RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 290, to amend the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the amendment?

Mr. ROBB: The bill as it left this house gave five years for the applicant to apply for insurance; the amendment provides for one year.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Immigration and Colonization — salaries, $305,570; contingencies, $45,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister please explain the increase in this vote?

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): It is due partly to statutory increases and partly to an increase in the number of employees.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister explain the nature of the employment of Mr. Gerhard Ens?

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Ens has been employed by the land settlement board to investigate conditions among the Mennonite people in their large settlements. He is employed temporarily at $100 a month and expenses.

Mr. BENNETT: What settlement is he investigating, and how long has the settlement been there?

Mr. FORKE: He is investigating all the different Mennonite settlements; he is well acquainted with the Mennonite people. He has made a report, and I can table it if my hon. friend wishes.

Mr. BENNETT: I want to know if he is investigating any new settlements. The fact is that he is there for election purposes; is that not so?

Mr. FORKE: That is probably the opinion of the leader of the opposition, but that is not the purpose for which he was employed.

Mr. BENNETT: On whose recommendation was he appointed?

Mr. FORKE: On my own recommendation.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, but who suggested the recommendation to the minister?

Mr. FORKE. Mr. Gerhard Ens is very well known in Saskatchewan, and as I wanted a man for this work I employed him.

Mr. BENNETT: Whom did he succeed?

Mr. FORKE: There has been a large immigration—

Mr. BENNETT: Whom did he succeed?

Mr. FORKE: No one was there before.

Mr. BENNETT: For how long is he employed?

Mr. FORKE: Temporarily.

Mr. BENNETT: For how long?

Mr. FORKE: That will be at my discretion.

Mr. BENNETT: Regardless of the Civil Service Act?

Mr. FORKE: My hon. friend knows he is not employed under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BENNETT: How long may he be employed temporarily without coming under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. FORKE: Three months.

Mr. BENNETT: So he was appointed to an office which had not existed formerly, for three months at $100 a month and expenses, to investigate and report upon the Mennonite settlements in Saskatchewan?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: And what was the need for these reports at this particular time?

Mr. FORKE: He is not the only man I may have making reports on immigration conditions in western Canada; I have others in addition to him, if hon. members want to know it, who are making confidential reports to me on immigration matters.

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps the minister might give us some information about these other people who are making confidential reports?

Mr. FORKE: They would not be confidential if I spoke about them.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister must not think he can take that attitude with this committee. We are voting supply for his department, and I would remind the minister that he is responsible to this committee. Now we would like to get that information.

Mr. FORKE: If the hon. member is determined to have the information I will give it, but I do not think it is in the best interests of immigration to do so. I have had complaints from Regina, from Yorkton and from Saskatoon, in addition to other places, about unemployment. I could have sent out a regular member of the department to investigate these reports, but I sent out someone who was not known to be a member of the department to make a confidential report upon the conditions which existed, and I would ask my hon. friend not to press for the name at present. I will give it to him privately if he wishes.

Mr. GARDINER: How many men are employed in that capacity?

Mr. FORKE: Only one, and he was only temporarily employed a week ago.

Mr. GARDINER: What necessitated his employment? Can the minister give us any reason why this action was taken?

Mr. FORKE: I wanted a confidential report upon conflicting statements, for my own particular purpose. I have nothing to hide in the whole matter.

Mr. GARDINER: I would suggest that the minister keep the name to himself, but I want to know what circumstances made it necessary to employ this other person.

Mr. FORKE: I had complaints from Regina that a certain number of idle people could not find work, and I had similar complaints from Yorkton and Saskatoon. There were conflicting statements with regard to the situation and I asked the superintendent in Winnipeg to find a suitable person to do that work and send me a confidential report. That gentleman is now engaged in that work; he is not engaged for any specified time; as far as that goes he may be discharged next week. I was asked if I had other employees doing this work, and it would not have been stretching it very far if I had said there were no other employees of this kind, but I am giving the facts of the case.

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to this Mennonite proposition, what is the trouble there? What necessitated the employment of Mr. Ens? Is he the man who belonged to the Mennonite settlement board?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the minister really think it is advisable to take a man off a settlement board interested in settling Mennonites in this country and ask him to investigate a situation with regard to Mennonite settlers?

Mr. FORKE: I think he has done very useful work. There was some trouble that he straightened out in regard to schools, and I think he has earned his $100.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the trouble with regard to the schools? Was there some trouble between the English-speaking and the Mennonite people of the school district, or what was it?

Mr. FORKE: I cannot tell at the moment, but I can get the report; I will bring it here if the hon. member wishes. I know there was some trouble in the schools, but I received the report only the other day and am not very familiar with it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the minister say what right the federal government has to be receiving confidential reports on the schools in Saskatchewan?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know whether or not I am getting outside my province. It was not exactly in connection with the schools; it was in connection with foreign children being properly looked after and told what to do in regard to getting their education. Is there anything wrong in that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am delighted to find the Department of Immigration becoming responsible for the education of these foreigners. This is the first time I have heard of it. I wonder whether grants will be made for that purpose now.

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there no grants to be made?

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then why should the federal government be mixing in the schools of Saskatchewan?

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. FORKE: We are not mixing up with the schools in any way; the hon. member is taking something from my remarks which I never intended.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the minister said that he sent out a man to make inquiries concerning some difficulty about the schools in Saskatchewan.

Mr. FORKE: I did not say that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the minister tell us what he did say?

Mr. FORKE: I said, among other things, that some children had had some difficulty about the schools, and he straightened it out for them. It was not interfering with education in any way. I have the report here and I am willing to table it and let you see it for yourself.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Are we to understand from the minister that the educational authorities are not capable of dealing with this matter?

Mr. FORKE: I think the members are magnifying this too much. If some families had any difficulty in understanding the school regulations I do not see where it would do any harm for an officer of this department to give a little explanation.

Mr. STEVENS: A confidential officer.

Mr. LUCAS: I notice there is an increase in the number of employees, amounting to fifteen; will the minister explain that?

Mr. FORKE: In 1928-29 the number of employees was 179; in 1927-28 the number was 164, making an increase of 15. This increase is accounted for as follows; one chief of records; one head clerk; one principal clerk; sixteen clerks grade 4 (promoted from grade 3); less net increase in lower grades due to adjustments and promotions, making a net increase of 15 in the number of civil government employees.

Mr. GARDINER: I am particularly interested in a special employee by the name of Ens. Was this man a member of the Saskatchewan legislature?

Mr. FORKE: I think he was in the Saskatchewan legislature.

Mr. GARDINER: Is he the member who resigned to allow a prospective provincial minister to get his seat?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know.

Mr. DUNNING: I think I could answer that question if I could get it clearly. I should like to have it repeated.

Mr. GARDINER: Are you aware of that fact?

Mr. DUNNING: What is the fact?

Mr. GARDINER: I wanted to find out if the Mr. Ens who resigned his membership in the legislature to make room for a prospective minister is the same person.

Mr. DUNNING: I can answer that.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the Minister of Immigration is a capable minister?

Mr. DUNNING: How can he know about the Saskatchewan legislature?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The one who knows is willing to give you the information.

Mr. GARDINER: I asked if that was so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He is the one who knows; you do not want the information.

Mr. FORKE: The answer is no.

Mr. GARDINER: That is all I want.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Ens did not resign his seat in the Saskatchewan legislature to make room for a prospective minister.

Mr. GARDINER: I thank you very much for a very complete answer to my question.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Ens ceased to be a member of the legislature many years before there was a minister elected in that constituency; that is my best memory in the matter.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it the intention of the minister to employ this gentleman for any length of time?

Mr. FORKE: He is employed only by the month.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that he belongs to the Mennonite colonization board. Would it not appeal to the minister as being hardly fair to employ one of the members of that board to look after the interests of the Mennonites, and pay his salary out of Dominion funds? I am well aware that this board have ample funds to look after the interests of their own people, and there is no need for this government to pay out even $100 per month to do that work when they are well able to pay for it. Before we go any further, can we get some assurance from the minister that this man will be dismissed or retired within a very short time?

Mr. FORKE: I intend to keep him just as long as he is useful.

Mr. GARDINER: Let us know what he is going to do. What is the intention of the minister in regard to the employment of this man so that he will be worth $100 per month and expenses?

Mr. FORKE: I will put the report on the table.

Mr. GARDINER: I want an answer from the minister now. It is a simple question and there is no reason why he should not answer it.

Mr. FORKE: Repeat your question.

Mr. DUNNING: He is not a criminal, and all this cross-examination is unjustified.

Mr. STEVENS: A minister is bound to answer any reasonable question.

Mr. GARDINER: How long do you intend to employ this gentleman?

Mr. FORKE: He is employed in looking after new settlers, and goes into any district where he can be of help to the Mennonites who are new to the country and need a little advice and assistance.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it the intention of the minister to pay his expenses?

Mr. FORKE: If I send him out of course his expenses would be paid.

Mr. GARDINER: I happen to know something about this Mennonite settlement board. We have many of them coming into our particular district, and, from the information I have received from the Mennonites who have come in, there is no need for the employment of this man except to help bear the expenses of this board. If you want to make a grant to this board for that purpose, well and good, but under the circumstances there is no reason why you should select one specific man for that purpose.

Mr. MANION: How many votes do you think he controls?

Mr. GARDINER: You cannot get any votes, because they do not vote.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: This seems to be departing on a new policy altogether. I should like to ask the minister whether it is his intention to apply this to other nationalities, and have them look after their respective countrymen coming here? There are thousands of people of Slavic stock coming into this country, who have to be looked after, and they probably need guidance just as much as or more than the Mennonites.

Mr. FORKE: I will be prepared to take any steps that I think are in the interest of immigration and the immigrant coming into the country, and I will be responsible to parliament for what I do.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any reason why the employees of the land settlement board should not do the work Mr. Ens is doing?

Mr. FORKE: We have had several members of the land settlement board over in Great Britain assisting the medical doctors over there. They have been making separate examinations for the assisted passage rates. That board has been overworked, and instead of discharging men we should be hiring them. I have no intention of employing any man we do not need, but I do intend to employ sufficient men to adequately take care of the work they are called upon to do.

Mr. GARDINER: I quite appreciate the position of the minister in that regard, particularly with reference to the land settlement board. In view of the fact that the land settlement board is primarily for the purpose of looking after the interests of the incoming settlers, does the minister not think that it would be better to increase the staff of that board rather than employ outsiders?

Mr. FORKE: It mght be difficult to make a permanent appointment of that kind. We do not want to increase our permanent staff when we can employ some local man for a month or so when we need him. That is much more convenient than employing a permanent official who may not be needed in the near future.

Mr. GARDINER: I notice it is twelve o'clock and probably we had better let it stand.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

At 12 o'clock midnight the house adjourned.

[The Chairman.]

Friday, June 8, 1928

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure) presented the third report of the joint select standing committee on the printing of parliament as follows:

Your committee have considered the matter of salary of the superintendent of the distribution office of parliament, and are of the opinion that the salary paid to this official is not adequate in view of the responsibilities of the position and the increase in the work of this office.

Your committee have therefore passed the following resolution, and herewith submit the same for the approval of your honourable house:

Resolved:

That the joint select standing committee on the printing of parliament do recommend to both houses that the salary of Mr. R. B. Davidson, superintendent of the distribution office, be increased to $3,600 per annum, from March 31, 1928.

FOREIGN DECORATIONS

On motions:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Yesterday I presented to the house a return respecting honours conferred by foreign governments on persons domiciled in Canada which has been asked for by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). I was surprised to read in an evening paper that the return had been interpreted as giving the names of prominent men who had been decorated by foreign governments. As a matter of fact, what the return actually states is the following:

No information as to any person having actually received any such title, distinction, decoration or order.

Intimation of a desire to confer orders upon the following persons was received from various foreign governments by the Canadian government, which, however, declined to recommend that permission should be granted to accept them.

The direct opposite of what has appeared in the journal referred to is therefore the case.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): In that regard I may say that I was surprised to see that I had been decorated.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I read it that the hon. gentleman had been offered it, but had declined it.

VALUATION OF IMPORTS

PROTEST AGAINST IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES BERRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. K. ESLING (West Kootenay): May I ask the Prime Minister if the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) has brought to the attention of the government the protest of the berry growers of the Creston valley in British Columbia against the importation of surplus United States berries during the present marketing season, and may the berry growers of the Creston valley and other portions of British Columbia look for any relief during the present season?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I regret that I am unable to inform my hon. friend as to anything that has taken place in council. The government's action in these matters will have to be made known as it is publicly disclosed.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS—SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, I have a reply to the statement made by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) with respect to tenders in the Department of Indian Affairs, particularly with reference to Royal Crown Soap, and also with reference to restricted lists. May I say, without reading the whole of this statement, and in order to shorten the matter, that the list is added to from time to time when we receive requests from firms to give them the opportunity to tender. There is no restricted list, and may I add that the Royal Crown Soap Company were awarded contracts in 1925-26, and this year at 6 cents per pound.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Quite so, but they were not on the list, although they did make application. I have the letter which I will send across to my hon. friend. That is the better way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They did tender in 1926. They must have been on the list then.

Mr. BENNETT: No; that is exactly the point. They saw it by accident and tendered.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh well, I have nothing further to say.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 289, to amend the Pension Act.

He said: I am pleased to report that the Senate have reconsidered sections 25 and 30, and I would suggest that the house concur in these amendments and in the bill as sent from the Senate.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the nature of the amendments?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Section 25 deals with the pension of widows who married after the appearance of disability or disease. The section as adopted by the Senate, I understand, is satisfactory to the committee of this house which dealt with the matter. Section 30 deals with the relationship of the appeal board to the department and is in line with the amendment adopted by the Senate.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is there any change in section 21?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so, but we concur in the change.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Vote 55, page 22 of the estimates.

Mr. GARDINER: Before you proceed with this item, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the item we were dealing with last night was not carried, notwithstanding that it appears in the votes and proceedings as carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I agree with my hon. friend. That is my understanding.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

The CHAIRMAN: When I came to the table this morning I did not think that item had been carried, but it was taken from the list. If it is the desire of the committee we will reconsider the item.

Mr. GARDINER: You will observe that on the last page of Hansard, I made this statement:

I notice it is twelve o'clock and probably we had better let it stand.

I have nothing further to say on this item, but probably some other members of the committee may wish to discuss it. In any event I think it makes for the proper conduct of business to bring this to the attention of the committee.

Immigration and Colonization—salaries, $305,570; contingencies, $45,000.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Chairman, I have a question to ask the minister (Mr. Forke) which is directly connected with this vote. In August last a young man in my constituency was given an appointment under the department of immigration; I think it had to do with the inspection of soldiers' farms. He comes from true blue Liberal stock and, so far as I know, will continue in the political faith of his people. The appointment was made one month before the by-election in North Huron, and the young man was promptly fired within a month or so afterwards. He left a good position to enter the department. He was appointed, I believe, on the recommendation of Hon. Duncan Marshall. I have spoken to Mr. Marshall and to the Minister of Immigration, but have been unable to get any satisfaction. I have also tried to get another minister, who is related to the family of the young man, to intercede, but without avail. I have been told that this young man was not competent. I do not believe it, for no member of that family would undertake to do any work which he was not competent to discharge. I was shown some expense accounts of his which were not supposed to be well made up, but the only fault I could find was that his expenses were too low. I am confident that if the young man had been taken in hand by an officer of the department and given a white man's chance he would have made good from the training he has had as a member of an old pioneer family. He thought he had been engaged permanently; if the department engaged him for a short period before and after the by-election he certainly did not think so. I plead with the minister in the future not to allow his department to be thus used during elections. On behalf of one of my constituents—it is nothing to me politically—I wish to enter a protest against any member of the administration coming into my county and using such sharp practices upon my people.

Mr. FORKE: I do not know anything about the facts of the case, Mr. Chairman, I will make inquiries of the chairman of the land settlement board.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Minister, if you do not know, you should because you were one of the first men I called upon when I came here and I have been in touch with you continuously as well as with one of your colleagues in an attempt to have this young man reinstated.

Mr. ESLING: I wish to ask the minister if within the last few weeks he has had a report concerning the Doukhobors in the West Kootenay district.

Mr. FORKE: I have had no report beyond what the hon. member himself has told me.

Mr. ESLING: Then, Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring to the attention of the committee a very serious situation. In West Kootenay we have a rather large community of Doukhobors. During the past three weeks a fanatical faction, composed of about two hundred, have been on a rampage, marching through the adjoining municipalities, holding public meetings, chanting and speaking. No one objects so much to singing but their leaders are practising the worst kind of communism. They persist in standing on the street corners and openly defying the laws of the country. For instance, they declare that they will not send their children to school, that they will not register births, deaths and marriages, and that they will not pay taxes. It is only within the past three weeks that this has happened. There are 200 of them to-day marching through the country, and to emphasize their determination not to abide by the laws of the land some of them—not all of these 200, but anywhere from half a dozen to a dozen—make public exhibitions by marching down the street absolutely nude. It is only within three weeks that the farmers' institutes in convention in West Kootenay voiced a protest to the provincial government. They said, "If the provincial government cannot enforce the law, for Heaven's sake, who will? Will the Dominion government do so?" I realize that the enforcement of the law and the responsibility for that enforcement is up to the province, but I submit that this federal government must share to some extent the responsibility for the behaviour of these radical fanatics. It was this government that dumped them into Canada. They not only brought them but bonused them for coming. It was about 1903 that $32,000 was handed out to the Doukhobors as a bonus for their having come to this country.

I ask the Minister of Immigration, I ask the government itself, to amend our immigration laws so as to provide for the immediate deportation of such of these fanatics as openly violate the law by going around the country absolutely naked. Is that impossible? You may say that it is up to the provincial government to prevent these exhibitions, but there cannot be a provincial policeman in front of every Doukhobor, and the community covers a wide area. At this convention of farmers, one man entered a protest against these exhibitions. He said, "I and my family occupy ten acres of land. I have my orchard, and everything I have is invested therein. Across the provincial highway from my orchard there is a family, man, wife and children, of Doukhobors going around absolutely stark naked, and I have to submit to that humiliation and mortification" Such a condition should not exist in Canada. I do not know what our relations are with Soviet Russia so far as deportation is concerned. Nevertheless this fact remains: We seem compelled to harbour these people, who to some extent are nothing more than human animals; they have no more sense of decency than human animals. We have paid them to come to the country; we have exempted them absolutely and unconditionally from military service; and we seem to be more concerned for their welfare than for the welfare of our own people. We seem, I say, compelled to keep them in the country with their open defiance and violation of the law; yet we are unable to retain our own Canadian citizens. The responsibility, so far as these fanatics are concerned, rests with the Dominion government and I ask that they take some steps to provide for the deportation of those who openly violate the law and express a determination so to do.

From this same community centre, where these farmers' institutes were in session last week, comes a letter stating that the rumour is strongly current there that it is the proposal of this government to bring into Canada 20,000 more of these Doukhobors and to place them in the Peace River country with a view to using them ultimately for railroad construction. I want to ask the minister whether that is so or not, and whether that rumour is well founded. Perhaps he will tell me whether there is any proposal to bring into Canada 20,000 or any number more of these Doukhobors and have them settle in the Peace River country?

Mr. FORKE: None whatsoever.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is it not a fact that many of these Doukhobors were born in Canada and therefore are not subject to deportation?

Mr. ESLING: Some of them were born in Canada. I do not question for a moment the right of these people to remain here after a residence of five years. But even so, anyone will admit that there must be some means of dealing with these radicals who offend every sense of decency. There must be some ground for the rumour regarding the entry of additional Doukhobors; because in 1912 an order in council was passed forbidding the further entry of Doukhobors into Canada, and we included along with them the Hutterites and the Mennonites. In 1919 the ban was lifted against the Hutterites and the Mennonites but we continued to exclude the Doukhobors. But only last year, or in 1926, another order in council was passed admitting the Doukhobors, and that would seem to indicate at least that they have free entry to Canada under proper medical examination.

One question I want to ask the minister is this—and I think we are entitled to an answer: Will he not take steps for the deportation, where possible, of such of these fanatics as openly offend every sense of decency and not only mortify but embarrass and demoralize the local communities by their exhibitions?

Mr. FORKE: Where recently arrived immigrants, be they Doukhobors or others, are unsatisfactory and do not obey the laws of the country, I think the department is prepared to deport them at any time.

Mr. ESLING: But here we have a concrete case; it is not a case of "if" they violate the laws. I have told you, you have evidence of it in the newspapers out there; you have it from the provincial police there that this faction of fanatics is absolutely and openly violating the laws of the country. They are standing on the street corners preaching absolute defiance, saying "We do not propose to send our children to school; we will not register births or marriages; we will not pay taxes." And to this fanatical faction is attributable the fact that eight schools have been burned in British Columbia. They not only say what they will and will not do, but they emphasize it by open defiance.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The general subject of immigration was dealt with sufficiently yesterday, and now we are justified in considering under this item the work of the department as a whole. I am sure the minister felt a little elated yesterday when he was given a clean sheet, decorated, and had medals pinned all over him and, as you might say, a garland of diamonds hung around his neck by the Prime Minister. Yet if we study the situation as we find it to-day there cannot be any gainsaying that we have some doubts as to the results obtained by the department under the minister's administration. It has been shown that we have lost millions of people, both by losing our own people and by losing those whom we have brought from other countries, and just here there is one point to which I would like to direct attention. During the years this government have been in power we have brought into Canada, according to the figures given by the government, some 573,000 people, but in that same period we have lost to the United States, including some few from Newfoundland the figures for which I could not get, about 591,000 people. In other words, we have lost to the United States more than the number of people we have legally brought to Canada from the old country at an expenditure of some $55,000,000. If that is a result from which the Prime Minister can derive any satisfaction I fail to see it.

The minister has admitted that the policies brought in by his department have failed, and it might be worth while to take them up in order. In all these years the three-thousand-family scheme has only produced some 2,600 families, and if that is the best we can do with ministers such as the present Minister of Finance, the present Minister of the Interior, the present Minister of Immigration and his predecessor, there is something wanting. Then there was a great scheme by which we were to bring to Canada retired officers from India, men with money; that has absolutely fallen through. Then we had schemes to bring out Scottish people, and hon. members will recall the way the minister spoke when this question was discussed in the house one evening. I put on the order paper some time ago, a question in this regard, and the minister informs me that most of those people are still on the land. That is not true, and the government know that very few of these Scottish people have remained here; the unfortunate part of it is that a number of them have returned to the old country. We heard yesterday and last evening that it was a great thing to bring an immigrant to Canada and satisfy him, then send him back to his own country as an advertising agent. Under that scheme we brought excellent people from Scotland, placed them in parts of this country for which they were unsuited and, as we prophesied at the time, they have returned to the old country dissatisfied. That is the sort of advertising we will get from them.

Then the Prime Minister said that this present minister possessed certain qualifications, and that we on this side of the house were dissatisfied with him because he had moved across to the other side. I do not know that we have any dissatisfaction with the minister because of that; he was more useful to us on this side because he had some criticisms to offer of the government then, while to-day his voice is absolutely silent with regard to the matters which he formerly criticized. Then it was said that he is an immigrant. I would like to know what blood is in any person in the country except old country blood; we are all descended from old country people. Then it was said that the minister had sympathy, but I would like to know where that sympathy can be found. He has driven away the parties who in past years have been the best immigration agencies for this country. He has fallen out with the Salvation Army and has absolutely destroyed their interest and enthusiasm in the settlement of this country. According to their own statement they have transferred their interest from Canada to Australia. The minister has fallen out also with the Anglican church. There was a meeting in Kingston some time ago at which it was said that the slogan of some parties in the old country was "Our trouble is not to get British settlers but to keep them out of Canada." For a long time that was disputed, but after a while the minister had to crawl down and admit that there was some truth in this charge. This church has been one of the best agencies for the settlement of this country, but the minister has done his best to alienate them. The minister has frozen out the Barnardo boy movement. Whether that was good or bad it brought some boys here, and if it brought some bad boys it also brought some good ones. So I can hardly see that the minister has that qualification of sympathy which was ascribed to him last night.

An hon. MEMBER: The McConachie case.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Yes; let us consider the McConachie case and try to find where his sympathy was then. The first question the minister will ask me is, "Well, are you in favour of bringing these mental defectives into the country?" I say I am not, but the minister is and has brought mental defectives into Canada, and I have details of a few cases taken from his own reports. One of them is the case of a mental defective whose condition is said to be the result of eating tinned food in babyhood. When a medical department or some medical officer can put that over the minister certainly it shows a weakness. Then we have other cases here, to a few of which I would like to refer in order to show that the minister has transsgressed the laws and regulations of his own department. Here is a case known as J. P., described as constitutional psychopathic inferiority, but given a permit by the minister. Here are two cases of infantilism; they are pretty close to this mongolian type, aged 17 and 14, and both given permits to enter this country. Here is another person described as feeble-minded and illiterate, but the minister issued a permit because there is a doubt as to whether this is a case of mental deficiency or whether the condition is due to lack of educational opportunity. Can you imagine anything more ridiculous? Here is another case, known as H. A., classed as neurasthenic and illiterate, subject to the delusion of being afflicted with various ills. Here is another one, 13 years old, incorrigible in school but allowed to stay in the country because the father is here. Here is another one, 18 years of age, psychopathic inferiority—emotional instability. These are all mental deficiency cases, admittedly so, yet the minister shows his sympathy by permitting them to come into this country.

Now let us consider the McConachie case. As I said before, I am not going to say that these people should be admitted indiscriminately, but when the minister admits grown up people and then refuses to admit a baby I want to say that it shows a want of common sense. By the admission of that McConachie baby he would have admitted also six excellent Canadian citizens. The medical officers say that in this type of infant not 9 per cent reach twenty to twenty-five years of age. It is not an institutional class. The baby has not one chance in a hundred to live, because the condition is a heart one, along with other things, and the first little illness that strikes the child will rob it of its life. It is interesting to know if the minister has shown sympathy, this great qualification of sympathy? No definite cause can be ascribed to the condition. It is not hereditary, but one of the conditions is due to a mother having her children too rapidly. Another condition, as shown by the medical authorities, is due to some shock on the parents' side. This book by one of the latest authors says that certain of these cases have been found to be the children of soldiers who have gone through the experiences of the war. McConachie was a returned soldier. If there was any sympathy in the minister's make-up, would he issue permits to these grown-ups who could be restrained, and yet separate a baby from its mother? That is a type of cruelty this country cannot understand; it is an absolute want of sympathy. I have asked the minister if he would accept, as he has in many other cases, a bond from reliable people that this child would not be allowed to become a burden or a menace to this country, but I have had no answer from the minister. Under the laws of this country it is a crime for a mother to desert her child, and yet we can by regulations rob a mother of her child. If there was any possibility of a menace in this case, or the possibility of any liability being put upon us, I would say there was some reason in taking a little baby from its mother, but not in the case of a baby who has not got one chance in a hundred of reaching even twelve or fourteen years of age.

But the minister's appointment is not due to these qualificatios of sympathy and service. We all know that the minister was put in this office to fulfil and carry out what has been described as a morganatic alliance. You might say a marriage has been consummated although no pastor officiated. But there is a marriage, and we are told to-day that the union has not been a satisfactory one, and there are symptoms now of dissatisfaction in the household notwithstanding all the medals that have been pinned on him. In other words, Sarah has become old and is non-productive.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Very funny, isn't it?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The result is there is a loss of immigrants; there has been an increase of about eight hundred but it is not an actual increase. This department is the most important one in this country at the present time. I have no fault to find with the subs department, as both the deputy minister and Mr. Fraser have been very reasonable with the two cases I took to them in connection with immigration. I would say that that is where the sympathy lies, in the officials, but on the part of the minister there is an absolute lack of sympathy in meeting these cases.

I really think the department must get back to the sympathy and coordination with all cases which it had in the past. It is too bad if they have lost the interest and enthusiasm of such a body as the Salvation Army.

I have a little sympathy with what the member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) said yesterday. We cannot make this country attractive to immigrants if we only stick to one or two classes. We bring domestics out here and I know for a fact that a big majority of them stay only to complete their period in Canada and then they are off to the United States. This matter of getting British settlers here is a very important one, but we are not going to draw a great mass of settlers from Great Britain on an agricultural policy alone. Great Britain is becoming more industrial every day and the minute we adopt a policy which will make it possible for industries to be established in this country, we will have a flow of British settlers. They are there and they are ready to come. At present we have the handicap of seasonal employment. In the old days this Ottawa river was alive with men during the winter, as the lumbering business was there in all its ramifications. What has happened? It has gone, but we have the pulpwood industry, and if we had a proper pulpwood policy in this country to-day we would have all these mills on the Canadian side. Whenever you speak of interference with the movement of pulpwood to the United States, that great association known as the Pulp Wood Association is immediately on your trail and threatening all kinds of dire things. We are sending to the United States from eastern Ontario thousands and thousands of cords of pulpwood. For what purpose? Cross the border at a port like Kingston and you immediately see the big pulpwood factories near the town of Watertown. I would point out to the farmers of this country that when we send our natural resources out of the country we also send the best natural resource we have—the boys and girls. When our pulpwood goes over there to build up these mills the boys go over to obtain winter work, and they do not come back.

Mr. WARD: Does the hon. member know the percentage of pulpwood which is exported from Canada?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I cannot say, as I can only speak for my own locality. But if you go to British Columbia to-day you will find a movement of pulpwood from the coast, and not one stick of it is being taken away on Canadian boats. It is bought by the Americans and taken away on American bottoms; it goes into American mills and gives employment to Americans, and our Canadian boys must suffer.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): May I interrupt for a moment? My hon. friend is speaking of something he does not know.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I know what I am speaking about.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The law of British Columbia does not permit the exportation of pulpwood or logs except by order in council, and the only grades of pulpwood or logs taken out of British Columbia to the United States market are third and fourth grade logs that cannot be sold locally.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I want to tell the minister I have gone up the coast and I know what the law is.

Mr. KING (Kootenay:): I know more about it than the hon. member does.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The law is there but they are being exported.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Only the third and fourth grades.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): We have stopped this exportation in Ontario, and what is the result? We are getting our factories and work for our own people.

Mr. BRADETTE: In northern Ontario if the settlers did not have the United States market and had to depend upon the local industry, they would starve to death. They have to export and they do export their pulpwood.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This is not the only matter in which the hon. member is out of touch with his constituency. He has his mills up there to-day owing to the fact that the exportation of pulpwood has been stopped. That and nothing else has placed the mills in the Abitibi district and elsewhere in new Ontario in the position in which they are to-day. We could have ten mills in this country, but they are at Watertown and other places in the United States. I am glad in any event that I have raised a little discussion on this subject. If the minister, much as I respect his good nature and so on, will come with me sometime along the coast of British Columbia, I will show him what I saw going on there in what I consider one of the richest provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Three great pulp plants.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The point is that the United States mills are being built up on Canadian pulpwood and the supply is being drawn from British Columbia.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not from British Columbia.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the percentage?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Never mind the percentage or anything else. There is the fact and you must face it. If the government and the minister would face it, he would find that he could draw from the British Isles today thousands of people whom he will not get.

Mr. WARD: Does the hon. member think he is fair to the committee when he gets up and makes a speech on the question of the export of pulpwood and does not give the committee the percentage of exportation that is taking place? The percentage last year was a little over ten per cent.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is ten per cent too much.

Mr. BRADETTE: There is a surplus production of pulpwood in northern Ontario which the local industries cannot absorb. Are the settlers going to destroy or burn that pulpwood, or are they going to be allowed to export it?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If the hon. member wants to know the percentage I am sorry I have not got it here; I have it upstairs in my room. He will be able to get it from the Bureau of Statistics. But in any event ten per cent of the pulpwood is a tremendous quantity of our natural resources going out of the country and there is no necessity for it to go out. There would not be a surplus or an excess if these mills were in Canada where they should be. These are our own natural resources.

Mr. WARD: Would the hon. member suggest that parliament should legislate where I shall sell the pulpwood off land I own myself?

The CHAIRMAN: I think I should point out that a discussion on the exportation of pulpwood is not relevant to the matter before the house.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is absolutely relevant. One of the reasons that have been given for the decrease in immigration is the lack of seasonal employment. What is the use of making any criticism if you cannot give something constructive? I am pointing out how we might get over the disadvantage that we have in connection with seasonal employment. One thing I was mentioning was the possibility of building up winter employment in this country if we had our own mills and produced our own paper. The mere fact of the percentage has nothing to do with the matter. I am pointing out what we should do in order to keep more of our people at home, and this is quite relevant to the question of immigration. The Minister of Immigration has said that he has sympathy; that he gives service to his people. The production of commodities in our own country will be an evidence of sympathy and service. I have not by any means gone into the whole question, but I should like to close up the discussion with this summary. The minister's administration is marked not by sympathy but rather by a want of it. He has dissociated himself from those agencies which would provide immigration. He has now established a severe medical examination. I do not know that I would have any great fault with the severe examination; but if you make your examination such that common sense will not be used, then the absence of common sense in dealing with one intending immigrant will absolutely stop and debar hundreds from coming to this country and we will lose the sympathy and enthusiasm which we should have in the old country. Those Scottish people who came over here and were settled should have been placed where they would have been advertisements instead of being permitted to return home and say that they were dissatisfied with conditions in Canada.

Mr. ROBB: In the closing hours of the session it is apparent that at least those of us who remain within the chamber are going to be entertained with a sniping process directed against the Minister of Immigration.

Mr. BENNETT: That is unfair.

Mr. ROBB: I say those of us who remain within the chamber, because I am satisfied and I imagine most hon. members on both sides of the house are satisfied that the public have lost interest in the attack of the Tory party upon the immigration department and the immigration policy of the government. Early in the session, indeed before the session, the Tory press throughout the country—

Mr. ARTHURS: The Liberal press—the Globe.

Mr. ROBB: —carried weekly statements that there were irregularities within the Department of Immigration. In fact it was alleged that there was traffic in permits and the government promptly met that statement by giving the house a committee representative of all parties within the house. Hon. gentlemen named their own members of the committee. That committee was given a free hand to subpoena witnesses from wherever they believed they could get the information. The committee sat continuously throughout the session. They brought before them witnesses from all parts of Canada and they had before them officials of the department. Every opportunity was given to make good the charges that had been daily made against the Department of Immigration and what was the result? Yesterday we had presented to us a unanimous report. I am told—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): We did not have anything of the kind.

Mr. ROBB: Let me finish my sentence. I am told that some hon. gentlemen made reservations, mental reservations, as to what was in the report.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The minister is not going to get away with any statement which is not in accordance with the facts. The minister, although he is Minister of Finance, has no special privilege to get up in the house and put over what is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. ROBB: When I was interrupted by my hon. friend I was just coming to the point that whatever differences of opinion there may have been, whatever mental reservations there may have been, they selected from among themselves a leader, an outstanding gentleman, a statesman from the opposite side who was very prominent in the Winnipeg convention, and demonstrated to the country that he had some following throughout Canada, and this gentleman presented an amendment which appears in Hansard, and in order to remind the house just what the hon. member did say about all this campaign that was carried on against the department I will read his words. He said:

> At the outset I desire to say that after examining some of the witnesses and listening attentively to the examination of others from the department and outside, I came to the clear conclusion that whatever the department may lack in efficiency as it is at present constituted, there can be no reflection upon the honour or honesty of the officials who are administering that department. I also came to the conclusion that the suspicion created throughout the country with regard to members of parliament trafficking in permits or letters of admission to immigrants from the continental countries of Europe is entirely without foundation so far as any evidence was brought before the committee, and so far as I was able to ascertain by personal investigation of some rumours which were brought to my notice.

Who started all these rumours throughout the country? The very gentlemen opposite who yesterday—

Mr. BENNETT: Name them.

Mr. ROBB: The press of the country carried their names.

Mr. BENNETT: The Toronto Globe—

Mr. ROBB: Does my hon. friend claim that the Toronto Globe is a supporter of this government?

Mr. BENNETT: It is the greatest Liberal newspaper in Canada.

Mr. ROBB: Yesterday hon. gentlemen opposite put up a gentleman from their front benches to say that there was nothing in this campaign that has been carried on. They did not divide the house on their amendment. The motion for the adoption of the committee's report was passed unanimously.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ROBB: Well, some hon. gentlemen called "On division" but there was no one who had the courage to stand up and demand a vote. Having fallen down yesterday, they start afresh this morning with a sniping process against the Minister of Immigration, although in the words of my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Ross) they have not much fault to find with my colleague except that he now sits on this side of the house instead of to your left, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend admitted that when the present Minister of Immigration sat to the left of the Speaker he was a pretty good fellow, and was useful.

Is it not about time, now we are in the last days of the session, that we got down to business? If there is any one who has any real charge to make against the department, let him come out in the open and make his charges. But why this sniping process?

My hon. friend from Kingston emphasized largely that unfortunate McConachie case. No person knows better than my hon. friend, who is himself a medical practitioner, that the head of the department must be guided in such matters by the medical officers, and the medical officers who advise the minister declared that this infant was not such as might be admitted to Canada under the laws of this country. This federal department has also some responsibility towards the provinces, because the provinces say to us: There are certain people you must not admit into this country, because eventually they may become a charge upon the provinces. I venture to say that the province of Ontario, represented by my hon. friend from Kingston, would be one of the first provinces to protest if the government allowed undesirables to come in who eventually might become a charge upon the province.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What about these other cases I quoted, cases of grown-ups who were admitted, yet the baby was refused. Explain that.

Mr. ROBB: They may have come in under a limited permit.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend in his sniping process against my colleague—

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): My sniping is done in the open, and the minister knows it. I made my statement openly, and I asked for an explanation. The minister is not going to use any such words as that to me. We had a ruling yesterday, Mr. Chairman, and it was a strong ruling. I am not sniping. I stand out in the open and make my statement openly, and any statement I make I back up with evidence.

Mr. ROBB: Just let us see that, right now. My hon. friend has charged that the Minister of Immigration of to-day has fallen out with the Salvation Army. I am the minister that fell out with the Salvation Army. That trouble started when I was Minister of Immigration. And why? Because we had complaints from some of the boys brought in by the Salvation Army that the army was taking funds from them contrary to the understanding they had with them. We sent for Commissioner Lamb. I was Minister of Immigration of that day, and I had an understanding with Commissioner Lamb. I pointed out to him the complaints that were coming in from some of these boys. We did not have any quarrel with Commissioner Lamb. We recognized the great work that he was doing, but we wanted to demonstrate to these gentlemen that it was the government of Canada that was carrying on the affairs of this country, and was responsible to the citizens brought into this country, and that if he proposed to continue bringing these immigrants, all he had to do was to observe the regulations laid down by the Department of Immigration. I submit that it is not the government that quarrelled with the army, but it is the army that tried to work this up with the government, and they fell down on it, and I think they themselves recognize that they made a mistake. Why should my hon. friend blame the present Minister of Immigration for my sins? If any person acting on behalf of the Salvation Army has any quarrel, do not take it up with the present Minister of Immigration, because I am the man who is to blame.

I am sorry I have detained the house so long. I simply rose to say that having considered the report of the immigration committee all day yesterday, a report which was unanimously adopted without anyone dividing the house, why should the business of the house be further delayed by attacks from here, there and the other part of the house—attacks which I regard as a Tory attempt to work up public opinion against the Department of Immigration, simply continuing the attack that failed during the session and in the committee. Let us now get down to business and vote supply, and go on with the business of the country.

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to say to the Minister of Finance that there will be no voting of supply if he continues to make speeches such as he has now made. I desire to say further to him that if he proposes to make inaccurate statements this house will not continue to vote supply. He said, as a minister of the crown, a few moments ago that there was an unanimous report adopted by the committee on immigration. Such was not the fact ,and it was stated here yesterday that such was not the fact. It is repeated here again to-day that such was not the fact. The minister knows it is not the fact, and he should not continue to make these observations. The Minister of Finance further stated a moment ago that this house unanimously adopted the report yesterday. He knows that it was carried on division, and was so stated. That indicated there were a number of members who did not agree with the report, but that the house did not vote upon it. He knows that is not a new custom. It was carried on by his own government, it was carried on when he was in opposition, and it will be carried on until the end of our parliamentary institutions. A vote was not taken in order to save time. But there will be votes taken before the conclusion of this session, if that is what the Minister of Finance wants. To-day or Saturday, whenever this session ends, he will have votes on concurrence, on his supply bill. I assure him of that here and now. If that is what he wants, if it is what the Minister of Railways wants, they will both get it.

Mr. DUNNING: It is better than talk.

Mr. BENNETT: Three times the Minister of Finance used the word "sniping." What is sniping? It is shooting from ambush or behind cover. The member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) was not sniping.

An hon. MEMBER: He is always responsible for it, though.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: No one in this house, whether minister or private member, can charge the hon. member for Kingston with sniping. Such a charge is absolutely devoid of truth. The member for Kingston charged the Minister of Immigration with dereliction of duty, and gave particulars. Then the Minister of Finance said the member was sniping. Does he think it is going to advance the business of this house to talk about sniping in connection with a charge that is frankly and openly made and that requires an answer, and to which an answer must be given by the head of the department, not by somebody else on his behalf. This capable minister, whose funeral oration was delivered last evening by the Prime Minister, cannot look to the Minister of Finance to make his defence. Let him make his own defence, and let him make his own replies with respect to questions that he is asked. He was asked a reasonable question on supply by a member of this house. Every member is entitled to a reasonable answer with respect to supply. That is the sniping that is charged against the member for Kingston. I say it is unworthy of the Minister of Finance to make such a charge in view of what took place. That is not going to carry estimates in this house.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, we can stay here as long as you can. There is no need to threaten.

Mr. BENNETT: We are not threatening.

Mr. DUNNING: Every word is a threat.

Mr. BENNETT: We are standing on our constitutional rights, and they are not going to be taken away from us by the Minister of Finance trying to block supply.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Temperamental.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a bit.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Chairman, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has favoured me with a few very complimentary sentences since this debate began, and I am going to reply to him in exactly the same tone. I say that both from experience and temperamentally he is not suited to be the leader of a great party. I tell the hon. member that what he has said is very cheap stuff. If I have made mistakes, if I am unable to conduct the business of this department, I want him to tell me in specific terms what are my failures. He has made general statements about a broad vision; great schemes; millions of dollars might be lost; there might be failures—all these general statements he made and then recited them over again. That is the kind of stuff that has been handed out to this house and lauded as broadness of vision, as big ideas that will amount to something. What have I got from that side of the house this session? I came in at the beginning of the session as Minister of Immigration and Colonization, anxious and willing to listen to any suggestion that might be constructive, that might help me to carry on the department to the best advantage of Canada as a whole. At the close of this session, Mr. Chairman, I am without one constructive idea; I have not one thought that will help me in any way to carry on the department to better advantage. But I have got sneers—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Abuse.

Mr. FORKE: Yes, and abuse; and I have been told that I am lacking in capacity and ability. I think if my hon. friend will go back to the province of Manitoba he will find that I have made a reputation in that province during the past forty years, that I have done something for the province. I want to say without egotism that I doubt if there is a man in Manitoba who has played so large a part in the public affairs of that province as I have during the last forty years. I am willing to leave it to the people who know me best, who have known me during the years of my maturity, to deal with the cheap sneers about my mentality, and about Sarah! I do not feel that my mental powers are less than they were, and I hope for long years to come to be able to carry on public business. It seems to me it does not lend dignity to the house to indulge in that sort of debate. I am willing to take all the blame for the mistakes I have made, but I think hon. members might at least have the decency to observe the amenities in speaking of a man's private life or his capacity.

Mr. DONNELLY: Mr. Chairman, a good deal has been said to-day and yesterday concerning the report brought in by the agriculture committee and the statement has been made that it was not unanimous. I sat on the committee and the sub committee and helped to draft the report. There was one portion of it which did not meet with general agreement, and it was carried on division. I want to lay that part before the house. We divided on the advisability of taking up the transportation question with respect to immigrants from the old country, and it was decided that we should recomend the granting of cheap fares to those immigrants up to the teen ages; but when we came to the question of extending the same right to our own people, the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) objected. This was the section upon which we divided, and I wish to place it before the house. It appears on page 8 of the report:

> The committee also recommends that measures be taken to ascertain whether the railways will restore the homeseekers' rates in effect prior to the war, making such rates effective eastbound as well as westbound.

In other words, we were to get in touch with the railways and see if we could get cheap rates for Canadians, because otherwise it seemed to us that they were discriminated against. For instance, a man living in Detroit can get a cheap rate to western Canada, but if he lives in Windsor he has to pay the full rate. We did not feel it was fair and square to treat Americans better than our own people, and we though we should get the same rate for Canadians who want to go west. That was the only thing on which we asked for a division.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the clause referred to by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Donnelly), he has not correctly represented my objections to that particular clause. He cannot be ignorant of the reasons I gave, for I not only gave them before the committee and the subcommittee, but in my remarks yesterday I stated very clearly my objection to including that clause in the agreement, or anything in the nature of that clause in the subamendment moved by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). I stated that a reduction of rates to move Canadians from one province to another was not a matter of immigration but of internal business of the country, and that while it was proper for a member to propose it in the house and get the judgment of the house thereon, it should not be taken up by us in the committee as a matter of immigration. I believe I am absolutely logical in taking that ground. I do not think there is any use labouring that point further; I have stated my position on it. I am convinced that my own position is a logical one and if the hon. gentleman is inclined to differ from it, that is his privilege.

Mr. MILLAR: Was the hon. member for Willow Bunch correct in saying that that was the only clause to which dissent was taken in the report?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Not exactly.

Mr. MILLAR: What other clause?

Mr. COOTE: I rise to a point of order. I think it is a well known rule in this house that proceedings in a committee, especially of a meeting which is held in camera, should not afterwards be discussed in this house; at least statements made in that committee should not be used in discussions in the house. I think that is a rule of this house; I ask whether that is correct. Hon. members in considering the matter should not refer, at least in detail, to discussions that took place in committee.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I have not done so. I have referred directly to matters in the hands of every hon. member in the house, contained on page 8 of the report of the committee, and referred to in somewhat different language in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. I have not gone into details. I can go into details and give my reasons more extensively than I have done, but I have refrained from doing so. I do not see anything to be gained by labouring the point. I have stated my position, which I still believe is a logical one, and I allow others who differ from me to do so.

But I want to make a remark or two in regard to what has been said by the Minister of Finance about sniping. I should think that the Minister of Finance has been long enough a member of the House of Commons, and has had sufficient experience, to try out some new method whereby to have his own way in this house, rather than to use the old threadbare methods which he has used for so many years. It is a very common practice of the Minister of Finance when he wants to get his estimates through, or the estimates of some other minister, or when he wants to block or prevent as far as possible any criticism of the government, to refer, just as he has done to-day, to the sniping methods of the opposition. I believe he was sitting in the house this morning when the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) brought to the attention of the Minister of Immigration as well as to that of the government a most shameful condition of affairs in his province. I sat here expecting that the Minister of Immigration would rise and give to that hon. gentleman some satisfaction as to what the government intended to do. But he did not do so. He sat there like a graven image. Not only did he sit there, but the Minister of Justice, the Minister of the Interior, the Prime Minister and these other ministers in the front row thought it was a matter of no concern at all. I presume that in the opinion of the Minister of Finance the information given by the hon. member for West Kootenay, to which he directed the attention of the department, is a species of sniping. We must not refer to anything of that kind because we are sniping, blocking the estimates. He must have included the references made by the hon. member for West Kootenay when he used the word "sniping". Could anything have happened in this house this morning which would justify to a greater extent any reference made to the inefficiency of the Immigration department, of the minister himself and of the government backing that minister, than the fact that what was brought to the attention of this house by the hon. member for West Kootenay was passed over by all the front row galaxy of notables and brilliant intellects of the cabinet?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Thanks for the ironical cheers. Just think for one moment of what was brought to the attention of the government by the hon. member for West Kootenay—a most disgraceful state of affairs in this country; and not a word of explanation. It was passed over by all this front line of brilliancy and not a word said in explanation. The hon. member for West Kootenay brought to the attention of this government a matter of very great importance and asked what the government were prepared to do, or what they would do along that line. He hinted or intimated to the government that deportation proceedings should be undertaken and he also hinted that the law should be changed, if necessary, in order to give the government the necessary power to send out of the country, no mattter how long they had been here, people who conduct themselves in the manner he indicated. It was not hearsay; the hon. gentleman, as in the case of the hon. member for Kingston, brought the facts to the attention of the department. And when we bring the facts to the attention of the department, we are told by the Minister of Finance that we are blocking the business of the house; we are engaged in sniping, in calling attention to any deficiencies of the department and of the government. We can stay for the next six months—

Some hon. MEMBERS: So can we.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, for the next six months. The government have some of the qualities of the sponge: they can absorb all the bouquets and complimentary references to themselves, but you must not make criticism; otherwise in the opinion of the Minister of Finance, you are sniping the government. You must not do anything of that kind. "Hand us bouquets and we will cover ourselves with the flowers you send us; but don't offer criticism because you are blocking the estimates. You are being unfair to the poor Minister of Immigration if you offer criticism of his estimates".

Mr. FORKE: The Minister of Immigration can stand it.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not believe the Minister of Immigration takes that position himself. I should be surprised if any man of the Scotch race, to which he belongs, would take that position. The Minister of Immigration did not get up this morning and accuse hon. members of sniping at him because we offered criticism of his department; that remained for the Minister of Finance, following out his usual tactics in this house when he wants his own way. He has been long enough a member to try to work out some new method instead of using the old threadbare methods he has used for some time to a disgusting degree.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to say a word with respect to the complaint registered by my hon. friend from West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) and stated again by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington. Surely both hon. gentlemen have been long enough in the house to know what the law is with respect to lawbreaking. My hon. friend made one statement that is hardly correct. When the direct question was asked by the hon. member for West Kootenay as to whether more Doukhobors would come in, the answer was given, No. With respect to the complaint regarding the conduct of these people in British Columbia, they are citizens of Canada. The Department of the Interior, my hon. friend knows full well, deport people when they are found to have committed any crime calling for deportation, and so recommended by local justices of the peace, when such persons have not been in the country five years.

Mr. BENNETT: The Department of Immigration.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes; I mean Immigration. Surely that is well known; my hon. friend knows that full well.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I know it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Then why the complaint that you are not receiving an answer? The situation is purely provincial; but if the individual has been in the country less than five years, in the event of any complaint, inquiries are made by the Department of Immigration and responsibility taken for his deportation.

I do not want to complain of the attitude of any individual of this house, nor do I wish to ward off criticism. Let us have it to the fullest extent; it is helpful. But as a minister in this government I do resent the constant reflections that are made upon the personal ability and mentality of members of the administration. I do resent that, and I want to say most emphatically but without any display of egotism that I think the members of the front row on this side will bear comparison with any member on the opposite side of the house. I have never refused to give an answer to any correct criticism, but I do resent very strongly being credited with not having sufficient mentality to size up any given subject with which I have to deal, and I know every other minister is in the same position. I want to say to hon. members opposite that that is a favorite pastime of theirs, but if they will couch their requests in parliamentary language I am sure they will always receive the most courteous treatment and replies from members on this side. May I plead, Mr. Chairman, that the decent amenities of the house receive some attention in that respect? Beyond that I have nothing to say; let us have reasonable and fair questions and they will receive courteous and decent answers.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Personally I think the minister should welcome some reflections from this side of the house as to the wonderful mentality of hon. gentlemen opposite, if for no other reason than that a little difference of opinion might make hon. gentlemen opposite a little more humble. I want to ask the minister a question: He listened to the case presented by the hon. member for West Kootenay; the Minister of Immigration did not reply, and no one had anything to offer for him. There was hardly a word said.

Mr. DUNNING: The question relating to his department was answered by the minister.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The one question of whether he was favourable to admitting more of these immigrants was answered, and he said he was not.

Mr. DUNNING: That was the question affecting his department.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That was an afterthought. No reply was made by any member of the government to the matter of deportation, which was brought up by the hon. member for West Kootenay. Now I want to ask the Minister of the Interior this question: In view of the representation made by the hon. member for West Kootenay and in view of the disclosures he made this morning, does not the minister think some change should be made in our laws with regard to deportation which would enable the government of Canada to deal with cases such as that mentioned by the hon. member for West Kootenay even after the five year term has expired?

Mr. DUNNING: You must have a place to send them.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not care where you send them.

Mr. FORKE: These people came here in 1903.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Hon. members will remember that in the debate yesterday we were told that we were not giving these foreigners a fair show because we were imposing our ideas upon them. For God's sake let us impose some ideas upon people of that stamp, because the hon. member for West Kootenay is absolutely right. We should apologize to ordinary four-legged animals if we made any comparison as between them and those people to whom the hon. member especially referred. I say there is something wrong with our system of government if we have not the necessary machinery to put people of that class out of this country, even if they have been here for a longer period than five years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will arrange for a domicile longer than five years he will find his question easily answered, but my hon. friend knows that if any individual residing in a province breaks the common law of the province, then the provincial authorities take control. That has happened with the Doukhobors previously; they were arrested for travelling about naked in British Columbia, and they were restrained in the province of Saskatchewan. All these things are unfortunate, but these people are citizens of our country and must be amenable to our common law. If that common law is not sufficiently strong to deal with cases of this kind then let us amend it, but when the answer is made to the direct question and the statement made that no more of these people will be admitted, the Department of Immigration has gone the full length in that respect. These people are here and they are citizens of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: Are they naturalized?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They have been here for a greater period than five years.

Mr. BENNETT: But are they naturalized?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as I know many of them are naturalized. I am not aware whether or not these particular people under discussion are naturalized, but as a matter of fact my hon. friend knows very well that they cannot be deported to their own country after they have been here that length of time.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes they can, if they are not naturalized.

Mr. FORKE: The great majority of these people came here in 1903; they now have children twenty years of age who were born in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but I was trying to ask the minister if he knows whether or not these people are naturalized. I must confess that I do not know; at one time my information was that they declined to become naturalized.

Mr. DUNNING: Having had some association with that small minority of the Doukhobors in my own province which created some difficulty, may I say in fairness to the thousands of good citizens who are law-abiding Canadian citizens and who are also members of the universal brotherhood known as the Doukhobors, which is a religious body with very high principles, that to label them all with the sins committed by a few people in Saskatchewan some years ago or in British Columbia to-day would be distinctly unfair. I think my hon. friend the leader of the opposition knows something of the situation in that regard. The great bulk of the Doukhobor people have proven to be good law-abiding citizens; they have a community ownership of property and so on. In answer to my hon. friend I might say that a great number of them from time to time have gone out of the community and become what are known as independent Doukhobors. My own opinion would be that to-day in Saskatchewan there are probably more independent Doukhobors than community Doukhobors. I may be wrong as to that; there are a great number in any event, and perhaps my hon. friend from Mackenzie could speak with more authority.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think probably four-fifths would be non-community Doukhobors.

Mr. DUNNING: And that means that they have reached that stage in their assimilation of our Canadian citizenship. The independent Doukhobor does apply for naturalization, and with respect to those people naturalization has been going on for years. As to the proportion naturalized I am not able to say.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it correct to say that the so-called fanatics, not using that word offensively at all, do not become naturalized? That was my information.

Mr. DUNNING: I think perhaps my hon. friend may be right with respect to that, but I remember that on a previous occasion I had reason to look into the matter of deportation, and of course immediately the question arose having regard to the changes which have taken place in the country from which they came. I do not believe that in the last few years we have succeeded in deportation proceedings with respect to people who came from that country a good many years ago, although they are not naturalized citizens of Canada. However, I really rose to speak in fairness to the great body of Doukhobors, because I know they are really assimilating Canadian citizenship; they are becoming good Canadian citizens and their children are attending the public schools. As far as the principles of their religion go, I believe they would compare favourably with any others.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I should think they would remain nationals of their own country until they became naturalized citizens of Canada.

Mr. ESLING: I was very particular to confine my request as to deportation, or as to some other means of controlling these people, to the radical fanatics. I made no reference at all to the community as a whole except to say that there was a very extensive community of industrious Doukhobors. My references were to the religious fanatics who to-day are offending the public by exhibitions of absolute nakedness. In order to bring this right home, I would like to know what the Prime Minister would think if he went into his garden in the morning to pick some pansies or violets and was confronted by six naked Doukhobors.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would send for my hon. friends the leader of the opposition and the leader of the Progressive party.

Mr. BENNETT: There would be a riot if you overlooked your own supporters.

Mr. ESLING: You may treat this matter with all the humour you wish, but I want to say that the home and the sanctity of his surroundings are just as dear to the settler in West Kootenay as they are to the Prime Minister. You might just as well say that your wives and children are to be offended by the exhibition of Doukhobors on these Ottawa driveways. These factions to whom I have referred are just a fraction of the community, but they are in the habit of going on these rampages.

I do not want to be too persistent in bringing this matter to the attention of the Minister of Immigration, and perhaps I should address my remarks to the Minister of Justice or to the Prime Minister. I would ask them if the government will not take some means of controlling these fanatics who are offending the general public. Some of these people are naturalized, but not many of them, and I know just as well as the Minister of the Interior knows that the province is responsible for the enforcement of the law. But this government should share that responsibility, because they brought these people into the country under certain conditions, such as exempting them from military service. They not only brought them here but they bonused them to come here. We talk about undesirables being sent out of the country. Surely this fanatical faction would come in that category, when they stand on the street corners and openly defy the laws of Canada. You can look at any of our local papers issued during the last three weeks and you will see the situation which now exists. I ask the government if they will not take steps to remedy this situation. I do not say it should be by immediate deportation if the legality of such proceeding is questioned, but I would ask if the immigration laws could not be amended to provide for deportation or some other means of controlling this radical faction of Doukhobors who are offensive to everybody.

This is a serious matter, and I am not going to be shouted down. The people of West Kootenay want to know if this government is going to take any action to control these radical fanatics.

Mr. SPENCE: It has been said that a great deal of time has been lost in discussing this problem, but I think the government brought it upon itself when the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) asked the Minister of Immigration certain questions. He proceeded to explain how these Doukhobors went around naked and so on, and it was the duty of the Minister of Justice or even the Prime Minister to get up and give the hon. member for West Kootenay some assurance that some drastic measures would be taken to stop the whole thing. There is no use of the government benches blaming our party for this discussion, because they are the ones to blame when they were not frank enough with the hon. member when he asked certain questions.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend from West Kootenay has brought up a matter which has been of interest to the people of British Columbia for many years. My hon. friend did not inform the house that when Mr. McBride was Premier of British Columbia he had trouble with the Doukhobor settlement. He appointed Mr. Blackmore to examine into that colony, and if my hon. friend will read Mr. Blackmore's report he will find that it was not unfavourable to the Doukhobor settlement in West Kootenay. In addition to that there has been trouble over the burning of schoolhouses, but my hon. friend knows that the late Mr. Oliver, on a visit to Grand Forks, in the area where these so-called fanatics live, definitely stated to the Doukhobors that the laws of Canada would be enforced.

Mr. ESLING: Did I not make my statement clear enough to the minister to convey to him the fact that these are the conditions existing to-day and not three or four years ago?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): These conditions existed many years ago, but Mr. Oliver stated in the presence of some hundreds of these people that the laws of the province and of the Dominion would be enforced.

Mr. ESLING: But they are not being enforced to-day.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The children from these colonies are going to school, and I think the government of British Columbia is effectively dealing with the question. I know that the present premier, who comes from that district, is fully familiar with the situation, and he is endeavouring to bring these people within the laws of the province and the Dominion. It is said that the administration of the law is a provincial matter, but I think these people are being effectively dealt with as far as the provincial government is concerned.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am very glad that the member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) has definitely limited his statements; it would be too bad if the impression should go abroad that any large number of the Doukhobor people were of the extreme fanatic type which he has described. I think he must recognize that there are only a few score of these extreme fanatics, and they are separated from the main body of the community, and are living on the outskirts. It is probable that they were responsible for the burning of the schoolhouses. They have been practically excommunicated and are feared by the community Doukhobors themselves.

As the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment (Mr. King) has just said, anyone who has read the report of Mr. Blackmore of a few years ago, will know that it is there conceded, notwithstanding some allegations that have been made by the merchants of Nelson against these people because they work on a cooperative plan that there is no crime and no poverty existing among them. The majority of them are not even members of the community organization, and are gradually fitting themselves into our life in every way.

I recall being present at a conference of young Doukhobor people held in central Saskatchewan just three years ago. They were meeting together to consider how they could best take their places in our Canadian life. The leader of that conference was a lawyer of Saskatoon, a Doukhobor and a graduate of Saskatchewan university. The thirty or forty young people who were present were all high school, normal school or university students. So far as I could see they were indistinguishable from any similar group of young Canadian people. One of the leaders at that conference was a gentleman from Philadelphia belonging to the Society of Friends, and the conversations and discussions were of the most earnest character. As I have said, I think it would be most unfortunate if the impression should go out that anything like a large proportion of these people were fanatics. In many ways they are among the very best people we have whether they live in Saskatchewan or Alberta, where a few of them are located, or out in British Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I wish to endorse what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said. Perhaps a word or two as to the origin of the Doukhobor sect and as to what they believe in might not be out of place at this time. The Doukhobors as they came to Canada were followers of Count Tolstoi. As most hon. members are aware, Tolstoi took Christ's teaching literally; he accepted literally and actually what Christ said, and he believed that it should be followed in a practical way not only on Sunday but in daily life. The result was the building up of a system or community which is referred to as Christian communism. They believe in non-resistance; they accept absolutely and literally the command "Thou shalt not kill". Some twenty-five years ago I had my first contact with this sect when I was shooting ducks on a slough in northern Saskatchewan. After I had been successful in bagging two or three ducks I heard a great deal of noise behind me and I found twenty or thirty husky Doukhobors with pitchforks in their hands racing down the hillside. They had left their farm-work and they were after me with righteous indignation because I had killed those ducks. I thought discretion was the better part of valour at that particular time and I got out of there as quickly as possible.

I have seen prairie chicken and wild game of various kinds feeding with domestic chicken in their yards in the villages, because those wild creatures very soon came to know that they were perfectly safe there. That was the basis of their belief. Under no circumstances would they touch meat. Under no circumstances would they drink intoxicating liquor or smoke tobacco. I have never seen anywhere in my life a better example of a really Christian community than I have seen in those Doukhobor villages. They were people of meticulously clean habits; they were moral to the extreme. Certainly they had some ideas to which we could not subscribe, but on the whole they were the very finest and best types of citizens and we never could find any fault with the Doukhobor communities.

Later on there came a stage where the communities started to break up and some of their young men were becoming Canadians. That is, they learned some of the habits of the Canadian boys, such as playing poker, drinking whisky and smoking tobacco. Some of them are quite Canadianized now. The larger number, I would say about eighty per cent of those in Saskatchewan, have now left the community and they are out on their own farms. Most of them have taken out naturalization papers. The other small number left in the communities are still carrying on in very much the same way as they did twenty-five years ago. There was in Saskatchewan about twenty or twenty-five years ago a number of this fanatical section to which the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) refers, and I remember, and I presume a good many hon. members will recall the time, when we had to marshal almost all the mounted police who were then on duty in Saskatchewan to follow a number of these men and women who had gone on a trek looking for the Messiah and fore-warning the country. They were finally taken back. They were forced to wear their clothes and after serving a term in gaol they went back to their villages. After that there was no further trouble in Saskatchewan. As regards the older section, those who are still living in the communities object in many ways to our educational institutions, but those who have left the communities certainly have no such objection. They have no prejudice against our institutions or against our language. The children are to-day learning the English language in our schools and many of the young men and women are going to our universities. I say, with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it would be unfortunate if the impression went out that this condition was general.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. COOTE: I hesitate to take any time of the committee at this stage, but certainly during the debate things have been said to which I should like to refer and particularly the statement which has been made so often that the committee on agriculture and colonization were entirely unanimous in regard to the report. It is impossible to secure unanimity of opinion among forty members of the house on a matter such as immigration. I do not suppose there is any subject which comes before the house on which such a variety of opinion is held by members. The committee had to make a report to the house and the report which is made, I think, comes nearest to being something that could be passed by the committee. It is arrived at as a compromise amongst the different members of the committee. Many of us agreed to the passing of the report with several mental reservations. Speaking for myself, if I had had my way the committee would have reported against further assisted immigration of any kind, including assisted passages or free passages for boys, domestic servants or agricultural workers. My opinion is that the majority of the committee are in favour of largely cutting out assisted immigration, but this is not contained in the report and so I will not say anything further about it.

The attitude of the organized farmers in Canada will be found in the evidence of the committee. I am not going to read it here, but I will read just a few sentences from a letter which I have received from the secretary of the United Farmers of Saskatchewan. He writes:

> We are opposed to the idea of the bringing in of immigrants purely for the purpose of settling up our vacant lands in order to provide revenue for transportation companies and pay an exorbitant toll to eastern industries.

I am opposed to the committee embarking upon any more colonization schemes. Our experience in the soldier land settlement scheme should convince us of the wisdom of leaving those things very much alone. Personally I should not like to see another dollar put into them. If we could forget about immigration and endeavour to make conditions right in this country, make them such that our people would find it advantageous to stay here, it would not be very long until our chief concern regarding immigration would be to have a very efficient medical inspection system which would keep out the undesirables.

I should like to remind the committee of some remarks I made last week in regard to the insufficient salaries which we are paying to men engaged in research and scientific work in Canada. Since I made those remarks I have received from a friend in Ontario a letter telling me about meeting in Washington a man who was at one time in the government service of this country. That gentleman is now engaged in the United States civil service at double the salary he was earning here. He said to this friend of mine:

> Tell the people at home not to be crediting this country's progress so much to the immense amount of money it controls, but to the intelligence with which it is dealing with many of its problems.

I should like to take the opportunity of telling this to the people of Canada. If we would spend as much money on scientific agriculture and scientific research in many other lines as we spend on immigration, we would get much better results. The United States, which has received more immigration than any country we have any record of, at least in modern times, never spent one dollar on immigration propaganda. The only money it spends on immigration is for the examination of immigrants who come voluntarily. I should like to see in future this country lay the emphasis on quality rather than quantity. While I am on my feet I should like to suggest that the government, through the Department of Immigration, should be the sole agency for the issuing of propaganda and for the securing of immigrants who are brought to this country. I hope that cooperation with the provinces will be secured; that the provinces will place their requests for immigrants with the federal Department of Immigration, and that they shall be secured through the agency of that department alone. All grants to immigration aid societies should be absolutely discontinued.

I should like very briefly to bring to the attention of the committee the case of a family brought into Canada by the Scottish Immigrant Aid Society, a society which I believe is to receive a grant from the government this year. This man and his family were brought from some place in Ireland. They were, to use an expression which I have seen in the press, dumped off at Pincher Station, Alberta. The man was supposed to go to work for a farmer in that district but the farmer when communicated with said that he had agreed to take a hired man and not a man with seven children. This man and his family became a charge upon the community but following communication by the municipal authorities with the Scottish Immigrant Aid Society that organization have more or less cared for them. According to the statement of the society the family has already cost them $800. I am now advised by the rural municipality in that district that they have had to guarantee the doctor's bill, amounting to $62, and the funeral expenses amounting to $75 of this man's wife, who has unfortunately died since coming to this country. The man himself finally asked for deportation but the department would not agree to that. I think they have made a great mistake. Six out of seven of the children have been reported upon by the local doctors as being medically unfit and they are sooner or later going to become a charge upon somebody in that province. Somebody will have to be responsible for them. One child was in the hospital I think for two months. This may be an isolated case, but it is not the only one and cases like this should convince us of the wisdom of confining all immigration activities to our own department. If the department will take that attitude I will do anything I can to support them in that policy. I do not believe in granting money to the Scottish Immigrant Aid Society, the Salvation Army, or any other society engaged in immigration work. If these people want to continue their immigration activities I do not suppose we can stop them, but it is not a proper policy for the government to take money out of the public treasury and give it to these people to assist immigrants in whom they have some particular interest. I should like to see the government give the Salvation Army in Canada a grant, because they are doing splendid work amongst the destitute people of this country, but I do not think we should give them a grant to go out and bring to us more people many of whom, I am sure, will become to some extent a charge upon the country. I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the committee.

