly an hour and in view of the general knowledge of the bill and its purpose I move that it be now reported. An opportunity for discussion can no doubt take place on the third reading.

Mr. CHURCH: The other night when the bill was in committee I had the floor and I had not concluded my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion is not debatable.

Mr. SPENCER: I rise to a point of order. This Bill has never been reprinted as it came from the committee and therefore I do not see that we are in a position to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN: The point raised by my hon. friend is not well taken. There has been no order issued that the bill should be reprinted. The motion for reporting the bill is carried.

Motion agreed to and bill reported.

Sir EUGENE FISET moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPENCER: Next sitting.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): When the house was in committee the other night I spoke for about five minutes in opposition to the bill. This bill has been a football in parliament for some years. When the bill was reported back to the house, we had quite a debate on it. This particular company has been coming to parliament for many years seeking favours. In my opinion this bill is a sample of the way in which insurance companies have been playing fast and loose with the legislation of the country and the sooner we have a new insurance act making it compulsory for all these companies to be under sound public control, the better. This particular company came to parliament first away back in 1865 and got a charter under chapter 43 of the statutes of that year. It came back in 1870 and got another act passed, chapter 58, along the same lines. Not satisfied with that it came back again in 1871 and got another act passed, chapter 53. It came back again in 1882, when chapter 100 of the statutes was passed and again in 1897 when chapter 82 of the statutes was passed. Now it comes along with this bill No. 56, section 1 of which reads:

> The capital of the company shall be five million dollars, and the unissued portion thereof may be issued from time to time by the directors in such amounts as they may deem in the interests of the company.

Clause 2 of the bill provides:

> Except as hereinafter provided no sums in excess of twenty-five per cent of the amount subscribed thereon shall be called by the directors or received by the company as payment on account of any shares of the capital stock which may be hereafter issued, except under the authority of and in accordance with the terms of such general enactment, if any, as may be passed by the parliament of Canada dealing with all life insurance companies which have a capital stock and derive their powers from the said parliament of Canada, unless the capital of the said company should at any time become impaired, as defined in subsection two of section seventy of the Insurance Act, or the company should in any year fail to declare dividends to the holders of its participating policies.

In the explanatory note on the opposite page of the bill it is pointed out that subsection 2 of section 70 of the Insurance Act reads as follows:

> The capital of a company shall be deemed to be impaired when its assets, exclusive of its paid-up capital, are less than its liabilities calculated according to the requirements of this act.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Superintendent of Insurance was opposed to this bill. Then by clause 3 it is provided that the par value of the shares shall be $10. We all know what an increase that will mean.

Then clause 4 distinguishes between different classes of shares, and provides for the approval of the transfer of the shares.

Clause 5 deals with the surrender or exchange of the shares, and the underlined portion of clause 5 reads:

> as many fully paid shares of "Class B" stock as may be by said by-law provided, but the paid-up value of the shares of "Class B" stock which may be so given as payment or in exchange shall not exceed by more than twenty-five per cent the paid up value of the shares surrendered. The shares thus surrendered shall ipso facto become "Class B" stock and may be reissued as such by the company.

So by legislation they are going to change one class of security for another, and we are being asked to interfere with the ordinary commercial transactions of the sales of the shares of this company.

Clause 6 deals with the sale of shares to employees and policyholders, and according to an explanatory note in the bill as reprinted the words "but not more than one hundred of such shares may be so sold to any one person," at the end of section 6 are omitted, at the expense, no doubt, of the policyholders, as has been done before, and for the benefit of the shareholders.

Clause 7 provides that the stock qualification of a director shall be twenty-five shares of the capital stock.

I wish to protest, Mr. Speaker, against the passing of this bill. I do not think it is in the public interest that this house should lend itself to passing this class of legislation. I have a motion of which I have given notice already for the six months' hoist. Canada has been a very happy hunting ground for the Sun Life Company. Talk about what the Sun Life has done for Canada; what has Canada done for the Sun Life? The company has taken away the premiums paid in by those policyholders who have allowed their policies to lapse. If a soldier who has come back from the war finds himself out of work and unable to pay his premiums, then the company, if his policy has not run for three years, keep all the money he has paid in, and what this and other life companies receive in this way runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars. The Sun Life is not investing its money to develop Canada alone, but it has investments all over the civilized world. The company is a law unto itself. It comes to parliament and gets amendments to its charter which are not within the four corners of the general Insurance Act or sound insurance. There should be a national policy evolved with respect to insurance and for the regulation of insurance companies. A resolution was introduced into this house two years ago with regard to the way in which not only this company but many other insurance companies are able to evade the law not only with regard to lapsed policies, but in regard to their general business policy all along the line we need a national insurance policy. More restrictions should be placed in the Insurance Act, or the act will be more effective than the Bank Act was some years ago. I do not suggest that this particular company is to blame, because it is in a good financial position and I believe it is well managed, but I do object to this parliament passing legislation of this kind for the benefit of a company which utilizes its money, not for the development of Canada alone particularly, but for investment purposes all over the world to suit its own purposes.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): I had little idea that this bill would come up so soon this evening, and little idea that it would come up in the way it has. I did expect to see a reasonable discussion upon it, because it is not only an important bill but a very contentious one. The hon. member who moved that the bill be reported knew perfectly well not only that the bill was a contentious one, but that amendments have been proposed against it, and therefore I wish to protest vigorously against this sort of procedure.

We all admit that the Sun Life is a very large company, and that it has done well for its policyholders, but I do not know that it has done more for its policyholders than many other companies; in fact, I do not think it has done quite so much.

We are also told that this company is a great asset to this country. I would like to ask, what makes a company of any description a great asset to any country? I would think that it was because of one of three things. I would say that this company was a great asset to this country if it insured a large number of our citizens at a reasonable rate. Or it might be a great asset if it distributed profits to a large number of shareholders. Or it might be a great asset to this country if it invested a large amount of its money in Canadian industry. If any of these three things were true with regard to the Sun Life, I would say that it was a great asset to this country, but what do we find? With regard to issuing insurance at reasonable rates, I am informed on the best of authority that its terms are no better than those of the average life insurance company, and not as good as some. Furthermore, instead of insuring the Canadian public in large numbers, I find that only a very small percentage of this company's business is done in Canada. According to a statement of my hon. friend who sits near me, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), which will be found at page 2412 of Hansard of 1927, sixty-three per cent of the business of this company was at that time done outside of Canada, and possibly seventy-five per cent of its business will be done outside this country within a year's time. According to correspondence now made public between the president of this company and the Insurance department, an even greater percentage of the business of this company is done outside Canada.

With regard to distributing its profits to its shareholders, here again we find a weakness, because the shareholders are not so very many after all. Out of 20,000 shareholders, we find that 51 shareholders control no less than 13,926 shares, while 524 shareholders control only 6,074 shares. So on that ground the company falls down in being a great asset to this country. In the third place, how much of this company's money is invested in Canada? This is a very important point, because we are everlastingly hearing of the need of bringing capital into this country. With regard to the capital of this company and its investments, I was surprised to find that although it claims to be such an asset to Canada it has invested its funds very largely in other countries. Now, if the company has so much at heart the interests of Canada, why does it not invest its capital in Canadian industries? Instead of doing this, we find that in the United States alone the company is interested in no less than 233 American concerns, and its foreign investments total over two hundred million dollars.

Mr. HAY: May I ask the hon. member how much of the company's insurance is written in Canada and how much in other countries?

Mr. SPENCER: According to the president of the company, not more than 15 per cent of its insurance is written in Canada.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): How much of the company's capital is invested in this country?

Mr. SPENCER: I have informed the house how much the company has invested outside —two hundred million dollars. I have not under my hand the total of its Canadian investments. I understand the main purpose of this bill is to enable the company to increase its capital. Why is this desired? Because, say those who represent the company, the directors are afraid of Americans buying up sufficient of the stock to secure control. But the directors are not at all timid of investing millions and millions of dollars in American concerns. As to the bogey of Americans getting control, I would remind the house that out of twenty thousand shares of stock Americans hold only 2,058 shares. So there does not appear to be much danger of control of the company passing into the hands of United States interests.

Mr. McGIBBON: Where does my hon. friend get his figures?

Mr. SPENCER: From blue books, from the evidence taken by the banking and commerce committee, and from the department of insurance.

Mr. McGIBBON: Of what date?

Mr. SPENCER: I cannot give the exact date, but they are the latest figures that I could secure. With regard to the capital of the company, there is a difference of opinion among the legal lights. In the early days the company had a life branch and a general branch, and two million dollars capital was allocated to each. In the course of time one of these branches was dropped and the company carried on with just two million dollars capital. This was ample, for as with all good insurance companies, the capital eventually became infinitesimal as compared with the total assets. As to whether the capital is actually two million dollars or four million dollars, I have seen a copy of a letter from the Justice department stating that the correct figure is two million dollars. It is interesting to note how the capital of two million dollars was paid up. To the end of last year cash payments were made to the amount of $305,000, plus stock bonuses of $845,000, plus premiums of $120,000. As against this they have built up from the premiums paid by the policyholders a huge investment of nearly $500,000,000. I understand that the original charter of the company gave the directors complete control over the transfer of shares unless they were fully paid up.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. On April 13, during the hour devoted to private bills, Bill No. 23, to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company was before the house, and I moved an amendment to the bill—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman will be in order in raising his point after the debate on this bill is concluded.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand that up till January 1 this year the shares were not fully paid up, with the result that the directors had it entirely in their own power to prevent control of the company passing into the hands of Americans. But about that time it is said the directors invited the shareholders to pay up the balance owing on their stock. The stock being now fully paid up, the directors have lost, voluntarily, the only means they had of retaining the shares absolutely in the hands of Canadians. That seems to me to be a complete answer to their expressed fear of control of the company passing into American hands unless this increase of capital is granted.

I am opposed to the bill being passed in its present form because the proposed increase of capital would be a decided hardship on the policyholders. To-day the company is paying to its shareholders 25 per cent. An increase of capital is not needed. If authority is granted for the proposed increase, the proceeds will have to be reinvested, and even if the directors succeed in finding securities to return as high as 6 per cent, the policyholders will have to make good the balance of 19 per cent to continue the dividend at 25 per cent. Naturally the shares of the Sun Life Company have become very valuable. To-day I understand they are over the two thousand dollar mark. Therefore it looks very much as though this were another of those beautiful companies who largely water their stock, buying new stock at par and making a very good rake-off for the present shareholders—to the loss, of course, of policyholders. One shareholder alone, I understand, controls 2,441 shares.

An hon. member when in committee claimed that the company needed to increase its capital because, without increased capital, it would not be able to sell insurance. I have a splendid answer to that argument. I have before me a statement in regard to ten of the largest American insurance companies, eight of which are mutual companies. For the benefit of the house I am going to give the totals of these insurance companies, and I will give the mutual companies first. The total assets of these companies are, respectively:

Equitable, New York	$ 966,825,151
Mutual Benefit	483,871,975
Mutual Life, New York	861,924,534
New York Life	1,401,076,822
Northwestern Mutual	781,604,915
John Hancock	451,006,878
Metropolitan	2,388,647,636
Prudential	1,789,266,620

I have given the mutual companies. The next two, both stock companies, are:

Aetna Life	298,071,087
Travelers	393,630,498

You will observe that the two last concerns, stock companies, are smaller than any of the other eight I have given, which are all mutual. I contend therefore that it is no argument to say that the Sun Life needs this extra capital to enable it to sell life insurance.

As I understand that some hon. members wish to speak on the bill I will not take up further the time of the house except to move an amendment. Before submitting this amendment, however, I notice that the Minister of Finance, speaking in the house a year ago, in reply to some criticism that had been made against the Superintendent of Insurance of the Dominion, made the following statement:

Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to offer any defence of the Superintendent of Insurance. That gentleman requires no defence from any person in the insurance field of Canada. He is recognized as a fearless official who is afraid neither of the wealthy company nor of the company on the verge of bankruptcy.

Later on he said:

We will take care of the policyholders, for after all it is their money that provides the capital. I want to say that the policyholders' investigations into the Sun Life Company have been well managed and I am proud of the company. At the same time I believe that 15 per cent is not an ungenerous interest on the investments.

I am very keen on opposing this bill for another reason. In my seven years' experience in this house and in the banking and commerce committee we have found the members of that committee always very ready to listen to the Superintendent of Insurance. They look upon him as a man on the top of the tree of insurance, a man thoroughly to be relied on, a man whom the government of any country can be proud to have in the civil service. His opinion has always been taken, except in this one instance; he has always been listened to with deference by the committee. But what do we find with regard to the Sun Life bill? After watching the committee for seven years I find now, that notwithstanding that the Superintendent of Insurance—a man, I say, at the top of his profession—has warned us against this bill and shown us its weakness, giving the various reasons why it should not be passed, he has been ridden over roughshod. I say therefore that we have a just right on these grounds to oppose the bill being rushed through the house, and I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy):

That the said bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it:

That section 2 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

(1) The shares of the capital stock hereafter issued shall, to the extent of at least ninety per cent thereof, be allotted fully paid to the policyholders' directors of the company, to be held by them in trust for the participating policyholders of the company, and an amount equal to the par value of the shares so allotted shall be charged to the participating fund of the company.

(2) The said shares hereafter issued shall rank equally as to dividends and otherwise with the shares of the capital stock heretofore issued, and dividends payable on the shares allotted in trust as aforesaid shall be credited to the participating fund of the company.

(3) At any annual or special general meeting of the company the shares so allotted in trust may be voted by the policyholders' directors of the company.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Is not the amendment which my hon. friend has just read exactly the same amendment he proposed in committee and which was refused by the committee?

Mr. SPENCER: What on earth has that to do with it?

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Spencer), which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Allan,	Descoteaux,
Arthurs,	Dunning,
Bancroft,	Evans,
Bettez,	Fafard,
Bird,	Fansher (Last Mountain),
Boucher,	Fansher (Lambton East),
Boulanger,	Gardiner,
Bourassa,	Garland (Bow River),
Bradette,	Gershaw,
Carmichael,	Glen,
Church,	Hepburn,
Coote,	Irvine,
Denis (St. Denis),
Desaulniers,

Jelliff,
Kennedy,
Luchkovich,
Macdonald (Glengarry),
Macphail (Miss),
Mercier (St. Henri),
Milne,
Morrissy,
Neill,
Robb,
St-Père,
Speakman,
Spencer,
Tobin,
Ward,
Woodsworth.—42.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),
Anderson (Halton),
Auger,
Barber,
Bell (St. John-Albert),
Bennett,
Benoit,
Blatchford,
Bock,
Bouchard,
Bourgeois,
Bowen,
Boys,
Brown,
Cahan,
Cannon,
Cantley,
Casgrain,
Chaplin,
Charters,
Clark,
Cowan,
Delisle,
Denis (Joliette),
Deslauriers,
Dickie,
Duff,
Edwards (Waterloo South),
Elliott,
Ernst,
Esling,
Euler,
Fiset (Sir Eugene),
Foster,
Garland (Carleton),
Girouard,
Goodison,
Grimmer,
Guthrie,
Hanson,
Hay,
Jenkins,
Johnston (Long Lake),
Jones,
Kaiser,
King (Kootenay East),
Ladner,
Laflamme,
Lang,
Lapointe,
Letellier,
MacDonald (Cape Breton South),
Macdonald (Kings),
Macdonald (Richmond-West Cape Breton),
Macdougall,
MacLean (Prince),
McLean (Melfort),
McGibbon,
McGregor,
McIntosh,
McKenzie,
McPhee,
McQuarrie,
Manion,
Matthews,
Maybee,
Motherwell,
Odette,
Parent,
Perras,
Pettit,
Power,
Quinn,
Ralston,
Raymond,
Rennie,
Roberge,
Robinson,
Robitaille,
Ross (Kingston City),
Ross (Moose Jaw),
Ryckman,
Sanderson,
Séguin,
Senn,
Short,
Sinclair (Queens),
Smith (Cumberland),
Smith (Stormont),
Spence,
Spotton,
Stevens,
Stewart (Edmonton West),
Stewart (Leeds),
Stinson,
Stirling,
Sylvestre,
Telford,
Totzke,
Vallance,
Veniot,
White (London),
Wilson (Wentworth),
Young (Saskatoon),
Young (Toronto Northeast),
Young (Weyburn).—106.

PAIRS

Mr. ADSHEAD: I was paired with the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is now on the third reading of the bill.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. GARDINER: I would call attention to the fact that it is after nine o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ST. CLAIR TRANSIT COMPANY—RESCISSION OF ORDER FOR THIRD READING

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I wish to direct your attention to the fact that on April 13 I moved an amendment to Bill No. 23, to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company, which was then up for discussion during the hour devoted to private bills. My amendment was discussed and when the hour for private bills expired it was still under discussion, and no vote had been taken. Tonight this bill came up again and was passed through the house without the amendment having been put. I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Jelliff:

> That the order for the third reading of Bill No. 23 and act to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company, be rescinded, and that the said bill be placed on the order paper together with the amendment thereto by Mr. Irvine for consideration at the next sitting of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must explain to the house that when I took the chair at eight o'clock the first three private bills on the orders of the day were called and then the house proceeded to consider Bill No. 23, to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company. There was nothing on the order paper to indicate that there was an amendment to the bill; I looked around the chamber at the time because I had a vague recollection that an amendment had been moved to this bill some weeks ago by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin. The hon. member was not in his seat, however, and as I have already said the amendment was not indicated on the order paper. I have ascertained since that the hon. member did move an amendment, and the question should have been put on that amendment first. Therefore, in fairness to the hon. member, I may say that his motion is in order, and the order for the third reading of Bill No. 23 should be rescinded. Mr. Irvine moves that the order for the third reading of Bill No. 23, an act to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company, be rescinded, and that the said bill be placed on the order paper, together with the amendment thereto by Mr. Irvine, for consideration at the next sitting of the house. The house will understand that there is a place where one must apply fairness, and there is evidence of a mistake due to an error made by the clerk who prepares the orders of the day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In order to be fair to the promoter of the bill, I suggest that this bill be put first on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill should be restored to first place on the order paper, and I will give the necessary instruction. The clerk who prepared the order paper did not mention the amendment, and therefore we were all induced to error. Strictly speaking, notice of motion should be given, but I think both sides of the house will understand that in fairness to the hon. member for Wetaskiwin this motion should carry.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I would call attention to the fact that when the hon. member rose to a point of order during the discussion on the Sun Life bill, I lost about two minutes of the time left for the discussion of that bill. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to report the bill at the next sitting of the house, and I think in fairness to the Sun Life bill that the hon. gentleman's bill should come first and that the Sun Life bill should keep its place on the order paper and come second on the list of private bills.

Mr. SPEAKER: As I have stated, it was due to a mistake by the clerk who prepares the orders of the day, that the bill was read a third time, and that bill must be put exactly where it was. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Motion agreed to on division.

PRIVILEGE—MR. KAY

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi): I rise to a question of privilege. In to-night's Ottawa Journal I find the following report of what occurred this morning in the committee on immigration and colonization. The headlines read:

McMurray "Astounded and Stunned" by the Coldwell Charges. Not Sworn in Giving Evidence.

Further down is another headline: "Not Under Oath," and then follows:

Mr. McMurray did not give his evidence under oath. This fact was pointed out by Hon. J. W. Edwards.

I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, as chairman of that committee, that Mr. McMurray was sworn by myself in the same manner as every other witness is usually sworn. The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) asked if Mr. McMurray had been sworn, and I informed him that he had. I trust the Ottawa Journal will publish this denial and give it as much prominence as was given to the statement to which I have just referred.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the statement made by the hon. gentleman is absolutely correct.

SUPPLY—STEEL INDUSTRY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) for committee of supply, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. MacDonald (South Cape Breton).

Hon. J. A. MACDONALD (Kings): When the house rose at six o'clock I was discussing the royal commission's report. I was showing how the transportation recommendations in connection with Prince Edward Island had not been carried out, particularly in regard to the standardization of the roadbed, and the ferry steamer. I was arriving at the point where I was endeavouring to show the increased traffic which had taken place during the past few years, and emphasizing the fact that the need for a second car ferry had arisen on account of the increase in traffic itself, regardless of any other condition.

Prince Edward Island was induced to go into confederation by the promise of a continuous and efficient steam service—mark the word "efficient"—being established and maintained between the island and the mainland winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the railway systems of the Dominion. Until this car ferry went into service about the year 1915 no reasonable attempts had been made by the various governments to implement this promise. For five, six, seven and eight weeks we had been isolated from the mainland, without any connection whatever by steam, as promised under the terms of confederation. The car ferry did very well for a time, and gave what might fairly be regarded as efficient service. After all, "efficient" is a comparative term, and what might be efficient to-day might not be efficient to-morrow. That is what has happened to the car ferry; she was efficient when she undertook this service, but the traffic has increased to such an extent that it is physically impossible for one boat to handle it. Consequently the need for a second car ferry, as recommended by the Duncan commission, has become acute.

In addition to the fact that the need is quite apparent from the standpoint of increased traffic, there is another aspect of it which is perhaps even more important. This matter was referred to by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) this afternoon, and I will not attempt to cover the ground he did in connection with the danger to a single boat. This boat has to fight heavy ice day and night for months at a time, and every person will realize the great strain which that causes. The boat is now thirteen years old, and is liable to accident at any time.

This is the only channel of communication with the island, and the matter, therefore, is vital. Should anything happen in the winter time which would result in the interruption of communication we might reach the point where we would have to face cold and hunger on Prince Edward Island. Before this car ferry was put into operation the merchants all over the province stocked up big sheds full of coal and warehouses full of foodstuffs of all kinds to carry through the winter, in anticipation of being tied up from six to eight weeks. That system is now a thing of the past. We no longer stock up for winter needs; we depend on having a steady stream of coal cars, flour cars, feed cars for our stock, and all other necessities coming through day by day on this car ferry. It an accident happened to that boat we would be faced with cold and hunger. I do not think I need go any further along this line; but in view of the large expenditures which are being made by the government in various directions, some of which are not at all necessary or at all events not nearly so necessary as this, the government should at this session of parliament have inserted in the supplementary estimates an item which will take care of the needs of Prince Edward Island in this regard.

The car ferry steamer cannot be built in a month or a year. Supposing an item is inserted in the estimates this session, the earliest date at which we could expect to have a second boat would be probably the fall of 1929. I am not speaking in any critical or political sense; I have already expressed my appreciation of the work that the railway management has done, and before closing I wish to finish a quotation, which I had started to read before six o'clock, from a statement made by Mr. Appleton, general manager of the Atlantic region, in connection with the difficulty of serving the province under present conditions. Mr. Appleton said:

> Everything that is at all possible is being done to facilitate the movements of potatoes from Prince Edward Island and the shipments by the car ferry of the Canadian National this year are greater than at any time in the history of the road.

He went on to say:

> Whatever shortage of cars there may have been at times they were caused by such circumstances that were quite beyond our control.

He said further that during the present season more than 4,000 empty refrigerator cars had to be ferried across in order to carry away potatoes from Prince Edward Island. He said further:

> While providing this service for Prince Edward Island we were also endeavouring to meet demands for refrigerator cars from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec which demands in the aggregate are equal to the requirements of Prince Edward Island.

That will give hon. members some idea of the situation with which a single car ferry has to cope. According to Mr. Appleton, as many refrigerator cars are required in Prince Edward Island as in the three large provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec combined.

Mr. SPEAKER: Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain what relevancy his remarks have to the amendment before the chair. I should think they would be more relevant in a debate that might take place on the items in the estimates when considered by the committee of the whole house. I do not just at present see the relevancy of his remarks.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The Duncan commission which was under discussion this afternoon gives as one of its recommendations:

> Prince Edward Island car ferry.—The terms and conditions upon which Prince Edward Island was admitted into confederation in 1873 contained the following provisions:—
>
> "Efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers to be established and maintained between the island and the mainland of the Dominion, winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial railway and the railway system of the Dominion".

It goes on to say:

> The present car ferry affords a much improved service as compared with that which the island formerly enjoyed, but in recent years traffic and freight have considerably increased, and will continue to increase, particularly at certain seasons of the year.

An so on. I was discussing the car ferry service.

Mr. SPEAKER: Of course the main argument was about the steel industry. The hon. gentleman was discussing the Duncan report generally. That explains the relevancy of his remarks.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I understood that the amendment referred to the report of the Duncan commission. I was discussing the demands on the car ferry. Mr. Appleton further stated that at one time there were 400 unfilled requisitions for refrigerator cars for potatoes. Hon. members will realize that when there is a ready and good market for perishable products, if you cannot get them moved the chances are that you will lose heavily, and that is what has happened.

As I said a moment ago, I am not speaking in a critical or political sense; I am speaking for the purpose of making as sincere, honest and earnest a request as I can to the Minister of Railways and to the government to provide those much needed facilities and, as regards the car ferry, a vital need for the people of Prince Edward Island, not only because of the recommendations of the Duncan commission but because the honour of the parliament of Canada in regard to the terms of confederation is at a stake. If there had never been a Duncan commission, we would have had a right to insist on account of the terms of confederation itself.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): The resolution of the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) calls upon the government to implement in full the recommendations contained in the Duncan report, particularly the recommendation relating to the steel industry. That hon. gentleman in my opinion is correct in the statements that he has made. This is not the first time that we have had a recommendation from a commission or a committee of this house; we had commissions or coal committees appointed in 1923, 1924, 1925 and 1926 to consider the industries of steel and coal in the maritime provinces. Those industries in the maritime provinces are in a precarious and withering state. The coal and steel industries all over the whole world are in a precarious state to-day owing to the disturbance of the industrial equilibrium after the war and owing to economic conditions. The maritime provinces have been suffering for many years on this account and hon. members on this side have been for five or six years bringing this coal and steel matter to the attention of parliament. Recommendations have been made but not one of them has been implemented.

You cannot deal with the steel industry in the maritimes without considering the allied coal industry; they are one. The amendment calls for implementing in full the recommendations of the Duncan report, particularly in regard to the steel industry. There is only one way in which to solve the ills of those two basic industries in this country and that is the way in which they solved them in England after the war. When England found that she was losing to the Hamburg yards the steel, coal and ship building orders, what did the Baldwin government do? They adopted exactly what those on this side of the house have been arguing for in season and out of season, namely, a safeguarding of industries act in the way of subsidies, bonuses and subventions, so as to give proper protection for those two industries. That is a system of subventions, subsidies and bonuses, which is the backbone of the Duncan report for the relief of the maritime provinces. Coming from Ontario I may say that central Ontario is clamouring for steel and coal from the maritime provinces, but owing to the difficulty of transportation and the high freight rates on the water and rail or all-rail routes for the cartage of coal and steel to central Canada, the maritime provinces are losing hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of tenders. In the city from which I come they found in some cases that these commodities in parts could be brought in duty paid cheaper than they could be brought from the maritime provinces owing to the heavy freight rate, both by all-rail or water and rail routes.

When this report was before the house last year I understood that the house was unanimous in regard to it. It was not looked upon as a party matter; everybody felt that some degree of protection should be given to these industries to put them on their feet. So far as the maritime provinces are concerned they are basic industries and we should adopt a principle of protection, of subventions, subsidies and bonuses to put those industries on their feet and let them weather the storm once and for all time. Is it not better to do that than to have the men in these industries go to the United States? It is the same with the shipbuilding industry. We have had information recently with regard to a shipbuilding firm in Collingwood and the maritimes. The men in the shipbuilding industry in this country have had to go to the United States to earn a living, and that is a condition of affairs that should not be. We entered into a contract with the maritime provinces at confederation, and no matter what the cost may be, no matter whether it be borne wholly or in part by this country, I say that we should go to the help of the steel industry, just as Stanley Baldwin did in England. In England they spent $100,000,000 a year to put one of these industries on its feet—the coal industry—rather than have strikes and labour difficulties, and have the industry go to the wall. I urge upon the government to do something for these two particular industries. We have had committees of the house inquiring into the coal question and into the steel question, and they recommended the encouragement of the movement of coal from the maritime provinces by rail and water during the season of navigation of central Canada. The committee adopted the principle, and the house accepted it, and voted $150,000 in subventions to help in the movement of coal from the maritime provinces to central Canada, but the navigation season ended before all that money was spent. But I repeat, the house had adopted the principle of that form of assistance for the coal industry. I say to the people of the maritime provinces that the people in the central provinces of Canada are just as much interested in putting the steel and coal industries on their feet as are the people of the maritime provinces, and are just as much interested in solving the problems of those industries as in solving those of central Canada. I do hope that all parties in this house will get together and give to the maritime provinces what is long overdue, something in the way of a safeguarding of industries act, to place these native industries on their feet for all time to come.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I think it ia great pity, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition members from the maritime provinces should paint such a picture of blue ruin as relating to that part of Canada. I appreciate, of course, the fact that they are in this house largely through the clever exploitation of the legitimate grievances of the people of that part of Canada, and through the invention by hon. members opposite of grievances that had no foundation in fact, and their great fear to-day is that in consequence of the manner in which the present government has implemented the recommendations of the Duncan commission they will lose that political grievance which has hitherto been so fruitful to them. I offer in evidence against their contention of ruin in the maritime provinces a wrapper, covering the chief Tory paper in the province of Nova Scotia, and in large type, for everyone to read, at the top of the wrapper appear these words: "Halifax the capital city of the prosperous province of Nova Scotia." I wonder whether the newspaper published in the interest of hon. gentlemen opposite is more to be relied upon than some of the statements to which we have been listening this afternoon and this evening in relation to that part of Canada? As a matter of fact, looking back, my hon. friends opposite were not always as fond of the Duncan commission as they appear to be now. I well remember that when it was proposed to appoint a commission to look into the grievances of the maritime provinces, my hon. friends opposite condemned the proposal utterly, and would have none of it; in fact, they talked very plainly about refusing to have anything to do with the commission when it was appointed. But to-day on every occasion when a maritime province Tory gets up to address the house, he uses the Duncan commission report as if it were holy writ. They want now every inch of it in every particular.

Mr. CANTLEY: Why not?

Mr. McGIBBON: It was a stolen Conservative policy.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, if my hon. friend thinks that one of the Conservative policies has been stolen by this government, that is at least evidence that something very substantial has been done in carrying out the provisions of the Duncan report; otherwise, the policy could scarcely be a stolen policy.

This afternoon my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Cantley) was labouring hard to inflate this grievance again and give it force in the maritime provinces, and in order to do so, he very dramatically asked me a question and sat down on his chair to wait for my reply. It was a question which he knew perfectly well would be a proper one for me to deal with when the estimates of the Department of Railways and Canals were before the committee, and he was in fact, by taking up the time of the house, preventing the Department of Railways and Canals getting its estimates before the committee of supply for consideration. With regard to the matter to which my hon. friend referred, he stated that during the proceedings of the special committee on railways and shipping owned and controlled by the government of Canada he had asked me a question, and had asked the president of the road a question, with regard to a new ferry for Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend stated that the answer he received on that occasion was that nothing would be done this year. He plainly stated that this afternoon. I have in my hand the stenographic printed report of the proceedings of the special committee on railways and shipping, and I am sure that what I am about to read as an extract from those proceedings can be confirmed by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Jenkins), who is a member of that committee. I read from page 47 of the report of the proceedings of that committee:

Mr. Cantley: What are you doing about a new ferry for Prince Edward Island?

Sir Henry Thornton: These ferries are owned by the government, but we have the strengthening of our ferry service under consideration, but we have not determined definitely with the government what to do. There has been a good deal of talk, and with some merit, that there should be an additional ferry, not only to take care of the increased business, but to provide a more positive service in the event of one ferry going out of service for some unanticipated reason.

Mr. Cantley: I would like to know what you are doing about it. Have you ordered another boat, or are you going to?

Sir Henry Thornton: I do not know whether we are going to order one or not; that is under consideration.

Mr. Cantley: Who will know, the minister?

Sir Henry Thornton: The minister and I will probably talk about it, and decide what we had better do.

Mr. Cantley: Have you talked about it?

Sir Henry Thornton: Oh, yes.

Mr. Cantley: What has been done?

Sir Henry Thornton: Nothing as yet. May I round up the situation by saying this; the traffic to and from Prince Edward Island is increasing.

Mr. Cantley: This ferry boat is 13 or 14 years old and she may break down at any time, and the island is dependent on one boat.

Sir Henry Thornton: It is not quite as bad as that, but there is a measure of truth in what you say. The situation is receiving serious consideration, and is not going to be overlooked.

Mr. Cantley: But nothing was done this year?

Sir Henry Thornton: Nothing this year.

"Nothing this year"—referring to the year that has passed.

Mr. CANTLEY: No, no.

Mr. DUNNING: The whole matter under discussion before the committee that day was with reference to the work done by the Canadian National during the past year. As a matter of fact, my hon. friend well knows, and the members from Prince Edward Island on this side of the house are in the best position to confirm it, that the question of a second car ferry for Prince Edward Island has been receiving the attention both of the Canadian National Railways and of the department for more than one year past. The members who sit on this side from the Island have on several occasions waited upon myself, and have waited upon the management and officials of the Canadian National Railways, in connection with that matter, and were always given to understand that determination with respect to the matter would be reached by the goverment before the supplementary estimates were presented to the house. That was the information given on every occasion when representations were made to me with regard to the matter.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister allow me a question?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend made his speech this afternoon.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely the minister is not going to refuse to answer a question?

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, is it a question?

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: If it is a question, all right.

Mr. CANTLEY: Does the minister not know that my question referred to this year, not last? I was not foolish enough to ask whether the government were going to provide a boat last year when I knew they had not.

Mr. DUNNING: I leave my hon. friend's language to the judgment of the house. This is his language:

Mr. Cantley: But nothing was done this year?

"Was done this year."

Mr. CANTLEY: Exactly; you made—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend can explain that as much as he likes, but he well knows, as other members from the maritime provinces know, the matter of the second car ferry has been under consideration by the government during the whole period.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am perfectly able to correct your answer.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: I will let my hon. friend make another speech.

Mr. CANTLEY: I will make another speech when I wish to.

Mr. DUNNING: I was about to say that Sir Henry Thornton on that occasion could not make a more definite reply than he then made.

Mr. CANTLEY: Not so ambiguous as your own.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: Sir Henry Thornton could not on that occasion make a more definite reply than he had made, because the decision of the government in regard to the matter had not then been reached. And I can tell my hon. friend that the tactics followed by him and his associates do not in general tend to induce a government to do the things they ask for.

Their manner of proceeding is not that which usually produces the result desired. We are giving consideration not to the request of my hon. friend—

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not going to be lectured.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: —but to the representations which have been continuously and courteously made by the hon. members who sit on this side of the house representing three-fourths of the seats in that province.

Mr. BENNETT: Shame.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: I may say quite frankly that I have, as Minister of Railways and Canals, recommended to my colleagues a provision in the supplementary estimates for the sum of one million dollars for a new car ferry for the Prince Edward Island—mainland service.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, it is not customary to disclose discussions between a minister and his colleagues antecedent to the estimates being introduced in this house.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is quite correct; but I may tell him that the cabinet to-day decided I should make the statement that I have just made.

Mr. BENNETT: They cannot do it. It is against the oath of office which the minister takes.

Mr. CANNON: Why did they ask you this afternoon?

Mr. DUNNING: I am surprised at my hon. friend's attitude in view of the fact that hon. members opposite were asking me to answer the question all the afternoon; now I am wrong because I have answered it.

Mr. McGIBBON: You are wrong because you have violated your oath of office.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is good news anyway.

Mr. DUNNING: They object for one very good reason: it removes one more of the political grievances to which they owe their seats in this house. As I said at the outset, they hold their seats by virtue of the exploitation and the exaggeration of grievances,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh no.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: —and they are fearful lest those grievances will be removed to an extent which will prevent them ever coming back here again.

Now with respect to the coal matter. This afternoon my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Smith) introduced the question of the ownership by the Canadian National Railways of a coal company in the United States —which ownership, by the way, was not acquired by the Canadian National Railways as such, but by the old Grand Trunk during the period of private ownership, and the property came to the Canadian National Railways with the rest of the assets of the Grand Trunk system. My hon. friend complains because the Canadian National Railway retains that property and so obtains coal from its own subsidiary in the United States. If his argument means anything, it means that he believes that it would be good business for the Canadian National Railways to take coal from Nova Scotia even further west than it does now for railway use. That is what his argument means if it means anything. As a matter of fact, the retention of the ownership of this coal company by the Canadian National Railways is fully justified if only for the purpose of supplying coal to the United States lines of the system.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): If the minister will permit me; Is there not more coal supplied by that company to the Canadian side than to the American side?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the figures in my mind.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): There is, according to the return.

Mr. DUNNING: According to the return there well may be. But I would point out—this is a matter of good business as well as justice to the maritime provinces—that the Canadian National Railways to-day uses Nova Scotia coal as far west as Belleville in Ontario and as far west as Cochrane in northern Ontario. If the Canadian National Railways was a privately owned concern, most certainly that would not be done. And it is a very grave question, Mr. Speaker, as to how far we should insist on discharging our national obligations through the medium of a publicly owned business institution instead of through this parliament. If we have national obligations toward the maritime provinces—and I for one have always admitted that we have national obligations of a peculiar and distinctive character—then I say those obligations should be discharged by this parliament through the medium of the government, and we should not load those obligations upon an institution like the Canadian National Railways, which we are trying to have conducted in a businesslike manner to enable it to compete with other institutions doing a similar business in a similar way.

Mr. McGIBBON: When did you change your mind?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not changed my mind, Mr. Speaker. That is the view I have held of Canadian National Railway operation, and the best proof of this is found in the Maritime Rates Act of last session, introduced by me on behalf of the government, which contains that principle very plainly.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will he deny that he did not condemn that very thing in his campaign speeches during the last two elections?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. McGIBBON: I will produce the proof in parliament.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall be very glad to have the proof produced, that I at any time advocated a different principle.

Mr. McGIBBON: I will produce it in parliament.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like my hon. friend to produce it now if he is so sure.

Mr. McGIBBON: Your leader did the same thing.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, please.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What is he talking about?

An hon. MEMBER: He doesn't know what he is talking about.

Mr. DUNNING: It is always easy to tell when an argument is getting home to my hon. friends; they interrupt with a question which is not a question, but designed to throw one off the track, to upset the tenor of one's discourse. I will enunciate the principle again. It does not much matter whether I ever advocated anything different; I have no recollection that I ever did. The principle is sound: If this country has obligations towards the maritime provinces, those obligations should be discharged through the medium of this parliament and this government, and should not be laid on the Canadian National Railways. That is the principle in brief.

The Duncan report in the matter of railways makes a recommendation with respect to the St. John and Quebec railway in the province of New Brunswick, and also another recommendation that negotiations be reopened in connection with the Kent Northern railway in that province. When the Dominion-provincial conference was held last year a number of the provinces had problems to present having to do with the ownership of railways by the provinces—railways which had proven to be a burden to their owners, and which they desired should be taken over by the federal government and made a part of the Canadian National Railway system. It was then understood that the Dominion government would give consideration to the needs of the provinces in connection with this particular matter. It is interesting to note that no one of the provincial railway problems is exactly like any other one of them. There are great diversities in the nature of the problems presented. As a result of consideration by the government, Sir Henry Thornton, the president of the Canadian National Railway system, was authorized to negotiate with the governments of the various provinces affected, and also with respect to some privately owned railways which, in the opinion of the governments of some of the provinces, it would be in public interest for the Canadian National system to take over. These negotiations, in the nature of things, are complex; they cannot be concluded in a moment. Very naturally each province wants to make the best possible deal that it can; and, on the other hand, the president of the Canadian National system is concerned to have in mind always the interests of that system in dealing with the provinces or with anyone else in a matter of this sort. The negotiations are not yet completed with respect to any one of these properties, but I am hopeful that they will be completed and that the government will be able to give consideration, during the recess, to these particular railway acquisition problems, with a view to some action being taken at the next session of parliament. It may even be possible that under existing legislation something may be done during the recess with respect to some of these properties.

Now, with regard to the Maritime Rates Act, I desire to give the house some information touching the operation of that legislation. A few weeks ago supplementary estimates were presented to the house for the fiscal year 1927-1928, which ended on the 31st day of March last. The supplementary estimates which passed this house prior to the end of last fiscal year had to do with the operation of the Maritime Rates Act for a period of only six months. It will be remembered that the Maritime Rates Act became operative on Dominion Day last year, so that there were exactly six months, from July 1 to December 31, to be provided for during the last fiscal year. The supplementary estimates were set out exactly in accordance with the terms of the Maritime Rates Act, and provided for $421,654.56 to be paid to eleven different railways other than the Canadian National, and $931,809.89 to be paid to the Canadian National on account of the 20 per cent reduction which had been in effect for six months. In other words, the Dominion government paid to the railways, for the first six months' operation of the Maritime Rates Act, on account of the 20 per cent reduction alone, a total sum of $1,353,464.45. What does that mean? It means that the people of the maritime provinces paid $1,353,000 less freight rates during that six months than they would have paid had the Maritime Rates Act not been passed. That is exactly what it means. It means that the people of Canada paid, on account of freight charges due in the maritime provinces under the normal rate, a contribution of $1,353,464.45 during that period of six months.

Now, I do not want anyone to accuse me of regarding this as charity. I have stated in this house, and publicly outside, that I do recognize, that the government recognizes, that the Maritime Rates Act was based upon a principle of fundamental right; and this amount paid by the Dominion government on account of maritime province freight bills is paid, not a a matter of charity, but as a matter of right, having regard to the national and strategic considerations surrounding confederation, mentioned and dealt with so fully in the report of the Duncan commission.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): If it is a matter of right, does the minister not think that the government should extend it some years back?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know how it would be possible to get the advantages of the 20 per cent cut on the individual freight bills of the people of the maritime provinces during the past number of years. That question never was raised, either last year or at any other time, with respect to any retroactive feature of the freight rates legislation; nor did the Duncan report recommend any retroactive consideration in connection with it. So much, then, for the Maritime Rates Act as relating to the first six months of its operation.

With respect to the present calendar year, we have to deal with the matter on the basis of the calendar year for the reason that the railways affected use the calendar year in their accounting. In the main estimates now before the house, the separate sheet dealing with the Canadian National Railways contains also, on the back of it,—page 4—provision for the anticipated expenditure by the Department of Railways and Canals, under the Maritime Rates Act, for the calendar year 1928; and that amounts to the following sums: To railways other than the Canadian National, $1,050,000; to the Canadian National on account of the 20 per cent reduction alone, $1,930,000. This means that the 20 per cent reduction is estimated to cost the treasury of Canada in 1928 $2,980,000. That will be the contribution by the treasury of this country to the freight bills of the maritime provinces during the year 1928. In addition to that, I enunciated a little while ago the principle that a national obligation should be discharged nationally and not through the medium of a business organization such as the Canadian National Railways. For that reason the Maritime Rates Act last year provided that, in addition to voting the 20 per cent provided for in the act, the whole of the deficit on the Atlantic region of the Canadian National, as defined in that act, should be separately voted to the Canadian National. Why? Because of the very fundamental of the Duncan report in that particular: because of what is mentionad there on page 21:

> That to the extent that commercial considerations were subordinate to national, imperial and strategic considerations, the cost would be borne by the Dominion and not by the traffic that might pass over the line.

With respect to this region, without taking any account of the 20 per cent, it is well known that there is a deficit in operation—a deficit in operation which, according to the Duncan report, is created by reason of national, imperial and strategic considerations. Sir Sandford Fleming sets out the considerations: greater length of line and other uneconomic factors in connection with the building of the railway but which were important national, imperial and strategic considerations. We have taken the ground therefore that the Canadian National is not the body which should be charged with the cost of these national, imperial and strategic considerations, but that the treasury of Canada should be charged with such costs and should pay to the Canadian National annually the amounts involved. And that is the reason the estimates are presented in this manner; that is the reason why the Maritime Rates Act contains the provision to which I have referred. It was discussed in the house a year ago when the act went through and the principle of it was conceded at that time. May I also say regarding it that it has this additional merit of presenting to the people of the maritime provinces and to the people of the rest of Canada an accurate picture year by year of the result not only of the operation of the 20 per cent reduction in freight rates but also of the general operation of the Atlantic region of the Canadian National Railways, which is affected by traffic conditions in the maritime provinces. Year by year it will be possible for us to gauge whether or not the 20 per cent reduction has produced and is producing an increase in traffic which is having an effect in reducing the general deficit of the region. That is one result which I am anticipating as a consequence of the greater prosperity which my hon. friends opposite deny but which the Halifax Herald affirms is taking place in the maritime provinces. I should therefore include the whole vote in my statement: For the year 1928, including the amount be voted for the general deficit on the Atlantic region and also including the amount chargeable to the 20 per cent reduction, we are asking the house to vote in the main estimates the sum of $7,398,644.50 on account of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, to be paid to the Canadian National Railways to the extent of $4,418,000 and to other railways to the extent of $1,050,000.

Now I shall come back to Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Macdonald) this afternoon said that nothing was being done on the Island in connection with the Island railway, and that the Duncan report recommended large expenditures and great improvements there. It is only fair to the Canadian National system and to the government to point out that the Island railway was originally a narrow gauge line, that it has been gradually brought up to standard gauge and that in bringing it up to standard gauge very large expenditures are necessary first on terminal facilities, to provide properly for the accommodation of standard gauge equipment. In that connection I may say that while my hon. friend complained that no expenditures were being made and that nothing was being done, in the railway estimates for this year appears an amount of $110,000 to be expended on the new terminal at Charlottetown and another amount of $47,000 to be expended on the new engine terminal at Summerside. Yet my hon. friends talk about nothing being done. As a matter of fact there is a steady improvement by the railway authorities of the railway facilities of Prince Edward Island, and that is well known to hon members who come from that province. Of course the people down there, like people everywhere, would like to see everything done at once; they would like to see it all done in one year, but we must look after the interests of this whole country. We are providing in the supplementary estimates for a new car ferry, which was admitted by my hon. friend to be the most serious problem affecting the island, remembering the possibility of the existing ferry going out of business and also considering the very great increase in traffic resulting from the increased prosperity of the island and the increased production as well. If we deal with that problem during the coming year and also proceed to deal with the terminal question at Charlottetown and Summerside, I am quite willing to leave the record of the government in regard to the Duncan report as it affects Prince Edward Island in the hands of the good people of that province, to let them judge whether or not we have done our duty in that regard.

I do not think there is anything further to say with reference to this matter as it affects the railways, and I would simply say in conclusion that my hon. friends opposite had better start on some constructive work, because I can assure them that they will have mighty little in the way of grievances to capitalize politically in the future in the maritime provinces.

Mr. I. D. MACDOUGALL (Inverness): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to follow the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) in all his mental contortions and acrobatics, at which I will admit he is very adept. However, I feel that I am voicing the sentiments of the people of the maritime provinces when I publicly congratulate the hon. gentleman upon having experienced a most remarkable change of heart, of mind, and of disposition, in reference to the maritime provinces. Not very long ago we heard from the mouth of the hon. gentleman words concerning the maritime provinces which do not very well fit in with his pious professions to-night. Not many months ago, in the city of Regina, as quoted by one of his own newspapers, he publicly declared that the only rights the people of the maritime provinces possessed were the rights to be born, to have a free ride on the Intercolonial Railway, to be married and to die. I congratulate my hon. friend, for whom I have the highest regard—

Mr. DUNNING: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I must again insist on the opportunity to deny the statement just attributed to me by my hon. friend.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I shall certainly accept the word of my hon. friend, because there are very few gentlemen in this house for whom I have an equally high regard. But I must tell him that he should carry that correction to that newspaper in Regina which is supposed to be one of his best supporters.

Mr. DUNNING: I did.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: However, my hon. friend has said that we who come from the province of Nova Scotia owe our positions in this house to the fact that we have exploited maritime grievances. I wish to disagree slightly with the phraseology employed by my hon. friend. We owe our positions in this house to the fact that we stood up for maritime rights and condemned the conditions under which the maritime provinces laboured, while the hon. gentleman and his party were ridiculing and abusing us for saying that the maritime provinces had any rights at all under confederation. It is to that we owe our positions in this house, and that is why we will hold those positions for many long years to come.

Now, sir, before coming directly to the resolution before the house I wish to deal, and perhaps with some feeling, with the remarks made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) in the very spavined intellectual performance to which he treated this house before dinner. In the course of that belaboured speech, which for some years to come will be the very best campaign material we on this side of the house could desire, he declared that we from the maritime provinces who press for one hundred per cent fulfilment of the Duncan commission report are whining. Let me tell my hon. friend—and I do not make this a party issue—that every man and every woman in the maritime provinces, irrespective of creed or political belief, Liberal, Conservative, Progressive and Labour alike, demand and expect to-day that the Duncan report will be implemented to the extent of one hundred per cent. When he declares that we who voice the sentiments of these people, Liberal and Conservative alike, are whining, he indirectly says that the people of the maritime provinces are whiners. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I fling that insult back in his teeth. Let me say that we who come from the province of Nova Scotia come here representing a province which has honourably performed an honourable part. We come from a province which has the distinction of being the first province on British North American soil to introduce the principle of responsible government. We come from a province which in the days that have gone made vast sacrifices to act as the buffer between Upper and Lower Canada on which was to be broken racial and religious prejudices. We come from a province which by dint of self-sacrifice made possible the consummation of Canadian confederation.

I want to say to the Minister of Finance, and I am glad that he is now in his seat, that when we come asking for a one hundred per cent implementation of the recommendations made by a tribunal appointed by this very government, an impartial tribunal which adjudicated upon our claims and brought in a report in our favour, we do not come to this parliament as mendicants or beggars. We do not come to this parliament begging the crumbs that may fall from your legislative table; we come as self-respecting people spurning your charity and your pity. We come asking for justice.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member, but he has used an expression which is unparliamentary, and imputed an insult to the Minister of Finance. Bourinot says that no hon. member is allowed to attribute to other hon. members the intention of insult.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Ever since I came into the parliament of Canada, whatever distinctions I may have had in other regards, I have always attempted to be amenable to the rules of parliament. I certainly shall submit to your Honour's ruling in this matter, but when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) refers to the people of the maritime provinces as whiners, in my judgment it is an insult to those people who have played an honourable part in confederation.

Mr. ROBB: I said I was sure the electors of the maritime provinces did not share the views advanced by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I shall leave my hon. friend in the judgment of Hansard to-morrow morning.

I agree with your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and I submit to it. I feel that at the next election the people of the maritime provinces will vindicate the position I have taken.

In reference to the resolution introduced by the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Macdonald), I rise to give it my support. I believe it has behind it one hundred per cent of the public sentiment of the maritime provinces. It deals with the fact that this government appointed a commission to investigate maritime claims; that they promised one hundred per cent implementation of the recommendations of that commission, and that they have failed to implement to the extent of one hundred per cent the recommendations of the commission. It deals specifically with the question of the Nova Scotia iron and steel industry. That question is one of vital importance, and one which must be considered not only on provincial grounds but also on national grounds, and on the ground of empire considerations as well. On provincial grounds it is of very great importance to Nova Scotia, because around and about that industry there have grown up many of the most populous centres in that province. The city of Sydney, and the towns of North Sydney, Sydney Mines, New Glasgow, Trenton and Stellarton, with very substantial populations, are all entirely dependent for their very existence on the success or failure of the Nova Scotia steel industry. They furnish the principal home market for the agricultural products of the farmers for many miles surrounding these towns.

May I point out also that there is an interdependence between the Nova Scotia steel industry and the Nova Scotia coal industry. When working at full capacity the Nova Scotia steel industry is capable of consuming, and does consume, over a million tons of Nova Scotia coal per year. You can see, Mr. Speaker, how very important to the province of Nova Scotia is the welfare of this industry in respect of which we are asking the government for assistance. We are asking not for any special assistance but for that assistance which was recommended by a tribunal of their own creation.

This is a question which should appeal to every hon. member of this house on national grounds. If you will look into the industrial history of those nations which are to-day pre-eminent in wealth, in power and in population, you will find that every one of them owes that pre-eminent position to a careful fostering of its coal and steel industries. We in this country in the years that are to come, no matter what government may be in power —although the continuation in power of my hon. friends opposite may somewhat retard industrial progress—are bound to achieve a great industrial expansion. In not so many years we will have a highly industrialized country. We will have opportunities for employment, not for ten million but probably for one hundred million people. We will have myriads of opportunities for employment for our own sons and daughters, and for many others who come from foreign lands. We must be careful, therefore, to foster and protect those industries which are of national and basic importance, which are wrapped up with the industrial future of this country.

We who sit in these seats to-night are not legislating merely for our own generation, nor for this year; we must not look through the eyes of years or of decades. In dealing with national problems we must look through the eyes of centuries; we must follow those policies which, while at present involving perhaps some sacrifice, in the course of years will redound to the industrial and political advantage of our country. No nation which has attained a pre-eminent position in respect of population or wealth or power has done so by ignoring its coal and steel industries. This question is one not only of national but of empire importance. I do not know whether some hon. gentlemen opposite take much stock in that statement or not. Amid all this din and clatter and idle chatter about a new status being achieved, about Canada being at last a sovereign state, about our having wrested, as it were, a Magna Charta of Canadian liberties as if from some foreign and tyrannical power; amid all the signs and portents which indicate that this country is slowly and surely but blindly drifting towards independence from the motherland, there be those of us in this country who, yclept old-fashioned if you will, still think that there is something of value and virtue not only in strengthening the bonds that bind this great young nation to this great old empire, but in attempting also to foster and develop industries which are of empire importance. The Nova Scotia steel industry is an industry of that character. It is the only steel industry which has its roots in British soil, whose roots are indigenous to the British Empire. We have no other of the same nature in the empire. Should we not from empire considerations do what is fair, reasonable and just to see to it that this industry, so vitally important to Nova Scotia, to our nation, and to that great empire to which it is our priceless privilege to belong, should not be allowed to deteriorate and to die?

There is more than that concerned in this matter. We have had a commission investigating maritime claims, a commission which was appointed by the sheer force of public opinion, a public opinion created by members on this side of the house and by the Conservative party in the maritime provinces. We had that commission go down to the maritime provinces where it held many hearings and I greatly regret the fact that the eloquent voice and the great intellectual gifts of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), who represents Nova Scotia in the cabinet, were not used before that commission. I greatly regret the fact that the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) did not appear before the commission and I still more deeply regret the fact that no outstanding Liberal in the maritime provinces appeared before the commission to give evidence. But leaving that aside for the moment, may I point out that as a result of the evidence submitted to that commission, as a result of the masterly case presented to them by the Hon. Gordon S. Harrington, the best and, indeed, the only real minister of mines we have ever had in Nova Scotia, the commission on page 38 of the report made a specific recommendation in regard to the Nova Scotia steel industry. There is no equivocation, qualification or camouflage about that recommendation There is no way of getting out of it at all except to ignore it altogether and unfortunately that is what the government has so far done. That recommendation is definite. It does not say that this thing should not be done until a year hence. It does not say that this thing should not be done because of the supposed abuses in the capitalization of the company. It does not say that this thing should not be done because there was litigation pending. It says simply that this should be done, and so far, the Prime Minister and his government have refused to do it.

But the situation is worse than that. The Prime Minister and many of his supporters promised the people of the maritime provinces one hundred per cent fulfilment of the Duncan report. One of the most novel experiences I ever had in my life was during the last federal election. I came to address a meeting in the town of Port Hawkesbury the very next night after the Prime Minister was there, and in going up to the hall I was compelled to walk under a banner bearing this strange device: "The Liberal party under Mackenzie King stands for protection for steel and coal". I am not accusing my right hon. friend of putting the banner there, but it was there just the same. That was certainly a banner with a strange device, if we are to take into consideration the way in which my hon. friends opposite have used these industries in the past few years. Some hon. gentlemen may think it is unimportant, trifling, for a government to pledge its plighted word and then to go back on it. I do not see eye to eye with that view. There are in this country, as there are in other countries, men who are ever willing to ridicule and to bring into disfavour constituted authority, and one of the best ways in which to have constituted authority degraded, detested and despised is to have those who are responsible for enforcing that authority violate their plighted word to the people to whom they have given it. That is the situation in regard to the Nova Scotia steel industry. No quibbling, no delving into the mists of political antiquity will obscure that fact. It is there in the commission's report. No one can obscure it and no one can deny it. We stand for one hundred per cent implementation of the Duncan report.

I was interested in the speech delivered on the budget by my very excellent friend, the Minister of National Defence. At this point let me say that I admire the hon. gentleman very much. I say in all sincerity that my hon. friend has had a distinguished record both in peace and in war. For a number of years he has been a luminary of the Nova Scotia bar. He is a credit to himself and a credit to the province whence he came. But the speech which he made on the budget, in which he dealt with the steel industry of Nova Scotia, was no credit to him. I was sorry to see such a worthy man attempting to uphold such an unworthy cause. Instead of coming out man-fashion as has been his wont, and saying to us, "I tried to get this thing through, or I did not; I am in favour of this thing, or I am not," he delved into the mists of political antiquity and went back to tell us of the Hon. W. S. Fielding and what he had done over thirty years ago for the Nova Scotia steel industry. We in Nova Scotia appreciate what that great old statesman from the province of Nova Scotia did for us. We honour and revere his memory, but every schoolboy in Nova Scotia, if it is a question of who first did something for the Nova Scotia steel industry, will answer that the first assistance ever given to the Nova Scotia steel industry was given by a Conservative government under Sir Charles Tupper. But I wish to tell my hon. and excellent friend, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) that the men who are without work in Trenton, the men who are without work in New Glasgow, the men who are without work in Sydney Mines and the city of Sydney, are not very much interested in what Mr. Fielding and Sir Charles Tupper did thirty-five years ago. We are no longer living in the past in the province of Nova Scotia. Not the spell of the setting of yester's sun, but the vision of the dawn of a new day—that is the inspiration of our little province by the sea. I do not wish to criticize my hon. friend at all, but it is well known that evil communications corrupt good manners, and my hon. friend was for some time in local politics, fortunately not for very long, but for some little time he was in the school of Murray and of Armstrong, a school of evasion, where you could not get a direct answer to a direct question if circumlocution could be used. He was trained in that school for years until the people of his native county, Cumberland, realizing his sterling worth and his great ability, charitably turned him down at the polls that he might not follow those people any longer. But, sir, I fear that that school of evasion has had some little effect on my hon. friend, because instead of coming right out here and saying, "The government is going to do this thing for Nova Scotia, or it is not," he made a laboured speech in which he attempted to show that thirty-five or forty years ago the Liberal party had done so-and-so for Nova Scotia.

Let me repeat, we in Nova Scotia are not any longer interested in what happened thirty-five or forty years ago. A commission has been appointed to deal with the rights of the province of Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces within confederation. It took three years of agitation, three years in which to crystallize public opinion before that commission was appointed. Their recommendations have been favourable to the maritime provinces. We in the maritime provinces have played an honourable part ever since we entered confederation. We played a worthy part in the consummation of confederation itself, and now we come to this parliament, not as suppliants, not as mendicants, not as beggars, but as the representatives of a free people asking that justice be done, asking that the recommendations made by an impartial tribunal, the creation of this government itself, shall be fulfilled to the letter. For that the representatives of the maritime provinces on this side of the house stand. For that no reasonable man can criticize us, and for that we shall stand until these recommendations are implemented one hundred per cent by the parliament of Canada.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that I am only voicing the sentiments of everybody who has listened to him when I congratulate the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall) most sincerely on his very eloquent and very high-spirited deliverance. The fact that it has not very much to do with the subject in hand I do not think troubles him, and as a matter of fact I shall not attempt in the short space of time which I have to follow him in the ramifications of his speech. I shall try, however, to satisfy his desire that there be no evasion in connection with this matter, and I shall endeavour to deal with a few facts in connection with the Duncan commission report which seem to have been left out by him and by the other speakers who preceded him.

I admire the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution (Mr. MacDonald). Compliments are flying thick and fast to-night, and I want to say that in this house, at least on the other side, I do not know of any fairer gentleman than the hon. member who moved this amendment to the motion to go into supply. I do believe that few public duties which he, with his fair-mindedness, has ever performed have been more distasteful to him than the motion which he moved this afternoon, because I know perfectly well that when he sets out in a resolution the statement and regrets that the government has refused to implement in full the recommendations of the Duncan report—mark you, has refused to—my hon. friend must know that he is travelling on very thin ice indeed.

I want to deal with only three or four matters in connection with the Duncan report. First, let me say one word with regard to the steel industry, which is tacked on at the end of the amendment but which, after all, is only intended to give some foundation for the general motion of censure and want of confidence which is contained in the resolution. The recommendation of the Duncan commission with regard to the steel industry is a recommendation—it has been read half a dozen times in this house to-day—in two branches. One is a statement that the steel and customs tariff has been submitted to the tariff advisory board, and that the commission were notified by the chairman of the board that it was under consideration, and the commission say with respect to this, that they regard it as their duty to record that the significance of this industry to the maritime provinces was forcibly brought home to their attention, not only in the manufacturing towns they visited in the maritimes, but also throughout the agricultural districts of the maritimes, and they say they record this in order to emphasize the need for prompt action. The second branch is that there is a recommendation, as has been suggested, that a bounty be paid on the manufacture of steel, based on the amount of Canadian coal used in its manufacture.

As I pointed out only a very short time ago, at the time this recommendation was dealt with by the house the steel industry in Nova Scotia was in the throes of litigation. Two parties were fighting for the control of that industry, and that condition of affairs continued up until some time in March of this year, when a third party stepped in, according to the newspapers, and made their own arrangements. These arrangements had not been completed at the time of the budget debate, and at that time it was pointed out that it was felt that some conditions should be required before anybody could fairly and properly and intelligently deal with the steel industry. Some of those conditions have been mentioned by my hon. friends opposite. One condition was that there should be unity between the steel and coal industries. Those who do not come from Nova Scotia may not understand that reference. For their benefit I want to say that there was considerable antagonism apparently between those who held control of the company engaged in steel operations, and those who held control of the company engaged in coal operations. It was felt that the steel and coal industries should be put on some basis whereby they would be unified, because as one of my hon. friends has quite properly said to-night, those two industries are allied, and can best work together as a united industry. The steel industry forms the main market for the slack coal of the coal industry. So one of the suggestions was that there should be an assurance of unity between the two, also that there should be some rearrangement with regard to the capitalization, running up to over one hundred million dollars. With regard to the wage disputes arising from time to time, suggestions were made that dividends were being paid on watered stock to the detriment of the workmen, and that there should be a readjustment whereby the capital would be reduced so it culd be ascertained what was the proper amount on which dividends should be paid. It was further proposed that the unwieldy organization of, I think, fourteen different corporations should be reorganized, and that there should be co-operation both provincial and municipal. Those suggestions were made in March of this year.

When the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) made his announcement in this house last year, the newspapers, as I had occasion to state a few weeks ago, commended the government for the decision arrived at and found ample justification for the delay in dealing with the industry in view of the uncertaintly which existed at that time. I want to say to my hon. friends that only within the last few weeks did the local legislature of Nova Scotia pass an act incorporating a brand new company called the Dominion Coal and Steel Corporation, with a reduced capital. That was the first definite step towards reorganization. But my hon. friends are a bit impatient with regard to the steel industry. I think if they followed the order paper at the present time they would find that either in the senate or in this house there is at least one bill which has to do with this very industry, indicating that not yet has the matter of capitalization and the reorganization of those companies been completed. Further, I want to say to them that this new corporation has not made any application to the tariff advisory board, and it has been represented that the situation is considerably changed in view of certain opinions held by those in control of the new corporation. Consequently there may be a substantial change in the application to the tariff advisory board so far as the steel and coal industry is concerned. Bounties and tariff are all bound up together. My friends opposite are a little too anxious to make political capital out of this particular point, instead of having due regard to the benefit of the industries involved. Who is there who would know more about the steel industry or who would be more desirous of having it properly dealt with when the time comes than the people who have put their money in it and now own it? To my mind it might fairly be left to them to present their case to the tariff advisory board. I rather expect we will find my good friend from West Algoma (Mr. Simpson), who so splendidly presented his case this afternoon, coming along with his friends whom he represents and joining in an application to the tariff advisory board on behalf of the steel industry, instead of there being, as at the present time, three or four conflicting applications, plus representations from some three hundred and fifty other interests who feel that they are affected. In a word, I expect there will be some unanimity of endeavour to bring about an adjustment of tariff or bounty which will redound to the benefit of the steel industry. I do think my hon. friends might have a little patience until this matter has shaken down. As they know, only a very few weeks ago an arrangement was arrived at whereby the new wage agreement will be continued over a certain period. With these various matters adjusted the industry may have an opportunity, which it has not had for some time, to proceed under normal conditions in order to ascertain just exactly what its needs are.

I am sure my hon. friends, if they speak frankly and in the interests of the industry, will declare that what they want done, whether it happens to be in the Duncan report or not, is that this industry be put and kept fairly on its feet. To give just the specific bounty mentioned in the report may not be the way to accomplish this. In fact is has been represented to me and to others from time to time that that was not all that the steel industry desired or that was necessary in order that this great imperial industry, as my hon. friend described it, should prosper. Therefore I think my hon. friends ought to give us credit for endeavouring to deal with this matter intelligently with a view to ascertaining what the industry needs, instead of proceeding blindly simply because it happens to be in the letter of the Duncan report, and then have parliament snap its fingers later and say: Well, we have done what the Duncan report said we should do; now let the industry take care of itself. I do not believe that is the best way for us to proceed, and I do not think that my hon. friends opposite, unless inspired by the eloquence rather than the logic of my hon. friend from Inverness would desire to see the industry so dealt with. My hon. friend is quite right. It is not a matter of months or of years, it is not even a question of getting something done this May or June. If the industry is worth saving the endeavour should rather be to put it on such a basis that it will be a national asset for our Canadian people.

I make no apology to my hon. friend from Inverness or to other hon. members for having on a previous occasion said that the fact that we have any steel industry to talk about at all is not due to my hon. friends opposite who now shed crocodile tears about the steel industry, but is due to the Liberal party in 1897 having taken steps to put the industry on a solid basis. When my hon. friends came into power in 1911 we did not find them taking the attitude that they take to-night. Not a bit of it. In 1911 the steel bounties expired. Did the Conservative party show the same solicitude for the steel industry that they do now? Not at all; the bounties were not revived. And later on they granted a drawback on steel used in the manufacture of wire, thousands of tons of which are imported into the province of Nova Scotia itself. This is the party which is now advocating that the steel industry should be protected, and is posing as its champion. I think it was in 1912—it is on Hansard—that some 75,000 tons of steel rails were required for the Canadian Pacific Railway and for the Grand Trunk Pacific. What happened? Our friends who to-day are so keen to have the steel industry protected, particularly my hon. friend from Toronto, at that time granted an application for a rebate of duty in order that that 75,000 tons of steel rails should be brought in from the United States in competition with the steel industry of Nova Scotia. So I do feel that my hon. friends ought not to take too much unction to their souls as being the only friends of the steel industry; they may safely leave it to the tariff advisory board and to the government to give reasonable and serious consideration to this matter.

So much for the steel industry, Mr. Speaker. Now I want to deal with one or two other matters. An hon. member opposite had a word to say with regard to subsidies. Do you know, sir, the only complaint that our friends of the opposition had to make was that the additional subsidy of $875,000 recommended by the Duncan report was not paid—mark you—in one lump sum, but in two lump sums. We are getting down as fine as that. If it is on an item of that kind that the alleged refusal of the government to carry out the Duncan report is based, then it seems to me that my hon. friends, as the Minister of Railways said, are not going very long to be able to derive comfort from the alleged failure of the government in implementing the Duncan report. But even in that I would point out to hon. members, to use the phrase of my hon. friend from Inverness, that the government has "implemented one hundred per cent"—that is his expression—the recommendation of the Duncan report. The report was submitted in September 1926—not 1927, as someone suggested this afternoon. Parliament was not in session at that time. The report was eventually laid on the table of the house and the government announced its policy. That policy was to implement the recommendation of the report in regard to the matter of subsidy. What was the recommendation of the report in respect of subsidy? It was this:

> And accordingly we recommend that "immediate interim lump-sum increases should be made in the payments to the three maritime provinces."

What were the "payments" referred to? Subsidies were being paid at that time—how? Under the statute they were being paid every six months, on July 1 and January 1. How would you make interim lump sum increases in the payments that were being made? The Minister of Finance might have said, "I am going to wait until the first of January to pay the whole $875,000"—according to my hon. friend's argument. But he did not do that. He said, "I will pay the $875,000 as an increase in the payments now being made. There is a payment due, half of the subsidy on July 1, and I will pay half of the increase then; the other half of the subsidy is due on January 1, and I will pay the other half of the increase then." The minister, who is not generally very soft-hearted in the matter of finances, meets the representatives from Nova Scotia and they ask him whether, in order to enable them to balance their books, he would not pay the last half, the $437,500, due January 1, a little ahead of time. He agrees and pays it on November 17; and my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Smith) takes occasion to suggest that the Minister of Finance was "called down"—those were the words he used—at the interprovincial conference for not paying the subsidies as they were due. If my hon. friend takes the responsibility for making that statement on behalf of the ministers from Nova Scotia—and I can hardly credit that the ministers from Nova Scotia took such an attitude—then I suppose the Minister of Finance cannot be blamed if he says, "We will stick to the letter of the bond and after this pay on July 1 and January 1." I do think it is unfortunate, to say the least, that quibbles should occur about a matter as simple as this, and that an endeavour should be made to show that the government has not implemented this recommendation in the Duncan report, when as a matter of fact it has fulfilled the very letter of the bond. So much for the matter of subsidies. The increase has been paid for last year and it is in the estimates for this year.

My friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) has already dealt with the question of railway rates, but there is a matter which he did not emphasize and to which I think it well to call the attention of the house, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to what this government has done regarding railway rates. Implemented the report 100 per cent? Yes, and a good deal more than 100 per cent so far as the amount is concerned. The house will find a recommendation in the report, with regard to railways, to the effect that there shall be a 20 per cent decrease in the rates on government railways in the maritime provinces. This recommendation appears at page 22:

> We recommend, therefore, that an immediate reduction of 20 per cent (so that 192 will become approximately 155) be made on all rates charged on traffic which both originates and terminates at stations in the Atlantic division of the Canadian National Railways (including export and import traffic, by sea, from and to that division), and that the same reduction be also applied to the Atlantic division proportion of the through rates on all traffic which originates at stations in the Atlantic division (excluding import traffic by sea), and is destined to points outside the Atlantic division.

The Minister of Railways has pointed out that not only has the government put into effect the 20 per cent reduction in local rates on the Canadian National Railways and 20 per cent on through traffic on the Canadian National as recommended, but hon. members do not realize that there has been paid in six months over $421,000 to other roads which were not covered by the Duncan report. And there is in the 1929 estimates a sum of $1,050,000 to be paid to these same roads. My hon. friends may say that there is a reference in the Duncan report to other roads. They will find that the only time it is suggested that the government shall pay to any other railway is when that railway is prejudiced by the reduction of Canadian National rates; in other words, they shall pay only to a railway which is in competition with government railways. And there, as the Minister of Railways points out, it is only to the Canadian Pacific Railway, inasmuch as the report refers to "the other great railway system." So that if the government stuck strictly to the letter of the report as brought down, and which hon. gentlemen desire to have implemented 100 per cent, the farmers shipping apples from Kentville to Halifax would get no 20 per cent reduction on the Dominion Atlantic Railway, because that railway is not prejudiced by the reduction on the Canadian National lines, which are not in competition with it. My hon. friends forget these things when talking about implementing the report 100 per cent. The government has endeavoured to see that there shall not be in the same province or territory one railway operating 20 per cent less than another, even though they may not be in competition.

Let me now point out what some people in the maritime provinces think of the question; let me show that there are people there who realize what is being done. The statement is made by Mr. A. P. Patterson, president of the transportation commission, Maritime board of trade, published in Halifax Herald of May 17, 1928:

> Maritime shippers benefited to extent of $2,400,031.27 in eight months as a result of reduced freight rates in line with the recommendations of the Duncan report. This is the saving in that period through the operation of the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

It seems to me that this testimony from the maritime provinces is worth something, and I fancy that if my hon. friends had desired to be quite fair in the matter they would have admitted as much. My hon. friend from Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) in his introductory remarks did admit that something had been done in the matter of freight rates; nevertheless his resolution proceeds to condemn the government for its "refusal" to implement the Duncan report 100 per cent. Although in the instance I have given the government went far beyond the report.

I, with others, desire to point out to the house and to the country this fact: that it has not been demonstrated that the contribution made by the Dominion in order to pay that 20 per cent reduction will necessarily mean forever a loss to the country. I hold in my hand a copy of the Financial Post of April 27, 1928, in which there appears an article published just after my colleague the Minister of Railways had brought down his estimates indicating the amount required this year in connection with the Maritime Freight Rates Act. This is what this article states:

> When the report of the National Railways, covering the operation in the Maritimes is studied closely it is found that there is much to warrant an optimistic view of the future. Indeed it may well be that the Canadian people once more are proving that a reduction in rates is, in the long run, a profitable policy. The postal rates were reduced from three to two cents and after a short period of deficits the post office department is now in a fair way to produce a surplus for the first time in many years.
>
> The analysis of freight movement in the maritimes proves that with the aid of the reduction the volume of traffic commenced to expand. In 1926, 2,854,328 tons of freight were handled and in 1927, 3,000,615 tons, an improvement of 7 per cent. Anyone conversant with the principle of the increase in efficiency resulting from greater volume, knows that it would require only a comparatively moderate increase in freight to place the maritime lines upon an even footing. Should freight advance another 7 per cent in 1928, it would be reasonable to expect a 10 per cent increase in earnings, which would reduce the deficit by more than $1,000,000. If the betterment continued the deficit would disappear entirely within three years.

So I do suggest that this legislation does not necessarily represent a loss eventually to the Dominion, but the article does absolutely contradict the spirit of this amendment now before the house.

While I am dealing with the matter of freight rates may I touch on one other matter which was not mentioned by any of my hon. friends. I am surprised that they did not discover that the Duncan report recommended something else. My hon. friend from Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church), who has an eagle eye for these things, came close to it when he said something about subventions. The Duncan report recommended that a system which had been in force in 1924 or 1925, whereby a subvention was paid on coal taken by rail from Nova Scotia to Quebec, should be renewed. That recommendation appeared at page 35 of the report; I will not trouble to read it all, but will just place the particular sentence on record:

> A committee of parliament which sat during the session of 1926, recommended that early consideration should be given by the government to the advisability of renewing the subvention, and we would respectfully support that recommendation.

Coming from the maritime provinces, and having some regard to the interests of the coal industry, I considered that recommendation to be of some importance. I just want to remind the house that on March 30th of this year the government passed an order in council, I think P.C. 539, which again has gone far beyond the recomendations of the Duncan report; not one hundred per cent but one hundred and fifty per cent at least. The old subvention provided that a 50 cent per ton reduction should be made in the freight rate on coal hauled from Nova Scotia to Quebec.

On motion of Mr. Ralston the debate was adjourned.

REPARATIONS COMMISSION

REPORT OF JAMES FRIEL, K.C., COMMISSIONER, TABLED

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): With the permission of the house and in compliance with the wish expressed by the leader of the opposition and other hon. gentlemen opposite, I beg to lay on the table the report of the commissioner appointed by His Excellency the Governor General in Council under the Inquiries Act to investigate and report upon all claims which might be submitted, for the purpose of determining whether they were within the annex to section 1 of Part VIII of the treaty of Versailles, and the fair amount of such claims.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 23, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Tenth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Parent.

Ninth report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Sanderson (for Mr. Hay).

REVALUATION OF SOLDIER SETTLEMENT LANDS

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I beg to lay on the table two copies of the regulations affecting applications for revaluation approved by the governor in council on May 16, 1928, P.C. 820.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFUND OF FEES

Mr. DAVID SPENCE (Parkdale) moved:

That in accordance with the usual practice in such cases, and in accordance with the recommendation of the committee on miscellaneous private bills the additional charges paid on the following private bills be refunded, namely:

Bill No. 298 (Letter P8 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of William Hogg.

Bill No. 307 (Letter W8 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of Augustus Vernon Ellis," and Bill No. 311 (Letter A9 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of Marie-Anne Palardy Murphy."

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I observe that my hon. friend's resolution states, "in accordance with the usual practice." For what particular reason should we remit these fees?

Mr. SPENCE: The matter was discussed in committee this morning, and the resolution was adopted by the committee. I would ask the chairman of the committee to explain the matter.

Mr. GEORGES PARENT (Quebec West): The main reason for the recommendation of the committee that these fines be refunded is that the lawyers engaged in these cases did not file their petitions before the House of Commons in due time, while the petitions were filed with the Senate on time. With the rules as they are at present the difficulty is this: In the Senate I believe they have at least twelve weeks within which to present their petitions, while in the House of Commons they have only six weeks. This has resulted in confusion and embarrassment for the lawyers engaged in these cases, and some of them have been one day late, and others two or three days late in presenting their petitions, rendering the parties liable to a fine of $200. In the particular cases that came before the committee this morning we concluded that under the circumstances the usual practice should be followed and these fines refunded.

Mr. ROBB: They are fines?

Mr. PARENT: Yes. Having had a little experience in presiding over this committee, I very much feel like recommending that some procedure be adopted which would obviate cases of this kind coming before us, because one would expect that the lawyers in these cases at least should know the period within which the petitions should be filed in both houses. If the time for receiving the petitions were the same for both houses, it would obviate such cases as we have had to consider lately.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

MOTION FOR PRINTING OF EVIDENCE

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I beg to move:

That the proceedings and evidence taken by the select standing committee on banking and commerce respecting improvement of the banking system of Canada, as submitted in their seventh report on the 3rd of May last, be printed as an appendix to the Journals of the house, and that 750 copies in English and 250 copies in French of said proceedings and evidence be printed in blue book form, and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough) moved:

That the first and final report of the select standing committee on Marine and Fisheries be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

RADIO—CANCELLATION OF LICENSE

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE STUDENTS ASSOCIATION

Mr. J. F. WHITE (London): Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a petition signed by Mrs. S. Marlowe and 28,155 other residents of London, Ontario, and vicinity, protesting against the cancellation by the government of the radio broadcasting license of the International Bible Students Association.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a petition signed by Mr. F. W. Martin and 15,062 other residents of the province of Saskatchewan, including 2,550 radio owners, protesting against the action of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in refusing to renew the radio broadcasting license of the International Bible Students Association.

Mr. A. SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I beg to present certain petitions signed by 7,773 radio owners and others in the province of Alberta praying that radio broadcasting privileges hitherto enjoyed by the International Bible Students Association be revived in the interests of freedom of speech and British fair play.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a petition signed by 11,577 residents of Manitoba protesting against the cancellation of the radio license enjoyed by the International Bible Students Association.

Mr. SPEAKER: I beg to inform the hon. gentlemen who have presented these petitions that they are not drafted according to the rules of the house; they are addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada. I will certainly despatch them to the right hon. gentleman.

THE DETROIT RIVER CANADIAN BRIDGE COMPANY

On motion of Mr. Odette, Bill No. 339 to incorporate the Detroit River Canadian Bridge Company was read the first and second times and referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by and asterisk.)

HON. N. W. ROWELL

Mr. ARTHURS:

1. What is the total amount paid by the Dominion government to Honourable N. W. Rowell during the last two fiscal years, (a) for professional services; (b) living allowance, and (c) travelling or other expenses?
2. Is there any further amount due to the Honourable N. W. Rowell for services rendered, or expenses, during the said period?
3. If so, what amount?

Mr. RINFRET:

Department of Finance

re Customs Inquiry Commission

1. (a) $44,060; (b) $3,230; (c) $3,140.84.
2. No.
3. Answered by No. 2.

Department of Justice

1. In 1926-27: (a) Appeal to P.C. re Lord's Day Act; Counsel fees, $4,600; Expenses, $22.06.

2 and 3. No information.

Department of Labour

1. (a) $1,000; (b) Nil; (c) $19.54.
2. No.
3. Answered by No. 2.

TRADE WITH UNITED STATES, 1927—GENERAL AND AGRICULTURAL

Mr. GOTT:

1. What were the total Canadian imports from the United States of America during the year 1927?
2. What were the total exports to the United States of America from Canada during the year 1927?
3. What were the total Canadian agriculture imports from the United States of America during 1927?
4. What were the total Canadian agriculture exports to the United States during the year 1927?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Imports into Canada for consumption from United States during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1927, $687,022,521.
2. Exports from Canada to United States during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1927, $479,335,230.
3. Imports into Canada from United States during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1927:

Commodities of which the basic raw materials are such as Canadian farms produce—

Raw materials	$41,747,292
Partially manufactured	9,699,866
Fully or chiefly manufactured	17,797,309
Total	$69,244,467

Commodities which Canada does not produce in their original form—

Raw materials	$ 67,643,836
Partially manufactured	8,950,373
Fully or chiefly manufactured	38,087,154
Total	$114,681,363

(Both field crops and the products of animal husbandry are included in above figures.)

4. Exports (Canadian produce) from Canada to United States during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1927:

Commodities produced, in their original state, on Canadian farms—

Raw materials	$ 68,018,636
Partially manufactured	7,345,865
Fully or chiefly manufactured	31,681,628
Total	$107,046,129

Commodities produced or manufactured in Canada from agricultural materials such as are not produced on Canadian farms—

Raw materials..	$ 211
Partially manufactured..	325,831
Fully or chiefly manufactured...	890,377
Total..	$1,216,419

(Both field crops and the products of animal husbandry are included in above figures.)

POSTAL SERVICE RECLASSIFICATION

Mr. McQUARRIE:

1. Did the Postmaster General, during the last session of parliament, recommend to the Civil Service Commission a higher reclassification of salaries for letter carriers and railway mail clerks, as promised?
2. If so, has that recommendation been implemented during the present session?
3. Has the Civil Service Commission failed to comply with said recommendation? If so, did it give any reasons and what are those reasons?
4. Has the government recommended to the Civil Service Commission revision of salaries for professional and technical classes?
5. If so, has a report been received by the government from the commission in connection therewith?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Did so during recess.

2 and 3. The Civil Service Commission has given careful consideration to the recommendations made by the Post Office Department but is unable to recommend for the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General in Council higher compensation rates for these classes because it considers that in comparison with other classes of positions of more or less comparable duties and responsibilities, these positions in the Post Office Department are now adequately remunerated. The commission has agreed to give further consideration to the provision of higher compensation for certain employees of the class railway mail clerk, which will include employees in charge of railway post offices and probably others.

4. The Civil Service Commission was requested by order in council to proceed with a study of the professional, scientific and translators classes with a view to increased compensation.

5. No. A report is in course of preparation.

JASPER PARK—PAVING

Mr. KELLNER:

1. Which department of the government did the paving at Jasper Park?
2. Was this paving done for the Canadian National Railways or for the parks branch?
3. What did the paving cost per square yard?
4. What are the items that go to make up the cost?
5. What was the cost of the tar sands used in paving f.o.b. cars?
6. What was the cost of the machine used in mixing the tar sands?
7. Does the government contemplate acquiring any more mixing machines or having any more constructed?
8. Has the government entered into a contract with the city of Edmonton to do certain paving?
9. If so, what is the amount of the contract?

Mr. RINFRET:

Department of the Interior:

1. Canadian National Parks Branch with technical assistance furnished by the mines branch.

2. Both.

3. $1.27 per square yard for highway pavement laid in 1927 by parks branch.

4. All items of work and material necessary for paving including cost of tar sands, freight, supply of aggregate, hauling, mixing, laying, rolling and depreciation on equipment.

5. Cost of tar sands used in 1927 on the parks branch work was $3.46 per ton, f.o.b. cars, McMurray.

6. The mixing machine was assembled by mines branch—the parks branch contributing mixing drums and other necessary parts to value of approximately $700. The total cost to the Department of the Interior and the mines department, including labour and material was approximately $2,000.

7. Yes, one machine to be constructed to the specifications of the mines department.

8. No.

9. Answered by No. 8.

Department of Railways and Canals:

1. Parks and mines branch of the Department of the Interior.

2. The parks branch were paving roadways of the department in the vicinity of Jasper Park and they paved a total area of 5,364 square yards at our request.

3. $1.137.

4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9. No information.

IMMIGRATION OFFICE—DETROIT

Mr. GOTT:

1. Does the Canadian government maintain an immigration office in Detroit, Michigan, or an office under the Department of Agriculture?
2. If so, where is it located?
3. Who is in charge?
4. What salary is paid?
5. How many people are employed in the office or on staff?
6. Who are they?
7. What salaries are paid them?

8. From whom is the office rented and what rent is paid?
9. What was the total cost of maintaining the office for the year 1927?
10. What returns were made and what was the nature of them?
11. How many Canadian government immigration offices are there in the United States of America?
12. How many people are engaged in them?
13. Where are they located?
14. What was the total cost of maintaining all the offices in the United States of America for the year 1927?
15. What was the cost of maintenance of each, salaries, rents, expenses, etc.?
16. What are the names and salaries, male or female, designated, of the respective officers in the United States of America, their position and rank?

Mr. FORKE:

1. Yes.
2. 10 Jefferson avenue, east, Detroit.
3. Mr. F. W. Kerr.
4. $3,120 plus $500 living allowance.
5. Four.
6. Mr. F. W. Kerr, Miss H. Grieve, Mr. J. C. Mitchell, Jr., Miss R. Preston.
7. Mr. Kerr, salary $3,120 plus $500 living allowance; Miss Grieve, salary $1,860; J. C. Mitchell, salary $1,380; Miss R. Preston, salary $1,080.
8. John I. Turnbull, $250 per month.
9. For the fiscal year 1927-28, $16,057.22.
10. Monthly returns showing: (a) number of inquiries received; (b) number of replies from inquirers; (c) number of inquirers interviewed outside of office; (d) number of inquirers interviewed at office; (e) number of good prospects established; (f) number of settlers sent to Canada; (g) number of carloads of settlers' effects sent to Canada; (h) amount of cash and value of effects of settlers; (i) travelling expenses incurred.
11. 17.
12. 41.
13. Boston, Chicago, Columbus, Detroit, Fargo, Great Falls, Harrisburg, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Manchester, Omaha, Saginaw, San Francisco, St. Paul, Spokane, Syracuse and Woonsocket.
14. For the fiscal year 1927-28, $216,907.45.
15.

——	Salaries	Rents	General Expenses	Exhibitions	Total
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
Boston	4,340 00	2,199 96	1,162 00	1,902 35	9,604 31
Columbus	4,340 00	840 00	2,564 27	1,254 39	8,998 66
Chicago	5,240 00	2,160 00	4,251 77	2,232 62	13,884 39
Detroit	7,901 71	3,000 00	3,698 35	1,457 16	16,057 22
Fargo	7,624 94	1,500 00	5,822 59	3,674 60	18,622 13
Great Falls	4,394 48	1,200 00	2,038 26	191 87	7,824 61
Harrisburg	4,850 00	1,380 00	1,730 85	1,504 49	9,465 34
Indianapolis	5,000 00	3,000 00	3,515 97	2,986 12	14,502 09
Kansas City	7,765 00	3,000 00	10,209 85	2,564 81	23,539 66
Manchester	3,235 08	1,200 00	1,033 85	.....	5,468 93
Omaha	7,079 03	3,000 00	8,542 07	5,472 93	24,094 03
Saginaw	1,800 00	240 00	103 04	.....	2,143 04
St. Paul	8,575 00	3,000 00	8,309 56	2,094 56	21,979 12
Spokane	4,950 65	1,800 00	2,652 92	1,045 46	10,449 03
Syracuse	3,710 00	1,500 00	3,022 61	.....	8,232 61
San Francisco	5,779 92	5,400 00	2,621 22	.....	13,801 14
Woonsocket	2,780 00	600 00	2,279 30	.....	5,659 30
Portland	1,853 28	364 00	364 56	.....	2,581 84
	91,219 09	35,383 96	*63,923 04	26,381 36	216,907 45

*Exhibition expenses for eight months, to November 30th, 1927, the exhibition branch having been transferred to the Department of Trade and Commerce on December 1st last.
The Portland office was closed in November, 1927.

16.

Office	Name	Classification	Salary	Male or Female
Boston	M. A. Bowlby	Emigration Agent, Gr. 2	$2,520 L.A. $500	M.
	H. B. Baldwin	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,380	F.
Columbus	W. S. Nethery	Emigration Agent, Gr. 2	$2,520 L.A. $500	M.
	E. Dickerson	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,380	F.
Chicago	C. J. Broughton	Emigration Agent, Gr. 2	$3,120 L.A. $500	M.
	M. Hill	Stenographer, Gr. 3	1,680	F.
Detroit	F. W. Kerr	Emigration Agent, Gr. 3	$3,120 L.A. $500	M.
	H. Grieve	Clerk, Gr. 4	1,860	F.
	J. C. Mitchell	Stenographer, Gr. 3	1,380	M.
	R. Preston	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,080	F.
Fargo	W. E. Black	Emigration Agent, Gr. 3	$2,880 L. A. $500	M.
	M. Adams	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,080	F.
	A. Runyon	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,080	F.
	R. Norman	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,080	F.
Great Falls	G. A. Cook	Emigration Agent, Gr. 2	$2,520 L.A. $500	M.
	R. Westerlund	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,380	F.
Harrisburg	F. A. Harrison	Emigration Agent, Gr. 3	$3,120 L.A. $500	M.
	M. Adams	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,260	F.
Indianapolis	R. A. Garrett	Emigration Agent, Gr. 3	$3,120 L.A. $500	M.
	Mrs. H. Cottingham	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,200
Kansas City	M. J. Johnstone	Emigration Agent, Gr. 3	$3,120 L.A. $500	M.
	W. J. Fraser	Emigration Agent, Gr. 1	1,920 L.A. $500	M.
	Mrs. G. Crutchfield	Stenographer, Gr. 3	1,680
	V. Estes	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,080	F.
Manchester	J. B. Riordon	Emigration Agent, Gr. 2	$2,400 L.A. $500	M.
	Guy Gaudet	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,200	M.
Omaha	A. E. Pilkie	Emigration Agent, Gr. 3	$3,120 L.A. $500	M.
	G. F. Brooks	Emigration Agent, Gr. 1	1,920 L.A. $500	M.
	D. C. Frisbie	Stenographer, Gr. 1	960	M.
Saginaw	R. A. Laurier	Emigration Agent, Gr. 1	$1,800	M.
St. Paul	Knute Haddeland	Emigration Agent, Gr. 3	$3,120 L.A. $500	M.
	W. D. Breckon	Emigration Agent, Gr. 1	1,920 L.A. $500	M.
	M. Oliver	Stenographer, Gr. 3	1,560	F.
	E. Martinson	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,200	F.
Spokane	D. N. McDonell	Emigration Agent, Gr. 1	$1,920 L.A. $500	M.
	O. Laney	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,080	F.
	H. Wade	Stenographer, Gr. 1	960	F.
Syracuse	C. E. Smith	Emigration Agent, Gr. 2	$2,040 L.A. $500	M.
	Geo. Whyte	Stenographer, Gr. 3	1,380	M.
San Francisco	Gilbert Roche	General Immigration Agent	$3,500 L.A. $900	M.
	J. McColl	Stenographer, Gr. 2	1,380	F.
Woonsocket	L. A. Delorme	Emigration Agent, Gr. 2	$2,400 L.A. $500	M.

DETROIT AND WINDSOR FERRY COMPANY

Mr. GOTT:

1. Does the Detroit and Windsor Ferry Company operate through franchise or charter from the government of Canada?

2. If so, when was same issued?

3. Under what department of state is it controlled?

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. Company operates under license granted by the government.

2. 1928.

3. Department of Public Works.

NOTRE DAME DES BOIS—EXCISE OFFICER

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Was the customs and excise enforcement officer at the port of Notre-Dame des Bois, Compton county, Quebec, who was the predecessor of the present incumbent of that office, dismissed from his said office?
2. If so, when, why, and upon whose complaint?
3. Did the officer, who was so dismissed, request that an official enquiry be held?
4. If so, was such request for an enquiry granted?
5. If not, why was such request refused?
6. How many years had the officer, who was so dismissed, been in the employ of the government?
7. How much money had he contributed to the superannuation fund during the period of his employment?
8. Has the amount so contributed by him to said fund been returned to him?
9. If not, why not?

Mr. EULER:

1. Yes.
2. December 6, 1926—Upon charge of political partisanship made by a member of parliament.
3, 4 and 5. No, but on his behalf representations were made by the Service Bureau of the Canadian Legion of the B.E.S.L. who were informed that Mr. Dumoulin would be given an oportunity to be heard. No further advice received, and it was understood that Mr. Dumoulin had left the district.
6. Seven years, seven months.
7. Five per cent of salary from date of permanent appointment April 1, 1921.
8. No.
9. Under consideration.

PACIFIC GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY

Mr. NEILL:

Having regard to the reference in the Speech from the Throne to provincial railway problems of the several provinces as outlined at the Dominion Provincial conference, are any negotiations being carried on between the government of Canada or the Canadian National Railways and the government of the province of British Columbia for the sale of the Pacific Great Eastern railway to the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. DUNNING: Negotiations with the British Columbia government are now proceeding.

CHIEF JUSTICE OF CANADA—SALARY, ETC.

Mr. EDWARDS:

1. What is the salary of the chief justice of Canada?
2. Does the chief justice receive extra remuneration for officiating in the absence of His Excellency the Governor General? If so, how much?
3. Does the chief justice receive any allowance when attending meetings of the judicial committee of the Imperial Privy Council, and, if so, how much?
4. How much was paid to the chief justice of Canada in each of the last five years by way of salary, expenses and other allowances?
5. What judges retired from the bench are receiving pensions, what salary was being paid to each when retired, how long had each served, and what amount of pension does each receive?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. $15,000.
2. This is forbidden under section 38 of the Judges' Act.
3. Under the Judges' Act, section 22, any judge who is a member of His Majesty's Privy Council may be paid a sum not exceeding $3,000 for expenses of travelling and living while in attendance at a sitting.

4.

	Salary	Expenses
In 1923-24 Hon. Sir Louis Davies..	$15,000 00	.....
In 1924-25 Hon. Sir Louis Davies..	1,290 32	.....
In 1924-25 Hon. F. A. Anglin..	8,125 00	.....
In 1925-26 Hon. F. A. Anglin..	15,000 00	.....
In 1926-27 Hon. F. A. Anglin..	15,000 00	$2,000
In 1927-28 Hon. F. A. Anglin..	15,000 00	.....

5.

—	Salary	Years served	Pension
Supreme Court of Canada—	$		$ cts.
Sir C. Fitzpatrick	10,000	12	6,666 66
A. Malouin	12,000	19	8,000 00
Quebec Courts—
J. S. Archibald	10,000	29	8,000 00
H. G. Carroll	9,000	17	6,000 00
Sir C. P. Davidson	8,000	27	8,000 00
C. J. Doherty	7,000	15	4,666 66
T. Fortin	7,000	18	4,666 66
C. LeBeuf	8,000	17	8,000 00
J. D. Purcell	7,000	20	7,000 00
J. E. Robidoux	9,000	20	7,000 00
L. Tellier	7,000	27	7,000 00
A. Tessier	9,000	15	6,000 00
A. A. Bruneau	9,000	20	6,000 00

5.—Concluded

—	Salary	Years served	Pension
	$		$ cts.
Ontario Courts—
J. A. Barron	5,000	27	5,000 00
C. W. Colter	5,000	17	5,000 00
J. L. Dowlin	3,000	12	2,000 00
E. R. Fralick	3,000	34	3,000 00
A. M. Greig	5,000	9	5,000 00
A. B. Klein	5,000	33	5,000 00
J. H. Madden	5,000	21	5,000 00
H. O'Leary	5,000	16	5,000 00
G. Smith	5,000	18	5,000 00
C. J. Snider	5,000	30	5,000 00
H. A. Ward	5,000	10	5,000 00
Nova Scotia Courts—
F. G. Forbes	5,000	24	3,333 33
N. H. Meagher	6,000	25	6,000 00
B. Russell	9,000	20	7,000 00
New Brunswick Courts—
J. G. Forbes	3,500	20	3,500 00
J. A. VanWort	4,000	6	2,666 66
W. W. Wells	3,000	18	2,000 00
Manitoba Courts—
T. D. Cumberland	5,000	33	5,000 00
L. A. Prud'homme	5,000	39	5,000 00
J. Ryan	3,000	34	3,000 00
Alberta Courts—
M. S. McCarthy	9,000	11	6,000 00
R. Winter	5,000	18	5,000 00
British Columbia Courts—
E. Harrison	3,000	20	2,000 00
W. W. Spinks	3,000	20	2,000 00
Yukon—
J. Craig	5,000	12	5,000 00

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS

CLASSIFICATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES AND POSTMEN

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all papers, letters, correspondence, orders in council and all other documents between the Civil Service Commission and the honourable, the postmaster general, or the government or any department thereof regarding the classification of postal employees and postmen.

TRADE TREATIES WITH GERMANY AND CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, answering my hon. friend from Fort William (Mr. Manion) regarding trade treaty negotiations, I said that:

As regards Cuba, as my hon. friend knows, there is an agreement at present in force. I think I advised the house early in the session that we have a most favoured nation agreement with Cuba pending negotiations in connection with a treaty.

I should have added, as I think I did in making the first statement, that in the agreement between Cuba and the United States, dated December 11, 1902, article 3 provides:

Articles of United States shall be admitted into Cuba at a reduction of 20 per cent.

Article 8 of the same agreement stipulates that:

This preferential shall continue during the term of the convention in respect to like imports from other countries.

So we have not the same conditions as have the United States.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): When my hon. friend from Fort William asked the question, I suggested that there was also another agreement under consideration, judging from what the Cuban minister said the other night. That is what he was referring to.

Mr. ROBB: We have now a temporary agreement which provides for imports from Cuba under the intermediate tariff. We are negotiating with them now.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

STRUCTURAL STEEL WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Northwest Toronto): I desire to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr.

Heenan) what steps the department are taking to adjust the strike of structural steel workers engaged on important public works in the city of Toronto.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Acting Minister of Labour): As acting minister of the department, no request has reached me to act in the matter, but I shall be glad to make inquiries and let my hon. friend know.

Mr. CHURCH: The other day the Minister of Labour said that there had been a request to the department to act.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON FISHERIES

Hon. W. A. BLACK (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the report of the royal commission investigating the fisheries of the maritime provinces and the Magdalen islands was laid on the table some ten days ago, and of the almost paramount importance of the fishing industry to those provinces, I desire to ask the Prime Minister when the government will be prepared to deal with the matter.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): As my hon. friend has just said, it was but ten days ago that the report was tabled. Before the government can contemplate bringing in legislation the members of the administration will wish carefully to peruse the report. I understand that there are some recommendations which might be carried out immediately without legislation; they will undoubtedly be entertained favourably. Any recommendation requiring legislation will have to stand over until another session.

QUEBEC, SAGUENAY AND CHIBOUGAMAU RAILWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): On April 23 last I asked the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) a question respecting the Quebec, Saguenay and Chibougamau railway, and he was to obtain if possible certain further information. I have clipped from a newspaper a prospectus of the issue of the bonds of the company and a reading notice that:

> The company has an arrangement with the Canadian National Railways under which the latter company will approve the location of line as well as supervise its construction. The company has also a close understanding with the Canadian National Railways with respect to the handling and development of traffic.

Certain officers of the Canadian National are directors of the enterprise, and having in mind what transpired in connection with Grand Trunk Pacific obligations, which purchasers in Britain afterwards alleged constituted a debt of this country, I direct the minister's attention to the matter for the purpose of asking him whether the government as such is taking any part in it. A correspondent of mine, who has no political interest in the matter, felt that it might involve us in the same situation as we were involved in with respect to Grand Trunk Pacific obligations, about which the minister is so well aware.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Since the last occasion on which the matter was mentioned in the house, an official statement has been published by authority of the legal vice-president of the Canadian National Railways, setting out very clearly the relationship between the Canadian National Railways and the Quebec, Saguenay and Chibougamau Railway. I am also advised by the president that it is correct that the Canadian National is undertaking to approve the route to be followed by the proposed line; is undertaking to supervise standards of construction; and intends to get into a position, with respect to the Quebec, Saguenay and Chibougamau Railway, whereby that railway may not sell its undertaking to any other railway company without first giving the Canadian National an opportunity to purchase it. Further, I am advised that a traffic agreement along the usual lines is in process of negotiation between the Canadian National and the Quebec, Saguenay and Chibougamau Railway, and the president and board of directors of the Canadian National deemed it wise, in protecting the interests of the Canadian National, that that company should have representation on the board of the Quebec, Saguenay and Chibougamau Railway Company. There is no financial responsibility, either by the Canadian National or by the government of Canada, for any of the securities issued by the Quebec, Saguenay and Chibougamau Railway Company.

Mr. BENNETT: I will discuss the matter further on the estimates.

VALUATION OF IMPORTED STRAWBERRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) and also of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) to a matter of very great importance to the strawberry growers of British Columbia. I am advised that local berries will be on the market in a few days, and within the next few weeks a number of cars will be available for marketing. I have here a telegram from Mission City signed by the following concerns: Fruit and Mercantile Exchange, Limited; Wilson Fruit and Produce Company; Central Fruit Distributors, Limited; Mapleridge Co-operative Exchange; Japanese Consolidated Farmers' Exchange.

These concerns represent about 2,000 growers and in their telegram they indicate that there is likely to be a heavy dumping of American berries on the Canadian market. They advise me that they have wired the Minister of Agriculture requesting that a fair market value be fixed on imported berries at 12 cents per pound. I believe other wires have also been sent from other parts of British Columbia. The reply of the minister, as handed to me, is to the effect that he had forwarded these inquiries to the Minister of National Revenue with suggestions that an opportunity be taken at the earliest possible date to discuss them. This is a very important matter; it means the difference between success and failure.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Question.

Mr. BARBER: I wish to ask the minister this question—

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are making a case.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to put his question simply and briefly.

Mr. BARBER: I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has discussed the matter with the Minister of National Revenue and whether he has complied with the request of these growers. If not, does he intend to do so?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I acknowledged all these communications, informed the various parties that I had referred their telegrams to the Minister of National Revenue expressing a desire, before any action was taken, to have an opportunity of discussing the matter with him. I have done so since then and I understand that under the existing law we have no authority to apply the dumping duties to any products carrying specific duties.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Following the question propounded to the Minister of Agriculture, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue whether this very important matter has been called to his attention. If so, what is the decision of his department in regard to invoking the provisions of the Customs Act and the Tariff Act to give the necessary protection to this industry?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): The statement made by the Minister of Agriculture as to having discussed the question with me is of course correct. With regard to anything else, my answer would be complete, for the moment at least, if I informed the house that there is no order in council under which the Minister of National Revenue can act.

Mr. STEVENS: May I ask one further question? We will go to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). Will the Minister of Justice be good enough to say whether or not under the Customs Act, section 43, and any provision of the Tariff Act, there is power which would enable the government by order in council or otherwise to give the necessary protection to this industry?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): The function of the Minister of Justice in that respect is to advise the Minister of National Revenue, and he has done so.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the Minister of Justice be kind enough to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: I am quite in order. Will the minister say whether, as Minister of Justice, he has advised the Minister of National Revenue that there is no power?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Department of Justice has advised the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): In view of the question which has been asked of the Minister of National Revenue, I would suggest to him that before any action is taken on the request of the 2,000 fruit growers of British Columbia, a proper investigation be made taking into consideration the effect any action will have upon the several million people buying these fruits.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The answer has been given, and the matter is concluded.

RECLAMATION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): On April 9, the Civil Service Commission advertised for a solicitor, Department of the Interior, water-powers and reclamation service. I would ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) whether this position has been filled and, if so, by whom?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I cannot answer the question but I will inquire and let my hon. friend know.