Mr. STEVENS: Hear, hear.

Mr. COOTE: I am glad to hear that "hear, hear", from hon. gentlemen who consumed a day and a half—

Mr. STEVENS: No; most of the talk was over there.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to quote to the committee the concluding portion of an address by Premier Stanley Baldwin which he delivered in London, England, shortly after he returned from his visit to Canada last year. He said:

> Canada has an enormous future and, if it be not impertinent to say so to Canadians, I would say: The future is with you; do not be in too much of a hurry. Your country is a country for virile races. Quality before quantity any day. Build up with the best. What does it matter if it is a hundred years or more before your country is full? Keep the stock you have, and the men and women you have, and see to it that the coming generations are in no whit inferior to them. I have often thought that it is a dangerous thing to the morale of a nation to get rich quickly, as it is to an individual. Time is on your side. Maintain the values; maintain the standards; and may the prayer of Canada always be the prayer of the Greek sailor, which has been preserved for us by Seneca: "God, you may save me if you will; you may sink me if you will; but whatever happens, I will always keep my rudder true."

I think our policy should be to make Canada a land which her own people will love and in which they may prosper. If we would lay that down as our policy and forget about the securing of immigrants I think we would be far more successful even in attracting the right kind of immigrants than is possible under the present policy of pumping in immigrants, regardless of the nature of the propaganda or the expense that is necessary to secure them.

Mr. JACOBS: I would remind my hon. friend that the only people in this country who are not immigrants or the descendants of immigrants are Indians.

Mr. COOTE: I agree with my hon. friend. I am not objecting to immigrants, but the people who came here and built up this country did not have their passage paid; they came here of their own free will.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the observations of the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Forke) this morning. Had he taken the trouble to recall my remarks he would realize that I spoke in the very highest terms of his character, of his integrity and of his worth. I could not, had I been his warmest friend, have spoken in any higher terms of praise. But I conceive it to be the right of those who are in parliament, as it had been the right for centuries in England, to discuss the qualifications of any minister for a particular post. I took the trouble during recess to peruse the observations made in the British House of Commons with respect to a certain judge of the high court in connection with the discharge of his duties. I find that the present Lord Buckmaster spoke of the learned judge as having been guilty of folly and referred to his qualifications to discharge his duties. I find also that Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman dealt with the matter in much the same way. It would be a sorry day for this parliament if the great traditions and practice of the mother of parliaments to discuss the qualifications of ministers to discharge the duties of their office were no longer to be honoured by those who sit either to your right or your left, Mr. Chairman. Those who recall the language used by Lord Randolph Churchill in discussing so great a man as Mr. Gladstone are aware that on more than one occasion he employed some very strong terms.

Mr. DUNNING: But even by Churchill's friends his language was not generally considered to be creditable.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not referring to what he said on the hustings, but to the language he used in the House of Commons, language very much stronger than my criticism of the Minister of Immigration. I discussed—and as long as I have a seat in this house I propose to discuss—to the best of my ability what I conceived to be the fitness of the hon. minister to perform the duties of his office. If I am ever charged with ministerial responsibility I shall expect the same measure of criticism from my opponents; I shall ask for no different treatment in that regard than that which I myself give. It is surely certain that a man eminent for his abilities in a certain walk of life may find himself in a public position for which he is entirely unfitted. For example, a man may be a great surgeon, but it does not follow that he is thereby fitted to be a great home secretary; or he may be a very able lawyer and yet lacking the ability to become a great chancellor of the exchequer. His training, his environment, his attitude of mind—all these things may wholly unfit him to hold a portfolio, and it is the duty of members of the House of Commons to be free and frank in their criticism of such a minister. My hon. friend was wholly opposed to the long traditions and history of parliament when he said that the members of this house have no right to discuss in any terms they please the aptitude of a minister to discharge the duties of his office. If an imbecile were placed in a position of trust as a minister of the crown every member would have the right to discuss and criticize the appointment. If some man, wholly unfitted in every possible way for the discharge of ministerial duties, is given a portfolio of which he knows nothing, we have a perfect right to discuss that, although he may be a most desirable citizen and a man of eminent attainments. While the minister we have discussed is a man of the highest character, a man of unquestioned integrity, a man who has made a very great contribution to the life of western Canada, it does not follow that he is fitted to discharge the high duties of the head of the Immigration department, or to give it that lead which is necessary for it to succeed. His complaint of a lack of suggestions from this house but accentuates our contention that leadership should come from the head of the department, and not be forced upon him by the members of the house, who, as they sit to your right, sir, support all the measures of the government, and who, as they are members of the opposition, support those measures which they deem desirable, and frankly criticize other measures which in their opinion are not in the public interest.

That is the position I desire to make clear, Mr. Chairman. I am very certain that if the hon. gentleman will be good enough to refer to Hansard he will observe that no better or higher tribute to his sterling worth, to his qualities of heart, to his high sense of duty, to his known integrity and character, could have been paid him than my tribute yesterday. But that will not deter me from fearlessly criticizing his fitness to discharge the duties which he undertook when he became the head of the Department of Immigration and Colonization.

Mr. LUCAS: Who is responsible for the newly arrived immigrant who becomes a public charge on the community?

Mr. FORKE: There is no other provision but deportation.

Mr. LUCAS: But before deportation who would be responsible?

Mr. FORKE: The local authorities. As reeve of a western municipality for twenty years I know all about that trouble.

Mr. LUCAS: Does the minister really think that is a fair burden to impose on the municipality? In my view that is one of the things that in western Canada creates public opinion against further immigration. A few days ago I received a letter from a gentleman at Killam, in which he says:

> I am writing to obtain a little information from you if it won't put you to too much trouble.
> I am secretary of the local colonization board formed by the C.P.R. to look after the immigrants arriving and to find them work with the farmers.

Then he gives the name of a newly arrived Scotchman and continues:

> He arrived here in April with very little money in his pocket, and engaged with a farmer. About ten days ago the man took sick with pneumonia and was brought to the local hospital for attention. He was in a delirious state and dangerously sick, and still is, his chief mental worry being that he had not the means to pay the expenses of the hospital and doctor. The doctor rang me up to ask who was responsible for this man's hospital bill. The farmer disclaimed responsibility, also the C.P.R. immigration department, and also the municipality.
> A few days later another immigrant, from Czechoslovakia came into the hospital sick with pneumonia and with no money. Their expenses will probably amount to $200 and $100 respectively.

This amount, Mr. Chairman, is saddled on the hospital in that instance. While someone might have to bear the expense I do not think it should rest on the hospitals in these various communities. Under the present system the municipalities are not responsible for the care of immigrants until they are three months resident in the district, and some provision should be made whereby the party which brings immigrants into the country should be responsible up to that time anyhow.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. FORKE: I admit the hardship that is imposed on municipalities in cases of that kind. There is however, one aspect of the matter that might be taken into consideration. A great many of these immigrants add to the wealth and prosperity of the community, and that must be borne in mind. I admit at the same time that there is a hardship. This very morning I was discussing the problem with my deputy and wondering whether some scheme could not be devised to overcome such difficulties. I cannot exactly see daylight at the present time. Going back probably twenty-five or thirty years ago, I had a good deal to do with hospitals in the province of Manitoba, in Winnipeg particularly, where an effort was made to devise some method of financing, and I can well remember that this was one of the problems considered then. We do not yet seem to have solved it. I realize the difficulty, and if we can possibly find some way out we shall do so. We have discussed the question along the lines of boy immigration, wondering whether we could not adopt some method of the boys themselves paying into a fund and creating resources to take care of sickness and hospital treatment. I can assure my hon. friend that we will look into the matter with a view to finding some solution.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Should not some item, say $2,000, be placed in the estimates to take care of immigrants who become destitute after having been brought in by the federal government?

Mr. LUCAS: Surely the organization that brings immigrants in should bear some responsibility in the matter. The Canadian Pacific brings in people and throws them on the public, and in many cases they are saddled on the municipal hospitals. It is not fair.

Mr. FORKE: That is along the line of our discussion; we have been trying to see whether something cannot be done in that direction.

Mr. GARDINER: Take the case of an immigrant who goes to one of the provinces and becomes a charge on the hospital in the municipality. The doctor performs an operation and thereafter he is deported. In view of the fact that the provincial governments are not responsible and the municipality cannot be responsible for any immigrant until after three months' residence, who will take care of such a situation?

Mr. FORKE: The hospitals are subsidized by the government and by the municipalities, and of course such losses will occur. I know that these problems are difficult to solve, but it must be borne in mind that all hospitals are subsidized to a certain extent both by the municipalities and by the government.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Not by the federal government.

Mr. GARDINER: I have in mind a case that came to my attention recently. A small hospital in a small town was run by a certain doctor. It received a grant from the provincial government for every patient therein treated. That grant amounts to 50 cents per day, whereas the hospital charges, bed and so forth, amount to $3.50 per day. That does not take into account the doctor's bill for attendance on that particular patient. The minister can appreciate the situation. I should think that after thirty years, as he says, some policy should be found by the department of the federal government to take care of a situation of that description. Can the minister give us an assurance that the matter will be dealt with? In my judgment it should be dealt with immediately; we should not wait for another thirty years to elapse.

Mr. FORKE: I am afraid I am unable offhand to offer any real solution for the problem. I do not think however that the hospitals incur very extensive losses in this regard. I admit that hardships occur occasionally, and perhaps the difficulty is greater in the case of smaller hospitals where the income is small, and where a large bill is incurred. But it is not a serious thing. I admit it is unjust; it is not right; and I can only promise that we will do the best we can to solve the problem. I have no solution to offer at the present time.

Mr. GARDINER: The matter is more serious in connection with the small hospitals than the minister supposes. There is no question about that. What will be the position of immigrants brought into the country after undergoing a medical examination by the doctors of the department? After such an examination they contract say, appendicitis, something that could not be foreseen. Surely you would not expect the small hospitals and the doctors to do that work for nothing?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are doing it every day among our own people.

Mr. GARDINER: Because the federal government will not accept responsibility; that is why they do it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They do it every day among our own people.

Mr. GARDINER: I am thinking of the small hospitals; it takes them all their time to keep going. The condition in western Canada, in the rural districts, is different from what it is in eastern Canada. These hospitals cannot afford to handle cases for nothing, because they have not the means; therefore it is incumbent upon the department to devise ways and means to take care of that situation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is unduly alarmed about that aspect of the situation. Can the Department of Immigration be responsible for every immigrant who becomes a public charge? I trust there are not such a great number after all, although there will always be a certain percentage who through some unforunate circumstance will be taken ill and be unable to pay doctors' and hospital bills. But they do not become citizens until they have been five years in the country. My hon. friend will admit at once that the hospitalization and the care of the sick is a matter that is pretty well taken care of by provincial legislation. There is in our own province, from which both he and I come, an arrangement whereby if an individual moves from one municipality to another and is indigent his hospital and professional bills are charged to the municipality in which he resides. It is quite true that in the case of an immigrant who has not been long domiciled it is somewhat difficult to collect. But in that event, unless the man leaves the province, there is always recourse against him for the debt, and it can be collected. The federal government have no machinery of that character. I would suggest that the department give some attention to the case where a man moves out of the province and there can be no recourse against him; when he is cured and is able to earn a salary on which the province or the municipal authorities can collect, something should be done. There is merit in such a case. But after having given the matter some consideration I must confess that, as regards the others, it is pretty difficult to devise a scheme to take care of the situation through federal agency.

Mr. GARDINER: The only class of case to which I have reference is the case where a person has not been resident in the municipality three months. The Minister of the Interior knows that in the province of Alberta the municipality is not responsible for the condition of immigrants until such time as they have resided three months. It is only in reference to immigrants who have not resided three months that I am speaking I am satisfied that $4,000 or $5,000 placed in the estimates would take care of all cases that might occur. It is not a great deal and it is exasperating that the small hospitals and doctors in small towns should have to suffer without any recourse.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not denying the hardship, but I say it is a difficult problem for a federal department of immigration and I do see the merit of the suggestion in a case where the province or the municipality is unable to follow up and collect. But as the individual usually remains in the locality or in the province, these local authorities have the best means in the world to recover. In cases where the individual leaves the province I can see the difficulty, and I would be willing to admit it in the case of a man who had not been in the country for three months.

Mr. GARDINER: That is all I am contending.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I may tell the minister that I have a bill of some $700 for hospital treatment of Czechoslovakians, incurred in the Calgary civic hospital.

Mr. SPENCER: I would like to ask the minister one or two questions with regard to the medical inspection of intending immigrants in Great Britain. I think this inspection is a forward step, but there are a number of things being said with regard to these examinations. I would ask the minister to give the committee a short outline of the procedure followed.

Mr. FORKE: Perhaps the Minister of Health might better do that.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the Minister of Health give me that information?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The medical men overseas are instructed under the Immigration Act to examine the physical and mental qualities of proposed immigrants to ascertain whether or not they are mentally and physically sound and to report. If it is found that the applicant is not of normal mentality, the examiner will so report, and then it is within the judgment of the immigration authorities whether such immigrant shall be admitted. If the applicant suffers from some physical defect the medical examiner will so report. I think that is all there is to it.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. SPENCER: Have the doctors any authority to catechize the would-be immigrant as to what he is going to do, to what place he is going, or what religion he may profess?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister be prepared to say that is not done?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would be quite satisfied to say that; we are only interested in their physical and mental condition.

Mr. SPENCER: Then if these questions were asked, the medical examiners would be hauled over the coals for so doing?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Certainly. I do not know the particular case to which my hon. friend refers, but such an examination would be very much the same as that given any patient by a physician in his office, to ascertain whether he is sound. If the applicant were sound he would be so reported, and if not the report would be made accordingly. I do not quite see what my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there anything on any form which has to be signed by the applicant which asks him to state his religious belief?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not as far as the medical examination is concerned.

Mr. GARDINER: I have had some complaints that that was done by some of the medical examiners in the old country.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would be very much surprised if that is so, because there is no form of that kind.

Mr. QUINN: I want to say a word or two just following up the remarks made this morning by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross). I am not very much impressed by the wonderful tributes paid the Minister of Immigration and Colonization by the Prime Minister, by the Minister of the Interior, by the Minister of Railways and by other hon. gentlemen on the front benches. Notwithstanding what the Prime Minister or any other minister has said, the Minister of Immigration is held up to the judgment not only of the parliament of Canada but of the people of Canada because of his treatment of the McConachie child.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. QUINN: Hon. members opposite do not like that. I am not going into the details; I am not going to review the McConachie case because it is well known, not only in Canada but in other parts of the empire. However, I want to tell the Minister of Immigration that I will criticize him just so long as he ignores me as a member of parliament and so long as he ignores this parliament when we ask him for information with regard to the department under his control. Personally I have asked the minister on three different occasions to tell me what the department intended to do with the McConachie family, but parliament has been ignored by the minister, who has not yet made any statement. I hold in my hand a copy of the Halifax Chronicle, a Liberal paper, and I find the headline:

Government to Aid McConachie Family Re-union.

That is misleading from the very beginning, because the family are not being re-united, although it is true that the mother is being brought back to Canada. The department never had cause to deport her; she was here, but the child was deported and naturally the mother went back to Scotland with the child. I will just read a few lines from the article:

The federal Department of Immigration and Colonization, of which Hon. Robert Forke is the minister, has decided to give some assistance to Mrs. Patrick McConachie, now in Scotland, who leaves in a short time to join her husband and family, now in Glace Bay.

Then it goes on to tell about the child being refused admission to Canada, and proceeds:

The following is an extract from a letter received, this morning, by Mr. Currie, from Mr. Forke's secretary, regarding the department's view of the matter.

"With regard to the matter of the cost of transportation, whilst of course this department cannot accept responsibility for the conditions which resulted in the rejection and return to the British Isles of Mrs. McConachie and her child, yet we very fully appreciate the hardship and embarrassment which resulted from the rejection, and after consultation with the minister I am pleased to be able to inform you that this department, in view of all the circumstances, and without the action taken being considered as a precedent, is prepared to bear the cost of ocean transportation of Mrs. McConachie."

Another item with regard to this family appeared in the same paper under date of May 7, which states:

The letter from Mrs. McConachie stated that the child was much improved in health and pending arrangements for her admission she will remain in the care of an aunt while Mrs. McConachie will come to Glace Bay as soon as arrangements can be completed.

That was what I found fault with when I first brought this matter to the attention of the house. During the discussion with regard to this department in the committee on agriculture and colonization the deputy minister stated that some 3,060 special permits were granted to members of parliament and others for the admission of immigrants to this country. My name was not on the list.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hurrah.

Mr. QUINN: I am not boasting about it; I applied for a permit but my request was not granted, and I claim that this was an instance where the good judgment of the minister could have been displayed. Stating the reasons by telegram and letter, I protested against the deportation of that child, and I still protest; I say the child should have been admitted to the country notwithstanding the regulations of the Department of Immigration, the Department of Health or any other department. McConachie is a British subject; he fought for his country and was here for eighteen months before this happened, and he is justly entitled to that consideration which should be given any British subject or any Canadian citizen. I asked for a special permit to admit the child at least temporarily, and if the department saw fit to deport it later on, well and good. The family would have been perfectly satisfied with that. But that did not happen.

My next complaint is that while we have asked for a statement from the minister, it has never been granted. But the minister, or his secretary, wrote a letter to the defeated candidate in South Cape Breton, a Mr. L. D. Currie, and gave him all the information with regard to the decision of the department. I protest against such treatment.

I do not wish to detain the committee any longer, but I want to take advantage of this vote again to register my protest in regard to the treatment accorded the McConachie family. I also protest against the treatment which members of parliament receive when they ask the Minister of Immigration for information.

Mr. FORKE: I do not wish to go over this McConachie case again and the circumstances connected with the deportation of the child. Suffice it to say that I could do nothing else on account of the ruling of the Department of Justice. This was not the same kind of permit that might have been granted under different circumstances had the mother applied only as a visitor to Canada. But she came as an immigrant, and the child also came as an immigrant, and, according to the Department of Justice, I had no power to do otherwise. The child automatically had to go back. I have been in communication with Mr. McConachie and he has no heat in regard to this matter, and does not seem to feel hurt at myself or the Department of Immigration. He wrote me a very manly letter, and I replied expressing my sympathy for the hardship and trouble he has undergone. I am sorry that this case has been given such a tremendous amount of publicity. It has been no advantage to the family to have themselves held up before the empire as an example of the hardheartedness of the Immigration department. I would gladly have done anything that could be done to lighten the burden of sorrow that came to this family.

I can assure the hon. member that I have never intended to be discourteous to him, and I am sorry that he thinks I have been. In regard to the offer made to Mrs. McConachie, it was made only in a friendly way. In fact, if the department could not do it, I would be glad to pay her passage out of my own pocket.

Mr. QUINN: There are others who would be willing to do the same thing.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Currie called upon the department as a friend of the family and discussed the whole matter. I hope it is true that the child is improving, but all the medical examinations we have had—I am no medical man and I can only take the findings of the medical officers—go to show that the child will not improve; I hope that will not be the case. I understand the child is to be left on the other side. This was stated to me by Mr. McConachie, and it was thought that the child could possibly be left over there and the mother come back and the family would be reunited. I am led to believe that the child will not suffer from the loss of its mother; it would not understand the difference and no hardship will be caused the child by the loss of its mother.

I am free to confess that this case has caused me a good deal of personal sorrow, because I do not think I am without sympathy, although some of the members on the other side of the house seem to think that is the case. I hope this will be the last of the McConachie case. The publicity it has received in Great Britain has done a good deal of harm, and at times the case has not been properly stated. Only the other day I read a statement by a gentleman from England who said that the child was returned simply because it was suffering from a cold. Some people say they are not afraid of a lie, but I am. It takes a long time to kill an untruth, and I have no doubt that this story has done considerable damage. I am sorry that this trouble should have occurred. The family has my sympathy. I hope Mr. McConachie and his little boys will become loyal Canadians and forget the trouble they have gone through during the last year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: While the minister is in a sympathetic humour I want to ask him about a case that has occurred in the city of Guelph. This is not the case of a Scotchman, but of a Welshman. This man lives in Wales, but his mother and children are in Canada, he being a widower. He has always made his own living and supported his own family, but when he wanted to come out here where his mother and children are the authorities say that he is a cripple and cannot come.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Physical disability.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. This man has always supported his family. Why not let him come out? I have forgotten his name for the moment, but I have had a lot of correspondence with the department, and I think in a case of this kind the rules might be relaxed.

Mr. FORKE: I am taking chances every day along the lines that you suggest.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Take another.

Mr. FORKE: I am taking the chance of some member on the other side of the house saying that I am acting contrary to regulations.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I will see there will be no criticism if you do it.

Mr. FORKE: If the case is as you say, we will see the man is admitted.

Item agreed to.

Immigration contingencies and general expenses, including grants to immigration societies, women's hostels, provinces, and loans for stock and equipment for Canadian boys, as may be authorized by the governor general in council, $1,300,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What grants were made last year to the immigration societies in connection with this vote?

Mr. FORKE: The only grants made last year were those to the women's hostels. The figures are as follows:

Halifax	$ 550
Montreal	5,500
Toronto	2,000
Winnipeg	750
Regina	1,000
Calgary	2,500
Vancouver	350

Mr. GARDINER: Does this vote contain any grants to immigration societies? I notice that the next item also provides for grants to immigration societies. Is this government giving loans for stock and equipment under the British Empire settlement scheme?

Mr. FORKE: It is not likely any boys will qualify this year. This scheme is a joint one entered into by the Imperial government, the Dominion government, and the provincial governments, and we are making provision here for loans for stock and equipment in case they may be required this year. The Imperial government, under the scheme, is to loan $1,250, the Dominion government $1,000, and the provincial government, $250, and the boy is supposed to have saved $500 of his own, making a total of $3,000. The loan of $1,000 by the Dominion government will go towards the purchase of stock and equipment and in helping the boy to establish himself on the farm.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this a recent arrangement?

Mr. FORKE: It was entered into last year.

Mr. LUCAS: On page 7 of the details, there are grants to immigration and colonization societies amounting to $150,000. Would the minister give a statement showing how that money is distributed? It is included in item 56.

Mr. FORKE: This amount is to cover the cost of cooperating with the provincial governments in training schools for immigrants, and grants in connection with repatriation and colonization work. The provincial governments who have training centres get a grant of $10 for each boy training at their centres. The province of Ontario, the British Immigration Society in Montreal, and the Manitoba government, are all going into the scheme, for boys between the ages of fourteen and seventeen coming from Great Britain to go on the farm. This amount of $150,000 includes a grant of $50,000 to the Quebec government for repatriation purposes. I might say a few words in explanation of that.

For many years the Department of Immigration made grants to what was known as the repatriation fathers, priests in the province of Quebec who were engaged in the work of going over to the New England states and trying to bring back to this country Canadians who had gone there. Without entering into details, I may say that the department felt that we were not getting adequate returns for the money spent. During the Dominion-provincial conference, I discussed the whole matter with Premier Taschereau, and he was agreeable to undertaking the work of repatriation if the Dominion government would make a grant on a fifty-fifty basis for the purpose. The provincial government in Quebec has been carrying on this work for some time with very satisfactory results, as anyone who listened to that paragraph about returning Canadians coming to Sherbrooke will readily realize. I think the money is being well spent, and that we are getting adequate returns. Under the arrangement the province of Quebec is to make regular returns to the Department of Immigration, showing the results of their activities.

Mr. LUCAS: This is an increased amount over what you were giving to the repatriation fathers, is it not?

Mr. FORKE: It is a slight increase, but I expect that we shall get a great deal more for our money in the way of results. It does not necessarily follow that all this money will be spent. If the province of Quebec spends $50,000 we will spend a like amount; if they spend $40,000, we will spend $40,000, and the continuance of the arrangement will depend upon the results that are obtained.

Mr. LUCAS: Is the government spending any money on repatriation work generally, apart from this vote?

Mr. FORKE: We have made the same proposition to all the provinces. We will do the same for the province of Ontario, for instance. I think the province of New Brunswick has some idea of entering into this scheme and bringing back New Brunswickers. Nova Scotia is also considering it.

Mr. LUCAS: According to the figures in the last report of the department, that for the year 1927, in the year 1924-25, 43,775 Canadian citizens returned from the United States to Canada; in 1925-26, 47,221; 1926-27, 56,957. This was the result apparently without the spending of any money by this government to bring these people back, whereas in connection with the repatriation work of the repatriation fathers, we have paid on on average in the last four years $36,000 a year, and their report shows that in 1924 they brought back only 333 people; 1925, 383; 1926, 829; 1927, 926, or a total of 2,511 in four years. Yet we are paying them on an average $36,000 a year. It seems to me that we are paying an excessive amount for the work these people are doing.

Mr. FORKE: In regard to returning Canadians, we have a great many agencies at work other than the repatriation agency in Quebec. We have in the United States eighteen agencies that are engaged, not in repatriation work especially, but in the getting of immigrants, and of course as opportunity arises they will advise Canadians to return home. For the month of April, 3,000 Canadians returned to Canada, the largest in any month for a number of years.

Mr. LUCAS: My idea is that if this amount of money was spent on immigration efforts in the United States, in getting settlers of any kind, instead of confining our efforts to repatriation work, we would get better results. If I remember rightly, we have only seventeen agencies in the United States, and according to the report, between 40,000 and 50,000 Canadians returned to this country. Whether that is due to the efforts of those agencies or not, I cannot say, but if it is, we are getting much better results for the money spent than from this other agency. Is the province of Quebec the only province that is taking advantage of this new arrangement the minister speaks of?

Mr. FORKE: I would point out that the province of Quebec is in somewhat different circumstances from the other provinces. We are spending about $3,000,000 on immigration, and very little of the new immigration goes into the province of Quebec. They are not getting perhaps their fair share of the money expended. They are anxious to get back some of their own people who have left the province, and have gone to the New England states in considerable numbers. With very little encouragement many of these people would come back. We shall not spend the $150,000 unless a like amount is spent by the provinces, and we shall not continue the arrangement unless we get adequate returns from the expenditure. It is an experiment, replacing something that has been in existence for twenty-five years, but of which there was a great deal of criticism. We are simply changing the system in order to do away with the criticism, and we believe that we are giving a fair and square deal to Quebec.

Mr. LUCAS: The minister says that Quebec is not getting its fair share of the immigration coming to Canada, but I notice that on page 18 of the annual report of the department there is a table of immigration, via ocean ports, for the fiscal year 1926-27, showing occupation, month of arrival, and destination, and it shows that the maritime provinces are getting the least immigration. Nova Scotia in that year got 1,702; New Brunswick, 911; Prince Edward Island, 125; Quebec, 13,735; Alberta, 11,780; Ontario, 34,000; Manitoba, 35,000; Saskatchewan, 16,000; British Columbia, 8,000. Quebec got more than the province of Alberta. According to these figures Quebec is certainly getting her fair share of the new immigration.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think that is a fair inference. If you will look at the figures for Manitoba, for instance, you will find that Manitoba gets more immigrants than Quebec and Saskatchewan combined, but that is simply because large numbers of the immigrants going out to the west go to Winnipeg as the distributing centre, and Manitoba is therefore credited with a great number of immigrants who have no intention of staying in that province. It is the same with Quebec. Quebec is the landing port for a great many immigrants who do not stay in that province, but Quebec gets credited with that number according to the table just quoted by my hon. friend.

Mr. GARDINER: Where would be the landing place of the 34,000 who went to Ontario?

Mr. FORKE: Different points in Ontario.

Mr. GARDINER: Where would they land in the first place, at what Canadian port?

Mr. FORKE: My hon. friend from Camrose has been quoting from a statement of immigration by ocean ports. You cannot tell from that statement whether the immigrants stayed in any of these provinces. The chances are that those who were booked for Ontario points were going to Ontario, but it does not follow that those who landed in Quebec stayed in that province. It was their landing port.

Mr. LUCAS: It would seem from page 19 of the annual report, which gives a statement of immigration from the United States for the fiscal year 1926-27, that Quebec is getting her fair share. Quebec received 2,907; Ontario, 5,835; Manitoba, 1,290; Saskatchewan, 3,662; Alberta, 4,587. I want to make it plain that I am not objecting to the west getting immigration, but my point is that there has been a great deal of money spent for a certain purpose without getting much in the way of results.

Mr. MARCIL: I should like to congratulate the minister on the work he is carrying on in connection with the repatriation of Canadians from the United States. This work was originally taken up under the government of Sir John A. Macdonald, carried on all through Sir Wilfrid Laurier's regime, and is being continued to-day by the minister. As the minister very properly said, Quebec is one of the provinces of the Dominion which benefits very little from the new immigration. I have had the honour of representing a constituency in eastern Quebec for thirty years, and I do not know of a single immigrant who has come into that county since I have been its representative. The whole of our immigration is tending towards Ontario and the west. We do not object to that, but there is an intensive feeling in Quebec, and it has existed for thirty years, that we should keep up the work of asking Canadians in the United States to come back to Quebec. The Canadian returning to his native land is already prepared to carry on his work, and to become a good, and perhaps a better citizen.

There is another point in connection with this work upon which I am sorry the committee on immigration did not dwell very extensively. There has been an extensive campaign carried on in the province of Quebec in the last six months, petitions have been signed all through the parishes, and the French-Canadian press have carried on an enthusiastic campaign, in favour of inducing French-Canadians to go to the west. When Sir George Cartier and Sir John A. Macdonald drafted the Manitoba constitution, their cry was then, Go west, young man. That was to stem the exodus to the United States away back in 1872. The only settlement of importance in western Canada at that time was the French-Canadian settlement on the banks of the Red river. The Manitoba constitution was made bilingual in the hope that a large surplus from the province of Quebec would follow the trails of the courreurs des bois, La Verendrye, the adventurer, the explorer and discoverer of the old days. Long before the Canadian Pacific railway was ever dreamed of the men of Quebec went into the western country, following the lakes, rivers and portages, and settled that land. They shared in the honours with the Scotch. The names of La Verendrye and Mackenzie will live forever in the history of the west.

Now, there is a feeling in the province of Quebec that if a man is leaving the province we should do everything possible to send him west, and the request that is now being made is that ample facilities should be given to the people of Quebec to go west rather than to the United States, and that to this end we should place them, if possible, on the same footing as a Britisher or other immigrant from Europe. I know there is a difficulty in transferring the population of Canada from one province to another. That question was discussed many years ago, when Clifford Sifton, the greatest of our Immigration ministers, took up immigration in earnest and opened the great campaign which brought a thousand immigrants a day into western Canada for years and years, a movement which reached its climax in 1913. In Quebec we are anxious to keep our people, but if we cannot retain them within the province we should like to keep them in Canada. We try to inculcate in them the idea that Canada is not confined within the boundaries of Quebec, but extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Lately a new district has been opened up in Quebec along the line of the Transcontinental in the Abitibi region. That is but the beginning of a trek which will continue, and if the Minister of Immigration wishes to endear himself to the hearts of the people of Quebec, I hope he will find means not only for bringing people to Canada but to retain those who are already here. Quebec is at the head of the Dominion in increase of population; it is the only province which has a birth rate to boast of. Its government is setting an example in social and other legislation which is being followed in every other province. Our families are very numerous, in the rural parts there are from ten to twelve children in many families. The farms being small, and devolving to the eldest boy, the other boys have to go elsewhere, and if they cannot go to western Canada they pass over into the United States. Quebec is fast changing from an agricultural to an industrial province The development of our waterpowers north of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa river has transformed the position of affairs, and to-day Quebec is at the very pinnacle of its prosperity. It is the most prosperous province in the Dominion. If we cannot keep all our people at home, there should be a determined effort on our part to send them west. Those members from western Canada who know the French-Canadian settlers there will, I am sure, endorse every word I say. In the French-Canadian you will find no more law-abiding person, no more thoroughly British subject. French-Canadians have stood by British institutions which they regard as their salvation, and for which they will, given the occasion, shed the last drop of their blood, as was said so truly fifty years ago by Sir Etienne Taché, premier of Canada at the time of confederation.

I am endeavouring to impress upon the committee and upon the Minister of Immigration the great importance of trying to discontinue the trek of our people to the United States by giving them inducements to go west. I am told it costs about three or four times more now for a man to go from Montreal to western Canada than it does for an immigrant to come from Liverpool or other ports in Europe. This is a tremendous disadvantage. The French-Canadian press of Montreal, the pulpits and the agricultural societies throughout the province sincerely desire to keep our people within the borders of Quebec. If that is not possible we wish at least to keep them within Canada, and we believe by doing so we would render an invaluable service to this country, because the French-Canadian is the most typical of all Canadian types. He is a Canadian pure and simple; there is no other home country for him; his people's relations with France disappeared centuries ago and he would be as much a stranger in France to-day as a Frenchman from France would be a stranger in Canada. We go to France now and again, but we talk of things that happened three or four hundred years ago. The French-Canadian is rooted in this country, he grows up with it. He has always been loyal to this country, from the modest farmer to the statesman, and he has at all times rendered signal service in critical periods, and we all know to-day that the meteor flag of England flies from the summit of this building because of the action of French-Canadians in 1776—when there were few Britishers in this country—and in 1812. We desire to remain British, and we want to take our share in the work of developing western Canada. I know all parties in this house will agree with the distinguished leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in his appreciation of French-Canadians and the value of their influence throughout the Dominion. In his western home he has seen the oldest settlements established by French Canadians, settlements which are progressing to-day and from their colleges are turning out professional men who are taking their part in the public life of the country. I heard him say that the first time he pleaded a case in a western court was before the late Mr. Justice Rouleau, a relative of His Eminence, Cardinal Rouleau. We think we should offer every inducement to our people to go west and thus stop the exodus to the United States. French-Canadians have played a distinguished part across the line. A French-Canadian was governor of the state of Rhode Island, and there are so many of our people over there that they control the vote in many towns and cities, while several have distinguished themselves by entrance to the local legislatures and the senate. But they belong to Canada. They wish to return to Canada, and if the present minister can do anything to assist them to return and go west he will render an invaluable service not only to Quebec but to the whole of Canada.

Mr. LUCAS: I quite agree with what the hon. member has said with regard to the French-Canadian people being good settlers, but I cannot agree that it would be a sound policy for the government to pay any money to move people from one province to another. I do not believe that is in any sense an immigration question.

Mr. MARCIL: We do not expect the government to do that. All we ask is that relatively the same rates be given to the people of the province of Quebec going to western Canada as are given to immigrants coming from beyond the seas.

Mr. LUCAS: I objected to that clause in the immigration report because I did not believe it to be sound. At the present day you will find in western Canada a number of men who went out there in the early days believing they were going to make a fortune in a very short time, but they have to work there just the same as anywhere else. There is no more free land, and many of those men have told me that if they could get back to Ontario or eastern Canada they would be very glad to do so. If you establish a low rate to the west there is just as good reason why you should establish a low rate to the east, for those who wish to return from the western provinces. This would result in our people transferring from one part of Canada to the other at the expense of the treasury, and I do not believe such a policy is sound. I wish to make it plain that I am not saying this in any way against the province of Quebec; I wish it to apply to all provinces.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I believe it is under this item that assistance is given to immigration societies, and it is in regard to certain assistance given to an organization known as the Scottish Immigration Aid Society, operating in Alberta, that I wish to speak for a few moments. The question I wish to ask has reference to some property which this organization holds under lease. The minister will remember that some time ago I asked some questions on the point. In 1923 apparently they received a five-year lease at a nominal rate of $1 per annum for 1,100 acres of land with buildings, the conditions being that they should use these buildings and the farm as a distribution point and a training centre for settlers, particularly Hebrideans. I understand from the reply given that the lease was renewed in 1926 for another five years, from 1928 to 1933, on the same terms. I have had a good many complaints in the last two years from people in that vicinity as to the use made of that farm and the buildings—or rather the use not made of them; the farm has not been used at all as a training centre and distribution point but has been operated for profit by the association. I was informed that, during the last two years at least, at no time have there been more than perhaps five or six men on the place, just sufficient to farm it; and as it is good land within a few miles of a railway a good profit is made. I was sorry I could not verify this personally, as I usually do in such cases, for the reason that during the past two years my ability to get around has been somewhat curtailed. I have however, received many complaints from the ratepayers of the district to the effect that no taxes have been paid by the society; and when you remove 1,100 acres of taxable land from the municipality and school district, you increase the burden on the rest of the people. I understand the minister made some investigation after the question I asked and the information I gave him. I should like him to tell me the result of his investigation and what action if any he contemplates taking.

Mr. FORKE: I was informed by the chairman of the land settlement board that the taxes had been paid on that farm.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: A few weeks ago I received from the secretary treasurer of the municipality and of the school districts duplicate receipts showing the taxes paid, and in six years taxes have been paid for one year, 1926. That was as far as they knew at that time, and that is only a few weeks ago. They sent the duplicates of the receipts. So far as they knew then certainly only one year's taxes had been paid.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think the farm has been a success. Only lately have the facts come under my consideration and I deemed it wise to advise that after a year's notice the agreement would be cancelled. Of course they will have to have the farm this year anyway. They may buy it and pay the price; otherwise the agreement will terminate.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It is to the minister's credit that he took action as soon as the situation was evident. I am sorry I did not bring it to his attention earlier, but I was not in a position to go around my constituency during the last two years.

Mr. EVANS: I have always regarded immigration as the work of the government and the government alone. I do not believe in granting large sums of money to any society or organization, whether it be a business concern, a church or any other institution of that kind. We have been giving large sums of money in the past for this purpose, and so far as results go it has been a failure. We can look back now and say that the west has been colonized in a most successful manner, but that has been due practically to the richness of the soil and to free lands. These are no longer to be had, and immigration should be directed to a very careful manner, whatever way we go about it. I do not believe at present in allowing any business or religious concern to direct waves of humanity which too often are only exploited.

Not many years ago I was in Alberta when the Canadian Pacific Railway conceived the idea of partly equipping farms for settlers. I was in Sedgewick about the beginning of that period when they landed some very fine live stock at that point. These were being branded while I was there. The official brand was made in large letters on the side of the animal and underneath three other large letters, "C.P.R.," were branded. I asked the director the reason for this. I wanted to know why they should torture the animal to such an extent by putting these large letters on its side. I asked, "Why put C.P.R. at all? Would not the official brand do?" The answer was, "How should we know our stock when we came to make seizures in the fall?" I want to direct the attention of the committee to the seriousness of immigration work and its failure since 1911 particularly. I have the official figures under my hand. But let me for a moment return to the granting of sums of money to certain bodies. A great bitterness was engendered throughout the country last year through the circulation of an order for return showing that under the Roman Catholic Church some twenty-nine priests were in the work of immigration and repatriation, not all of them drawing salaries but most of them getting expenses. The salaries were not large, but why should this be done at all? This is the work of government. If any church wants to do it, let it. But the point I make is this—and I wish my Roman Catholic friends to understand that I have no prejudice at all against them: the method we are adopting is dividing our people, making clearcut lines throughout western Canada. I do not care very much from what country you bring immigrants if you will let them settle among others and not make any clearcut line. Do not make western Canada a replica of the Balkan states. I have no doubt that if this plan is carried on extensively something of the same results will be experienced in this country as in southern Europe. So much for that.

I stated that immigration had been practically a failure. The last official figures I have are from the Bureau of Statistics over the signature of Mr. Coats. I find that in the census period between 1911 and 1921—the period practically of which I have been speaking—we lost 19,958 farmers from the land. That is a loss from Canada of almost 20,000 farmers during that census period. From the province of Ontario, where we are told there is a home market and for which we have sacrificed agriculture in order to build up the cities, I find that we lost 33,722 farmers, and I think this is an appalling figure especially when we are considering spending such large sums of money to gather up people from other parts of the world to occupy our vacant land. I find that Quebec lost 13,165 farmers, New Brunswick lost 3,181, Nova Scotia lost 4,623 and the little province of Prince Edward Island, the garden of Canada, lost 3,159 farmers.

There is a cause for all this, and I should like to impress upon this house that agriculture cannot stand any more burdens for the sake of any other industry. Yesterday the Minister of Railways made the statement that an immigrant coming to this country and expecting the government to do a great deal for him invited failure from the beginning, and I want to tell the house that we have had a real object lesson in that regard. Our urban industries have failed, after all we have sacrificed to build them up, for the simple reason that before an industry will open its doors in this country it must link up with the politicians.

I have dealt with five of the eastern provinces; let me give the figures for the western provinces, and we must remember that during 1911, 1912 and 1913 particularly we engaged in the work of immigration very vigorously. During that ten year period the number of farmers in Manitoba increased by 16,931; those in Saskatchewan increased by 14,260, in Alberta by 17,376 and in British Columbia by 8,527. I think these figures must be startling to the people of this country; in spite of the great effort we have made to people our vacant lands to-day we have 20,000 farmers less than we had in 1911. Surely there is a reason for this, and I want to say that if we only keep our people on the farms our country will go ahead much more quickly than is the case at present. We have not only brought agriculture to a precarious position but we have even destroyed the purchasing power which is needed by our industries in the urban centres. So I say, Mr. Chairman, that before we spend such large sums of money we should consider this business very seriously and we should consider the purpose for which we should bring in immigrants.

During a great part of every year we have to face a tremendous unemployment problem. I have read some of the immigration literature which is sent throughout the British Isles, which states that if a man is willing to work and to put his shoulder to the wheel he is sure to make a success in Canada. I want to inform this country that the time has come when there are no wheels to which he can put his shoulder; we have sacrificed agriculture in order to build up these industries and they have failed to do that which they were expected to do, as the hon. member for East Calgary said yesterday; they have failed to provide employment for the working men. So we are continually losing these men to the republic to the south.

I have very little more to say, Mr. Chairman, but I think this is one of the most serious problems facing Canada to-day. We must entirely alter our fiscal policy, because it is wrong, and let me impress upon hon. gentlemen that the industry of agriculture surely needs to be as well treated as any other industry. However, I want to say that the farmers of this country do not need protection now; in the main they are not asking for protection but they are asking to be relieved of the burden of all the other industries, which they have been carrying in the past.

Mr. BOULANGER: After listening to the last speaker and to the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) I have been asking myself seriously if there is not a lot of insincerity in the remarks we hear from hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to the exodus of Canadian farmers to the United States. Last night the leader of the opposition said it was a pity to see so many thousands of young Canadian farmers leaving their farms to go to the United States; that it was alarming, and that something should be done to keep those young farmers in Canada. Yet when we come to this house or to the agricultural committee and propose some scheme for the purpose of keeping Canadians on the farms of Canada we are met by the opposition of our friends across the way, who tell us that this is not a question of immigration. Of course it is not; we agree on that, but it certainly is a question of prevention—we should prevent the emigration of Canadians to the United States. It is also a matter of colonization, and I think if we could devise some means of keeping young Canadians in this country on the farms we would be doing well. So it seems to me that before we bring in a lot of immigrants at the expense of the country we should do something to keep the people we already have. It is true that many farmers leave the land in eastern Canada; the hon. member who just took his seat gave the figures for the different provinces, and our first duty is to devise ways and means of keeping these men on the farm.

We have advocated in this house that we should give these farmers the same advantages we give the immigrants we bring from other countries. If we are going to assist immigrants to come to Canada we should give the same measure of assistance by way of assisted transportation to our own young people. It was demonstrated in the committee on agriculture and colonization that the difficulty in increasing the population of Canada is one of transportation, and that is why the committee recommended that aid be given by way of assisted passages. We advocate that the same measure of assisted transportation should be given to our Canadians, and we claim that if it were, the farmers in the east would remain in Canada instead of going to the United States. Transportation has a lot to do with that exodus or migration from Canada. Distances are great in Canada; transportation is very costly, and instead of our people going to western Canada on to the millions of acres of vacant land within twenty miles of the railroad, of which the leader of the opposition spoke last night, they are going to the nearer cities of the United States to earn their living. If it is considered proper to subsidize the steamship companies; if it is considered right to pay the passages of young boys between the ages of fourteen and nineteen years to come from England to Canada, it seems to me that it should be right and proper to pay part of the transportation expenses of young Canadian farmers in order to prevent their going to the United States and enable them to establish themselves on these millions of acres of vacant land within twenty miles of the railroad. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we will get into trouble through the action of this government in connection with assisting immigrants to come here to take the place of Canadian farmers who leave us. It seems to me that we will be called upon to give an explanation to our constituents of the recommendations made in the report of the committee with regard to further extending the facilities to enable people to come here at the expense of this country. Our farmers will ask us why they are called upon to pay taxes when they cannot themselves get any assistance to modernize their ways of farming, and to raise the level of agriculture in their section of the country. They will want to know why we are paying out such large sum of money to give free rides to strangers wh come to Canada to take the place of our farmers who have left through lack of assistance. When the farmers of eastern Canada are tired of paying taxes to give free rides to everybody, probably the government will give us a Duncan commission to find out what we are mad about.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): There are one or two matters I should like to call to the attention of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Boulanger.) I submit that very generous consideration has been given in regard to the repatriation of French-Canadians from the United States, dating back to 1889, under several governments and under the management of different departments. From 1889 down to the end of last year we expended a total of $558,530.61; in the last five years, 1922-27, we have expended $155,102 for that purpose. I submit that these figures do not indicate any lack of generosity on the part of the several governments which have held the reins of office since 1889. I should like to give some figures which were supplied by the deputy minister, Mr. Egan, at the request of the committee. From 1924 down to 1927, 2,511 French-Canadians were repatriated through the activities of this government. It strikes me as a little peculiar that those who have been repatriated in the last four years, and I think it will also apply back of that, have not been brought back to live in the province of Quebec. In 1924 none of those repatriated were placed in Quebec; in 1925, none were placed in Quebec; in 1926, only 20, and in 1927, only 22 were settled in their former native province of Quebec out of a total of 2,511. Apparently the object of the repatriation is not to resettle them in the old province of Quebec.

Mr. BOULANGER: Does not my hon. friend think that a citizen of Quebec is at home anywhere in Canada?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not see where any words of mine would raise that question in the mind of the hon. gentleman. I fail to see why he should introduce or insinuate anything of the kind, as I said nothing to warrant it.

Mr. BOULANGER: Does not the hon. gentleman think that a citizen from Quebec is just as useful anywhere else in Canada?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Certainly he is, and I have said nothing to the contrary, nor have my words indicated that I think anything to the contrary. I hope that is sufficiently clear to the hon. gentleman. I will say that the French-Canadian, whether repatriated or a native of the province of Quebec, will make a first-class citizen in any province.

Mr. BOULANGER: Why should they be repatriated only to Quebec?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is a question for my hon. friend to answer. Going back into the history of this thing, the various governments were approached by those interested in bringing back French-Canadians from the New England states, who said that they wanted to bring their children back to the home province. But that has not been followed, and it does strike me as somewhat peculiar that in this repatriation movement—I will refer in a moment to the other matter the hon. gentleman mentioned—these French-Canadians have been repatriated to every other province except the province of Quebec, and the figures would seem to bear that out. In addition to the money which has been generously spent I think by all the governments in repatriating French-Canadians, they come along now and ask that special facilities be given by way of reduced rates to permit the movement of French-Canadiaans to other provinces.

The provinces of Quebec and Ontario made a special arrangement with the railways in these two provinces for a two-cent home-seekers' rate. They did not ask for the assistance of the federal government in obtaining this rate, but went to the railway companies and negotiated for themselves. Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta could just as easily negotiate for a special rate. So far as cheap rates are concerned, anyone in Ontario, Quebec, or the maritime provinces, who wants to size up the situation in the west can do so at a cost of $10 or $12 through the medium of the harvesters' excursions. They have the opportunity of sizing up that country at a very small outlay of money. They can go out there for a few months and get employment, and will probably be able to return with money in their pockets.

Mr. BOULANGER: Will the hon. gentleman admit that the reduction in railroad rates would help to prevent the exodus of Canadian farmers?

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It might, but why ask for that reduction especially to take them to the west in order to keep them from going to the United States? May I draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that last night the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) in his few remarks said that in the part of Quebec from which he comes it was possible by the building of a short line to open for settlement thousands and tens of thousands of acres of first class land? I cannot look at the map on the wall and see represented there the big province of Quebec, the largest of the nine provinces, almost twice the size of any other province, and for one moment believe that all the tillable land, all the land fit for settlement in that province is contained within a narrow fringe on each side of the St. Lawrence river. That is not believable. There are just as good opportunities in other parts of Quebec as there are in northern Ontario. But apparently no effort has been made by the Quebec government to open up those lands for settlement and to place their own children in that portion of the province. They do not seem to care about that; otherwise why do they not go ahead and open up those lands to keep the young men of Quebec from going across to the United States? The hon. gentleman says, no; if you want to stop emigration from Quebec; if you want to keep our young men in Canada—

Mr. BOULANGER: Not only from Quebec, from all the provinces.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The hon. gentleman naturally and very properly has in mind the people of his province and I do not blame him for that at all. It is mere camouflage for him, so far as his purpose is concerned, to throw in Ontario with Quebec. He spoke of lack of sincerity on this side of the house. Let him be frank himself.

Mr. BOULANGER: Let the hon. gentleman state the objection to citizens of Quebec crossing their own borders.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I have not said anything of the kind, but it would not make any difference if I talked from now until this time next year, I could not convince the hon. gentleman that I had not some ulterior motive. I have stated very frankly my position and I declare that my position is the logical one. This is not an immigration matter.

Mr. BOULANGER: Is it not a colonization matter?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It is, but not in the sense for which the Department of Immigration and Colonization was formed. That department was formed for the purpose of bringing immigrants into this country, thereby adding to our population, and colonizing our immigrants when they were brought here.

Mr. BOULANGER: Is it not a question of national importance to keep our people here in preference to bringing in strangers?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, and I outlined some methods which the government might adopt, if my hon. friend would support them, of keeping our people in this country instead of forcing them out of every province in Canada to seek employment across the line. Let the government change their policy in that regard. But if the hon. gentleman wants what is in the back of his mind expressed in plain words it is this. Back of the whole idea in regard to reduced rates for the movement of people from one province to another is the desire to get the Dominion government in some way to subsidize the planting of Canadians from the older provinces in the provinces of the west. That is not the business of the Department of Immigration and Colonization in any sense of the word. It is not their business to go to the young men of Quebec and to say: Do not go to the United States; we will get a reduced rate on the railways for you. You have that in Ontario and Quebec now, but we will get a further reduction in rates so that you can go to the west and settle out there. Supposing the young man said: Well, why not give me some encouragement to settle in my own province? Oh, no, you say, we are not bothering our heads about that at all. We want a reduction of rates in order to enable you to settle in any province of Canada except the province in which you were born. The hon. gentleman asks the Dominion government to endorse that sort of thing which I consider is absolutely illogical and unreasonable in every sense of the word, because if you appeal to a young man in Ontario or Quebec not to cross the line but to take advantage of a reduced rate and settle in Alberta and Saskatchewan where there are good opportunities to settle on the land, you might just as reasonably appeal to a young man out in Saskatchewan or Alberta who is talking of leaving Canada and say to him: Do not do that; we have a clay belt down in Ontario; we have some fertile lands in Quebec; we have special opportunities which we are offering for the settlement of overseas people in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia; do not go across the line; we will get a reduced rate for you to go back into Ontario or Quebec. After he stays there a little while, he says: I think there are good opportunities in the Peace river district. Well, we will get you a reduced rate; we will take you out there for practically nothing and you can try that out. If you are not satisfied with that after a while, we will get you a reduced rate and you can come back and try to settle either in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia or some other part of Canada. The whole thing is illogical and unjustifiable, and if my hon. friend were just as sincere as hon. members on this side of the house are who, he has intimated, were sincere in this matter, he would say that back of the whole idea that he has in his mind is asking the Dominion of Canada to subsidize the planting of colonies from the older provinces in the provinces of the west. That is something which we should not do. We want more population in the Dominion of Canada and above all we want to retain our own Canadian population. There is no reason, nor has my hon. friend attempted to advance any, why those who leave Quebec and go to the west could not be settled on land in Quebec. He has advanced no reason why a young man should be assisted to go out from Ontario to engage in farming in the west when he might engage in farming in Ontario. He has not met that point at all.

Mr. DONNELLY: The hon. member said that the province of Quebec had done nothing to induce its people to stay at home. Is it not a fact that it made an arrangement with the railways for a special two cent rate for any settlers who wanted to move from southern Quebec to the northern part?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, I said that a special two cent rate had been obtained in Ontario and Quebec and they did not come to this government to ask for federal intervention to get it. They managed that themselves. If they want a special rate to take people into any other part of the province, I have not the slightest doubt that if they go to either of the railway companies and say that they have a party of fifty, seventy-five or a hundred people who want to go west, they will get a special rate from either of those transportation companies to convey them to the west. But the point I am making with regard to Quebec is this. They have done something in obtaining the two cent rate, but what they have not done and what they expect the other provinces to do is to open up lands for settlement for their surplus population, if you can properly use the word in that regard, while they themselves have not done anything to open up their own vast extent of territory and provide settlement for their young men within the bounds of their province.

Mr. BOULANGER: With the exception of voting for protection, what other means has the hon. gentleman to suggest to prevent the exodus of farmers to the United States?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does the hon. gentleman mean from the province of Quebec?

Mr. BOULANGER: From anywhere in Canada.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Ontario, for instance, has done something in the way of opening up what is called new Ontario and areas are being opened up for settlement in that part of the province.

Mr. BOULANGER: The same thing has been done in Quebec.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Very good. That seems to me to answer my hon. friend's question. My hon. friend cannot say that either Quebec or Ontario is crowded or congested at the present time. We have only to glance at the map. We know the size of Quebec and the size of Ontario, and there is any amount of land in either of those provinces to accommodate all the native sons of Canada in any province of Canada who want to settle on the land. That being the case, there being no congestion of population in the older provinces, I say that it is not the function of the Dominion government to go to the railway companies and importune them to give a special rate to move citizens from one province of this Dominion to another.

In regard to the Scottish immigration society, to which reference was made a few moments ago by one hon. member, that organization has been operating since April, 1922. According to a return supplied by the deputy minister, Mr. Egan, that organization has brought out and placed 1,315 people. That would cover the ones who were assisted; there would be some who did not come under the assisted passages scheme. Now what have we paid out in that connection? We have paid out $143,027.83. Part of that we will get back, namely, half of the unpaid passage loans loss, to be paid by the British government, or $26,539.93. But that still leaves a net cost of $116,487.90 paid out in assisting this particular immigration society in its operations, in the placing of some 1,315 individuals—640 adults and 675 children.

I want to say a word in regard to the leasing of this farm of 1,116 acres at $1 a year as a training centre for immigrants. That lease was to run for five years from March, 1923, to 1928. In 1926 the lease was extended. At that time the lease had still two years to run, but when representations were made to the then Minister of Immigration—or to the Minister of the Interior, but I presume the former—to have the lease extended for a further term of five years, and that application was granted, it would make the lease run until 1933, and really until 1934, because one year's notice had to be given of its termination. I want to ask the minister whether I caught him correctly a while ago when he intimated that he intended to give one year's notice of the termination of that lease. Can that lease be terminated before 1933? My understanding of the term of the lease was that it was for five years, and that it could not be revoked until the end of five years, that when it was renewed for a further term of five years, making it run to 1933, it could not be cancelled until 1934; that is, you had to give one year's notice in 1933. It does not occur to me just why this lease was extended for a further period of five years when it had still two years to run. The deputy minister, in the committee, in answer to a question of mine, said that this was the only society in the Dominion of Canada which was given that consideration, namely, the use of a block of land at merely a nominal rent. It was the only society in the Dominion that was getting that favour. I do not know whether the minister is prepared to explain why the lease was extended for a further term of five years in 1926, when it had still two years to run. It does not occur to me why the application was made at that time for an extension or why the application should have been granted at that time. I would ask, can the lease be cancelled at a year's notice from now, or must you wait until 1933 to give your notice of cancellation?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know much about the extension of the lease, but the ground I take is that that farm was given for a training centre, that they have not lived up to their contract, that they have not been using it for that purpose in the last two years, and therefore I have given notice that the lease will be cancelled at the end of this year.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It can be cancelled on the ground that they have not complied with the terms of the lease?

Mr. FORKE: Yes, that is the ground I take.

Item agreed to.

Empire settlement scheme, including grants to immigration societies, women's hostels, etc., as may be authorized by the governor general in council, $1,000,000.

Mr. BARBER: I have just one matter to bring before the minister in connection with this item. Under this item we have the three thousand family scheme, which I consider best of all the immigration schemes of this government. It is the one that I had the greatest confidence in, and I had hopes that it would work out successfully, but apparently from the experience in my district, that is not proving to be the case. Some time ago fifteen Scotch families were brought out to the Fraser valley and located on what is known as the Amiens farm, a large district owned, I think, by the provincial government. This settlement did not work out satisfactorily, because I notice from the report of a meeting held about two weeks ago that thirteen out of the fifteen families had signed a demand for an inquiry, or as an alternative, their passage back to Scotland. Misrepresentation is alleged. There is a little story in connection with this, and to make it brief, I will quote from the press report of this particular meeting. It says:

Gifford, May 29.—The Scottish families domiciled on the Amiens farm under the imperial land settlement branch of the Dominion government held a public meeting in the Hygienic building on Friday evening to air their grievances.

These are several and some are very deep. The attitude of thirteen at least, of the fifteen settlers is that of strong resentment against misrepresentation, and similar settlers from Clayburn, Peardonville and Bradner joined them in complaint.

The farmers, before leaving Scotland, were given a "memo." describing the settlement. This stated that the farm had been "successfully operated." This they find is not true. The land was drained by ditches "maintained by the provincial government." They state that two-thirds of the land needs drainage and is flooded at certain times of the year, and that the ditches dug by the government are assessed against their lands. "Running water for domestic purposes" was mentioned. This applies, they discover, to one farm only in the fifteen.

They were promised two crops before repayment of loans was demanded; that is one full year from the October following their arrival. Some state that although their agreement stipulates these terms, their cheques have been assigned right from the commencement. The chief grievance, however, is in the amount and rate of repayment. They consider that the charges are higher than they should be. This complaint is shared by the settlers from the other districts who state their condition is one of "abject slavery." On this Amiens farm, the annual charges per acre, including municipal tax, dyking tax and repayment amount to $20 an acre. This, it is claimed, is a burden too great for farm land and cannot be met.

Their milk cheques are assigned to the land settlement branch and so great is the proportion deducted that they have not enough income to live upon. One man stated that for one month they took all his cheque and that the next month all but $3 was taken. Another settler said that for four months his total receipts amounted to $46. On this he had to keep a wife and three children. They have complained to the Imperial board in London and were referred to the Dominion board. This board, they affirm, ignores them and officials deny any personal responsibility. The settlers ask for an inquiry into these conditions or as an alternate, return passage to Scotland, "where they can get everything fair and above board and without any deceitful practices."

This request is signed by thirteen out of fifteen settlers. Now, Mr. Chairman, no doubt the department—

Mr. FORKE: If the hon. gentleman will excuse me? The chairman of the land settlement board will be here when his estimates are being passed. He has all the details in connection with these cases, and it would be more convenient if my hon. friend would deal with the matter then.

Mr. BARBER: I have placed the case before the minister, and I do not think there is any need to repeat it. But these settlers are holding indignation meetings and communicating with their friends in the old country, telling them of their woes, something which certainly will not be a powerful factor in encouraging British immigration. I take this opportunity of placing the information before the minister, and I trust an explanation will be given when the Soldier Settlement Board vote is before the committee.

Mr. FORKE: I make that promise, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARDINER: What progress is being made with the three-thousand-family scheme; is it completed?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know the exact figures, but I believe the scheme will be completed this summer.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the explanation of the increase in this vote?

Mr. FORKE: We expect a larger increase because we are giving assistance to double the number of boys. We are cooperating with the Imperial government on a fifty-fifty basis.

Item agreed to.

Chinese immigration—salaries and contingencies, $65,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, this is perhaps an appropriate moment to make reference to another phase of immigration from the orient, not Chinese immigration to which this particular item refers, but immigration from Japan. I am pleased to be able to inform the house that following conferences with the Japanese government, in which the Canadian government made clear the difficulties created in western Canada by the economic competition of Japanese immigrants, the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs has informed us through the Consul-General of Japan at Ottawa, that the government of Japan does not contemplate that the total number of emigrants to Canada, including agricultural labourers and domestic servants, and wives and children of Japanese emigrants resident in Canada, will exceed a total of 150 anually. We have further been informed that steps will be taken to terminate the practice of sending for so-called "picture brides". The administrative measures directed to this end will go into force on September 1.

The Canadian government has indicated to the government of Japan that hereafter in the case of immigration from Japan, as from other countries, the Immigration Act and procedure, including the provisions for viseing of passports and pre-investigation of applications will be administered by Canadian officials.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the replacement of trust funds held by the department, misappropriated by immigration officers at Halifax, N.S., and Coutts, Alberta, $1,632.08.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. FORKE: At the different seaports and ports of entry along the international boundary there are departmental trust accounts in which funds deposited by immigrants and other parties being given temporary admission to Canada and deposits required under the Immigration Act re deserters, et cetera, are held.

Last year when these trust accounts at Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Coutts, Alberta, were audited it was found that the accountant at Halifax had misapropriated $2,323.35, and the inspector in charge at Coutts the sum of $350.83. As the officer at Halifax was bonded for $1,000 this amount was paid the department by the bond company, which means a net shortage at that port of $1,323.35. In the case of the officer at Coutts, the department held $42.10 due him, leaving a net shortage of $308.73.

[Mr. Forke.]

As this shortage in these accounts will have to be repaid—in some cases bond will be forfeited to the government—to the parties making these deposits when the conditions under which they were made have been fulfilled, it is necessary to recoup the trust accounts. In the case at Coutts the money taken was that of a $350 bond deposited by Otto Lindquist and of 83 cents exchange on American currency. At Halifax most of the money taken was cash deposited by settlers under the family settlement scheme, the officer there using current receipts to make repayments for previous deposits. This, as soon as the current receipts dropped off left him in a position that he could not cover up what had previously been taken.

Mr. GARDINER: What happened to the officers?

Mr. FORKE: They were dismissed from the service. We are collecting the balance from them.

Mr. GARDINER: Were they appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. FORKE: The appointments are made by the Civil Service Commission now. I do not know how long those men had been in the service.

Mr. GARDINER: You are not in a position to say whether these delinquents were appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. FORKE: No, we have not that information.

Soldier land settlement—amount required for soldier land settlement advances and cost of administration of soldier settlement, $1,558,000.

Amount required for general land settlement advances and cost of administration of general land settlement, $1,557,000.

Mr. KENNEDY: I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a case of what appears to me to be great hardship and injustice under the Soldier Settlement Board. The name of the settler is Frank T. Chinn, who came from England in June, 1921, an ex-imperial soldier who had seen service in France. He is a settler under section 2, paragraph (s) iii, chapter 188 of the revised statutes, 1927. He told me he was directed to Canada by the policy of the Soldier Settlement Board as outlined in a pamphlet distributed by the board in England. I have discussed the matter with the minister and with the chairman of the board, but evidently they do not take the pamphlet as seriously as Mr. Chinn did or as I do.

This is the pamphlet issued by the Soldier Settlement Board of Canada:

Land settlement in Canada, agricultural training and farm loans for imperial ex-service men: published by authority Hon. Arthur Meighen (Minister of the Interior), minister in charge soldier land settlement, London, October 1, 1919.

There is a list of officials who may be seen or written to:

Officials whom you may see or write to.

These officials are in London, Liverpool, Birmingham, Exeter, York, Peterborough, Carlisle, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dublin, Belfast. And Lieut.-Colonel K. C. Bedson, overseas representative, 7 Parliament Mansions, Orchard street, Victoria street, London, S.W. 1.

The policy of the Board in this case is stated to be:

(1) To settle on the land citizens whose best interests will be served by engaging in farming.
(2) To assist in settlement only on land of good value, well located, and of such fertility as to ensure profitable returns.
(3) To develop in close settlement in areas contiguous to existing or promoted railway lines.
(4) To secure for soldier settlers by means of special purchasing arrangements the best value obtainable in live stock, implements, building material and other necessary equipment.
(5) To guide and assist soldier settlers in the management of their farming activities, so that the best results may be secured.
(6) To provide such guidance and advice as may be most helpful to the settler's wife and family in the development of the home and its economic and social relations.

I would direct attention especially to sections 2 and 5. There are a number of very fine promises in this pamphlet and I wish to refer to just one or two. I quote from page 7:

Method of purchasing land:
The Soldier Settlement Board may purchase improved or unimproved lands in any province if required for soldier settlement.
To assist applicants in locating lands, offers of property for sale are classified by the board according to districts, and in compiling lists of suitable lands the assistance of public officials, local authorities and officers of the Great War Veterans' Association is invited.
The settler however is not restricted to such lists. He has full right to select land, subject in all cases to approval after inspection by the board.
When a parcel of land is selected by a soldier settler, an experienced land inspector is sent out to make an appraisal of the land, and to make sure that it is suitable and possesses the value that is placed upon it. If all conditions are right, it will be purchased by the board and sold to the applicant.
The Soldier Settlement Board deals with the owner direct; pays no commissions on transactions of this kind, and thus protects the settler.

Now this man came to Canada in 1921. In 1923, after a certain probationary period of training on one or two farms, part of the time in British Columbia and part in the districts surrounding Edmonton, he was taken out by a representative of the Soldier Settlement Board and a farm in the Westlock district was shown him. The section of the Soldier Settlement Act, chapter 188, the revised statutes, 1927, "An Act to assist Returned Soldiers in settling upon the land," which deals with this matter is section 25, subsection 4. I quote it:

No advance such as by subsection 1 of this section authorized shall be made unless the board is satisfied,
(a) that the value of the security, ascertained as in section 12 of this act directed with respect to lands to be acquired by the board, is sufficient to justify the making of the advance; and
(b) that the applicant has the ability to make from the land a fair living for himself and his dependents, if any, after paying interest and amortization charges and other necessary payments with respect to such advances and to the land and the cultivation thereof.

Mr. FORKE: What is my hon. friend reading from?

Mr. KENNEDY: I am reading from the Soldier Settlement Act, and I am making a speech I prepared about two months ago. I have been waiting all this time for this estimate to come up. I have quoted the section that bears upon the matter. It seems to me that although it is not directly stated, the primary intention of these two subsections is to protect the country, to see that money is not advanced on poor land or to a settler who has not the ability to make a living in addition to meeting his payments to the Board. In connection with this policy laid down in the pamphlet distributed in England by representatives of the Soldier Settlement Board, it must be taken that the soldier settler is guaranteed that the board will not locate him on land where he cannot make a good living if his farming methods are reasonably sound.

This gentleman had farming experience in England. It has been said that his experience was as an auctioneer and valuator. It is a well known fact that most auctioneers from the old land who go around valuing stock run farms on the side, and I understand that Mr. Chinn had seven years' experience managing a farm owned by his father. He bought this farm in 1923, which was Canada's banner year in wheat production. It was the year in which we had a very plentiful supply of moisture and when crops on practically every kind of soil did fairly well. In that year Mr. Chinn was driven out by a representative of the Soldier Settlement Board and, in accordance with their policy of fair play, he was settled on the south west part of 34.59.26, west of the 4th meridian. Since that time his experience has not been very happy. In letters which he has written to the Soldier Settlement Board he has stated that in only one year was he able to produce a crop which would give him a living over and above his expenses, to say nothing of paying the amortization on the amount owing the board.