CANADIAN NATIONAL PARKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. A. BLACK (Halifax): I would ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) whether, in the supplementary estimates, he proposes making any provision for national parks or parks and historic sites in the province of Nova Scotia?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I am sorry I cannot inform my hon. friend prior to bringing down the estimates.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. members to be good enough to give notice on the order paper, of questions of this character, which it is evident the government cannot answer offhand. According to Bourinot, such questions should be placed on the order paper.

SUPPLY—STEEL INDUSTRY

The house resumed from May 22, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that the house go into committee of supply, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South).

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): When the house rose I was dealing with a feature of the Duncan report which, as I pointed out to the house, perhaps had not received the attention it deserved; I was referring to that portion of the report recommending the renewal of a subvention on coal carried all-rail from the maritime provinces to upper Canada. I was pointing out that on March 30 the government passed an order in council which, as I suggested, had gone further than the recommendation of the commission. My reasons for so stating are two: First, under the old order in council the maximum subvention was 50 cents per ton on coal moving from the maritime provinces. Under the new order in council, whereas the rate was $3.80 per ton the order in council provides that the maximum rate shall be $3 per ton; in other words, instead of a maximum reduction of 50 cents per ton the maximum reduction is 80 cents per ton. Just in that connection I might say that the new rate is based on the rate provided in the order in council relating to Alberta coal, and therefore the province of Nova Scotia gets the benefit of the Alberta rate under this new order in council. I would also remind the house that the 80 cent reduction is made on a rate which had been already reduced by almost 20 per cent under the Maritime Freight Rates Act of last year. In the province of New Brunswick the rate is reduced from $2.60 to $2.10, a 50 cent reduction.

In still another particular the order in council goes further than the old provision. Under the old order in council provision was made for the transportation by rail to upper Canada from Montreal, of maritime province coal, which had been water borne from Nova Scotia to Montreal. The provision then made called for a reduction of one-fifth of one cent per ton mile, but the maximum subvention which could be made was 50 cents per ton. Under the new order in council that maximum subvention has been increased to 75 cents per ton, which enables Nova Scotia coal to be moved just that much further into the province of Ontario. I call that to the attention of my hon. friends who suggest that this report is not being implemented, and those who will presumably support the amendment which states that the government have refused to implement the recommendations of the commission.

The order in council provides one further feature which is not contained in the original order in council, and that is an inquiry by the Board of Railway Commissioners into the cost of the transportation of coal from Montreal to western Ontario. Those are the benefits which are received by the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in connection with the recommendations made by the Duncan commission for a subvention on maritime coal.

There is still a further point to be considered in connection with coal, because this amendment speaks of coal particularly. The Duncan report contains a recommendation that provision be made for the establishment of coking plants; I would direct the attention of the house to this recommendation, which is on page 36 of the report and which recommends that we proceed without delay to put in practical shape the policy which was recommended so definitely by the Dominion fuel board as the only method by which eastern and central Canada can be relieved of dependence upon imported anthractite. I want to point out that the recommendation of the Dominion fuel board was submitted to the parliamentary committee in 1926; on that recommendation a resolution was drafted providing that a subsidy of 3 per cent per year should be paid on coking plants erected for the purpose of using Canadian coal, and that 3 per cent was to cover a period of fifteen years. I want to point out to my hon. friends who fear that this report has not been implemented that the legislation passed last year provided for a subsidy of 4 per cent to private companies, as against the 3 per cent recommended by the Dominion fuel board and 5 per cent to municipal corporations, and that that subsidy permitted the use of 30 per cent of American coal if that were found necessary in order to make a satisfactory coke. It was thought that possibly the requirement of one hundred per cent Canadian coal might defeat the erection of these plants, and it was determined to make the legislation practical. Again, in that respect, the government have gone further than the recommendations of the Duncan commission.

With respect to the duty on coal, we have the authority of my hon. friend who moved this amendment who has already stated his conviction that there is not much chance of an increase in the duty on coal. I do not know whether he has said that in this house, but he made that statement in his own county; he has been frank and fair enough to say so. Any special questions of tariff affecting coal are now before the tariff advisory board, as has been stated.

I would mention just two other matters dealt with in the Duncan report; first port development and export trade. I can only mention these matters in passing in order to register the fact that the government have fully carried out the recommendations of the commission. The Duncan commission recommended that statutory harbour commissions be established for the ports of Halifax and St. John. Some time ago attempts were made in this house to show that this meant some sort of special harbour commission different from the commissions existing throughout Canada. I think this house was convinced that the Duncan commission meant exactly what it recommended, a statutory commission based on those commissions whose work they had already investigated, particularly the harbour commission of Montreal. The statutory harbour commissions were established, and this year this house passed votes of $500,000 for the port of Halifax and $5,000,000 for the port of St. John, covering three years, in order that these harbour commissions may function.

Then we come to the question of fisheries. It was recommended that a deputy minister of fisheries be appointed; last session legislation was brought down and placed upon the statute books, in connection with that very matter. In addition to that, although it is not recommended in the Duncan report, last fall this government promptly appointed a commission because of an acute condition which arose in connection with the fisheries, and that commission investigated the fisheries of the maritime provinces. As has been stated in this house to-day, the report of that commission was laid on the table only about ten days ago, so I think we can fairly claim that the government have substantially not only carried out the recommendations of the Duncan report but in this case as well have gone even further.

I see I have only a moment or two left, but before I conclude I want to say that my good friend from Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) quoted from an old, well-worn set of statistics with regard to blast furnaces. Those statistics were quoted by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) during the budget debate this year. He attempted to show that the blast furnace industry had been going down in this country. I want to remind him and the house that my hon. friend was very careful not to note that two periods of government were covered by the figures which he quoted. He quoted the activities of the blast furnaces in 1913 and then jumped to 1925. In 1913 the men employed in blast furnace operations numbered 1,589, but in 1921, after eight years of rule by his own party, the number had diminished to 614. Since that time there has been a continual increase in this figure, and in 1927 the number of men engaged in operation of blast furnaces was 734.

Let me remind my hon. friend that the output of the blast furnaces in 1913 was about 1,000,000 tons; in 1921 it had gone down to 593,000 tons, and since that time, under this government, it has increased from 593,000 tons to 907,000 tons. The adverse balance of trade in connection with the steel industry was $101,000,000 in 1913; in 1921 it had gone up to $169,000,000 and in 1927 it was back to about $106,000,000.

There was mention made of the town of Trenton. I do not propose to make any parade of what I have been able to do, or what I have been trying to do, but I think when the record is examined it will be found that I have been just as sincere a friend of Trenton as any of the gentlemen on the other side of the house. I have spent a good deal of time and put forth a good deal of effort in order to assist, if I possibly could, in connection with the development and the progress of the steel industry at Trenton.

The Eastern Chronicle had an editorial only a day or two ago which said this about Trenton:

Trenton is busy and likely to be for this year.

I quite realize that the steel industry of Trenton has had a hard time, and also that the mining industry has had a difficult time, but I say that a very sincere attempt has been made, not always by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house, to bring about a better situation there. I do not believe, and I do not want this house to believe, that the sentiments expressed by my hon. friends represent the sentiment of the people of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): You found that out in 1925-26.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend found out a few things too in 1925-26. The people of Nova Scotia understand the situation with regard to the steel and coal industry and they know consideration will be given to these matters just as soon as conditions make it possible and practicable. They know that the matter of freight rates has been effectively dealt with in the way in which the Minister of Railways showed last night. They know that the government has gone much farther in connection with freight rates than was suggested in the Duncan report; that the increases in subsidies have been paid, as recommended by the Duncan report, yes, and perhaps a little ahead of time. They know that subventions on coal rates have been provided for as recommended by the Duncan report. They know that subsidies to coking plants have been provided for at a greater rate than recommended by the Duncan report. They know that harbour commissions have been established, and votes have been made so that they may carry on; that legislation has been passed with respect to a deputy minister of fisheries, and that in connection with this industry there has been the additional feature that a special commission has been appointed and has made its report.

I feel that this house is convinced, and I know the people of Nova Scotia are convinced, that there has been honest, sincere, and effective action not only to implement the letter of the Duncan report but to go even further to meet the needs when the situation demanded.

Hon. J. E. SINCLAIR (Queens): I will not detain the house at any great length with the remarks I have to make on this question.

At the outset, I want to take direct issue with the amendment that has been moved by my hon. friend from South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald). When the amendment says that the house regrets the refusal of the government to implement certain recommendations as contained in the Duncan report, it implies a refusal on the part of the government to do this. That is not a correct interpretation of the case, and I do not agree with it.

My hon. friends on the opposite side of the house, during this debate particularly and in some of the previous debates during this session, have undertaken to outline certain things as being recommended in the Duncan report which are not recommended therein. I do not wish to go over the many recommendations that were made, in order to bear out that statement, as I went into it rather fully in the debate on the address earlier in the session. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) has gone into it in detail in this debate, so it is unnecessary for me to go over the ground again.

I wish to say a word or two in regard to some statements that have been made as to the province of Prince Edward Island, particularly referring to the transportation system, port developments, and the ferry service between the island and the mainland.

I was pleased to hear the announcement made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) yesterday, that the government had come to the decision that it was necessary to provide for a second car ferry. I am sure that information will meet with the approval of the people of Prince Edward Island, regardless of party affiliations. Our people all feel that that was the first necessary step to take at this time, in carrying out the recommendations that were made in the Duncan report.

When hon. members say to this house and to the country that the Duncan report recommended a second car ferry between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, they place a very narrow and short-sighted interpretation upon the recommendations of that report. The report did not actually recommend a second car ferry, and I will read the recommendations that were made in order that the house and the country may properly grasp the facts.

The Duncan report as we all know was a very able, well considered and well written document. It is a report that will be in our hands for many years to come. I think every member of that commission gave a degree of consideration to the questions submitted to them that is very rarely given by commissions, and I say that without any reflection on other commissions.

The commission first pointed out that the ferry service was unsatisfactory, and that the railway administration admitted that there was need for supplemental provision being made, either in the form of a second ferry boat or a special freight boat. That was cited by the commission as the opinion of the railway management, and then the commission directly recommended as follows:

> We recommend that the matter be gone into from the point of view of placing at the disposal of the island such satisfactory means of communication as will ensure as regular and complete a service as can reasonably be made.

When we look at the recommendation that is made in the report, we must come to the conclusion, as fairminded people, that the Duncan commission went into the matter very fully, and that their recommendation was not limited to a single car ferry, or any single instrument that might be used to provide a satisfactory service. It was much broader than that. In effect the commission says that it is the duty of Canada to see that the island shall be ensured as regular and complete a service as reasonably can be given. I think that is the spirit of the report, and it is in that spirit that we must approach the question. I am glad to know, as I said before, that the government has come to the conclusion, as many others who are directly interested in the transportation system of the island have done, that at the present time a second car ferry is needed in order to give the island the regular service it should have.

I should like to refer to the question of port development. The Minister of Finance cited expenditures that were made for port development in Prince Edward Island. That work was necessary; it was undertaken by the Department of Public Works before the Duncan commission made its report and the report did not mention directly, just as I said was the case in regard to railways, what was actually needed at the present time in that regard. Let me read that part of the report so that the public may understand the matter. The report states:

> We recommend that the Public Works department make an immediate survey of these harbours, particularly as to wharfage and storage accommodation, with a view to adequate provision being made to meet the needs of the island's produce.

To say that we have implemented that recommendation to the full would be saying too much; but as I said in a previous debate—and my remarks have been referred to in the press and in other ways—I think the government have gone as far as they can reasonably be expected to do at this date towards implementing that recommendation. But it will be seen that the recommendation is a broad one and that it carries with it the statement that the government are responsible for meeting the needs of the island's traffic as time goes on. That I think is understood and I am glad to be able to say that the government were acting toward that end before the recommendation of the commission was tabled in the house.

Let me refer for a moment to what has been said by some other hon. members during the debate regarding certain railway improvements that are necessary on the island. If I may quote from yesterday's Hansard, I find that one of the speakers made this statement:

> I was showing how any transportation recommendations in connection with Prince Edward Island had not been carried out, particularly in regard to the standardization of the roadbed, and the ferry steamer.

There is no recommendation in the Duncan report asking for the standardization of the roadbed in Prince Edward Island. That is a narrow interpretation that is being put upon the report. I will not impute any motive to those who put that interpretation on, but it has been used outside of the house in an intent to influence the minds of the electors along a narrow channel. The recommendations of the report are generally for a proper transportation system in the island, not nailing the matter down to any particular action that may be taken at this time, but leaving it open for the future. In that spirit I think the government and the railway department are approaching the matter in an endeavour to carry out the intention of the Duncan commission and the wish of the people.

In the debate yesterday I did not altogether catch what was being said by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) when he was discussing the report with a view to showing the house that what was intended by the Duncan commission had not been sufficiently carried into effect. The main recommendation mentioned in the amendment was that in regard to coal and steel, but it was necessary for my hon. friend to make certain statements regarding the car ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland and the carrying out of certain recommendations in regard to our province. To do that he read a letter which I find on page 3256 of yesterday's Hansard, and he said that that letter emanated from a responsible citizen in Charlottetown. The hon. member however did not tell the house to whom the letter was addressed or who signed it, and unless he is willing to reveal to the house the author of the letter, I must hold him responsible for the statements made in it. In the last paragraph of that letter the writer uses these words in reference to standardization of the railway:

> Those farmers are moreover discriminated against by the expense of an extra handling of their shipments into broad gauge cars.

I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is willing to tell the house who the author of the letter is. I think the house has a right to know that, and if my hon. friend is not willing to reveal the name of the author he must be responsible for the statements made in the letter. In fairness to the railway management and the transportation system I wish to say that no extra expense to the shipper is involved in the handling of freight or in the transfer of shipments from the narrow gauge railway to the broad gauge railway. The expense of making that transfer is taken care of by the railway and the regular rate on freight is charged on a mileage basis on that part of the line just the same as on any other part. Moreover, as the house well knows, that matter comes under the jurisdiction of the railway commission. These words appear at the close of the quotation:

> And yet, John E. Sinclair will say the farmers are satisfied.

I do not know where that quotation was taken from, but so far as it applies to me I have not used those words either in parliament or in the country. Anything I have to say in regard to the farmers or any other class in Prince Edward Island, I am willing and ready to say in the house or anywhere else, without being quoted in an anonymous letter, the author of which my hon. friend has not seen fit to disclose to the house. Will my hon. friend say by whom and to whom the letter was written? The members are entitled to that information and when he uses the name of an hon. member, it is only fair that the source of his information should be given. If he refuses to give that information, then all I have to say is that he must assume the responsibility for his statement, which as far as it refers to me is not correct.

Mr. CANTLEY: I described accurately the gentleman who wrote me the letter. I have no intention of giving the hon. member any information on that point. I am perfectly willing to accept all responsibility for any statements I make.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): Do I understand that the hon. member refuses to say who wrote the letter?

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens). Then I must say that so far as the statement refers to me, it is not correct. I never made that statement, and if my hon. friend accepts the responsibility for his informant, he must accept my denial and become responsible for a statement that, so far as I am concerned, is not correct.

I thought it was proper that I should make a few remarks on this question, especially in view of what has been said by my hon. friend from Pictou, who has really very little interest in Prince Edward Island unless it is to use information of this kind in regard to matters with which he is not familiar himself, and has to take second hand, and in doing so he refuses to divulge the name of his informant, the person to whom the letter was addressed or the person by whom it was signed. Things are getting to a pretty low ebb when my hon. friend has to fall back on such information to support such a motion as we have before us at the present time.

There is nothing further I need say. I could say a good deal as to the effect of the Duncan recommendations in regard to Prince Edward Island, but we have gone thoroughly into that matter on former occasions and I see no necessity for going further into it. I shall only remark that the people of Prince Edward Island without regard to party affiliations will welcome the announcement made in the house last night by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), that the government had come to the decision that it was now time that a second car ferry was provided to carry on the ferry service between the island and the mainland. I agree with the government in their conclusion that this second car ferry is necessary for the service, and it cannot come one minute too soon to meet the increasing necessities of the traffic. During two months of the season that has just passed the business of the ferry was greater than the ferry boats could take care of; that is in the months of November and March, which are the two months when the peak movement of our chief crop, which is potatoes, takes place. With the increased acreage that is now being planted we feel that the present facilities will not be able to handle the traffic this year, and we are glad to know we can hope to have a better service the following year. I am sure that the minister's announcement will be received with the utmost satisfaction by every elector in Prince Edward Island, regardless of party affiliations.

Mr. R. H. JENKINS (Queens): I shall detain the house for only a few moments, but I would be remiss in my duty if I failed to express the appreciation not only of myself but of the people of our province with respect to the announcement made last night by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning). Some of our friends of the opposition would have us believe that no attention whatever was being paid by the government to the improvement of our car ferry service, but on looking up the Hansard of last year I find, at page 1336, under date of March 18, 1927, that the Prime Minister made this statement:

A survey of what is required with respect to the needed railway service improvements on Prince Edward Island will, as recommended, be made immediately, in order that future action may be intelligently determined.

The whole matter of ferry boat service between the island and the mainland is now under investigation, as recommended by the commission.

And that investigation has been going on. The Minister of Railways also stated in his address last night:

As a matter of fact, my hon. friend well knows, and the members from Prince Edward Island on this side of the house are in the best position to confirm it, that the question of a second car ferry for Prince Edward Island has been receiving the attention both of the Canadian National Railways and of the department for more than one year past.

That confirms the statement made by the Prime Minister in 1927. The Minister of Railways continued:

The members who sit on this side from the island have on several occasions waited upon myself, and have waited upon the management and officials of the Canadian National Railways, in connection with that matter, and were always given to understand that determination with respect to the matter would be reached by the government before the supplementary estimates were presented to the house.

That is a true statement. I happen to be a member of the select committee on railways and shipping and I was practically told that this matter would be looked after in the supplementary estimates. Some of our friends opposite have done a lot of talking, especially the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley), who appears to take a peculiar interest in our province, for which we thank him, but while he was talking, the members from Prince Edward Island were working in the interests of the province, and as a result we have received the announcement which was made by the Minister of Railways last night. Speaking in this house on February 6 last I said, among other things:

So far as communication is concerned I believe that the government will carry into effect the recommendation of the Duncan commission, and provide another car ferry. Three years ago on the floor of this house I advocated that this matter should be dealt with, and I understand that the government for some time, through the Department of Railways, has been gathering information and making preparations for this desired improvement. We are sincerely hopeful that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) will see fit to place, if not in the main estimates at least in the supplementary ones, an appropriation for this much needed work.

The hon. member for Pictou in his address yesterday referred to the members from our province as rubber stamps. It is rather significant that although he might have been called to order for so doing, knowing the hon. gentleman as we do, nobody thought it worth while to call him to order. No member is supposed to be referred to in this house by another member as a rubber stamp. I think the remark was not in very good taste.

Mr. CANTLEY: Would the hon. member be good enough to repeat his statement in regard to rubber stamps? Does he say that I said the members from Prince Edward Island were rubber stamps?

Mr. JENKINS: Here is what the hon. member said, at page 3258 of Hansard:

The members for Prince Edward Island on the government side are referred to as "rubber stamps."

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes, referred to as that in the paper from which I quoted.

Mr. JENKINS: It is immaterial anyway.

Mr. CANTLEY: I was quoting from a paper in the hon. member's own island and they should know.

Mr. JENKINS: The fact is that while the hon. gentleman has been talking, we have been working in the interests of the province, and we are very pleased to have this announcement which the Minister of Railways made last night. I again thank the minister and the government for promising to provide this improved service, and I am sure that the government will in future do anything it can to further the interests of Prince Edward Island.

Many members opposite are always talking of hard times. We do not agree with them in their doleful tales, because in our province things are prosperous and this action on the part of the government should be an occasion of further satisfaction to our people.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): I shall not detain the house many minutes, but I should like to set forth the views of another section of the country towards this resolution.

The resolution, as I understand it, asks for two things, bounties and increased tariffs. A bounty is asked for on coal, and I understand that the argument which is advanced in support of that request is that the steel companies in central Canada import their coal from the United States and have to pay a duty on it, but that when the coal is used for metallurgical purposes, they get a rebate of 99 per cent of the duty. The British Empire Steel Corporation, located in the maritime provinces, uses coal from its own mines, and therefore does not get any rebate because it does not pay any duty; it imports no coal. It therefore asks that the government give it a bounty, for using its own coal, which will be equal to the drawback received by the Steel Company of Canada on the duty it pays on the coal it imports from the United States. Every year since I have been in this house the people of the maritimes have been telling us that they could not sell their coal; people would not buy it; and they wanted the government to do something to help them find a market. Now they tell us they are not willing to burn their own coal unless we pay them a bounty. What would hon. gentlemen opposite think if the farmers of this country came to parliament and said: We want a bonus on every bushel of our own oats that we feed to our own horses? They would say it was a preposterous request. But not one bit more preposterous than the very request those men are making for a bounty on their own coal.

What is the need of the iron and steel industry in Canada? Is that industry in such a serious position as hon. gentlemen opposite would have us believe? I say it is not. The iron and steel industry of Nova Scotia, as I understand it, is devoted largely to the production of what are known as the primary iron and steel products, such as pigs, ingots, blooms and billets. Let us look at the value of the imports in those particular branches of the industry to-day as compared with what they were in 1922 when my hon. friends opposite were in power. We find that in 1922 the imports of pigs, ingots, blooms and billets amounted to $932,370; our exports of these commodities for the same year amounted to $622,919. In other words, our imports that year were 50 per cent greater than our exports. That condition continued until 1925. Then in 1926 the condition was reversed, and our imports in those forms of iron and steel amounted to $1,568,112; our exports, $2,167,172. In the next year, 1927, we imported of the same forms $1,634,048, and exported $3,427,779. That is, our imports, which in 1922 were 50 per cent greater than our exports, in 1927 were only half as much as our exports. Our imports had increased by $700,000; our exports by four times that amount. Most of these imports, I understand, come from the United States.

It would be interesting to know what was the situation in 1913, when the party of "No truck or trade with the Yankees" was in power. In that year we imported pigs, ingots, blooms and billets to the value of $5,545;770; in 1927 we imported those forms to the value of $1,126,354. To that we have to add $507,783, imports of chrome steel, ferro silicon, and so on, making a total importation for 1927 of $1,634,127, as against $5,545,770 in 1913. If you make allowance for the difference in the value of the dollar in those two years, you will find the imports to-day about 15 per cent of what they were in those days.

These forms of iron and steel are the raw material of a great number of our other manufactures. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) pointed out the other day, some 300 manufacturers of other commodities depend on these forms for their raw material. What is the production, then, of the other forms of which these products are the raw material? We find that of castings and forgings, hardware and hooks, agricultural implements, machinery, automobiles, and so on, we manufactured in 1922 to the value of $187,137,608, and in 1926 to the value of $296,161,940—an increase of over $100,000,000. In 1922 we employed in these industries 40,700 men; in 1926, 57,050. I want to ask my hon. friends opposite: If we adopted the policy which they advocate and increased the duty on these forms of iron and steel, and therefore increased the cost of the raw material of these other industries, what would be the effect? We would jeopardize these other industries employing 57,000 men for the sake of the industry that is producing the raw material. Would we increase our market by that means? No, we would ruin the very market we are trying to create.

Now, what is the condition of the three great iron and steel companies in Canada; are they in as distressful circumstances as some people would have us believe? Let us look first at Besco. In 1924 the British Empire Steel Corporation lost $2,137,000; in 1925, $4,335,000. In 1926 they made a gain of $1,138,000. Their condition is improving without any change in the tariff. How about the Steel Company of Canada? In 1914 their stock was selling at $11 a share; to-day it is quoted at $216. What about the Algoma Steel Company?—referred to yesterday by hon. gentlemen opposite. I have here a newspaper despatch, dated April 27, sent from Toronto to the Montreal Gazette, giving the opinions of the president of that very company as to the company's future. I will read part of the despatch. It is as follows:

Since last Autumn about $10,000,000 has been added to the market value of the corporation's securities. The common stock in that period has advanced from $1.50 to $9.50 a share—

I commend that to some hon. gentlemen who are fond of investing in mining stocks.

—which involves an appreciation of close upon $3,400,000. Algoma Steel first preferred in the same length of time has gone from 33 to 60 and Lake Superior 5's from 38 to 72, these advances in the bond issues representing an advance in values of nearly $6,000,000. Since 1912 there has been plowed back into the corporation's plant a total of over $13,000,000, all of which was taken out of earnings, and Mr. Dodd is of the opinion that before another decade has passed away the total investment at the "Soo" will reach $100,000,000.

Then further down the following:

The high rate of output by Algoma Steel during the present year has been due to the increased activity in general business, which has strengthened up all departments of the corporation's work. On February 1 orders on hand amounted to $7,000,000, since which time a large number of new orders have been received, these being sufficient to keep the plants operating at high speed for several months to come. In March the shipments of iron and steel alone reached a total of 52,850 tons, whilst the total output of all departments aggregated 62,328 tons. Earnings of the corporation just now are running at the rate of $300,000 a month, and it is thought that by the end of the fiscal year on June 30 there will be a sum of $2,000,000 cash in the bank, with no loans whatever outstanding. A replacement value of $50,000,000 has been set upon the Sault Ste. Marie enterprise, so that the holders of the corporation's bonds would appear to be well protected.

Those are the companies, Mr. Speaker, who are now telling us that they are in such dire straits and cannot survive unless the government lend them some assistance. It has been frequently stated that this government has discriminated against the primary iron and steel industry, and has favoured other industries at its expense. Let us compare the situation in the iron and steel industry with the situation in all manufacturing industries throughout the country. We find that in 1922 the iron and steel industry employed 75,354 men, paying them in wages, $91,629,491; and in 1926 they employed 103,510 men at a total wage of $137,640,065. All manufacturing industries in Canada in 1922 employed 387,689 men; in 1926, 499,733. The wages and salaries paid were, in 1922 $497,113,554, and in 1926, $653,850,433. Comparing the figures then and now, we find that since 1922 the number of employees engaged in the steel industry has increased 34 per cent, and the wages 41 per cent; while in all manufacturing industries the number of employees has increased 29 per cent, and the wages 31 per cent. So we find that the number of employees in the iron and steel industry has increased more than the average in Canada, and the rate of wages has increased more than in the other industries.

Taking all these things into account, Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the claim of the iron and steel industry for further consideration has absolutely no basis in fact, and is utterly unjustifiable.

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will congratulate the hon. member (Mr. Young) who has just taken his seat on the valuable statistics in connection with the steel industry which he has given to the house and to the country. It is amusing to notice that our hon. friends opposite are so anxious now to dispose of the debate and do not appear to wish any further discussion on their own amendment. It seems that the important announcement made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) last evening has rather taken the wind out of their sails, and now they are anxious to have their amendment disposed of as quickly as possible. However, before leaving the question, I desire to extend to the Minister of Railways, for the announcement he made last evening, the thanks of the people of my county, of all shades of politics. I think I am justified in making this statement, that the Liberal members on this side of the house could have given this information out some time ago. They had the assurance from the railway management and also from the minister that this important matter would be dealt with, but it was not our place to divulge any information that had been given us in confidence until the minister had seen fit to make an announcement in the house at the proper time.

The placing of a second car ferry on the route is something that benefits not only the province of Prince Edward Island but the whole of the maritimes and, in fact, the Dominion at large. Our province is not very considerable in area but we have a large trade. We buy largely from the manufacturers of the upper provinces and, in return, we ship out large quantities of produce; so that the car ferry, as I say, is of advantage not only to Prince Edward Island but to the whole Dominion, for it links up that province with the mainland and other parts of Canada.

In my opinion the very excellent speech made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) has so cleared the situation as to render it unnecessary for me to go into details to show the way in which the Duncan report has been implemented. That report has been acted upon as well as it was humanly possible for any government to have acted upon a report in the time that has elapsed since it was brought down. Our friends opposite are demanding that the report be implemented 100 per cent. Now, hon. members on this side of the house, who were in the house when the commission was proposed, and when the government attempted to appoint that commission, will recollect how hon. gentlemen opposite objected. They objected to the appointment of a commission, declaring that it was only a means of sidestepping the issue. They said that the government would appoint the commission and that when that commission's report was submitted it would be laid away in the archives and never be implemented. They opposed to the hilt the appointment of the Duncan commission. But the commission was appointed and, after it had completed its labours it brought in a very comprehensive report dealing with every phase of the maritime situation. That report has been implemented almost 100 per cent. Anyone who reads the speech of the Minister of National Defence, and observes how carefully he took up question afer question mentioned in the report, will agree that the report has been fully implemented.

The 20 per cent reduction in freight rates represents to the people of the maritime provinces a boon which one can hardly estimate; we do not realize the amount of money it will mean. In their estimates the other day the government had the sum of $3,395,000 voted this year to make up to the Canadian National Railways the reduction in freights on that division. This is practical assistance not only to the shippers but to every industry in the maritimes; it extends an advantage to farmers, fishermen, manufacturers and merchants; it takes in everyone. In addition to that, the further reduction made on coal, in the way of subventions, which has been fully brought out by the Minister of National Defence, goes to show that in that respect alone the government has gone further than the recommendations made in the Duncan report.

Now I come to the subsidy. It would not be surprising if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) almost refused to pay that subsidy, after the manner in which our hon. friends opposite have criticized the Finance department with regard to the method of paying the subsidy. It is really unfair that such criticism should be indulged in. There have been handed out these sums to the maritime provinces: Nova Scotia, $875,000; New Brunswick, $600,000; Prince Edward Island, $125,000. Under the circumstances, these payments being made at regular intervals along with the other subsidies, why in the world do our friends complain? They remind me of the clergyman who took as his text the reference to the devil who went about like a roaring lion seeking whom he might devour. The clergyman divided his subject under three heads: first, who the devil was he? secondly, where in the devil was he going? and thirdly, what in the devil was he roaring about? Our hon. friends opposite were roaring about something yesterday, when they were loud in their condemnations of the government. To-day they have not a word to say regarding the matter.

The Minister of Finance has treated us fairly, and the whole question is subject to further examination. It is to be looked into carefully, and if further subsidies are due the maritimes, I feel that we shall be dealt with fairly and that the grant will be increased. But I do not think that the way to secure that increase is by continually criticizing the government for the manner in which they have so far dealt with the Duncan report.

With regard to railway facilities and the improvements that have been made, one has only to look at the port development that has taken place in the province of Prince Edward Island, at Charlottetown, Summerside and Georgetown, to see what splendid advantages have been afforded. But as the Minister of National Defence has pointed out, over $5,000,000 has been voted between Halifax and St. John for port development. In view of this, I submit that our friends opposite should not be unreasonable enough to ask for anything further along these lines. I was pleased to note that the Minister of Railways last night stated that $40,000 would be allotted this year for additional terminal facilities at Summerside. This shows that the Canadian National system is improving its lines, when there is a demand for these facilities.

In the province of Prince Edward Island our trade has increased by leaps and bounds. As I pointed out before, railway stations that were to be closed, because they could not come up to the required amount of earnings, have improved to such an extent that whereas stations that were earning $10,000 three years ago are now earning $50,000. I noticed in an item in the maritime press the other day that twenty-one new sidings had been asked for in the maritimes from the Canadian National Railways. This, the news item went on to state, was proof of the expansion of trade and the improvement of industries in the maritimes. It was evidence of progress when they required these additional facilities.

As a result of the survey carried out over the railway lines in the province of Prince Edward Island we hope that further improvements will be effected when the recommendations of this survey are turned in to the government. We also appreciate the fact that, in accordance with the recommendations of the report, a study has been made of clays and gravel and materials for road making. We are glad to know that the fisheries commission, which has just handed in its report, has made important recommendations which are similar to those suggested in the Duncan report and which I have no doubt will be dealt with.

In connection with the new car ferry, we sincerely trust that a careful study will be made of that ferry before the contract is let. I do not think any man is more capable of giving advice in this matter than the present captain of the car ferry. He has had experience over a number of years and is thoroughly familiar with the route and its requirements. He knows how docks should be built; he knows what arrangements should be made whereby automobiles may be placed on the car ferry under their own power instead of being loaded on flat cars as is the case at present, and I believe no one can give better advice in this matter.

Again I wish to thank the Minister of Railways for the important announcement which he has made; I hope a contract for this ship will be let soon and that we will have it in time to assist in moving the 1929 traffic.

Mr. H. B. SHORT (Digby-Annapolis): It was not my intention to make any remarks in connection with this discussion; hon. members on this side have gone pretty well into the case as far as the maritime provinces are concerned, but in his remarks this afternoon the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) would lead us to believe that the government had implemented the recommendations of the Duncan commission in connection with the fisheries of the maritime provinces. For my part I have not noticed that the government have done anything whatever in that connection. The first recommendation of the commission was that a department of fisheries should be established through the appointment of a deputy minister, and when the Prime Minister spoke in connection with the Duncan report last year he stated that a deputy minister would be appointed. More than a year has passed since that time and nothing has been done in that respect. The Minister of National Defence and the hon. gentleman who spoke last would lead the house to believe that one of the recommendations made by the Duncan commission was that a commission should be appointed to investigate the fisheries. I cannot find that in the Duncan report.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend will not find in my speech any suggestion that such a recommendation was made by the Duncan commission.

Mr. SHORT: I understood from my hon. friend that the government had carried out that recommendation by appointing that commission, which has just made its report. That commission had nothing whatever to do with the Duncan report; it was appointed only last October, and the reason for its appointment was the unrest in the fishing industry in Nova Scotia. That commission has made its report and this afternoon the Prime Minister said in answer to a question by my hon, friend from Halifax (Mr. Black) that the government are not going to act upon the report this session.

I just wanted to state that absolutely nothing has been done in connection with the fisheries of the maritime provinces, as recommended by the Duncan commission. As I have said, it is not necessary for me to make any further remarks in connection with this matter because our case has been well put by the members who spoke last night. Our friends opposite are complaining because we have nothing further to say in the matter; I think we have said quite enough, and it will take the government some time to answer the case we have put forward.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my observations will be very brief. In the first place we are told that the party which sits to your left opposed the appointment of the Duncan commission. The Conservative party of that day expressed its grave doubts and apprehensions as to what would be the result in dealing with the grievances of the maritime provinces if we left it to a commission and the Liberal government. That commission was appointed; will my hon. friends now name to me any Liberal who appeared before that commission to assist in the solution of those problems? Will my friends from Prince Edward Island tell me that any of them were present to help solve the problems of that province? Will any members of the Liberal party state, as members of this parliament, that they were present? Were any members of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia or in New Brunswick present?

Mr. RALSTON: Is my hon. friend asking that as a question?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. H. J. Logan, K.C., a distinguished member of this house for many years, who had held the important position of president of the Maritime board of trade, a gentleman who is supposed to be a Liberal, was before that commission.

Mr. BENNETT: I was just waiting for that answer; look at the report of the proceedings before the commission and see what Mr. Logan's contribution was. The case was presented by the government of Nova Scotia, and in the main by Colonel Phinney.

Mr. ILSLEY: It was their business to do so.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend says it was their business to do so. Methinks, having heard the hon. gentlemen from Prince Edward Island this afternoon, that it was their business also, but now the hon. gentleman claims it was the business of the provincial government. That is the position; the whole point is that the Conservative party is responsible for having presented the grievances of the maritime provinces to this house month after month and year after year. Nothing but a delegation from the province of Nova Scotia was responsible for the ultimate appointment of that commission, and when that commission was appointed those in this house who supported the Liberal government were notable for not being present.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend permit just one question, and I will not interrupt him again. To what delegation does he refer?

Mr. BENNETT: I mean the members who came here from Nova Scotia, the parliamentary delegation.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought perhaps he had in mind a delegation headed by ex-Mayor John Murphy of Halifax, who was a Liberal candidate.

Mr. BENNETT: One of the reasons why the head of that delegation was not a Liberal member was because it was realized that as far as he was concerned the delegation was nothing but an open gesture.

Mr. RALSTON: Who?

Mr. BENNETT: Ex-Mayor Murphy.

Mr. RALSTON: I heard him congratulated by a number of Conservatives on his presentation of the maritime case.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely, because that ensured that he would not be a member of this house. I well recall that the Prime Minister, in dealing with this matter, very properly pointed out that the report of that commission might well be likened to the report of Lord Durham on dealing with the problems of upper and lower Canada. So we have a very great state document prepared by a commission presided over by Sir Andrew Rae Duncan who, fortunately, was not one who was influenced in any sense by local considerations or, shall we say, by antecedent prejudices with respect to the claims of the maritime provinces. That report was presented to this parliament and was accepted both by the government of the day and the opposition of the day; in other words, it was unanimously adopted, and this parliament was anxious by its expressions of opinion, both formal and informal, that the recommendations of the report should be carried out.

We get that far in unison. Now, when the promise is made that the recommendations will be carried out it is equally important that they should be all carried out as that part of them should be carried out. This greatly reminds me of an accused person charged with theft on twelve counts. He is acquitted on eleven of the charges and the defence for the twelfth is that, having been acquitted on eleven, he should be acquitted on the twelfth. Or take it the other way; he is found guilty on eleven counts, and it is argued that having been found guilty on eleven counts he should be found guilty on the twelfth. That argument would not go very far in any court of law in which the Minister of National Defence might appear. The fact is that many recommendations were made by this commission, some of which have been carried out while some have not. For instance, yesterday some discussion arose between the Minister of Finance and one of the speakers as to whether or not the subsidies had been paid when they should have been paid. All I know is that the minutes of the Dominion-Interprovincial conference held here last fall indicate that one of the responsible ministers from the province of Nova Scotia urged that on the true construction of that report the first instalment of the increased subsidy under that report should have been made in 1926, in other words, at the date of the making of the report. The Minister of Finance or the Minister of Railways certainly did not advance the case by saying, as the Minister of National Defence said, that every recommendation made by the report had been carried out.

The amendment moved yesterday deals with that very phase of the report; it does not deal with railways, or it does not deal with other matters. It contends that the government has declined or refused to give effect to the recommendations in the report with respect to the steel industry.

After the whole of yesterday afternoon had been taken up in discussing among others the question of a car ferry between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, I was amazed to hear the Minister of Railways say that the government had placed a provision of a million dollars for this car ferry in the supplementary estimates. Then this afternoon I heard one of the hon. members from Prince Edward Island saying that it was not their place to disclose what was given in confidence.

The British North America Act provides that any moneys expended by this parliament shall carry with them the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General, and that the estimates shall reach this house in certain well defined ways. For the first time in my limited experience, and I think in the experience of the oldest member of this house, a responsible minister of the crown rose in his place and told the house that a million dollars has been placed in the supplementary estimates for a given work. It is true that the question was asked whether it would be done or not, but the correct answer was that the matter was under consideration. Instead of that, the minister of the crown discloses what is to be in the supplementary estimates. When he was reminded of the fact that the oath of a cabinet minister should prevent the disclosure of what takes place in council, he said he had the permission of the government to make that statement. That makes it even worse, because the oath of office of a privy councillor—I have taken the trouble to look it up—is very clear upon that point. He swears:

> You will serve His Majesty truly and faithfully in the place of his council in this His Majesty's Dominion of Canada, you will keep close and secret all such matters as shall be treated, debated and resolved on in Privy Council, without publishing or disclosing the same or any part thereof, by word, writing, or any otherwise to any person out of the same council, but to such only as be of the council.

How does the hon. gentleman justify his position in turning to the members from Prince Edward Island yesterday afternoon and saying that a million dollars has been provided in the supplementary estimates, when to make such announcement is a violation of the provisions of the British North America Act and of the oath of a privy councillor of this Dominion? One of the first gentlemen to claim that in this house was the right hon. the Prime Minister himself. In connection with the Petersen investigation I recall that it was successfully urged that even the names of the men who appeared in council should not be given out. The Prime Minister during the present session said, when a question was asked as to the government's intention, that that was a matter which must be settled in council and could not be disclosed before determined, and he did the proper thing with respect to that matter. When you ask questions regarding policies that are under consideration by His Majesty's Privy Council for the Dominion, it is improper to disclose them, because it is a violation, when it involves the expenditure of money, of the British North America Act itself and of the oath of a privy councillor. Perhaps the new status of Canada may explain that violation of the provision of the British North America Act.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sure that my hon. friend will permit me to interrupt him. My hon. friend has attributed to me words which I did not use yesterday. There is an important distinction between the words he attributed to me and the words which I actually used. What I said appears in Hansard at page 3282, and is as follows:

> I may say quite frankly that I have, as Minister of Railways and Canals, recommended to my colleagues a provision in the supplementary estimates for the sum of one million dollars for a new car ferry for the Prince Edward Island-mainland service.

My hon. friend then interjected, and, referring to the oath of office and the disclosure of discussions between my colleagues, I then said:

> My hon. friend is quite correct; but I may tell him that the cabinet to-day decided I should make the statement that I have just made.

I had the permission of the government of Canada to reveal to the house the recommendation I had made to the government, that a sum be included in the supplementary estimates for this purpose. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there was no impropriety and no violation of my oath of office in indicating to the house what the government had decided I should indicate.

Mr. BENNETT: At page 3282 of Hansard it appears that the Minister of Railways said:

> My hon. friend is quite correct; but I may tell him that the cabinet to-day decided I should make the statement that I have just made.

That is in answer to a statement that he recommended to his colleagues the inclusion in the supplementary estimates of the sum of one million dollars for a new car ferry for the Prince Edward Island-mainland service. Surely the hon. gentleman realizes that he has disclosed to this house a recommendation made to his colleagues in council, which is a communication in council. He must realize that the cabinet cannot release him from his obligation, because the British North America Act provides that any resolution for the expenditure of public money must be preceded by a message from His Excellency the Governor General. Suppose that His Excellency the Governor General did not approve of that estimate—it is not conceivable that that would happen—it is anticipating the approval of the crown to the expenditure of money which may not be made except in the manner and form provided by our rules and regulations.

It will be borne in mind that the hon. member from Prince Edward Island made this statement, "It was not our place to disclose what was given to us in confidence."

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): The railway management recommended that.

Mr. BENNETT: The management do not recommend the expenditure of public moneys in this country.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): We have to have the recommendation of the management.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what the hon. gentleman said; "It was not our place to disclose what was given to us in confidence." I will leave that, because it is only incidental to what I have to say, and I am moving away from the main theme of my discussion.

I point out that last evening we had for the first time a violation by a minister of the crown of his oath of office, and of the provisions of the British North America Act.

Mr. DUNNING: That is not so.

Mr. BENNETT: I observed the anxiety of the Minister of National Defence to indicate to us last evening and to-day that the government had under consideration the providing of a deputy minister of fisheries, and that they had appointed a commission and the commission had recommended the appointment of a minister of fisheries. I have never seen such willingness to serve in that capacity from members of parliament as I have seen during the last few hours. The only thing that is lacking is to have the hon. member for Antigonish-Guyborough (Mr. Duff) in his place, and then we would have it a quartette instead of a trio.

Mr. McLEAN (Prince): There must be a lot of the members on that side of the house trying to qualify for the position of minister of fisheries.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman in his modesty is trying to say that he has no desire to be appointed. Perhaps another one will follow in his footsteps and relieve the Prime Minister of any difficulty in making the selection. All you have to do is to get three more to say they have no interest, and the matter will be complete.

Attention was directed to the steel industry. I am not going to traverse any ground that has already been covered, and waste time as the Minister of Finance would say, but I would like to point out that the Duncan report recommended prompt action, and the word used is "prompt." That was in 1926, and we are now told that nothing can be done until 1929. If three years constitute promptness, what would constitute slowness?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Conservative rule.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Weyburn has just answered, and he gives me the opportunity to direct attention to the fact that while he has been contending that the steel industry requires no assistance, the Minister of National Defence and the Prime Minister have been promising that something will be done. But I suppose, as is usual, the hon. member for Weyburn will stand up at the critical moment and vote whatever may be decreed in that regard, and while he will have the satisfaction of indicating to his constituents the speech that he made, he will also be able to point in another direction to the vote that he gave.

Mr. McINTOSH: Especially the vote.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, for that after all is what counts. He reminds me of the hon.

member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) who said the other day: "I am voting for this because I am a Liberal but I certainly do not believe in it." That is the sort of thing, I take it, my hon. friend has in mind.

The Minister of Finance yesterday was not in that agreeable mood that so often characterises him. He seems to have had some difficulties. What they were I cannot say; I trust they were not in regard to increasing judges' salaries or anything of that sort; but he certainly seemed to have some difficulties yesterday afternoon, because in a moment of petulance he described those who were striving to remedy their grievances as being given to—well I hesitate to use the word by which he described them, and I will leave it at that because I fear those who are of the same ancestry as himself in those sections of the Dominion that are called the maritime provinces will not cease to recall, not with pleasure, the way in which he has stigmatised the efforts they are making for the benefit of the country. The minister said that those who come from the maritimes and sit on this side were present because of the grievances that they had really manufactured with respect to the maritime provinces. Let us put this single question and leave it at that. If they were imaginary grievances, why has the government taken so long to explain what they have done towards remedying them? If those grievances were purely imaginary, as was indicated by the Minister of Finance yesterday; if they were manufactured for the occasion, as he said, why has parliament been endeavouring so anxiously to satisfy the just demands in accordance with the recommendations made in this report? If this was Tory propaganda, why is a Liberal government giving effect to it? Those complaints were made time after time by men of the lower provinces and at last they succeeded, by sending to parliament a delegation such as I have mentioned opposing the government, in bringing about the creation of this commission, which they did not then think would be the best method of dealing with the matter, but which, in the light of subsequent events has turned out to be very satisfactory. Now the government has spent the last hour in explaining how it has endeavoured to implement the recommendations contained in the report while the Minister of Finance says that these are nothing but purely imaginary grievances that the people have.

Mr. DUNNING: He did not say that.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I took down his words with respect to grievances. He said that these gentlemen owed their seats in the house to those grievances. He did not use the word "imaginary". I think "fancied" was the word he used.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend permit me to quote the exact words?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. He used the expression twice.

Mr. DUNNING: This is what the Minister of Finance said:

> My hon. friends the mover and the seconder of the resolution laboured long and hard to convince themselves that they really have a grievance. They know better than that; they know that the people in the maritime provinces are not in sympathy with all these continual whinings for something more to be done in addition to what has already been done.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, you from your wide knowledge of classical lore will remember the case in which a man said: "O save me from my friends." I had declined to use the word "whinings" out of regard for the Minister of Finance, but it remained for his colleague, anxious on his behalf, to speak of these "continual whinings," words which I am sure he is sorry he used.

Mr. DUNNING: Whinings, not of the people of the maritime provinces but of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, elected to their seats in parliament by as highly respectable and educated constituents as those represented by anybody else in the house.

The hon. member's amendment dealt with the question of steel. Sir Andrew Rae Duncan investigated the matter and he made a recommendation that prompt action should be taken. I have already indicated that the report was made over two years ago. The steel matter is not a question of politics. I say that to the hon. member for Weyburn. It is a question of taking such legislative action as will place that steel industry in a proper position with respect to the country. The coal, iron and steel industries of Nova Scotia are the lifeblood of the eastern provinces. I wonder if the hon. gentleman has recalled what was said in the United States in the era of their greatest prosperity, namely, that "steel is king." I direct the attention of the Minister of Finance to this consideration. The report of the Department of National Revenue brought down for April indicates that of iron and its products we imported the following amounts:

Year	Free	Dutiable
1927	$3,615,193	$19,032,371
1928	3,677,768	21,145,646

Mr. MANION: For one month.

Mr. BENNETT: For the month of April. Further, in the report that came to us this morning I find that the imports for Canada for the month of April are the highest they have been since 1925-26. They have risen from $59,104,651 to the enormous sum of $78,490,470, or an increase of nearly $19,000,000 from April, 1926, to April, 1928, and for the twelve months ended April 30, 1928, our total imports have increased by nearly $100,000,000 over the twelve preceding months, being the largest that we have had since 1925. Our exports for the month of April as the figures indicate, show a decrease as compared with preceding years; for the twelve months ending April 30, 1928, we had total exports amounting to $1,209,844,957, or an increase of much more than $100,000,000 over those for the twelve months ended April 30, 1925, but unfortunately a decrease of $106,000,000 from those for the twelve months ended April 30, 1926, and a decrease of $60,000,000 from those for the twelve months ended April 30, 1927.

There is not a banker, not a man who is engaged in dealing with money, business or industry on the American continent who is not looking to the future with grave anxiety. We know that by these increased importations during the last month we have had, not dumped, but sent into this country increasing quantities of goods from other countries and that our exports are diminishing. What does that mean? We have for the month of April an adverse balance of trade amounting to a very large sum of money. In fact, as perhaps the hon. gentleman has seen, it amounts to about $20,000,000. For the first time in many years we have a monthly adverse trade balance of $20,000,000, and yet in the month of April we increased our importations of iron and its products by more than $2,000,000. What does that mean? With the United States Steel Corporation showing that their bookings are $400,000,000 less than they were in the preceding quarter, with everywhere apprehension on the part of business men as to the future, with the gravest anxiety as to where we are heading, with stocks pyramiding at a price never heard of before in this country or indeed on the American continent, we find that our importations of iron and steel, largely from the United States, show an increase of more than $2,000,000 for the month of April. Is that not a good reason why this recommendation of Sir Andrew Duncan should be carried out? He recommended prompt action with respect to this industry, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) will say that nothing has been done because he has left the matter to his tariff advisory board. What did he tell us about this tariff advisory board? He told us that he preferred to trust his own common sense in other matters, and the house agreed with him, for thus far on any matter submitted to the board no findings of fact had been made which would enable the government to arrive at a conclusion. He has told us that this matter was before the tariff advisory board. Sir Andrew Duncan has also said that it was before the board. But nothing was done, nothing has been done, nothing is being done, and this country is faced with the fact that unless something is done, the reaction that is now setting in in the United States will be followed by depression in this country, such as has always followed depression in the United States. But if we now take the action that we are capable of taking in Canada, if we call up all our reserves, if we face the situation as we should, if we deal with conditions as Sir Andrew Duncan pointed out we should, we will develop our iron and steel industry in Cape Breton and be able to meet the situation, instead of buying increased quantities of goods from the United States in the shape of iron and steel.

Remember this, that the steel question was the first matter submitted to this tariff advisory board, and it has not yet been dealt with. The minister himself has afforded to us the best reason why he should not rely upon that board. Any hon. member who followed the discussion with respect to the tariff advisory board when the textile schedules were before this house realizes that the Minister of Finance was more willing to trust his own common sense in dealing with those matters than the meanderings of this tariff board, which dealt with everything and found nothing, which laboured all night and produced nothing, like the fishermen upon the lake; they caught nothing, and this tariff board found nothing.

It is for that reason that I venture at this time to point out to this house the urgent necessity of action being taken. If three years ago, before economic and commercial conditions had reached the state they are now in, if the anxiety which was then not great but has become as great as it is now, if there is the greatest and gravest anxiety, not in this country, we will say, but in the republic to the south of us with respect to what the immediate future will be, and by immediate future I mean within the next year; if they fear it, as they do—read their financial journals or the financial columns of their papers, and you will find that they are all apprehensive—if they are apprehensive, let us get our house in order so that when depression strikes them, we will not have the reaction here. You can do that only by dealing with these matters as Sir Andrew Duncan pointed out, by taking the necessary legislative action to see to it that this great industry in Nova Scotia functions as it should, and not only that industry, but the great industry at the Soo to which reference was made yesterday. In other words, the deposits of raw material that are being worked up and fabricated into the various products of iron and steel should, so far as possible, be fabricated in our own country, and we would not then send out of this country, as we did in April, upwards of $24,000,000 for iron and its products. It is for that reason that we urge as strongly as we can, not in any political sense, but with an earnest desire to point out the dangers that lie in our pathway. The economic condition of the American continent being what it is, we would be derelict in our duty, we would be faithless representatives of the people, if we did not point out that condition and ask this house to take the measures which Sir Andrew Duncan said should be taken, and taken promptly, mark you, with respect to this industry in order to save it from disaster.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the reason we make this motion on going into supply. The Minister of Finance was finding fault about the loss of time. It may be a loss of time, but in order that Canada may be able to face the conditions which will be upon us within a reasonable time unless all signs fail, unless the business barometers cannot be read as they should. Unless the predictions made by great business executives of the United States are not worthy of consideration, we should take steps first of all to curtail our expenditures and see to it that not a single dollar of the public money is spent unless it is productive; in other words, unless it will pay the interest upon the expenditure made. That is the first consideration.

Secondly, we should see to it that such legislation is placed upon the statute books of this country so that when the storm breaks and economic disaster or difficulty or setbacks threaten our nearby neighbours, we shall be fortified and strengthened to meet the storm without in any sense having disaster upon us.

[Mr. Bennett.]

That is the reason I venture to urge this matter upon this house at this time. It is not a matter of whether you shall have a wharf here or a ferry there or a narrow-gauge railway yonder; these are insignificant administrative acts with respect to the Duncan report. The great problem is the development of the raw materials that Providence has given to us, the opening up of our great resources, the providing of employment for our people, the making of greater opportunities for our people in Canada. That is what the Duncan report dealt with, in order that the maritime provinces might become what they were intended to be—not that somebody might have a dollar spent here and somebody else have a dollar spent there, not that $50,000 should be spent for a wharf here or a bridge there. That is not what Sir Andrew Duncan was talking about, but large problems of constructive statesmanship, and there is no larger problem of constructive statesmanship than the development of the iron and steel industry of this country, whether it be at the Soo, in Cape Breton, or at Hamilton. It is essential that that industry should be developed because under modern economic conditions steel is the life blood in the development of a country. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we urge upon this house that action should be taken, not next year, but this year, to remedy this grievance, and that the report made by the Duncan commission should be implemented and prompt action taken, not in 1929, but in 1928, while there is still time before the economic storm bursts upon this country.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. MacDonald, South Cape Breton), which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson (Halton),	Garland (Carleton),
Arthurs,	Grimmer,
Barber,	Harris,
Bell (Hamilton West),	Hodgins,
Bell (St. John-Albert),	Kaiser,
Bennett,	Ladner,
Black (Halifax),	MacDonald (Cape Breton South),
Bowen,	Macdonald (Kings),
Boys,	Macdonald (Richmond-West Cape Breton),
Brady,	Macdougall,
Cahan,	McGibbon,
Cantley,	McQuarrie,
Casselman,	Matthews,
Chaplin,	Maybee,
Charters,	Pettit,
Cotnam,	Quinn,
Cowan,	Rennie,
Edwards (Frontenac-Addington),	Ross (Kingston City),
Edwards (Waterloo South),	Ryckman,
Esling,	Senn,
Fraser,	Short,

Sinclair (Wellington North),
Smith (Cumberland),
Spence,
Spotton,
Stinson,
Stirling,
Thompson,
Tolmie,
White (London).—51.

NAYS

Messrs:

Adshead,
Allan,
Bancroft,
Beaubien,
Benoit,
Bird,
Bissett,
Blanchard,
Bock,
Bouchard,
Boucher,
Boulanger,
Bourassa,
Bourgeois,
Bowman,
Bradette,
Brown,
Campbell,
Cannon,
Cardin,
Carmichael,
Casgrain,
Coote,
Delisle,
Denis (St. Denis),
Denis (Joliette),
Desaulniers,
Descoteaux,
Deslauriers,
Donnelly,
Dunning,
Dussault,
Elliott,
Evans,
Fafard,
Fansher (Last Mountain),
Fansher (Lambton East),
Forke,
Foster,
Gardiner,
Garland (Bow River),
Gershaw,
Gervais,
Girouard,
Glen,
Goodison,
Goulet,
Hall,
Heaps,
Hepburn,
Howard,
Howden,
Jelliff,
Jenkins,
Johnston (Long Lake),
Kellner,
Kennedy,
King (Kootenay East),
King, Mackenzie (Prince Albert),
Lacombe,
Laflamme,
Lanctôt,
Lapierre,
Lapointe,
Lavigueur,
Letellier,
Lucas,
Luchkovich,
MacLean (Prince),
McLean (Melfort),
Macphail (Miss),
McDiarmid,
McIntosh,
McKenzie,
McMillan,
McPhee,
McPherson,
Mercier (St. Henri),
Millar,
Milne,
Morrissy,
Motherwell,
Neill,
Parent,
Perras,
Power,
Prévost,
Ralston,
Rinfret,
Robb,
Roberge,
Robitaille,
Ross (Moose Jaw),
St-Père,
Sanderson,
Séguin,
Smith (Stormont),
Speakman,
Spencer,
Steedsman,
Stewart (Edmonton West),
Sylvestre,
Telford,
Thorson,
Tobin,
Totzke,
Woodsworth,
Young (Saskatoon),
Young (Weyburn).—109.

PAIRS

(The list of pairs is furnished by the chief whips.)

Messrs:

Duff,
Dubuc,
Bothwell,
MacNutt,
Veniot,
Dickie,
Guthrie,
Embury,
Ilsley,
Hanson,
Blatchford,
Lacroix,
Boivin,
Euler,
Vallance,
Malcolm,
Fiset,
Sinclair (Queens),
Edwards (Ottawa),
Chevrier,
Lang,
Hay,
Kay,
Cahill,
Marcil,
Fontaine,
Verville,
Morin (Bagot),
Raymond,
Howard,
Wilson (Vaudreuil),
Auger,
Taylor,
Cayley,
Odette,
Rutherford,
Pouliot,
Guérin,
Mercier (Outremont),
Baldwin,
Heenan,
Dionne,
McRae,
Rowe,
Hocken,
Manion,
Clark,
Stevens,
MacLaren,
Jones,
Preston,
Stewart (Leeds),
Young (Toronto),
Hubbs,
Wilson (Wentworth),
Simpson,
Perley,
Anderson (Toronto),
Price,
Peck,
Bell (St. Antoine),
Casselman,
White (Mount Royal),
Ernst,
Ryerson,
Smoke,
Robinson,
Gott,
Lennox,
Maloney,
Geary,
Johnstone,
Black (Yukon),
McGregor.

Mr. DUFF: I was paired with the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie). Had I voted, I would certainly have voted against the amendment.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I was paired with the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. Embury). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was paired with the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dubuc). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. ROWE: I was paired with the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Lacroix). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. MANION: I was paired with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler). Had I not been paired, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. CLARK: I was paired with the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I was paired with the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Hon. Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): I was paired with the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Jones). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. PRESTON: I was paired with the junior member for Ottawa (Mr. Edwards), otherwise I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I was paired with the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. GOTT: I was paired with the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Rutherford). Had I not been paired, I would have voted for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. VENIOT: I was paired with the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. BLATCHFORD: I was paired with the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. McRae). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. BOIVIN: I was paired with the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Motion (Mr. Robb) agreed to on the same division reversed.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Canals—Ontario—St. Lawrence canals, improvements, $17,500.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Would the minister explain this item?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The $17,500 is required to construct seven cribs, floats and booms at the upper entrance to the Cornwall canal, where, on account of the swift current at lock 21, vessels have great difficulty in tying to the entrance to the lock. In order to obviate this difficulty it is intended to construct a series of cribs, floats and support booms against which vessels may tie up to meet the requirements of safe navigation.

Item agreed to.

Port Colborne elevator, improvements, $24,400.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the nature of these improvements?

Mr. DUNNING: The vote is made up as follows:

Item
1.—3-150 h.p. motors for receiving lofters complete with starters, conduits and new cable	$ 8,100
2.—Replacing 4-100 h.p. marine log drive motors with 4-125 h.p. motors removed from lofter drives, and installing new bearings, etc	1,000
3.—Brakes for 9 lofter drive motor shafts	1,300
4.—Mechanism for pulling marine leg in and out	4,000
5.—Re-constructing 9 lofter heads to have them vented through roof.	5,000
6.—Concreting existing bin walls in old house between top of trough plates and floor	5,000
	$24,400

The whole expenditure is designed to speed up the operations of the Port Colborne elevator.

Item agreed to.

Quebec canals—Carillon-Grenville improvements, $3,500.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What improvements are being done on this canal?

Mr. DUNNING: This is to build a scow.

Item agreed to.

Trent canal, improvements, $269,600.

Mr. McGIBBON: What are the improvements here?

Mr. DUNNING: The amount required is made up of the following items, $61,400 being a re-vote:

Item	A.—Eastern Division
1.	To provide gate building plant and construct six spare gates	(revote $10,000)	$16,000
2.	Dredging and excavation	(revote $14,000)	24,500
3.	To construct public wharves at Thurstonia and Greenhurst		4,000
4.	To complete concrete dam at Hawk river logslide	(revote)	5,000
5.	To construct concrete dam at outlet of Big Bear lake		3,800
6.	To construct concrete dam at outlet of Maple lake		2,500
7.	To rebuild dam at outlet of Grace and Dark lakes		1,500
8.	Rebuilding and repairs to reservoir dams		10,000
9.	Miscellaneous	(revote $3,700)	5,300
			$72,600

Item	B.—Western Division
10.	To complete dam at Lock 24.. .. .. (revote $20,000)	$45,000
11.	To construct dam at Lock 25..	65,000
12.	Cement..	16,000
13.	To build house for marine railway operator at Big Chute..	4,500
14.	To build derrick scow for Severn subdivision..	1,800
15.	Removal of rock and other excavated material.. .. .. (revote)	4,000
16.	Engineering staff, salaries and working expenses..	56,000
17.	Miscellaneous and unforeseen.. .. .. (revote)	4,700
			197,000
	Total..		$269,600

Mr. KAISER: Is there anything in the estimates to cover the balance due on the Atherley bridge?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this canal used for commercial purposes, and if so, to what extent?

Mr. DUNNING: I will give the particulars of traffic. In 1927, which is the last year of record, 2,577 Canadians vessels and 79 United States vessels passed through the canal. The freight carried amounted to 27,754 tons originating in Canada, none originating in the United States. I have given the numbers of vessels; the tonnage of the vessels was 82,411 tons for the Canadian vessels and 2,042 tons for the American vessels.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What are the dues?

Mr. DUNNING: All the canals operated by the department are operated free of charge as far as navigating vessels are concerned.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Then the cost would be over $9 per ton.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not understand my hon. friend.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There were 27,754 tons of freight carried through the canal and the vote is for $259,600, which would work out at over $9 per ton.

Mr. DUNNING. Yes, that is one way of figuring it. Of course my hon. friend is aware that there is a very substantial revenue to the department from the Trent canal.

Mr. ADSHEAD: That is what I asked, and I thought my hon. friend said no.

Mr. DUNNING: We are misunderstanding each other. My hon. friend asked if there was any revenue from the boats passing through. There is no toll charge; the Canadian canals are operated free as far as that is concerned, but there is a revenue from the rental of shore property, from water powers created by the canal and so on.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How much?

Mr. DUNNING: Our total revenue from all sources received from the Trent canal for the year ending March 31, 1928, was $95,644.52. That was the aggregate revenue from water powers, rent of boat houses and other forms of revenue.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it the intention of the government to complete this canal. I think I can guess what the minister is going to say; I think no sane man would advocate building this canal if it were to be started to-day. It has been on the go for about 150 years, I believe, and is nearly through to the Georgian bay. I understand that in one or two remaining places it is operated by a marine railway, which does not permit the rather expensive boats to come up the canal. It does appear to me that outside of the power question the future of this canal is wrapped up in the tourist trade which, as everyone knows, is probably the third or fourth revenue producing industry, if you might so call it, in this country. If this canal were finished it would greatly stimulate that trade. People with large, valuable boats will not bring them up over these marine railways, yet we are right at the door of a nation of 115,000,000 people, many of whom want to spend their vacations in this way. I should like to ask the minister if it is possible to finish this canal.

Mr. DUNNING: I got into trouble a little while ago for telling the house something I had recommended to my colleagues, and I am wondering if I will get into equal difficulty if I discuss something which I have not recommended.

Mr. STEVENS: Be very careful and it will be all right.

Mr. DUNNING: The fact is that in 1922 it was estimated that it would cost $3,000,000 to complete the Trent canal, and the government have not yet decided to expend that money.

Mr. McGIBBON: What has been the total expenditure to date?

Mr. DUNNING: It is a lot of money, $3,401,204.76.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is that all that has been spent on the Trent valley canal?

Mr. DUNNING: That is only one division; I am sorry, but I had the wrong page. I find that this goes back to 1868.

Mr. McGIBBON: Further than that.

Mr. DUNNING: That is so, because $309,000 was spent on the canal before confederation. The total cost of construction up to the end of the last fiscal year was $19,359,000; betterments, $3,069,000; maintenance, that is repairs and so on, $1,661,000, and operation, $1,673,000, or a total for all expenditures connected with the canal and including the cost of operation of $25,763,847.72

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The minister was good enough to give the revenue from all sources; could he give the expenditure for the corresponding period? I would also ask if the improvements contemplated will in any way increase the amount of water power developed on the canal?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, in some particulars. Of course my hon. friend must understand that there is a distinction between expenditures of the kind now being voted, which are for maintenance of the present work, and those voted for new work.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I refer to the expense of maintenance and operation.

Mr. DUNNING: I will give the figures in a moment. In respect to the water power, of course my hon. friend can see that unless we maintain the dams and renew old ones we will lose the revenue now derived from water power. Much of the expenditure, the details of which I gave a few moments ago, is for those improvements and renewals. I can run over them individually, but in the meantime the operating cost for 1927-28 was $152,329.25.

Mr. STEWART Leeds): I was only anxious to know whether there would be any increased development of power.

Mr. DUNNING: No, there is no increase contemplated.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PECK: I do not rise to take exception to this item; in fact I thoroughly approve of it, and I hope that while I am a member of the house I shall have the opportunity of voting for a very much more substantial sum to complete this work. The purpose of the undertaking is to connect the Georgian bay with lake Ontario, using the various waterways and lakes which are to be found in the interior of Ontario between these points. The total length of the canal when completed will be 240 miles, but so extensive are the lakes and rivers which can be utilized that there will be only thirty-five miles of actual canal in the system when it is completed.

This work has been under consideration for a very long time. It is just one hundred years since the advantage of building the canal commended itself to the government of the day, and steps were taken to survey the system. The work was not immediately undertaken, but later on certain locks were built linking up a portion of the system. Then there was a long wait and finally, forty-two years ago, the work was again taken into consideration, and progress has been slowly made. The system is practically complete now except for a small portion of development required on the Severn river, and it would have been completed but for the intervention of the war.

The canal links up several important municipalities, such as Trenton, Campbellton, Lindsay, Orillia, Barrie and numerous other places. The lake system is a very extensive one. Lake Simcoe, of course, is very well known. The next largest lake is Rice lake, twenty miles in length and from two to three miles wide. Then there is Balsam lake, Stoney lake and others; and hundreds of other lakes find an outlet into the canal system. The district has become a very attractive one for tourists, and all along the canal system you will find summer cottages and hotels. If the canal were completed I think it would be a still more attractive place to the tourists. We cannot overlook this trade; it brings millions and millions of dollars annually into this country, and it should be encouraged. I understand that the minister is contemplating a visit to the system. I extend to him my endorsement of the invitation which has already been given him, and I am quite sure that after he has spent two or three days examining the system he will consider favourably the final construction of the Trent canal.

Mr. DUNNING: There was a question before recess regarding power sites. In connection with this undertaking there are power sites available for lease representing, without further conservation works, about 11,000 horse-power. The completion of the canal would not add to the available power, as the power sites on the proposed locks at Swift rapids and Big Chute are already under lease.

While I appreciate the invitation to visit this beautiful section of Ontario, which I have received from those interested in promoting the completion of the canal, the very frank confession on the part of those giving the invitation that it was for the purpose of endeavouring to convince me that $3,000,000 ought to be spent makes it a little embarrassing. I hope to have the opportunity, if not this summer, on some occasion in the not distant future, of seeing that particular canal. Last summer I made a trip over our commercial canals with a view to familiarizing myself with them, and I hope to have a look at the Trent canal in the not distant future.

Mr. BROWN: Would the water-powers on this system be in any way involved with the question now before the Privy Council? Perhaps that is a question that cannot be answered.

Mr. DUNNING: That is a matter on which lawyers differ.

Mr. PECK: All the water-powers still available will belong to the Dominion.

Mr. DUNNING: We think so.

Mr. PECK: That was agreed to between the province and the Dominion several years ago.

Mr. BENNETT: On this canal.

Mr. THOMPSON: I should like to endorse what the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Peck) has said in connection with the completion of the canal. It seems too bad that where so much money has been expended only a short length should be left uncompleted. If this short length were completed it would mean that millionaires living in New York could pass up the Hudson river, through the Erie canal, on into lake Ontario, and then enter the Trent canal at Trenton and pass up to lake Simcoe towards Georgian bay.

The tourist trade of this country should be encouraged. It is estimated that we received last year in Ontario alone $100,000,000 from the United States tourist traffic. If this canal were completed that trade would be enormously increased by many hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, and I am sure the minister will see the necessity of it.

Mr. KAISER: I should like to ask the minister whether he proposes to bring down an appropriation for the amount of money which three counties claim that the government honestly owes and has promised to pay in regard to the building of the big Atherley bridge. This is an acute question and one that we are urged to bring to the attention of the minister. The canal happens to strike the corner of three counties, and a large bridge had to be built over the canal. The cost of the bridge was estimated to be about $100,000. The government agreed to pay 40 per cent and the counties to pay 60 per cent. I understand the government has claimed that the costs were to remain at $100,000; but owing to demands made by the engineers the costs ran considerably more than $100,000, and the government have, as I understand the matter, refused to acknowledge their share of the balance. There are on file letters in which I understand promises have been made and the counties are urging their members to endeavour to secure an adjustment of the account. It is only right that the minister should make a statement to the committee whether there will be an adjustment in connection with the balance. The counties are still carrying this debt, paying interest upon it, and to my mind the evidence is absolutely in favour of the government paying its share.

Mr. McGIBBON: As representing one of the ridings where this bridge has been built; I should like to endorse the sentiments of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser), that the matter if possible be cleaned up. I recognize the difficulties of the department in bringing these matters to a final conclusion, but had it not been for this canal, such an expensive bridge would not have been required, and when the counties agreed to pay 60 per cent of the costs I think that was quite fair. It is quite true that the cost overran the estimate and I think that is where the difficulty lies, but it is not impossible to arrive at an equitable solution of the question. In the meantime the counties are carrying this debt and paying interest on it and I should like to know how far the minister is prepared to go in the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: It would always be very pleasant if one could accede to requests of this nature. I have gone very carefully into the question of the Atherley bridge and I think all ministers who have examined the matter, regardless of which party they might belong to, would confirm what I am now saying, namely, that there never was any real obligation on the Dominion to contribute anything towards the bridge in question. If we leave that aside for the moment, the fact remains that the Dominion agreed to pay 40 per cent, not to exceed $40,000 of the cost, and the bridge was built, I believe, by the counties themselves. Unfortunately, in the first place they did not accept the lowest tender for the bridge. Later the cost overran $100,000 and they came back asking the Dominion to pay an increased share. The treasury board has never been able to see any reason why the Dominion should pay more than the $40,000 which has already been paid and which, as I say, in the opinion of the department, was in the first place really an act of grace as there was no real obligation resting upon the Dominion. The bridge is not over a canal. Of course I know the claim of the counties and I appreciate the force of it, namely, that the effect of the canal some distance away was that a swing bridge was required. If I remember correctly, that was the argument.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister is absolutely wrong. The bridge is right over the canal.

Mr. DUNNING: It is not over the canal. It is over a navigable stream which is being used for navigation and not for a canal.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is part of the canal.

Mr. DUNNING: The navigable stream was there before the canal was built. However that may be, the Dominion, rightly or wrongly, agreed to pay forty per cent of $100,000, and the Dominion kept that agreement to the letter. The counties concerned in building the bridge did not, as I say, accept the lowest tender. Whether that was the reason why the cost overran $100,000, I am not in a position to say. The fact remains that the cost exceeded $100,000, but the Dominion fulfilled every obligation it ever assumed in connection with the Atherley bridge. The question now is: Should the Dominion be even more generous and share in the expenditure over and above the $100,000? The matter has been before the treasury board on more than one occasion and the treasury board has not seen fit at any time to recognize the claim. I regret that I cannot say anything more favourable than that to my hon. friends.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I correct the minister? I do not know for the life of me how he can say that the Dominion has no obligation in the matter. The extra expenditure was incurred owing to the fact that they had to have a swing bridge or the canal would have been blocked. The counties did not need a swing bridge; the swing bridge was built for the purpose of navigation only and it does go over part of the canal. It is the part connecting the two lakes. After the agreement was entered into the department insisted upon some changes which helped to run up the expense. For instance they had to have an electrical apparatus installed to turn the bridge in one minute instead of having it turned by hand. That accounts for part of the extra expense. Surely the minister cannot deny that the government is responsible for part of the extra expenditure, because if that swing bridge had not been built there, the canal would have been useless; it would have been blocked. I cannot see the force of the minister's argument.

Mr. KAISER: The point that seems to confuse both the minister and the counties is whether there was an absolute statement on either side that the costs were to be held down to $100,000 and that the government were obligated to pay only forty per cent of that amount. I submit that the letter which was written by the department distinctly gave the counties to understand that the government would pay forty per cent of the total cost.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to see such a letter, because if any undertaking was given by any government to pay more than the $40,000, I would consider it my duty to recommend that that obligation, entered into in that manner, be implemented. But I have no knowledge of such an undertaking as that to which my hon. friend refers. If he can produce an authentic or official document from this or any other government committing the government to more than has already been paid, I shall be glad to have the matter considered again in the light of that undertaking.

Mr. KAISER: I do not think anybody could expect any government or any person to take a sounder stand than the minister has taken, and I would humbly request him to ask the department to show him the letter which was written and which is in its possession, that misled the counties.

Mr. DUNNING: My officials inform me, as they have done on former occasions, that there is no such letter, but that the order in council authorizing the expenditure makes it very clear—and of course the expenditure was authorized a long time ago—that the federal government's proportion shall be forty per cent, not to exceed $40,000, and that amount has been paid. I shall have a further investigation made in the department and if there are any commitments by any government, before the contract was entered into or as a part of the contract, that more than $40,000 should be paid with respect to the bridge, I shall be glad to bring the matter once more to the attention of the treasury board.

Mr. KAISER: I should not like to say that such a promise was made definitely in the contract. I submit that there is a letter on file. It was read in my presence. I cannot say at the moment whether it was read by the solicitor for the counties or by an official of the department. But I do not think the counties misunderstood the matter in the slightest. They were given to understand that the government would assume 40 per cent of the total cost.

Mr. DUNNING: I will have that further looked into.

Mr. THOMPSON: When the agreement was entered into, the county was to pay 60 per cent and the government 40 per cent, but later the government insisted that a swing bridge should be built. That increased the cost, and I think it is only reasonable that the government should bear its share of this increased cost.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend forgets that the stream in question is a navigable stream. At that point it is not canalized, and regardless of whether or not the canal had been built, the counties could not build a bridge which would obstruct that stream. They would have to make provision for the navigation of the stream, and they did. The fact that a swing bridge was put in has nothing whatever to do with the building of the canal further along the same watercourse. On no navigable stream may a bridge be built which has the effect of obstructing navigation. The argument that the swing bridge was put in because of the Department of Railways and Canals is entirely erroneous. So far as the swing portion of the bridge is concerned, I am advised that the department looks after its maintenance, and also pays the cost of keeping a man to operate it. On the whole, I must say that by comparison with similar matters elsewhere, I do think these counties were very generously treated by the particular government and minister who entered into that agreement in the first place. But if there is any commitment by this government, by a minister, or by an official who was authorized to enter into such an arrangement at the time, or anything of the kind, I shall be very glad to have it looked into again. I am not speaking of any promises which may have been made since the bridge was built; that is another matter entirely. But with respect to the arrangement which resulted in the building of the bridge, if there is anything of the sort in existence we will have the whole matter reconsidered.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it not a fact that the changes were made at the instance of the government after the agreement was completed, changes which increased the cost?

Mr. DUNNING: My officers inform me that the plans were submitted in the usual way, but as the bridge was being built certain defects were found owing to the nature of the ground underneath the piling, and it was insisted that stronger piling should be used in connection with the centre portion of the bridge; otherwise, the bridge would not have stood.

Mr. McGIBBON: That would increase the cost to that extent. That was done after the agreement was made. I am also credibly informed, and I believe it is a fact, that the government demanded other expenditures, for instance, on electrical machinery, instead of hand power for turning the bridge. That also was done after the agreement was made, and it considerably increased the cost. As the government insisted on that being done, I think it should pay the whole of that extra expenditure.

Mr. DUNNING: That was part of the original agreement.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am told not. It was long after the original agreement was confirmed, and for the life of me I cannot see how the government can get away from bearing its fair share of this increased cost. It is true that the ground proved to be rather unsuitable for the foundations, and that increased the cost. The government, according to the original agreement, bear 40 per cent of the cost and the counties 60 per cent, and I think any additional expenditure should be borne in the same proportion. These unforeseen expenditures cannot be looked after at the time the bargain is made, and since part of this increased cost is due to the demands made by the government, and the government's demand increased the cost tenfold, I think the government should at least bear its share of this extra cost.

Mr. DONNELLY: This vote seems to meet with a lot of contention, and we in western Canada can hardly understand it. A lot of money is voted by this house for the east, for canals, bridges, breakwaters, dredging and wharves, and we have none of those things in western Canada. The only thing we can get is an odd public building here and there. In fact, in the constituency I represent there has not been a dollar spent by the government, but we are quite satisfied and contented out there. But now we have members from the east complaining that there is not enough money being spent down here. Already over $230,000 has been spent on this proposition. Canals such as this are out of date anyway. I think this canal should be modernized. It should be drained out and filled in and turned into a public highway. Then it would be of some use to the public. A canal six feet deep in only used for pleasure. Turn it into a public highway, make it into a good automobile road, and then the public will use it. It is no good as it is. If there is to be any contention over this item, let the canal stay the way it is and become a nuisance. I think the best thing to do is to reduce this item to one dollar.

Mr. McGIBBON: I presume we may now all sit down and sing the doxology. The hon. gentleman has spoken; the last word has been said. The hon. member does not know that along this canal we have some of the best power houses in the province of Ontario.

Mr. DONNELLY: Could you not still have them if it was filled in?

Mr. McGIBBON: I suppose the hon. member could have a windmill without any wind, if he was behind it.

Mr. DONNELLY: You could furnish the wind.

Mr. McGIBBON: If the hon. member was there, that would be sufficient.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is all you can furnish.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member talks about the money that is being spent in the east. I should like to remind him that according to a return made by his own government, by the Department of Railways and Canals, two years ago, this country was carrying the wheat from the west at a loss.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is a mistake, and it was proved to be a mistake by one of your own party last year.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. gentleman, I see, wants to quarrel with his own government and with his own Minister of Railways.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

I take the time off their clock. I say that the return was made by the hon. gentleman's own government. Evidently he is not in accord with his own minister.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is a joke. You have said that fifty times.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member is a joke.

Mr. DONNELLY: He is not sore, anyway.

Mr. McGIBBON: If the hon. member would speak so that he could be heard, I might perceive whether there was any intelligence in his remark. I would again ask the Minister of Railways if he will not agree to the government paying at least 40 per cent of the additional cost of this work, and let the municipalities be responsible for the other 60 per cent?

Mr. CHURCH: The midland counties have a legitimate grievance against all the governments so far as this particular canal is concerned. It has cost this country $25,000,000. What are the rentals and dues of this canal? On page 77 of the annual report of the department they are: dues $37 and rentals of—

Mr. DUNNING: I gave the information this afternoon—$95,644.

Mr. CHURCH: I was just going to say that dues were $37, rentals $95,644.02 a total of $95,792.02. This odd figure of two cents in the total seems to me to be all the value that the midland counties have derived from this canal. It has been nothing but a political canal. We have had enough of these political canals. There is the Newmarket canal, of sacred memory, where the people were told they would see ocean liners plying. The district on the Trent canal from Trenton to lake Simcoe should be industrialized. The government are holding property there to-day and nobody can get an industrial site. If you had a publicity agent to take up this question something could be done. If there was more co-operation between the federal government, the provincial government, the Hydro-Electric Commission, the municipalities of these midland counties, the national railways and other railways for the development of the district served by this canal the midland counties would become a great industrialized area. This is what the canal was intended for. I pass by the canal two or three times a week and I never see a boat there. In my opinion there should be some forward policy worked out between the federal government and the parties I have named. Trenton, an industrial town itself, is going ahead by leaps and bounds, but if something is not done soon this canal will become Newmarket canal No. 2 so far as Ontario is concerned. I do hope the minister will have an opportunity during the recess to visit the Trent canal district and meet the municipal authorities. I know they will be glad to see him up in Simcoe and the other counties. The tourist trade alone would contribute a very large revenue if there was less red tape in getting boats through the canal and more business methods. In that area they have cheap light and power second to none in Canada. With the co-operation I have suggested the revenue would be increased two or three times.

Miss MACPHAIL: I agree with the first part of the speech of the hon. member (Mr. Church) who has just sat down. I really think that canals for transportation purposes belong to the day of the ox cart, and that is quite a piece behind us. I do not think we should continue sinking money year after year into these small canals. The Newmarket canal has this advantage over our other canals—they never turned the water into it. It is our only dry canal. I understand it served the purpose of helping to elect a Liberal candidate on one or two occasions. I think that is what it is built for. Apparently there is a large increase in this vote, and I do think it is about time that all parties in the house made up their minds whether it is worth while spending more money year after year on this canal. With the price of labour to-day I should think it would pay to save time by another route rather than to take boats through the canal locks. I agree with the member on the Liberal side (Mr. Donnelly) who thought we should fill up this canal and make a good road of it.

Item agreed to.

Welland canal—improvements, $35,500.

Mr. CHURCH: Five thousand two hundred ships went through this canal last year. The tonnage through the Welland canal, if I remember rightly, is about five and a half million tons a year. There has been considerable delay in getting ships through the locks, and the tonnage has fallen off. According to page 97 of the last report of the Department of Railways and Canals, the tonnage was 5,214,514 tons, a falling off of 425,784 tons from the last year of record. The people of Canada have spent a large sum of money in this district which is one of the finest industrial areas in Canada, supplied with an abundance of cheap light and power. In the past few years, owing to the cheapness of light and power there, the whole Niagara district has become industrialized, especially between Niagara Falls, Welland, Port Colborne and the village of Port Dalhousie. I urge the minister to do something definite under this item. The question that occurs to me is this: What is going to become of the existing canal in 1930 when the government opens the new Welland ship canal? When that takes place we shall have three canals altogether, including the canal of 1870, the existing canal and the Welland ship channel. There is a vast amount of waste land in that locality which should be turned into sites for industry. It is with the utmost difficulty that you can obtain a site in that district to-day owing to the fact that the government has tied up half the country through which these three canals pass. I would suggest to the minister the possibility of building a great boulevard between lake Erie and lake Ontario on the new Welland ship channel although the province might be the proper authority to take into consideration a proposition of this sort in conjunction with the province. I certainly think that the federal government, at any rate, should consider the construction of a boulevard parelleling the new ship canal.

Speaking about industrial development, there are many small power sites that could be obtained to-day for industry if the land were available. The government should make it known that there are certain sections along these two old canals that are available for industrial purposes. There is no reason why there should not be considerable industrial activity in that district, when you consider the cheap light and power facilities which can be taken advantage of. Active measures should be taken this summer to get rid of the congestion which exists at the present time on this existing canal. I visited the district some fifteen times last summer, and, so far as I could see, the congestion appeared to be at both ends of lake Erie and lake Ontario. That canal will be utilized next summer almost every moment of the night and day and I trust that in the coming summer additional money will be forthcoming for further dredging at the lake Ontario end of the canal at Port Dalhousie and at Port Arthur and on the central section. It is important to know what action will be taken in regard to the lake levels. I do not know what the reason is, but the levels have gone down and there are many complaints in this regard from Thorold, St. Catharines and other places of shallow water in this channel. Many ships have been delayed in their passage through the canal. Whether this condition is due to the Chicago diversion I do not know, but I do know that there has been a good deal of complaint regarding the levels there. I hope the minister will spare no effort, in view of the heavy tonnage passing through the canal, to get rid of the congestion which to-day is hampering the movement of vessels. Action should be taken at the earliest possible moment to cope with the very heavy tonnage that is sure to go up this year. A revenue of $574,113 is derived from this canal alone out of a total revenue of $961,694 from all canals. The government can well afford to be liberal and keep the work going on repairs and renovations at this busy canal all summer and also hasten as much as possible the completion of the new Welland ship channel, as it will not be completed one day too soon to cope with the huge volume of tonnage congesting the present canal all the time by night and by day.

Mr. DUNNING: The committee ought to have some information bearing on the operation of the canal, in view of the remarks of my hon. friend; because I am bound to say, after paying the matter of Welland some rather close personal attention last year, the whole Welland operation—both the operation of the existing canal and the construction of the new canal—reflects very great credit indeed upon the Canadian engineering profession. That can be best illustrated in relation to the existing canal when I point out that there was a considerable increase of tonnage passing through the present canal in the calendar year 1927. In 1926 there passed through 5,214,000 tons of cargo and in 1927, 7,247,000 tons, or an increase of over 2,000,000 tons in one year of cargo passing through the existing canal. When one takes into account the fact that the operation of the existing canal is hampered very considerably by immense construction works going on in some places, crossing the existing canal, and that it is necessary to pass ships through the existing canal while at the same time constructing new works, one can appreciate the nature of the work that is being done. Engineers who have come from other countries in the past year have expressed in the very highest terms their opinion of the engineering importance of the great work which is being accomplished in the construction of the new Welland ship canal—with which I shall deal under another vote—by the Canadian engineers. By way of illustration of the volume of business, I would point out to those members from the west, who know something about the handling of grain through elevators, that the 3,000,000 bushel elevator operated by the Department of Railways and Canals at Port Colborne handled last year 77,600,000 bushels of grain. That was the extent of its operations during the last calendar year. I do not think there is a piece of grain-handling machinery in the Dominion that can show a record superior to that—a complete turnover, twenty-six times, in the handling of this grain. The previous year the amount handled was 62,535,000 bushels as compared with 77,621,000 in the last calendar year, with a capacity, as I have indicated, of approximately 3,000,000 bushels of storage. Of course, it is a transfer house; but these figures will give an indication of the importance of this artery.

With reference to my hon. friend's question as to what we shall do with the existing canal when the new canal is completed, I may point out to the committee that there have been four Welland canals, including the new one. Parts of three of them are still in existence, and it is somewhat of a problem to work out to the best advantage the utilization of the channels, the water, and so on, of the former canals. As an engineering matter it has not yet been fully worked out what we shall do with the present canal when the new one is completed.

Mr. BENNETT: But all the water will be diverted finally through the new canal.

Mr. DUNNING: There are qualifications even to that; from Thorold to Dalhousie that is the case. However, these problems are being looked into continuously by our engineering staff, and the fact that we have not yet reached a conclusion as to exactly what shall be done in connection with a matter of such magnitude does not indicate dilatoriness on the part of those responsible. I assure the committee that due care and consideration will be given the problem.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

National Defence—militia services—administration, $317,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not wish to go into the details of this item but I do desire to protest against the very heavy increases which are manifest in the national defence estimates this year. I presume that some of the papers will say I am making my annual protest, but I am very glad to be able still to protest against these expenditures, and there is a very real reason for protest this year since in the last two years the estimates for this department have increased almost fifty per cent.

Last year the minister rather resented my references to professional militarists; he said he had yet to meet a professional militarist. I should like to say that when we speak about professional militarists and their influence we simply mean what we mean when we speak of other professional men; we refer to a man who is a professional soldier, whether he is a private or an officer. I think possibly the minister himself is a splendid example of a man whose job it is to magnify and efficiently run his department. I have every admiration for a man who wishes to make a success of what he undertakes; I think we would not admire a minister if he did anything else, but since there are men whose job it is to make a success of military things; since there are officers who very naturally, from their viewpoint, are trying to make their military establishment efficient, we who are opposed to military expenditure can quite rightly suggest that undoubtedly their continual effort is to increase expenditures, just as is the aim of officials in other departments.

Last year the minister stated:

> I am presiding over the Department of National Defence, not over a department which has to do with the propagation of the principle of abolition of war.

I think that is a clear-cut statement; in fact I am inclined to think it a little nearer the truth than the statement he made during another debate in this house, when he described himself as the minister of peace. I wish he were the minister of peace; in that case I would be very glad to entrust to him a good deal of money in order to create an effective peace department. But let me repeat what he said last year:

> I am presiding over the Department of National Defence, not over a department which has to do with the propagation of the principle of abolition of war.

So he is very clearly at the head of that department, trying to make it effective from his standpoint. He went on to say that he proposed:

> —to see that we have at least some form of defence such as that which is regarded as necessary, having regard to conditions in the world.

In this connection I noticed a very good statement in the Toronto Daily Star, to this effect:

> So far all attempts to disarm even partially have been doomed to failure because the international representatives who meet to discuss the problem have been admirals and generals professionally interested in improving the world's war preparedness, and incapable of believing that the whole thing ought to be, or could be, ended.

That is the point I should like to make, and in this view I think I am sustained by no less an authority than Lloyd George, who in one of his recent letters made the following statement:

> In every country, it is a part of the business of the fighting staff to work out plans for defence against all conceivable enemies. Their minds get absorbed in these brilliant schemes. They gloat over their efficiency, and like every inventor, yearn to put their machine to a test. In the secrecy of their department, the possible war soon becomes a likely war, and the likely gradually glides into the inevitable war. It is at first discussed in whispers behind locked doors. Then at clubs where gather together men whose patriotism is above any suspicion of being tempered by discretion. . . The next stage is always the after dinner speech.

Then, as he says, comes the surrender to fools. William Leach, when Under Secretary for the air ministry for England, suggested that if peace were wanted peace must be prepared for. Let me give a comment on this from the Manitoba Free Press:

> Naturally such a revolutionary proposal—

Such as was made by Mr. Leach at that time.

> —namely, reliance upon Christianity to attain peace, provoke a storm of protest. Major General J. E. B. Seely, Liberal member of parliament, and Rear Admiral N. F. Sueter, Conservative, were among Mr. Leach's opponents in the debate, the former exclaiming: "If the empire is to be defended by Sermons on the Mount, God help them."

The Free Press goes on:

> It is easy to picture the righteous indignation of choleric political colonels, retired admirals and many others who pride themselves upon being practical men, living in a practical world. In spite of the ghastly failure of the policy of just such very practical persons in 1914, they are back to the same old cry of preparedness for the next war to ensure peace.

The minister does not like quotations. I gave him some last year, and I give these tonight simply because while a good many people may not particularly care what I say with regard to these things, they cannot altogether disregard the opinions of men who stand high in the councils of the nation, some of whom even stand high in military matters. Let me quote an authority whom I think the minister will recognize. Sir William Robertson, speaking before the chamber of commerce at Lincoln, England, said:

> We no longer agree that the best way to prevent war is to prepare for it. Instead of preventing war, we know that preparations are likely to precipitate it.

So I ask the reason for the development of militarism in Canada—because let us make no mistake; there is a steady increase in our military expenditures, and these expenditures are a very fair indication as to where our interests and our policies really lie. I happened to be in Montreal only last Sunday; there I watched a long parade which took almost an hour to pass. The newspapers said there were nearly 10,000 people in that parade. The salute was given to the Minister of National Defence, and we almost seemed to be back in the days from 1914 to 1918. It is quite true there were only a few veterans in that parade, but unfortunately we had a great many young chaps and even young boys parading. I cannot but think that this kind of thing is encouraging the military spirit. Why are we seeking to develop that spirit in Canada? I cannot but recall some words of Dr. E. J. Dillon in The Inside Story of the Peace Conference, as follows:

> Imperialism and militarism are striking roots in soil where they were hitherto unknown. In a word Prussianism instead of being destroyed has been openly adopted by its ostensible enemies.

It is all very well to say that our militarism in Canada is very different from Prussian militarism. I am firmly convinced that militarism is very much the same the world over, whether in Germany, Great Britain, France, Japan, or in Canada, for that matter, although I am thankful to think that so far we have not progressed as far as some of the older nations. But we are on the way, unless there is some very definite check given to present tendencies.

In the old days in which many of us grew up in Canada we did not have these military ideals to the extent we have to-day. We did not have the military spirit that has been fostered in the last few years, and we did not have these very heavy expenditures for war. Immediately after the war we said that we had learned our lesson—that the world had learned a lesson—and we were proceeding to try something better. It would seem that even though we talk peace, even though we are a member of the League of Nations and are talking these days of arbitration treaties, we in Canada are still pursuing this military idea.

We all want peace; the minister agrees with that. But the minister and his department, and a considerable number of people in Canada, believe that peace can be secured by military armaments and by defence. They are sincere; I grant them that. They consider themselves patriotic. But those of us who differ are also sincere, and we believe that their policy will lead this country to ruin. We have the right, I would say the duty, to defeat that policy.

The Minister of Finance has made the statement that half our natural revenue goes to pay the interest on the debt incurred in the last war. In spite of the futility of that war—its failure to settle any of the grave economic or international questions, we are preparing to assume our share in some next war that will not be very long in coming if other nations adopt the policies that we are adopting. In every other estimate that comes before this house we ask the purpose of the expenditure. I think we should be distinctly told, in connection with these estimates, against whom we are preparing to fight. Some of the militarists accuse us of being dreamers and impossible idealists. I accuse them of being romantic sentimentalists, and I would say to them, against whom are we in Canada preparing to fight?

Mr. STINSON: Anyone that attacks us.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Anyone that attacks us! We are making our preparations to-day and we are looking around for potential enemies who are likely to do the attacking. Can you imagine that we are going to be drawn into another great European war? I can hardly think that when I talk with the men who returned from the last war. I had a letter the other day from a returned veteran of the war, and in speaking of his own boy he said, "I will never let him go to war. I have done my bit for the both of us, and before he goes I would do something desperate." That is the opinion of not a few of the returned men.

Mr. STINSON: Very few.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I say not a few, and I know whereof I speak. I have spoken with hundreds, and I think into the thousands, who have expressed this view to me.

Are we going to war against the United States? If we are, let us come out frankly and say so. We say that war between Great Britain and the United States is unthinkable, but someone has very well remarked that when people say a thing is unthinkable it means they are thinking very seriously about it. Are we preparing for war against the United States? In a recent book by Commander Kenworthy, entitled Peace and War, I noticed the following:

> So strong a part does sentiment play in such matters that the great majority of Canadians would probably decide for immediate intervention on the side of the mother country.

That is in case of war between Great Britain and the United States. Then he goes on:

> Yet this would mean a terrible war on Canadian soil. Automatically the Americans would invade Canada, and Britain, fighting in both the Pacific and the Atlantic, would forego other naval campaigns, including colonial raids and trade attacks so as to permit the throwing of as many British troops and aeroplanes from all parts of the empire on to Canadian soil in as short a time as possible. . . If Canada were invaded, a long-drawn-out and bloody land and aerial war would follow to add to the horrors of the naval campaigns.

Later on he says:

For the benefit of humanity and the good of the people concerned it would be better on the whole if Canada declared for neutrality. Such a declaration would limit the area of the struggle and make an earlier ending to it easier. Once Canada were in, the most appalling war in history would have commenced and the world war of 1914 to 1918 would be far surpassed in moral horror, material loss and human misery.

And again he says:

But there is something greater than nationalist patriotism; and taking a long view, which is also a more humane view, it would be better for Canada to keep out.

When we have such advice from a Britisher of the standing of Commander Kenworthy, I think we might very well ask whether we are right in preparing for a possible war with the United States.

Are we preparing for war in the orient? Again, very few of us in Canada think that that is the way in which we can settle our problems on the Pacific. The most clearcut statement for armaments that I have seen from a Canadian source is that contained in a document published by the Navy League of Canada. It is entitled Interdependence of Canadian Industry and Naval Defence. He says that national security——may some day lie in mutual treaties for ever lasting peace based on international economic adjustment; to-day unfortunately, it lies only in a proper measure of armed defence.

I think that is a fair statement of the case from the standpoint of the militarists. They talk of arbitration in order to wave it aside; they talk about treaties and say that treaties offer no security, and they come back again and again and say that the only way in which we can have world peace, the only way in which we can attain national security is by force of arms. It is that position that some of us challenge to-night. The document to which I have referred admits that the provision of armaments has not in the main prevented war, but warns that when a clash occurs, as it inevitably will under the existing economic system——stability of industrial commitments will lie only with those in a position to maintain their sea communications.

Again going back to the old and indefensible British position with regard to sea power.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Does he not think an examination of the territorial lines which resulted from the Versailles treaty would show that many other wars would be inevitable in consequence of that treaty?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is a rather large question into which I am not prepared to go to-night. It seems to me that the boundaries as drawn in Europe after the war were very arbitrary and in themselves are likely to provoke war in the future. I should like to see an early revision of the Versailles treaty. I am not, however, so sure that the drawing of new political boundaries will be the way to ensure peace. I think we shall have to go deeper than that and get at the underlying economic causes. In that connection I should like to quote one other sentence from this statement of the Navy League:

It is the everlasting economic war which prevails, in time of nominal peace, which has produced, and will produce, physical war.

There, it seems to me, is a clearcut statement, a frank recognition of the real cause of modern war, namely, the everlasting economic war which prevails in time of nominal peace. In view of such a situation, may we not ask whether there is no way out. Are we to go on forever exploring blind alleys? Are we to go on forever in the old ways that have proved absolutely futile in the settlement of these great economic problems; or have we not come to the time when we can tackle the big economic questions and attempt to discover some solution along other lines than those of the past?

I want to give one other quotation from the Manitoba Free Press which sets forth the position of a large number of Canadian citizens to-day:

It may take some time possibly several years, to get national animosities worked up to the due pitch for another war. But, in the economic conflict, the warfare for markets and concessions abroad, the activities of financial groups are more apparent than in the ten years or so leading up to the last war.

The pressure on the financial system has been intensified. The capacity of industrial nations to increase output has been enormously increased. The belief is commonly held in every country that wider markets must be found: the industries have to take care of increased overhead charges, due to recent industrial expansion, and industry everywhere is saddled with the burden of war debt.

As the system is operated at present, the only outlet according to orthodox financial belief is in exporting to markets abroad. But the markets abroad are being reduced, by reduced purchasing power, and themselves becoming industrialized. More nations than ever are looking for markets abroad, or preparing to cut into the business of competitive exporting. The belief that it is vital to secure control of such an outlet as the untapped resources of Asia Minor is based on falsehood. It is one of the fallacies of orthodox finance. But it is leading to war, unless the lead is given by some nation towards a policy of increasing purchasing power at home—to open up the home market.

There we have a suggested solution of the great economic problem. Instead of making every effort to solve that economic problem, which is to-day not merely a national but a world problem, we are now turning back and attempting to prepare to fight those enemies with whom our present industrial and financial policy may bring us into conflict.

We who protest may be small in numbers, at least in this chamber, but I urge that in this matter we represent a very large section of the people of Canada. Canada has an opportunity for leadership in the campaign for peace. As I have said on previous occasions we are in a very unique position. As a member of the British Empire and as a member of the League of Nations we are linked up with the great majority of the nations of the world. On the other hand we live side by side with the great United States republic which is recognized as being a leading force in international finance. We are, a natural link, between these two great groups of powers. We are safe as regards invasion from the United States. No one to-day thinks that the United States are going to attempt a political invasion of Canada. There may be peaceful penetration by finance and industry, but we are safe from political invasion. Why cannot we take a bold step and lead the other nations along these lines of peace? To-day by permitting ourselves continually to increase our armaments, we are simply preparing the way for further trouble. You remember, Mr. Chairman, those lines of Israel Zangwill on "The God of War".

> "To safeguard peace, we must prepare for war"
> I know that maxim; it was forged in hell.
> This wealth of ships and guns inflames the vulgar
> And makes the very war it guards against.

I have every respect for the way in which the minister is carrying out the work of his department; I can quite understand his ambitions to make that department effective; but I would urge upon the house that it is not the professional soldiers nor the Department of National Defence that ought to determine the extent to which we prepare for war in this country. That is a matter of policy which ought to be decided by the house. More than that, if in some way the public at large could directly voice its attitude on this question, I have not the slightest doubt that the referendum would indicate opposition to the extension of military expenditures.

Mr. CHURCH: We are having once again the annual debate on peace and war. I may say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) that the soldiers who fought for Canada were just as fond of peace as he is or anybody else who is preaching peace in this country to-day. Since I have been in the house these estimates have been cut down from $15,000,000 to $10,000,000 and to-day they are so cut to the bone that unless you want to cut the whole thing out altogether, you cannot cut another dollar off. The minister has been a very economic minister; he has held an even balance between the peace and the war party; he has gone over his department from coast to coast, and he has brought his estimates down to-night In answer to that all we hear is about war debts and authorities on peace. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre does not require to quote any authorities on peace. He and the League of Nations are the most shining authorities on peace. He argues that we should cut the whole thing out and work for peace. The minister is working for peace on a preparedness basis. We have had enough Monroe doctrines and scraps of paper like the Washington conference and the Kellogg scrap of paper to be. We have the League of Nations which is the most troublesome institution in the world to-day. The only real League of Nations is the British fleet which in the last war protected our shores and protected us from slavery worse than anything in the history of the world. Had it not been for the British fleet in the late war we would have experienced the awful horrors of war on our own soil in Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg and Vancouver. As for what Canada does in a militia sense, as compared with the motherland and Australia and New Zealand, Canada gives in money a contribution of two pence halfpenny to militia and defence. The motherland pays the whole cost of a magnificent fleet to protect our shore, to maintain our trade routes and to enable us to do business on the seven seas of the world, while we who in the darkest hours of the war were prepared to accept the protection of the British fleet and all the privileges we enjoyed as part of the British Empire should now be prepared to accept some of the responsibility which that incurs and contribute adequately to maritime freedom. Yet we do nothing but sponge on the British taxpayer for our protection and whine and complain about our mythical status.

Canada has failed as no other country in the late war has failed to give places in the armies of industry to Canadians who gave themselves places in the armies of liberty. Talk about peace and war! Let me tell the gentlemen of the Labour party that I do not believe that they are expressing the real views of the labour men of this country. The labour men, the trades unionists, of this country and the working classes enlisted as did no other class of the community. There were 50,000 of them who joined the colours and were killed, fighting for their country. Talk about the United States! Over 100,000 of the men who left for the front to fight this country's battles, when they came back here, could find no work to do, and they were driven out of Canada to the United States, by the economic policy of free trade which the hon. gentlemen of the Labour party advocate, to seek a living in the United States.

What do my hon. friends propose as a substitute for these estimates? The Monroe doctrine? Will that protect the shores of Canada? No. Will the new peace proposals of Mr. Kellogg protect this country? No, that, like the Monroe doctrine, will be another scrap of paper. It seems to me that every time they have an election on the other side of the line the Democratic or the Republican party spring a new league of nations or a peace pact or peace note of their own, and they put it over England and France and all the fellows who did the actual fighting, while they themselves were too proud to fight. They had a Washington conference in the days of President Harding, whereby Great Britain and France and the United States were to build no more capital ships for about forty years. Did the Americans keep that pact? No. Immediately after the war they turned all their war-time plants on the Atlantic ocean, at New York, New Haven and Savannah and other ports, into peace-time plants, and they started building a merchant navy by twenty-five and fifty and a hundred ships at a time, so that in a few years they will be equal to the British Empire in that respect. That is the way they kept the last pact. Did the Americans keep the Washington conference of five years ago? No. A bill was brought into the last congress, at the instance of President Coolidge, calling for a large expenditure for new capital ships for the navy and ships for the merchant marine and a huge navy vote, so much so that their expenditure to-day is the largest of any nation in the world. Now that another election is coming on across the line, they put their heads together and evolve a new scrap of paper called the Kellogg plan, to end war until after the next presidential election when the jingoes will again be on top.