I am going to deal with this matter as briefly as I can, and it is my contention, that the chief reason and the only substantial reason which can be given for the failure of this man—because I do not think it will be necessary to argue that he has failed unless we take a letter written by the supervisor of the Soldier Settlement Board at Edmonton—was because he was settled on land unfit for cultivation. In every district, regardless of how good it is, there are lands which apparently are too poor for farming. They can be utilized in a way by linking them up with other land suitable for cultivation, but in themselves they cannot be regarded as farming propositions. In his efforts to make a success of agriculture this man endeavoured to secure a transfer to another farm, and he was offered such a transfer. That is the first reason I give as proof that he was settled on land unsuitable for agriculture, but lest there be any doubt about the matter he took up the question of the soil, its value and its suitability for farming with the soil culture department of the university of Alberta. I have here a letter written by Professor Wyatt, professor of soils of the university of Alberta at Edmonton under dated of December 14, 1927, as follows:

> With regard to your letter of December 1, 1927, we have not yet made any laboratory analysis of the soil from your farm since our visit there early in October; however, we did make certain tests in the field together with the examining of physical properties of the soil of your farm. We found, as I had suggested in a previous letter, that the greater part of your farm consists of podsol or wooded soils. Your great difficulty is that the extremely heavy subsoil is so close to the surface, that it is with great difficulty that these soils absorb water. Your farm is situated on the transition belt between the black soils to the south and the typical wooded soils to the north and west and some parts of this transition belt has very good soil whereas in other parts the soil is very poor. While we have not examined in any detail the soil of this transition belt, above referred to, we feel certain that your soil belongs to the poorest phase of the wooded soils.

In that letter there is a statement to which I wish to particularly direct the attention of the minister and the committee:

> . . . . the extremely heavy subsoil is so close to the surface that it is with great difficulty that these soils absorb water.

Last July I took the trouble to go over this farm with a shovel; the black soil seemed to be about an inch thick, and under it was soil which looked like chalk when it was worked up. Although all the black soil in that district was so wet that you could hardly walk over it without sinking to your ankles, as the professor says, this subsoil was quite impervious to moisture and the top layer of black soil was quite dry. Unless you flooded the field you could not hope to penetrate that subsoil, and the only possibility of securing a crop would be if the rains came so close together that the soil would be irrigated regularly. If a dry period of eight or ten days were encountered the crop would wither. I do not think it can be disputed that the Soldier Settlement Board undertook on one or two occasions to move this settler to another farm; there can be no doubt that Professor Wyatt stated that this was the poorest of wooded soil, and the crop records, which are not disputed, show that there never has been a crop sufficient to provide a living for this man in addition to the fixed charges which are against the farm. This settler has been dealt with in violation of the pledges and policies of the Soldier Settlement Board, as laid down in this pamphlet which has been distributed throughout the British isles.

It has been said that an effort was made to right the wrong done this man. In the statement of policy which I read there is a section which says that the Soldier Settlement Board will guide and assist soldier settlers in the management of their farming activities so that the best results may be obtained. On one or two occasions Mr. Chinn made an effort to get the soldier settler inspector to supervise his farming operations; he did not succeed in doing so in time for his spring work, so he put himself under the direction of one of his neighbours, Mr. John Edgson, a man whom I know very well, who has been farming there successfully for about twenty-five years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): How far is this farm from Mr. Edgson's farm?

Mr. KENNEDY: About two miles to the south.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am just trying to get this farm located in my mind.

Mr. KENNEDY: It is two or three miles out of Westlock, and I would not like to say whether it was directly north or south. Here is a statement signed by a number of farmers in that district:

Westlock, Alberta,
January 30, 1927.

To whom it may concern:

We, a few of the farmers of the Westlock district desire to record our knowledge of the farm identified as the S.W. ¼. 34-59-26-W. 4th, which is now occupied by our neighbour F. T. Chinn in order to assist him to get transferred on to a better farm by the Soldier Settlement Board of Canada. Some of us have known this farm ever since it was first homesteaded, and many of us have worked on the place at some time in the usual custom of exchanging work, assisting during illness &c. &c., during spring, summer and harvest seasons. The shallowness of its soil is indisputable, and to the best of our knowledge, it has only grown one crop that would give a man a living (season 1923) ever since it was homesteaded. We have always considered it to be one of the poorest of the few really poor farms in this well known district of Alberta, and whose fertility is borne out by the U.S. Tariff Commission (1924) investigating the cost of production of wheat in the U.S.A. and Canada, in which it states "Westlock ranks lowest in cost and highest in yield of wheat, per bushel, per acre, of any place on the North American continent, viz. 33.2 bushels, cost 60 cents per bushel, cleaned and delivered at the elevators." The uniform richness of our soil serves to make a poor farm an outstanding landmark, and we have always resented the fact that this particular farm was chosen and purchased by the S.S.B. as a representative farm for this district for settlement, on the face of its well known characteristics by the farmers of this community. We contend that as such it is a libel on our reputation, and in our opinion ought never to have been purchased by them for this purpose, which contention has been borne out by its continual crop failures.

There is a large file of correspondence regarding the efforts of the soldier settlement board at Edmonton to move Mr. Chinn to another farm. He was offered one farm which, according to the statement made by the superintendent at Edmonton was the best of nineteen or twenty farms he had a chance to choose from.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Could my hon. friend summarize it?

Mr. KENNEDY: This farm was located about forty miles west of Pibroch, near Mosside. It consisted of 240 acres, partly covered by the Paddle river. There was some high land which could be farmed, and there was a shack and stable. About half the farm was subject to periodical flooding by the river. If they put the drain low enough to drain the water off when the river was low, it would flood back at high water and make it impossible to cultivate. There was another low spot near the corner of the farm where there was a large slough. There appeared to be the possibility, if he was moved to this new farm with the liability from the old farm of $5,000 over his head, of his getting 40 acres of good agricultural land on which to make a living.

He was offered another farm consisting of a half-section, but there was no cultivated land on it, it being all bush land. He had a chance to move to that farm with his wife and two children, take his debt with him, and do the best he could to get established on that half-section inside of two years and make a living for himself; an impossible proposition.

When he took the question of this farm at Mosside to the superintendent of the soldier settlement board at Edmonton he was told that it was one of the best farms available on the list of the soldier settlement board. This man is carrying a debt of between $5,000 and $6,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend know anything about an offer to take him up to the Peace River district?

Mr. KENNEDY: They made an offer to give him cheap transportation to the Peace River country to examine lands which had come back on the hands of the soldier settlement board. He got some information regarding the lands north of the Spirit river to the effect that they were very much of the same type as the land at Westlock.

Just recently the superintendent of the soldier settlement board at Edmonton, Mr. Johnson, wrote to Mr. Chinn stating that so far as he was concerned the revaluation will mean nothing to him, because he cannot see any way in which he can make good. It is clear to me that what the soldier settlement board intends to do with this man is to force him off the farm, which would be a good thing because he is just wasting his time there. If we are going to bring these people out from the old land and settle them on land where they can make a good living over and above—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Surely my hon. friend does not say there is a guarantee that a good living will be made? The individual plays a large part in it, whether there will be a success or failure.

Mr. KENNEDY: There is a guarantee that they will be settled on land where a farmer who conducts his farming operations properly will have reasonable hope of success. There is not a farmer in Canada who could make a living off that farm. It is absolutely worthless and should never be farmed; that is the whole point. The soldier settlement board is apparently willing to take this man's stock and farm and turn him loose.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know Mr. Johnson very well, and I feel sure that if the farm is as poor as my hon. friend indicates, there is a prospect for revaluation, and he would get his indebtedness cut down very materially.

Mr. KENNEDY: Even the Minister of the Interior could not make a living on that farm if he got both the farm and the equipment for nothing. That is the opinion of Mr. Edgson and the others who signed this document; it is soil that cannot be worked successfully. Is it fair to this man to say we are going to take everything and turn him out and let him shift the best he can? If there was any basis of compromise at all, I would advise Chinn to take it.

Mr. FORKE: How much has he put into the farm?

Mr. KENNEDY: He claims to have put in £125. He has spent five years trying to make a go of it, and every person in the district admits that both he and his wife are industrious and are trying their utmost to get along.

Mr. FORKE: Your statement does not agree with the statement we have here.

Mr. KENNEDY: It also does not agree with the statements made by the inspectors of the soldier settlement board regarding that land.

Mr. FORKE: You must admit that all a minister can do is to trust his inspectors.

Mr. KENNEDY: If the minister must trust his inspectors regarding the reports on the land in this case, then I submit the soldier settlement board is unsound from the ground up.

[Mr. Kennedy.]

Mr. FORKE: Do you know of any other method?

Mr. KENNEDY: If we cannot meet the settler half way in this matter, I submit the soldier settlement board is wrong from the ground up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The statement I have here would indicate that this man had put in $125.

Mr. KENNEDY: No, pounds.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is what is in the record. It may be wrong. I just want to draw my hon. friend's attention to it.

Mr. KENNEDY: No, in order to get established he invested £300 of his own money in addition to what was advanced by the soldier settlement board. This is the case of a farmer who cannot make it go. The soldier settlement board cannot make it go and nobody else can on that basis. In that case is there anything to be done except to tell the settler: In spite of all the promises that have been made, the only thing to be done is to let you go off the farm and settle anywhere you like?

Mr. BENNETT: Who chose the farm?

Mr. KENNEDY: The soldier settlement board bought the farm from some one some years ago.

Mr. BENNETT: Did they choose it?

Mr. KENNEDY: The soldier settlement board took over the farm some years ago. They put another settler on it and he failed.

Mr. FORKE: Tell the whole story; the hon. member has not finished the statement.

Mr. KENNEDY: The soldier settlement board took over this land in 1918 or 1919. They put another settler on it and he failed. They had had the farm under observation for two or three years with the same kind of record in regard to crops as we have had since 1923. They sold the farm to this man in 1923 and we have the record as I have given it to the committee. If there is anything else to be told in regard to the matter, I have no objection to the minister stating it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask the hon. gentleman this question, because I am perfectly willing to assist in any case of hardship. Is it not a fact that Mr. Chinn, the soldier mentioned, tendered on this reverted land for $5,000; that his tender was accepted, and that he had been farming a year previously in the Edmonton district?

Mr. KENNEDY: I think that is correct; but does the Minister of the Interior mean to tell parliament that, if we bring a man out here from the old country with fine promises made by the soldier settlement board, claiming that they know land, and that they are expert appraisers; if after two years, we place him on a farm; if after five years' effort hopeless failure results, and it is demonstrated that the land is no good, we are going to say that the responsibility is on the settler and that the soldier settlement board, in spite of its protestations through its advertising in the old land as to the protection it is going to give to the settler, has no responsibility in the matter at all?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not say that.

Mr. KENNEDY: No man who has been in Canada for only two years, not even if he has attended an agricultural college, can be an expert judge of land. We ought to meet this man and give him at least what he has put into the land, whether it is £25 or £125, and let the soldier settlement board take its reasonable loss as he must take the loss of five years' effort of himself and his wife.

Mr. FORKE: There are many contradictions between the statement I get from our supervisor and the superintendent at Edmonton and the statement made by the hon. member. Perhaps there is a misunderstanding. I am willing to make a full investigation into this case and if any hardship has been suffered by the returned soldier, and if anything can be done to help him, I am willing to do what I can. The record I have is not very good.

An hon. MEMBER: Read the record.

Mr. FORKE: There is a statement that the cows had not been milked for five days. No man can succeed under conditions of that kind.

Mr. KENNEDY: That is the flimsy kind of excuse that the board must resort to. Any man who has farmed on the prairies or in bush country knows that he will lose cattle and horses for five days or even three weeks in spite of his best care. That shows just the futility and poverty of the excuses they advance as to why this man has failed. Another statement was that there was scattered around his field some grain that he had not raked up by hand apparently and there were a few manure piles around the yard. There is not a farmer in the west who does not have that and they all know what it is to have one's neighbour's stock break through one's fences in the fall and scatter one's stooks around. Everyone has that experience every year. Those are the three excuses given by the soldier settlement board as reasons which I should believe why this man's failure is due to himself and not to the poverty of the farm on which he has been placed.

Mr. FORKE: I do not see what more we can do. I will endeavour to secure some other information; but Mr. Johnson, the superintendent at Edmonton, I have found to be a very reliable man and not liable to do anything rash.

Mr. KENNEDY: Mr. Johnson has been superintendent for only a short time.

Mr. FORKE: I am willing to make further investigations and if I find any injustice has been done, in fact if he has lost money, I am quite willing to assist him a little. There are limits beyond which it is not advisable to go, because sometimes it is really the kindest thing to tell a man who has got into an impossible position that the best thing for him is to give up the whole undertaking. I do not know what the situation is in this case and I am going to have an investigation made. My whole attitude towards the returned soldiers has been that of desiring to help them in every way, and especially in their farming operations. I have listened to the remarks made by the hon. member; I will take them into consideration, and I will try to get some outside information to help me to come to a conclusion in the matter.

Mr. KENNEDY: Will the minister be in Edmonton this coming summer?

Mr. FORKE: I hope so.

Mr. KENNEDY: I will show him around. I think it would be a kindness to Chinn to have this thing cleared up sooner or later. I think he ought to be willing to take out what money he has in the farm because he is just wasting his time where he is.

Mr. FORKE: We will take the matter into consideration if there is any chance of his succeeding at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: No, the minister has already undertaken to give a statement, while this item is under consideration, as to the process of revaluation.

Mr. FORKE: Yes. I should like to make a reply to the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber). I know something about the troubles of which he speaks. There has been a good deal of correspondence and I am satisfied that it must be looked into. I advised the chairman of the land settlement board that the matter had to be investigated. We are sending out Major Ashton, one of the commissioners, immediately to investigate the whole matter, to meet those people, to find out what their troubles are and to make a report to me on the situation.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

GREAT LAKES AND ATLANTIC CANAL AND POWER COMPANY, LIMITED

On the order:

The house resumed, from May 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Denis (Joliette) for the second reading of Bill No. 152, respecting the Great Lakes and Atlantic Canal and Power Company, Limited.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker, the last time this bill was before the house it was quite apparent that it was contentious. In fact, some members were opposing the second reading. I usually adopt the attitude in connection with bills destined for the railway committee that they are entitled to go there in order that the promoters may be there in person and be heard, but in view of the fact that this bill, even if it got to the committee, could not possibly receive adequate consideration during this session, I would suggest to the sponsor of the bill that it might as well be allowed to stand. No advantage can be gained by proceeding further with it, and it would only take up the time of the house to continue the debate on the second reading.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): In view of the request now made by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning), I would ask that this bill be allowed to stand.

Bill stands.

[Mr. Speakman.]

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from May 18, consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Edwards (Ottawa) for the third reading of Bill No. 43, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, I gave notice some days ago of an amendment to this bill, and hon. members may have noticed that I have changed my notice of motion somewhat as it appears on yesterday's votes and proceedings. I shall not dwell at all on the first notice of motion. While I have no desire to take up the time of the house, I think perhaps it is due to myself that I should give some explanation of the motion that I propose to move. I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn) to add the following as clause 3 of this bill:

> 3. The Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada may make such inquiry into the costs, prices and profits of the Northern Electric Company, Limited, and all other subsidiaries of the Bell Telephone Company, in connection with goods sold and services rendered to the Bell Telephone Company of Canada as the board may deem necessary for the purpose of approval or revision of telephone tolls to be charged by the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, the effect of the change is simply this, that to make it broader I have not only included the Northern Electric Company, Limited, which seems to be the bone of contention in connection with the Bell Telephone Company so far as the public is concerned, but as an additional safeguard I have added all the other subsidiaries of the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would point out that the amendment is out of order; you cannot anticipate by a motion a question that is already before parliament and already on the order paper by four previous motions. That view is supported by all the authorities. Those authorities are quoted in a debate that we had in this house on June 14, 1922, when I raised and was sustained on a similar point of order and will be found at page 2973 of Hansard of that year 1922. The authorities discussed this point at page 248 of May and at page 320 of Bourinot: May at page 248 says:

> A motion must not anticipate a matter already appointed for consideration by the house whether it be a bill or an adjourned debate upon a motion. A motion is equally out of order, if it anticipates a notice of motion for leave to bring in a bill that includes the subject proposed to be dealt with by the motion. A matter already appointed for consideration by the house cannot be anticipated by an amendment, while a notice of motion as long as it remains upon the paper, whether for a specified day or not, prevents its subject-matter being discussed by means of an amendment to a motion.

Bourinot at page 320 says:

An amendment cannot anticipate a notice of motion on the order paper.

I would point out that there are four motions on the order paper dealing with this question. The first is that of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary), dealing with subsidiary company legislation:

March 9—Second reading of Bill No. 63, an act to amend the Railway Act (investigation of subsidiary of telephone or telegraph companies).—Mr. Geary.

Secondly there is my own resolution of May 16:

Mr. Church, on the third reading of Bill No. 43, "an act respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada," will move that the following clause be added to the bill:—

"3. That notwithstanding any law, statute, usage or custom to the contrary the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada shall have power to investigate and regulate all tolls and charges of the Northern Electric Co., Limited, or any other subsidiary company in which the Bell Telephone Company of Canada has any interest whatsoever."

Then there is the resolution of the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas) of May 27:

Mr. Lucas, on the third reading of Bill No. 43, "an act respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada," will move that the following be added to the bill:—

That notwithstanding any law, statute, usage or custom to the contrary the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada shall have power to investigate and regulate all tolls and charges of the Northern Electric Co., Limited, or any other subsidiary company in which the Bell Telephone Company of Canada has any interest whatsoever.

And the resolution of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) of May 28.

Mr. Sanderson, on the third reading of Bill No. 43, "an act respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada," will move to add the following as clause 3:—

3. The Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada may make such inquiry into the costs, prices and profits of the Northern Electric Company, Limited, in connection with goods sold and services rendered to the Bell Telephone Company of Canada as the board may deem necessary for the purpose of approval or revision of telephone tolls to be charged by the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

These four motions are substantially the same and are already on the order paper, some of them appearing weeks ago on the order paper, and some months ago. The rule is clear that you cannot anticipate the action of parliament on a notice of motion, undisposed of, and parliament having failed to take any action on these previous notices of motion, I submit that the motion of the hon. member for South Perth is distinctly out of order. Bourinot so states. He goes further than May, and the British Speaker has recently ruled on the same point on similar lines.

In connection with bill No. 93, to amend the criminal code, which was before the house on June 14, 1922, Mr. Good desired to move an amendment, but it was ruled out of order because there was already a notice of motion on the order paper dealing substantially with the same matter treated in the proposed amendment of Mr. Good. I would ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as the amendment is the same as my own amendment of three weeks previously and three others undisposed of.

Mr. RENE MORIN (St. Hyacinthe- Rouville): If I understand aright the point of order raised by my hon. friend, it is that notices of amendments having been given previous to that of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson), and approximately in the same words, his motion is out of order, but, Mr. Speaker, if you will study these notices of amendment you will find that they differ in some very material respects. The notices of motion previously presented by hon. members seek to give power to the Board of Railway Commissioners to investigate and regulate the tolls of the Northern Electric Company in a general way, while the amendment of the hon. member for South Perth refers to the Northern Electric Company only so far as its business is connected with the business of the Bell Telephone Company. I doubt whether the previous notices of motion are in order, because I do not believe it would be proper for this house, without any notice to the Northern Electric Company, to empower the Board of Railway Commissioners to inquire into its prices and costs of carpet sweepers, broadcasting equipment, radios, and millions of other articles which are made by that company, and which have no connection at all with the business of the Bell Telephone Company. But the motion of the hon. member for South Perth, on the contrary, appears to me to be in order, because it refers to the Northern Electric Company only so far as its business is connected with that of the Bell Telephone Company. I submit that the motion of the hon. member for South Perth should be accepted.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other member desire to speak on the point of order?

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Speaker, we have not yet found out what the point of order is; we could not hear anything that the hon. member said.

Mr. SPEAKER: The point of order may be briefly stated thus: that the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Perth anticipates a question which is already on the order paper. If no other hon. gentleman desires to speak,—

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I judge that what the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) has referred to is the well-known rule that you cannot by a motion anticipate a matter that is already on the order paper and should be dealt with in its turn. There is also a rule that there is no objection to two bills being on the order paper referring to the same matter; or rather, it is not a rule but a dictum of one of the authorities on procedure. But even if two bills be on the order paper dealing with the same subject, one may not be heard in anticipation of the other which has a prior right to be discussed, having been on the order paper for a longer time. The well-known rule against anticipation I urge upon you, Mr. Speaker, as being fatal to the amendment of my hon. friend from South Perth being discussed at the moment.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, there appeared in the votes and proceedings of May 22 a notice of motion by the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas). It is in the form of an amendment to the bill which we are now considering, and is almost identical in its terms with the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for South Perth. In view of the fact that this notice of motion should take precedence of the amendment, and in view of the further fact that Bourinot at page 301 of the fourth edition lays down this rule:

> A motion must not anticipate a matter already appointed for consideration by the house—

I submit that the amendment of the hon. member for Camrose should take precedence over that which has been moved by the hon. member for South Perth.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It has not been moved yet.

[Mr. Morin.]

Mr. SPEAKER: As regards the priority of amendments, we have no rule in this house as to what amendment the Speaker should take cognizance of when there are several. Naturally the practice is that the first in order should be taken. In the British House of Commons it is different; the powers of the Speaker are almost autocratic in matters of private legislation. May—it is not under my hand at the moment—states that when a private bill is called and there are several amendments, the Speaker may choose according to his own judgment the amendments and put them to the house. That is one point.

The second point has to do with anticipation. I have read the amendment moved by the member for South Perth, I have also read the other amendment moved by the member for South York (Mr. McGregor), and finally I have read the bill which has been on the order paper since the beginning of the session, called the Geary bill. Now, if we were, say, at the beginning of the month of May, or even at the 15th, I would be inclined to bar the amendments which deal with nearly the same question as the one raised by the Geary bill. But mark well that the rule governing anticipation is not as stated a moment ago by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest. He quoted May. This is what May says about anticipation:

> A motion, (other than a motion for leave to bring in a bill), is equally out of order, if it anticipates a notice of motion for leave to bring in a bill that includes the subject proposed to be dealt with by the motion. A matter already appointed for consideration by the house cannot be anticipated by an amendment, while a notice of motion, as long as it remains upon the paper, whether for a specified day or not, prevents its subject-matter being discussed by means of an amendment to a motion or of a motion for the adjournment of the house, including a motion under standing order No. 10.

I wish hon. members to listen to this:

> In determining however, whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation, the Speaker must have regard to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the house within a reasonable time.

I pray members again to listen particularly to that sentence:

> In determining, however, whether a discussion is out of order on the ground of anticipation—

Exactly the point raised at this moment.

> —the Speaker must have regard to the probability of the matter anticipated being brought before the house within a reasonable time.

Well, to state the question is almost to resolve it. If we were in the month of May, if there was not almost a certainty of prorogation within a few hours, or a day, I should be inclined to say that the Speaker must sustain the view expressed a moment ago by the member for Toronto Northwest. But we have almost reached prorogation, and there is certainly no chance whatsoever for the Geary bill to come before the house. This bill will be found at page 7 of the orders of the day as No. 43, in these words:

Second reading of bill No. 63, an act to amend the Railway Act (investigation of subsidiary of telephone or telegraph companies).

There is no probability, in fact there is a certainty, that the bill cannot be reached; in view of this shall I debar the moving of the amendment which covers almost the same principle as that invoked by the bill?

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Speaker, will you be good enough to read—

Mr. SPEAKER: I am giving my ruling. Basing myself on May I am therefore perfectly justified in stating that there is no anticipation, because the Geary bill which deals with the same subject, cannot be reached, the house being within a few hours of prorogation.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, you have given a ruling on one point of order. I desire to raise a second point.

Mr. SPEAKER: Certainly.

Mr. GARDINER: In the votes and proceedings of May 22 the hon. member for Camrose gives notice of an amendment. The amendment therein proposed is almost in identical terms the amendment proposed by the hon. member for South Perth. I submit to Your Honour that the hon. member for Camrose should first have an opportunity of moving his amendment before you accept the second.

Mr. SPENCE: I wish to say a word or two in connection with private bills.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPENCE: A number of members are determined to talk out every private bill introduced this year and it is absolutely unfair to members of the house. Every member of the house understands exactly what the Bell Telephone bill is, and it is absurd to think that one or two gentlemen in this house can talk out everything all the time. We should have the point of view of all the members of the house and it should be decided by the vote of the house, instead of continually talking out these private bills.

Mr. GEARY: I rise to a question of privilege in reference to the remarks of the last speaker. I presume he is referring to hon. gentlemen opposite who talked out the Edmonton and Dunvegan bill on two or three occasions.

Mr. SPENCE: I am referring to the hon. gentleman who is speaking, and to others as well who talked out the Edmonton and Dunvegan bill. There has been nothing but obstruction in the house this whole year.

Mr. GEARY: I want to call the attention of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) to the fact that if he is referring to me I have spoken exactly fifteen minutes on this bill in the house. Bills have to be discussed, however much we may be anxious to get home.

Mr. SPENCE: This bill has been discussed on several occasions and talked out. There is not an hon. gentleman who does not understand all about it. We should take the point of view of the members of this house and get an expression of opinion as to whether or not it should be adopted. So far as I am concerned I do not give a twopenny whistle whether it carries or not, but I object to this procedure.

Mr. DUNNING: Before you rule on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would merely request that you read the two amendments under discussion in order to determine whether they are to the same effect. That, I believe, is the point of order raised by my hon. friend. My understanding is that the effect of one is entirely different from the effect of the other; a very important difference in principle exists between the two.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On the point of order, I am not certain that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) has got the point correctly. It is not a question whether there is any similarity between the two amendments; it is a question of priority in respect of the motion itself. There is no question whatever that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Camrose on May 22 last will have priority over the amendment of the hon. member for Perth. I agree with the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) that it should be put to the house first.

Mr. SPEAKER: The point raised by the hon. member for Acadia is that the Speaker should put the amendments in order of precedence.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order; that is the point raised by the hon. member for Acadia. Incidentally I would request silence; there is only an hour for private bills, and I should like all hon. members to hear the ruling, which I intend to give to the best of my ability. May, thirteenth edition, says at page 283:

A member who has given notice of an amendment is not entitled to precedence on that account or to be heard before a member who rises to speak to the question.

That is precisely the situation under review.

According to the rules of debate, the member who first rises and is called by the Speaker, being in possession of the house, is entitled to conclude with any motion which may properly be made at that time. Nor, though a contrary practice prevails in proceedings on a bill, if a series of amendments are proposed to a motion, can members claim, unless they rise to speak, to be called in the order in which their notices stand upon the notice paper.

I rule accordingly that the question now before the house is on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for South Perth.

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): This bill has aroused widespread interest in the province of Ontario. The Bell telephone is the only telephone of any consequence in the province. Whether this is so in Quebec I do not know; I am not familiar with conditions there. But it is true in Ontario. The Bell Telephone Company serves the public; it is operated by a private concern but is really a public utility. The telephone has become a necessity in this age. We could hardly think of living without it. It has done very much to save time for all of us, to save life indeed, to make business run smoothly; and it has been a great factor in binding people together in scattered communities. It is therefore of great social significance. The Bell Telephone is a subject which interests possibly more people than almost any other one thing in the province of Ontario. It is not then to be wondered at that the people of that province are watching eagerly the fate of the two bills that have been presented to this house, the Bell Telephone bill and the bill to safeguard the people's interests, moved by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary).

The Bell Telephone Company has been operating in Canada since 1880 and it is only since 1909 or 1910 that the company has become subject to the jurisdiction and authority of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Since that has been true the Bell Telephone Company has been most generously treated by the Board of Railway Commissioners and by the people of Ontario and Quebec. In 1919 it was permitted to make a flat increase of 10 per cent and in 1921 of 12 per cent; and a few months ago another increase was allowed, the disposal of the profits of which is now causing the company concern and in all probability is the reason for the bill which is now before the house. The raise in rates was allowed on the principle:

[Mr. Speaker.]

That non-discriminatory rates should be established by the company sufficient to produce revenue to cover its operating expenses; a proper amount for depreciation and amortization; its taxes, including income tax, interest, dividends upon its stock and a reasonable surplus.

The Globe in an editorial on May 23, 1928, has this to say:

A dividend rate of 8 per cent is maintained, and the board has accepted the estimated requirements of the company for depreciation, with one small exception. There are few corporations in the country but would welcome a guarantee of solvency and earnings such as the Bell company obtains.

All this is paid for by the telephone users. In justice to these, should should not the board be authorized to make certain that the revenues of the company are devoted to the company's business exclusively?

In the mind of anyone who has looked closely at this matter there is the suspicion that a close relationship exists between the Northern Electric Company and the Bell Telephone Company, and that in all probability the Bell Telephone Company has used the Northern Electric Company to conceal its profits. At least it is true that the Northern Electric Company is controlled by the Bell Telephone Company, and in the year 1926 the Bell Telephone Company was a customer of the Northern Electric Company to the extent of 57.8 per cent of its total business. In 1925, according to Mr. R. A. Reid, barrister, who was counsel for the Ontario government at the last hearing before the Board of Railway Commissioners and also at the appeal from that hearing before the cabinet, $12,000,000 of apparatus, supplies and equipment were sold by the Northern Electric Company to the Bell Telephone Company, and at the end of that year the Northern Electric Company had total reserves and surplus amounting to $8,409,070, with property and plant valued at $9,882,053. For the years from 1920 to 1925 the depreciation reserve ranged from 100 per cent to 129 per cent; that is what was set aside yearly for depreciation of plant and equipment. Surely this is a satisfactory financial condition, yet the Bell Telephone Company, which owns 52 per cent of the stock of the Northern Electric Company, does not show any share in its profits. They would rather receive their profits through an increased rate granted by the Board of Railway Commissioners, which is levelled on the people of Ontario and Quebec. Under the statute as it is at present, the Board of Railway Commissioners cannot investigate the Northern Electric Company, and it seems quite clear that the right to investigate the subsidiaries of the Bell Telephone Company, among them the Northern Electric Company, should be granted by parliament to the Board of Railway Commissioners. If we, as a parliament, do not grant the Board of Railway Commissioners the right and power to investigate the subsidiary companies of the Bell Telephone Company, surely we cannot be said to be safeguarding the interests of the people. The Geary bill, which has not come up for consideration, was designed to do that very thing.

Mr. MORIN (Bagot): What about the Sanderson amendment?

Miss MACPHAIL: That amendment was moved only to-night, and although it seems similar to the Geary bill I cannot say whether or not it serves the same purpose. As a matter of fact I think it would be a very good thing in this case if this public bill could be given some sort of right in this chamber, because it has been moved by this member in order to safeguard the interests of the public. We have 245 members in this chamber who have openly, eloquently and solemnly promised at election times to work very hard in the interests of the public and to do what they could to safeguard the common people against attack from any source whatever. This is a fine opportunity to make good that promise. Undoubtedly the members of this house, by defeating the Bell Telephone bill as it stands at present, have an opportunity to serve the people in Ontario and Quebec, and indeed the people of all Canada.

One would hesitate to say that a Liberal government is more interested in a bill which proposes to increase the capital of the Bell Telephone Company from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000 than in safeguarding the people by passing with that bill an amendment which will make it possible to have the affairs of the subsidiary companies investigated when the Bell Telephone Company comes before the Board of Railway Commissioners to ask for an increase in rates, or by adopting the Geary bill, which will do the same thing. I think there is no doubt that at some future date the Bell Telephone Company will again appear before the Board of Railway Commissioners asking for a guarantee of dividends on their increased capital, should this bill pass. If it were true, as we hope it is not, that the predominant element within a Liberal government stands for that principle of looking after special privilege before looking after the interests of the masses of the people, one might well ask if that is a good Liberal principle or doctrine.

The thing which makes the Bell Telephone Company bill look suspicious is this: If there is to be no milking of profits from the Bell Telephone Company by the Northern Electric Company why should not the Bell Telephone Company welcome a full and free investigation into the affairs of the Northern Electric Company and its other subsidiaries? Some friends of the bill claim that the company wants more capital with which to extend its business. If that is true, why did not the friends of the bill support the Garland amendment in this house, which to me seemed the easiest and most sensible course to adopt if an increase in capital were desired, since it provided for the sale of stock in the open market. The house defeated that amendment; and from that we can only conclude that the amendment was defeated by the friends of the Bell Telephone Company, which leads us to be exceedingly suspicious of the reason for this doubling of capital. I think the Globe of Monday, May 28, 1928, makes it very clear when it says, in a short editorial on the first page of the second section:

> Why—if everything is straightforward, clean-cut and aboveboard—does not the Bell Telephone corporation welcome the Geary bill, which would effectively establish its bona fides?
> Why—if everything is straightforward, clean-cut and aboveboard—does not the Bell Telephone corporation welcome the proposal to offer this new stock to the public at the market price, which would effectively dispose of any suspicion that the public service monopoly plans to "cut a melon" among its privileged shareholders, as was done the other day by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company?

One of the chief reasons given by the Bell Telephone Company for the increase requested when they last appeared before the Board of Railway Commissioners was that they needed the increase to enable them to pay dividends on their stock. Now they want to double the amount of that stock, and I suppose the next step would be to go back to the Board of Railway Commissioners and ask for increased rates in order to guarantee an 8 per cent dividend on the increased capitalization. Again, that will result in swollen profits with which they will have to do something, and if they take the same step again they will increase their capital and then go back to the Board of Railway Commissioners and have their rates raised sufficiently high to enable them to pay dividends on the increased capital; that will go on endlessly.

I was much interested this morning in reading the long and detailed brief submitted by Mr. Reid when, as counsel for the provincial government he made an appeal to the cabinet against the ruling of the board. The very close connection between three or four companies is made very clear by him. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company owns 98 per cent of the stock of the Western Electric Company; the Western Electric Company owns 48 per cent of the stock of the Northern Electric Company, and the Bell Telephone Company owns 52 per cent of the stock of the Northern Electric Company. It will be seen that there is a direct connection between the higher rates the people of Ontario and Quebec pay and the swollen profits of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. I am surprised that such a good Canadian as the member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) who so violently protested against the talking out of this bill, is anxious to have the money of his very patriotic city go to swell the profits of the millionaires of New York. If one goes through all the material submitted by Mr. Reid, who would seem to be the greatest authority on this subject—

Mr. SPENCE: He thinks he is, that is all.

Miss MACPHAIL: —the connection between the high rates paid by our people and the profits of all these other companies cannot fail to be noticed. This milking process has now been going on for some time. The Bell Telephone Company has been successful in hiding from the people who pay the rates the amount of their profits. Some they have hidden in depreciation much greater than they use, as I will show in a moment, and some they have hidden in the Northern Electric Company.

The depreciation set aside by the Bell Telephone Company has been hiding enormous profits in the past. I am now quoting from page 15 of the petition in appeal:

> From the year 1912 down to the year 1920, it has taken out of the telephone users and subscribers of Ontario and Quebec, under the guise or mark of a depreciation charge, the sum of over $39,000,000, and has only used or spent out of that money for the purpose of depreciation for which it was extracted from the telephone users, the sum of about $13,000,000, leaving a sum of over $26,000,000, taken out of the pockets of the said telephone users of Ontario and Quebec in extortionate, high and excess telephone rates during that period of time, and which will never be spent for the express specific purpose for which it was squeezed out of the said telephone users, and is still being added to and piled up at the rate of over $1,500,000.

[Miss Macphail.]

That would seem to show that the Bell Telephone Company is hiding what is really profit under the name of depreciation.

When we consider the way they have of dealing with the income tax, we find that they keep the public from knowing just how much they are making out of the rates charged. On page 11 of this same petition in appeal we find the following:

> The question of income tax was not properly dealt with by the railway commission, and no definite finding, judgment, or decision was arrived at, thus leaving in the air an item of over $400,000, which your petitioners contend should not be allowed at all as an operating expense of the company, as has been done, but should be deducted from the company's net earnings and paid by the company and its shareholders, and not by the subscribers and telephone users, nor shifted by the company in such a way as to have to be paid by the telephone users; nor is the company entitled to, by rate increases or otherwise, sufficiently high rates to meet the payment of such income tax payment. It must be paid by the company direct as an entity or person out of and from surplus and net profits. It is not an operating expense.

Mr. Reid goes on to show that the method used by the Bell Telephone Company in the paying of their income tax is contrary to the statute under which the income tax branch of the Department of National Revenue operates, and he quotes as follows:

> It is under and by virtue of section 3, subsection 8, of 13 and 14 George V. chapter 52, statutes for 1923, that the department acts, and that is the authority under which an item of this kind, put in as an operating expense, is disallowed as such.

And further on:

> The application of the Bell Telephone Company for an increase of rates was based upon the operations for the year 1925, and the company showed a nominal paper bookkeeping deficit of $8,712 for that year. But it improperly charged its income tax payment, amounting to $320,000, as an operating expense. If this had not been done, and had the income tax payment been dealt with in a proper manner as hereinbefore explained, there would have been a surplus of over $300,000 in 1925, instead of a deficit, and the application of the company should have been dismissed.

And then, to my mind, he clinches the matter in the last three lines on page 12 by saying:

> The Bell Telephone Company should stand in no more favourable position than the wage earner, or the salaried individual, who must pay his income tax out of his net earnings.

The Bell Telephone Company have been doing very nicely for themselves by passing their income tax on down and charging it to the telephone users in higher rates. Added to that, they have been sinking very large sums of money in depreciation reserves that have never been used for that purpose. It would seem to me that the members of this house, who represent after all, if they are guided by their professions, the telephone users rather than the Bell Telephone Company, should take such steps as will prevent the Bell Telephone Company on the one hand, from hiding its profits, and on the other, from passing its income tax on down to the people on the ground floor. When we think of anyone, no matter where he lives or what his job is, who has a telephone, he pays not only his own income tax but a share of the income tax of this wealthy Bell Telephone Company of Canada and its subsidiary companies. Surely that is not fair. If people pay their own income tax that should be enough without asking them to pay the other fellow's as well.

As I am a representative of a constituency which is almost wholly agricultural, I think it would be well to consider the position of the farmer in regard to the increased rates, and in regard to the income tax which is passed on down. There are many people besides the Bell Telephone Company who are in the position of passing their increased cost of living and their income tax on down the line until it reaches the place where it can be passed no farther, and that fellow must pay up. In this case that fellow is the farmer. The farmer in Ontario or Quebec who uses a telephone and indeed, whether he uses it or not, pays for the increased telephone rates of many people. He pays it not only for himself but also for the increased rates of the telephone that his doctor uses, the increased rates of the telephones used by his dentist, by the merchant from whom he buys his supplies, by the minister whom he hears preach on Sundays. He pays for the increased rates of the telephones used by the implement agent, the man who runs the gasoline station, the blacksmith who shoes his horses, the editors of the newspapers, both daily and weekly, that he reads. Indeed he pays the increased telephone rate of the dealer to whom he sells his farm products, if he has not yet developed intelligence enough to know that he should sell his own products in cooperation with his fellows. Last, but certainly not least, he pays the increased telephone charges of the undertaker, or at least his estate does. The farmer is on the ground floor. He cannot pass his increased costs of living due to the rates on to somebody else. I have heard a great deal in the house about the farmer not paying an income tax. Hon. members now know the reason. He is so busy paying other people's he has not anything left to pay his own. It is not any wonder at all that the agriculturists are getting out from under the load.

In conclusion, if the government care for the people, indeed, if they care only for themselves and wish to maintain themselves in the position which they now happily occupy—I mean happily for them—it would be very well for them to do everything in their power to ditch the Bell Telephone bill as it is at present constituted. If by the Sanderson amendment it is as well safeguarded as it would be by the Geary bill—and I am not in a position to say whether it is or not—it would put the matter in a different light; but the Bell Telephone bill should be safeguarded in such a way that the people of Ontario and Quebec will not again be forced to pay higher rates which will enable the Bell Telephone Company to pay dividends on its increased capitalization.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): I had intended to present certain statistics to the house and my estimate of those statistics for the consideration of my fellow members, but the figures which I intended to give have been presented by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) and I will not burden the record or take up any time by repeating the figures which she has placed on Hansard. Hitherto I have registered no opinion in regard to the Bell Telephone bill, but I want to place myself on record just to this extent. This is a bill which involves an extra capitalization of $75,000,000. That is a large amount of money. The company is already capitalized at $75,000,000 and it wants to double that capitalization. The company is a very large one, one of the biggest concerns in the Dominion of Canada, and it has obtained from the people of the Dominion the money to become a big concern. Therefore it seems to me that in a matter of such proportions as this is, with practically all the people of Canada interested on the one side and the company on the other, a bill involving so much money and of such far-reaching effect is one which could very well wait for further consideration at the next session of parliament. That is the view that I take in regard to the matter, and if those who are sponsoring in parliament the bill of the Bell Telephone Company have confidence in the merits of their case and in the request of that company for an increased capitalization, they can well afford to wait until all classes of the people—because practically all the people of Canada are interested in this matter—have had an opportunity thoroughly to study and digest the question from every angle.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): If there were one ground upon which Your Honour's ruling was right, if I may say so with all deference, it is that the amendment before the house does not cover the same matter as does the bill to which Your Honour refers. The amendment before the house has not harm in it. The difficulty with it is that it is perfectly innocuous; it will get us nowhere and any lawyer in the house who is acquainted with the practice of the courts and of the Board of Railway Commissioners will tell the house readily that it is not of the slightest use at all. It does not bring, for the purpose of investigation, the Northern Electric Company under the jurisdiction of the board, and it is a very serious question whether, under the terms of the amendment of my hon. friend, the Board of Railway Commissioners would have any power whatever to act under those sections of the Railway Act which give them their powers and set out their procedure. The danger I see in my hon. friend's amendment is this and it is one I am sure he did not quite see himself because I believe, as was evidenced by his vote the other night, my hon. friend is opposed to the increase of capitalization at this time. If anyone suggested this change to my hon. friend, what was in the mind of the one who suggested it to him—

Mr. SANDERSON: I resent the insinuation therein implied.

Mr. GEARY: I am asking if there was any suggestion made of that.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then the hon. member has gone too far.

Mr. GEARY: I will withdraw anything my hon. friend objects to.

Mr. SANDERSON: The inference.

Mr. GEARY: What is the inference?

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friend knows.

Mr. GEARY: I am quite at a loss. I am saying that my hon. friend by his vote the other day evinced his desire to prevent the capitalization from being carried out in the way it is suggested.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friend went further than that. He endeavoured, I take it, to leave the impression on the house and on the country that there was some influence behind my action in regard to the amendment.

Mr. GEARY: No.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. SANDERSON: I am sorry if I misunderstood my hon. friend.

Mr. GEARY: Then the matter is settled. I had no idea there was any influence on my hon. friend.

Mr. SPEAKER: I rather gathered that from the remarks of the hon. member.

Mr. GEARY: No. I said quite distinctly that my hon. friend had no such idea in his mind, but that if anyone cooperated with him in drawing up the amendment or if anyone else was concerned in that drawing-up unknown to my hon. friend, that person had it well in mind that this might serve as a sort of grease, as was said by an hon. member to my left, to carry through the capitalization of the Bell Telephone Company. Shall I adjourn the debate?

Mr. SPEAKER: I think it is too late.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I might be permitted to say just a word, there are still on the order paper two private bills which have been discussed.

Mr. GEARY: Will the right hon. gentleman permit me? Was the debate adjourned on my motion?

Mr. SPEAKER: It is past nine o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was not speaking in reference to the measure referred to by my hon. friend. There are still two private bills on the order paper. They have been discussed at considerable length and I am advised, whether rightly or wrongly I cannot say, that the house would be prepared without further discussion, to vote upon them. If that should be the case, it might accommodate all parties if those bills could by agreement be called at the present time, with the understanding, of course, that if there is an objection to either of them being voted upon, that would prevent its being taken up at this time, and if there is no objection to the measures being voted upon the house would pass upon them finally.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I may inform the Prime Minister that there is objection to them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That settles the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills being exhausted the house will revert to committee of supply.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Soldier land settlement—amount required for soldier land settlement advances and cost of administration of soldier settlement, $1,558,000.

Amount required for general land settlement advances and cost of administration of general land settlement, $1,557,000.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to inquire if the minister has come to any decision with regard to the disposal of soldier settlement lands that have no agricultural value.

Mr. FORKE: I cannot definitely state that we have reached any conclusion. I did not suppose that there were any soldier settlement lands that could be classed as having no agricultural value. They may have very little agricultural value in some cases, but I do not really think that any of them could be regarded as of no agricultural value. We have some very poor lands up in the inter-lake district in Manitoba, some of which have been selected as soldier settler lands, and I am inclined to believe that a good many of these lands are not suitable, and that no family could make a living upon them. If they cannot be sold at a reasonable figure, and taxes are accruing upon them, my idea would be—I am not making this as a definite statement—to let the municipalities handle them themselves, if they can collect the taxes on some of these very, very poor lands. That is the only solution I can see so far as the taxes on these lands are concerned. I would be prepared to sell them to the neighbouring farmers for what they would bring; I am referring to the very poor lands that we have up in the inter-lake district in Manitoba. I repeat, however, that I do not think there is any land that you could class as useless for agricultural purposes, because it should be fit for grazing purposes at all events.

Mr. GARDINER: In using the term "of no agricultural value," I was using the term which the minister himself applied to these poor lands last year. That is the very expression he used. He told this committee a year ago that there were something like 5,000 abandoned farms, 3,000 of them fairly good agricultural land, and 2,000 of no agricultural value, so if I made a mistake in describing the lands, the minister is responsible. The point I want to get at is this. Taxes are accruing on these lands, and the municipalities and school districts are tied up because of these taxes being unpaid. I merely suggest to the minister at this time that he should try to do something with regard to these lands; get rid of them so that they will be taxable at as early a date as possible.

Mr. LUCAS: Can the minister tell the committee what is the situation with regard to the revaluation of soldier settlement lands?

Mr. FORKE: I have a short memorandum on this subject here which I will read first:

The question of revaluation is one that is creating considerable interest, and it is worth while explaining what is being done.

The act was passed a year ago, becoming effective on the 1st June. The condition of the act was that a settler had up to the 1st October, 1927, to apply for revaluation. As there were a number who had not applied at that time, an order in council was passed lengthening the time to the 30th November, 1927, with a proviso that if special conditions arose in which a settler was unable to make application, and these conditions were submitted to the board under oath, the board might accept his application for revaluation.

It was quite evident that before revaluation could be systematically and economically carried out, it would be necessary to wait until the greater number of applications had been received, so that a district could be plotted out and revaluation undertaken without the loss of too much time and too great expense.

It was first decided that no revaluation would be started until all the applications were in, but as the applications came in more rapidly than was expected, it was decided that revaluation should start during July, 1927, and be proceeded with until winter conditions made it impossible to make a proper revaluation.

The method of revaluation is that the land inspector making the revaluation proceeded to the settler's place, and, in conference with the settler, agreed to the identity of the land, the state of cultivation in which the land was when it was bought for him, and the condition of the buildings when bought. This having been agreed to, the inspector proceeded to measure up the acreages that were under cultivation and those which were cultivable, and also to make other appraisements on the land and put a valuation on the buildings, as they were at that time. Having done this, the inspector then placed a valuation on the farm as it was when purchased, according to present day values in that particular district.

The act also provided that if a settler had, by good farming methods, brought his land into a better state of cultivation than it was when he got it, then he received an allowance in appreciation, but if it was discovered that the land was in a fair to good state of cultivation when he got it but by neglect and poor farming it had gone back, then he was charged up with a certain amount of depreciation.

If buildings had been removed, the settler was charged up with the price of the buildings, or if buildings had been burned he was charged up with the amount of insurance that he had received, or, in other words, if a piece of land was worth $3,000 with the buildings on it, the land without the buildings was appraised at $2,220, and if these buildings had been moved off or burned, the price of the buildings, or the amount of insurance received, was added on to the $2,200.

The number of settlers eligible to apply for revaluation is 10,682. Of these 7,886 applied, and during the mid-summer and fall of 1927 1,515 of these revaluations were made. Of this number 1,003 have been received at head office.

I should also like to quote a few figures from a statistical summary as of May 23:

The number of settlers eligible to apply was 10,682. Out of this number, 7,886 applications were received. During last summer and fall, before it got too late to make revaluations, 1,515 appraisals were completed by the supervisors. Of this number 1,314 were forwarded by the district offices to head office, but as head office found certain oversights as to documentation which necessitated their return for correction, the final number that were approved by head office as at May 23rd was 831.

The 831 that have been approved were sold to the settlers at $3,008,602, and the final total reduction on revaluation was $609,275, or an average total reduction of 20.3 per cent.

That is the situation as far as the revaluation has gone. I am informed that the bill dealing with soldier land settlement passed the Senate yesterday, but it will not become law until it has received the royal assent. Until then no steps can be taken for revaluation, but arrangements will be made for this purpose. Any further information I shall be pleased to supply.

Mr. NEILL: Of the 831 cases which the minister says have been finally approved, have the men got their title, or have the cases simply been approved in the office?

Mr. FORKE: They are completed, but I am informed that some of the men are not satisfied and there may be an appeal.

Mr. NEILL: They are not completed?

Mr. FORKE: They are completed as far as the Soldier Settlement Board appraisers are concerned.

Mr. NEILL: It does not seem to me to be very swift progress when only 10 per cent have been valued, but not finally approved except by the department. I would not consider that a claim was finally approved until the man was satisfied or the courts told him he would have to be satisfied. Has the minister any record of how many of these applications have come from British Columbia and how many of them have been dealt with finally?

Mr. FORKE: From Vancouver there were 621 applications; 560 appraisals made; cases received at head office, 162; finally approved, 162. From Vernon, 465 applications; 37 appraisals made; cases received at head office, 37; finally approved, 4. About 200 cases altogether have been received at head office.

Mr. NEILL: And finally settled?

Mr. FORKE: Finally settled as far as the Soldier Settlement Board appraisals are concerned.

Mr. NEILL: But I repeat what I said before; that is not a final settlement. I would only call those finally settled where the soldiers and the department have mutually agreed on the price. I want to know how many have been finally settled. Apparently very few indeed.

Mr. FORKE: I am informed that about 85 per cent of the revaluations have been approved and accepted by the soldier settlers.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): What is the percentage by provinces of applications for revaluation?

Mr. FORKE: I shall have to figure that up.

Mr. NEILL: Has any arrangement been made by the Exchequer Court of Canada to facilitate the hearing of these cases at points comparatively accessible to the settlers? I presume the settlers will not be expected to come here.

Mr. FORKE: The exchequer court have given out no statement as to what procedure shall be adopted.

Mr. NEILL: I thought they had made some regulations.

Mr. FORKE: But these are the regulations in regard to appeals to the exchequer court:

1. The appellant shall, within thirty days from the day of filing his notice of appeal addressed to the registrar of the court, in compliance with Rule 6 of the board, file with the registrar a statement in writing setting forth his grounds of appeal, and serve a copy of the same upon the board.

2. The crown may, within thirty days from the service of the appellant's statement of the grounds of his appeal upon the board, file with the registrar of the court any statement of objections it may desire to urge against the allowance of the said appeal and serve the same upon the appellant. Thereupon either party will be at liberty to make an application to a judge of the Exchequer court to fix the time and place of the hearing of such appeal.

3. In the event of the appellant failing to file and serve his statement of grounds of appeal or the crown failing to file and serve any objections to the allowance of the appeal within the time prescribed, or such further time as a judge may allow upon application made therefor, the appeal may be set down for hearing by order of a judge upon the application of either party.

4. All proceedings in the appeal shall be governed by the right and justice of the case as may appeal to the judge and shall not be required to conform to the technical rules of procedure of the court.

5. Upon the hearing the judge may allow or dismiss the appeal or make such order as he may deem proper in the circumstances of the case.

I think the judges of the exchequer court have been communicated with, but no statement has yet been handed out as to where the cases will be heard.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Did I understand the minister to say that he had the number of applications by provinces?

Mr. FORKE: By districts.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Has revaluation proceeded at relatively the same rate in the different provinces, or is it further advanced in some provinces than in others?

Mr. FORKE: Yes, looking at the list I think they are pretty much the same.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister distinguish between the two items which make up the whole? I notice the second item is:

Amount required for general land settlement advances and cost of administration of general land settlement.

Is that in connection with the returned men or has it to do with settlers apart from returned men?

Mr. FORKE: The first item relates to the Soldier Settlement Board and the second to general land settlement. The Soldier Settlement Board is acting as the land settlement board for the Department of Immigration.

Mr. GARDINER: Under the second item is it proposed to make advances for the purchase of land?

Mr. FORKE: The board's general land settlement activities may be summarized as follows:

1. 3,000 British family settlement scheme.
2. 500 New Brunswick British family settlement scheme.
3. British farm labour placements and aftercare services under the aftercare agreement with the British government—
(a) British families under the above two schemes.
(b) British farm labourers recruited by the department overseas.
(c) British farm labourers nominated in Canada.
(d) British migrants under the "Hoadley Scheme" province of Alberta.
(e) British farm labourers brought to Canada by the Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway.

This amount is required to take care of general settlement. Was the hon. member asking about administrative work?

Mr. GARDINER: I want to know whether it is proposed under this particular item to make advances for the general land settlement scheme?

Mr. FORKE: The advances in connection with the British family scheme and other land schemes are made by the department on a fifty-fifty basis with the British Empire settlement committee. The Department of Immigration makes the payment in the first place and is afterwards recouped by the British government on a fifty-fifty basis. That is what the million is for.

Mr. GARDINER: It is not the intention of the government to buy more farms?

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. NEILL: I want to bespeak the clemency of the minister in behalf of a man in the district I represent. I need not go into the details as his deputy has the full particulars, but I want to mention this aspect of it. The government four years ago assessed his land and the then appraiser said this:

About the centre of the property where the land is lower, and on about eight acres the soil is a shallow loam, about two inches on clay. This particular part of the farm will require further drainage.

Further on he says that the farm has been cropped thirty years and the soil is run out. This part of the farm has been assessed recently for revaluation purposes at $100 an acre. I do not blame the minister, but as a practical farmer does he think that $100 an acre is a reasonable price for land described as shallow loam, two inches deep on clay which requires drainage? I put that to the minister as a practical man. I know what his answer will be and I believe he will promise to look into the matter.

Mr. FORKE: I can only say I want justice done in every case, and if the balance tips I want it to tip in favour of the soldier.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Loans to Canadian National Railway Company

Amount not exceeding $39,000,000 to meet expenditures made or indebtedness incurred (where amounts available from net operating income or investments may be insufficient) by or on behalf of the Canadian National Railway Company, herein called "The Company," or any company specified or referred to in chapter 172 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, and chapter 13 of the statutes of 1920 or now or hereafter comprised in the Canadian National Railways or by the company in respect of any railways, properties and works entrusted to it from time to time under the provisions of section 19 of chapter 172 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, or any one or more of such companies, on any or all of the following accounts, such expenditures or indebtedness being herein called authorized expenditures:—

(a) Interest on securities, notes and other obligations; rentals for lease of lines;

(b) Equipment principal payments; sinking funds; miscellaneous maturing or matured notes and other obligations secured or unsecured;

(c) Operating income deficit, whenever incurred or ascertained;

(d) Construction and betterments, including coordinations; acquisition of real or personal property.

The amount herein authorized may be applied from time to time to meet authorized expenditures, in the discretion of the governor in council:—

(a) In respect of railways, properties and works entrusted to the company as aforesaid;

(b) In respect of railways, properties and works not so entrusted by way of loans in cash, or by way of guarantee, or partly one way and partly the other, subject, however, as follows:—

If by way of loans from His Majesty, the amount or amounts advanced to any one or more of the said companies shall be repayable on demand, with interest payable half-yearly at the rate fixed from time to time by the governor in council, secured if and when directed by the governor in council by mortgage or mortgages upon such properties, in such form and containing such terms and conditions, not inconsistent herewith, as the governor in council may approve.

If by way of loans from persons other than His Majesty (without the guarantee of His Majesty) the amounts, terms and conditions of such loans shall be such as the governor in council may from time to time approve.

If by way of guarantee, any such guarantee may be either a general guarantee covering the total amount of the issue, or by a separate guarantee endorsed on each obligation, and may be of the principal, interest and sinking funds (if any) of the notes, obligations or securities of one or more of the said companies specified by the governor in council, which notes, obligations or securities the companies so specified are hereby authorized to make and issue, and such guarantee may be signed by the Minister of Finance, or such other person as the governor in council may authorize, on behalf of His Majesty, in such form and on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine to be appropriate and applicable thereto. Any guarantee so signed shall be conclusive evidence for all purposes that the provisions of this enactment have been complied with.

Should temporary loans be made or negotiated before the lapse of this appropriation either from His Majesty or other persons, guaranteed notes, obligations or securities may subsequently be issued under the provisions of the preceding paragraph of this enactment to renew, refund or adjust such loans, or any part thereof.

Each company herein mentioned or referred to is hereby authorized to aid and assist, in any manner any other or others of the said companies, and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may for its own requirements and also for the requirements of any or all such other companies from time to time:—

(a) Issue notes, obligations or other securities, joint or several, at discretion, for the purpose of any guarantee made or to be made under the provisions of this enactment;

(b) Apply the proceeds of any such guaranteed issue, or the amount of loans received by virtue of this enactment, in meeting authorized expenditures on its own account or on account of any or all of such other companies;

(c) Make advances for the purpose of meeting authorized expenditures to any or all of such other companies, upon or without any security, at discretion.

No purchaser of such guaranteed notes, securities or obligations shall be under any obligation to inquire into the application of the proceeds of any guaranteed issue, $39,000,000.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The discussion of this vote commenced the other evening.

Mr. GARDINER: There is a large increase required this year and perhaps the minister will give us an outline of the reasons for it.

Mr. KENNEDY: This is the estimate in connection with which we decided to discuss the Peace River situation?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend decided it; I did not.

Mr. KENNEDY: The minister said he would as soon discuss the question here as under any other item. I wish to direct the attention of the committee to the need for a railway in the Peace River country, and I bring the matter up in order to give the minister an opportunity to make a statement on behalf of the government in view of his own statement last year. The committee will remember that last session both the house and the committee on railways and canals gave considerable attention to the subject. When the question came before the house, on the report of the railway committee and the amendment thereto, the Minister of Railways made the following statement, as reported at page 2409 of Hansard, April, 13, 1927:

I intimated while the hon. member was speaking that the government was prepared to accede to that request if the amendment now before the house were withdrawn; and indeed, whether it is withdrawn or not—my hon. friend can press it to a vote if he desires—the government does intend in any event to secure further detailed engineering information in order to be able to say to the people of the Peace river country and to the people of British Columbia, who are vitally affected, "When a western outlet is built, this in our opinion is the pass through which that line of railway should be constructed. .. .. .." We are prepared to do that in any case. . . . . We are prepared to ask the Canadian National Railways to determine definitely as early as possible which pass should be used when a railway is to be constructed. . . . That is as far as we are ready to go at present.

In view of that statement I want the minister to tell us what has been done in the way of carrying it into effect. I know that a start was made in connection with the matter during last season and that Mr. Hill, one of the engineers of the Canadian National Railways, was up looking over a part of the railway which would be required, running west from Whitelaw towards the Peace river canyon at Hudson Hope. I believe his report was laid on the table of the house early in the session and it illustrates very well the urgent need for carrying out the program which was laid down last year in the amendment, in so far as surveys of the Peace and Mountain pass are concerned. The amendment mentioned the Pine pass as well, but I believe there is fairly complete information available with regard to that pass.

It has been said for years that the Peace river pass is the best route. That may or may not be so, but the late Premier Oliver of British Columbia advocated a line through the Peace pass to Prince George as the best method solving the Peace River Railway problem. His words can be found at page 46 of the evidence of the committee on railways of 1927, The Minister of the Interior was also of that opinion and his words touching the matter are reported at page 270 of Hansard of last year, when he said:

I agree with the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser) that the only feasible route, irrespective of what it costs, is by the Peace river pass. No one can deny that who knows the topography of the country and the direction in which the rivers run.

The report of the joint board of engineers of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway on various proposed railway routes for a western outlet to the Pacific from the Peace river district contains the following on page 7:

In considering a western outlet from Peace River district (to avoid back-haul) two branches will be required; one starting at Spirit river and running westward 165 miles to Rocky Mountain canyon when it and the branch from Berwyn 200 miles long form a junction on south side of Peace river, this being the only practical crossing of Peace river.

The gradient of new line along the Peace river need not exceed 0.4 per cent excepting the branch on south side from Spirit river to junction at Rocky Mountain canyon, which will require 1.00 per cent gradient.

The line for about 150 miles west of Berwyn on north side of Peace river is through country that in time would become agricultural, and the same can be said for the first 125 miles west of Spirit river excepting the part through forest reserve.

No extraordinary difficulties would be encountered in construction of line along Peace river; the work would be classed as heavy if compare with average prairie line, and light if compared with average mountain lines.

From Rocky Mountain canyon to Prince George (257 miles) the line will closely parallel the Peace river to Mount Selwyn, thence up the Parsnip, the Pack and Crooked rivers to Summit lake, thence down the slope of Fraser river to Prince George, 35 miles.

From Prince George the traffic can be carried over several routes.

Mr. Hill, who was one of the engineers who signed that report, found that matters were not quite as stated in the report, although I must say his findings are not very conclusive. In paragraph 4 of his report he has this to say:

Range 15 to Rocky Mountain canyon (southerly route). The best and largest area of agricultural land in the Peace river block, north of the river, is known as the St. John country and is in elevation 1,000 feet, or more above the Peace river. To the east of it the Beatton river runs south into the Peace river and its valley is 600 to 1,000 feet deep. To cross it with a direct line gradients up to 2.0 per cent would be required.

The last report stated one per cent. I do not know that I need take up any more of the time of the committee at present with this report, but while the statements with regard to Peace pass and the other passes were made in good faith, we find that the more they are investigated the more new facts come out, which neither the engineers nor anyone else thoroughly grasped previously. It should be pointed out that Mr. Hill's report of last year is mainly concerned with the railway running between Whitelaw, the present end of the Central Canada Railway, to Hudson Hope on the north side of the Peace river. It does not cover the Peace pass, which begins at Hudson Hope. Mr. Hill states that to construct a line coming close to the Peace river on the north side would require gradients of 2 per cent, but that a longer route swinging north would require gradients of only one per cent. However, his report does not state the extra cost which would be involved or the extra mileage which the longer route would necessitate, and in view of that fact the last statement of his report is very much in point. It says:

The Obed route, from information available, is unquestionably the best Pacific outlet for the Peace River country as a whole. It is, however, unpopular with certain sections of the country. Actual surveys have been made over this route and also the Pine pass route. In order that a correct comparison may be made—

That is the point.

—between all routes, surveys must be made over the other two, the Monkman pass and Peace pass routes.

Notwithstanding the fact that the engineer gives certain conclusions and says that this route is not as good as the other, he admits that he has not complete and correct information, and that the information cannot be correct until it is complete. I would like to see complete surveys made of the Peace pass and Monkman pass routes. With all due respect to the engineers and without questioning their good faith I submit that we cannot make a comparison between these various routes until we have a similar or practically similar survey of the Peace pass and Monkman pass routes. I think the experience this country has had as a result of duplication of railways and wrong locations of railways in the past, leading to permanently increased costs of operation and fixed charges, should indicate that it is a wise policy to make sure of the proper location of an outlet such as this.

There is one result which I think is obvious from the survey work already done. I think it was shown in the report of the committee last year that the Peace river country could be railroaded in such a way as to provide about 6,000 economic acres of land to every mile of railway as against about 5,000 acres or a little more in the three prairie provinces. That will mean a great deal in connection with the operation and the revenues of the railway in the future. A survey of these passes may cost several thousand dollars, but the wrong location of railways—because when a railway is once put down it cannot be moved —or the construction of excessive gradients where lower gradients might be obtained at a reasonable cost, soon add millions of dollars which must be paid by the people of the country in freight rates. So I submit that while it may cost a little more to survey these passes, and while we might save a few thousand dollars by not making these surveys, it would be much better to spend that money and get a correct location which will give us the cheapest possible cost of operation in the future. If that policy had been followed in laying out the railways throughout the three prairie provinces as well as throughout the rest of Canada; if a comprehensive study such as will be made if these surveys in the Peace river country are completed had been made in the three prairie provinces, it would have meant a great saving in connection with our Canadian National railways. So I submit that it is good policy for Canada and good policy for the Canadian National Railways or any other railway company to have that information, and since in the last analysis the cost of mistakes in railway construction and operation will come directly or indirectly, out of the pockets of the people of Canada, I think it would be a wise and ultimately economic thing for the minister to carry out at the earliest possible moment the promise he made last year.

In his report Mr. Hill has stated that outside business is still agitating for an outlet, while the settler is well satisfied with the grain rates. The settlers are fairly well pleased with the present freight rate; they are reasonable enough to know that the present rates in the Peace River country are very good considering the mileage over which the traffic must be hauled. However, they are also aware of the fact that a coast outlet would place them in a position as advantageous with respect to shipping their grain to the Pacific coast as that occupied by Edmonton to-day, and the saving in the cost of moving grain to the Pacific coast as against the cost from Edmonton would be approximately 6 cents per bushel. This year, in view of the bill which has just passed this house and the Senate, the Alberta government will construct about 40 miles of railway. I think it is unfortunate that surveys were not completed before these lines were laid down, but the need for this work was so great that the money was voted at the last session of the legislature. They are now constructing one branch of the railway and they will start on the other one, I understand, just as soon as they possibly can. In view of the statement of the Minister of Railways last year, I should like him to assure the house this service will be completed as soon as possible, and this season if it can be done. I know the Minister of Railways is anxious to do this, and I trust he can assure the house that he sees his way clear to get the thing done as soon as possible.

Mr. DUNNING: I trust my hon. friend will not regard me as discourteous if I reply somewhat briefly. At this stage of the session I do not think the house would desire to have a very lengthy discussion on the various possible routes from the Peace River country to the Pacific coast.

As the hon. member has indicated, I made a statement last session. My hon. friend says

I made a promise. I wish he had not said that, because I try to avoid making promises. I made the statement a year ago of my intention to do something which was then within my power to arrange to have done. It did not constitute a promise to do something in the future.

My hon. friend has discussed the report of the engineer who went through the Peace pass in order to determine its comparative value as a western outlet for the Peace River railways. My hon. friend now desires assurance that similar work will be done immediately on other passes. I cannot at the moment intimate with the same clearness I did a year ago that the work will be proceeded with this year along the lines indicated. I have no positive assurance as to the men and facilities being available to go on with the work. But I would say this to my hon. friend I apprehend that when parliament is asked to vote money for the construction of any line westward from the Peace River country through northern British Columbia, the first thing this house will want to know is what the Canadian National Railways management recommend with respect to the location, the construction and everything connected with it. I deprecate our dragging this matter into the realm of what might be called a discussion by laymen, such as my hon. friend and myself, because it is, after all, a question of railroad construction and operating economics when the decision to spend public moneys finally comes before parliament for approval. I feel sure when that time comes that parliament will desire rather to pay heed to men who make a life work of determining these questions on an engineering and economic basis than to take my view, or even the view of my hon. friend, interested though he may be as a resident of the district.

The information which I have tabled respecting the work done last year indicates that the Canadian National management at the present time believe that they have sufficient information to justify them in saying which would be the most economical route from the Peace River country to the British Columbia ports. I cannot say that I am personally satisfied that sufficient investigation has been made, and I intend to endeavour to get the Canadian National management to see the matter in that light and make a further and more detailed investigation before any definite and decisive recommendation is made as to the route. I can give my hon. friend that undertaking, but at the present time I am not in position to say that such and such work will be done this year on the height of land between Alberta and British Columbia.

Mr. FRASER: As another member of this house who is more or less interested in the development of the Peace River country, I would like to say a very few words in regard to this question. I might say at the outset that I am rather disappointed in the statement of the Minister of Railways. Last year the Minister of Railways made a statement in the house, which I might as well read, as he has somewhat limited the application of it to-night. I am reading from Hansard, 1927, page 2409, when the Minister of Railways was speaking on this question and replying, I think, to the member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy).

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend (Mr. Kennedy) has just quoted it; there is no question about it.