It is said now that we are a new nation. If we are a nation, we can declare war and are a sovereign power. The Kellogg note says we are or thinks so. The people of this country have never been asked to vote on this magnificent new status which we are supposed to have. It is a mere mockery, a sham, and a humbug all along to talk of our having a different status and being a nation. We are not a nation. We are part of the British Empire to-day, and when Britain is at war Canada is at war. We are a link in a chain of free commonwealths within and making up the British Empire. We are not a free and independent nation. We are sponging to-day on the motherland for the cost of the protection of our Atlantic and Pacific coasts and our shipping on the seven seas. We contribute not a cent to the British fleet. We have a contemptible little navy of three or four stone hooker boats that hug the shore and are too proud to go out on the ocean and fight, and if they do go out on the ocean they have under the Laurier navy to send a wireless to Ottawa and have an order in council passed before they can fight when they see the enemy coming. I was on the Pacific last March at the time of the threatened war with China, and a Vancouver paper came out in a special edition headed "War is to be Declared," and asked what was going to protect the Pacific coast. The British Empire got out of its alliance with Japan, mainly owing to Canada's falling down.

The British Empire was also urged by Canada to drop its plans for a naval base at Singapore for the protection of our Pacific province, Australia and New Zealand in the event of another war. There will be wars as long as time lasts. You can talk about the mythical League of Nations, but I believe that there will be war as long as time lasts, and the country that prepares itself for war is doing more for peace than all the so-called peace agencies and talkfests on peace which I have heard in this house and out of it ever since I came into it.

Let me tell my hon. friends who are shouting from the house tops about peace that the half a million soldiers who fought for this country in France and Flanders are just as strong for peace, and ten times stronger, than those in this house and out of it who are shouting peace, because they went to the front and experienced the horrors of war. Canada lost fifty thousand men in the great war; many thousands more came back wounded and are now lying helpless in the hospitals, and some of them cannot get into the hospitals; some are starving and out of work because they are not one hundred per cent efficient, while we can spend nearly two millions on a farcical League of Nations. Many of these soldiers had to go to the United States to look for a living. The Canadians who joined the Canadian expeditionary force and served overseas from 1914 to 1918 have done more for peace than all those who stayed at home and are shouting peace from the house tops and served Canada better than Canadians on the voters' lists have served Canada in the polling booths from 1919 to 1926.

This League of Nations provides a fine Cook's tour for government officials and ministers. The League of Nations has provoked more strife than it has settled. It is the disturber of the peace of the British Empire, this so-called League of Nations to which my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre is so fond of referring and similar mock debating societies on peace, and one day the British Empire will wake up and realize that they have been living in a fool's paradise as they were in 1909 if they listen much longer to the League of Nations and the peace party and the pacifists. We have spent $1,600,000 on the League of Nations, in joy rides and trips for officials and tourists. Talk about having a seat in the League of Nations; you might as well have a seat in the American baseball league or the National league. These leagues do more for peace with the Americans than the League of Nations. The League of Nations has done nothing for Canada and the empire but cause trouble and provide nice soft jobs and travelling expenses for officials and those who shout peace from the house tops in this country in season and out of season, while others who did the real work of protecting the people of this country, in the darkest hours of the war are driven in peace to the United States looking for a job and are exiled from Canada.

I am sorry that the minister has not included in his annual estimates a table showing the comparative contributions to defence that are made by the motherland, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. Our contribution amounts to about two shillings per head; in fact I do not think it is that much; I had the figures here, but unfortunately I have mislaid them. The figures for Australia and New Zealand are five or six times what ours are. They are paying for the Singapore base. We pay nothing. New Zealand, a country with a population less than the city of Montreal, is contributing $5,000,000 over a period of years for the support of the Singapore base, and has contributed battleships to the British fleet. The Pacific question will be the great question before the people of this country to-morrow. I believe that the minister has pared his estimates down to the bone. You, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Power), know more about war than all the peace parties put together, because our gallant chairman as a young man sacrificed his position and went to the war, and I do not believe he will ever be the same man again. You, Mr. Chairman, have seen the errors made by the people of this country in the lack of preparations for war, and the cost of unpreparedness, and you know what it has cost the people of this country at Valcartier and in other parts of Canada in training as a result.

The cadet movement in this country is very largely paid for by the boards of education throughout Canada and the municipalities. Ontario will support the cadet movement as long as time lasts. That is the policy of the government at Queen's Park and through the municipalities they are spending a large amount of money on the cadet movement. Those who are in the non-active militia—I see my hon. friend from Parkdale in the house, but I did not see him in the war parade last Sunday. I know that in his Irish regiment and in many other units in Toronto the officers, the non-commissioned officers and men have to dig down into their own pockets to provide part of the uniforms, equipment and stationery, and almost everything else for their units. That is what they have to do in the soldier city of Toronto. These are men now in the active militia at Toronto. They admire the present minister and the support he is giving them. He is holding the balance very evenly between the war party and the peace party in this country. The peace party are those who depend on the Monroe doctrine, the League of Nations, the Kellogg note and similar scraps of paper to say nothing of the Washington note of five years ago. In my constituency in the Earlscourt section there are twenty-four war widows in one block; they know something about war. Many of them have to go out to work, as a result of Canada's failure, and they are just as strong for peace as my hon. friend who has just spoken. Notwithstanding all this dream about our new status, notwithstanding the fact that last year we spent from $300,000 to $400,000 celebrating Dominion day, many of the returned men who fought the battles of their country have had to go to the United States to find jobs. Talk about what the United States is doing for peace! I know no country in the world that is doing more to prepare for war in their army and navy votes. Preparedness will do more to ensure peace than any other agency, as the late Lord Roberts pointed out years ago. The minister has not enough backing; his estimates are not half large enough to put the militia on a proper basis. The item for spring camps is not half large enough. Only a few units are taken care of and the camps are small and not what they were. Many units cannot drill in camp; they have to drill in their home towns by night, as a result of such false economy.

Then we are spending nothing on maritime freedom; we are loading those bills off on the hard-pressed taxpayers of Great Britain. In the province of Ontario the population is mostly British born and they know something of what the mother country has done for maritime freedom. Certainly, had it not been for the British fleet, neither Canada nor the United States would have been able to send any troops overseas or send supplies or keep our trade routes open. There should be a day of reckoning for the peace party in this country. We can no longer continue to sponge on Great Britain for naval defence. Take the Pacific question: the teeming millions of China and Japan are within a few days of our western shores, and yet on the Pacific we have only one or two ships recently purchased. True, we have a few fishing and rowing boats, but so far as a fleet is concerned, we are not even a twenty-fifth class naval power.

I think these votes have been very carefully prepared and the only fault I have to find is that they have been cut down too low. But I shall support the minister. In the province of Ontario, which pays over 40 per cent of the cash taxes of Canada, 95 per cent of the people are in favour of these votes. I know something of the Trades Union movement in the city of Toronto. No movement in this country contributed more men to the Canadian Expeditionary Force, and they are the backbone of the militia, rank and file. I repeat, I shall support these votes, but they are not half enough. So far as they go, however, I think they will commend themselves to the wisdom and the judgment of the country generally.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, when in 1925 I made my first speech against cadet training the total vote was about $11,000,000; this year it is $18,726,946.42. That is a very large increase. This is done under a government which on every possible occasion protests that it is a peaceful government. Well, looking over the treasury benches one would agree that at least it is a peaceful looking government. Yet these national defence votes have gone on increasing year after year. We used to have a Minister of National Defence who though he looked like a Prussian war lord, did not act like one; but to-day we have as minister of the department a gentleman who looks peaceful enough but acts like a Prussian war lord. Again, I entreat the Prime Minister to transfer his Minister of National Defence to a department where his great ability and driving force will be of greater benefit to Canada. Naturally the minister wishes to make a success of his department, but to the extent that he accomplishes this he makes hypocrites of Canadians, for all the time we are protesting that we are trying to promote the peace of the world as we listen to plans for peace made by leading Britishers and Americans and also by some of our own countrymen. And we have a place on the council of the League of Nations. It is a farce for us to send representatives to the League of Nations unless we back them up by peace sentiment in Canada. And if they are so backed up, why in the world do we not show that peace sentiment in the estimates? This fact is abundantly clear: Supposing preparedness does bring peace—and I do not think for a moment it does—under the new methods of carrying on war all the amounts of money we are voting for old methods are a straight waste. Training men to ride horses beautifully, dressing them up in blue and red coats, and putting on high class military parades such as the one put on last Sunday in Montreal, glorifying the whole spectacle and making it appear a grand thing—all this is just so much waste. We might as well use the money for some sensible purpose in Canada, because wars are no longer carried on in that fashion. Even since the last war a great deal of progress has been made. Only yesterday we all read in the newspapers of poisonous gas escaping accidentally from a tank in Germany, and finding its way, through open windows, into private houses, killing some people and destroying horses, cattle and vegetation everywhere. This is the new method. In the future wars will be carried on largely from the air, so that all this silly swank, this dressing up in pretty uniforms and parading on beautiful horses, will be absolutely useless. What will be the sense of a lot of men going around on horses, all dressed up, and thinking themselves frightfully big fellows? I say, it will be just so much waste of money. I do not know how much this demonstration in Montreal cost the country, but no doubt it took a good deal of money. They had the cadets out and the minister of peace was present to inspect the whole affair. They simply glorified the whole devilish thing. Now, there is nothing glorious about war, and what is the use of entertaining that stupid idea any longer? I know, as other members know, of returned broken and sick soldiers who have to support families although they are receiving no pension, not having applied in time. There are thousands of men who are now going around, wrecks of the last war, and there is no use saying that it is a glorious thing so far as they are concerned. Yet everyone who saw this spectacle in Montreal was stirred by it. I too might have been stirred by it, had I allowed myself to forget what it leads to, because military music does stir people; that is why they have it; otherwise men could not be induced to go into battle and kill one another.

It is rather interesting to look over this pamphlet, for which, I suppose, the country pays. On the front there is an advertisement of Molson's ale and on the back one of the Royal Bank of Canada, and between the two there is the military display. Let me give the names of some of the patrons of this peace spectacle which Montreal saw last Sunday: Their Excellencies; the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec; the Archbishop of Montreal; the Bishop of Montreal; the Premier of Quebec; the Minister of National Defence, otherwise known as the minister of peace; the Minister of Marine; the Secretary of State; the Mayor of Montreal; the Minister of Roads, Quebec; the Provincial Secretary; the Chief of General Staff; the Chief of Naval Staff—and a couple of other fellows. These are all peace people.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Did it include the member for Southeast Grey?

Miss MACPHAIL: No, they missed me. Now, why can we not be out and out about this thing? Why can we not be absolutely honest? There are two schools of thought in Canada in regard to security. Both I believe are absolutely honest. One school believes that you will get security through military preparedness, and to that school the minister of this department belongs. He believes that if you prepare for war you will get peace. I do not belong to that school. I belong to the school—and it is growing in Canada—which holds that if you want peace you must prepare for peace. And the methods whereby peace is secured are not the same as the methods used to promote war. This peace sentiment is growing in Canada. I recall the time when some of us first tried to say things like this in the house, particularly the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and myself. When we made statements of this sort a gentleman, now a judge in the maritime provinces, shouted "bolshevik" and many other things like that. We were laughed to scorn; we were supposed to be fools who somehow or other by mistake had got into parliament. But to-day that attitude is not evident in the House of Commons; it is not seen to-night, although it is true there is a more or less empty house. Why? The answer is that after all parliament is but a reflection of the Canadian people and members dare not take that attitude. They were elected by the people and the people believe that war brings nothing but destruction and disaster not only, as the Secretary of State said the other day, to the vanquished but to the victors as well. War is an outgrown institution, as every advanced writer in every country agrees; and I do not know why in the world we cannot act on some of the best thought of the best people. For my part I would absolutely cut out every bit of national defence. The air force may be of some use at least in peace; it might be of some use in war, although I do not know. But certainly the other displays are of no use whatever, and when you come to items such as this the thing is simply vicious. It is a hypocritical attitude for the government to say and to expect any sane person to believe, that they are working for peace while at the same time they are poisoning the minds of the youth and making it impossible for these same youth, if they take training as cadets, seriously to promote peaceful ideas.

I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but there was one thing in connection with this parade in Montreal which is too good to miss. No doubt it was lovely as a pageant, but they concluded with the following words, sung to the accompaniment of massed bands:

Abide with me; fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens; Lord with me abide;
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me.

I fear no foe with Thee at hand to bless,
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness;
Where is death's sting? Where, grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if Thou abide with me.

Was that not a wonderful thing to trail that in at the end of this glorious parade of military achievement? At least they held death up as the great ideal and aim of military preparedness.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not know whether the minister desires a discussion on the subject of defence; I do not know whether this is the proper time to bring it on. I doubt whether the committee is in the proper mood to go into the theme as thoroughly as the theme itself merits. But I find myself between two extremes to-night. On my right I find an hon. gentleman who holds, I believe, that some preparation will probably help to keep war off, although he thinks war is absolutely inevitable in all time to come. On my left are members who think war can be abolished and should be abolished, and that one way to abolish it is to stop making preparation for defence, and if necessary to throw away our arms and to declare to the world that we do not think we need fight any more.

I am between these two extreme points on the floor of this house to-night and I find myself having to take a more or less middle path philosophically. If I had to make a choice. I would not hesitate to line up with the hon. lady to my left. But I think I have a sound position, because the great philosopher Aristotle once took the same ground; he said that truth was to be found in the grand mean. And we have a more recent example in the Prime Minister and his party who have taken that position as between the extreme left and the extreme right; they say that they will go between the two, following truth in that path. If therefore I cannot get the ear of the minister in what I shall say to-night surely in view of the position I have adopted I ought to be acceptable pro tem at least.

First of all I want to pay the highest possible compliment to and express the deepest appreciation of the splendid idealism and sincerity of hon. members to my left who from time to time have stated, as they have done to-night, their absolute opposition to war in any shape or form, believing as they do, that we can get along without it; that we are more able to defend ourselves without the means of preparation than we are with them. I do not know whether or not they are correct in that position, but I do know they are doing a very great deal to stimulate the imagination of the people and create that will to peace without which peace on a permanent basis will never be achieved. In that great work I certainly congratulate them; I hope they will continue it and I hope they will be encouraged from every section to continue it. On the other hand, I want to say that I have no longer any allusions about the possibility of stopping war so suddenly, in view of the actual conditions which I see in all parts of the modern world. While I think this idealism is admirable and necessary, nevertheless we cannot close our eyes to the great facts which scream at us from every section of the known world. I had the most profound admiration for the splendid fourteen points of the late President Wilson, but how far did they go? I think we would have to say that he overlooked the fundamental propositions, which were economic; those points, however sharp they were and however splendid, were absolutely doubled up and rendered useless by the economic forces with which they had to contend.

Therefore I submit that our consideration of this great problem of peace and war must extend, if it is to reach sound conclusions, to the real causes of war. I think the hon. members to my left who have emphasized peace as they have done, creating in the minds of the people of Canada a will for peace, will ultimately lead us to an understanding of the conditions which produce war and which make war absolutely inevitable. I know some people believe that Christianity can stop war; I think some hon. member mentioned that to-night. Obviously we have no Christians; that is the trouble. The only Christian of whom I ever heard was Jesus Christ himself; I never met another, never read of another, and do not believe there was ever another. We cannot stop war in that way; there are no Christians, so they cannot stop anything. Some people thought the international labour organizations could stop war. Until 1914 I had a profound faith in those organizations myself, but they did not stop war. Things went on as usual, and the very men who belonged to that international fraternity competed with each other in their mad rush to get at each others throats.

Then some say that if we get rid of our arms we will stop war. You might just as well tell me that the reason I do not hit the man sitting in front of me is because I have no arms. If you cut off my arms and I desired to hit him I would kick him; if you cut off my feet I would bite him; no matter what you did I would find some means of attacking him. I do not think you can stop people from fighting even if you do not spend another penny on military preparations.

Miss MACPHAIL: Save your money.

Mr. IRVINE: Yes, I think we might save it pro tem. I am not defending these expenditures; I am discussing the question academically. I do not think we can stop war by any idealism of that kind, nor do I think we can stop it by ceasing our preparations or by destroying the implements which for the moment we use in fighting. I think war goes deeper than that.

Let me say now, so that I shall not be misunderstood, that my antipathy to war is not less than that of the hon. member for Southeast Grey, nor is it less than that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I do not think war is a sensible thing; in fact I think it is a most impractical thing, but perhaps that is why it appeals to the house. I think we use the most impractical means possible in order to attain the most practical ends. War has no justification other than the fact that it is inevitable and that we do not know how to stop it; that is its justification. It has no moral justification; it has no economic justification; it has no human justification, but we do not know how to stop it, so we have to prepare for it. That is the position in which we find ourselves.

Now I wish to say one or two words further. I want to suggest that a study of war, which perhaps every hon. member has made to some extent, must lead us to the conclusion that its chief cause is essentially economic. If that is true, if economic conditions cause war, the abolition of armaments will not stop it. If economic conditions cause war, the preaching of peace will not stop it, because you cannot reach economic conditions by talking about peace. So the only thing for us to do is to make a real, sincere attempt to go a little deeper than that and get at the economic causes. Let me suggest something along this line to the Minister of National Defence; I know he is against war just as much as the rest of us, but he finds himself in a position of responsibility. I also find myself in a position of equal responsibility, although I do not get the name for it; I am responsible for conditions just as much as he is, and I am not going to shirk my responsibilities. However, I want to make a suggestion to the minister, as a means of ultimately leading to that condition which hon. members to my left visualize for us so often. I think Canada to-day would be one of the first countries to be attacked; we have territory, and territory is what some of the nations of the world need most. If they go on breeding their populations at the present rate, they will have to have additional territory if they can get it by force. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked against whom we were preparing to defend ourselves; my reply is that we are preparing to defend ourselves against the first nation which so overruns its own territory with its own population that it has to find additional space. I do not know which country that is going to be; I could name a few who are in a neck and neck race for the position, but that is one real cause.

Now I suggest to the minister that he endeavour to do a little good work along this line in connection with our immigration policy. I suggest that he get in contact with the Minister of Immigration, and that they say to Great Britain, "During the next thirty years we are prepared to take the surplus population which you now have provided that you will stop being an incubator for us. We do not want incubators. We will take your surplus provided you adopt a policy which hereafter will limit your population to your own resources." Just ask them to take an intelligent view of the question. Their population increases by about 400,000 every year; they have now a population of about 43,000,000, while they could not feed 25,000,000 on a high standard of living. What is the use of our taking the surplus population and relieving the pressure, while they keep on constantly increasing their population without knowing how they are going to feed them? That is a condition which leads inevitably to war. In addition to that, it is not an intelligent policy. I do not say Great Britain is the only country doing that; all Europe is in the same position, together with Japan, India and China, and we will be in a similar position some day if we follow this rigorous immigration policy now in force. I submit that if any farmer in western Canada tried to raise more pigs than he had swill for he would have the humane inspector at his door when that fact became known. However, the nations go on increasing their populations to such an extent that they scarcely have standing room for them. They say, "We must have no war," but the natural law steps in and says there must be war as long as nations blindly go on in disregard of the need to regulate population in relation to resources.

I suggest also to the minister that he use every possible effort to promote a policy which will lead to intelligent economic co-operation among the nations of the world. I think the Prime Minister, when he was speaking in reply to the resolution moved by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) put the situation correctly when he indicated that peace came about not by having any definite department to carry it into effect, but by the general policies for either peace or war which were carried into effect. That is just as true on this side of the argument. War will not come about by having one department for defence, but it does come about by the general policy of all governments. So I would suggest that an outlook towards the economic co-operation of all countries of the world should be entertained as a general policy, internationally speaking, by the present government.

In the third place, we should continue to promote the ideal of good will amongst all the peoples of the world in a positive way, such as the hon. member for Southeast Grey never fails to do, and such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre never fails to promote.

In conclusion I want to suggest to the minister another thing which I have already brought to his attention through a resolution. In order that he might do the best with the money at his disposal, and in order that the preparations which we make may not incite to war but have the opposite effect. I urge that he follow the suggestion of the resolution which I brought before this parliament some time ago. I ask him now—not at some time in the future, not when war has broken out, but at this moment—to make it known that should Canada be led into future wars, immediately every agency that may be required for war purposes shall be conscripted. I do not propose to repeat the argument I made when addressing the house on that resolution, but I considered the minister's reply made on that occasion to be weak. I had not the opportunity at that time, but I now take the opportunity to tell him that I think it was weak. He said he was afraid to take such steps as the resolution referred to proposed—these may not be the exact words, but it is the idea—lest it should appear to other countries that we were trying to encourage war. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be a simple matter for the minister to get over that difficulty. If the Secretary of State were to indicate to all nations just what we were doing, and ask them to do the same thing, there would be no real doubt about our intention. I submit that the other countries would be more likely to think we were preparing for war if they happened to look at our estimates for this year and find that we have increased them enormously and taken no steps towards peace at all. If they knew that the Minister of National Defence had taken such a democratic and a fundamentallly better step than any other minister in the world holding a similar portfolio, namely, to put the entire nation in the same position in the case of war as the soldiers have been in all wars—placing them at the command of the state—I think it would make for peace. I do not think the Minister of National Defence can defend the attitude which we had to take in the last war. I do not think it was fair to have allowed a few men to control money during the war—men who by manipulation of credit or lack of intelligence to control it were the means of doubling the war debt of Canada. I do not think it can be justified that men who happened to be in charge of factories manufacturing war munitions should be permitted to make enormous profits while soldiers died at $1.10 per day. I do not think the people of the next generation will stand for that kind of thing. If you want to have a united Canada in the case of a war coming upon us; if you want to have the very best type of preparation, now is the time to take the step to make it known everywhere that this is our policy. We do not want war with anybody, but if we have to fight we will all fight, and there will be no millionaires as a result, and no special privileges as to those who shall go and those who shall not go.

Mr. BOURASSA: Suppose we come back to the consideration of the estimates of the Minister of National Defence. The hon. member who has just taken his seat mildly reproached the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) for being idealistic.

Mr. IRVINE: No.

Mr. BOURASSA: In his interesting but somewhat rambling speech he has traced a pretty broad program for the government, as well as for parliament. I do not propose to follow him through all the ground that he has covered or explored, but there are two points I think are worth while considering.

He says that war is unjustifiable morally, economically, and in every respect, but that as it is unavoidable we must prepare for it. There was a time when it was said that plagues were unavoidable, and that the people had therefore to prepare to receive the plagues and inter the victims—out of reach if possible—but that was all that could be done. If war is unjustifiable, then it behooves every parliament, every government, and every member of any representative body of the people, to try to find some practical means to prevent the evil of war reaching the country they are responsible for.

I do not propose to speak to-night on the doctrine of war or peace; I do not propose to consider the conditions of Europe and endeavour to find out whether there is likely to be a war in five or ten years. I simply desire the members of the government to consider their responsibility to the people of Canada, in view of the attitude which most of their supporters took in the last election, and the previous one. Let them ask themselves if the attitude they take in this chamber, or in the country, outside of election time, coincides with the position they took when they appealed to the people. As far as the province of Quebec is concerned, I noticed that in the last four elections all the candidates of the Liberal party were elected on a peace program, and on a denunciation of the war spirit and war policy of the Tory party. They made solemn pledges that they would endeavour to prevent the recurrence of any such thing as happened in 1914. They denounced the military expenditures of the Tory government and they promised to reduce those expenditures. The Liberal party is pledged to a peace policy and a reduction of military expenditure. I now ask the Liberal members of this house, as one of their free friends, to stand by their promises to the people of Canada, and especially to the people of the province of Quebec. That is one point.

The second point is: Is there anything in the international situation, so far as it concerns Canada, that justifies an increase in military expenditures? Has anything happened since 1917, or 1921, or 1925, to justify the Liberal party, brought to power under the conditions I have just mentioned, in increasing the military budget, under the pretence that we must keep in a state of preparation? Are the relations of Canada with any country on earth such as to justify our taking that position? Does the position taken by our representatives at Washington, Geneva and London, justify our going on with war preparations? Does the intention already expressed by the Prime Minister, that we are prepared to adhere, as a nation, to the proposal of the American government for universal peace and arbitration, justify our increasing our military budget from what it was last year, after it had been increased last year over that of the preceding year? I say, no, no, from a moral point of view, with regard to the pledges given by almost every supporter of the government to the people who have sent him here. I say, no, with regard to the position which we have taken in international circles, in Geneva or elsewhere, as well as towards the United States of America. The geographical position of Canada is such that there is less risk for Canada in standing squarely for a peace and disarmament policy than there is, not merely for any other British country, but for any other country on earth; and more practical results are to be derived, not by mere verbal assertion, sanctimonious declarations of love for peace, while we bring in from year to year increasing estimates for war, but by proving in fact that what we say we mean; that we disarm, first, because we do not believe in war, and, second, because we do believe that the position which Canada occupies enables us to take that stand.

If you believe in preparedness, then I agree entirely with the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). If you believe in preparedness; if you believe it is the duty and the interest of Canada to prepare for any war emergency, then this military budget is a farce. If you believe in preparedness, as every country in Europe believed before the war and as some of them still believe, rightly or wrongly,—and I am not going to discuss to-night the policy of any country in Europe or elsewhere—then, do as do the countries that believe in a military policy. Know what preparedness is, and prepare seriously; but face the people of Canada honestly. Do not tell them at election time that you believe in peace and disarmament, and then come to parliament and say that you believe in a policy of preparedness. You cannot stand both for those who believe in a war policy and for those who believe in a peace policy. It must be one or the other. Neither this government nor any other can play with those feelings, those opinions, those principles. The hon. member for Southeast Grey and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are absolutely right when they say that the consciousness, intelligence and common sense of the people of this country are growing. Of course it is true there are still a number of people who believe in war and perhaps a larger number of people who believe in preparedness, although they hate war. I have no grudge against them; I respect their views; but you cannot be at the same time with those groups and with the other growing group who believe that Canada is so situated that a bold, courageous and practical policy for peace is the best move you can make at the present time in international affairs.

It was but this last fall that I went over all the western provinces, and some of my experiences there remain very vividly in my memory. I know the feelings of the people cannot be judged by one experience or two or ten experiences, but after all there is something in taking the pulse of the people in a most spontaneous way. I happened to address in Calgary a very large meeting, having regard to the conditions under which I spoke there. It was in the midst of harvest; the season had been bad, nevertheless people crowded in from thirty miles around to meet, not a man who had anything to offer to them, not a minister of the crown, nor a prospective minister, thank heaven! but just a simple individual who had been depicted to them for years and years by the press of all shades of opinion as an enemy of everything British, as a trouble maker, as the stormy petrel of the politics of Canada, who had been described to them more or less under the colours with which my good friend the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) covers me periodically. Nevertheless they came; and I thought I would make an experience. I delivered there the most anti-militaristic, anti-imperialistic, and some people would call it the most anti-British speech that I ever delivered in my life, a speech such as I never would and never did deliver in Quebec. I appealed to the sense of nationhood, the sense of racial fraternity, the sense of Canadian nationalism. Then I passed over the various causes of the last war, the arguments that had been used to justify us in going into the war, and later to justify us in adopting conscription. I did my best to show that all those features of our military policy before, during and since the war, were bad, were inimical to the interests of Canada and really inimical to the true interests of the British Empire. I appealed especially to men who had been in the war and to their relatives; and the great consolation I had was, that after that meeting about fifty persons, veterans of the war, fathers and mothers of dead soldiers, with tears in their eyes, thinking of the boys who had sacrificed their lives because of the infernal propaganda carried on before the war to bring them into it, came and shook my hand and told me: "At last we have heard expressed what is in our bosoms and what has been in our thoughts for ten years. At last we find a public man who has the courage"—I repeat their language as it was—"to tell what we think". They had never dared say so because they would have been accused of lacking patriotism, of being untrue to their duty to the empire; but they began to realize that there is some other way of working for one's country and even for one's empire than by getting drunk with the wine of militarism, and fighting, and dying. There is living for one's country, working for one's country, endeavouring to increase by a useful life the moral and economic patrimony of all the races that inhabit Canada. Yes, the peace-loving sentiment is growing!

But there is more than that. Take our relations with the rest of the world. Let us consider the situation of Canada, not as we imagine it but as it stands in the eyes either of the people of the United States or of the British people who know what it is. You hear it every time you go to London, every time you meet some of those clear-sighted men who know the real conditions of the British Empire and of the world. Every one of them will tell you: Of course the case of Canada is entirely different from that of Australia and New Zealand. As regards Canada being obliged, even for imperial purposes, to make the same military expenditure as Australia and New Zealand, situated as they are on the border of the Asiatic continent, and having of necessity to rely upon outside help from a very distant country, your situation is so entirely different that the best service which you can render us is, so to speak, to wipe off from your political and international activities any possibility of your being a cause of war to England and the British Empire. Often, in the old chamber, I heard some of the most loyal leaders of the Tory party charge the British government with lack of love for or interest in Canadian affairs because they were always ready to disarm or to give way to United States pretensions and claims, disregarding our own claims and pretensions. I never could take that view. Opposed as I was, in those days especially, to the imperial policy followed in London, particularly under Tory governments, I always held and I repeat to-night that the best service England has rendered us has been precisely, after the war of 1812-14, to give way to the United States, because she realized that another war between the United States and England would be a piece of foolishness and a crime, and that Canada would be the sufferer by it. Those men who have a true sense of national pride, not the childish, not the noisy and cheap form of jingoism which can be put up so easily, but which we would have to put down so quickly in case we made good our childish provocations to the great nation to the south of us, those thoughtful men realize that a war between Great Britain and the United States, under all circumstances, would be a crime and a folly, and so long as Canada is connected with the British Empire, would be absolutely suicidal on our part. Therefore it would be true, and truer to-day than ever, that even if Great Britain were the victor in such a war, whether the British Empire was the victor or the vanquished, Canada would be the victim.

With regard to the rest of the world, what must logically follow, if the doctrine is held on the other side of the house that there is absolute solidarity among all British countries, if the Tory party has definitely abandoned the old national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper that every self-governing dominion of the British Empire has the right to be neutral in the case of a war in which Great Britain alone is involved, a policy which Sir John A. Macdonald put in practice when he refused to supply troops for the British government in the Soudan? And he refused not because the war did not call for it, but because he upheld the doctrine of nationalism as it was held and practised by the old Liberal-Conservative party for thirty years, prior to confederation as well as afterwards. Of course if the new Tory doctrine is to prevail that every time England is at war Canada must be at war, then the argument of the hon. member for Toronto is absolutely right, and in that case your militia estimates are absolutely inadequate. But if you believe in what most of your candidates have stated, especially in the province of Quebec; if you mean to keep those pledges which several of the members of the government have given most solemnly to the people at large, if you are going to stand by the principles which you succeeded in having enunciated and carried at the imperial conference, if you are going to stand by those principles not only here and there, but stand by the underlying principle which directed the course of this government in the Lausanne affair or in the Chanak incident, then you must have the courage to declare that when England is at war and Canada is not concerned Canada is not at war. It is about time we should abandon the hypocritical attitude of being more nationalistic in the province of Quebec than the most rabid French-Canadian has ever been, and then turning around and putting on a coat of imperialism in all the English-speaking provinces. You will never form a national sentiment that way. You must be one or the other. You must either stand by the principle of nationalism which was upheld by the Tory party for thirty years, or abandon it. You cannot be fish to one and flesh to the other. You must be one or the other. Are you going to be a peace or a war government? If you mean to be a war government, and to help Great Britain in some war in which she may be engaged, not necessarily in every war, but if you want to prepare for sharing in Great Britain's wars, prepare for it, but prepare for it seriously. Go to the people in that case and ask for a new mandate, because your present mandate does not entitle you in honour to pursue a mild and weak war policy.

That is the only thing I want to say tonight. I do not propose to dwell on the general merits of a peace and a war policy, nor to dispute every single item in these estimates. I simply wanted to repeat here what I have said to the people who have elected me, to repeat it here as I told it there, and to ask those who took the same pledges and the same attitude to stand by the people who have sent them here, just as they stand up against the bad Tories when they are in the province of Quebec.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Will the hon. gentleman allow me to make an inquiry, not in any spirit of challenging what he has just said, but because I would like to have the information? What were the peace pledges given by political candidates in the last election in the province of Quebec, to whom were those pledges given, and where and when?

Mr. BOURASSA: It was the attitude taken by almost every Liberal, and by almost every Conservative candidate too, for that matter, by every Patenaude candidate, and every Monty candidate. They said that Canada had had enough of war in the last war, and that Canada had no business to be in any future war of Great Britain's, and that the doctrine that when Great Britain was at war Canada was at war was not a Canadian doctrine. That was the position taken by almost every candidate in the province of Quebec, to whatever party he belonged.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Will the hon. gentleman tell me further if there is a record available of any such pledges, and the terms in which these pledges were made, and where I could find them?

Mr. BOURASSA: If my hon. friend knows French he has only to read all of the French papers published in the province of Quebec during the three last electoral campaigns, and he will find plenty of evidence.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Perhaps my hon. friend will send me some.

Mr. BOURASSA: They are in the library. I should like to oblige my hon. friend because I like to be as agreeable as possible to the hon. member, whom I hold to be one of the true Conservatives of the old school, and whom I know to be a gentleman. At the same time, however, I am not in a position to act as his private secretary and read these papers for him. He could read, for instance, Le Soleil, Le Canada, Le Devoir, or even the Star and the Gazette, though in the Star and Gazette he will find something that is very strange. For example, when the Star stood for Mr. Patenaude and his candidates, there might be a different theme in the reports of the speeches than would appear in the Montreal Gazette, or in the second election, when Mr. Patenaude stood as a supporter of the Meighen party, which he had denounced the year previous, there would be another theme. But if my hon. friend would read all these papers, and especially if he had listened to the speeches that were made during these campaigns, he would be fully convinced. In fact it has always been so much the atmosphere in the province of Quebec that no party and no candidate could take any other attitude.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I thought the hon. member was speaking of pledges.

Mr. BOURASSA: It is a general conviction which has been ingrained into our minds by the leaders of both parties for years and years. When for the first time we shared in an imperial war, in 1899, the only excuse given by the Liberal candidates in the province of Quebec was that the hands of Sir Wilfrid Laurier had been forced by Lord Minto and the Conservative party, and that if he had not given way the Tory party would have done much worse, whilst on the other side the Conservative party were denouncing Sir Wilfrid Laurier for having done what he did. In my constituency, for instance, I was fought by an official candidate of the Conservative party, who was supported by a very distinguished member of that party, a late minister of the crown in the province of Quebec, who accused me of being insincere because, having denounced the participation of Canada in the South African war, I did not go over to the Conservative party which he said would have done nothing of the kind. So that has been the atmosphere—and not only in the province of Quebec. If my hon. friend—I know he is a little younger than I am, and perhaps with his various literary pursuits he has not had the same time as I have had for reading old political records, and I do not blame him for not having the same tastes as myself—but if he would dig up the speeches that were made both in parliament and outside of parliament before confederation and after confederation by such men as Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Alexander Campbell and the most distinguished leaders of the Conservative party, he would find that they enunciated the very doctrine I have upheld this evening, that Canada is not obliged to participate in imperial wars. More than that, after confederation, Sir Alexander Campbell stated again in England, in the presence of all the representatives of the various Dominions and of the British government, that the pledge upon which confederation was made in 1865, as between the representatives of the imperial government and the representatives of United Canada, was that England, being the sole cause of possible wars for Canada, was morally obliged to stand by Canada in every war that could be declared by or against England and threaten Canada, but that Canada had no other duty than to defend her own territory. That was good Conservative doctrine for thirty years. I do not claim that hon. gentlemen opposite have not the right to renounce that doctrine, but I do claim that the people of Quebec, both Conservative and Liberal, have the right to stand behind that old policy. Similarly for many years they stood for the old, sane and moral policy of temperance as against the Yankee policy of prohibition, and they were denounced; but to-day their policy is being followed by the sister provinces, including the very moral province of Ontario. My hon. friend should remember the time when the province of Quebec was denounced for opposing conscription. I think, now the war fever has cooled, it is generally admitted that Quebec's opposition to conscription spared the lives of many of the youth of this country, not only in that province but outside, and that Quebec was no more criminal in taking that stand than were the people in Ireland, in Australia, in New Zealand and in South Africa, with the approval of the British government; that the people in Quebec were not necessarily the slackers and sluggards that they were depicted in the Tory press of Ontario because they chose to exercise their rights of citizenship in the same way as, for example, the Irish and the Australian people. I do not see why they should have been denounced as they were. This is the way of thinking in Quebec, and it does not seem to me that a government which has been elected and retained in power by the solid phalanx of the Liberals of Quebec, supported by what Liberals were left in the other provinces, should now be ashamed of that attitude and not place itself solidly on the ground defined to-night by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) and the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). If the government should do so it would be coming back, not only to the old Liberal policy, but would be simply resurrecting the dead policy of the old Conservative party.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Can the hon. member name one Liberal candidate who in the last election gave a peace pledge?

Mr. BOURASSA: Every one.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): My friend is generous almost to a fault. Will he give the name of one Liberal candidate who gave a peace pledge?

Mr. BOURASSA: Let my hon. friend take the Parliamentary Guide, and, with the exception of three or four who were more concerned with local questions, he will find that practically all the Liberal candidates took that position.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Give me one.

Mr. BOURASSA: All of them took the position that if the electors wanted Canada to be at peace they should vote for the Liberal party, because Mr. Meighen wanted to throw Canada into war over the Chanak affair, and the Liberal government prevented it; and that if the people wanted to have terms of peace accepted in London at the next imperial conference, they must stand back of the Liberal government. I think they were right. If that is not a pledge—

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Where is the pledge?

Mr. BOURASSA: I am not a lawyer, but I have always considered that when a candidate defines his position he is giving a pledge. I have enough confidence in the sense of honour of members of parliament—even of members on my hon. friend's side—not to consider it necessary to have them go before a notary public and sign and seal a document that they will not do this or that, or that they will stand by this or that. I do not believe that candidates for political honours and responsibilities should ever come to the point with their electors of being obliged to send for a notary public to witness their signature to a document defining their attitude.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): We will let it go at that—no pledge.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, I want to go back to the item before the committee and to deal with some of the matters that have been brought forward to-night. Let us understand what this so-called increase is. Taking the militia vote, the figures we are dealing with total $11,035,800. I want the committee to go back to 1913-14; they will find the corresponding item at that time was $11,243,540. In other words, notwithstanding that the cost of material, of living and of salaries has increased at least 50 per cent, the vote this year is less than it was in 1913-14. I want further to call attention to the fact that in 1914-15 the militia vote totalled $11,593,696—also more than the present estimates.

Mr. QUINN: I see the total is $18,720,000 for this year.

Mr. RALSTON: I am talking about the militia vote. There was no vote for the air service in the estimates in the earlier years. Let us discuss the militia vote, because after all that is the military vote which is engaging our attention. I am asking for $11,035,000 as against $11,243,000 in 1913-14 and $11,593,000 in 1914-15. I undertake to say that if this vote were calculated in the dollar and cent value of 1913-14 it would not amount to more than $7,000,000.

Now, the increases which have been spoken of in a sort of offhand way as if they had been made without any reason at all, can be explained if the committee will look at the facts for a moment. There is about a $6,000,000 increase in the two years. $3,000,000 of that is for the air service—increased expenditure in connection with aviation. We are being constantly reminded of the fact that we are not spending enough on aviation, that we are not getting ahead fast enough.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Civil aviation?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes. At Camp Borden we have training for both civil and military aviation, in order that we may have the benefit of the combined training and save the overhead of two establishments. Part of the training at camp Borden is devoted to civil aviation, but it is included in the military vote. Consequently a portion of the vote for military aviation should be allotted to civil aviation.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Do those who take the course in civil aviation get their certificates without being under any obligation whatsoever for military service? They are not on the reserve force at all?

Mr. RALSTON: I can assure my hon. friend that that is so. Another million dollars in this vote, as hon. gentlemen know, is on account of the cost of one destroyer to replace those which are now obsolete. There is $4,000,000 accounted for right off the bat. I do not think we ought to worship the fetish of no increases. Increases should be granted if there is good reason for them. I do not think there is very much in the point that there happens to be an increase over last year, or that there is necessarily any virtue in a decrease. The item should be justified on its merits.

Every opportunity will be given to deal with each item separately, but at the moment I wish to run over the vote roughly and compare it with that for last year. There is an increase under the heading of general stores. At the close of the war we had a lot of stores on hand, but they have been gradually depleted, and last year we had to increase our supplies to make good those withdrawals. We have been using ammunition each year in connection with the rifle training and in connection with the general work of the department and we are not making even enough to keep up the stock of ammunition supplies. We had but a small amount of ammunition on hand and it seemed to me only the part of efficiency and economy that we at least should see to it that we made as much ammunition as we used.

In reference to the non-permanent active militia there is provision for an increase of three days in respect of such units as go to camp. Let me give the committee an idea of what our establishment consists. There is an establishment of 126,000 men, and an enlistment of between 60,000 and 65,000; and only 33,000 men are trained. Of these 33,000 some go to rural camps while others train in armouries; the urban units are trained for the most part at local headquarters. What has been done in connection with these rural camps? Last year the men went for nine days, which meant only about seven days of work. Previous to the war they went for sixteen days. I am asking that they be given twelve days, because that means that they will have only about nine days' training. Let us leave the men out of consideration altogether: nine days' training in the year is not too much for officers who have to assume some responsibility in connection with their units. Indeed, it is a very small amount of training, and it is the best opportunity the officers have for training.

A good deal has been said about military swank and all that sort of thing. I have not the time to deal with the many witty remarks—which I do not think add very much to the discussion—that have been made in this regard. I never was in the militia myself before the war, but I do not think there is necessity for any man to apologize for the Canadian militia, when we consider the contribution which this country made to the war. The Canadian militia and the officers who had attended the camps, many of them having given their services free, acquitted themselves well; and it was the fact that they had been trained that enabled this country to get together a large number of men in a very short time at the outbreak of the world war. I urge therefore the importance of this provision for three days' additional training.

Miss MACPHAIL: Does the minister say that the majority of the men who went overseas had trained before the outbreak of the war?

Mr. RALSTON: I am not talking about the men, but the officers. I thought I had made myself clear.

Mr. CLARK: Is it not a fact that almost 90 per cent of the first Canadian contingent had trained in the Canadian militia before the outbreak of the war?

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot tell my hon. friend; nor can I answer the question asked by the hon. member from Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). I would think that there could not be a large proportion of the Canadian expeditionary force who had trained with the militia because the number training yearly was comparatively small. To-day we are training only 33,000 men in all, both at local headquarters and in camps, so that there could not be a large number of those in the ranks who had previously been trained. But there was at least a large number of officers, among those who went overseas, who had had militia training; and these officers as well as the men, I think, played their part and well justified the training they had received. I want the committee to understand that I have in mind primarily the training of officers. But, in order that there may be an opportunity for proper training, these additional three days are included in the non-permanent active militia vote.

With regard to the permanent force, there is an increase that represents an addition of about ninety men. I find, in connection with the Royal Canadian Artillery at Halifax and Esquimalt, that we have not enough men to man the defence lights. These two places are points of important contact with the outside world. These are two important focal points that should be defended, and I am asking for an additional vote in this connection to bring the permanent force up, not to strength nor to authorized establishment, but in order to fill up certain gaps where necessary so that the force may be rendered reasonably efficient. I have found in the year's experience I have had that in connection with some of the units we have had merely a skeleton. There has been too much overhead and the supplying of these men will make for economy and enable us to take on services that we cannot now undertake. Perhaps the committee may know that the military are furnishing signal services in connection with the Hudson bay expedition. It was necessary to have a personnel to do that, and I am taking on technical men particularly in order that we may have a larger force for these various purposes, especially at Halifax and Esquimalt.

There is a vote of $10,000 extra for the Royal Military College. The topographic survey has also made a strong case for an increase of $5,000 which, after consultation, I have agreed to put in the estimates. In connection with transport and freight, the vote has been absolutely too low and I have increased it to provide reasonably for an account which I must admit has been overdrawn in the matter of transport and freight largely for those going to camp.

These are the items in connection with which an increase is made. Let me assure the committee that these increases are not made in any militaristic spirit; they are not made because anyone here is glorifying war. I heard the remarks of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), whose sincerity I respect, as I respect the sincerity of hon. members across the floor. But when I hear an hon. gentleman speaking of somebody coming forward—I think this was the expression he used—with a sanctimonious declaration of love for peace, I do not think it is quite fair to members of the house generally who have just as sincere a desire for peace as he has, notwithstanding what he may think. We have some responsibilities in this country as well as our desire for the idealistic. We realize that we are living in a world where we must keep our feet on the ground. I hope my hon. friend from Southeast Grey has accepted my apology—which I intended to make as abject as I could—but I want to assure her that this department is not being run with a view to bringing some personal glory to the minister or in order that the minister may make a success of it. My hon. friend might as well suggest that my colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) was anxious to encourage crime in order that the penitentiaries might be filled, so that his department would be magnified.

Mr. QUINN: Is the minister apologizing to the hon. member for Southeast Grey with regard to the statement that officers were not men?

Miss MACPHAIL: I didn't say that; I only asked, were they?

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend heard what I said. I say, this department is not run in order to aggrandize the present minister. But it is necessary that we should have a reasonable degree of efficiency. I do not agree with either the hon. member for Southeast Grey or the hon. member for Labelle, one of whom says that these expenditures are an absolute waste while the other suggests that the present provision is a farce. We are trying, on the best advice we can obtain and after consultation, not simply with military people but with those who take a deep interest in the defence of the country, to provide a reasonable service, to the end that we in Canada may hold up our heads and not only be prepared to defend our country but for another purpose which I am afraid some members of the committee do not realize is essential, namely, that we should be prepared to maintain our position as neutrals should the occasion arise. Because we happen to see a soldier on the street we need not conclude that we are going out to look for a fight. That is not the idea at all. The object is that we shall provide a reasonable force for defence and to maintain our neutrality if an emergency calls for it.

Now I should like to say just a word with regard to the remarks of my hon. friend from Southeast Grey referring to the military tournament at Montreal. I want to tell her that that tournament was not held at the expense of the department or the country in any way; I understand it was arranged by the officers and men of the Montreal militia units who gave a great deal of time and effort to it. I hope the hon. member was there; I would commend the show, if I may call it so, to anyone who would like to see good, clean, wholesome entertainment. I would commend it ahead of a good many other entertainments which were no doubt attended by respectable people in Montreal on that particular evening. If anyone wanted to see good gymnastic exhibitions, good drill and good equitation that was the place to go, and the good people of the city of Montreal did not seem to fear that their militaristic spirits would be unduly roused. I think the attendance the first night was 6,000 or 7,000; on the second night I understand 9,000 people were there, and on the third night the attendance was about 12,000.

Miss MACPHAIL: Will the minister admit that was glorifying war just the same?

Mr. RALSTON: I am sorry, but I cannot admit that at all. I want to say that there are a good many members of this house who have reasons for not glorifying war just as keen as those held by some of the hon. members who have spoken to-night. There is no attempt and no intention to glorify war, but there is some reason in this country for young men, having the idea that they have some duty to their country other than to simply get their living from it—

Miss MACPHAIL: Is the minister inferring that those of us who talk as we have talked to-night are only here to get our living out of the country?

Mr. RALSTON: The minister is not inferring that at all, as I am sure my hon. friend knows.

Miss MACPHAIL: That is what one would infer.

Mr. RALSTON: I am sorry my hon. friend took that inference, because there was no ground for it. I am only saying that a person is not necessarily glorifying war because he happens to put on a military uniform. While we have been carrying on military operations in a small way, I have not heard of very many Canadians who are anxious to go to war simply for love of it. I do not think that because you train a boy to use boxing gloves he is naturally going to become a pugilist or that he will be wanting to fight all the time. If we are going to adopt that sort of reasoning it seems to me that training in athletics or any kind of physical exercise is going to train the boy to use violence instead of the ordinary peaceful methods of life. I do not think there is much fear of producing that mental attitude simply because a man may happen to spend so many days in camp, or because he shoulders a rifle a few times.

Then I wish to say just a word with regard to this matter of peace and war and the conflicting policies suggested by my hon. friends, and I commend these remarks to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. For five, six, seven or eight years we have been talking disarmament; we have been working hard for it. When I say "we" I mean Canada; we are a member of the League of Nations, and the commissions of that league have been working with all their strength towards a position by which disarmament may be brought about. As yet that result has not been attained; I do not want to be discouraging or blue about it, but at the same time the prospects are not any too bright, judging from the last meeting of the preparatory conference on disarmament. But then along comes the United States with a proposition out of the blue, not that we should disarm but that we should become parties to a pact for the renunciation of war. Does my hon. friend suggest that because the United States have taken that step they are inconsistent or hypocritical when, almost at the same moment, they increase their naval estimates by almost a quarter of a billion dollars? They realize that there is still a practical situation in the world.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the minister if the cutting down of the naval estimates so drastically was not quite in line with that very movement?

Mr. RALSTON: Perhaps it was, but I am only saying to my hon. friend that there does not seem to be any immediate prospect of disarmament, notwithstanding the fact that the United States is sincerely endeavouring to bring about peace. We are still in the world, and we have to remember that this utopian situation has not come about as yet. I do not want to take time to quote figures, but I think we have the smallest per capita expenditure in the world with regard to militia expenditures, and when we ask for a vote of $1.70 per capita, that should be compared with the per capita expenditure of France, which is $7.60; of Italy which is $6.11; of Japan, which is $3.91; of Germany, which is $2.60; of the United States, which is $5.07; of Great Britain and Northern Ireland which is $13.03; of New Zealand, which is $3.07; of South Africa, which is $3.55 and of Australia, for which I have not the figure for this year, but which was $4.58 last year.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Has the minister the figure for Denmark?

Mr. RALSTON: No; I am sorry, but I have not that figure. I submit that we are not travelling very fast along the road towards militarism when we request that amount.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask if the minister has the figures for the Scandinavian countries?

Mr. RALSTON: No, I have not.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why give the figures for the militaristic countries instead of the figures for those countries which are striving for peace?

Mr. RALSTON: I should have thought, from what I have heard, that Belgium is striving for peace; the United States is striving for peace, together with Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. I did hear that Russia was striving for peace, but I see that the per capita expenditure of that country is $3.06.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I wonder why the minister gives us that figure?

Mr. RALSTON: Because I notice it here, and Russia is a country which made a proposition only a short time ago for complete disarmament. At the same time, she spends $3.06 per capita on this account.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then the minister is accusing Russia of insincerity because of that act?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know what my hon. friend means by that. I will undertake to say that the actual expenditure is much more than the figure I have given, because Russia pays part of her military expenditures in kind which does not appear in dollars and cents at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is not the minister accusing Russia of insincerity?

Mr. RALSTON: No. I say that a country which is held up before the world as one which proposes disarmament is herself spending $3.06 per capita on this account.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 25, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

RADIO—CANCELLATION OF LICENSE

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE STUDENTS ASSOCIATION

The clerk of the house laid upon the table the twenty-ninth report of the clerk of petitions stating that he had examined the following petition:

Of H. Bishop and 11,576 others, radio fans, of South Vancouver and other places in British Columbia; praying the Prime Minister of Canada not to give any heed to the protest made to him regarding the character of the radio programs of the International Bible Students Association, but that the said association may be encouraged to continue their programs of music, education, and religious instruction, in the interest of British fair play and freedom of speech and religion.—Mr. Ladner.

This petition is irregular inasmuch as it is addressed to the Prime Minister of Canada and not to "the House of Commons in parliament assembled" and should not therefore be received.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting the Prime Minister with a petition signed by J. B. McCoy and 59,283 others, protesting against the cancellation of the radio broadcasting license of the International Bible Students Association.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. SPEAKER: I must declare the petition to be out of order because it is not addressed according to the rule of the house, which requires that:

Every petition should commence with the superscription: "To the Honourable the House of Commons in parliament assembled." Then should follow the formula: "The petition of the undersigned. . . humbly sheweth."

I may inform the hon. gentleman and other hon. members who have presented similar petitions this week that I shall be pleased to find space in this building for the storage of those documents.

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present on behalf of a number of people in British Columbia, relating to the same subject matter. May I ask as to the form of presentation. If a petition is addressed to "The Right Honourable Mackenzie King," as he is the Prime Minister, is it not in effect a petition to the head of the government, and therefore suitable for presentation in this house?

Mr. SPEAKER: The time honoured practice is that petitions should not be addressed "To the Prime Minister of Canada," but "To The Honourable House of Commons in parliament assembled." I refer the hon. gentleman to page 207 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms for fuller information.

Mr. LADNER: May I follow the same procedure as the hon. member—

Mr. SPEAKER: Same ruling.

NEW EDINBURGH MILLS PROPERTY

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table information regarding the New Edinburgh mills property at Ottawa, asked for by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

KING'S BIRTHDAY ADJOURNMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That when this house adjourns on Saturday, the 2nd of June, 1928, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 5th of June, 1928.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Will the house sit on Saturday, the 2nd of June?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, unless hon. members desire that it should not.

Motion agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF ELEVEN O'CLOCK RULE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in view of the tremendous growth of the crops in western Canada, may I ask if the government have any intention of suspending the eleven o'clock rule in order to let us get home before harvest?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING. I should like to be able to assure my hon. friend that the house will be agreeable to his suggestion, but I am not in a position to do so at the present time. I would suggest that the whips confer with a view to reaching some agreement whereby the session can be brought to a close without unduly hastening any feature of it. The government is quite prepared to have the eleven o'clock rule suspended, or to sit in the mornings if that suits hon. members. But this must be with the concurrence of the house as a whole.

SITTING OF SATURDAY MAY 26

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Is it the intention to follow to-morrow the hours of last Saturday, that is, from two to six instead of from three to eleven?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): A motion will be necessary to change the hours if the house is to be in session from two to six only. If that is the wish of hon. members I shall with unanimous consent, be pleased to make such a motion. As the matter now stands, however, the house will meet at three and sit in the evening.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): May I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) if he has received permission from his Imperial masters with regard to the production of those despatches exchanged between the English and Russian governments on the 3rd July, 1922, relating to the establishment of a Russian trade office in Montreal?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I do not know to whom my hon. friend refers by "Imperial masters."

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If he is referring to communications exchanged with the government of Great Britain, I may say that they are in form similar to the request made to any government for permission to lay on the table of the house documents with which they are concerned. As to the exchange of notes regarding the establishment of a Russian trade office in Montreal, a reply to our request for permission to bring down these documents has not yet been received.

TRANSPORTATION OF COAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I find it necessary to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) if any action has been taken by the government in connection with the movement of coal from Alberta to eastern Canada. In consequence of the interpretation placed upon the order of the Board of Railway Commissioners by counsel for the railway companies, it would appear that the movement is being retarded. I thought the hon. gentleman might make a public statement that could be heeded by all concerned. I hesitate to trouble him at this time, but I have been pressed by telegrams to ask him if it is possible to secure a statement of the position.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I did not know the question was to be asked by my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: I mentioned it to the hon. minister before I came in.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have had representations made that the order did not provide for transhipment. I took the matter up with the Board of Railway Commissioners by letter, and apparently they feel that they had sufficient authority to order the transhipment of coal, and they did so under an order issued less than ten days ago. All I know about the matter is that we are receiving wires that counsel for the railway companies are objecting that the railway board has no jurisdiction. Mr. Camsell is in communication with the Board of Railway Commissioners, and to-morrow I may be able to answer my hon. friend more fully.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, may the house take it for granted that if any confusion has resulted from the drafting of the order in council in this respect, an amendment thereto may be expected?

Mr. STEWART: I should not like to give that promise, for it might involve the government in very considerable cost. Before we do that we want to be sure of the steps we are taking and what the cost will be. Speaking personally, and not for the government, I may say that I think the interests would be well advised to continue the single line haul in order to establish a lower rate. However, I hope to be able to make a more complete answer to-morrow.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret)—but as he is not in his seat may I ask the Prime Minister to draw it to his attention— to expedite the placing on the table of a return that was moved and accepted by the house a few days ago in regard to the case between the Post Office Department and the Civil Service Commission relating to R. E. Hall. The subject matter was discussed the other day.

IMPORTATION OF CATTLE FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I am again compelled to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) the following question: Has an order in council been passed permitting the importation in bond of American cattle into Canada for one year for pasturage or grazing on crown lands, and has the minister received a protest from the Western Stockgrowers Association against such an order in council being passed?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I have never heard of it. However—

Mr. BENNETT: Has such an order in council been passed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, certainly not.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public Works—Quebec—harbours and rivers —Ellis bay, harbour improvements, $300,000.

The CHAIRMAN: On the last occasion the committee had under consideration the item, "Ellis bay, harbour improvements, $300,000". Shall the item carry?

Mr. LUCAS: Has the minister any information to give in regard to this item?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): Perhaps I shall give some information on this item if my hon. friend requests it. The report of the engineer shows that Ellis bay, formerly called Gamache bay, is situated near the southwest end of Anticosti island at a distance of 345 miles below Quebec. The island has an area of 31,000 square miles. All timber land is the property of a syndicate, the Anticosti Corporation, which is now developing the island for the purpose of settling it and for the production of pulpwood, which will be manufactured into pulp and paper at the following mills: the St. Maurice Valley Corporation, Three Rivers, Quebec; Port Alfred Pulp and Paper Corporation, Port Alfred; Wayagamack Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, Three Rivers. Port Menier on Ellis bay has been selected as the community and store centre where the town is being built, it being also the most protected place for the establishment of a harbour. The Anticosti Corporation has under way at the present time a scheme for the development of this harbour, which involves the expenditure of approximately $2,500,000 exclusive of railroads, dwellings and buildings which it will be necessary to construct on the island. Construction work was commenced by the company on December 1, 1926 and two ships berths were ready on June 1, 1927, a new commercial wharf on July 31 last, and harbour works completely finished by December 1, 1927. The report of the engineer is that this development scheme will be of great aid to shipping in the gulf of St. Lawrence, as it is proposed to make Ellis bay the provisioning centre for ships in the gulf where coal and fresh water will be obtainable at the new commercial wharf. There will also be adequate protection for shipping in time of bad weather and a sea-going tug will be kept on hand to render assistance to ships in distress in the gulf. District Engineer Sabourin reporting on March 23, 1927—that was before the vote came before the house—estimated that outgoing there were 1,000,000 tons of pulpwood, valued at $5,000,000, and 3,000 persons; and incoming 3,000 persons, 400 horses and 55,500 tons of fuel and machinery estimated at $2,000,000. The population at the present time is 3,000 which it is expected will greatly increase in the near future. I find that a few years ago the island of Anticosti, which is a Canadian island, formerly owned by Mr. Menier, who is not a Canadian, was used largely for pleasure purposes, although there were about 1,200 acres farmed. The report of the farming operations is that there were raised oats, wheat, barley and various garden vegetables. The island is reported to be suitable for farming purposes after the timber is taken off. The company propose to ship pulpwood to their own mills, the Wayagamack, the St. Maurice and the Port Alfred, situated at different places in Canada, where the pulp will be manufactured into paper in our own Canadian mills. A few years ago the population was from 250 to 400; already that has increased to over 3,000, and it is expected that before midsummer it will be over 5,000.

The estimate of the company is that there are 15,000,000 cords of pulpwood on the island; they were to ship 300,000 cords last year, the same amount this year and 420,000 cords in subsequent years, to these three paper companies. It is estimated that the re-growth each year will amount to 450,000 cords, so there will be a margin of 30,000 cords after taking off the 420,000 cords each year, which should provide for the continuation of this business for many years to come. That is the best information I am able to obtain on the subject. I understand the people working there are being well paid, and this is a reliable corporation. I had not looked up the matter for almost a year, and the other day I was under the impression that this was an American concern, but that is not so. It is practically an all-Canadian company, and it is expected that the 420,000 cords of pulpwood taken off annually, valued at about $5,000,000, will be manufactured into $25,000,000 worth of paper in Canada each year for many years to come. Then there is the additional consideration that this is very close to the main channel of the St. Lawrence and is recommended by the engineer as the best port of shelter in that district.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to ask the minister if this company holds the island in freehold or whether it merely has timber rights?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They bought it out absolutely.

Mr. GARDINER: Then this town which is being built will be what is termed a company town?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, it will be largely a company town; the company will own the land and I believe they are giving their employees the houses. I understand a large number of houses have been constructed and more are in process of construction.

Mr. SHORT: The minister has said that he expects the population to reach 3,000 instead of the 250 to 400 people now there. Are these additional people to be immigrants or are they to be Canadians?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understand that is the number there now, and they are nearly all Canadians.

Mr. SHORT: Are they immigrants?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I am told they are nearly all Canadians.

Mr. SHORT: Then this is merely shifting the population from one section of Canada to another.

Mr. ADSHEAD: After the explanation of this matter made by the hon. member for Quebec South, it is quite apparent to me that this vote is for a commercial company which is on the island with the express purpose of taking off all the pulpwood they can and then leaving the island. This is not an immigration scheme in any sense, and I do not know why this very rich company should not be able to dredge their own channel. Neither do I know why the idea of a shelter should be brought in now for the first time. I think this vote should be cut down considerably; in fact, I have a motion here that the vote of $300,000 be reduced by $290,000. I do not think this sort of thing should go on; we should not assist a private company of this kind when there are so many other things in Canada urgently needed.

Mr. EVANS: Here I believe we are face to face with one of the most deplorable features of Canadian development. After all the minister has said, apparently this is a foreign company which possesses this island as freehold property, and which has no further interest in it than to denude it of all its trees. When that is done it will be of no use either as a fishing centre or as a shelter, develop it as we may. I think before this vote is carried some assurance should be given that timber of a certain size will be preserved, and that sufficient timber will be kept growing to preserve the settlement which is already there and to leave the island in a habitable condition. In too many places in Canada the pulpwood companies are simply taking off all the trees and leaving the land fit for no other use. I think some assurance should be given that timber will be preserved on this island for all time to come.

Mr. POWER: I have in my hand the prospectus of the Anticosti Corporation, issued at the time the bonds were issued. It would appear that this corporation paid the Menier family $6,000,000 for the island, thereby obtaining all the rights to the hunting, fishing, farming and forestry previously held by the Menier family. As the minister has said, this corporation is composed of the Wayagamack Pulp and Paper Company, the St. Maurice Valley Corporation, and the Port Alfred Pulp and Paper Corporation, the last two being Sir Herbert Holt companies and the first an independent concern. As soon as they acquired ownership of this island they issued bonds to the extent of $6,000,000; that is to say, they asked the public to subscribe $6,000,000, to enable them to pay for this island. All the common shares of the corporation are owned by these three companies, so with the public's money they purchased the property and now they want the public, that is to say parliament as representing the public of Canada, to make them a gift of some $500,000 more to help pay the interest on the bonds already issued. That is practically the situation from the financial standpoint.

With regard to the expenditure by this company at Ellis bay or elsewhere, I find in the prospectus that twenty-eight miles of railway have been built already, aparently out of the $2,500,000 mentioned by the minister.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, that is not true.

Mr. POWER: Does the minister mean to tell me that over and above this $6,000,000 the Anticosti Corporation paid for a railway? If that were the case I would be very much surprised.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that they are spending $2,500,000 exclusive of railways, and dwellings—this is the report from the engineer—and other buildings, which will be necessary to construct on the island.

Mr. POWER: I do not know whether they spent money on the harbour. There was already in existence one harbour with sheltered deep water at the time the property was purchased. If they are finding it necessary to build two more I do not see why the government should be called upon to help pay for them.

We have too many of these large corporations in Quebec—I am not opposing corporations because they are large, nor wealthy men because they are wealthy—who are constantly coming to the federal, provincial and municipal governments, asking for assistance, when people of lesser means are unable to obtain assistance. This Anticosti Corporation is possibly one of the wealthiest in Canada. It is not undertaking development or colonization work, and in saying that I am sorry to have to contradict the minister. Those who know anything about the lumber and pulpwood business in the part of the country from which I come know that it is the intention of this company simply to go on the island, cut off the pulpwood and then move away. I do not think anyone who has any knowledge of the pulp and paper situation, or the pulp and paper people in Quebec, will deny that statement. It is said that there are 15,000,000 cords of pulpwood on the island, but I doubt that very much. As a matter of fact, when this purchase was made, the people who knew simply smiled and said, "Ain't it costly?", and they called it the ain't-it-costly corporation. It was not costly to the companies themselves, because the public subscribed to the bonds and if there is any profit it will go to the common stock, which helps the companies.

I do not believe there is any intention of remaining there in perpetuity. No pulp mills are being erected there, but only wharves and railways to take the pulpwood from the forest, put it on the vessels, and transport it to Port Alfred and Three Rivers. The prospectus says that the total cut will be 420,000 cords. If they cut that much they are cutting far more than the annual growth. As I said before, there is not 15,000,000 cords, and in the second place, the annual growth would not be more than two per cent under very favourable circumstances. Under the conditions that obtain here the trees do not grow fast, and the annual growth would hardly be one-half of one per cent, so there is no possibility of this being a permanent settlement, or of people remaining there after the island has been cut over.

I would suggest to the minister that instead of pressing for this item he leave it over for another year and see whether or not the statements which I have made are true. If it can be shown to me that there is any question of colonization here, or a permanent settlement, I have no objection to any development being carried on. I am told that the amount for dredging this summer will be $200,000, and that all of last years' vote has not been expended. We could not spend possibly more than $200,000 or $250,000 this year, and I would ask the minister to reduce his estimate and if it is found at the next session of the house that there is really something worthwhile encouraging here, then we could vote more money.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Would you agree to the reduction I suggested?

Mr. POWER: What was that?

Mr. ADSHEAD: I proposed to reduce that by $290,000, making the amount $10,000.

Mr. POWER: If there is any real dredging to go on with, and if the dredges are there. I would suggest that possibly there be $100,000 or $150,000 expended this year. By next year we would know whether there was any real reason for it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not want to prolong the debate or the session, because I know everybody is anxious to get away, but I cannot let this matter pass without saying a few words, particularly in view of the fact that this item has reference to a place which is situated in the county which I have the honour to represent in this house.

At the outset of my remarks I may state to my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) that I am very much surprised at the stand he is taking to-day. When there was a vote before the house that had to do with some appropriation for the province, when we were called upon to vote an item of $8,500,000 for the harbour of Quebec, at the head of which his brother presides, he did not object. I think it ill behooves the hon. gentleman to quarrel with other sections of the province and other parts of the community where necessary improvements must be made just as much as in the district of Quebec, and which in the future may be much more beneficial to the country than even those which are being carried on in the district he represents.

The question has been raised by the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) and the hon. member for Quebec South as to whether Anticosti island would ever be colonized, and if there would be any farming carried on in that thriving community. I have a book here entitled Le Canada et l'Emigration Francaise, by Mr. Frederic Gerbie.

In 1881, long previous to the acquisition of the island by Mr. Menier, the French senator, colonization was going on. There were settlements and farms at that time. The reason these people ceased their operations was that when Mr. Menier took possession of the island he made it a sort of national park or summer resort. He filled the rivers and lakes with fish and used the island only for his own purposes for a few weeks in the spring, summer and fall. In 1881 there were 102 occupants, and 106 proprietors; there were 898 acres of occupied land, and 427 acres of improved land and pasture, including gardens and orchards. The crops at that time, in 1881, were 51 bushels of oats, 133 bushels of barley, 11,610 bushels of potatoes, 1,178 bushels of turnips and 58 tons of hay. Progress was being made steadily at the time Mr. Menier took possession of the island. When he did take possession he had certain lands improved, and conducted some farming operations himself, as is shown by the census of 1921. If hon. gentlemen would look at page 399 of the Census of Canada, 1921, they would see that Anticosti island had 1,246 acres of pasture, 196 acres of cereals and flax. There were further farm operations conducted at that time, as follows: 21 acres of forage crops, 24 acres of potatoes and roots, 100 acres cultivated for barley, producing 1,400 bushels, and 80 acres sown to oats producing 350 bushels. This was the development in the little village Mr. Menier had there, wherein was situated the church, the convent, the butcher shop, the grocery shop, the police station, the fire department, and the farm which he owned.

These things had been accomplished by Mr. Menier himself, and everything was turned over to the Anticosti Corporation for the sum of $6,000,000. This amount was paid in ready cash by the three companies mentioned by the Minister of Public Works, namely, the Wayagamack Pulp and Paper Company, the St. Maurice Valley Corporation, and the Port Alfred Paper Company, which are three of the largest pulp and paper companies in Quebec and perhaps in Canada. These companies have bought the island for $6,000,000. According to the figures which I have under my hand the corporation have spent $1,500,000 in starting the construction of two wharves in addition to the wharf that was built in the early days by Mr. Menier. These two new large wharves have been constructed in order to enable big vessels to come in and load cargoes of pulpwood for the three companies whose names I have mentioned. In addition to that the corporation have built houses for their men and an hotel for the people coming there. The expenditure on this work up to the present time is nearly $2,000,000. That has been done during the eighteen months that the new corporation has been in possession of the island.

If I remember well, when I was there in 1925 and 1926, at the time of the two last general elections, only Mr. Menier and those associated with his business were on the island, but in August, 1926, this corporation came into being and since then the island has been a beehive of industry, many people having found their way there and have been enabled to earn their bread and butter in that part of the province of Quebec. Had it not been for this undertaking many of them would have been turned away from Quebec and Canada and would have had to go to the United States. As the Minister of Public Works has said, there are on the island at present three thousand Canadian-born or naturalized Canadian subjects who are earning their living and receiving salaries running from at least $75 a month to as much as $15,000 a year, that being the salary which the general manager, Mr. J. H. Valiquette, is paid for the work of running the whole business of the Anticosti Corporation and developing the island.

As regards the question of colonization I have under my hand a letter from Mr. François Faure, General Manager of the company who is in charge of the operations of the whole island. He writes:

The first work done by the Anticosti Corporation was to make the necessary organization to exploit the forestry resources of the island, and the next step is the classification of the soil with a view to colonizing the island with good Canadians and immigrants.

A certain amount of this work had been done before Mr. Menier became the owner of the island and according to the company's letter, the original of which has been placed in the hands of the Minister of Public Works, it is their intention to do colonizing work later on when their activities in the pulpwood and lumber business have provided a sufficient area of cleared land to establish new settlements at different points. There was a miniature railway on the island when Mr. Menier was owner. Since that time larger railways have been built and in the very near future they will circle the island in order that the company may carry on their activities and accomplish the purpose for which they bought the island.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the hon. member assure the committee that any person can go on the island without the permission of the company, and without being an employee of the company?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Persons who want to go on the island must be connected with the company, or have special business with the company, or have permission of the company to go there. There is nothing unusual about the island. There are, I am told, in Ontario and other provinces, certain territories where larger corporations conduct activities similar to those conducted by this company, where they are owners and proprietors of the land and where they have the right to order out people whom they do not want to be on their property. They are proprietors and owners of the whole area of the land, the Iroquois Falls, for instance, where the Abitibi Pulp and Paper Company is established.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the hon. member know of any case of that description in Ontario where public funds are being spent for the benefit of a company alone?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not know what the practice is in Ontario or what is being done in the other provinces, but I know that last year when the Minister of Public Works was faced with a request similar to this one he inquired and found out what the proper procedure was and in what way these companies should be assisted if they were bona fide corporations that really wanted to do something to develop the country. They started on a plan similar to the one carried on, I am told, in the United States. The government helps companies that have certain financial backing and when it is sure that they really intend to do something to develop the natural resources of the country. The same thing has been done in other provinces and I think we in Quebec are asking no more than has been asked and done in other provinces.

As regards the number of cords of pulpwood that might be taken out of the island, before these people purchased the property an estimate was made of what they could get out of it in the way of timber. Mr. Piche, who I am told is one of the best authorities on the lumber industry not only in Quebec but in Canada and who it at the head of the forestry resources of the Quebec government, surveyed the whole island, and he gave his opinion that a minimum of 15,000,000 cords of pulpwood could be taken out of the island. Any person can estimate from the re-growth that will come later, there will still be on the island timber to be cut for pulpwood when nearly all the members of the present parliament have passed away.

As the Minister of Public Works has said, the wood is manufactured into paper in Canada, not a stick is being exported to the United States. This means that Canada reaps the full economic benefit of the whole territory. The management of the island of Anticosti is in the hands of a staff who are all Canadian citizens. Salaries and wages paid to labourers and others for the manufacture of pulpwood and other work in which the company was engaged during the operating season of 1927-28 amounted to about $2,000,000, and the raw material which is shipped to the different cities is manufactured there into paper which, as a finished product, is exported to the United States, or used in Canada when it is required by other paper mills in this country. This brings to Canada a revenue of approximately $12,000,000 per annum and this is the case when operations are not being carried on to full capacity because certain works have just been started.

What is the government asked to do? The government is asked only to dredge out a certain part of the channel so that it will be possible for the boats of the company to come with safety to the two new wharves that have been constructed by the company. The government is not asked to dredge a harbour for the sole benefit of the company. It is asked only to dredge a channel from the main channel where the vessels come near the island to their wharves so that these vessels may come in to them with safety to load pulpwood and other products of the island. When I went there in 1925 and 1926 on the boat of the Clarke Steamship Company we had to remain about a mile and a half or two miles upstream and we had to be taken by gasoline launches to the wharf of the Menier family, because there was no channel by which we could reach the wharf in safety. The government and the country owe it to the company, which has invested $6,000,000 of its own money in the island, which has spent more than $2,000,000 this year, and which will spend more than $2,000,000 in salaries and wages every year if it wants to develop the natural resources of the island, to give it an opportunity to have a proper channel from the main channel in the river St. Lawrence in order that boats may reach the wharves with safety.

During the 1928 season of navigation ten boats per week carrying mechandise, coal, cattle, horses, pulpwood and passengers will pass through this port. The number of passengers it is estimated will approximate from five to ten thusand people going to and from the island. There are in addition the boats of the Clarke Steamship Company, which, under the terms of the subsidy given by this government, have to ply every week to these wharves. When there were hardly three or four hundred people on the island when it was owned by Mr. Menier, the vessel could anchor upstream, and that was sufficient for the small population of the island at that time, but now that the population has reached three thousand, and is likely to increase later on, it is necessary to provide facilities for the vessels of the Clarke Steamship Company and also for such vessels as will carry pulp and other products from the island, and as the Postmaster General reminds me, it will also enable the boats to carry the mails in safety.

This company has four vessels, one of which was recently built at a cost of many thousands of dollars: the George McKee, the Fleurus and the Savoy. The last two vessels were owned formerly by the Menier family. There is also the Sable "I", which is owned and operated by the Bras d'Or Navigation Company, but in which this company at Anticosti is interested, and which plies regularly from the spring right up until the fall, and even in the winter months, to that port and to the ports of Quebec and Montreal, with supplies of goods and passengers. The Postmaster General again reminds me that I have omitted to mention the revenue; he never forgets anything. In 1925-26 the revenue from the port Menier post office was $319.23; in 1926-27, $685.06; in 1927-28, $2,285.31; so the revenue is increasing year by year and has greatly increased over what it was in 1925.

Formerly, when Mr. Menier used to occupy the island, apparently it was his own private property and practically no customs and excise duties were collected; they amounted to $57.97 in 1925-26; $37.63 in 1926-27, and in 1927-28, $585.19 was collected and accrued to the national revenue, so there is business being done in a regular way at that place, and I think that this is a proposition that is worthy of consideration and encouragement by all the members of the house.

I have no particular interest in this proposition myself. I do not own a cent of stock or of bonds of the company. I have never had any dealings with the company. I have never been on the island since this company was operating. I was there in 1925 and 1926 when the Menier family were owners of the island. When a company such as this is ready to undertake a large work of this kind in developing the natural resources of this country, I think we ought to give it the fullest possible assistance, and make it easier for the company to go on with its business.

Mr. POULIOT: Do I understand from what the minister said that within a few years the revenue derived from the sales tax that will be paid on the sales of pulpwood or paper manufactured in Anticosti island will be sufficient to repay in full the amount that it is now proposed to expend on this work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot say just what the exact revenue will be, but I am told by the Finance department that the business of all such companies helps the general business of the country. There will be a sales tax on the paper when it is manufactured, and there will also be income tax. Work of this kind all contributes to the general business of the country, and the more business there is, the more revenue the Finance department gets. The revenue from $25,000,000 worth of paper manufactured in Canada will be a very important revenue. The collection of the tax on the profits of the corporation will also bring in a considerable revenue to the treasury of Canada. The business that this company will carry on will materially aid the financial situation in this country.

I want to say to my hon. friend who asked the question with regard to whether anybody else is getting similar assistance, that this is a principle that has been followed for over twenty years; that is, where a company or an individual was coming in and starting a concern which would employ labour and produce materials, tending to the general development of the country, the policy of the government has always been to help them by way of dredging, wharves, breakwaters and all that sort of thing. We are doing it for the Thunder Bay Pulp and Paper Company at Port Arthur. We are doing it for the United Grain Growers; we dredged a slip to their elevator at Port Arthur. We are doing it for the Saskatchewan Co-operative Grain Growers; we dredged a slip to their company elevator at Port Arthur. We did dredging for the elevator that was built in Sarnia. We are doing it for the Powell River Lumber Company in British Columbia. We are doing it similarly for coal companies. There is no difference in principle.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Are not all these public ports, not private ports?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are public ports, but my hon. friend does not get the point. The dredging we did was dredging to enable them to get from the main stream to their elevators. That is just what is being done here, only in this case there is an additional advantage. I want to say to my hon. friend, because I know he wants to be fair, when he refers to the fact that there was no reference the other day to the fact that this was a harbour of shelter, what I read to him to-day were the details prepared over a year ago when this matter was submitted to the house, and when the house committed itself to the project, and the contract was let.

Somebody asked how much dredging was done. There was $187,000 of dredging done last year. I want to explain to the house that if they do not approve of this sort of thing, it is going to affect all similar projects. It includes, for instance, the coking plant at Hamilton; it includes the Manicouagan Company, Trinity bay and various other works.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But in these other cases the companies do not own the whole town; they are not company towns.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They own the property to which the slip is being dredged, but in this case, it is very near the main channel of the St. Lawrence. The engineers report that it is the most suitable place for a harbour of refuge in that part of the river. I do think that the dredging should proceed this year, and that it should proceed to the full amount of the item mentioned here. If I thought it were possible for us to do with less money, there is nobody more anxious than I am that we should get along with the least possible amount, but this house committed itself, without any objection, to this work a year ago. I want the house to have all the information possible. I appreciate the discussion, because if this is the feeling of the house, then I want to know it.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The hon. gentleman made a statement a short while ago that nobody could go on the island without the consent of the company; that it was a company town and that the company owned all the stores.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Practically all the large concerns keep control of their own property. Where a company is carrying on business operations, it is absolutely necessary that the public should not wander about at will over the company's property. I think everybody will agree with that proposition. Take the steel companies, or the plant at Hamilton; take the Thunder Bay Pulp and Paper Company; take any of these works we are assisting, and the same rule applies.

Mr. BOYS: Are there not public highways through all the properties you are referring to?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not say so. I think the principle followed is exactly similar.

Mr. BOYS: It seems to me the only justification is that possibly they would have no right to do dredging themselves. As I understand, the whole island is privately owned, and always has been. Am I right?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Quite so.

Mr. BOYS: Then I take it for granted there has never been a survey resulting in highways which would be vested in the crown. The whole island is privately owned. That would not give the company the right to go out in navigable water and do work which is essential to the undertaking. It seems to me the vote must be justified on that ground. I do not think the minister would go so far as to suggest, that where an enterprise is privately owned, and the public have no right of access to any portion of the territory, it is the duty of the country to provide money for dredging. Another feature occurs to me in regard to the financing. I heard the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) intimate that bonds to the extent of $6,000,000 had been offered to the public. I gathered that the public had subscribed for them, and that the promoters would get the common stock for practically nothing. The minister has pointed out that this was undertaken last year, and it is important to know whether those who subscribed for the bonds did so in the expectation that the dredging would be proceeded with. That is certainly a very important feature, because, if so, it might be considered a breach of faith if the work were not carried out. Personally I should like to be enlightened on those points.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not in a position to say whether any bonds of the company were sold on the statement that the government had made any promise to do dredging. Certainly no bonds could have been so sold except after the item was passed by this house a year ago. I may tell my hon. friend that the government did not decide upon this policy without considering it very carefully and ascertaining the merits. I was led to believe, after a very careful investigation, that this was one of the best investments by way of dredging as a public work that the department could do. I believed it was a bona fide concern and would give employment to 5,000 people at good wages for many years to come. That is only the smaller part of the business, because I felt the company would supply the raw material to be manufactured to the highest possible extent within Canada, thus employing a great deal of labour.

Mr. BOYS: Is not the labour absolutely in the hands of the company? In an ordinary community if a man loses his job he can get some other work in the locality; here he would have to get off the island.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend misunderstands me. The pulpwood will be consumed in the paper mills at Port Alfred, St. Maurice and Three Rivers. It furnishes employment to the men on the boats engaged in moving the material and the men in the mills. Here is the situation: Instead of having the island of Anticosti absolutely unproductive, we now have a thriving population there, well provided for and receiving good wages.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is it not a fact that the men must spend their wages in the company's stores at the company's own prices?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it is. Last year 55,000 tons of food products were brought in.

Mr. ADSHEAD: And sold by the company?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no doubt. However, Mr. Chairman, perhaps we can obtain sufficient information to satisfy everybody, and I am quite willing to suggest that the matter stand for further consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: One other question. The minister has attempted to bolster up his argument for the expenditure of the money by stating that it would make a good harbour of refuge for vessels. Remembering that this is private property, is there any agreement with the company to permit vessels to use the harbour in case of distress?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that they have always had that right.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is in the gulf.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are two St. Lawrence routes, one north of Anticosti and the other south. If my hon. friend will look at Port Ellis on the map he will find that this harbour is only a little off the direct route. Some 3,000 feet of dredging has to be done to get to the dock, but that is partially along the main channel. This is what the engineer reported a year ago when the matter was under consideration:

> This development scheme will be a great aid to shipping in the gulf of St. Lawrence as it is proposed to make Ellis bay a provisioning centre for ships in the gulf where coal and fresh water will be obtainable at the new commercial wharf. There will also be adequate protection for shipping in time of bad weather and a seagoing tug will be kept on hand to render assistance to ships in distress in the gulf.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister's remarks are very interesting. I listened also to the eloquent speech of my learned friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain), but I was very much surprised to hear him complain that the item for $8,500,000 for the harbour of Quebec had been voted.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I did not say that. I said I was surprised to find there was not very much discussion of it at the time from the hon. member for Quebec South who is fighting this item now. Let us be fair with everybody.

Mr. POULIOT: Those two things are entirely different. The item for Quebec harbour is altogether different from the item for Ellis bay dredging. Now we are on the latter item. Because my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) represents an important section of Quebec city—which is also represented by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Parent) and the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lavigueur)—and because money has been voted for the city of Quebec—and the fact of the matter is, it is not for the city of Quebec alone, but for the country at large—is no reason why any hon. gentleman should get up and suggest that the hon. member for Quebec South must necessarily remain silent in respect of any vote for any other constituency. To say that because this house has voted $8,500,000 for Quebec, therefore the hon. member for Quebec South must necessarily keep his mouth shut when other items are under discussion, is no argument at all. When the item for Quebec was under consideration the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay supported it; he voted for it. The hon. gentleman reminds me of that old maxim: Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem audiendus est—no one is allowed to allege his own turpitude.

The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay should be glad to admit that light comes from discussion. The very interesting speech from the hon. member for Quebec South brought forth some illuminating explanations from the Minister of Public Works. Every hon. member is free to speak in this house as he sees fit, and because a certain item has been voted for his constituency that is no reason why anyone should say he has not the right to express his own views regarding the advisability or otherwise of some other item. I crave the indulgence of this house to defend the rights of any member; any member has the right to say what he thinks about any item before the house. Because I get an item of $5,000 or $10,000 or more in my constituency, why should I shut my eyes to everything else that goes on here? Because a member gets so much for his constituency is he to be blind to what is going on somewhere else? One should be more independent than that, and I am sure that if my hon. friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay will think it over he will agree with me, and that when he speaks afterwards he will congratulate the hon. member for Quebec South on his freedom of speech.

I am not acting as lawyer in behalf of the hon. member for Quebec South; he can defend himself. But I would point out that the hon. member for Quebec South has nothing to do with the spending of the money voted for Quebec harbour; he has no more to do with it than has the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) or the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Parent). It is true his brother is chairman of the Quebec harbour commission, but he does well; and the best evidence that he does well is the fact that he remains in office. But these two gentlemen are separate individuals, and I admire the hon. member for Quebec South for being so independent. I do not believe the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay has any ground for complaint against the chairman of the Quebec harbour commission. If so he should state the fact. But whether he has any complaint or none in that regard why should he reproach the hon. member for Quebec South? This is something altogether different. The question he raised in the opening of his speech was more like the first course of a meal—hors d'oeuvres; it was really beside the question.

I am not particularly opposed to the vote, Mr. Chairman, but before we leave it I have two remarks to offer. The first is this. The population, we are told, has increased from 451 in 1921 to 3,000 at the present time—and 5,000 in midsummer. Well, I see the time when Anticosti island will be so thickly, so densely populated that it will be represented in the house by a distinct member. I do not know whether at that time the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay will choose to represent Anticosti island or will devote his attention to Charlevoix-Saguenay. But there are a good many constituencies with a population of from 50,000 to 60,000; in my own constituency there are more than 50,000 people; and I wonder whether I should get ten times as much for my constituency—$3,000,000—because there is ten times the population there that Anticosti has during the summer. There is another thing, too. If any hon. member wishes to go to Anticosti island to get some idea of the improvements that will be carried on there next summer he will be barred. This is private property; you are not allowed to go there: "Keep off the grass; no trespassing allowed." But it is very strange. There is a sort of wall—

An hon. MEMBER: A wall of Jericho.

Mr. POULIOT: No, not a wall of Jericho, because that wall fell down. But there is a wall around the island and no one can get in. I say, it is entirely private property, and there is room only for public expenditure. It is very strange, I repeat. But in Quebec city anyone can walk about on the streets; it is public. It is interesting to note the difference between the two places. No one can step on to Anticosti island because it is absolutely private, whereas Quebec city is public and you can walk through the streets and view the fine improvements that are going on there for the benefit of the whole country.

I have little more to say. But before concluding I would point this out: in Quebec the American people are very well treated by the provincial government. Take Noranda and Arvida for instance: when these new towns were built the Quebec legislature appointed as mayors and councillors, Americans who were not naturalized as British subjects. And at the last session of that legislature a statute was passed, in connection with the town of Racine in the Lake St. John district, enabling two Americans to be appointed as mayor and councillor, respectively—there is another member, a municipal councillor, also. These two gentlemen, one a Mr. J. Reidy Smith and the other a Mr. K. B. Bolton, are not naturalized as British subjects. I got this information from the Department of the Secretary of State. Now, according to the British North America Act aliens come under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and I wonder whether the federal government will veto such a law giving public rights to aliens, Americans, who are not naturalized as British subjects. I should like to have some information from the government on this point.

To sum up. The only reason why, in my opinion, there is an excuse for this vote is that it is expended in a semi-public way; in a few years the money will come back to the government through another channel. It will help some people to have work there for some time to come. That is the only reason and the only justification for this vote, but I ask the Minister of Public Works and the members of the cabinet not to be impressed by big corporations; they are entitled to justice, but they are not entitled to anything more than the man in the street is entitled to. I do not say that as a criticism; I say it from the bottom of my heart. I think there should be equal justice to all. I have no reason to complain in that respect about the present federal government, but the members of the cabinet should be careful and I hope they will be in the future to see there are no grounds for complaint of this kind, because in Quebec to-day there is criticism of the excessive powers given to private and foreign corporations by the local legislature.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understand the item is to stand, so I wish to make just a slight suggestion to the minister. I am informed that trading vessels are not allowed to enter the harbour to which this vote has reference. Will the minister kindly ascertain for me whether or not that statement is correct and whether, if this vote is passed, it will not be necessary to have some arrangement with the company which will permit the free entry of trading and fishing vessels to this harbour where we are to do the dredging?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will be glad to obtain the information; I understand that these vessels have access to the harbour, but I will make certain.

Mr. POWER: Since my name has been brought into this discussion I might add just a few words. First I wish to thank my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) for his able and eloquent defence of my conduct in this house. After what he said little remains for me to add except to say that I am very sorry I did not listen to the argument of my hon. friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain). I am sure that if his argument were as relevant and as pointed as the observations he made with reference to myself, the house must have been convinced that this vote should not go through. As I understand it, he said that because a certain vote was passed for the city which I represent, I should remain in my seat and allow all kinds of raids to be made on the public treasury.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I did not say that; I said that when the vote for the Quebec harbour commission was under discussion, my hon. friend from Quebec West was not so much concerned with the future, because that vote was passed very much on the assurance that later on there would be revenues coming from the harbour of Quebec. In this case my hon. friend from Quebec West was discussing the same point; he said we should be concerned about what will happen to this island in the future, when it will be depopulated, and I simply made a comparison in that way. I said then that I was surprised to find the hon. gentleman so concerned to-day with considerations of that kind when he was not so much concerned when the other vote was passed.

Mr. POWER: I accept the explanation made by my hon. friend in reference to his remarks concerning myself and other members of my family, although I do not know what they have to do with the future of Anticosti; as yet my brother has not been appointed chairman of the harbour board of Anticosti. However, if the minister who appointed him to the harbour board of Quebec thinks he can carry on the work at Anticosti, he may yet receive that appointment. In any case, as I understand the argument of my hon. friend it is that when we were discussing matters relating to the harbour of Quebec I did not oppose that vote, nor did I say that the harbour of Quebec was a paying proposition at present. That is quite true; I did not say anything like that but I did say, and I repeat, that Quebec is a national port, and even if it never paid interest on its debentures or on the money expended there it is the duty of the parliament of Canada to see that the harbour commission of Quebec has money with which to carry on the development of that port.

On the other hand this place for which it is now sought to vote money is a private enterprise, owned by a private corporation which keeps the inhabitants there almost in a state of peonage, and which will not allow an ordinary citizen of this country to land on the island without first receiving permission. I doubt very much whether those people living on the island can get married without permission; I know they must not have firearms or powder; I know that the animals which roam the forests cannot be shot by anyone landing on the island; I know that the fish with which the rivers teem cannot be touched and that no man going there may put a line in any stream under pain of deportation. It is even worse than somewhat similar laws we have in this country. If, forsooth any of the workmen dare to insult his majesty the governor of the island, they are deported by the next boat. That is the situation as it exists there, and I do not know a similar condition anywhere else in Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: Are they deported without trial by jury?

Mr. POWER: They have no such thing, and if they had the magistrates would be in the pay of the corporation. Now we are told that we should vote $500,000 for this work because the post office there pays $2,000 a year, but the hon. gentleman should know that we are paying subsidies for the air mail service to that island and also for the vessels which stop there to get the mail. If the post office even paid enough to cover these subsidies we might be satisfied, but it does not.

I want to conclude in this way: I am absolutely opposed to this vote, unless I can obtain from the minister a greater assurance than he has been able to give me so far that there is something solid in the way of settlement and development of our country to come out of this expenditure. Unless the minister can tell us that this island is not to be absolutely owned and controlled and that the inhabitants are not to be owned and operated, body and soul, by a corporation such as this, against which we cannot rise to say something in this house without receiving the expostulations of persons even within my own constituency, this vote should not pass. I will admit that as a result of what I said the other day and what I have said to-day I may have extreme difficulty in being re-elected, but in my opinion the time has come when members of this parliament and possibly members of other legislative bodies should say to the large corporations which are endeavouring to throttle the economic, moral and social life of the people of the province of Quebec, that the time has come to stop. We will support them so long as they wish to develop the province, but when strangers and foreigners come and dictate to us what shall be our course of conduct, I think we should call a halt.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the item should stand?

Item stands.

Hudson—wharf reconstruction, $6,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Will you explain that please?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The engineers' report shows that this wharf is in very bad condition and will have to be reconstructed. It is so badly decayed that repairs cannot be made.

Mr. STEVENS: That is at the summer resort down the river.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: What are we building it for?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was built years ago and has since rotted away.

Mr. BENNETT: Why are we putting up a new one with the public money, when the letter carriers only get $1,000 per year?

Mr. STEVENS: This is a luxury.

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My note shows that Hudson is a port of call for the steamer Victoria, and also for other steamers plying on the Ottawa river. The traffic at that place is quite heavy and consists of general merchandise for the stores, agricultural implements for the farmers, and flour, eggs, potatoes, cattle, and so forth.

Item agreed to.

Lake St. Louis—dredging, $56,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Has this item anything to do with the proposals of the paper company on lake St. Louis?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understand it is for a boat channel out in the lake.

Mr. STEVENS: I understand they are diverting the channel, is that right?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. STEVENS: If the new scheme is carried through are they not going to divert the channel?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is not my information.

Mr. STEVENS: It would be too bad to spend another $30,000 if they were; would the minister have that checked up?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: It might possibly be a serious matter.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is in the lake and has nothing to do with the river at all. The object of this dredging is to facilitate the passage of boats drawing 14 feet of water. At present traffic is very often held up by boats grounding, and they are exposed to great danger.

Item agreed to.

Lower Miguasha—wharf, $2,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Does it cost $2,000 to repair these wharves every year; $2,000 last year and $2,000 this year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are usually built in sections. There was part done last year, and a part is to be done this year.

Mr. BENNETT: I know one wharf which was repaired last year down in the lower provinces, and the condition of the repairing was that any person who worked on it would have to promise to vote for the Liberal candidate. Has that anything to do with this being continued over from year to year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I might say that these people insist on voting that way anyway.

Item agreed to.

Mal Bay—wharf repairs, $7,900.

Mr. LEMIEUX: There are two Mal Bays, and I would like to ask the minister if this is the real Mal Bay in Gaspe county?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is the real Mal Bay, because it is in Gaspe.

Item agreed to.

Manicouagan river—wharf and dredging—one-third of cost to be contributed jointly by the Ontario Paper Co. Ltd., and the Anglo Canadian Paper Company, $100,000.

Mr. STEVENS: How much has been spent on this so far?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Nothing. It was voted last year, and this is a revote as the companies did not get sufficiently far with their construction work and the government did not proceed with the work. This revote is required towards the government's share of the cost of the construction of a wharf 1,085 feet long consisting of a stone approach 280 feet long by 40 feet on top and close faced cribwork for the balance, 37 feet wide. It will be 49 feet high at the outer end with a depth of 25 feet at low water and 39 feet at high water. This wharf is to be built in connection with the construction of pulp and paper mills and power development near the mouth of Manicouagan river by the Ontario Paper Company and the Anglo Canadian Pulp and Paper Mills Ltd., these two companies having agreed to contribute one-third of the total cost of the work.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the companies put in $100,000 each?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $100,000 in all.

Mr. BENNETT: Then we should not have to pay more than $50,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, that is not right; the total cost will be $360,000, and they are to pay a third.

Mr. BOYS: Is there any limitation as to the contract? I do not know whether I make myself plain or not, but I happen to know of a somewhat similar case where there was an estimate put in on a one-third basis, and it was claimed, when it cost a little more, that the government could not exceed the estimate. Is there any limitation in connection with this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They will pay a third, whatever it costs.

Item agreed to.

Richelieu river—improvements, $100,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Could we have some particulars about this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This work has been requested in numerous petitions since 1909, and is required as a part of a large scheme of improvements on the Richelieu river. The amount is required for the improvement of navigation, which is at present under study and investigation by the engineering branch of the department.

Mr. STEVENS: Why go ahead with it when it is only under study? Why not wait until we get a report? This is an old, long-standing matter. Surely there is no necessity of rushing through an appropriation a year before a full report is received.

Mr. BENNETT: If I understand the minister aright, if he has this appropriation passed, he has committed himself to a very large expenditure.

Mr. CARDIN: There is at present a certain amount of this work which should be undertaken. A certain amount of dredging is absolutely necessary from the St. Lawrence to the town of St. Ours, a distance of twelve miles. The channel in the Richelieu river is crooked and very shallow. Complaints have been made by the navigation company, more particularly the Sincennes McNaughton Line, Limited, which is navigating the Richelieu river with its boats and at present there is a need for deepening the channel on that distance of twelve miles from Sorel to St. Ours. There is also a certain amount of dredging to be done to improve the channel above St. Ours. This work contemplates the improvement of the Richelieu river which is the discharge of lake Champlain, and the Richelieu river crosses the counties of Saint-Jean, Iberville, Chambly, Vercheres and Rouville. This is a very important channel for trade and the work is in the interest of the farming communities established on the Richelieu river.

This need existed prior to 1909 and 1910. Certain works were started in 1909, 1910, 1911 and 1912, and the work was stopped owing to the expenditures which were necessary during the war. The government has already expended a couple of hundred thousand dollars in deepening and correcting the channel above the city of Saint Jean, in the county of Saint Jean, Quebec. This is an important work and with this amount we can take care of the most pressing needs, namely, deepening and straightening the channel from the St. Lawrence river up to St. Ours, a distance of twelve miles, and also deepening the channel above the town of Saint Jean. As has been stated, a certain amount is included in this appropriation to continue the studies of the proposal which was made for the construction of a controlling dam which was to be built at Saint Jean, Quebec, in order to regulate the flow of the river Richelieu and to permit proper navigation in that section of the river. The Richelieu river, if it is properly developed, can be a very important channel for trade, because it connects by water the St. Lawrence river and lake Champlain in the United States. This is important territory and I feel sure, if we could deepen and straighten the channel of the Richelieu river and construct a regulating dam, we could establish a very profitable trade in the Richelieu river. Canadian coal could very easily and profitably be taken up the Richelieu river by vessel and sold in the vicinity of lake Champlain, at least in that section of Quebec which is next to the United States boundary.

The river Richelieu has always been in the history of this country one of the most important channels of trade. It is one of the most important waterways we have in Quebec and it is proper that we pay some attention to the rural sections of Quebec and decentralize to a certain extent the expenditures that we have been making for a long time. We have been spending millions to develop big centres in Quebec and, indeed, in Canada as a whole, but the small sections, the rural communities, have not been developed as they should have been. They have lacked proper facilities. The town of Sorel in which I live has been keep at the same population for twenty-five years. Why? Because we have no transportation facilities, no proper railway accommodation, and the town of Sorel and all the surrounding farming communities have been kept in the same position for the last twenty-five years. My idea in advocating this expenditure is to help the rural sections of Quebec, to decentralize our expenditures so as to give a chance to people living in the smaller communities. The section through which the Richelieu river flows has not been making the progress which it should make. If it had been given the same facilities as those which other sections of Quebec have received. It would have enjoyed the greater progress which they have been enjoying. This expenditure to improve one of the most important channels of trade in our country is money properly spent and it will help very materially that section of the province which is deprived of proper communication and connection with the big centres such as Montreal and elsewhere, where the produce of the farm is sold. I think this appropriation is absolutely jusifiable.

Item agreed to.

Rimouski—dredging—to complete payments, $12,000.

Mr. STEVENS: What payment is being completed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This was dredging done last year by the National Dock and Dredging Company.

Mr. BENNETT: But there must have been a contract and money paid for it. Perhaps this is like a case which arose not long ago where, because a contractor lost money, we passed an order in council to pay the money he lost, although he had tendered for the work. That was in conection with an elevator at Edmonton. If this is to complete payment under a contract, well and good. If it is for extras, well and good. The question is not the size of the amount but the principle involved.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There were no extras. This is just to complete payment of the contract.

Mr. BENNETT: Was the contract let without an appropriation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There was an appropriation last year. The total contract was let.

Mr. BENNETT: For how much?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $55,000.

Mr. BENNETT: And we have paid $30,000? With $12,000, that makes $42,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The final estimate was $55,110. The amount paid to the contractor was $29,054.86 and there are provided in the main estimates $12,000, making a total of $41,054 and leaving a balance of $14,055, which we are asking—

Mr. BENNETT: Has the work been done?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the $12,000 been paid?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. BENNETT: What the minister did was to let a contract for $55,000 on the strength of a $30,000 appropriation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Quite so.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister is now finding $12,000 of the money and hoping to get $14,000 in the supplementaries.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the intention.

Mr. BENNETT: That prinicple is all wrong. It is one of the things that make for trouble in this country, as perhaps the minister will learn by looking through the departmental records.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are always difficulties about adhering to any principle—

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. That is right.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This has been the custom ever since confederation. Frequently when the estimates are passed you may be unable to tell just exactly what the tenders will be; they may be much higher. Even where you have reasonable tenders, they are frequently much higher than the estimate.

Mr. BENNETT: That is with respect to public buildings; but this is dredging.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That applies to dredging, too. This is a very proper subject for discussion by the committee. For example, we are voting $500,000 for the start of the Confederation block. That work will be let by tender perhaps in the course of a very short time, and on that vote of $500,000 we will sign a contract for perhaps $3,000,000. The same thing applies to dredging. Nobody would think of putting $3 000,000 in the estimates now for that work, or at all events, it has never been the custom, whether it should be done or not. That is done on the other side of the line, and it is perhaps worth considering whether it is the proper thing to do or not. Perhaps we should consider whether it is proper ever to let a contract for more than the amount of money parliament has provided, but that practice has been followed in this country since confederation.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister will realize the difference between public buildings and dredging. With respect to a public building, once we commit ourselves to it we vote each year a sufficient sum to meet the expenditure under the contract; that is, we know when we are voting $500,000 that the architect's certificate will not involve the payment of a larger sum than that during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929. But with respect to dredging, that is done by the yard. You have $30,000 to spend, and you make a contract for $55,000. You have spent $29,000 and paid it. You have $12,000 in your estimates; that makes $41,000, which leaves $14,000 to be taken care of in the supplementary estimates, I presume. The work was done when the estimates were prepared, I take it. There is something about this that makes it very strange when you cannot place the whole sum of money in the estimates at once. With respect to dredging, you should not let contracts for a larger sum than parliament has appropriated the money for. Otherwise my friend from Huron, with an appropriation of $5,000, will spend $250,000 on Goderich harbour—money well spent, too. But this theory is all wrong.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When the main estimates were being prepared, we did not know what the expenditure under the contract would be up to the 31st of March. Let me make that clear. We could not tell at the time of the preparation of the main estimates how much would be spent under the contract to the 31st of March, and when the main estimates were being prepared, it was thought that $12,000, in addition to the amount that would be expended three months later—

Mr. BENNETT: There was no dredging going on in the winter months, was there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not suppose so.

Mr. BENNETT: Then the work was done in the fall when the water froze up. When the main estimates were prepared, there was ice over that water. We are now asked to vote $12,000. My objection is to letting a contract for dredging for $55,000 on a $30,000 appropriation. With respect to a public building, I agree that the principle is sound. We vote the money year by year, and if we did not the contractor could not continue, and the contract would be outstanding. But with respect to dredging, you should not spend more than parliament appropriates.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why is this work being done by contract? Why is it not being done by the departmental dredges?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have not enough dredges to do all the dredging that is done in this country. A great deal of our dredging, I would say more than half, is done by contract. Our departmental dredges are performing a valuable service. They enable us to know just what it costs us to do dredging of a certain type with our own dredges, doing it under the best circumstances that we can get. We can usually do as well by contract.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Perhaps better?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Sometimes better, and sometimes not so well.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does that apply to the west as well as to the east, or is the minister referring only to the east?

Mr. ELLIOTT: A larger proportion of our western work is done by our departmental dredges than is done in the east.

Mr. McQUARRIE: As I understand it, you find it more satisfactory to do the work by contract.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, but we—

Mr. McQUARRIE: It must be that, or you would get more dredges. When you let contracts, I presume you do so because you find it more satisfactory to carry out the work in that manner. I am not objecting to that policy at all; in fact, I have advocated the same thing out in the west, but never successfully, and I just wanted to get an explanation as to why a different policy was followed in the east from that followed in the west. We have had a good deal of experience in connection with dredging out in British Columbia, and more particularly so far as my experience goes, on the Fraser river, and I have advocated from time to time the letting of contracts, but I have never been successful in convincing the minister that that should be done. It seems to me that the contracts system is much more satisfactory, provided of course that contracts are let after open competition and in a fair and honourable manner. I must say in regard to the Fraser river that I believe it would be highly advisable to do some of the work by contract. I know there is necessity for keeping dredges there, but as to some of the work I should think it would be more satisfactory to let contracts and have the work finished up. But that does not seem to be the policy of the department in the west at all, so far as my experience goes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We did let some contracts in the west, but as I said, we have a larger proportion of dredging done by our own dredges in the west than in the east. There is some advantage in letting a contract if your tender is low enough, but I think my hon. friend will understand that it is a great advantage to have your own dredges because that enables you to get better prices from the tenderers. That is the great secret. You know what the work costs your own dredges, done in the best way the government can do it. That is of assistance in arriving at the actual cost of the work, and in addition, if the tenders that you receive are in the opinon of your engineers too high, and if it is impossible to get them down to a proper level you can do the work with your own dredges if you have sufficient to do it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That is quite right. I was not advocating doing away with the departmental dredges, but it seems to me the contract system is highly desirable.

Item agreed to.

Rimouski—wharf repairs and improvements, $14,200.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This work is required for maintenance of the wharf in proper condition to handle the increased traffic due to the pulp and paper industry in this region. During the season of 1927 approximately 150,000 tons of freight were handled over this wharf.

Item agreed to.

Riviere Laguere—dredging—the provincial government to contribute a like amount, $25,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will the minister explain this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required towards the cost of the excavation of a canal approximately ten miles in length by twenty feet in width at the bottom, with slopes of one in one on both sides, from the river Laguere through the marshy lands southeast of St. Anicet south of Port Lewis and west of Ste. Barbe and St. Stanislas, to the river St. Louis north of St. Stanislas. This appropriation is asked for on the understanding that the provincial government is to provide an equal amount.

Mr. POULIOT: In what county is that?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Chateauguay-Huntingdon.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): What industry does this serve?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not an industry.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What business does the canal accommodate?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is a drainage canal.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought the provinces did that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are not going on with the work unless the provincial government contribute half.

Mr. SPENCE: Why does the minister introduce this vote and ask the committee to pass it unless his engineer believes it is the right thing to do? Is he simply asking us to pass the item because the provincial government's engineer recommends the expenditure?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it is recommended by our engineer.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is it in accordance with the usual practice for the Dominion to assist in drainage work?

Mr. BENNETT: The provincial governments look after drainage work.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Many years ago the Dominion government constructed a canal on the south side of the St. Louis river at the foot of lake St. Francis. This canal is known as the Beauharnois canal and its construction resulted in a permanent rise in the level of lake St. Francis, which lake borders Huntingdon county. The result was that the river Laguere, which acted as the natural drainage basin for the land adjacent to the lake front, was unable to fulfil its functions, and between 18,000 and 22,000 acres of arable land was totally ruined for agricultural purposes and an additional acreage became only fit for cultivation in extraordinarily dry years. It is claimed that the work done in connection with the canal caused the trouble.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That is, work done by the Dominion government?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That is admitted?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, federal work which results in loss or injury to private property is a proper case for compensation, but not a reason for constructing drainage canals. In Alberta and Saskatchewan, and in Ontario too, the provincial authorities look after drainage canals and the land owners are assessed with respect to the cost. I think the minister with his long experience in Ontario will agree that it is laying down a dangerous principle for the Dominion to become responsible for a drainage canal. Navigable waters are within our sole jurisdiction. Has not compensation been paid?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. This is really compensation, I take it.

Mr. BENNETT: It cannot be that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The federal department of Public Works was responsible fifteen or sixteen years ago, and an item was put in the estimates to improve the drainage of the river, but during the war years nothing further was done. It is claimed that this flooding was caused by works constructed by the Dominion government. I assume that no compensation was paid or this demand would not have been made. My hon. friend has raised a very important point. What we have in mind is that the local municipality should do the work with the contribution from the province and the Dominion.

Mr. BENNETT: But surely 20,000 acres of land have not been destroyed without compensation being paid or a claim made for it. We cannot be deluded with the idea that the people who owned the property made no claim for damages. There must be something behind it; they did not let the statute of limitations bar their claim.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that shortly before the outbreak of war this damage was caused.

Mr. ROBB: Long before that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: At any rate fifteen or sixteen years ago an amount was put in the estimates as a settlement of the government's liability. On account of the war the work was not proceeded with.

Mr. STEVENS: Why not change the wording of this vote to "compensation for damage?" I would be the last to say we should not pay just compensation—

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: —but I think you are starting a very dangerous precedent by taking responsibility for the cost of constructing drainage canals, I care not where.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I look upon "contribution" as better than any admission of damage.

Mr. ROBB: As explained by the minister, at the time of the construction of the old Beauharnois canal forty or fifty years ago a dam was thrown across and the level of the lake raised considerably. I am told that the owners of the low lands immediately along the canal received certain compensation, but the river Laguere was the natural drainage for a wide area of country going back eight or ten miles from the lake. The owners of that area were not considered. The river has gradually filled up, and this has destroyed the natural drainage of a large section of the country. The case was reviewed by the department's engineer, and if hon. gentlemen will look at the records they will find that in 1912, 1913 and 1914 an item of $40,000 appeared in the estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: Was the work done?

Mr. ROBB: The work was undertaken and part of it done, but it was stopped on account of the war. Eventually, when Mr. Carvell came into office and everything was being pruned, this work was dropped. But it is the natural drainage of the ground. We met the municipalities and said to them that the provinces had responsibility for the drainage, but they said, "You have destroyed our natural drainage into lake St. Francis, and in consideration of that the federal government should at least contribute a part". It seems to me the minister is perfectly sound in his contention that, having voted this amount, we should say to the county council, "You will undertake this work and complete it and assess the land for the difference, whatever it may be, between the vote we are making and the sum total, and the province should contribute an equal proportion."

Mr. BENNETT: The explanation is perfectly reasonable, and compensation should be paid if injury has resulted from a federal work. But it should not be done as a canal. It is compensation for damages done, so that you do not create in the estimates a precedent that could be relied on in future cases. The rule is reasonably clear that wherever a federal work causes damage the damages must be compensated for. This is a damage that has arisen more recently—

Mr. ROBB: We want to clear it up and get the land drained. We do not want anyone to get money now—

Mr. BENNETT: The work is in lieu of paying compensation to individuals. In other words, you are making the land arable because it is now demonstrated that by reason of the canal it is not arable whereas before it was. This canal is being constructed to prevent the flooding from ruining the land, but it should be made clear that it is in lieu of compensation to individuals.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The Minister of Finance says it should be cleared up, but does this clear it up? I do not think it does, because the maintenance of this canal has to be taken care of.

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: There is nothing to show.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend did not notice that we suggested that the local municipality maintain it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: If there is a distinct agreement that they shall maintain it, that is another matter; but I did not hear the minister say that there was any such arrangement. Does the minister now say that there is an arrangement now whereby the municipality will have to maintain this drainage canal?

Mr. ROBB: There will be before the work is undertaken.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Before we make any contribution they will have to give that undertaking.

Mr. McQUARRIE: So this will be the end?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

St. Gregoire de Montmorency—reconstruction of revetment wall, $5,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This has been requested by the municipality and mayor of St. Gregoire. It is required to prevent one of the streets of the village from being washed out. It is for the reconstruction of a section of the revetment wall 545 feet in length. The work commenced in 1924-25 and continued in 1925-26, and sections totaling 700 feet have been rebuilt. The proposed work will consist of a concrete wall 12 inches wide at the top with a slope of two in five, and with an earth back filling.

Mr. McQUARRIE: This is a bank protection work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, it is a revetment.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How is the Dominion responsible for it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the reconstruction of a work built by the Dominion years ago. Apparently the Dominion government, in their own opinion, were responsible at that time and we are asked to reconstruct the work now.

Item agreed to.

St. Lambert—reconstruction and repairs to dyke, $1,600.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will the minister explain this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is under a contract, and the amount of $1,600 is required to complete payments owing to H. Gravel, contractor, for the reconstruction of 802 feet of this dyke, and for minor repairs to the riprap adjoining the concrete wall.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What kind of dyke is it? Why does the Dominion have to build a dyke?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the report of the engineer:

I beg to state that this protection wall was badly damaged last spring. The ice must have carried approximately 500 cubic yards of stone filling. It is to be feared that the next spring ice shove may carry away most of the protection work including the stone filling. If this were to happen, the cost of this protection work would be increased.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I am interested in this matter because we have the same problems in the west, and we are told that the Dominion will not contribute anything to works of this kind. Several cases have come up lately, and the department have said, "No, we have no responsibility at all; we have no responsibility for building dykes of that nature".

Mr. SHORT: Is it the practice in Quebec for the federal government to look after all these dykes? It is not so in Nova Scotia, where it is a municipal matter. Why should the federal government assist one province and not another? We have a number of dykes in Nova Scotia but whenever repairs are required they are done by the municipality.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This liability is due to the fact that the construction of the harbour work at Montreal has so contracted the channel that ice during freshets comes over against this portion of the bank, causing damage, which will increase unless the wall is put up there.

Mr. SHORT: That remark applies to every province. The same thing happens everywhere; these freshets cause damages that have to be repaired. The same thing is true in Nova Scotia as in Quebec, and why should we not have the same treatment? If you make this a federal matter I will insist that Nova Scotia be given the same treatment.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not a federal matter unless the damage has been caused by a federal work.

Mr. SHORT: That is only an excuse.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it is a reason.

Mr. SHORT: The same reason applies to every other province; freshets occur everywhere else.

Item agreed to.

Ste. Petronille—wharf repairs and improvements, $11,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount of $11,000, of which $2,000 is a revote, is required for the following work:

1. Repairing macadam surface and laying 800 square yards of concrete pavement, $3,100.
2. New movable slip and hoisting apparatus, repairs to flooring and to shed, $3,510.
3. Earth back filling which municipality agreed to carry out, $3,300.

Contingencies, $1,090. This makes a total of $11,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will this complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Sorel—harbour improvements, $31,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to complete the contract with the Jackson Construction Company Limited for the reconsideration of the Pontbriand wharf consisting of a reinforced concrete dock wall 241 feet long resting on concrete sheet piling. This is to cost $22,000. It is also to provide for driving protection piles along the inside of the wharf in Lanctot basin, which is not under contract but is being done by day labour, and which will cost $4,000. It also provides for the reconstruction of the old cribwork icebreaker in the Richelieu river, 25 feet by 25 feet, to cost $4,500.

Mr. GARDINER: I presume this will complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: How much was spent there last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Up to March 31, $40,755.18 had been spent.

Item agreed to.

Trois Rivières—wharf reconstruction and repairs, $198,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister please explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to reconstruct the coal dock by demolishing the crib work down to one foot above low water level on a length of 753 feet, including 100 feet at the south end, for a width of 19 feet, removing the back filling and driving tongued and grooved sheet piling along the outside of the wharf for a total length of 824 feet, and to construct a concrete superstructure, concrete flooring and concrete walls to support coal elevators. Three elevators built on this wharf are in danger if this work is not carried out. Approximately 250,000 tons of freight are handled over this wharf annually.

Mr. LUCAS: What will be the total cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is estimated at $198,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will this complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Trois Pistoles—repairs to wharf, $5,000.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a word to say with regard to this item, which is in my constituency. I wish to say that we are completely satisfied with the work done by the officials of the Department of Public Works in Quebec, and I wish to pay a deserved tribute to Mr. Decary, the superintendent for Quebec, to Mr. Sabourin, the district engineer, and to his assistants, who are very able men and who do their work conscientiously and to the complete satisfaction of the people of that province.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Valleyfield—dredging, $40,000.

Mr. GARDINER. Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to continue the dredging of a channel 3 miles in length by a width of 100 feet and to a depth of 14 feet from deep water in lake St. Francis to the government wharf, with a turning basin at the wharf 650 feet by 700 feet. This project was commenced in 1924 and continued in 1925 and 1927.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the estimated cost of this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $334,402.

Mr. GARDINER: How much has been expended, and how much will be required to complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In 1924-25 we spent $31,993.62; in 1925-26, $32,064.98; in 1926-27, $18,647.01; in 1927-28, $48,074.56.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the estimated cost to complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The estimated cost is $334,402.

Item agreed to.

Varennes—dredging, $20,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to complete payments to Les Chantiers Manseau in connection with their contract for dredging shoal areas to provide a 14 foot channel 500 feet wide to the government wharf.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the total amount of the contract, and what expenditures have been made to date?

Mr. ELLIOTT: To March 31 the expenditure was $44,674.95. This will complete the work.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and Rivers—Ontario—Blind River—dredging, $12,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This dredging is required to facilitate the turning of the large boats which call at Blind River. Merchandise to the value of $100,000 is handled over this wharf annually.

Mr. GARDINER: What would be the tonnage of that merchandise?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am afraid I cannot give my hon. friend that information.

Mr. MANION: Recently there has been a great increase in the lumbering industry in that section. I know nothing of this item, but no doubt the work is being done because of that increase in the lumbering industry.

Item agreed to.

Burlington channel—reconstruction of south pier, $31,000.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Just before we deal with this item I should like to ask the minister and the government to see if the amount proposed to be expended cannot be substantially increased. This amount is entirely inadequate for the work needed, and the benefit to be derived will be general in its nature and not confined in any sense to this particular locality. It is a matter which has already come before the minister and his department. The Steel Company of Canada have just begun a wharf and pier at the end of the bay to which this channel gives entrance, costing over $1,500,000. The coking plant of the United Gas & Fuel Company is also being constructed, and will cost at least another $1,000,000. The success of both these enterprises is dependent on its being possible to bring coal in in large quantities by the larger boats. The proposed appropriation will not make it possible to bring large quantities of coal into Hamilton bay. As I have just intimated, the benefit is not limited to the city of Hamilton. The minister knows that this matter came before his department and representations were made by people from Kitchener, London, Galt, Guelph and other localities, which would all be beneficially affected if the channel were so enlarged as to enable coal to be brought in in large quantities. Hamilton, which is most nearly affected by the enlarging of the channel, has been a pioneer in the matter of bringing to Ontario large quantities of Alberta coal. The efforts to bring Alberta coal to Ontario were instituted many years ago in that city, and have been continued ever since. There has been great encouragment from Hamilton and district to the movement of Alberta coal into Ontario, perhaps more so than from anywhere else in the whole Dominion of Canada. The best way in which adequate encouragement can be given to the use of Alberta coal in Ontario is by the enlargement of this channel.

The Welland canal is expected to be completed within something like two years. I am told by those interested in the construction of the coke ovens and of the Steel Company of Canada's wharf and pier, that unless they are in a position to have the accommodation which that canal will give, they will not be able to handle the increased tonnage that the completion of the Welland canal will open up for them and for that part of the province. Under these circumstances it is beyond all question that the adequate enlargement of this canal at Burlington should be undertaken at an early day, and if the work is proceeded with this summer it will in no sense be undertaken to soon. The enlargement of the beach canal should be commenced without delay, otherwise the benefits that will accrue to that section of the country through the opening of the Welland canal will be largely if not entirely lost. For that reason I ask the minister and the government to reconsider the amount of the appropriation. I ask it not purely because of its local advantages to the city of Hamilton—I ask for that only incidentally—but on the very much larger ground of its general benefit to the western part of the province of Ontario.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The representations to which my hon. friend refers, have been made to me, and I have been giving them consideration. It will be noted that that work is also to enable a private company to carry on its business. It is very similar in principle to the matter we were discussing this afternoon.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): It is absolutely different.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no hesitation in saying that it is the duty of the government to provide facilities to enable boats with full loads to come through there.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): The coking plant surely cannot be considered in the light of a private enterprise, solely, nor can the expansion of the Steel Company of Canada.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are not government enterprises.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The hon. gentleman mentioned Alberta coal being brought to Ontario. This coal must have been transshipped at Port Arthur, because it would come by rail from Alberta. I understood that the Alberta lignite was shipped all the way by rail.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): If I had been in politics before the 23rd day of September, 1925, I could explain that. As it is, it is an entirely new thing to me, and I could not tell my hon. friend the modus operandi. I only know that the securing of that coal was a live issue in that district, and was forwarded by every means in the power of the people there.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the minister give us the engineers' report regarding this work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend will understand that we were talking about something different from what the hon. member for West Hamilton is now discussing. This is in regard to Burlington channel, and the engineer's report, dated November 30, 1927, is as follows:

This section of the pier is in a very dilapidated condition and a certain amount of material is washing into the channel at this location. I would further point out that the lighthouse marking the bay entrance to the channel is located on this section of the pier and I consider it of the utmost urgency that this work be gone on with. Should the pier fail the lighthouse would be destroyed as well as there being a grave possibility of blocking the channel to navigation.

Mr. CHURCH: I think this item shows the shortsighted policy of the Department of Public Works. This is the hardest channel in the great lakes to get through. The steamer Corona had only two feet clearance on each side going through it. The steamer Chippewa cannot go through at all, on account of the paddle boxes. The Corona was on this route but they took her off. Perhaps it was for economic reasons, but I believe one of the reasons was the great difficulty in making that channel. The channel ought to be twice as wide. The Canada Steamship Company are running freighters there, and it has been found to be one of the most difficult ports to make on the great lakes. When there is an east wind it is practically impossible to get into the bay. The government has spent some money on the north and south piers, but this channel should be twice the width. A large freight business is being done at Hamilton and with the opening of the Welland canal the larger boats will not be able to call there. The channel should be both widened and deepened, and the money spent now will have to be spent all over again a few years hence. It is not only at this port that this same mistake is being made, but at others as well. The new oil tankers now running on the lakes cannot get through this channel, and the $31,000 might just as well not be spent. It would be far better to widen the channel out to at least three or four hundred feet, and in addition to that the piers should be concrete. If you are going to do the thing at all it should be done right.

[Mr. C. W. Bell.]

The city of Hamilton and the harbour commission have brought this matter to the attention of the government for years. All the city of Hamilton was allowed last year for the post office was a couple of revolving doors and even that was voted out. Hamilton through its post office, customs, income tax and other branches contributes a very large revenue to the government, and I hope the minister will look seriously into the matter. I have received complaints from captains saying that they cannot make the harbour on account of the channel being narrow. The government have done some work on the north pier and the swing bridge, but I hope they will do something to widen the channel. The money that is being spent now is money wasted. The work will have to be done all over again in the future when the Welland canal is opened.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Might I draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that this is for the reconstruction of the south pier? It does not refer to the matter about which he has been speaking.

Mr. CHURCH: My hon. friend may know a great deal about getting a town clock in his home town of Glencoe, but when the question is one of meeting the needs of the town of Hamilton, he does nothing. He is like his illustrious colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who when a terrible disaster occurred on the great lakes, sent a wireless and had the crews taken off by a United States life saving vessel.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I am asking the government to undertake the work in an adequate way generally. I am not asking them to expand their dredging unnecessarily, but I should like them to make a channel which can be properly used by boats of the tonnage necessary.

Mr. ROBB: As Minister of Finance I find myself to-day in a very embarrassing position. I thought I had to fight only my own colleagues to keep down the estimates in order to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen opposite. To-day I find hon. gentlemen opposite are urging that we increase the estimates by more than one hundred per cent.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): For something worth while.

Mr. ROBB: They are all worth while.

Item agreed to.

Cobourg—harbour improvements, $75,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required towards the following harbour improvements:

Maintenance dredging of an irregular shaped area between the outer ends of the entrance piers to a depth of 22 feet—28,000 cubic yards scow measurement at 55 cents	$ 15,400
Reconstruction in concrete of 786 linear feet of esplanade or north pier	50,000
Reconstruction in concrete of 110 linear feet of south west breakwater	46,000
	$111,000

Towards this we are asking for $75,000, and $24,480 has been expended to March 31, 1928. The work has been requested by the board of control and the board of harbour commissioners, and it is required to give proper accommodation for the car ferries. Aproximately 500,000 tons of coal were handled over the wharf during 1927.

Mr. LUCAS: Will this complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $111,000.

Item agreed to.

Collingwood—dredging, $64,000.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like an explanation of this item.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to provide for the following:

To complete payments to C. S. Boone Dredging and Construction Company on contract for dredging a section of the main channel 1,590 feet long to 18 feet, 6 inches, $5,800.

To complete dredging ship channel to 18 feet, 6 inches, approximately 2,400 feet remaining to be done, 22,400 cubic yards scow measurement at $2 per yard, $44,800.

This forms part of the dredging required in connection with the proposed new elevator to be constructed at Collingwood. The following project is now under consideration:

To dredge a 100 feet channel to the Imperial Oil Company's dock and a turning basin at the end of the dock to a depth of 15 feet, the whole area being 1,280 feet long, $12,000.

To dredge a small area 310 feet by 50 feet to 8 feet, 6 inches at the town dock, $1,300.

Mr. GARDINER: What will it take to complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This will complete all of the above. I may say to my hon. friend that further work will have to be done in the harbour.

Item agreed to.

Goderich—harbour improvements, $75,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to cover the following:

To complete the contract with Messrs. Kilmer and Barber Limited for deepening the outer entrance channel to 24 feet and removal of rock in inner harbour to 21½ feet, $24,000.

To reconstruct the superstructure of the south pier in concrete for a further length of 300 feet, $18,000.

To reconstruct a further 500 feet of the superstructure of the north pier, $27,500.

For general repairs to timber works, inspection and contingencies, $5,500—total, $75,000.

The work is required to give better shipping facilities to this important great lakes port. Approximately 20,000,000 bushels of grain were handled through it during 1927.

Mr. GARDINER: Will this complete all the contemplated work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the estimated amount to complete it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This will complete all that we are providing for at the present time, but in order to make the harbour sufficient for the increasing demands that are made upon it there will have to be quite substantial expenditures in the future.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister any engineers report as to possible expenditures in the future?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amounts spent on this harbour in round figures are as follows:

Year	Amount
1922-23 (construction work)	$10,500
1923-24	27,000
1924-25	25,000
1925-26	71,000
1926-27	58,000
1922-23 (dredging)	51,000
1923-24	54,000
1924-25	40,000
1925-26	52,000
1926-27	67,000

Or a total for the work done to March 31, 1927, of about $458,000. The construction work remaining to be done and proposed to be spread over three years, including 1927-28, is as follows:

North pier reconstruction	$48,000
South pier reconstruction	24,600
		$72,600
Dredging 1927-28 and 1928-29 complete inner and outer harbour		$94,000

So that the total estimated cost of the improvements is about $625,000.

Item agreed to.

Grand Bend—repairs to pier, $2,400.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): What is the nature of these repairs?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required for the renewal of the decking and stringers of the north pier on a length of 210 feet starting from a point about 216 feet from the outer end. The work is required to protect the existing harbour works.

Item agreed to.

Hamilton—harbour improvements, $35,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount of $35,000 is required for the dredging of an approach channel outside of the harbour headline in Burlington bay, at Stipes inlet, in conjunction with the proposed construction of wharf and the dredging of a slip by the Hamilton By-Products Coke Company, Limited. This channel will be approximately 200 feet wide at the inner end and will extend from harbour head line in a northerly direction, in line with the ship channel for a distance of 1,600 feet, gradually widening to 300 feet at the outer end, involving the removal of 108,637 cubic yards of silt, loam and clay.

Item agreed to.

Kincardine—harbour repairs and improvements, $43,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is a revote of $20,000. The details are as follows:

(1) To complete the contract with Messrs Henry and Ross for the reconstruction in concrete of 174 feet of the superstructure of the south pier and 300 feet of the north pier, $15,800;
(2) Towards the reconstruction of two further sections of the north pier, 100 feet long and 200 feet long, respectively, the former section requiring to be completely removed by dredging. Allotment for 1928-29, $17,200;
(3) To dredge entrance channel to depth of 20 feet, a total distance of 1,490 feet, 20,000 cubic yards at 45 cents, $9,000;
(4) General repairs to harbour works, $1,000.

That makes a total of $43,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister the tonnage handled at this port?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In 1927, 20,000 tons were handled.

Item agreed to.

Kingston—dredging, $14,200.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I should like to impress upon the minister, notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance said, that for some years there has been no dredging done at Kingston except what has been paid for by private parties. When the minister realizes that there are now some eighty large boats wintering at this port, he will see the necessity for additional work there.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Elliott.]

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

ST. CLAIR TRANSIT COMPANY

The house resumed from Tuesday May 22 consideration of the motion of Mr. Goodison for the third reading of Bill No. 23 to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Irvine.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Goodison moves, seconded by Mr. Sanderson, that Bill No. 23, to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company, be now read a third time. In amendment thereto Mr. Irvine moves:

That the said bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it.

That all the words after the word "directors" in the eighth line of section 12 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"but no such issue or allotment of shares as fully or partly paid up shall be valid or binding upon the company.

(a) Unless before any such issue or allotment of shares shall have been made as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, the company shall have filed in the office of the Secretary of State a contract in writing, duly executed by the parties thereto, setting forth the considerations other than cash for which the company is about to issue and allot such shares as fully or partly paid up; nor

(b) Unless in each and every case in which the company shall allot or issue shares upon the footing that the whole or some part thereof shall be credited as paid for a consideration other than cash, such consideration shall be received and credited by the company at not more than its then actual cash value;

(c) And, in case the foregoing provisions of this section are not complied with, the holders of the shares so issued shall be liable to the company and to its creditors to the amount of the par value of the shares held by them respectively.

The question is on the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Irvine) negatived on division.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is now on the amendment moved by Mr. Garland (Bow River):

That bill No. 23 to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company be amended by adding at the end of clause 14 the following words:

"And provided also that five per centum of the gross tolls received by the company shall be paid by the company to the Receiver General of Canada annually.

I must declare this amendment out of order because it is a tax. Bourinot, at pages 430 and 431, on the imposition of taxes, says:

As a consequence no private member is now permitted to propose a dominion tax upon the people; it must proceed from a minister of the crown, or be in some other form declared to be necessary for the public service. A motion or a bill of such a character should properly be introduced by a minister of the crown.

The question comes under standing order 60:

If any motion be made in the house for any public aid or charge upon the people, the consideration and debate thereof may not be presently entered upon, but shall be adjourned until such further day as the house thinks fit to appoint; and then it shall be referred to a committee of the whole house, before any resolution or vote of the house do pass thereupon.

May at page 511, 13th edition, says:

The principle that the sanction of the crown must be given to every grant of money drawn from the public revenue, applies equally to the taxation levied to provide that revenue.

The principle is clear. The recommendation of the crown is always signified in matters of taxation. There is no question that this amendment imposes a charge on the people.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, before you declare the amendment out of order, I wish to say a word in connection with it. It is very difficult for one not versed in the rules of order to appreciate the point of your objection,—

Mr. SPEAKER: I have not given my ruling yet.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): —for this reason, that the bill itself involves taxation and was permitted to stand. If a toll upon the users of a public thoroughfare cannot be looked upon as a tax, then I submit that a charge of five per centum on the gross receipts of those tolls cannot be looked upon as a tax either. To go back to the bill itself, I assume your honour was very lenient with its sponsor when you failed to rule the bill out of order. However, I have no intention of pressing the amendment. My purpose is served by expressing the opinion that toll bridges, in principle, are unsound. But I admit that the hon. gentleman who moved this bill and his friends are under a difficulty. They apparently need a bridge badly, but neither the federal nor the provincial authorities are prepared to build it. Therefore, we have private interests coming to this parliament and asking for the right to build a bridge, and in order to reimburse themselves to be permitted to charge tolls. My only reason for presenting this amendment was this. Inasmuch as this parliament is being asked to give private individuals an extremely valuable franchise, which no doubt will reimburse the original investors handsomely for the investments made, the country is certainly entitled to a small portion of the receipts from the bridge. However, I feel satisfied that your honour will rule the amendment out of order, and my only regret is that you did not rule the original bill also out of order, for in effect it amounts to the same thing. It is a tax upon the people, just as effective as though it were imposed by the Minister of Finance. It is a tax upon the users of the bridge, and all I sought to do was to get 5 per cent of the gross receipts or taxes back into the Dominion treasury in order to assist the Minister of Finance to declare another surplus in his budget next year.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has ably defended his amendment, but relying upon my standing authorities, Bourinot and May, and also upon standing order 60, which was quoted a moment ago, I must rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise to a point of order. May I direct your honour's attention to the fact that I had not yet moved the amendment. Your honour, believing that I had done so, ruled it out of order. It will be an interesting point for your honour to decide just what status the amendment has under the circumstances.

Mr. SPEAKER: According to all the authorities, when a bill comes for its third reading the duty of the speaker is to take all proposed amendments, notice of which has been given, and have the house dispose of them one by one. The first amendment moved was that of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine). After it had been disposed of, I looked in the direction of the hon. member for Bow River and I did not observe him to dissent. His amendment was next in order. As an error occurred the last time I wished to avoid a repetition of any mistake this evening. I do not think the point of order is well taken. The question is now on the third reading of the bill. It has been moved that the bill be now read the third time. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Sir EUGENE FISET (Rimouski) moved the third reading of Bill No. 56, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): This bill is before parliament for the second time, and I presume hon. members realize its great importance. We have given it so far this year scarcely two hours' consideration. The bill in the amended form in which it came from the select standing committee on banking and commerce has not yet been printed and distributed to the house. We have passed it through the committee of the whole not knowing what we were passing. The measure was not even printed, and here we are about to give it its third reading, notwithstanding the possibility that there are some members who do not know what it contains. I suggest, sir, that this is not very good practice. There seems to be an attempt to push the bill through the house whether it is acceptable or not from the point of view of public interest.

There are some things in connection with this bill to which I wish to direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of the house. This bill reminds me of a pirate ship; it is sailing on the high seas of finance but it is not flying the jolly roger. If she were flying the jolly roger at the masthead everyone would know exactly what her objective was. But she is flying the Canadian flag on the foremast, the union jack on the mainmast and on the mizzen a burgee of goodwill to the public. With these decorations she sails on to victory. No one questions the skipper as to what the port is; no one raises any objection to the course that is being steered; no one asks anything about the nature of the cargo. She is allowed to pass by unquestioned. If she were true to her real purpose and destiny she would fly the jolly roger.

The history of this bill was given very ably by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn), who analysed the demands of the company, discussing the different clauses of the measure. I will not follow his course; I will present my view of the matter from a different angle. The bill provides, as I presume we all know, for an increase in capital stock to the amount of $2,000,000. I should like to have some reason either from the company or from the sponsor of the bill—at any rate, from some authority—for this increase in capital. I shall deal later on with the reasons given by the company itself for increasing the capital. These reasons I regard as a mere subterfuge; they do not really explain why the company seeks to increase the capital stock by $2,000,000. Let me here observe that capital in a well established insurance company is not only unnecessary but is a hindrance to the company. Every dollar of capital in an insurance company so well established as is the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada becomes a charge on the earnings of the company. That is its only service; it is not required. No one will argue that an insurance company which is well established requires capital at all. The capital which this company now has is more than sufficient, having brought the company from small beginnings to where it now stands, one of the most successful insurance companies in Canada or even on the North American continent. I contend therefore that as the company has been brought thus far on a comparatively small amount of capital we should demand from the sponsors of the bill or from the management or the directors just why they now seek to raise the capital stock of this company by another $2,000,000.

The general tendency to-day in connection with insurance companies is not to increase, but to decrease capital stock; the tendency is towards mutualization, capital stock not being required at all. In this connection I think it is illuminating to read an extract, taken from the Citizen of April 23, which comes from the Mutual Life Assurance Company. He says:

> An interesting announcement is made by the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada to the effect that a special extra dividend to the amount of $700,000 is to be paid this year to its participating policyholders. From information received from the company's head office, it is learned that the percentage of dividend will be graded according to duration of policies, those which have been longer in force receiving a large percentage of extra dividend. The scale of extra dividend commences at 10 per cent of the regular annual dividend payable in 1928 on policies one year in force, and is as high as 25 per cent for longer durations...
>
> While special extra dividends have occasionally been paid by other life insurance companies elsewhere when warranted by earnings and accumulated surplus funds, this is the first occasion on which a Canadian company has adopted this method of sharing earnings with policyholders.

I submit that it would be far more in keeping with the modern practice of life insurance companies for the Sun Life Company to use its profits as the Mutual Life Assurance Company have used their profits rather than to devise new capital issues of stock as a means of absorbing the extraordinary profits made by the company. There are two ways in which the company could handle its excessive profits, other than the course it has chosen to follow. First, the company could give to the policyholders the extra profits which it is now seeking to find some way of covering up, or if it did not wish to take that course it could reduce the cost of insurance to all policyholders both present and future. I contend that either of these suggestions would be a far better way to deal with the situation confronting the Sun Life Assurance Company at the moment that the one proposed in the bill.

Next I want to direct attention to the amount paid by the shareholders for the $2,000,000 of stock they have under control. By examination I find that the shareholders of this company have paid in all $380,000; that is the entire amount of the capital invested in the Sun Life Assurance Company by the shareholders. They have received profits on that amount; they have received other profits on other amounts which they have been able to control by certain manipulations; they have voted bonuses to themselves and in that way have paid the rest of the $2,000,000, and they are charging profits on that amount, making from 25 per cent to 30 per cent annually on their investments. Not only that, but from that small initial investment of $380,000 the shareholders to-day have standing to their credit $30,000,000. Surely these earnings are sufficient to make us pause for a moment and ask whether we will give them a further gift of $2,000,000, by means of which they will pry out of the pockets of their policyholders another enormous amount in profits, equal to the amount which they are now getting on the $2,000,000 of stock already issued.

I regard this bill as a scheme to obtain greater profits for the company, and to obtain them in such a way as to enable the company to pose as a benefactor to the public, through its magnanimity in reducing the profits from 10 per cent, to which they are entitled by law, to 5 per cent. Meanwhile the company will get twice this amount by increasing its capital stock unnecessarily. The company almost boasts that it takes a profit of only 5 per cent when it might take 10 per cent, and attempts to make a plea to parliament rather on compassionate grounds as to why this bill should go through. Let me turn to a statement which appeared in the large daily papers throughout Canada a short time ago, coming directly from the manager of this company. In its headlines this statement bears that mark of servility which characterizes the attitude of most daily papers towards huge corporations, a servility which I sometimes wonder whether parliament has been able to escape. This article says:

> The phenomenal record of the Sun Life Assurance Company is an inspiration to all Canadians. Its income of $102,000,000 is already equal to the total revenue of the government of Canada in the year 1910, and $38,000,000 is certainly an amazing sum to have earned as profit in one year. Not many corporations anywhere can report such figures. The president's intimate, practical comments at the annual meeting explaining how these huge profits were made were illuminating.

They were illuminating!

> Of even greater moment, however, were his statements regarding the danger that this great Canadian institution may pass from Canadian control. Some months ago, Mr. Macaulay referred to the activity of Wall street in the buying of Sun Life stock, and cautioned policyholders and shareholders of the menace it involved to an institution which was founded and developed by Canadians and which has obtained its phenomenal growth under Canadian management. Subsequent events have justified these misgivings, and at the meeting to-day the first public intimation was given that the Sun Life directors are seeking legislation at the present session of parliament which is intended to effectively forestall this danger.

This news item, which was sent to the great dailies of Canada, and which contains the announcement that a bill was to be introduced to save this great company from passing into the hands of Wall street, was advertising, carefully guided and planned in order to affect the minds of members of parliament when the bill was presented. Now let me read a very short extract from the report made by Mr. Macaulay, general manager of the company, at the last annual meeting:

> The new assurances completed amounted to $328,000,000, an increase of over $62,500,000. The amount in force at the close of the year had risen to $1,487,000,000, and at the present moment is well over $1,500,000,000. The income exceeded $102,000,000, an increase over the previous year of $23,800,000. To me, this is very impressive. Not only has this item passed the one hundred million mark, but the increase alone is equal to what was our total income but eight years ago, which had been accumulated by forty-nine years of strenuous effort. A life company with a total income no greater than our increase would be an important corporation.
>
> The assets have increased by $56,000,000, and now exceed $400,000,000. But the most wonderful of all these wonderful figures is the amount earned as profit—$38,000,000. How great this figure is may be judged from the fact that the earnings of the previous year, in which we so rejoiced, were $20,500,000.

There was an increase last year in the earnings of this company amounting to approximately $18,000,000, and the total amount which the company made last year was $38,-

000,000. If it gets 5 per cent profit on $38,000,000 this year, that is a very good profit. But let us assume that next year the earnings of the company will be $50,000,000; five per cent of that amount would mean a larger profit than for this year, and the company is increasing its profits each year, and is really on the road to making enormous profits for its shareholders. They could afford to reduce it to 2½ per cent next year, and to 1 per cent the following year.

A business of this kind which is absolutely safe, and a business upon which the entire community depends for its insurance, should be the business of the government of Canada. This government has gone into such businesses as railroading, and I do not think anyone has cause to regret it; but here is a business a thousand times safer than railroading and a thousand times more necessary than many of the things which the government has taken charge of. Here is a business which should belong entirely to the state, and instead of passing a bill to give the right to these people to take further money from the pockets of the policyholders, this government should be passing a bill taking over the entire life insurance business of Canada.

I have said that this bill is another scheme of the Sun Life Assurance Company to increase its profits. I would like to quote from the report of the royal commission which investigated this company some time ago, and show that this company in the past has been in the habit of securing profits for its shareholders in a very doubtful manner. Before I read this, Mr. Speaker, I might say that this royal commission was investigating the Sun Life Assurance Company, whose bill is now before parliament. This report was dated February 28, 1906, and the following appears on page 20:

> During 1891, and the first half of 1892, dividends at the rate of twelve per cent, and since and including the latter half of 1892, at fifteen per cent, have been declared, besides the bonus of 2½ per cent upon the old stock in 1897.
>
> Carrying to the credit of the shareholders' account the ascertained proportion of profits and interests has not, however, enabled the company to pay these dividends and from time to time the directors have resorted to various devices for the purpose of increasing the shareholders' account, so as to enable it to pay the dividends which have been paid.
>
> The first of these devices was to credit the practically defunct accident branch with considerable sums of money, upon the theory that that branch in years past had been charged more than its proportion of the general expenses of the company. The accident branch being so credited out of the current profits, the sums so credited were brought into the shareholders' account, for the purpose of augmenting it and so enabling the dividends to be paid. Three sums were so credited to the accident branch and brought in to the detriment of the policy-holders; $2,000 in 1895; $4,000 in 1900; and $30,000 in 1902; and the evidence is that there are still at the credit of the accident branch considerable sums of money, the intention being to bring these also into the shareholders' account. It is manifest that in revising the charges made in past years to the accident branch, the directors of the present day have undertaken to overrule what may be presumed to have been the well-informed and deliberate decision of the directors of formers years as to the proper proportion of expenses to be charged to that branch, and your commissioners think it clear that the revision was undertaken solely as a device for maintaining the shareholders' account.

Another improper means by which the shareholders' account has been enabled to provide the dividends paid to shareholders is by similarly revising the rate of interest allowed upon capital in addition to its share of the profits in past years. The method adopted has been to go through the years as far back as 1877 and to allow, instead of the rates which were allowed, a rate of six per cent, which has been imposed at six per cent, compound interest, from 1877 down. The result of this has been to bring into the shareholders' account $9,088.34 (in 1901).

A third method of swelling the shareholders' account has been to go back to the year 1897, when the new capital was issued at a premium of $30 per share, and to bring into the general shareholders' account interest, compounded at six per cent, upon that premium. This revision of the earlier dealings with this premium, to the prejudice of policy holders, was also, in the opinion of your commissioners, improper. In this way the shareholders' account was swollen in 1905 by the sum of $37,930.73.

That was the finding of the royal commission in 1906, and I hazard the guess that if we had another royal commission their findings would be even more interesting than what I have already read. These have been the methods adopted by this company to swell the shareholders' account in the past, and if I had no further knowledge than that I should be suspicious of this bill. I should suspect that it was another device to increase the shareholders' holdings and thus give them higher profits at the expense of the policyholders.

I should like now to deal with the excuses which the company have offered for bringing in this legislation. The first excuse, and the one that was argued the most last year, was that the company had the right to $2,000,000 more capital, by its present charter. They argued that we should pass this bill to remove all doubt, they having no doubt in their own minds as to what rights they had under their charter. The department wrote to the superintendent of insurance on February 9, 1927, in direct reply to a question asked with respect to the claims of the insurance company, and to the very distinguished and no doubt highly paid counsel who appeared on their behalf. The letter is as follows:

I have had under consideration the question whether the Sun Life Assurance Company has the power to issue share capital to the amount of four million dollars, and I have had the advantage of reading several opinions of counsel for the company, and my opinion is that the company is without authority to issue shares in excess of two million dollars.

Section 4 of the act of 1870 clearly imposed a limitation effective at that time to limit the capital available for the life and accident business to two million dollars. Section 4 is not, I think, to be regarded as inconsistent with the provision of the act of 1871, restricting the business of life and accident insurance because it is not a regulation which became operative only if the company carried on two branches of business, but was effective from the beginning even if the company confined itself to the life business as it might have done. In fact I suggest there is a stronger presumption that section 1 of the act of 1870 is repealed for inconsistency with section 3 of the act of 1871 than that section 4 of the said act of 1870 is so repealed.

The statute of 1870 contemplated the possibility that the company would only transact life and accident business and in such case the capital stock was to be limited to two million dollars. The whole of the authorized capital was to be devoted to the life branch and it was only in the event of a decision by the shareholders to engage in the general business that the capital could be increased beyond two million dollars. It would be remarkable I think if the rescission of the power to engage in the general business should have the effect to relieve the company from the limitation to issue not more than two millions of capital for its life business.

Yours truly,

W. STUART EDWARDS,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

Thus the Justice department buried the first excuse of the company for the passage of this bill. I come to the next excuse which the company offers, and this one is more amusing than the one to which I have referred. It is the effect that this great and wonderful company, of which Mr. Macaulay is so justly proud and a company that is perhaps the most successful of all Canadian companies, fears that Wall street will get its clammy fingers upon this institution, and so to save the flag at the foremast and to make sure that the patriotic sentiment of the nation shall be lined up behind this company they tell us that they must have this legislation passed. Great dangers, they say, surround this institution, for Wall street is on its trail! As a matter of fact Wall street has been on the trail of Canada for a long time and Mr. Macaulay has never said a word about the matter. Wall street is on the trail of the Minister of Finance right now and he is not squealing about it. Wall street is on our trail more than any other institution at the present time. But apart from that, an examination shows that a very small proportion of the stock of the company happens to be in the hands of people in the United States.

The next point in this connection is that the Sun Life Assurance Company is not so particular about Canada as would appear from the wails of its president, because when the question is one of the investment of the money of the Canadian policyholders, this is by no means limited to Canada. I do not for a moment say that it should be, but it would be a very good policy if it were. I merely say that patriotism does not seem to be necessary in regard to the investments of this insurance company; it is necessary only when they want a bill to increase their capital. Surely a company that is so willing to invest the money of the policyholders in the United States and any other country abroad should not object to a few people in those countries owning some of its stock.

I imagine that the greater proportion of the business of this insurance company is done across the line and thus done outside of Canada. Surely there is no reason for this extraordinary attitude of fear which has been expressed by the president and the directors of the company. But apart from all these objections to his argument, the outstanding fact is that we have not in this legislation the means of preventing the stock from going to the hands of people in the United States. Such legislation is impossible. Even Mr. Macaulay's father's stock has already gone into the hands of people in the United States and I presume that Macaulay's stock will go there too if he can get more for it there than anywhere else. The funny thing about the matter is that the action which the president of the company has taken in bringing this bill before parliament has tripled the danger which he fears. It has increased the demand in New York a hundredfold for the stock of the Sun Life Assurance Company. Thus another argument falls flat.

I wish I had the time to read a few extracts which would prove this point. I think I could not do better than read from the correspondence which has taken place between the Superintendent of Insurance and the president of the Sun Life Assurance Company on some of the points in this bill. To do so would, I think, make it clear to the house just what the nature of the legislation is, and the argument of the company, if it may be called an argument, would seem to be mere subterfuge. This is a letter from the Superintendent of Insurance to Mr. Macaulay:

I am in receipt of yours of the 20th instant, and have read the same with much interest.

I do not know whether the tendency you mention has been more marked since the amendment of your bill at the last session or not, but I shall be glad to know if, in your opinion, a requirement that a larger proportion than a bare majority of directors be Canadians and British subjects, would have a deterring effect on the dealings in the stock. I understand that the movement of the shares to New York had commenced before the amendment of your charter respecting the board of directors last session, and I had a feeling at the time that possibly the change proposed then permitting directors other than British subjects might strengthen that tendency rather than diminish it. You will probably be able to say whether or not this is so.

You will, of course, have noticed a somewhat similar movement with reference to Canadian bank shares, which indicate that amount of capital is not a determining feature.

I am glad to know that so large a proportion of your capital is in the hands of yourself and associates and in the hands of those who may be fairly well counted on to preserve the company as a Canadian company.

In that communication it is revealed that the company itself, by altering the regulations with respect to its directors, made it possible for United States directors to come in, whereas before they could not. Therefore it would appear that they were not very much afraid of the United States at that time. Moreover, as is made clear in this letter from the Superintendent of Insurance, the amount of stock issued by any company is no guarantee of its control remaining in Canada. This is a letter from Mr. Macaulay to the Superintendent of Insurance on the subject:

I have your favour of the 23rd.

I am quite sure that the question of the nationality of directors has nothing to do with the movement in our stock. At present the buying appears to be only for investment, but if a New York group should obtain control they would find no difficulty in appointing Canadian associates or nominees.

The transfer of our stock to American ownership appears to be increasing steadily in volume. Even since I wrote you, several more blocks of fairly large amount have gone across the boundary lines. Several other blocks have been offered to us here, and, as we were unable to find purchasers for them, they too, no doubt, will be in the United States within a few days. Another block was offered to me this morning. An American broker has just written asking for a number of copies of our annual report that he may give them to persons who may become interested in our stock. Another report indicates that it is proposed to give our stock a prominent place in the holdings of some investment trusts. This very morning also we have had a call from the president of one of the National Banks of Hartford, who wished to find out as much as possible about the value of our stock, in order that he might accommodate brokers by making loans on its securities until such time as they find customers. Mr. Wood had a long interview with him and tried to discourage him but was smilingly told that we are like most inside executives, we do not know the real value of our stocks. He spoke of buying some for himself at $1,200 per share. Even since I dictated this letter a Toronto broker tells us that he has an offer of $1,410 per share from the United States. Almost every day there are fresh developments.

So every day in every way according to Mr. Macaulay the company was going to be snatched from him by somebody in the United States.

I want to occupy a few of the remaining minutes of my time to deal with what the policyholders have to say about this.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time.

Mr. IRVINE: I presume that Mr. Speaker knows when my time is up. If the hon. gentlemen who are hollering "time" want to be hung up on a nail and become the alarm clock we are going to have next year, I have no objection, but until they are so appointed, if they will kindly hold on to themselves the Speaker will govern the house.

I have here a report which was made by an eminent counsel of Toronto at the request of a number of policyholders. A number of the policyholders came to this counsel and asked him to investigate the company with respect to the legislation now before parliament. This counsel was Mr. R. A. Reid, LL.D., D.C.L., advocate, barrister at law, Kent building, Toronto. I will try to read a portion of this report before the alarm clock goes off again. Mr. Reid says:

History of the Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada since Incorporation in year 1865

1865. The Sun Life was incorporated with an authorized capital of $500,000 all of which was subscribed and one-tenth paid-up. The original 5,000 shares were sold to the public at $10 per share and no further call has been made in cash, although it has become paid-up to the extent of $50 per share by frequent bonus issues.

I am willing to put the remainder on Hansard without reading it, if hon. gentlemen have no objection.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. IRVINE: I am glad that you like my voice so well. It continues:

1877. Authorized capital increased to $1,000,000; subscribed capital $500,000. First dividends declared at the rate of 8 per cent per annum. In addition a bonus issue of $12,500 was made increasing the paid-up portion to $12.50 per share.

1882. Dividend rate increased to 9 per cent per annum.

Mr. SPEAKER: Time.

Mr. LADNER: I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: The Speaker must alternate, and not see only the members of one group. There are several groups in the house, and I saw the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner).

Mr. IRVINE: Is that motion debatable, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: No. A motion to adjourn is never debatable.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to ask your honour what is the effect of that motion being adopted?

Mr. SPEAKER: The effect of it is to adjourn the debate.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I mean its effect with respect to this bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: As regards the bill, it will keep its place on the order paper.

WINIFRED OSBORNE GIMBLETT

The house resumed from April 27 consideration of the motion of Mr. Garland (Carleton) for the third reading of Bill No. 84, for the relief of Winifred Osborne Gimblett.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by Mr. Church (for Mr. Garland, Carleton), that Bill No. 84 (letter O of the senate), for the relief of Winifred Osborne Gimblett, be now read a third time.

There is an amendment to the motion in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I do not see him in his seat, and therefore I will not put the amendment. The mover of the amendment must be here.

Mr. HEAPS: I believe on previous occasions when the mover of a motion or an amendment was not in his place, some other member was allowed to act in his behalf.

Mr. SPEAKER: Not in the case of an amendment of which notice has been given. This amendment stands in the name of the hon. member who has moved it. He is not in the house, and therefore the chair must ignore the amendment. The question is on the third reading of the bill. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): A number of hon. members to my right, Mr. Speaker, have asked what bill this is. They have not the least idea of what is going on.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is a divorce bill. I announced it quite audibly, I think. It is a bill for the relief of Winifred Osborne Gimblett. It has received its third reading and has been passed by the house.

EDMONTON, DUNVEGAN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY

On the order:

The house again in committee on Bill No. 57, respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company—Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I submit that it is now nine o'clock and that the hour for private bills is exhausted.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills being exhausted, the house will now revert to supply.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public Works — Harbours and rivers — Ontario—Kingston—dredging, $14,200.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This item was under discussion before the recess.

Item agreed to.

Lions Head—dredging, $17,800.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is proposed to dredge a channel 200 feet wide by approximately 400 feet long to a depth of 18 feet, involving the removal of 31,750 cubic yards scow measure of class "B" material. The work has been urged by the resident engineer, and is necessary to enable boats to reach the wharf loaded with hay and general farm products, which at the present time is done with great difficulty owing to the shallow water.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose that difficulty has existed for thirty years.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I expect the water is a littler shallower this year.

Item agreed to.

Midland—harbour improvements, $48,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Certainly. The information furnished me is as follows:

This is to complete the dredging contract of Randolph Macdonald Co. Ltd., for dredging an area of 880 feet by 625 feet to a depth of 22.5 feet in front of the elevator wharves and an area in front of the new Midland Simcoe Elevator Company for a length of 2,180 feet by 120 and 500 feet. Approximately 50,000 cubic yards, scow measure of the former area remains to be dredged in 1928 season, $30,000.

2. To construct two shelters 200 feet by 24 feet including office and warehouse and paving 2,317 square yards of the new wharf $9,500.

3. Reconstruction of old dock leading to new wharf, $8,500.

Item agreed to.

Owen Sound—harbour improvements, $60,000.

Mr. RYERSON: May we have some information on this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This vote is required for the following work:

1. To dredge along the harbour wall for a length of 2,100 feet to a depth of 20.5 feet, including the removal of an angle of shore line recently transferred to the department to permit a new alignment of the harbour wall, involving the removal of 19,000 cubic yards, place measure, of mud, silt, sand, etcetera, at 65 cents—$12,800.

2. Towards the construction of 750 linear feet of the west entrance channel wall, consisting of pilework substructure and concrete superstructure with a width on top of 3 feet. Estimated cost—$30,000. Allotment for 1928-29—$27,700.

3. Construction of an extension of 415 feet to the harbour wall near the elevator slip consisting of close sheet piling with concrete anchorage. 180 lin. ft. of this already constructed as an extension to the contract with Messrs. Woolrich & Brigham, estimated to cost $10,645 —$18,000.

4. To complete payments to Messrs. Woolrich & Brigham on their contract for the reconstruction of several sections of the harbour wall—$1,500. Total amount for 1928-29 $60,000.

Item agreed to.

Port Arthur—harbour improvements—Thunder Bay Paper Company to contribute one-third cost, $50,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Does that represent the total cost, or our two-thirds?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The whole cost is more than that.

Item agreed to.

Port Burwell—harbour repairs and improvements, $200,000.

Mr. SHORT: As this is a pretty large amount, will the minister give us particulars?

[Mr. Lucas.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. This vote is required for the following work:

1. To reconstruct two sections of west pier from water level up, 150 feet long and 50 feet long respectively..	$ 5,000
2. To reconstruct and complete 505 feet of sheet pile wall along east side of harbour near carferry slip..	20,000
3. To renew 510 feet of walling on west side of harbour; construct sand fences and for minor repairs..	1,000
4. To provide for the contract with the Port Arthur Construction Company for the reconstruction of a rubble mound checkwater 200 feet long projecting westerly from the centre of the existing concrete breakwater; for repairs to existing rubble mound wall between outer end of west pier and inner end of concrete breakwater; and for the construction of a rubble mound extension in four lengths of varying direction having a total length of 1,800 feet and commencing at a point 50 feet inwards from the outer end of concrete breakwater. Total estimated cost $450,000. Amount to be earned in 1928-29..	174,000
Total..	$200,000

There has been expended to March 31, $23,060. These amounts were requested by District Engineer Craig in his annual estimates, in which he reported:

These works are urgently required to maintain the harbour walls along both sides of the harbour.

Item agreed to.

Port Colborne—repairs to harbour works, $100,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister give particulars of this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to. This is required to repair damage to the east and west breakwaters caused by a severe storm of December 8, 1927. The proposed work is as follows:

1. To reconstruct the superstructure of several sections of the west breakwater totalling a length of approximately 1,885 lineal feet..	$ 92,018
2. To reconstruct the superstructure of three sections totalling 277 lineal feet and to repair the rear wall of 77 feet of the east breakwater..	36,165
Inspection, contingencies, etc.	11,817
Total amount required..	$140,000

Mr. SPENCER: Why is the amount limited to $100,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is expected that that is all they will do this year.

Item agreed to.

Port Dover—repairs to piers, $50,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, after one of my colleagues has moved an amendment.

Mr. ROBB: I move, Mr. Chairman, that the Port Dover item be changed to read:

Repairs to piers and harbour improvements, revote $12,000, vote $50,000.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. RYERSON: Will the minister explain why the full amount was not spent last year? I am not opposing the vote. I know Port Dover requires the improvements.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount, of which $12,000 is a revote from 1927-28, is required towards the reconstruction of the east pier which was damaged by a severe storm on December 8, 1927, and for repairs to the vertical timbers and to the stringers of the west pier. We now propose to build a new east pier instead of reconstructing the old one. The engineer reports that practically the whole superstructure of the east pier has been demolished except for a portion recently reconstructed, about 200 feet, near the outer end of the pier. At present there remains about eighteen inches of timber substructure, stone filled, above water level. All cribs have been shoved out of line and no doubt considerable damage has occurred below water level.

Mr. RYERSON: Is there any provision for dredging there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; this is just harbour work.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it proposed to build a new pier?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The east pier, a little further over where the channel is better.

Mr. GARDINER: Will there be better protection from storms?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The channel is wider, but I do not know that there is any better protection from storms; we shall be subject to storms in the same way.

Mr. RYERSON: Of $25,000 voted last year for dredging purposes, only $13,000 has been expended. I presume there was still more dredging to be done there.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is hardly correct in saying that $25,000 was voted for dredging purposes; it was voted for repairs to the pier and only $12,693 was expended. This is part of the same project.

Mr. GARDINER: The amendment just carried has reference to other harbour improvements. What are those other improvements?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We had to change the wording of the item owing to the fact that the location was changed.

Item as amended agreed to.

Port Stanley—harbour repairs and improvements, $16,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item and say what tonnage passes through the port?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want some hon. member to move that this item be reduced by $12,000. The explanation is that the contract with A. W. Robertson, Limited, was closed out after the main estimates had been prepared, and the $12,000 will not be required.

Mr. ROBB: I move that the item be so reduced.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Rondeau—harbour repairs and improvements, $41,700.

Mr. GARDINER: Explain.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of this amount $34,000 is a revote. The vote is required for the following work: (1) reconstruction of inner end of east pier, $4,500; (2) reconstruction of section of west pier, $2,700; (3) further extension to shore protection, $2,500; (4) revote for dredging slip for Lake Erie Coal Company for proposed extension to wharf to be constructed there during 1928, $32,000—total, $41,700.

Mr. GARDINER: Will this complete all the proposed work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes; this will complete all that is projected at present.

Item agreed to.

Sarnia—dredging, $45,000.

Mr. GEARY: Has any dredging been done on the American side?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is for dredging a channel to the new elevator at Sarnia.

Mr. GEARY: The channel is off the river.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Off the main channel of the river; it is to the elevator constructed last year.

Mr. STEVENS: Whose elevator?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The city of Sarnia financed it; they guaranteed, I think about $400,000 of the cost and the company put up the balance. I cannot tell the name of the company.

Mr. GEARY: What is the total amount?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Until March 31, 1928, $123,164 had been spent and we are asking now for a revote of $45,000.

Item agreed to.

Southampton—repairs to breakwater, $6,600.

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required for the reconstruction of the east breakwater on a length of 250 feet on the inner end of the north face and on a length of 400 feet on the inner end of the south face. This work is to be done by day labour. It is hoped that the completion of the work will result in there not being more than $5,000 to expend during the following year. Unless unforeseen damage occurs we should not require to expend any large amount on repairs to these structures for at least two years. The work is required for the accommodation of the fishing fleet and for the general traffic of the harbour.

Mr. BENNETT: Why done by day labour?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The engineer is of the impression that he can carry it out with his own forces to better advantage than by letting the contract.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the committee will remember that a few weeks ago I indicated that work done by day labour, in some of these Public Works items, was limited to those who professed the Liberal faith. I read a letter that came to me from Rivière Nouvelle, Bonaventure county, in March, 1928:

> We the undersigned take the privilege of writing you concerning some public work performed at our river during the summer of nineteen hundred and twenty-seven (1927).
>
> We Conservatives asked the foreman Mr. Richard Molley for work; he refused all Conservatives one hour's work by orders of Hon. Charles Marcil. Is this a free country, or does a man have to be a Liberal to live here? Are we to be deprived our rights in the future as in the past? At the time the work was being performed last summer we wrote the hon. Minister of Public Works and got no reply. Is that justice? Do you call that kind of work public or private or party work?
>
> If we are justified in writing you concerning this kindly reply to our request, and oblige
>
> Yours sincerely,
>
> Hugh Watt, returned soldier.
> Epiphane Talbot, returned soldier.
> Peter Gignac.
> Jean Abel Thiriault.
> Joseph P. Laroque,
> Joseph Gignac.
> Godefroi Thiriault.
> Remio Theriault.
> Simon Loisel.

If that sort of thing is going on in this country it is time parliament did something to assert the rights of individual Canadians and especially returned soldiers, to jobs by which they can keep themselves at least in food and clothing for themselves and their families. It is not limited to that particular constituency, as I have said, and I would like to ask the minister whether it is the settled policy of his department to instruct his engineers that the local member shall limit employment to those who support the administration, in the expenditure of public moneys.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I must say I do not recall the circumstances of this case, but I shall be very glad to look into the question of the letter not being answered.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the smallest part of it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know of no letters coming to the office which do not receive a reply just as promptly as possible. The reply may not be satisfactory, but we always try to reply. As far as the practice is concerned, I have given no special instructions with regard to this or any other place. If the work is done by day labour we expect to engage men who will give a reasonable day's work for a day's pay. I have given no instructions as to who should be employed.

Mr. SHORT: For the benefit of the committee I might say that this is the practice in vogue in the constituency which I represent. A man cannot earn a dollar on public works there if he is not a supporter of the administration. I presume the minister has nothing to do with it, but the local politicians certainly act that way.

An hon. MEMBER: So does the local government.

Mr. SHORT: No, the government of Nova Scotia employ many Liberals in the expenditure of public money.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SHORT: I can give an instance which occurred during the last election. I asked one of the road men, a man driving a team on the road and drawing $6 a day, for his vote, and he said he could not vote for me. I said, "At least you are honest, notwithstanding the fact that you are drawing $6 a day from the local government." He was not fired for that, either; he continued right on until the job was completed. However, in my constituency it is impossible for a Conservative to get a day's work on any public work being carried on.

Mr. GARDINER. With regard to this item I should like to ask the minister if it is not the practice that when an amount exceeds $4,000, contracts should be given, and the work should not be done by day labour?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, there is no such regulation, but I may say that in nearly every case we try to let contracts, where we can, at a price which would be equal to the cost of carrying on the work by day labour.

Mr. STEVENS: Is not the minister wrong in that answer? I am not going to quarrel as to whether or not he is doing it, but if I recall correctly there is some regulation, some order in council or some statutory provision which says that any work costing over $5,000 must be done by contract, or putting it another way, where the minister thinks it is best he may do any work costing less than $5,000 by day labour.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. I think what my hon. friend has in mind is the letting of contracts for $5,000 and upwards by public tender. There is an express provision in the act which authorizes the department, where it is deemed advisable or in the public interest, to do the work by day labour.

Mr. STEVENS: Up to $5,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, there is no limit.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought the amount was $4,000, but my hon. friend says it is $5,000; is there not a treasury board minute carrying that provision?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it is statutory.

Mr. BENNETT: Then up to $5,000 you can do it by day labour, but anything in excess of that must be done by contracts called for by public tender?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, there is no limit. Take this building, for example; it was built entirely by day labour.

Mr. STEVENS: But that is different; parliament appointed a special non-partisan committee and so on; that was a special provision of parliament.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is quite true, but there is no limit under the act to the amount of work which may be done by day labour.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is there not some provision by which you must call for public tenders if the work is to cost over a certain amount?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I did not quite catch that question.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is there not some provision whereby works costing over a certain amount must be carried on by contract, advertised and called for by public tender? Under that amount contracts may be called for by private letters, on account of the expense and so on.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think what my hon. friend refers to is that for works costing under $5,000 we can call for local tenders, but my hon. friend can take my word for it, I think, that the act provides that contracts for over $5,000 are to be by public tender. There is no restriction other than that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what we say.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is a provision that the work may be done by day labour, and that provision is not limited to the $5,000. My hon. friend will find that in the act.

Mr. BENNETT: But if that is so you could skate around any statute by saying you will do a certain job by day labour.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the provision in the statute.

Mr. CANNON: No, there is no limitation.

Item agreed to.

Toronto—dredging and repairs to entrance piers, $32,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister give us the particulars of this item?

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): Will the minister explain what this $32,000 is to be used for, and if it is earmarked for any particular work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is required for the maintenance of the harbour works and to keep the channels open to the heavy traffic using this port. At the time the estimates were printed it was estimated that the expenditure in 1927-28 would be practically the whole amount of the appropriation of $31,000. However, a later report showed that only $14,000 would be expended during 1927-28, leaving a revote of $17,000. This amount is required for the following work.

1. Maintenance dredging in eastern channel on an approximate area of 275,000 square feet, involving the removal of 46,000 cubic yards, scow measure, of sand and silt, at 58 cents per cubic yard, $26,680.

2. Maintenance dredging in western channel on an approximate area of 120,000 square feet, involving the removal of 5,000 cubic yards of sand and silt, place measure, at 65 cents per cubic yard, $3,250.

3. Repair the concrete surface of decking on a portion of the west pier which is damaged and cracked. It will be necessary to remove the finish to an approximate depth of two inches and lay a new concrete finish on a length of 900 feet by the full width of the pier, which is 20 feet, $2,000.

The total estimated cost is given at $31,930; the appropriation for 1927-28 was $31,000; probable expenditure, $14,000, leaving a balance of $17,000.

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): That is all referring to the eastern entrance?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is an item of $3,250 covering the maintenance of dredging in the western channel, and an item of $26,680 to cover maintenance of dredging in the eastern channel. Then there is an item of $2,000 to cover the repair of concrete surface of decking on a portion of the west pier.

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): Has the minister considered the necessity of deepening the western entrance to the harbour with a view to providing an entrance for larger vessels on the completion of the Welland canal? I believe the harbour board has already communicated with the minister regarding it, but I should like to know if he has considered it and what position the government or the department propose to take. It is very necessary that that entrance should be deepened in order to provide for larger vessels.

In this connection I might say that the western entrance is rocky and it will require a great deal of blasting. That kind of work cannot be done on short notice, and the arguments that I can put forward would only be the same as were offered to-day by the member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) regarding the Burlington entrance to Hamilton harbour. The larger vessels which will be enabled to come through the new Welland canal must necessarily get into these ports which are the largest on the lake, and this work should be done at once. If the Welland canal is to be completed in 1930 my contention is, and I believe it is the contention of the harbour board, that some work should be done each year, and I should like to know whether the minister can give some information in regard to that. I should like to know also whether vote No. 144—dredging, Ontario and Quebec, $600,000—would cover any dredging in the western entrance to Toronto harbour.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The item to which my hon. friend has just referred cannot be utilized for that purpose. The amount required for that work would be considerable, and the desire is to have it completed by the time the Welland canal is finished, but I cannot say anything further than that the matter has been under consideration. Our information is that we can get depth of twenty feet in the western channel without any blasting, but if we have to go deeper than that we shall have to do some blasting, which will materially increase the cost. I cannot advise my hon. friend to be hopeful about much progress being made this year at any rate.

Item agreed to.

Windsor—wharf repairs, $2,700.

Mr. ROBINSON: I believe $2,000 was spent last year for renewing piles, and I should like to know what this amount is to be used for. Please understand that I am not objecting to the vote at all.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amount is required for the renewal of three six-pile fender clusters in front of the government dock, and renewing the roof on the warehouse to the extent of 163 feet by 40 feet.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Manitoba—Gimli—reconstruction of protection work, $7,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will the minister explain this item, please?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This work consists of the reconstructing of 1,200 lineal feet of protection work which was partly destroyed during 1927. Unless this work is reconstructed a portion of the lake frontage of the village will scour away rapidly. Gimli is the headquarters of the Gimli Fisheries Limited, a company carrying on a fishing business which handles over 1,000,000 pounds of fish annually

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why should the Dominion do this work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Why should we not do it?

Mr. McQUARRIE: As I understand it, you do not always do protection work, and you have refused in a great many cases to undertake responsibility of that kind; you say it is a matter for the municipality or for the provincial government.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the reconstructing of work formerly constructed by this government.

Mr. BENNETT: The old Northwest Territories did it all. Is it a navigable stream upon which this protection work is being done? That has been the test heretofore.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it is on lake Winnipeg; it is navigable.

Mr. BENNETT: That has generally been the test that has been imposed. On a navigable water the Dominion government, if it has control over the water, may erect protection work. As the hon. gentleman has said, they have declined to place protection works on many of the smaller streams in the western provinces.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Quite so.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Even in regard to navigable streams the Dominion refuses to assume responsibility for bank protection work.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. McQUARRIE: In this case the minister says that it is the reconstruction of work previously undertaken by the Dominion, and I presume the minister does not know why it was originally undertaken by the Dominion; is that right?

Mr. BENNETT: There is a principle behind this, and all the western provinces are affected. For instance, the Bow river is a very rapid stream and it has eaten into the bank and destroyed some of the streets in Calgary, but thus far the Dominion government has taken the attitude that it has no right to put a single dollar into this protection work. Why is Gimli selected and other places left out? The same thing applies to Edmonton, where the river has cut into the banks and they have made unsuccessful efforts to get some money from the government for protection purposes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is not a river; it is lake Winnipeg, which extends for nearly three hundred miles in length and nearly eight miles in breadth. There are very extensive settlements along the east and west shores of the southern part of the lake, and there are some docks and wharves, and that sort of thing, that are very necessary. A great deal of fishing is done on the southern part of this lake. If it is necessary to have docks, wharves and harbours for the fishing industry on either the Atlantic or the Pacific, it is just as necessary to have them on lake Winnipeg.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is mistaken. I am not going to leave the matter as it is, although it may take a little time. No one is talking about docks or wharves. What is being referred to is a protection work to a bank that has been broken down of a river or a lake, and we certainly have not in recent years been able to get any appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Let me give the history of this structure. The department constructed a shore protection 2,420 feet long, starting near the public wharf. This work was carried out in 1908-09 and it has been repaired subsequently. The wharf was built in 1899-1900 at a cost of $10,660.75 and extended in 1907-08 and 1912-13.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman say that this is a wharf?

Mr. ELLIOTT: A wharf.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a different thing altogether. This is a protection work.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to protect the portion of the lake frontage in the vicinity of the wharf. Judging from the map I should think that the movement of the water controlled by this structure was originally caused to a large extent by the construction of the wharf. At any rate for some time we have been assuming liability in this connection and I take it that when the work was started it was thought we were liable for it.

Item agreed to.

Roseau river—improvements, $65,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the explanation of this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount of $65,000 is asked to be provided towards work now under contract with G. B. Wood, Limited, of Winnipeg, Manitoba. The work consists generally of the construction of thirteen miles of dykes, 10 feet wide on top, averaging 6 feet in height, having a slope of two to one on the inside and one and one-half to one on the outside, and of a control dam across the Roseau river in the line of the east dyke.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it a navigable stream?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think it is.

Mr. BENNETT: This looks like an irrigation project.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not an irrigation project. The government of Manitoba has promised to contribute one-third of the cost of the work and land to be acquired in connection therewith, up to a maximum of $50,000, which sum has been appropriated by the provincial government. District Engineer Goodspeed reports on the 21st April, 1926:

> The years 1919 and 1925, produced very serious summer floods. Last year the discharge exceeded 1,000 second feet from June 8 to July 26, and the flood practically destroyed the crops of a large number of farmers of Vita, Arbakka and vicinity.

This question has been before the department since 1893, going from worse to worse since that date. Steps to avoid further flooding in the Roseau district, in the southeastern part of Manitoba, at a cost of $150,000, will be undertaken by the provincial Department of Public Works during the coming summer.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like a little more information about this. It seems to me that comparisons might well be drawn from this item rather than from the other, because this item is apparently concerned with the protection of the adjacent country from flooding from freshets in the river. Might I ask the minister if the flooding conditions which necessitate the dyke are caused in any way by some federal construction work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think that is the case. The Roseau river, as my hon. friend may know, has its main source in the state of Minnesota, although two branches, Mud creek and Pine creek, rise in Canada to flow south across the international border to the main river. These branches drain about 300 square miles in Canada, while the river has a total drainage area of 1,350 square miles where it crosses the boundary and 1,525 square miles at Stuartburn. In the state of Minnesota drainage projects of considerable magnitude have been carried out. Before artificial improvements, some 300 square miles were occupied by swamps and marshes, which during wet seasons turned into shallow lakes. While some of this swamp land has been improved, much waste land still exists, and further drainage projects are under consideration. During 1913-15, eighty thousand dollars was expended in enlarging the channel for a distance of seventeen miles, beginning at a point near the Canadian border.

On the Canadian side of the border the river for some twelve or thirteen miles flows between low banks through a flat country. The cross section of this stream is small, with a minimum of about 400 square feet, and the slope in this distance averages about two feet to the mile. With this restricted section the waters in flood season are pushed out over the low banks and cover the surrounding country, particularly to the east and northeast, where a portion of the flood water escapes to Rat river. West of the river, the land flooded, about two miles wide, is swampy and of poor quality. It has been estimated that a total of 100,000 acres is sometimes flooded. Not only does this occur at the time of spring breakup, when it probably does least damage, but frequently summer freshets occur, which destroy prospective crops and do lasting damage to cultivated areas.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is this a reclamation project, or is it merely for the protection of the surrounding country?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not a reclamation project.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am not objecting to the protection being given, but I should like to know on what peculiarity of circumstances the protection is based in this instance whereas it is refused in others where the freshets do equal damage? This is rather an important point, because a good many damage claims have been made and there have been a good many requests for the control of water. I should like to know just wherein the singularity of this situation lies.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is claimed that this is not a provincial liability; that it has been aggravated by certain drainage works that were carried on in the state of Minnesota. Apparently the Dominion has for some time assumed liability and is contracting to do the work to which the province has contributed.

Item agreed to.

Victoria beach — repairs to wharf and approach, $4,400.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to ask the minister whether there has been any application for more extensive improvements in the way of a breakwater. There is a very rough bit of water there which makes it practically impossible for the summer people to do anything at Victoria beach, and which also makes it very dangerous to the fishermen and others whose duty takes them around the lake. Has any application been made for more extensive work as regards breakwaters and wharves around Victoria beach and Grand beach?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no mention of it here, and I have no recollection of any further requests being made. The note which I have here reads:

The work will consist of rebuilding with stone-filled cribwork, the inner 40 feet of the public wharf damaged by storm this season, and of repairing 500 feet of the road approach, destroyed by the high water of this year, by a close cribwork face along the lake side, and filling with dredged material. This wharf provides accommodation for a summer resort of approximately 2,500 people. Victoria beach is also the headquarters of the Royal Canadian Air Force, which patrols the country in connection with fire protection.

Tht district engineer reports:

The expenditure is required to give access to and maintain the public structures used by people of Victoria beach.

I have no memorandum of any further work being required.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The work that is required at Grand beach is a little distance from Victoria. There is a larger number of summer people at Grand beach; there is a good deal of travelling from point to point, and very often we have had serious accidents to the fishermen out on the lake from the very violent storms that come up in that locality. Have no representations been made along that line, for protection at Grand beach?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I could not say what representations may have been made about Grand beach, because I have no data here in connection with it. All I have is in connection with Victoria beach, but I shall be very glad to look it up for my hon. friend and let him know what applications, if any, we have received.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers — Saskatchewan and Alberta — Athabaska river — improvements, $40,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us hear about this.

Mr. KELLNER: Where and when is it proposed to expend this money?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does my hon. friend think it should not be expended.

Mr. KELLNER: I think it should be, but some of these items have been in the estimates year after year and the money has never been spent. I was wondering if you are going to spend this amount.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The details are as follows:

This amount of $40,000 is asked to be provided towards the following improvements in the Athabaska river.

The dredging of a 150 foot channel through the existing shoals in the Athabaska river, between Fort McMurray and Stony Island, a distance of approximately nine miles. The proposed channel is to be dredged to six feet below zero of gauge, or approximate average low water level.

The amount of dredging required is estimated to be:

	Scow measurement
Class "A"..	36,300 cubic yards
Class "B"..	6,900 cubic yards
Total..	43,200 cubic yards

Item agreed to.

Cowan dam — repairs and maintenance, $3,300.

Mr. BENNETT: Where is this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a dam maintained by the department for raising the elevation of Cowan lake or Long lake, and for assisting in the navigation of the river between the dam and Beaver river, about thirty-five miles, by supplying flood water to carry canoes and scowloads of freight.

Mr. BENNETT: It is merely a storage dam?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there any other case of a storage dam being constructed in Canada by the Dominion government? Is this a stop-log proposal?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that three similar dams have been constructed by the Dominion government on the Ottawa, at Quinze, Kippewa and Timiskaming.

Item agreed to.

Faust—wharf, $12,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Where is this wharf? I think a lot of money is being wasted on wharves that are not required, and at the same time money is refused for public buildings where you are getting a revenue. In the one instance you are looking for votes; in the other you cannot get them.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is in the Peace River riding.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought so.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I suppose it could be stricken out if anybody—

Mr. BENNETT: That sort of thing is not worthy of the minister.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This wharf is very necessary.

Mr. BENNETT: Where is it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is on Lesser Slave lake. The wharf is needed at the Faust United Fishermen's landing point, which is in the federal constituency of Peace River. I understand that at present there is no wharf on Lesser Slave lake, notwithstanding that there is a large fishing industry carried on there which yields a considerable revenue each year.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose that is done by the company on whose prospectus I saw the names of some members of parliament.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I could not tell my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: It looks like it. In the meantime great communities have to go without public buildings that are urgently required, while this wharf on Lesser Slave lake, some few miles from the north pole—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. BENNETT: —some few miles from the north pole—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): That is not good advertising.

Mr. BENNETT: It is on the Lesser Slave lake. I should think the name itself indicates sufficient for my hon. friend's purposes. Really there should be some principle in this thing. I saw the prospectus of a fishing company up there on which appear names of members of parliament. Now they are getting a wharf on Lesser Slave lake, while communities really requiring the expenditure of public money cannot get it. That is not the way public money should be expended.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think my hon. friend wants to make statements that are not justified by the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that there is no wharf whatever on the Lesser Slave lake, where there is a tremendous fishing industry, yielding a yearly revenue of from $150,000 to $200,000, without mentioning other traffic, tourist and otherwise.

Mr. BENNETT: Revenue to whom?

Mr. ELLIOTT: To the fishermen, I presume.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is to whom it usually goes. My information is that fishing boats of a reasonable size as well as other boats ply these waters. They have to be anchored one-quarter of a mile out on account of lack of landing facilities, and the fish have to be hauled twice, and sometimes during heavy weather it is very dangerous.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad the minister has been good enough to give us the information, but it does not detract from the statements I have made, nor in any way indicate that they were not accurate. The fishing is mostly done in the winter, through the ice, and this year an application was made to extend the time. I do not know of much fishing being done there in the summer, because they have not refrigerators to take care of the fish. I presume the next application will be for a cold storage plant subsidized by this government for taking care of the fish caught in Lesser Slave lake in the summer. The minister says the wharf will be used for tourists—tourists on the Lesser Slave lake!

Mr. KENNEDY: Most of the fishing in Lesser Slave lake is done during the summer. About 600,000 pounds are taken out of the lake annually, most of which goes to Chicago.

Mr. BENNETT: If, as my hon. friend says, the fishing is done in the summer time, then I am entirely in error; but certainly during the past winter I had a telegram asking for an extension of the season for winter fishing on these lakes, and I know the member for East Calgary (Mr. Adshead) received a similar telegram. The department was asked to extend the time.

Mr. ROBB: I understood from my hon. friend on one occasion that there was no winter in that part of the country; it was all summer.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend has not got it quite right: It is always summer there in the winter.

An hon. MEMBER: And always winter in the spring.

Item agreed to.

Fort McMurray—wharf, $21,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Tell us about this.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to construct a wharf, consisting of a round sheet pile wall, extending 100 feet parallel with the river bank, and 58 foot wing walls connecting same with the bank at both ends. The walls will be anchored to anchor piles and back filled with stone to the height of the wall and for a width of 25 feet on top. The estimated cost is $21,000.

Mr. BENNETT: That memorandum, I take it, was prepared at the time when the constituency was represented in this house by Mr. Cross, because it has been on the records of the Public Works department for three, if not four years, and nothing has been done. Everybody wants the accommodation. Am I to understand that because it has been voted once you are going to continue revoting it so that it may be a bait to induce the electors once more to vote by proxy behind hedges in certain sections of the community as they did on previous occasions?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is dealing with speculations, with which perhaps he is more familiar than I am.

Mr. BENNETT: These are not speculations.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They have very peculiar methods in certain sections of the province mentioned by my hon. friend, but having spent only a fraction of the time that he has spent there, I am not nearly so familiar with those methods. It should not be necessary for me to assure him that everything is put into these estimates with the utmost good faith and with a view to serve the country as this government always strives to serve it.

Mr. BENNETT: I am happy to say that the province in which I live has been singularly free from electoral troubles; but in two sections of the west, in Prince Albert and northern Alberta, they learned a lesson from the voyage of the Minnie M. and machines that my hon. friend had more to do with as a member of the local legislature, that is, they copied certain devices for conducting elections without reference to the electorate. In one instance this was done with dire results, because it deprived the hon. gentleman who now sits for Athabaska (Mr. Kellner) of one term in this house, and in the other case the former Attorney General, who now adorns the Supreme Court of Canada, with the aid of the present chief justice of Saskatchewan, gave back to another candidate his stolen seat.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I may say to my hon. friend that I am not so familiar with the lady to whom he refers as he appears to be. I never had the pleasure of her acquaintance.

Mr. BENNETT: She was one of the seven sisters.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did you know them all?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I think the hon. leader of the opposition ought also to advertise the two other western provinces as they were during the regime of his friends.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—Saskatchewan and Alberta — repairs and improvements, $10,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I wish to supplement something that was said by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett). He said that the particular part of the Bow river to which he referred was encroaching upon the streets of Calgary. It has done more than that. The Dominion government, I understand, own the boulevard facing the river, and it has been washed away in certain sections. Not only that, but the property alongside is becoming eroded. If it is justifiable to protect the banks of other rivers, I would suggest that a few thousand dollars be spent to put in piling for, say, a quarter of a mile, to confine the river to its proper channel, and so prevent further erosion.

Mr. BENNETT: The protection work at Prince Albert is on the river, I take it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: On the North Saskatchewan river. It is reconstruction work. The original work was built in 1912 and 1916 at a cost of $64,885.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the character of the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Rebuilding with pile work and filling a portion 400 feet long of protection work on the North Saskatchewan river on the waterfront of Prince Albert. District engineer Goodspeed in his estimates for 1928-29 says:

> Some years ago the Dominion government built a pile breastwork or breakwater along the south bank of the Saskatchewan river in the central part of this city. It has stood well, but when the river broke up last spring the ice floes made two considerable breaches in the work. The breastwork is still a real protection to the bank as a whole, but with the two breaches which are now made, next spring's flow of ice might destroy the greater part of the work.

Mr. COOTE: Does the minister think that $10,000 is sufficient for repairs and improvements generally to the harbours and rivers of Saskatchewan and Alberta? I suggest that he include a little more in the supplementary estimates. I desire to mention some work that is being done in High River. I think the minister's engineer has looked over it. It is similar to the work done in Manitoba for protection of towns from floods. The provincial government has given considerable thought to the work, and I think the Dominion government has contributed to it in part. Will the minister continue the policy of contribution? The work I refer to is for the protection of the town from flood. A few years ago the main street was flooded to a depth of three or four feet for days at a time. This is a great hardship, and the cost of constructing the necessary works would be more than such a small municipality could bear. I hope the government will do as they did several years ago—contribute to the cost of this work.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think the Interior department and this department are co-operating with the town along the line suggested by my hon. friend. The amount for this item last year was a little over $4,000. We think $10,000 will be adequate to meet this year's requirements.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—British Columbia—Arrowhead, improvements, $1,100.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The proposed work is to discourage the meandering easterly branch of the Columbia, over the Arrowhead delta, from breaking through and filling up the steamer berth at the Canadian Pacific Arrowhead wharf. It is proposed to build a fence retard across the false channel with a view to inducing the river itself to build up a sand and silt dam and the sand bars back of it. The retard consists of six-foot stakes driven in the ground at one-foot centres.

Item agreed to.

Crooked, Pack and Parsnip rivers, improvements, $3,500.

Mr. BRADY: What is the extent of the work to be done on these rivers?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This work is to facilitate and make less arduous and dangerous the navigation of this waterway for trappers, traders and others going into the upper Peace River country to investigate the possibilities there. The known freight passing down the river in 1925-26 was 100 tons of general freight, supplies and so forth, but the actual amount was probably considerably more. The catch of furs coming out would fall within 20 per cent, either way, of $60,000. The traffic is by open boats, usually with outboard motors attached.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Coote.]

Fraser river: in full and final settlement of claim of N. E. Broley, in connection with contract for dam at Woodward's slough, $11,639.74.

Mr. GARDNER: Explain.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is required in full settlement of the claim of N. E. Broley in connection with a contract for a dam at Woodward's slough. In a memorandum of December 13 the chief engineer recommends the following amounts to be paid: on Broley's claim, $7,038.77; on subcontractor's claim, $4,600.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the nature of the trouble?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The department made a change in the design of work, occasioning a loss to Mr. Broley. We find he sustained a loss of $8,226 due to outlay on construction over and above the amount of the estimate.

Item agreed to.

Fraser river, improvements, $150,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What does this include?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is asked for improvements on the Fraser river as follows:

(1) Sapperton bar—construction of dyke No. 1, $25,000.
(2) Steveston—repairs and extension of Woodward's training wall, $25,000.
(3) Steveston—towards extension of north jetty, approximately 5,000 feet, $100,000.

Mr. COOTE: Is any dredging done there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, not in this item.

Mr. McQUARRIE: These works, I understand, have all been recommended by the resident engineer, and I have no doubt they are necessary. The work being done on the Fraser river is justified. The shipping to the port has very largely increased, as the minister knows, and New Westminster is becoming one of the important ports on the Pacific. Will the minister inform the committee what is the minimum depth of the channel at present and what objective the department is striving for in connection with the channel from New Westminster to the gulf? As the minister no doubt knows, the draught of vessels coming into the ports of the Pacific has very materially increased of late years. The Minister is also aware that there are certain ships which so far have not been able to get into New Westminster for business there. I understand that the objective of the department is and has been to provide a sufficient depth to enable ships which would naturally do business in this port to get in there so as to take out the products, which are being manufactured in New Westminster and on the Fraser river, to the markets of the world. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily, but I desire some information on this matter.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have been able to get a minimum depth of twenty-seven feet, which is sufficient for present requirements. That is our information.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister suggest that twenty-seven feet is the objective? According to my information that is not sufficient for ships which want to get into the port now. The former objective of the department was a thirty-foot channel, and the demand now is for a thirty-five foot channel, which seems to be absolutely necessary. Surely the minister does not say that he considers a twenty-seven-foot channel sufficient for that port. I do not think he intended to make that statement.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am told that the training piers which are being constructed are expected so to guide the course of the river as to scour it out and keep the channel sufficiently clear for purposes of navigation. It is quite true that the demand is for a thirty-five-foot channel, but a twenty-seven-foot channel seems to meet present requirements. I do not think I should go so far as to say that it will suffice for all time, but if the training piers work out as satisfactorily as we hope they will the depth will increase.

Mr. McQUARRIE: More than twenty-seven feet?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The question I asked was as to the objective of the department. I know that the answer given on former occasions was that it was thirty feet, and if the minister is going to cut it down to twenty-seven feet there must be something wrong.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are at twenty-seven feet now, and it will be a matter of experience, to a large extent, as to what amount of scouring will take place and to what they will be increased. We have no doubt that they will increase.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I have been complaining time after time in this house because of the manner in which the works on the Fraser river have been carried on. I have not objected to what has been done; I do not say the department is not accomplishing anything, but I have complained about the delay in giving a sufficiently deep channel for that port, a channel demanded by the citizens in that vicinity and the people who are doing business in the port, and which is warranted by the amount of business available. I have suggested from time to time that a contract should be let to provide a thirty-five foot channel from New Westminster to the gulf. This afternoon the minister explained quite logically that in many cases it was found advantageous to let contracts for works in his department. I am suggesting now that this is a case where a contract should be let to finish up this work, which has already taken so long. I quite understand that the engineers of the department have been working on this matter for many years, and that lately they have been devoting a great deal of attention to it; I realize the study which has been given to the subject by Mr. Cameron, the chief engineer. I think he really does take an interest in this work and that he is endeavouring to do his best. He seems to be a very capable engineer, but I am objecting to the policy of the department, the policy of delay, of waiting to see what results will be produced by the construction of certain works. All the engineers have said that there are no engineering difficulties in the way of providing a satisfactory channel from New Westminster to the gulf. There are hon. members of this house who have visited New Westminster and who have gone from there to the gulf; they know the amount of business offering; they know the advantages of the port, the details of which I am not going into at present. I am very much surprised that the minister should be content with the results so far attained, and I impress upon him the fact that the people out there are not going to be satisfied when they learn that he thinks a twenty-seven foot channel is sufficient for the needs of the port.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend misunderstood me.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister did not mean that? I do not think he really did mean what he said, but he must realize the necessity for a channel deeper than that.

Then there is another matter which I have mentioned from time to time in this house and to which no particular attention has been given; I refer to the dredge 303. That is a very old dredge which has been operating for some 25 or 30 years; it is a suction dredge, sucking up sand and water into its hold and then taking that sand and water to the gulf and discharging it. I do not know what the engineering department think about dredge 303, but certainly the opinion of the people of that district seems to be unanimous that it has outlived its usefulness, if it ever had any. There is another type of dredge which has done valuable work in connection with the channel of that river; I refer to the dredge King Edward. Again I am going to suggest to the minister that some investigation should be made into that matter. I am not suggesting that the one dredge, the King Edward, will be sufficient, but I do say that the dredge 303 should be replaced by a modern, up-to-date dredge of the King Edward type. I also understand there has been some kind of investigation conducted into the matter of dredge 303 by a special investigator sent out by the department. According to my information the investigator did his work in March of this year, and I should like to know if any report has been made, the nature of that report and what action is going to be taken in regard to it.

Then there is one other matter I should like to mention, in regard to the compensation for Sunday work to be allowed the employees working on the Fraser river dredges. There is an order in council which provides that no employee of the Dominion government shall be employed on Sunday except in cases of necessity, and that in such cases compensation shall be provided. With regard to the men employed on the Fraser river dredges, no compensation has been allowed for this Sunday work. I know the matter has been before the department several times; various suggestions have been made but nothing has been done to meet the situation. I would ask the minister whether he does not think it about time that this matter was settled. If the men cannot have their Sundays off at least they should be given compensation for that extra work.

Mr. COOTE: I have very pleasant recollections of a visit to British Columbia last summer and a trip over a short part of the Fraser river. I can bear witness to this fact, at any rate, that the people of New Westminster are very anxious that they should have a deeper channel to the ocean. I suggest that the minister have his engineers report to him on the cost of providing a somewhat deeper channel from New Westminster than exists at present, so that at least a large number of the vessels which call at Pacific coast ports would be able to reach New Westminster. I am interested in the question because I think it would be of advantage to the Canadian National Railways to have a terminal elevator built at Port Mann. The larger portion of the shipments would go via Vancouver, but I think a large part could be handled at Port Mann. It would be a good idea if the minister would have an examination made as to the cost of deepening the channel.

[Mr. McQuarrie.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: With regard to the remark made by the member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie), as to the twenty-seven foot channel, I would say that the department has a channel of twenty-seven feet, having deepened it from seventeen or eighteen feet. As I explained, that is not our objective; we have been getting it deeper all the time, and it is expected that the twenty-seven foot channel will be scoured to a greater depth through the action of the training piers. My hon. friend surely does not think that we have not had engineers examining this situation. This vote provides $25,000 for the construction of dyke No. 1, $25,000 for repairs and extension of Woodward's training wall, and $100,000 for the extension of the north jetty approximately 5,000 feet. There has already been an expenditure on the Steveston jetty of $819,642, and with what we have in contemplation, while it is not our objective, we think this district of the country is being treated very liberally. We know that expenditures must be made, as this is an important point, but I am rather surprised to hear my friend from New Westminster complain that we are not going rapidly enough. I think we have been doing very well.

With regard to the question of a day off for the men working on the dredges. They all have their Sundays off with the exception of the cook, the fireman and the watchman. These men are engaged for full time, and I do not know how we could dispense with the services of any one of them on Sundays.

We are proceeding as expeditiously as possible with the important work that is necessary at this point, and we think we are doing very well.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I understand there has been difficulty in adjusting matters so that these men would get their Sundays off.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Which men do you refer to?

Mr. McQUARRIE: The ones who are not getting their Sundays off. I am not referring to the ones who do get their Sundays off; naturally they do not complain.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They all get their Sundays off except these three.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The men who do not get their Sundays off should receive some compensation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They do, in their salaries.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I assume the minister knows the provision of order in council P.C. 1537, which contains the following provisions:

1. That no employee of the Dominion government should be required to work on Sunday except in circumstances of emergency or necessity.
2. That in the case of any such employee who by reason of emergency or necessity is required to work on Sunday, he shall be allowed, in substitution, during the next six days of such work, a compensatory period of rest of twenty-four consecutive hours.
3. That no exceptions to the foregoing principle shall be allowed except by departmental authority, and then only in cases where there may be no substitute help available to perform the duties which are involved.

It cannot be suggested that there is no substitute help available, because there will be when the dredge is in port. I am suggesting to the minister that, in all fairness to these men, when they work on Sundays they should receive extra compensation.

Mr. DUSSAULT: I am very much surprised at the remarks of my hon. friend from New Westminster. When I hear of a salary of $2,220 for a master of a dredge, I am very much surprised that my friend's electors are not satisfied with it. In our district they would work sixteen hours a day through the week and eight hours on Sunday for that salary.

Mr. ADSHEAD: And break the sabbath?

Mr. DUSSAULT: We are not Jews in our district.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Do I understand from the minister that he will give consideration to that matter?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to give consideration to anything, no matter how unreasonable it may be. I would say to my hon. friend that I do not believe there is a ship sailing or working on any water in this country on which the men have Sundays off. Does my hon. friend seriously suggest that we should have another cook, watchman and fireman on Sunday, or is the answer to his question to be: Give them more pay? These men are well paid now, and I am told that there is not a ship which does what he suggests should be done. If he can name any I shall be glad to hear him do so.

An hon. MEMBER: Does he do it himself?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The other men are given their Sundays off, which is very different from what is done in other parts of the country and different from the practice on board ship. On board ship the men work on Sundays as a usual thing, but on these dredges they are allowed to have that day off.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister, in taking the stand he does, makes it quite obvious that there can be no blame attached to anybody else in connection with this matter. This subject has been under discussion for some time. It does not originate with me and the minister knows that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It does not originate entirely with me.

Mr. McQUARRIE: When the minister makes statements like those he made a few moments ago, he is simply forgetting himself. He is getting excited. There is no necessity at all for that. That is not the way for a minister to perform. I have brought this matter up at the request of an organization in New Westminster, which has met the minister, which has met the deputy minister, which has been making representations for months about this particular matter. Then the minister asks: Do I suggest this? Do I suggest that? I am not suggesting anything. I tell the minister that these men expect that they will be treated in accordance with the law. I brought this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister some two years ago and he said that he would give instructions that the provisions of the order in council should be complied with. I think he did that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are being complied with.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The intention is quite clear under that order in council that employees of the Dominion government should get Sundays off.

Mr. CANNON: If the cook is gone, how will the rest of the crew eat on Sunday?

Mr. McQUARRIE: That is very clever. The Solicitor General is always very clever.

Mr. CANNON: That is not clever; it is only common sense.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I am quite sure he eats enough anyway. The matter of compensation was discussed by myself with the deputy minister. There was no intimation that that was unreasonable at all. What I say to the minister now I say on the strength of representations which have been made by the Amalgamated Civil Servants' Association of New Westminster, who have had this matter in hand. I am not suggesting anything to him. I am conveying to him suggestions which have been by this association and by the men who are affected, and I say that in all fairness they are entitled to consideration. The minister says: Oh, yes, I am willing to consider anything, no matter how unreasonable it may happen to be. I do not think that is a fair way of looking at the matter, and I do not think it is carrying out the promise which the Prime Minister made two years ago, that the provisions of the order in council should be lived up to.

There is another matter to which I referred, namely, the report of the investigating officer sent out there to inquire into the operations of dredge 303.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I did not answer my hon. friend with regard to that; I am sorry. The report has been received and it is receiving the consideration of the chief engineer at the present time.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is it possible to get a copy of that report?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I fancy so, but before it is handed out I should like to have an opportunity of having it considered by the government.

Mr. McQUARRIE: At present it is not available?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally (British Columbia)—repairs and improvements, $65,000.

Mr. FRASER: How much of last year's vote under this heading was spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $58,901 to the 31st March, 1928.

Mr. ESLING: I wish to justify an appeal for necessary and reasonable expenditures, not for the construction but for the repair of wharves in my district, and to do so I want to make a comparison between what the older settlers put up with and the inducements which are offered to the newcomer. Prospective settlers are invited to come to Canada and the government provides them with farms, and assistance to the extent of $7,500 for each family, this amount to be repayable in twenty-five years with interest at five per cent. For families engaging in farm work there is a free grant by way of a portion of the passage money, and that is best emphasized in the case of an ordinary family of five, say three adults and two children. To-day they can reach a Canadian point, say Winnipeg, for $67.50 as compared with 563, which was the rate for a family of the same size which came out to Canada in the earlier days. That is a saving of $495.50. I say this simply by way of preface to the remark that in my district I have one thousand miles of lake and shore line behind which there are many communities of good, substantial British settlers who came to the Kootenay country, who purchased land for as high as $250 to $300 an acre, who paid as much more for clearing it, who planted orchards, built homes and have thereby been the means of creating very substantial communities which make substantial contributions by way of provincial taxes. The only access which these people have to the outside world is by steamer, and for that purpose they must have wharves or landing places for the shipment of their fruit and the receipt of their freight. They are not asking for new wharves.

I remember in justifying expenditures for the citadel and Rideau Hall last year and this year the Minister of Finance said that during the war and since then very little money had been spent on those properties and that therefore repairs were necessary. Such is the case also in the Kootenay district. There has been practically no money spent in that district since the war and all we ask is the repair of those wharves by replacing the planking, by driving some new piling here and there and making them safe. I have under my hand certain items. First of all, there are in the estimates just three items totalling $4,000 for my district. I have some twenty-two items of repairs to wharves, expenditures not asked for by a member or by the settlers only, but recommended by the government's own district engineer. He has presented to the Department of Public Works a list of estimates of repairs to some twenty-two wharves at a cost averaging from $85 up. In some cases new planking is all that is necessary. Among the various items is one for $8,000, to cover the replacement of the present landing place at a settlement called Ginol. The Minister of Health, who comes from British Columbia, knows the needs of West Kootenay. He has assured the settlers that he is behind all projects for the advancement and the needs of West Kootenay. He has written to the people of Ginol, saying that an item for the repair of this wharf or landing place will be considered in the supplementary estimates. All I ask of the minister and of the government is fair and reasonable expenditure by way of repairs, knowing full well, as the government must, that these settlers have gone in, and put in the best years of their lives and all their savings. Their conditions are vastly different from the inducements that are held out to the new settlers coming into British Columbia. May I ask the Minister of Public Works simply to give us fair and reasonable consideration in the expenditures for wharves in these places that are without needed accommodation.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is a correction I should like to make, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the item for Gillies Bay. The recommendation is that a float be constructed, and this is being provided for instead of the wharf repairs, and I would ask the Minister of Finance to move that the item for Gillies Bay wharf repairs, $4,000, be struck out.

Mr. ROBB: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Motion agreed to.

Old Massett—wharf repairs, $3,800.

Mr. BRADY: It is five minutes to eleven, Mr. Chairman. I have already spoken on the needs of northern and central British Columbia in the matter of public works, and I wish now to take up another matter. I know that anything I say now will probably not avail one iota. Candidly, I do not expect that anything I have done in the matter of presenting the need for public works in my constituency, or anything I may say, will bring much reward—not to myself, but to the people concerned. But I do not wish these estimates to go through to-night without taking at least fifteen minutes to present to the house certain facts that peculiarly relate to conditions in western Canada. I feel very keenly my position as a member of the House of Commons. Having given twenty years of my life to the cause of education, believing that there is something greater than party, something greater even than personal aggrandizement; that the people's needs are above every other consideration, I trust that I shall be given the opportunity to say something which I have refrained from saying for at least the two solid years I have been here. I am not going to condemn the government; far from it. I shall not condemn the Minister of Public Works, but I do condemn the system we are following to-day in this young country which has the heritage of ages to look back to, and at least we should do something that will indicate no lack of concern with the building up of Canada as it ought to be built up to-day. Like other hon. members who have been here since the 18th of January, I should like to get home, but there is something greater than family ties. One who represents the people is in duty bound to stand to that post to the last, and he must not forget the people in thinking of himself.

As a preamble to what I wish to say, I desire to quote a paragraph which I saw in the Ottawa Citizen to-night. I read there two little things that I thought were worth recording, written probably by the dozen of our journalists, and a man whose judgment and whose perspicuity I should think is not to be questioned. Here is what he says:

> If people who sign petitions knew how little influence they exert in parliament, they would never go to the physical exertion involved in signing them. They are placed on the table, deposited for a certain time in the vaults, and then carted away to the junk heap. Parliamentary experience is that it is quite possible to get up a petition for anything, and those who indulge in it only engage in a process of industrious futility.

When I think of the petitions which I have had in my possession from British Columbia, when I think of the labour, the physical exertion, yes, even the agony these pioneers went through in the depth of winter, travelling hundreds of miles where no roads exist, to procure the signature of petitioners in order that their needs might be presented to parliament, I cannot help feeling, particularly after reading the item to which I have referred, that education is necessary even in this parliamentary assembly; because these petitions which are presented to parliament should not be treated disrespectfully, should not be regarded as trivial. They represent the heart searchings, the desires and the hopes of the people who have signed them. As it is now eleven o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I shall continue my remarks on some other occasion.

Progress reported.

NEW EDINBURGH MILLS PROPERTY

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO RETURN TABLED

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): May I, with the unanimous consent of the house, ask the Minister of Public Works if he would be good enough to supplement an incomplete return which he has brought down? We are getting very close to the end of the session, and I should like to have these further details to-morrow if possible. I wish to have the details of figures which are not attached to the appraisal which is in this return regarding the New Edinburgh mills. I should like the document showing the lease of Green Island, also the particulars of water rights attached to that property. These details should have been included in the return, but apparently were overlooked.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to supply my hon. friend with everything we have.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Saturday, May 26, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Eleventh report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Brown (for Mr. Parent).

PRIVATE BILLS

REFUNDING OF CHARGES

Mr. L. H. JELLIFF (Lethbridge) moved:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the eleventh report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, and with the usual practice in such cases, the additional charge paid on the following private bills from the Senate be refunded, viz.:

Bill No. 317 (letter G9 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of Helena Martyniuk."

Bill No. 320 (letter J9 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of Robert Anderson Traill."

Bill No. 332 (letter U9 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of Gabrielle Norton."

Bill No. 334 (letter W9 of the Senate) intituled: "An act for the relief of Charles St. Clair Parsons."

Bill No. 337 (letter Z9 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of Harold Wilfrid Vivian Vincent Turner."

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Will the hon. gentleman who sponsors this resolution explain on what ground this refund of fees is made?

Mr. JELLIFF: I am not a member of the miscellaneous private bills committee, but I understand that these bills were filed in the Senate, and were heard and passed upon there, after the time limit for the presentation of petitions to this house had expired. I understand that in some of the cases involved the applicants for divorce are very poor people who were unable to pay the deposit.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Stevens.]

NIAGARA FALLS MEMORIAL BRIDGE

Mr. G. H. PETTIT (Welland) moved:

That, at it appears by the minutes of the proceedings of the Senate, page 438, that the preamble of Bill No. 14, an act to incorporate Niagara Falls Memorial Bridge Company, was reported as "not proven", the fee and charges paid on the said bill be refunded, less the cost of printing and translating the same.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES' SALARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): In view of the statements made in the press to the effect that the report of the special committee on judges' salaries is not to be considered this year, I would like to ask the government whether the report will be considered before parliament prorogues.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am afraid my hon. friend will have to wait and see.

PACIFIC CABLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I would like to ask the Prime Minister what grounds there are for the report which appears in the press that the Pacific cable has been sold to the Eastern Telegraph Company, that a meeting was held in London attended by a representative of the Canadian government, and that Canada acquiesced in the sale. Would the Prime Minister tell us if that is true, and if so the extent of this sale and purchase by the Eastern Telegraph Company?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): There have been negotiations in London with respect to the Pacific cable, but my understanding is that no final conclusion has been reached. As soon as the government are in a position to intimate to the house any facts with respect to these negotiations I shall have pleasure in seeing that they are made known.