Mr. FRASER: This is what appears in Hansard:

> I intimated while the hon. member was speaking that the government was prepared to accede to that request if the amendment now before the house were withdrawn; and, indeed, whether it is withdrawn or not—my hon. friend can press it to a vote if he desires—the government does intend in any event to secure further detailed engineering information in order to be able to say to the people of the Peace river country and to the people of British Columbia, who are vitally affected, "When a western outlet is built, this in our opinion is the pass through which that line of railway should be constructed." We are prepared to do that in any case.

Just by way of introduction I would like to say this; let the house remember in the first place that we are dealing with a very large question. The Peace River drainage basin comprises 117,000 square miles of land, which is equal to about 75,000,000 acres. In my opinion, with this land it is possible to double the present output of wheat in the Dominion of Canada. Anything that will do that is surely an important question and one that requires the very earnest attention of every person in the Dominion of Canada. It would indicate that by the development of the Peace River country it is possible almost to double the population of the Dominion of Canada.

Let me point out this further fact. The Peace River country is roughly a thousand miles from the Pacific Ocean and three thousand miles from the Atlantic seaboard. That would surely indicate that the best route to haul the products of that country is to the west. At once another question comes in, and that is the Panama canal. The Panama canal is having a wonderful effect all over the Pacific coast. At the present time we are actually transporting goods from Toronto and Hamilton to the city of Vancouver without breaking bulk. I know of an agricultural implement agency who are distributing a good part of their products all over British Columbia, and I contend that that will be the route over which these products will pass to the Peace River country, as soon as the proper line of railway is constructed. The Panama canal will act as an equalizer and regulating agency so far as rates into the Peace River country are concerned.

So far as I am concerned the proper route to be taken is via the Peace River valley. This route would provide the lowest grades through the Rocky mountains. The elevation through this pass would be 2,350 feet, and the elevation of the Canadian National railways through the Rocky mountains at the present time is 3,750, while the Canadian Pacific railway has an elevation of 5,350. This is one of the factors which must be taken into consideration. The grade will not exceed the grade of the Canadian National railways, and they have the best grade for a transcontinental railway on the American continent.

Mr. DUNNING: I know my hon. friend does not wish to labour under a misapprehension. Has he read the engineers' report made this year on the Peace River pass?

Mr. FRASER: That is not on the Peace River pass at all. I beg to differ with the Minister of Railways on that point. Anyone who will attempt to make parliament or the people of the Dominion of Canada believe that that report has any relation at all to the Peace River country's western outlet is not putting the matter in a proper light. I might as well take up that question now. The Peace River country, to be properly served, must have a main line from the coast to Hudson Hope. From Hudson Hope there must be two lines, one on the north side of the river and one on the south side. The work that was done by your engineer this year did not touch the Peace River pass at all. It went as far as Hudson Hope and it went from there east to Peace River crossing or somewhere near there. It linked up those two points. That is only branch line construction and it will be so for all time in the Peace River country. Exactly the same thing pertains to the south side of the river. There will be one mainline running from the Pacific coast to Hudson Hope and from that point we must have a branch line on each side of the river. That will be branch line construction and operation for all time.

[Mr. Fraser.]

Mr. DUNNING: Then how are the Peace River people going to get mainline service?

Mr. FRASER: The mainline from the Peace River is from the coast to Hudson Hope. From that point you must have two lines. Let me say this also in connection with the Peace River. That is the only route into the Peace River country that will not entail a back haul. On any other route you take, for instance, the Obed route, the Monkman route, or any of the southern routes, you will have to haul the freight on the north side of the river either to Berwyn on the east or to Hudson Hope on the west. If the country is going to develop—and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) quoted from the report that the best part of the Peace River country was on the north side—it is a shorter distance to the coast to haul freight from Fort St. John to Hudson Hope. In any other case you have to haul it east and then west again. The Peace river country can never be developed without a main line from the Pacific coast to Hudson Hope. From Hudson Hope, which is the only crossing on the Peace River for two hundred and fifty miles, it is impossible to get a crossing at all, and you have on both sides of the river immense areas of first class agricultural land. The minister's engineer of course states that the areas on the north side are splendid agricultural land and the report we had last year stated that the areas on the south side were equally valuable. It is impossible to suppose that either of those areas will remain undeveloped. Consequently the development of the Peace River country in my opinion must be through the Peace River pass, because that is the only route which will not entail a back haul and of course add distance to the haul and add to the expense of the haul. The Peace River route will provide that haul from any part of that country connecting at Hudson Hope and from there proceeding along the main line to whatever outlet you may take on the Pacific coast.

That is the fault, the Chairman, I find with the statement made by the Minister of Railways last year and the actual work that has been accomplished. I took it from the statement he made that he was going to make a serious effort to get information in regard to the development of the Peace River country. I say here, and I say it advisedly that the work that was done this year had no relation at all to the ultimate outlet of the Peace River country. We have not only, as I have stated, the lowest summits, the best grades, but, it must be remembered, immense water powers in that country. It is possible on the Peace river to develop all kinds of water powers; in fact the late Premier Oliver in his statement here said there was sufficient water power along the route to operate by electricity the whole of the route. We have tributary to those water powers all kinds of minerals and timber awaiting development in that country. Put all these things together and I think it will be found that this is a question that deserves the very serious consideration of the government:

In addition to the statement made by the Minister of Railways last year we have ample evidence in the records which were gathered before the railway committee last year to justify a serious attempt at least to get all the information available about the Peace River route. My contention is that as regards the actual route there is at present no available information, because Premier Oliver when he was before the railway committee stated that the Obed route would be a positive danger to British Columbia. He favoured the Peace River route. In making a statement before the parliamentary committee he laid this down:

> Great care should be taken to see that railway construction is so located that it will form part of a permanent transportation system having in view the maximum development of the country.

I might refer to what is called the maximum development of the country. The information laid before the railway committee last year in regard to the maximum development of that country estimated that only 1,860,000 tons of freight were available in that territory. But remember this, that the area they were speaking of was only a very limited area of the Peace River country, and, as I have pointed out, the possible freight to be developed in that country is not 1,860,000 tons but ten or twelve million tons. Railroading a country for 1,860,000 tons is an altogether different proposition from railroading it for ten or twelve million tons. I think the evidence which has been produced before the committee and which is before the government at the present time does not take into consideration the large-sized development of that whole area. Before the matter is definitely decided, this information must be gathered from some reliable source.

We have Premier Brownlee agreeing absolutely with the late Premier Oliver that the Obed route is not a proper settlement of the Peace River question. In fact he says that he is opposed to the Obed route and that the best that can be said about it is that it is a temporary expedient, a proposition that will only provide railway service for a very limited area in the Peace River country. We also have the Minister of the Interior, who claimed to have considerable knowledge of the Peace River country, coming out frankly last year in the debate and stating that he was then and had always been of the opinion that the proper way to develop the route was via the Peace River itself. Let me point out some of the conditions that existed in the Peace River country during last winter. They produced somewhere in the neighbourhood of eight or ten millions bushels of grain and they were engaged in hauling that grain all winter—and I am talking now more particularly of the British Columbia end of the district—to the end of steel, a distance of some sixty or seventy miles, some four or five hundred four-horse teams. They were hauling this grain all winter and they were not able even then to move all the grain. In fact I had a letter from a man telling me that if he had teams working from the time that sleighing was in shape to haul the grain and would keep at it until the sleighing was finished, he would have two or three thousand bushels of grain that it would be impossible for him to haul during that year. It takes a whole week to make the trip and they have great difficulties to contend with. They have no proper accommodation on the way and they have to carry their feed with them. All this makes it a slow proposition to haul the grain of that country to the railway terminal which is at Spirit river. These men are paying thirty cents a bushel for hauling this grain to the railway. I was told of one instance where they came to a river. There had been a chinook wind a day or two before, and the water was running over the ice. The man had to haul his load of grain over the ice, and the water on top of the ice was so deep that it flooded his sleigh and wet his grain, and when he got to Spirit river, the elevator would not accept his grain because it was wet. These are some of the difficulties these people are experiencing, and that is on the south side of the river. On the north side, they cannot deliver their wheat until the spring. Then they load it on the boat, and it is hauled to Peace River Crossing, where they connect with the railway.

I do not wish to take up any more time at this stage of the session, but I would like to impress upon the minister that in my judgment the work that was done this year in regard to obtaining information about the Peace river was only in regard to branch lines. In fact, when the Minister of Railways was up in that country last year I understand he made the statement that what that country needed was not main lines at all, but more branch lines. Now who ever heard of opening up a country by providing branch lines first, and then the main line afterwards. That was the statement of the minister as reported in the Edmonton paper, and I think that is putting the cart before the horse with a vengeance indeed. It seems to me that the first thing we should provide in connection with a big development of that kind is the main line, and then afterwards provide your branch lines. How in the world are you going to provide your branch lines in their proper location and in proper juxtaposition to the main line until you have your main line laid down definitely, and you know what you are building to and where you are building to?

I submit that the request made by the hon. member for Peace River is a most moderate one. Not only that, but I submit that this matter should be handled in pretty much the same manner as the minister handled the Hudson Bay railway question. I think an eminent engineer should be required to make a survey of the whole country and of all the conditions that have to be taken into consideration, an eminent engineer who is not connected with either of the two railways, but who will be absolutely impartial and will present a report that will be accepted by all the railway engineers in the country as definite and final. With all due respect to what the Minister of Railways has said, I submit that the Peace River railway question will never be settled until something of that kind is done. It is absolutely necessary for the full development of the Peace River country that a comprehensive survey of the whole situation from every angle be made by an eminent engineer who is not in any way interested in either of the two great railways.

I take the strongest possible exception to what is taking place in that country at the present time. You are asking the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian National railways to combine their forces and present a report, or to provide a solution to the problem of developing the Peace River country. I submit that that is absolutely improper. I say that it is not fair to this country, it is not fair to the Canadian National railways and it is not fair to the Canadian Pacific railway. The Minister of Railways must remember that the Canadian Pacific Railway is not interested at the present time in that northern country. They have not a mile of railway north of Edmonton.

[Mr. Fraser.]

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend state that I am asking the two railways to join forces?

Mr. FRASER: That is what is going on with the minister's consent.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is quite wrong; I am not asking them to do any such thing.

Mr. FRASER: Surely the Minister of Railways knows that combined offers have been made by the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway—

Mr. DUNNING: Of course I know it.

Mr. FRASER: —for the development of the Peace River country, and for the purchase of the Edmonton and Dunvegan Railway, which must enter into the question.

Mr. DUNNING: That is very different from stating that the minister is asking them to do it. The minister has not asked them to do anything of the kind.

Mr. FRASER: It is being done with the minister's consent; he is allowing it to go on. I say that that is not a proper thing to be done. That territory will provide profitable traffic for any railway which develops it. The Canadian National railway is operating at a deficit which the taxpayers of this country have to pay, and if that is a profitable country for a railway to operate in, is it not a good place to help wipe off the deficit on the Canadian National? Then why not turn whatever profit there is in that country to the benefit of the Canadian National Railway? The Canadian Pacific Railway at the present time has ample opportunities of developing its own territory in the southern part of the province. We know perfectly well that when it selected the lands, it selected them contiguous to its own road. Let them develop those lands. We heard in the railway committee last year that there were numbers of places in the southern part of Alberta and Saskatchewan that were crying for railways. That is Canadian Pacific territory. Let them provide the required facilities there before they extend themselves into the northern territory. Let them provide proper transportation facilities for the people who are settled in these southern parts where their own lands are. That seems to me a reasonable proposition. They have sufficient work there to look after, or the people would not be crying out for railways. If that is so, let the Canadian National have the benefit of opening up this new country and getting the whole profit, instead of splitting the profit with the Canadian Pacific.

The minister disclaimed any responsibility for the combined offer. If he is not in favour of it, surely it is easy for him to stop it and to get to work in a comprehensive way and give the Canadian National a chance to develop that country, and give it an opportunity to wipe out the deficits which it is incurring, and which the taxpayers have to pay at the present time. I submit that if that proposition is gone about in a proper and comprehensive way, the development of that Peace river country will absolutely wipe out all deficits on the Canadian National Railways. I submit that I am not asking too much when I ask the minister to have a comprehensive survey made of all the conditions by an eminent engineer who will bring in a definite and final report that will enable the people of Canada to know exactly what should be done in order to open up that country.

Mr. BRADY: I shall not follow in any way the lines that have been taken by the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken. But I wish to place before the house, in the five minutes I intend to take, a question involving the responsibility that is absolutely on the shoulders of this government, and that is to implement what they themselves commenced. The Prime Minister himself, in words that certainly conveyed only one meaning, placed himself definitely behind this outlet to the Pacific coast for the Peace river country. The Minister of Railways last year, also in words as emphatic as a man could use, pledged himself to do what his words were intended to convey. They are in Hansard; shall I read them?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Dispense.

Mr. BRADY: I am glad the house knows exactly what the Minister of Railways said. In the short time at my disposal I will use the logic which the champions of the Hudson bay railway used to get that road completed to the stage in which it is in to-day. I went to the trouble of reading their speeches, and here are the arguments they advanced for the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, and if these arguments are not tenfold stronger for an outlet to the Pacific coast for the Peace river country, then our logic is at fault and our arguments are vain. Here are the arguments which the champions of the Hudson Bay railway used:

1. That a huge sum had already been expended, and that to abandon the railway would be a great waste of public money.

Now here is the first parallel. It was this Dominion government that placed thousands of settlers in the Peace river valley. They are still coming in and will settle there permanently. It is the duty of the government to implement what they promised. Now, number two:

That large areas in Saskatchewan and Manitoba were set aside and the proceeds from their sale were earmarked for this special enterprise.

In regard to this we already have large sums expended on the reconnaissance and survey of the Obed, Pine and Monkman passes. The Peace River pass has yet to be surveyed in accordance with the people's views. We have spent money there already. Are we going to stop now, when for the last three months we have been dealing with the biggest problem that confronts the Canadian people —immigration? It is part and parcel of that very scheme. The duty of the government is to decide for all time to come where that outlet is to be and so set the minds of the people at rest. I am not advocating one outlet or the other, but I demand that the minister define the outlet. When that is done you can put in your subsidiary lines wherever necessary. The third argument advanced for the Hudson Bay railway was this:

That the route was feasible on the ground of safety of navigation and shortening of transportation.

Now I appeal to the committee, is not that argument conclusive to-day regarding the Peace River outlet? There is a big drawback by the Edmonton and Dunvegan line to Edmonton. To get that route to the Pacific coast is just as important for the farmers of Alberta and British Columbia as is the Hudson Bay line for the farmers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. We were told that if the Hudson Bay railway were connected up at Port Nelson—since Fort Churchill—the terminal would be the same distance from Liverpool as Montreal is, namely, three thousand miles. If that be true, and if that was the main argument for the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, I say unhesitatingly that that argument is tenfold stronger when we advance it to get the shortest and most economical route from the Peace river country to the Pacific coast.

Another argument brought forward was found in the wonderful history of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, and it was said that the Hudson Bay line would equal it because of the great mineral territory through which it would run. Will any hon. gentleman dare deny that the mineral wealth of the Peace river country, particularly towards the west, is beyond imagination? We have the wealth. You dare bring nothing against any of the arguments laid down for the Hudson Bay railway as those same arguments are applicable to this project.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the people demand from the government the fulfilment of its pledge. I do not want the government now to go into millions of dollars of expenditure, but I submit it is the duty of the government to take that survey and decide once for all where the outlet to the coast is to be. If it is Stewart, well and good; if Rupert, well and good; but let us know. I think this house would be lacking in the exercise of its authority if it permitted the government now to sit back, as the Minister of Railways is practically doing, and abandon the pledge that he gave in this house on April 13 of last year. On that occasion he said:

> When a western outlet is built this, in our opinion, is the pass through which that line of railway should be constructed. This we are prepared to do in any case.

Now, sir, it is simply a question of principle. The hon. minister is bound by all the arguments of logic and honour to make a proper survey this year and let the people of Peace river and the Pacific coast province know where that outlet is to be. I think if the hon. minister did that he would be doing all we are asking.

Mr. MALONEY: I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that the Peace river country is not the only section of Canada that lacks railway facilities.

Mr. DUNNING: I wonder if my hon. friend would be kind enough to let me deal with the Peace River matter before he proceeds? I desire to thank the member for Skeena (Mr. Brady) for the very temperate character of his remarks, except in so far as they implied a lack of good faith on my part. I regret I cannot extend the same thanks to the member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser). As to the latter's remarks, a question of principle arises immediately which this house must always keep before it in connection with our great experiment of public ownership of railways. My hon. friend insists that the minister shall say to the management: Do this; do not do that, in connection with what is a practical matter of railway economics as to which this house has vested responsibility in the management, and properly so, free from political interference by the minister. If we are to maintain the experiment in public ownership which we are carrying on, and make it a success, we must always be very careful to draw a line between what the management as a matter of practical railway economics may wish to do and what the political head of the railway department for the time being may insist upon their doing.

Now, with respect to this matter, I intimated a few minutes ago that when this house eventually votes the money for the construction of this railway enterprise—and that day probably is closer than some of us now think —I am satisfied that the house will not desire to be guided by the engineering and economic advice of my hon. friends from Cariboo, Skeena and Peace River, nor by my advice. This house will demand of me, and properly so, that the management of the Canadian National Railway system, having under the law to do with these matters, shall state what is the sound thing to do from the point of view of railway economics, and will be guided by that expression of opinion rather than by the opinions of any hon. members who have spoken.

May I say to my hon. friend from Cariboo, the same thing applies with reference to the negotiations which have been proceeding for the acquisition of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia railway, now owned by the province of Alberta. The same procedure was followed by this government in that case as was followed by the government in connection with all other provincial lines which were under discussion at the Dominion-provincial conference a few months ago. The management of the Canadian National Railways, the practical railway men of our publicly owned system, were authorized to negotiate with the parties at present owning the lines, with a view to reaching an agreement as to what on the one hand, would be satisfactory to the provincial government, and as to what, on the other hand, the railway management could conscientiously recommend to this government. That was done, and that only, in connection with the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company.

I do not desire to embarrass the negotiations, about the present status of which I am not sure. But I do know that the Canadian National management did make, to the present owners of the line, a tentative offer, subject to the condition I have just related. They made an offer which was not satisfactory to those owners. Subsequently, due to circumstances which I will not take the time to go into, but the responsibility for which cannot be laid at my door or the door of this government, joint negotiations were entered upon between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National, on the one hand, and the owners of the road on the other. My hon. friend condemns that. Very well; but I say to him again that when we come finally to deal with that question this house will want to know, not what his opinion is, not even what my opinion is as Minister of Railways, but what are the reasons of the management of our publicly owned enterprise for the recommendations they may make to the minister. So much for that.

Now with reference to the engineering aspect of the question, what was done last year? I thought, when I gave the information to the house by way of a return in detail, that this would be sufficient at any rate to demonstrate that the Canadian National, as requested by me in accordance with the undertaking given to the house last year, had made a substantial start upon the work then contemplated. And in that connection I would ask the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Brady) to be fair enough—I know he wants to be fair—to bear in mind that the Canadian National management, from the very commencement, have had their own views as to what constituted the soundest economic solution of this problem. We are asking them to undertake work which, in the judgment of the management, is not necessary on economic grounds but is necessary only because of the many divergent views held by the people who are affected in the circumstances. What was done? My hon. friend from Cariboo this evening cast aside all the work done by engineer Hill, as well as engineer Hill's report, and propounded what appeared to me to be an entirely new aspect of the problem. Apparently, for him, the main line ends, coming from the west, at Hudson Hope. There is not to be a main line from there through to where the grain is produced in the Peace river valley in Alberta. He is thinking, and properly, in terms of his own constituency in British Columbia, while all the time the real problem —so we are told—is a short outlet to the Pacific coast. That means a main line outlet, if it means anything, from the present producing country in Peace river, Alberta.

It is true my hon. friend is correct when he says that the engineer did not go through the Peace pass last year. Why? Because the exact information regarding the Peace pass was already in the possession of the Canadian National Railways. What the engineer strove to do was to collect accurate information regarding the country which lies between the producing area in the Peace river in Alberta and Hudson Hope. And the report is before the house. I do not propose to discuss it except to say this: I must of necessity attach more importance to the engineering opinion of that engineer than I do to the opinion of my hon. friend. I must of necessity do that.

Mr. BRADY: The minister says that he places more reliance—naturally—upon the engineer's report. But last year I read to him one report regarding the Obed route, wherein the engineers absolutely stated that that was the best outlet for the Peace River. Since then different opinions have been advanced, and I may be wrong. If so, I want to be corrected.

Mr. DUNNING: I have before me that expression of opinion and my hon. friend forgets one qualification in it. It is signed by Mr. Hill, the reconnaissance engineer. He states:

> The Obed route, from information available, is unquestionably the best route.

Mr. BRADY: That is the one.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; but I point out the qualification, "from information available". Now there was one constructive suggestion from my hon. friend from Cariboo.

Mr. KENNEDY: The minister should notice the rest of that paragraph—that he does not claim to have complete information.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right, and that is why I stress the words "from information available". There was, I say, one constructive suggestion from my hon. friend; because, after all, while the principle of what I have been outlining with respect to the National Railways is undoubtedly sound, we must nevertheless reckon with the fact that this House of Commons finally votes the money for any project such as this. The constructive suggestion made by my hon. friend was that I should follow, in connection with this problem, the same procedure as with respect to the terminal port for the Hudson Bay railway, and secure the services of some eminent engineer from outside the range of the present Canadian National Railway Company, obtaining in that way an entirely independent report on the whole problem. If I gathered the tenor of my hon. friend's remarks, I doubt very much whether he would accept the opinion of the most eminent engineer in the world unless it coincided exactly with what he considers the situation to be.

Mr. FRASER: That is not a fair remark. I made the suggestion to the Minister of Railways that he get an eminent enginer to survey the whole situation. But certainly I am not an engineer and do not pretend to be. I am speaking from information I have gathered on personal visits to the Peace River, and from people who have been in and out of the Peace River, as well as from information available to every member of the house. And I say most positively that you would get an eminent engineer to make that survey. But certainly I have no engineering opinion to offer.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not want to give offence to my hon. friend, and I thought he would admit at once that he had strong opinions on the subject. I thought he would be rather like the Scotchman who said that he was always open to conviction but that he would like to see the man who could convince him. That, I gathered, was my hon. friend's attitude when he was speaking.

Mr. CANTLEY: It was an Irishman who said that.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, it may be a libel on both races. At any rate, the constructive suggestion was that an outside engineer be secured to report on the whole problem. That is worth considering, not because I have a lack of faith in the engineers who have been working on the problem up to now, but because the government must recognize public opinion in relation to the problem. And certainly there are many diverse opinions about it in the Peace river country, as my hon. friend from Peace River is in the best position to know. I shall be glad to give consideration to that suggestion. In connection with it I might point out that it might be necessary to go outside Canada, as it was in the case of Churchill, to secure a man who would be completely free from any association with either of our great railway systems.

In conclusion may I say this. The government does appreciate the importance of developing our new regions and especially the Peace River area. The transportation problem there is a difficult one. Upon its right solution may depend the future sound development of a very large area, not an area of 175,000 square miles, as my hon. friend said—

Mr. FRASER: 117,000.

Mr. DUNNING: Or even 117,000 square miles, because he took in the whole watershed right up to the summit of the mountains to get that area. It does not matter, however; it is a large and rich area which certainly merits development, and which is developing now in spite of the handicaps under which it labours. The Canadian government is not unaware of the importance of it, nor is the management of the Canadian National Railways. That is best demonstrated by the efforts the Canadian National has made to secure control of the railway at present running from Edmonton into that country. I do not desire to be more definite than that, but I think my hon. friend has contributed something by way of a suggestion which may prove of value, not because we lack faith in our own engineers but because of the great diversity of opinion among those most closely affected it may be desirable to consider such a course, and I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have just one question to ask. The minister has enunciated to the house an excellent principle with regard to the safe way by which we can ensure reasonable success to our nationally owned enterprise, that principle being no political interference. I am quite in accord with that, but I carry in mind the promise since the minister does not like the word "pledge," of last year that a survey of the various routes would be undertaken. Now the minister tells the house that last year he was in a position to carry out that promise.

Mr. DUNNING: So far as the year's work was concerned. I am only discussing the year's work.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But he says this year he is not in a position to do so. The question in which I am interested is as to the difference; what has happened in the meantime to make it impossible for him to implement the promise made last year? What situation has arisen? I do not believe the minister has explained that at all.

Mr. DUNNING: I may say to my hon. friend quite frankly that on a couple of occasions I have discussed with Sir Henry Thornton what we should do this year and how it could be done having regard to the other work of the Canadian National Railways from one end of the country to the other, and Sir Henry Thornton has not yet advised me what he can do this year with respect to this problem. That does not mean that nothing will be done; I did not intend to convey that impression. I was merely endeavouring to be careful not to put something on Hansard which would be quoted to me next year from three or four different sources as has happened to-night. I hold that during the past year the government did implement, as fully as was possible under the circumstances, the undertakings made by me on behalf of the government last year. The undertaking made on that occasion still remains good, but when my hon. friends press me to say what will be done this year I am not in a position to answer because Sir Henry Thornton has not yet indicated to me what it will be possible to do. The policy is exactly the same; there is no difference.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just one question to ask the minister, a question which is often asked by the man on the street who is not well versed in economics and high finance. How is it that the management of the Canadian National Railways claim to have surpluses and yet to-night we are asked to vote an amount of $39,000,000? If these surpluses exist why must we vote money for the use of the Canadian National Railways this year?

Mr. DUNNING: The answer to that question is very simple. When the term "surplus" is used in connection with railway operation it means a surplus of revenue over the expenses of operation. There still remains to be paid the interest on the capital obligations of the railway, and the deficit in connection with the Canadian National Railway arises because of the fact that, until the present, it has not earned enough over and above its operating expenses to pay the interest upon all its bonded indebtedness. In recent times it has generally succeeded in earning sufficient to pay the interest upon that portion of its obligations held by the public.

Mr. BENNETT: Only in one year.

Mr. DUNNING: I am making a general statement; if we combine the last two years it has practically carried itself as far as interest due the public is concerned, but I am ready to let my hon. friend have his own view in that regard. In general, having regard to the size of the figures involved, it may be said that the Canadian National Railway is now earning sufficient to pay interest on the obligations held by the public.

Mr. POULIOT: And if a member wants some information about the affairs of the Canadian National Railways would it be possible for him to get that information, even in a confidential way?

Mr. DUNNING: That is a very difficult question to answer without knowing what kind of information is desired.

Mr. POULIOT: Any kind of information, because we are voting money and we should know where it goes.

Mr. MALONEY: When I made way for the minister about an hour ago I was about to direct his attention to the fact that the Canadian National Railway system is not giving an adequate service to the people of the district which I represent. We are called upon to-night to vote the sum of $39,000,000 to this company, and surely it is the duty of every member of parliament to see that this money is spent in the interest of service to the whole people of Canada. I speak as one who is most anxious to see the Canadian National Railways succeed in every way, and I believe the minister is most anxious to see that the railway gives service to every section of the country. Therefore I call his attention to the fact that in the county of Renfrew the Canadian National Railways are not giving a satisfactory and sufficient service.

In the first place, through a peculiar and penurious policy which has been practised for the last few years, by cutting down the maintenance of way men they have left the roadbed in such a condition that at times it is very dangerous to travel over that section by train. Not only is that the case, but the railway station at Caldwell in the county of Renfrew, a most important centre, was burned down two years ago. Since then they have been transacting business in a box car, and at that it is not one of the large box cars but one of the smallest of those built within the last twenty-five years. During these two years a great deal of business has been transacted at this point; month after month more than $10,000, $12,000 and $15,000 in revenue has gone into the coffers of the railway company from outgoing and incoming traffic, but the box car still remains. Conditions are such that the health authorities of that municipality are considering closing that box car because they believe it unfit for human habitation; under the provincial law they have power to do so. In addition to that, in the westerly part of the county of Renfrew it takes three days to make a round trip between two points only thirty miles apart. Any man who is not crippled could walk the distance in much less time. I draw these facts to the attention of the minister and ask him to impress them upon the management of the Canadian National Railway system. They have been brought to the attention of the management many times but I ask the minister now, feeling that he is anxious to see that all sections of the country are properly served by this railway, to bring these facts to the attention of the management.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. BRADETTE: I realize that it is not a very popular thing for a member to make a speech at this stage of the session, and particularly when it originates from what the press of the country calls a "back bencher." However, I am going to take a few moments of the time of the house to bring up a matter which not only interests the section of the country which I have the honour to represent but affects the whole of Canada. I refer to the principle of taxation which is applied to the Canadian National Railway system. When last Wednesday I brought up this subject before the committee, the Minister of Railways asked me if I would bring it up again when we were dealing with the Canadian National Railways supplementary estimates. I hope that hon. members will be indulgent towards me because so far this session I have listened a lot and said very little.

Another factor is that we in northern Ontario very seldom come before this house asking for favours, but the moment I received the mandate to represent that section of northern Ontario I knew I was bound to present this matter before the house, as it is one we have been agitating for for the last twelve years. We have sent several delegations to the different ministers of railways, and the different governments, and our public bodies have met the premiers both of the Dominion and of the province. I want to make it clear at the very outset that it is not my intention to make this a political matter, because I expect to get support from every section of this house.

Eighty per cent of the Canadian National railway system is actually paying taxes, or compensation, if you prefer the word, and the other twenty per cent is not. Of the same substance eighty per cent is called flesh and twenty per cent is called fish. This twenty per cent is through the northern part of the country, and I feel I am bound to bring this matter before the house as forcibly as possible. It has been previously said that public and private ownership are going to remain with us. We are not against the principle of public ownership in northern Ontario, but we should receive the help that other parts of the province are obtaining from that public ownership. The first thing that comes to one's mind when dealing with public or private ownership is the matter of taxation. I know the house will look reluctantly on the principle of voting public money to pay taxes to a section of the country in respect to a part of the road actually owned by the government. When I mention Cochrane or northern Ontario, I do not want to be regarded as taking any local or regional attitude; as I said at the outset, I want to consider this matter in a non-political and national sense.

On the 12th of January last, I wrote a letter to the Minister of Railways telling him of my intention to place before this house a motion to generalize the system of taxation on the whole railroad. I will read his answer:

> I appreciate very much your advising me in advance of your intention to move a resolution in the House of Commons having to do with the Canadian National Railways.
> As you know, the whole subject is a very complex one and includes widely differing conditions in different parts of the country. You will pardon my pointing out one error in your letter and that is the statement that the National Transcontinental line is practically the only part of the Canadian National system not actually paying municipal and school taxes. As a matter of fact, no municipal or school taxes are paid by the system in Saskatchewan or Alberta and I believe also in a considerable portion of Manitoba; also, no taxes are paid in the maritime provinces on the former Intercolonial lines. This will serve to indicate to you the magnitude and complexity of the problem.

Through my activities during the last twelve years as a member of the municipal council of the town of Cochrane and also a member of the associated boards of trade of northern Ontario, I have taken a very important part in the discussion on that all-important question. I realize that this is a really complicated problem, nevertheless an injustice is always an injustice; and an injustice has been perpetrated and perpetuated against northern Ontario.

At the present time practically 80 per cent of the system pays taxes, mostly in the towns and cities and in the most thickly populated centres of the country, and that principle should be generalized, more particularly over that section of the road from Quebec to Winnipeg. When I was speaking last Wednesday a member of the opposite side of the house asked me about the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was stated at the last annual meeting of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that they actually paid to the municipal and provincial governments of the country nearly $8,000,000 in taxation. I would assume from that that the Canadian Pacific Railway is paying taxation on the whole system.

On receiving an answer from the Minister of Railways I sent a copy of the resolution to the Speaker of the House. This resolution reads as follows:

> Taxation of Canadian National Railway property, on that portion of the railway system primarily known as the National Tanscontinental, and extending from Quebec city to Winnipeg, for municipal and school purposes, in all localities, along these sections of the railway municipally organized—

Whereas, government ownership of the Canadian National railway system has created a burdensome situation in a number of muncipalities through having a large portion of otherwise assessable property placed on the exempt list; and

Whereas, in many cases the loss of municipal taxes from such exempt property is out of proportion and creates a very serious loss of revenue absolutely needed for the proper administration of municipal affairs; and

Whereas, the prerogative of the crown, of having crown property exempt from taxation, was established prior to the crown ever expecting to or undertaking to take up competitive business in full competition with private corporations which are subject to municipal taxation; and

Whereas, it would appear that justice and equity would preclude the crown from taking advantage over private corporations in the discharge of corporate business; and

Whereas, the National Transcontinental was built by the Dominion government for the Grand Trunk Pacific railway on the understanding that it would be handed over to this latter railway on completion and under a lease, as an integral part of the Grand Trunk Pacific system; and

Whereas, the principle of taxation of railway property on the Canadian National railway has been maintained and in some cases established, in most sections of the present corporation, namely; over the portions of the system originally called the Grand Trunk railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Canadian Northern and the Intercolonial;

Therefore, be it resolved: That this house urges the waiving of the prerogative of the crown of exempting any such railway property from municipal and school taxation, on that section of the Canadian National railway system originally known as the National Transcontinental railway, from Quebec city to Winnipeg, for all organized municipalities along that part of the Canadian National railway system, which is occupied and used solely for the administration and maintenance of that portion of the aforesaid railway system.

A few days later I received the following letter from the Clerk of the House of Commons, dated January 19, 1928:

The notice of motion which you sent in for the order paper does not seem to be in order, as resolutions to increase the charge upon the people must be introduced by the government with the recommendation of the Governor General.

You are asking by this motion that the house urge the waiving of the prerogative of the crown of exempting the Canadian National Railways from the municipal taxation in a certain part of the country. If you secure an affirmative vote, the government will be bound to renounce these taxes. In other words you are asking for a decision of the house on a charge upon the people without following the ordinary practice. I took the matter up with Mr. Speaker this morning and he entirely agreed with me. I regret therefore my inability to give notice of this motion when the session opens.

It is not my intention to discuss that letter as I realized that I was out of order, due to the fact that it covers the question of the expenditure of public moneys. but it surprises me that the principle of taxation is not generalized throughout the whole system.

We have had promises from ministers, from members of this house, from premiers of the province of Ontario and from the mayors of several municipalities that this matter would eventually be brought before this house, and that is the reason why I am taking this opportunity to bring it before the house. I realize it is too late to do anything this session, but I hope that before next session something fair and definite will be done on this question.

When the section of the railway from Quebec to Winnipeg was built it was understood that on the completion of the line it would be turned over to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway for administration. For reasons well known to the country, on account of the war and the decline of immigration and over construction of railways, the Grand Trunk Pacific could not live up to its contract with the government, and eventually the government had to include that portion of the line in the national railway system. The attorneys of that corporation—I will call it a corporation—maintain that this section should not pay taxes because it is now administered by the government. It is hard for a layman to understand why 80 per cent of the system should be taxable while the other portion is not taxed. We maintain that that principle should be generalized, and there is an absolute necessity at the present time that this question should be solved for all time.

I understand that the house has in the past dealt with very serious problems and has always dealt with them successfully. We in northern Ontario very seldom ask anything from any government; but if you look at a map of Canada you will see that we are really central Canada. We are not the east and we are not the west, but we are bridging the gap between the two sections of the country. It has often been said in the house and in the press that Canada is strong at its extremities and weak at its centre. We are strengthening the centre; we are bridging the gap between east and west; we always take a keen interest in national matters, and we do not see why we should not receive the same consideration as the rest of the people are getting in connection with public utilities. When I mention public utilities I do not want to discriminate in any way whatsoever, and I hope representatives on the other side of the house from southern Ontario and in fact representatives in every corner of the house will understand me when I say I am in full sympathy with the development of the hydro electric in connection with industrial, commercial and farming operations and developments.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BRADETTE: If hon. gentlemen who say "carried" know the way to get this carried, I will sit right down while we have a chance to get the money in our section of the country. I have had very little encouragement so far and I trust the house will bear with me for a few minutes because it is a matter of great importance to us. We in northern Ontario, outside of a development around lake Nipigon, are not getting any benefit out of the hydro electric development, but without any recrimination whatever I may say that in our section of the province we have helped to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars in connection with hydro development although we have never got any of its fruits. Moreover, in this year of 1928 the provincial government is paying out of the provincial treasury $6,000 for every working day, to subsidize rural lines. We in northern Ontario, who do not expect to get any hydro development owing to the fact that the government has seen fit, and I believe rightly under the circumstances, to give eighty per cent of the hydro electric power to private competitors, are satisfied with the situation, but we want to have your sympathy in a problem which interests really not only northern Ontario but Canada as a whole. It also interests new Ontario and new Quebec. We have been playing the game with every section of the country and I hope on this occasion, now that the matter has been brought before the house, that the house will see fit to deal sympathetically with us.

Two or three years ago, if I am not mistaken, the sum of $75,000 was offered to the Premier of Ontario in the way of a grant or bonus in lieu of taxes payable by the Canadian National Railways. Mr. Ferguson is a true friend of the north and although we do not belong to the same political faith, we are great friends because we are both working for the development of that section of the country. For some reasons, best known to himself, he turned that offer down. We believe he did so for three reasons, the first one, which might be a logical one, being that the offer was too low. The second one, which might be at the root of the difficulty that we have to encounter, was the fact that if he accepted that sum to be distributed in respect of the Canadian National railway system, by that fact he would establish a principle of taxation in respect of provincial railway, the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario. I believe he was right in that regard, because the principles or policies of taxation of public utilities should emanate from Ottawa so that we may know exactly how taxation will be applied and generalized so that we would not be characterized by the hit-and-miss system under which we are working at the present time. After further investigation in this matter, I heard that the premier of the province turned down that $75,000 because he did not see his way clear to distribute it. But our municipalities along the line of the National Transcontinental in that section are perfectly well equipped; we have the necessary machinery to accept that money and to distribute it. I heard on other occasions that perhays there would be friction on account of the distribution of the money for school purposes. Again I repeat, we have the municipal organization to distribute the money fairly and justly in the different municipalities, to the public and separate school boards, and in this matter of tax distribution we never encountered any difficulties.

Mr. DUNNING: It is necessary for the committee to report progress in order that the Speaker may take the chair while the house decides what shall be done after eleven o'clock. If my hon. friend will permit, I desire to move that we report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): We have spent a good deal of time to-day in discussion, but we have not made as much progress as we had hoped to be able to make. I gather that hon. members are anxious that the session shall not be unduly prolonged and I imagine that we could make more progress if we sat somewhat later this evening. I would therefore move:

That the house shall not be adjourned at eleven o'clock p.m. this day.

Mr. SPENCER: That does not mean an unlimited sitting?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, but it gives latitude for progress if we are making progress.

Mr. SPENCER: At twelve o'clock shall we take a vote again with regard to sitting later?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It will always be in order for anyone to bring up the question of adjournment.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I beg to lay on the table the report of the joint committee on the library of parliament, which met on May 31, 1928, as follows:

The committee authorized the transfer of the volumes of the Irish Law Reports series to the Department of Justice, and also of certain technical books to the library of the mines department, with the understanding that such books should be accessible to members of parliament at any time.

As a result of a discussion on the question of the laxity in respect to the return of library books, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

"That, when members of parliament have in their possession more than six library books, and when such books are retained in their possession for such a period of time as to inconvenience other members who may desire to borrow such books, then it shall be the duty of the liibrarians to notify the members that, by order of the joint committee on the library, the books must be promptly returned, and, if not so returned, the librarians are hereby instructed to report the case to the committee, or to the speakers."

A question was asked respecting the case of an ex-member of parliament who for a long time had had in his possession a number of books from the parliamentary library and, though notified on several occasions, had neither answered the librarian's letter nor returned the books. The committee unanimously passed the following resolution:

"That, the librarians are hereby instructed to communicate with the ex-member in question, and to inform him that these library books now in his possession are the property of the crown, and that, as he had been notified to return them and had ignored such notice, unless such books are returned immediately after this final notice, the matter will be placed in the hands of the Justice department with the request to take action to recover the property."

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. BRADETTE: I hope that next year, I will be given an opportunity to thresh this question out very thoroughly before the railway committee. The matter is complicated and there is a great deal of information which would be very useful to the house to enable it to study the problem fully. That is why I am going to cut my speech very short. As I said before, I have received a considerable number of answers to the circulars and pamphlets sent to members of parliament and also to members of the provincial legislature. I am going to read only one of them a letter from Senator G. D. Robertson, which is very typical of those which I have received. That is what he has to say about the matter under date of February 14, 1923:

Dear Sir:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 8th inst., together with printed circular enclosed referring to the desirability of the Canadian National railways being assessed for municipal and school purposes.

At Cochrane and other points along the Transcontinental where the railway property represents a large portion of the improved property in the municipality I readily appreciate the propriety of the railway bearing some of the cost of municipal taxation, especially for schools, as most of the children attending such schools are children of employees of the railway company and such employees ought not to be taxed for school purposes more heavily than are similar employees in other municipalities where the proportion of taxation is more widely distributed. This question was discussed some two years ago by the late government, being brought to its attention by the undersigned after my return from Winnipeg in August 1920 via the Transcontinental railway, when this question was brought to my attention, but it was not deemed advisable to take action at that time, or until the whole of the government-owned lines were merged into one system. Now that this is being done and the Grand Trunk and Canadian Northern portions of the Canadian National system do not pay taxes, there would seem to be no good reason why some reasonable rate of taxation should not also be imposed upon the portions of the national system formerly known as the Canadian Government railways.

I shall be glad to lend such aid as I may be able to bring some relief to your municipality, and others similarly situated, but feel that the movement should be initiated in the House of Commons, as the jurisdiction of the Senate, of which I am a member, respecting the introduction of money bills might be questioned.

I have at least a hundred letters, all very sympathetic. Here is one from Mr. Manion, another from Mr. William Irvine, another from Mayor Lavigueur to Mr. Warrell, clerk of the municipality of Cochrane. They show that the matter was discussed, if not on the floor of this house at least among the members, and most of them were very sympathetic. I hope that an opportunity will be given me to explain the situation before the railway committee. I realize that it is getting late in the session to get a grant of money, but again I ask the Minister of Railways if that amount of $75,000 is still in the possession of the government. If so, that distribution should be made at once during the year 1928. We have the machinery and all the organization necessary to take care of the distribution of that money.

We in that section of northern Ontario are willing and ready to help all other sections of the country. We have shown it in the past. We are not numerous, but the time is coming when that section will contain millions of people. More and more we are becoming the treasure house of the North American continent; but just now we are in the pioneering stage and we must insist in our demands for what is legitimately coming to us. For these reasons I am asking for support on this all-important question to us, and that we get this compensation as soon as possible. We are willing to go without sidewalks, or to put up with very bad ones. We will do without good streets, but we want our children to have proper school accommodation. We want them to have good qualified teachers. We want them to have at least a good elementary and high school education. We do not want their location to be against their education. I believe that in helping our section you will be helping particularly the cause of education in this country. In conclusion, I hope that something will be done, and in the very near future, to alleviate the injustice that has been done to that section of the country during the last twelve years.

Mr. DUNNING: I might just briefly say in reply to my hon. friend that the question of taxation of all the various units comprising the Canadian National railway system is, as I indicated in the letter which he read, a very complex problem. Certain lines are crown lines, and always have been, and because of that fact they have been exempt from taxation. Certain others were owned by private companies, now forming part of the Canadian National railway system.

Mr. BENNETT: And were exempt from taxation by statute.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and certain others were privately owned, and were not exempt from taxation at all. Then there is still another class in the west which are exempt from municipal and school taxes because of the fact that the Canadian Pacific railway exemption from similar taxation applies all over the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and over a part of the province of Manitoba. This brief statement will illustrate the great difficulty of the problem.

A little over a year ago, on an occasion when the various provinces were represented, an effort was made by the Canadian National Railway to reach some common ground of agreement between the provinces, and it was thought that such agreement had been reached. Subsequently, however, two or three of the provinces indicated that the understanding which it was really thought had been arrived at did not coincide with their view of what was done at the conference, and consequently the situation still remains very complex indeed. I do not want to go into a lengthy discussion of it to-night.

My hon. friend indicated something which I will suggest to the members of the house generally, and that is that when the special committee on railways and shipping is in session, the committee before which these estimates were presented and considered in detail, an excellent opportunity is afforded to members of the house generally to present before that committee any case such as that now presented by my hon. friend from North Timiskaming, on an occasion when the general officers of the company, with the necessary records and information, are there for the very purpose of giving information to the parliamentary committee. I suggest that the time of the house can be saved if members generally will take advantage of the presence in Ottawa of the general officers of the company attending the meetings of the special committee. That applies also to my hon. friend from South Renfrew, who spoke of some matter of train service, information regarding which cannot possibly be in the possession of the minister, or of any of the departmental officers available to the minister when the estimates are before the house; but these matters can be considered in detail before the committee.

In conclusion, may I say this? The situation with respect to the National Transcontinental is a peculiarly acute one, and while we are trying to solve it in common with all the other problems of a similar nature from coast to coast, I can only say that I will undertake to see to it that that phase of the problem receives during the recess consideration separately from the rest, in view of the fact that we have been unable to reach an agreement with the provinces comprehensive enough to cover the whole of the problems which require to be dealt with in regard to taxation. I trust that my hon. friend will be satisfied with the assurance that this particular phase will be examined during the recess.

Mr. BRADETTE: That is satisfactory, but I would ask the minister if it is not possible to have a distribution of that sum of $75,000 this year. We have all the necessary equipment and organization, municipally speaking, to take care of that amount, which should be given to the municipalities direct and not to the province.

Mr. DUNNING: I will see to it that consideration is given to that phase of the question.

Mr. HARRIS: Again this year we are asked to vote a very large sum of money to the Canadian National railway, involving an increase over last year of some $17,239,500. I think perhaps the people of this country are not worrying very much about voting this amount of money so long as they feel that they are getting a good return from the investment.

I would ask the Minister of Railways, who has just undertaken on behalf of one of the members of his party, to do something, if he will undertake to see to it that we have presented to us next year, if we are spared to come back to this House of Commons, a balance sheet, setting out the assets and the liabilities of the Canadian National railway system, which will be a true reflection as nearly as possible of what is taking place and of what has taken place during the last five years. To make it as brief as I possibly can, due to the lateness of the session, we one and all know that there have been vast amounts of money spent on capital account for the Canadian National Railways, more particularly during the last five years, expenditures on road and equipment which in turn apply to the asset side of this balance sheet. The investments on capital account this year total $43,724,677.16, bringing the grand total up to $1,914,000,000. Just let that sink into the minds of hon. members a little bit. There has been invested in road and equipment, and charged holus bolus to capital account, $1,914,000,000 and not one dollar of that, apart from the retirements from year to year, has been written off that vast capital for exhaustion of the different units which go to make up the system. Not one dollar has been written off for exhaustion and depreciation. The only amount that has been written off is the amount representing the original cost of some item which was retired. That is written off, but nothing else. The minister well knows that the class A roads in the United States, in accordance with the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, write off a certain amount each year for exhaustion or depreciation, if you will. The minister well knows that that portion of our road which operates in the United States under the Interstate Commerce Commission must write off a certain amount for exhaustion or depreciation, and yet we in Canada are being more or less led astray by this balance sheet which does not show any reflection of the exhaustion or depreciation on the many hundreds of millions of dollars which have been poured into the road in the form of new equipment. I would be the last man to attempt to demoralize that great institution, the Canadian National Railways. I am anxious to forward its interests to the very best of my ability, but I owe a duty to the people I represent to point out that this balance sheet is not a true reflection of what is happening in regard to the system. True, in fifty years' time as we retire the different elements which go to make up this system to-day we shall come back to the stage where the total capital account may show the original cost of everything that makes up the road. But would it not be fairer to ourselves and to the country at large if year by year we reflected in this statement some idea of the amount of exhaustion which is taking place? To my mind the Minister of Railways will be doing a service to the country if he demands that the railway commission exercise jurisdiction—if they have any—over the accounts of the Canadian National Railways so that the balance sheet may show a fair reflection of the depreciation. I would ask the minister at least to give us a ray of hope that this will be done.

Mr. DUSSAULT: Mr. Chairman, I wish to address a few remarks to the Minister of Railways. Our division of the Canadian National Railways from Ste. Rosalie to Riviere du Loup, comprising 250 miles, in 1925 and 1926 gave a total revenue of eleven million dollars, and the expenses were only seven million dollars. There are no important places along the line. Its cost being valued at $40,000 a mile would bring the total for that mileage to ten million dollars. Now, the net revenue being four million dollars, if you allow interest or dividend at 5 per cent it would mean $500,000. In other words, our division has paid over and above that 5 per cent $3,500,000 to the country. And we are not saying a word. We are only asking the minister, not to open new roads, not to give us new stations, but just to keep the present road and stations and equipment in good condition. We are paying 20 per cent on the capital investment in our division. I repeat, we only ask the minister to keep the property in good condition, and we hope members from other parts of the country will be satisfied, as we are, to wait until their divisions pay 20 per cent on the investment before they ask for further expenditure.

Mr. ARTHURS: I desire to add a few words in support of the remarks of the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Maloney), as to the condition of the railway service along what was formerly known as the Canada Atlantic division of the Grand Trunk, now under the control of the Canadian National Railways. Originally there was a daily service from Ottawa to Depot Harbour or Parry Sound. This service has been reduced to two trips a week from Ottawa to Scotia Junction. I have no objection to that at all. I do not want the railway to put on a service that does not pay. But on the remainder of the line, some fifty or sixty miles, from Scotia Junction to Depot Harbour, the service is by a mixed train daily each way. The car set aside for the service of the public must I think have been the first car built by the Grand Trunk Railway. It is lighted by old coal oil lamps, which I am sure are forty or fifty years old, and they only make the darkness visible. You cannot read, you cannot write, you cannot do anything to pass the time on this train which jogs along at night. The heating system is on a par with the lighting. I am quite sure that if the minister saw this car he would immediately see that it was replaced by one of the many modern cars lying idle at other places. As a matter of fact, this daily service covers a well-populated section of fifty miles. The service itself is not unsatisfactory in regard to time, but we ask that proper equipment be supplied, or that an electric car replece the present equipment.

Mr. KAISER: I wish to support the remarks by the hon. gentleman from Levis (Mr. Dussault). It is only fair that those sections of the line which provide revenue should receive consideration. It would save the house a half hour speech if the minister would be kind enough to ask the deputy minister to tell Sir Henry Thornton that the town of Oshawa—which contributes a larger percentage to the revenues of the Canadian National Railway system than any other place of its size—has the most inadequate, most unhealthy, most unsanitary and most antiquated station along the line.

Mr. MacNUTT: I regret that the Canadian National Railway estimates have been left until now for consideration, and that this item has been held over until such a late day in the session. The Minister of Railways, speaking a few moments ago, informed hon. members that the proper place to take up problems in relation to railways would be in the select committee on railways and shipping. I understood that committee was appointed for an entirely different purpose, and any member, not a member of that committee, has not the privilege of addressing it except by permission due to some sittings being held in camera.

Mr. DUNNING: On no occasion in the past two years has the request of any member of the house, not a member of the committee, been refused by the committee for permission to be heard with respect to any matter. That is the custom in the committee.

Mr. MacNUTT: I am glad to get that information. I understand now that by courtesy we have the privilege of appearing before the committee. I shall very briefly bring to the attention of this committee a matter of considerable importance, and I offer no apologies for so doing even at this late hour. We have listened with a great deal of pleasure to railway propositions with regard to the Peace River district and also in the northern Ontario district, and for a few moments I shall direct the attention of the minister and the house to the want of railways in the east.

A year ago, when the Minister of Railways brought down his three year branch line railway program, which if I remember correctly called for some $10,000,000 for railways in the west, he made the statement that the door was not closed and that possibly at some future time, before the three year program had been completed, he would do something for the people in eastern Canada. We need four branch lines in the province of Nova Scotia, but I shall confine my remarks very briefly to one in my constituency, the Stewiacke valley railway. The history of this road dates back so far that there is not a member in this house, I believe who has any recollection of such a railway. In the year 1888 a company was formed to build a branch line railway through that valley, beginning at a point on the main line, going in a direct line through a very fertile valley and connecting with the main line at another point. I am giving this information for the benefit of the Minister of Railways who has just recently told us that he arrived in this country twenty-five years ago. He will see that fifteen years before he came here this proposed railway was under construction. As I stated, the company was formed in the year 1888 and the usual incorporating bill passed the provincial legislature at that time. It required a paid up capital of $50,000 in the treasury before the company could apply to the provincial or federal governments for subsidies. That amount was in the treasury, and with a certificate or receipt from the bankers, they proceeded to England and sold their bonds. The farmers along the Stewiacke valley, who were well-to-do farmers, subscribed heavily to that company. The promoters began construction work, and ten miles of road was graded. As I stated, the history of this undertaking goes so far back that I am unable to give to the house the precise reason why the moneys to be realized by sale of bonds in England were not available for the prosecution and completion of the work. But suddenly, without warning, operations on the construction work were discontinued. The result was that the bondholders in England sent a man over to make investigations and it was discovered that all they had to represent an advance of some $300,000 was a right of way thirty-five miles long, with ten miles graded. I regret that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is not in his seat as he was at that time solicitor for the English bondholders. They discovered that the shareholders of the company, who were largely farmers throughout the Stewiacke valley, were liable to the bondholders for the amount of their shares. The shareholders appealed to the government of Nova Scotia, who after considerable delay came forward and liquidated the debts due to the English bondholders, thus relieving the shareholders of a liability amounting to $300,000. Consequently the provincial government owns the right of way, of which ten miles are graded.

The Minister of Railways has had a resolution placed in his hands indicating the possibilities of that road as a revenue producer. I have a copy of that resolution. I will not detain the committee by reading it. Let me say, however, that in addition to what is therein set forth I have a letter from a wealthy American lumber concern who have purchased something like 90,000 acres of land on the Stewiacke river, on which they state they have approximately 125,000,000 board feet of hardwood that cannot be driven downstream and must be moved by rail. If the Minister of Railways will be good enough to come to our province this summer and give me the pleasure of taking him through this magnificent valley, and meet its people who are the salt of the earth, I will also show him the greatest deposit of gravel in the whole of Nova Scotia. As the Canadian National Railways are building branch lines into gravel deposits, I can show the minister a deposit which is unsurpassed in any part of this country. This has not been set forth in the resolution presented to the government.

Mr. DUNNING: If it will help my hon. friend and relieve him of the necessity of making a further plea, I can assure him that before any further branch line program is submitted by the management to the minister, the minister will request the management to go carefully into the Stewiacke valley situation. If it will shorten the discussion with respect to branch lines and with respect to certain railway acquisitions which have been brought to my attention by members on all sides of the house, I wish to give the same general assurance regarding them all. There will be a careful examination, and the very fact that my hon. friend has mentioned it again will ensure this being done. With respect to my hon, friends from Levis, Parry Sound and Ontario, who have in their midst at least according to their own ideas, such splendidly paying sections of the Canadian National, I can only say that if the figures they present prove to be correct there is no question but that sections of the railways earning so handsomely should receive any necessary attention. I am sure my remarks in this connection will catch the eye of the president and will result in the figures presented by hon. members being very closely examined.

With respect to my hon. friend from Toronto-Scarborough, at this late hour I shall not attempt to enter a discussion of the accounting methods employed by the Canadian National Railways. I will content myself by saying that a reference by any member of this committee to the evidence taken before the select standing committee on railways and shipping, a copy of which has been placed in the hands of every hon. member of the house, will reveal that my hon. friend from Toronto-Scarborough went into the matter of accounting very fully and very fairly, if I may say so, with the accounting officers, the general officers and the president of the company before that committee. Opinions very easily differ on the question of accounting; I think that fact is well realized by all members of this committee who have had any experience in business matters. I can only say to my hon. friend that for myself I intend to study very carefully the representations he made before that committee together with his remarks here to-night, and I know the officers of the company responsible in that connection will do the same thing because already it has been a matter of discussion among them since the conclusion of the sessions of that committee. I think that is all I can say at the moment.

Mr. SPENCE: While the minister is giving consideration to the Parry Sound district and to Oshawa I want to draw his attention to the station of Sunnyside, four miles west of the union station in Toronto. I would say that 75 per cent of the people travelling west from Toronto get on at Sunnyside station. There the station building is away up on a hill; you have to go across a poorly constructed bridge and then down thirty or forty steps to a great open space. There people must stand fifteen or twenty minutes waiting for trains, with no protection against rain or other weather conditions. Some consideration should be given to the people who use that station. I have waited there for fifteen or twenty minutes in the rain and snow; there is no place to sit down or even stand under shelter. I drew this matter to the attention of the deputy minister two years ago and I was promised some relief, but so far the station people tell me nothing has been done. I would ask the minister not to try to remember this without making a note of it, because these things are easily forgotten and I am afraid a lot of the ministers opposite forget purposely.

Mr. DUNNING: We are not allowed to forget anything that goes into Hansard, and the remarks of my hon. friend are going into Hansard now. I will direct the attention of the management to this matter.

Mr. BENNETT: I was discussing this vote the other night when the house rose at eleven o'clock, and I then pointed out that we as shareholders were dealing with the most important business in a financial way which parliament has to consider. I intended to point out the similarity between the corporate structure of the Canadian National Railway system and that of any other railway company, the only distinction being that in this instance we represent the great body of shareholders, the people of Canada, instead of those who have share certificates representing their interest in an enterprise. I had also pointed out that this was not a supply bill in the proper use of the word "supply", that it should not be included in the estimates of the government of Canada but should be a separate measure just as the amount voted to the federal commission in Ottawa was a separate measure, and just as the amounts voted to the harbour commissions of Halifax, St. John and Quebec were separate bills. I still think that is so.

We are asked to-night to vote some $39,000,000 to this railway system, and a very considerable part of that amount will be required to take care of obligations which already have been partly incurred. That is abundantly clear. We are now meeting the obligations of this railway system in two ways: For some years we made direct advances out of the treasury, advances of $7,000,000, $10,000,000, and $15,000,000 out of our revenues. We taxed the people of the country for this money, which was put in the general consolidated revenue fund and then paid out to this railway company. Then we adopted another course, that of guaranteeing security and enabling the railway company to borrow the money themselves. There was still another method adopted at one time, by which we issued our own securities, received the money and handed it over to the railway company. This is the second time this year we have been called upon to vote money for this enterprise, the first item was in the supplementary estimates with respect to 1928, when we appropriated certain sums of money to make good the requirements of the undertaking. Now we are called upon to vote the very large sum of $39,00,000.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which is the great competitor of this system, asks its shareholders for additional money by placing before them in the annual report which is presented to them, and which they receive before the meeting, a complete statement showing just for what the money will be required. I submit that parliament should have before it in the statute in detail the very same information given the shareholders of a privately owned enterprise in connection with its requirements. For instance, on page 8 of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company report for this year will be found the ten requirements in connection with branch lines. If you then turn over further you will find that the shareholders are asked to ratify and confirm certain leases and agreements which have been made. In another section you will find a request for the issue of additional common stock for the completion of hotels and generally for issuing new securities for the purpose of carrying on their undertaking. That is the way the matter is dealt with there. In this vote of $39,000,000 which will be placed upon the statutes of Canada there is not a single word to indicate where this money is to be spent. When the shareholders of this company read the statutes of Canada and see this appropriation of $39,000,000 they will find it impossible to ascertain where that money is to be spent, the purposes for which it is to be used being stated only generally. The shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway receive this report; they know they are asked to vote money to the company, or are asked to enable the company to issue securities for the purpose of building branch lines, for the purpose of building new steamships and for the purpose of building new hotels. They are told where this money is to be spent; they are told the length of the proposed branch lines and are given an estimate of what they will cost. In some instances the directors indicate that they have made commitments, which they ask the shareholders to approve.

That is the position, Mr. Chairman, and why should we conduct this great enterprise of ours in this way, by putting before parliament in the very late days of the session without an adequate opportunity for discussion—that is perfectly clear—the statement that we require $39,000,000, indicating that the money may be obtained in any one of several ways and handed over to the management for the purpose of enabling them to meet the commitments of the undertaking? I submit that we have a right to know these things, just as in a statute providing money for a harbour commission we know that $500,000 is to be spent in Halifax harbour this year, with the purpose indicated for which it is to be used. When we pass statutes providing money for the harbours of Quebec or St. John we indicate very clearly for what that money is to be used, but look at this estimate which is placed before us. Will any member of this house, looking at that estimate, be able to say with any degree of certainty where this money is to be used? All the fine print contained in the estimate is an indication of how the money may be raised, but where is this money to be used other than in connection with the Canadian Government Merchant Marine? Where is it to be used? I submit that we should know that with great particularity, as trustee shareholders representing the real shareholders, the people of Canada, so that when they pick up the statutes they may know that their trustees in this parliament voted certain sums of money on the recommendation of the management of this road, to be used in certain specific places.

We have been told that one of the uses to which part of this money is to be put is the construction of a hotel at Halifax. Where do I find it in this vote? It is quite true that it was before a special committee and certain observations were made with respect to it, but that is not what the shareholders of the road have before them. What the shareholders of the road have before them are these estimates, and there is nothing there to indicate that a sum of money is to be used for the construction of a hotel at Halifax or elsewhere. I have the Canadian Pacific Railway report and I find reference made to what they have been doing with regard to the Banff Springs hotel, and I find reference made to expenditures they are making in other places with respect to hotel construction. The shareholders are asked to approve those expenditures.

I hope to make this point clear without taking more time in which to develop it, but it seems to me that the management of the road should be so specific in the statement of their requirements for money, that they should ask us as trustee shareholders to appropriate this money, not in the estimates, but in a public bill, or an appropriation bill, call it what you like, rather than by supply estimates. We would then be able to look up the statutes and find the points at which the money was to be expended and discover to what extent this money had been used for the purpose for which it was earmarked.

I will not dwell to-night on the question of the finances of the road, although in my judgment these matters should be dealt with. There is growing up in this country the habit and custom on the part of some of the members to believe that because one offers a suggestion with respect to the condition of the Canadian National Railways he is reflecting upon the government of the day. That is not so. The government has some responsibility with respect to it, but any criticism is criticism against the government of the day only to the extent to which they permit conditions to continue which place a heavier and heavier obligation upon the people of this country. I wonder if the members of this house realize that we have permitted this undertaking, during the last year or two, so to increase its obligations that the burden of interest that must be met by this road has increased according to the last report, over a million dollars. A million dollars of additional interest to be earned is a very heavy charge upon the undertaking, having regard to the margin that exists between the gross and net earnings.

As I say, I will not dwell to-night upon the financial return. All you have to do is to see that during the year 1926 the road earned a little more than $2,000,000 over and above the amount necessary to pay the interest upon that part of its obligations which were in the hands of the public. That is a satisfactory result, but it is not as satisfactory as we would desire. I have always maintained, and I propose still to maintain before this committee, that where you have an undertaking in which the people of the country are so largely interested, where money has been loaned upon which the taxpayers will have to continue paying interest for years and years to come—sums now aggregating in the total nearly $500,000,000—when you consider that, one can see how absolutely essential it is that we give the closest study and the closest scrutiny to every detail of this expenditure. We are not doing it as an opposition or as a government, but we are doing it as representative shareholders of an undertaking that belongs to all the people of Canada. There is a tendency on the part of some of those who support the administration to think that because it is a Canadian national railway, for the purpose of patronage, use or transportation it belongs peculiarly to those supporting the administration. That idea must not prevail. It must be realized that this road belongs to all the people of Canada, and the taxpayers who are maintaining it at the moment are vitally interested in its success whether they be Conservative or Liberal.

The consolidation of these roads took place first under the Union government and later under the Conservative administration. The consolidation could not be carried into effect until the judgment of the Privy Council was delivered, and that judgment was not delivered until after the Conservative administration had been defeated. But the consolidation as such, the framework, the skeleton and the statutes were prepared before the present government took office. As soon as the present judgment of the Privy Council was delivered they had to carry into effect the scheme of reorganization. I can remember about twelve or fifteen years ago I suggested that over $100,000,000 would be necessary to be expended to make one of these roads a railroad at all, and I can remember the scorn with which that statement was received. We have now spent more than $100,000,000 upon that undertaking. These railroads were not roads that could compete with the Canadian Pacific system, and so we had to spend hundreds of millions of dollars upon the system to make it efficient and effective.

Unfortunately we have had to spend money in the port of Portland against the interest of our cities of St. John and Halifax. We have had to spend money on terminals in Chicago, Flint and Detroit, and at other towns we have had to maintain stations because we have the Grand Trunk Western as part of the system. In addition, we have the road that runs into Portland. We must not forget that the people of this country have a vast investment in a road in the state of Vermont, which road is in the hands of a receiver. This will involve the expenditure of very large sums of money, many millions of dollars, in order that it may be rehabilitated and the present shareholders excluded so that it may become part of the Canadian National system.

Faced with all these situations, it is not fair to the people of this country that we should vote $39,000,000 in a few minutes, with only a few questions being directed to the question of train service here or there. It is true that we have a special committee set up for the purpose of considering and studying the questions that appertain to the operations of the system during the last twelve months. I was not a member of that committee myself, but one who reads the report will realize that it has not done justice to the occasion, this year at any rate. There seemed to be a tendency on the part of the minister to believe that it was his duty to defend something that somebody was attacking. The true duty of the committee is, regardless of attack or defence, to get to the bottom of the situation and ascertain what are the real obligations of the road to the people, and how we may best serve the shareholders of this enterprise by making it more profitable.

I almost conceive it to be my duty to spend some time in discussing the financial structure and the financial operations of the system, and the obligations which have resulted in the enormous burden of debt. In one instance this is part of our national debt directly, and in the other instance it is the guaranteed obligations of this country, which are just as much an obligation of the country as though they were a direct obligation. This would be so, because it is apparent that the system as such cannot discharge these obligations As I pointed out some days ago, we found ourselves compelled, against all railroad practice, to pay some of the money of this country on the equipment obligations of the system. I say that is contrary to all practice, because my friend the minister realizes that a privately conducted system does not go to its shareholders and ask for new capital with which to meet additional obligations in connection with equipment certificates that are outstanding. The whole success of the system is based on the theory that it will annually earn sufficient money to enable the obligations for equipment to be discharged as they fall due. But we find that the people of Canda, the shareholders of this enterprise, must vote increasing sums from year to year to meet and discharge these additional obligations. Let us for a moment ask ourselves what we are going to do. I will leave all that, although I almost conceive it my duty to discuss it. I shall however leave it for a moment and refrain from discussing at length the questions in connection with the financial structure, hoping that we may have a better opportunity on another occasion next year to have the matter considered by the shareholders of the enterprise when we have greater leisure and opportunity to consider it in detail.

What are we going to do with the $39,000,000? Some observations were made in the committee as to what use was to be made of this sum of money. I think the minister will have to make some statement in the house as to the details of the construction work he proposes to carry on, but it is sufficient for my purpose to-night to direct attention to one of them, and that involves the question of the construction of an hotel at Halifax. When the new terminals were constructed in Halifax by a former minister, the then minister made certain observations with respect to the construction of an hotel in connection with the terminal at the harbour entrance. Certain observations made by him at that time indicated that a well-conducted hotel would be a part of the terminals at that point. Halifax required additional hotel accommodation. In 1927 a promoter conceived the idea of building an hotel there and he discussed the matter with the president of the Canadian National system. An option was taken upon the Dwyer property for the purpose of constructing a hotel upon it, and it is a very excellent site. The promoter then took the matter up with the president of the system. That promoter has enabled me to have the original of the letter that was then written by the head of the hotel department, namely, Mr. Pratt, on the 9th day of February, 1927, indicating what the prospects were of making money in that hotel. This letter reads as follows:

Subject: Proposed Hotel in Halifax

Mr. E. D. Girardot,
Haligonian Syndicate, Ltd.,
206 Dominion Express Building,
Montreal, Que.

Dear Sir:

Replying to your letter of January 26 enclosing operating schedule and financial set-up of the proposed Lord Nelson hotel at Halifax.

I have placed this matter before our president, giving him my views of the proposition and the possible financial results of same. I cannot quite reconcile your estimate of revenues and expenses with those of our general superintendent of hotels, which statement was made up from actual figures taken from our other hotel statements for comparison, and which reveals a probable net annual loss for the initial year of approximately close on $100,000. Such being the case, the company cannot regard the proposition with favour unless it can be shown that at least an even break could be made.

I wish to assure you, however, that we are absolutely in accord with the need for a first class hotel in Halifax, and, while we cannot undertake any financial assistance or make any promises along these lines, you can be assured of our moral support in so far as advertising, direction of traffic, and any other assistance that my department can render to you in furthering this scheme on the operation of the hotel.

When you have the project well in hand and started, if you will then submit to the president a financial statement of the scheme he will be quite prepared to place the matter before the board for consideration as to possible future connection therewith.

Yours truly,

Walter Pratt,
General Manager.

That is a letter from a very responsible hotel official. It is the original letter, which I shall be glad to hand to the Minister of Railways for his perusal. It indicates what was in the mind of that responsible official, and after all, we, as shareholders, should in some respects regard that as a very fair statement of the situation. He states that there would be a loss of $100,000 a year in the Lord Nelson hotel. That is the hotel now in course of construction, which will be completed within the next few months and occupied this fall. What was the position with respect to that? The Canadian Pacific Railway Company own the Dominion Atlantic. When this syndicate was formed as originally indicated there, it was contemplated that they would build this hotel. The operations fell through. Then a delegation representing the Lord Nelson hotel came to the city of Montreal and presented to the president of the Canadian National system the claim that the hotel would have for financial assistance by taking stock in the enterprise, and the letter that I have read indicates the conditions under which the president was asked to make this investment in the light of the report made by his responsible officer. There are two gentlemen still living of that delegation; they are responsible gentlemen; they live in the city of Halifax; they are well known, and they have indicated that the last words of their conversation with the president of the road was that they should press upon the Canadian Pacific the desirability of making an investment of $100,000 in the enterprise. It was asked at that time that the Canadian National system should put $250,000 into the enterprise. That was the request and that matter was taken under advisement. So the Canadian National was asked to put $250,000 and the Canadian Pacific was asked to put $100,000, it being felt that the tourist traffic, if you will, that was tributary to the one was about two and one-half times greater than that which was tributary to the other. In other words the Canadian National system had $250,000 interest as compared with the Canadian Pacific interest of $100,000 in tourist and other traffic that might be developed for the hotel at Halifax. That is the position at that point.

Of course it is well known that matters of this kind must be referred to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston). It is also true that a statute of this country places the final authority for these capital expenditures with the governor in council, subject of course to parliament voting the money. Certain friends of the Minister of National Defence were of the opinion that this hotel should not be constructed and they made their representations to him. Some of them journeyed to Yarmouth to discuss the matter with him and those representations had great effect. When the Canadian National system communicated with the Minister of Railways, as it was bound to do, indicating its decision, we will say, to engage in the enterprise, the government, advised not only by the Minister of National Defence but by the Minister of Railways in that regard, refused to have anything to do with it. The set-up financially was not satisfactory. I have the clippings under my hand. That in my judgment was a proper view to take, having regard to the fact that the commission to be paid was much larger than should be paid for securing capital under these circumstances. The set-up was then changed.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is omitting the most important consideration with respect to the government. In fairness he should state that.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be glad to have it stated by my hon. friend. It will not interfere with my statement. What does the minister refer to?

Mr. DUNNING: I am referring to the matter of the consent of parliament to the expenditure.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought I made that clear.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought I said "subject to the approval of parliament". I think my hon. friend did not catch that.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend misunderstood. The proposal was to spend money immediately.

Mr. BENNETT: I am going to show before I conclude that money has already been spent on two other hotels without parliament knowing about the matter yet. The statute in my judgment contemplates parliament giving an antecedent consent to expenditures. That is my view of the law. I may be wrong and the Minister of Justice may correct me as to that. My view of the Canadian National statute and the statute under which the governor in council authorizes expenditure is that there must be an antecedent authority given by parliament to the shareholders to spend given sums of money, and my contention is that those sums should be for specific purposes. The Minister of National Defence—and I have his statement as given out at that time and but for the hour I should like to deal with at length—took the view as the Minister of Railways has now indicated he also took and the government took, namely, that there should be no expenditure on the Lord Nelson hotel without the consent of parliament. The Lord Nelson hotel was an incorporation incorporated under the laws, I think, of the province of Nova Scotia. It had acquired the site and obtained estimates of the cost of building the hotel. They were issuing certain bonds and preferred shares. This road was asked to buy certain securities, namely, preferred shares. The public had been asked to buy bonds. I remember myself being solicited to acquire certain bonds of this enterprise, and it was pointed out that this was an enterprise which was being promoted by two railway systems, one the Canadian Pacific and the other the Canadian National—"promoted" is not the word, but they were interested in the enterprise. The preferred shares were offered to the public, and the public bought them very generously. I have under my hand the story of the campaign through the newspapers telling how various business enterprises in Halifax put money into this undertaking. Insurance companies and banks bought the bonds. Other large organizations bought the bonds because they believed they were a safe investment having regard to the conditions that were indicated, for instance, in this letter, and by the statement that had been made—made without authority, they may say, but nevertheless had been made with respect to the enterprise. Out of this welter of unsatisfactory dealing there at least comes this conclusion, that the Canadian National management did agree to submit to the government the proposal to become interested as investors in the preferred shares of the company, and the government took the view indicated by the minister at this moment that without the consent of parliament they should not make any such investment. The Minister of National Defence made a statement to that effect. He made it in writing, or gave it out to the press as an official statement. I have it under my hand. That came about under the circumstances to which I have alluded. It was on the 14th of July that the final statement was made. The organ of his own party in Halifax carried this:

Ralston promises to do his utmost for railway hotel here.
Federal government decides not to subscribe to minority interest in proposed Lord Nelson hotel, but if C.N.R. directors will recommend terminal hotel at Halifax, legislation will be submitted to parliament.

Then follows the statement given out by the Minister of National Defence. There we have a refusal on the part of the government to accede to the reasonable request of the management of the road to become investors in this enterprise, because it was felt, on the one hand, that it should not be done without the consent of parliament, and because of the belief on the part of the Minister of National Defence that the government should not be interested as minority shareholders in the hotel but should build their own terminals. In other words, it was more important that there should be patronage than business, because from a business standpoint no one for a single moment, in the light of the knowledge brought out that a loss of $100,000 per annum was inevitable in the operation of one hotel would say that you are going to lessen that loss by building two hotels.

Then what happens is that the management of the road proceeded to Halifax. A very great gathering was held there. They went down by special trains carrying many of the directors, and on the very day, Trafalgar day, that the first sod of the Lord Nelson hotel was being turned, they were starting operations to build a new hotel at the terminal docks in Halifax. That was their announcement. The president himself made the announcement, and here is the story taken from the local press regarding his visit there, and the circumstances under which the hotel was to be built. Halifax was assured of the station and two new hotels. The newspaper heading says:

Hon. J. L. Ralston says C.N.R. plan primarily a railway project, and as such railway can use its own funds and begin at once.

Therefore, what the government would not accede to was to become interested as minority shareholder in the undertaking to build a hotel, but what could not be done in the way of investing money in the Lord Nelson hotel could be done to build a new hotel, because the enterprise was to be joined up with the station terminals. But this committee should realize that two other hotel investments have been made by our railway. In the Admiral Beatty hotel at St. John, the Canadian National have an investment of some $25,000. In the hotel at Sydney, they have invested a sum in the shares of that hotel, and if they could invest in these two hotels, why could they not make an investment of $250,000 in the hotel at Halifax? It well might be that the whole $250,000 could not be immediately paid, that it would have to be paid later, but the principle is the same in each case. The amount does not change the principle. If you have an investment in an hotel company at St. John, and in an hotel company in Halifax, it is exactly the same principle as is involved in buying the securities of an hotel company. The amount involved is not the question at issue. But what is more, it is clear to any man that whether you put $25,000 or any other amount into an enterprise of this kind the money comes out of the pockets of the people of Canada, because the sums we vote are the sums from which these capital expenditures are taken.

Now what happened? We have the public buying the securities—banks, insurance companies, investors. We have companies interested in the growth of Halifax investing their capital in the preference shares, and now we have the people of Canada, collectively, competing with a privately owned enterprise which the expert officer advising the system says will mean a loss of $100,000 per annum. Should we do it? That is the question.

This vote of $39,000,000 does not state upon the face of it that this money is being used for this purpose, but the minister has said that in that $39,000,000 is included a sum sufficient for commencing and carrying on operations for the construction of the terminals, and as I understand it, the hotel system, if it was so desired. The hon. member for Cape Breton the other evening and another hon. gentleman, the hon. member for Colchester, I think, urged on the government that in the public interest the money available for hotel purposes should be utilized where it would secure an adequate return, in building bungalow camps, for instance, in various parts of Nova Scotia where tourists go in large numbers, or at other points where return will be sure. But this I do say, that this country should not embark upon an undertaking the primary object of which is to destroy, or at least to render unprofitable, an enterprise that originally was founded upon the assumption that it would be dealt with exactly in the same manner as other hotels at two other points of the Canadian National railways system are. That is No. 1.

No. 2 is this: If it is sound constitutionally, as the minister says, advised by the legal experts of his department, and by the Minister of National Defence, who is a very able lawyer, that these moneys should not be expended except with the consent of parliament, how was it that they commenced the operation of constructing a new hotel without any reference to parliament at all? How could it be done? Either they were right in the one case and wrong in the other, or it was a mere subterfuge, for no appropiration had been made by parliament to build the terminal, and no money was voted by parliament for that purpose, and it is now necessary to come to parliament to build the terminal. It follows that the money previously spent on the terminal was money that parliament had not sanctioned. Here is what took place. Contractors were put upon the job, holes were sunk, the foundation started—

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend say that there was a contract let?

Mr. BENNETT: No. These conditions are described in this Liberal paper. It speaks of a firm of well-known contractors. I shall not take the time to read it, unless it becomes necessary in view of the debate that follows But there are the facts.

Now it is so easy to say: Ah, well, every man is anxious to have money spent in his province, and you people dare not oppose this. That is what is destroying Canada. This is the smallest piece of politics on the largest scale that you have had in this country for a long time. The Minister of National Defence is in charge of everything connected with the administration of affairs in the province of Nova Scotia. He it was who said he would not permit this hotel to be built if he could help it. He wanted another hotel for patronage and other purposes down at the dock terminal. Now he has got it. He said: Those members from Nova Scotia cannot oppose this; they know if they go back to their constituents it will be the old story, their constituents will want the money spent there, and if those members vote against it they will be defeated.

Let us look at it squarely in the eye. I was speaking recently to a member of this house. He was told in the last election. You had a great chance to get something you required; your vote would have determined whether the government should be put out of the door; why then did you not hold them up and say what you required? Let me tell you what that member did. He is still in this house. He does not belong to one of the old line parties, and he did not join the so-called Liberal-Progressives behind the present administration. He sits to my left, and if you desire to read the report of his speech I will give it to you. In reply to that remark he merely said if you think that is the kind of member you want, then don't vote for me. What was the effect upon the public mind? He was elected by a large majority. That action on his part required great courage. What is happening now in Halifax? It is expected that I, the leader of the opposition, will not discharge my duty to the country with respect to this enterprise, because if I do so, peradventure there may not be a million and a half dollars spent on a hotel in Halifax, and the Conservative party will lose a great number of votes in respect to it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before my hon. friend leaves the point to which he has just referred, may I ask him this question: Does he mean to say that any hon. member assumes that in order to get its support he could hold up this government for some public work?

An hon. MEMBER: It was in 1926.

Mr. BENNETT: I said in 1926, when the fate of the government turned upon a single vote, his constituents said to him: Why didn't you do it? You could have got it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If he had any idea that the government depended upon his support he was very much mistaken.

Mr. BENNETT: A single vote determined its existence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He would not have got anything that way.

Mr. DUNNING: Not his.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think the hon. gentleman knows whom I am talking about.

Mr. DUNNING: Other men are just as honest.

Mr. McPHEE: He might let us know.

Mr. BENNETT: I can assure the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) that it was not he. That should set his mind at rest. I simply say that is what this transaction resolved itself into. I am informed there are other members in this house who were told that. If we permit this great system to get into that condition, where are we drifting? This road belongs to us. Now, I put forward this proposition. There is my friend from Prince Edward Island, whom I happen to see: would he do this as a business transaction? His brothers are very successful business men in my community: would they do it? Is there a business man in Canada who would do it? That is the question. Then if it is not matter of business what is it? It either is or is not a matter of business. Is there any man in Canada would do it as a matter of business in face of that letter written by the head of the hotel department showing an estimated loss of $100,000 a year on one hotel, the Lord Nelson; is there any man of business in Canada who would become a party to the transaction to which I have alluded? That is the question which I propound to this committee to-night, and I leave it with them. I at least have done my duty. A very great English statesman once said: We the opposition, it is true, may not be able to change the attitude of the government with respect to these matters, and we may not have all the information that we should have but there is one thing at least we can do—we can present the facts to the committee so they can understand them, and we can leave the judgment with them and their majority. That is all we can hope to do.

There are other matters in connection with this $39,000,000 vote that I should like to refer to, but this is so outstanding and clear an instance of what we are drifting into that I have endeavoured to develop it at length. Now, shall we do this thing? If the government would only realize that this should not be a supply bill! It is not fair to the government. It is true that that is what has been done, but this is not supplying His Majesty with money. Not at all. This is a corporation created by statute, with a corporate structure, and we are lending it a sum of money; but even though my friend the Minister of Railways does represent the shareholders it is not supply for His Majesty. That is the position. I do submit that my friends should accept what I suggest to them in all sincerity, namely, introduce an ordinary bill that we may consider the details and change and amend, if we think desirable, in the most friendly way, as, for instance, was done with the Federal District Commission bill. The right hon. Prime Minister thought it desirable to make certain changes there. They did not exactly commend themselves to me, on the theory that we should not go beyond the life of a single parliament in any commitments, but he frankly faced the situation and desired to adjust the conditions to meet the general approval of the house, not treating it as a party matter. Supply becomes a party matter; that is the trouble. Under our system, as the right hon. Prime Minister pointed out the other evening, if you carry an adverse motion on going into supply that of itself defeats the government. Whereas if this were a money bill, using the term in the proper sense, the same as the Federal District Commission bill or the harbour commission bills, we might make changes in the light of our knowledge and experience, the suggestions of gentlemen here and there might find countenance with the administration. In short, we would meet together as shareholders at a meeting to deal with it as a matter of business. For I do say to my hon. friends the right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Railways, you never yet saw a meeting of shareholders of a great enterprise where they divided themselves into hostile camps politically. The division is on the ground of business, and the attitude they take with respect to it is as a business proposition.

With all confidence I say to you to-night, Mr. Chairman, and the members of this committee, that there is not a group of business men as numerous as we are here to-night who would sit down and consider this matter and arrive at the conclusion, even with the limited knowledge that I have mentioned, that it is desirable to go forward with it at this time. The day may come in a few years when it is desirable that you should have two hotels in Halifax instead of one, in fact I hope that time will come very speedily; but do not let us wreck a private enterprise, entered into at some sacrifice, to provide Halifax with a hotel. On the other hand, do not let us jeopardize this great enterprise. I wonder if hon. gentlemen realize that it is the greatest enterprise to-day in Canada in point of capital involved, in point of effect upon the body politic, in point of obligations outstanding and the influence of its success or failure on Canada itself. In these respects it is the greatest enterprise we have next to the government. That is the postion. Shall we as business men forget our politics for a moment and remember that we represent shareholders, nine or ten millions in number, scattered from one end of the country to the other, and deal with this matter in a business way? That is what I have submitted to the committee to-night. I am sorry I have had to take so much time for the purpose, and I have done scanty justice to what I conceive to be one of the most important questions that can engage the attention of this parliament. There are many details which I have passed over but I have them beside me and if it becomes necessary to submit them during the progress of the debate I shall be prepared to do so.

Mr. DUNNING: I am surprised at the length of time my hon. friend has occupied, inasmuch as I understood that there was no intention that there should be long speeches and that brief replies were expected from me in order to facilitate the passage of work in the house. For that reason, possibly, I have been a little too brief up to now. It was not however with the intention of being curt but rather to escape the accusation, so frequently made, that a minister is blocking his own estimates by talking too much. However, no one will make that charge against me if I take a little time now to deal with the remarks of the leader of the opposition, with many of which I agree and some of which I purpose proving to be inaccurate.

First my hon. friend complained, and would lead the house and the country to believe, that the Canadian Pacific report to its shareholders is infinitely more detailed, contains much more information, than the management of the people's railway gives to the shareholders of that concern. And he cites as an instance that there was no mention in the report of the Canadian National Railways of an important matter like the Halifax hotel. I would refer him to page 11 of the report of the president of the Canadian National Railways. There he will find close to half a page dealing with the Halifax hotel situation from the point of view, not of a politician, but of the chief administrator of a railway.

Mr. BENNETT: I had that beside me. I was comparing the two, the statement made by the Canadian Pacific as to how its money was to be used, and the statement made here, which is a long, evasive statement with respect to a transaction for which, it says, a million and a quarter will be asked.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend characterizes the statement as a long, evasive statement.

Mr. BENNETT: I do.

Mr. DUNNING: He has also, I presume, read the evidence of the president of the company to the committee on railways and shipping with respect to the same matter?

Mr. BENNETT: And I say he must be mistaken.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. gentleman is entitled to his opinion in that regard. But I would respectfully point out to him and to this house that he cannot in any sense pretend that the decision on the part of Sir Henry Thornton and the management of the Canadian National Railways to recommend this expenditure was in any way politically influenced by anybody, inside this house or outside of it.

For a number of years the management of the Canadian National system have been looking with great interest toward the possibility of providing adequate terminal facilities at the two great ocean terminals of that system in this country, Halifax and Vancouver. My hon. friend himself indicated that a number of years ago a minister of railways, before the time when the Canadian National system assumed its present form of management, pointed to the necessity and the intention of providing, in connection with the terminals at Halifax, an hotel as part of the Canadian National system. The Canadian National management never at any time —so the president informs me, and I believe him—considered any other proposition than a Canadian National hotel owned and operated by the company itself at Halifax, except as an alternative in case they could not secure the consent of the minister, of the government and of this parliament to the erection of a Canadian National Railway hotel. The president has made that clear on more than one occasion. Moreover, the president of the railway assures me, has assured me on more than one occasion, that the morale of the men engaged in working on the Canadian National system from coast to coast would be seriously affected if the Canadian National were compelled to back down with respect to the construction of a Canadian National hotel at Halifax. My hon. friend may talk politics: I present the information which the president of the road submits to me with regard to this matter.

I dislike to get into a discussion which may be regarded as partisan politics in connection with a matter of this kind, but my hon. friend has led the way. I know that as a result of dealing with him in kind I shall be accused of blocking my own estimates; but some things require to be said with respect to matters of this sort. My hon. friend criticized very strongly the amount of work which has up to now been done on the Canadian National Railway station and hotel.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that some work had actually been done.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; my hon. friend criticized that work being done without the authority of this parliament. And I understand him to hold very strongly to the view that with respect to major expenditures by the railway they should receive, to use his own word, antecedent approval by this parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what he said.

Mr. DUNNING: I understood him to lay down that principle. Yet he was a member of a government which authorized the expenditure of $5,000,000 on an hotel at the city of Vancouver which had not even been discussed by this parliament, let alone authorized.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman knows that the contract was not signed when the government went out of power and, because of the very point I make, was not signed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: It was or was not signed; ask the minister. It was not executed and, I took the view, should not be—if that is to any purpose.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend probably took that view personally. But the action—

Mr. BENNETT: But was the contract signed?

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly not; my hon. friend knows that as well as I do.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps it will interest those who applaud so much to learn that the Canadian National is not yet out of the woods with respect to commitments made, without a contract being signed, and which were duly authorized by the government of the day.

Mr. BENNETT: I will deal with that later.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows perfectly well that although the contract was not signed it was intended by the government of which he was a member to sign that contract without the approval of parliament. Will he deny that?

Mr. BENNETT: I certainly will; and what is more, Sir Henry Drayton said the money was to come out of the next year's estimates. The contract was not signed, his attention having been directed to the very matter to which the hon. gentleman refers. And he is on record in regard to it.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is surely confessing a piece of business which is remarkable, to say the least.

Mr. BENNETT: In what way?

Mr. DUNNING: That a contract should be drawn up—

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: —and signed by the contractor—

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. DUNNING: —and sent here for signature—

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. DUNNING —involving an obligation—

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so—a large one.

Mr. DUNNING: —a form of contract which is open to criticism, open to very serious criticism, because it was a cost-plus contract for the building of an hotel. Does my hon. friend mean to have the committee believe that his government led that contractor along to the point to where the contractor himself signed the contract, but that the government had no intention of allowing the other party to sign it? Is that what we are to believe?

Mr. BENNETT: I will deal with that; the contract was not signed, and I will give the reasons.

Mr. DUNNING: The facts speak for themselves.

Mr. BENNETT: They do; the contract was not signed.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no quarrel with my hon. friend's personal attitude with regard to the matter; I understand from him to-night that he then held the same views which he holds to-day. But surely he does not claim that those views were held by the government of which he was a member, and that in spite of those views they went to the length of having a contract drawn and signed by the other party so that it merely required ratification. Further, the contract in question was sent over to me, as the incoming Minister of Railways, before I was sworn in, to know whether or not it should be executed. That is the fact with respect to this matter, and I only mention it because my hon. friend described the transaction as the smallest piece of politics in the largest matter for several years.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: I simply call his attention to what happened in connection with a very much larger matter financially.

An hon. MEMBER: And smaller politics.

Mr. DUNNING: I will not say that.

Mr. BENNETT: The contract was not signed in this instance. As for small politics, I think my hon. friend is an authority on that.

Mr. DUNNING: At least we come to this parliament to-day with respect to the Halifax hotel and ask parliament for the money with which to build a combined station and hotel at that point. We come here before a contract is let and before any contractor has been asked to bid on the work; we are asking parliament for authority to spend the money, and if authority is granted we will proceed with the work. We are not working along the lines of the Vancouver hotel transaction at all; we are coming frankly to parliament and asking for supply to enable the work to proceed.

In that regard may I say further that, leaving politics out of the matter altogether, this is recommended to parliament by the president, by all the vice-presidents and by the management of the system, who think it essential that the system should have at this time an hotel at this eastern gateway. It is well known that the officers of the system deem it necessary that there should be an hotel also at the western gateway, and with respect to that I believe there is included in the amount now being asked provision for a start to be made on the construction of an hotel at Vancouver. There is no difference between the two cases as they now come before the house in each case authority is being asked from this parliament for the expenditure of the amount of money which the management desire to expend.

Now with respect to the report generally, my hon. friend held up the Canadian Pacific report as an example of what he believes should be given this parliament with respect to the Canadian National Railway system. I have no criticism whatever to offer of the Canadian Pacific report to their shareholders; that is the business of that company and I have no doubt the shareholders are satisfied with it. But for my hon. friend to pretend for one moment that the shareholders of this enterprise, the Canadian National Railways, through their representatives in parliament, do not receive a very great deal more information about their property than is received by any shareholder of the Canadian Pacific Railway is an insult to the intelligence of this house. A special committee considered this report for days; the meetings of that committee were open to members of this house, and except for a portion of one session the meetings were open to the public as well. Here are the pages of the evidence taken; no statement asked for with respect to any part of the business of the company was refused by the management, and those statements form part of the public record. These were not meetings of private shareholders; they were public meetings; the press were there, and in addition to that the records of the proceedings are printed and available to any citizen of Canada. So I say that even during this session more information with respect to this railway enterprise has been given than is afforded by any private railway corporation on the North American continent. Why was not more information given? Much information was volunteered by the officers, as members of the committee on both sides of the house will agree, and more was asked for by various members of the committee. Statement after statement was handed in at the succeeding sessions by the officers of the company, containing the information asked for by members of the committee. The only time that practice was not followed was when the information was of such a character that it would supply the competitors of the Canadian National Railways with information regarding its business which could be used to the advantage of the competitors and to the detriment of the Canadian National. As a matter of fact the competitors of the Canadian National both in the United States and in Canada in the very nature of things have a very great deal more public information respecting the activities of the Canadian National than it is possible for the Canadian National to secure with respect to these competitors.

That is all I desire to say with respect to that phase of the matter, except to develop one point. My hon. friend asked, "How do we know where this money is to be spent?" This estimate was placed before the committee, and in the hands of the officials were books giving details of all the proposed expenditures on betterments and other capital requirements.

As far as branch line bills are concerned my hon. friend knows very well that the system in connection with Canadian National branch lines has been to come to this house with a bill for each branch line together with the estimated cost thereof, and the authority to spend the required money within three years is voted by this parliament for each specific branch line. All that is necessary in that connection, then, is to find out, as can be readily found out in committee and the facts of which are available even outside of the committee to any member of the house or to any individual, how much of that expenditure requires to be taken out of the budget this particular year. I do not think my hon. friend would suggest that we hand to every member of the house and ask him to study this volume, which deals with expenditures on capital account on the railway, or this other volume which has to do with other capital expenditures, refunding and all that sort of thing. We have deliberately set up a small special committee of this house in order to do what? We have done that in order to ensure the intensive study of the accounts of this system, which it would be impossible for 245 men to make. That is the system we have followed, rightly or wrongly; I believe it to be a good system, and the only system by which it will be possible to convey to the people of this country who own this railway anything like an adequate conception of what their property is doing and of the manner in which it is being conducted. Again I say the branch lines are dealt with specifically and individually; my hon. friend's complaint there falls to the ground, because the shareholders themselves, through their representatives here, authorize the expenditure of the necessary amount of money in connection with each specific branch line.

Now, with respect to the retirement of equipment, again my hon. friend is inaccurate. The system with respect to the retirement of equipment is very simple; equipment is retired out of revenue.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend made some statement, which I did not clearly understand, but I think the statement that the cost of equipment is retired out of revenue is the answer to what my hon. friend meant.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman did not hear me perhaps he will be good enough to withdraw his statement that I made an inaccurate statement. It would be well to understand what is said before inaccuracy is charged. My point was that the report from the finance committee indicated that part of the money borrowed was used to retire equipment obligations which should have been retired out of capital, and which my hon. friend said should be out of income. It is in the statement, as a matter of fact; I will give you the page.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend was speaking of retiring equipment; he now speaks of retiring equipment obligations.

Mr. BENNETT: Paying for the equipment bonds.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is quite right, but the conclusion he draws from the facts he states is not, in my judgment, accurate. I cannot think of any other point which requires to be covered, except that I should like to say a final, and, as I hope, a constructive word. This house has not yet realized the extent to which the special committee may be used to place on record for the shareholders, the people of this country, information with respect to the system. Naturally, we are groping yet as a people in connection with this great experiment in public ownership, possibly the greatest experiment in public ownership in the world, the greatest of its peculiar character. Gradually the men who have served on the special committee for a number of years are getting a wider knowledge of the ramifications of this vast system and of the principles which underlie its accounting and its operation. Gradually, because of that, a volume of useful information with respect to the system is being placed upon record in the proceedings of the committee from year to year. Simply as a minister, I would say to the house that if the committee method of dealing with estimates, which is advocated by many with respect to all the departments of government, is to be successful, let us do our best to make a success of the one example we have, the committee on national railways and shipping. By success I mean going there as members of this house with our criticisms and with our questions, particularly as relates to the major matters of the conduct of the country's business. We should do this in the manner in which the hon. member for Toronto-Scarborough (Mr. Harris) went into the accounting. Perhaps he had an advantage, being a member of the committee, but, as I said before, this committee has never yet denied to any member of this house the privilege of asking questions of the officers of the company. I would plead, therefore, in order that there might be a little more intelligent discussion of Canadian National affairs in the future in this house, that we make wider use as members of this house of that committee for the purpose of eliciting information, which once printed becomes easily available to all the people of Canada through the medium of the reports of the committee.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not intend to take very much time, but my hon. friend has seen fit to make some references to myself; references which have arisen out of wrong information given to my hon. friend, or else he is endeavouring to place a construction on my actions in connection with this project which is entirely unwarranted.

As far back as 1913 a report was made to the government of which my hon. friend was a supporter at that time, regarding the port development at Halifax, as follows "that for the transatlantic trade as well as for the local and tourist trades hotel accommodation of the highest class adjoining the terminals will be a necessity." I want to remind my hon. friend that in 1926 two different gentlemen appeared before the commission presided over by Sir Andrew Rae Duncan. Mr. Cornell for the Halifax Board of Trade made his representations, and closed his remarks with this:

> We hope that is the beginning of a move to appreciate the position at this end of the line and that the program of hotel accommodation will be extended to the city of Halifax, the city of Halifax being the chief port, and the chief Atlantic Canadian terminal of the railway.

He was speaking of the Canadian National Railways providing hotels in various places and soliciting tourist traffic. This was followed by the testimony of Hon. J. A. Walker, Minister of Natural Resources for Nova Scotia, who said:

> It is highly desirable that the federal government should take immediate steps to establish a national park in the province, and the Canadian National Railways erect a first class hotel in Halifax, the capital, or main centre of the province.

The reference made in the Duncan report to this project is shown on page 43. This report states that a suggestion was made that there should be a hotel built by the Canadian National Railways at Halifax, and then goes on to say:

> We feel it is not a subject matter upon which we can make any recommendation, as in our view it is a question for the judgment of the railway administration itself in the light of ordinary business considerations.

We have to-night the recommendation made to the hon. Minister of Railways, the president of the road, every vice president of the road and the board of directors for a Canadian National hotel at Halifax. The matter has been referred to the special committee of this house and investigated by them, or if it was not investigated it should have been, because the gentlemen who are sitting around my hon. friend were on that committee at the time. After investigation, it was recommended to the house.

Mr. CHURCH: How does the hon. minister justify another hotel in Halifax when the return issued to parliament last year showed that every one of the ten Canadian National hotels were going behind in the fixed charges?

Mr. RALSTON: I am not in the hotel business, but I am simply quoting authority which it seems to me ought to have some weight with this parliament and with this country. Hon. J. A. Walker, who was a member of the Conservative government in Halifax, justified it, as my hon. friend puts it.

Mr. CHURCH: A sort of political hotel.

Mr. RALSTON: Everyone who has inquired into this has recommended and has justified it. The special committee of this house has justified it. I do not propose to go into the matter in detail regarding the merits of an hotel at Halifax, but I might point out some very strong reasons why the Canadian National Railways should have a hotel there. The Canadian National Railways, enjoying as it does three-quarters of the traffic of the province of Nova Scotia; having steamship connections at Halifax, Halifax being the beginning of the long haul across the continent, needs hotel accommodation there. If they did not have it people would go to other hotels and they would lose the opportunity of getting that long haul traffic. The Canadian National Steamships are developing a service to the West Indies which will have its terminal at Halifax. Business is constantly increasing through the port of Yarmouth, through a new line of steamers being put on from both New York and from Boston to Yarmouth, with the expectation of something like 40,000 tourists through Yarmouth this year, and the Canadian National Railways will expect to get a proportion of that traffic if they have a good hotel at Halifax. Not only the Canadian National Railways but other roads have seen the advantages of having hotel accommodation in order that they may have a better opportunity to route passengers over their lines. The Canadian Pacific has had the experience at Quebec, and I have no doubt the Canadian National have had the same experience at other points, that having a hotel at these points is a great advantage in getting a large number of travellers routed along their lines.

But I am not discussing the merits so much as I am the remarks which were made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. What he said with regard to somebody going to Yarmouth indicates how little he really knows of the situation. He mentioned a proposition that had been put up whereby the Canadian National Railways were to invest a quarter of a million dollars in a hotel proposition in Halifax, and he said some friends came to Yarmouth and intimated that it was these friends who influenced me against the hotel. I want to tell him that the friends who came to Yarmouth were Mr. W. H. Dennis, the manager of the Halifax Herald, the opposition paper in Halifax; Mr. H. R. Silver, who is well known as a leading Conservative in Halifax and who has been I think the president of the Conservative organization; Mr. J. G. Farquhar, and Mr. Bain. These are the gentlemen who came to place before me a proposition in which they thought I might be interested as a member of the government, to the effect that the Canadian National Railways should invest a quarter of a million dollars in the hotel project. I want to say to my hon. friend that it was due to no persuasion of theirs that I took the position I did; that I went over the proposition with them from end to end, and that I found out what my hon. friend practically admitted when he spoke first to-night, namely, that to say the least the proposition was extremely expensive. When we have in raising $1,084,000 to pay $156,000 in shrinkage of securities on a proposition which is going to be supported by two railways which are taking a large block of the preferred stock, you have a proposition that, it seems to me, requires close examination. My hon. friend was quite right when he suggested that he did not wonder from that point of view that I did not agree to the proposition that was made.

The proposition which was made at that time was this, namely, that the cumulative preferred stock was to be sold to the underwriters at 85 and that the Canadian National railways was to pay par for that stock. In other words the Canadian National railway was to pay $37,500 into the pockets of the promoters of the company. I thought that was not good enough from the point of view of government financing if there was some other way out. I realized exactly what the Canadian National situation was; I realized that it was thought it might be impossible to get an appropriation for a Canadian National hotel and that this was the best alternative offered. But I told those gentlemen there at the time—and I did not mince matters with them—I criticized the proposition. I told Mr. Bain in effect: "I am against your making this money out of it. You can hardly expect the government of Canada to approve a proposition of this kind and pay this amount of money into your pocket. I am for a Canadian National hotel if that is possible". My hon. friend talks about selling bonds. Does the committee think there would be any great trouble in selling $600,000 worth of bonds in a concern into which about $1,084,000 cash was to be put altogether and in which the preferred stock behind the bonds was to be largely taken by the two great railway systems of Canada, who would be in effect the guarantors of the concern? Would the bondholders stand much chance of losing their money? They would be pretty sure that the railways, in order to save their investment, would have to take the proposition over and their bonds would be perfectly safe. But even those bonds were to be sold to the underwriters, Messrs. Bain and Company, at a ten per cent discount. That is, they were going to get the bonds at ninety which they were to sell to the public at one hundred. I do not think I am very far wrong and I am in the judgment of the house and the country when I say that I felt if a better proposition could be made for the people of Canada, it should be made. I told Mr. Bain at that time that I was against his making that money and I told the gentlemen that I believed in a Canadian National hotel and that I was going to work for it. That was the answer I gave them at that time and they went home.

Mr. DUNNING: And they were not your friends?

Mr. RALSTON: There are people within the sound of my voice who know whether in a political sense they were friends of mine or not. They were Mr. W. H. Dennis and Mr. H. R. Silver. They were political opponents of the strongest kind. I gave those gentlemen that information at that time. I came to Ottawa and the government held a meeting on July 14th. This is the statement which was given out at that time:

> That the federal government is not prepared to authorize the expenditure of public funds in the purchase of a minority interest in a hotel project at Halifax, was one of the decisions made at to-day's meeting of the cabinet. The statement was made after the meeting that, quite apart from the features of the scheme itself, the government considered that large capital expenditures of this kind should, in the first instance, be submitted to parliament.
> Hon. J. L. Ralston, Minister of National Defence, when seen this evening, stated that he had made his position clear to the promoters of the project two or three weeks ago, namely, that he was for a Canadian National hotel, in preference to spending public money on underwriting charges, and having the direction and management of the institution subject to the control of outside parties.
> When asked regarding the prospects, Hon. Mr. Ralston said that the matter had gone so far that he had no doubt in his mind that if the board of directors of the Canadian National railways recommended a project for a railway terminal hotel at Halifax the government would see that it was submitted to parliament next session. He also stated that he would do all possible to assist such an undertaking.

May I pause here to say that in connection with the matter of control the Canadian National was to be away in the minority? Both railways, as a matter of fact, in that scheme were to be in the minority and the majority of voting power was to be held by Mr. Bain and his clients to whom the stock was sold. As I have read to the committee, the statement I made after the meeting of government was that if the Canadian National railway directorate would recommend a Canadian National hotel, I felt the matter had gone so far I was certain in my own mind that the government would submit it to parliament. What happened then? The next was a statement—and this is what my hon. friend did not refer to—made by Sir Henry Thornton on July 20th, just five days after, as follows:

> In connection with the possible participation by the Canadian National railway in the construction of the proposed Lord Nelson hotel at Halifax, the following statement was given out to-day in Montreal by Sir Henry Thornton, president of the national system:
> In view of the fact that any partial investment in the proposed hotel at Halifax would require the approval of parliament, which could not be obtained until the next session, and the preference indicated that the Canadian National should construct and entirely own a hotel at Halifax, which is in accordance with the original desire of the railway, an appropriate amount will be included in the annual railway budget to be submitted at the next session of parliament.
> It should be observed that no time will be lost in the execution of this policy, as in any case even a partial investment in the hotel would require parliamentary sanction, and, therefore, could not be made until the next session of parliament.

Newspapers in Halifax came out at that time accusing me of having blocked a project for a hotel at Halifax but I did not see any hats thrown in the air or any headlines in at least one newspaper, although there was a statement by a member of the government that, if there was a project for a Canadian National hotel, he believed the government would submit it to parliament if the railway directors would recommend it, and when there was a statement by the president of the company to the effect that the board would so recommend it. But the people of Halifax began to get a clearer view of the situation and they realized why the Canadian National felt that they should have an hotel and that the financial proposals were pretty extravagant for a government project. In August I was in Halifax and this is the report of an interview which the president of the board of trade and two members of their committee had with me. I take this from the Halifax Herald of August 20, 1927:

> Colonel Ralston referred the committee to a statement he made in Ottawa on July 14, expressing himself in favour of the project and also to a statement made by Sir Henry Thornton to the effect that an amount sufficient for the construction of a Canadian National railway hotel in Halifax would be placed in the railway estimates for submission to parliament at the next session.
> The Nova Scotia minister said there was no change in the situation, that it could be taken as authoritative that the matter would be placed before parliament.

The board of trade committee reported that they were cordially received.

That looked, it seemed to me, as if Halifax ought to feel there was a fair chance for having an hotel there. My hon. friend has taken occasion to-night to say—and this is what he must refer to—that this was a piece of partisan politics. I want to say to my hon. friend that I am flattered by the suggestion that I, a humble and junior member of the government, having just finished my first session in this house, had such power in the country that I was able to induce not only the government but Sir Henry Thornton and his board of directors to recommend a thing which for the purpose of his argument he must assume they were against, a thing which was unwise, which was not in the interest of the road, simply because I wanted it done for political purposes. My hon. friend gives me great credit. I do not claim to have that power and further than that he must go the full length and he must say that in addition to that I have been able to get all the vice-presidents and the board of directors of the road to recommend it, and Sir Henry Thornton to come here and testify before this committee and to make the report which the minister has read to-night, all because of the fact that he was carrying out my political ideas. Simply to make that statement is a sufficient answer, I think. It is about as preposterous a thing as could be said; it is about as untrue a thing as could be said, and I want to tell my hon. friend that there is absolutely no foundation for it whatever. I have supported the Canadian National hotel project because I believed it was sound from the point of view of the people of Canada, and from the point of view of the people of Nova Scotia.

I want to mention one other thing. This hesitancy which I showed about accepting this project had another effect. I had pointed out to the gentlemen at Yarmouth that this proposition was a pretty expensive bit of financing. One of the gentlemen came to Ottawa just about the time the Government was meeting, and I pointed out to him again that this was an extremely expensive bit of financing, with the result that I have under my hand at the present time, if hon. members will believe me, a letter from him in which he advises me that in order to meet my views about the expensiveness of the proposition, Bain and Company will agree, if the government will put this through, to hand back $25,000 of the $37,500 which they were going to make out of the Canadian National subscription. I think that was some accomplishment, and indicated some justification for the position I took. Later they presented another financial proposition, which reduced the $156,000 that was going to be made to $94,000, so that the company on the second scheme was going to get altogether $1,146,000, and were going to pay $94,000 for it. Even that I thought was a pretty expensive piece of financing for the government to authorize, and I do not think I can be blamed for having hesitated about that, or that the government can be blamed for taking the position which they did. They did not accept that proposition. As I have said, the statements by Sir Henry Thornton and myself were in July, then came the interview with the board of trade representative. That interview was in August.

Then later in September and I do not blame them for it—it was legitimate competition—along came Mr. Beatty of the Canadian Pacific railway and said—I do not think I am misreading his mind—"Here is an opportunity perhaps to cultivate the goodwill of the province of Nova Scotia. We will put up the whole $350,000 towards building the hotel." Mr. Beatty in a statement that appeared in newspapers not long ago made no reference to the facts which I have just related to the committee, namely, that it had been intimated in the statements by Sir Henry Thornton and myself in July that an estimate for a Canadian National hotel in Halifax would be submitted to Parliament. Mr. Beatty proposed, and his proposal was met with acclaim in Halifax at the time, to put up the $350,000 and to take the place of the Canadian National saying that he would give the Canadian National their stock if they desired it afterwards. Immediately, possibly the next day or the same day, Sir Henry Thornton came out with a reiteration of the statement he had previously made that he was for a Canadian National hotel, and said that the Canadian National would go on with their hotel. I have the statement here; it is very short.

Mr. KENNEDY: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I understood that we were to sit here to get through some estimates. It is perfectly obvious that we are not going to get very far with the estimates to-night. Why not conclude this debate and adjourn?

Mr. RALSTON: Perhaps my hon. friend will realize that what has been said has been rather important from my point of view, and I think I should be allowed to say a word or two to see it through.

Mr. KENNEDY: Yes, but at the same time the minister has had a considerable time already.

Mr. DUNNING: He has been speaking for only ten minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY: Nobody will suggest that members of parliament can work day and night and be in a fit condition to do the business of the country. On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, under what rule are we now sitting?

The CHAIRMAN: The house adopted a motion to continue after eleven o'clock.

Mr. KENNEDY: This day.

The CHAIRMAN: If I remember the motion rightly, it stated that the house should continue after eleven o'clock.

Mr. RALSTON: I shall not trouble the house with reading the quotation. As I said, Sir Henry Thornton came out immediately with a further statement to the effect that the Canadian National would erect its own hotel in Halifax, and that has been his attitude. I do not want to take the time of the committee to read extracts, but I could read at least three different statements made in the public press of the country, by Sir Henry Thornton to the effect, as my hon. friend the Minister of Railways has said, that the partial subscription in a hotel was altogether an alternative if they could not get the money for a Canadian National hotel.

I want the house and the committee to understand the situation. I want the people of Nova Scotia to understand the situation. My stand has been, first, last and all the time, for a Canadian National hotel, and it has been so because I believe it was in the interest of the country that if public funds are put into a hotel it should be a Canadian National hotel. After the Beatty hotel was announced, I made no further statement about it until Sir Henry Thornton represented that he believed that it was absolutely essential in the interests of the road, and as the Minister of Railways says that he considered that it was absolutely necessary in view of his competitive position in the province of Nova Scotia. I am for giving a fair chance to the people's road; and I do realize this fact, that the Canadian National has an interest in the province of Nova Scotia which it should be allowed to protect. I am only too glad to welcome the Canadian Pacific railway with their hotel and the statement I made to the newspapers I stand by, namely, that I think it is a good thing for the province of Nova Scotia to see two big railway systems like the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific investing money in that province, because it will ensure their very active interest and give an impetus to trade and an increase to traffic all over the province. I do expect to see a great incentive to the tourist traffic and a great addition to activities in the various towns and villages throughout the province when we have these two hotels in Halifax.

I have taken more of the time of the committee than I intended. I believe that my stand will be justified in the future, and I am willing at any time to submit the records to this committee or to this country in order to vindicate the soundness of the position which I have taken.

Mr. QUINN: I am not going to delay the house very long, but I want to make this criticism.

Mr. SPENCER: I rise to a point of order. The Prime Minister asked us to sit until 12.30. It is now after one, and we have not passed a single estimate.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I move that the house do now adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN: That motion is not in order in committee.

Mr. QUINN: I have the floor, and I am going to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. QUINN: Might I make a suggestion to my hon. friend? I think we are all desirous of accommodating each other as far as possible. I would suggest that this discussion apparently is terminating, and that we conclude the discussion on this one item with the understanding that when it is concluded, we adjourn.

Mr. BENNETT: There is not the least chance of terminating this discussion within a reasonable time this morning in view of the speeches that have been made.

Mr. RINFRET: You mean your own speech.

Mr. BENNETT: I said this discussion.

Mr. DUNNING: Let us go on for a while.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not fair to keep members here under these circumstances. I protest against it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. There is a motion before the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion made by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) is quite in order. The hon. member moved that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion negatived: Yeas, 37; Nays, 49.

Mr. QUINN: As I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to go on record as opposing any expenditure of public money in the province of Nova Scotia, but I must criticize the government's attitude with regard to this hotel expenditure because their announcement came too late. For years, as will be observed from the statement of the Minister of National Defence, the people of Halifax have been looking forward to increased modern hotel accommodation. In 1913 we had a program laid down to develop the terminal at Halifax. If the minister had disclosed his policy a year ago this discussion would not be taking place to-night, for it would have been accepted by everybody not only in Nova Scotia, but throughout the Dominion, it being realized that we were in need of a good, modern hotel. The Lord Nelson hotel promoters would have ceased their activities. But after the negotiations reported here to-night the promoters of that hotel announced that they would proceed. A few days afterwards the Canadian National Railways announced that they had decided to build an up-to-date hotel and station at Halifax at a cost of a million and a quarter dollars. To my mind for a combined station and hotel that sum is not sufficient. To-day the new hotel is almost completed, against the protests of the management of the existing hotels. In full page advertisements they declared that no further hotel accommodation was needed. Those people are all friendly to this government. The Minister of National Defence will not deny that the management of the two leading hotels in Halifax are friendly to his government, and that they protested most vigorously against the building of the Lord Nelson hotel, because they urged that there was already sufficient accommodation. Now, we had the announcement of the Lord Nelson hotel promoters that they would proceed with their building, and immediately following that came the announcement of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. RALSTON: An announcement was made by Sir Henry Thornton on July 20 of last year, before any announcement was made by the Lord Nelson Company.

Mr. QUINN: After a considerable amount of the stock in the new hotel had been subscribed.

Mr. RALSTON: After large advertisements had been put in the newspapers advertising the stock, notwithstanding the fact that the promoters knew of the matter of the Canadian National hotel had not been approved by the government.

Mr. QUINN: After the announcement by the promoters of the Lord Nelson hotel that they were going to proceed with their project, I ask was it good busines for this government or the railway management to announce to the people the building of a second additional hotel, especially after the vigorous protest on the part of the management of the existing hotels that there was no need for further accommodation?

Mr. RALSTON: And notwithstanding that protest, I advocated the Canadian National Railway hotel.

Mr. QUINN: What does the minister think of that hotel to-day?

Mr. RALSTON: I have made my statement.

Mr. QUINN: I think it would be far better for the railway management to proceed with the building of a railway station to replace the temporary shed which was erected after the explosion in 1916. The people have been clamouring for this for several years. The government should also provide further docking facilities and port improvements; if they want to spend a little more money, let them build the bridge across Halifax harbour that the people have been asking for. It may be said that increased port accommodation is not needed, but let me point out that the shipping tonnage of the port of Halifax is greater than that of the port of Montreal. My authority is the secretary of the Halifax Board of Trade. He states that in 1927 the gross tonnage, not including coasting ships, of the port of Halifax was 13,167,839 tons. From the report of the Montreal harbour commission I notice that our gross tonnage was practically 500,000 more than it was the year before. Montreal is not open the year round but it is hailed as the great shipping port of Canada. The Minister of National Defence has mentioned the fact that there is increased steamship accommodation; larger steamers are being built to bring tourists into Nova Scotia, not necessarily to Halifax. I suggest that before they go further with the hotel project they wait a little while to see how the present accommodation will suit the travelling public going into Halifax; and instead of going ahead at the present time with the Halifax hotel they might build summer hotels throughout the province and bungalows as suggested in the newspapers and elsewhere. I believe they could use the money to better advantage for the time being than proceeding with the present hotel at Halifax. The Minister of Railways stated a little while ago that he had had to come to parliament to vote the money before they could proceed with the hotel. I ask him, why did he not come to parliament to vote the money to excavate and build a foundation?

Mr. DUNNING: They had done it.

Mr. QUINN: I do not think there is anything more I have to say.

Mr. DUNNING: It is quite evident that there will still be an extended discussion on this vote and in view of the fact, even if it is the desire to get through, that we must under the rules make some progress under another item, I would ask whether it is agreeable to the committee to have items 410, 411 and 412 on page 4 of the estimates, relating to the maritimes, disposed of?

Mr. BENNETT: In any event the items cannot be changed.

Mr. DUNNING: They are accountable estimates.

Item stands.

Canadian Government Merchant Marine

Loan to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, repayable on demand with interest at a rate to be fixed by the governor in council, upon such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine, and to be applied in payment of: deficits in operation of the company and of the vessels under the company's control during the year ending December 31, 1928, and capital requirements, $758,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to direct the attention of the minister to a portion of the fleet which is obsolete. Five of these boats were laid up last winter in Halifax at a considerable cost—something like $100 a day. Interest is going on as well as depreciation. They have to be reconditioned to a considerable extent before again going into service. All told the cost of these boats, lying up, runs into the vicinity of $100,000 a year. The fleet contains some twenty vessels of less than 8,000 tons each and under present conditions it is impossible for the boats to which I have referred to pay their way. The country will lose a great deal less if they dispose of these boats at whatever price they can get or at figures approximating what they got for the boats they have sold. The minister will agree that this is the part of wisdom and I would ask him to take the matter up with the proper officers to see what can be done in that direction. Will he give the house some assurance that this policy will be adopted and the boats disposed of as rapidly as possible?

Mr. DUNNING: As a result of discussion in the special committee the management have been requested to make a survey of the situation with a view to discovering what it is best to do during the current year in the light of what my hon. friend has stated.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 1.30 a.m. (Saturday).

The house met at eleven o'clock.

GRADING AND INSPECTION OF WHEAT

MOTION FOR PRINTING OF EVIDENCE TAKEN BEFORE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move, seconded by Mr. Coote:

That twenty thousand copies in English and five thousand copies in French of the evidence taken by the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization on the consideration of the subject of the grading and inspection of wheat be printed in blue book form, and that distribution be made thereof free of charge by the Department of Trade and Commerce, and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to object to the putting out of the evidence if the agricultural committee determined that its distribution is worth while; but I submit that we are introducing a precedent that later on may, to say the least, create embarrassment and add materially to the expense of carrying on the affairs of this parliament. I have no recollection of parliament ordering the printing of twenty thousand copies of evidence. It is customary to order the printing of a reasonable amount of such information as is desirable for members of both houses and for distribution to their constituents. But if it is necessary to print this number of copies, why should it not be done by the department interested? The proper procedure, it seems to me, is for the Department of Trade and Commerce, to which we give a considerable vote for printing, to take the responsibility of putting out this evidence, if it is considered worth while to do so. If I understand the motion rightly, Mr. Speaker, it is questionable whether it is an order on the Department of Trade and Commerce to do this work. If it is, I doubt if a private member has the right to move such a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I was about to say that if it is intended that the printing shall be at the expense of the Department of Trade and Commerce, the motion must be introduced by the minister of that department; and it is not very clear that the department shall look after the distribution. I will read the motion once more:

That twenty thousand copies in English and five thousand copies in French of the evidence taken by the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization on the consideration of the subject of the grading and inspection of wheat be printed in blue book form and that distribution be made thereof free of charge by the Department of Trade and Commerce and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

It is not clear whether the printing is to be done at the expense of the House of Commons. If it is so intended, I must, as head of this department, advise the hon. gentleman that we have not sufficient funds to print such a large number of copies. We have already sent in a requisition for 1,500 copies. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce is willing to do the work, well and good. But he must say so.

Mr. MILLAR: The intention of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, is that those copies shall be printed from the general fund and distributed by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will my hon. friend state what he means by the general fund?

Mr. MILLAR: Well, the consolidated revenue fund. It all comes out of the same pocket anyway.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, but there must be an appropriation to take even five cents from the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. MILLAR: I am not much worried about that so long as we get the printing done. I desire to point out that we have been dealing with a question on which very little information is available in printed form. It is related to an agitation that has extended over the last twenty years; during all that time our farmers have been asking that their wheat should be graded according to its milling value. Your committee went very fully into this matter, and took the evidence of witnesses who are experts in their particular lines, and the information so brought together will be of very great value to the western farmers.

Now, twenty thousand copies may seem a large number, but with fifty-four constituencies in western Canada, practically all of which will be keenly interested in this question—as I will show in a moment—it means a very small number of copies to each constituency; further, it means that there will be about only one copy for every seven or eight thousand farmers. Some time ago when the evidence was completed, but before the report was issued, I took the trouble to secure from the printing bureau a statement of the cost involved. It did not include the report, nor did it provide for the translation into French. It amounted to only a little more than eight cents a copy. Making allowance for the translation and including the report—this resolution does not provide for it but I hope it will be included—the cost would amount to only ten cents a copy. When we consider that the information deals with a subject of great interest to western Canada, I think it is reasonable to expect that all those copies will be ordered.

I hold in my hand half a dozen letters from farmers who, having seen by the press that this matter was discussed in this house, of their own accord wrote for further information. One asks for a dozen copies, another, the secretary of an organization, asked for a dozen copies of the discussion which took place in the house on this subject some months ago, and so on. I have received probably a dozen letters, showing that the farmers are keenly interested in this matter. I believe other members have had the same experience. I do not think I have discussed in this house any question about which I have received so many inquiries, and which seems to have created so much interest. The evidence is quite complete, but unless that information is made available to the farmers so that they may have a chance to study and apply it I am afraid a large part of the benefit of the committee's work will be lost. I would refer again to the fact that the proposed distribution covers the three prairie provinces. The number is small, but in view of the fact that a few hon. gentlemen seem to think it large, I am personally willing that it shall be reduced, respectively, to 10,000 in English and 2,500 in French. That is reducing it by half. I have no authority from the committee to make that suggestion but I believe a number of the members of the committee are of opinion that we might do with less. I would move, therefore, that the number be reduced as I have indicated, and the amendment will embody words to that effect. I shall be quite satisfied with that.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend suggests a reduction in the number of copies. May I point out that there is a committee which has to do with the printing of the House of Commons. My hon. friend might agree to amend his motion in such a manner as to omit altogether reference to the number of copies to be printed and leave the number to the committee of the house to determine. I suggest that the motion be simply that copies in English and copies in French be printed. The committee might confer with His Honour the Speaker as regards the number of copies necessary.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): When is that committee likely to meet if we prorogue this afternoon?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It might meet this morning or during the course of the day with a view to conferring with His Honour the Speaker. I should not think there would be any difficulty.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I cannot for the life of me understand the opposition to the request for a certain number of copies to be printed, the cost to be taken out of the revenue. We have no hesitation in expending $10,000 on invitations and menu cards for Rideau Hall, but when it comes to a small amount for the printing of valuable information for the farmers of western Canada there is opposition.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is no opposition; it is only a question of procedure.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understood there was opposition and that this was why the hon. gentleman suggested a reduction in the number of copies. I do not think it is wise to reduce it. In the west there is a tremendous demand for this information, and the dissemination of as many copies as could be printed would serve a useful purpose. This is the kind of information that has been called for ever since difficulties arose in connection with the grain trade, and here we have evidence bearing upon the subject.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Did the hon. gentleman hear Mr. Speaker say that he was afraid he had not sufficient funds for the purpose? Is it not wise to confer with His Honour in that regard? If my hon. friend wants a new sheet of estimates no doubt the amount could be increased. But I think it is only elementary wisdom to confer with the Speaker as to what can be done.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) overlook one fact in relation to this motion: I do not know who is going to call a meeting of the committee. And if the committee is called how shall we get results before parliament prorogues? I do not think it is wise to follow that course unless the Prime Minister can assure us that we shall obtain a quorum and come to some agreement before prorogation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My endeavour in the matter is to ensure copies being printed. His Honour the Speaker has mentioned that with the figures suggested it is not possible for him to authorize the house to pass the motion as it stands. I conferred with His Honour to ascertain whether it would facilitate matters if the figures were left out. And as I was conferring with His Honour I heard the hon. member who moved the resolution suggest that the numbers be reduced to 10,000 and 2,500 respectively. I thought the better course of procedure would be to leave it to the committee in conference with His Honour the Speaker to determine how many copies it might be possible to print. I have not the least doubt that the disposition of the committee will be to print all that are required. At any rate, if a limited number of copies are printed I think I can undertake to say that, in the event of the funds of the House of Commons being insufficient to provide the larger number required, we shall manage somehow to meet the situation out of unforeseen expenses or in some other way until parliament meets again.

Mr. MILLAR: My suggestion to cut down the number was because of opposition to the number.

Mr. T. S. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): I desire to move an amendment:

That the words "together with the report of the committee" be inserted after the word "wheat" in the fourth line.

The object of the amendment is to ensure that the report will be incorporated with the evidence in the printing.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the mover agreeable to the reduction in the number of copies to be printed?

Mr. MILLAR: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Amendment agreed to.

Motion as amended agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I observe to the house, inasmuch as we follow British practice as far as possible, that in England only a limited number of copies of reports are authorized. As regards publications for public use, anyone who has been in England knows that he can find, at certain bookstalls in the city of London, copies of various blue books which are available at a minimum charge. The time has come in Canada, I think, when we should adopt a similar practice.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): I wish to move a motion which will require no discussion. I move that the ninth report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—PUBLIC EXPENDITURE

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I desire to move in amendment:

That all the words after the word "that" in the motion be left out and the following substituted therefor:

"This house is of opinion that the expenditures for the year ending March 31, 1928, and the proposed expenditures for the year ending March 31, 1929, are excessive and extravagant, and that the country has not received, and cannot expect to receive, any adequate returns therefrom."

Mr. Speaker, I offer no apologies for moving this motion at this time. Those members of the house who have the main estimates before them will observe that we voted $366,071,314.22 for the public service last year, in addition to certain supplementary estimates. This year again, however, although we voted these very large sums of money which were essential to take care of the demands made by the public service, the extravagant demands in my judgment, we were asked to vote a further sum of $7,777,747.89 in two supplementary estimates embodied in Bill No. 155 already passed by this house. So our expenditures, which we thought to be large when we passed the estimates last year, in fact have been swollen not only by supplementary estimates passed last year but by an additional sum of over seven and three-quarter million dollars which was found to be essential for the purpose of taking care of the commitments made by the government, including governor general's warrants which amounted to nearly $200,000.

I submit that this expenditure is entirely beyond what should be expended by this country at this time, and I find my vindication for the observations I am about to make in the statement made to this house over a quarter of a century ago by Right Hon. W. S. Fielding, the then Minister of Finance. Meeting a motion deprecating large expenditures and swollen budgets, the then Minister of Finance used these words:

Let me say that so far as my hon. friend's object was to utter a word of warning as to the need of moderation in our expenditure, as to the need of looking to the future, I entirely sympathize with him and welcome that word, no matter from what quarter it may come. There is always a tendency, whether in personal or in national affairs, for men in times of great prosperity to forget the future, and it is always well that some cool head should be found to call attention to the conditions of the day, to the possible change of these conditions, and to the necessity of adapting our policy not only to things as they are, but to things as they may be at no distant day. I am always glad to find any one calling attention to that phase of our public affairs. So strongly impressed have I been with the necessity of at all times keeping that in mind, that in the various statements which it has been my privilege to present in the form of budget speeches, at the moment when we attained the greatest prosperity, I had deemed it well to call attention to the serious view which my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) presented to-day, and which I have presented from time to time, as to the necessity of looking to the future.

Now, sir, on more than one occasion during the progress of this session I have ventured to point out to the house that the conditions existing at the present time indicate very clearly to those who read the commercial barometers and to those who are concerned about the future that we should exercise great prudence and foresight in connection with our expenditures. I have already directed attention to what was done during the year which ended on March 31, 1928, and it is only necessary to turn to the Canada

Year Book and to look at the total expenditures of this country during the last few years to observe that while we are prosperous, in the sense that we are collecting large revenues, we are also making enormous expenditures, which it would have been thought impossible for this country to make a few years ago. If any hon. member will refer to the Canada Year Book for 1926 he will find the total expenditures indicated at page 765, and it will be seen that in the last year before the war, the year ending March 31, 1914, the total expenditures of this country for all purposes were $186,241,048. By the year 1926 these figures had risen, in that short period of only twelve years, to $355,186,423. Included in the latter figure were sums of money advanced to the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine but it will be observed that in previous years the sums expended for these services were larger than in the year 1926. Therefore we have the conditions to which I have referred, namely enormously increasing expenditures, increasing it seems to me beyond all possible opportunity for us to overtake them by any revenues we may possibly hope to collect, if we are to bring about that reduction of taxation which is so essential to the development of our industrial life. If a citizen of this country had been told ten or fifteen years ago that the Dominion of Canada, with its population so little increased in that period of time as the figures indicate, would increase its expenditure by almost 100 per cent, he would have thought it impossible that it could be so, yet there are the figures before us.

When we turn to the revenue statements at page 761 we find that the total consolidated revenues of this country were as follows:

1923..	403,094,210
1924..	406,582,840
1925..	351,515,392
1926..	382,893,009

At pages 3037 and 3038 of the Canada Gazette for this year we find that our revenues for the year ending March 31, 1927, amounted to $385,668,925.31, and that for the year ending March 31, 1928, they rose to the largest sum we have on record in this country, namely, $417,127,500, in round figures. Our expenditures for 1927 amounted to $324,239,424.97, including $10,000,000 for the Canadian National Railways and $426,817.14 for the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. For the year ending March 31, 1928, the last fiscal year, our expenditures amounted to $329,966,715.67, including a million dollars for the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, or in other words an increase of $5,727,290.70 over the preceding year.

Under present conditions, Mr. Speaker, is there anything to warrant the enormous increase of over five and three-quarter million dollars in the expenditures of this country in 1928, over 1927, when the expenditures during that year had reached the enormous figure to which I have referred? Any expenditure of this country in excess of $325,000,000 is an enormous expenditure for the Dominion of Canada with its limited population. If this government were more anxious about the practice of economy, about seeing that one hundred cents of value is given for every dollar of expenditure, the conditions would be much better than they are now. What Mr. Fielding said twenty-five years ago is more than true to-day. We are getting into the habit of dealing with thousands and millions of dollars as though they were a mere bagatelle, and we think that for some reason we may make these vast expenditures without any regard whatever to the future. I think the time has come when we should take stock of the situation. I know how pleasant it is for governments to spend money. Their supporters demand that they shall spend money; the Minister of Public Works is besieged by applications for public buildings, and every department of the public service is asked for money. And yet this was the condition which prevailed in the United States when President Coolidge took charge, when he appointed General Lord and his successors to the position of director of budgets, and brought about a saving, as has been pointed out by me, of over one million dollars a day in interest charges alone. In his message to congress he referred to the debt of the country as being the greatest economic menace that threatened the life of the United States. I have directed attention to it already, and bearing in mind the vast expenditures to which this country committed itself in 1927, for the year ending 31st March, 1928, I again direct the attention of my fellow members to the language of Mr. Fielding. You may possibly say to me, "But what are the particulars; what are the details? Why is it that you say these expenditures may not give an adequate return to the people of this country?" I refer the house to the language used by the then leader of the opposition, Mr. Borden; and I might mention that in his view he was supported by an eminent English statesman whose utterance I shall not delay to read. Mr. Borden said:

Now, where an opposition are not able to get, within a reasonable time, and without unduly protracting the session, information which would enable them to discriminate between hundreds of items brought down to this house, when they are unable to get information which would put them in the same position for forming an opinion that the government are in, the proper duty for an opposition is to protest against excessive expenditure, to throw upon the government the responsibility of making it, knowing as they do that the government have within their power the means of reducing that expenditure by eliminating from it items which are less worthy of public appropriation than those which are necessary to be made. That is the view which has been put forward in the English House of Commons as a sound principle, that an opposition in protesting, as we have protested, against undue expenditure, have discharged their duty without dealing in detail with the particular items of the expenditure brought down by the government.

Let us then, in the light of that statement and the observations which I have just made, look at the expenditures to which we are committed for the years 1928-29, in other words the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1929. I wonder if this house has considered what money we have voted; I wonder if the Minister of Finance has taken due cognizance of the extent to which we have made commitments for the future. Let me read them to this house. The main estimates for this year committed us to an expenditure of $373,796,856.24. The first supplementary estimates committed us to a further expenditure of $10,583,611.91, and the further supplementary estimates committed this country to the expenditure of $1,000,200. Then let us look at the other sums to which we are committed. First there are the railways—well, I will not take them first—

An hon. MEMBER: But they are coming?

Mr. BENNETT: They are coming, yes. The hon. gentleman seems to think it is a matter of very little importance, and yet I think, when he calmly considers the situation, he will realize what it means not only to himself but to his family, to place these increasing burdens upon the people of this country. The three items which I have mentioned make a total of $385,380,668.15.

But we did not stop there. We voted $3,000,000 to the Federal District Commission for the improvement of Ottawa, by Bill 218. We voted a $200,000 annuity by Bill 218 to the same authority. We voted an annuity of $75,000 to the National Battlefields Commission by Bill 34. We voted $200,000 per year for two years for level crossings by Bill 220. These items make a total of $388,855,668.15.

But we did not stop there. What further sums has this house committed this country to? At the initiation of the government and at their request, we have voted $8,500,000 to the harbour of Quebec. It is admitted that the money is a direct charge upon this country and that it will not be repaid by the harbour itself; that was admitted by the hon. gentlemen who assumed responsibility for that expenditure. We have voted $5,000,000 to the harbour of St. John, and $500,000 to the harbour of Halifax. These items total $14,000,000. It is perfectly true that all these items will not be expended this year, but it is also equally true that the money must be found some time by the taxpayers of Canada, at least in respect to the item of the Quebec harbour. We have committed this country to those expenditures, whether the money be paid to-day or to-morrow or next year or the year after.

But did we stop there? We did not; we went further. Last night we were voting, and to-day we will be called upon to vote—the government has the requisite majority behind it to vote it —$47,156,644.50 for the Canadian National Railways and for the Canadian Government Merchant Marine.

Does this house realize just what these stupendous figures mean in the way of taxation? But in addition to these sums, we also voted $3,500,000 for the terminal at Toronto, and voted a further sum, in excess of $22,689,575, in connection with the Canadian Northern Income Charge Act. These bonds were originally an obligation of the Canadian Northern railway, but they have become an obligation of this country because we know these companies cannot be allowed to go into liquidation or into the hands of a receiver because of our investment in them during the past ten years.

An hon. MEMBER: What is that total again?

Mr. BENNETT: It is $22,689,575, under Bill No. 153. We have the stupendous total of nearly $450,000,000 outside of that obligation in connection with the income securities of the old Canadian Northern. I wonder if this house realizes that we are now faced with a budget of nearly half a billion dollars with less than ten millions of people who are already staggering under the burden of a debt of two and a half billions of dollars? In these buoyant days it is easy to talk in millions of dollars and find the money to meet these appropriations. We have not had the opportunity, as Mr. Borden pointed out when leader of the opposition, of considering the items in detail.