APPLICATION OF DUMPING DUTY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria): I desire to ask the government a question based on the following: On May 15 the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser) was reported in Hansard at page 3054 as having asked the Prime Minister this question:

Are you going to put into effect another order in council to-morrow as you state you have power to do?

To the question the Prime Minister replied:

Yes, the very minute the minister comes to council and gives us reasonable grounds for putting that order into effect the governor in council will act on the advice of the minister.

On May 23, at page 3302 of Hansard, the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber), referring to the condition of the strawberry market in British Columbia, is reported as follows:

I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has discussed the matter with the Minister of National Revenue and whether he has complied with the request of these growers. If not, does he intend to do so?

The Minister of Agriculture admitted the receipt of certain telegrams from strawberry growers in British Columbia asking for valuation for duty on imported strawberries, and said:

I understand that under the existing law we have no authority to apply the dumping duty to any products carrying specific duties.

In view of these statements will the government relieve the anxiety of the fruit, vegetable and egg producers in the province of British Columbia and elsewhere by stating why action has not been taken as promised?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend's question is so long that apparently he was unable to present it without referring to his notes. I shall have to ask him to allow me to read it over and give him an answer on Monday.

IMPORTATION OF CATTLE FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the government if the minister in charge of the matter will lay upon the table the order in council dealing with the admission into Canada of cattle in bond for grazing?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am informed that the Minister of National Revenue has to do with the matter, and I will direct his attention to this request.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF PRIVATE AND PUBLIC BILLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): One day last week the Minister of Railways was good enough to say that he would submit to the government my request that they take over as a government measure Bill No. 63, which is an act to amend the Railway Act in regard to the investigation of subsidiary companies. I would like to ask the minister if he has submitted this request, as promised, and if so, what action has been taken?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I understand that my hon. friend's question has reference to a public bill. My hon. friend will remember that during the course of the consideration of public and private bills I intimated that several members of the house had asked that preference be given to their bills, and that to avoid any discrimination I had declined, on behalf of the government, to accede to those requests, and I also stated that the rule of no discrimination would continue to be followed. As far as I am aware it has been followed up to the present time, and it is the procedure which the government will wish to follow. If any public bill can be reached in the regular order, of course it will be the desire of the government to have it so reached, but it would not be fair to hon. members of the house generally if the bill of any one member were to receive consideration which is denied the bills of other members similarly situated.

Mr. GEARY: I would like to pursue that a little further, because I think the Prime Minister did not quite catch the drift of my question. I do not desire for a moment to secure a place out of turn, but I did suggest to the Minister of Railways that since this bill seeks to amend a public statute, the Railway Act, he might consider recommending to the government that it be taken up as a government measure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That comes to very much the same thing; there are two or three other measures in the nature of public or private bills and private resolutions which members have asked the government to take over as government measures, and to have so considered. What my hon. friend now suggests is a round about way of attaining what he first had in mind when he made the request.

Mr. GEARY: I do not think I made any request that it be taken out of its turn.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That may be so.

Mr. GEARY: There are five proposed amendments to the Railway Act, and I think the Minister of Railways might consider taking them up as government measures.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Minister of Railways has had the matter under consideration, but my hon. friend will realize that he is not in a position to state what takes place in council.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the Prime Minister consider the advancement, in some way, of the divorce court bill which comes from the Senate, and which is of very great interest to the house and to the country?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is another bill in exactly the same position.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that bill has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But it is a public bill; it is not what might be called a government measure. It is quite possible that that measure will be reached this session in the regular course of procedure.

I might say to my hon. friend that I have suggested and would again suggest to the whips of the different parties that they get together with a view to seeing if some agreement cannot be reached between the different groups in the house whereby these public and private bills in which hon. members are interested may be considered without unnecessary blocking in relation to other measures on the part of members of different groups. I do not see that it is possible for the government, by giving extra time for the consideration of private bills or public bills, ever to hope to have these bills reached if, when particular bills are before the house, hon. members are going to make it a point of seeing that they are talked out. Now we have reached a point in the session when I think the whips of the parties should be able to reach some agreement whereby all the measures which hon. members may wish to have considered will be assured of consideration within a limited time, and if that can be done the government will seek in some way to facilitate their consideration.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Vancouver-Burrard): I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he would be good enough to see whether a return relating to the post office at Sutton, Quebec, is ready.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): I received the papers at my office about one o'clock to-day, and I will endeavour to have them here on Monday. They will have to go from my department to the office of the Secretary of State, and from there to the house.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

British Columbia—harbours and rivers—Old Massett—wharf repairs, $3,800.

Mr. BRADY: I wish to supplement what I was saying last night regarding the Public Works department in British Columbia. As a preface to what I have to say I would like to read an article from the Ottawa Citizen of last evening:

> If both political parties had political wisdom, they would, in my judgment, come to an agreement by some binding pledge, to put an end forever to patronage, and free themselves as members from all worry and annoyance at the hands of place hunters. Candidates could then stand on their personal merits, on the merits of their party, their interest in their constituencies, in the welfare of the country at large, and the people would vote for them honestly on those considerations only. We would not then witness the painful exhibitions that I have seen of defeated candidates boasting that, though defeated, the patronage is still in their hands, because their party had won the election.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to get this article before the committee. I fail to understand why it is that representatives of constituencies have placed upon them the duty of going through the country investigating requests made by the people in the matter of public works. They are put to great expense and have to travel very often in the most inclement weather, as it is frequently during the winter months that the members must travel. They travel through the country and go to great pains to get the facts to present to parliament, and then they come here only to discover that anything they say has no possible chance of having any attention paid to it, for the simple reason that they are not members or supporters of the government in power.

Last December I visited the northern section of British Columbia, putting in three weeks there under great hardship and incurring considerable expense. I went there to find out just what the people needed, and to satisfy myself that I was working in accord with the government engineer, I took a trip to Victoria, six hundred miles away, and presented to him what the people had given to me. I told him that I did not wish to advocate anything which he did not consider was right and proper. I hold in my hand a letter from the federal engineer, in which he says that the various public works that I asked for receive his absolute support. He has the following to say in the last paragraph:

If there are any other items which you consider it necessary to include in these estimates I shall be pleased to have a list of them at your convenience.

But what do I find? I find, Mr. Chairman and members of this committee, that after going to every possible care and trouble, and presenting to the Minister of Public Works these requests for the northern and central parts of British Columbia, when the estimates are brought down there is only one item for wharf repairs at Old Massett. The federal engineer's report on necessary public works showed an expenditure of $79,365, not counting $30,000 for river improvements and snag boat operations on some of the rivers there. But what do I find? I find that in this constituency of Skeena, which has an immense Pacific seacoast and where is carried on the largest fishing industry in the whole of Canada, their great need for wharves and roads has been entirely overlooked.

The people of Canada are asking the same question that I am going to ask. Is it right that the most important department in the whole of the government's activities, the Department of Public Works, should be placed under political patronage? Is it possible, because a member happens to come from a constituency once Liberal or Conservative, that the people are to be penalized for that? Surely the Department of Public Works should be outside the realm of politics altogether. If the government realize the importance of building up our young country, I cannot see why they should not take the steps that are necessary.

In reading the report of the Ontario Department of Health for 1928 I find that out of 57,521 official certificates issued last year, 61 per cent were issued for emigration purposes. That means that 34,000 young Canadians left this province to go into the United States. In British Columbia we are faced with great problems. We have the orient right at our door; we find that a seepage is steadily going on there, and the government is doing very little to hold our own people in the country.

A wharf costing only four or five hundred dollars is denied because the government, to my mind, seemingly lack vision, when they think that intelligent people will be won over and brought to their knees in submission to any party in power who refuse to give them what they are entitled to.

Why should a member of parliament be obligated to come here asking for these things, when there is a federal engineer appointed by the government to send in reports on necessary public works? We are absolutely like children when we come to the major elements of government. Why should a member of parliament, I say again, have to come here and beg, as if it were a personal favour, for what is of national importance? Surely a government which, by being placed in power, has received the highest gift which a nation can bestow upon it, should be over and above party interests and look for the good of the country from east to west.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. BRADY: I hear an hon. gentleman from the old province of Quebec saying, "hear, hear." I am proud to have that "hear, hear;" but I would be much prouder and happier if I thought the province of Quebec joined with me in my supplication that the public works department be taken outside of political patronage.

An hon. MEMBER: It is.

Mr. BRADY: It is not, I am sorry. I do not want to go into personalities, but when the Deputy Minister of Public Works was passing through British Columbia last year, when he came into the town of Prince Rupert —and I was there—to whom did he go? Did he come and ask the representative to consult with him? No, he went to those that I know are not working as they ought to work over and above party interests. I have never yet accused and I shall never accuse a man unless I am on sound principles, but I know that many necessary public works which are for the building up of that young province, which are works supported by Liberals and Conservatives, or, in other words, by the people, have to be recommended by one who no longer sits in this parliamentary assembly. We are handing down a legacy of hate instead of a legacy of peace and of hope. As long as we continue in the mood we are in to-day where we are passing every paltry little public work as a bouquet for the member to go back and say to his constituents: "See what I got for you," we are doing great injury to the future of Canada. Is there any intelligent man who to-day thinks that this is going to continue? It will not. The hour must come when we shall have to change our ways and take out of the realm of politics what is for the nation's good.

Last winter at the request of three or four people I went sixty miles away over the waters in order that I might discover their needs. I went into a storm, the worst that had struck the Pacific coast for years. I was out on the water storm-tossed for two days and nights, never knowing whether the boat would reach land or not. Our boat was swept by the stormy seas; we were there baling out tons of water at midnight. What for? Hon. members may say: you are only posing. I would not be in the house to-day if I were posing. When I arrived at my destination I found a family that had been without supplies for days. I found them, mother and children, cut off from every chance of getting in touch with any of their fellowmen and this at the festive season of Christmas.

The day is coming when throughout the length and breadth of Canada truth will prevail. It will come in spite of every material force that ever man put into execution. It is coming because the heart of the people is true and they know the truth when they hear it. No longer can members of the government go through the length and breadth of Canada and tell the people about the misdeeds of their opponents. Why should we talk about what the other party did? Let us get rid of the defects of the past and let us stand upon a common platform. Surely the Liberal party, represented by hon. gentlemen opposite, and the Conservative party, represented by hon. gentlemen on this side of the house, have major platforms, big principles upon which they can go to the country, and we should leave out the trivial things that we hear so much about.

I want to ask the government and particularly the Minister of Public Works this question. I have brought forward not one but several public works that I believe are necessary. Do they honestly believe that those public works which I have presented this year are required? British Columbia will one day be the pride of Canada' because her wealth in natural resources is beyond the dreams of human possibility. Do they believe that because British Columbia is separated from the rest of Canada by the great Rocky mountains, it is not to be considered when public works and public development are under consideration? Surely British Columbia, which is now coming forward so strongly and capably, is entitled to consideration. A father is bound to look to the interests of his children; a city is bound to see to the health and welfare of its citizens, and I say that the federal government, which has taken upon its shoulders the Public Works department, should do what is essential. I cannot prove it, but I feel sure that there are in these estimates that we are now passing millions of dollars that it is not essential to expend. and this money should be spent throughout Canada where public works are absolutely essential. You know it, Mr. Chairman, and I know it. What is going to be the end of all this? The end is very evident. The people of Canada to-day are becoming educated to this extent, that they recognize merit and truth, and can separate it from falsehood and hypocrisy, and until the government treats this matter of public works differently, and takes each province and each constituency on its merits, regardless of how it may have voted, and gets the federal engineers to give an honest report as to the public works that are essential, we are only blinding ourselves and are guilty of folly. I come to this House of Commons with a motive which I think no man can challenge There is no man who can challenge my love of the people and my regard for their welfare. We all probably feel that way, but I can say this, that I can go back to my constituency feeling assured that I have done my duty faithfully to the people, even though the government may turn deaf ears to my presentations and the needs of the people who are entitled to be heard.

How can the government answer this question? Why did they remove from the estimates the appropriation put in for a float for the fishermen at Prince Rupert? Why was that taken out of the estimates? First, why was it put in? We see there a dilemma. If the floats were necessary in the first place, they are doubly and trebly necessary now. The port of Prince Rupert is the largest fishing port on the North American continent, and hon. gentlemen know it. We find that of the output of salmon and halibut for the whole of Canada, the port of Prince Rupert exports over sixty per cent. Now I want to know why the government took out of the estimates that appropriation, especially when to-day the fishing fleet at Prince Rupert has increased three-fold. I have photographs here, showing the greatest congestion at that port. I ask again, why was that appropriation taken out of the estimates?

Some of the eastern members have but a vague idea of the port of Prince Rupert. It is unfortunately true that the people of the east cannot travel as much as they should to the west, but that port, I can tell hon. gentlemen, is growing rapidly, and despite the treatment which it is getting at the hands of this government to-day I have faith enough to believe that the port of Prince Rupert will become a leading Pacific port. The people of British Columbia are a people brought up among the great mountains that rear their tops to heaven, and if you study the history of the world, you will find that the mountaineers have always been the great leaders in every forward move of civilization. So I would say to the government now, please forget this little thing of trying to get even. Just forget it and rise to the height to which you ought to rise, namely, to a broad vision of the welfare of the whole people, and where it is necessary that money be expended on public works, let the expenditures be made for the good of the country at large, regardless of whether the constituency is represented by a Progressive, a Conservative or a Liberal.

Mr. POULIOT: I have listened with close attention to the strong plea made by my hon. friend from Skeena. I differ from him, however, because I do not believe that the estimates are drafted in such a partisan way as he complains of, because otherwise there would have been no item of $500,000 for Toronto, which is not represented in this house by any Liberal member. There are also other items in the estimates for counties which are represented by members of the opposition in this house. I understood my hon. friend from Skeena to say that the appropriations in the estimates are presented to members on the government side as if they were bouquets for them to present to their electors after the close of the session. Is the hon. member complaining of that?

Mr. BRADY: I do not complain about money being expended where it is necessary, but the money should be expended because the work in question is a work of merit, and no member should look upon an appropriation as a bouquet handed over to him. But many of them do, because I have heard them say, and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will agree with me, "I got this for you, and I got that for you." Is that true or not?

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend is asking for a bouquet for himself perhaps.

Mr. BRADY: No, sir, no bouquet for me.

Mr. ROBINSON: If the hon. member for Temiscouata is answering for the Minister of Public Works, will he tell the committee why the item that was in the estimates last year for the fishermen's float at Prince Rupert has been taken out of the estimates?

Mr. POULIOT: But my hon. friend from Skeena spoke of so many things that I forgot his main point.

Mr. BRADY: I should like to get squarely from the minister why this item was taken out of the estimates.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not imagine the item has been in the estimates while I have been in charge of the department.

Mr. BRADY: Yes, it was.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If so, I would not have heard complaints about nothing being in the estimates for Skeena, complaints that are made every session when the British Columbia votes are under consideration. I take it that this must have been some time ago.

Mr. BRADY: No, sir.

Mr. ELLIOTT: According to the reports received by the department, there is a difference of opinion among the fishermen as to what is the proper location for the float at Skeena. Probably that is the main reason why further progress has not been made in this connection. I am surprised at my hon. friend, who I know is very serious and would not for the world misrepresent any hon. gentleman, particularly members of the government—I am surprised, I say, at his asking if the government do believe in British Columbia and that western section of Canada. Certainly every member of the government entertains that belief, and they feel that they have done fairly well by that section of the Dominion. He will find that of the $539,000 for British Columbia, not one dollar is being spent in a Liberal riding.

An hon. MEMBER: It is hard to find any Liberal members from British Columbia.

Mr. ELLIOTT: According to my hon. friend's argument, if there were no Liberal members from British Columbia the province would get nothing. I think my hon. friend realizes that British Columbia has fared very well. His suggestion as to political patronage entering into these estimates has, I think, been conclusively answered by my hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot). There are supplementary estimates coming, but I am not in a position to say whether the ridings that are not represented by government supporters will fare better in those supplementaries than they have in the main estimates. Up to the present, however, the government has done very well for my hon. friend's riding and the other ridings in British Columbia, and it intends to continue to treat the province fairly in spite of the criticisms of my hon. friend.

Mr. BRADY: The appropriation of $15,000 appeared in the main estimates for 1925. The appropriation for the Stewart wharf was likewise included. Both were taken out. The minister's answer to me is similar to that which he has given to other members, but it is not convincing. It would be far from me to say that as a general rule the Public Works department does not stretch out to embrace all the provinces, but the fact remains that these absolutely essential appropriations were discontinued. The minister tells me that the reports he received disclose a difference of opinion amongst the fishermen regarding the location of the float. I ask the minister for the source of his information and for the names of the parties.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the report received from the district engineer. I may tell my hon. friend that the proportion of the present votes for British Columbia to the total estimates compares very favourably with the figures of other years. In my opinion this fact alone fully answers my hon. friend's criticism.

Mr. BRADY: I want to get this matter cleared up, Mr. Chairman. The Minister of Public Works says that he has done more for British Columbia than what was done in past years. That may be so. But this does not explain why the appropriation was withdrawn, for to say that his action was based on a report that a few of the fishermen were in doubt about the location of the float is by no means an adequate explanation. The fishing industry is very important to Canada, and should be encouraged. The minister placed the onus on the federal engineer in Victoria. I know a little about the sources of information, I wish the committee to consider this: I am the representative of the people of my riding, Liberal and Conservative, labour and commercial, and they have come to me and requested that the appropriation should be reinstated in the estimates. Do you, sir, or does any other member of the committee think that I, who for years taught the sons and daughters of these people, would degrade myself by putting forward something that I had not thoroughly examined? Yet my judgment and my integrity are apparently of no account to the Minister of Public Works or his department in comparison with the other sources of information to which he refers. Surely this is not in accord with the principles of democratic government. Then take another matter, the post office in Prince Rupert. The accommodation is a farce. The people of the city were opposed to renewing the lease of the premises, and yet their views were disregarded. Why? As to the float, the fishermen have requested that it be built, and all the business people of the city, including the board of trade—and they are mostly Liberals—have supported that request. Yet nothing is done. There may be an appropriation for the work in the supplementaries; I know not; but I do contend that it is of vital import to the people who are building up this country and adding to its revenue that they should be given proper accommodation, and I cannot see any reason why this float should not be built. Does the minister think that I am speaking merely for the pleasure of doing so? I went to Victoria, travelling 600 miles odd, to interview the federal engineer. I went at my own expense and in my own time so that I might get the engineer to give me an idea of the situation in order that I might come to Ottawa feeling that at least I had gone to the trouble of presenting things rightly. And what did he tell me? The federal engineer told me exactly what I have stated to the minister, namely, that certain works were necessary. I have a list of these works. First, there is Bella Coola: for wharf repairs $6,700 is required. Then Digby island, repairs to approach, $2,600; Hartley bay, wharf, $4,600; New Massett, wharf repairs, $2,050; Old Massett—that is the one that appears in the estimates here; Port Clements, $715; Prince Rupert floats, $16,000; Queen Charlotte city, proposed wharf repairs, $4,000; Queen Charlotte city, proposed repairs, $1,900; and Stewart, extension to the proposed wharf $38,000.

In addition to these I gave to the minister a list of other necessary public works that involved my going hundreds of miles—

Mr. ELLIOTT: Can my hon. friend give us any information as to the location—

Mr. BRADY: Yes, I shall tell you.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —on which the people would be agreed?

Mr. BRADY: The people are agreed that the north end of the present drydock is a perfect natural location, easily within reach of the city and sufficiently sheltered to enable a wharf to be put up there. But they object to Seal cove. I went there myself and I know something about the place. There is no road and on dark nights it would be dangerous to pass through the channel to the proposed site. The fishermen object to going so far away from the city.

I do not wish to elaborate this, but I would point out to the minister that I went to Victoria for the purpose of getting from the federal engineer a plan of the proposed work to be built at Seal cove. I agree with the minister that there was a doubt as to which site was preferable. Cow bay or Seal cove, but that was a matter that could have been easily adjusted. The point was that the floats were needed. So long as it was understood by the federal government and the provincial and municipal authorities that the work was needed, the site was not at all a question to worry about.

I put in some further estimates: Float at Metlakahtla, an Indian fishing village, where there is no float at all. Last year, two Indians were reported drowned going to get their boat, a storm having arisen. That would cost $1,200. Clearing Whitesail and Ootsa rivers: all that is needed here is $2,000; for removal of five little log jams, that are there and give portage of 238 miles of the finest lake water that Canada possesses. All round these lakes there are farmers, and people are going in to build up the country. Next on the list are floats for Francois lake. If hon. members here realized what a heritage British Columbia is, what a wonderful country is there, what it is going to be, and the increasing numbers of people who are going into that country, they would be astonished; even the people of old Ontario who live by the mighty St. Lawrence would open their eyes in wonder. It is indeed a wonderful country—wonderful in the extent of its fertility, its beauty, and its splendid water transportation. We ask for five little floats, not costing $100 each, to be placed along the Francois lake, so that farmers may come from Nadina which is sixty miles away. Those farmers are obliged to transport their produce sixty miles along a poor road, whereas all they would have to do would be to go down to the water's edge to a little wharf and go sixty miles upstream at no small cost. Then there is needed a float at Allison harbour, as well as repairs to the wharf at Silver City, Alice Arm; a breakwater at Oona river and a warehouse and wharf at Aiyansh.

I have travelled the length and breadth of Canada, visiting Ontario and Quebec last year at personal cost of time and money. I wanted to get in touch with the east in order that I might translate their message to the west. The people of the east and the government, as a whole are not aware of the greatness, the richness and the opportunities afforded for settlement in central British Columbia. Why should a paltry thousand dollars be refused that country? I went through my constituency last winter; I was away from home for weeks: for what purpose? That I might stand here with conviction and tell exactly what the country needs. I have stood in the streets of Ottawa and I take a pride in our capital, as every Canadian does. But I say that the greatest monuments, the noblest works of beauty that any government can help to erect are happy homes in these lovely valleys and fertile fields throughout Canada. That is the monument I wish to see built and it is not the monument that is being put up today. I do not want to press the Minister of Public Works. He has always been courteous to me. He is a gentleman whom everyone can respect, and it is not his fault entirely that something is not done to help that country. I believe that if he had the say he would lend a readier ear to the urgent entreaties and honest desires of the people who are building up that part of Canada. Now, does the minister think that there is a chance to have these floats built at Prince Rupert?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is always a chance.

Mr. BRADY: I have ever been sport enough to take a chance.

Item agreed to.

Port Alberni—assembly wharf, $132,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to construct lumber and fish assembly wharves, the lumber wharf 300 feet by 60 feet with standard gauge track at front and back of wharf and the fish meal wharf 160 feet by 40 feet with storage shed 150 feet by 32 feet. This also provides for reconstruction and extension of the existing government wharf to provide trackage connection with the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway.

Mr. GARDINER: Will this complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Powell River—breakwater, the Powell River Company, Limited, to contribute one-half of cost, $27,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is asked to be provided towards the construction of a breakwater 1,025 feet long and 6 feet wide on top, with a batter of 1½ to 1 on each side, extending out into the Malaspina strait. The breakwater as designed will consist of a gravel mound up to 12 feet below low water. This gravel mound will be capped with large rocks carried up to elevation 18 feet above low water, or about 4 feet above high water, and the toe of the rock mound will be carried down to 20 feet below water, so that the wave action will not affect the gravel mound down below.

Mr. GARDINER: What will be the total cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The contract was for $98,409.15, and the government pay half.

Mr. JELLIFF: Will the minister please give us some information about this company?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Powell River Company is a very large paper-making concern, and the present mill has a capacity of 250 tons of newsprint per day. The company have recently practically doubled their plant with a view to putting out a further 240 tons of paper per day. This report which I have says that the plant will be in operation in two or three months, but since the report was made some time ago I assume that this new plant is in operation now.

Mr. JELLIFF: Will the minister please tell us whether this expenditure is only for the benefit of the Powell River Company or whether the public will derive some benefit from it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is a public wharf there as well as the company wharf, but the greatest benefit will be to the Powell River Company and to the people who are working for that company.

Mr. STEVENS: There is a heavy traffic in and out.

Mr. JELLIFF: If this work is for the benefit of the Powell River Company why should they not pay the whole cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is a government wharf there as well.

Mr. JELLIFF: Here we are making an appropriation to assist the Powell River Company; within the last few days we considered a vote for Ellis bay, amounting to $300,000, in order to provide an approach for another private company. In that case there was no provision whatever for the use of this approach by private individuals. How does the minister distinguish between the two? How does he reconcile the attitude of the government in these two cases?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I might say that the proportion here is much higher than in the case of Ellis bay. We are doing dredging, part of which has to do with the main channel, and part of which provides a harbour of refuge. The company there have expended about $2,500,000 on the wharf, or about five times the amount we are expending. This is by no means an isolated case; we are trying to encourage concerns which are doing an honest and legitimate business and producing wealth in this country, by providing for them certain facilities or doing dredging in Canadian waters in which they have no jurisdiction and which they could not enter without the permission of the government. They could not do their own dredging. We are trying to meet these various companies; that is the policy of the government. We believe it is good business, and one of the best investments we could make. When we find a company which intends to expand and create wealth in this country by carrying on its business here with Canadian labour, we try to give them what we think is fair encouragement. The Powell River Company are not getting more than we think they should get.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister has stated there is a government wharf at this point; can he give us any information as to the tonnage passing over it? If I am not mistaken there was a similar vote for work of this kind at this place either last year or the year before, and I think it was pointed out then that this was purely a company town. I should like to know if there is any possibility of the old wharf being used in the public interest.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of course it is used by the public; there are other commodities than those of the company passing over the wharf, and my hon. friend will understand that of necessity that is the fact in regard to practically all these wharves. I am sorry I have no information about our government wharf; all the data I have here is in connection with the wharf under consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this purely a company town where the company controls the whole situation, a town which cannot be entered by anyone without permission of the company?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not able to say as to that; every town which is built up by a manufacturing concern is more or less a company town, if that is what my hon. friend means. However, I want to say very frankly that these are the towns of which I think we should have more in this country; I think we should encourage them; company towns are what this country needs. I am surprised to find the attitude of any section of this house hostile to fair treatment to companies doing an honest business, producing wealth and turning raw material into finished products in Canada. These places of necessity must be company towns, when the companies enter practically new sections of the country and start carrying on their business. This is largely a company town because nothing was there before; the company has developed that section of the country, and I know this is a most deserving concern. The people interested in the company are strangers to me, but they are highly recommended and until now I have never heard any objection to this kind of assistance. There was no objection a year ago when this practice was commenced. I think it is good business, and I believe that from the standpoint of the Minister of Finance, who I know has the same opinion, there is no other business as good as that of assisting and encouraging these companies who carry on business right up to the point of finishing their product in this country.

Mr. GARDINER: Similar discussions have taken place every session, and I am rather surprised at the minister taking the attitude that we should encourage these company towns. Surely the minister must know that the people are owned body and soul in these company towns. They are controlled in such a way that it is not good business for this country. I see no reason why we should put our hands into our pockets to assist companies like this, where it would be purely for their own benefit; it does not appeal to me as being good business to do this kind of spending of public moneys. I am very much surprised that the minister should take the attitude he does, in view of the report we get as to conditions in these company towns, in which no one can call his soul his own. If he thinks that is the kind of thing we want in this country, then I must disagree with him.

Item agreed to.

Quathiaski cove—wharf repairs, $1,000.

Mr. NEILL: The amount of this vote is $1,000, but I want to point out to the minister that this sum is absolutely inadequate to do what is required. While I am on my feet I will also mention another item, Savary Island, wharf repairs, $2,000, which is in the same category. A wharf is not like a road; you cannot leave a wharf half finished or make it only half safe, because the public cannot be expected to travel on the unsafe part as they would on an unfinished portion of a road. The amount asked by the engineer in the case of Quathiaski Cove was $2,600. The wharf here is an old one which was built by the provincial government and then taken over some years ago by the Dominion. Last summer an opening occurred between the wharf and the approach which opened and closed every time a steamer touched the outer part of the wharf. This made a regular death trap, because if any one had been caught in that hole when it happened to be open and it had closed upon him, he would have been crushed. Last summer a hurry-up call had to be made and some money rushed out there to relieve the situation of absolute danger. I wish to draw the minister's attention to this matter and to say that it is absolutely necessary to supply an extra sum of $1,500 in the supplementary estimates.

In the case of Savary Island we find the same condition. It would cost about $3,800 really to complete this wharf. This place is a big summer resort; the larger class of steamers call there, and $2,000 is not sufficient to make the wharf safe. I think it is absolutely essential that the extra money be voted in the supplementary estimates to meet this situation. These wharves must be put in condition so that they will be safe.

Item agreed to.

Squamish—wharf repairs, $10,500.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This work will consist of putting in four rows of joists 6 inches by 10 inches by 22 feet under 1,980 feet of approach, measured from the shore end. The balance of approach (600 feet) requires to be rebuilt. This work is required for the maintenance of the wharf which is a very important landing. From January 1 to October 1, 1927, 5,000 passengers and 900 tons of freight were transferred over this wharf. This is requested by the district engineer.

Mr. GARDINER: Will this complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Stewart—contribution to provincial government towards surfacing Stewart-Hyder road, $11,100.

Mr. GARDINER. Will the minister explain this item, please?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The provincial government of British Columbia have applied to this department for assistance towards surfacing the road between Stewart and Stewart wharf. District engineer Forde reported on May 14, 1926, that he had discussed the cost of the hard surfacing with the provincial government engineer, and made up the following estimate of same:

7,000 square yards of road surface to be treated. 700 barrels tarvia at $17 per barrel in place	$ 11,900
3,000 cubic yards of rock in place at $2,75	8,250
10 per cent for contingencies	2,015
Total	$22,165

Half of the above cost, $11,082.50.

Mr. NEILL: What constituency is that in?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is in the constituency of my hon. friend from Skeena (Mr. Brady).

Mr. GARDINER: What is the particular reason for the government changing their policy in this regard?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps I should have told my hon. friend that the district engineer reports that the highway in question is that portion of the Stewart-Hyder road which has been built to take the place of the pile timber trestle which was formerly used as a means of travel between Stewart and Stewart wharf.

Item agreed to.

Tatchi river—improvements, $2,000.

Mr. FRASER: I would like to point out that this vote has been asked for the last two or three years, and I am pleased indeed to see it put in the estimates. A request has always accompanied this vote for the reconstruction of the wharf at the lower end, that is, at Stewart lake. The traffic originates there and is then taken up through the river, but so far there has been no provision made for the wharf. I should like to impress upon the minister that while he is doing these improvements on the Tatchi river, it is essential that the wharf should have a certain amount of consideration. I would ask him to bear this in mind when the supplementary estimates are being considered.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally, $30,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this to be spent in a particular province, or generally for the country as a whole?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Generally for the country as a whole. It is the annual vote.

Mr. GARDINER: In view of the fact that we have general votes in every province, is it necessary that we should have this extra one?

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to cover travelling expenses, telegrams, printing, stationery, instruments, et cetera, which cannot conveniently be charged against one in particular of the general appropriations for construction, improvements, or repairs in each province.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—maritime provinces, $540,000.

Mr. STEVENS: It is not my intention to criticize this item particularly, but I should like the minister to give a brief explanation. In putting that question to him I will take the opportunity of bringing to the attention of the committee the Public Works Act which was under discussion last night, because under this item will arise an opportunity, if such were contemplated or desired, of abusing the privileges which is accorded to the minister under this act. I am speaking now in a very general sense and I am not in any way suggesting that such is the intention of the present minister. I want to point out the danger of a rather loose interpretation of the act. The total vote for dredging is $1,715,000, and it gives into the hands of the minister a very large sum of money to be used generally throughout the different provinces of Canada. Section 36 of part II of the Public Works Act, chapter 166 of the revised statutes, volume 3, is the section which controls not only this minister but other ministers in the expenditure of money. I will read the section and then I wish to make one or two brief comments. Section 36 reads:

> Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of such works, except in cases
>
> (a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest; or
>
> (b) in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department; or
>
> (c) where the estimated cost of the work is less than five thousand dollars and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

I fear that the minister's interpretation of paragraph (b) of this section is that he is at liberty, whenever he feels like it, to do any work of any value under the direct control of the department by day labour and not by tender. I do not concede that to be the intention of the act. Obviously the intention of the act is that the department doing work shall invite tenders by public advertisement. Then it makes these three exceptions. One refers to an emergency such as war, fire or something else that requires immediate work to be done. Paragraph (b) is the controversial one. It reads:

> In which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

In other words the act says that if it can in certain circumstances be clearly demonstrated by engineers' findings and incontrovertible evidence that the work can be done more expeditiously and economically by the officers and servants of the department, the minister is released of the obligation of calling for tenders. It never was contemplated that under the section the minister should have the discretionary power of saying whether the work should be done by tender or otherwise. In other words the act imposes upon the minister an obligation always to call for tenders unless certain very specific reasons can be adduced to the contrary. To digress for a minute, I think the minister said last night that it was the policy of the government to follow certain lines. If it is the minister's intention to take advantage of paragraph (b) to do certain works, no matter what the cost is, by day labour, then the act ought to be changed. Either the act ought to be changed to make it clear that its intent is as I read and understand it, or the section should be modified so as to make it perfectly clear that the minister has the discretion whether he calls for tenders or not.

This is not a new controversy in the house. Long before the minister came into the house the question was discussed time and time again; but never before did I know a minister to take a stand other than the one that I took last night, namely, that where the work was to cost less than $5,000 it was optional with the minister whether he should call for tenders or not. That was always claimed, I think extravagantly and unreasonably claimed by ministers in the past, but I never before heard a minister assert that paragraph (b) gave him a sort of discretionary power. Even paragraph (c) shows that it is incumbent upon the minister to determine whether, by the nature of the work—that is, where it is to cost under $5,000—it is advisable not to call for tenders. He must even then be certain that it is better to do the work without tender. In other words the section is this, that wherever it is possible to do the work by tender, it must be done by tender. The duty is then imposed upon the minister to be prepared to show parliament that where tenders were not called for he could get the work done better, cheaper, more economically, more expeditiously, without calling for tenders. I wish to associate section 36 with the interpretation that I have given of it. I put that forward as my view in connection with the expenditure of this very large sum of $1,715,000 for dredging. My submission is that in the expenditure of this sum, as in other cases, it is obligatory for the minister to call for tenders except where he can show clearly that the work can be done more expeditiously otherwise.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the first place this appropriation of $1,715,000 will be taken up to a very large extent by the operation of our various plants.

Mr. STEVENS: I quite agree with that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Therefore the question of letting the work by day labour or contract will enter into a small proportion. I have read the act with some care myself and I think that is the interpretation of it. But the practice not merely under this government but for years has been to do the works which, first of all, the local engineer recommends can be better done by day labour. Sometimes, of course, the chief engineer disagrees with him and says, No, you had better do the work by contract. Then the matter comes to the deputy minister, and then to the minister in charge. There are cases where it is more convenient to do the work by day labour. I want to say very frankly that the duties of the minister are much lighter when it is done by contract. I do not want to say positively, but my information is that the Department of Justice some years ago gave a ruling on the subject which is in accordance with the practice that has been followed for twenty years at any rate.

Mr. STEVENS: There was just one other thought. I know from experience in the past seventeen or eighteen years that there is a pressure brought upon members and upon ministers to have the work done by day labour. Personally I have always resisted that, because I thoroughly believe in the contract system. I think the minister would be relieved of a tremendous amount of trouble if he fixed himself firmly on the obvious intent of this clause, namely, on the principle that the work shall be done by tender, and that the exceptional case shall be done by day labour, when it is well demonstrated from independent sources that it is an exceptional case. I believe that would save the minister and the government a great deal of embarrassment and trouble and anxiety, and I think the country would be saved money, too. What I am trying to do is to induce the minister to fix himself on that principle, rather than on the other, that it is optional.

Mr. GARDINER: I presume the minister has some explanation of this item of $540,000 for dredging in the maritime provinces.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This $540,000 is required to carry on dredging operations in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick by contract and day labour, and by departmental plant. The amount spent last year was $494,401, which is practically the amount it runs to annually.

Mr. GARDINER: Are there any particulars as to where the work will be done?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is decided as the season progresses. They try to get their plan worked out as early as possible in the season, but frequently it is impossible to tell, even at the close of the session, just what work will have to be done. Perhaps a June freshet may do a good deal of destruction, a wharf may be washed out, and so on. While the money is appropriated as early as possible in the season, there has to be a good deal of discretion left to those in charge in order to provide for emergencies as they arise.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister has no definite information at the present time as to where the work will be carried on?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have information as to all our dredging plants, and what the cost is going to be for each plant, but it is pretty difficult to say at the moment just where the whole season's work will be carried on.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Under this item of dredging for the maritime provinces, I would like to ask if it is the intention of the department to do any work at Mabou harbour, in the county of Inverness. The minister will remember that last year we discussed this matter and it was stated by him on the floor of the house, and also in correspondence which passed between him and me, that 118,000 cubic yards would be removed in Mabou harbour. The information that I get now is that that work was not concluded, and that there is additional dredging to be done. I have had some correspondence with the minister on the matter this session, and I would like to ask him if it is the intention of his department to complete the work which they started last year, and also to provide for additional depth in the harbour.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the program for dredge No. 13, it is intended that they shall do further work at Mabou harbour this year.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Would the minister tell me just what work is contemplated?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot give definite information.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: But the minister can give me the definite assurance that some work will be done there this year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the present contemplation, and I think it will be carried out.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: When that dredge goes down to Mabou, I would ask that it stay for a day or two at Port Hood, to do very much needed dredging at the wharf there. At the present time it is impossible for boats of any worth while tonnage to dock at the wharf.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I see in our list of work required in that district there is noted 7,800 yards, scow measure, to be done at Port Hood, and I assume that something will be done there.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I thank the minister for the information.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—Ontario and Quebec, $600,000.

Mr. SIMPSON: Under this item I would like to bring to the attention of the minister the condition of St. Mary's river at the Soo. I notice by the press that one of the Canadian Pacific steamers during the present week, having passed down through the locks, in turning to get into the government dock had to drop her anchor, as they usually do if there is a north wind blowing, and on pulling it up a large boulder was brought up with the anchor. They had to put a cable around the boulder and take it on down the river to deep water, as it would have been dangerous to other vessels to leave it at that point. The minister was up in that locality last fall, and is quite familiar with the conditions there and with what is required. There is considerable dredging needed to deepen the Canadian side of the river at least to the same depth as the American side. The larger Canadian boats, particularly a couple of years ago when the water was low, found it impossible to dock in the Canadian side of the river. I think representations have been made to the minister by the board of trade and other organizations there to undertake a comprehensive scheme to deepen the river there at least to the same depth as on the American side.

I simply want to take advantage of this opportunity to bring the attention of the minister to the conditions there, as demonstrated by the incident in connection with the Canadian Pacific boat this week. The heading in the press dispatch is that the Canadian Pacific steamers are likely to have to use the American canal as a result.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What my hon. friend states as to the necesity there is according to the information I received from our officials in that district, as well as the impression I gained myself when I was there last year. We are trying to do what we think is a reasonable amount of work in view of the importance of that particular point. Certain contracts for a part of work have been let within the last few days.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, $90,000.

Mr. GARDINER: How much of this item was spent last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $85,220.34 to March 31.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Where do you propose to spend the $90,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: A good deal of it represents the cost of running our departmental plant at whatever point it is required. So far the points suggested are Springfield—

Mr. ADSHEAD: That is Manitoba.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Selkirk, Springfield, Nelson, for use on the Red river and in connection with the fisheries.

Mr. GARDINER: What Nelson is that?

Mr. ROBB: That is the Nelson river.

Mr. LUCAS: Those are all in Manitoba.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, I think so.

Mr. LUCAS: None of this vote is for the other provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is very little dredging to be done in those provinces.

Mr. GARDINER: Have you a plant in Alberta or Saskatchewan?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. GARDINER: Why charge them with this vote?

Mr. BENNETT: Before the minister answers that question, I would suggest he take that portion of the $90,000 to be appropriated to dredging and use it for protection work on the Bow river at Calgary. I do not think the Aurora or Rainbow would like to anchor there this year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend knows that I should like to follow his suggestion, but he knows also that there is an absolute rule against switching votes to an absolutely different purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: Amend it now.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I pointed out to the minister last night—I do not know whether he caught my point—that facing the Bow river at Calgary the government own a boulevard, which was washed away at that point, together with some adjoining property. Protection work is urgently needed to protect that boulevard.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The removal of boulders and blasting of rocks comes under this heading, and part of the money may be used for this purpose. Of course, I think my hon. friends will agree that there is not enough dredging work in Saskatchewan or Alberta to justify keeping a dredge there and transporting it over dry land from one point to another. But a part of this vote is used every year where it is thought work should be done in the provinces in which we have not a dredge.

Mr. BENNETT: But why not strike out the words Saskatchewan and Alberta"? Don't try to make people think you are using public money there when you are not. Certainly you are not spending any in Alberta.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We do use part of this vote.

Mr. BENNETT: For dredging? How do you do it, with hand shovels?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Part of this vote each year is used for just such work as my hon. friend has mentioned, the removal of boulders and the blasting of rocks, as may be required in those provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. minister be good enough to tell us what dredging work was done in Alberta last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot say as to last year; but if the work is necessary, part of this vote is available for it.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister knows our point. The public is made to believe there is an appropriation from the federal exchequer for dredging in Alberta, and it is not so; that is all. Why not let the vote go to Manitoba, if they have dredging to do there? But do not charge Alberta with something that is not done there.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does my hon. friend insist on that?

Mr. BENNETT: I am not insisting. The majority behind my hon. friend is sufficient to prevent my insisting on anything. If I had power to insist, I would certainly relieve him of his office in a very short time. But I am only suggesting that it is quite unfair to make it appear that money is used for dredging in Alberta; it is not. As I say, we have not any harbours there except those which would have to be reached from the Arctic ocean, to which access is denied, but which would be ample to take care of our navy to put down any incipient revolutions in that territory.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This perhaps is an evil practice that has continued since the days of governments which were not as perfect as this government.

Mr. STEVENS: The Lord have mercy on them!

Mr. ELLIOTT: The practice of putting the vote under this heading has obtained for many years. I hope my hon. friends will not insist, for we are in a wonderfully amiable mood this afternoon, and I wish to express my appreciation for the various suggestions that have come from all quarters of the house.

Mr. HEAPS: That is all hon. members will get.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But I do not think it would really be in the interests of Saskatchewan or Alberta to have this vote so worded that if necessity arose in either province there would be no portion of it available. I cannot believe that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition or any other hon. members would like to have those provinces put in that position. But if they insist, we might consider amending the vote next year. There is no question that some of this money will be used in Alberta and some in Saskatchewan.

Mr. BENNETT: Will you add the words "and protection work?"

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I protest against any suggestion that Saskatchewan should be cut out of this vote. It is well known that in the northern part of the province there are great waterways—lakes and rivers—and I am surprised that the leader of the opposition should have any doubt at all on that point.

Mr. BENNETT: But there is no dredge in the province.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): There was a steam dredge at Cumberland lake the last time I was there. It may have been moved for use elsewhere, but that does not affect the fact that dredging has been done there for a number of years. I do not think the steam dredge I saw did any work last year, but dredging had been done by other means. In other parts of Saskatchewan dredging is becoming more necessary as the waterways in the north are being developed and used in connection with the mining development. I repeat, I should not like to see Saskatchewan cut out of this vote.

Mr. KENNEDY: Do the terms of this vote make the money available for clearing a river channel where it has become blocked and the river overflows its banks in high water?

Mr. ELLIOTT: If it is proper work to be done by the federal government, and it is recommended by the engineer, part of this vote will be available for it.

Mr. KENNEDY: Would proper work be the clearing of a river channel where the Dominion government decides that it is justified in doing it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Primarily the clearing of a river channel is limited to clearing it for the purposes of navigation. The expenditures have been made to pay compensation for damages done by federal works. Where flooding was caused by dams or other structures erected by this government it was claimed, and properly, that the damage should be compensated for. In that event part of this money would be available for the purpose. It is difficult to define all the purposes of the vote.

Mr. KENNEDY: I have a case in my own constituency. The West and East Prairie rivers have become blocked as a result of trees falling into the water and forming a jam. Every spring these rivers overflow their banks and cause a lot of damage.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is it a navigable river?

Mr. KENNEDY: No, they are not navigable; neither is the Bow river. I do not know of any navigable river there except the Peace.

Mr. ELLIOTT: From what causes does this damage arise? Is it from lumbering operations along the banks?

Mr. KENNEDY: No; it is the result of fires going through the forest reserves. Some of the timber is killed, and falls into the river.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Possibly it might be done, but it is hard to lay down any general rule governing every particular case. If such cases arise we will give them the best consideration we can.

Mr. GARDINER: How much of the vote was spent in Alberta or Saskatchewan last year or the year before, and what was the nature of the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In Saskatchewan last year, out of this vote, there was spent at Cowan lake $330, and on Sturgeon river $2,322.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the nature of the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not the details.

Mr. GARDINER: I wanted to have some information so that we might know what the vote was being used for.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was not done by the government dredge but by day labour. I suppose some emergency had arisen making it necessary to clear the river.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—British Columbia, $485,000.

Mr. JELLIFF: Will the minister explain the increase?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This vote is required for dredging operations in British Columbia by contract and day labour. The department plan to provide for the repair and maintenance of plant as follows: departmental dredging, plant operations, $226,000; maintenance, $109,000—that is, $335,000. Works to be done by contract and day labour, $103,500; new plant, $36,500; surveys and inspections, $10,000—$485,000. The additions are largely due to plant.

Mr. ESLING: How much of this item will be spent in surveying the lower Duncan river, about which there is correspondence between this government and the provincial government? A sum of $2,000 was recommended by the district engineer, covering a survey of the lower Duncan with a view to opening it for navigation purposes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am afraid there would have to be a special vote for that; I doubt very much whether it could come out of this item.

Mr. ESLING: The minister mentioned that a portion of this was for survey work, and the department has a recommendation from the government's own district engineer, including an item of $2,000 for the survey of what is known as the lower Duncan river from Howser lake into Kootenay lake.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The $2,000 for survey could probably come out of this grant.

Mr. ESLING: Will the $7,500, also recommended by the district engineer,—

Mr. ELLIOTT: For survey?

Mr. ESLING: No, in connection with the opening of the upper Duncan river. In lieu of clearing the upper Duncan there is a proposal, with which the minister's department is quite familiar, for a joint contribution, this department to pay $7,500 and the provincial government a similar sum, towards the construction of a trail along the upper Duncan river. While we understand that the construction of trails does not come within the province of the federal government, nevertheless it is incumbent on this government to clear the river, and the proposal is that the department should contribute $7,500 and be relieved of further charges in connection with the clearing of the river.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am afraid that item would have to be covered by a special vote, particularly when it includes such work as my hon. friend indicates.

Mr. ESLING: I simply wanted to know whether it could come out of this vote.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BELL (St. John-Albert): Is there any provision, in the item for maritime dredging, with reference to Lorneville, St. John county?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; that dredging is in the category of works for which there must be special votes.

Mr. BELL (St. John-Albert): Is there any provision for that work in the present estimate?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I do not think so. This would not cover an item like dredging at Lorneville.

Mr. BELL (St. John-Albert): I may be incorrect, but I have an idea that an estimate had been made—

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is right.

Mr. BELL (St. John-Albert): —by the resident engineer for that work. There is nothing included in this vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: An estimate has been made in regard to Lorneville; I know that is correct. But it certainly cannot be included in a general vote of this kind; there must be a special item. If that should happen to be in the supplementaries—

Mr. STEVENS: We should all fall dead.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I shouldn't want you to fall dead.

Roads and bridges—Dominion roads and bridges generally, $7,100.

Mr. GARDINER: I want to take this opportunity—probably I should have done so earlier—to ask some questions in regard to the pavement outside the parliament grounds in Ottawa. Were these pavements and sidewalks built by contract or by departmental labour?

Mr. ELLIOTT: By contract.

Mr. GARDINER: Was the contract completed to the satisfaction of the department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was passed by the inspectors, but I am bound to say it did not turn out very well.

Mr. HEAPS: Why was it passed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It appeared to be all right at that time.

Mr. HEAPS: Was there no inspection of the material used in the construction of these sidewalks?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: From their present condition it does not look like it.

Mr. GARDINER: Who was the inspector who had charge of that work and reported upon it, and who were the contractors who did the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The contractors were the Grant Construction Company. I cannot give my hon. friend the name of the inspector.

Mr. HEAPS: Who is now responsible for putting them in good shape?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The department will have to do it.

Mr. HEAPS: And is there no comeback on the contractor at all?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think so.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Was there not a guarantee for five or ten years?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not in regard to concrete sidewalks.

[Mr. T. Bell.]

Mr. STEVENS: If the contractors were the Grant Construction Company I think they should be ashamed to hang out their shingle as contractors any longer after having done a job like that. Whoever the inspector was who passed upon this work, he should be disciplined, and I would suggest that the minister notify the contractors that they will get no more governmental work unless they put that work in decent shape. It is a disgrace to any contractor and to the parliament buildings. I cannot conceive of any self respecting contractor leaving a job in that condition.

Mr. GARDINER: Since this is the only possible item left in these estimates under which this question may be discussed, I suggest to the minister that the item stand and that he secure the information required by the house. It is hardly right that we should be asked to accept the meagre information given by the minister. I think he might let this item stand over until he secures the information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not want to object arbitrarily to letting the item stand, but before very long the supplementaries will be brought down and perhaps my hon. friend would be satisfied if I undertook to supply the name of the inspector and whatever additional information is available in regard to this question, when the supplementary estimates are under consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: If the minister will agree to that I think it will be all right. I would like to see a copy of the contract, also.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think this is a very proper matter to be considered.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Coming up on the east side from Wellington street there is one bit of sidewalk which never has been completed. There is some gravel remaining, and I have often wondered why it was left there. On a wet day it is very disagreeable, and I would suggest to the minister that this bit of sidewalk should be finished.

Item agreed to.

International bridge over St. Croix river between St. Croix, N.B., and Vanceboro, Maine, the state of Maine to contribute the sum of $2,000, $4,000.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to inquire of the minister the terms of the agreement between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine in connection with this international bridge. As the minister knows, several bills to provide for the construction of bridges over international waters have been before this house this session, and it has been claimed that it is impossible to secure agreements in those matters. It will be rather interesting to the committee to know what kind of an agreement this is, and how it was arrived at.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The agreement relates only to the construction of the bridge; each government contributes half the total cost. This revote of $4,000 is required for the completion of the international bridge over the St. Croix river, under contract with C. A. Noyes of Orono, Maine, at a contract price of $14,797.65. The work remaining to be performed consists of the completion of the contract by the construction of 215 feet of concrete railing on the bridge and the placing of 550 feet of wire cable guard rail on the roadway, and also in the completion by the Department of Public Works of the roadway aproach on the Canadian side, the full length of which was not included in the contract.

Mr. GARDINER: This is an international waterway?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the department no information as to the terms of the agreement between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine, or did they contribute to the work without such an agreement?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The province is not in it at all; this is an agreement between the federal government and the state of Maine.

Mr. GARDINER: Then the minister will be in a position to give the information as to the agreement?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The only agreement is that each government pays half the cost.

Mr. GARDINER: Are there no international complications?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. LUCAS: Are there any tolls charged?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; of course, tolls would not be charged on a bridge built by the two countries.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this agreement between the federal government and the state of Maine or between the federal government and the United States?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is between the federal government and the state of Maine.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any reason why an agreement should not be entered into between the government of the United States and the government of Canada in regard to bridges over the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Apparently the state has the jurisdiction.

Mr. GARDINER: I understood that this was an international waterway?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Then how does the state have jurisdiction?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The system in the United States is different from our system; the state has a larger jurisdiction than our province. The state contributes its portion to an international arrangement of this kind, to which the federal government is a party.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—maintenance and repairs to bridges and approaches, $14,600.

Mr. LUCAS: What bridges are these?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is to provide for the following works in connection with the maintenance of the Ottawa river and Laurier avenue bridges:

Maintenance of Chaudiere bridges and Hull causeway, $4,000.

To renew 72 steel beams and 10 buckle plates on Hull causeway, including the removal and replacing of pavement blocks, $3,000.

To paint (one coat) part of Laurier avenue bridge, spanning the railway tracks, renew rivets in lattice works of hand railing and part of bracing under bridge, $3,000.

To erect a corrugated galvanized iron ceiling under part of Laurier avenue bridge spanning the railway tracks, to prevent loose concrete from falling on tracks, $4,000.

To repair parts of stone block pavement on Hull causeway, $600.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is it the policy of the federal government to assist in the construction of bridges in parts of the Dominion other than Ottawa?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Chaudiere bridges, built and maintained by the department, carry interprovincial traffic between Ottawa, Ontario, and Hull, Quebec.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone lines—Nova Scotia —Boularderie—Cape Breton telegraph line—general repairs, repoling, etc., $5,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Are these government lines?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone lines—Quebec—reconstruction of the north shore St. Lawrence telegraph system from Murray Bay to Bersimis, $25,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT. This is to provide for the general reconstruction, repoling, wiring and so on, of the telegraph system on the north shore of the St. Lawrence between Murray Bay and Bersimis, a distance of 153 miles.

Item agreed to.

Alberta and Saskatchewan telegraph and telephone lines—general repairs and improvements, $15,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the minister think it necessary to keep these telegraph and telephone lines in operation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: As my hon. friend knows, these lines are located in districts where the business is not sufficient to induce commercial companies to carry on. We are conducting these lines as pioneer work, to a large extent, to supply facilities to the settlers in isolated places so they will be in connection with the interior sections of the country. Having constructed them, we think they should be kept up. We are not doing any more than is absolutely necessary, and as soon as we can induce commercial companies to take these lines over, we do so.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Could you tell us just where these lines are situated, and the mileages?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I can obtain that information for my hon. friend.

Mr. GARDINER: Have you any information as to income and expenses?

Mr. ADSHEAD: Are these lines linked up with the lines which the governments have all over the provinces?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We try to connect up with the provincial lines wherever it is physically possible.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia—mainland telegraph and telephone lines—general repairs and improvements, $28,000.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to ask the minister if the upkeep of the lines south of Kamloops, recently sold by the government, is included in this vote ?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This would not include the upkeep of any lines we have sold.

Mr. FRASER: Would it be included in last year's vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The vote last year would include general repairs for all lines in that district. We have been relieved of certain lines this year by disposing of them, and of course we will no longer be liable for the cost of maintenance.

Mr. FRASER: The vote this year is for $28,000, while last year it was only $17,750, and you have sold a thousand miles of lines; what is the explanation of the increase?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will give my hon. friend the details of what the divisional superintendent asks for and recommends. The first is the Kamloops section, $5,981.25; resetting poles on the Kamloops-Heffley creek line at an estimated cost of $356; repoling Kamloops-Fruitlands line, estimated cost $1,635; and repoling between Knutsford and Stump Lake on the Kamloops-Merritt line, $3,900. The latter item is the most important item in this estimate, as the present pole line between Knutsford and Stump Lake is now in a precarious position. The present poles have been reset a number of times and are now quite rotten and will not stand a further reset. When this work is done the Kamloops-Merritt pole line will be in first class physical condition and good for a great many years. The other items are: Barriere section, $1,490; Merritt section, $3,825; Chase-Revelstoke section, $2,100; Vernon section, $5,630; Penticton section, $2,482; Arrow lakes section, $1,767; Golden-Invermere section, $3,133; and Princeton section, $1,905.

Mr. FRASER: Two or three of the items you have mentioned are included in the lines that have been disposed of. For instance, the line from Knutsford to Merritt is certainly part of the line which you have already disposed of.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is quite right about that; that line was disposed of after these estimates were prepared.

Mr. FRASER: Could you tell me what amount it will now be necessary to spend on these lines?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am afraid I cannot tell what amounts will be cut out by the sales that have taken place.

Mr. FRASER: You have sold all the lines south of Kamloops, according to the return which I have here.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: From Knutsford to Merritt is one line; the Vernon section is another; and the Penticton and Arrow lakes sections; all these lines are south of Kamloops.

Mr. ROBB: Does my hon. friend desire me to move that we reduce this vote?

Mr. FRASER: I do not think the vote is any indication of what you are going to spend.

Mr. STEVENS: If the lines are sold we certainly should not vote money to spend on lines that have passed over to private companies.

Mr. FRASER: I have requests from other parts of that same district, and in view of the fact that you are relieved of a large amount of expenditure and have actually recovered $50,000 of your capital, I should like to ask for the construction of some lines which have been denied in that district for the past three or four years. That is the point I wish to make.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is quite right in what he says, as a number of these lines have been disposed of since these estimates were prepared. If my hon. friend will make the motion, I do not think we shall suffer from having the amount deleted.

Mr. ROBB: What is the amount?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $28,000.

Mr. STEVENS: That includes some lines that are not comprised in the sale to the private company. The minister ought to be careful to strike out only what is sold and leave the balance.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If an amount of $10,000 is left, that will be sufficient.

Mr. FRASER: The minister would be better advised to wait until he knows what parts of those lines have been sold and what is required for the maintenance of the lines which the government still own and operate. I do not think a motion of that kind would be advisable at present coming from the minister or anyone else.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Let the item stand.

Item stands.

Telephone line from Rolla to Rolla landing, $2,500.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this a new line?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. This is an extension from Rolla to Rolla landing, a distance of approximately seventeen miles.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—engineering branch—salaries of engineers, inspectors, superintendents, draughtsmen, clerks, and messengers of outside service, $483,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give a brief explanation of this large item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to provide for the salaries of the outside staff of the engineering branch, including district engineers, supervising engineers and their staffs, et cetera, for the fiscal year ending April 1928-29.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—maintenance and operation of water storage dams on Ottawa river and tributaries, surveys in connection therewith, and settlement of land damages, $100,000.

Mr. COOTE: How much was spent under this large item last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $88,151.

Mr. COOTE: Is this all for the Ottawa river and its tributaries?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—National Gallery of Canada, $135,000.

Mr. FRASER: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The trustees have requested an additional $35,000, and they have been given that larger appropriation.

Mr. GARDINER: What explanation has been made to justify the demand for more money?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to provide for operation and maintenance, workshop supplies, upkeep of premises, purchase of works of art. The addition over last year is to enable the board to complete the purchase of some pictures which they have in mind to purchase.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): About how much is expended yearly?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The full vote is spent every year.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does the department calculate on a certain appropriation for the national gallery every year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): About how much?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Usually $100,000.

Mr. FRASER: I have been asked to make a protest in regard to the closing hours of the national gallery. In the first place I should like to ask the minister whether the hours of closing of the national gallery are regulated by early closing in the city of Ottawa; is it correct that the gallery closes at four o'clock in the afternoon, daylight time, or three o'clock standard time?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that it follows the same time that we follow in the house, that is daylight saving time.

Mr. FRASER: That is exactly the point of protest. The people of the rest of the Dominion of Canada go on standard time. Last year there came to this city a representative from my district who is very much interested in art and after his business was concluded he had just one hour to spare for a visit to the art gallery. Under all ordinary conditions he would have been able to visit the gallery for that one hour, but on account of the early closing he failed to have that opportunity. That man will probably not have an opportunity in the next ten years of making a similar visit and I was asked on his behalf to bring the matter to the attention of the minister. Why should the people of the whole Dominion of Canada be inconvenienced to the extent of that one hour to give the people of the city of Ottawa an hour of extra daylight? The position taken by the gentleman appealed to me as being very fair and reasonable. If this property is being operated for the people of the whole of Canada, it is quite reasonable that they should expect it to be open the same hours as if it were run on standard time which prevails throughout Canada.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is just one of the things that apparently happen in every place that is being run on daylight saving time, a time different from that in use in other places. But may I call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that if the visitor had come from Montreal, Toronto, or any other place having daylight saving time, he would not have noticed the difference. It is the rural sections that are perhaps prejudiced. The same thing would apply to a man who wanted to hear the debates in the house. He might be fortunate if he found himself an hour late.

Mr. BENNETT: That would depend upon what estimates were under consideration?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Probably so. He would not fare quite as badly if estimates were under consideration as if some matters were before the house.

Mr. BENNETT: That might be true too.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The matter is worth considering, and I thank my hon. friend for bringing it to the attention of the committee. I do not know that I can make any promise that there will be much in the way of results, but I shall be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Four o'clock is an early hour for the gallery to close. It could surely remain open as long as the museum.

Mr. VALLANCE: Suppose it opened an hour earlier in the morning?

Mr. JOHNSTONE: Is the museum open on Saturday afternoon?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, and on Sunday. I think my hon. friend is wrong about the hour of four o'clock; I think it is five o'clock, daylight saving.

Mr. FRASER: Four o'clock was certainly the hour that was given to me. This gentleman had business in various departments, and after that was done, he said that it was three o'clock by his time, standard time. He went to an attendant in the House of Commons to be directed to the museum, but was told there was no use going there at that hour as the museum closed at four o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSTONE: The reason I asked the question was that a lady and gentleman came here on Saturday afternoon and found the museum closed. They were told it closed every Saturday afternoon.

Mr. McQUARRIE: It is not everyone, unfortunately, who can come to Ottawa to see the pictures in the national gallery, and I think that the policy which has been adopted by the directors of loaning some of the pictures to other centres to be placed on exhibition is highly to be commended. I know that in New Westminster, through the kindness of the directors, we have for several years been receiving from the national gallery very fine exhibits of pictures, which have been viewed by many thousands of people, and I think that that kind of thing should be encouraged. There is some charge in connection with the sending out of these pictures, transportation and insurance charges, and so forth, but it is not generally known that the pictures in the gallery are available for that purpose, and I think it would be well if that fact were more generally known, because ordinarily these wonderful pictures in the gallery cannot be seen unless one comes to Ottawa.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not just get the point raised by the minister. He said that there would be no special inconvenience to people coming here from say Montreal or Toronto, where they have daylight saving time. I would remind him that no matter whether they have standard or daylight saving time in these places, they come to Ottawa on trains running on standard time. It is very commendable that there should be a gallery of this kind, and the name "National" indicates that it is for the whole nation, and not solely for the benefit of the citizens of Ottawa. It is a fact that while many cities and towns, including Ottawa, have adopted daylight saving, the great mass of the people in the country districts, are still on God's time, standard time. You are spending another $35,000 to get some extra fine pictures for the gallery, for whose benefit? Obviously people from outside points will not have the same opportunity that the citizens of Ottawa will have to see these pictures, because of the early closing of the gallery. I think this is a matter in connection wth which the minister ought to get results. He says that he cannot promise anything definite. This is a case where he should promise something definite. He should be definite enough to say that the people outside Ottawa will have a reasonable opportunity to see these pictures and take advantage of the gallery, notwithstanding any difference in time there might be.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have a good deal of sympathy with what my hon. friend says, but I think he did not get my point when I said that while it did not make any difference to the people who came from Montreal or Toronto, which were on the same time as Ottawa, daylight saving time, it did make a difference to those who came in from the country, and that point deserves consideration.

What my hon. friend from New Westminster has said is very pertinent. I think that principle of loaning pictures should be extended as far as practicable. This gallery is the national gallery of Canada, and that is the reason why in their wisdom those in charge have seen fit to allow the pictures to be loaned to different local galleries, so that the people there will have the opportunity of seeing them, which they would not have unless they paid a visit to the national gallery. I shall be glad to look into the matter and do the very best I can.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): When I referred to people coming in from the country, I did not mean people coming in from Carleton county or from anywhere in the immediate vicinity of Ottawa, who would walk in or come in on a bicycle. I presume that people from the rural districts many miles away from Ottawa would come in on the same trains as people coming from Toronto and Montreal, and they would be inconvenienced so far as Ottawa being on daylight saving time is concerned.

Mr. GARDINER: How much was spent in buying pictures tlast year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not that information here, but my hon. friend will find a list of the pictures bought in the report of the national gallery.

Item agreed to.

National monument on Connaught Place, $35,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Will the minister explain this?

Mr. BENNETT: Only $10,000 was spent last year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is a revote of $25,000. This amount of $35,000 is required towards the erection of a national commemorative war monument on Connaught place, Ottawa city. This work is being performed by Mr. Vernon March of Goddendene, England, at a contract price of $135,000 for the bronze work, the granite pedestal and foundation work to be performed by the department at an estimated cost of $50,000, thereby making the total cost of the monument approximately $185,000. The work done during the year 1927-28 consisted of the modelling of the large clay figures which are to surmount the arch and also considerable preparatory work on the furnaces, etc. The sculptor is now proceeding with the moulding of the figures. The sum of $10,000 was paid the contractor in September, 1927, on account of work performed.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Has the minister received the consent to this of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) or the hon. member for South-east Grey (Miss Macphail)?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not in writing.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): From their remarks the other day I should judge they would regard this as a glorification of war and might be expected to oppose it strenuously.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I think my hon. friend might have remained silent in view of the fact that the hon. members to whom he refers are not here to defend themselves. I do not think they would oppose this vote.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): If my hon. friend will turn his head round he will see the member for Winnipeg North Centre sitting behind him.

Mr. ADSHEAD: He is quite capable of defending himself. For my part I do not consider this a glorification of war.

Item agreed to.

River gauging and metering, $30,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does this cover the metering and gauging of all rivers in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: No, the Department of the Interior looks after some of this work.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to provide for the investigation and collection of data as to the fluctuations of various rivers, to pay the salaries of gauge readers at various points and travelling expenses, and to purchase recording apparatus.

Mr. BENNETT: Should not these matters be all brought under one directing head? My difficulty in times past has been that one department or another is each doing a little gauging work on its own account.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is the reading taken at the same time each year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: A record is kept of the flow of the stream at regular intervals throughout the whole year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How often in Kingston, for instance, do you take this data?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not able to say. I know in some places daily readings are taken.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are the readings taken daily or once a month?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot say with regard to Kingston.

Item agreed to.

Surveys and inspections, $120,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is required to provide for any surveys and inspections that may be necessary during the fiscal year 1928-29 in connection with harbour, river, slide, boom and bridge works and other services under the control of the Public Works department.

Item agreed to.

For erection of memorial tablet to late Dr. Alpheus Todd, former Librarian of Parliament, $1,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Where do you expect to put this tablet?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is to be placed in the library, I understand.

Mr. BENNETT: It should be put in a more prominent place, for no man has reflected greater glory on this country in a literary way than Alpheus Todd.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The resolution passed by the committee is:

That it is desirable and fitting that a memorial tablet should be erected in the library.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CUMBERLAND RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY

Mr. J. L. ILSLEY (Hants-Kings): I wish to direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, to order No. 67, for the second reading of Bill No. 304, respecting the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company. I should like very much to have this bill given its second reading so that it may be referred automatically to the railway committee. This would not take up any of the time of the house, and I may say that every other Senate bill in the same situation, with the exception of the one immediately preceding it, has received first and second readings and been referred to the committee. With the consent of the house I would move that the bill be read the second time.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion may be entertained if the house will give unanimous consent.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No objection.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

ANCHOR CAP AND CLOSURE CORPORATION OF CANADA, LIMITED

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver-Centre): On behalf of the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark), I would ask that the same procedure be adopted in respect of Bill No. 303, respecting a certain patent of Anchor Cap and Closure Corporation of Canada, Limited. I would move the second reading of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: If there is no objection.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed, from May 25, consideration of the motion of Sir Eugene Fiset for the third reading of Bill No. 56, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vanucouver South): I had occasion to move the adjournment of this debate last evening. The principle of this measure and all its clauses have been thoroughly considered by the banking and commerce committee. Certain of the clauses were dropped, compromises were entered into with respect to others, and the bill carried almost unanimously in the banking and commerce committee. There were in fact only three audible objections.

Mr. SPENCER: Was there not a small attendance that morning?

Mr. LADNER: No, I do not think so.

Mr. IRVINE: Yes.

Mr. LADNER: At any rate there have been several discussions in the house. We are now drawing to the close of the session and the views of hon. members on this measure are well understood. Most hon. members are fairly well informed on the merits and demerits of the bill. Some hon. members have shown violent—one might say fanatical—opposition to the bill. So strong are their objections that, I submit, they are not inclined to allow other hon. members the right to express by vote their opinion on the question. Intimation has been made to me directly and clearly that certain hon. members intend to block the measure and to talk it out and put it at the foot of the list.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker —

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member not to use such an expression as "fanatical opposition".

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is an inaccurate statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: At all events the expression is not parliamentary.

Mr. LADNER: I withdraw the words, Mr. Speaker; I merely wanted to convey the idea and to submit to the judgment of the house that the opposition to the bill is of an unusual nature and liable to protract the discussion beyond the close of the session.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I have no desire to do so unless he permits me.

Mr. LADNER: I should prefer to finish; I do not say that in any ill-will. The time is short, however, and I have but a few remarks to make. In view of the circumstances which I have stated, Mr. Speaker, and the fact that we are nearing the close of the session, I take this opportunity to move that the question be now put.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Ladner moves, seconded by Mr. Stevens, that the question be now put. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): In view of the remarks made by the hon. member, implying that sufficient discussion has taken place on this bill, I want to say to him and to the house that there are a number on this side who, while they do not propose either to block the bill or to bluff their way through it, desire an opportunity of discussing it. And in view of the fact that there are a number of bills which ought to be expedited, and which under these circumstances there is no opportunity of considering, I move now that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Glen moves, seconded by Mr. Spencer, that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, that the motion made by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner), that the question be now put, has precedence.

Mr. SPEAKER: The authorities are quite clear on the point. At page 144 Beauchesne, after Bourinot, says:

> The motion for the previous question may be superseded by a motion to adjourn or for reading the orders of the day. But such a motion cannot be made if the house resolves that the question shall now be put under this rule. It is also in order to move the adjournment of the debate on the previous question but not if the house decide that the question be put.

Mark those words: "It is also in order to move the adjournment of the debate on the previous question". The previous question has been put and the hon. member now wishes to supersede that question by moving the adjournment of the debate. The motion to adjourn the debate is not debatable; I shall therefore put it forthwith. Mr. Glen moves, seconded by Mr. Spencer, that the debate be now adjourned. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Glen) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Bancroft,	Glen,
Beaubien,	Irvine,
Bird,	Kellner,
Campbell,	Luchkovich,
Coote,	McMillan,
Evans,	Morrissy,
Fansher (Last Mountain),	Spencer,
Forke,	Ward,
Garland (Bow River),	Woodsworth.—18.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),	Bradette,
Anderson (Halton),	Cannon,
Arthurs,	Cardin,
Bell (Hamilton West),	Casgrain,
Bell (St. John-Albert),	Denis (Joliette),
Bennett,	Dionne,
Bettez,	Donnelly,
Blanchard,	Dunning,
Blatchford,	Esling,
Bourgeois,	Fiset (Sir Eugene),
Bowen,	Foster,
Garland (Carleton),	Fraser,
Hall,	Ralston,
Jenkins,	Robb,
Ladner,	Robinson,
Laflamme,	Ross (Kingston City),
Lapierre,	Ross (Moose Jaw),
Letellier,	Ryerson,
MacDonald (Cape Breton South),	St-Père,
Macdonald (Kings),	Sanderson,
Macdonald (Richmond-West Cape Breton),	Sinclair (Queens),
MacLean (Prince),	Smith (Stormont),
McLean (Melfort),	Spence,
Matthews,	Stevens,
Motherwell,	Stewart (Edmonton West),
Odette,	Telford,
Perras,	Thompson,
Pouliot,	Veniot,
Preston,	White (Mount Royal),
Quinn,	Young (Saskatoon),
	Young (Weyburn).—61.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is suggested that I direct your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) was in the house and did not vote on this motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Generally, under the practice of the house, an hon. member who has heard the question put must vote. However, lately, since 1906, I know, in the British parliament this time-honoured practice has been ignored; I have seen a standing order to the effect that when a member does not feel justified in voting he need not do so. I decided this point some weeks ago, when the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Forke) was in the same position; he declared that because of conscientious reasons he did not think it wise to vote on the question.

Mr. DUNNING: But he did give an explanation.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I must confess that I heard the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) this evening with considerable astonishment. Especially was I surprised at the words with which he prefaced his motion; he charged, or implied, that certain hon. gentlemen were attempting to put up what he called a fanatical opposition to this bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: In justice to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) I must tell the hon. gentleman that he withdrew that expression. I do not think it is parliamentary; all authorities agree that no one may accuse an hon. member of fanaticism or of adopting a fanatical attitude.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am very glad to learn that the hon. gentleman withdrew that expression, and I trust that Your Honour and the house will realize what he was attempting to do when he used those words.

I regard this bill as of vital importance to the country and to the members of this house, more so than any measure which has ever come before us with the possible exception of the Georgian bay canal bill of last year. With the exception of that one bill this is the most obnoxious measure I have had to consider in the seven years I have been in this house, and in a moment or two I will give my reasons for that statement.

Speaking directly to the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver South, may I point out to Your Honour and the house that in the votes and proceedings of to-day there is a notice of motion appearing in the name of the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fansher), in the following words:

—that the said bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole, with instructions to amend section 2 by adding thereto the following:—

"Of the capital stock to be hereafter issued no shares shall be distributed to the stockholders as dividends or bonuses, or shall be issued in any other way than in return for the payment to the company of at least the full par value thereof.

"After the issue of any capital in excess of two million dollars no dividends to shareholders shall be declared by the company in excess of fifteen per cent per annum."

I would direct the attention of the house to the fact that this very amendment to this bill was moved last year by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), and was carried by the house. The moment the house agreed to the amendment the sponsors for the bill withdrew it, and so defeated the obvious intention of the majority of the members of this house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Do I understand that the hon. gentleman intends to move an amendment?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, Your Honour; I am simply calling the attention of the house to the fact that if this motion for the previous question is carried it will preclude the house from declaring itself upon an amendment which the house carried last year.

As I said, the sponsors withdrew the bill, and were unwilling to accede to the majority will of this house. Some hon. members now have the temerity to declare, because it is our wish that the will of the house as expressed last year be sustained on this occasion, that we are deliberately—I cannot repeat the words because I have been instructed not to—talking too constantly and too solemnly on this bill. I do not think there is a more important bill, from the point of view of public affairs, and I will give my reasons in a few moments.

This company was incorporated in 1865, under 28 Victoria, chapter 43, as the Sun Insurance Company of Montreal. Under the charter it was given the right to carry on fire, marine, accident and guarantee insurance, and also life insurance. The powers granted were never used except in regard to life insurance, and very slightly in regard to accident insurance. The capitalization authorized was $2,000,000 in one hundred dollar shares, $800,000 to be subscribed and $100,000 to be paid up and invested. This capitalization covered the life branch.

In 1870 this act was amended by 33 Victoria, chapter 58, and the life insurance business was separated distinctly from the general business. The amendment of that year authorized a capital for the life branch of $1,000,000, which might be increased to $2,000,000, solely for this branch. The same capitalization was permitted for the fire, marine and guarantee branch. Separate accounts of the expenses, profits and claims, losses, liabilities and assets were to be kept. The obvious intent of the charter at that time was to limit the capital of the company to $2,000,000 in respect of life, and $2,000,000 in respect of its general business.

In 1871 business was commenced, and the name was changed to The Sun Mutual Life Insurance Company of Montreal. The life and accident operations were united, and at that time everything inconsistent with these new provisions was repealed. In 1882 the name was again changed to the Sun Life Assurance Company and permission was granted to invest funds in foreign countries. In 1897 the investment powers were extended to include real estate in Canada and bonds and debentures of municipalities in the United States.

It will be noted in passing, Mr. Speaker, that shortly after the passing of this act the investment policy of the company was changed. Up to that time it had been doing a good deal of business in the way of mortgages, real estate loans, and so on, but suddenly the policy was switched and the policyholders' money was invested in the most speculative kind of industrial stocks, chiefly the traction stocks.

In 1871, when the business started, the capital subscribed was $500,000, 10 per cent of which was paid up, or $50,000 in cash. In 1876 another $12,000, or 2½ per cent, was paid up, making a total of $62,500. From 1876 to 1897, or even longer, the total capital of the company was $62,500.

In 1897, when the company wanted to enter into business in New York state where the capital paid up must be $100,000, an arrangement was made, not by causing the original stock to be paid up, but by making a further issue of $200,000 at a premium of $30 per share. According to the report of the commission which investigated the company in 1906, when they found that a bond of $10,000 would be required, they were unwilling to put up that bond. At this date the total capital was $700,000, of which $105,000, or 15 per cent, was paid up, and this was the capital for a great number of years. As the company did not enter New York state at this time a new issue of stock was not necessary.

The following appears on page 19 of the report of the royal commission which investigated this company in 1906:

It is made plain by the evidence that the issue of new stock was not necessary for any financial reason connected either with the operations of the company in Canada or with the proposed extension into the state of New York.

It is to be observed that the management of this company have had differences with the department as to their investments, and as to the classification of accounts and other matters of detail. The company has constantly adhered to its own view without regard to the view of the department.

This situation has largely prevailed to this day. I doubt if any other single insurance company in Canada has, because of its peculiar policy and the dictatorial character of its management, been so constantly in conflict with the department. May I say that if there is one man's opinion in regard to this bill which I am prepared to accept beyond any other in Canada, is that of the man who for years has been trusted with the administration of the Insurance Act. He has carried on this work with the greatest satisfaction, and Mr. Finlayson has again and again declared against increasing the capital of this company. He has given several reasons, and I may be compelled to repeat some of them at this time.

We find that as a result of the increase in capital by the issue of $200,000 of capital stock, only a portion of which was paid up, there was a very rapid increase in dividends. From 1891 to the first half of 1892 the rate of dividend was 12 per cent; for the second half of 1892 the rate went up to 15 per cent, and in 1897 it rose to 15 per cent plus a 2½ per cent bonus. How were these high dividends maintained? First, Mr. Speaker, by fraud; by the wrongful transfer of profits to shareholders' account and, secondly, by revising the interest rate on the capital. I now quote to the house the opinion of the commissioners who dealt with this matter:

It is plain to your commissioners that the large interest of the assurance company in these various enterprises—

That is, those to which I have just referred, namely, the stock enterprises and other speculative investments in the United States.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is that the Sun Life Assurance Company?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, it refers to no other company.

It is plain to your commissioners that the large interest of the assurance company in these various enterprises is greatly in excess of the limits of reasonable investment. Apart from any question of statutory power, it seems to your commissioners that to engage the funds of an insurance company in enterprises of this character to such an extent as necessarily to involve the directors of the insurance company in promotion, construction and management, is foreign to the purposes of an insurance company and calculated to imperil its funds.

In the opinion of your commissioners, the embarking upon such enterprises is no legitimate function of an insurance company and is a misuse of powers of investment, however wide. It does not seem to your commissioners that the success or failure of any particular undertaking has any bearing upon the question of principle involved, or affords any true standard of propriety. Other enterprises, similar of character, as will be seen in a later part of this report, have ended in serious loss, although the directors were so sanguine in regard to them as their evidence showed them to be in the case under discussion.

I now come to the criticism of the commission with reference to the faulty investment, or the wrongful transfer to the shareholders' account.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Do I understand my hon. friend to state that this money that was wrongfully transferred to the shareholders belonged to the policyholders?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Absolutely. I note the following at page 20 of the commissioner's report:

A shareholders' account has been kept, to which has been credited not only the interest but also the proportion of the profits allotted to them from time to time, and it is out of this account that the dividends have been declared. During 1891, and the first half of 1892, dividends at the rate of twelve per cent, and since and including the latter half of 1892 at fifteen per cent, have been declared, besides a bonus of two and a half per cent upon the old stock in 1897.

This is what the commission state in regard to the matter:

Carrying to the credit of the shareholders' account the ascertained proportion of profits and interests has not, however, enabled the company to pay these dividends, and from time to time the directors have resorted to various devices for the purpose of increasing the shareholders' account, so as to enable it to pay the dividends which have been paid.

The first of these devices was to credit the practically defunct accident branch with considerable sums of money, upon the theory that that branch in years past had been charged more than its proportion of the general expenses of the company. The accident branch being so credited out of the current profits, the sums so credited were brought into the shareholders' account for the purpose of augmenting it and so enabling the dividends to be paid. Three sums were so credited to the accident branch and brought in to the detriment of the policyholders and in the case of the shareholders; $2,000 in 1895; $4,000 in 1900; and $30,000 in 1902; and the evidence is that there are still at the credit of the accident branch considerable sums of money, the intention being to bring these also into the shareholders' account. It is manifest that in revising the charges made in past years to the accident branch, the directors of the present day have undertaken to overrule what may be presumed to have been the well-informed and deliberate decision of the directors of former years as to the proper proportion of expenses to be charged to that branch, and your commissioners think it clear that the revision was undertaken solely as a device for maintaining the shareholders' account.

Note again what your commissioners have said in this regard:

Another improper means by which the shareholders' account has been enabled to provide the dividends paid to shareholders is by similarly revising the rate of interest allowed upon capital in addition to its share of the profits in past years. The method adopted has been to go through the years as far back as 1877 and to allow, instead of the rates which were allowed, a rate of six per cent, which has been improved at six per cent, compound interest, from 1877 down. The result of this has been to bring into the shareholders' account $9,088.34 (in 1901).

A third method of swelling the shareholders' account has been to go back to the year 1897, when the new capital was issued at a premium of $30 per share—

That is the $2,000 to which I have just referred:

—and to bring into the general shareholders' account interest, compounded at six per cent, upon that premium. This revision of the earlier dealing with this premium, to the prejudice of policyholders, was also, in the opinion of your commissioners, improper. In this way the shareholders' account was swollen in 1905 by the sum of $37,930.73.

Is it any wonder that this company has been able to pay admirable dividends to its fortunate shareholders? But what of the policyholders? The commissioners continue:

Still a fourth method of maintaining the shareholders' account was to take out of moneys realized upon the sale of investments large sums, in addition to the proportion of profits allotted to the shareholders. This is claimed to have been done by way of anticipation of profits—

Anticipation of profits, if you please!

—to be ascertained and declared in the future, the suggestion being that when the time arrived for the distribution of these profits, the shareholders, upon the principle of distribution which has been adopted, will be entitled to the sums so forestalled, or greater sums.

That gives the house some slight conception of the manner in which the company has been conducted from that time on.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): What is the date of that report?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The commission of 1906. In answer to the implication conveyed in the question I may say that largely the same board of directors exist and the same managing head exists. The single managing head is the dictator of the company. Just as the commission reported at that time that the company had an exceedingly obedient board of directors, so can it be stated to-day that the board of directors is as susceptible to reason by the present general manager and president, Mr. Macaulay, as it was in those days.

A further fact to which attention is called in the commission's report is the extraordinary action of the board of directors or the management with respect to a certain Shawinigan account. The commission states that the management omitted in the government returns accounting for $172,000 worth of bonus stock of the Shawinigan Company. That may be found at page 23 of the report. The company apparently had plenty of money for foreign investment, but I have a serious recollection of not very long ago in western Canada finding the very agents of the company declaring that it was withdrawing from the province. Why? Because it claimed that there were too many prior rights to real estate in the province. But it did not give you any real facts of the case. It did not tell you that in a certain year the whole policy of the company had changed, so that instead of making investments in slow real estate or mortgage loans it preferred more speculative and perhaps more profitable investments in such concerns as the Cornwall Street Railway and many other corporations of that character. The fact of the matter is that this company is coming out to the west, and for that matter, all over Canada, soliciting insurance, and taking the money from those who take out their policies, and then investing that money, which was produced in Canada, largely in other countries.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Does the hon. gentleman really believe that? Is it not a fact that all the money which it raises in Canada must, under the Insurance Act, be invested in this country?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not at all.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I understand that that is the case.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My hon. friend is misinformed.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I am not misinformed, either.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I trust that the hon. gentleman will make his point very clear when he speaks. Let me tell him that there is no method of segregating the policyholders' money. The only fact brought out in the committee was that more than seventy per cent, I think it was even seventy-five per cent, of the business of this company was done abroad.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): That is true.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure that the hon. gentleman does not want to mislead the house. The fact is that the investments of the company in Canada more than represent the amount of its premiums collected in Canada. The company's foreign business means its life insurance business, not its investments. The hon. gentleman can see it in the blue book.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That brings me to this very nice point. Here we have Mr. Macaulay and the board of directors spreading throughout all Canada in the last year a tremendous volume of propaganda urging that this bill be passed by parliament for one principal reason, that we should save this grand Canadian company from the grasping clutches of American investors, and retain the company within Canada. Would it not have been infinitely better if this company had undertaken to invest all or at least the greater part of its funds, even those secured from its foreign policies, in Canadian enterprises?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Surely the hon. gentleman knows that that is not possible, that under the laws of the United States the premiums collected in that country must be invested in the United States. It is the same kind of law as we have in Canada. It is only fair to state that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman may have information that I have not got under my hand at the moment. I am not aware that there is such a provision in our act, but in any case it would be far more benefiting this company if its proportion of Canadian investments was greater than it is at the present time. It has gigantic profits, a tremendous surplus, great reserves of many kinds, and I venture to tell the hon. gentleman that only a small fraction of this company's resources is invested in this country.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): A great deal of the money which this company gets in premiums from countries other than the United States is invested in Canada, in addition to the premiums collected in Canada. Those are the real facts of the case.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Can the hon. gentleman tell me how much there is invested in Canada?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): About $146,000,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the hon. gentleman know that the total assets alone amount to about $500,000,000?

Mr. BENNETT: The assets are nearly $1,000,000,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And the amount for loaning about $500,000,000. As a matter of fact the policy of the company at the time of which I speak was to use the policyholders' funds to help themselves and their friends to speculate in favoured positions. Let me support that rather startling statement by a reference to page 24 and 25 of this report—I will come to that later. At the time the company engaged in these highly speculative endeavours, they just happened to be lucky; that is all. Their losses in several of their investments were tremendously heavy, and had it not been for a fortunate turn of events as regards their investments in Canada and other countries, the company would have no doubt sustained heavy losses at the expense of the policyholders. For instance, the appleyard enterprise spelled almost disaster for the company for a time, also its investment in Levis County Railway bonds. If you turn to page 29 of the report of the Royal Commission on Life Insurance you will find there set out at length the method of the company in investing the policyholders' money.

I now come to the question of the need for the capital increase asked for in this bill. It would be well if those who, like my hon. friend from Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner), are anxious to give this company another $2,000,000 capital, with which to cut melons and distribute stock bonuses, would study the report of the Royal Commission on Life Insurance of 1906. The principles laid down by that commission with respect to insurance are as valid to-day as on the day they were written.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if the hon. gentleman realizes that in consequence of that report a new Insurance Act was passed, and that under that legislation the character of the investments of the company are fixed by law, and all the company's investments now comply with the Insurance Act.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I had no intention of suggesting for a moment that the company to-day was carrying on exactly the same type of investments that it carried on then. My purpose was to indicate the temperament and type of management of the company, which management still exists, and which is of a peculiar type that sees the possibilities of making and accumulating gigantic profits, possibly more than anything else in connection with the company. The mere fact that they come to this house and ask for an increase in capital when they do not need it is an indication of their type. Life insurance companies need but little capital once they get started. Let me ask hon. gentlemen to listen to this statement of the commissioners:

> It seems reasonably plain that if an insurance business possesses the elements of success, the capital stock soon cease to play any important part in its operation. It is difficult to deny, however, to the capital actually adventured the position of security and profit which its adventure has earned. In cases like that of the Canada Life, where $875,000 was put into an established and flourishing business, for the sole purpose, so far as the commission has been able to ascertain, that it might earn at the expense of the policyholders a larger rate of interest than it inherently commanded, no such considerations apply.

There, in the words of the royal commission, is a principle which should be applied to the consideration of this particular measure before the house. The company has a capital to-day of $2,000,000, fully paid up last year, paid up, I am sorry to say, not in cash; only a very small portion of it was paid up in cash, the rest of it being paid up in stock bonuses, transferred profits and dividends. That the company needs no more capital for continuing and expanding its business is made very clear by the fact that the company in Canada with the smallest capital at the present moment is charging the lowest rate on its life insurance policies, and yet is expanding at a faster rate than any other insurance company in Canada. Let me turn to page 166 of the report of the commission. We will find, dealing with the whole principle of the policyholders trust, that is, the funds of the policyholders—

Mr. CASGRAIN: What company does my hon. friend refer to in relation to lower rates?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Canada Life, with a million dollar capital, $125,000 of which is paid up, one-half paid out of profits.

Mr. BENNETT: It is fully paid up now.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is the company to which I have reference.

> It seems to the commission of importance to define the nature and position of the funds resulting from the operation of insurance companies.

I would ask hon. members to note this point:

> Save in so far as capital stock plays a part, these funds are either a reserve kept in hand to discharge the insurance obligation, or a surplus resulting from a charge upon the persons insured in excess of what it has cost to insure their lives.

Here you have a company which last year made a profit of $38,000,000. Is it not clear, Mr. Speaker, to the shallowest thinker on this question that a company doing a business returning $38,000,000 in one year is certainly in no need of capital for expansion, irrespective even of the commission's report? The fact of the matter is, this company is making such gigantic profits that it is afraid of the public clamour that will arise when it continues paying annually 25 per cent or more in dividends, so it wants to have some method of covering up those gigantic profits, which must be disbursed as dividends some time or other, and rather than let the policyholders share in the profits by reducing the rates or mutualizing the company, the management prefer, by increasing the capital, to make possible further watering of the stock. There is a pretty tale in regard to that. Let us run over it for a moment. It might be well to bring up to date the record of the capitalization and dividends to shareholders since the discussion took place on this bill only a year ago.

Mr. BENNETT: Might I interrupt my hon. friend—I did not hear distinctly—to say that the company has approximately half a billion assets, not a billion?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills being exhausted, the house will now revert to supply.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public Works—chargeable to collection of revenue—collection of public works revenue, $4,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the explanation of this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to cover expenditure in connection with the collection of slide and boom dues and commission to agents for collection of rents, and so on.

Mr. BENNETT: In any community where the department has rents to collect why should it not use its permanent officials for the purpose, rather than pay agents commissions? That is a question I was asked some time ago, and I could not answer it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The practice has obtained for some time of giving to regular rental agents the collection of rents of this kind.

Mr. BENNETT: For instance, do you pay commission on the collection of rents from the brewery buildings to the west of us?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, we do.

Mr. BENNETT: That is an illustration of what was brought to my attention. Why should the department with the number of officials they have here, who are not overworked, collect these rentals rather than pay somebody outside to do so?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend has taken what is perhaps the best paying collection from the standpoint of the agent; but the department owns these residences and certain other property, and on the whole it is considered that the commission we pay—

Mr. BENNETT: What commission do we pay?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Five per cent.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the amount of the rentals?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $111,000.

Item agreed to.

Graving docks—Champlain graving dock, $89,200.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this dock being used for government purposes?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: For general public purposes.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it under the control of the government?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: It is owned by the government, I take it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this for repairs or extensions?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is for the operation and maintenance of the Champlain graving dock for the year 1928-29.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any revenue?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, there is revenue.

Mr. BENNETT: How is this chargeable to collection of revenue? I must confess that I have found it difficult to understand this without some explanation, but probably the explanation is forthcoming. You have over $200,000 chargeable to collection of revenue, while it is really money spent on maintenance and repairs in connection with three graving docks.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the way in which the books are kept. The expenses in connection with those docks which give revenue to the government are charged under the heading "collection of revenue".

Mr. BENNETT: Is the revenue equal to the expenditure in any one year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Item agreed to.

Harbour and river works—Burlington channel bridge, $7,500.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Is there any revenue from this bridge?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, no revenue. This amount is required for staff, maintenance and repairs for the Burlington bridge which affords a crossing over a ship channel for vehicular and other traffic.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Why is it in this category if there is no revenue? Is there any revenue from the channel?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; it has been kept in this class as a matter of bookkeeping. The works that we operate are all in here; those that return a revenue are here included. It is a matter partially of cost of collection of revenue and cost of keeping up the docks.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I presume there are expenditures in connection with attendants who look after the bridge. Is that item included in the vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Who are the persons looking after the bridge, and what are their wages?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

Carey, Morley—bridge tender, $1,260.
Brown, Edward—assistant bridge tender, $1,140.
Duckett, Frank—assistant bridge tender, $1,140.
Irving, Harve—assistant bridge tender, $1,110.
Morrisson, J. A.—assistant bridge tender, $1,110.—Total, $5,760.

Item agreed to.

Kingston—wharfs and bridges, $12,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are there any repairs being done at La Salle?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are certain repairs to the guide piers, as well as replacement of timbers and splicing piles, $1,300; improvements to grounds, $50; renewing floor of the east span of sidewalks, $2,050. These are included in the amount.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That highway will require very much more in the way of repairs in order to be in condition for next fall. About eighty large grain boats winter there, and a good deal of damage has been done to the anchorage. The minister would be well advised to have it looked after before next fall.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to look into it.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot understand what difference there is between the items we are just now discussing and those with which we dealt this afternoon. What is the difference between constructing a wharf and bridge at Kingston, putting a dam at Latchford and a lock and dam at Riviere du Lievre, and repairing a slip at Selkirk, on the one hand, and on the other the works which were under discussion this afternoon? There must be some explanation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The distinction is this: the works which we operate are kept in this category, whereas the other wharves we build and turn over to the Marine department.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Moreover, you are getting a large revenue from these.

Mr. BENNETT: But that goes into the consolidated fund at once.

Item agreed to.

56103—217½

St. Andrew's rapids—lock and dam, $21,500.

Mr. GARDINER: Explain.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to provide for staff, repairs and so forth for the fiscal year 1928-29 in connection with St. Andrew's rapids lock and dam on the Red river, Manitoba.

Item agreed to.

Selkirk—repair slip, $3,400.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): How much revenue is returned to the department from all the items included in this vote of $55,660?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of all those mentioned in this vote we get revenue from the last item alone, and that is $2,490.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Surely the minister is mistaken, because those boats pay a toll at the La Salle bridge. Why, you must have had revenue from one boat that was seized and was lying there for some time.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That goes to the Marine department; we do not get it.

Mr. BENNETT: I had occasion the other day to ask the minister this question: Why is it that the Department of National Revenue is inviting tenders for the construction of a new building, when the Department of Public Works has always dealt with such matters? A building is being put up in Phillipsburg, in regard to which I wrote the minister. There was no record of it in his department, and subsequently he was good enough to advise me that the Department of National Revenue was in fact putting up a public building there. Why should that department put up a building there? It is a small matter, but I should like to know the reason.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot state the reason, but from time to time that department has put up small buildings. It has not done so very often, only occasionally.

Mr. BENNETT: Here is a public building to which my attention was directed. I inquired of the minister and he said that the Public Works department had no record of it. I was able to give him further information on the matter, and he subsequently informed me that the Department of National Revenue was constructing a public building. What architect is doing the work, for instance, and what services are rendered?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not any of the Public Works architects.

Mr. BENNETT: We shall have another opportunity to inquire into the matter.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone lines—land and cable telegraph lines, lower St. Lawrence and maritime provinces, including working expenses of vessels required for cable service, $218,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister give us some particulars of this vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required during the fiscal year 1928-29 for the working expenses of the land and cable telegraph lines of the sea coasts and island of the lower river and gulf of St. Lawrence and the maritime provinces, including working expenses of vessels required for cable service. The amount called for includes $7,500, possibly required for submarine cable renewals; $75,000 for maintenance and working expense of the cable-ship Tyrian; $70,270 for telegraph staff salaries and commissions and $65,230 for repairs and supplies, making a total of $218,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How far north on the Labrador coast do these lines go?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They go as far as Belle Isle.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the revenue from this service?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The revenue earned in 1928-29 was $39,305.92, and in 1927-28 it was $33,150.

Item agreed to.

Alberta and Saskatchewan, $114,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What are these telephone lines for and where are they?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is to provide for the working expenses of the telegraph and telephone lines in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan for the year 1928-29. Prior to the year 1927-28 separate appropriations, one for Alberta and one for Saskatchewan, were always provided for the maintenance of these lines. For administrative purposes the lines in these two provinces were united into one division, known as the Alberta-Saskatchewan division. The mileage is made up as follows:

In Alberta:	Miles
Edmonton—Hudson Hope	739½
Athabasca—Fort McMurray	245
Athabasca—Lac La Biche	78
Mooswa—Onion lake	37
Junor	8
	1,107½

In Saskatchewan:
Battleford—Isle la Crosse	335
Lloydminster—Onion lake	42
Assiniboia—Willow Branch	84
Grouard—High Prairie	38½
Dawson Creek	8
Kilkerran	6
	513½

Mr. BENNETT: Can the minister tell me the revenue from the Alberta mileage?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are combined for 1928-29; up to 1925-26 they were separate. In 1925-26 the Alberta lines brought in a revenue of $17,110.08, and the Saskatchewan lines $3,616.14. In 1926-27 the combined lines brought in a revenue of $19,299.62, and last year the combined revenue was $20,726.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia mainland, $92,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this also a telephone service?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, telephone and telegraph, the mainland telegraph and telephone lines in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. FRASER: Would not the same question which I asked this afternoon apply to this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am advised that none of these offices have been sold.

Mr. FRASER: I do not want to contradict the minister, but I think he is mistaken. I think that is the same vote we had this afternoon, or that it includes the same district, in which 145 offices have been eliminated.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps this might be an opportune time to say which of these lines have been sold. The Kamloops section is still in our possession; we still have the Barriere section, the Chase-Revelstoke section and the Golden-Inverness section.

Mr. STEVENS: The best paying sections have been sold.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are all south of Kamloops, and when we revert to that vote I will move that the amount be reduced to $12,705, for the repair of the lines we have not sold.

Mr. FRASER: Will not the same principle apply to this item? The item this afternoon was for repairs and this is for maintenance of the lines in exactly the same section. You have eliminated 145 of those offices, but this vote covers the whole section.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We will only need whatever amount is required for maintenance; we will not need anything for those lines which have been sold. I think probably my hon. friend is correct in saying that this item does cover some of the lines which were sold.

Mr. STEVENS: In comparing this item with the amount voted last year this would appear to include them all.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, I think that is correct.

Mr. FRASER: As a matter of fact, these lines were sold after the estimates were made up and the estimates have not been altered?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is it exactly.

Mr. McQUARRIE: To whom were the lines sold?

Mr. ELLIOTT: To the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Mr. McQUARRIE. In competition with other companies?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I think not.

Mr. GARDINER: What price was received for them?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We received $50,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: There is another telephone company operating in that section, the Okanagan Telephone Company.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, but apparently it was not in a position to buy these lines; the British Columbia Company was able to take them over, and we received $50,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The Okanagan Telephone Company intimated that they were not in a position to buy these lines?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I do not believe I can say that; I understood that the only negotiations carried on were with the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Mr. STEVENS: Do I understand the minister to say that only $50,000 was received for these lines?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the minister consider that a satisfactory amount for these lines? That included the lines running from Kamloops to Merritt, the Penticton section, the Vernon section and the portion belonging to the government in the Okanagan, part of it using the British Columbia Telephone Company lines.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would say to my hon. friend that we got rid of a very big deficit; they were all running behind.

Mr. STEVENS: If I recall rightly, that portion of the line pretty nearly balanced up its cost; that was a very good section of the line. I think there was a section taken out some years ago for the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Some parts were not as bad as others, but we had an annual deficit of over $30,000 for a number of years on the lines we sold. We were pleased to get rid of them.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is the company which took them over making them pay now?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We hope that they will not have the deficit that we had.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Some of these lines were in competition with the Okanagan Telephone Company, and, if I remember correctly, that company made an offer at one time to purchase some of these lines. I am surprised they were not communicated with and asked to make a bid on the purchase.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not understand that they were.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That seems surprising to me. I understand they were anxious at one time to take the government lines over, and they may have given a better price than the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That matter of telephone service was fully discussed in New Westminster in 1923, when the department officials met the board of the Okanagan Telephone Company. The secretary-treasurer of this company, in a letter dated September 26, 1923, said:

> The Okanagan Telephone Company does not feel that at the present time it is in a position to maintain and operate all government lines within territory now occupied by us.

The words "occupied by us" cover only a very small portion of the lines disposed of, 79 miles, and the object of the government was to dispose of the lines in toto, so as to effect a saving of $30,000 a year, and not sell the lines in pieces and disrupt a serviceable system by disposing of the valuable portion and retaining the non-productive portion. This precluded any chance of dealing with the Okanagan Telephone Company. The present transaction has meant that we have disposed of the revenue producing lines along with the non-producing lines, at the same time guaranteeing to all localities and individuals now being served by the government lines the continuation of such service by the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Mr. FRASER: What amount of money was spent last year on substantial improvements on the lines which have been sold?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have salaries, contingencies and upkeep all together, and I cannot give the upkeep separately.

Mr. FRASER: I am interested in the cost of the new equipment put into the lines which have been sold.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to get that information.

Mr. GARLAND: Has the minister any information as to the amount of capital invested?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that the original cost for construction and everything else was about $200,000.

Mr. FRASER: Do I understand that this vote is to be allowed to stand, the same as the other one?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to give the information in the supplementaries, and have the discussion there.

Mr. FRASER: All right.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia northern district, $88,000.

Mr. BRADY: Will the minister give us an idea of the extent of the lines covered by this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The total mileage is 1,575.

Mr. BRADY: Could the minister give me the points and locations covered?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The mileages are as follows: Oregon-Jack creek, 13; Highland valley, 29; Savona, 32; Lilooet, Pioneer Lytton, 160; Clinton-Gang Ranch, 70; Canim Lake system, 27½; Williams Lake-Alkali Lake, 32. Are there any particular localities that my hon. friend would like?

Mr. BRADY: I want to know if any new lines are being constructed in northern British Columbia.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This does not refer to new lines; it covers the lines already constructed

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. GEARY: Were the figures given stations or miles?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Miles.

Mr. GEARY: Where could we get the amount of receipts for these various lines? Is it printed anywhere?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is in the Public Works report.

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Outside service — salaries and allowances, including amount required to provide for salaries, reclassification, revision, promotions and increases which may be authorized by the Civil Service Commission, $16,955,934.40.

Mr. MANION: Would the Postmaster General give us some of the details as to this item?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): There are four principal items included in this appropriation. The item for salaries shows an increase of $428,940, of which $187,620 is due to statutory increases approved by the Civil Service Commission and the balance of $241,320 is due to additional assistance, chiefly letter carriers and postal clerks, required to handle the increased volume of mail and to provide for improved postal facilities for the public. The increased vote will be offset by a corresponding increase in the postal revenue. The item for mail service shows an increase of $425,000 of which $100,000 is for mail service by railway and $325,000 for mail service by air and land conveyance including rural mail delivery. The third item, miscellaneous, is the same as last year. The item for the Yukon is the same as last year.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the first item include salaries for postmasters in what are called non-staff post offices—that is, where they get a lump sum for running the post office without any provision for staff?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give the committee give some information as to how those salaries are arrived at? I have had several complaints regarding their being inadequate for the service performed.

Mr. VENIOT: The minimum salary for rural postmasters at the present time is $60 per annum. When the revenue of the post office from the sale of stamps, commissions on money orders and postal notes, et cetera, increases from $120 up to $1,000 the increase in salary is fifty per cent of the increased revenue

I wish to take advantage of the question asked by the hon. gentleman to say that the question having arisen last winter and again this session as to an increase in salary for rural postmasters, it has been decided to increase those salaries. As I say, the minimum now paid is $60, and the minimum in future, beginning 1st April, 1928, will be $100 per annum. The percentage increase of salary on the revenue from $100 up to $1,000 will be seventy per cent instead of fifty; on the revenue from $1,000 up to $10,000, it will be thirty per cent, and on the revenue from $10,000 up to $15,000 it will be twenty per cent. This will give an increase without any discrimination whatever to more than 9,000 rural postmasters.

Mr. BENNETT: An increase of $40 a year.