Take the votes, for instance, concerning expenditures west of the great lakes. How many of us have been afforded the opportunity to read all the necessary papers, documents and reports on these subjects, to discover whether these undertakings will serve any useful public purpose? Take the vast expenditures for civil government; take the expenditure, as shown by the return brought down to this house, in connection with the fleet of government automobiles in this city; take that alone. You say, "Oh, that is a piffling thing," but there it is. It runs into thousands and thousands of dollars increasing as the days go by, and yet no one seems to care. The other day I heard a gentleman who, it is true, is only an observer, a man who has lived in the capital a long time and who is not interested in politics, say that he had never before seen such reckless expenditures of public money in this country. If you walk down yonder, you will see a vacant piece of land which the Minister of Public Works has bought for a large sum of money to put a pavement on which will cost nearly three-quarters of a million dollars before it is finished. Land and buildings have been purchased just to secure a small area of land in the centre of the city. We look at the wreck of an old hotel and there is an expenditure of three millions of dollars with the commitments for the adjoining areas. We have a sum of $950,000 in two annuities alone in respect to the national battlefields and the improvement commission of this city, and to this there is added an annuity in connection with level crossings, making a total of $1,150,000.

Take the railway expenditures. What member of this house has any adequate appreciation of the railway figures? We sit here and laughingly vote $47,000,000 and we are voting by these supply bills nearly $100,000,000 more than the national debt of this country was before the war began. That is only fourteen years ago. Think of the commitments that have been brought about in that time. In England, France, continental Europe, the United States, with all their riches, they have approached these problems as men who are intent upon bringing about a shrinkage in expenditure and it is no answer for the Minister of Finance to say that every member who sits on this side of the house has been anxious to have additional sums spent in his constituency. Why would he not be when he sees the government recklessly throwing money away in every direction? Has one particular community to be singled out for expenditure and the other left alone? The reason why hon. members on this side rise and ask that their constituencies be protected is that there are public buildings falling into decay, public works that are not being maintained, because, forsooth, the patronage evil is abroad in this country and the exchequer of Canada is being used to advance the political fortunes of the supporters of the administration. That is the real reason. There is no thoughtful man who travels by automobile throughout this country; there is no man who goes on our highways and observes the expenditures for post offices, wharves, docks, dredging in counties and districts that are returning supporters of the administration and then notes the lack of them in other communities, but realizes that if there is no necessity for them in the latter, there certainly is no excuse for them in the former. If, in other words, the public necessity does not demand that money should be expended for public works in the sense I have indicated in constituencies that do not return supporters of the administration, that in itself is an indication that there is no public necessity for these expenditures in the other communities to which I have referred. That is patronage to the eyes of the most superficial observer.

I am not unmindful of the fact that it is easy to brush these things aside; that it is easy to say that this country is entering upon an era of unexampled prosperity and that there will be more revenues than ever before we have heard of available for our purposes. One of the premiers of the provinces within the last forty-eight hours, dealing with his experience in Canada under our profitless prosperity, said: "Your remedy is to obtain reduced taxation from the federal authorities." This country is groaning under the burden of present taxation. There are few more highly taxed countries than we are with such a vast area and such a small population.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What premier was that?

Mr. BENNETT: The premier of Quebec is the gentleman who made the observation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That was to abolish the income tax.

Mr. BENNETT: He suggested that as one thing that would have a very immediate beneficial effect on industry.

Mr. ROBB: What does my hon. friend think of that?

Mr. BENNETT: I am not charged with responsibility.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Once more it is the old story of my very courteous and, in some particulars, easy-minded friend, the Minister of Finance, who asks: "What do you think about it?" When I have responsibility, I will tell him what I think about it. That is the reason this motion is before the house. It is because the government seems to shirk responsibility by asking somebody else what they think about the matter. It is easy to look at bank returns, at the returns of industry under profitless prosperity; it is easy to look at your statistics; but a Minister of Finance who would assume responsibility in this country for bringing about a policy of real economy, would be regarded with the greatest possible affection by the people. This might not make for popularity for the moment, but it would bring about that enduring admiration for his achievements in promoting thrift and economy which are the bases of all prosperity in the country.

Listen to what we heard this morning. The Minister of Finance this morning rose in his place and talked about the difficulties in connection with a slight expenditure for printing a few pamphlets to distribute over the country. There is more money spent here in a single month for automobiles for those who should not have them than would pay for the whole of this expenditure. If you look at the return that was brought down, it is calculated to make any Canadian blush with shame to see the expenditures made in connection with automobiles in this capital city of Ottawa. That is the minister's conception of economy. He is not going to print 25,000 copies of a report on the protein content of wheat. Why, he says, we must be economical; we must see how we are going to save our money, and then we are voting $39,000,000 for the national railways and duplicate hotel facilities at Halifax with an estimated loss, according to their own manager, of $100,000 per annum on one hotel. That is the government's idea of economy—lose $100,000 a year, but be economical in the matter of printing a few hundred pamphlets.

Look at the returns that have been brought down during the last few months; study them, and you will be convinced that no business man could for a single month maintain his business if the conditions indicated in those returns were allowed to continue. That is the position with respect to the matter. Is this a business administration or just a tax-collecting administration, gathering in the money for the purpose of disbursing it amongst its supporters? That is the question. Is this a business administration or not? I put the question to the committee last evening; I pointed out as carefully as I could—and I have not yet finished with respect to that—what is involved in regard to the expenditure in connection with the hotel at Halifax.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not, not by any means. I am pointing out what that involves. It involves a loss, as admitted by the technical adviser to this country's railway, of $100,000 a year with respect to one hotel, and now the minister says: Give us $1,250,000 and we will build another to duplicate the one already in existence. The government has either gone mad with extravagance or else is drunk with power and is without any sense of responsibility. The administration thinks there will be no end as long as it can spend the money. Study the budgets in England and look at the economies they have effected; or if you are not governed by British precedent, go down to Washington and you will find that with all their wealth they would not think for a single moment of spending money in the manner in which we do. I have a considerable number of columns of figures that I might read to the house to show exactly what is going on in connection with various matters mentioned, but I will content myself with merely making this motion, because I cannot at this stage of the session take longer time in which to direct attention to the details. But I follow the time-honoured custom mentioned by Sir Robert Borden as the precedent for British statesmen in opposition dealing with matters of this kind, to protest against these swollen budgets, protest against these unnecessary expenditures, to protest in the name of the people who will have in the end to carry the burden and pay the taxes.

It is all right to rejoice in these days of seeming prosperity and say we have ample moneys and let us spend them. But there comes a day of reckoning, and that day you can almost see in the distance now. The trade returns of this country for the last month for which we have the figures show that our imports are, I believe, higher than they had been in any corresponding month in our history, and our exports had fallen to the lowest figure for years. There was an adverse balance of trade against us of $20,000,000 in round figures. That merely indicates that under the existing conditions created by the government opposite you have in Canada, what? You have the possibility, nay, more than that, you have issued an invitation to the great mass producing industries to the south of us, now that there has been some slackening in their activities, to maintain full production in order that their overhead may be taken care of, and their surplus products sent at cheap prices to the Dominion. We imported in April, 1928, more, I think, than we ever did in any corresponding month in our history, $78,000,000, and our exports dwindled to $58,000,000. Is not that a warning to the minister?

Let him consult the financial heads of great institutions to the south of us. It is true that we have a vast, untouched estate, and that new wealth may be produced much more readily from that than from an old and cultivated estate. But it is also true that where we cultivate, it is necessary that we should sell, and if we find a curtailment and shrinkage of trade among the nations of the world, we find a limitation placed upon our ability to dispose of that which we produce. The minister knows that. He has been told time and time again by the great heads of financial institutions to be cautious, to look ahead. Every thoughtful business man is doing it; everybody is shortening sail except the speculators. Do you realize, sir, that this great speculative era that we now have on the American continent is one fraught with possibilities of the gravest disaster for this country? The brokers' loans alone in New York last week were over $5,000,000,000, an unheard of figure. In this country speculation is rampant. Some people imagine that trading in pieces of paper upon which there are engraved words and figures constitutes the creation of new wealth. It is not so. The new wealth of the country is being created by the application of labour and capital to the natural resources of the country, and this trading in stock certificates, this great era of speculation in this country and on this continent, is one fraught with possibilities of the gravest danger to Canada, because we have not as they have in the United States a vast accumulation of wealth that will enable us to meet the approaching conditions with ease.

Look at the movement of securities; look at the movement of gold; look at every indication there is with respect to speculation in this country. I know great brokers' houses that have declined to take new accounts in this country for over twelve months, one perhaps the greatest brokerage house in this country, because they fear what they see in the distance. But no one in the government seems to care, and if we point out the conditions we are "pessimists", if we venture to direct attention to the conditions we are "decrying our country". That is the talk that hon. gentlemen opposite hurl at us and before the country. But I recall the language of one who was regarded in after years as one of the very greatest of British statesmen, who observed that when their orgy was through, when they had at last recovered from the debauch in which they were then enjoying themselves, possibly then in their sober and quiet moments they would look back and recall the warning that had been given by those who, looking into the future as best they could, guided by those economic signs that were apparent, and by beacon lights, warning of the future, had pointed out the conditions as they also had come to pass. You perhaps will look back upon our warnings, and perhaps remember with at least some degree of fair-minded justice the observations that were made by those of us who have pointed out the national disaster that is inevitable if this orgy of mad expenditure continues.

It is for these reasons, sir, that we make this motion, hoping and believing that at least it will have the effect of directing the attention of the administration to the seriousness of the condition that is involved in the vast expenditures of public moneys that must be raised by the taxpayers, that is by the people of Canada.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) closed his very interesting speech by giving us as a reason for the introduction of this amendment that he wanted to advise the government to go slowly in the expenditure of public funds. It occurred to me as I listened to my hon. friend's speech, that it was more of a lesson to his own followers that he was presenting because I have in mind that in recent weeks we on this side of the house have been attacked, not because we were spending too much money, but because we were not spending money enough in certain parts of the country.

I find no fault with the amendment introduced by my hon. friend. It is a part of party etiquette that at some time just before prorogation the leader of the opposition should attempt to present a resolution broad enough to allow everyone to come in under it and vote for it, and so to-day he has presented what might properly be termed a blanket resolution.

My hon. friend, like myself, is an admirer of that great finance minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Mr. Fielding. He has quoted

Mr. Fielding frequently this morning. There was one observation that Mr. Fielding generally made in answer to all such speeches that my hon. friend did not quote. I recall it very well, as will my hon. friend and all of those who sat in the house with Mr. Fielding. Mr. Fielding used to say that every person was in favour of economy for the other fellow, but no one wanted economy applied to his own particular constituency.

After all, Mr. Speaker, I am not finding any fault with the statement that my hon. friend has made regarding the wisdom of Canada going slow in the matter, for instance, of speculation, and in Canada going slow in expenditure, but there is a reasonable attitude to take. There was a time in the history of Canada when it was very necessary to go slow and to economize, but as the country grows and progresses, the government that does not take care of the growing needs of the country is falling down in its duty. It seems to me that the real test as to how wisely the finances of a country are being administered is to make a comparison of the expenditures with the revenue; to ascertain the taxes that are imposed upon the people, and then to determine whether the government, in carrying on the affairs of the country, have been doing so economically, and in such a way as gradually to reduce the burden of taxation bearing so heavily upon the people.

I welcome the opportunity of a comparison of this government's administration with the administration of our predecessors, but before proceeding may I point out that all these statements that we sometimes hear and sometimes read of the government—or rather parliament, because it is an attack on all parties—railroading through three hundred million dollars odd of estimates, contain a good deal of rubbish. Parliament has already authorized a substantial part of these estimates—they are statutory. For instance, if hon. gentlemen will look at the summary on pages 4 and 5 of the estimates they will find the amounts authorized by statute. The statutory estimates this year amount to about $150,608,000. Civil government estimates total $12,363,000. These civil government estimates are the result of the Civil Service Commission appointed by parliament, and parliament guards very jealously any encroachment on the rights of that commission. It is the Civil Service Commission that increases or decreases the salaries of civil servants throughout the country. Then there are the war pensions. Those already authorized by parliament total some $39,000,000 odd. In other words, sir, parliament is called upon closely to scrutinize about one hundred million dollars of government estimates; the balance had already been scrutinized by parliament, and parliament itself had authorized the expenditure.

I said a moment ago that the real test of administration was a comparison as between revenues and expenditures and reduction of taxes under Liberal and Tory governments. At this late hour I have no desire to delay the house. I know hon. gentlemen are all anxious to proceed with the business yet remaining to be dealt with. But may I just briefly put on record a comparison of the revenues and expenditures under this government and under our immediate predecessors? For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1921, the total estimates were $535,790,643. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1922—the Conservatives were in power for nine months, but they were wholly responsible for the estimates which were prepared in the previous year—the estimates were $446,747,947. And what were the receipts in 1921 when the total estimates were over $535,000,000? In that year the total receipts were $436,292,184. In the following year when the estimated expenditure was over $446,000,000, the total receipts were $382,271,571. Those years showed a deficit and an increase of taxes. The duty of this government on its coming into office and resuming responsibility for carrying on the affairs of the country was to pay off the debts of our predecessors. We have succeeded in doing that, and at the same time materially reducing taxation.

Now, what sort of balance sheet did these hon. gentlemen show when they were in office. I welcome this change of heart on the part of the Conservative party as demonstrated this morning by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. But our Tory friends in opposition are always strong for economy. When they are charged with the responsibilities of office I recall the famous words, to be found in Hansard, of a distinguished representative from one of the maritime provinces, who, after this party had been in office for some fifteen years and had accumulated surpluses, and was succeeded by the Tory party, said one afternoon when the estimates were under discussion—my colleagues the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice will remember his words:

> Why economize? Let us speed away and spend the money.

That is the attitude.

Mr. BENNETT: Dash away.

Mr. ROBB: Yes, that is right. My hon. friend recalls the words.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not come back any more.

Mr. ROBB: That was the attitude of the Conservative party when entrusted with responsibility in 1912. What was the change in the debt position of the country during the administration of the Tory party? According to the public accounts they increased the national debt in 1920 by $674,337,591; in 1921 by $92,010,359; in 1922 by $81,256,818. In the first year of our administration the national debt was increased by $31,641,067. But let us keep in mind that we had inherited some contracts that had been given out by our predecessors and we had to provide for them. What has been the record of the departmental finances since that day? In 1924 the reduction of debt was $35,993,593; in 1925, $345,589; in 1926 $27,706,586; in 1927, $41,896,729; and for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1928, when the books were closed the reduction of debt was $51,125,436. And notwithstanding that, we have been able to reduce the taxes bearing so heavily upon the people.

Under these conditions with growing surpluses, with the reduction in taxation, it is perhaps very natural that throughout Canada there should be increased demands for expenditure. I recall, about a year ago I think, one of the biggest of the big financial men of this country, himself a strong advocate of economy—he had been preaching it for some time—saying to me: "I am afraid, Mr. Robb, that Mr. King's government may be carrying this economy a little too far; this country is growing, and you must provide for the carrying on of the affairs of Canada in a reasonable way." I suppose he voiced public opinion fairly well. At least he voiced the opinion that we have heard in this chamber during this session. I am wondering who is going to vote for this blanket resolution for economy. Who is going to vote against these estimates that we are presenting to-day? Are the hon. members who come from the great city of Toronto going to vote against these expenditures, and for greater economy? Are hon. members from Hamilton going to vote for a reduction in the estimates? No cities in Canada have received more by direct votes than these two cities in Ontario. No person will say that they are ardent supporters of the government; but the growing demands of those cities did require some additional expenditure. And my hon. friends from the maritime provinces, are they going to vote for this blanket resolution for economy? If so, they are going to vote against all the speeches they have made within the last month. They held up this house for the better part of two days telling us that we had not been providing sufficient expenditure to carry on the affairs of the country. But it is not the province of Ontario and the maritimes alone who have been asking for increased expenditures. My hon. friends down in yonder group have been chiding the government because, forsooth, we have not been spending money enough in their part of the country. I have under my hand a statement showing that just one day, when my colleague the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) was presenting his estimates, seventeen gentlemen opposite rose each in his place and demanded an increased expenditure in his own county. We were chided because we were not providing for public buildings or wharves or something in the counties those hon. gentlemen have the honour to represent. A few days later my colleague was again before the committee, and again there were demands for increased expenditure. It is possible there were some demands from this side, but it so happens that on the list I have in my hand there are seven names of hon. gentlemen, one from the city of Quebec, but all the others, gentlemen now facing me, very genial chaps. And would you believe it, among those asking for increased expenditures was my hon. friend who has presented the resolution this morning.

Mr. BENNETT: That is hardly a correct statement. What I pointed out was that the city of Calgary, with its large revenues, was without a public building although other places had public buildings, because they had returned government supporters and Calgary had not.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend pointed out that Calgary was entitled to a public building and he was on sound ground. He was no worse than other members in that respect. I was in Calgary last fall and I am bound to say I think my hon. friend was right. But surely he cannot chide us for having increased expenditures when he and his friends are finding fault because we have not been spending money enough.

I have no desire to delay the house longer. The policy of this government is to live within our means; to provide annually surpluses instead of deficits; to reduce annually the taxes bearing so heavily upon the people. Our record is good in that regard and we have succeeded in reducing the public debt. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that so long as a country is able to present in its annual statements a surplus of revenue over expenditures, a reduction in the national debt and a reduction in taxation, blanket resolutions such as this, coming from hon. gentlemen opposite who individually are urging the government to spend more money in their own constituencies, are not very weighty. My hon. friend is making a brave attempt to rally his friends around him to get them to vote on a resolution which might possibly send the government to prorogation with a little less majority than we have been having recently. But back in the country gentlemen who vote against these expenditures will be met by their constituents with this comment: "Well, you will have to do some explaining as to why you are voting against a government that is providing generously for carrying on public works within our different counties."

Mr. BENNETT: On a question of privilege, may I mention one matter? The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) has sent me a slip indicating that under Bill 204, which increases to $10,500,000, the amount of security that might be issued in connection with the Toronto terminals, $7,000,000 had already been issued and the new amount would be only $3,500,000. The act calls for $10,500,000 but $7,000,000 has already been issued and the additional amount, as I have stated, is only $3,500,000. I thank the hon. gentleman. I had not the information as to the exact amount.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I desire to make an observation or two on the motion which has been presented by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). It is of course not an opportune time to attempt to analyse the entire budget of the nation, especially when there is such anxiety evinced on all sides of the house for a speedy closing of the session—an anxiety which I share. I think I might say at the outset that there are very grave charges indeed involved in the leader of the opposition's resolution, charges which perhaps merit a great deal more attention than we shall be able to give them at the present time. It is true the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) has characterized the motion as being a part of party etiquette, and in that regard the charges, judging by the past at least are well founded. Then the minister replies in party etiquette style also by pointing out to us that this is not the only government whch has made large expenditures. That too I regard as party etiquette. I want to point out that I was one who urged the government for larger expenditures at a time when Canada was passing through a very difficult period of depression. At that time I found that the house generally had caught the gloom, and everywhere was insisting that the government should restrict its expenditures and thus further force the country into depression. Following the same policy I would say that this is the time when Canada should restrict her expenditures as far as possible and start no new exploits which could be postponed for a few years, knowing that the depression will return. I do not wish to charge the government with not having followed that policy, for that policy has never been followed, and it cannot be followed until there is a sounder view perhaps of the expenditure of money in relation to the general prosperity of the country. There may be extravagance in many of the items which have passed the house; there may be extravagance in any one or other of the departments; and to that extent no doubt the charge of the leader of the opposition may be very well taken. On the other hand we are not in a position to know just whether there have been extravagances or not. For several years we have pressed from this section of the assembly that there ought to be a better method of examining the expenditures of the country. We have asked from time to time that estimates be either allocated to various standing committees of the house, or that special committees be appointed to attend to this matter. So far we have not received much encouragement. I do not know whether the present way of dealing with the estimates is also party etiquette and affords an opportunity for partisanship in this house. If that is so, it does not apply to this particular government but to all governments.

But I do insist that the government give us now some assurance that at subsequent sessions an attempt will be made to deal a little more efficiently with the examination of the expenditures of the country. Sitting here in committee of the whole, with party etiquette reigning on each side, wasting time asking foolish questions, putting the minister into a corner where he cannot answer and has not the information—all this is absolutely absurd, and for an intelligent assembly like this to proceed in that manner to vote the expenditure of approximately $500,000,000 is something I cannot understand.

While I am not supposed to be a business man, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, I would not proceed in that way. I think there are better ways to do it, and if the Prime Minister is going to have anything to say on the amendment I hope he will give us some assurance that this question will be looked into and that in the future the estimates will be more carefully examined.

I agree to this extent with the Minister of Finance, that the amendment of the leader of the opposition is a blanket charge. There are many expenditures which we all agree must go on, and of course there may be some which should not be made. However, I say we have not the means of getting accurate information with respect to these matters. Of course I realize that perhaps the leader of the opposition could not do otherwise at this time than make a blanket charge, but in respect to the other point which the Minister of Finance brought out, when he asked who was going to vote against this amendment, I could tell him of people who might very well vote for it. I refer to the people of the western provinces, because when you look over the expenditures of the country you find that a very small percentage of them has been made there. So I think we could surely justify ourselves if we decided to support the amendment of the leader of the opposition. I do not know the exact percentage of the total expenditure which will be made in the western provinces, but I do know that in other years less than 10 per cent went to those four western provinces, and I do not know that that percentage has been increased. I also know that in the west there is a growing feeling that in the eastern provinces large expenditures are made which are regarded by the man in the street as being for party purposes. I do not say that that is true; we do not know whether or not it is true because we have not had the opportunity to investigate. However, I will say that I have made no request to the government for the expenditure of money in my constituency. I did have an idea that we should have a new post office in the large, flourishing city of Bentley; I once thought I might ask for $5,000,000 or so to dredge out a harbour below my house on Blindman river, but not being persona grata I thought I had better not present those requests.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that in a growing country such as Canada our expenditures necessarily must grow with our increasing obligations. If we merely make a blanket charge that too much money has been spent I do not know that I could conscientiously support that view unless I had the information which, as I have indicated, we do not have. I hope that in the future we will make larger expenditures, providing that they are made for the welfare of the nation and to meet the needs of the public service. I do not believe the people will be averse to the expenditure of the present budget, provided they are assured that the expenditure is made in a proper way. That is all I desire to say at this time.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) has just spoken with regard to the advisability of adopting a different method of considering the estimates. In particular he has suggested that the estimates should be submitted, as I understand it, either to a special committee for the purpose of considering all the estimates of the departments, or by departments to standing committees of the house which have to do with the different subjects to which the estimates relate. May I say to my hon. friend that his suggestion is one which the government had under consideration at the opening of this session. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) will recall that at the beginning of the session I discussed with him the advisability of the different parties in the house adopting some more effective method of scrutinizing the supply requested by the government, some method which would enable members to hear what the officials of the departments had to say with respect to the several items included in the estimates. I entirely agree with my hon. friend that the system at present in force, under which a minister of the crown is necessarily dependent in the House of Commons on his deputy for much of the needed information with the deputy, also of necessity, often not wholly familiar with all the details of particular branches, is most unsatisfactory. Speaking for the government I would say that we would welcome a change in the present method, a change which would not only afford fuller opportunity for discussion but which would carry with it an obligation on the part of the heads of different branches of the public service to appear before a committee of the house and explain fully the reasons which have occasioned the recommendations which find their place in the estimates submitted to the house.

Having said this I would like to supplement my remarks further by saying that if we are not voted out of office as a result of this blanket amendment and if when another session comes around we still retain the confidence of the House of Commons, one of the first matters to which we will ask the house to give its attention and consideration will be the one mentioned by my hon. friend, namely that of arranging some method by which the estimates may to a greater or less extent be considered by a special committee or by the standing committees of the house.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): If this amendment comes to a vote we will be placed in one of those awkward situations which come about as a result of the party system of government. We have been placed in this position more than once before, and the house need not be surprised at the way any hon. member of this small group may vote in connection with this amendment. We are now asked to decide between the tremendous expenditures and some of the votes which are made for party purposes only. Not long ago an amendment was debated on this side of the house condemning the government for not implementing the Duncan report 100 per cent. That whole report is the result of a false fiscal system, and so long as special privilege is catered to in this country situations of that kind will develop in the future more rapidly than has been the case in the past.

To-day if we vote for the government we vote for millions and millions of utter waste this year in connection with the demolishing of splendid buildings in this city which were built for permanent use, without the construction of one highway in western Canada where the people cannot even go to market or get their mail for certain weeks in the year. Next year we must have some new method for consideration of our public expenditures.

SUPPLY—INDEMNITY OF MEMBERS

On the motion to go into committee of supply:

Mr. H. E. LAVIGUEUR (Quebec Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss the question of an increase in the indemnity of members of the House of Commons. It is almost one o'clock, and I wonder if, with the consent of the house you would call it one o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER: There does not seem to be unanimous consent, so the hon. member had better proceed.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: This question has been the subject of discussion, and petitions have been presented from time to time. I noticed in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen, a declaration made by the right hon. the leader of the opposition and I would like to read what the hon. gentleman is quoted as saying.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What is the hon. gentleman talking about?

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: About an increased indemnity for members of the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We cannot hear you at this end of the chamber.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I can speak in French if my hon. friend prefers it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not a question of French or English, it is a question of sound; we cannot hear a word.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I am sorry for my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, he is at the other end of the house and I am at this end.

This declaration as published in the Ottawa Citizen of yesterday morning may lead the people of this country to believe that a request has been brought before this house and refused. I will read the declaration:

The move for an increased indemnity for members of parliament and, incidentally, senators, has failed. On Wednesday night some Conservative members joined with Liberals and Progressives in interviewing the Prime Minister, a procedure which, so far as Conservatives was concerned, was not with the approval of the leader. Mr. Bennett has informed a delegation that he is against an increased indemnity or allowance as applied to this parliament, but, if passed before dissolution, and applicable to the next parliament after being pronounced upon at a general election, he would not have the same objection. Hon. J. A. Robb is also opposed.

According to this article the leader of the opposition has made a declaration in regard to the matter, and so has the Minister of Finance. A move has been organized by the different parties in the house and I have been told that more than ninety-five per cent of the members—

Mr. SPEAKER: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair. In accordance with the motion made by the Prime Minister this morning and agreed to, the house will meet at two o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at two o'clock.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at one o'clock, I was dealing with the question of increased indemnities for members of parliament, and drawing the attention of the house to an article published in yesterday morning's Ottawa Citizen, which in my opinion did not do justice to the two hon. gentlemen whose names it mentioned, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I think in justice to them, and also in justice to the large numbers of the members of this house who are in favour of an increase in the indemnity, which I consider is one of the most important questions and should be treated as an important measure by this house, I should say a few words.

I have no hesitation in stating that at least ninety or ninety-five per cent of the membership of this House of Commons are in favour of an increase in the indemnity. I am myself in favour of it, not only on my own behalf but on behalf of large numbers of hon. members. I am not exactly one of the oldest members of the house, but I come pretty near to be one of the oldest members, and I consider that in justice and fairness to the members of this house, and in the interests of the country at large, it would only be fair and right that the indemnity should be increased, and if the thing is to be done, I do not see why it should not be done this year as well as at any other time.

In 1920 I had the honour of speaking in this house when the question of an increased indemnity, proposed by the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden, came before us. The great majority of the members were in favour of that increase, which was concurred in by both political parties and by the house. At that time it was very clearly stated that the indemnity was not adequate remuneration for the sacrifices and expenses that had to be borne by the members who had to sit here in Ottawa for five or six and sometimes seven months in the year. The members of this House of Commons, representing the people, are supposed to make pecuniary sacrifices, and in some instances they can well afford to do so. We have in this house some of the wealthiest men in the country, who can well afford to give up their private business and devote their lives to the service of the country. But, on the other hand, we have representatives of the people in this house who belong to the farming class, men representative of labour, industrial representatives, and merchants, and for these classes it is well known that there is not much reward in politics. After a man has given years of service to his country, and his private business has been ruined, he is left at home, and sometimes his family has to suffer as well as himself for the sacrifices that he has made in political life. We have lost many valuable men who have had to leave the political arena and go into private business, or seek employment in the civil service or on the bench, simply because they could not afford to stay in politics. On both sides of the house at the present time there are many members who are looking for a judgeship or some other position for the reason that they cannot afford to remain in politics. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is in the best interests of this country that this question should be brought before the house, and that the house should express its opinion upon it. Everybody is cognizant of the fact that there has been a move on the part of hon. members for an increase in the indemnity. The matter has received great publicity in the press, and therefore I think it would be wise under all the circumstances to have the house express its opinion on the question. Much might be said on this question, but I shall not detain the house in view of the fact that a great majority of the members have signed petitions asking the prime minister to increase the indemnity—not only a great majority of the members on this side of the house but there were as many on the other side who signed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is not right.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: An official delegation from this side and an official delegation from that side of the house met the Prime Minister and laid before him their demand. So, Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to have the opinion of my fellow members. For myself, I am quite ready to take the responsibilty for what I have stated.

Mr. WHITE (London): Does my hon. friend say that an official delegation from this side of the house waited on the Prime Minister?

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Yes.

Mr. WHITE (London): I object to that statement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: So do I.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to take full responsibility for what I am now stating. In 1920 I was in favour of an increased indemnity; I spoke in favour of it and I voted for it. I am quite willing to take the same stand now and to explain to my people that when a man assumes the obligations of a member of parliament it is only reasonable that he should be reimbursed the expenses he has to incur during the six months or more in the year that he is absent from his family. In 1921 my opponents in the county of Quebec-Montmorency reproached me for having voted in 1920 for an increase in the indemnity. I frankly acknowledged to my people that I had done so, and I declared that I would do the same thing again, for I thought the increase was well merited, and I told them that if they wanted a cheaper man they were at liberty to select my opponent. They sent me back to this house with a majority of fifteen hundred—the largest majority that Quebec-Montmorency ever gave to any member. I think this measure should be fully discussed by the house. It is not a party question; both parties are committed to the increase. For my part I agree with my colleagues that we should proceed in the matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by Mr. Robb, seconded by Mr. Rinfret, that I do now leave the chair.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Health—the administration of the acts respecting food and drugs, honey, maple products, opium and narcotic drugs and proprietary or patent medicines, $130,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: When this vote was under consideration on a former occasion I asked the minister some questions. Probably he can now give me the answers.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health): When we were on this item the other night my hon. friend complained about the administration of the narcotic division of the department. At that time I indicated to the house the activities of the division during the past year. I advised that there had been 459 convictions of males and 31 convictions of females, and that we had succeeded in Montreal and also in Vancouver—two of the largest centres of the narcotic drug traffic—in securing important convictions. We have been similarly successful in Winnipeg. I have reason to believe that the division has done excellent work in this respect and also in checking the interprovincial trade in narcotics. I think my hon. friend was rather severe in his criticism. The figures I have mentioned speak for themselves, and we also have evidence from abroad that the work being done by this branch is considered effective in other countries. In confirmation of this I wish to read an extract from a letter written to me by Sir Malcolm Delevingne of the British Home office. He says:

The effective action which your department has succeeded in taking and the information which you have been able to communicate are of first rate importance for the campaign against the illicit drug traffic. The minister will have pleasure in calling special attention at the opening meeting of the advisory committee to the important work which Canada has done in this connection. He can honestly say that there are few countries indeed which have done so much, and he conveys his warm congratulations.

Sir Malcolm Delevingne was speaking for the Minister of Health of Great Britain. We know that the officers of our division through their activities have succeeded in effectually curbing the international traffic in narcotics.

Mr. McGIBBON: The other evening I asked the minister to tell me the number of commitments, the charges on which those commitments were secured, and the occupations of those committed to gaol.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Outside of those who were engaged in the practice of medicine and pharmacy, the persons convicted appear to have no other occupation but that of trafficking in narcotic drugs.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not know whether the minister caught my question. I asked him how many convictions there had been, for instance, for illegally selling narcotic drugs, and the occupations of those so convicted.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have just informed my hon. friend that we have secured 459 convictions. If he would like the figures by provinces I can give them. Besides the 459 convictions of males there were 31 convictions of females. As I have said, outside of those engaged in the practice of medicine and pharmacy, we think the principal business of those convicted is this illicit traffic.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have a statement from the Bureau of Statistics under the head "Selling narcotic drugs," and I see 36 males and 5 females, making a total of 41, were convicted. Then there is another list of sentences with and without the option of fine—21 and 20. I do not know how the figures correspond with the minister's.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know where my hon. friend secured his information. If it is information supplied by the department I have no doubt it is correct and I cannot understand why my hon. friend should doubt it. The information given me by the department shows the total number of convictions male and female, also sentences; and I see that 327 of those convicted had the option of a fine, 159 were without that option, and there were 4 cases deferred. I have given the nationality of the persons convicted.

Mr. McGIBBON: Probably the confusion arises in this way: the minister has grouped them all. For instance, there are convictions simply for the frequenting of opium resorts. My question does not refer to that. There are something over 300 there. I am speaking about those convicted of illegally selling narcotics and not of frequenting say, Chinese dens or places of that sort.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is different. I was dealing with those who had been engaged in the traffic and were convicted of infractions of the narcotic act. The figures I have given are correct. As for the conviction of those engaged directly in selling, so far as the federal government is concerned we have had 77 convictions under the act.

Mr. McGIBBON: For what length of time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The year ended last March.

Mr. McGIBBON: How many of those were medical men whose conviction was due to ignorance of the law and not to the fact that they were engaged in the traffic? For example, giving a man half a dozen tablets to carry away with him, a physician is convicted: his conviction is due to ignorance of the law and not to the fact that he is participating in the traffic.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): During the year ended March 31 there were seven physicians, two veterinary surgeons and three druggists committed, not as my hon. friend says for giving two or three tablets—

Mr. McGIBBON: Some were.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Our experience has been this—and my hon. friend will be so advised: it is not the desire of the department to persecute physicians, but we do get information from time to time that certain physicians are engaged in this traffic for profit, and once that information comes to the department it is our duty to make an investigation. We make our own inquiries and if we think there is ground for the complaint—and complaints come from many sources—then the mounted police and the chief of the Dominion police force are asked to make an investigation. After they have made their investigation, if the case is one that should be proceeded with it is proceeded with. That has been done and will continue to be done. I do not think we have any apologies to make in regard to the activities of the Dominion officials or of the mounted police in the carrying out of this work. There are many difficulties. People have complained regarding the class of operators we have employed. Now the ordinary healthy man cannot walk into a physician's office and get a tube of morphine or a tube of heroin, but the addict will go into the office of the physician who is trafficking for profit and obtain one, two or three tubes. It has been the custom, or was the custom of the police to employ men who were addicts. I had many complaints made and we found one case where the addict when he was out of employment went to one office after another and tried to build up a case to report to the department. That man is not employed by the department to-day; he is serving two years in the penitentiary.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have no brief for any doctor trafficking in drugs and I want the minister to understand that perfectly. His department are justified in going to any extent at all if this condition exists. But I have in my hand evidence that rather contradicts the minister's statement. In fact, there are two doctors in my own constituency who, I am quite certain, were never in the drug traffic at all, but who were convicted and fined. They were threatened to have their license cancelled. But I am not pressing that point for the moment. The minister says that he is using drug fiends to get these people.

An hon. MEMBER: He said "addicts".

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are not at the moment, but I would not say that we would not.

Mr. McGIBBON: Has the minister in the past, or has his department or the mounted police, used such men?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, the mounted police have used them but they have not supplied them with drugs and have not used them when they were taking drugs. At least, that is the information supplied us. I have spoken of one individual whom they had employed and when we found that he was operating with a view to being in continuous employment, we advised the police that we would not accept information from that individual. And as I say, he has been convicted and is now serving two years in the penitentiary.

Mr. McGIBBON: I want to ask further—and this is the gravamen of my question: Were the mounted police allowed to give morphine to these addicts?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We had this matter under consideration with the commissioner of police a year or more ago and he advised that the department had never employed an individual whom we know to be actually using narcotics at the time, and should it be subsequently learned that such an agent is addicted to narcotics every effort is made to restrict the use until the case is completed, when he is immediately let go.

Mr. McGIBBON: Did the minister ever read the evidence given at a trial in Timmins of a doctor there? The name of the mounted policeman is Fraser.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That case came up a year or two ago.

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, I went into the files at that time. The operator then used by the police is the individual I speak of. He is not in the employ of the department or of the police at the present time.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is a fact, then, that the department on occasions have allowed mounted policemen to take human beings and use them as spies to to speak—dose them up with morphine? It seems to me—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have the sworn evidence that they did.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not care where you got your evidence; it is not true

Mr. McGIBBON: It came out in the court.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not care where you get your evidence; it is not true.

Mr. McGIBBON: It came out in court.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have the statement of the commissioner in which he absolutely denies anything of the sort. My hon. friend knows that we are dealing with an abnormal traffic, and sometimes we are compelled to use extraordinary means. As far as the department is concerned, if we find people engaged in this traffic we try to secure convictions.

Mr. McGIBBON: I want the minister to get my point correctly. I say it is a disgrace to this country and an insult to the intelligence of the people that human beings should be victimized in this way and have morphine dosed into them by the mounted police.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is making a statement in which there is no truth; he has not the evidence to support it.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have a copy of the sworn evidence given at this trial in Timmins.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That does not mean anything; the mounted police say that is not so.

Mr. McGIBBON: But this is the evidence given under oath at the trial of the doctor who was convicted. I hold no brief for the doctor; the charge I am making against the Department of Health is that they allowed human beings to be dosed up with morphia by the mounted police.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I claim that is not true. My hon. friend says he has the evidence. Who gave the evidence? Was it the addict?

Mr. McGIBBON: He was one of the witnesses.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is an experienced practitioner and he knows that no one will believe the word of an addict. I am surprised that he should bring such evidence here.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am trying to get the minister to understand that this evidence was given at the trial and was confirmed by a mounted policeman. Does my hon. friend place the policeman in the same class? On the sworn evidence of these two men the doctor was convicted, and it was admitted by the policeman that he administered morphine to the addict.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The mounted police did not advise the court of that fact. As I have explained, we advise the police to avoid the use of these addicts as informers if possible, and we are trying to get on without them. I would not say, however, that it would be possible to proceed without them in some cases, because the ordinary healthy man cannot go into the office of an ordinary doctor and get away with it. The report I have here shows that since April 1, 1927, only one agent has been employed in connection with cases against members of the medical profession, and particular pains were taken to insure that at the time of his employment he was not an addict. He worked for us for several months, and was periodically examined by a physician to insure that he was in good physical condition, and free from narcotic addiction. At the conclusion of a number of cases in the Toronto district, but before they came to trial, this agent fell from grace. The moment it became known to this department he was immediately placed in hospital, and remained there until cured of his addiction. Upon his leaving hospital, orders were issued that under no circumstances was he to be in future employed in cases against professional men to avoid even the possibility of his being addicted while engaged in that class of work. I think we have taken fair measures in this regard, and I am not impressed by the evidence given by this addict at Timmins.

Mr. McGIBBON: But my dear man, the mounted police admitted it.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I was rather surprised to hear the minister say he would not take the evidence of drug addicts in these cases. I would refer him to a question which I placed on the order paper in February, in reply to which he indicated that none of these addicts were being used.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not now.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): And not at that time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not for the last year.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): At the time this question was answered the minister said none of these addicts were used, yet he had in his possession the evidence taken in a case where an addict was used. I refer to a case in my own riding where a doctor was convicted on the evidence of a drug addict, and if the minister will look through the evidence which he has in his department he will find that it includes the evidence of an addict. This was the case of a young man who had been in practice less than three years. This drug addict came to him and told his story, and we all know what kind of story a drug addict can tell; it would bring tears to the eyes of a crocodile. This young doctor, having no morphine in his office, in order to relieve the sufferings of the addict went to the drug store across the street and bought some. The addict came back in a few days, presented the same argument and got a little more morphine, and on his third visit the mounted police came and arrested the doctor, who was convicted and sentenced to three months in prison. He was a young man with practically no knowledge of the law, but he was convicted on the evidence of this drug addict.

In my question I asked:

How many physicians were convicted for violation of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, in each province during the year 1927?

The answer was:

Quebec, 4; Ontario, 10; Alberta, 1.

My question then went on:

How many physicians were convicted through the use of drug addicts as spotters?

The answer to that question was "none". Yet at that time the minister had in his own office the evidence which was given at that trial. I am not blaming the minister; I think something should be done to prevent people from selling these drugs, but I do not believe it was the intention of the act that young medical men throughout the Dominion should be tempted to violate the law by men who present very specious arguments as to why they should have a little morphine or cocaine.

This young man to whom I have referred has been convicted and has served his sentence; he is now prevented from practising medicine, and the federal department—I am not saying the minister himself—is making an effort to have his license cancelled so that he cannot practice in the province of Ontario. I think that is a species of persecution, and the minister should look into the matter very carefully, because I do not think he himself is responsible for the action which has been taken. This is the first time this young man has been convicted of anything, and I think he should be allowed a second chance. This act was not particularly passed to catch medical men; its purpose was rather to get the regular traffickers in narcotic drugs, and I think the department should turn their efforts in that direction instead of tempting medical men throughout the Dominion to violate the act.

It is not a crime for a medical man, after properly examining a drug addict, to give him some medicine to relieve his suffering, and there are very good reasons why a certain latitude should be allowed the average doctor. Only a few years ago I had quite an experience in that regard; I refused the drug to a young woman, with the consequence that she ended her life in the river. These people do suffer very acutely; I have seen them on more than one occasion, and their suffering is extreme. Something should be done for them; they are human beings. As the minister says, you cannot believe their evidence under oath, and why convict medical men on the evidence of this kind of people? Of course the police were present in this case; they sent the man there with a marked bill which they could trace in order to see if the doctor received it; the third time the addict visited the doctor the police came in, arrested the physician and found the money in his possession. That was evidence enough, of course, that he had received it from this man, but the evidence as to the amount of the drugs which changed hands depended entirely on the evidence of the drug addict himself. This drug addict has since skipped the country. He had served a term in prison in the United States and has gone back there and cannot be found at the present time; he left the department's service on his own account. I should like to know just how that corresponds with the return made by the minister or his department, which says that no drug addicts are being used by the department to convict medical men throughout the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. HOWDEN: As a medical man and a member of this house I feel that I should protest against the use of stool pigeons or decoys against medical men. It is a medical man's business to deal with suffering and sickness. Every day of his life he comes in contact with human emotions, and the emotion displayed by a drug addict suffering from the want of drugs is incomparable to anything I know of. Drug addicts have come to my office from time to time and have been relieved, but I never sold a tube of morphine or took payment for any injection in my life, and I never will. But I would hate to think that a man might come to my office at any time suffering from the pangs of the drug habit, and if I undertook to give him some relief I would be subjecting myself to the penalities of the law.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): You would not if you did it yourself.

Mr. HOWDEN: I did not know that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If you give it for self-administration, then you might be liable.

Mr. HOWDEN: I have never given it for self-administration. It seems to me that it is very unfair to the medical practice, because, taking them as a class, the medical men are a pretty fair bunch of citizens so far as Canada is concerned. They try to keep the law. It is true there are exceptions, but it does not seem fair to have a stool pigeon sent into a doctor's office in order to secure a conviction against him of selling drugs.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is not done, and a doctor is not investigated unless there is very good evidence that he is trafficking in drugs. As I explained to the committee this work is done by the mounted police, and they use the agencies they think necessary. Prosecutions are not started against men who are carrying on their practice in the way my hon. friend suggests. A doctor can administer to the addict the required dosage to relieve the symptons, but the doctor may not sell drugs to that addict for self-administration. The medical profession should know that, because I am advised they have been circularized more than once. I think the number of convictions would indicate that the profession are not engaged in this traffic. My hon. friend has referred to a particular case. We were advised by the father of a young boy in Toronto that he was associating with a person whom he thought was an addict, and this addict was getting his supply from a doctor at a certain point. We investigated and found that the addict was going from day to day and getting his supply. The police took up the case and they sent their investigator in and he was able to buy cocaine at one dollar per grain, and the evidence was secured. The unfortunate young man was convicted and I was appealed to. As regards his right to practice medicine, that rests entirely with the Ontario council of medicine. We report to the council any convictions that are made, and it is up to the provincial council to deal with their members as they see fit.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): In connection with this particular case, I should like to ask the minister if he thinks it is the duty of the department to make an effort to get this license cancelled by the council?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have made no effort.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): It is my understanding that an effort has been made and is being made now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I should like the minister to look into that feature of the case.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I think the medical council is able to look after a case of that kind without any interference from the department at Ottawa. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The only thing we did was to notify them of the conviction. We do this with all the provincial councils and then it is for them to proceed as they see fit.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I agree that the minister has a perfect right to inform the council of Ontario or of any other province, but in this particular case I understand that a special effort is being made to have the license cancelled.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I should be very much surprised to find that to be true. We have no desire to do anything of that kind, and I will have that checked up.

Mr. McGIBBON: I want the minister to understand distinctly that I am not criticizing any attempt he may make to convict those who are in this business. But the point I am raising is this: the mounted police were allowed to administer drugs to human beings. I will read the evidence given at the trial at Timmins. The following is the cross examination of the constable:

Q. At what time would you give him shots?

This refers to the drug addict.

A. I arranged my shots about four times a day; one in the morning; one in the evening and before going to bed—all depending on circumstances.

An hon. MEMBER: Who was the witness?

Mr. McGIBBON: The witness was a mounted policeman.

Mr. HOWDEN: Is a mounted policeman a medical man?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. McGIBBON: Later on the witness makes this statement:

I have had him knocked out after coming out of a doctor's office.

That is the evidence of a mounted policeman admitting that he was administering drugs.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This case happened two years ago, and I would suggest to my hon. friend and the committee that instructions were issued to the commissioner that we did not wish to employ people under those conditions, and the practice has ceased.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am glad to know that.

Item agreed to.

Soldiers' Civil Reestablishment—unemployment relief, $250,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister be good enough to give us just a few words of explanation as to how this appropriation is operated? I am bound to say that on one or two occasions matters of unemployment in connection with returned soldiers were brought to my attention and I found it impossible to get any relief from the fund. It would be very much appreciated by those who may be compelled in the future to make demands upon the fund if the minister would be good enough to give in colloquial terms an explanation that the public would understand.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): The policy of the department in regard to issuing relief is to assist necessitous cases who are unemployed and who are pensioned by the Board of Pension Commissioners for disabilities incurred while serving with the Canadian expeditionary force in the great war.

Mr. BENNETT: It is given only to pensioners?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As a matter of fact persons who are not pensioners do in certain cases receive relief, but generally it is pensioners. Second, it is to assist those who have received a final payment by agreement from the Board of Pension Commissioners as above for disability rated between five and fourteen per cent. That is, some men who have commuted their pensions are still considered pensioners. Third, it is to assist former members of His Majesty's imperial forces and former members of His Majesty's allied forces who have been pensioned as above and who are now resident in Canada, provided, however, that disabled members of His Majesty's imperial or allied forces who arrived in Canada subsequently to the first December, 1924, are not considered eligible for this assistance. It was found that in 1924 many pensioners were coming to Canada and were asking for relief. An order was passed debarring pensioners coming from other countries after that date.

This assistance is provided mostly during the winter months and after investigation which indicates that distress would be occasioned if such help were not forthcoming. The rate of relief is as follows:

Single men	$30
Man and wife	45
Man and wife and one child	57
Man and wife and two or more children	67

The relief is given in the form of orders for groceries, fuel, rent, and not in cash.

Mr. MANION: By whom?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): By an officer of the department.

Mr. GUTHRIE: To whom is application made for such relief?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would be made directly to the officer in the unit. Then the investigation is made. If the conditions are as stated, the man would come in and receive relief.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the minister mean the general officer commanding the unit?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): An officer under the officer commanding the unit.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MANION: Under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister would indicate what, for instance, a man in Calgary who is disabled and who is absolutely without employment, would have to do to claim the benefit of this fund?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): He would make application through the unit medical officer who would advise his officer to investigate the circumstances, and if the man came within the provisions and required relief, it would be granted on the basis that I have stated.

Mr. BENNETT: The statement made by the minister at once indicates why there has been so much complaint. For instance, a man is in desperate circumstances and he makes this complaint. Two or three weeks after he may receive $30. In the meantime he may have suffered the pangs of starvation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There may some delay, but generally speaking I am advised that our people to-day know pretty nearly the families who will come in the winter asking for this relief and they are making suggestions how we can do something to prevent these people from coming each year. The families are pretty well known, I am told, in the various units, and it has been suggested that we should endeavour to do something more to give them some kind of employment and get them away from this idea. We are going to try to do something this year in that regard.

Mr. BENNETT: How much was expended last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About $388,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Then we over-expended the vote of last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The main vote last year was $250,000; we had a supplementary vote of $200,000, and we spent $388,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the minister the figures to indicate just where those sums were disbursed? This is a matter that became of some interest recently.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will give the amounts by units.

Unit	District	Amount
"C"	Eastern Ontario	$ 45,000

I am giving the figures in round numbers. That is the Ottawa unit.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is "C" unit only in Ottawa?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Ottawa and eastern Ontario. That would take in Kingston and that area.

"D"	Western Ontario..	$171,000

That would take in Toronto.

"A"	Quebec..	$ 54,000
"B"	Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island..	7,000
"G"	Manitoba..	47,000
"H"	Saskatchewan..	5,000
"I"	Alberta..	9,000
"J"	British Columbia..	43,000
"K"	New Brunswick..	2,767

Item agreed to.

Operating expense and working capital, $250,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is this for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is for administration service, general and medical; travelling expenses of the staff; hospital and Red Cross shops; telephone, telegraph charges and postage; stationery; Ottawa insurance; mechanical transport; advertising; legal costs; other operating costs and contingencies.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there any revenue in the department arising out of the use of this working capital?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have a revenue from the Vetcraft operations. That comes under another item. That would be the only source of revenue.

Mr. BENNETT: Working capital has in business a well-defined meaning, but I cannot quite understand what is meant by it in this appropriation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It refers really to the contingencies of the department; telephone, telegraph charges, postage, light, heat, power and so on, making a total last year of $171,000.

Item agreed to.

Employers' liability compensation, $100,000.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have a number of returned men who have certain disabilities. In the case of a twenty-five per cent disability man, for instance, we will undertake to pay the compensation board.

Mr. MANION: The full amount?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, and in that way the employer will give consideration to that case which he otherwise probably would not give.

Mr. MANION: And in some cases you pay part?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mounted police, Prince Albert volunteers and police scouts on account of the rebellion of 1885, $970.90.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to ask the Minister of Justice a question under this item. I think perhaps he appreciates the difficulty that has been urged very strongly upon me by the few remaining members of the old mounted police who for a time were receiving pensions on a basis of pay and allowances which have since been very largely increased. The same applies with respect to those who were pensioned within a particular period, for within a year after that, certain living allowances were discontinued and an increase was made equal to the then pay and allowances, and the pension of these few being based only upon the salary, and not upon the living allowance, has worked a bit of a hardship upon those who did not receive this additional pay. I mentioned this matter to the minister last year, and I think he had it under consideration. Possibly he could indicate whether there is any likelihood of anything being done, because some of these men are certainly very deserving.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I know they are, but the line had to be drawn somewhere, and that was the trouble. I think we have been dealing rather generously with the old mounted police. However, I shall be pleased to look into the matter again and see if it is possible to do anything, with the support of the house.

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—salaries, $14,920.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): With respect to the inspection of immigrants coming to this country from Great Britain, would the minister be good enough to give the committee a detailed statement with respect to the regulations under which the medical officers conduct their examinations? We have heard rumours as to certain humiliating circumstances, and I should like to have a short statement from the minister on the matter.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Instructions are issued to the medical officers to ascertain whether the applicants who come before them will meet the provisions as set out in the Immigration Act; in other words, they try to discover whether the applicants are suffering from conditions that would prevent their entering this country. That is done in the ordinary way. My hon. friend spoke to me yesterday in regard to this matter, in connection with a complaint that he had received from one of his constituents in regard to the exposure of a member of the family who had gone up for examination. I do not know why we should worry so much. These men are trained medical men; they are all graduates and have had experience, and I think we are all sufficiently familiar to-day with the work of the profession and the facilities that are used by the profession, to ascertain the conditions that exist in the individual who comes before them. If a physical examination is necessary, then the one to judge as to the extent of that examination is the examining officer. If an individual walks into his office with a good firm step, he can almost be sure that that individual has not flat feet or bunions or other deformity, and he would not worry about that; but if the individual hobbled in, the examining officer would probably want him to expose his extremities to see what defects were there. In the examination there should be, I think, an examination of the vital organs, such as the heart and lungs. That means a certain exposure of the chest if it is done properly. If the examining officer finds, as he proceeds that there is reason to believe that there is some deformity or unusual condition of the spine, he should examine the spine. If he thinks there is some condition involving the gall bladder or liver, that should be examined. I think we shall have to leave this matter entirely to the examining officer, and our only concern is to see that the examination takes place under proper conditions. If a female immigrant is going before the medical examining officer, and there is not a female medical officer, there should be a female attendant, and I think that is the practice. I do not think we should be very sensitive in regard to these matters, because in our everyday life we go to our own physician, and there is no question in regard to giving him the opportunity to make the proper examination.

Mr. MANION: They know him.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is true. I think my hon. friend will agree with me—he has had wide experience—that if we are to carry out this work properly it must be left to the judgment of the officer to decide as to the extent of the examination.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. MANION: Yes; but I think the minister touched one point that should not be left to the officer's discretion; there should be a female attendant.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. I understand that is the practice.

Mr. MANION: I notice in the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment $4,500 appears for the deputy minister for nine months, and in the Department of Health $8,000 appears also for the deputy minister. I thought Dr. Amyot was deputy minister of both.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes; but these estimates were prepared some months in advance of our reorganization.

Mr. MANION: This $4,500 is not needed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, in respect to the retiring deputy minister, Mr. Parkinson. When he retired he was given leave of absence. It is taken care of in this estimate.

Mr. MANION: One year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Do I understand that the examination applies only to people coming out from Great Britain as immigrants to this country?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): People from Great Britain, no matter of what class, can be examined. We are trying to examine those who come here with the idea of settling permanently.

Mr. SPENCER: I take it that the examination takes place whether the immigrants pay their own fares or come out under the assisted passage scheme.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We examine all who come here with the expectation of settling. The visitor or tourist is subject to examination only when he disembarks.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The question I asked yesterday is not to be slighted. I do not think it is necessary to carry it further, but I want the committee to understand that the explanation given by the minister of the case I brought to his attention has caused a good deal of turmoil and suspicion. The minister has given his word that he will inquire into the case. I hope he will give me full particulars. In certain instances I think the authority is being exceeded. I am fully convinced of that or I would not have brought the matter forward.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am very glad to have had the discussion. It will be forwarded to our men in the field. There is no difference of opinion as to how the examinations should be carried on.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I desire to ask the minister if there is no way of securing some reasonable retiring allowance for a former member of the staff of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, Dr. W. A. Groves. I have had correspondence with the department in connection with the case, but so far I have not been able to secure results. Dr. Groves complains that he has not been treated on retirement as have other officials of the department. From the letters he has sent to me and from conversations I have had with him I think he has a good claim for some compensation—I do not know how much. Will the minister explain why Dr. Groves is not placed on the same plane as other medical officers who have been retired and paid a retiring allowance?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have had correspondence with Dr. Groves, and I have had my officials go into the case. I am advised that he was a part-time official, and that on his retirement he was given two months' leave. I think he contributed—

Mr. GUTHRIE: He had been a contributor to a fund.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): —under a plan which he thought was going to give him superannuation. The Finance department never accepted the money contributed under those conditions. Last year I advised that these moneys be returned to the officials who had contributed them, as they could not come under the provisions of the Superannuation Act.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was not Dr. Groves entitled to much more than two months' leave of absence even under the existing scheme?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I am advised that he received what had been customary in the practice of the department. I have had correspondence with the doctor and have so advised him.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Salaries, contingencies, including the Solicitor General's office, $302,690.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I desire to bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice the criminal statistics of Canada. We have been led to believe that our penal institutions are being flooded with foreigners, but in looking over the statistics I find that suggestion is absolutely unfounded. Taking the penitentiaries report, I notice these percentages. From 1917 to 1926 the percentage of Canadian-born in our penitentiaries was 63.4; in 1926, 66.6. The percentage of those from Great Britain and other British possessions occupying our penitentiaries was, from 1917 to 1926, 14 per cent; in 1926, 14.2 per cent; and of those from the United States, for the same periods, the percentages are 6.4 and 5.1 respectively. Taking the foreign-born in our penitentiaries, from 1917 to 1926, the percentage was 16.2; in 1926 14.1. I am not going to take up the percentages according to proportion of population, but I desire to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that the only percentage increase in the population of our penitentiaries occurs in our Canadian-born. As to education, we have for years been led to believe that the illiterate form the main percentage of our penitentiary inmates, but this is not borne out by the figures. Taking the illiterate criminals, in 1924 the percentage was 2.7, in 1925, 3.1 and in 1926, 2.8. Of the next class, the elementary, that is, those educated up to matriculation, the percentage was 81.7 in 1924, 78.4 in 1925 and 75 in 1926. Coming to the superior educated, that is, those who reached a higher stage, the percentage was only 1.2 in 1924, 1.2 in 1925 and .9 in 1926. Let me point out this: the illiterate were not increasing in percentage; the superior educated were not increasing but decreasing. Rather, the increases came from those who had gone through our public schools up to the threshold of higher education.

Then we come to juvenile delinquency. In 1925 the total was 8,739. Of these, 8,064 were boys and 675 girls. In 1926 the number was 8,846. Of these the boys numbered 8,245 and the girls 601. The total increase in the juvenile delinquents is 107; while there was a gross increase in boys of 181 there was a decrease in girls of 74.

Now to summarize. So far as the penitentiaries are concerned, I have a few points which I wish to direct to the attention of the minister. I will not touch the jails and asylums because the same considerations will apply to any increase there. First, the increase is coming from our own Canadian born; secondly, the increase is coming from the class who have received elementary education; thirdly, our juvenile delinquents are increasing. I think the time has come when the Justice department, in conjunction with our provinces, should take into consideration this serious situation. It is very grave when you consider that the boys going through our schools —those boys who have not gone on to higher education—are increasing in delinquency, and the further fact that the boys are increasing in delinquency while the number of girls is decreasing. In my opinion the time has come, if we are to meet this situation at all, when the Justice department should enter upon some investigation of the cause for such a state of affairs. It is terrible when you think of the increase in delinquency amongst our boys. There must be some cause for it, and the Department of Justice and the departments of the attorneys general in the provinces should now take the matter up.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What suggestion has my hon. friend to offer with regard to the method?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In the first place I would advise the minister that the time has come when he should put his foot down upon the present practice of sending boys to the penitentiary. There is no use in saying that it is not going on; it is going on and the boys are there. There are to-day in the penitentiaries boys of fifteen, sixteen and seventeen. I know the minister will tell me that they are sent there by the police magistrates, and that this is a matter over which he has no control. These boys are placed side by side with life inmates of the penitentiary. That is something that the minister can control—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Quite so.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): —if he cannot control their admission. Then there is another situation. In Ontario we owe a great deal of the improvement in the province to the late Hon. W. J. Hanna. He provided an institution to which these boys might be sent. It worked well for a while but it is not working out at the present time. There is a little of the devil in these boys; there is no question about that. As soon as they escape from the institution they are taken and sent to the penitentiary. Ninety boys out of that institution, because they escaped, have been sent to the penitentiary.

There are two things which I want to impress upon the minister. First, the minister should have his officials, or the official in every institution, take up this matter with the younger people and find out just what was the beginning of their career. That he can do in the asylums and a few other places. He can then cooperate with the provinces, and that is something that can be done in the prisons, jails and so forth. We ought to be able in that way, far better than by taking the matter up through clubs and other institutions, to ascertain the cause in every case. We can thereby discover whether it is due to the shows or to books, literature that has influenced them, or anything else. We should be able to find out in the majority of cases what started the boy in his course of crime. The second point is this: the time has come when there should be a more modern treatment of boy offenders than there is to-day. I do not agree that the Justice department or the attorney general's department in any province should ever let out of their hands the treatment of a boy after he has been delinquent. That is done now. There are private persons running schools and so forth, and I will mention one circumstance which will show how ridiculous the treament is. Two boys in my city were convicted. One never had a crime recorded against him and the other was a chronic offender. The police magistrate and the chief of police did not want them back in the city. These two boys were sent up; the one who was thoroughly under the influence of the chronic offender had never committed a crime. How did they treat these two boys? The boy who had never committed a crime was sent up there on the understanding that if he served a few months he would be sent home, but when he got to this school the Department of Justice and the department of the attorney general took the ground that they could not interfere because this was a privately run institution for the treatment of boys. They insisted that this boy who had never before been in trouble should be retained in that institution the same length of time as the chronic offender. Finally they are sent home and if that boy ever had a chance he did not have it then. He was thoroughly under the influence of the chronic offender.

This is a serious situation and in my opinion the Department of Justice and the departments of the attorneys general should cooperate with a view to solving the problem. If there is a cause it should be removed. I think I have demonstrated to-day that the foreign born element is not flooding our penitentiaries at least: the percentage there according to population is .02 in the case of the Canadian born and .04 in the case of the foreign born. So that there is no flooding on the part of the foreign born. In the second place the increase in delinquency is coming from our own Canadian born. Now we ought to be able to handle the situation and find a solution for it, and I suggest that the Minister of Justice take the matter into his serious consideration. Let him cooperate with the provinces and devise a more modern treatment of the difficulty.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): My hon. friend from Kingston has certainly called the attention of the committee to an important and serious condition and I may assure him that anything I can possibly do to decrease the number of offences among young people, or at least to check increases in crime, I shall be only too glad to do. Of course, as he says himself, these young people come under our department only after they have been convicted. We are not in contact with them in any way prior to their having been sentenced by the courts. However, I am quite willing to discuss this matter with the attorneys general of the various provinces and to cooperate with them to effect any reform which would remedy this condition of things.

I am glad my hon. friend has directed attention to the untruth of the statement so often made that the large proportion of inmates in the penitentiaries are foreign born. I think we may modestly confess that in this country we are breeding our own criminals, and we should not charge other countries with sending them here.

I am strongly in sympathy with my hon. friend in connection with the reform he suggests having to do with young offenders, and I have already stated in this house that I do not think it fair to put young people sixteen, seventeen or eighteen years of age in continuous contact with hard-boiled criminals. They are not given a chance to reform, and I thank my hon. friend for having spoken on this matter to-day. When the estimates are being prepared next year this will help me to convince my colleagues that the money will be well spent to provide for the construction of special institutions for young offenders. We should segregate those young people and give them a chance to reform. I do not know whether one institution would be sufficient; personally I think there should be two of them, one for eastern Canada and one for western Canada. This will mean quite an expenditure of money, but I think we owe it to our young people that this money should be spent. So far as I am concerned I can assure my hon. friend that I am in sympathy with his suggestion and I will try to convince the government and parliament next year that money should be provided for this purpose.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sure we have all listened with interest to the remarks of the Minister of Justice, but some of us have listened to somewhat similar statements made year after year; we are told something is going to be done, yet years pass by and there is very little change indeed.

I hold in my hand the annual report of the superintendent of penitentiaries. For some years he has been asking the Minister of Justice to make certain changes; the Minister of Justice has assured us that he will try to persuade the government to make these changes and parliament to endorse the necessary expenditures, but I am quite sure that parliament is more than ready to make these changes now. I do not see why it should be such a tremendous task to persuade the government to carry out the recommendations of their own officials, especially when they are so reasonable and when they have been adopted in other places. Even on this busy day—and I do not think these things should be left to the last moment—I venture to take a few minutes to put on record these recommendations made by the superintendent. First he recommends the segregation and classification of young inmates; again he recommends the opening of a mental disease hospital. These reforms have been urged again and again by different societies throughout the country, and I do not see why they should be delayed for so long. The report also recommends the segregation of habitual criminals. I think that has been agitated for the past ten years, and I wonder how soon the government will take action?

Then it is recommended that more work be furnished to the inmates. Only last year the director of industry held a little exhibition in this very building in an attempt to persuade the members of this house to take some action which would induce the government to provide more work for the criminals. It is an astonishing thing that these officials who are close to the prisoners and who see their needs have to come almost on their knees to the higher officials begging that something be done, while the minister comes and tells us in his turn that he is going to try to persuade the government to do something. Perhaps I am putting it rather strongly, but I should like to see action taken, as indeed the government have indicated that action will be taken. Unfortunately such assurances have been given in the past, but year after year we have to face this unsatisfactory state of affairs.

If we could not supply work to the individuals inside these various institutions; then there are roads to be built and ther-is land clearing work to be done. I was through one of our penal institutions in western Canada last year and saw the need for work of this kind. I wonder why we could not employ some of these men to build some of the roads which are so much needed; I am sure they would be much better off out in the open air under proper supervision than they would be cooped up in their cells. You may say that is not sufficient punishment, but I think it is helpful treatment if they are under proper supervision and are required to work for the state instead of working for their own personal advantage.

Then there is the further question of the payment of prisoners for their work. Some years ago the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) after working for two years, suceeded in having a resolution passed by this house approving of the payment of prisoners. I had rather imagined that a resolution passed by this house after full discussion was almost equivalent to legislation, and certainly that it formed a mandate for the government upon which they might be expected to act. That resolution was adopted two or three years ago, yet prisoners are not being paid any worth-while sum, and their families are still being supported by the municipalities in which they live. Very often the families are punished more than the prisoners themselves.

I do not want to read the whole list of recommendations; I think we are all convinced of the need for these changes, and I am sure the country would welcome the adoption of these recommendations.

Supreme Court of Canada

Contingencies and disbursements, including books, magazines, etc., for judges, not exceeding $300, $7,500.

Law books and books of reference for library, and binding of same, $10,000.

Printing, binding and distributing supreme court reports, $7,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I had hoped that real economy would be practised in the expenditure of some money with respect to the library of the Supreme court, because every time I look at it I fear that we will lose it by fire. This library is worth at least $450,000, and in some particulars it could not be replaced at all. I would be derelict to my duty as a member of the profession which is so well served by the books in that library if I did not again publicly direct the attention of the government to this condition. That is economy, to prevent destruction which certainly threatens with respect to that property.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will be pleased to submit these remarks to my friend the Minister of Public Works. I have already stated the same thing to him in that respect.

Item agreed to.

Penitentiaries, $1,811,072.

Mr. GARDINER: I would remind the minister of the resolution passed by this house some time ago recommending the provision of work and the payment for work to prisoners in our penitentiaries. I should like to ask the minister what action he is going to take in this regard.

Mr. LAPOINTE: A resolution was passed in 1926, and my hon. friend must remember that I was largely instrumental in having the house accept that resolution. I am willing to do what is possible towards employment in the penitentiaries. The quantity of work produced is increasing in value every year. For instance, the report of the superintendent shows that last year the revenue amounted to $183,004.02, which is three times the revenue of a few years ago. But something more should be done. Of course, organized labour in Canada would object to articles made in the penitentiary being sold on the open market. The arrangement which is accepted now by organized labour, and which seems to be a fair one, is to have the penitentiaries produce the articles used by the various departments of the government. With this I am very much in sympathy. I intend to visit all the penitentiaries this year if possible, and I will give this question the necessary attention in order to arrive at a possible solution. There are more difficulties in the way than appear on the surface, but it is a noble aim. There is nothing more detrimental to the morale in the penitentiaries than idleness; there must be work provided at all times. On the other hand, it must be productive work. Crushing stone, and things of that sort, as done years ago merely for the purpose of keeping them at work, is not good for the convict mentally, morally or physically. But in order that the work be productive there must be some place where the product can be utilized. With the cooperation of my colleagues in the government, I hope it will be possible to supply more productive work in the penitentiaries, and practice some of that economy of which the leader of the opposition was preaching so admirably this morning.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I notice the committee is only now—

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it the practice to take in succession two speakers on the one side of the house? I understood it was always shared around.

The CHAIRMAN: My hon. friend will realize that some regard is had to the size of the groups as well.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Which group?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Liberal Progressive.

Mr. BROWN: I was going to ask the Minister of Justice to take into consideration a question I brought before the house this session in the way of a resolution, but which unfortunately I was not able to discuss at any length because I was crowded into the last ten minutes of the sitting. I refer to the question of holding the sentence of the lash over a man until just before he is to be discharged from the prison. I have discussed this matter with many people and they all agree that any efforts made to reform a man must of necessity be ineffective if this sentence is being held over him. If the minister is visiting the penitentiaries this year I would like him to discuss that matter with the men who are accustomed to dealing with criminals. As I said before, I had the opportunity of discussing it with the chaplain of one of the penitentiaries and he agreed heartily with the position I take.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall be pleased to consider that matter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This question of productive work for prisoners appears to be one of those long dragged out things upon which we all agree but cannot get any satisfactory result.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; we did not all agree until 1926, and then it was rather an achievement to have the house accept it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think it was in 1925 the house accepted the resolution.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, 1926.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Going back to February, 1921, I find the report of a committee appointed by the Right Hon. C. J. Doherty, then Minister of Justice, to advise on the revision of penitentiary regulations and the amendment of the Penitentiary Act. The following appears on page 21 of that report:

> The committee, therefore, most emphatically recommends statutory provision to provide productive labour for all convicts.

And further on, clause 26:

> The mere provision of work is not, in the opinion of the committee, sufficient. That the heaviest penalty for a crime is paid not by the criminal, but by his dependents has been chiefly emphasized before the committee, not by philanthropists and charitable workers, but by judicial, police and penitentiary officers of long standing.

And again:

> If anything but evil is to follow from punishment by imprisonment for long terms, it is, in the opinion of the committee, essential that such provision should be made as will allow the convict to earn at least something toward the support of his dependents during his confinement or of himself after his release.

With that I think the Minister of Justice agrees in principle, and I believe the government and the members of the house agree also. As the minister said, they agreed back in 1926 to the resolution moved by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) which was carried successfully and I think without a dissenting voice.

Turning to the statutes of this country, I find in the act respecting penitentiaries, subclause 3 of clause 62, the following:

> The convicts may be employed in labour under the control of the crown.

I have no hesitation in stating that considerably more labour could be diverted to the penitentiaries in this country by the government than is being done to-day. If the government is in earnest about this matter there is no need to draw the herring of the labour organizations across the trail. Later on the time may come when there will be an excuse for it, but as long as the government is going outside the penitentiaries for work that can be done just as efficiently within, work done in an excellent way and under excellent supervision, then I submit the Minister of Justice has not made out a case for delay. I most earnestly urge that the recommendations of the superintendent, Mr. Hughes, and the recommendations of this house dating away back to 1921, be carried out without further delay. There are cases of hardship and cruelty arising out of the non-action of the government in this matter.

In my own particular riding I have a case of a man committed to gaol. He probably deserved to go there, but he left a wife and three children absolutely dependent upon charity. They had almost to go round from door to door, and were forced to seek assistance from the municipality and board of trade. This man was a sort of transient prize fighter, and he could have been employed at most useful work. As a matter of fact I understand he became an excellent shoemaker while in prison, but received nothing for his work. He should have been paid and that money could have gone back to his dependents and relieved them of the stigma of having to look to charity for their existence. The wife and children were punished much more than the convict, and I most earnestly urge on the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister that no further delay should be permitted in increasing the amount of crown work for penitentiaries.

Mr. BANCROFT: While this vote is before the committee I would like to say a word regarding the Manitoba penitentiary, which is situated in my constituency. First of all I want to pay a tribute to the very capable and efficient manner in which this institution is being run. The warden and officials seem to realize their responsibilities and appreciate the fact that they are dealing with human beings, and appear to be doing their best for the unfortunate individuals who are under their care. I agree in large measure with the words of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). I visit this institution very often, and I have seen the men at their work. It seems to me that when a man is doing some constructive work, when he is creating something, he takes an interest in it and from that time on it is easier to make progress in reforming him.

A great deal of the work that is being done at this institution at the present time is in the nature of building. The inmates have constructed some very fine buildings in the last few years and they are a credit to the institution. But I should like to direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to the houses that the government own at that institution. They own in all some thirty houses which are not a credit to the government of Canada. They are old houses; they are a disgrace to the community and they disfigure the landscape. They are not modern in any way; they are without basements, and without furnaces. I suggest to the minister that when he goes west he look into this and see if he cannot agree with me that it would be advisable to have a nice group of cottages or bungalows, fully modern, that could be heated from the central steam heating plant of the institution.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We will visit it together.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. BANCROFT: Yes. These houses could be rented to the guards and officials of the institution and interest on the money invested in them could be earned in that way. Without a great deal of outlay some houses could be constructed there that would be a credit to the department, which certainly cannot be said of the present buildings.

Another matter to which I wish to refer—and I have mentioned it in the house before—is that the farm in connection with that institution might well be run in connection with or under the supervision of the experimental farm as a demonstration farm. I am sorry to say that we have a great deal of labour in that institution which is well situated in every way to make an ideal demonstration farm for that district. All I would suggest now is that the work be supervised by the officials of the demonstration farm at Brandon, and in that way it would become an object lesson to the farmers in the district. At this late stage in the session I will not detain the house by saying any more on the matter, but I hope the minister will look into it when he goes west this summer.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I should like to say in regard to the observations made by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) that the matter, so far as Ontario is concerned, has already been dealt with by the court of appeal which decreed that sentences of the kind of which the member spoke are invalid and will not be operative as to the administration of the lash towards the close of the serving of the term. The court of appeal for Ontario has set aside more than one sentence imposed under those conditions and it has decided that for that province at least there shall be no more of them.

Mr. BROWN: I saw in one case that the court of appeal had so decided, but the decision referred only to one case in which the man, as they thought, had been wrongfully convicted.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): They followed that up with others and decreed that.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—expenses of litigated matters, Department of Justice, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I was astonished to see this item and then in the supplementaries another item of $60,000 with respect to one legal matter, namely, the Labrador-Newfoundland case. Why should they not all be in one item?

Mr. LAPOINTE: When the main estimates were prepared we had not received the bill of our agent.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—to complete the revision of the Dominion statutes; payments may be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or regulations thereunder, $15,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What has this revision cost up to date?

Mr. LAPOINTE: $120,337.42.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police
Pay of force—further amount required, $186,130; Maintenance (including billeting, travelling expenses, forage, fuel and light, clothing repairs and renewals, horses, ammunition, stationery, etc., medical, hospital, etc., transportation and freight, building repairs, contingencies and criminal investigations, and establishment of new detachments and renewals)—further amount required, $334,692.—$520,822.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is based on figures to confirm an agreement between the Dominion government and the province of Saskatchewan and the proposed agreement with the province of Alberta. At the last interprovincial conference the question arose as to over-policing. The attorneys general and the premiers of those two provinces called attention to the fact that there seemed to be overlapping and that the work could be done more economically by one police doing the work of the other. As a matter of fact, I think the Canadian mounted police had been doing that work until the war, when the services of the whole force were required elsewhere, and the provinces had to establish police departments of their own. We had a conference first with the provincial authorities of Saskatchewan, and we came to an agreement to take over the work of the province as it had been done until some time during the war. The amount which the government of Saskatchewan will pay is based on the salaries of the additional number of men which we shall require in the force to do that work.

Mr. BENNETT: Did you absorb the old provincial force?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. We need in Saskatchewan about 70 more men than we have at present. Speaking from memory, I think they had over 140. The province is going to pay us $175,000 annually, and also reimburse us for the cost of transporation of the prisoners. We are doing the work at cost really, but we shall not lose anything by doing it, and it will be a relief for the provincial authorities. We are willing to do the same thing for Alberta, and the premier of that province has already had conferences with me in that regard, and it is more than probable that an agreement will be reached with Alberta. We are therefore providing for an amount for Alberta as well as Saskatchewan. Of course, the government will not really be spending any money, because this amount will be paid back to us by the provinces, but it will go into consolidated revenue, and we have to come to parliament, in the first place, to vote the money.

Mr. GARDINER: It is represented to me that there are different scales of pay in the mounted police force even for the same ranks. Is that correct?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think it is correct, for the same ranks.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the minister quite sure of that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Of course, the length of service is taken into consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON: What is the total strength of the mounted police?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The estimates provide for a strength of one thousand of all ranks.

Mr. ROBINSON: That is up to the old strength?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Adjustment of war claims—Secretary of State, $12,000.

Mr. MANION: What is that for?

Mr. RINFRET: This is the balance of the item we had for a number of years covering the work of Commissioner Friel and also the clearing office in London. The vote is now cut by half because Commissioner Friel has completed his work, but we have retained a secretary and small staff in order to prepare for a settlement of the question next session.

Mr. MANION: What did Commissioner Friel get altogether?

Mr. RINFRET: He was appointed on June 19, 1925, and his honorarium and living expenses and travelling expenses amounted to $33,015.58, up to January, 1928.

Item agreed to.

International office for the protection of industrial property and the international copyright union office, $2,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Where is this office?

Mr. RINFRET: This is in connection with the Berne convention.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why the decrease in this item?

Mr. RINFRET: We voted $4,000 last year in the expectation of paying half for the protection of industrial property, and half for copyright, but the payment for copyright will not be required until the coming year. But in future we shall need $4,000 to cover both items.

Item agreed to.

Patent and copyright office—salaries—to provide for a commissioner of patents, $6,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: You have got along very well with an assistant commissioner of patents, have you not?

Mr. RINFRET: I am glad to have my hon. friend admit that because our intention is to appoint as commissioner, the assistant, whom my hon. friend has praised. My hon. friend will recollect however, that in the office formerly there were Mr. O'Halloran, an assistant, and in addition, Mr. Ritchie, who was holding quite an important position. Neither Mr. O'Halloran nor Mr. Ritchie has been replaced, and the intention is to appoint the present acting commissioner as commissioner and give him an assistant.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Do you really need a commissioner and an assistant as well?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes. I might add that after we get the results of the international meeting in Rome, we shall bring in amendments to the Copyright Act, and the activities of that branch will be considerably enlarged.

Item agreed to.

To provide for salaries, including promotions and reclassifications made and approved prior to April 1, 1928, $70,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What does that mean?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) ought to explain this item. My understanding is that the Civil Service Commission recommend promotions between the beginning and the end of the fiscal year, but the increased amounts do not go into effect until the beginning of the new fiscal year. This is to cover all those cases which the Civil Service Commission have recommended for promotion.

Mr. BENNETT: Every branch of the public service?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Public Printing and Stationery—salaries, including $500 to Fred Cook as secretary to the government printing and stationery committee, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $80,190; contingencies, $15,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I notice in this item a rather curious feature: one departmental accountant, grade 6, $4,140, and one departmental accountant, grade 5, $4,140. Is this with the object of putting the first-named person into a higher class and giving him more pay, although the estimate is the same?

Mr. RINFRET: The department has recommended the appointment to the Civil Service Commission, but it can have no effect until after the commission has pronounced upon it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Has it been recommended by the superintendent of printing?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes, to the commission, by the King's Printer.

Item agreed to.

Public Printing and Stationery—printing, binding and distributing the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, $25,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When will the index to the statutes be published, may I ask?

Mr. RINFRET: We are still waiting on the Justice department to complete it. We hope to have it by August.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What distribution is to be made, for instance, to members of parliament; will it be confined to one set or to two?

Mr. RINFRET: There is to be one set in English and one set in French for members of parliament.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is, I shall get two sets, one in English and one in French?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How are they to be bound?

Mr. RINFRET: These indexes will be in exactly the same form as the statutes that have been distributed this session.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How are the statutes to be bound? In 1906 we received two copies, one bound in half law calf and the other in cloth or paper, as the present volumes are.

Mr. RINFRET: So far we have not provided for any extra binding. I am quite willing to give consideration to any recommendation from my hon. friend in this regard.

Mr. GUTHRIE: As the minister knows, the cloth or paper binding, while good enough for a year or two, is very flimsy. The half law calf is a very substantial binding. I notice that the statutes in all the departmental offices are so bound. It is not very expensive, and I think one set might be bound in half law calf.

Mr. RINFRET: That is a good suggestion. I regret to say we have not provided for any such binding, but during the recess I will consider it.

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Salaries and allowances, including amount required to provide for salaries, reclassification, revision, promotions and increases, which may be authorized by the Civil Service Commission, $16,955,934.40.

Mail service, including mail service by air, $15,080,000.

Miscellaneous, including Lucien Pacaud, secretary of the High Commissioner's Office, as the representative of the Canadian government on the Pacific cable board, at $1,500; and $5,000 for the payment of compassionate allowances to employees injured while in the performance of their duties, or to dependents of employees killed while on duty, such payments to be made only on the specific authority of the Governor in council, $1,126,175.

Yukon Territory, $150,000.

Total, $33,312,109.40.

Mr. MANION: I desire to ask the Postmaster General a few questions before I mention some facts that have been furnished to me. Will the minister tell the committee what air mail contracts have been let, and between what points?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): I have the information here. Between Montreal and Rimouski, a distance of 330 miles, the contract price was $49,500.

Mr. MANION: Montreal to Father Point is the same thing?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes; we go to Rimouski. Between Montreal and Ottawa the Canadian Transcontinental Airways, Limited, cover a distance of 110 miles and the contract price is $8,250; and between Montreal and Toronto, the Canadian Airways, Limited cover a distance of 330 miles, the contract price being $49,500.

Mr. MANION: Were tenders called for in all cases?

Mr. VENIOT: Tenders were called for on these routes and after they were received I called in the air board. There was such a diversity of tenders, between the lowest minimum and the highest, that it looked very much indeed as though persons were tendering who did not know what they were tendering on. As I say, I called in the air board of the National Defence department and I had a consultation that lasted two or three hours with the air board superintendent of this service, Mr. Coolican my deputy, and if I mistake not, the Minister of National Defence who was present for a while. We discussed the best methods to ascertain reasonable and proper prices for work of that description, and what machines should be employed to ensure safety and proper transportation. After this consultation we took the two companies who the year before last and last year had made trial flights between Rimouski and Montreal, and Montreal and Ottawa, and we arrived at the price which we submitted to the air board committee which takes all these matters into consideration. We decided upon a reasonable price which was $1.25 per mile, and on the basis of that $1.25 per mile we let the contract to these two companies who had been in our service previously.

Mr. MANION: Was that in accordance with the lowest tender?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. MANION: Were there not tenders—

Mr. VENIOT: I am leading my hon. friend astray. It was in accordance with the lowest tender, taking into consideration the proper class of machine to be used in this transportation business.

Mr. MANION: Were there not one or two other companies who tendered and whose total tender was lower than the one of the company to whom the contract was finally given at the price?

Mr. VENIOT: That is true.

Mr. MANION: And who were also reported on as good companies.

Mr. VENIOT: They may have been good companies, but the machines provided at the time were not such machines as we wished to use. One company—I forget the name—offered sixty cents a mile but it was not organized.

Mr. MANION: Which was that—the Western Canadian? No, it would not—

Mr. VENIOT: It could not be that.

Mr. MANION: That is one of the older companies. There is one other question. The minister mentioned different contracts between Montreal and Father Point and he mentioned one between Montreal and Toronto.

Mr. VENIOT: That is right.

Mr. MANION: Was there a contract between Montreal and Ottawa?

Mr. VENIOT: That is under negotiation. We cannot definitely decide—although we are pretty close to the point of definite decision—until we have all arrangements concurred in between the Canadian and the American postal authorities. That contract will be called for within a very few days—in a short time, say a couple of weeks.

Mr. MANION: I wish to say a few words on this question. I am going to make a statement of the case as it has been given to me and I am subject to correction; although the statements of the minister so far absolutely agree with the statement given me. I fancy therefore that the facts are as stated. The statement, as given to me, is that the tenders were called for in December, 1927. There were some five or six tenders. Canadian Transcontinental Airways Limited was the company which was finally given the contract between Montreal and Father Point, and Montreal and Ottawa. According to the statement given me their figure is $57,500, covering the two contracts, or higher than the contract of the Fairchild people by $17,500. The Fairchild people tendered on a basis which would work out, on the trips for which they tendered, at $40,500. But the contract was as I say, let finally to the Canadian Transcontinental Airways Limited for $57,750.

Mr. VENIOT: That includes what routes?

Mr. MANION: That is Montreal-Father Point, and Montreal-Ottawa. I am taking these two—

Mr. VENIOT: Those figures are right.

Mr. MANION: Am I right in regard to the tender of the Fairchild people of $40,500? That is the figure given me, and that is the sum I arrive at on the basis of the tender, a copy of which I looked over.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. VENIOT: I would not say from memory. Had I thought that these figures would be required I would have got them.

Mr. MANION: I will make a statement and if the minister finds I am wrong, I shall be subject to correction. If these figures are correct—and I have no reason to doubt their accuracy, because the figures the minister has given absolutely agree so far with these—then there is a loss of some $17,500. I take the Fairchild tender and I shall give in a moment my reasons for doing so. Now the minister pointed out that the air branch of the National Defence department were asked for reports and according to the return which I have seen their recommendation was not so strong for the company to which the contract was given as it was for the Fairchild people. The minister shakes his head as though I were not correct. I will quote the return. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee but the facts should be presented to the house. I have in my hand a letter from Mr. Desbarats, the Deputy Minister of the Department of National Defence dated February 9, 1928, in which he says:

> As requested in your letter of February 8, I attach hereto report prepared on the tenders received—

And so forth. This clause affects the situation:

> You will note that the Western Canada Airways, the Fairchild Aviation Limited—

That is the one to which I referred.

> —Canadian Airways Limited and, perhaps, Canadian Transcontinental Airways Limited—

That is the one to which the contract was finally given.

> —are the four companies whose offers are considered likely to give satisfaction in the performance of this contract.

Certainly that paragraph in the letter represents the Canadian Transcontinental Airways Limited as the weakest company of the four. It does not give them a rating as high; it states "and, perhaps, Canadian Transcontiental Airways Limited".

Mr. VENIOT: That is not the whole statement; there is some doubt in that regard.

Mr. MANION: It is a fair inference from that report that they did not recommend so highly Canadian Transcontinental Airways Limited, who got the contract, as they did the Fairchild company. I do not take the others; I take the Fairchild company because a recommendation was made with respect to them and they are an old company. That is Mr. Desbarats' letter. What does his report on Canadian Transcontinental Airways Limited say?

Aircraft suitable. This company is a new organization with little operating experience. Difficulty is being experienced carrying out present mail contracts.

Certainly that is not a very high recommendation.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not care what Mr. Desbarats said; we experienced no difficulty with that company in connection with their mail service during the winter season. If ever a company gave satisfaction in carrying on an air mail service this company did so, following air routes just as dangerous as that to Greenly island. Their service along the north shore and the gulf of St. Lawrence and to the Magdalene islands in all kinds of weather; their continuity of service, only missing one trip during the season owing to an accident; their persistent endeavours to give accommodation to the people they served under very trying conditions gave a good deal of satisfaction to the department and these were some of the reasons for which I favoured them when the contract was let.

Mr. MANION: I have no quarrel with what the minister says, but he did quote from the air branch of the Department of National Defence and since he quoted one side of the question I am going to quote the other side.

Mr. VENIOT: I quoted them as to the choice of machines we should use, but I did not quote them as to the experience of these people, because I had those details before me.

Mr. MANION: Very well. I have quoted their views with respect to the company which received the contract; I am a little afraid that in the passage between the minister and myself this may have been forgotten, so I will quote it again:

Aircraft suitable. This company is a new organization with little operating experience. Difficulty is being experienced carrying out present mail contracts.

Now I am going to read what they say about the Fairchild people:

This firm has had five years' operating experience. Aircraft offered are suitable type. Company's main base is well situated for operation of this particular route.

In other words, their recommendation as to the Fairchild people is considerably better than their recommendation of Canadian Transcontinental Airways, the people who received the contract, whom they said were experiencing difficulty in carrying out their present air mail contract.

Mr. VENIOT: There has been no difficulty.

Mr. MANION: With all due respect to the minister I doubt if he knows anything more about aircraft than I do, and I admit that is not very much, so I will have to accept the report of the air branch of the Department of National Defence in preference to the opinion of the minister. That is one point. Here was a company recommended by another branch of the government—

Mr. VENIOT: What is the date of that report?

Mr. MANION: It is the same report, dated February 9 last. This company was awarded the contract, and according to this report they are not as well fitted for the work as another company whose tender was not accepted, even though it was for $17,500 less. I do not quite follow the reason of the minister for this action. Then there is another point, more or less a point of ethics. Tenders were called for; I know this is done sometimes in the government and perhaps has happened in the past, but after they were called for they were ignored. Negotiations were carried on between the department and Canadian Transcontinental Airways, whose original tender was $1,025 per trip for the Montreal-Father Point trip as against the Fairchild offer of $300. For the Ottawa-Montreal trip the original tender of these people was $460 as against $75 which was the sum stated by the Fairchild people. So if any negotiations were to be carried on I should have thought they would have been carried on with the Fairchild people. Their tender was not the lowest. I think one or two companies had lower tenders, but I think they were not experienced and were not well reported on. I can quite understand that the lowest tender need not be taken, because we are never bound to do that, but the Fairchild people were reported upon favourably, and I cannot get it through my head—perhaps I am dense—why they should have been ignored, unless there are other reasons which the minister has not yet given, in favour of a company which has not had much experience and which is rather reported against by the air branch of the Department of National Defence. I would be rather glad to hear what the minister has to say.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman said that perhaps I did not know any more about aircraft than he does, and he said he knew very little about it. Let me say that I do possess a little more knowledge than he showed this afternoon, although I have never done any flying. If I am not mistaken the report from which he was reading was dated last February. When the final decision was made to award this contract we had before us the experience of the company which had been flying during the winter along the north shore and the gulf of St. Lawrence and to the Magdalen islands.

Mr. GEARY: To which company does the minister refer?

Mr. VENIOT: I am referring to Canadian Transcontinental Airways Limited.

Mr. GEARY: Can the minister tell us who compose this company?

Mr. VENIOT: No, I cannot. I know the names of some of the officials, that is all.

Mr. GEARY: Is this an incorporated company?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, but I do not know who are the directors.

Mr. GEARY: Does my hon. friend know the directors?

Mr. VENIOT: No, I do not know the officials except from seeing their names on their letterhead but I know the general manager, Dr. Cuisinier, who offered his services to go to Greenly island and assist in the rescue of the men who flew across from Ireland.

Mr. MANION: Of course that was subsequent to the giving of the contract.

Mr. VENIOT: That was when we were discussing this contract and looking into the whole question. I have had no experience in flying; I doubt whether I would ever go up in an aeroplane, because I feel safer on terra firma. However, the experience I have was gained from the reports submitted to the department on each trip made during the winter by this company. This service was carried on under very hazardous conditions, and the experience they have had flying this route in winter time is an experience which no other flying company in Canada has had. They carried on their work successfully; at a time when we were up against it to maintain communications which we desired to maintain on the north shore and the gulf of St. Lawrence and especially to the Magdalen islands, they undertook that work for us and have given absolute satisfaction. They have proved that they are fully equipped in every way as far as flying equipment, pilots and mechanicians are concerned. At their head they have one of the aces of the world war, and I felt that their experience was sufficient to warrant my doing business with them.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. MANION: I will admit that the minister differs rather materially from the report of the Department of National Defence, because they say this company has had very little experience.

Mr. VENIOT: I cannot help that. They began flying in the month of December and flew all winter. They made ten or twelve trips to Seven Islands; several trips to Anticosti; a trip a week to Magdalen islands, and continued that until the opening of navigation. They only missed once towards the end of the season, owing to an accident to their plane. Perhaps at the time Mr. Desbarats made that report they may not have had much experience in flying, but I would like to find one man in Canada who has had more experience than Dr. Cuisinier.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to take up much time on this question but my hon. friend leaves himself open to a misunderstanding. He said that up to the time Mr. Desbarats made his report this company may not have had very much experience. Would I assume from that that after Mr. Desbarats made his report they got a good deal of experience?

Mr. VENIOT: I told my hon. friend that they commenced flying in the month of December.

Mr. MANION: But the report of Mr. Desbarats says that the Fairchild Aviation Company has been flying for five years. Mr. Desbarats is a deputy in the Department of National Defence, and this is his report:

> Fairchild Aviation Company: This firm has had five years' operating experience. Aircraft offered are suitable type. Company's main base is well situated for operation of this particular route.

Another strange thing is that this contract was given after the tenders were called for and the tenders ignored. About three weeks after Mr. Desbarat's report, on March 20, the minister wires to the company, as follows:

> Your wire received. You are in error touching my agreeing to one fifty per mile for your trips Rimouski to Montreal. What I agreed to was four trips at one twenty five or three trips at one fifty, whichever suited you best, the details to be worked out between you and Coolican. Department's most favourable price for Rimouski-Montreal and Montreal-Ottawa total, $57,750.

I am not admitting that; I think the most favourable price was $40,000, according to my figure. The figures were given to me and

I tried to check them up as carefully as possible. The telegram continues:

In view of near approach to opening of navigation, I will have to make other arrangements unless you come to speedy decision. There is no intention of trying to sidetrack your company, but I cannot accept your figures.

And then the negotiations went on, and the minister closed with these people. But in addition to that, while these people only tendered for thirty weeks, which is during the summer, I assume, a contract was given for four years.

Mr. VENIOT: Both companies have got a four year contract, for thirty weeks in the year.

Mr. MANION: If the figures had been worked out from the original tender, it would show a total of $40,000 for the Fairchild people and $150,000 for the other company, or a difference of $110,000. To show that this company has not done too badly by this contract, I would like to quote from an advertisement appearing in the Financial Post of this week. This is an advertisement for The Canadian Transcontinental Airways Limited, class A stock, which is being offered at $17 per share. I will just quote a couple of clauses, as follows:

The company has already received contracts from the Canadian government covering a number of years' operation. These contracts have been made after the cost per mile of operation for a number of aerial transportation companies in the United States was known. They allow the Canadian Transcontinental Airways Limited, an operating margin which assures large profits. Under the contracts, the company agrees to meet European passenger boats at Father Point.

Mr. GEARY: Does the advertisement state who they are?

Mr. MANION: No, it does not; I do not know the names of the officers.

Mr. VENIOT: Dr. Cuisinier is one of them, and he is the one with whom I have had a good deal of communication. I think the legal head of the company is Mr. Robert Cannon.

Mr. MANION: I notice some of the telegrams were signed by the company and some by the gentleman the minister has just mentioned. It was the hon. gentleman behind me who was asking who were in charge. I would point out that according to the advertisement the company feel they have made a very good contract.

Mr. VENIOT: That is not an advertisement of the company you are reading.

Mr. MANION: It is an advertisement for their shares. Of course, at the bottom appears the usual statement contained in these advertisements:

The statements contained in this advertisement are not guaranteed, but are based upon information, which we believe to be reliable,

Mr. VENIOT: That is a broker's advertisement.

Mr. STEVENS: They are the financial agents, and they got their information from the company. It would be illegal for them to do anything else.

Mr. MANION: In summing up, the following facts would appear: The contract was given out at too high a price, a higher price than that tendered by a company reported as being a better one by the Department of National Defence; a four year contract was given where the tenders called for thirty weeks; negotiations were carried on with these people after calling for tenders, and those who had tendered lower were thrown aside; an opportunity was apparently given to organize a company which, the minister says had a lot of flying experience, but which according to the Department of National Defence lacked experience; and the proposition in the paper for selling stock rather looks as if it were the offering of a new company. The whole thing looks to me as if the minister felt that he should not pay any attention to the tenders, and for one reason or another—I certainly do not impute wrong motives—he went above the price that it was necessary to pay. In these times of high costs I thought the matter was worth taking up, because it seems to me to be an unnecessary waste of money.

Mr. VENIOT: Why did you not take up the other company, the Canadian Airways Limited?

Mr. MANION: To tell you the honest truth I did not happen to have the facts. The minister says tenders were called and I will take his word.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman will take notice that the rate of $1.25 per mile for a distance of 330 miles, Montreal to Toronto, is the same as the contract he is criticising now.

Mr. MANION: The price may be the same, but I do not know of any reason why a department of this government should feel obliged to pay $1.25 per mile when it can get the same work done for $1 per mile.

Mr. VENIOT: I would pay $1.25 if I was satisfied I was getting really good service, rather than $1 where I might not get the same service.

Mr. MANION: The minister should not have asked Mr. Desbarats and his department for a report unless he intended to give some consideration to it. I am taking the report of the air branch of the Department of National Defence and we will just have to think it over and let it go at that.

Item agreed to.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman asked a question the other day as to whether the printing was in a separate item, or in an item which we had already passed. I was not in a position at that time to give a correct answer, but I will say now that the printing was included in the vote; the advertising and printing being together. The hon. gentleman asked another question in connection with rural mail boxes.

Mr. MANION: I think that was another one of the hon. gentleman's.

Mr. VENIOT: I might answer that question now. A contract was entered into between my department and Eastern Steel Products for the purchase of 40,000 rural mail delivery boxes with all necessary attachments, complete, for the sum of $2.80 per box, plus sales tax not to exceed 10 cents per box, f.o.b. at points to be designated by the Postmaster General in Toronto, Ottawa, London and Montreal. The company further agrees to deliver f.o.b. at a point in Winnipeg to be designated by the Postmaster General as many of these 40,000 boxes as may be required for which an additional payment would be allowed at a rate not to exceed 35 cents per box—that is the freight—and in no instance shall the additional rate exceed the actual cost of freight between Montreal and Winnipeg. The company further agreed to deliver f.o.b. at a point in Moncton, New Brunswick, such number of the above 40,000 boxes as may be indicated by the Postmaster General, the company to be paid an additional rate of 10 cents per box in lieu of freight allowance. These boxes when delivered at these points and ready to hand over to those who desire to purchase them for rural mail delivery will cost about $4.

Mr. ROBINSON: Last year, on the 14th April, I brought up the question of the high cost of living and the high rents that letter carriers, have to pay. I mentioned at that time that the chartered banks, when they send clerks to the border cities, give them an extra living allowance to offset the high cost of living. I was told that the matter would be looked into.

Mr. VENIOT: In the cities?

Mr. ROBINSON: In Windsor.

Mr. VENIOT: I did look into it and I made a recommendation to the Civil Service Commission for an increase in salary. That recommendation has not been acted upon and I am not in a position to do any more.

Mr. ROBINSON: Some of the letter carriers there are receiving less than they were before the revision. While I am on my feet I want to put on Hansard a resolution passed by the Windsor city council on May 30 of this year to this effect:

That the council go on record as being in favour of the postmen of this riding being given an increase in wages in view of the high cost of living at points along the international boundary.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not go into that feature of the matter. I went into the feature of a general increase throughout Canada. I felt if I made distinctions, a great deal of trouble would arise in the service. Therefore I went merely into the question of an increase generally throughout the service to men employed as mail carriers. The result was as I stated to the house two or three days ago.

Mr. ROBINSON: Will the matter likely be taken up next year before the end of the session?

Mr. VENIOT: I would not like to promise the hon. gentleman as to that, but I will give it some consideration. If we made a distinction there, a great deal of trouble might be caused throughout the service.

Item agreed to.

Post Office—salaries—to provide for payment of flat increase of $120 from April 1, 1928, to the private secretary to the Postmaster General, $120.

Mr. BENNETT: This seems to afford a reasonable opportunity for me to bring to the attention of the committee and the minister the circumstances connected with the dismissal of Mr. J. C. McAdam, who was postmaster at Lafleche, Saskatchewan. As I happen to be the only member of the house on this side from west of the great lakes who apparently could be entrusted with the duty of bringing this matter to the attention of the committee, I feel it is a duty devolving upon me to bring up what I consider to be a great outrage resulting in a grave injustice to a returned soldier who had served in the 10th Battalion, one of the battalions that went earliest to the war, and who was wounded. The circumstances in connection with the matter seem to be as follows. On the 3rd March, 1927, Mr. Thomas Donnelly, member of parliament, wrote from Ottawa to the Postmaster General as follows:

Dear Veniot:

I desire hereby to request the dismissal of Mr. J. C. McAdam, as postmaster at Lafleche, Saskatchewan, for political reasons of which I have personal knowledge.

I will assume all responsibility in this matter, and will answer any questions that may be asked either in the house or outside it, concerning Mr. McAdam's dismissal.

I desire also hereby to recommend that Mr. Thomas Stark be appointed temporary postmaster in Mr. McAdam's place.

Yours truly,

Thos. Donnelly.

On that there is this notation:

March 4, 1927. Please put this through by order in council. P.J.V.

In due course an order in council was passed, a certified copy of which appears on the file, dismissing Mr. McAdam as postmaster on the ground of his partisanship. The order in council which is dated the 14th March, 1927, reads:

The committee of the privy council, on the recommendation of the Postmaster General advise that the services of Mr. J. C. McAdam, postmaster at Lafleche, Saskatchewan, be dispensed with on the ground of political partisanship.

E. J. Lemaire.
Clerk of the Privy Council.

It is perfectly clear that up to that point the Postmaster General is not blamable. By a standing order in council that was passed, I think in 1911 or 1912, it was provided that if any member of the house certified over his signature that any particular person was an offensive partisan or was guilty of partisanship—

Mr. DUNNING: That he has personal knowledge.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that he had personal knowledge that a particular person was guilty of partisanship in his particular constituency, the minister to whom the letter was directed would, as a matter of course, take steps to have the necessary order in council passed. Up to that point it seems to me that the Postmaster General is not censurable. He merely carried out the conditions of an order in council. But the difficulty began there. As soon as Mr. McAdam knew that he was dismissed—and he was advised that an order in council had been passed dismissing him—he asked for an investigation. The citizens of the community in which he lived, without his solicitation, gathered together and prepared several petitions which were signed by a very large number of persons, asking that he be retained in his position as postmaster at this village. The postmastership yielded him a livelihood. As a matter of fact the salary, rental of the buildings and the commission gave him between $1,800 and $2,000. The first petition, for instance, is one signed by W. F. Hamelin, general merchant; J. H. Elsey, hardware merchant, and fifty-five other persons. The other one is signed by R. C. Davidson, agent; Alex. Stewart, implement dealer, and eighty-six other persons. That is 145 persons signed these two petitions. Then followed another step in this unfortunate transaction. The following telegram was sent to the right hon. the Prime Minister on the 22nd March of this year:

We the undersigned citizens of Lafleche feeling great injustice done to J. C. McAdam in his dismissal from post office here and the appointment of E. H. Bilodeau in his place respectfully request the immediate reconsideration of the matter and thorough investigation of the circumstances leading to Mr. McAdam's dismissal.

That is signed by fifty people or more. According to the return of the last election there was not that number of persons there who voted for a Conservative candidate, nor was there that number of persons who voted for a Progressive candidate, so that it may be taken for granted that of those one hundred and fifty people who signed the petition and the fifty people who signed the telegram to the Prime Minister, a considerable number were neither Conservative nor Progressives but must have been supporters of the present administration. My contention is this, that when a returned man, finding himself charged with offensive partisanship denies that there is any truth in the charge; when he asks and demands that there should be an investigation, and when a number of citizens, some fifty in this particular instance, take the trouble to send a telegram to the prime Minister asking for an investigation, that investigation should be granted.

I may point out that on the file brought down, there was lacking a letter which was in my judgment rather an important one, namely, the letter written by Mr. McAdam himself to the Postmaster General. That letter does not appear on the file, the reason probably being that they did not ask the minister for his personal file on the matter.

Mr. VENIOT: That is the only reason.

Mr. BENNETT: The letter is dated Lafleche, Saskatchewan, October 24, 1927, addressed to the Hon. P. J. Veniot, Postmaster General, Ottawa, and reads as follows:

Honourable Sir:

I have received from the Civil Service Commission notification of the appointment of Mr. Thos. Scott to the position of postmaster at Lafleche.

Since my dismissal on May 5, I have been hoping for an investigation of the circumstances leading up to such dismissal, but apparently no investigation has been made.

As you know, sir, I am a returned soldier, having had two years service in the front line with the 10th Canadian battalion. I was severely wounded, and after spending six months in the hospital, I was discharged as physically unfit, and I still suffer from the effects of my wounds.

I received a small pension for some time after my discharge from the army but shortly after my appointment to the position of postmaster here, this pension was withdrawn.

Since my dismissal from the post office I have been and am still without any permanent occupation.

I feel, sir, that the least that I should expect from the Dominion government is that a thorough investigation be made of my case, as I feel confident that I have been misrepresented to the Civil Service Commission, because of political and personal ill feeling.

I sincerely hope that British justice will not fail a loyal British subject. I am given to understand that the local Liberal association was by no means unanimous in asking for my dismissal, neither did it recommend a successor.

I do not wish to cause any commotion in the Dominion house over this matter, but if the Civil Service Commission do not grant my request for an investigation I must have the matter brought to the attention of the Dominion house at its next sitting.

Hoping to hear favourably from you by return, I am, sir,

Yours obediently,

(Signed) J. C. McAdam.

To that letter on October 28, 1927, the hon. Postmaster General replied as follows:

Mr. J. C. McAdam,
Lafleche, Sask.

My dear Sir,

Replying to yours of the 24th instant, re your dismissal as postmaster, I beg to say that certain regulations are laid down by order in council dealing with such cases. I have followed these regulations, and, having done so, I do not consider an investigation necessary.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) P. J. Veniot.

That is a letter with the Postmaster General's own signature upon it. I do not desire to discuss the merits or demerits of this particular case. It may be that the evidence is conclusive as to political partisanship of Mr. McAdam, and it would be very wrong for me to express an opinion with respect to it, because I am hoping that the right hon. the Prime Minister and the hon. Postmaster General will agree that it is a fit case in which an investigation should be held, and if the member for the constituency has the necessary evidence to submit to that inquiry for the purpose of satisfying the commissioner, whoever he may be, that Mr. McAdam has indeed been guilty of political partisanship, then, of course, the inevitable consequences must follow. But if, on the other hand, there has been a mistake, I am sure it must be the sense of this committee that one who has been through the experience of Mr. McAdam, and has served as postmaster without a pension because he was in a position which gave him an income of roughly $150 a month—I do feel assured that it would be the sense of this committee, of every member of this house, of the Prime Minister, and of the Postmaster General himself, that this man should have the opportunity to defend himself which he asks. I am sure that the Minister of Justice of this Dominion will agree that when one asks for nothing more than a mere investigation, and has behind him such a body of public opinion as that to which I have referred, has filed petitions with the government indicating at least that there must be some mistake, and asks that elementary British justice be meted out to him, the government would be doing but the proper, the just and the fair thing to afford him this opportunity for investigation. Investigations are being held all the time. We have had before us the reports of a large number of them, and in some cases men have been released from their positions because the charges were proven, and in other cases there was not sufficient evidence on which to ground the complaint that was made. I feel also that an appeal made to the hon. gentleman who represents the constituency in question should not fall upon deaf ears.

We all know how easy it is at times for members of parliament to be misled by information which they may receive from their own constituents who, sometimes sincerely believing that which they tell, are after all but the victims of rumours, they having accepted, as correct, statements which they have received that are merely hearsay.

Under these circumstances, am I asking too much of the minister that on behalf of the administration he would promise that the investigation will be held? I cannot anticipate what the result of that investigation may be by in any sense indicating what my views are as to whether or not Mr. McAdam has been guilty of partisanship that merits the very severe punishment that he has received by the loss of his office and livelihood. I do not desire to anticipate or prejudice the matter, but I do feel that having been asked as the only member from the west representing a minority, but a minority of nearly as many people as those who supported hon. gentlemen from western Canada sitting to the right of the Speaker, that elementary sense of justice which at time governs us all should ensure to this unfortunate man, who feels that the country he served so faithfully and well has denied him the opportunity to present his case before a proper commission, and if the charges of partisanship that may be preferred against him before that commission are not proved, that he be reappointed to the position which in that event was improperly taken from him.

Mr. DONNELLY: Having had something to do with the dismissal of this postmaster at Lafleche, I feel that I should explain my action. Let me preface what I have to say by the statement that the constituency of Willow Bunch was only surveyed in 1908, and the first road was built through it in 1910 or 1911. After that time, postmasters were appointed in all the towns of any size along that line, and no political partisanship was used in their appointment because our friends the Conservatives were in power at that time; yet strange to say, all the postmasters in towns of any importance throughout the constituency are Conservatives, only one postmastership in a town of any size being held by a Liberal, and the reason assigned for him being appointed, I am told, is that they could not find a Conservative in the place to appoint.

I am in the fortunate or unfortunate position, being a medical man and travelling through that district, of knowing pretty well the political views of everybody out there. In the 1925 and 1926 elections I had the misfortune or good fortune to hear Mr. McAdam on several occasions trying to influence voters by speaking against myself, against the Prime Minister of this country, and against the Liberal party. After the 1925 election, being a new man in politics, I did not say anything about it. In 1926, he acted in the same way, and these men were going around saying, "The Civil Service Commission appoints us, and no one can discharge us." I thought it was time to show them that if they were going to indulge in politics they could not hold a government job. So I made representations, as is shown by the letter, that Mr. McAdam had been politically active, and I advised that he be dismissed.

I notice what was said with regard to the petition. I heard only two names. A delegation came up to see me with regard to this man's dismissal, and two of those men were in the delegation. They admitted that Mr. McAdam had no one to blame but himself, for he had been politically active, there was no doubt about that, but they said he had been a pretty good postmaster—I knew that—and having now been taught his lesson he should be forgiven and taken back. I told them it was too late to lock the door after the horse was stolen—the matter was in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, that I had no love for him, and as I had heard him talking against myself, against the party and against the Prime Minister, as far as I was concerned the dismissal would stand.

With regard to the appointment of Mr. Bilodeau, I advised that Mr. Stark be put in as temporary postmaster. He refused to take the job. The Civil Service Commission, I understand, appointed a Mr. Scott. He too was a returned soldier, but he had moved away from the town to another place further north and refused to come back. Later I am informed the Civil Service Commission appointed Mr. Bilodeau, who is in temporary charge as postmaster. Some organizations through that district, such as the Klu Klux Klan and the Orange order, objected very much to this, because they said: Here is a Protestant, a returned soldier, being turned out of a job and a Frenchman and Catholic being put in his place. Not being a Frenchman or a Catholic myself, religion does not influence me at all. I believe a man has a right to whatever religion he professes. But even at that I do not think Mr. McAdam has very much coming to him. During the last election I had a Frenchman and Catholic running against me, and Mr. McAdam did everything he could to elect that Frenchman and Catholic. He was beaten by the fortunes of war, and I think he should take his medicine.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman said he heard Mr. McAdam attack himself and the Liberal party and the Prime Minister. That in my judgment would be clear evidence of partisanship, if he was then postmaster, and within the provisions of the order in council of 1912. I strongly deprecate the question that the hon. member has seen fit to introduce. In all the letters I have received I find nothing about the religion of Mr. McAdam or of anyone connected with him. Neither do I find any reference made to the racial origin or religion of the person who is now postmaster. In fact I may say that one of my correspondents is himself a leading Roman Catholic. He is a very well known man in that section. Nothing is worse for this country than to introduce the element that has been introduced by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Donnelly).

Mr. DUNNING: He did not introduce it.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what he said.

Mr. DUNNING: He related the introduction of it.

Mr. BENNETT: No, he charged that certain people, because they were Protestants and Orangemen and Ku Klux Klansmen, were objecting to the appointment.

Mr. DONNELLY: Quite right.

Mr. BENNETT: I say there is no evidence of any such thing upon the files or in the correspondence I have seen. It is very much to be deprecated that such a charge should be made in this house.

Mr. DUNNING: Much more to be deprecated that it is encouraged in the country.

Mr. BENNETT: It is very much worse if it is encouraged in the country, as it has been by hon. gentlemen very closely associated with the hon. Minister of Railways. I can say that quite truly.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I wish absolutely to deny that and, on the contrary, to state that the evidence in the court proceedings demonstrates that Conservatives very close to my hon. friend are back of these attempts to arouse racial and religious prejudices.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I made the observation with the idea that possibly the Minister of Railways would show the hand that he has now disclosed. I have lived long enough to see him rise to the bait. He did it in this case. He has given away the source of the attempt that has been made by the Liberal organization in western Canada to fasten upon the party with which I am associated the very charges that he has now made. The man brought back from the United States by the government of Saskatchewan, and who is now being kept by somebody in a hotel in Regina, was brought back to make the charges now made by the hon. gentleman. He now adopts them as his own, and thereby discloses the support given to that man, which we suspected and were anxious to confirm. We now know where these charges come from. We now know the authority behind that notorious person, Pat Emmons, who is being put forward to make charges against the Conservative party and, the hon. minister says, those who are closely associated with myself. I think he will find before he is through with that line of action that he is entirely mistaken, and that it will do no good either to him or the party that has set those reports loose in Saskatchewan predicated upon a speech made in the legislature by the premier of Saskatchewan, in which he charged that members opposite him belonged to the Ku Klux Klan, a small minority in the legislature; but unfortunately for him it was disclosed that behind him there sat members of that Klan who were supporting him, and that none of those who sat opposite him belonged to that order. That was what was proven in the legislature of Saskatchewan.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend produce evidence to prove what he has just said? He knows better.

Mr. BENNETT: Just a moment. It is not necessary to get excited and begin to assume that attitude of mind in respect to it. The hon. gentleman knows that I have not the papers here, but the daily press in Saskatchewan—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. leader of the opposition, but surely discussion on what has happened in another legislature has nothing to do with the item before the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know. If I have not the right to answer observations dragged in by those opposite, it is a queer thing to me.

Mr. DUNNING: I rise to a point of order. I object to my hon. friend stating that I dragged them in. He boasted of putting out the bait for me to rise to. I was proud to rise to it.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly I did. I said that the hon. member for Willow Bunch made certain statements which I deprecated, and I added that those statements were now being circulated in Saskatchewan, whereupon the hon. gentleman—

Mr. DUNNING: By men closely associated with me.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly; and I referred to the premier of Saskatchewan, whose speech I read—my hon. friend asked me to give him the evidence—in the daily paper while I was on the train last Sunday and Monday journeying to Ottawa. In that speech he made in almost the identical words the statements now made by the Minister of Railways and Canals. I also read in the same journal the report of a trial that had taken place in Regina. It gave the evidence given under oath with respect to a man by the name of Emmons, whom I had never seen or heard of until then. He had been brought back from the United States by the Saskatchewan government, and in the course of the trial he endeavoured to introduce the names of two persons, Dr. Cowan of Regina and another gentleman, but his name has slipped from my mind. They at once issued denials of the statements made by Emmons with respect to themselves.

As to what was said by the minister, I have given him the evidence and the place where he will find it. There are members in this house from Saskatchewan who if they have read the press will know about it. I found it in the newspaper published in Saskatchewan as well as in a newspaper published in Moosejaw which gave a report of it. Then, coming down on the train I again read it. It will be found in the library if the hon. gentleman desires to know where to find the report. I deprecated the observations made by the hon. member for Willow Bunch for that very reason.

Now I say that in view of the statements that the hon. member has made, upon his word as a member of this house, the incident would seem to be ended. There is no necessity for an inquiry if an hon. member of this house, standing in his place, makes such a statement, and I shall advise my correspondent by sending him a copy of Hansard, showing that the hon. member for Willow Bunch himself heard this man, in his presence, as an active partisan; because if he did an investigation is unnecessary. But on the facts that were upon the record, there is no letter from the hon. member indicating any such thing except, as I said, the official letter upon which the dismissal was predicated. And when the minister was asked for an investigation, having regard to what was said by Mr. McAdam, it does occur to me that in all cases of this kind it would be a very simple thing to grant an investigation or to advise the member for Willow Bunch of the request for an investigation in order that he might place on the record what he has said to this house to-day. In my judgment, having regard to the terms of the order in council, the conditions under which men have held office in the civil service, and their liability to dismissal if they are active partisans, when a member says that he heard a postmaster at Lafleche take an active part against the government of the day, becoming an active partisan, in a pending election, he has justified that dismissal and nothing further need be said with respect to it. The government is bound to accept, whether it be from this side or the other, a statement publicly made by a member of this house as to what he himself heard, knew and observed with respect to a partisan postmaster.

Mr. VENIOT: I regret very much indeed that the question of race or creed has been introduced into this discussion.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. VENIOT: It is not the first time with this post office dismissal that such has been the case.

Mr. BENNETT: There was nothing on the files about it.

Mr. VENIOT: I have my own personal file. I have in my hand two letters; each letter accuses my department of French domination in the nomination at Lafleche. A letter was written to the Prime Minister of the province by Mr. W. J. Passmore touching this question—

Mr. BENNETT: When a file is ordered by parliament to be brought down, does that not involve—

Mr. VENIOT: Not the minister's individual file.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister's files are part of the public business of the country. The Prime Minister will be the first gentleman in this house to say that; a letter such as that to which attention is now directed, sent to him, which he has passed on to the minister, is a public document. I read the file and I now place it back on the table. If the letter is marked personal it should not be read to the house.

Mr. VENIOT: It is not marked personal.

Mr. BENNETT: If it is not marked personal it should be on that file, and I think I have a right to ask that it now be put on the file if it is to be read from. The file must be completed and the Prime Minister will be the first member of the house to say that is correct.

Mr. VENIOT: Let me call the attention of the hon. member—

Mr. BENNETT: No; we are not going to leave this.

Mr. VENIOT: I have a right to reply to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT: But I want the document put on the file.

Mr. VENIOT: I am not touching the document at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: He said, "I have in my hand a letter." I am raising a point of order.

Mr. VENIOT: I have the floor; it is not a question of order. The hon. member says so-and-so shall be done; I wish to take issue with him and to say it is not the rule of the house.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman has the right to raise a point of order.

Mr. VENIOT: He has; but I am not reading from the document. I am replying to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister said, "I have in my possession two letters dealing with the question of race, and generally with respect to this postmastership." He said also, "I have a letter written to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister"—and he gave the name, Passmore.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The prime minister of the province.

Mr. BENNETT: Was it not the Prime Minister?

Mr. VENIOT: No; it was the prime minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To me?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought that. And the fact that the Prime Minister transmitted the letter to the minister, and the name of the correspondent was given, ensures me the right to have it placed on the file. That is not an unfair statement of the rule.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is correct.

Mr. BENNETT: I ask the minister to do so.

Mr. VENIOT: Before referring to the letter at all—

Mr. BENNETT: It has been referred to.

Mr. VENIOT: I will not refer to it.

Mr. BENNETT: It is too late now.

Mr. VENIOT: Surely I have the same rights here as the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VENIOT: One moment. The hon. gentleman has raised a point of order and I am going to speak to it. Surely I have a right; the leader of the opposition has not all the rights in the house.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. VENIOT: Although he may think he has, he cannot put it over me in that way.

Mr. BENNETT: The point of order is under consideration.

Mr. VENIOT: On the point of order, that the minister must produce what is supposed to be his file, if I mistake not there is a ruling in this house touching that question. A case was submitted two or three years ago when a letter was put into an official file, which was supposed to have been a letter written by an hon. member of this house to a minister and not marked "personal." This house ordered that the letter be taken off the official file and returned to the personal file of the minister; which indicated that the personal file kept by the minister is not to be produced on the official file because it is only for the minister's guidance in making a decision. That ruling has been given in this house, and if I mistake not the case was referred to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. That position was taken and it is on that point of order that I—

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the fact.

Mr. VENIOT: I have no objection to laying the file on the table and I will do so.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not do it?

Mr. VENIOT: I am going to do it. The reason I did not do it before was that I was going under that order of the house. I felt I was right and I still feel that I am right. But the letters that I will refer to I will place on the table of the house. There is nothing to hide.

Mr. BENNETT: The papers were moved for.

Mr. VENIOT: I will do that; I will add it to the file. One of these letters was received from "Mr. John Evans, M.P., 305 Eleventh street, Saskatoon, December 24, 1927." My reply to him was:

I am in receipt of yours of the 24th—

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Evans' letter should be read.

Mr. VENIOT: I have it.

Mr. BENNETT: You should read that before you read the reply.

Mr. VENIOT: Very well:

I have been requested to write you regarding the unwarranted dismissals that have of late been made in the matter of county postmasters. I have in mind the particular case of Jno. C. McAdam of whom it may be said that he was dismissed without cause.

Here is a man who served overseas, was wounded and has been eight years as postmaster at La Fleche and has competently done his duty. Why was he discharged?

I am sorry to say that I am hearing over this province—

It was not the hon. gentleman; this is what he tells me he heard.

—the charge against your department that it is dominated by French Canadians who have a mania to dominate in the administration of Canadian affairs. I am frankly conveying this to you as I hate to hear it, potent as it is of racial ill-will.

May I hear from you at an early date.

John Evans.

I was absent when that was received and my secretary acknowledged receipt; and on my return it was brought to my attention. I replied:

I am in receipt of yours of the 24th ultimo re the postmastership at Lafleche, in the electoral district of Willow Bunch, in which you claim the postmaster was dismissed without cause.

In reply I beg to say that sufficient cause was found to warrant me in retiring this official.

I note your very pert reference to my department being dominated by French Canadians. To this I must take decided objection. Your reference to such a rumour shows that those who started it could only be actuated either by ignorance of the facts or narrowness of thought. I am myself a Frenchman and feel that I can truly boast of never having allowed, during a long life of public service, any racial or religious feelings to thwart my judgment in reaching a decision.

To show you that no such feelings existed in present case, let me point out that when Mr. Adams was retired a Mr. Bilodeau, a Frenchman, was recommended as acting postmaster by the English-speaking member of Willow Bunch. When the permanent appointment was asked there were five candidates, four of whom I think were French. Thomas Scott received the appointment from the commission and I accepted it, notwithstanding I could have refused the certificate. Scott refused to accept the appointment, but before asking the commission to issue another certificate I received an application from E. L. J. Joycoch. Although this was received late, I requested the commission to consider the application. I need not have done so, and if this department were dominated by French Canadiens, as you insinuate, I would not have given this Englishman a chance.

That was the letter I wrote. The other letter to which I referred was addressed to the Prime Minister, and was signed by a gentleman named W. J. Passmore. The Prime Minister's secretary, no doubt on behalf of the Prime Minister, sent me an extract from this letter and desired to know the circumstances connected with this case.

Mr. BENNETT: Would my hon. friend read the letter, the reply to which he is now reading.

Mr. VENIOT: I have not that letter.

Mr. BENNETT: I think perhaps the letter was written in reply to a telegram, was it not?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, I have the letter here. It says:

In reply to your letter of March 22, regarding the dismissal of Mr. McAdam from his position of postmaster in Lafleche.

You inform us that Mr. Bilodeau was appointed by the Civil Service Commission, owing to Mr. Scott's refusal to accept the position, but you do not say why a non-resident of Lafleche recommended by the Gravelbourg Liberal Association should get the preference over local applicants.

Mr. Bilodeau does not hesitate to admit that he received his appointment through the representations of the Gravelbourg Liberal club, over the heads of many resident applicants.

If you care to order an investigation you will find that Mr. Scott, as a returned soldier himself, refused to accept the post office appointment here because of the injustice meted out to Mr. McAdam and because he felt as we all do, that no one else but Mr. McAdam was entitled to the position when nothing detrimental had been proven against him, either as a citizen or as postmaster.

You state that Mr. McAdam had been removed from office through the representations of the member for this constituency. We all know that our member, Dr. Donnelly, must have been grossly misinformed regarding Mr. McAdam's political activities by some prejudiced persons, for ample proof can be brought forward that he (Mr. McAdam) remained absolutely neutral in all political campaigns.

In conclusion, I wish to say that this ill-considered act will take every English speaking vote from the Liberal party if it is not remedied. The G.W.V.A. will make it known over the entire Dominion, as a glaring example of French Canadian domination in politics. It has already spread over all of southern Saskatchewan, and is causing serious friction between the two peoples in this province.

I wrote to the Prime Minister giving him the information, and went on to state there was no petition received by the department from this Liberal association recommending the appointment of Bilodeau, and that the only recommendation for the dismissal of the late postmaster was that of the hon. member sitting for the constituency. Since it has been decided that these letters should go on the original file, I will put them there, but I still believe I have not the right to bring them within the rules of the house.

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I ask a question? If I were to write the minister a letter such as this, would he dismiss the postmaster?

Mr. VENIOT: If the letter is with regard to your own county I will act upon it.

Mr. BENNETT: I trust the minister realizes that if these letters had been upon the file all this waste of time would have been unnecessary.

Item agreed to.

Post Office—outside service—salaries and allowances—further amount required to hereby adjust the salaries of former permanent post office employees who were dismissed from the postal service on account of their participation in the postal strike of 1919, and who have since been re-employed and are still in the service, such adjustment to give the employees the benefit of the salary they would have received had they re-entered the service in the class equivalent to the one in which they were formerly placed, and also of the salary revisions of 1919 and 1924, in which they would have participated had they remained in the service, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $115,000.

Purchase of rural mail boxes—further amount required, $40,000.

Mail service by air and land conveyance, including rural mail delivery—further amount required, $150,000.

Mr. THORSON: I hope the leader of the opposition will display towards the employees of the post office at Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Calgary and Vancouver who will be affected by this vote those elementary principles of justice with regard to which he spoke so eloquently a short time ago. I feel that there has been a good deal of misrepresentation with regard to this vote and a great deal of misunderstanding as to what is meant by it.

I do not propose to discuss the Winnipeg strike or the merits of that strike, but I think it well that certain facts be placed before the committee so that the situation may be properly understood. In 1919 the postmen in western Canada belonged to an organization called the Amalgamated Postal Workers, which organization, as far as Winnipeg was concerned, was affiliated with the Trades and Labour Council of that city. When the strike of 1919 was called on May 15 of that year the Amalgamated Postal Workers went out with the other unions affiliated with the Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg.

I do not propose to discuss the causes of that strike, nor its merits, because, in my opinion, neither question is involved in this particular vote. Whether the strikers were right or wrong is not involved in the consideration of this particular item. On the 24th of May, after the strike had been in progress for some nine days, the postal workers received an ultimatum from the Dominion government to this effect:

To-day voluntary workers are temporarily taking the posts that these people have left. The government announces that those returning before twelve o'clock noon on Monday the 26th inst. will be accepted, and that all failing to resume their duties by that hour will be definitely refused thereafter a place in the federal service. Commencing at the above stated hour new employees will be engaged on the usual permanent basis.

I ask the committee to give special consideration to that feature of the ultimatum which threatened the striking employees that they would never thereafter be employed in the federal service.

In the fall of 1919 the government receded from the position it had taken when this ultimatum was delivered. Their decision was rendered necessary by the circumstances existing in the Winnipeg post office at that time. The government decided that they would take back the striking postmen as vacancies occurred, under certain circumstances which I think ought to be indicated. These were as follows:

The reappointment of the striker must have the approval of the governor in council:

On reappointment, the striker must give satisfactory assurances that there will not be a repetition of the offence:

The striker must pass the ordinary Civil Service Commission examination and he must commence anew in the service.

These regulations have been in force since the fall of 1919 or the spring of 1920. There were 416 permanent employees and 267 temporary employees dismissed by order in council for failing to return to work after the ultimatum had been issued. I would draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the ultimatum was delivered on Saturday, a public holiday, and required the return of the workers by twelve o'clock on the following Monday. There have been a number of ex-strikers retaken on the staffs of the various post offices. There are now seventy-two ex-strikers on the staff of the Winnipeg post office, two at Saskatoon, nine at Calgary and four at Vancouver. When these men were taken back into the government employ they were put on the jobs they formerly held; they were required to do work which they had been doing prior to their dismissal consequent upon going out on strike. These men were experienced in the work of the post office; they had training and they had shown themselves to be competent men. The figures will show that at the time of their going out on strike, their average length of service was seven years. That is, the majority of the men who are now in the service of the government had put in, at the time of their dismissal, seven years service with the government. They had training and experience in post office matters.

When these men were taken back they were put on their old jobs. Those who had been sorting mail, were put back at sorting; those who had delivered mail, were put back on delivering; those who had been supervisors, were put back at supervising, and those who had been clerks, or had served in capacities requiring experience, were put back in those positions as vacancies occurred. But when these men were taken back they were paid as postal helpers, the lowest grade known to the post office, and some of them are still being paid as postal helpers. The Dominion government has taken advantage of their training, of their experience, and of their services in the respective classes to which they belong, and yet has only paid them as postal helpers. There is one case in the city of Winnipeg of an ex-striker holding a position as supervisor, and having under him four or five men who were not strikers. The four or five men under him were receiving the maximum salary while the supervisor, being an ex-striker, was receiving the salary of a postal helper.

I would not approve of this vote if it justified the strike in any way. I think there has been a good deal of nonsense spoken with regard to the strike. I think at this time we can view the strike and what happened very calmly and dispassionately. It has not been suggested that this item involves a justification of the strike; it does no such thing. If it involved a justification of the strike I would not have approved of it. The men who have been taken back have freely admitted that they were badly advised in going out on strike, and they have undertaken that there will be no repetition of the occurrence in so far as they themselves are concerned. This proposal does not involve the reinstatement of striking employees; it does not involve the restoration of seniority right. It is necessary to keep faith with the men who took the places of the strikers, and no man who is now in the Winnipeg post office or in any of the post offices affected by this vote is going to lose any rights of seniority. He will not be prejudiced in any way, and he will not lose the position he occupies. While it is necessary to keep faith with the men who occupied the places of the ex-strikers, it is also necessary that this committee and the parliament of Canada should recognize the great principle that services should be paid for according to their value. That is all that is involved in this vote, namely, that we should pay these men in accordance with the services which they rendered to the post office. Nothing else is involved in this vote except the preservation and application of that great principle and those who have been advocating that this be done, have done so with a desire to see applied to these men the elementary principles of justice of which the leader of the opposition spoke this afternoon. This is not a justification for the strike.

Mr. MANION: It is a palliation.

Mr. THORSON: It is not an attempt to reinstate the rights of seniority that were forfeited and lost through going out on strike. The sole and only purpose of this vote is to pay the striking employees of the post office who are back again in the public service in accordance with the value of the services which they were rendering. It is not giving them something to which they are not entitled. They have already earned what it is now proposed to pay them. There is a great principle involved. Since the Dominion government has taken these men back into the government service, the Dominion government should pay them in accordance with the value of the services rendered. I could quite well understand the position that might be taken that the Dominion government should never take these men back. That would be a perfectly understandable position to take and there would be some justification for it. But once having taken these men back into the public service, and having used their services, the Dominion government should follow the example of other employers and pay these men according to the value of their services.

Mr. BENNETT: It perhaps will clarify and simplify the discussion to ask: Are they not being paid according to the terms of the contract of their employment when they went back?

Mr. THORSON: I am glad the leader of the opposition has asked that question. It is a pertinent question to ask. But let me answer it by asking him another question. Many of these men had been in the service of the Post Office Department for ten or fifteen years; they were not fitted or qualified for other kinds of work; there was an odium attached in the city of Winnipeg to all ex-strikers, and they found it difficult to get employment. I ask the leader of the opposition whether it was a fair offer to these men to say to them: We will take advantage of your services; we will take advantage of the fact that you have been for many years in the service of the Post Office Department; but we will make the best bargain with you that we can, and we will take you back as apprentices?

Mr. BENNETT: What was the bargain?

Mr. THORSON: I have been attempting to indicate the bargain and I have already indicated to the committee the terms upon which the men were reemployed. But what I am saying with respect to that is that that was a very unfair condition to attach to the reemployment, because it was taking advantage of the situation in which the men were placed.

Mr. BENNETT: Who put them there?

Mr. THORSON: It took advantage of the situation in which the men were placed. The Dominion government is the only employer of labour that has acted in that particular way.

Mr. BENNETT: I have a telegram saying that the opposite is the case.

Mr. THORSON: Let me continue with my argument. Other employers of labour have in some instances refused to take back striking employees. That is a perfectly understandable position to take, but when they did take them back they paid them at the current rate of wages. If, for instance, an iron master took back a mechanic, he paid him the wages that were payable to a mechanic. He did not pay him the wages that an apprentice would receive; he paid him as a mechanic and not as an apprentice. But the Dominion government, taking advantage of the position in which the men were placed, stated that they would take them back only as apprentices. Yet when they did take them back they put them in positions that they had formerly occupied; they used their services, their training, their experience. The suggestion that is made in this vote is that even at this late date justice should be done and the men should be paid in accordance with the value of the services rendered by them.

And Mr. Speaker having resumed the chair.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): A number of hon. members have been inquiring as to the amount of remaining business. We have made fairly good progress and it should be possible, without unduly circumscribing the discussion, to conclude this evening. But that will depend, in part, I think on the attitude adopted with respect to private bills. I have been advised by those who are promoters of these bills that they would like to have them brought to a vote immediately if that is possible. If it is not agreeable and there is going to be opposition to the bills to the extent of having them talked out during the hour assigned to the dicussion of private bills it might be as well for the house to know this at the beginning rather than at the close of the hour, and thereby save an hour which is very precious at this stage of the session. I would therefore mention to hon. members that when the house reconvenes this evening, I will ask formally if there is objection to a vote being taken immediately on these bills and I will also ask whether, in the event of a bill being brought forward in the regular order, there is likely to be protracted discussion. In the event of objection being registered by hon. members, rather than have a protracted discussion with nothing in the end to gain, I will ask that the measures stand.

Mr. GARDINER: I might just as well inform the Prime Minister that there will be objection to those bills coming to a vote. They will be debated.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is my hon. friend speaking for others as well as himself when he says that?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I may inform the Prime Minister there are a number in this corner who propose to speak on those bills and they will probably occupy the hour.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If that be the case and if the bills are to be talked out, we might, unless the house thinks otherwise, have an understanding that the bills will be allowed to stand and that after recess we shall proceed immediately with supply.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In that event may I ask hon. members if it will be agreeable to them to come back at seven or shortly after seven?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Seven o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: I will not stand in the way, but I think 7.30 would probably be better.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As the leader of the opposition thinks 7.30 might be better, shall we agree on 7.30?

Mr. BENNETT: I will not stand in the way.

Mr. KENNEDY: Shall we continue with this estimate of the Post Office department?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then if the house is agreeable, I would suggest that we meet at 7.30.

Mr. GARDINER: We are quite willing to come back at 7.30 provided it is understood that private bills will stand, and that we shall go on with supply.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That will be the understanding.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at seven thirty o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

PRIVATE BILL LEGISLATION—RULES AND PROCEDURE

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before we leave private bills I desire to say I cannot but think that matters so vitally affecting the business life of Canada as some of these bills do should not be dealt with as they have been by this House of Commons. I have a very strong conviction about this matter, but I have not expressed myself before with respect to it. I do not think it is conducive to public appreciation or respect for parliamentary institutions that what took place this afternoon should recur, that a small group, because they say they will talk a bill out, should be able thus to prevent a vote being taken upon the merits of the measure.

I do not propose in any sense to express an opinion with regard to the bills, but I do say we must in some way amend our rules or modify our procedure to prevent that situation recurring. It is bad for the country, it is bad for parliament, and it is worse for the commercial community whose interests may be affected. I have not a word to say in criticism of those who do not approve of measures and desire to discuss them, but a minority of twenty or twenty-five should never be able to prevent a vote being taken and the will of the house recorded. If this house is in favour of the legislation it should have the opportunity to so declare; if the house disapproves, there should be an opportunity afforded to so record itself.

I venture to make these observations at the end of this session because I have not heretofore said anything with respect to the matter. I do hope we may be able to arrive at some method by which a recurrence of the situation may be prevented. I realize that initially the trouble was in terminating private members' days too speedily; but that was the fault of the house itself, and in no sense was the administration to blame. But I do think that if my friend the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) had determined that we should have the power to vote, there never was a case in which the powers of closure would have been more salutary, nor the invitation to use them would have been more properly acted on than in these cases.

Right. Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with my hon. friend that closure should have been introduced with respect to private legislation, but I heartily agree for the most part with his other remarks. I may say that the government as a whole are entirely of his view that there may be a necessity to amend the rules so as at least to enable the promoters of private bills to have them determined one way or the other by this parliament.