Mr. VENIOT: That is a minimum, but some will receive increases of $100, $124 up to $200, according to the revenue ranging from $150 up to $15,000.

Mr. MANION: In round figures what does the total increase amount to?

Mr. VENIOT: In consequence of the reduction in the postage from three to two cents the postmaster's salary, if I can call it such, that is, accumulated from the minimum salary and from commissions, would naturally have been reduced, because, salaries being paid on revenue, as the revenue diminishes the salary diminishes. But an order in council was passed in 1927, retroactive for the year 1926, that no salary would be less than it was at the end of the year prior to the reduction in the postage. That entailed an extra expenditure of some $600,000. This increase which we are now giving will maintain that and add to it somewhere in the vicinity of $250,000, making a total of about $900,000.

Mr. MANION: What is the $900,000?

Mr. VENIOT: This amount of $900,000 includes about $600,000 to make up the reduction that would have taken place had we continued to pay the postmaster on the revenue after the reduction in the postage, and we are adding to that some $250,000 which will make up somewhere between $850,000 and $900,000.

Mr. MANION: I notice the minister was speaking of the three items together, so we might put our questions in regard to them in the same way. As regards the second item "mail service, including mail service by air" I think the committee would like to know what services are being carried on by air at the present time. I know of some in northern Ontario.

Mr. SPENCER: While the minister is giving that, he might also give the future program.

Mr. VENIOT: I will find the information in a minute, but I may say from memory that last winter we had an air mail service from Moncton to the Magdalen islands at a cost of about $6,000, and an air mail service from La Malbaie in the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay to Anticosti, costing about $26,000. Yes. It covers the Seven Islands and Anticosti, accommodating six or seven points along that route. We had, in addition to that, an air mail service from Sioux Lookout to Red Lake, serving Gold Pines, Jackson-Manion (Woman Lake), Narrow Lake, Grace or Rainbow Lake, and Clearwater Lake. The name of the company running that service was the Patricia Airways, Limited. The service was at the rate of ten cents per ounce. The company was allowed to carry the mail under what is known as the sticker system; that is, we were not charging anything extra, but in the case of any person who wished to send his mail by that air service, the company was allowed to attach a sticker to the mail at the rate of ten cents per ounce. We had also a service from Rolling Portage to Red lake, serving Gold Pines, Jackson-Manion and Narrow Lake. This service was at the same rate. We had an air mail service from Leamington to Pelee island at $32 a trip. The London Air Transport, Limited, carried on that service, under an arrangement made between Pelee township, Leamington, and the Post Office department.

Mr. MANION: I happen to have received some letters via air mail service, and I note that there is a stamp called "Airways stamp" put on them. Is that a private stamp of their own, or is it a departmental stamp?

Mr. VENIOT: It is a private stamp at the present time.

Mr. MANION: So the revenue goes to the airways company?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes. The reason for that is that the whole system is as yet in the experimental stage, but just as soon as we are in a position to know that we can give the public a regular service, we shall have an air mail stamp, and charge accordingly. We are now arranging for an air mail service, as we had last year, from Rimouski to Montreal, Montreal to Toronto, and Montreal to Ottawa. We are also negotiating for an air mail service from Montreal to Schenectady, and another one from Toronto to Buffalo. It will be some time before these two latter services will be inaugurated, because we have to enter into special arrangements, a sort of air mail treaty, with the United States.

Mr. MANION: Is this air mail service for special mail, just in case the individual wants to have his mail sent that way?

Mr. VENIOT: The Montreal-New York and the Toronto-Buffalo service will be a regular mail service, and rates will be charged in accordance with the service. At the present time there is no extra charge being made for the service from Rimouski to Montreal, Montreal to Toronto, and Montreal to Ottawa, because it is not yet a regular air mail service, but is given only twice a week. The object of that service is to connect with the transatlantic boats at Rimouski, and hasten the mail across the continent to the Pacific coast. We have found that by taking the mail by aeroplane from Rimouski we can land it in Toronto twenty-four hours ahead of the usual delivery.

Mr. MANION: Is all first class mail taken that way?

Mr. VENIOT: All first class mail matter from across the ocean will be taken in that way for these points. The planes carry from 750 to 1,000 pounds, and they have been pretty well loaded every time. Then when the planes are returning, they gather the transatlantic mail at Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec and catch the steamer after she has left port and before she reaches Rimouski. In that way, Canadian mail reaches Great Britain one week ahead of the usual time.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is the Postmaster General considering establishing an air mail service on the prairies from Winnipeg to Calgary? It would certainly increase the speed of the mail service from the prairies to the coast, and I believe that Calgary is making a special air landing with that object in view.

Mr. VENIOT: In connection with all the air mail services we have established, I may say that so far as the air routes are concerned, they are subject to the air board, under the Department of National Defence. They are working in absolute co-operation with the Post Office department, and it is the intention this summer to have the air board make a survey west of Toronto as far as we can go with the survey this summer, taking in Winnipeg, Edmonton and Calgary, and any other points that we designate. They will make the survey, and then give us a report on the possibilities of establishing an air mail service in those sections. While I will not say that it is a fixed policy, yet if Canada is to follow the movement for air service which is spreading on the continent of America, eventually we will have to have an air service to the coast.

Mr. ODETTE: Will a survey be made of southwestern Ontario with a view to establishing an air mail route between Toronto and Windsor?

Mr. VENIOT: I am not in a position to promise that to my hon. friend, but I think it is included in this survey program.

Mr. TOLMIE: How frequent is the air mail service between Victoria and Seattle, and what are the arrangements there?

Mr. VENIOT: I do not know what the arrangement is. It is a private company.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does any of these three votes include the payment of the mail carriers who are carrying mail by stage?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: Is it the intention of the department to establish an emergency station for aeroplanes at Riviere du Loup on the route from Montreal and Quebec to Rimouski?

Mr. VENIOT: The Post Office department has nothing whatever to do with establishing airfields or landing ports. That matter belongs entirely to the Department of National Defence. We point out to them where they may be required, and they look into the matter, and if it is decided to establish such an airfield they take the matter in hand and do the work.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How are these rural mail couriers paid? Is there a minimum payment? Is the work awarded by contract?

Mr. VENIOT: The rural mail service is awarded under contract.

Mr. ADSHEAD: By tender?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. ARTHURS: Mr. Chairman, some days ago a question arose on the estimates of the hon. minister regarding the carriage of the mails by boats in northern Ontario. I think the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) brought the matter up. The minister at that time stated that he intended not to open the service until the 15th of May. I took some part in the discussion, but I did not hear the minister say whether he intended to discontinue the service on the 15th of October. Does he?

Mr. VENIOT: I will ask permission to explain the situation.

Mr. ARTHURS: I will tell the minister first what I want. This year navigation on all these lakes opened exceptionally late, on the first day of May. It usually closes from the 12th to the 15th of December—not October—because the boats are running during the whole of the hunting season and for some time afterwards, and if the mail is not carried by boat it involves considerable hardship on the men who have the contract for carrying the mail during the other part of the year. Their contracts are usually made on the supposition that they will be drawing the mail on sleighs, and if the mail service by boat is discontinued as early as the 15th of October and is not resumed until the 15th of May, those contractors have to carry the mail over the worst possible roads, a condition which was not contemplated by them at the time they took the contracts. I would ask the hon. minister to reconsider this and continue the mail service in those parts of the country where there is an ordinary resident population until the close of navigation.

Mr. VENIOT: After the matter was brought up about two weeks ago by the hon. member for Muskoka and my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, I stated that the season would not begin this year until the 15th of May, but in the meantime I would have the matter looked into thoroughly. The same week instructions were issued to our superintendent of mail transportation by mail and steamer to visit this district and go into the whole situation. He did so, meeting the steamship company that carries the mail and other mail contractors, as well as a large number of residents of the district. He reports that he has reached a decision which he feels sure will be favourable to all those with whom he discussed the matter. Arrangements will be made with the steamship company for a better and earlier service next spring. We felt we should not allow a steamship company or any other company transporting our mails to impose upon us whatever prices they thought fit.

Mr. ARTHURS: Just there, Mr. Chairman—in the past the price has been relative to the number of boats employed in the spring and fall. I know that was the case in regard to one navigation company some years ago.

Mr. VENIOT: They were asking $50 a day for fifteen days. I did not consider it worth while.

Mr. ARTHURS: During the season ten or twelve boats are in commission, but during the spring and fall the number is reduced to one-third, or at the outside one-half.

Mr. VENIOT: My object is to give them a good and efficient service, and I think we are in a fair way to do it after what took place the other day.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is a maximum price per mile set for the rural mail carriers beyond which you will not go, or do you leave it open to tender?

Mr. VENIOT: It is all by tender. There is no maximum price set, but we have a scale to guide us in determining whether tenders are too high or not.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not quite correct to say they are all by tender, because frequently the contracts are renewed by the department without calling for tenders.

Mr. VENIOT: That is true. Now I wish to take up a little of the time of the committee on this question. For the last two years an agitation has been started by a person purporting to represent what he calls the Postal Mail Carriers Association. All mail contractors have been asked to contribute from two to five dollars each. Those supposed to be at the head of the association claim that they can influence the Post Office department to such an extent as to have increased allowances made to these mail carriers. Now I want to say right here on behalf of the department that the day has come when, with the knowledge in my possession of the way in which this agitation is being carried on, it is necessary for me to declare that the Post Office department in no way recognizes such an association, and that the gentleman who pretends to be its secretary has no authority to speak on behalf of the department.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I ask if he has any authority to speak on behalf of the mail carriers? I do not think he suggests that he has any authority to speak on behalf of the Post Office department.

Mr. VENIOT: I have been informed by mail contractors that representations have been made to them that this gentleman is in such close touch with the Post Office department that he can almost guarantee what he is seeking for them. That is why I am making this statement to-night.

Mr. ARTHURS: He must be a Liberal.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not know whether he is or not, and I do not care.

Mr. STEVENS: Hear hear; that looks like daylight.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not care what his politics may be, but I want to stop this agitation among our mail carriers. I find propaganda is being put forward by this gentleman encouraging our mail carriers to ask for $70 a mile; that they be placed upon the same footing as the mail carriers in the United States. This is not practicable in Canada, owing to our sparsely settled country and the different climatic conditions in various parts of the Dominion. For these reasons it is impossible to fix a uniform rate of so much per mile, and it would not be doing justice to the mail contractors to attempt it. But if a uniform rate of $70 per mile were fixed, it would mean an extra expense to the Post Office department of $7,000,000. If we were to make the rate retroactive to the date this gentleman advocates—and he is leading some of the mail contractors to believe it may come to that—it would mean an additional $18,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: It would be well to be a letter carrier then.

Mr. VENIOT: It would be better to buy them all out. As to the number of renewals, this gives me an opportunity to present a comparison as an answer to the statement that our mail carriers are being paid too little. I am not going to say that they are not being paid too little, but it is their own fault. When the tenders are put out we always find someone tendering below the contract of the year before; and, taking 400 contracts renewed, I find that not 4 per cent of those to whom we have offered renewals refuse. Apparently they are glad to obtain the renewals and to continue their contract at the figure they were receiving before. On the other hand, in many cases—80 out of 100 at least—where the contract was let anew the new contractor obtained it at a figure lower than the previous one.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If that keeps on you will ultimately get it done for nothing.

[Mr. Campbell.]

Mr. VENIOT: No, it is not so very much lower. But I maintain that it is the fault of the mail carriers themselves.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that a fair way to put it? It is a matter of competition and I know that many of these people are absolutely out of pocket.

Mr. VENIOT: Why do they carry on?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The government under this system is encouraging dishonesty. These fellows are pretty honest, but when you pare them down it makes for dishonesty.

Mr. VENIOT: I have been nearly two years at the head of the department and I have yet to discover one dishonest mail carrier under contract.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is exactly what I say; if they were not honest fellows this would only encourage them to be dishonest. You are paring them down so that they cannot make a living.

Mr. VENIOT: The department is not paring them down. It calls for tenders, just as in the case of public works, and if they bid down, that is their own business.

Mr. MANION: Are there not many contracts that are renewed without tender?

Mr. VENIOT: Certainly.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is it not a fact that in a great many cases, probably the majority of cases, where there is the slightest advance asked in the price for the carrying of mails by contract, the local inspector peddles the job around trying to get the lowest price he can obtain among the various tenderers?

Mr. VENIOT: I want to know the inspector that does that.

Mr. ARTHURS: It is done right along.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend is talking from hearsay; I will ask him to specify a case, and if he does so I will go into it.

Mr. ARTHURS: I will give the minister many instances if he requires them.

Mr. VENIOT: Give them; I want them.

Mr. ARTHURS: You will get them.

Mr. VENIOT: In the case of opening up a post office in a new district, when the inspector goes in to make his report, he informs us whether or not it is advisable to open that new office. If he reports in favour of it, while he is there he gets, from this one and that one, estimates as to what it will cost to carry the mail, giving the number of miles. That information is submitted to the department. The inspector in that case does not try to pare them down, but he gets the prices. We know what the ordinary prevailing prices are on a rural route, and where the tender is anywhere from 15 to 20 or 25 per cent above that rate—where by our scale it is too high a price—then overtures are made; if there are three or four tenderers each one is given another opportunity to submit a price upon the receipt of information from the department that we consider all the prices too high.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Can the minister tell us what the average annual payment is to one of these rural carriers?

Mr. VENIOT: That is determined by distance and frequency of service. There are rural routes in the Dominion which have a service only twice a week; there are others with three services, four services and six services weekly. Others are more frequent. And the mileage varies in all these routes; it is very seldom that we have two routes with about the same mileage. It would be impossible to give any average.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): With regard to the rural mail carriers, particularly in Ontario and in the section from which I come, I can say very definitely that they are the poorest paid members of the civil service of this country. And they are the hardest worked; they work six days a week and almost every day in the year with the exception of four holidays. These men are not paid anything like the remuneration paid the city carriers. Moreover, they have to supply horse and rig, pay large expenses for upkeep of that equipment, and every day, in all conditions of weather, in all seasons of the year, very often on bad roads, they have to be on the job. Frequently it takes them almost the whole day to make the rounds of their route. Let me cite one specific instance which will typify all the rest. In one rural route the mail carrier covers fifteen miles every day and he receives $750 per annum, which amounts to about $2.40 per trip. He has only four holidays in the year.

Mr. VENIOT: Six.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): He has to keep his horse and buggy, has to shoe the horse whenever necessary, and must meet all expenses in connection with his outfit. Hay at the present time costs almost $30 a ton and oats from seventy cents to a dollar per bushel. A bushel of oats will keep a horse about three days, and he requires from six to seven tons of hay a year. It costs $2.50 to shoe a horse, and if the carrier has to buy new shoes that means between $5 and $6. Altogether, they estimate that the cost of shoeing a horse and keeping up a rig is about $70 a year. This man has to keep a family the same as the man in the city, although he gets very much less. The minimum wage for the city letter carrier is $1,080, with a maximum of $1,500, and he gets two suits per annum. He has no equipment whatever to keep up. So that the rural route men do not get enough for the work they do, notwithstanding that it is very much harder work than the city carriers perform.

The minister says the work is done by contract; we know it is. But there are circumstances in which the inspector does try to pare them down, and in order to keep their position they will reduce the price to less than cost of service. One reason why they do this is that many of these men have no money whatever. They have their horse and rig and if they lose their contract they can hardly sell that outfit. Many of these men have been in the service quite a number of years, and hardly know what else to do. I know one or two men who could not do anything else, so they will submit to having their tenders reduced in order to retain their positions.

Mr. VENIOT: I want to say to the hon. gentleman that they are not reduced in their tenders.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I can say definitely to the minister that they are reduced, and I know one man in my own town who was reduced almost half less than a year ago.

Mr. VENIOT: Name him.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): He was reduced almost half because he was afraid he would not be able to retain his position. I will give the minister his name afterwards.

Mr. VENIOT: I thought my hon. friend had given the name.

Mr. LETELLIER: Do the rural mail carriers in the constituency represented by my hon. friend carry parcels and passengers?

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): No, they do not carry passengers, although they do carry parcels and manage to increase their income to some extent in that way. They some times carry bread into the country districts, and of course they carry some parcels. I have known of instances, although I cannot give the names, where inspectors have come out from the city and had each man tender against the other. The inspector would go to one man and say, "Mr. So-and-So has tendered for so much; can you beat it?" Then he would go to the other man and say, "Can you beat this tender?" I know one occasion at least when the man who had the contract had to reduce his tender considerably. That sort of thing has happened several times; these particular instances I mentioned happened some years ago. I know the minister does not know all about these matters; he is giving the facts as he knows them, but he is not on the job to see how these men work. Many times these mail carriers must wait for hours when a train is late; they are late getting out and late getting home, and unless some of them rent a little field where they grow oats and hay, they cannot carry on.

Mr. LETELLIER: As I have quite a number of mail carriers in my constituency I should like to inform this committee of the satisfaction which they seem to have with the way they are treated by the department. A number of mail contracts were recently renewed in my constituency and I have not heard one of the contractors complain that he is not receiving sufficient remuneration for his services. I believe the tender principle is the most practical method which could be adopted by the department. As members of this committee know, these mail carriers cannot be given a great deal more than they are receiving because this rural mail service is maintained to encourage the rural people to remain on their farms, and it is maintained by the department at a great loss. If the contract prices seem to be low we must not forget that that is the fault of those who tender. Not long ago I had a new mail delivery established in my constituency in the St. Romain district, and I must congratulate the minister for giving us this delivery. He called for tenders; the opinion of the people in that district was that $600 would have been a reasonable compensation, but the contract was awarded on a tender of $520, and the man carrying on the work claims that he is doing well.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Does the hon. gentleman think that man is receiving enough for his services? What mileage does he cover?

Mr. LETELLIER: In the winter time these men use horses and in the summer time most of them use automobiles. Some of them not only carry the mail but also operate private boarding houses or hotels. In the latter cases they must meet the trains in order to meet travellers, and at the same time they carry the mails. This works to their benefit and to the benefit of the country at large. So I believe it is rather unfair for hon. members of this house to try to introduce the idea that this system of calling for tenders should be changed; I think such a change would be prejudicial to the country at large.

Mr. THOMPSON: May I ask the minister a question? If I understood him correctly he said he had succeeded in having a number of contracts renewed without calling for tenders? Is that correct?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. LETELLIER: If no change is to be made in the contract there is no need to call for tenders, but if a mail carrier asks for an increase in his remuneration, the department is obliged to call for tenders.

Mr. THOMPSON: Then the treatment accorded the mail carriers in my hon. friend's constituency is different from that accorded mail carriers elsewhere.

Mr. SPENCER: I wish to ask the Postmaster General a question with regard to the rural mail delivery routes. As he well knows, in the prairie provinces, and particularly in the province from which I come, there are many rural mail deliveries made only twice a week. That is a very poor service. As one of my hon. friends has said, the rural mail carriers sometimes cover great distances; I believe they go up to thirty miles and over on a round trip.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, thirty-five and forty miles.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister knows perfectly well that a very poor service is being given in many of these districts. I admit the expense, but the expense is necessary, in my opinion, if we are going to give satisfaction to the hundreds of thousands of newcomers settling on the prairie. I should be glad if the minister would give the committee an outline of the policy of the department with regard to opening up new rural mail routes.

Mr. VENIOT: At the last session the house voted an amount for the purchase of about 40,000 rural mail boxes. Upon investigation we found we might require more than that in order to meet the requirements of the next three or four years. Renewal of boxes takes about 3,000 per year, and adding to that number the applications we expected to receive we therefore ordered in the vicinity of 50,000 boxes. For the information of the committee I have a compilation here of the number of applications received during part of last summer, and the fall and winter, divided up into postal districts. For Charlottetown there were two applications received; tenders were invited for both, a contract has been awarded in one case, and the other is under consideration. For Halifax district, which includes all of the province of Nova Scotia, there were 32 applications received, 14 tenders invited, 11 contracts awarded, and 3 are still under consideration. In the St. John district, which includes the province of New Brunswick, 42 applications were received, 20 tenders invited, 14 contracts authorized, and 5 are still under consideration. In the district of Quebec, which covers the lower section of the province of Quebec, 49 applications were received, 21 tenders invited, 19 contracts awarded, and 10 still under consideration. In the Montreal district of the province of Quebec, 37 applications were received, 16 tenders invited, 12 contracts awarded, and 9 are under consideration. In the Ottawa district, Ontario, 49 applications were received, 20 tenders invited, 14 contracts awarded, and 9 are under consideration. In the North Bay district, Ontario, 22 applications were received, 8 tenders invited, 4 contracts authorized, and 4 are still under consideration. In the Toronto section, 14 applications were received, 10 tenders invited, 5 contracts awarded, and 5 are under consideration. In the London section, Ontario, no applications were received, 3 tenders were invited, one contract awarded, and one is under consideration. In this case the matter was one that came under the special supervision of the inspector of the district, and he made the report without applications being received. In the Winnipeg district, 28 applications were received, 16 tenders invited, 9 contracts authorized, and 7 are still under consideration. In the Moose Jaw district, 39 applications were received, 8 tenders invited, 4 contracts awarded, and 5 where the date of operation is not yet fixed. In the Saskatoon district, 51 applications were received, 36 tenders invited, 22 contracts awarded, and 10 where the date of operation is not yet fixed. In the Calgary district, 30 applications were received, 11 tenders invited, 7 contracts awarded, and 4 where the date of operation is not yet fixed. In the Edmonton district, 20 applications were received, 9 tenders invited, 3 contracts awarded, and one where the date of operation is not yet fixed. In the district of Vancouver, 20 applications were received, 14 tenders invited, 10 contracts awarded, and 4 where the date of operation is not yet fixed. The totals show 435 applications received, 208 tenders invited, 136 contracts awarded, and 78 where the date of operation is not yet fixed. The total number of eligible residents on the 136 routes authorized is 8,568. The total number of eligible residents on the proposed routes, for which tenders are invited but not completed, is 2,150. The total of these two figures is 10,718, which is the increase in the number of people to whom service will be given this year as compared with 1927.

Mr. SPENCER: In what way are the new routes being decided? Is there any limit to the number of rural routes being opened up in each constituency, or is it regulated by the nature of the route?

Mr. VENIOT: When an application is received for a rural route, instructions are immediately sent to the district superintendent. He then authorizes one of his inspectors to go and examine this route, and he in turn gives a report on it, favourable or unfavourable as the case may be. We generally require that fifty per cent of the people on the route should purchase boxes before the route will be established. When we receive a favourable report from the inspector tenders are immediately invited so that we may know what it will cost.

Mr. BRADY: There must be some basis upon which a rural route is established. You mentioned that fifty per cent of the people would be required to take these boxes, but there must be a certain number that you decide as being necessary before a mail route is established. I should like to know what that number is upon which you base your ruling.

Mr. VENIOT: There is no real minimum fixed; it depends a great deal upon the location and the proximity to already existing post offices. We have to decide whether we can give better service by leaving a post office in a small district, where there is only a small number demanding rural delivery, or to establish a mail route and abolish the post office, or we may decide to open another office to accommodate the people. There is really no minimum that I know of, but you must understand that it would never do to open a route for from six to ten families. Anything from fifteen to twenty families has been the figure that we have been generally working on.

Mr. GARDINER: The Postmaster General had a scale or schedule, to which he referred, and which he used as a guide in granting rural mail contracts. Could we have some details of that?

Mr. VENIOT: We consider that anything ranging from $40 to $50 per mile is a reasonable price.

Mr. GARDINER: That is per annum.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, $40 to $50 per mile per annum.

Mr. FRASER: The Postmaster General mentioned a moment ago that he had purchased 50,000 letter boxes. Would he be good enough to tell the committee if he called for tenders for those boxes, whom he bought them from, and what price was paid?

Mr. VENIOT: Tenders were called for. I think we received about 50 tenders. I know there were at one time in the cellar of the department 52 models. That would not represent 52 tenders, but it would represent around 40 tenders. The contract was awarded to a sheet metal firm in Montreal who were the lowest tenderers.

Mr. FRASER: What price was paid?

Mr. VENIOT: I have not that information here and I would not want to guess at it. We endeavoured to get a box at a cost that would make the price to the boxholder no more than he had been paying previously, which would be around $4.50, and we succeeded in doing that.

Mr. FRASER: Do you charge the boxholder exactly what you pay for the boxes?

Mr. VENIOT: We charge the boxholder exactly what the box costs us; that is the contract price, plus freight and storage charges. That comes to about $4.50.

Mr. FRASER: How long does the minister suppose the supply he has will last at the rate they are going now?

Mr. VENIOT: At that rate it will, I think, last for four years, perhaps more.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In regard to rural mail contracts, is there still in the contract form a clause which gives the department the right to impose upon the contractor for the same contract price additional work to what he is already doing?

Mr. VENIOT: If that refers to additional mileage, his contract allows him to be paid pro rata. But if it refers to quantity of mail to be carried the same distance, there is a clause under which he must carry the mail. A limited quantity is not mentioned in the contract, but we have had cases where the quantity has grown so large that an adjustment has had to be made through the officers of the department.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In some cases I know a section has been added which has proved a serious burden to the rural mail carrier and no consideration has been given although he has requested it. This is a matter in which postmasters would have to be careful because unless they were acquainted with what was added, it might mean a serious burden to them.

Mr. VENIOT: If any case like that came up I would certainly try to adjust it.

Mr. MANION: I notice that the cost of stationery and printing has been increased by $75,000. I have the estimates from 1924 on, and for 1924-25, 1925-26, 1926-27 and 1927-28, the cost was $350,000. I have not the figures further back. This year the estimate is $425,000, or an increase of $75,000. Will the minister explain this?

Mr. VENIOT: My information is that a few years ago the vote was decreased by $50,000.

Mr. MANION: That must be quite a few years ago because I have the figures for 1924-25.

Mr. VENIOT: A few years ago the vote was reduced by $50,000, but due to the growth in all phases of the postal work it is necessary at this time to increase it.

Mr. MANION: In what year was it reduced?

Mr. VENIOT: I have not the year. The explanation given to me by my officials is that the increased business has brought about the necessity for the increased amount for supplies, et cetera.

Mr. MANION: If the minister cannot give me that, I wish to go a little further in regard to general costs. I was looking up the same figures in regard to the general cost of the department. I notice that in 1924-25, the year I went back to in regard to stationery and printing, the total estimates amounted to $29,586,118. This year the total estimates amount to $33,312,109, or an increase of $3,725,991, or almost $4,000,000. Will the minister explain why there is such a large increase in that period of time? Of course I can understand that there has been a gradual increase from 1924 on.

Mr. VENIOT: The only information I have before me is regarding the difference between last year and this year, and if I can judge by that, the increase can easily be explained. The item for salaries shows an increase of $428,940, of which $187,620 is due to statutory increases approved by the Civil Service Commission and the balance of $241,320 is due to additional assistance, chiefly letter carriers and postal clerks, required to handle the increased volume of mail and to provide for improved postal facilities for the public. The item for mail service shows an increase of $425,000, of which $100,000 is for mail service by railway and $325,000 for mail service by air and land conveyance, including rural mail delivery. You will find that the increase in these two items between last year and this year is roughly a million dollars.

Mr. MANION: I have now in my hand the estimates going back to 1920-21 and they show an increase of practically $1,000,000 a year. I will give the round figures:

Year	Estimates
1920-21	$24,000,000
1921-22	25,000,000
1928-29	33,000,000

From 1920-21 to this year there is an increase from $24,000,000 to $33,000,000, or an increase in eight years of $9,000,000, so that we are increasing the estimates for the Post Office department a little better than a million dollars a year. I can quite well understand that there would be an increase because we are extending our rural mail delivery and so forth, but this seems to be rather a heavy increase. At the rate of about a million dollars a year, if we go on for another ten years, the estimates for the Post Office department will amount to between $40,000,000 and $45,000,000. I think in some way we should cut down the ratio. I admit that some increase is necessary, but such an increase seems rather heavy.

Mr. VENIOT: May I draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the opinion was expressed very freely on the floor of the house last winter that the Post Office department should not be a surplus department; that is, that we should if possible endeavour to live within the revenue, but not look for large surpluses.

Mr. BENNETT: Balance your budget.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes. That is, we should spend the revenue from the postal service in giving the people a better service. It will be noticed that when there is an increase in expenditure there is also an increase in revenue. I think it was in 1926 that we reduced the postage from three to two cents, and I think it will be found by looking carefully into the records that the house was then told that there would be a deficit of between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 owing to that decrease in the postage rate, provided that the business did not increase. The business has increased to such an extent in Canada in the last three years that that $6,000,000 has practically disappeared. The difference in revenue to-day as compared with what it was in 1926, when the postage was three cents on letters and first-class mail matter is under $1,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the total revenue to-day?

Mr. VENIOT: Roughly, it is $33,000,000. What has brought about the increases this last year? I have given a few items amounting to $850,000, practically $1,000,000, due to the extra mail service that we have been called upon to give by train and water and air. That all mounts up very rapidly. In expending this extra money for the purpose of giving extra service to the public I feel that we are doing a good thing. The people are asking for it, the service is required, and the only regret I have, as the head of the department is that I cannot meet all the demands made on the department, many of which I know are honestly made for service that is really needed. But we cannot meet all these demands at one time. We can only go as fast as our revenues will permit.

I made a statement the other night, just to give an idea to the committee how I feel about giving service to the country in the proper distribution of the mails. I said that in the sparsely settled districts, in some cases isolated districts, where people receive but one mail a week, they might as well receive none, and that that kind of service should no longer be tolerated in Canada. I have attempted, and I am attempting in all cases of that kind, to give a better service. We have instances where our mailmen have travelled from twenty to twenty-five miles to get to isolated points where the revenue is only forty or fifty dollars a year, and yet to get there has cost the country the sum of $500 or $600 to give the service to these people. Naturally, therefore, it must be expected that the expenditure of the department will increase year by year. Outside of one item alone, stationery and post office orders, the demand for which is very largely increasing in Canada to-day, the other increases in the expenditure have been due to the additional service rendered.

Mr. MANION. The item of stationery is the one I was speaking of a few moments ago. I notice that in the estimates of 1921-22 that item was down as "stationery, printing and advertising," and the amount was $375,000. There was apparently a reduction between that year and 1924—

Mr. VENIOT: A reduction of $50,000, I think.

Mr. MANION: What I am coming at is this, that advertising was included in the item for stationery and printing in 1921-22 and in 1920-21, but it is not included in the item for stationery this year. Is advertising included in any other item in these estimates?

Mr. BENNETT: Is that for the government annuities, which went to the Labour department?

Mr. VENIOT: To show you how the increase runs up, in one item alone, money orders, there has been an increase in the number of orders issued of 5,700,000.

Mr. MANION: The minister did not answer my question as to advertising. Is advertising included in a different item in these estimates? In 1920-21 and 1921-22 it was included in the stationery item.

Mr. VENIOT: I will have that looked up.

Mr. BRADY: In the matter of establishing new rural mail routes, is there a condition requiring a definite number of boxes per mile before the route can be established?

Mr. VENIOT: For long distances, yes. I think it requires at least five boxes to the mile. For shorter distances, it is different.

Mr. GEARY: Would the minister say to what extent the adverse balance, if I may call it so, has been due to the reduction made a year ago in the rates for the carriage of newspapers?

Mr. VENIOT: The estimated deficit on the reduction from 1½ to 1 cent a pound on newspapers was $500,000. Hon. gentlemen will remember that when the bill was before the house I claimed that the increased volume of business which I hoped would follow the reduction would work off that deficit in two or three years. It has disappeared already down to $169,000. That is the deficit now.

Mr. GEARY: That is what it cost to carry that class of mail?

Mr. VENIOT: No. Following the reduction we got an increased volume of business, so that instead of having a defiicit of $500,000, which we would have had following the reduction if there had been no increase of business, the deficit is only $169,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the total deficit?

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. VENIOT: On the whole newspaper business? I think it was $1,750,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I think it was more than that.

Mr. VENIOT: I can look it up. I will take a note of it.

Progress reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1928-29

A message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1929, was presented by Hon. Charles A. Dunning (for the Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON FISHERIES

Mr. SPEAKER: By leave of the house, I beg to lay on the table a memorandum addressed to the House of Commons by the Canadian Fisheries Association.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Monday, May 28, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Fifth report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Young (Saskatoon).

PRIVATE BILLS

THE PEOPLE'S THRIFT CORPORATION

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay) moved the first reading of Bill No. 340, to incorporate the People's Thrift Corporation.

Mr. STEVENS: Explain.

Mr. CASGRAIN: This bill was introduced in the Senate and passed by that body. It is similar to the bill introduced in this house some time ago by the hon. member for South Timiskaming (Mr. Lang), to incorporate the Central Finance Corporation; this bill carries the same privileges and asks for the same rights. When the Central Finance Corporation bill was discussed in the Senate this bill was also considered, and they were both passed by that body. Special clauses were embodied in both these bills at the instance of the superintendent of insurance, Mr. Finlayson; those clauses were submitted to the law clerks of the Senate and were approved by the committee and passed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and referred to the select standing committee on banking and commerce.

EASTERN BANK OF CANADA

Mr. STANISLAS BLANCHARD (Restigouche-Madawaska, for Mr. Foster) moved the first reading of Bill No. 341, to incorporate the Eastern Bank of Canada.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): The hon. member has not moved for leave to introduce the bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This is a Senate bill.

Mr. STEVENS: Then I would ask the hon. member to explain it.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): in the absence of the hon. member in whose name the bill appears I might tell the house that representatives of financial men in New Brunswick have expressed their desire to incorporate a bank. The bill was presented in the upper house and comes to us from there. I understand it is in accordance with all the terms provided by the Bank Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and referred to the select standing committee on standing orders.

Some hon. MEMBERS: The banking and commerce committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I might explain that the name of this bill was changed in the Senate, and therefore it must go to the committee on standing orders.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL H. W. COOPER

Mr. McQUARRIE:

1. What were the reasons for the dismissal of Lt-Col. H. W. Cooper, late warden of British Columbia penitentiary at New Westminster?
2. What charges were made against said Cooper?
3. Was said Cooper informed of said charges, or were particulars thereof withheld from said Cooper even after he had requested same?
4. Was an investigation conducted by Inspector Jackson?
5. If so, who recommended to the minister the holding of said investigation, and the choice of Inspector Jackson as investigator?
6. Had there previously been differences between said Jackson and said Cooper, and were they on unfriendly terms?
7. Did said Inspector Jackson refuse to permit said Cooper to be present during the taking of any evidence (except his own) and also refuse to permit said Cooper to examine or cross-examine any of the witnesses or to be informed of the nature of their evidence?
8. Did said Inspector Jackson also refuse to permit said Cooper to be represented by counsel during the investigation?
9. Did said Jackson recommend the dismissal of said Cooper, and if so, on what grounds?
10. Was said dismissal recommended by the superintendent of penitentiaries, and if so, on what grounds?
11. Was said Cooper ordered by telegraph to turn over the control of said penitentiary to Trollope, the late deputy warden thereof, and if so, what urgent necessity prompted such action?
12. Was said Cooper, after dismissal, granted an allowance which is strictly contingent upon a finding of good conduct?
13. Had any adverse reports on said Cooper been previously received? If so, when and what was the purport of same?
14. Had said Cooper been highly commended by the Superintendent of Penitentiaries in all his annual reports since said Cooper's appointment?
15. Were there any escapes from the said penitentiary during the tenure of office of said Cooper?
16. Has there been any such escape since dismissal of said Cooper, and if so, who was in charge of the said penitentiary at the time, and under what circumstances did the escape take place?
17. Did any personal difference between the Superintendant of Penitentiaries and the said Cooper with reference to persons and incidents outside the penitentiary service immediately precede the request for an investigation of said Cooper's administration?
18. Has the resignation of Trollope, late deputy warden of said penitentiary, been received?
19. What reasons were given for such resignation?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Colonel Cooper was not dismissed.
2. No charges were made against Colonel Cooper.
3. Answered by No. 2.
4. Yes, into matters of administration generally.
5. Superintendent of penitentiaries.
6. There were no personal differences. They were not on unfriendly terms.
7. Yes. The investigation was held in connection with general administration and not on charges against said Cooper. Colonel Cooper was refused permission to examine or cross-examine witnesses. He was informed of and questioned regarding any evidence taken that affected himself or his administration.
8. Yes.
9. Inspector Jackson did not recommend the dismissal of Colonel Cooper. He recommended his retirement immediately, to promote efficiency and harmony in the penitentiary service, because of maladministration.

10. Superintendent of penitentiaries did not recommend dismissal but recommended that he be retired to promote efficiency and harmony. This because of his inability to properly administer the affairs of a penitentiary, proven by his admissions and the information adduced.

11. Yes, Because it was considered unwise and unsafe to leave him longer in control.

12. Warden Cooper was not dismissed. He was granted an allowance which may be paid to officers retired to promote efficiency. See section 32, subsection B, chapter 154, revised statutes of Canada.

13. Superintendent repeatedly complained about unsatisfactory correspondence. Also had repeatedly drawn warden's attention to lack of work accomplished at his institution.

14. No.

15. Three inmates escaped from custody and were missing from Saturday until Monday. They were afterwards recaptured by Deputy Warden Trollope secreted in the roof of the administration building.

16. Warden Cooper was not dismissed. Since his retirement a Chinese inmate did escape from British Columbia penitentiary. Inspector E. R. Jackson was in charge of the penitentiary. Said Chinese inmate was under control of a guard and was employed in renovating the residence vacated by Warden Cooper. This residence was not occupied.

17. No.

18. Yes.

19. He resigned because of ill-health.

RADIO—BROADCASTING STATION CFCA

Mr. GEARY:

1. What air channel is used by broadcasting station CFCA?

2. Is this channel reserved for the exclusive use of CFCA?

3. Does any station other than CFCA use this channel?

4. Has any station other than CFCA used this channel in the past, and if so, when did it discontinue such use, and why?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. (840 kilocycles)—356.9 metres.

2. No.

3. Yes. 840 kilocycles is also used by CKLC (Red Deer, Alta.) and by phantom stations CNRT (Canadian National Railways Toronto), and CKOW (Nestle's Food Co. Toronto); the latter are licensed to broadcast over CFCA's plant.

4. Yes. CKCL (Dominion Battery Co., Toronto) and CKNC (Canadian National Carbon Co., Toronto). Discontinued 31st March, 1928. CKCL and CKNC were transferred from the 840 kilocycle channel to the 580 kilocycle channel, in order to give each station more time on the air. These stations now enjoy the equivalent of 3½ days each per week as against 2⅓ days per week each when they shared time on 840 kilocycles.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ROCK BALLASTING

Mr. PRICE:

1. Was there any rock ballasting done between Toronto and Montreal during 1925 and 1926, and 1926 and 1927?

2. If so, how many miles, between what points, and at what cost per mile?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. Yes; a total of 83.59 miles of double track was ballasted with crushed rock and crushed, washed and screened gravel.

2.

Year	Location	Double track miles	Cost per double track mile
1925	Dominion to Vaudreuil	17.33	$ 14,337
	Port Hope to Newcastle	13.00	9,909
1926	Vaudreuil to River Beaudette	19.58	10,345
1927	River Beaudette to Cornwall	23.33	10,698
	Grafton to Port Hope	10.35	9,774

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT MERCHANT MARINE—BASIS OF PAY

Mr. TOLMIE:

1. What is the basis of pay for the officers and men of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine?

2. Do the officers receive permanent appointment? If so, are they allowed any leave of absence at the end of voyages when in the home port?

3. Are the sailors paid off each voyage?

4. Is any standard of ration fixed for the men and officers? If so, what standard has been adopted?

5. Has the government received any complaints of the treatment of sailors manning the Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. The rates of pay for British mercantile marine steamers, similar in type and tonnage to the ships of the Canadian national steamships, were taken as a guide, but increases were added thereto when fixing the wage scales of the Canadian national steamships.

2. Officers whose services are satisfactory are assured of continuous employment, except when steamers are laid up. Officers are given leave, which is mutually arranged and taken either wholly or in parts, to suit the convenience of the company and ship.

3. Sailors are paid off at the end of each voyage, and if they do not care to remain in port until the ship's next date of departure, they are given the privilege of joining another ship, if one is available.

4. The ship's articles contain a victualling scale similar to that of the British Board of Trade, but in practice the officers and crew are victualled on a better scale, which has given general satisfaction.

5. A few complaints have been received from some members of the crews sailing from Vancouver, but after investigation it was found that such complaints had no foundation and were the result of some petty grievance of the men with the officers. No complaints of any kind have been received from members of the crews sailing from Atlantic coast ports.

PELAGIC SEALING TREATY

Mr. NEILL:

1. What amounts have been received year by year from the United States Government under the Pelagic Sealing treaty of 1911, up to the end of 1927?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. Statement of amounts received year by year from the United States government under the Pelagic Sealing treaty of 1911, up to the end of 1927-28 (March 31):

1912-13	$200,000 00
1913-14	10,000 00
1914-15	10,000 00
1915-16	10,000 00
1916-17	10,000 00
1917-18	nil
1918-19	10,000 00
1919-20	nil
1920-21	185,748 07
1921-22	83,901 98
1922-23	58,540 76
1923-24	35,580 70
1924-25	28,274 89
1925-26	74,765 64
1926-27	34,376 83
1927-28	95,014 07
	$846,202 94

56103—218½

DEVELOPMENT OF SEA FISHERIES

Mr. NEILL:

1. Has the sum of $160,000 provided by section 2, chapter 74, revised statutes of Canada, 1927, to aid in the development of the sea fisheries of Canada, been entirely expended on the Atlantic coast?

2. Will the government take steps to see that the fishing industry on the Pacific coast receives its due share of this payment?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. Yes.

2. As the bounty is based on the interest on Canada's share of the award made under the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, 1871, and as the said articles apply to the Atlantic coast only, the payment is restricted to that coast.

IMPORTATION OF CATTLE FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if it is the intention of the government to cancel the order in council passed last March providing for the importation in bond of American cattle for grazing?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): If my hon. friend will ask that question again to-morrow I think I will be able to report progress.

APPLICATION OF DUMPING DUTY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): On Saturday last the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) asked a rather long question, to which I intimated I would, after reading the question over, give an answer to-day. The first part has reference to an answer of my own; I was asked the question:

> Are you going to put into effect another order in council to-morrow as you state you have power to do?

To that question I replied:

> Yes, the very minute the minister comes to council and gives us reasonable grounds for putting that order into effect the governor in council will act on the advice of the minister.

On looking at the text of my reply, it is quite clear that it has special reference to the length of time it would take to put an order in council through, once reasonable grounds were given the governor in council for so doing. My hon. friend continues:

> In view of these statements will the government relieve the anxiety of the fruit, vegetable and egg producers in the province of British Columbia and elsewhere by stating why action has not been taken as promised?

The promised action has not been taken because an order has not been presented giving reasonable ground why it should be put into effect.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

ERECTION OF OFFICE BUILDING ON WELLINGTON STREET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to a matter which is of some importance, but perhaps I may be too late to be of very much use. In view of the millions which this parliament has voted for the beautification of Ottawa, in view of the desire on the part of the Prime Minister and all of us that that beautification shall be continued and in view of the beauty of the square in front of this building, I would ask if the attention of the Prime Minister has been called to this ghastly architectural monstrosity being erected opposite the west block, and which will ruin the beauty of this whole square when it is completed?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might say that it has not been drawn to my attention exactly in the terms the hon. gentleman has used.

Mr. MANION: I have tried to make it emphatic.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There has been no formal communication to the government on the matter.

Mr. MANION: Everyone will agree that the building is going to ruin the beauty of this most attractive square out in front of the parliament building. Does the Prime Minister not think it advisable that this government should ask the city of Ottawa to put on some building restrictions, so that this general plan of beautification, which is being paid for by the people of Canada, shall not be ruined by such architectural monstrosities as that? I would not say this about the building if it were down in some business section of the city. But this whole square is very uniformly beautiful; on the north side we have this building, and on the east and west sides we have the east and west blocks; and Wellington street, while not particularly beautiful, is in keeping with the rest of this square. That building is going to ruin the whole beautification of the square. I draw this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister because I think the city should be given some notification of what I suggest.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I agree with my hon. friend that there should be control over the class of buildings to be erected in the vicinity of buildings which are the property of the people of Canada. The Federal District Commission did ask the city council to secure to it that power with respect to Elgin street, where the new park is to be developed, and I believe the city council applied to the Ontario government for that power. I cannot say positively, but I am inclined to believe that a bill was passed for that purpose. I have directed the attention of the commission to the advisability of seeking to get that power extended with a view to effecting exactly what my hon. friend has in mind: some control over the style of buildings that are erected in important public parts of this city.

Mr. MANION: Cities have the right, in fact the duty, to pass upon permits for buildings to be erected within their boundaries, so that even if the city has not passed to the commission that right, the city itself has the power to act.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE

MULTILATERAL TREATY PROPOSED BY THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the Canadian government has made any reply to the invitation of the United States government in the matter of a peace treaty?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I expect to be able to lay on the table within a day or two the correspondence that has taken place in this matter. Up to the present time a reply has not been sent forward, and I am therefore not in position to give the reply to the house to-day.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. I. D. MACDOUGALL (Inverness): I would like to ask the Minister of Railways why it is that the province of Nova Scotia has no representative on the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways, and why they have not been represented for the last three years. Is it the intention to appoint representatives in the near future?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Nova Scotia in that regard is in no position different from that of my own province of Saskatchewan or the province of Alberta. The constitution of the Canadian National board is not a matter of provincial representation, although some regard must be given to considerations of that nature.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (West Calgary): That is the reason the druggist is there from Prince Rupert.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend has any remarks to make in regard to that there will be a proper time to make them. The matter of adding to the present representation on the Canadian National Railways board has been receiving the consideration of the government during the past few months, and I will not forget the representations made by my hon. friend, which have been made, I can say, even more strongly by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston).

Mr. BENNETT: That is politics.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The other day the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) asked for some correspondence respecting the severance of relations with Russia, and in particular for the exchange of letters and notes on the subject between the British government and our government. Since coming into the house I have received a communication from His Majesty's government in Great Britain agreeing to the papers being tabled, and, with the permission of the house, I will now table the correspondence.

PRIVILEGE—MR. COOTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. C. COOTE (Macleod): In my remarks made in this house some time ago, appearing on page 1077 of Hansard, I quoted the price of an Erskine six coach as being $735 in the United States and $995 in Canada, or an increase of 35.4 per cent. The American price was quoted from page 6-8 of the February issue of Motor, a magazine published in New York. I now find that there was an error in the printing of this page, and that the price quoted referred to an Essex coach. The correct price for an Erskine coach in the United States appears to be $795, which would make the price in Canada approximately 25 per cent higher than the United States price. I am making this statement to correct as far as possible any injustice that may have been done to this company, and I regret that the error did not come to my attention sooner.

SUPPLY—IMPERIAL AND FOREIGN RELATIONS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): I am sorry to delay the proceedings, but it seems to me that before we prorogue we should have a statement from the government with regard to our foreign relations, and also an explanation of what has been done since the last Imperial conference to implement its decisions. I am still more sorry to have to bring this matter up in the form of a motion of want of confidence. There is just a sufficient degree of diffidence or disquietude regarding the course of the government to make it sincere on my part; but if I resort to this procedure, it is rather because the regulations of the house prevent any individual member bringing an important subject before the house unless it is in this form. Thus I will have to conclude these remarks with a motion of regret at the course followed, or rather the lack of action on the part of this government and other governments represented at the Imperial conference, in not giving full sanction to the decisions arrived at in London.

In the report of the conference, the following statement appears:

> Every self-governing dominion of the empire is now the master of its destiny. In fact, if not always in form, it is subject to no compulsion whatever.

Further on:

> Equality of status, so far as Great Britain and the dominions are concerned, is thus the root principle governing our inter-imperial relations.

Is it not important for all concerned that "forms" should be made to coincide as exactly as possible with "facts," but still more so with the "root principle" thus stated emphatically by the conference to be now the basis of inter-imperial relations, and therefore the basis of external relations of each individual member of the so-called British commonwealth of nations with foreign countries? Of "compulsion" it was rather useless to speak. For many years past, the British government can be absolved from any attempt at exercising compulsion on any of the dominion governments in any matter political, whether in internal or in external affairs. But there are certainly still in existence limitations over the exercise of our full sovereign powers, either in internal or external matters; and, what is perhaps worse still, there are loopholes and equivocations that were not dispelled at the last Imperial conference, and which, I think, should be clarified as soon as possible. If full and individual freedom of action is now the constitutional basis of government in each of the self governing nations acknowledging King George as their sovereign, then all obstacles preventing the full and unhampered exercise of that freedom should be removed, and points which are still obscure should be clarified in order to dispel in the present and to avoid in the future all possible misunderstanding between Great Britain, Canada and the other self-governing dominions or sister nations, call them by whatever name you like, or between each of those countries and any foreign country with which it may have to deal.

As regards the head of our government it was stipulated at the last Imperial conference:

> It is an essential consequence of the equality of status existing among the members of the British commonwealth of nations that the governor general of a dominion is the representative of the crown holding in all essential respects the same position in relation to the administration of public affairs in the dominion as is held by His Majesty the King in Great Britain, and that he is not the representative or agent of His Majesty's government in Great Britain or of any department of that government.

Further:

> It seemed to us to follow that the practice whereby the governor general of a dominion is the formal official channel of communication between His Majesty's government in Great Britain and his governments in the dominions might be regarded as no longer wholly in accordance with the constitutional position of the governor general. It was thought that the recognized official channel of communication should be, in future, between government and government direct.

This was adopted in the month of October, 1926, and to my great surprise, in taking cognizance of the papers deposited on the table during this session, relating to the rupture between Canada and Russia which took place in May, 1927, seven months afterwards, I noticed that all the correspondence exchanged between the Canadian government and the British government was exchanged through His Excellency the Governor General. Therefore, I hope the Prime Minister will explain to the house why, seven months after the adoption of this resolution, it was not put into effect in a matter of this importance. May I suggest, just in passing, in order to make the position clear both to the people of Canada and to the people in the other British communities as well as to the foreign world, that the Governor General being no more a governor should receive the title and dignity of Viceroy, so that it would be made quite clear that the Governor General occupies, as was stated in London a year ago last fall, the same position, enjoys the same privileges, and is limited to the same extent in the exercise of his functions, as His Majesty the King is in Great Britain.

A matter that was considered at the conference was the reservation of dominion legislation for the assent of His Majesty, or for the disallowance of such legislation. This is now a pure matter of form. Another question was the jurisdiction of the dominions outside of their own territory, what is known generally as extra-territorial jurisdiction. This is an important matter. Another was the revision of the Colonial Laws Validity Act. This act was invoked not long ago by the Privy Council in London to annul a statute of Canada which had been in force for years and years and respected by all Canadian tribunals. It was wiped off by a stroke of the pen, not because of the situation of Canada, but because of the possible application of the precedent to Ireland. This is, I think, a very important matter. These three subjects were to be submitted to the study of a committee. I should like to know, and I think the house will be interested in learning from the Prime Minister, who is at the same time Minister of External Affairs, whether that committee has been appointed, of whom it will be composed, what questions will be referred to it, what directions will be given to the representatives of Canada upon it and when we may expect to have a report therefrom. That committee was supposed to enlighten itself, with the help of experts on various matters of legislation, and therefore to be in a position to report to the various governments in a very informed way.

Then the important matter of merchant shipping laws was to be submitted to a subconference which was to sit at the same time as this committee, with its array of experts, so, I suppose, that both bodies could help each other. I would respectfully ask the Prime Minister to tell us when the sub-conference is going to convene, how it will be composed, what will be the various matters submitted to it and when we may expect or hope for a report.

The matter of appeals to the Privy Council has been practically left in the hands of each parliament of the various dominions. It is not so stated in so many words, but it is easy to read between the lines of the paragraph of the report relating thereto, that all the members of that conference acknowledged or asserted the right of each so-called sister nation composing the British commonwealth to deal with this matter as it thought fit. I am not going to touch upon this point at all, because in itself it would require very wide consideration. I simply beg the government, when they take it up, to read carefully the debate which took place not very long ago in the House of Lords relating to the decision of that semi-judicial, semi-political body with regard to the payment of pensions to civil servants in Ireland. This may dispel the delusion that the Privy Council is altogether infallible either in judicial or political matters. I refer to the case of Wigg and Cochrane versus the Irish Free State.

But what I desire to bring more especially to the attention of the government and the house is all that concerns our foreign relations. The conference has acknowledged broadly, in a spirit of true British statesmanship, the right of Canada, as well as of any other British dominion, to open and maintain direct relations with any foreign country, and to place itself in its relations with those foreign countries on the footing of a free nation. The government, quite properly, I think, has given effect to that decision, first by the appointment of a representative of Canada in Washington, an act now reciprocated by the appointment of an American minister in Ottawa; and very soon the house will be called upon to approve of similar action being taken with regard to France and Japan. I may say that the policy of the government in this connection has, though it does not amount to very much, my full approval, but it has also the full approval of all true-thinking Canadians. I simply give the friendly advice that in everything which relates to the material organization of the various legations, the government should not lose sight of the fact that Canada is still a small country, in importance and in population. The government should not undertake to put these foreign legations on the material footing of embassies from large countries. If we want to multiply those relations for the good of Canada, for the extension of our foreign relations, we must be in a position to establish such agencies or legations in every country with which we may have relations, and therefore I think it would be at once wise, prudent, modest and proper to be a little more economical in the display of material installation, and look for the multiplication of those agencies rather than make a few of them very costly and, may I say, parvenu-like.

What is extremely important is that before we go on multiplying our relations with foreign countries by establishing legations, we should have a clear and above-board understanding with Great Britain on the one hand, and with foreign countries on the other, as to what will be the exact situation of those representatives of Canada in foreign capitals where the British government is equally represented by an ambassador or a minister plenipotentiary; and likewise, as to what will be the situation of the representatives of those foreign countries with us in regard, on the one hand, to our relations with Great Britain as a member of the so-called British commonwealth of nations, and on the other, in regard to the relation of those countries with the government of Great Britain. In order to make my point clear, I wish to bring before the house a sketch or short history of the establishment and rupture of our relations with Russia; and second, to take up the standing of foreign consuls representing in Canada countries which have not yet established direct relations with us.

The history of our relations with Russia makes very interesting reading indeed. It took birth first in the form of a trade agreement concluded on the 16th of March, 1921, between His Britannic Majesty's government and the government of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet republic. That trade agreement, it is easy to see by reading it, was preliminary to the conclusion of a complete international treaty. In fact, in the very preamble it is said:

> Whereas it is desirable in the interest both of Russia and the United Kingdom that peaceful trade and commerce should be resumed forthwith between those countries, and whereas it is necessary, pending the conclusion of a formal general peace treaty between the governments of these countries, etc.,

May I say, to soothe some disquieted consciences, that this trade agreement was not concluded between the Soviet republic and a Radical government in England, but by the coalition government of which Mr. Lloyd George was then prime minister, and signed by Sir Robert Horne, a good, thorough, proven Tory of England. Canada, under an equally good Tory government, headed by Mr. Arthur Meighen, decided to adhere to that arrangement. Their first order in council was passed on August 22, 1921, upon the recommendation of no less a statesman than Sir George Foster, then Minister of Trade and Commerce, and with the full approval of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Arthur Meighen. It did not materialize at once. A general election came on in the fall of that year; but the then Conservative government attached such importance to the establishment of those trade relations that before quitting office, they passed a second order in council, dated December 26, 1921, incorporating a formula prepared for them in London by the Department of Foreign Affairs, under which Canada declared that it adhered to the arrangement concluded between the British and the Russian governments on March 16, 1921.

Now that created quite a queer situation. There was no reservation whatever on the part of Canada. It was not an adhesion to one section or the other of the treaty; it was not a mere acceptance of those clauses of the treaty which established trade relations alone. No, it was an adhesion to the whole treaty. It is, of course, too long to read, but I would advise every member of parliament who thinks of the general interests of the country once in a while, to read it through. They will find out that there were mutual undertakings on the part of Russia and England to clear the seas surrounding Europe of what mines would still be floating around after the war; it made very long and precise stipulations for the sojourning of their respective nationals in each country; it stipulated in what manner the official agents of each country should reside—the Russians in England and the English in Russia; it stipulated also in what manner the property as well as the persons of the nationals of each country would be protected by their respective governments, and so forth. So that by accepting the formula written in London and sent to Ottawa, and accepted here, with eyes closed or opened—I am not quite sure which —by the Canadian ministers, we adhered to all those stipulations. I mention this merely en passant, to show how wise the Imperial conference of 1923 was when it stipulated that each government thereafter should negotiate for itself and according to its own needs the nature and extent of its relations with other countries.

The adhesion of Canada was communicated internationally by the exchange of those notes, which have been produced to-day by the Prime Minister after permission received from London. May I say in passing that there is something ludicrous in the idea that it should take fifteen days to get permission from either the Dominion Secretary or the Foreign Secretary in London to enable Canadians to take cognizance of a paper which concerns them alone. I quite realize, as the Prime Minister said the other day, that if we entertain relations with various governments, then when there is in the correspondence or the records matters of concern to those governments, it is an elementary rule of diplomacy and international etiquette than none of the governments concerned should make the documents public without the consent of the other governments. But in this instance the British government acted, as Lord Haldane defined it many years ago, merely as a trustee, so to speak, for the Dominion of Canada; and therefore this document should have been a Canadian document, not to be made public without the consent of the Russian government so long as our friendly relations continued; but since they were broken we should be as absolute masters of this as of our own orders in council.

Matters went along more or less smoothly between the British and Russian governments for a couple of years. In 1924 Mr. Ramsay MacDonald gave a warning to the commissar for foreign affairs in Leningrad that his agents in London should be a little more careful about the manner in which they were carrying on their trade and other activities.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Did you say Mr. Ramsay MacDonald gave the warning?

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes, in 1924. In 1926, pressure was brought to bear upon the then Conservative government, of which Lord Balfour was the foreign minister, but he refused to break relations with Russia. He admitted that certain activities were carried on by the Russian agents; he questioned the wisdom of having concluded arrangements with the Russian government, but he thought it would be unwise and imprudent on the part of the British government to break off all relations because of the actions of this or that man. But, as the story goes in London, during all that time in Leningrad there was a tug of war between the Standard Oil Company and the Royal Dutch Oil Company —which, in spite of its Dutch name, is a British company headed by Sir Henri Deterding. There had been what is called a "gentleman's agreement" between those companies. As a rule these gentlemen's agreements cover many things which, for the sake of the parties concerned, are better not uncovered. But it came out that the Russian government had, on the side, granted to the Standard Oil Company certain advantages. Thereupon Sir Henri Deterding beseeched Sir William Joynson-Hicks, the Home Secretary —who in London is known among friends and foes by the familiar name of "Jix"—to take action, upon which the Home Secretary decided to raid the Arcos building in London, against the wise advice of Sir Austen Chamberlain, Foreign Secretary. But the thing being done, and the documents sought not being found, Sir Austen, thanks to the sanctimonious principle of cabinet solidarity, was obliged to cover the indiscreet but very radical action of his colleague in favour of Sir Henri Deterding; and therefore he had to announce that the British government could no longer continue relations with the Russian government, because the Russian agents in London had been carrying on frightful acts of international dishonesty and discourtesy, organizing spying on the British government, and so forth.

Following this the very clever and active gentleman who heads the Department for Dominion Affairs, Mr. Amery—who, by the way, if the policy recommended on the other side of the house was carried out would be obliged to step out of the British Empire, because he who rules the dominions is not of English blood; he is a Hungarian Jew, but a very clever man—Mr. Amery wrote to Ottawa to inquire what Canada would do in the matter. His despatch dated May 23, 1927, is very interesting reading:

In connection with my telegrams—

Of course, various telegrams had already been sent to keep us au courant.

—as to Anglo-Soviet relations, we are advised that the termination of the Russian trade agreement of 1921 in relation to this country—

England—

—would not—

I call the attention of the Prime Minister and the house to this point:

—would not, in the absence of intimation that the notes exchanged on July 3, 1922—

That is, the notes which made us a party to the agreement—

—are no longer regarded as governing the relations between Canada and Soviet, necessarily terminate the operation of the agreement as between the Soviet government and the Canadian government.

In other words, the British government was then advised, and it was its opinion, that Canada stood as a separate party in its relations to Russia. Then, further down:

Especially as the Soviet action which has led to the present situation is directed against the institutions of all parts of the British Empire, we should like to suggest for consideration that as regards the retention of Soviet representatives that this is a matter on which uniformity of action by the various members of the commonwealth concerned would present great advantages.

Upon which the Canadian government—speaking through its improper channel of communication, His Excellency—wired back quite properly:

The despatches received—from Mr. Amery—do not indicate that any documents have been found in the Arcos raid which establish that the official agency in Canada has been a centre of espionage and subversive propaganda. If any evidence to this effect has been discovered, it is desired to be informed as early as possible.

Further down, and quite properly again, His Excellency reminds the British minister that under the very agreement to which Canada was a party, if one government had cause to complain, it had to call the attention of the other government to the fact and ask for an explanation. He asked whether any special steps had been taken towards giving the other party an opportunity of furnishing an explanation; upon which Mr. Amery replied:

Such information as was obtained from Arcos raid directly relating to Canada consisted of addresses found in possession of Anton Miller.

We shall see in a moment what these are.

Second question: It is under third paragraph of article XIII of 1921 agreement that action is being taken by His Majesty's government.

In other words, the British government broke relations with Russia on the strength of this provision:

In the event of the infringement by either party at any time of any of the provisions of this agreement or of the conditions referred to in the preamble, the other party shall immediately be free from the obligations of the agreement.

But the same paragraph contained these words:

Nevertheless it is agreed that before taking any action inconsistent with the agreement the aggrieved party—

In this case Great Britain—

—shall give the other party—

In this case Russia—

—a reasonable opportunity of furnishing an explanation or remedying the default.

Now, by agreeing unreservedly to this provision we were bound to pursue a course which Sir William Joynson-Hicks did not think fit to adopt. Strange to say, without waiting for the documents to be submitted—either those that related to Britain or those obscure but famous addresses found in the possession of Anton Miller—and without having in their possession any of the evidence gathered by the police of London—without waiting for any of these documents or for the documents deposited on the table of the British Commons, the Canadian government decided to break the agreement. The reason I do not know, but we have this admission dated May 26. I may say that Mr. Amery's letter was dated May 23, to which we replied on the 26th:

So far as Canada is concerned there has been a steady and substantial growth of trade under the agreement, and there has not been any substantial ground of complaint as to espionage or propaganda against the present official agent in Canada.

This is an official declaration signed by the Governor General on Canada's behalf. Nevertheless,

My ministers have concluded that the evidences of espionage and subversive propaganda set forth by your prime minister (Mr. Baldwin) make it clear that an essential condition of the agreement as entered into by Canada as well as by Great Britain, namely, that each party should refrain from hostile action, etc., . . . has not been fulfilled. In order to remove any doubt as to whether the agreement lapses automatically and having regard to all the circumstances they have accordingly decided to terminate the agreement.

It appears therefore, that without having in their possession the whole or any part of the evidence in the matter, and while admitting that they had no ground of complaint against the Russian representative in Canada, the Canadian government broke that agreement upon a mere despatch from Mr. Amery stating that the prime minister had deposited some papers on the table in the British House of Commons.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the hon. member intend to move an amendment?

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It would be advisable for the hon. member to move the amendment now; his forty minutes will soon be up.

Mr. BOURASSA: Very well, Mr. Speaker. This is the amendment:

This house regrets that proper steps have not yet been taken to give full effect, both in domestic and external affairs, to the "equality of status" acknowledged by the Imperial conference, 1926, to be the "root-principle" of the relationship between the self-governing Britannic communities.

The papers came, but they came late. After we had followed suit, upon Mr. Amery's prompt invitation, we find that Mr. Amery was not in a hurry to dispatch the papers. The rupture occurred on May 26 and the papers left London by mail on June 10. They arrived here, and all that was found relating to Canada was this:

List of addresses found in possession of Anton Miller.

Canada: (No. 1) Communist Party, Canada, Room 301, 95 King St. E., Toronto, Canada, Private address: (No. 2) Miss Skene, 54 Victor Ave., Toronto, Canada.
(Inside envelope: I. Macdonald).

Then there is a very long list covering all the countries on earth. It ends with the following:

Canada, confidential matter:
1. Mr. Charles Gray, 167 Lisgar Street, Toronto, Ont., Canada.
2. Mr. E. Pirttinen, 56 Wroxeter Ave., Toronto, Ont., Canada.
3. Mrs. Mary M. Sutcliffe, 34 Tyndall Ave., Toronto, Ont., Canada.
(Inside envelope Macdonald or other).
Miss Alice Ayres, 54 Delaney Crescent, Toronto, Ont., Canada.

I do not know whether it is due to the influence of Toronto, but strange to say all these bolshevists are to be found in that holy, sanctimonious centre, the Queen City. Now, that is all that concerns Canada in all that record; there is nothing else. With regard to those evidences of which His Excellency the Governor General, speaking in our name, felt quite satisfied that they justified us in breaking the agreement, without reference to the procedure which we had undertaken to follow in such a situation, they also came later on. I will not read them. May I venture to say that before the government had acted without reading them, they should at least have read the expressions of opinion given in the parliament at Westminster? If they were obliged to draw their inspiration from London, it seems to me that a Liberal government might perhaps have borrowed something from the leaders of liberalism in England rather than to take their cue exclusively from Mr. Amery. What did Mr. Lloyd George think of the matter, as leader of the Liberal party in England? I have the British debates here and any hon. member may consult them if he cares to do so. Mr. Lloyd George said in effect: "Of course you have evidence of espionage; you have evidence of intrigue. But that is exactly what we are doing ourselves in every country; that is what every government has been engaged in, not only during the war, but before and after. Every government employs spies in every other country. We knew that when we entered into relations with Russia. Lord Balfour knew it; and notwithstanding the same propaganda and espionage, or worse, he refused to break relations in 1926." Mr. Ponsonby, one of the most distinguished members of the Labour party, and, as everyone knows, the scion of a very aristocratic family, related how, in a previous incident, the head of the criminal investigation department in London, Sir Basil Thomson, to make a case against Russia, had forged a document, which Mr. Ponsonby read to the House of Commons. And this was not contradicted. Mr. Arthur Henderson, who had been a member of the coalition government during the war and who was also in the Labour government in 1924-25, related how he himself, a member of His Majesty's government, sitting in Berne as a delegate of the British government in an international conference, was spied upon by a paid agent of the same British government; and that spy, not receiving his fee quickly enough from the minister of the crown who employed him to spy on one of his colleagues, went to the Swiss government and sold the documents. It was the Bernese police who put into the hands of Mr. Henderson, a minister of the crown, the papers and reports of an English spy employed by the English government to spy upon another member of that government in a foreign capital.

After these expressions of opinion and statements of the policy pursued by all governments in every country, perhaps we might have waited at least to read the papers and the judgment passed upon them by such distinguished members of the Labour party and the Liberal party before we agreed, on a simple command from Mr. Amery, to break relations with Russia. I do not say that we had no cause to do so; I do not know. However, I find in the record before us that we have broken relations with Russia simply and solely because the British government did so; and that break in London was condemned by some of the most representative men of public Liberal opinion in England as contrary to the interests of England. Now the story is out, although I do not know whether or not it is true, that this was done at the command of a large financial institution in London, quarrelling with a rival American institution for the favour of the Leningrad government.

I have not brought up this matter for the mere pleasure of unearthing disputable proceedings on the part of the British or any other government; in this regard the British government is no worse than any other government in the world. As Mr. Henderson and Mr. Lloyd George pointed out, in the present state of things, all governments follow these practices; but I have brought this matter up to indicate how important it is, now that we are beginning to establish relations with foreign countries, to be very prudent in concluding those relations, in order to make sure that they are designed to serve those interests which are confided to us. We should confine our engagements to what is commanded by our own position, and should not rely blindly upon statesmen responsible to the people of the United Kingdom, on the other side of the ocean, to prepare and to conclude our relations, and then break them, for reasons which may be good or bad but have no application to Canada.

There is one feature which it is perhaps still more important to keep in mind. In this instance, we broke our relations with a foreign country because of some difficulty arising in London between the British government and the representatives of that foreign country. There is now a representative of the United States of America in Ottawa, and we have a representative of Canada at Washington. Supposing trouble arose to-morrow; supposing the American government found fault with Mr. Massey or whoever might succeed him, and asked us to recall our representative, as once the American government requested the recall of Sir Lionel Sackville-West for some indiscretion in political matters. Are we going to write to London and, for the sake of "unity of action," ask that the American ambassador be expelled from London? The Irish Free State is also represented in Washington, and the United States is represented in Dublin. Supposing trouble arises, as it may, since modern Irishmen take an equal interest in politics to that which they took in the olden days; supposing the representative of the Irish Free State in Washington should commit some indiscretion such as the representative of the English government committed forty years ago, and the American government asked Dublin to recall their indiscreet representative. Would Mr. Cosgrave, or his successor, write to the Prime Minister here and ask us to expel the American representative from Ottawa, or recall our minister from Washington, for the sake of "unity of action?" This is an aspect of the situation which should be studied immediately. We should consider seriously whether we are to maintain our relations with these foreign countries regardless of what action is taken in London, or whether we are to break our relations every time there is trouble between London and any of these other countries. I think this is a very important point. It is a source from which may emanate more trouble than we anticipate, if we do not make our position quite clear in the beginning. If our relations are not to stand by themselves; if we are obliged to break relations every time there is trouble between London and Washington, or Tokyo, or Paris, what becomes of our "equality of status?" If it works only one way and never the other I do not see where the equality lies. As I have already said, this is a very important point, and I am quite sure the Prime Minister will take it in the spirit I am bringing it forward, that is, in order to find a happy solution for all concerned.

In contrast to this, let me point out the absurd situation which we had to face, as a nation and as a government, through an unhappy incident which preceded the present session. I refer to the action of the Mexican consul, Mr. Barron. I need not tell the house that I am not going to discuss the religious or any other policy of the Mexican government. I am not concerned with that to-day, although I have my own views about it. It has been said that we should have broken relations with Mexico in a tragic fashion. I do not agree with that, first because as a matter of fact we have no official relations with Mexico. Then again, I am not quite sure that our standard of Christianity as a nation gives us any moral authority to teach lessons to all nations on earth. Again, it must be admitted, gladly or sadly, that for many centuries past religion and morality have ceased to have any connection with international relations, and it would have been ludicrous for the Canadian government to break relations with Mexico on account of its religious policy when, at about the same time, we were establishing official relations with the government of France. The Mexican policy is more brutal; but if it is a question of Christianity, I think if any modern government on earth has worked effectively for half a century to destroy Christianity, it is the government of the French republic. But there is a further reason. When we see that the Holy See itself is entering into relations, when the opportunity affords, with all governments, Catholic, Protestant, pagan or unfaithful, I do not think it behooves us to be more Catholic than the Pope and to establish or break relations in international affairs on the basis of religion.

But when it comes to the personal attitude of Mr. Barron, that is a different question. This gentleman chose to make use of the Canadian press to insult a bishop of Canada, a Canadian citizen, and then to insult a member of this house, another Canadian citizen. In every other country on earth, including the Black republic of Liberia, that gentleman would have been invited to leave within twenty-four hours. Sir Lionel Sackville-West, the ambassador of the great British nation, was asked to leave the United States for an indiscretion of much less magnitude than that committed by Mr. Barron, and this without any protest on the part of the British government.

It has been suggested that the Canadian government could do nothing because Mr. Barron was not accredited to the Canadian government, but to the British government. A certain Mr. Aiken, consul ad honorem of the republic of Venezuela, gave his opinion on this great question to the Montreal Gazette. He said that the Canadian government could take no action because Mr. Barron, as well as himself and other consuls, was not accredited to the Canadian government but to the British government. He was then asked this question, "But what about the last Imperial conference?" and he replied, "The last Imperial conference had nothing to do with that. In that respect Canada is still a colony." I should like to know from the Prime Minister, who has in such glowing terms and eloquent language extolled the glorious position which this country occupies since the last Imperial conference, whether or not it is the Canadian government that is right, or whether it is Mr. Barron or Mr. Aiken. I should like to know whether or not foreign consuls in this country are to be allowed to commit indiscretions, breaches of etiquette and of international rules, which they would not be allowed to commit in Hayti or in the republic of Liberia. Not that I have any poor opinion of the niggers; but, to come back to the comparison I used once, I am afraid that the quality niggers of Canada have a little less pride than the less sophisticated negroes of these republics.

If we want to give full force to what was decided at the last Imperial conference, means should be taken to have all foreign consuls accredited to the Dominion government, and they should receive their approval from this government and not from London. If we want to avoid such misunderstandings, if we want to avoid the ridiculous position we were placed in in this instance, I think we should insist—it would be a very easy matter to settle—that these foreign consuls should be accredited to us, just as they are accredited to the Irish government in the Irish Free State, and to South Africa and so forth.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the hon. gentleman permit a question on this point before he leaves it? Was it not agreed at the Imperial conference that in future a consul should receive his exequatur—I think that is the term—from His Majesty's government in Great Britain, and then be referred to this government for the countersignature of this Dominion?

Mr. BOURASSA: The report of the Imperial conference reads as follows:

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs informed us that His Majesty's government in Great Britain accepted the suggestion that in future any application by a foreign government for the issue of an exequatur to any person who was to act as consul in a dominion should be referred to the dominion government concerned for consideration and that, if the dominion government agreed to the issue of the exequatur, it would be sent to them for countersignature by a dominion minister. Instructions to this effect had indeed already been given.

Now let us consider the broader question of foreign relations generally. I pointed out last year that there had been introduced in the last report of the conference a reservation which is apt to open up the possibility for very serious difficulty. I will read this passage:

When a government has received information of the intention of any other government to conduct negotiations, it is incumbent upon it to indicate its attitude with reasonable promptitude. So long as the initiating government receives no adverse comments and so long as its policy involves no active obligations on the part of the other governments, it may proceed on the assumption that its policy is generally acceptable. It must, however, before taking any steps which might involve the other governments in any active obligations, obtain their definite assent.

Where by the nature of the treaty it is desirable that it should be ratified on behalf of all the governments of the empire, the initiating government may assume that a government which has had full opportunity of indicating its attitude and has made no adverse comments will concur in the ratification of the treaty.

Evidently the sentence containing the words "no active obligations" was inserted après coup. But to my mind it is quite insufficient. This declaration, taken as a whole, is apt, is bound to create misunderstandings and equivocations. This I pointed out last year in relation to the Locarno treaties. The negotiations with Egypt have since emphasized the falseness of this situation. I need not tell the house the enormous importance the Egyptian question occupies in imperial affairs. It is not the possession of Egypt; it is not having this or that form of government in Egypt, as everyone knows who has taken the trouble to study the situation; it is the possession and continued possession of the shortest sea route to India. It is quite clear to anyone who has given time to the study of this question that the British ministers had this in mind at the last Imperial conference. The following appears on page 25 of the report:

On the 20th October, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs made to the conference a comprehensive statement on foreign affairs, and on the invitation of the conference His Majesty's High Commissioner in Egypt attended and made a more detailed statement on the position and prospects in that country.

And then again:

As in 1923, emphasis was laid on the vital importance to the British Empire of the maintenance of the route to the east and south Pacific via the Suez canal, and attention was directed to the bearing of these interests on the conduct of foreign relations.

To anyone who was in London and could get near the sources of information, it is a well known fact that Lord Lloyd came from Egypt to expose the situation there to the Imperial conference, and that the relation between the maintenance of the Suez canal route and Egypt is practically one. Now, at the conference, all the dominions, Canada included, agreed that the maintenance of communications through the Suez canal is an imperial question. Canada has apparently agreed to share with the rest of the empire the obligation of maintaining Gibraltar, of keeping the British fleet supreme in the Mediterranean, of holding Malta, of defending British interests in Cyprus, and of keeping Port Said and Aden in British hands. We have agreed that the question of dominating the basins of the Mediterranean and the Red Sea is an imperial affair in which we are just as much concerned as Australia, New Zealand and India. That is of course absolutely untrue. That means that at any time—and every thoughtful man in London knows it—the Egyptian question may bring England into difficulties with Spain at one end, with Italy and France in the middle, with Greece at the other end, not to speak of the small nations. The question is a very important one. It is natural that Australia and New Zealand should take at once an imperial and national interest in the matter. It is natural that, I will not say India, but that group of Englishmen who think the maintenance of English power in India is a necessity of imperial dominion, should think the situation in Egypt is a most vital one. But that Canada, occupying the position which she does on the continent of America, should associate herself in such broad terms with a declaration of that kind, is, I think, very imprudent.

Let us see now the course that was followed. On the 29th of March last Lord Parmoor questioned the British government in the House of Lords with regard to the Egyptian question and the correspondence exchanged with the dominion governments in relation thereto. I have in my hand the report of the parliamentary debates, House of Lords, of that date. Lord Salisbury, answering for the government, said:

There was no question at any time of asking the Dominions to take part in being responsible for the treaty or the results of the treaty.

He admitted that they had exchanged communications, and he added:

All the dominions replied to this request and they all expressed themselves satisfied with the prospect held out to them that there would be an agreement, or might be an agreement—unhappily it has not yet taken place—on this subject with the government of Egypt. I need not say they raised no objection whatever to the terms.

Apparently the dominions have placed themselves exactly in the position provided for the year before at the Imperial conference by making no "adverse comments" upon the negotiations carried on by the British government. The day after, on the 30th of March, the Prime Minister of Canada gave quite a different version and he was wise and prudent enough to base his assertion on documents which he produced. He produced a first draft treaty dated July 28, 1927, under which the British government, stipulating for the whole empire including us, would have taken certain engagements with regard to the situation in Egypt. Therefore, if that treaty had been agreed upon, Canada having made no "adverse comment," the sole signature of the British foreign minister would have engaged us, Australia, South Africa, Ireland and the other dominions under the very terms that were agreed upon at the Imperial conference in the month of October, 1926. The government very rightly—and I congratulate them upon their action—protested, and thereupon the British government receded from their position and drafted another treaty which they signed only in the name of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. It took some time before the report of that speech reached London. In the meanwhile another question was put in the British House of Commons:

Viscount Sandon, on the 5th April, asked the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs the nature of the communications made by the government to the dominion governments and the answers received on the subject of the proposed Anglo-Egyptian treaty.

Upon which Captain Margesson—he is Junior Lord of the Treasury, if I am not mistaken—answered in the name of the government:

I have been asked to answer this question. The dominion governments were kept informed of every stage in the negotiations with Egypt and, as soon as the text of a treaty had been agreed with Sarwat Pasha, its terms were communicated to the dominion governments by telegraph and their concurrence was sought in the proposal to present it to the Egyptian government. The replies to this telegram made it clear that the policy of His Majesty's government in Great Britain was satisfactory to all the dominion governments.

Therefore in the short space of six days there was one version by the Marquess of Salisbury, one version by the Prime Minister of Canada, and another version by another minister of the crown of Great Britain. When the reports of our debates arrived in London, Lord Parmoor took the matter up again, upon which the Marquess of Salisbury naturally had to explain:

The noble and learned lord has pointed out that the gravemen of Mr. Mackenzie King's speech was the slight change of form which took place in the draft which was originally submitted to the Canadian government and the form in which the treaty was ultimately signed.

Lord Parmoor: The noble marquess means ultimately submitted to Egypt?

The Marquess of Salisbury: Ultimately submitted to Egypt. I am obliged to the noble and learned lord. Unfortunately, it was not signed; it was ultimately submitted to the Egyptian government. I had not, when I spoke,—

On the 29th March—

—the two forms in mind in addressing your Lordships' house, and perhaps I was to blame in that particular.

I should think so.

I frankly admit that I had not those two forms in my mind and, undoubtedly, Mr. Mackenzie King was fully entitled to call attention to the distinction. There was, therefore, perhaps, a misunderstanding in the matter. But it is quite clear now.

Why? Because the Prime Minister here, being questioned, gave the true version which contradicted flatly and absolutely the version given in the House of Lords by a representative of the British government. Am I not right in saying that such misunderstandings should be avoided? that such equivocations should be made impossible for the good of all concerned, of Great Britain as well as of Canada? Nothing good can come out of such misunderstanding, from such extraordinary exhibitions of short memory by a British minister stating that at a certain date there was only one draft treaty; that the dominion governments were never asked to agree to that. Then comes another British minister stating in the other chamber that there was a draft treaty and that the dominion governments were asked to agree to it; and then the Prime Minister of one of the dominions states that there were two draft treaties; that the dominions were asked to agree to the first; that they refused and then that the second one was framed without their concurrence. That is sufficient to show how unsatisfactory is the situation in which this portion of the report of the last Imperial conference has left us. I may point out to the Prime Minister and to the house the very timely observation which Lord Parmoor made during that debate. He said:

The noble marquess, Lord Salisbury, said the other day that I seemed to forget that it is a question of parents and children.

That is, this question as between the government of Great Britain and the dominion governments. That looks like full equality of status!

I certainly did not forget it, but I feel that as between parents and grown-up children there is more need of care and right understanding than in almost any other relationship.

I fully agree with that. But what thinks the Prime Minister? Does he think himself a fully grown up child, a semi-grown, or a babe at the pap bottle, as Lord Charles Beresford once said to that other distinguished English statesman, Mr. Winston Churchill? I should like to know if in those very complicated and involved foreign relations, the initiation and negotiation of which must perforce be undertaken by the British government—not because of the superiority of the position occupied by Great Britain, but because Great Britain, on account of her possessing the vastest empire that has ever been, is obliged constantly to keep in close relations with all governments on earth, and to enter into negotiations with them, to hasten those negotiations or protract them, according to the international situation—I would like to know if it is not in the best interests of all concerned, not only that we should be "kept informed," but that such misunderstandings should not happen? They never would happen as between two foreign governments. Could one imagine that the British government, having carried on negotiations with a foreign government, would one day state in the House of Commons or in the House of Lords through one of its members, that it had proposed a treaty, that that treaty was refused, and that it had then proposed another treaty which was accepted, and then that another minister of the crown would upon another day state just the opposite? No, but they think apparently they can afford to do that without any difficulty when the babes of the colonies are concerned. But if we are to establish with the British relations as between men and men, between young men, if you like, and old men, but between men and men, equally devoted to the same king, one set just as much as the other, as respectful and as cognizant of the same principles of British government, the one set as the other, equally responsible to the respective people who put them into power and throw them out of power, in Canada or in England, I think it is about time that these things should be avoided in the future, and be made impossible to occur.

I want to finish by calling the attention of the government to this point. It seems to me that all through these negotiations, and generally in this very important and growingly important matter of foreign relations, there is confusion between moral obligations and active obligations. Last year, when I referred to Locarno, I think it was the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) who told me that this government did not subscribe to any active obligations, and therefore we were absolutely free from the consequences of that policy. May I remind the house of two instances which show that moral obligations, undertaken sometimes without fully realizing their importance, carry a country pretty far?

I am one of the last remnants of the parliament which had to ratify the sending of troops to South Africa in that first venture into imperial wars in which Canada took part. Two years previous, the distinguished Prime Minister of Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, was in London, and he made fine speeches in which he promised the hearty support of Canada in all the ventures in which England should be engaged—let the fires be lit on the hills, let the bugles sound, and so forth. I know from the very best authority that in close chamber with Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, when Mr. Chamberlain asked if he would be prepared to promise Canadian troops in the event of war—because two years in advance Mr. Chamberlain was already planning the conquest of South Africa—Sir Wilfrid Laurier said no. He undertook no active obligations. Two years later an agent of the South African Chartered company came here and succeeded in inducing Sir Wilfrid and the leader of the opposition to submit to the house a resolution of sympathy with those poor brigands of South Africa who wanted to get their gold cheap and pay no taxation to the government of the Transvaal or to the government of the Orange Free State. We expressed that sympathy. We assumed moral obligation in one of the most immoral wars waged in the last century, one which revolted the consciences of the noblest men of Great Britain as well as the rest of the world. I shall never forget when, a year and a half later, I was put this question by that venerable survivor of the great Victorian days, Leonard Courtney, who asked me, among ten or twelve of the faithful Liberals who had not betrayed morality and honour to serve the ends of the Prussian-like Mr. Chamberlain: "How is it that a Liberal government headed by a French-Canadian lends its moral support to a policy pursued as against the honour of Britain, and in the name of principles against which you have yourselves fought in Canada for fifty years?" What could I answer?

But there is an example still more striking, and closer to us, which should appeal to the men responsible for the present situation in Canada. It is the position in which that great and noble man, Sir Edward Grey, found himself placed by the uncertainty of the policy pursued for the ten years previous to the war. This should appeal to the Prime Minister, for will he permit me to say that in reading through Sir Edward Grey's memoirs, very often I thought of him. They have many points in common—nobleness of mind, the seriousness of their studies, literary accomplishments, and even that bucolic characteristic, with this difference, that Sir Edward Grey is rather fond of trout and birds, and our Prime Minister, which is much more plainly his task as party leader, gives himself to the raising of sheep. Sir Edward Grey entered the Foreign Office in 1905. He took a situation that had been already vaguely sketched by the Conservative government, of a rapprochement with France, a vague understanding with Russia, and with a queer policy towards Germany, of friendship for half the week and diffidence the rest of the week. He had to pursue that very difficult policy, and he pursued it with great ability; but after ten years in what position did he find himself? In many instances he had given his word of honour to the people of England that he stood under no obligation whatever to France and Russia. He had given his word to the various German ambassadors who passed through London that he was not obligated to France or Russia in any respect. But from week to week, from month to month, and year to year, he was being carried into a process of vague and undefined moral obligations until he woke up on the eve of the war to a situation where if he did not force the hands of his colleagues to make good a policy which he had left unknown to half of them during those ten years, he felt that he would be dishonoured before the French government and its distinguished representative, M. Paul Cambon, in London. On the other hand, when he was put the question by Prince Lichnowsky, his bosom friend, and as earnestly devoted to the cause of peace as Sir Edward Grey himself, whether England would stand neutral in case Germany would respect the territory of Belgium, he was forced to admit he could not give that pledge. Why? Because he had taken towards France and Russia moral obligations, undefined, and because those moral obligations had been followed up and pursued and strengthened by conversations—secret conversations—between the officers of the French general staff and officers representing the English war office, and between the heads of the French navy and the first lord of the British admiralty, Lord Fisher. This so-called moral obligation had been carried to the point that, if it had not been sustained by military action, the French government would have been in the position, as Lord Grey makes it quite clear in his book, of telling him, "You have deceived us for ten years." On the other hand, the German government was also in the position of telling Sir Edward, "You have deceived us for ten years." And what is the melancholy conclusion of that poignant book which tells us so much of the nobleness and greatness of mind, of the sincere idealism of one whose brilliant career ended in bankruptcy, because he did not realize the tremendous task that was put upon him? He says:

> Anyone who has taken an important part in public affairs, looking backward after it is over, may be amazed to see how far the results of what he did differ from what he intended them to be. He may well feel, as he reflects upon this, that he has been but an instrument for purposes of which he did not think at the time, and which are beyond his power to comprehend or fathom.

This is the confession of one of the noblest, of one of the best informed, of one of the acutest minds of Great Britain, after ten years' playing with moral obligations undefined. I think I am safe in saying that I am only doing my duty to Canada by calling the attention of the house to the vital importance of realizing what moral obligations mean, of taking great care before we pass resolutions of sympathy with the Locarno policy, before we agree to the general policy pursued by Great Britain in Egypt or elsewhere, because a time may come when a man, master of his mind and perhaps of other people's minds, will demand of us, "What did you mean?" And who will pay the price in the last instance, but the youth of this country?

Now, sir, it may be said the conclusion to be drawn from my remarks is that I favour a complete separation of Canada from Great Britain. No, no, not a bit of it. I am always surprised to find that I feel more British-like than so many of my English-speaking fellow-citizens. I am not in a hurry. I think the best definition that has been given of the present situation of Canada in its evolution is that by our distinguished fellow-citizen, Mr. Ewart. To him was put—as it has been put to me very frequently—the question: What is Canada? is Canada a colony still? is Canada a nation? is Canada independent? Well, as he says, in some respects it is, in others it is not. He gives this illustration:

There is no name or word which can be used as correctly indicative of Canada's status. All that we can say is that Canada has ceased to be a colony, but that she is not yet a sovereign state. That is not an unusual difficulty. Transition states, very frequently, must be described rather than named. Look at the polywog. He is an aquatic blob with an active, wiggling tail. But, shortly, he sloughs off the tail and protrudes four lusty legs. He closes his gills, useful in the water, and develops lungs, necessary for life on land. Eventually, as a full-grown frog, he contributes to the enjoyment of Canadian summer evenings by giving us his version of "O Canada". He was a polywog. He is now a frog. During his intermediate life, all that we can say of him is that he is no longer a polywog, and he is not yet a frog.

I think the comparison is very apt. Now, many people are disquieted at that transition period. You have the hasty nationalist who would pull off the tail and force the poor animal immediately to seek its living on the land. You have the typical colonist who often is disquieted as to what kind of beast it is. Then you have the ardent imperialist who would cut off the legs the moment they show themselves. Or again, you have the French-Canadian colonist like Mr. Taschereau, for example, who hangs on to the tail and tells us in Quebec: This is the bulwark of our national liberty. Well, I do not feel that way. All I ask is that we should let the poor thing grow according to its own nature and temperament. Let those legs protude gradually, let the tail fall off when the time comes, but for heavens' sake do not drown the poor animal in the quagmire of colonialism, as Mr. Amery would do under pretence of what he terms preserving "unity of action," or because we may be afraid of new things. But if we want that process of evolution to be harmonious, if we want these relations as between Canada and Great Britain, or as between Canada and the foreign world, to develop harmoniously, to develop steadily, if we want the slate to be cleared gradually, if we want to establish our relations on a solid footing and enlarge our scope of action according to the needs of our situation as it grows, I claim the first thing we should do is to give an example to the world that we, a young country, unmixed as we have been so far in the old diplomacy the world over, need not resort to those habits or practices that diplomats of the old school still believe they are forced to resort to. I think we should play the game in the full light of day, above board, and that we should have a clear understanding with the British government upon every issue, if it is an issue in which Canada is concerned, whether we are prepared to take this or that responsibility. In those issues in which we are not concerned we have no opinions to express. If those sanctimonious congratulations to the British government mean nothing, then why should men who style themselves "practical" send them by the bushel. Why should we, in this house or at the Imperial conference, pass resolutions of congratulation to the British government with respect to its action on matters for which we are not responsible? Foreign governments do not do that. The British government itself does not pass resolutions to congratulate us on doing this or that, or not doing this or that. In this respect the British government has ceased to treat us like children. Why do not we, on both sides of the ocean, act as straightforward men, and define clearly our foreign relations, as well as matters upon which we claim and mean to exercise our full responsibility of internal government?

To this, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need add anything further. In many respects I think this government has well deserved of the people of Canada for its attitude on imperial matters. In many respects it has helped to clear the atmosphere of some old misunderstandings. But as a sincere and outspoken and candid friend, I tell them, do not let clouds gather in other spheres. You have cleared the atmosphere, you have helped in having the status of the governor general settled once and for all and, I repeat, for the best advantage of both countries; you have expressed your views on the necessity of adapting forms to fact in many other respects. But in regard to those important matters of foreign relations I think it is vital to define, in view of Canada's close neighbourhood to the United States, the position you are going to take before long of adhering to the treaty of universal peace and arbitration which is being proposed to us as separate from Great Britain, without having to make reservations such as the French government has made, and such as the British government is still making, though in a milder form. Why? We have no empire to keep up; we have no intricate situation to maintain in either Egypt or Morocco. We have a clean slate; let us keep it clean. Let us make it the solid foundation of a free British nation, proud of its ancestry, proud of its traditions, but also proud of a clean record in the sphere of international politics, not being mixed up in any of the intricacies of foreign affairs which are likely to embroil us in much more dire consequences than we conceive at the present time.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): After the thoughtful, comprehensive and convincing speech to which we have listened, I fancy very little remains to be said. However, I should like to associate myself with the motion that has been proposed, as I regard it as of very far-reaching importance. The form of the motion has been explained by the mover. I am frank to say that although I wish the government to travel a bit faster and to take a more courageous course along this line I have no more confidence—perhaps I might say, a little less confidence—in the Conservative party in regard to international affairs.

It is rather remarkable that these questions of our foreign relations should create so little interest in Canada. We are interested in post offices in the maritimes or in harbours in Quebec; we become tremendously excited about the tariff. But in these questions, which are of importance to every Canadian, it seems as if comparatively few members take any vital interest. I need only remind the house that approximately one-half of our total revenue goes to pay the interest on the last war. That in itself should indicate the necessity of placing our international relations on some better footing than has been the case in the past. I know that not merely in Canada, but even in the old land, it has not been very customary to have foreign affairs freely discussed by the rank and file in parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: Did my hon. friend say that one-half of our revenues went to pay the interest on the war?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Practically one-half.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman had said one-third he would have been nearer the fact.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the hon. gentleman would take the trouble to consult a speech I made a little earlier in the session, in which I took as the basis the statement of the Minister of Finance, and added certain other figures which properly should be charged—increased cost of collection of debts, and so forth—he would find that I am well within the mark. As I was saying, it has not been very customary for the rank and file to discuss foreign affairs; but now that we in Canada are brought so closely in touch with various other countries it is important that we should form the habit in this parliament of discussing, more fully than we have done heretofore, those questions which relate to our external affairs.

[Mr. Bourassa.]

Several years ago we set up a committee on industrial and international relations. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) himself suggested that international relations should come under the supervision of that committee, but so far not one question of international relationships has been referred to it. I would urge upon the Prime Minister that next year some of these questions be brought before this committee in order that we may discuss them in greater detail than can be done in the house.

I wish to state in a very brief form my own opinion with regard to the question before the house. First of all Canada's views on imperial policy or international affairs are not necessarily those of Great Britain. That, I think, has been well illustrated by the last speaker. Secondly, opinions on these matters differ widely in Great Britain. We all know that there is a Conservative policy, there is a Liberal policy and there is a Labour policy in Great Britain. Why should we always take the point of view of the Baldwin government? I hope within a very short time to see the Labour party in power in Great Britain. When that takes place I trust I shall have the great satisfaction of urging my friends in this house to follow the lead of the motherland.

An hon. MEMBER: Why any more than any other?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Not more than any of the others, of course. But since my Conservative friends are continually telling us when the Baldwin government is in power, that we ought to follow the motherland, they would be only consistent in following the motherland even when the Labour party is in power. As for me, I would say that we ought to choose our own policy whether the Baldwin government or a Labour government be in power in Great Britain.

In this country we so rarely read anything in regard to the policies of the opposition parties in Great Britain that I venture to quote from The Spectator, a quite respectable English paper which I think ought to appeal to the present government. This paper, in the issue of January 28, 1928, gives a summary of certain observations of His Majesty's government in Great Britain on the suggested program of work of the subcommittee on security of the Preparatory Commission on Disarmament which, states this journal:

> —constitutes a document of considerable importance, for it embodies a full statement of the considered views of the British government on the questions, first of arbitration, and secondly of security agreements.

I will not stop to read the summary but I wish to quote the Spectator's comment:

This statement of policy must be read in its relation to disarmament on the one hand and security on the other. The doctrine gaining increasing ground on the continent of Europe is that for disarmament to become a practical proposition it is necessary to arrange for the peaceful settlement of all international disputes, not merely of some. That means submitting all such disputes to some form of pacific settlement, legal or justiciable cases normally going to the Permanent Court and non-justiciable cases being settled by arbitration, if conciliation fails. The British memorandum, it will be observed, assents to neither part of this proposition, and Great Britain still declines to undertake to have legal disputes settled by the court or non-legal disputes by arbitration.

With regard to legal cases, Lord Phillimore has recently stated convincingly in the Spectator the case for sending all such questions as a matter of course to the Permanent Court. Twenty-eight nations have so far signed the optional clause, whereby they undertake to do this, and, though ratification is still required in some cases, the clause at present binds twenty states. Germany and France both have bills providing for ratification before their respective parliaments.

If twenty-eight states are willing to sign the optional clause why should not Canada sign it? The trouble is, we have bound ourselves at the Imperial conference to take no action without first consulting the motherland. I think we should at once represent to the motherland the advisability of our signing the optional clause. However, let me proceed with this statement:

With regard to non-justiciable disputes, it is to be observed that Great Britain appears to have gone back on the policy she supported at Locarno, for she there applauded France and Germany in their decision "to settle by peaceful means all questions of every kind which may arise between them," whereas the British note declares that there are some political questions, even of a justiciable nature, which a state cannot agree unreservedly in advance to submit to arbitration. Elsewhere it is stated that non-justiciable disputes are unsuitable for submission to a tribunal capable of giving a binding decision. These objections, which appear—if they have any meaning at all—to leave the door open for war in the last resort, are equally difficult to reconcile with the resolution unanimously carried with the specific approval of Great Britain at the last League assembly, declaring "that every pacific means must be employed to settle disputes of every description which may arise between states."

It would seem, Mr. Speaker, that the real trouble with regard to the optional clause lies in Great Britain's traditional policy of sea power in time of war, and I fancy that in Canada, sooner or later, we will have to face the question of whether or not we propose to stand by Great Britain's position in this regard. I think very few people realize that Great Britain has not receded from the position of one hundred years ago. I would like to quote a few passages with regard to the Stigstad case, which was before the Privy Council, and which I think well illustrates what I would regard as the perfectly indefensible position of Great Britain in this regard. This was an appeal from the prize court of England. A neutral ship on her way to Rotterdam with goods destined for Germany was required to discharge at a British port; no unreasonable delay or expense in carrying out the provision of the order was incurred. It was held, that the order in council did not entail unreasonable inconvenience on neutrals and was valid, and that the neutral shipowner was not entitled to damages for the detention of the ship or to expenses.

I quote from the argument on which this decision was based, page 285 of the English law reports, appeal cases, 1919:

What is here in question is not the right of the belligerent to retaliate upon his enemy the same measure as has been meted out to him, or the propriety of justifiing in one belligerent some departure from the regular rules of war on the ground of necessity arising from prior departures on the part of the other, but it is the claim of neutrals to be saved harmless under such circumstances from inconvenience or damage thereout arising.

And again:

—the only question open to the neutral claimant for the purpose of invalidating the order is whether or not it subjects neutrals to more inconvenience or prejudice than is reasonably necessary under the circumstances.

And again:

In considering whether more inconvenience is inflicted upon neutrals than the circumstances involve, the frequency and the enormity of the original wrongs are alike material, for the more gross and universal those wrongs are, the more are all nations concerned in their repression, and bound for their part to submit to such sacrifices as that repression involves. It is right to recall that, as neutral commerce suffered and was doomed to suffer gross prejudice from the illegal policy proclaimed and acted on by the German government, so it profited by, and obtained relief from, retaliatory measures, if effective to restrain, to punish and to bring to an end such injurious conduct. Neutrals, whose principles or policy lead them to refrain from punitory or repressive action of their own, may well be called on to bear a passive part in the necessary suppression of courses which are fatal to the freedom of all who use the seas.

And a little later on:

The assumption was that a neutral, too pacific or too impotent to resent the aggressions and lawlessness of one belligerent, can require the other to refrain from his most effective, or his only, defence against it, by the assertion of an absolute inviolability for his own neutral trade, which would thereby become engaged in a passive complicity with the original offender. For this contention no authority at all was forthcoming.

I ask whether any member of this house would subscribe to this doctrine:

The seas are the highway of all, and it is incidental to the very nature of maritime war that neutrals, in using that highway, may suffer inconvenience from the exercise of their concurrent rights by those who have to wage war upon it.

Surely it is an altogether new doctrine that the warring people have the rights while the neutral people have no rights, or only partial rights. I proceed:

. . . . to say that retaliation is invalid as against neutrals, except within the old limits of blockade, contraband, and unneutral service, is to reduce retaliation to a mere simulacrum, the title of an admitted right without practical application or effect.

That is still the position of Great Britain. Let me contrast that with the attitude of the United States, our great neighbour to the south, who will not and need not tolerate very much longer the unwarrantable position taken by Great Britain. I would like to quote a few passages from a recent article appearing in the Contemporary Review for April, 1928, by Colonel Edward M. House, who says:

The failure of the Geneva naval conference has emphasized the difficulties of reaching an understanding regarding the relative strength of armaments. A simple and far more effective way out would be for the sea powers to agree to a code of sea laws making battleships of all kinds useless except for defensive purposes. The only adequate means by which this may be accomplished is through an agreement to accept the principle of the freedom of the seas in so far as it means the abolition of contraband and immunity of private property at sea.

He refers to the second Hague conference of 1907, when an American proposal was presented urging the immunity of private property, of neutral and belligerent alike, from seizure at sea, and also a British proposal urging the abondonment of the principle of contraband altogether. Lord Reay, stating the case for the British proposal, said:

Recent experience, gentlemen, has therefore confirmed my government in its opinion. It remains firmly convinced that in the present condition of world commerce and of human knowledge the exercise of the right of seizure results only in hampering neutral commerce without giving belligerents compensating advantages and in bringing the former eventually into the war. It is, therefore, with the firm conviction that the time has come to remove the dangers which I have pointed out, that the British delegation has the honour to propose that contraband be abolished and that neutral commerce be restored to the freedom which it requires.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Then Mr. House comments on that statement, and says:

The British were absolutely right in abandoning the principle of contraband. No halfway measure will suffice. There can be no longer a distinction between articles destined for military purposes and those intended for the civilian population. On the other hand, until private property on the high seas is made immune, the troublesome and dangerous differences of opinion that arose in 1812 and 1915 are bound to return in the case of another war. What is suggested, then, is simply the acceptance of the British proposal of 1907 for the abolition of contraband and of the American proposal of the same year for the sanctity of private property at sea.

He quotes Commander Kenworthy as having stated in an article in the London Review of Reviews:

The one nation that can be successfully blockaded is Britain, and yet we cling to the weapon which may possibly bring about our destruction.

And he concludes:

With the freedom of the seas guaranteed by covenant between nations, there would be no incentive for the United States, France, Germany or Russia or other powers to maintain navies larger than sufficient for police purposes.

And again:

The benefits which would accrue to Great Britain through the freedom of the seas would be free communication with her dominions, and the certainty that her food supply and raw materials could never be interrupted. Such a policy would eliminate the terrors of submarine warfare, for submarine could be used only against battleships and craft of war.

I do not think I could better summarize the position of some of the most thoughtful English Liberals and Labour leaders with regard to this question of the blockade than by quoting from a recent speech by Mr. W. Arnold-Forster. He says:

(a) The blockade weapon is no longer divisible. It is impossible to distinguish between civil, medical, and military stores.

(b) It is more generally detested than ever. Europe remembers that 760,000 died in consequence of England's blockade before the armistice and 100,000 during its continuance afterwards; that the Russian famine resulted largely in consequence of the stoppage of farming machinery; that supplies were refused to Greek islands which favoured Constantine; and that for the year 1917-18 even the neutral nation Sweden received no supplies. And America remembers our interference with her shipping, and the 12,000 tons of her copper which were piled up on the mole at Gibraltar.

(c) It is now much more impracticable. In 1914 there were only two cables between Germany and America, one of which we cut, and the other we diverted and tapped. And the prize courts showed the value of the information which came from that source. Now there are many means of communicating the movements of ships, both under the sea and above it.

(d) It follows that it is now less defensible as a weapon, from all points of view. We must, of course, remember that the United States is outside the League of Nations, and might decide to help a nation which had disobeyed the league. But if we renounce the blockade we shall be in a position to ask that the United States of America on her part will not assist a proven aggressor.

I am quoting at length to-day for a set purpose. If on my own authority I made these statements they might be challenged by members of this house as being merely my own personal opinion, or as representing the opinion of one small group in this house. I would point out that these are the views of very large and influential groups of people in Great Britain. I will quote the position of the Liberals in Great Britain, and I wonder if the Canadian government will go as far as the Liberals in Great Britain are willing to go. They demand that the British government should at once take the following measures:

1. To sign the undertaking framed by the League of Nations, to refer all international disputes of a legal character to the league's court of justice at The Hague.

2. To enter into general or particular treaties of arbitration providing for the peaceful settlement of other disputes.

3. To reduce our own existing armaments, which are beyond the needs of the present situation, and specifically to repudiate any policy of entering into a competition in naval construction with the United States of America.

4. To press forward the action which is contemplated for codifying and defining more closely the principles of international law.

The Liberal memorial states:

In our judgment the failure of Great Britain to retain the foremost place in the world movement towards a more rational and a more moral civilization is due in material part to the hesitating action and divided counsels of the government.

This is not a statement made by some irresponsible group, but is the formal statement of the Liberal party of Great Britain.

I would also appeal to my Conservative friends to be as broadminded and as far-seeing as some of the leading Conservatives in Great Britain. About the time the Liberals were taking the position they did, the general council of the League of Nation's Union, upon motion of Lord Robert Cecil, put out a declaration urging upon the government a programme of co-operation with the league under five heads, the second being in these terms:

2. To promote the peaceful settlement of all international disputes by every means in its power, and with this object immediately,—

(a) To sign the optional clause with any reservations that may be necessary to provide for the special position of this country.

(b) To announce its willingness to negotiate all-inclusive arbitration agreements with any civilized nation, on a model to be established by the League of Nations.

I would ask the Prime Minister why we should not proceed immediately to negotiate with the British government with a view to securing our release from our present obligations and enabling us to sign at once the optional clause.

Further since the Root treaty of 1908 has now expired, I would ask why a treaty cannot be made between Canada and the United States which will be much more inclusive in its character than that which is now being proposed by Mr. Kellogg. If I understand the situation aright, Great Britain is putting in so many reservations that the treaty will be comparatively useless, or at least will stop very far short of what we in this country want. Why should we not proceed at once to renew our treaty with the United States, renew it in the name of His Majesty on behalf of Canada, and make it without any reservations—an all-inclusive arbitration treaty?

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does my hon. friend suggest that the treaty forwarded to Canada by the United States is not the treaty without any reservations or without the reservations put in by Sir Austen Chamberlain?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I will leave that to the Prime Minister to answer. I would hope that it was the original treaty as put forward by Mr. Kellogg and not the treaty as emasculated by the interpretations of the present administration in Great Britain.

I want to follow the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) for a few minutes in his references to Russia. It may be comparatively safe for the member for Labelle to refer to Russia, but I suppose it is much more dangerous for me to do so because of the general popular conception that the Labour movement is seriously affected with sympathy for Russia. We are sympathetic with Russia; I do not deny it. I regard the experiment in Russia as one of the greatest that has been made in any part of the world, or in any age in history. We can look back to-day with something like a dispassionate view to the achievements of the French revolution, and I believe the time is coming when we will look back to the Russian revolution of ten years ago as marking one of the greatest epochs in the history of the world. I am not suggesting that we in Canada should proceed along Russian lines—that is another question.

The trouble is that we have been prejudiced by our newspapers against Russia. Instead of quoting some socialist or labour authority, I would like to quote, in opening up this discussion, a few words from our good friend Colonel H. J. Mackie. Colonel Mackie has spent a good many years in Russia; he was head of the Canadian section of the movement which attempted to relieve the children of Russia some years ago. Colonel Mackie, who I believe is regarded as a good Conservative, was quoted by the Toronto Daily Star of February 2, 1927 as follows:

"The chief obstacle in the way of friendly relations between Great Britain and Russia is the wilful, stupid hostility and misrepresentation of British politicians, particularly Churchill, Birkenhead and Joynson-Hicks", declared Col. Herbert J. Mackie, former M.P. for North Renfrew, who, since 1920, has been in Russia ten different times. He has just recently returned from his latest visit.

Colonel Mackie continues:

The situation in Russia to-day is simply unbelievable to anyone who has the picture of the Russia of 1920 in his mind.

To the external view the people one sees on the streets of Moscow and Leningrad are well dressed, happy, contented and prosperous.

Wonderful strides are being made in education. The commissar of education told me that he was much interested in the Canadian rural school system and that he hoped to send a commission of five educationists to Canada next spring to study our methods.

Again:

I have been greatly impressed with the absolute sincerity of the men at the top of Russian affairs.

"Stalin is the great man of Russia to-day," said Col. Mackie.

He is a quiet, reserved man, but he is very able, and the people trust him.

Trotsky's power is on the wane.

One thing that has impressed me greatly in Russia is that the leaders there are willing to admit their mistakes and to change their plans if they find they will not work.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What happened to Trotsky?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think we all know that Trotsky was banished. For the few minutes that remain to me I should like to speak of our relationship with this Soviet Russia, which is apparently not nearly so black a country as many have painted it. I would refer hon. members to a very interesting article on Russia in Toronto Saturday Night on March 24 of this year. An hon. member suggests that this is a socialist paper. I think I am comparatively safe in quoting Toronto Saturday Night.

Mr. IRVINE: No, the hon. member is not. It is not a safe paper.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Let me read a few paragraphs from this journal, which has usually very little good to say concerning many of us:

Behind the controversy between the Standard Oil Company of New York and the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Company lie two fundamental causes as old as industry itself: a desire for raw materials and the need for a larger market.

The article goes on to tell of the development of the oil industry in Russia:

As soon as Great Britain had signed a trade agreement with Russia in 1920 the British company began negotiations with the Soviet government with a view toward obtaining a monopoly on the purchase of oil produced in Russia.

There were too many competitors for the Russian oil reserves, however, for the Soviet government to consent to any such arrangement. The latter contemplated an amalgamation of all the oil interests in one company in which the Soviets, too, would participate.

Such an arrangement was unsatisfactory to the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Company because it would have given the Standard Oil Company of New York, its chief rival, privileges similar to its own; for a number of years the British company continued its efforts towards a monopoly contract.

The article records further developments in which Soviet oil, despite all obstacles, began to play an increasingly important role in the industry and commerce of European and Near-eastern nations and concludes:

In the end the disposition of Russian oil will probably be worked out on an economic and not an ethical basis.

This warfare between the two rival companies, British and American, culminated in the Arcos raids in Great Britain. To substantiate this I should like to call attention to two very significant articles published in the English Foreign Affairs for October and November, 1927: "Oil and the Arcos Raid," by Francis Delaisi. This statement confirms and supplements the article in Saturday Night to which I have referred. I read only brief extracts, but as so few of my fellow members spend very much time with the old country papers, apparently I am justified in giving the information therein contained:

The breaking-off of diplomatic relations between Great Britain and the Soviet union was not the spontaneous action of the British government, but was inspired, and perhaps commanded, by certain large-scale oil interests.

Again:

At last the various oil interests—Anglo-Dutch, British, American, Franco-Belgian, et cetera—grasped that they were playing the Bolshevik game by indulging their rivalries, and concluded a kind of "pact of non-aggression." They engaged not to seek separately any concession from the Moscow government. They did not prohibit trade with the soviets, but they agreed to allow Russia no credit, and brought all their influence—and it is considerable—to bear on the banks to prevent the grant of any credits other than those promised by treaty. Thus the financial blockade of Soviet Russia was determined.

Then the writer goes on to give details of the various events in the continued warfare between the different oil interests. He continues:

At the end of 1926 the export of Russian oil had surpassed the 1913 tonnage.

Curiously enough, the principal market was England. With the collaboration of Arcos and of several individual Englishmen, a powerful company, the Russian Oil Products, was formed in Great Britain. And—supreme impertinence! —R.O.P. brands are to-day competing, often successfully, with the Anglo-Persian, the Shell, and the Royal Dutch under the very eyes of Sir Henri Deterding. Here, plainly, was a degree of presumption which the oil magnates could not tolerate.

Notwithstanding this there developed considerable trade between Great Britain and Russia. It went so far that Mr. McKenna, a former Chancellor of the Exchequer, whom I have quoted in the house in other connections——had been brought to agree to a credit of £10,000,000 (not, it is true, in cash, but in goods) to the successors of Lenin.

But at this point Sir Henri Deterding came on to the scenes in a towering rage. What! at the very moment when he, the petrol king, was seeking to close the British market to these vile bolsheviks, the doors of the stock exchange were being opened to them . . . .

Such a loan at such a moment was worse than defection, it was insubordination!.....

To force Sir Austen Chamberlain's hand, then, a great coup was necessary. Sir Henri Deterding likes to be called the "Petrol Napoleon". Like his model, his ideas are bold, his persistence unconquerable, and he has a taste for violent and sudden attacks which rout the enemy.

On Wednesday, May 11, the agreement for the Soviet loan of £10,000,000 was signed at a private meeting held at the Midland Bank.

The following day, by order of the Home Office, the police invaded the offices of Arcos, and, in defiance of the extra-territoriality granted by Britain to the agents of the Soviet government, proceeded to institute a detailed search.

In the following article of November, 1927, there is a summary of the situation as follows:

In substance, the raid of the Home Office upon the offices of Arcos was a raid of the oil magnates upon the Foreign Office.

I will not venture to indicate to British readers the lesson which may be learnt from these facts. Moreover, the interference of the great oil trusts in foreign policy is by no means an exclusively British phenomenon.

The writer goes on to develop that; and then concludes:

The idea of transforming a means of accumulating wealth into an instrument of power and domination belongs to the realm of feudalism and romance; it is a survival of past ages. It cannot fail to lead the nations into war and the trusts themselves to their ruin. It is anti-economic and inhuman.

I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, the articles where this information may be found. I put it to the government, in what an absurd position Canada is placed in view of these revelations. On account of pressure exerted by certain oil firms in Great Britain for their own interests, there was a reversal of policy by the British government, and in spite of the arrangement then existing, under which credits were to be extended to Russia. We in Canada meekly followed the lead of Great Britain, and indirectly the behest of the oil kings of Great Britain. In what a position are we placed! I suppose we shall now have to wait until some other industrial kings of Great Britain take action, and then we shall again meekly fall into line. I say that this is an absurd position, and I would appeal to the Prime Minister that his Department of External Affairs should exercise a great deal more independence in such matters as this.

One of the difficulties in having the Kellogg peace treaty signed at the present time arises because of the problem as to whether or not Russia will be asked to participate in the treaty. According to the treaty of some years ago made between Great Britain and Russia after the war, which was read by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), there was every desire to re-establish business relationship between Russia and Great Britain. All was going well until these oil kings came in for their own purposes and upset the whole arrangement, forcing the hand of Great Britain and indirectly involving us in the trouble. I wonder why it would not be possible at this time to carry out the expressed desire of so many people in Canada, a desire expressed among others by our Alberta farmers, to re-establish relationships between Canada and Russia.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I assume, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members who wish to take part in this debate have spoken, because I would have preferred to wait before replying until all the members who have any intention of speaking have spoken, as I would like in my remarks to cover whatever points may be raised by the different speakers.

May I remind the house that the motion before it at the moment is that the house go into committee of supply, the supply being that of the Department of External Affairs. I refer particularly to this because my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who has moved an amendment, has mentioned that one of his reasons for his so doing was that in that manner only was it possible for him to address the house on the various subjects to which he has referred. I might say to my hon. friend that I think he would have had that opportunity the minute we got into supply, with respect to the different items that would come before the committee. However, I recognize he might not have had it in a manner which would have afforded him the opportunity of reviewing in the comprehensive and logical way he has done the different subjects referred to in the course of his remarks.

I should like to read the amendment anew. It is as follows:

> This house regrets that proper steps have not yet been taken to give full effect, both in domestic and external affairs, to the "equality of status" asknowledged by the Imperial conference, 1926, to be the "root-principle" of the relationship between the self-governing Britannic communities.

That amendment has this merit in particular, that it approves in no uncertain tone the formula which was laid down at the Imperial conference with respect to the position of Canada and the other self-governing dominions and the British government. The equality of status which is there set forth is the root principle of the relationship.

I may say that on the whole, my hon. friend's remarks in relation to the government were quite as appreciative as they were critical of its attitude in dealing with matters pertaining to Canada's external affairs, and I am sure that I am not far off the mark when I say that I do not think my hon. friend desires his amendment to be considered as a motion of want of confidence in the administration. I hope that when I have endeavoured to reply to what he has said, he will feel that his purpose has been served in bringing before the house and the country the various matters he has, and that it will not be necessary to press the amendment to a division; for certainly were that to be done, the government would be obliged to ask the house to vote against the amendment. With the exception of the one word "regrets," which appears in it, and the delay alleged, I for my part would be rather prepared, under other circumstances, to accept a resolution along the lines of the purport and purpose my hon. friend has in mind. The purport and purpose of the resolution is simply that, as opportunity arises, the government should do what lies in its power, to carry out the principles laid down at the last Imperial conference, establishing Canada's position as one of the British dominions, on an equality so far as status is concerned, with that of Great Britain. With respect therefore to the real purport of the resolution there is no exception to be taken on the part of the administration, and as I have already said, I hope that my hon. friend will later on feel in regard to the matters he has brought up that perhaps he has seen them from an angle which has not afforded him the full light which he should have had in moving a resolution critical of the administration.

The first point that my hon. friend dealt with was the manner in which communications were being carried on between the government of Canada and the British government. He drew attention to the fact that at the Imperial conference of 1926 it was decided that thereafter communications passing between His Majesty's government in Canada and His Majesty's government in Great Britain should be direct as from government to government, and not through the channel existing at the time, namely, the office of His Excellency the Governor General. My hon. friend said that he was somewhat surprised in looking at the correspondence relating to the severance of relations with Russia to discover that though that correspondence took place in May, His Excellency the Governor General was still the medium of communication, and that the Canadian government was not communicating direct with the government of Great Britain. May I say to my hon. friend that in all these matters of changed relations, if they are to be described as such, the line of evolution, rather than of revolution, is in the long run almost certain to be the most effective one and the most enduring, and a change, even when it is a desirable one, is sometimes carried out to the better satisfaction of all concerned where time is taken to see that all interested parties are fully apprised of the significance of the change, and that all the necessities in relation thereto are properly met. My hon. friend will realize that for the Department of External Affairs to take over the work of conducting the direct communication with England, as it was being done through the office of His Excellency the Governor General, there was need, for that purpose, of an appropriation by this parliament to the Department of External Affairs. The conference met in London in November; the estimates which were brought to parliament for the current year contained an appropriation which would enable the Department of External Affairs to take over the communications. It was necessary to add to the staff of the department for purposes of coding and transcribing despatches, and to have therefor, as well as for the cost of transmission, extra appropriations. Parliament had only voted the appropriation at the time the correspondence took place with regard to our relations with Russia. That of itself, as I think my hon. friend will recognize, was a sufficient reason why the change should not have been made abruptly or immediately after the conference had registered its decision with respect to it. On the other hand, there was the further circumstance that the British government's wishes had also to be considered. It was to some extent a matter as between the British government and all the dominions with respect to the form this particular change would take and the time when it would be made. We were led to believe that it was desirable to give the foreign office and the dominions office time to perfect the necessary changes in their departments, and that was another reason why there was no immediate action taken in changing the channel of communication.

However, I might say to my hon. friends that there was still a further reason. When the estimates were introduced it would be the beginning of the fiscal year, and the change, I presume, might have been made then on the assumption that parliament would support the administration. But, all things considered, it seemed to us that the first of July last year, being Dominion Day and of particular significance in that it marked the diamond jubilee of confederation, would be an appropriate date on which to bring this change into effect. Therefore early in the year we suggested to His Majesty's government in Great Britain that we hoped, so far as they were concerned, matters would not be delayed beyond the first of July. That date was regarded as quite acceptable to the British government, and on the first of July the communications between His Majesty's government in Canada and His Majesty's government in Great Britain began to be exchanged direct, and have continued from that moment to be so exchanged. My hon. friend may now feel assured that the change about which he was so anxious was made nearly a year ago. Many of the communications which now for nearly a year have been exchanged direct between the two governments are between prime minister and prime minister; some of them are sent direct to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in London; but for convenience sake, and also for the sake of record, all communications in the first instance come to our government through the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and communications to the British government go through the office of the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs in London. Let me say that from the moment the arrangement was introduced up to the present it has worked admirably and I think to the distinct advantage of both governments. I do not wish to make comparisons with the length of time previously taken, but certainly there has been to some extent a lessening of the time required through the elimination of the roundabout process which formerly was in vogue.

My hon. friend spoke next of the particular paragraph in the report of the Imperial conference which sets forth that matters relating to the operation of dominion legislation should be referred to a special committee, and he took exception to the fact that up to the present time that committee has apparently not been formed.

Mr. BOURASSSA: If the right hon. gentleman will allow me? I put it in the form of a question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad to accept my hon. friend's correction. I apologize to him for having used the term "took exception." My hon. friend asked: Has the committee been formed; if not, when is it to be formed? When the Secretary of State for the Dominions, the Right Hon. Mr. Amery, was in Ottawa at the beginning of this session, I spoke to him concerning the convening of the committee. Mr. Amery had been in touch with the other dominions in the course of his tour, and he told me that they had all to some extent brought up the subject with him, or he had brought it up with them, and after his return home he expected to be in a position formally to communicate with all the dominions as to the formation of the committee. In other words, I gathered that he had ascertained from the several dominions their wishes, and was intending to have a communication sent out which would enable the committee to be formed forthwith. Up to the present time we have not received a formal communication. I might say that as a result of this discussion to-day I shall have pleasure in drawing the attention of the Secretary of State for the Dominions to the fact that hon. members think there should not be any further delay in the establishment of the committee. But may I say this? I do not think there has been any intentional delay on the part of the Secretary of State for the Dominions. I have no doubt that what has been happening here has been happening also in Great Britain and the other dominions, namely, that the departmental officials have been engaged on what might be considered the statement of the case from the point of view of their respective governments with respect to the several matters to be considered so as to be in a position the minute the committee is called together to make a presentation of the case. As to Canada, some of the officers of the Department of External Affairs and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) with the officers of his department have been conferring together and studying certain aspects of the question. Similarly, in the Department of Marine and Fisheries there have been experts at work on different phases of the question relating to merchant shipping, which is also to be dealt with by means of a committee. I think my hon. friend may feel assured that the committee will be called very shortly, and that the position of Canada or of any other part of the empire will not be prejudiced by the delay.

Mr. BOURASSA: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend knows, whatever work these committees perform will likely come before the next Imperial conference, and I presume their report will be made to that conference. Just when the conference will be held I cannot say at the moment, but in the natural order of things it would not be before the fall of next year. I think, therefore, there is plenty of time for the committee to meet and make its report.

I was pleased to see that my hon. friend approved so whole-heartedly of the intention of the government to establish legations in Paris and Tokyo, and also of the step already taken in establishing a legation at Washington. With respect to the word of counsel and advice he gave to the administration to proceed in a modest way, may I assure him that we are entirely in accord with him in that particular. There is an old saying which comes to one's mind with respect to these legations, it is that in Rome one must do more or less as the Romans do; and no doubt my hon. friend had in his thoughts the expenses of the legation at Washington. Quite frankly I may say that they are on a scale which the government does not contemplate with regard either to Paris or to Tokyo. But, as he knows, Washington is generally conceded to be the most expensive capital in the world. Even the legation which Canada has is small compared to some of the legations of other countries of very much less importance than our Dominion. What we have done at Washington has been done appropriately, having regard to Canada's relationship to the United States; and I think my hon. friend will be pleased when he sees how Canada's action at Washington will be reciprocated by the United States in its legation here at Ottawa. It is an open secret that the United States government contemplates erecting very shortly in this capital an important and, I may say, an imposing building for the purposes of its legation. As Canadians we shall, I believe, feel proud of what will be done in that regard by the country to the south.

As to the importance of the representation being clearly defined, I agree absolutely with my hon. friend that it is essential that the position of Canada's minister at any of the capitals in which there may be legations should be perfectly clear, both as respects his relations with the British minister at that capital and as well, in regard to his relations with the country to which both are accredited.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When the house rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I had been touching upon the representation of Canada in legations abroad and the position of our representatives in relation to the other British representatives and also in relation to the representatives of the countries to which they are accredited. The hon. member who moved the amendment stressed the importance of these relations being clearly defined. Naturally I entirely agree with him in that; personally I see very little difficulty in the definition. The representatives of Canada to other countries are appointed in reference to the domestic and external affairs of Canada, and they have to deal only with matters in respect of which we are primarily concerned. At these legations they meet, in the same capitals, the representatives of the British government who are similarly charged with the responsibility of representing the British government in regard to its domestic and foreign affairs, wherever those domestic and foreign affairs come to be a matter of international interest and concern. It is conceivable that in some cases the foreign affairs of one part of the empire will intersect the arc which relates to the foreign affairs of another part of the empire. In that event one would assume that the obligation with reference to what is held in common would be a joint obligation and that the two representatives, or more if there are such, would carry out their trusteeship in co-operation with each other after consultation. Possibly there may be some who will object that there is always the possibility of difference arising. That possibility exists everywhere and if it is to come up between representatives of different parts of the empire perhaps it is fortunate that it should arise first of all between two individuals, and subsequently be referred to their respective governments, by whom any difference could be smoothed out, as differences have been dealt with in the course of years where they have arisen between different governments of the same empire. I believe that is all I need to say with reference to the position of our representatives abroad.

The next subject mentioned by the hon. member for Labelle was the action of the Dominion government in severing relations with Russia. That action was taken just a year ago this month, about the time or rather at the time the British government severed its relations with Russia. As the hon. member said, the agreement which we had with Russia was one which originated between His Majesty's government of Great Britain and the Union of Soviet Socialistic republics in Russia. That agreement came into being under a previous administration; Canada's adherence to that agreement was given under that former administration. When we came into office we found that agreement in existence; both governments were parties to it, and naturally we accepted the obligations which arose under it. I think there was an exchange of notes, six months after we came into office, accepting or rather confirming a formula which had been agreed to prior to the time we assumed office.

Mr. BENNETT: May I ask a question? Is not the right hon. gentleman in error in stating that the agreement had been confirmed before Mr. Meighen's government was defeated? My memory is that there was no formal agreement until after my right hon. friend came into power, although I speak subject to correction.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What I am now saying is that an order in council had been passed, first of all, asking the British government if they would ascertain from Russia whether Canada might not become a party to the agreement. Then, after having taken that action, a formula was drafted which was submitted to or by the British government, and they or our government were asked whether that formula would be acceptable and also if it would be acceptable to the Russian government in order to make Canada a party to the agreement. That formula was approved by an order in council passed by a previous administration, and the British and Russian governments were both advised that Canada would adhere to the treaty under that particular formula. Then, as I recall it, in the following August our administration received a communication from Lord Balfour, who was acting Foreign Minister at the time, stating that the formula had been formally signed.

Mr. BENNETT: That was in August of 1922.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is correct, but that was merely carrying out the obligation, in the matter of signature, to which the previous administration had committed the government of Canada. However, that is a mere detail; the facts are that we continued to be bound by the terms of the treaty with Russia, and we received in Canada in 1923 what was known as the Russian trade mission or agency. Russia sent to this country a trade agent, who opened an office in Montreal with a small staff of employees and undertook obligations or duties relating in part to trade and duties in part of a consular character.

I might say to the house that that particular office did not have a very happy beginning as far as the government of Canada was concerned. At the time the Russian agent came to Canada he brought with him what seemed to members of our administration an unnecessary amount of literature of the character of propaganda of communist ideas. So much of this material was brought in that the government found it necessary to question the head of the agency as to its character. Some of the material was brought to Ottawa and examined, and I personally saw a good deal of it. It was not the kind of literature which I think should have been brought into this country ,and I very frankly told the Russian agent that that was my opinion of it. I sought to obtain from him reasons as to why this literature was being brought into Canada, and I obtained answers which were far from satisfactory, so far as my own feelings were concerned, and I think I was inclined to be generous in the attitude I took toward him.

Mr. BENNETT: In what language was this material printed?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was printed in different languages. Some of it was translated and the government went to particular pains to ascertain the nature of the propaganda. Some of it was in the nature of posters which children of any age, whether or not they could read or write, could understand. They were of a character which I do not think any hon. member of this house would wish to see exhibited about this country.

Mr. SPENCER: May I ask if any of the literature was in English?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I drew the attention of the agent to these posters and asked him whether he thought they were the kind of thing that should be brought into this country, and he admitted quite frankly that if they had not been brought in for the purpose of wrapping he did not think they would have been brought in at all.

Mr. BENNETT: My right hon. friend is referring to pictorial posters, not printed ones?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the Prime Minister give us an idea of how much of this literature was brought in at that time?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say how much, but I know sixteen boxes were brought in when the agent arrived.

Mr. HEAPS: What was the size of the boxes?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They were so large that the only explanation that could be given of them was that their contents were intended as a library or to be used as exchanges with other libraries of this country. Some of the literature attacked religion; some was an attack upon organized economic society, and generally speaking, the literature that I saw was not of the character that I believe my hon. friend would have wished to see circulating in this country. The extraordinary thing about it was that this particular material should have been brought in by an organization whose purpose was the friendly one of the development of trade between this country and Russia.

There were other matters, which I think I may be excused from mentioning at the moment, which gave rise to considerable suspicion in the minds of the administration, so much so that the government contemplated at one time making a search of the quarters in Montreal where this mission was located. This was some time previous to the announcement in the British house that relations had been broken off with Russia, on the part of the British government. Then one day we were advised that the British government had broken off relations, for reasons already mentioned. We had in our possession a statement made by the Prime Minister of Great Britain to the British House of Commons. In addition to that we had the information concerning which there was no question about the circulation of communist propaganda in China by one of the agents of the Russian government. This was contrary to the obligations entered into by Russia in the treaty, and we felt that everything considered we had more than sufficient ground at the time for severing relations with the Russian government. We took prompt action in the matter; we did not wait until the British government had communicated its view of the situation to parliament, we acted before that.

The criticism that has been directed against the government has been that we merely followed the British government. The hon. member for Labelle drew attention to what was in the communication from the Secretary of State for the Dominions, to the effect that unified action on the part of the British Empire would be helpful at that stage. He argued that it was because of that communication and request from the British government that our action was taken. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who seconded the amendment, also stressed the point that we should have waited to see what was said by Liberal and Labour members in the British parliament. It was precisely because we wished our action to be understood as independent action that we did not wait until discussion had taken place in the British parliament. The criticism of my hon. friend is directed towards us for following the British government, and then he says we should have waited to follow the British parliament. We were not following anyone, we were acting on our own initiative and taking action towards this particular trade mission which we felt was justified in the light of circumstances as we knew them to exist. We did not hesitate to make it known to the officers of the original mission that we were not satisfied with its personnel, and these officers were changed some little time prior to the breaking off of the relations with Russia under the treaty. The agent who was here at that time appeared to me to be a thoroughly honest and honourable man. I had no reason to mistrust him in any particular, and I said so at the time we broke off relations. I am sorry that I can not say the same with respect to his predecessors in office.

I would point out to the house the position in which this country would have been placed had the government's action at the time not been what it was. Up to the present time the United States has never made a treaty with the Union of Soviet Socialistic republics in Russia. At that time Great Britain had severed connections with Russia in the matter of trade, and this country would have been left as the one part of the English speaking world which had maintained relations. It seems to me that we would have been put in a position where the rest of the world might well have demanded what exceptional reasons we found to continue a relationship which was likely to prove embarrassing to the rest of the British Empire.

While our action was taken independently of Great Britain and all other parts of the empire, I am perfectly frank in saying that if it was helpful to any one part of the British Empire in a difficult situation, I am all the more pleased on that account. What I want to make clear is this; the taking of similar action to that of another part of the British Empire does not mean that our action is necessarily obsequious, a mere imitation, or, above all, that it is in any shape or form yielding to dictation.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Would the Canadian government have broken off relations if the British government had not done so?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If we had had occasion to go carefully into the evidence that we obtained at that time, I think it is quite possible we would have severed relations. In fact, it was very much against our will that we continued relations as long as we did. We continued them simply because we were anxious to avoid embarrassment to other parts of the empire as well as to ourselves. When the situation became such that to have continued longer would have been taking a course which would have been very doubtful, as far as Canada was concerned, and embarrassing to other parts of the empire, we had no hesitancy in taking the course we did.

Mr. HEAPS: Is the statement that the Prime Minister is at present giving to the house not rather at variance with the statement he issued after relations were broken off?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I made it quite clear at the time of breaking off the relations that as regards the then Russian agent, we had no exception to take to any action on his part. I confess to my hon. friend that I did not go into the detail into which I have gone to-night with respect to the grounds which we had prior to that time for suspecting the work of this particular trade mission. The government did not do so at the time because we were anxious not to say any more than was necessary, and I would not have said as much as I have to-night had it not been that, in view of what has been said in the course of the debate, I have felt it was only fair to hon. members to bring before the house these other factors. We were particularly careful to make it clear that we in no way wished to prejudice dealings in trade between Canada and Russia, rather that we were anxious in every way to have those relations furthered. There is no reason why trade relations should not be developed between Canada and Russia just as speedily, happily and effectively as are trade relations between the United States and Russia at the present time, particularly in view of the circumstances that while Russia has no diplomatic relations with the United States, nevertheless she is trading there. She is free to trade in this country. We will welcome the representatives of Russian firms or any representatives who come to trade with the people of Canada. We are anxious that normal trade relations in all particulars shall be restored between Russia and Canada in any particular in which they have been impeded.

May I add this further fact which perhaps I should have mentioned before? The particular agency which had its office in Montreal was claiming, under the treaty it is quite true, immunities and rights of a character which went much beyond those conceded to any consular agencies of other countries. For example, the right was claimed by means of couriers to bring into the country in sealed bags whatever they wished to bring in of their correspondence; in other words, that the mails of Canada were not to be trusted for communications passing between Russia and its office in Montreal. That was a kind of immunity that we could not see was either desirable or necessary for the purpose of promoting legitimate trade, and the importance that was attached to that kind of thing by the office in Monreal aroused a suspicion which the absence of it might have prevented altogether. That, I think, covers all that I need say at the moment with respect to the severance by Canada of its relations under the trade agreement with the union of soviet socialistic republics.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does the Prime Minister know of any other diplomatic consulate that brings in political propaganda from the country from which it comes?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not aware of any. What I have never been able to understand is what any consular agency or trade mission wants to do with matters of propaganda. It does not seem to me that it enters into their particular sphere of legitimate action. I have, I hope, made it clear to the hon. member for Labelle that so far as the communication that came from the Secretary of State for the Dominions was concerned, that communication had no influence at all upon the government's action. Our action was taken of our own initiative and knowledge of affairs and was in no way at the instance of any member of the British government. We are prepared to take the full responsibility for our action and to defend it on the ground of what we thought at that time in the interest of Canada was necessary and advisable.

My hon. friend has spoken of the consuls and he has intimated that a consul should receive his exequatur with the approval of a minister of the Dominion government rather that with that of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. May I say that prior to the last Imperial conference the practice differed somewhat as between the two classes of consuls. There are the honorary consuls and the consuls of career. The honorary consul, as my hon. friend is aware, frequently or usually resides as a citizen of the country to which he is accredited. A consul of career is one coming from his own country to reside in the country to which he is accredited. Prior to the Imperial conference the consul of career received his exequatur from His Majesty the King on the advice of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain; the honorary consul received his exequatur also from the crown but only after the Dominion government had been approached in the matter in the first instance and had given its approval. From the time, however, of the conference that procedure was changed and both classes of consul, the honorary consul and the consul of career, received their exequaturs from His Majesty the King as formerly but the countersignature was not that of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain, but that of the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada. That is the practice now and has been the practice for more than a year, and all consuls who have come to Canada since the last Imperial conference have received their exequaturs in that form. As to consuls who were formerly resident here claiming any right on the score of holding their exequaturs from the crown at the instance of the British government, I might say that that point was taken up by our government with His Majesty's government in Great Britain and the question was formally put to the British government. Did they in any way regard the holding of an exequatur countersigned by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs as giving ground to the holder thereof to believe that he was holding his exequatur from the British government? The reply was an unequivocal no; that all consuls holding their exequaturs in Canada at the time the change of procedure was made were subject to the change as it stood now as if from the beginning they had held their exequaturs from the king on the approval of the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada. Therefore, the federal government of Canada in the matter of its relation to the consuls from the time that this new procedure was adopted, has had entire control with respect both to their appointment and the demanding of their recall. If in any particular that power has not been exercised, the responsibility must lie on the Dominion government, and in no sense is the British government in Great Britain responsible for the action of this government. I think that answers the point which my hon. friend wished to bring out.

There remains then the question of the Egyptian treaty, and here I do not think there is very much to be said. Speaking in the house some time ago I mentioned that the government was under the impression that it had been invited by the British government to become a party to the treaty which was being negotiated between the British government and the Egyptian government. Subsequently a communication from Great Britain appeared in the press to the effect that the Marquess of Salisbury had stated in the House of Lords that that was an erroneous impression; that Canada had not been invited to become a party to the treaty. When I saw that statement I immediately gave to this House of Commons my reason for believing that we had been invited and I drew attention to the fact that the treaty which we had been asked to approve and concur in was drafted and presented to us in a form which, under the procedure laid down at the previous conference, would have bound all parts of the British Empire. After we had pointed that out to the British government and at the same time mentioned that we could not become a party to the treaty, the form of the treaty was changed, and the treaty was put in a form which would bind only His Majesty's government in Great Britain and Northern Ireland. Lord Salisbury stated that it had not been the intention of the government to invite us, and I am quite prepared, and said so at the time, to accept fully Lord Salisbury's statement in that regard. I would like the house to have the statement made in the House of Lords itself, by members of both parties there, as to the correctness of the impression which our government drew in the first instance from the treaty in the form in which is was presented. I have in my hand the report of the debates in the House of Lords on April 26. It was Lord Parmoor, acting as leader of the opposition in the House of Lords, who brought up this subject in the first instance. His lordship, among other things, said, after seeing my statement in the House of Commons here:

It is quite clear that if the form there adopted had been approved, the Dominion government would have become a party to the Egyptian treaty.

I might read the entire statement so that hon. members of the house will have it in a form that I think will tell the whole story. Lord Parmoor said:

I do not want to go back into the forms of treaties which were examined and explained at the last Imperial conference, although I think that the Prime Minister of Canada— and I believe the noble marquess will agree with this—is perfectly right in saying that, having regard to the forms and principles there laid down, the inference which he drew was a perfectly accurate one, that the Dominion of Canada was being asked to become a party to the Anglo-Egyptian treaty. He calls attention—and I think this is the most convenient way I can put it—to page 9 of the White Paper, which has been published in regard to the treaty negotiations between this country and Egypt. He points out that under the head of the counterdraft approved by His Majesty's government, July 28, 1927, it is stated that this was forwarded to the Dominion government. It is quite clear that if the form there adopted had been approved, the Dominion government would have become a party to the Egyptian treaty. He further points out that it was because of the objection which the Canadian government through their Prime Minister, took, that the form was subsequently altered and the altered form was the form to which the noble marquess called my attention the other day. It is to be found on page 36, where, in accordance with the principles laid down at the Imperial conference, it is made quite clear that the only parties involved at a subsequent stage were Great Britain and Northern Ireland, on one side, and Egypt on the other. But that result was brought about by altering the form in which the treaty was originally submitted to the Canadian government, and it really emphasizes the change in policy of His Majesty's government between those two dates.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the Prime Minister state what were the words of the other form?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Under the procedure laid down at the Imperial conference, a treaty that was to bind only one part of the British Empire was to be made in the name of His Majesty's government for that part, and that part was to be specifically named, but if the treaty was intended to bind the whole empire, not just one part, it would still be in the name of His Majesty, but the reference would not be specifically to any particular part. It was the latter form in which the treaty was submitted to us. Then elsewhere Lord Parmoor says:

I have on former occasions asked that papers might be laid showing what were the reasons given. I will not press that to-day, because it is not the particular point with which I am dealing. All I can say is that Mr. Mackenzie King's statement is anything but obscure. It is perfectly straightforward. What he originally stated in the Canadian parliament is correct, that the Anglo-Egyptian treaty was first submitted to the Canadian government in a form which made Canada a party to that treaty.

That statement was made by Lord Parmoor in the House of Lords, and to that the Marquess of Salisbury replied a little later on in the course of the debate. I might read the reference which Lord Salisbury makes in that regard (House of Lords reports, page 894):

In regard to Canada, we have this advantage which we did not possess on the last occasion, that by reason of the lapse of time we are now in possession of the full report of what was said by Mr. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister of Canada, in the debate to which the noble and learned lord had made reference.

Here may I pause to say a word with respect to these misunderstandings that sometimes have arisen between the British government and our own government. The hon. member for Labelle said this afternoon it was unfortunate that any misunderstanding should arise. I agree wholly with him in that regard, and I think that every effort should be made to prevent such a possibility. But devise what plans we may for communication between governments, we are still subject to the possible misrepresentation that may come from press reports between this country and the old country, and I wish to say, after looking at the press reports which passed from this country with respect to a certain debate which took place here, and which gave rise to this discussion in the House of Lords, that I am convinced that particular discussion would never have taken place in the Lords had a correct report of the debate which took place here been sent to the paper I have in mind by its correspondent in this country.

Lord Salisbury goes on to say:

I have read the report of that speech with the greatest care, and I may say at once that His Majesty's government have no reason to complain in the least of anything which the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Mackenzie King, said on that occasion. On the contrary, I should like to bear testimony to the great courtesy and consideration with which he discharged the very responsible task which was thrown upon him. I have the honour of Mr. Mackenzie King's acquaintance, and I am not surprised to read that he entered into this subject with a full regard to the responsibility under which he stands and with the circumspection which the subject demands.

Elsewhere he goes on to repeat that there was this difference in the two drafts, and that I was entitled, indeed, that it was my duty, to point out the difference between them.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the Prime Minister permit a question? In submitting the original draft of the treaty, the British government, I presume, observed all the courtesies and requirements under the Imperial conference agreement?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Entirely so, yes.

Mr. STEVENS: And furthermore, that treaty was not executed in any respect before it came into the hands of the Canadian government?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, and as a matter of fact it is not executed yet.

Mr. BENNETT: Egypt refused it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: My point was this: There was no suggestion that the British government was seeking to commit Canada without giving the Dominion government full opportunity of considering the matter?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I have said, the original draft we received admitted, to my mind, of only one interpretation, which was that we were being asked to become a party to the treaty. Apparently there were members of the British government who had no such intention in their minds. Lord Salisbury I am perfectly certain had not, from what he said. I am quite certain that Lord Salisbury would never have said in the House of Lords that that was not the intention if there had been in his mind any such intention. But what may have been in the minds of others I cannot say.

Mr. STEVENS: But whatever the form was, it was submitted to us first.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, certainly, and the first form that was submitted was the form which led us to believe that we were being invited to become a party to the treaty. We made it perfectly clear that we could not accept the treaty in that form, and here may I say that I am happy to be able to inform my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, who asked earlier in the session for the correspondence, that I have received word from His Majesty's government in Great Britain which will enable me to table what is essential in the correspondence to disclose the difference, and I shall table that correspondence to-morrow.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that with respect to Egypt I have covered the point which my hon. friend the mover of the amendment had in mind. In the concluding part of his remarks he spoke more particularly of Egypt as an illustration of what might be regarded as the incurring of a moral obligation on the part of Canada through any expression on the part of our government in the nature of approval or concurrence in a matter which was submitted to us. My hon. friend referred also, I think, to Locarno, or if he did not, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who seconded the amendment, did, and intimated that the expression of approval which was given at the Imperial conference in London of the action of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in having succeeded in having the Locarno agreements drafted and signed was equivalent to a moral obligation on the part of Canada towards the matters referred to in those treaties, which moral obligation might grow into an act of responsibility. May I say first of all in regard to the conferences which have to be attended by members of different governments, and also in respect to communications which are submitted for the purpose of giving information, and perhaps for the purpose of receiving approval, that I cannot see how it is going to be possible to conduct conferences or correspondence between different parts of the empire if we are not to be permitted in these matters of great international concern the same kind of courtesies and amenities we are accustomed to use in our daily social intercourse with our neighbours. The mere fact that one gentleman expresses satisfaction at another having succeeded in doing something that is meritorious, does not to my mind involve the one who has the courtesy to convey that expression in any moral or other kind of obligation with respect to subsequent happenings. When a representative of one of the dominions moves a resolution at an Imperial conference expressing pleasure at the action of the British government or of some other government in regard to a matter that is obviously something to be pleased about, the representative of another part of the empire is put in a most invidious position indeed if he has to refrain absolutely from joining with his colleagues from the other dominions in that expression of good will simply because his action may be construed as involving moral obligations and obligations of a more serious character by the mere fact that he has yielded in his actions to what I would describe as a natural courtesy. Now, anything that has been done by representatives of our government at the Imperial conference which has been of the nature of a general expression of good will or appreciation of some course of conduct that has been carried on or some achievement that has been realized by a member of the British administration, is intended to be only what on its face it purports to be, a genuine expression of good will and appreciation—nothing more; and it cannot be held to involve us in a moral or any other obligation. Similarly, if the British government or any other government of the British Empire submits to us a treaty with respect to which they think we will desire to be informed, and we give our approval or concurrence, or say that we have no objection, I hope it will be understood in all parts of the empire that what we are doing is just what we are saying and nothing more, and that any expression of good will of this character carries with it no obligation unless the obligation is specifically stated. Indeed, that is a feature of the report of the Imperial conference on treaty-making which is all-important. My hon. friend will find that the report sets out quite distinctly and deliberately that where there is an intention to bind another government by anything that is said or signed, that particular obligation must be specifically stated, and must be specifically agreed to by the government that as a consequence is to be obligated. I think with that understood and with that safeguard, consultation and conference and co-operation and co-ordination—all these various steps which are so essential to unity and good will between all parts of the empire—can be carried on with security and to the advantage of all concerned; but without them even the most elemenetary discussion would, I submit, be next to impossible.

Now, my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) spoke of the Permanent Court of International Justice and made special reference to the optional clause, so called. The particular paragraph of the Imperial conference report dealing with this matter is headed: Compulsory Arbitration in International Disputes. It appears at page 23 of the report, and is as follows:

> One question which we studied was that of arbitration in international disputes, with special reference to the question of acceptance of article 36 of the statute of the permanent court of international justice, providing for the compulsory submission of certain classes of cases to the court. On this matter we decided to submit no resolution to the conference, but, whilst the members of the committee were unanimous in favouring the widest possible extension of the method of arbitration for the settlement of international disputes, the feeling was that it was at present premature to accept the obligations under the article in question. A general understanding was reached that none of the governments represented at the Imperial conference would take any action in the direction of the acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the permanent court, without bringing up the matter for further discussion.

My hon. friend said that in his opinion our government ought to notify the British government that the time has come when that matter should be brought up for discussion, and that Canada should state specifically her position thereon. Earlier in the session the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Ahshead) asked a question relating to the same matter which was answered by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). The question was:

> I do not know whether I would be right in asking the government to make a declaration on this point. The time is getting late, and I should like the government to say something upon this point.

That is, the point referred to in the paragraph which I have just read. The Minister of Justice in reply said:

> I am sorry that the hour is so late, but it is early enough for me to say simply that I am in sympathy with the subject matter of the resolution. I have some more reasons to give in support of my amendment.

The resolution moved by the hon. member for East Calgary was as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the time is opportune that according to agreement, the government of Canada should discuss with the government of Great Britain, the desirability of Canada accepting article 36 of the statutes of the Permanent Court of International Justice providing for compulsory arbitration in international disputes.

The Minister of Justice, as I have shown, was inclined to approve of the resolution and was prepared to give his reasons. In making that statement he was giving the views of the administration.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have covered all the points that were brought up in the course of the debate. There may be others that I have omitted, but if so I have not done so intentionally. May I repeat to my hon. friend from Labelle what I said at the outset? I hope this reply will be sufficient to cause him not to press his motion as one of want of confidence in the administration, but rather that having expressed his views, he will ask the house to permit him to withdraw the motion and that the house will give its consent.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Do I understand the Prime Minister to say definitely that on that occasion the Minister of Justice in giving his approval of the particular resolution was speaking for the government?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. He always does at any time that he speaks in this house, and I think we may all rely on getting very sound opinions from him.

May I say just this word in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, because it arises out of the amendment of my hon. friend? All the matters which we have been discussing this afternoon relate more particularly to the procedure laid down at the last Imperial conference arising out of relations between the government of this dominion and the other governments of the British Empire. We have had a little over a year under the new procedure, and, so far as it is new, I should like to say that the year's experience only serves, so far as we are concerned, to confirm the wisdom of the course which at that time was taken by the Imperial conference. Particularly with respect to communications between governments I think a real advance was made when it was decided not only that communications should be direct as between the governments, but also when it was agreed that communication might be more effectively carried on if on the part of the governments concerned the personal facter were introduced. I am sure we have all been delighted at the selection which has been made by His Majesty's government in Great Britain of a high commissioner to represent that government in Canada. Sir William Clark, who will be coming to Canada in the course of the next few weeks—possibly early in September—has, as the house knows, been appointed High Commissioner in Canada for His Majesty's government in Great Britain. I believe that the opportunity for personal conference with a representative of the British government, on many matters that arise between that government and our own, will prove an effective means of avoiding possibilities of misunderstanding that occur so frequently when communications are conducted in writing. That is true with respect to communications generally as between different countries. I believe that dispatches are often written with as much regard for what is being left unsaid as for what is being said, and attention is paid to clauses and pharses and words which sometimes serve to make the true meaning obscure indeed. Personal conference gives opportunity for all sides of a question being reviewed with care, and permits of the final drafting of a record of conversations which record is approved on both sides and admits of no misinterpretation or misunderstanding. I believe that the appointment of a high commissioner to Canada by the British government is going to be one more link which will help to ensure the continuance of the happy relations which we enjoy at the present time.

I am convinced that at no time in British history have the relations between this country and the government of Great Britain been happier or more secure than they are at this moment. And may I say further that, in my opinion, nothing in British history has done more to put the British Empire on a firm and enduring foundation than has the statement of relative position between the several governments of the empire as set forth at the Imperial conference of 1926 and as approved by all the governments there assembled.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I do not propose to trespass long upon the time of the house. I was rather amazed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) should have suggested that those who desired to participate in the debate should do so before he replied; for the right of reply rests with the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and not with the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before I spoke, I said.

Mr. BENNETT: The subject matter of the debate has been fully canvassed in this house on previous occasions.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think my hon. friend is wrong; I do not think the hon. member for Labelle has any right of reply on an amendment to go into supply.

Mr. BENNETT: Pardon me, that is quite right; I was under the impression that he had moved a substantive motion. My hon. friend is right; I was treating it as a substantive motion. At any rate, the right of reply did not rest with the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not say "reply". I said I wished to refer to the remarks of hon. members which included those of my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister's duty was to reply to the speech of the hon. member for Labelle, who moved the amendment. His primary duty would be to do that, because the amendment is a motion of want of confidence in the administration and it should be spoken to either by the Prime Minister or by some other member of the administration it matters not whom.

As I have said, this matter has been fully canvassed previously in this session; much of the discussion that has taken place has already been fully covered in previous debates. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) dealt at length with the difficulties that must be experienced in giving effect to the resolutions passed at the Imperial conference of 1926. May I merely observe this: "Equality of status" is a high-sounding term, but unfortunately it cannot be said to properly represent the present position between Great Britain and the overseas dominions comprising the British Empire. Not only does it not adequately or properly represent that position, but a very great deal of work must be done before that postion is attained. As I have said on previous occasions, I regard it as a somewhat serious matter that we should be thus falsely and improperly using words—words that can have no appropriate use when applied to the present relations between Great Britain on the one hand and Canada, Australia and New Zealand on the other. How long is it desirable to continue using the wrong nomenclature? How long is it desirable to use improper terms to describe a condition? The resolution introduced by the hon. member for Labelle as an amendment to the motion to go into supply contemplates that certain action should be taken speedily; that is that speedy action should be taken to give effect to those changes that are necessary before equality of status is achieved. The resolution means that or it means nothing. It is regretted that this government has not taken those very necessary steps that must be taken if this equality is to result. That is what the resolution in terms declares. Now, I cannot think that any member on this side of the house who listened to the statements made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George in a previous debate, referring to the various statutes that must be amended and the various changes that must take place, can fail to realize that this end cannot be attained in a single day, nor in a year nor in many years; because the consents that must be secured before there is equality of status are consents that touch not only the parliament of the motherland but the parliament of every overseas self-governing dominion within the empire. That is clear; it cannot admit of doubt. The best illustration that can be used is that in connection with Egypt. Egypt was asked to sign a treaty of peace with Great Britain. The treaty was drafted and Egypt declined to execute it. Whereupon, in view of the action taken by the Egyptian parliament, Great Britain made a demonstration in force for the purpose of protecting her constitutional rights there. Now, I put this question to every member in this house—it is a very simple question: Had war unfortunately resulted by reason of the differences of opinion between Great Britain and Egypt and a Canadian citizen—a resident normally of Canada—had been in Cairo on that day, what would have been his position? Would he have been an alien enemy or a neutral? That is the test. There is no hon. member in this house who for a moment will say that in the eyes of international law such a person would be other than an alien enemy to the Egyptians. And so long as this country is not a sovereign state, it follows that it will never have equality of status with Great Britain. Whether or not this country shall be a sovereign state—which means that it must become an independent state—is a matter that must be settled by the people of Canada and not by any government in Canada. That is clear. For my own part I will never lift my hand to bring about that condition. I go further: for my own part I shall to the utmost of my endeavour oppose any such action, in my lifetime, that affects this Dominion. For I cannot but think that we are better discharging the great responsibilities that rest upon a free people, as a member of the commonwealth of nations called the British Empire, than by living a life of independence, dependent for our very existence nationally, upon the high seas and elsewhere, upon the grace and favour of powerful neighbours. That is the position I take with respect to that.

But let us go a step further. Equality of status, as discussed this afternoon and this evening is, I say, a misnomer, and the case of Egypt best indicates exactly what is meant by it, but let us apply another test. There can be no equality of status as between Canada and Great Britain until both communities have the right to declare war and make peace. That is the test imposed by great writers on international law, and it does seem that without having reference to those authorities it is quite a simple one. Can Canada declare war to-day against any nation in the world? The answer must be in the negative, and so long as we may not declare war we have no equality of status with Great Britain. But if Great Britain declares war against Egypt it follows, of course, that war is thereby declared against Canada, although we may not have been a party to any treaty made between those two countries. Our commerce would be the prize of any opposing fleet by which it might be captured; our cities might be bombarded and we might be driven from the world so far as commerce and trade are concerned. That, I think, is so obvious as not to require any observations on my part other than merely to state the fact. Under these circumstances I leave it to the judgment of this house, and indeed I have stated this to others than members of this house, including imperial ministers, whether it is not very wrong and very improper to use this high sounding term with all the implications which are involved, because I know it cannot but do harm. I agree with the Prime Minister that it is always desirable to be frank and open in these matters and to use words which will express one's meaning without any desire to place limitations upon them, but the words "equality of status" connote and denote a condition in this country which has not yet been reached, and a condition which may not be reached until we take a solemn step which I hope and believe we never will take and which I know we will not take in my lifetime, a step which will give Canada that right of sovereignty which it does not possess, that right to amend, aye and to make its constitution, which right we do not possess at the moment. All these changes must first be brought about, as well as changes with respect to our merchant shipping acts, with respect to the Colonial Laws Validity Acts and with respect to those innumerable statutes which have force and vigour in this Dominion, although the casual observer has no reason for believing that to be the case. These are facts which we must face, whether we like it or not, and the use of words to express a position which is not true in law and which is false in its very inception cannot do any good to these self-governing dominions.

Mr. ADSHEAD: May I ask a question? At page 12 of the Imperial conference report there is a paragraph which covers the point to which my hon. friend is referring, as follows:

> Equality of status, so far as Britain and the dominions are concerned, is thus the root principle governing our inter-imperial relations. But the principles of equality and similarity, appropriate to status, do not universally extend to function.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for East Calgary has made an observation which has been made before in this house. There is a frank recognition by the Imperial conference that there is no equality of status. The amendment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is to the effect that steps should be taken to bring about that condition and that the necessary legislative enactments should be passed by the parliament at Westminster as well as by the parliaments of the overseas self-governing dominions. That is all that is involved in the matter at the moment, as I see it. If I may say so, the hon. member for Labelle was more moderate to-day in his expressions than is usually the case. I followed him with very great interest and I can only make the observation that he must not for a single moment forget that to give effect to his resolution to-day, to-morrow or next year, involves an amendment to the British North America Act so far-reaching in its consequences that I do not think many members of this house have really considered it in all its implications. If we are to obtain that equality of status which the hon. member apparently desires, this parliament, or shall I say the Canadian people, will have the right to create for themselves a new constitution; they will have the right to make such amendments to the present constitution as they think desirable and the struggle for confederation, which was a compromise brought about by the far-sighted statesmanship and vision of the great men of 1867, once more will have to be thrown into the melting pot for solution. These questions are not easy of solution, and this British North America Act, which is a compromise between the views of majorities and minorities, between different races and different religions, once more will have to be proceeded with, with everything involved thereby, before we can arrive at that happy stage to which he refers, equality of status. I cannot think that the Canadian people are disposed at this moment to forego what we have for the purpose of obtaining that of which we know not, for it involves a situation so serious, so fraught with possible disaster and so very far-reaching in its consequence and implications that I do not believe there is any body of public opinion in Canada which desires that that end should be brought about in the way I have indicated.

Therefore I venture to suggest to the hon. member in all sincerity that before he asks us to proceed immediately to bring about these constitutional changes which will give us that equality of status, he should seriously contemplate all that is involved in it and what the implications are; he should consider the far-reaching consequences which must follow from such action. For my own part I very much prefer this constitution in its present condition, weak though it is in many particulars, defective though it is in many instances; I prefer that rather than that we should have this struggle all over again, with its possibilities for animosities and prejudices to be aroused in this country. As I say, I prefer that constitution to this possible equality of status which would once more throw these matters into the melting pot for solution. I will not further dwell upon that matter, because it seems to me that it is abundantly clear to even the casual student of our constitution that the condition which we desire to bring about, some say immediately and others by slow growth and evolution, is one which has about it possibilities for evil as well as possibilities for good.

Let me go a step further. I am not seriously at variance with what has been said by the right hon. Prime Minister with respect to the severing of our relations with Russia. I heard my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) make his observations in that regard, and I cannot but think that after mature consideration and after listening to what has been said by the Prime Minister he will agree that the action taken by the head of the Canadian government was the proper action to be taken under the circumstances, and that the Prime Minister is entitled to congratulations from all right-thinking Canadians for having taken that action. After all, there can be no comity between nations when the representatives of one nation are concerned with the destruction of the government to which they are accredited. About that there can be no doubt; it is as old as the establishment of embassies; it is as old as the journeyings of ambassadors, and when the Prime Minister tells us that he was confronted by a condition such as he has alluded to to-night, I do not believe there is in any part of this country a citizen who will not be disposed to congratulate him upon the speedy action which he took and the result which was attained.

But there was one word used by my hon. friend from Labelle, or one expression, that I would wish he had not used; he spoke of our "imperial masters". I cannot but think that that was a rhetorical use of the words; I cannot think he seriously meant to imply that the people of this country were in any sense being mastered by, shall I say, our remote ancestors overseas. I am certain that is not so; I am certain there is no disposition on the part of British statesmen to indicate by thought, by word or by deed how this country should govern itself. The Prime ministers made that abundantly clear in the discussion which took place in connection with the Egyptian treaty. It will be recalled that one who was a great prime minister of Great Britain indicated publicly that if the time should ever come when Canada let it be known that it was her desire to sever those relations light as silk and strong as steel, England would be prepared to let us go our way. I think that my hon. friend upon reconsideration will agree that the words "his imperial masters" are not an apt designation of the relationship which now obtains between Great Britain and Canada.

Mr. BOURASSA: I made no reference like that in my speech this afternoon. The other day I asked in a jocose way whether the Prime Minister had received permission to deposit these documents.

Mr. BENNETT: One of the reasons why I alluded to this expression was to afford my hon. friend the opportunity he has availed himself of. While the public in reading the remarks might conclude that it was a serious statement by the hon. member for Labelle, I realized that in his own consciousness he meant it in the sense in which he has now used it. I am very glad that he has taken this opportunity to give that explanation, that he had no serious thought in his mind that the people or the government of Great Britain were our imperial masters. I am sure the country will read that statement with satisfaction, and will be glad to know that it was made in a jocose sense and not in any serious sense at all.

I trust my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre will understand me when I say that it is a very dangerous thing to read a magazine article referring to the oil barons of England, France or America, and conclude that there is official sanction or authority for the conclusions or inferences which he draws from such magazine articles. The official documents referred to this afternoon by the right hon. the Prime Minister in no sense warrant the conclusion that oil barons or any other kind of barons had to do with this particular difficulty. As we all know, British capital and the capital of other nations developed the oil fields in Russia. The production of these oil wells was taken over by the Soviet government and sold without regard to the costs of development. They were enabled to obtain money for this oil, regardless of prior ownership. If you have a property to sell that cost you nothing, that you have taken from somebody else who owned it and paid for it, it is a very simple thing to compete in the markets of the world and destroy legitimate trade connections. That is the reason difficulties were experienced in Russia with respect to not only Great Britain and America, but other countries as well. To say that that had anything to do with the raid that was made upon Arcos, in London; that the literature that was found there, or the literature that was brought into this country, as mentioned by the right hon. the Prime Minister; that the negotiations that transpired with respect to propaganda, not only in China but in other parts of the world, had anything to do with it, is to leave a wrong impression upon the minds of those who look to members of parliament for information with respect to matters of this kind. I am satisfied that my hon. friend, steeped as his mind sometimes is in what I conceive to be unfair prejudices against capital and against those who engage in the use of money for development, has concluded that what he has read in this magazine article was the motive behind the action of the Imperial government. Having done this, I believe it is possible, but I hope not, that he has thought fit to make that the basis of the excuse for the raid that was made upon the Russian ministry in London, and for the discontinuance of official relations between Soviet Russia and this country.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the hon. member not admit that the Labour party in Great Britain definitely charged that that action was taken because of matters of this character, and publicly asked for an investigation which was denied them by the Baldwin government?

Mr. BENNETT: It is quite correct that there are irresponsible men in England as there are even in this country, who make charges which are not warranted by facts. It is true there is a tendency to make charges against governments as the Prime Minister would say, to make a charge of lack of attention to administration, and to find excuses, if possible, which would vindicate the friendship of the Labour government with the Russian Soviet government.

The Labour government as such did not make the charges; a Labour member made the charges.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said the Labour party, not the Labour government.

Mr. BENNETT: A member of the Labour party made the charges.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The leader of the Labour party.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Ramsay MacDonald is a very careful Scotchman, and while he left the impression to be drawn inferentially from his observations that the real reason for the raids upon the Russian Soviet headquarters was not the reason given by Mr. Baldwin's government, but some other reason, he was very careful not to make such a charge as would force him to stake his seat upon the authenticity or correctness of the charge. I am sure my hon. friend will not attach too much importance to that. He is one who has sometimes said that in moments of hysteria wrong charges have been made in connection with what took place in Winnipeg some years ago, and that false inferences have been drawn and wrong conclusions have been arrived at. I am sure he did not mean to leave the impression upon this house this afternoon that it was his honest belief that anyone who had access to official sources of information would come to the conclusion that the raid made upon the Soviet headquarters by the British government was made at the behest of the oil interests of America, Great Britain and other countries. I am sure he had no such idea in his mind.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quoted from what I regarded as a well informed article by an authority in Great Britain who definitely made those charges. I have no independent knowledge with regard to these things, and I would not expect to find them—I think the leader of the opposition will agree with me—in official documents.

Mr. BENNETT: Once more I am in accord with the Prime Minister. I have no reason to believe that official documents are falsified, but I have reason to believe that the British statesmen are men of as high honour, integrity and patriotism as the man who wrote the article for the purpose of obtaining a fee from the magazine. I cannot but think that the hon. member for Labelle, who is at times rather unfortunate in attributing motives to British statesmen which I am sure were never in their minds, will agree that we must get back to the old thought that after all language is not used to disguise the thought, but rather to express the meaning which the statesmen had in their minds. As the Prime Minister has said, the ordinary amenities should be observed in these matters. I am sure that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre believes that I have sufficient confidence in his integrity and righteousness to think that he uses language to express his meaning and not to disguise it. I have every confidence that the great statesmen of Great Britain, the men who have built up this vast empire for centuries, are not men who use language to disguise their thoughts. If there were oil interests or other interests which brought about the breaking off of relations with Russia, I am sure there would be some record of it somewhere. If the British statesmen desired to say that they wanted to protect property interests of Great Britain, they would say so. They have never been reluctant to protect property interests of Great Britain, and they have never been reluctant to express their views in that respect. They have never been slow to protect the lives of British citizens, or the property of British citizens. I accept official documents and official dispatches just as I find them, as indicating what the action was taken for and the causes given; and there is not in this house an hon. gentleman who does not believe that the causes were adequate that induced my right hon. friend's government to act in this country and that the same causes operated in Great Britain with the same result. Although we were first in point of time to complete the action that we took by dismissing the Soviet ministry from this country, although we did not raid their premises, though, as the Prime Minister said, he had that in contemplation, yet in Great Britain, acting with foresight, with knowledge, with wisdom, with a sincere and patriotic desire to serve best the interests of their country, these statesmen in their official despatches and statements represented, I believe, only the true condition of affairs and they acted in accordance with the conditions they found as indicated by those despatches and not because any oil barons or anybody else suggested that such action should be taken.

Further, the hon. member for Labelle referred to the fact that the Secretary of State for the Dominions was of foreign birth and that he had not a drop of British blood in him. He referred to him as a Hungarian Jew. I greatly deprecate that observation in this house and I am sure on mature deliberation the hon. member for Labelle will admit that it slipped from his tongue without his intending to give offence. One of the greatest of British Prime Ministers was a Jew and proud of the fact; but he was a British citizen and the Right Hon. Leopold Amery was born in India, the son of a father of Devonshire, and Devonshire is a county in England. It may be that in his veins there runs some blood that may not be Anglo-Saxon; but my hon. friend should be the last to refer to that, because it is the proud boast of our country that a man is a British citizen and a British subject although, indeed, his blood may not be Anglo-Saxon, and there is no better illustration in the world of that fact than in the Dominion of Canada. That is the position with regard to that.

May I make one further observation with respect to the Egyptian treaty and I shall have concluded? I think it was very unfortunate that the Prime Minister used the words he did in the debate of the 26th March. I think those words were construed just as I would construe them had I not heard an explanation. At page 1716 of Hansard the Prime Minister is reported as having used these words:

> I may say to my hon. friend that within the last few months the government was asked, with respect to a treaty that was being negotiated between Great Britain and Egypt, whether we would become a party to that treaty. The terms of that treaty are known, they have been published. They involved military sanctions, and they contemplated military alliances. What was the reply of the government to that question? It was that we did not believe that so far as Canada was concerned the parliament of Canada would approve such a course; that if Britain and Egypt could work out a treaty as between themselves along the lines proposed, well and good; but that so far as Canada was concerned, we did not feel that it was in the interests of the British Empire itself or in the interests of the larger peace which it was hoped the treaty would serve, that this country should be asked to become a party to it; and the British government immediately accepted our view in reference thereto.

I direct the attention of the right hon. gentleman and the house to the language that is used:

> The government was asked . . . . whether we would become a party to that treaty.

Later he said:

> We were asked to become a party.

There is a vast difference between asking any person whether he will become a party to anything and asking him to become a party. In the one instance you have the right of election and you have to say whether you will become a party or not and you consider the matter. In the other case you are asked to become a party.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The greater implies the less, and it was the greater that we assumed, namely, that we were being asked to become a party.

Mr. BENNETT: For the moment I am referring to the language used by the Prime Minister. If you read that language just as it is, I am sure that the inference that was drawn from it would not be wholly unwarranted. I do not know to what journal the right hon. gentleman referred, but the Ottawa correspondent of the Times, published on Wednesday, March 28, 1928, reported the matter in this way:

> Mr. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister, in his reply, while declaring his sympathy with the idea—

That is the motion of the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail).

> —deprecated the creation of a new department which would overlap the work of the Department of External Affairs. His government, he contended, was wholeheartedly committed to a pacific policy, and he cited, in proof of this, its efforts in different directions for the promotion of world peace. He claimed the credit for averting a serious European war by his stand over the Chanak affair in 1922.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Which by the way is completely untrue. He made no such claim.

Mr. STEVENS: The Prime Minister is forgetting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not at all.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of the certainty with which the Prime Minister speaks, he will pardon me if I take a moment to look up the debate and see what he did say on that occasion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall be obliged if the hon. member will do so.

Mr. BENNETT: Commencing at page 1715 of Hansard the Prime Minister refers to the Chanak affair, quoting from Mr. Bonar Law and from the words of the late Lord Oxford and Asquith. Then he goes on at the top of the page to read the report of the latter's speech. Then the Prime Minister says:

May I remind the house that at the time that statement was made, Australia and New Zealand had each signified their intention of sending forces to join with the British forces in the event of war, and that Canada stood out alone in seeking information and asking that her parliament be advised before the people of this country were committed to participation in another war. I quote further from the report as follows:

Then follows the quotation from the report. He continues:

Then may I give to my hon. friends opposite the opinion of one who I think was well informed at the time, but who no one for a moment will say is an advocate of the present administration, much less of myself. I refer to Lieut-Colonel John Bayne Maclean, of MacLean's Magazine.

After this follows the extract from that magazine.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my hon. friend read it?

Mr. BENNETT: The extract?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not intend to read the extract because I do not think it is necessary to do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the precise point; it was the extract I was referring to.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: Then I will read it, but I cannot see where the relevancy with respect to the question actually comes in. The Prime Minister continues:

What did that paper have to say with reference to this matter? Colonel Maclean, the editor, under his own name, in the issue of MacLean's Magazine of November 15, 1922, published an article headed:

"Did Canada Stop Near East War? Refusal to Take Precipitous Action Saving Factor Sane Thinking Essential to Peace".

The second paragraph of this article reads:

We were recently asked by cable to answer at once by cable that we were ready to embark on another and greater war.

Some men, not Canadians, who have unusually good sources of world-wide information, whose judgment is generally sound and whose views are held in high esteem, are positive that had our Premier succumbed to the Lloyd George-Churchill demands, preceded as they were by propaganda and scheming for Canadian participation, the British Empire would undoubtedly have been at war now with Turkey, Russia and perhaps India, Afghanistan, Persia, and God knows who else or what the end would have been.

That was the opinion at that time of Colonel MacLean, and he had sources of information which I do not hestitate to say from what I have since learned were pretty reliable. The view which he there expressed I have been told in Great Britain on very high authority was not very far from the mark as to what might have followed had Canada not taken the position which she then did.

I wish to say to my hon. friend that if this incident proved anything, it proves above all else that the spirit and the purpose and the attitude of an administration on this great question of peace and international understanding is more important than any of the lesser matters of departmental administration or departmental propaganda. The Chanak incident is only one of a number of incidents which have come up in the course of recent years, and all of which have served to disclose the essential importance of the attitude of an administration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Now my hon. friend has read through the quotation and he has been unable to put his hand on any word of mine which makes the claim to which he refers, that is, what the London Times said was a claim on my part to have averted a war involving Great Britain, which statement was the occasion of the debate in the House of Lords.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the Times Despatch reads:

He claimed the credit for averting a serious European war by his stand over the Chanak affair in 1922.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Which I say is untrue.

Mr. BENNETT: No one who reads that observation will say that when my right hon.

friend used the word "administration" rather than his own name, he did not desire that credit should be taken to the head of the government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It does not even refer to the administration.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a statement of Colonel Maclean, a friend of my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely my hon. friend has overlooked this point: I am not quoting from Colonel Maclean. I am quoting the words my right hon. friend used himself in this house, as reported at page 1716 of Hansard, as follows:

I wish to say to my hon. friend that if this incident proved anything, it proves above all else that the spirit and the purpose and the attitude of an administration on this great question of peace and international understanding—

International, mark you:

—is more important than any of the lesser matters of departmental administration or departmental propaganda. The Chanak incident is only one of a number of incidents which have come up in the course of recent years, and all of which have served to disclose the essential importance of the attitude of an administration.

Modesty forbade my right hon. friend from saying, "to disclose the essential importance of the attitude of the right hon. the Prime Minister." He contents himself with saying, "the administration," but that in this case means himself, for he is the Minister of External Affairs, and certainly no one would contend, after reading that observation, that there was any over-statement of the case in the report of the London Times.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I say that the observation of the Times was completely untrue, and is responsible for all the misunderstanding that has arisen between the British government and ourselves in respect to this matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us see what the Times does say:

Within the last few months, Mr. King continued, his government had been asked whether it would be a party to the treaty which was being negotiated between Great Britain and Egypt. Having examined the terms, and discovered that the treaty involved both military sanctions and a military alliance, the ministry felt that Canada's adhesion would not promote either the interests of the British Empire or larger world peace, and when it expressed the opinion that the Canadian parliament would not endorse the treaty, the British government accepted the decision without cavil.

I have just read from the speech which the Prime Minister made in this house, and what the London Times says is almost word for word what he said. Will he here and now point out anything said in the House of Lords by Lord Parmoor or anybody else about the Chanak affair? Was not Lord Parmoor dealing with the Egyptian crisis exclusively, and with the attitude of the British government upon it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He was not.

Mr. BENNETT: He was so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have in my hand Lord Parmoor's speech.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, read it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend wishes, I will give it to him. The matter was brought up in the House of Lords on the 29th of March and Lord Parmoor spoke as follows—it is headed "Canada and the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations." I am quoting from the House of Lords reports, March 29, page 733:

Lord Parmoor had given notice to ask His Majesty's government whether their attention has been called to the statements recently made by the Prime Minister of Canada on the subject of Chanak and the proposed treaty with Egypt; and to move for papers. The noble lord said: My Lords, on more than one occasion I have attempted to draw your Lordships' attention to opinion in our dominions, and particularly in our great Dominion of Canada, on general questions of foreign or peace policy. More than once I have asked that documents might be produced, and particularly on one occasion when, in the Canadian parliament, the same request was made, and the answer was given that the Canadian government would have been perfectly ready to produce the documents, but that the Home government had raised an objection. Now, only such a short time ago as March 26 a very remarkable speech was made in the Dominion House of Commons in Canada on questions such as we have been already dealing with to a certain extent to-night—namely, on questions of world policy in connection with peace. I am one of those who think that what has been called the spirit of a peace policy is essential if you are to meet with success in the promotion of a real world settlement in the future, and it is upon that particular point that I want to call the attention of the noble Marquess.

On March 26 Miss Macphail, who is a member of the Dominion House of Commons, brought in what one would call in this country a pacifist resolution. That pacifist resolution was talked out, and therefore I do not put any particular weight upon what she said, because I want to point out what was said on this occasion by Mr. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister. I have a resume of what he said here:

"His government", he continued "was wholeheartedly committed to a pacific policy."

It may be said that many governments have said that. But Mr. Mackenzie King went beyond that point, and said that he would give two illustrations which would show the reality of the facts on which he made the statement. The Prime Minister of Canada said this first of all in regard to the Chanak affair, which of course was in 1922, though I had no idea that his statement would go so far. It is stated that —"he claimed"—

Just the words of the Times correspondent which my hon. friend has read. The report goes on:

It is stated that—"he claimed"—this is one of the reasons he gave for the reality of his pacific policy—"credit for averting a serious European war by the stand over the Chanak affair in 1922."

The very words which my hon. friend has read from the Times correspondent, and which was the cause of the debate in the House of Lords.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the debate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh yes, the debate. The report goes on:

In other words, what he says is that had the Canadians been prepared at that time to send their forces in connection with the Chanak affair, in his view there would have been another European war. We know, of course, that they would not do that, and that they stood out against it. But the claim he makes requires very deep consideraton—that because they stood out, and in consequence of the attitude of Canada, the danger of what he calls a European war was prevented.

Then he goes on to say—and this seems to me to be extremely important, and I ask the noble Marquess whether he can lay papers —that "within the last few months his government had been asked whether it would be a party to the treaty which was being negotiated between Great Britain and Egypt. Having examined the terms and discovered that the treaty involved both military sanctions and a military alliance, the ministry felt that Canada's adhesion would not promote either the interests of the British Empire or large world peace."

And Lord Parmoor goes on to say, in expressing this opinion, that the Canadian parliament would not endorse the treaty.

So I say the whole occasion of the debate in the House of Lords was the reference of the Times correspondent to what he said was my claim that I had averted a war—I think that was the way he put it—which, as my hon. friend well knows, was completely untrue.

Mr. BENNETT: The debate in the House of Lords in which Lord Salisbury was speaking for the government was concerned with the Egyption treaty and none other. Read Lord Salisbury's speech and you will find no reference to Chanak; he dealt with the Egyptian treaty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I must correct my hon. friend again. I have the speech here in which he made the reference.

Mr. BENNETT: Just a passing reference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No passing reference; it is a long reference. Does the hon. gentleman wish me to read it?

Mr. BENNETT: I am going to let the right hon. gentleman do it if he so desires, because the debate took place on the Egyptian treaty. The 29th of March was the date.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Marquess of Salisbury says:

My Lords, with regard to the closing words of the noble and learned Lord's speech, he will recognize, or I hope he recognizes, that the object of the policy of His Majesty's government in Great Britain is precisely the same as the policy which he has ascribed to His Majesty's government in Canada—namely, to preserve peace. There is no difference between us on that great issue. Of course, we are intent upon preserving peace. But, undoubtedly, the relations between the various component parts of the empire in respect of these high matters are of some difficulty. The noble and learned Lord went back a great many years—right back to the incidents of 1922. He quoted an observation by Mr. Mackenzie King on the subject of what is known as the Chanak incident. The facts are agreed, up to a certain point at any rate. Undoubtedly the Canadian government were asked to associate themselves with the British government at that time, and were asked whether they would be represented by a military contingent in case military action was required in those regions. I have personally no responsibility at all for the action of the then government. It is true that subsequently to that question and that answer there were no military operations, but I would not like to lay it down that the result was entirely due to the action of the Candian government. My recollection, for what it is worth, is that there was a very strong feeling in this country against military operations on that occasion, and I think it would not be rash to say that the strong opinion expressed in this country had at any rate a partial effect, just as much as the opinion in Canada had, in bringing that question to the end which it reached.

I turn to the more recent case of Egypt.

So, as I have said, it was the Chanak incident that directed attention to the whole discussion, and was dealt with by both hon. gentlemen in the House of Lords.

Mr. BENNETT: I again repeat that the subject matter of the debate was the Egyptian treaty, as the right hon. the Prime Minister in the first instance mentioned. I just put this question to the right hon. gentleman and to the members of this house: If he did not desire to obtain credit for himself with respect to the matter, why did he quote with approval Colonel Maclean? Let us face the thing frankly. The right hon. gentleman quoted Colonel Maclean with approval and said:

> Then may I give to my hon. friends opposite the opinion of one who I think was well informed at the time but who no one for a moment will say is an advocate of the present administration, much less of myself, I refer to Lieut.-Colonel John Bayne Maclean of MacLean's Magazine. What did that paper have to say with reference to this matter?

And he quotes an article published in that magazine headed:

> Did Canada Stop Near East War? Refusal to Take Precipitous Action Saving Factor Sane Thinking Essential to Peace.

Then Colonel Maclean approves of the stand taken by the government of this country led by the right hon. Prime Minister. And again I put this question to him: Why did he quote John Bayne Maclean if he did not want his certificate of approval as the man who had saved this country from war? If a man reads a certificate of approval of himself from a magazine, obviously he does not do it to throw discredit on himself. When he said that this gentleman was not an advocate of the present administration, and no friend of his, he did so to strengthen the certificate of approval.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): May I ask the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. BENNETT: The paragraph that I quoted dealing with the Egyptian affair is almost word for word from Hansard. I do not think it is quite in keeping with the traditions of the great office which he now occupies that the right hon. gentleman should vent his personal spleen against the Times correspondent by making the observations he made this evening. I do not think it adds either to the dignity of the office or the greatness of the right hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am venting no personal spleen. I never had any.

Mr. BENNETT: Those of us who know have a clear understanding of that. So far as the right hon. the Prime Minister is concerned, that gentleman would not be the correspondent of the London Times if he could help it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suppose he was appointed at the instance of my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: He was not. I am happy to say that I knew nothing of the appointment until it was made. The right hon. gentleman must not conclude because he does not always have his way that necessarily I have my way in a matter of this kind. I am rather surprised he should pay me the compliment. I have great responsibilities without power.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, the hon. gentlemen who so receive that statement may some day realize what it means to occupy the same position.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have nearly concluded all that I desire to say. The motion of the hon. member for Labelle at least clarified the situation by enabling this house once more to consider—and, I trust, to consider with some degree of care—the enormous responsibilities involved in the use of the words, "equality of status," because by implication they involve powers far-reaching and consequences that we cannot foresee. For my part I congratulate British statesmen in that they have been able during this long term of years to develop a system of communication between the various outlying sections of the empire—between the governments of the self-governing dominions and the motherland that have made for ease, certainty and facility in the transaction of business. But one observation was made by the Prime Minister to-night in that regard that we cannot allow to go unchallenged. He spoke of Sir William Clark as the British High Commissioner in this country, and said that his appointment might facilitate the transaction of business between this country and Great Britain. It must not be forgotten that whatever difficulties there may be with regard to notes and despatches passing between the government of the motherland and the government of Canada, in the ultimate analysis, either by cable or by written communication, the High Commissioner of Great Britain must send his messages to the government that accredits him. And so it always has been. The written word sometimes is much more reliable and avoids misunderstandings to which conversations sometimes give rise. I recall reading not long since an account of what took place in 1891 at Washington, when a misunderstanding arose between Mr. Blaine and two of His Majesty's commissioners from Canada as to what had been said, and it brought about considerable difficulty. Conversations in diplomacy have caused difficulties, and any member of this house who has read what transpired in connection with the great war will realize the different views given by German statesmen and British statesmen as to certain conversations that had taken place, and volumes have been written about such misunderstandings. So recourse is had to despatches, to written communications, as the ultimate authority upon which nations rely to govern and guide their policies. While the introduction to Canada of a British High Commissioner may serve a useful purpose for parole communications, yet in the end written communications must govern.

We on this side of the house have already indicated that the very appointment of a Canadian minister at Tokyo will be wholly misunderstood by the oriental mind, for it predicates to the world that we are a sovereign state. As I read in the previous debate from great authorities on international law, that means, if it means anything, that we are a sovereign state; which we are not. The very appointment of such a minister, with the possibility of difficulties and differences in respect to foreign policy, involves implications, as I said before, most serious in their consequences. I do not think the people of this country are desirous of having ministers in foreign countries unless they are certain that those ministers on grave matters of foreign policy, which may mean life or death to the great empire of which we are proud to be a member, will co-ordinate their views with the views of the British ambassador. To have a representative working with the ambassador of Great Britain is one thing; but to have a minister who at any time may differ with the views expressed by the British ambassador may bring about an impossible situation in the life of the empire. If hon. gentlemen have in mind the ultimate thing which is involved by implication in what is being put forward, that is, that we shall assert our mind and carry it to its ultimate conclusion, regardless of the expressions of opinion by His Majesty's ambassador who may be present in the very same capital, well and good; but let us face it frankly and not use words to disguise our thoughts and endeavour to skate around the position which we are to take. That is the stand which we on this side of the house take in this matter.

I shall not discuss the proposed Tokyo embassy because an opportunity will be presented during the presentation of the estimates for the Department of External Affairs to deal with it fully, except in a few words to express our attitude with respect to it. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that while it well may be that some useful purpose has been served by the hon. member for Labelle bringing this matter once more to the attention of the house, its greatest purpose will be served if it causes hon. members to think carefully of what is involved in the words, "equality of status", and to see to it that those words have attributed to them the meaning which they are entitled to receive from every man, however limited may be his knowledge of constitutional law, who knows the true significance which attaches to the English language. Beyond that I have nothing further to observe.

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the speeches which have been delivered on this very interesting question. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has moved an amendment to the motion to go into supply and has expressed regret that the Canadian government has not taken adequate steps to implement the declaration of equality of status pronounced at the Imperial conference of 1926.

Last session I spoke at some length on the status of Canada, confining myself to a discussion of the autonomy of Canada in her domestic affairs. To-night I welcome the opportunity of discussing her status in so far as external affairs and international relations are concerned. I am of the opinion that whatever may be the status of Canada in so far as her domestic affairs are concerned, there has been a fundamental change in her international status. Her separate status in that sphere has been recognized not only by Great Britain but by other great world powers. This international recognition of our separate status is the strongest possible evidence of its existence. I think it would be wise to review the constitutional developments that have taken place in recent years, particularly during the last decade. It might well be called a decade of constitutional development; indeed, it might well be described as one of the most important decades in the history of Canada. Each year has its events of outstanding importance. I propose therefore to review these events very briefly so that we may have before us a panorama of the progress that has taken place. This will enable us to see clearly what has happened and to appreciate fully what the present situation really is.

In 1919 the peace treaty of Versailles was signed. Sir Robert Borden, then Prime Minister of Canada, insisted that Canada should sign that treaty, and he finally prevailed upon Great Britain to endorse the propriety of that step. There was great opposition from the American delegation led by President Wilson and Mr. Lansing. To them this suggestion was an unheard of departure from international usage and practice. But Clemenceau, in his blunt way, pointed out that there were as many Canadian soldiers lying in the fields of France as there were Americans; that Canada had taken her part in the war and should have the right to take part in the negotiations leading to peace. This view eventually prevailed. This was Canada's first international recognition. It is true that this international recognition of Canada was a mark of courtesy rather than a fact of any juridical importance; for the British Empire signed that treaty and, in so signing it, bound all of the self-governing dominions. Sir Robert Borden also in that year obtained for Canada separate representation in the assembly of the League of Nations, and the right to have the Canadian representative eventually elected to the council of the league. This was Canada's first adventure in the arena of international politics, and it had for its primary object the promotion of world peace. The senate of the United States objected very strongly to the separate voting power of the dominions in the assembly of the league.

Then in 1920 the proposal that Canada should have a minister plenipotentiary at Washington was announced. On May 10, 1920, Sir George Foster, who was Acting Prime Minister, made the following announcement to the House of Commons:

> It has been agreed that His Majesty, on advice of his Canadian ministers, shall appoint a minister plenipotentiary who will have charge of Canadian affairs and will at all times be the ordinary channel of communication with the United States government in all matters of purely Canadian concern, acting upon instructions from and reporting direct to the Canadian government. In the absence of the ambassador the Canadian minister will take charge of the whole embassy and of the representation of imperial as well as Canadian interests. He will be accredited by His Majesty to the president with the necessary powers for the purpose.

Sir George Foster added the following to this announcement:

> This new arrangement will not denote any departure either on the part of the British government or of the Canadian government from the principle of the diplomatic unity of the British Empire.

There may be a very great difference of opinion as to the correctness of this conclusion. It has been suggested by many students of constitutional law that this proposal, together with the signature of Canada to the peace treaty, and Canada's separate representation in the assembly of the League of Nations, marked the beginning of the disintegration of the diplomatic unity of the empire. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), who were then members of the opposition, objected to the proposal that the Canadian minister should take charge of imperial affairs, and suggested that he should be independent of the British embassy and concern himself solely with Canadian affairs. For over six years no action was taken to implement the arrangement that was proposed to this parliament in 1920.

In 1921 the question of Canadian representation at the Washington disarmament conference came up. President Harding had summoned a conference between the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan to discuss disarmament. General Smuts of South Africa had objected to the action of the American government in addressing its invitation to the British government alone, ignoring the dominions, and had cabled to the Canadian Prime Minister protesting that, in view of the agitation in the American senate against the independent voting power of the dominions in the League of Nations, it was a direct challenge to the new dominion status and it would be a bad precedent for the dominions to attend without having been properly invited, but if a stand were made the battle for their international recognition and international status would be finally won. Mr. Meighen, who was then Prime Minister of Canada, thereupon communicated with the British Prime Minister, and it was finally agreed that the status of the Dominion representatives at the Washington conference should be exactly the same as it had been at the peace conference at Versailles. Canada was represented at the Washington peace conference by Sir Robert Borden. His powers to represent the Dominion were issued by the crown on an order in council of the Canadian cabinet.

In 1922 the Washington conference was held, in the month of January. At that conference the British delegation spoke with one voice, as it had done at Versailles, after consultation amongst its own members. Subsequently the Italian government extended an invitation to an international conference at Genoa, this invitation being addressed by the Italian ambassador direct to the Dominion Prime Minister. In September of that year there occurred the famous Chanak incident, of which we have heard so much this evening. The Turks had driven the Greeks out of Asia Minor and a crisis appeared imminent. The British government sent a communication to the dominions stating that a situation of the utmost gravity had arisen in Turkey, requiring prompt action, and asking the government of each dominion whether it desired to associate itself with the measures that Great Britain would take and to be represented by a contingent of troops, whose presence would have an excellent moral effect, possibly even preventing actual hostilities. To this communication Australia and New Zealand answered in the affirmative. The present Prime Minister took the view—and I suggest that it was a very sound view to take—that the question of sending a Canadian contingent was for the Canadian parliament alone to decide. He intimated that he would be very glad to receive the fullest information in order to decide upon the advisability of summoning parliament. If the Prime Minister was too modest to claim that his action had a great deal to do with averting war, I have no hesitation in expressing my personal opinion that it had that effect. On February 2, 1923, the Prime Minister made a statement in the House of Commons, and I challenge any hon. member of this house to deny the propriety of the sentiments he then expressed. He said:

> —if the relations between the different parts of the British empire are to be made of an enduring character, this will only be through a full recognition of the supremacy of parliament, and this particularly with regard to matters which may involve participation in war.

This was an assertion in forcible language of Canadian autonomy in so far as active participation in war is concerned. In my opinion it was also, in a sense, a repudiation of a central foreign policy, in which Canada did not concur.

The year 1923 was one of great importance so far as our constitutional development was concerned. I shall deal very briefly with three events which took place in that year, the Lausanne conference, the Halibut treaty and the Imperial conference. Canada refused to accept the special responsibilities of the Lausanne treaty because Canada was not a party to the negotiations. In the course of a statement made to the House of Commons on April 2, 1924, the Prime Minister explained the attitude of Canada in these words:

> We take the position that, not having been invited to the Lausanne conference, not having been represented there, not having for the reasons that I have mentioned, signed the treaty, the treaty does not impose obligations on Canada, and that the parts of the empire on which it does impose obligations are the only parts that should be expected to sign and ratify it. As we did not regard the treaty as imposing obligations on Canada, we did not feel that it was necessary to submit the treaty to parliament for its approval, or in its name to signify concurrence in its ratification.

This was a fresh declaration of autonomy in external affairs, and a restatement of the right of parliament to determine Canada's policy, going even a step further than was taken in the previous year. If I were to interject a personal note, I think I might accurately say that the sentiments expressed with regard to the Chanak incident and the Lausanne conference found some echo in the famous speech delivered by Mr. Meighen at Hamilton prior to the Bagot by-election.

The Halibut treaty was signed at Washington on March 2, 1923, by Mr. Lapointe, then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on behalf of Canada. That was the first time a treaty had been made with a foreign country, having to do with Canadian affairs, which was signed by a Canadian minister without the intervention of the British ambassador. In my opinion it marked a great advance in Canadian treaty making powers. Later on I shall refer again to this treaty. The United States senate took exception to some of the terms of that treaty, suggesting that they should be made applicable to all British subjects rather than confined to Canadian nationals, but eventually these objections were withdrawn and the treaty was ratified by the senate of the United States early in 1924.

The Imperial conference of 1923 was another event of outstanding importance, particularly with regard to the resolutions passed by it relating to the negotiation, signature and ratification of treaties. The conference of that year ratified and approved the precedent established by Canada in connection with the halibut treaty and asserted the right of the dominions to negotiate and sign treaties involving themselves only without the intervention of the British ambassador. This marked a further breach in the doctrine of diplomatic unity, and a great advance was made in the direction of complete autonomy over external affairs and in international relations. A greater advance was to take place in 1926. After the Imperial conference of 1923 I think I am safe in saying that the theory of a joint foreign policy for all the constituent parts of the British empire suffered a very marked modification.

In 1924 the Canadian government objected to the manner of representation at the international conference called to devise means of carrying out the Dawes plan of reparations, and suggested that the representation at that conference should follow the precedent set at Versailles and Washington, under which our Dominion would be separately represented by its delegate bearing full powers from His Majesty the King to act in the name of His Majesty in respect of the Dominion. Senator Belcourt was sent to that conference as the Canadian representative.

In 1925 there were two events of considerable importance. The International Boundary Treaty was made in that year with the United States in the name of His Majesty the King in respect of the Dominion of Canada. It was negotiated and signed by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) without the intervention of the British ambassador and without any objection being made by the United States. Then came the famous Locarno treaty of that year, which contained an important clause which had not been included in all previous treaties. That clause was to the effect that the treaty should impose no obligation upon any of the British dominions or upon India unless the government of such dominion or of India should signify its acceptance. Great Britain refused to sign that treaty, as did Canada, but our refusal to sign was based upon very different grounds from those taken by Great Britain. Once again Canada refused to accept any commitments resulting from a treaty which had been made without any co-operation on her part. There was this difference between the Locarno treaty and the Lausanne treaty: the latter, having been made in the name of the British empire, notwithstanding the protests raised by the present Prime Minister bound all the dominions, while the Locarno treaty specifically exempted those portions of the empire which did not accept the treaty.

The year 1926 was perhaps the most important year since confederation in respect to the constitutional development of Canada. It saw a new status conferred upon Canada in so far as external affairs are concerned, and complete international recognition of that new status. In that year the Canadian minister to Washington was appointed. The proposal of 1920 was ultimately carried into effect, with this very important difference, that the Canadian minister to Washington is not a member of the British embassy but is there as the representative of Canada concerned only with Canadian affairs. All negotiations between the United States government and the Canadian government pass through him as our Canadian representative there.

I propose to discuss only one feature of the report brought down by the Imperial conference, that portion of the report which deals with the making of treaties. Prior to 1926 treaties were made between His Majesty and foreign powers in the name of the British Empire, or by His Majesty the King without stating for whom the treaty was made. Therefore, such treaties bound the whole empire including all of the dominions, unless the dominions were expressly excepted from their terms, as would have been the case had the Locarno treaty been adopted. In that sense, of course, the Lausanne treaty was binding upon Canada, notwithstanding the refusal of the Canadian parliament to accept its responsbilities or to admit its active obligations. In the same way, the Halibut treaty was binding upon Great Britain and the other dominions, in the sense that it was a treaty between His Majesty, to whom all the dominions owe allegiance, and the United States, and was not made in respect of any particular dominion.

The old practice of making treaties underwent a very important change. Treaties to which His Majesty the King is a party are all made by His Majesty the King, but they are now made only in respect of those portions of the British Empire that are to be bound by them. The Imperial conference recognized the right of each dominion to make separate independent treaties which would not be binding upon any other member of the British family of nations. Treaties will now be made by His Majesty the King only in respect of those portions of the empire which wish to be parties to them. In each case the king will issue full powers to his plenipotentiaries to negotiate and sign treaties, and these full powers will be issued upon the advice of the government concerned, indicating the part of the empire for which they are to sign.

For example, if a treaty is not to be binding upon any of the dominions, it will be made by His Majesty the King and it will state on the face of it that it is made "for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and all parts of the empire which are not separate members of the League of Nations." Such a treaty will, on the face of it, be a very different treaty from the Lausanne treaty and other treaties that have been made, for not even in international law will such a treaty bind the dominions.

Similarly, a treaty binding only upon Canada will be made by His Majesty the King "for the Dominion of Canada."

The Imperial conference defined the true position of the Governor General. He is not in any sense an agent or representative of the British government, but is a representative of His Majesty the King. He is in reality a viceroy and not a governor general, and occupies in Canada exactly the same position that the king occupies in Great Britain.

In 1927 we saw the appointment of a United States minister to Canada, and also the election of Canada's representative to the council of the League of Nations. I should like to deal with the implications involved in Canada's representation on that council, but the time at my disposal does not permit me to deal with that very important question.

This year we have had expressed to us the willingness of France and Japan to send ministers to Canada, and to accept ministers from us should we desire to send them. We have also had the very interesting controversy that has taken place with regard to the Anglo-Egyptian treaty. I will not go into that controversy, but we have had an illustration of the great importance of the change that has taken place in the making of treaties as a result of the conference of 1926. We are now in a position to say that we are not parties to a treaty that Great Britain proposes to make with another country, and we are therefore in the position, internationally speaking, where we would not be bound by such a treaty. We have also had expressed to us, although the facts are not as yet very clear, the willingness of the United States to sign separate treaties with the governments of the dominions with a view to the preservation of peace and the outlawry of war.

These are the outstanding constitutional events that have taken place in this last decade. I have tried to state the facts accurately and briefly. What conclusions are we to draw from these important events as to the status of Canada? Frankly, I confess that I am unable to describe the new status of Canada. Certainly it is no longer a dependency in the old sense of the word, and equally it is not a sovereign state as the great jurist Austin understood that term. But the old conceptions of statehood are changing. There is no term that can adequately describe our present status because Canada is now a new kind of state not previously known to juridical science. It is free to act separately and independently in its dealings with other states and it is recognized by them as possessing that power; yet it is circumscribed in its own powers of self-government. It is part of the empire still and still subject to the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Great Britain, it still owes allegiance to the one king, yet it is independent in its external affairs if it wishes to be so. The status of Canada certainly is a very curious anomaly.

No great change has taken place in our status in so far as our internal affairs are concerned, although the way is paved for a great increase of autonomy to us when we desire to take it. But a tremendous change has taken place in the international status of Canada: it is vital and fundamental. There has been a constant process of decentralization during the past decade. The old dream of imperial federation is a thing of the past and the theory of joint foreign policy has, to a large extent, been abandoned. International relationships are brought about in two ways: first, by the interchange of diplomatic representatives, and, second, by the making of treaties; in both of these ways there has been a complete change in so far as Canada is concerned. Canada can and does make her own treaties. Canada can now and does have her own representatives at foreign courts. Two entirely new doctrines of international law have been evolved.

The change that has taken place in Canada's international status is best illustrated by the change in the attitude of the United States to Canada. Let us remember that in 1919 the United States delegation opposed the separate signature of Canada to the peace treaty. The United States senate objected to Canada's separate voting power in the assembly of the League of Nations. In 1923 the United States senate demurred for a time at any rate to the halibut treaty which had been made with Canada. Yet now we find this state of affairs: the two countries have exchanged ministers; the right of Canada to make separate treaties has been fully and frankly recognized. The United States has recognized completely our international status and France and Japan have indicated their willingness to do so. This separate international status of Canada is of supreme and vital importance to us in all our international dealings, for it extends to all matters, even matters involving peace and war. Since our international status is complete and separate and has been recognized as such by foreign powers, it no longer follows as a consequence of international law that Canada should be at war simply because Great Britain is at war.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But is she not?

Mr. THORSON: The decision on this important question will rest with the Canadian parliament. No one should seek to minimize the importance of our international status.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I have asked a question of my hon. friend.

Mr. THORSON: I have only forty minutes. Fears have been expressed by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) as to the future of Canada. My faith and confidence in the future of Canada are greater than his. I have no such fears for her future, for we in Canada are developing according to our needs as we see them in our self development; we are simply following the example that has been set for us by Great Britain. Our development is not entirely a matter of volition: I doubt whether it is a matter of volition at all; rather is it a process of evolution. Nor need we have any fears that Canada, in the future will shirk her responsibilities: she has not shirked them in the past, but has discharged them in a manner that commanded the admiration of the world. In all things that pertain to Canada's policy, it should be the right of this parliament to decide. I for one am prepared to take the attitude that as matters arise for our determination, we should determine them in accordance with the best interests of Canada. If we look well to the present, the future is in no danger.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, if the resolution of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), is adopted by the house, Canada had better get out of the British Empire altogether. It takes more than such separatists as the hon. member for Labelle, the Vincent Masseys, the P. C. Larkins, the Ewarts, the Dafoes and the Atkinsons of Toronto to make a nation. A nation does not consist of pink teas and ten o'clock dinners at Washington; a nation consists of something nobler and greater than that. If the young gentleman, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson), who just sat down would think less of such academic questions as the status of this country and would devote his ability and attention towards solving some of the great practical economic questions of the British empire, such as trade, defence, and migration, he would do more for Canada than by whining about our status as his illustrious leader did at the last so-called Imperial conference. I hope it is the last Imperial conference that will ever be held because if there are many more held of the same kind the British Empire might as well disband.

Talk about Canada's status! Canada has such a fine status in domestic and external affairs that you have not a fleet to protect your shores when war occurs except a lot of stone hooker boats to which I referred the other night when the estimates of the Department of National Defence were under consideration and in peace not a life saving station on lake Superior to save our sailors. Where were the Atkinsons, and Dafoes, the Ewarts, the Separatists and Nationalists like the hon. member for Labelle when there was a great disaster on the great lakes last December when many of those brave men after unshaken endurance gave up their lives? Where was Canada's mock nationality then? And also on lake Erie a month ago what became of Canada's nationality then? Where were we on the great lakes last fall in the darkest hour of a December night? When those brave men were out on great lakes in their doomed vessels, what did Canada's sham nationality do for them? They had to wait until they were pulled off by an American life saving crew, after hours and days of suffering. That is the kind of mock status and sham nationality the people of this country are putting up with in time of peace and time of war as well. England in war and the United States on the great lakes paid the bills. There was a debate in this house on June 21, 1926, before the Imperial conference was held, and the Prime Minister was asked to lay on the table the agenda of the conference so that we might have a debate in this house. New Zealand and Australia had a debate upon the subject, and I asked at the time that the agenda be laid on the table, because Sir Wilfrid Laurier before he attended the conference had taken parliament into his confidence, laid the agenda on the table, and let parliament decide what its attitude should be on certain of those questions. But what did the present Prime Minister say? There was a debate of about one hour, in which I took part, and in which I said:

> We are not an independent nation, or a nation at all; we are a link in a chain of free commonwealths within and making up the British Empire. We never were a nation. Talk about annexation with the United States! There is no feeling at all in Canada in favour of it, nor for independence either. Talk about Canada being independent, a country of nine million souls, competing with or withstanding a nation of 110,000,000 people! Why if we were independent a foreign fleet might sail up the St. Lawrence and we would not have as much as a rowboat to oppose it with because our toy navy is locked up in a garage at Halifax.
>
> I invite consideration of the question of what our duty is as a member of the empire. We are shortly to have an Imperial conference. Where is the agenda; what will Canada bring up, and what is the government's policy? The late Sir Wilfrid Laurier used to sit down at such a conference with the representatives of the sister dominions, Australia, New Zealand and others, with the object of seeing what could be done to better the conditions of the component parts of the empire and foster inter-imperial trade and relations.

I invited consideration at that time of the question of what our duty as a member of the empire should be. Sir John A. Macdonald's motto was, "A British subject was I born, and a British subject shall I die.' We are one of the links in the chain of free commonwealths making up the British Empire, but those links to-day are scattered to the four winds of heaven, except for our common allegiance to the same king. There are some in this country who would abolish appeals to the Privy Council and abolish the office of governor general. Treaties formerly had to have the sanction of the mother of parliaments but now apparently we are a sovereign power and can make our own treaties. Just the other day a note came to Canada from Secretary Kellogg of the United States, came to us as a separate country, due to the reign of the separatists in Canada, asking us to join in a pact to end all war. While Secretary Kellogg was sending us that note, another secretary in the United States cabinet, Secretary Wilbur, in the same capitol as Secretary of State Kellogg, came down to congress with a war vote of $274,000,000. Secretary of State Kellogg is inviting us to join in denouncing war for all time, now that an election for president is coming on in the United States within a short while, as it does every four or five years. For the first three years they were too proud to fight in the great war; they sat on the fence. They propose a peace pact every time a presidential election comes on. Harding did it in the Washington conference. Now Kellogg and Coolidge follow in his footsteps. But this Canada is now a separate country. Instead of Secretary Kellogg sending his note to the Imperial government, he sends us a note of our own. We must be a separate nation, with sovereign power to make peace or war. As I said, while Secretary Kellogg was proposing peace, his colleague in the same building, Secretary Wilbur was having voted the sum of $274,000,000 for the building during the next three years of fifteen cruisers at a cost of $17,000,000 each, and an aeroplane carrier at $19,000,000. While Secretary Kellogg is shouting peace, Secretary Wilbur is for war. Peace and war all in the same capitol building and a presidential election as the real issue; a vote hunting peace pact is all it is by gentlemen who are both in the same cabinet of President Coolidge. And what does President Coolidge do? He supports the vote for $274,000,000. That is the way they are trying to help peace along the same way they did in the so-called Washington conference. The Washington conference was called by President Harding just before an election, and France, the United States and England were to stop building capital ships for a definite period of 40 years. Did the United States keep the terms of that conference? No. No sooner was the ink dry on that agreement than they brought down larger votes than ever before for the building of ships, and here we have an example of the same thing by Secretary Wilbur and President Coolidge. Did they keep the Washington conference? No. England and France proposed to keep the conference, but the United States did not keep it. Travel down the Atlantic seaboard to-day, and at New Haven, Portland, New York City, Baltimore, Savannah, and all along that coast you will find war plants that have been turned into peace plants, and which to-day are building merchant marine ships for the United States merchant marine, hoping that some day soon they will catch up to Great Britain, and they are almost at that point now, and become mistress of the seas in battleships and merchant marine, a title to which England has held for hundreds of years. That is the way they keep their treaties, treaties of peace and war as well; they are just or will be scraps of paper like the Monroe doctrine of old and the Harding Washington navy conference of five years ago.

[Mr. Church.]

We had a discussion on status in this house, and on June 21, 1926, I asked the Prime Minister to lay on the table the agenda for the Imperial conference that we might have a debate on the subject, as they had had in Australia and New Zealand. The high commissioners for Australia and New Zealand prepared an economic brief of the problems confronting our sister commonwealths, but did Canada have any brief? No. We had a high commissioner in London, the Hon. P. C. Larkin, but nothing similar in an economic brief about Canada was presented with a view to finding a solution for the three great problems of the British Empire, upon the right solution of which rests the future of the British Empire. I have always heard that the three great problems of the British Empire are trade, defence, and migration within the empire. Did Canada have anything to say along these lines? Not one word. But New Zealand and Australia did. We had nothing to say at all. All we did was to whine about our status. You would think it was a mock parliament and a mock conference so far as we were concerned.

The people of this country, Mr. Speaker, are far from being interested in this question of our status. The Winnipeg Free Press and a few other papers, Mr. Ewart and a few other gentlemen who are interested in literature and speak at after dinner meetings, may be interested in it. These fiddlers and after dinner speakers are separatists. The subject may interest a lot of people who are dry at these banquets, but so far as the people of this country are concerned, they are not interested in our academic status. The men who went from this country to the front do not care a hoot about our status, nor do the 600,000 of our people who have had to go to the United States to look for work. Canada's status is just what it was a hundred years ago. We are part and parcel of the British Empire, and what Canada has done in the last forty years for the mother country she has done of her own volition and will do again to-morrow if war comes, because when Britain is at war Canada is at war. Whatever Canada has done in the past she has done voluntarily, freely and gladly, and she has done it well, and if trouble ever comes again, she will do the same thing again, and go to the help of the mother country on sea and land, and mobilize all her forces of men and money for the defence of the empire.

What did Canada do at the Imperial conference? It did nothing. There is a great empire problem which the empire marketing board is taking up, and that is one of the finest boards they have in Great Britain. It is trying to solve trade and economic problems. That is what it is for, and that is what it is doing. That board found that only twenty-five per cent of the fruit consumed by Great Britain comes from the overseas dominions, and they are trying to change that. At the Toronto exhibition this year the Empire Marketing Board is going to have an exhibition of what Canada can do for the empire, and what the board have and are doing for Canada, and I hope that everyone will attend and learn what the Empire Marketing Board can do for the agriculture of this country, and in helping to solve many other of our economic problems.

Now we are not interested in the resolution of the hon. gentleman from Labelle. He has the happy faculty three or four times each session of raising this question. If he belonged to a mock parliament it would be all right, but in this serious parliament, spending four hundred million dollars of the people's money, surely we can find enough economic problems concerning the health, welfare and prosperity of every man, woman and child in this Dominion to keep us busy. Let us try to solve these economic difficulties, rather than employ our time discussing the academic question of our status. The Prime Minister had no mandate to change the status of Canada. Take the office of governor general; that has all been changed. Our Ewarts and Atkinsons and Dafoes want to have a Canadian governor general. We have enough Ewarts and Atkinsons and Dafoes without wishing to have any of them as governor general. What is the office of governor general to-day? That used to be one of the few links that bound Canada to the motherland. The old office has practically been abolished. We became a nation overnight, in the twinkling of an eye. Under our new status the governor general is now only a viceroy. What has the governor general to do to-day? If he were to appeal to Downing street for advice he would be told he possesses in the Canadian cabinet the only authority who can advise him. It will not be long before the change of status will abolish the right of appeal to the Privy Council. As a lawyer, I can say that the Privy Council is one of the finest courts we have in this empire. I hope it will be a long day before that right of appeal will ever be abolished, for it is one real court where a Canadian can get justice.

If this resolution carries Canada might just as well get out of the British Empire. If we are a sovereign power—if we have the right to appoint the governor general and make our treaties, that is what it means in practice—we shall do everything over the head of the British government. If we have the power to make treaties with every nation in Europe, Asia and South America, we might just as well get out of the British Empire and stay out. If this equality of status goes much further, the British Empire will be well rid of us. Canada does not want anything like this. This is the second time this session we have had preached from the housetops this new dream of status by the hon. gentleman from Labelle, while we sponge on the British Empire for maritime freedom, and in time of war wire for the British fleet. New Zealand and Australia before the great war contributed dreadnaughts. New Zealand is contributing five million dollars over five years to the Singapore naval base, so is Australia—the only naval base that will preserve British liberty on the Pacific. Canada has done nothing for maritime freedom; we are content to sponge on the mother country. The people of this country do not believe in this resolution; they believe in one king, one flag, one empire, one national anthem. The people of this country do not believe in any change of status in domestic or in external affairs. We are not fit to handle our external affairs. Some of the commercial treaties which this government has made with foreign countries are so many gold bricks to Canada. You have made treaties with every country bordering on the seven seas. Now you are going to send ambassadors to every country in the seven seas.

Americans to-day find Canada nothing but a happy hunting ground as they grab our natural resources; they are taking away our fisheries, our water-powers, our pulpwood, our mines, our forests. Canada is the happy hunting ground of these American millionaires. Economically Canada has been annexed to the United States.

The other day the hon. member for Labelle on the orders of the day asked the Prime Minister something about our "imperial masters." I do not know how he got away with it. Whom does he mean? What has this nation to fear from imperial masters? I think Canada has far more to fear from the fifteen gentlemen on the front benches than from Downing street, with this nonsense of so-called "imperial masters." The hon. gentleman from Labelle goes over to England and makes separatist and status speeches. I think it would be a good thing for the British Empire if he got out of it altogether. I think that is the best thing he can do, and it will be the best thing for Canada to do if it adopts a resolution like this. What has all this change of status ever done for Canada but provide a nice lot of fat jobs in the seven seas for ambassadors to hold pink teas and ten o'clock dinners, and go to the League of Nations and misrepresent Canada. At present those tea functions are held exclusively in Washington, but now they will be having them in Tokio, if you please; and in China, if you please—"washee, washee." I was out at the Pacific coast last March during the trouble in China, and one of the papers had in big, striking headlines, "War with China." What would happen to this Dominion if the teeming millions in China and Japan ever crossed that Pacific ocean? It was enough to make the people of British Columbia wake up from this new dream, this nice high-sounding phrase of change of status in external and domestic affairs and demand maritime protection. Canada has had enough of this kind of talk; the country is sick of it. The government would be better employed to sit down and solve some of the economic problems that confront Canada to-day and stop all this status fad. Let the government do something about the empire marketing report. Let them put on the statute books a safeguarding-of-industries act to conserve the resources of this country and stop their being drained away to the United States. Let the government do something in a practical economic way and solve our own domestic problems and leave our status alone.

If this thing goes much further we will be able to get along without the Prime Minister. We will be electing the Prime Minister of this country king of Canada. He will assume kingly powers if this so-called dream of status goes much further. A month or two ago I referred to this particular matter. I want to say a word about the status of Canada. When Canada is in trouble or war threatens we always 'phone for the British fleet. When Canada was in trouble on the great lakes, our mariners had to sound their sirens morning, noon and night for American life-saving boats to come to their rescue. I am a good Canadian nationalist because I am a true British imperialist. The sense of Canada's nationalism increases and multiplies through our love of British unity. The true Canadian nationalist will not want to see this country a dead beat on the taxpayers of the British Isles for the upkeep of battle cruisers and a navy to maintain the safety of Canadian shores and for the protection of Canada's commerce on the high seas. The true Canadian nationalist will not want to see Canada a nation only in the advertising pages of American journals. As a nation we are a pauper so far as the actual reality goes.

The closing days and nights of navigation on the great lakes in the season of 1927 recorded a great story of unbroken fortitude and of unshaken endurance which proved that our countrymen, the sailors on the decks of those doomed vessels, were blood brothers of the soldiers who brought glory to Canada at St. Julien, the soldiers who could not be blown off the ground they gained at Passchendaele, who climbed the heights of Vimy Ridge, who gained the victory at Amiens and many another field of glory, men whose names will forever thrill every true Canadian. These sailors struggled or waited hour after hour; help came to them it was help organized by the valiant hearts and strong bodies of their own country, or if help came it was help bought and paid for by the taxes of the people of the United States. That is Canadian nationality for you. The struggle was a story of glory for Canada's sailors. The struggle was a story of shame for Canada's politicians. The tragedies of the Great lakes in the closing hours of navigation last season showed in its true colours the stuff that Canadian nationalism is made of. The Winnipeg Free Press, Toronto Star, John S. Ewart liberal variety of nationality is the nationality that writes and talks and chatters at banquets and refuses to pay under the terms of that nationality.

Canada is a proud and haughty nation. It sends its merchant ships into the winter storms with nothing to do but whistle for a United States service tug when the ship is in danger and to fill the air with the distress signals of a siren with the hope that a United States life saving vessel will put to sea and save the lives of Canadian sailors. Canada, a nation, and in trouble, has a navy maintained at the expense of the old country taxpayer to guard the safety of Canada's shores in war.

These people who move equality of status resolutions of this sort are nothing but separatists; that is the best term by which to describe them. They are trying to change the status of Canada. But Canada cannot remain a member of the British Empire and do all the talking and determine all the foreign policies and pay nothing. The other day trouble came up in Egypt and Great Britain was responsible; but Canada wanted to poke her nose into the thing and give advice. We should pay or keep quiet. We are appointing ambassadors to every country under the sun—ambassadors in South America and elsewhere. Canada, in the opinion of some of these separatists has become a nation. I do not know who the next ambassador is going to be or whither he is to go. Some countries are left yet. Obviously all those who desire appointments cannot get into the Senate, because there are not enough vacancies; nor can they all get on the bench. There are fifty-five applications a paper says for junior county court judgeships in Winnipeg alone. If anybody wants any of these jobs he has to pay his dollar and join the ward association. I suppose these ambassadors have paid their dollar and joined the Liberal ward associations also. Why, in my riding there are gentlemen who have canvassed me, one looking for a judgeship and another for an ambassadorship. I saw one of them here in the halls the other day. Evidently they fancy I have some influence with this government. One gentleman who ran against me lost his deposit; he lost the election only by about 10,000 or 12,000 votes. And I did not have even one ambassador to vote for me. The only ambassador I have ever had the honour of representing used to live in a former constituency of mine, North Toronto, but he is now in England. I refer to Mr. P. C. Larkin. No doubt under the new status regime—this magnificent new regime that has been ushered in—ambassadorships will be found for all those who want them, but they must pay a dollar and join the ward association. The hon. member for Labelle might be made ambassador extraordinary to France, and he is certainly extraordinary; there is no doubt about that—to France or Italy or some place like that. That is the place for him. He is not satisfied with the way they do things in New France. He is a nationalist. But I want to say that it takes more than gentlemen like the hon. member for Labelle —it takes more than men of his nationalist stripe—to make a nation. No doubt in a few days when parliament closes, if this resolution goes through, we shall see the hon. gentleman from Labelle on the high seas taking Cook's tour as our new ambassador to France. One of these gentlemen, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan), has already gone to the League of Nations to bring about peace over there. He could not pacify a few steelworkers who were on strike in the city I come from; yet he has gone abroad to pacify Europe. I understand that a good many of them are going to take this Cook's tour. One or two of them go by way of Halifax and Quebec, but the rest of these gentlemen always sail from New York on American liners, that is the new status way of patronizing Canadian ports. That is the way they do things under this magnificient new status regime. I do not know who will be the new ambassador to Tokyo or to China; nor have I any idea as to whether the proposed ambassador to China can talk Chinese, status or not. I do not know whether he can say in Chinese "I want my laundry", or "Is my laundry ready?" I suppose, though, when he goes over there, under this very splendid new status regime that has been introduced, and in the magnificent style that now obtains, he will hold five o'clock teas and ten o'clock dinners for the Chinamen. No doubt our ambassador to China will hold pink teas and invite all the Chinese aristocracy. He will invite these Chinese to his social functions: "Will you have pink tea with me this afternoon?" "Thanks; I will Mr. Ambassador. I believe in equality of status; so do you."

The Prime Minister of Australia came to Canada after the last Imperial conference and he gave certain addresses in this country, speaking before the Canadian clubs. And by the way, may I observe here that some of our Canadian clubs are no more Canadian than some of the Empire clubs are imperial. However, as I say, that gentleman gave addresses in Canada on the results of the Imperial conference to the oversea dominions, and he was severely called down by the Prime Minister of this country who in effect practically told him to mind his own business. This was in reference to what Australia and New Zealand had done at the Imperial conference. Those two dominions at the Imperial conference, instead of whining from the housetops about their status, instead of complaining about this, that and the other, went prepared with an economic brief, and were willing to sit at the round table and discuss things, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier did when he represented the people of this country at similar conferences. Canada cannot expect to do all the talking in the empire, to suggest all the imperial policies for the motherland, and have the British taxpayer shoulder the cost of defending the empire. Why should Canada do all the talking and shouting from the housetops and the mother country—the British taxpayer—foot the bill? Yet that is what it amounts to under this magnificent new equality of status regime we have to-day.

The pacifist and the nationalist are much alike; the pacifists are for the new status, and so are the nationalists. I am a good Canadian nationalist, Mr. Speaker, because I am a true British imperialist. I do not want this country to enjoy the fruits of freedom and have the British taxpayers pay for the protection which our commerce is given on the high seas. A true Canadian nationalist will not want Canada to appear before the rest of the world as a pauper in this regard. But that is the position that Canada will occupy if this changed status is brought about. Canada is not a nation and never was a nation; we are part and parcel of the British Empire and shall continue to be, though we had a carload of gentlemen like the hon. member for Labelle prepared to state otherwise. There are many problems which should have been taken up at the Imperial conference and which were not there discussed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member concluded?

Mr. CHURCH: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the hon. member merely wishes to conclude his speech I think the house will give unanimous consent, so that we may take the motion.

Mr. CHURCH: It is eleven o'clock and I wish to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[Mr. Church.]

Tuesday, May 29, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Third report of the select standing committee on standing orders—Mr. Morin (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville).

PRIVATE BILLS

EASTERN BANK OF CANADA

Mr. L. S. R. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) moved that Bill No. 341, to incorporate the Eastern Bank of Canada be referred to the select standing committee on banking and commerce.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 342, for the relief of Frank Deering.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 343, for the relief of Mary Mabel Jennie Potten Impey.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 344, for the relief of Cyril Wilfred King.—Mr. Sanderson.

Bill No. 345, for the relief of Myrtle Adelia Baker Knauff.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 346, for the relief of James Harvey Lefurgey.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 347, for the relief of Hilda Evelyn McDowell.—Mr. Jelliff.

Bill No. 348, for the relief of Catherine Ellen Mobbs.—Mr. Jelliff.

Bill No. 349, for the relief of Edith Elizabeth Poole.—Mr. Arthurs.

Bill No. 350, for the relief of Henry Frederick White.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 351, for the relief of Frederick Clayton Wilton.—Mr. Arthurs.

Bill No. 352, for the relief of Lillian May Yuill.—Mr. Lennox.

Bill No. 353, for the relief of Ruth Ellen Braund.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 354, for the relief of Harry Alven Heels.—Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 355, for the relief of Francis Augustus Pearce.—Mr. Arthurs.

Bill No. 356, for the relief of Florence Anne Salmon.—Mr. Price.

Bill No. 357, for the relief of Rocco Scocco.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 358, for the relief of Mary Audry Smith.—Mr. Young (Toronto Northeast).

On division.

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

MOTION FOR AMENDMENT OF AND CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. C. R. McINTOSH (North Battleford) moved:

That the third and final report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations, presented to the house on the 16th instant, be amended as follows:

By striking out paragraph 8 thereof, and substituting the following therefor, namely:

Your committee further recommends that 750 copies in English and 250 copies in French of this report, and the evidence upon which it is based, be printed in blue book form, and that standing order No. 64 be suspended in reference thereto.

And that the third report, as so amended, be concurred in.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather extraordinary procedure. I presume it is possible and in order to move that the report be concurred in. Personally, I have not had time to read the report, and if we are to insist on going forward with this report to-day I shall ask that Your Honour order the report read. There is another point, Mr. Speaker. Is it competent for a committee that has made a final report —which I understand the committee had made previous to the report now before us—to come back to the house and amend that final report? As I understand it, a committee is discharged when it makes its final report.

An hon. MEMBER: It is a standing committee.

Mr. STEVENS: It is suggested that it is a standing committee, but if a standing committee makes a final report surely it is not in order again to meet and offer an amendment to that final report without having been instructed by the house. It may appear that this point is rather finely drawn, but it is an extraordinary and unusual procedure. This report is one of considerable importance and I do not think the house should be asked to concur in it blindly, particularly in view of the rather unusual course which is being pursued.

Mr. McINTOSH: The report, as stated by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) was presented to the house over a week ago. All the amendment proposes is a change in a very unimportant part of the report, that is, in the number of copies of the report to be issued. There is no amendment to any of the important items in the report, and the report has been before the house for almost two weeks.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): The amendment to the report is not moved by the committee. Private members have asked that the report be adopted, and anyone can move an amendment to it. The committee has not asked for the amendment of the report, and it is always open to any private member to move concurrence in the report.

Mr. STEVENS: I think I now find myself on fairly sure ground, and I raise this as a point of order. It is not competent for two hon. members of this house, acting in their private capacity, to present an amendment to a committee's report; that, I submit is out of order. I suggest that the only procedure that can be followed is to revive the committee and refer any measure back to them for their consideration.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member is taking a stand the very opposite of that he took a few minutes ago.

Mr. STEVENS: Not at all.

Mr. NEILL: It is well known that it is in order for a member to move concurrence in a report, and any motion of that character is subject to amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the point of order raised by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), regarding the amendment to the third and final report of the committee is well taken. The most practical way to amend this report is to refer it back to the committee with instructions that they have the power to reduce the number of printed copies from 10,000 to 1,000. I suggest to the mover (Mr. McIntosh) that he amend his motion—I do not think he will have any difficulty in getting the unanimous consent of the house, because it is an unimportant point—on the lines above indicated. The committee can be reconvened and can bring in a report with a view to reducing the number of printed copies from 10,000 to 1,000. The following ruling is given in Bourinot, page 480, and Beauchesne, paragraph 661:

When the motion is proposed the report may be referred back to the committee for further consideration or with instruction to amend the same in any respect. It is not competent for a committee to reconsider and reverse its own decision, but if the house resolves that such reconsideration is necessary, the correct procedure is for the house to give the committee instructions which will enable it to consider the whole question again.

Motion stands.

INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE OF FLAGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): At the request of the New Westminster and District Great War Veterans' Association branch of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League, I have the honour to present to the house a photograph of a very significant event which occurred at the city of New Westminster on April 7th last, being an exchange of flags, the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes, between the New Westminster association and the Bellingham Post of the American Legion. I believe a duplicate of this photograph was presented by the Bellingham Post to President Coolidge, and I concur in his words that incidents of this kind can do much to promote good will between our respective countries.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I say to the hon. member for New Westminster that the Speaker will find a suitable place in the House of Commons to keep this souvenir of a very happy incident which took place in his constituency.

QUEBEC BRIDGE—PROVISION AGAINST ACCIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGES PARENT (Quebec West): I would like to call the attention of the government and especially the Minister of Railways and Canals to a very sad accident which took place on the Quebec bridge a short time ago. A child fell into the St. Lawrence river through an opening between the sidewalk and the railing of the railway. This is the third accident that has occurred under similar circumstances, and I would ask the minister to take up the matter with the proper authorities to see that this condition is remedied.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I shall be glad to have the matter looked into.

IMPORTATION OF CATTLE FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Has the Minister of Agriculture any information to give to the house to-day in respect to the question to which I drew his attention yesterday, namely, whether it was the intention of the government to cancel the order in council passed last March providing for the importation in bond of American cattle for grazing?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I may say that good progress has been made by the method indicated in my hon. friend's question towards removing the grievance complained of.

[Mr. McQuarrie.]

FOREIGN CONSULS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): The Prime Minister yesterday made allusion to the correspondence exchanged with the British government with regard to the standing of foreign consuls in Canada. Would he have any objection to laying that correspondence upon the table of the house?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I can see no objection and I will arrange to have the correspondence brought down.

SUPPLY—IMPERIAL AND FOREIGN RELATIONS

The house resumed, from Monday, May 28, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) for committee of supply, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Bourassa:

> The house regrets that proper steps have not yet been taken to give full effect, both in domestic and external affairs, to the "equality of status" acknowledged by the Imperial conference, 1926, to be the "root-principle" of the relationship between the self-governing Britannic communities.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, last night I spoke on this question from half past ten to eleven o'clock; I will do my utmost in the house to defeat this amendment in the other ten minutes at my disposal. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is moving this particular amendment for political purposes and to gain votes in the province of Quebec. He wants to make political capital out of the British Empire which he has been making a football of for many a day now. Canada is not going to be talked out of the British Empire. If Canada could be talked out of the British Empire, the hon. member for Labelle would have done that long ago. Canada is not going to be talked out of the British Empire; Canada will have to be fought out of the British Empire. Canada is not going to be written out of the British Empire by the Dafoes, the Atkinsons, the Ewarts and all the rest of the gentlemen of that separatist description. The hon. member for Labelle and his illustrious leader are two souls with but a single thought, two hearts that beat as one on this particular equality of status question.

I did not start this discussion. As I say, it was started for political purposes by the hon. member for Labelle. He has found the session rather barren of results so far as the government is concerned in regard to solving the economic ills of the country, and so he has to trot forward this problem in which he refers to the government of the old country as our imperial masters, or the imperial monster who is seeking to devour all Canada. The Imperial conference, in my opinion, has left undone those things which it ought to have done and done those things which it ought not to have done and there was no health in it. No results came out of it so far as the overseas dominions were concerned. Like the League of Nations it has created more confusion and set up more strife than ever. We are proud that Canada is an integral part of the greatest empire the world has ever known. The war left us our status as it was. What Canada has done during the past thirty-five years she has done of her own volition, and voluntarily, and she would do the same thing again, namely, come to the mother country's aid in her hour of peril. So the people of this country are satisfied with our present status and seek no change in it. Far better for Canada would it have been had the Imperial conference solved our economic problems—trade, defence and migration—instead of all this status talk.

After all is said and done the Prime Minister is only following the footsteps of Sir Robert Borden because he was the arch-conspirator in connection with the change of status. In 1919 at the treaty of Versailles Sir Robert Borden insisted that Canada should sign that treaty separately. He also insisted on Canada having a separate seat in the League of Nations. It would have done Canada as much if not more good for good will and peace if he had insisted on our having a seat in the American baseball league or the national and international league. It would be as practical as the League of Nations. As regards our status what have we secured and what has been the change in chronological order? In 1919 there was the treaty of Versailles which was signed separately. In 1921 there was the Washington Disarmament conference. When Sir Robert Borden and Sir George Foster brought up in the house the question of an ambassador to Washington and put it through, if I had been the only Conservative in the house at the time I would have opposed such a proposition to divide Britain's representation at Washington which was the beginning of all this monument of folly known as separatism.

In March, 1923, the Halibut treaty was signed at Washington separately by Mr. Lapointe. In 1923 the Imperial conference confirmed the separate signing of treaties. In 1924 Canada acted separately in the conference on the Dawes plan. Then there was the question of the reservation of Dominion legislation for the assent of His Majesty or for the disallowance of such legislation. The hon. member for Labelle says now that the disallowance of legislation by His Majesty is all a matter of form. He says that the Colonial Laws Validity Act was invoked not long ago by the Privy Council to annul a statute of Canada; that this statute was wiped out by a stroke of the pen because of its possible application to Ireland. If they can wipe off the statute books that act which is the foundation of all the charters of liberty of the overseas dominions, they can change our new status and wipe the British North America Act off the statute books by a stroke of the pen also and repeal the British North America Act. In this way they can interfere with the rights of the provinces, with the rights of minorities, with the rights of municipalities in this country, and with the right of one minority to have its own religion and laws and preservation of its language. We are thus at the parting of the ways. No one knows where it will all land us.

In 1926 the conference recognized the right of each dominon to make separate and independent treaties not binding on any other dominion. We are a separate country. We have sovereign power. The people of the United States admit that. They have sent us what is known as the Kellogg note about peace and war with a general presidential election in the near future. While Secretary Kellogg on one side of the capitol is inviting the nations of the world to join in a collective renunciation of war, Secretary Wilbur is being voted the sum of $274,000,000 for the building, during the next three years, of fifteen cruisers at a cost of seventeen million dollars each and an aeroplane-carrier at nineteen million dollars. Mr. Kellogg's colleague asked for twenty-five of these 10,000-ton cruisers, but Congress thought fifteen of them in the next three years would be enough to go on with. Especially with the elections so near!

The governor general is a mere viceroy. If he appealed to Downing street for advice he would be told: We have nothing to do with you; you are over in Canada alone and your cabinet there alone can advise you. In 1927 we won a seat in the League of Nations. What good that seat is to us, I do not know except that there will be a nice little trip between sessions for this minister or that minister and an expense account for living allowance as well. The academic league has now cost the people of this country $1,800,000 all told and has been barren of results to Canada and created more strife than peace.

In 1927 we went into the ambassador business and Canada now proposes to send ambassadors to Japan and France. The United States and France and England are to send ambassadors to Canada. Did you ever hear the like of it? Where will all this separatism end? Where is it all going to land Canada? It simply means that the so-called "evolution" in theory and practice is working out in the best interests of complete separation in both domestic and external affairs. This evolution has become and is working out as a peaceful revolution. That is all that equality of status and separatism have done for Canada. The next step will come gradually and surely, namely, to change and to do the British North America Act to death and we are by this status setting up a new constitution in the name of evolution. Our separation now is as complete in a peaceful way as that of old of the North American colonies. That is the gist of it all in plain practice. No wonder the government want to close up this debate and not startle the country any further seeing that this status has landed us in a state of uncertainty and doubt and division and separation from the motherland. As a separate country we now are to be mixed up in all the foreign politics of Europe, Asia and America, for are we not boasting that way? We are at the parting of the ways. Whither are we drifting? No wonder even government members are beginning to wag their heads in doubt as to where we are, and to get alarmed at the huge cost of it all to Canada.

I say in conclusion the government want to close off this debate, because of its effect on the people of British descent of this country, who now only comprise fifty-five per cent of the population of this country. It is no wonder that many members as well as supporters of the government are wagging their heads and wondering where this equality of status folly is going to land Canada. So far as that goes, we are now at the parting of the ways, and we do not know what the next step is going to be. We still continue to sponge on the mother country for our defence both on land and sea. The people whom I have the honour to represent have no more pride in the nation-builders of their own party than I have in the nation builders of the party opposite. I have no use for the nation building that Sir Robert Borden, the Hon. Wesley Rowell, and the other oracles of Union government pretended to do at Versailles and Washington. I have no use for the nation wrecking separatism of Sir Robert Borden's proposal to establish a Canadian embassy at Washington. That embassy is not now and never wil be anything in the nature of a centre of service for the good of Canada. The embassy at Washington is a sink hole, and the Canadian high commissioner's office at London is not much better. These embassies, or sink holes, as I call them, will be duplicated all over the earth by this government. When the seed planted by Sir Robert Borden's and the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King's separatist embassy at Washington has reached maturity, what will the harvest be? The harvest will be reaped by the taxpayers of Canada. That harvest will not be in the form of crops that will fill their barns, but it will be in the form of taxes that will empty their pockets. Canada will then be spending two or three million dollars per annum in interest and debt charges on embassy buildings and on the salaries and upkeep of useless Canadian ambassadors, and still more useless staffs of clerks. Canada must spend two or three million dollars per annum in order to prove that we are in an academic way a nation without a navy or an army.

Never in the entire history of Canada has she at any time been able to defend herself. We are a nation only in a mythical and academic sense.

No matter what the Imperial conference says or does, our representatives have no right to take away our birthright in this way on the pretence of evolution. It means we are a separate sovereign state independent of Great Britain, and without any semblance of a navy or army to help us.

That is what the resolution of the hon. member for Labelle means. I hope that he will not have the privilege of withdrawing his motion; I hope that unanimous consent will not be given to allowing him to withdraw it, but that it will be pressed to a division so that the people of this country will at last awake to where this equality of status is landing Canada—out of the British Empire sooner or later.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take the time of the house except for a very few minutes. On several occasions I have expressed my views on certain phases of the report of the Imperial conference of 1926. In expressing those views I paid particular attention to certain clauses of that report which I thought were over-emphasized by the Prime Minister when the report was first under discussion, and I think certain of those clauses have been over-emphasized in the discussion in the South African parliament and also in the parliament of the Irish Free State.

If one reads that report and endeavours to place himself in the atmosphere in which it was negotiated, may I say, and finally accepted, I believe that there was, upon the part of the majority of the prime ministers and their associates representing the several dominions at the Imperial conference, a sincere desire to preserve in our time, and for future time, so far as possible, the unity of the British Empire, which they therein described as the British commonwealth of nations. I am sure, from the addresses of several members to which I have listened from time to time in this house, and particularly the addresses which the Prime Minister has given here and in various parts of the country, that he has a supreme desire to preserve the unity of this British comonwealth—the political unity, may I say, of this British commonwealth. But in preserving the unity of the comonwealth it was necessary for those who were representing this dominion and the other dominions at the last Imperial conference to take into consideration what I might call the peculiar views or idiosyncrasies of the representatives of one or more of the dominions there represented, who had never had the experience in constitutional growth and practice which we have enjoyed for sixty years in this dominion; and I can well appreciate that, in order to satisfy their fears and anticipations for the future, particularly strong emphasis was laid by the draftsmen of that report upon the autonomy of the several dominions composing this British commonwealth.

But it seems to me that the problem which these representatives then had before them was a problem similar to that which faced the representatives of the dominions at the Imperial war conference of 1917, where in referring to the proposed readjustment of the constitutional relations of the component parts of the empire, they placed on record their view that:

> Any such readjustment should recognize the right of the dominions and of India to an adequate voice in foreign policy and in foreign relations, and should provide effective arrangements for continuous consultation in all important matters of imperial concern, and for such necessary concerted action founded on consultation as the several governments may determine.

I think that the problem of the representatives of the several dominions at the Imperial conferences from that time down to the present has been to provide for this dominion as well as for the other dominions an adequate voice in foreign policy and in foreign relations. Some differences of opinion may exist as to what is an adequate voice, but the position reached by common agreement at the last Imperial conference seems to be this: That each dominion in respect of those foreign relations which solely and exclusively apply to its own interests shall in the future be represented by its own ministry, and represented by its own agents, whoever they may be, who are duly accredited for the negotiation of treaties dealing with matters that are peculiarly and solely and exclusively of interest to such dominion. Therefore, the Imperial conference of 1926 approved of the appointment of a special minister by Canada accredited to the government at Washington. We are in a most peculiar situation with regard to our neighbours to the south. They have a population of over one hundred millions of people, and they are conscious of their vast material and financial resources, and confident of their political power. We, on the other hand, are a small country of less than ten million people, and we, too, are conscious of our own special rights. Two peoples living alongside a common boundary stretching for three thousand miles between them, having these peculiar characteristics, must face from time to time many problems which we at least who are of the smaller nation must regard as of vital importance to our present and our future interests.

There was too in this country a sentiment which had been propagated for many years, and with which I do not wholly coincide, that our rights had been sacrificed from time to time since the earliest treaties were made between Great Britain and the United States dealing with Canadian interests. It seems to me in surveying the history of the past that if Canadian agents had solely and exclusively directed the negotiation of those treaties, in view of our political position, in view of our lack of financial and material resources, in view of our very modest political power, they would have found it very difficult indeed to secure such advantageous terms as were secured from time to time by British representatives at Washington in consultation with the representatives of this country.

But that opinion prevailing throughout the length and breadth of this land had at least to be conciliated, and therefore it has been provided that Canada, in regard to the United States particularly, shall have her own minister at Washington, and that those matters which are of interest solely and exclusively to Canada shall be negotiated and administered by the representative of Canada at Washington. But the correspondence, as I stated on another occasion, which resulted in the appointment of a representative of Canada at Washington, following the appointment of a representative of the Irish Free State, clearly discloses the understanding which was reached between the government of Canada and the government at Westminster to be this: that all matters in which Canada is solely and exclusively interested should be attended to by her own minister; but that when matters arise which may affect Great Britain herself and other parts of the empire, the minister representing Canada should always act in close association with the British ambassador at Washington, and that if the general interests of the British commonwealth are affected, the ambassador of Great Britain would in fact retain a predominating position.

When I look also at the resolutions of the conference of 1923, which were submitted to and approved by this house, and the explanations made in reference thereto on June 21, 1926, by the Prime Minister of the day, I find that he invited parliament to pass a resolution to the effect that those treaties which impose active obligations upon Canada, and those treaties alone, should necessarily be presented for approval by the parliament of Canada before this government should advise His Majesty to ratify them in Canada's behalf. The words of the Prime Minister were clear; he said:

> The present government by this resolution is asking parliament to approve of a course of procedure which will involve with respect to treaties, involving military and economic sanctions, the approval of parliament before the government of the day agrees to any obligation implied in the treaty being undertaken in the name of the country.

That resolution, after being so explained, passed this house unanimously. Therefore so long as that resolution remains in force and effect it would be unconstitutional on the part of the government of Canada to advise the ratification of a treaty binding upon Canada which imposed active obligations of the kind mentioned without first receiving the endorsement of this parliament. But that does not apply to a large body of treaties made with foreign states which do not involve active economic or military obligations. For instance, we have had before us during this session a number of conventions—which are really treaties—and this parliament has been asked to approve thereof by resolution. There is the slavery convention, the convention protocol of the second opium conference, the international sanitary convention—these all affect very intimately the rights and obligations in many respects of Canada and of Canadian citizens. In view of the position which this government has taken at a recent date, I was somewhat surprised that we were not asked to confirm those treaties by acts of the Canadian parliament. During the discussion I asked either the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) if those treaties coming into effect on the advice of the Canadian government and ratified by His Majesty the King through his duly accredited representative, would make them a part of the public law of this Dominion. I received no answer, and I am still in doubt whether the government have pursued the really effective course. In respect of the Waterways treaty of 1909, it will be remembered that an act was passed by the parliament of Canada in 1911 not only confirming that treaty but empowering the government to carry it into effect. I find in looking back over our recent political history that a similar course has been followed with regard to other treaties affecting Canada. For instance, I find that chapter 46 of the statutes of Canada for the year 1921 is an act to authorize the ratification and carrying into effect of the protocol of the 16th day of December, 1920, accepting the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice of December 13, 1920. The first section of that act reads:

> The governor in council is authorized to advise that His Majesty be humbly moved to ratify on behalf of Canada the said protocol of the 16th day of December, 1920, in the manner thereby stipulated.

That was a complete confirmation by the parliament of Canada. The act also provides in section 2 as follows:

> The governor in council is authorized to make such orders in council, regulations and nominations and to give such directions and notices, and to do and authorize such other acts and things as may appear to him necessary, proper or expedient on the part of Canada for carrying into effect the said protocol and the provisions of the aforesaid statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice.

In my opinion these conventions, which were submitted to us during the present session and approved by resolution only, should necessarily be confirmed by statute of this parliament in order to give the government of Canada full power and authority to carry their provisions into effect.

But leaving that apart, there is no doubt at the present time with regard to the authority and jurisdiction—shall I say?—of the government of the United Kingdom in negotiating treaties which apply to all parts of His Majesty's dominions and possessions. I do not see at the present time any restriction placed upon the negotiation of such treaties by the representatives of His Majesty's government at Westminster which apply generally to the whole empire so long as they do not impose active economic and miltiary obligations upon any one of the dominions. It is obvious of course, in view of the position which the parliament of Canada has taken, that the government of this country cannot without the approval of this parliament constitutionally advise the ratification of treaties imposing such obligations upon it. There remains the negotiation of treaties which contain, if I may say so, passive obligations regulating rights as between ourselves and the foreign nations with whom we negotiate, the rights of our citizens in those foreign countries, rights affecting our commerce and trade, and the rest. And hereafter, under the present practice, it is left to the parliament of Canada, when any vital issue involving war arises, to decide as to what action we shall take under the circumstances and conditions which then prevail.

But to return for a moment. The provisions laid down by the conference of 1923 with respect to the negotiation of treaties provided for the separate negotiation of treaties by each dominion, but left it to the dominion then negotiating to decide as to whether the proposed treaty would affect the interests of Great Britain or of the other dominions. An amending provision, approved by the conference of 1926, provided moreover that each dominion when negotiating a treaty should first notify the government of the United Kingdom, and the governments of the other dominions respectively, of their intent and of the purport of the proposed treaty, and that upon receipt of such notification such other dominion government or the government of Great Britain should express its dissent with reasonable promptness. If no dissent is expressed, then the negotiating government may proceed to the conclusion of any treaty which does not impose active obligations upon any of the governments which are represented at the Imperial conference. Under that provision, which I have briefly summarized, I think His Majesty the King, on the advice of the government of Great Britain, may proceed to negotiate treaties dealing with the rights of Canadian citizens in Asia or South America or Central America or elsewhere, and that so long as the government of Canada, upon receiving due notification of the purport and intent of these treaties, declines to intervene, it thereby tacitly acquiesces in the government of Great Britain negotiating such treaty, which will affect to that extent Canadian rights and interests; provided always, of course, that it does not impose what we have termed "active obligations." But if active obligations are proposed under the treaty being negotiated by His Majesty's ministers at Westminster, then the assent of each government must first be obtained. Therefore the existing provisions, as amended by the Imperial conference of 1926, still afford a wide discretion to the government of the United Kingdom under which that government may assume the acquiescence of any dominion that fails to express its views in regard to impending negotiations of which it may be notified. So that the citizens of this country may yet be bound through apathy and acquiescence. Take for instance the treaty of Lausanne to which reference has been made. In respect of the treaty of Lausanne and in respect of those provisions of the proposed treaty between Great Britain and Egypt, in so far as they do not impose active obligations on this country they may—under the present practice—and I think properly so—be negotiated by His Majesty's ministers at Westminster. And if the Canadian government, on being invited to participate, does not express any dissent, such treaty may be placed in operation by the ratification of His Majesty alone; because there still exist the prerogative power and authority of His Majesty the King to ratify treaties which apply to all parts of the empire. As to whose advice His Majesty may receive in respect of such ratification, that is of course a matter of constitutional practice. But in respect of the Lausanne treaty this government informed, on March 24, 1924, the government of the United Kingdom that it would not invite the Canadian parliament to concur in the ratification of that treaty.

And that—I am quoting the words, I think, of the Minister of External Affairs of Canada:

—Without the approval of parliament they—

The Canadian government.

—feel they are not warranted in signifying concurrence in ratification of the treaty and conventions. With respect to ratification, however, they—

The Canadian government.

—will not take exception to such course as His Majesty's government may deem it advisable to recommend.

In that case Canada assumed no active obligation, but took no exception to the ratification of that treaty, although it did impose, I might say, passive duties and obligations upon Canada, or at least upon Canadian citizens in Turkish territory and Canadian trade and commerce and property, located in Turkish territory or under the jurisdiction of the Turkish government. Therefore the treaty of Lausanne was thereupon ratified in the name of the king on the advice of the British government and became binding upon Canada without confirmation by the Canadian parliament. And it is binding still upon Canada and upon all Canadians, because in the year 1924 the parliament of the United Kingdom passed chapter VII of the British statutes of that year, the Treaty of Peace (Turkey) Act, 1924, an Act to Carry into Effect a Treaty Passed between His Majesty and Certain Other Powers, and Certain Conventions, Protocols, and Declarations connected Therewith. If hon. members will read the terms of that statute they will see that by section 1:

> His Majesty may make such appointments, establish such offices, make such orders in council, and do such things as appear to him to be necessary for carrying out the said treaty, conventions, protocols and deliberation, and for giving effect to any of the provisions thereof.

And section 2:

> Any order in council made under this act may provide for the imposition, by summary process or otherwise, of penalties in respect of breach of the provisions thereof, and for conferring on courts within His Majesty's dominions jurisdiction in cases where under the convention respecting conditions of residence and business and jurisdiction such courts are alone to have jurisdiction.

Therefore the treaty was not only ratified by His Majesty; it was approved by a statute of the parliament of Great Britain. His Majesty's government of Great Britain was authorized to carry out its full provisions; and the enforcement of penalties was placed as a duty and obligation upon Canadian courts by a statute of the Imperial parliament.

The Imperial conference of 1926 also specifically declared that any question as to whether the nature of a treaty was such that its ratification should be concurred in by all parts of the empire was a matter for discussion and agreement between their governments. I do not lay so much emphasis as the Prime Minister appeared to do the other day, on the fact that the Secretary of State for the United States at the suggestion of the British government sent a communication to this government in respect of the Kellogg peace proposals, because I am sure the Prime Minister of this country does not wish to act separately and independently from the governments of the other dominions and from the government of the United Kingdom in regard to these negotiations. I assume from the position which the Prime Minister took at the recent Imperial conference that he realizes the absolute necessity, if we are to preserve the existing unity of the empire, of consultation and concurrence wherever possible between the governments of the dominions and that of the United Kingdom with respect to matters which appertain to the whole empire to which we belong.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAHAN: I have noticed that certain gentlemen in this country who are admittedly in favour of the early independence of Canada and of breaking the light ties of association which bind us to Great Britain and the other dominions, speak of Canada having become in fact though not in name an independent and practically sovereign state. The Imperial conference of 1926 took an entirely different view; as I read it, and I have read it time and again, it seems to me that those who directed the drafting of that report were insisting that all matters which relate solely and exclusively to this Dominion should be under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the parliament and the administration of this country. So, in the negotiation of treaties, our minister or representative abroad, in those matters which relate solely and exclusively to our interests and to our well-being, would have exclusive jurisdiction, but when our interests also become matters of interest to the other dominions, to the United Kingdom and to the empire as a whole, it is implied in the Imperial conference report that as far as it is possible for honourable and intelligent men so to do, those representing the various parts of this empire, should strive to reach a concurrent view by consultation and concession, so long as they make no sacrifice of the vital interests of any part, in order to promote the general interests of the autonomous dominions and of Great Britain.

That is my hope, because in my opinion there is no doubt that at present we have not the political strength which will enable us to stand alone as an independent sovereignty and protect the rights which we have so jealously guarded during the last sixty years. I wish to say nothing offensive to our great neighbours to the south, but especially is that fact true in view of the confidence and consciousness of that great republic that their political power and their financial and material strength are not only paramount on this continent but becoming paramount throughout the world. While personally I will be pleased to see representatives of this country, in the future as in the recent past, engaged in the negotiation of conventions and treaties for the settlement of difficulties and the solution of the problems which may arise between Canada and the United States, still I have a lingering belief that the co-operation, advice and assistance of the government of the United Kingdom and its ambassador at Washington may yet be of vital interest to us and to our success in such negotiations. Therefore I feel persuaded that the government of Canada, looking at the whole matter, though determined to preserve our autonomous rights, will always be equally determined to preserve the political unity of this empire to which we belong, believing that under present conditions and as far as human minds can see into the future, it is in the paramount interests of Canada that we should preserve that association with Great Britain and the other dominions.

On the other hand, why introduce an element of discord into this country? The speeches which have been made on various platforms throughout Canada, in which it has been suggested that we are an independent sovereign state, with the implication that we are about to pursue an independent course and separate from Great Britain, have really deeply wounded the sentiments of hundreds of thousands of thinking people throughout Canada. It is a fact which must be recognized, that a great body of our people, and they are not confined to one race, believe in maintaining that association and that bond of empire, however light it may be; they believe that the existing ties are more honourable to both great races in Canada than any other political alliance which we might now form with any other foreign power, that the existing political association is more compatible and more consistent with the best traditions of our forefathers, some of whom actually fought to establish the constitutional liberty of this country. Those thoughtful patriotic men who preceded us, endeavoured year by year and decade by decade to mould British institutions to adapt them to the particular needs of our country, and we have now attained a position in the British Empire which I am sure will enable us to have an adequate voice in all matters of imperial concern which affect our interests; a voice which as we grow in strength will, I hope, enable us to influence the foreign policy of that empire so that it may be more consistent, if that is possible, with the views entertained by the intelligent and patriotic citizens of this Dominion. I look forward to the future when this Dominion, autonomous, it is true, will nevertheless influence in a large measure, by consultation, by advice and by co-operation, the future policy of the government of the United Kingdom and the governments of our associated dominions.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to go into this question at greater length, but I suggest that in respect of those imperial statutes which were enacted years ago and which still apply to this country, the solution of our difficulties, if I may be allowed to say so, may be found to a large extent in adopting the policy recommended in the report of the last Imperial conference. It should be done, so far as possible, by concurrent legislation between the United Kingdom and the various dominions of the empire. It was by concurrent legislation that Canadian citizens born and bred, and Canadian citizens who had procured naturalization in this country, obtained the rights of natural born British citizens in every British community throughout the world. I am proud to say and glad to admit that the Imperial Naturalization Act of 1914 was based largely on the proposals made by the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the Imperial conference of 1911.

I do not think that it detracts one iota from our status, that it detracts one iota from our dignity as self respecting British citizens, that when matters of general interest arise representatives of our government should enter into amicable negotiations with the government of the United Kingdom and the other dominion governments to devise reciprocal legislation which will assure to us, as Canadian citizens, all the rights of British citizens throughout the world, and thus ensure to us that protection—I am not merely talking of naval protection—which comes through the proper exercise of the political influence of a commonwealth such as ours.

I have had occasion to look into the statutes of the parliament of Great Britain which still apply to us, and, the longer I pursued my investigations, the more statutes and treaties I found which directly affect us. I would suggest to the government that when they come to consider the modification of these statutes they will find their ramifications so extensive as almost to appall them. Before the next Imperial conference this government should make haste slowly, and, by such expert assistance as is available, should probe these matters to the bottom. They should do this not with a view to organizing some method of taking this dominion out of the commonwealth, but to devise ways and means by agreement and concurrent legislation, and, by new conventions where legislation is not necessary, for the purpose of keeping this Dominion within the British commonwealth. Let us keep Canada in the empire as a dominion fully conscious of its rights and privileges, but also conscious that we must play our parts, man for man and government for government, with those of the other dominions of the commonwealth in maintaining the political unity of the empire to which we now belong.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Just a word of personal explanation. I think the object I had in view when I moved my amendment has been fully accomplished by this every interesting debate, and, therefore, with the leave of the house, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member be given leave to withdraw his motion?

Amendment (Mr. Bourassa) withdrawn.

SUPPLY

Motion (Mr. Robb) agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Laflamme in the chair.

Civil Government—External Affairs, salaries and contingencies, $144,310.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the Prime Minister explain the increases in this item?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There is a very slight increase in the amount voted for salaries. Last year the total amount was $107,135 and this year the amount asked for is $111,310 or an increase of $4,175. That increase is accounted for in part by statutory increases and in part by additions to the staff. I might say that the additions relate more particularly to junior clerks and that one or two appropriations that were made last session for officials of a higher rank have been dropped.

Item agreed to.

Civil Government—Privy Council—salaries and contingencies, $59,200.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Last year the appropriation for salaries amounted to $49,780. This year it is slightly increased, the amount being $54,200. The increase is accounted for largely by statutory increases. There is but one addition, namely, that of a clerk.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Why is it that with the higher salaries increased, the salary of the humble office boy is reduced from $540 to $480, the messenger's salary is reduced from $1,300 to $780 and the confidential messenger's salary is reduced from $2,820 to $1,440? Do they not deserve as large salaries this year as they did last year?

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is due to promotions which have taken place and which have been made in accordance with the regulations of the Civil Service Commission. No employee has had his salary reduced.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The increase is due chiefly to the appointment of a private secretary.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To an assistant, yes.

Mr. BRADY: What are the hours of duty of the office boy?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He is supposed to be on duty whenever he is wanted. He has no set hours.

Mr. BRADY: If his hours of duty were prolonged, for instance, to eight or ten hours, the salary would naturally be looked upon as exceedingly small, if it is $480 a year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The office boy has plenty of spare time in the summer.

Item agreed to.

Civil government—office of the secretary to the Governor General—salaries and contingencies, including house allowance of $1,500 per annum, to secretary to the Governor General, $107,725.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no real increase in this item. The amount is practically the same as last year. Any additions are due to statutory increases.

Item agreed to.

Civil Government — High Commissioner's office—salaries, including High Commissioner, additional to salary authorized by chap. 15, R.S.C., $2,000, and contingencies, $109,600.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In this case I am pleased to inform the committee that there is a decrease. In the salaries there is a decrease of $4,680 and in contingencies there is a slight increase of $2,000, making a net decrease of $2,680.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to say a few words with regard to a certain matter that came to my notice when visiting London a year ago. While in London I took the opportunity of visiting both Canada House and the Australian building. I take it that we have this house in London to advertise Canada's business and Canada's wares as well as to encourage people to come to this country. Although I found Canada House an inviting place for Canadian visitors, very nicely equipped with rest rooms and writing rooms and attractive from the social point of view, at the same time, as compared with the house maintained by Australia in London, Canada

House seems to take second place. For instance, with regard to interesting people in Canada from an immigrant point of view—and when I say immigrant I take it to mean all classes of people who are coming to make their homes in Canada—I found there was nothing to draw attention to Canada except certain literature such as would be found in the office of any immigration agent. This might go to their houses through the mails just as well as by being put on a file at Canada House. Comparing Canada House with Australia House in London I find this difference, that in Australia House there is placed before the visitor a miniature picture of Australia. No doubt the Prime Minister himself has seen this as well as myself and indeed most members who have gone to London have taken the opportunity of visiting both these places. Not only do you find in Australia House an advertisement of their great mineral possibilities, agricultural resources and orchard production, but you have, as I say, a miniature picture before you of every state in the Commonwealth of Australia. Along with that you have of course literature similar to that which we have in Canada House. It seems to me that if we took a leaf out of Australia's book we might do a great deal more with the money we are spending in London on Canada House. I found the High Commissioner doing his best to give visiting Canadians in London every opportunity to enjoy the social life of the city, and that sort of thing, which is all very nice, but I take it that the main object of Canada House is not only to interest business generally in Canadian affairs, but to interest people who are thinking of emigrating, in the hope that they may find, in what they see at Canada House, sufficient inducement to cause them to make up their minds to come to Canada. I just throw out this suggestion because I think it is very essential from the Canadian point of view, in order to get returns from what we are spending in London, that we should change our method of advertising Canada in England.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say to my hon. friend, with reference to the contrast he points out between Australia House and Canada House, that there is a distinct difference between the manner in which Australia and Canada respectively carry out some of their services, for example, the work of immigration. All the immigration work of Australia is centered in London. The policy of Canada has been to have immigration offices scattered throughout the British Isles, in England, Scotland and Ireland. We have altogether some twenty-five immigration offices scattered through the British Isles, while with the exception of London there are none so far as Australia is concerned, their whole work being centered in the Australian building. That, I think, accounts in large degree for the difference in the advertising of Canada at the Canadian building to which my hon. friend has made reference. One going into the Australian building does see, as my hon. friend has pointed out, much that is representative of the different states in Australia. I question however, whether as many people who are thinking of emigrating to any of the British dominions would learn of Canada through one office in London as learn of Canada through the different offices scattered throughout the British Isles.

Mr. SPENCER: I am well aware of the fact that we have various offices scattered throughout Great Britain, but at the same time we must remember that there are more people in the city of London than there are in the whole of Canada, and at very little expense, if any, I think we could do still more valuable advertising through making certain changes at Canada House.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might add this further word. Through a committee of council, of which the Minister of Trade and Commerce is the chairman, there have been some steps taken recently to further publicity in the British Isles with the object of meeting the very point to which my hon. friend has just referred.

Mr. NEILL: I also visited Canada House last year, and I was struck by the paucity of Canadians in Canada House. One would have supposed that if anywhere in Britain one would find Canadians, it would be there. This session I asked a question—I have not it before me now—as to the number of employees in Canada House who had either been born in Canada or had spent five years in this country, on the idea that if they had spent five years in Canada they would rank as Canadians or have a knowledge of conditions in part at least of Canada. I figured the answer out to mean that only eleven per cent of the employees of Canada House were Canadians in this sense. I think in an institution presumably devoted entirely to the advertising of Canada and the getting of immigrants for Canada, it would be advisable if more Canadians were employed, even though it would cost a little more to send them over from here. I think they would be more likely to fill the objects for which the employees are there.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What my hon. friend says may be quite true, but it is also true that at the present time there is a larger percentage of Canadians employed at Canada House than there has been at any time since the office was opened. All of the higher positions are held by Canadians. Some of the typists' positions and some of the other positions are filled by persons who are residents of England and are not Canadian born, but the policy of the government in the matter is more and more to fill the existing positions with Canadians.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: There is a gentleman employed in the office there by the name of J. Reid Hyde. I would like to ask if he is a Canadian.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that Colonel Hyde was born in Montreal and resided in Montreal.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What are his duties?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Colonel Reid Hyde is retained to deal more particularly with the important financial transactions with which the office is concerned. He has an expert knowledge of financial affairs and has been retained by the High Commissioner to deal with these matters. He is not on the permanent staff of the office, but his services have been found extremely valuable.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: May I say to the Prime Minister that I know nothing about the qualifications of Colonel Hyde, but I submit for his consideration that it is not in order that a gentleman of Colonel Hyde's standing and drawing this amount of pay should be kept on a temporary basis all the time. As a matter of fact, while Colonel Hyde is paid as a temporary employee, he is working for the Canadian government nearly the whole year round in one capacity or another. Whether intentionally or not, this seems to be a very evident case of evading the Civil Service Act. This gentleman is getting, I was going to say, more pay than anybody else in Canada House, but whether he receives more pay than Mr. Pacaud, he certainly is getting more than anyone else in the office, and still he has not been appointed in a regular way at all. He is paid at the rate of £7 per day as a temporary employee, and according to an answer which I received on March 14 last, he is shown to have been employed by three different departments for about 216 days as a temporary employee at £7 per day, except when he was employed by the Department of External Affairs itself at £9 per day, for 52¼ days. I do not exactly understand why there should be that difference, but I certainly think it is hardly fair to the permanent staff of an office like the High Commissioner's office that someone who is not a regular employee should be taken in and paid at these high rates. I know that when I was over there as High Commissioner we found it pretty difficult to get a new man appointed to the staff because we had to apply to the Civil Service Commission here, and everybody will understand how difficult it is to deal with a matter of that kind at arm's length across the ocean. But the idea of taking on a high salaried official as a temporary employee never would have occurred to me, and it does not seem to be consistent with the principles of the Civil Service Act which the Prime Minister himself states, with certain grave exceptions at times, he is in favour of. I would like the Prime Minister to explain it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will recall that after the war there were a great many outstanding accounts due Canada, some of them matters of adjustment between the British treasury and our treasury. There were also the loans that had been made to Greece and Roumania, and there were numerous other important financial transactions which had not been finally adjusted. My hon. friend will agree with me that in the office as it was constituted at the time he was high commissioner, if he had had to rely exclusively upon the staff then there, he would have found it difficult to deal satisfactorily on behalf of Canada with these important transactions. When Mr. Larkin was appointed high commissioner, one of the first steps he took was to endeavour to settle these transactions and to obtain payment of the advances and loans that were made by Canada during the war period. He retained Colonel Reid Hyde for the purpose of assisting him, Colonel Hyde being an expert chartered accountant and a Canadian then residing in London in whose ability Mr. Larkin had entire confidence. Colonel Reid Hyde performed his services most satisfactorily. Under the direction of the high commissioner he discussed with the British treasury and with others the details of the outstanding accounts with the result that very large sums have been paid to the Canadian treasury in the short time that Mr. Larkin has been High Commissioner in London. I might mention, as an example, the Roumanian and Greek loans. The government of hon. gentlemen opposite advanced, I think, to Greece and Roumania something like $25,000,000 each, to enable them to purchase Canadian commodities of different kinds. The commodities were purchased, but we have been unable to get payment although our own money was advanced for the purpose of the purchase. Apparently up to the present there has been very little chance of getting payment of the principal; but by the co-operation of Colonel Reid Hyde under direction of the high commissioner we have at least succeeded in making an arrangement whereby interest will be secured to Canada until the whole of the principal is paid. Up to the present time I understand that about $9,000,000 has been paid into the treasury. That is a large sum, considering that it represents interest alone.

A gentleman of the technical and professional qualifications which Colonel Reid Hyde possesses is almost essential to the High Commissioner's office for dealing with matters of this kind. I might say that the question of appointing him as a permanent official, in view of his knowledge of the financial matters with which the High Commissioner's office is concerned, has been under consideration, and at a subsequent session the government may ask parliament to approve of the appointment of a financial comptroller—because that is really what the position required is —for the office of the High Commissioner. Mr. Pacaud's name has been mentioned. Mr. Pacaud is the head of the office under the high commissioner. But his duties do not relate primarily to financial affairs, and I think my hon. friend from his experience as High Commissioner would feel that it was in every way advisable for Canada to have on the staff some expert accountant who would give his whole time to these very important financial matters.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The Prime Minister seems to give all the credit to Colonel Reid Hyde for collecting money from Greece and Roumania. I wonder if Mr. Larkin, our High Commissioner, is not entitled to some of that credit? It seems to me he must be.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was very careful to say that Colonel Reid Hyde had acted in consultation with and under the direction of the High Commissioner. Unquestionably the credit is primarily due to Mr. Larkin, whose great financial ability is recognized not only in this country but throughout the world. However, as my hon. friend knows, in transactions of this kind a high commissioner would wish to have associated with him someone who is able to render professional services of an expert character and who could attend to details. I have just been looking over the class of professional services rendered. They relate to the adjustment of accounts with the treasury, with the admiralty, with the board of trade, to conferences regarding Canada's share of reparations under the Dawes plan, to the adjustment of the Greek and Roumanian loans, and so on. These are all financial transactions and, as my hon. friend has said, we are fortunate in having as High Commissioner a gentleman of such great experience in financial matters as Hon. Mr. Larkin. Under his direction the office has been able in this short time to secure for Canada the payments to which I have referred.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister has certainly placed a most wonderfully coloured halo around the head of Colonel Reid Hyde. I have been in London a couple of times, and I got the impression that he is a sort of social and political factotum for the High Commissioner. One of his chief duties is to represent the High Commissioner at lesser banquets and social functions which the High Commissioner himself does not desire to attend, but at which he should be represented. It is almost stretching one's imagination to the breaking point to ascribe to Colonel Reid Hyde any credit for the collection of a portion of the debts due from Roumania and Greece. With all due regard to the Prime Minister's statement of a moment ago, I say to him frankly that there is a very widespread feeling among Canadians in London that Colonel Reid Hyde is an expensive and an unnecessary appendage to the High Commissioner's office. If there is to be a financial comptroller in London—for which I do not see any necessity—let us create the position and fill it in a proper way. The colonel has been a sort of glorified barnacle attached to the High Commissioner's office, and I think it is asking this committee to go a long way to approve of an account for 214 days in one year, I think it was, at £7 or £9 a day, for services such as he renders.

When you walk into the High Commissioner's office there are two or three gold-braided individuals standing there, one of them at the door. I walked in purposely, merely to verify the many stories I had heard with regard to the office. The gold-braided individual at the door at once instructed me to sit down. I asked for the privilege of a conference with Mr. Pacaud, who was an associate of mine in this house sitting on the opposition side, but a gentleman whom I have always held in high regard. I wanted to make a personal call on him. I sat down and waited to see how long it would take for the first motion to be made. It took fifteen minutes. After waiting for this interval I very meekly asked the gold-braided individual if he would convey my message to Mr. Pacaud and see if I could have the privilege of an interview. He relayed my message to another gold-braided gentleman at the other end of the room. He in turn relayed it to a sort of secretary sitting in a corner. They relayed back to me the answer, "Sit down," which I did. I sat for a further twenty minutes and then, getting a little weary, I asked those functionaries once again if they would be kind enough to let Mr. Pacaud know I was there. The same triangular operation was put into force once more, and again I was asked to wait.

Mr. McINTOSH: They must have had your number.

Mr. STEVENS: I thank my hon. friend. Apparently he is suffering from a little personal pique this afternoon. Then I was informed that Mr. Pacaud was at lunch and could not see me. Next day he wrote me a very nice letter apologizing for the delay occasioned me and asking if I would call again. Unfortunately I did not get an opportunity of doing so. While I was there a gentleman came bustling in and everything was on the jump at once. Here was Colonel Reid Hyde, with all the gold-braided flunkeys of the Canada House, touching their caps and bowing and scraping to Colonel Reid Hyde. Colonel Reid Hyde has been attached to the High Commissioner's office in a wholly unnecessary capacity. He might have done some of these minor jobs for the High Commissioner, but as the Prime Minister has said, it was the High Commissioner's duty—and undoubtedly he did it—to carry out the major negotiations in connection with this settlement. I should be sorry indeed to think that he had done otherwise. But to suggest that Colonel Reid Hyde was a necessary instrument in carrying it out is going pretty far. Personally I do not think his presence at Canada House is any help to Canada. It would be a great deal better for Canada if Canada House were turned into an office where Canadians could go and get the information they desired, and where those who are in London seeking information about this dominion might obtain that information in a reasonable and straightforward manner, which is not the case at the present time.

Item agreed to.

To provide for representation at Washington, including salaries and allowances for minister plenipotentiary, secretaries and staff, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act or any of its amendments, $100,000.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might remind the committee that last year when I asked the house to appropriate $130,000 for the legation at Washington I stated that if we were placed in a position to purchase a building it would be possible to reduce that estimate by at least $25,000 when I next came to parliament for an appropriation. I am pleased to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that that promise has been implemented and that this year the appropriation for the legation at Washington is $30,000 less than the amount asked for last year. The difference is to be accounted for by the fact that Canada owns its building in Washington and there are no rentals to be paid.

Mr. GARDINER: What were the expenses last year?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The total expense was $98,000.

Mr. GARDINER: I presume that the agreement in regard to the building went through all right. I am not acquainted with the terms of the agreement and perhaps the Prime Minister will give us some information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Under the Public Works items the house appropriated the sum of $500,000 for the purchase of a building including furnishings—it was a building already furnished. The entire $500,000 was not required; the building and furnishings were secured for $470,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What staff is employed, and has it been found necessary to increase the number in the last year?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might say that the exact cost of the building and furnishings was $477,756. There is a staff of from twelve to fourteen, including stenographers, messengers, clerks and secretaries.

Mr. GEARY: What are the details of this $100,000? For instance, what provision is made for depreciation and things of that sort?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This item has nothing at all to do with the building; it relates to salaries, and allowances for travelling expenses and for the general carrying on of the legation.

Mr. GEARY: Is this the only vote in regard to the Washington legation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is the only vote; it includes maintenance of the legation, it covers salaries, allowances for motor car, travelling advances, telegraph, telephone, printing and stationery, light and fuel, office keeping and some furnishings; also sundries of one kind or another.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In connection with this item there is a matter concerning which I wish to make some inquiries, particularly in regard to our minister at Washington. I have reference to the case of a French Canadian widow, Mrs. Amédée Bilodeau, who has a very large claim against the government of the United States, and which has been in process of settlement—at least, the negotiations have been going on for settlement—for a number of years. The matter has recently been drawn to the attention of the leader of the opposition, and as he was not able to be here to-day he asked me to bring it up when this vote came before the committee. It is a very grave case of an international character and from the papers I have been able to examine in regard to it I think this poor woman is suffering a serious injustice at the hands of the United States government. The question is, why our representative in Washington has not been able to effect some settlement of this woman's claim. The facts, which I shall briefly state, will be in the momory of the Minister of Justice and also of the Solicitor General. They are these: Amédée Bilodeau of Sherbrooke was shot down in cold blood by an officer of the United States government in Canadian territory on May 29, 1925. The quibble that has taken place during the last three years has been whether it was or was not in Canadian territory; but when one reads the evidence adduced in support of the claim, one is convinced that it is merely a quibble. The unlawful act took place in Canada, and the officer of the American government who perpetrated the offence is at large and has not been prosecuted. This woman has made a plea to the United States government and I think she has enlisted the sympathy of the Department of Justice; considerable correspondence has taken place between the two governments, but the last leter placed in my hands is the reply of the Secretary of State of the United States, expressing the regret of the government of the United States that such a thing should happen, but refusing the claim of the widow for any compensation. This is a matter of international interest; why has not the Department of Justice taken proceedings to arrest the offending officer? If that crime were committed in Canada he could be arrested and extradited, but up to the present time no such step has been taken. It was admitted at the outset that the crime did take place in Canada.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, that is denied.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I need only take the statement of the district attorney of Essex county in the state of Vermont, in a letter written on June 18, immediately after the occurrence. As a reason for not prosecuting the offender, who was an official of the United States government, he says:

> The case was never presented in our courts because we were satisfied that the shooting of Bilodeau took place in the Dominion of Canada.

There was no prosecution; the man was given his liberty. As I have said, the evidence was submitted to the Department of Justice and was also placed in my hands, and it convinces one that the question of where the actual occurrence took place is merely a quibble. It occurred on the Canadian side of the international boundary, twenty-five or thirty feet in Canada; the man was deliberately shot down by the United States officer, three or four shots being fired at him. He was able to run some three hundred yards before he dropped, and he ran further into Canadian territory. Then he was picked up by the American officer, placed in a motor car and taken to a hospital in the state of Vermont, but was dead before he reached the hospital.

From the record I see that two American officers came to Canada for the purpose of getting evidence with which to break up some illicit drug trading which was being carried on between Canada and the United States. From the evidence one gathers that Bilodeau, the man who was killed, in some way was mixed up with this illegal traffic. These officers were sent to Canada for the purpose of stopping that traffic, if possible. They induced two men in the province of Quebec, Bilodeau the deceased and a man named Price, to get them some narcotic drugs to be taken to the United States. It seems that a certain quantity of drugs was procured in Montreal, and when the parties started to go back to the United States some altercation seems to have arisen when they were at a point in Canada near the international boundary line. What the altercation was I cannot say from the evidence, but it is certain that one of the American officers, who was travelling at the time under an assumed name, deliberately shot down this man Bilodeau. The other American officer drew a revolver and threatened the other man, Price; he severely assaulted him and threatened to shoot him. Bilodeau, however, was illegally shot down in Canadian territory, and I cannot imagine why the Department of Justice has not taken steps to prosecute that man. I fancy they have used the diplomatic channels in Washington, which not only exist now but which have existed for some time, but there seems to be little or no prospect that they will succeed in getting anything from the government of the United States for this unfortunate woman. The United States apparently allege that there is a great conflict as to whether the act was committed on the Canadian or on the American side of the line; if it was committed on the American side of the line why was not this man prosecuted? If it was committed on the Canadian side of the line why do not our authorities take proceedings now to bring this man to Canada and try him?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does not my hon. friend think that if there is a possibility of criminal proceedings, the attorney general of the province is responsible?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the Department of Justice here has been seized of all the facts and has been diligently corresponding with the government of the United States.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That was for the purpose of securing compensation for the widow and not in order to institute criminal proceedings.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Unless I am misinformed the Minister of Justice has power to direct the attorney general to lay an information, and I cannot see why this step has not been taken in regard to this case, with which the Department of Justice has greatly concerned itself. Whether or not the door is closed to this woman getting anything in the way of compensation, through the last letter from the Secretary of State for the United States, I do not know, but a glaring wrong has been done in the Dominion of Canada. Our law has been broken, altogether apart from the question of reparation, a crime has been committed in this country by an officer of the American government, and up to the present time no prosecution has taken place. I would ask the Prime Minister to see to it that our representative in Washington reopens this matter with the authorities of the United States; it is sufficiently serious to be proceeded with. "Let justice be done though the heavens fall" is an old, accepted maxim, but at the present moment we have a condition which permits an official of the United States government to come into Canada and slay a man in cold blood, and no prosecution has yet taken place on either side of the line.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might say to my hon. friend that this matter is by no means closed. My hon. friend has referred to a communication from the United States Secretary of State, but the government of Canada does not accept the view of the United States government in this matter. Within the last week representations on that very point have been made anew to the United States government through our minister at Washington. As my hon. friend has intimated, the United States government hold that the shooting took place in the United States and that the act was performed in self-defence. We do not admit that; we contend, as my hon. friend has contended, that the act was committed on this side of the line and that it resulted in the death of an individual whose widow is now entitled to compensation, and we are pressing the claim of the widow in the name of the government of Canada. I can assure my hon. friend that this matter is receiving all the attention which the circumstances will permit at this time.

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to this matter I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government will be satisfied with compensation paid to the widow?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As the Minister of Justice has just said, with respect to criminal proceedings there is an obligation upon the attorney general of the province; it is not an obligation which rests with the Minister of Justice of the Dominion. As the minister has just reminded me, it is not only an obligation; the power in the matter rests with the province. If the government of Canada succeed in establishing the right of this widow to redress, I assume that of itself will be evidence that a crime has been committed, in which event I would be very much surprised if the province in which it was shown that the act had been committed did not take immediate action.

Mr. McGIBBON: How is it that it cannot be proven where the crime took place three years ago, and why has the man not been arrested?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are many lawyers interested in the matter and they are leaving nothing undone.

Mr. McGIBBON: I cannot say much for their efficiency if, after three years, they cannot determine that matter.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think the lawyers have been exceedingly diligent in having failed to get the proper co-operation from this government.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): There is another matter I would like to bring to the attention of the committee in connection with this Washington embassy. I refer to the question of vessels which have been arrested off the coast of the United States. The case in which I am particularly interested has to do with a vessel owned by a person in my own constituency. This vessel was arrested nineteen miles off the coast of the United States, taken into one of the ports and kept there for eighteen months or two years until the vessel practically went to pieces. The matter was tried in the United States court and it was decided that they had no business to arrest. This was about three years ago, and from that time the owner has been trying to get redress. I think the matter was before the British minister previous to the appointment of our own minister; then it was handed over to the latter. I have written repeatedly to the department and all I have been able to get so far is the statement that the matter is under consideration. We should, under the treaty, be able to get some action in three years because we have a treaty now between Great Britain and the United States under which such claims can be established and paid. I would ask that some action be taken because I think the matter has been under consideration long enough.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The case my hon. friend has mentioned is similar to a number which have come up within the last year or two, since the treaty to which he refers was signed. Practically all are cases that relate to alleged bootlegging. The government is anxious as far as it is possible to lend no encouragement to this traffic. We have not attempted to press cases where it was not clearly established that a national interest was affected rather than some bootlegging interest. I am afraid the case my hon. friend has in mind has not come clearly in the class of one that is wholly in the national interest. However, I shall have pleasure in seeing that the matter is looked into further.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): I think the department is satisfied about the justice of this claim because it has already been determined by a United States court. There is no question of bootlegging because the vessel was nineteen miles off the coast. The only thing I have to complain of is the delay, because there are special provisions in this treaty whereby all we have to do is to ask for an arbitration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The point, I understand, is largely one of whether the seizure was unreasonable or improper, and any technical question is perhaps secondary. However, the department will look into the matter further.

Mr. GEARY: Regarding the matter brought up by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), we could understand a delay in criminal proceedings in Vermont, where they are notoriously slow, as in many of the states of the union, but as a rule we do not find that same lack of desire to prosecute criminal offenders in the provinces of this country. This is a case of great notoriety, and it has been brought to the attention of the Justice department. It has been investigated by them and that department is seized of all the circumstances. I would be glad to know if the Justice department has communicated with the attorney general of the province of Quebec or even with the local crown attorney It is quite conceivable that the matter may not have reached the attention of the authorities in Quebec.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am quite sure that the department of the attorney general in Quebec has investigated into the matter. I did not know that this question would come up to-day and I did not look at the papers, but I will be pleased to inquire into the matter.

Mr. GEARY: The Minister of Justice will be aware that if there was neglect in prosecuting, the Department of Justice can hardly keep out of the matter now that they have taken such a prominent part in the whole affair.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think the provinces would allow even the Department of Justice at Ottawa to investigate criminal affairs or take their place in regard to these matters.

Mr. GEARY: But they would very readily allow themselves to be pressed by the Minister of Justice to do their duty.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I believe the department of the attorney general of Quebec is doing its duty; there has never been any complaint as to that. I think our record in criminal matters in Quebec is clean.

Mr. GEARY: There is no suggestion it is not. Here is a case in which there has been some miscarriage of justice, and the matter is very plainly within the purview of the Justice department here. It seems to me that the Justice department cannot stand aside and let this matter go unchallenged.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think the gentleman interested in this case has made a mistake when he tries to make it a political issue.

Mr. GEARY: I never heard of it before.

Mr. KAISER: We are asked to provide $100,000 for the expense of running the legation at Washington. Will the details of the expenditures pass through the hands of our Auditor General, just the same as other departments, and will this be the practice in regard to the new legations that are about to be established in different countries?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Every cent of expenditure is audited by the Auditor General, and the particulars appear in his report.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The following appears in a Canadian Press despatch from Winnipeg; in Saturday morning's issue of the Ottawa Journal:

> The appointment of a Canadian minister to Washington will be followed before very long by the appointment of Canadian plenipotentiaries to Buenos Aires, in the Argentine, and to the capital of Mexico, Dr. W. N. Sage, assistant professor of history at the University of British Columbia, declared in the course of an address before the Canadian Historical Association, here to-day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Sage has been posing as a prophet, but whether he will prove to be a reliable one or not I am unable to say. I would say to the committee that the government have no present intention of making any such appointments as those to which my hon. friend has just referred.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—salaries and expenses, passport office, $23,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Does the money paid for passports meet the expenses of running the passport office?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The amount obtained by the government in fees for passports more than pays the expenses of the office.

Mr. KENNEDY: There seems to be a good deal of misunderstanding throughout the country with regard to these passports. For instance, a short time ago a man came to see me who wanted to get a passport to go to the old country. His complaint was that he was informed by the agent of the Canadian National at Edmonton that he would have no trouble whatever in Ottawa and he came from Edmonton to this city. He said that if it had not been that parliament was in session and I happened to be in Ottawa, he would have had great difficulty in getting his passport because there was no one else he knew in this city or anywhere east of Alberta to whom he could refer and who could identify him in order that he might obtain a passport. If we are going to have or if we must have a passport system, the railway agents and others selling tickets and acting as agents for steamship lines ought at least to be compelled to give to those purchasing tickets from them reasonable information regarding passports as well as in respect to all the other things it is necessary for them to know in order to proceed to the full length of the journey on which they are starting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The same amount of knowledge with respect to passports is, I believe, current in Canada as in any other country. Anyone going abroad assumes, I imagine, that a passport will be required and it is very easy for an individual to ascertain where a passport is to be obtained. I think the railway companies, as my hon. friend has suggested, should advise all their agencies fully with respect to that requirement and thus help individuals purchasing tickets readily to obtain the information they need as to passports. I cannot think of any method that could be devised to make it easier for a Canadian citizen to secure a passport than that which exists at the present time.

Mr. KENNEDY: That is perfectly true so far as the passport office is concerned, but the railway agents—I think the Minister of Railways might take notice of this, and he might be able to help out—should give correct information and not start people out with wrong information on a journey from the ends of this country to Europe or some other place. The business of the railway agents is to sell tickets and I think they ought at least to be charged with a sense of responsibility and not to give out wrong information to people who are buying tickets from them.

Mr. DUNNING: I know as a matter of fact that all railway agents, particularly in the larger centres, are fully informed regarding the passport requirements, but I would hesitate to assume the responsibility for the possibility of individual error on the part of one or more of the many thousands of station agents in Canada. The railway companies, for the very good commercial reason mentioned by my hon. friend, place their agents in a position to supply a mine of information on many topics and among them is undoubtedly the passport question.

Mr. GEARY: They have forms, I understand.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: I have had the same experience. A gentleman who came from my district was told by the agent that it was easy to obtain a passport. He said to him: Go through Ottawa and everything will be lovely. When he arrived in this city no one could identify him. I do not know whether it was the railway agent or a private agent who gave him, as my hon. friend said, false information, failing to tell him that he had to get statements and documents signed by local residents. Had he been told that he would have known what to do. I think some responsibility rests upon the railway companies to instruct their agents to give correct advice. It is a very serious thing for a person to come three thousand miles and then have to go back or wait here for some weeks in order to get the necessary documents.

Mr. DUNNING: I will see that this discussion is communicated to both railway companies.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Could the Prime Minister on this item assist me in a difficulty that has arisen in my constituency? An Italian named Gesmina, residing in Guelph, a British subject, who was not familiar with the passport regulations, went to Italy last August taking with him his naturalization certificate instead of a passport. He landed in Italy and although now he desires to return to Canada they will not let him out of Italy. The Italian government take the position that he entered Italy without a passport and he must not leave the country. I cannot get a passport for him now because I have no photograph of him. It seems, now that he is there, he is liable for some military service and they will not let him go. The man is a British subject and for twenty years he has been a resident of Guelph. Is there any way, diplomatic or otherwise, of getting that matter arranged?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I imagine that if Mr. Mussolini were advised that the acting leader of the opposition had brought this matter up in the Canadian parliament and had personal reasons for wishing to have it arranged, he would be prepared to have it put right. It would certainly appear that Mr. Mussolini has the necessary power.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If my right hon. friend will bring the matter to his attention, that might solve my difficulty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will do that with pleasure.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Under present regulations does every Canadian who goes simply to England have to have a passport?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the regulation. We have repeatedly discussed with the British government what seems to us to be something of an anomaly, namely, that a Canadian citizen must have a passport in order to get into the British Isles. The British authorities contend that after all time and trouble is saved by the passports which they require as a means of enforcing their regulations with respect to aliens. They think if Canadians have passports they will be subjected to less in the way of questioning.

Mr. GEARY: I am only surprised there is so little trouble. If it were not that we have a particularly efficient and courteous staff in connection with the passport office, we would have a great deal more trouble. The process is a most annoying and embarrassing one to go through, but they put it through with the minimum of trouble to the people concerned.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous — To provide for Canada's contribution to the expenses of the League of Nations for 1928—including Secretariat, International Labour Organization and Permanent Court of International Justice, $155,968.21.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have another matter to bring to the notice of the Prime Minister. Complaints have been received by the leader of the opposition and no doubt by the Prime Minister himself from various cities in Canada where there is a more or less extensive Jewish population, asking that something be done in regard to the alleged persecution of the Jewish people in Roumania and, I think, in other eastern European states. The writers of these letters inquire why something cannot be done by Canada's representative on the League of Nations. I would ask the Prime Minister if this matter has been brought to his attention and if any steps have been taken to mitigate the trouble in regard to the Jewish population particularly in Roumania. I understand that anti-Jewish agitations have been going on in that country for some time. The relatives of many of these people are residents of the Dominion of Canada and they are naturally much alarmed at conditions which exist in Roumania. They expect, I think very reasonably, that our representative on the League of Nations should take this matter up with the idea of having these persecutions stopped.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that the principle laid down by the League of Nations in matters of the kind is that the minority adversely affected should themselves make representations to the league. I understand that in this particular matter of the alleged persecution of the Jews in Roumania, the minority have made representations to the league, and that the matter is at the present time before the council of the league. As my hon. friend knows, Canada is represented on the council of the league, and I am sure that the circumstance will occasion an extra interest on Canada's part in the matter which my hon. friend has brought up.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is one other matter pertaining to the League of Nations. Complaints have also been made, and I have no doubt to the government as well as to the leader of the opposition, in regard to German currency which is held in this country to a considerable extent and was purchased during or after the war. It is said that in some countries German currency has already been redeemed out of the alien enemy property which has accumulated in the hands of receivers in various countries. There is a proposal, I believe, before congress now that German currency held in the United States shall be redeemed out of money held by the custodian of alien property in that country. Whether that proposal will go through congress I cannot say, but it seems that there is held a considerable amount of German currency, in marks, much of which was purchased at a higher figure, and much at a ridiculously low figure, but the holders of this currency are unable to obtain any payment at all from Germany. Could the matter be taken up either at the League of Nations or in any other quarter to see if some compensation could not be made to the holders of this German currency? Canada obtains a large amount of reparation money. Is there any provision in regard to that reparation money for the redeeming of this German currency?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It would seem as if German currency was in the same position as the depreciated currency of many other countries.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But the German currency has been repudiated altogether, I believe.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That may possibly be the case. At any rate it is depreciated to a point where a good many, I imagine, would be inclined to repudiate it. To take action in accordance with the suggestion of my hon. friend would mean that the government would have to consider very carefully the element of speculation that may have entered into the whole question of the holding of German currency, and I am afraid that were we to attempt to solve that phase of the question, we would get into a morass out of which we would never succeed in extricating ourselves.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the Prime Minister be good enough to explain what the increase in expenditure is due to? We are in for this expenditure now, but I think we should be careful that we have as little increase in expenditure as possible.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend will recall, Canada was elected to the council of the league, and that has involved some additional expenditure. The additional expenditure is accounted for in that way.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Now that we have a seat on the council of the league, what is our position in regard to the receipt of these notes from the United States in regard to peace?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Our position, I assume, is precisely the same as that of Great Britain and all the other nations that are members of the league.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It seems rather odd, now that we are spending a large amount on the League of Nations to preserve peace, that we should be receiving separately these notes from the United States.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I presume my hon. friend is referring to the invitation extended by the United States government to the great powers—

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The Kellogg note.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will realize, of course, that the United States is not a member of the League of Nations, and it would not be in a position on its own initiative to communicate through the league. I think we ought to welcome as many invitations as possible to join in a movement of the kind.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Might it not have been preferable for us to stay out of the league? We might have been able to deal with these things better separately.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, I think not.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is this increase for entertaining purposes?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think it is, no.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the Prime Minister explain these various increases? There are four of them altogether, totalling over $196,-

000. There is an increase in item 294 of $5,000 odd, an increase in the next item of $6,000, an increase of $5,000 in item 297, and a much larger increase in the other item.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will do my best to explain the increases as we come to the various items.

Item agreed to.

Amount required for expenses of Canadian delegates to the assembly council and commissions of the League of Nations, $21,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The increase here is due to the circumstance I have already mentioned, namely, that we are on the council of the league, as well as being represented at the assembly. There are additional expenses arising out of representation on the council.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the Prime Minister explain what has happened this year or last year to account for the increase?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Last year Canada was elected to a seat on the council of the league.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who took that seat?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The leader of the government in the Senate has represented Canada on one or two occasions on the council. At the next meeting of the council Canada will be represented by the Hon. Philippe Roy, who is at present Commissioner General in Paris.

Mr. CANTLEY: May I ask the Prime Minister what advantage accrues to Canada through a seat in the council, which increases our expenditure by $6,000?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is a very large question. Representation on the council affords us a wider knowledge of affairs in which we are interested, and also enables Canada's voice to be heard in the councils of Europe on matters in which we are interested. My hon. friend doubtless heard the very eloquent and able address made this afternoon by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, in which he expressed his belief that Canada's influence was beneficial among the nations of the world, and that it would be increasingly so as the years go by. That is the view which the government holds with respect to our representation on the council of the League of Nations and it is because we believe we may be able to make a contribution that will be helpful that we have accepted a seat on the council.

Mr. McGIBBON: Was it the wish of the government of Canada that we be represented on the council?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That was a matter which the nations represented at the league themselves decided. The Canadian government did not take any part whatever in the matter.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: When does the next meeting of the assembly take place?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It meets on the first Monday of September each year.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is Canada preparing part of the agenda which will be discussed at that time? This is a matter of considerable interest to Canadians.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The preliminary agenda has, I understand, been prepared, but the final agenda has not yet come forward.

Item agreed to.

To provide for representation at Geneva, $17,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: Why the increase here?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is to cover an additional secretary and stenographer. The work of our representation at Geneva has increased for the reason I have already mentioned—our representation on the council.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who is the additional representation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As to the addition to the staff at Geneva, the appointment has not yet been made. The appropriation will have to be provided first.

Item agreed to.

To provide publications of League of Nations for distribution to members of parliament and a grant to League of Nations Society of Canada, $3,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At first sight this may appear a considerable increase—$2,250. It is only a small portion of what was requested by the League of Nations Society of Canada. The government felt it would be furthering the wishes of parliament in giving to the Canadian Society an additional amount for the distribution of publications of the League of Nations.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Can the Prime Minister give any idea of the success of the drive which has just been concluded for increased membership in the Canadian Society of the League of Nations?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am afraid I cannot give my hon. friend any information. That is the work of the society itself, and I have not heard how successful the drive has been.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I appreciate that it is not a government institution, but I thought the Prime Minister might have been in touch with the heads of the society.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand the society has been successful in increasing its membership considerably, but I am sorry that I cannot give particulars.

Item agreed to.

To provide for representation at Paris, including salaries and allowances for minister plenipotentiary, secretaries and staff, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act or any of its amendments, $75,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What increased salary will our minister receive, and what increase in staff is necessitated by the change?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend is aware, the Hon. Philippe Roy is at the present time Commissioner General of Canada in France. Mr. Roy received his appointment in 1911, and has continued as Canada's representative ever since. He has served under different governments, and I think with entire satisfaction to all of them. His present salary is $12,000. It is not intended to increase his salary when Mr. Roy is appointed—as he will be, we hope—to the position of minister plenipotentiary. There will be an additional allowance for representation purposes. There will be a slight increase in the staff. Apart from that we do not expect that the expenses of the present office in Paris will be materially increased. I might say to my hon. friend that for some time past Mr. Roy has represented that the premises in which the present offices are situated are quite inadequate. Possibly hon. gentlemen will recall that when there was a thought of purchasing the Scribe hotel it was the intention to have the Paris office transferred to that building, had it come into the possession of the government of Canada. However, when that project was dropped the Canadian office in Paris remained where it had always been. We would have changed the office in any event, whether we had decided to open a legation in Paris or not. The intention is to move from the present premises to another part of Paris where better accommodation can be had and which will prove more convenient—the Rue Francois Premier. The rent of the new office will be a little higher, and some of the additional amount in the estimate is asked for on that account.

Mr. MANION: Does the Prime Minister mean that the new location will be more convenient for Mr. Roy or more convenient for Canadians who may have occasion to call there? I ask the question because I remember that the present office is exceedingly convenient for any Canadian seeking information. I do not know the street named by the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend looks at a map of Paris he will find that most of the embassies and legations are located in the section of the city to which the office is being transferred. This section, I understand, is increasing in its business significance, and I believe the new location will be even more convenient to Canadians visiting Paris than the present one.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think $12,000 was rather an inadequate salary for the Commissioner General in view of the duties he had to perform and the expenditure he had to incur. Now he is to be raised to the position of minister plenipotentiary is it the intention of the government to supplement his salary at all?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The salary remains at the figure at which it has been, but the government is making an increased representation allowance, as it is termed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is it included in the $75,000?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

To provide for representation at Tokyo, including salaries and allowances for minister plenipotentiary, secretaries, and staff, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act or any of its amendments, $50,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Might I ask my right hon. friend to allow this item to stand until my leader returns?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly.

Item stands.

Supplementary estimates—civil government External Affairs — Contingencies — further amount required, $7,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This vote arises out of the circumstance that we expect increased obligations arising out of the legations at Paris and Tokyo, and the addition of a high commissioner's office in Ottawa after the arrival of the high commissioner from England.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to ask what item are we considering now? I wish to move an amendment to reduce this to a dollar. I so move that amendment. I will write it out.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 413 of the supplementary estimates. Shall the item carry? Carried.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Railways and Canals—Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, maintenance and operation, $287,100.

Mr. BRADETTE: This vote brings up a question which is of considerable importance to my constituency. At least 90 per cent of the entire Canadian National Railway system is at present paying taxation, or at any rate compensation in lieu of taxation, to all municipalities along the system; but for some reason unknown to us we in northern Ontario are not receiving any compensation or taxation whatsoever. I have already referred to this subject; I brought it up when speaking on the address in reply to the speech from the throne at the beginning of the session. It will no doubt surprise hon. members that so far this question has not been brought to the attention of the house. I want to point out however that in northern Ontario the whole subject is under consideration. The town of Cochrane is taking a keen interest in it, being well organized for the discussion of these matters affecting that part of the country. We have been working on a policy for the last twelve years and have sent several delegations to Ottawa. We have met various ministers of different governments and we have also interviewed the provincial authorities. So far, however, the matter has never been discussed on the floor of this house. Now, I do not want to be parochial or regional, because this is a matter of national importance. The question of public and private ownership naturally involves the principle of taxation, and—

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I know my hon. friend wishes to have sufficient time to develop this subject properly. I suggest therefore that this matter is more appropriately connected with the Canadian National Railway vote than with the vote for the Board of Railway Commissioners. The taxation of railways is a question that does not come within the purview of that board. My hon. friend doubtless has in mind the Canadian National board. I have no objection to his proceeding, but his remarks would be more in order, and he would have more time to develop his subject, if he waited until the Canadian National estimates were under discussion.

Mr. HEAPS: But the hon. member's remarks might apply to the Canadian Pacific as well as to the Canadian National.

Mr. DUNNING: Neither is under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners so far as taxation is concerned.

Mr. BRADETTE: Some principle governing the question of taxation, and applicable to both railways, should be arrived at. I know that this is a broad question, but it is one that will have to be discussed sooner or later, and the sooner we discuss it and come to some conclusion the better it will be for the country at large. I shall be perfectly satisfied to discuss it under another item, but I want to emphasize the fact that this discussion is absolutely necessary.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will understand that I have no objection to his going on; I was merely pointing out that the matter is not strictly relevant to the item now before the committee.

Mr. BRADETTE: Under what item does the minister think it would be best to discuss the question?

Mr. DUNNING: Unquestionably under the vote for Canadian National Railways.

Mr. BRADETTE: What time does the minister think that vote will come before the house?

Mr. DUNNING: I wish I knew; I can only say, some time before the end of the session. I will bear in mind that my hon. friend does desire to speak on the subject on that occasion, and will endeavour to make sure that he knows when the vote comes up. If in the meantime he is in the house as much as I am he will know when it is being discussed.

Mr. BRADETTE: That will be satisfactory under the circumstances, but I want it understood that it is my intention to bring the matter forcibly before the minister so that a conclusion may be arrived at before next session.

Mr. CHURCH: The item we are now discussing passed last session at four o'clock in the morning. At that time the minister promised to bring down certain information asked for in a motion for papers. That information has not been brought down. This commission was appointed a few years ago to facilitate the settlement of disputes between the municipalities and the railways, but so far as the exercise of any jurisdiction on the part of the commission goes, this item providing for $287,000 might as well be struck out. Indeed, I am going to move now that the item be reduced by $200,000. This commission has ceased to exercise its functions; it has ceased to invoke the powers, privileges and functions for which it was appointed. It might just as well be abolished, and we might profitably go back to the law of supply and demand for all the commission has done in the way of regulating freight and passenger charges and express and telephone rates.

The people of this country are entitled to better treatment than they have been receiving at the hands of the commission. The Board of Railway Commissioners is not a court; it never was a court, some of the gentlemen on the commission are not lawyers and are not qualified to be judges. You might as well suggest that the Civil Service Commission was a court. A ruling was given recently to the effect that there could be no criticism of the commission because it is a court. When the bill was introduced into this house, under the Laurier government, setting up the commission the reasons given for the creation of the commission were that, in the first place, the railway committee of the privy council, which was a committee of the cabinet, was too busy and that, secondly, in a matter of this sort we should have railway and civil engineers on the board the commission was to be in effect a committee of parliament. This commission was created under the auspices of a great chairman, the late Mr. Justice Mabee, and later under Sir Henry Drayton. Under the chairmanship of those gentlemen the commission got somewhere, but now it has fallen from grace. One application with regard to express rates, has been before the commission for eight or ten years or longer than that, with the result that the commissioners who originally had the question under consideration have all died. No decision has ever been given in the matter. The members of the board are dead and gone, and no proper hearing has been held to determine the case. Now the express rates case must be heard all over again, and the municipalities have been invited to come back to Ottawa and see what can be done.

I have good reasons for moving this amendment; the railway commission has failed to exercise its power. Members of that commission are sworn to carry out their duties; they may go into matters of this kind of their own volition, without waiting for everyone to complain, in order to give the long-suffering people of this country some relief. I have looked over the list of cases for the last fifteen or twenty years and I cannot find one instance where they went into a case of this kind on their own responsibility, or volition, as the act says. That may be due to the fact that the government have not appointed the gentlemen best qualified to undertake this work of rate regulation. The Interstate Commerce Commission across the border has this same power, and they deal with cases of this kind on their own responsibility.

Mr. DUNNING: Just before six o'clock perhaps my hon. friend will answer this question: If the Interstate Commerce Commission is so useful in the United States, how is it that the rates in Canada are far lower than those which obtain in the United States?

Mr. CHURCH: The hon. gentleman can reply at the proper time, but I can give him some rate information he knows nothing about.

Mr. DUNNING: I am asking for it.

Mr. CHURCH: I can tell him about the way his railway is being operated.

Progress reported.

ANGLO-EGYPTIAN TREATY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): With the permission of the house I would like to table some correspondence, which last night I promised I would table this afternoon. The correspondence was requested earlier in the session by the leader of the opposition. It relates to the communications between Canada and Great Britain on the subject of the Egyptian treaty.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

LONDON AND PORT BURWELL RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 58, to incorporate the London and Port Burwell Railway Company—Mr. Taylor—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. TAYLOR: This is a bill to incorporate the London and Port Burwell Railway Company. The company propose to construct and operate a railroad line from the town of Port Burwell, in the county of Elgin, in the province of Ontario, to the city of London, in the county of Middlesex, in the province of Ontario, a distance of some thirty-four miles. At Port Burwell, the lake terminal of this railway, there is a well-developed harbour capable of accommodating the largest lake vessels. This harbour has a channel depth of about 25 feet and a turning basin of 650 feet. Only one side of this harbour is being utilized at the present time, yet it contributed last year over $160,000 to the revenue of this Dominion. The inland terminal of this railway line will be the city of London, with a population of approximately 65,000 people. London is recognized as a distributing point for freight in southwestern Ontario.

The primary object in constructing this railway is to supply cheap transportation facilities for the products of coking ovens, which this company propose to build at Port Burwell. This is provided for in the amendment as clause 16, which reads as follows:

Provided, however, the Board of Railway Commissioners shall not exercise its powers under sections 166, 167 and 170 of the Railway Act except and until either:—

(a) a coking plant, fully equipped, has been established at or near Port Burwell at a cost of at least $700,000; or

(b) a bona fide contract has been entered between responsible parties for the construction of a coking plant, fully equipped, to be established at or near Port Burwell at a cost of, at least, $700,000 and a sum of, at least, $200,000 has been expended in and/or on the construction of such coking plant; all to the satisfaction of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Western Ontario will thus be assured of an industrial development of the greatest value to that section of the province, helping to solve the fuel problem in that locality and also assist in the establishmenet of other industries which are sure to follow a development of this kind.

This bill was gone into very thoroughly in the committee and it was shown that the freight to be carried by this company will be new business, a product of their own development. I feel that I scarcely need appeal to the house for the passing of this bill when hon. members become aware that favourable action will mean the expenditure or employment of a large amount of new capital in the country, and capital which will assist in solving a great problem in the industrial and economic life of Ontario. In doing this it will not place any burden whatever upon any part of our country.

I should like to emphasize one more point, Mr. Chairman, and that is that the promoters of this company are not asking, nor do they intend to ask, for any assistance, financially or otherwise, except that they be given the privilege to spend their money in this manner. When the question of the capital necessary for the construction of this project was discussed in the committee, clause (4), providing for the capital stock of the company, was deleted from the bill. I, therefore, beg to move:

That the following be inserted in the said bill as clause 4:—

The capital stock of the company shall be five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Are we down to clause 4 yet?

Mr. MANION: Is not that amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN: There is no amendment to section 1. Shall the section carry?

Mr. WHITE (London): Before this clause is declared carried I wish to make a few remarks in regard to this bill. I represent the city of London in this house, that city being the northern terminus of the proposed line, and I am opposed to the passing of the bill. I think I can give the committee some good reasons why the bill should not be passed.

This bill proposes to grant a charter to a railroad from Port Burwell to London, Port Burwell being on the north shore of lake Erie. There is already a railroad in operation running from the shore of lake Erie to London, and owned very largely by the city of London—the London and Port Stanley Railway. The proposed line starts at Port Burwell, which is about seventeen or eighteen miles east of Port Stanley, and runs to London in a northwesterly direction. The route of the London and Port Stanley road, which connects London with Port Stanley, is a direct line south by the shortest possible route to the shore of the lake. This road is about twenty-four miles long, while the proposed London and Port Burwell road would be thirty-four miles long, according to the sponsor of the bill.

I should like to give the committee a short history of the existing road. In the early days before railroad accommodation was what it is to-day, London suffered a great deal from very high freight rates, and in an endeavour to extricate herself from that position—and in fact the people of St. Thomas were in the same position—certain residents and officials of London and also of St. Thomas organized a company and secured a charter for the London and Port Stanley Railway. That charter was secured in 1853 so that the road has been in existence for seventy-five years. When the charter was secured there were a few private shareholders concerned as well as the municipalities of London and St. Thomas. The road commenced operations under the direction of the London and Port Stanley Railway Company in 1856 and it continued under that direction until 1874. It was then rented to the Great Western Railway and that lease ran for twenty years. The Great Western Railway was absorbed in 1882, the Grand Trunk Railway took over that road and also of course took over the lease of the London and Port Stanley Railway. The Grand Trunk railway operated the latter road until 1892 and then, having failed to secure the stock of the road by purchase at its own price, it abandoned operations in 1892, two years before the expiration of the lease. During this time the Grand Trunk secured some shares of the stock and the stock now stands about four-fifths owned by the city of London and one-fifth owned by the Grand Trunk or the Canadian National Railways.

London bought out the shares of the city of St. Thomas in 1893, paying therefor the sum of $40,000. After the cessation of operations by the Grand Trunk there was a period in which a certain United States syndicate rented the road, but they did not operate it very long. They gave it up and finally the city of London leased it to the Pere Marquette Railway for a period of twenty-one years for a rental of about $12,000 per annum. The operation by steam continued until 1915, but it was not very satisfactory and the roadbed and bridges were allowed to depreciate. The service as regards both passenger and freight were very poor. In fact business declined very materially and of course the trunk roads had no particular object in keeping the road open to the lake. The longer haul west or east gave a great deal more to those railroads than they could get by bringing material from Port Stanley to London; so the road was allowed to decline. Prior to 1914 the city of London had invested about $520,000. That was an actual investment of cash and there were certain arrears of interest which amounted to a great deal more than that. In 1914 the city of London, being the largest creditor, took over the road. It rebuilt it, installed new 80-pound rails, new bridges, new stations and freight houses, new carshops and barns, and a great deal of new rolling stock was purchased. The road was electrified and London started operations in 1914, using hydro-electric current as the motive power.

I should like to say a word about the construction of the line. Some people have the idea that an electric line is some little line that runs alongside a highway without any particular regard for curves, grades or anything of that kind and that it probably runs all over the countryside before reaching its destination. But in this case it is a line that goes straight from London to the lake and the rails which were put in by the city of London in 1914 are 80-pound rails. A great deal of broken stone was used as ballast and the other construction pertaining to electrical matters is also up to date. The road was electrified largely by the enterprise of the late Sir Adam Beck, and in installing that equipment he had the idea of making the road a standard for the hydro-radials which he was then promoting. Consequently the construction is particularly good. For example, the method of suspending the live wire is a little out of the ordinary. Steel towers were used set in cement instead of the ordinary wooden poles, and cables were stretched from tower to tower with a certain amount of sag between towers. The live wire was suspended from the cable by hangers of varying lengths in such a way that the live wire is horizontal throughout its length.

I am giving these details so that the committee will understand just how important this installation is and how well it was done. In fact the character of the construction is comparable with that which is used in electric tracks through tunnels and also in United States cities where they do not allow steam locomotives to go into the centre of the city. The construction is first class throughout and is such that steam roads have been using that electric road on occasions when they have mishaps on their own lines. Only three weeks ago I saw several freight trains come in hauled by Wabash engines which came over from St. Thomas to London and thence went east on the Canadian National. In that construction the city of London spent from 1914 to 1927 some $1,434,000. The road is of great importance to the whole district and particularly to London where there are three large industrial establishments situated along the line. One of these is the stove and furnace branch of the McClary works, advertised as being the largest stove and furnace plant under the British flag. Thus hon. members can see that the Port Stanley road is of great importance to the city of London in regard to freight handling. It also provides an entrance to the city of London from the city of St. Thomas by the Michigan Central, that road having made an arrangement with the London and Port Stanley for the handling of freight. That arrangement is subject to revision every five years and subject also to the approval of the Dominion railway commission.

At Port Stanley the harbour has been greatly improved by the Dominion public works department. We have twenty-two feet of water in the inner harbour and twenty-four feet outside with about one thousand feet of dockage and a turning basin probably eight or nine hundred feet in diameter. A great deal of freight is brought in by boat to Port Stanley. The Cleveland and Canada Navigation Company run passenger and package freight boats from Cleveland. The Canada Steamship Company make Port Stanley a port of call and a great deal of package freight is handled from Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, up to Port Stanley and consequently through western Ontario by the London and Port Stanley road. Then we have a car ferry which connects Conneaut with Port Stanley and which handles about 35 or 40 loaded cars per trip. We also have the Century Coal Company which is established there, handling coal in bulk. It proposes to handle about 300,000 tons of coal this year. In committee the statement was made that the London and Port Stanley railway could not handle coal. The fact is that the London and Port Stanley railway has been handling coal every day, and has done so for twenty years or more. I have a communication here from the manager of the road in regard to its capacity as a freight-handling proposition, from which I should like to quote a few paragraphs. He says:

> We have three sixty-ton electric locomotives, each equipped with four 250-horsepower motors.

The statement was made in committee that eight hundred tons of freight was the limit of a train load. I explained to the committee that while 800 tons is the limit handled to-day, it is not necessarily the limit that can be handled by these locomotives. That figure of eight hundred tons is set in order to keep the power charges down. Those who understand the method of charging for electric current will very readily understand that the peak load charge in connection with electric energy is a very heavy one. The charges for electric energy are computed in two ways: First, in computing the monthly power bill there is the demand or peak load charge, which is based on the highest horse-power used for a period of ten minutes during any day during the month in which the power is delivered. After that, the charge for the current is so much per kilowatt hour. Inasmuch as the charge for peak load or demand makes up about one-third to one-half of the power bill, it will be readily understood that it is very important to keep down the peak load. The manager says:

> Eight hundred tons of coal is the maximum tonnage allowed for one train for the purpose of keeping the power peak down, but this is not the capacity haul of one locomotive. One locomotive could haul from Port Stanley to St. Thomas approximately 1,040 tons. If volume of business warranted and power was available, then it no doubt would be profitable to raise the tonnage allowance to the limit.

Further he says, referring to a vessel load of coal which came in shortly before he wrote:

> With reference to the movement of 7,000 tons of coal which arrived at Port Stanley in one vessel, it will be noted that a total of 120 cars, comprising 7,200 tons, was handled from Port Stanley and delivered to our connections within the time of 50 hours. Other business handled northbound for the same period consisted of 1,731 tons, which comprised car ferry business and regular business between St. Thomas and London. Southbound movements during the same time accounted for 4,493 tons.

He also says, in regard to capacity:

> The maximum number of tons that could be handled by one sixty-ton locomotive with the present restriction of 800 tons out of Port Stanley would be approximately 9,360 tons per day. The maximum number of tons that could be handled with one sixty-ton locomotive with no power restrictions would be approximately 12,480 tons per day.

So the committee can very readily see that the question of insufficient power or insufficient equipment is not a vital one, because the road is well equipped in those respects, and can handle all the tonnage that is available.

Then in addition to the freight business, the passenger business has developed to a great extent. Port Stanley has become a very popular summer resort, as it has a very desirable bathing beach and picnic ground. Since electrification there has been a marked increase in passenger traffic. The passenger business in the last year of steam operation (1915), amounted to 100,000 paying passengers. In both 1925 and 1926 there were over 1,000,000 paid passages each year on the railway, and last year, 1927, there were 700,000 passengers carried.

Now a word as to the management and the general financial results. First of all, I want to explain to the committee just how this road is being operated by the city of London. The London and Port Stanley Railway Company as at first organized is still in existence. That company is comprised of the mayor of the city of London as president, and eight aldermen, composing the board of directors, the city clerk acting as secretary. The company thus organized took over the property in 1914, and leased it from January 1, 1914, to the city of London for a period of ninety-nine years. The city of London appoints the London railway commission, which operates the road. That lease and that agreement were confirmed by an act of this parliament, chapter 16 of the statutes of Canada, 1914. By it, certain rentals are payable to the city of London varying from $20,000 per year up until 1923, to larger amounts, until $50,000 per year is reached in the final years of the lease.

As to the financial outcome of our operations, the road from 1916 to 1921 paid all expenses, all taxes, rentals, operating costs, interest and sinking fund and had a surplus each year of quite a substantial sum. About that time, owing to the establishment of good roads, the competition of motor trucks and passenger automobiles became so severe that the surpluses were changed to deficits, and since then we have had a deficit each year. I should like to quote from the manager's statement in the year 1925. He says that between July 1, 1915, and December 31, 1923, the railroads paid to the city of London in rentals, $170,000; sinking fund, $170,000; accumulated surpluses, $157,000; and some other items which are too small to enumerate, which make a total of about $527,000 or a yearly average of $62,000. Those are profits over and above operating charges, interest on debentures, taxation, and other items that are met out of earning. This road is of such importance to the city of London that even if a loss were incurred each year, I am very much of the opinion that London would continue to operate the road and consider it good business, not only because of the freight that is handled, but because of the means it affords of getting people to Port Stanley.