May I say in reference to my hon. friend's remark as to what took place just before six o'clock, that that is only the last act in the drama.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The worst sinner of all is the one who is at present sitting immediately behind my hon. friend and who is one of his supporters. I think he has taken up more time of the house in obstructing votes on private bills than has been taken up by all the other members put together. I am referring to my hon. friend from Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church).

Mr. BENNETT: I would not say it is quite as bad as that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I certainly think the rules of the house should be so amended that when a private bill has been fully discussed and hon. members have had ample opportunity of knowing the arguments pro and con there may be a speedy decision one way or the other.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I desire to take exception to the remarks of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). He intimated that something disgraceful took place just before adjournment at six o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that; pardon me.

Mr. GARDINER: I merely stated to the Prime Minister when we were considering the business for this evening that I knew there were sufficient members who wished to discuss private bills now on the order paper to more than take up the hour between eight and nine o'clock. I am not going to recede one iota from the position that members must at all times have full opportunity to lay their views before the house and before the country, with respect to any measure, private or otherwise.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

An hon. MEMBER: All members should have that opportunity.

Mr. GARDINER: It is true we may require some amendment of the rules. Personally I should like to see all bills come to a vote and the members of this house supporting legislation that is not in the interests of the people made responsible for their vote. I have no desire to block legislation nor do I think have any of the members who are associated with me. But, sir, if we are going to make it easier for private legislation to get through this house, then I submit that when we are amending the rules we should see to it that private members are given an opportunity to introduce legislation which is required by the people. but which governments do not seem to care to introduce.

I regret the occurrence that took place, and possibly because of what has transpired during this session amendments to the rules will be made next session so that legislation will be passed, or at least the house will get an opportunity to express its opinion upon it.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) must have misunderstood me. I did not use, nor did I suggest the use of, the word "disgraceful" with reference to what has taken place; but I did say it was not consistent with the dignity of the house that private bills should not be considered because there were members who said they proposed to talk out the hour, and it would be impossible to reach a vote at this late date after we had sat several months.

Mr. GARDINER: I accept my hon. friend's explanation; it is quite satisfactory. I would say, further, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation now on the order paper has been discussed by members of all groups in this house, and I do not think it is altogether fair for my hon. friend to say that twenty or twenty-five members in this corner of the house were to blame.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say in your corner of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Private bills being exhausted the house will resolve itself into committee of supply.

SUPPLY

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Vote 519, supplementary estimates.

Post office — outside service — salaries and allowances—further amount required to hereby adjust the salaries of former permanent post office employees who were dismissed from the postal service on account of their participation in the postal strike of 1919, and who have since been re-employed and are still in the service, such adjustment to give the employees the benefit of the salary they would have received had they re-entered the service in the class equivalent to the one in which they were formerly placed, and also of the salary revisions of 1919 and 1924, in which they would have participated had they remained in the service, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $115,000.

Purchase of rural mail boxes—further amount required, $40,000.

Mail service by air and land conveyance, including rural mail delivery—further amount required, $150,000.

Mr. THORSON: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to occupy the time of the committee very much longer. The hon. leader of the opposition put certain questions to me with regard to the conditions under which the striking postmen had been readmitted to employment. The position which I suggest should be taken in regard to that is that these men were not able to choose between employments. They were quite ready, from the fact that they had not been employed and had not been able to get employment, to take any employment that offered, no matter what terms were imposed. But, Mr. Chairman, the position I take is this. The condition that these men should be paid as new men seems a very unfair condition to attach to their reemployment; that condition now should be changed and full justice should be done these men. They should be paid in accordance with the value of the services rendered. Every other employer who has taken back into his employ men who went on strike has paid these men full value for their services; the Dominion government has been the only exception to that rule, and I suggest that it is not too late for this government to remedy the injustice which was done. These men who went on strike and who have been reemployed by the Dominion government were not vicious men; a large number of them were returned soldiers and they had all contributed their share to the patriotic fund and had done their part in looking after the welfare of the returned men. They had performed their duties conscientiously and well. Perhaps they were misled, but at any rate they have promised that they will not take part in a strike of this nature again, so there is no danger of a recurrence of the trouble in the future. Many of these men lost their homes and their savings before they were re-admitted into the service for which they were trained and for which they were well qualified.

This request that justice be done these men does not come from them alone; it has the support of many bodies and groups of men. The Winnipeg postal group, by a very large vote, have endorsed this proposal, although only a small portion of that group are ex-strikers; the Amalgamated Civil Servants of Winnipeg have also endorsed the suggestion, as have the executive of the Canadian Legion in that city. This is not a new proposal in the history of Canada. There are precedents for the suggestion now made, precedents which were just and which we should follow in this case. In 1924 the postmen of Toronto went out on strike; they were sent an ultimatum similar to that given the Winnipeg strikers. Then they were dismissed and told that they would not be reemployed. However, they were reemployed on the same terms as those offered to the Winnipeg strikers, as vacancies occurred and as new employees. In 1926 the Dominion government realized the justice of their claim and reinstated them, going further than it is now proposed to go and giving them their back pay, recognizing the justice of that procedure. It would be interesting to know the attitude of the leader of the opposition in connection with this proposal and to know whether his attitude is shared by some of his colleagues. I am sorry the hon. member for Fort William is not in his seat; I have been told that when he was touring Manitoba during the last election he met a group of these men. They placed their case before him and he expressed sympathy with their application. They told him about the Toronto strike and what had been done there, and I am told that on that occasion after hearing their representations he stated that if the Conservatives were returned to power and if he remained Postmaster General he would be prepared to treat them as the striking postmen in Toronto had been treated. If I am incorrectly advised I hope the hon. member will put me right.

I make this suggestion because I believe it to be just and proper; I believe if we adopt it we will remedy a wrong which has existed in Winnipeg for a long time and heal a sore which has been festering for years. No one is being prejudiced; no justification of the strike is involved; we are merely recognizing the fact that the Dominion of Canada should pay these men according to the value of the service rendered. I suggest that this committee adopt this item so that now, after this long lapse of time, justice may be done and a fitting end written to one of the most distressing chapters in the history of Winnipeg.

Mr. BENNETT: Nine years ago last April a delegation of Winnipeg postal employees representing the entire body of men employed in the post office of that city visited Ottawa, the capital of Canada. They met a delegation of the then cabinet. They were asked as to their grievances and they indicated slight changes which they desired to have made in the terms of their employment. Their wishes were met in full and when they left this city to return to Winnipeg they left behind them letters of thanks directed to the ministers in question, thanking them for the courteous way in which they had been received and for the willingness shown by the government of the day to meet every just claim they had to make. They stated that they had no complaints of any kind to make with respect to the terms of their employment, the conditions of their service or their relation to their employers, who were the people of Canada.

Just about a month thereafter some 480 of the Winnipeg postal employees left their employment; they left without notice; they left without providing substitutes; they left without any personal grievances or any complaints as to their service or the conduct of their employers. They left the service of the state in violation of their oaths of office as public servants of the Dominion of Canada, and the reason they gave for leaving the public service were that a strike had been called by certain men in that city, and an effort was being made to establish a Soviet form of government in Winnipeg. An additional reason given was that some of them were compelled by intimidation to leave their employment.

Let us consider just what that means. If we can only approach this matter in a spirit somewhat different from that of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat after endeavouring to make political capital out of it, I think perhaps it would be more to the advantage of this country.

Mr. THORSON: What justification has the leader of the opposition for making that statement?

Mr. BENNETT: Just the language used by the hon. gentleman himself, and nothing more.

Mr. THORSON: I think that statement should be withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT: His language is opon to only one inference, the only inference that would be drawn by any court. He himself is a member of the profession; he assisted in the prosecution of those who originated the effort to establish a Soviet in the city of Winnipeg. He was one of the prosecuting counsel, and I ask him to say to this house whether or not he thinks the conviction obtained in one of these cases was improperly obtained? An appeal was taken to the Privy Council, which declined to allow it because, while the Privy Council only in rare cases hears appeals from criminal convictions, the lord chancellor at that time made it perfectly clear that it was apparent, after a most exhaustive statement of the case by learned counsel, that there had been no departure from the principles that govern the administration of criminal law in every part of the British Empire, in the trial and conviction of at least one of these offenders. Does the hon. gentleman who spoke this afternoon say to this house that this man was improperly convicted?

Mr. THORSON: I propose to answer that question. I made it perfectly clear to this house that if this vote had implied justification of the strike, I would have opposed it. No justification of the strike is involved in the vote. I—

Mr. BENNETT: Don't make a speech. My hon. friend knows better than to do that. He will have his chance, and I shall proceed now with my observations. I have permitted him to give an answer.

Mr. THORSON: You asked me a question.

Mr. BENNETT: I asked a question and the hon. member has answered it. He has said that if this vote involved in any sense approval of the strike he would not have supported the measure. I therefore think that if I can show to the committee that the vote does imply that very thing, the hon. member will withdraw his support of the item in the estimates. This trial having proceeded, as I have said, the conviction having been made and sustained by the court of last resort in the British Empire, we have then a just and proper conviction for an effort to establish another form of government in Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? In what way can he say that the decision of the courts in Winnipeg was upheld by the Privy Council?

Mr. BENNETT: An application was made for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The case was presented by learned counsel not only of the English but of the Winnipeg bar; and the Privy Council, after listening to the argument, indicated that there was no cause shown for hearing the appeal, and leave was refused.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Did the Privy Council listen to the argument?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentlemen who presented the case to the Privy Council is now one of the learned judges of the court of appeal of Manitoba. He presented his argument for the better part of a day. The Privy Council listened with great attention and at the end of the discussion the lord chancellor—if my memory serves me it was the lord chancellor of the day—gave judgment, declaring that no case had been made out indicating that the conviction was wrong either in law or otherwise, or that it offended the principles and canons of justice that prevail throughout the British Empire in relation to criminal cases, and therefore the conviction would not be quashed by the Privy Council.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Was it not true that refusal of the Privy council to consider the matter was based on constitutional grounds?

Mr. BENNETT: It is hardly correct to say that it was based on constitutional grounds. It was based on this large ground: that no case had been made out that would warrant interference by the Privy Council. When I say that no case was made out I mean that there was no such departure from the principles of justice that govern all criminal trials in the British Empire as would warrant interference by the Privy Council in rehearing or considering the case. In other words, what the Privy Council said, by the judgment of the lord chanceller, was that the principles of justice had been observed in the trial, that the evidence warranted the conviction, that the conviction was sound in law and therefore must stand. That was the judgment of the Privy Council. The constitutional question to which the hon. member refers is a simple one: it was whether or not the Privy Council would consider a criminal appeal. The Privy Council has considered criminal appeals and has since that time declared that where there is any departure from the principles of justice that govern all British courts in criminal trials, the case will be considered by the Privy Council. Those are the facts.

We have therefore a conviction which, to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, must appear a sound conviction. We have a conviction because an effort was made to destroy the established form of government of this country in the city of Winnipeg. In other words, an effort was made to change our government and that effort failed.

Mr. THORSON: Would the hon. leader suggest by that statement, that all who took part in the strike of 1919 in Winnipeg had that intention in mind?

Mr. BENNETT: It is hardly necessary to answer a question of that kind, and it is not expected that a lawyer will answer it. It is not expected that one of the profession would ask so simple a question.

Mr. THORSON: Answer it.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not here to give instruction in law to the hon. gentleman; it might pay for him to sit somewhere and learn a little. But I do not propose to give that instruction at the moment.

The conviction having been made because of an effort, mark you, to destroy the government of Canada in the province of Manitoba and in the city of Winnipeg, and that effort having failed, one of our citizens, was prosecuted, and convicted. It will be found in the law reports of the country. Now what relation has that to this vote?

Mr. THORSON: None.

Mr. BENNETT: It is necessary for the hon. gentleman to say none if he desires to retain his position as having a logical mind. However, I shall show that it has a very direct bearing on the matter. Let us bear in mind my opening observation: 480 men who had no direct grievance of their own, had left the postal service of Canada without notice, in violation of their oath. They left, not because they had any grievance of their own, because they admitted they had none. But citizens one of whom was subsequently convicted as I have indicated, were endeavouring to establish another form of government in Canada, a soviet in the city of Winnipeg. The government was confronted with that situation—a complete tie-up in the postal service. What does it mean to the commercial life of Canada and to the domestic life of our citizens to have a complete postal tie-up? Business was paralyzed, the postal service was discontinued, no deliveries made of letters to homes. The people were without communication so far as the postal service was concerned—absolutely without it. The government of the day permitted that condition to continue, urging as best they could, that there should be a settlement of these difficulties. Time went on; two weeks passed; and then the Minister of Labour of Canada, the Honourable Gideon Robertson,—and I think, although my memory may be wrong, the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen—went to Winnipeg. The first thing they did was, not to endeavour to coerce the postal clerks, but to ask them whether they had any grievances against this country, their employer. They admitted they had none. They were not on strike because any wrong had been done to them personally, but because they were in sympathy with those who were endeavouring to destroy the government of Canada. The relation between the conviction and the sympathy is found in the fact that that effort to destroy the government was held to be criminal, and one of them was convicted under the conditions to which I have referred. Therefore, the sympathy was for a criminal act, an act which was declared by the court of last resort to be criminal; that is clear. I think this answers the question asked by the hon. gentleman. There is the answer; it was sympathy for a criminal conspiracy, a conspiracy to destroy the government of Canada.

What did the government of the country do? Mark you, the government, after all, is but a trustee for the whole population of Canada. I was not in the house at that time, so I can speak with some freedom with respect to the matter; I was not even in politics. The position was a very simple one. Confronted with the paralysis of the postal service of Canada for upwards of two weeks; no mail; business being ruined, and homes without letters, what happened? The then Minister of Labour, and the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen on Friday gave public notice through the papers, and by personal notice, directed to all those who were concerned, through the postmaster, pointing out that the postal employees were acting in violation of their oath of public service, and the public service must be resumed. That was a clear and frank recognition that all men may act hastily, and of the influence of the mass over individuals. This was a recognition of what I believe some philosophers call mass psychology; the influence of the many over the mind of the individual. It has a clear recognition that men may act hastily and make mistakes; that they may be guilty of errors of judgment. It was not proposed to drop these employees from the public service, or to drive them out of their employment, but they were advised and notified that they would be permitted to resume their regular employment if they returned to work on or before the following Monday. They were invited to meet the postmaster and the Minister of Labour at a stated hour on Sunday to discuss the question, in case the employees had any complaint to make with reference to their own matters. That is a summary of it. What could be fairer than that? Could anything be fairer? Would any man suggest that that is not a frank recognition of the weaknesses of human nature and a possibility of the influence of mass mind upon the single individual? I think every member of this committee will agree that that was a fair position to take. On Sunday eighty-two of the employees met the postmaster and Minister of Labour, and all of them reported for duty on the succeeding Monday, and were reinstated without discrimination. Could anything be fairer than that? Would any hon. gentleman ask that his own relatives or friends be treated more fairly than that? It was a recognition of a difficulty and the recognition of the possibility of hasty action with an opportunity for repentance: Come back and go to work. Eighty-two went back on Monday and the rest remained away from their job.

An hon. MEMBER: From their duty.

Mr. BENNETT: From their duty, yes. Advice having been given on the preceding Friday that if they did not desire to come back they would be dropped from the service, on Monday those who did not so report were dropped from the service of the country and they were no longer employees of Canada.

Their places were filled as far as possible. Some 250 returned soldiers went to work and the postal service was renewed. It was badly crippled and sadly paralyzed, but in time order was brought out of chaos and the service was fairly established. It is only fair to say that a number of those who did not go back to work resented that others were prepared to take their places, and they made some little effort to prevent them discharging their duty in delivering mail. However, that led to no serious condition, although there were certain threats indulged in, threats that are always incident to a tie-up such as this, but no serious results followed. Order was brought out of chaos and the strike failed. The soviet form of government was not established in Winnipeg and the institutions of the country were saved. This was brought about to some extent, through the efforts made by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, in the legal knowledge he brought to bear upon the prosecution of the offenders. His knowledge and training as a lawyer helped and assisted in the securing of a conviction against some of them.

Then what was the position? A reaction set in; reactions always follow in matters of this kind. There were efforts made to induce the government to permit these men to go back to their old positions, regardless of what had transpired. If the government had yielded readily to the pressure brought to bear upon it, it would have been unworthy of being a government; it would have been unworthy of supporting the prosecution carried on by the hon. gentleman as a lawyer. But the government adhered to its policy, although in the filling of vacancies that arose from time to time in the postal service of Winnipeg, they made an exception in giving preference to postal employees who had not been guilty of any open acts of violence. Ultimately a very large number of old employees found employment. I think this is a fair summary, and I think my hon. friend will say it is a fair statement of what transpired.

Mr. THORSON: With some exceptions.

Mr. BENNETT: There may be some exceptions.

Mr. THORSON: Very serious ones.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course, the hon. gentleman has had a much wider knowledge of the circumstances than I have. I only have them from reading the law reports and the reports in the press and the memoranda issued from time to time with respect to the situation that developed. But it is sufficient to say that a very substantial number of the four hundred who did not go to work that Monday following the opportunity given to them, subsequently found employment by reason of there being vacancies in the postal service in Winnipeg which they filled.

The question is, in what capacities were they employed; what was their contract of service; did they go back to their old positions or did they go in as new hands? The hon. gentleman stated this afternoon and, from my reading, correctly, that they came back as new hands, as those who had not formerly been in the public service. They came back just as, to my knowledge, some twenty-five or so conductors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company came back to the service during the last two years, after they had been dismissed.

Mr. THORSON: Were the Canadian Pacific conductors taken back as wipers, or anything of that sort? Were they not paid as conductors?

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. They went back as conductors having lost their pension rights and their seniority as employees of the company.

Mr. THORSON: They were not paid as apprentices.

Mr. BENNETT: Some of them, because there were no vacancies for conductors, came back as brakemen although they had formerly been old and trusted conductors. The same situation obtains in this case. It is not fair to talk about wipers or engineers or anything else in this matter. The question is to determine what the contract made by the country was with those who came back to work. There is an axiom of law that was, I am sure, invoked by the hon. gentleman in his prosecution, namely, that every man must be fairly presumed to contemplate the result of his own actions and when the opportunity for repentance is given and not availed of, the law no longer looks upon grown men as infants but looks upon them as men of understanding able to appreciate their conduct and actions. Therefore when they chose not to repent, but rather to defy constituted authority and to throw their lot in with those who desired to destroy our country and its institutions, they must have understood what the natural and logical result of that action would be. They took the chance; they declined the invitation, and at least one or two hon. gentlemen on this side of the house will perhaps at this moment be recalling the language of a great American poet who said:

> Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
> In the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side;
> Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BENNETT:

> Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right.
> And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

That is carried, I have no doubt. The law attributes to these postal employees that knowledge, that intelligence, that power of determination, that power of choice by which they declined the invitation of the country notwithstanding their violation of their oaths of office, notwithstanding the weakness that had yielded to the influence of their tempters who would destroy the government of Canada. They said: We choose to remain out; we choose to throw our lot in with the strikers; we choose to throw the power of our numbers and influence in with those who, if they had succeeded would have destroyed constitutional government in Winnipeg. They failed and when the strikers failed and the strike failed they came back for employment. But they came back too late. That is all this case is.

My hon. friend put this case. He said: Other employers take back their people and give them positions. Let us admit all that. That has nothing at all to do with this case. This is the body politic fighting for its life. This is the nation fighting for its existence. This is the struggle between constituted government and bolshevism. It was a struggle between the municipal institutions at Winnipeg and the soviet form of government and that was the case put by my hon. friend in his prosecution. He may not have put it in those words, but that is the case he put and that is the case upon which a conviction was made. Now we are asked to do what? This parliament, which is not like an ordinary employer, which provides its oath of office for those who are its employees, which protects all the citizens, which makes the laws, the criminal laws, and provides in part for their administration, within the province, it is true, and under provincial jurisdiction, is now asked to say that those men who went back to work afterwards shall be placed in the same position so far as their employment is concerned as if they had never gone out on strike. We are asked to vote $115,000 to do that. The letter carriers may have insufficient pay; the railway mail clerks may be badly paid; but $115,000 is to be raised by the taxpayers of Canada to provide for additional compensation to those who left the service and declined to return under the conditions I have mentioned.

That is the case and that is a case to which I am opposed and to which I think most thoughtful citizens are opposed. You may curry favour for a moment with men by adopting the position that you are the champion of their cause; that you are going to see that they are placed in the position which they do not now enjoy; but within their hearts they themselves know that they have not been treated unjustly or unfairly. I have talked with some of them. I have talked with one of them who came from the old province of New Brunswick and who is now in California. He belonged to a very ancient family in New Brunswick. He fought in the Boer war. He lost his position; he yielded to the importunities of those who would induce him to relinquish allegiance to the state. He gave up his position; he went on strike without a grievance. He could not get back his position and he is still without it. He left Canada, and in the conversations that I have had with him I have never heard him say for a single moment that he did not deserve the punishment that he received for his action.

Is the House of Commons to put a premium upon this sort of thing? Are we prepared to say that those who do this shall be rewarded? You say: Ah, well, these men are receiving a very small wage. Some of them have never risen from the position they first occupied. Some of them are still in the position in which they were originally and have made no progress upwards. Perhaps half of them in Winnipeg and Calgary have risen to the position which they formerly occupied and are receiving the salary which they were receiving at the time they left the service of the state. Others have not. It is too bad that this is so; but justice is blind; justice is concerned not only with the offender but with the body politic against which the blow was struck. The criminal courts, as was said this afternoon, are not there to punish persons vindictively; they are not instruments to enable one man to effect an evil purpose against another. But the criminal courts are established in this country for the purpose of enabling the rights of all the citizens to be enjoyed without impairment and without destruction by any man. These men, when they took their choice, when without any personal grievance they left the service and declined to go back, contemplated all that and justice to those who remained, justice to those who went back and justice to the people of Canada demands that we shall not interfere; that the logical and inevitable results of what men have done shall visit them in all their conduct. There is not one of us who does not appreciate and understand that. Now we are asked to interpose the strong arm of the state beeween cause and effect. The cause was there. The effect was there. We are now asked that the state shall remove the effect. I cannot agree to that.

The city of Calgary which I represent has sent me telegrams and letters with respect to this matter. I have received them from Vancouver and from other places.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the hon. member say that the city of Calgary has sent telegrams?

Mr. BENNETT: Not as a municipal body, if that is what my hon. friend means.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is what I am asking about. What body in Calgary was it?

Mr. BENNETT: The board of trade.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The board of trade is the city of Calgary in the hon. gentleman's opinion.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the most representative body in the city of Calgary. The young and old men's board of trade is a representative body. If I had said citizens, I would have more nearly expressed my meaning. I did not intend to convey the view that the municipal body had passed resolutions or had taken any action in the matter, if that is what the hon. gentleman means. I desire to make it perfectly clear that that is not what was in my mind.

I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that under the circumstances I have described this government would not precipitate this discussion nine years after the event, and in the last hours of a dying session, but if it keeps this house in session for many hours I at least cannot become a party to it. I can only voice my protest against it. To some people the securing of votes seems more important than anything else in the world. But I believe that the great mass of the labour people in this country with whom I come in contact, the men with whom I have discussed it, the men in the service of the railways, who have had similar punishment meted out to them when they committed an offence against their regulations, feel that these men in Winnipeg understood what the results would be and they accepted them as part of the trials of life; they were warned, and understanding the consequences, they took the chance, and the chance having failed, we are now asked to say that they shall be put in the position they would have been in if they had succeeded. Surely the government cannot seriously mean that. They cannot seriously ask us to do it. It is not analagous to the case in Toronto. That case is entirely different. In Toronto it was not a sympathetic strike. It was a strike of the postal workers because of their own grievances, not the grievances of somebody else. The postal workers struck because they had been injured. Believing they could not secure what they wanted in any other way, they struck, and the government of the day thought that they were right in the strike, and gave them back their positions. It was not a case of a man striking in sympathy with somebody else, not a case of striking even for some imaginary grievance. In Winnipeg the strike was an endeavour to destroy constituted authority. If the Toronto strikers had done that, the government would not have intervened. I know the minister who intervened in that regard, and he intervened properly, because their grievances were just, and he gave them back their positions, and gave them the benefits to which they would have been entitled, and additional benefits.

There are other matters in this connection which I shall reserve to bring up as the debate proceeds. I have outlined the considerations that govern me in determining what my attitude shall be in connection with this question.

Mr. HOWDEN: I dislike very much to detain the house at this time, but I come from a constituency in Manitoba and represent part of the city of Winnipeg, and I desire to put myself on record in this matter. Notwithstanding all that has been said by the leader of the opposition, I wish to associate myself with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, whose attitude I heartily endorse in this matter. The hon. leader of the opposition has said that we have taken this attitude in order to gain political kudos. I might say to him and to this house that I realize very well that the action which the government has offered to take in this matter has not met with very much favour in many districts of Manitoba and in the city of Winnipeg, and I have no hope of gaining any political influence whatever by my attitude in this matter. But I believe that this is only justice and fair play to these men.

There is a good deal that can be said on both sides. There is a good deal that can be said in support of these men, that they were not given a fair chance. They were supposed to have a meeting with the then leader of the government and the Minister of Labour, but through a miscarriage of the mails and one thing and another, the meeting was never consummated. I might say that the Prime Minister of Canada at that time and the Minister of Labour did make an arrangement to meet these men, but they never turned up at the meeting.

Mr. BENNETT: Is not the hon. gentleman mistaken? Did not the Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour meet them in the post office on Sunday?

Mr. HOWDEN: They did, but that was on the 25th of May, and the 24th was a holiday, and a Saturday, and there was no mail that day, and these men did not get word that they were expected to meet the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen and the Minister of Labour at that time, and so the meeting fell through. When they did not meet these gentlemen on Sunday, an arrangement was made that they would be met on Monday, but when the men turned up on Monday they waited in vain, because there was no Prime Minister and no Minister of Labour present. It is suggested that this is a matter of re-instatement. This is not a matter of re-instatement. The men are not being re-instated. The government that was in power at that time saw fit to re-engage these men in postal work, and it is not the suggestion or the intention of this government that these men be re-instated, but ever since that time these men who were skilled in the work in which they were engaged have been paid the wages of apprentices. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the labourer is worthy of his hire, and this country has been engaging these men, and paying them the wages of apprentices. For these reasons, I cannot see anything but fairness in the proposal that the postal workers should be paid the moneys they have earned in the past several years. I heartily concur in the attitude that has been taken by my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, there is developing a very large body of opinion in Winnipeg that, regardless of the merits of the strike, the time has come when there should be some sort of settlement of this matter, which has constituted a long outstanding grievance. There are a great many people who are to-day taking the position that the strike has been over now for some nine or ten years, and that it is time for us to forget some of the bitterness of those days, and so far as the ordinary routine work is concerned try to arrange the affairs of this country in such a way that the best work can be done by public officials. The hope of doing anything like that is absolutely shattered by such a speech as that to which we have just listened to-night from the lips of the hon. leader of the opposition. He says that there is a vital difference between the strike in Toronto and the strike in Winnipeg. He says it was quite right that the men who went out on strike in Toronto several years ago should be re-instated. I suppose that in going out they had violated their oath of office, but nothing is said about any such violation by the hon. leader of the opposition in that connection. What is the distinction that the hon. leader of the opposition makes between the two? He said that the men in Toronto went out because they themselves had a grievance, and that the men in Winnipeg went out because they had sympathy for other people who had a grievance. I wonder which is the higher type, after all. As a matter of fact, the men in Winnipeg did have grievances. They had grievances the year before; they had a strike the year before, and it had not been satisfactorily settled. Had they not had grievances they would not have been so readily appealed to as they were. I am afraid I must admit that—they could not have been so readily appealed to had they not had grievances. But if you are to make this distinction, that when a man feels injured himself he can take action, but when he feels another man is being injured and wants to help him, then his action becomes criminal—I say that is a new doctrine.

I had hoped I might not have to speak on this question, because again and again the Winnipeg strike has been dragged before this house. Personally I am not at all ashamed of my association with the workers of Winnipeg at that time, and although I was in no sense responsible for the calling of the strike, the position which I held with the workers enabled me to see something of the inside of the committee meetings that were being held at least during the last weeks of the strike. I was not there at first. I listened very closely to the evidence which was given at the trial, and I am proud to have a close personal friendship with a number of the men who were prominent in that industrial trouble.

Now, I do not like to accuse the leader of the opposition of wilfully misrepresenting things; I hope he has not done so. I should like to think he would be fair. But I do not think he could put before the country anything more fundamentally untrue and more cruel than the statements that he has made to-night. I cannot blame him, nor can I blame the country very much, for having an entirely false impression of what took place. In the first instance, the official reports were very misleading. I should like to take a minute or two to deal with them, and since the leader of the opposition has occupied a long time, I think I will follow his example even if this is the last night of the session. I cannot let these statements go as they have been presented to-night. At the outset, Commissioner Perry, of the North-west Mounted Police, went west to make inquiries into what he understood to be the industrial unrest throughout that section of Canada. He set spies on the trade unions. They listened to what the men were saying. Undoubtedly the men were interested in the great world events that were taking place, and, among others, in the Russian revolution. The men were talking quite freely about the advisability of directing their efforts in this country along lines that would more effectively solidify their ranks in order that they might be better able to bargain with their employers. Some of them spoke of the industrial revolution. Every student of history knows that that refers to the transition from hand to machine work. But these ignorant spies misunderstood the entire labour movement. I knew what was going on at that time from some of my friends who happened to be on boards of trades in western cities, but I also knew from my labour friends the real situation regarding labour. Commissioner Perry came back and made a report to the government which entirely misrepresented the situation, because his report was based on information from men who did not understand, and could not very well be expected to understand, the labour movement. That was the background.

After that there came the misrepresentations in the daily press during the strike. Relatives of mine living in Vancouver read a story in circumstantial detail of the setting up of a soviet republic on the banks of the Red river. The story was manufactured out of whole cloth, absolutely not a scintilla of truth in it, and yet it appeared in detail from the fertile pen of a Winnipeg writer.

I know several of the men who were convicted. We have not here the facilities for transforming ourselves into a court of law. The unfortunate labour people, although they raised tens of thousands of dollars to pay legal fees and get the best defence possible, have not been able to follow those who had unlimited funds in presenting their case to the public at large. We cannot discuss the details to-night, but the leader of the opposition has made some very general and very sweeping statements. I am going to make statements which I am quite prepared to substantiate, and if I could do anything to secure a fair trial for the labour people of my own city of Winnipeg, and if I could do anything to bring to trial those who succeeded in putting over one of the most dastardly conspiracies, I should be delighted and should think that I had accomplished in this house something that was worth while. I say the trials that were put on there were farcical, absolutely a travesty of justice. From beginning to end they were farcical.

Mr. BENNETT: Farcical?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, from beginning to end. The leader of the opposition referred to the effort we made to get the matter before the Privy Council. There were representations made from the law courts of this country, and the influence was such that, added to the constitutional aspects, the Privy Council did not hear the case. I think it is absolutely unjustifiable that the leader of the opposition should endeavour to give the impression that the Privy Council endorsed what was done by our courts. We raised tens of thousands of dollars, and sent Mr. W. H. Trueman, K.C., now Mr. Justice Trueman, to England. He thought he had a good case, but he could not get the trial reviewed by the Privy Council.

If I had the time to go into the details I would tell the committee how the jurors were selected. Something like three hundred men were brought in from the country—

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, it is not for me to call upon you to protect the honour of our courts against attack, but our rules of order on the subject are definite. If the committee desires that our courts should be attacked and those trials described in the language which the hon. gentleman has employed—

Mr. THORSON: I think I might speak on that question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I wish to finish my remarks. It is not a point of order. If the courts need any protection I have no doubt that the legal fraternity will flock to the rescue. I am not suggesting that my hon. friend across the way (Mr. Thorson) is attempting to do that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): Order. With reference to the remark made by the leader of the opposition, the rule is very plain.

A member while speaking must not cast reflections upon the conduct of judges of superior courts unless such conduct is based upon a substantive motion.

It is a rule of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not think I have said anything to come within that rule, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CLARK: How could a trial be dastardly and farcical?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I say it was farcical, and if I had time I could very easily show that it was.

Mr. CLARK: Was it conducted by a court of law?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. It was a trial for conspiracy, and anyone who has studied the laws of conspiracy knows what that means. Great reams of evidence were ruled out altogether. Certain laws of evidence were invoked which had come down in cases of seditious conspiracy almost unchanged from the days of the Star Chamber. Men who had known nothing whatever of others until the time they were called into the court were held responsible for actions that had taken place in the lives of those other men years and years before. If anyone cares to read these trials—and I wish I could persuade some of our legal friends to do so—they will find, in all the state trials in Great Britain, going back to the days of Lord Erskine, no more outstanding and fundamental piece of injustice than that which prevailed at the time of this strike. The leader of the opposition referred to the classical idea that justice is blind. Justice, indeed, sometimes is blind to the fundamental issues, blind to the larger affairs and to the most vital things that concern us to-day.

I want to refer for a moment to these charges made by the leader of the opposition. He says that an effort was made to establish the soviet form of government in Winnipeg; he says that the struggle was one between constituted authority and bolshevism; he says that an effort was made to destroy our country and its institutions. I realize that my own word does not go very far, but knowing my friends who were in that movement and knowing the details of the movement, I say that these charges are absolutely false. I wish to state, that fundamentally the strike was one concerning wages and forms of organization. There had been a controversy in the contract shops in Winnipeg; the iron-masters refused to recognize the unions in the form in which the men wished to organize themselves. They said, "We will treat with our own men but not with unions in which are men from the railways." That was the beginning. The right to organize was refused, a right recently conceded by the Peace treaty of Versailles. That was fundamentally the trouble. The machinists involved came to their fellow employees and talked it over indignantly. There might have been mass psychology; I suppose there was. But had we not had mass psychology thousands of people would not have gone to the war; nor should we have very much in the way of political elections unless there were mass psychology; a good many would not be returned to parliament without mass psychology. The men in the trades and labour council discussed affairs and they said: This is a fundamental principle. The right to organize is fundamental. And so they asked: What are we going to do about it? We cannot get help from the government in the matter. There was a government that was quite unsympathetic, so they said that the only thing to do was to make their protest by quitting work together. It was not at that time thought that there would be weeks and weeks of this struggle; that did not enter into the mind of anyone. They said, "We will quit work as a protest against the unjust treatment which we believe our fellows are undergoing". Among those who said they would protest in this manner were the postal workers. I say without any reservation whatever that these men who went out, the majority of them returned soldiers, had not the faintest idea of setting up anything like a soviet government in this country. I am not discussing soviet government to-night, but may I observe by the way, that soviet simply means council. The people of Russia are organized according to the council method instead of being organized and elected geographically as we are. The farmers get together and appoint their group, and the various classes of labour do the same. There is nothing so frightful about the word "soviet" when it is understood; and it has been better understood by some of those who have travelled abroad and even better by some of my own humble labour people than by many of the business and professional ranks who read the Saturday Evening Post or Toronto Saturday Night and literature of that kind, or even by those who read the official reports. Read the official reports presented by our own government about that time: absolutely without any real foundation, the most extravagant statements were put into the official government reports and widely circulated across this country. I am not blaming the majority of the people of the country for not understanding the situation; I say they have been misinformed. Further I go back to that time and note that to a large extent the people were suffering from war hysteria. The business men were talking about reconstruction, and the labour people were doing the same; but their reconstruction was not along similar lines. The labour men were hoping that out of the great turmoil of the war there would arise a better world. When then the business men undertook to refuse the primary rights of organization, can we wonder that the labour people decided to protest? And they did protest and the strike was called.

I am not going to minimize the evils of the strike; it was a serious one to the business community of Winnipeg. But again, a great deal of misrepresentation has been kept up with regard to the details of that strike. One statement I have heard most frequently is that the milk supply was cut off. What happened however, was this: when the workers found that everyone had said "We will go out in protest", they got together at the city hall and took the ground that they must maintain the essential services. They therefore asked the milk drivers to go back to their work and keep the milk wagons going. Somebody suggested that it might be thought the drivers were leaving the strike, and so it was arranged to put a card on the wagon saying, "By permission of the strike committee". The next day the business men's organization took two lines of attack. They said: "You see the strike is weakening; the men are going back". It should be said that a number of these business men had agreed to this arrangement made in the city hall; it is regrettable that they had not the honour to stand by their agreement, and Mr. Alfred Andrews and others associated with him on the citizens' committee said, "Don't you see these strikers are weakening?" And they had in another column of their paper the announcement, "We cannot even get milk without the permission of the workers. Don't you see we are in the midst of a revolution?" They worked on the excited nerves of the people, because there was mass psychology then as well as in the war. The result was that the general public were stampeded and the workers were indignant at what they conceived to be a lack of honour on the part of the business men. Consequently they said "Well, if you refuse to carry out your obligations, if you misrepresent us, we will refuse to give you milk to-morrow." I think it was a mistaken method—absolutely—although the big milk companies have often failed to give milk for one reason or another, and we have had to go without. But in my judgment it was a mistaken thing to do. Then a milk service was organized by the citizens themselves. That is the milk incident and it is fairly representative of a number of things that took place then. I do not like to go into these details, but we have had the facts repeatedly so misrepresented that it seems to be absolutely essential that something of this kind should be done.

Mr. KAISER: You are the only source of truth.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No; but I am, I hope, one source of truth. I would say to the hon. gentleman who has interrupted me that what I am saying to-night I am saying because I believe it to be true, and because I think it is in the interests of the country that some of these matters should be straightened out.

It was said that the labour people in their labour hall had a soviet to control the city. I will admit frankly that they had a tremendous power in their hands because the workers themselves, the builders, the milk drivers, the painters and machinists all said, "We are willing to have you direct our efforts." The citizens committee, which was practically an enlargement of the board of trade, said, "You have a soviet up there, you are controlling the life of this city." The real situation was this; if there was by any stretch of the imagination a soviet in the labour temple, there was also a soviet down in the board of trade rooms. Almost for the first time in the history of my own city the authority of the board of trade soviet was challenged. That meant trouble. The leader of the opposition told us to-day that he received telegrams from the city of Calgary. Naturally, one might believe that meant from the municipality, but when I asked the leader of the opposition he admitted frankly they were from the board of trade. In his judgment, the board of trade is practically the city of Calgary, and it was that very attitude that created the greater part of the difficulties in Winnipeg. The great majority of the people had looked to the board of trade to give a lead, and the board of trade had got the idea that they ran the city—as in fact to a very large extent they did. The board of trade consisted of bankers, representatives from the railways and representatives from the big industries and representative business men. This was the very same type of organization the labour people were trying to create; a soviet, if you will. The business men had their soviet, if you want to use that word.

Mr. STEVENS: Were not these bankers and so forth organized as citizens to sustain and uphold constitutional government in the city of Winnipeg?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They considered that they were organized to uphold constitutional government in the city of Winnipeg, but the constituted government which they wished to uphold was a government which allowed a few ironmasters to deny the right of the men to organize. That is what it meant in practice, a frustration of the workers ideals and the preventing them having their own representatives in parliament. The newspapers were influenced to a very large extent, and the workers had no opportunity of getting their case before the public through that medium.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Did not the workers want constitutional government?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Of course they did. That is the wretched implication that is constantly thrown out. The leader of the opposition went into a rolling series of sentences with regard to the effort to establish a soviet form of government in Winnipeg, and all this kind of thing. Yet he also stated in another connection that these men were sitting in conference discussing their grievances. Do you suppose that men who were trying to overturn the government of Canada would be sitting listening to the higher officials of the Post Office Department? Why, it is absurd. At the very time the newspapers were sending telegrams out regarding the terrible conditions in Winnipeg, Mr. A. B. Hudson, at one time a member of this house, and several gentlemen were trying to find some sort of formula which would settle the trouble with the machinists, which formed the basis of the strike, and thus settle the whole matter.

A good many of the men who were associated with the strikers were returned soldiers. Thousands of returned men just back from the front, who had been labour people before they went abroad and who had found it difficult to secure work, and learned that many of the things for which they had fought were not being worked out here in Canada, associated themselves with the workers. Do you mean to tell me that these thousands of returned men were going to attempt to overturn the government of Canada? The whole thing is preposterous.

Mr. ADSHEAD: For which they had been fighting.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: For which they had been fighting. I say the idea is preposterous, and yet these stories were spread across the country. It is quite true that the Hon. G. D. Robertson came to Winnipeg and tried to settle the strike. The trouble is he went at it the wrong way. Had he not come I have not the slightest doubt the city of Winnipeg and the province of Manitoba would have settled it in a much more satisfactory way than it ultimately was settled. But he came in his own peculiar fashion and stirred things up still more, and then he refused to receive a deputation of returned men who waited upon him; he would not let them march to the Royal Alexandra. It was that which caused the trouble that brought about the unfortunate incident in which there was shooting in the streets of Winnipeg.

Mr. MANION: Did my hon. friend say that Mr. Meighen refused to receive a deputation of returned men?

[Mr. Adshead.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It was Mr. Robertson; I did not say Mr. Meighen.

Mr. MANION: Was he informed that it was merely a deputation of returned men?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: He was informed that a procession of returned men wished to wait upon him at the Royal Alexandra, and he refused to see them. He did receive a small committee of these men, and this is what occurred so far as I am able to learn, and I was there and watching it very closely. The returned men said they were going to have a parade whether the Minister of Labour wanted it or not. They had been used to parading in France and they said they intended to have one in Canada. The labour men tried to dissuade them because they recognized the danger of such a parade on the streets at the time of public excitement. However, the returned men said they were going on with it. As a matter of fact, the parade did not even form up, but a great many people came out to see the show. It was a most regrettable occurrence; you would have thought a great circus was coming to town, and the streets were lined in every direction by curious crowds. When the time came for the parade the mayor read the riot act, and then the police came on the scene. There had been specials there who had antagonized the people by the way they had handled the crowds. There were some missiles thrown, and then there was the charge and the shooting. That is what occurred.

As I said in this house on one other occasion, if this was to be a physical revolution for the overturn of the government of this country, can you imagine for a moment that the workers would not have armed themselves? In all the investigations that were held there was not found one single gun in the hands of the workers. The idea of a physical revolution being brought about by the strikers in Winnipeg was absolutely preposterous.

I do not think I could do better, to illustrate the kind of hysteria which prevailed, even among our legal friends and the government officials at that time, than by reading a few words from some things I wrote in those days, and for which I was arrested.

An hon. MEMBER: How did they find you?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They found me when I undertook to edit a paper in the place of a friend of mine who was arrested. I knew pretty nearly what was likely to happen and it did happen. I was arrested, but generally a man is arrested on regular charges. This was one of the charges on which I was arrested:

The jurors aforesaid do further present:

4. That J. S. Woodsworth, in or about the month of June, in the year of our Lord One thousand nine hundred and nineteen, at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, unlawfully and seditiously published seditious libels in the words and figures following:

"Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed; to turn aside the need from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey and that they may rob the fatherless."

Isaiah (110:1-2)

And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat; for as the days of a tree are the days of my people; and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.

Isaiah (65:21-22)

That was sedition, according to the authorities at that time. I do not think I could give a better illustration of the positive hysteria which prevailed at that time. Do you think men could have a fair trial under those conditions? As far as the law is concerned I also call this to the attention of the leader of the opposition: My hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre, who was engaged in the prosecution of these cases, assures me that if my case had actually come to trial he feels quite confident they could have convicted me for having published these two passages.

Let me read in the few moments that remain to me a few paragraphs from the second count of the indictment:

What is the present situation? The sixth week of the strike leaves neither side in control. Both the strike committee and the "citizens" committee are determined to hold out. Neither is by any means at the end of its resources. In the ranks there is little sign of weakening. The strike may be prolonged for weeks. In the meantime the business men claim that the city is being ruined—is ruined and the workers undoubtedly will face the winter with reserves sadly depleted.

The City Council, the provincial government or the federal government have adopted no constructive policy. They stood prepared only for repressive measures.

When finally it did seem that the provincial government might effect a settlement, the Dominion government upset everything by its outrageous arrest of the strike leaders.

In the meantime, the returned soldiers are becoming restless and threatening to take things into their own hands. They are tired of the policy of "do nothing"—"keep order", so consistently followed by the strike leaders.

And a little further on:

Mediation, by a body as well equipped as any that is likely to be found, has apparently failed. There is a dead-lock.

What will happen? How will it end? Is there any possible way out?

Members, both of the strikers' committee and the citizens' committee say: "We must fight to a finish. We cannot afford to yield. If it takes three months, we will see it through," ...

I could go on through the whole of that article, which was a conciliatory article written after consultation with some of the leading business men in Winnipeg. I suggested that a commission should be appointed, and that in the meantime the work of the city should go on. I proceed to quote:

The task of such a commission would not be an easy one. The strike has revealed how widely divergent are the views of the employers and "the workers". Then, what is the alternative? A wide bridge must be found or "It's a fight to a finish," and then what?

Let us reiterate there are very reasonable men in both camps.

I said that at a time that we were all liable to be arrested; I pleaded for mediation at a time when feeling was running high. That is on record and, in passing, I would note that it is curious that that very article should have been one of those said to be seditious. I have not read it all, but any hon. member is welcome to do so.

I have not very much more time to-night. I had not thought to go into this matter at all, but the issue has been forced by the leader of the opposition. I feel that he has been misinformed; he confesses that he has read official documents and he has read the newspapers, but I think I may claim to have been a little nearer the workers. Fundamentally, however, some of the same difficulties are in existence to-day as there were in 1919. Groups of men who occupy prominent positions in the community are accustomed to running things in their own way. I have called attention in this house to the fact that we have a very few people who, through interlocking directorates, control the whole situation. They do not brook any interference or opposition, and when outsiders begin to organize the workers or the farmers immediately they are up in arms. One of the leaders in the United States said only a few weeks ago, "If you wish to damage your opponent do not begin to argue against him but call him a bolshevist; that is the easiest way." That was done in 1919, and I hope the time will yet come when we may have a chance before some impartial tribunal to bring out all of the facts in connection with that struggle.

Now I come back to the postal workers. What are we going to do? I say that a great many of the citizens of Canada have found out in the last nine years how ill-founded were their fears and how one-sided were the sources of their information. I am not trying to whitewash the workers; they may have made mistakes, but I will say that if they made mistakes there were other, much stronger powers much more lacking in the fundamentals of constitutionalism. I am not a constitutionalist, because I believe that generally you have to initiate things outside the regular lines of constitution. On the other hand I am not one who advocates violent revolution; I have said that before and I have been bitterly condemned for so saying.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): The hon. gentleman's time is up.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As I sit down I would plead for fair play for these strikers.

Mr. VENIOT: When this item was first placed before the committee of supply it was my intention to then make the statement which I wish to now make. When I saw that there was a disposition to discuss the merits of this item I thought perhaps it would not be right to make my statement at that time. Let me say here that for over a year I have given this question serious, deep thought and study. I did not recommend to the government the insertion of this item of $115,000 in the supplementary estimates without having given it serious consideration. I cannot agree with those who say that because we would recognize what I considered at that time to be an injustice we are recognizing at the same time the results which developed from the strike of 1919. I know nothing of the Winnipeg strike; I do not want to know anything about the merits or demerits of it. I considered the case as I found it, and since I find in reading the press lately and in the speeches made on the floor of this house that wittingly or unwittingly the case has been misrepresented in many respects, I think it only fair that I should be allowed a few moments to lay the case before the committee as I found it.

The statement that these men were taken back under certain conditions is true, but it is equally true that these conditions were never fulfilled. These men were taken back; they had to undergo a civil service examination in order to qualify, which examination entitled them to be placed in the lowest classification of the service. They should have been placed in that classification and given an opportunity under the merit system to work up to the higher classification which they occupied before the strike. That was not done. When they underwent the civil service examination and were put in the low classification, receiving the wages or salaries of the lower classification, to my mind they should have been kept there. When they went back into the civil service after passing that examination they were placed in a higher classification and called upon not only to do the work of the more highly classified officials which they were before the strike, but also to instruct the new men who came into the service and to help by their efforts to make the service more efficient.

Mr. DUNNING: And at a lower salary.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, at a lower salary, at the minimum salary. That is where I find the injustice, I am not going to criticize the Postmaster General or the government of that day at all. That is not my intention. I state this merely because I want the facts laid before the country so that there will be no longer any misrepresentation. The case of these men may not end here; it may come up again, and it is for that reason, finding as I have found arguments based upon misrepresentations of this case that I wish to place these facts now before the committee. There having been so much misrepresentation; there having been so much propaganda for and against taking the Winnipeg strikers back; that having been carried on for a certain number of years without anyone having had the opportunity or perhaps the courage to lay the facts exactly as they are before the people; knowing that there is still a very bitter feeling in this matter; that there is still a strong opposition in the house coming from sources where perhaps the case is not well understood; feeling that before I go further in the matter I should give the house a greater opportunity of investigating and examining into the case and not ask it to take this action at this late hour when we are about to prorogue; and feeling that this case will perhaps come up at some later date, I thought I should ask one of my colleagues to move that the vote be reduced by the amount provided for salaries and allowances, namely $115,000. But I want it distinctly understood that I am not doing so on the arguments advanced in the house to-night in that regard, because many of those arguments were not founded upon fact. I do not say that there was intentional misrepresentation; I do not wish to insinuate anything of the kind, but I have the facts before me. I may also point out that I would not withdraw from the case because of a veiled threat that this house might be called upon to sit for several days yet. I will now ask my colleague to move in the matter.

Mr. ROBB: Nine years ago, in June, 1919, a regrettable incident in the city of Winnipeg stirred and divided all the people of Canada and the bitterness of that event is yet apparent even in this parliament. This is not the first time that an item similar to this has been under consideration by the government since we assumed the responsibilities of office in 1921 and the wisdom of the government in not allowing the item to get past the treasury board and in not bringing it before parliament has been fully justified, it seems to me, by the debate we have had in the house to-night. Surely we members of parliament are not again going to divide the people of Canada by continuing a debate which had such unhappy results nine years ago. So I believe in what I intend to do I am meeting the wishes of all, even those who are supporting the pleas of the workers, and it is in the general interest of Canada that we should no longer debate this question. I gather from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) that one of the reasons for which the strikers at that time were censured was that they wanted to go on a parade. Well, this house wants to go on a parade within the next two hours over to the other chamber, so I beg to move:

That vote No. 519 be amended by striking out the item of $115,000, and that all the words from "salaries" in the first line to and including "Civil Service Act" in line 15 be eliminated from the record.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A fine example of the power of the financial soviet.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Civil government—Auditor General's office—salaries, including the Auditor General at $10,000 additional to 7-8 Edward VII, chapter 6, and contingencies, $428,715.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the Minister of Finance would not mind if I put on record a little matter that I should like him to look into. There seems to be a difference between the figures in the Canada Gazette and the figures in the Public Accounts with respect to public expenditures and income. Every month they summarize the preceding twelve months of revenue and expenditure and there is some slight difference between them. If the hon. gentleman can get an opportunity to look into the matter during the recess, I should like him to do so and we shall have a talk on the subject.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I am glad my hon. friend has reminded me of that because it will be on the record. I have noticed the discrepancy.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—to provide for salaries and expenses of the advisers engaged in tariff inquiry. Payments may be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or regulations thereunder, $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This item, I believe, includes the salaries of the tariff advisory board and I propose to move that the salary of the chairman of that board be struck out and that the item be reduced by $10,000. My hon. friend, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) need not look around to see how amply he is supported behind, because I will make the motion when the bill is before the house. I desire to make the protest now to expedite the business of the house and I will make the motion later.

Mr. GARDINER: Does this item include an amount sufficient to supply members of the house with printed copies of the evidence taken before the tariff board?

Mr. ROBB: Provision is made in this item and in one in the supplementaries for taking and printing the evidence this year.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I notice that this item states that payments may be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or regulations thereunder. Does that mean that these employees are not under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. ROBB: They are not under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. SIMPSON: I notice in an answer given by the Minister of Finance to a question asked by the hon. member for Pictou with respect to the submission of the two great steel companies to the tariff board, it is stated that some 350 other concerns had asked to be heard in that connection, and the Finance minister rather left the impression that these 350 firms were opposed to the submission of the steel company. I just wanted the minister to clear that up.

Mr. ROBB: No. Had my hon. friend been in the house when I gave the information asked for by the hon. member for Pictou, he would have observed that it was the hon. member for Pictou himself, by the form of his question, who may have left that impression. If my hon. friend will look up the record he will see that I said there were 350 odd firms who were interested in that application and wanted to be heard.

Item agreed to.

Unforeseen expenses, expenditure thereof to be under order in council, on recommendation of the treasury board, and a detailed statement to be laid before parliament within fifteen days of next session, $80,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister give us some details? I notice there is a decrease of $30,000.

Mr. ROBB: I have certain information which I shall be glad to make available to the hon. member, but which I would prefer not to put on the record, with regard to the distinguished visitors we had from overseas last year in connection with the diamond jubilee. There was a considerable expenditure owing to the number of overseas visitors.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to provide for grants to be made to the provinces of Nova Scotia, $875,000; New Brunswick, $600,000; Prince Edward Island, $175,000, pending consideration of provincial subsidies.

Mr. GARDINER: At this late hour I am not going to take any objection to this item, but I would inquire from the Prime Minister when we may expect some reconsideration of the grants to the several provinces.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is the intention of the government to give that matter consideration during the parliamentary recess, and we hope to be able to make some report next session.

Item agreed to.

Government contracts, supervision committee, salaries, including L. R. LaFleche, secretary, $6,000, and that of L. H. Beer, salvage officer, $5,000, telephones, telegrams, travelling expenses, stationery, etc., $21,500.

Mr. BENNETT: I confess that I have made very considerable efforts to ascertain just what services have been rendered to this country in this connection, in view of the purchase prices paid for goods. The Minister of the Interior yesterday, I think, misunderstood certain observations that I made. If this purchasing committee is here for any purpose, it is to check government purchases. The war purchasing committee came into being during the war, and it did very valuable work under Sir Edward Kemp as chairman, and it was felt that if it was continued it might effect a great saving to the public revenues. I confess that I have found considerable difficulty in ascertaining just what services this organization is now rendering. I would like to know just what it does.

Mr. ROBB: That is a very fair question, and I quite agree with the leader of the opposition that we might perhaps use to a greater extent the supervision of this purchasing commission. They are operating to-day in just about the same way as they operated when the body was first organized. They are running up against the purchasing agents in all the different departments, but they are doing a good work. They arrange for the transfer of supplies between the different departments; there is also the salvage department, which disposes of certain salvage. The purchases authorized amounted to $308,000; transfer of surplus goods from one department to another, $49,000; sales to the public of salvage, $124,540.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to put this on record. There is no branch of the public service in which a greater service could be rendered to this country than by a proper commission of this sort which would be the central distributing body with respect to supplies. Every great business now has a central purchasing department, and if this were done, I am satisfied that considerable money could be saved to the country; I am very certain of that from what I have myself observed. I think the Minister of Finance must have observed that their purchases have been very small, some $400,000, which indicates that they have not been doing much for $20,000 in salaries.

Item agreed to.

To assist in the suppression of the white slave traffic, $1,500.

Mr. GARDINER: What efforts are being made in this direction, and what results are expected to be acomplished from this expenditure of $1,500?

Mr. ROBB: This is a grant we give to the mounted police. I have no record of what they do with it.

Mr. SPENCER: Why is there a reduction of $1,000 in this item? It should be increased rather than reduced.

Mr. STEVENS: The morals of the country are improving.

Item agreed to.

Amount required toward defraying expenses of the Empire Parliamentary Association visit to Canada, $75,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This organization has been maintained since its inception as a non-partisan body, and its value lies in the fact that the chairman of one branch may be of one school of politics, and the chairman of another of an opposing school. This organization is coming to Canada as our guests, and there are not lacking already some indications that with respect to the selection of men who will act for the press, for instance, they are all of one political school. This opposition has certainly not been consulted. My friends to my left may have been, but we certainly have not been consulted.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say to my hon. friend that I have not been consulted either. I think each of us has reason to be offended.

Mr. BENNETT: We are in the same boat.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that the press gallery are arranging for their own representation. At all events, that I understand is what they have been asked to do, and so far as the government has to do with the matter we are quite prepared to accept whomever they may recommend.

Item agreed to.

To provide for representation at Tokyo, including salaries and allowances for Minister Plenipotentiary, secretaries, and staff, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act or any of its amendments, $50,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This had better stand for the moment.

Mr. BENNETT: I will deal with Tokyo along with the other vote. We can pass this now, and I will make the motion later.

Mr. DUNNING: A separate motion?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—to provide for the repayment to the insurance adjusters of the proceeds from a sale of cargo which was washed ashore from the steamer Brockton and regularly disposed of to the credit of the Receiver General, $2,473.73.

Mr. ROBB: This is to cover a case where some flour was picked up at one of the Georgian bay ports. It was sold and the money placed in the hands of the Receiver General. The insurers have now proved their claim, and we propose to pay them the money.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the payment of salaries and expenses in connection with the operation of the Canadian Farm Loan Act; any payment under this item to be by way of advance repayable to the consolidated revenue fund from the revenues of the Canadian Farm Loan Board as and when they accrue, $50,000.

Mr. GARDINER: The Minister of Finance might give the committee some information as to what is proposed to be done under this vote.

Mr. ROBB: In the month of April this year five of the nine provinces had passed legislation to come under the Farm Loan Act. None of them, so far as I know, have yet appointed their commissioners. As soon as the session is over we propose to take the matter up actively with them.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that the reason for the delay?

Mr. ROBB: The legislation was only passed in April of this year.

Mr. BENNETT: This will enable it to function?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. BARBER: What provinces have passed legislation?

Mr. ROBB: Speaking from memory, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia.

Item agreed to.

To provide for salaries and expenses of the advisers engaged in tariff inquiry. Payments may be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or regulations thereunder—further amount required, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What I have said in relation to the item before will apply to this also.

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—chargeable to income—Nova Scotia—Truro public building—addition, $22,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the nature of thus public building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: An addition.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—Ontario—Ottawa—purchase of property on Sussex street, $525,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, the item of $525,000 for the purchase of property on Sussex street refers to property known as the New Edinburgh mills. I wish very briefly to state certain facts, and then to submit to the government that they should give this matter further consideration before making the expenditure. In 1924 the purchase of this property was under consideration, and the government declined to proceed with it.

My point is briefly stated in the following terms. In the first place the value of the property to the government is as vacant property only. That is the only justification for buying the property. On this property there has been erected a very large and extensive concrete and brick sawmill, box factory and woodworking plant. Obviously, this plant is of no use to the government at all. Unquestionably it was a costly plant to erect, and undoubtedly there still remains in it, as a woodworking plant, a very substantial value. The value is set by two very highly qualified valuators, Messrs. H. Gale Legg and A. E. Cross. Their valuation is well done, and I have no criticism of it. Briefly stated, these are the values: Land, $135,000; buildings, $475,000; I submit to the committee, however, that the only value we should consider is the land value, not the building value, because these buildings are of little use for the purposes suggested.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the water-power value?

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot go into details, but I will say this, hydro-electric power is available in constant form so cheaply that I doubt the value of the water-power as an economical unit in connection with the matter. The assessment is $178,000 on the land and $230,000 on the buildings. In the agreement to purchase will be found the following clause, and I wish to call this particularly to the attention of the government:

> The party of the second part in consideration of the covenants and agreements hereinbefore entered into and on the part of the party of the first part to be done and performed, promises and agrees that and so soon as the parliament of Canada shall have appropriated a sufficient sum for that purpose, to accept delivery to them of the aforesaid conveyances and moveable property and take possession thereof with the lands and premises herein described, and to pay forthwith to the party of the first part the sum of $525,000. . .
> It is mutually agreed by and between the parties hereto that should the parliament of Canada not appropriate the said sum at its present session, these presents shall at the conclusion of said session become null and void and of no effect.

My point is that the property at the present time is only under option, and while it might appear that by the passing of this estimate the government was irrevocably committed, I submit it still may retire from the purchase if so desired. A further point is that a part of this property is a lease of Green island, which is the property of the government. The building referred to by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) the other day as the one to be used for the statistical bureau is on the end of Green island. I have the lease of Green island under my hand, given by this government in 1904, being a renewal of a longstanding lease. In that lease is a clause reading as follows:

> And that if the said demised premises or any portion thereof be required for any purpose which the minister may deem to be in the public interest, possession of the same may at any time during the said period be resumed by His Majesty, his successors or assigns upon six months' notice in writing by the minister to the lessee to that effect, and in no such case shall the lessee have any claim to compensation on account of damage in any way resulting from such resumption or from the determination of this demise; but that the lessee may remove, within a reasonable time, any building or buildings which belong to or which may have been erected by it on the demised premises.

In other words, there is on this island a building which it is proposed to remodel and use for the statistical branch. I submit to the minister that he need pay nothing for that as this lease protects the government in that regard.

One further word in connection with the cost. I claim, Mr. Chairman, some knowledge of this class of business. It is in the line I have followed for many years, valuating property and so on. I have examined the property carefully, having in mind the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce the other day, and I submit this: It will cost from $150,000 to $200,000 expenditure on this property to make it suitable for the purposes suggested the other day—a statistical branch and national research bureau. There is no heating provided; no sanitary accommodation; there are just concrete pillars with a curtain wall of brick. The buildings are well constructed for woodworking but are not suitable for an office or as official buildings. They are not built for that; they are not suitable for the purpose at all, and I submit to the Prime Minister and his government that it will cost more to put these buildings into shape than it would take to construct another building back of Wellington street which could better house the statistical branch and give better service to parliament. I conclude with this one observation: I think it is possible and desirable to secure the lands for the purposes of beautifying that extent of the river to Rockcliffe park. If that is in mind, the land is suitable and desirable for the purpose. But its maximum value would be under $200,000. The buildings on that property, having that use in view, are merely an incumbrance and therefore parliament is ill advised to vote $525,000 for the purchase of the property at this time.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to say just a word in answer to my hon. friend. I take it that we are on fairly safe ground in accepting his valuation of $200,000 for the land.

Mr. STEVENS: I said that was the outside; I wanted to be generous.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We will not quarrel on that point. I may say very seriously that I believe that this purchase has been made in such a way that it is unnecessary to defend it, and there is no need to quarrel with my hon. friend over a few thousand dollars. Let us take $200,000 for the land. I do not know what my hon. friend would say as to the value of the waterpowers, the boiler and all the machinery used in connection with the property. I am told on very reliable authority—and the valuations we have bear this out—that they are worth in the vicinity of $200,000.

Mr. STEVENS: That would be excessive.

Mr. GARDINER: What are you going to do with them?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are going to use them for lighting, heating and various other services.

Mr. STEVENS: You might buy the hydro-electric for one-quarter of the cost that would mean.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That would be quite impossible.

Mr. BENNETT: How many horsepower will it develop?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is generating now 800 horsepower.

Mr. STEVENS: That is the maximum; what about the minimum?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the minimum; the maximum would probably be between two and three times that amount.

Mr. BENNETT: Is the power lease sold?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Eight hundred horsepower of it was leased at $22 per horsepower. There can be no question that for the purposes for which the government require the property, these power rights and the machinery in connection with them are worth at least $200,000.

Mr. GEARY: Where do you get a maximum of two to three times your minimum?

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend wishes I will give the figures.

Mr. GEARY: Do you increase your depth some way?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps I had better make a statement to the committee: For some years the Gatineau Power Company, Limited, supplied the Ottawa Electric Company, from power house erected on these lands, with 800 horsepower at the rate of $2 per horsepower per month bringing in a revenue of $1,600 per month or at the rate of $19,200 per annum. The Gatineau Company have developed and used power up to 1,500 horsepower and it is possible that, upon further investigation, additional power could be developed at special seasons. It is obvious, therefore, that an average of 1,100 horsepower could be obtained and if this power was disposed of as rated, it would yield an annual return of $26,400 or 1,100 horsepower at $2 per month. If an allowance of $6,000 is deducted for running expenses a net profit of $20,400 per annum would result. $20,400 capitalized at 10 per cent equals $204,000 the value of the power. The department is paying $20 per horsepower per annum for power. The valuation, then, was $150,000. Among the machinery there was one engine, practically new. I am not going to enter into any elaborate discussion with regard to the value of the property. My hon. friend values it at $200,000; plus a minimum of $150,000 in respect of the power we get $350,000. Then take the buildings. My hon. friend says that they have no practical utility for the purposes of the government. He also refers to the fact that the lease held by the government would enable the government to construct those buildings, or a portion of them, on the leased property—and that is only a part—without compensation. If he reads the clause in the lease he will see that the lessees have power of removal. I do not think anyone will argue seriously that this government or any other, or any individual, for that matter would attempt to drive the lessees to the position of removing the building. The valuations placed on the buildings by competent valuators are: In parcel No. 2, which my hon. friend who has had the details will perhaps understand better than the various other members of the committee, the valuation is $156,914; for parcel No. 3 the valuation is $219,311, and for parcel No. 4, $41,384. It is not necessary to go into details. These buildings are fireproof and are well constructed, and they are very suitable for the purposes for which the government intend to use them.

Mr. STEVENS: Don't say that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not if I did not know it to be true.

Mr. PECK: I would like to ask the minister the reason for going so far away from the centre of the city?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will be glad to answer that question. I was dealing with the point of value, but apparently my hon. friend is convinced, so I will pass on. I was just going to say that we have at least $350,000 of the $525,000 accounted for by the two items of land and power, which leaves $175,000 for the buildings which the valuators have estimated to be worth $273,000. For a little over $100,000 repairs can be made to the factory which will house the statistical branch, and thereby we will save about $60,000 a year in rentals. As far as the convenience of the location is concerned, it is on the street railway and is only a few minutes from the centre of the city.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the estimated cost of renovating these buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The estimate for renovating the buildings required for the statistical branch is $108,000, so two years' rental will pay the whole cost of renovation.

Mr. GARDINER: What about the others?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have no definite estimates on the others.

Mr. GARDINER: Have the others been acquired for any definite purpose?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, they will be used for the research laboratories.

Mr. ROBINSON: I would like to ask the minister with regard to the Windsor post office site, as to whether or not he will soon be in a position to invite tenders for the new building. As far back as February 17 the Border City Star came out with a statement from Mr. Odette, who, I believe, was perfectly sincere, that the minister was ready to invite tenders, and again on May 26 I find another statement to the same effect. The reason I am asking the question is that at present I am sure he could get a better price for that property—namely $485,000, which is at the rate of $2,300 per foot—than he will be able to get some time from now, because business is moving south on Ouellette avenue, and there is a boom in real estate there at present. The party who has offered that price for the property is, I understand, willing to lease it to the government for three years, or until the new building is erected, which I suppose will be on Canadian National property. I know there has been a holdup with regard to the sale of that property since 1923, when Mr. Healy was a member of this house. He had an idea at that time about the new city hall, but I received a telegram from the mayor of Windsor yesterday as follows:

Present city hall site abandoned; council favours waterfront for post office.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not in a position to give a definite answer at present. The hon. member will readily understand that until a decision is reached it is quite impossible for us to call for tenders.

Mr. ROBINSON: Then all the articles in the Border City Star were incorrect and without foundation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They must be if they differ from anything I say.

Mr. GOTT: I am glad the minister says these statements are incorrect, because there has been such a ballyhoo in connection with this post office that the people of Windsor are beginning to believe that the Minister of Public Works is not sincere at all. I would like to ask him one question and that is whether he is going to give any serious consideration in the near future to the construction of a new post office in Windsor?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Certainly; I am doing so now.

Mr. BENNETT: As I understand it, the point is that the government will not sell the property until such time as provision is made in the estimates for a new building, and there will be no such provision until next session.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is right.

Mr. GOTT: In what way is the department giving favourable consideration to this matter?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I did not say we were giving favourable consideration, but my hon. friend knows perfectly well that very serious consideration is being given that matter. There is no doubt that they need a new post office in Windsor, but while a number of the people are agreed as to the site which should be selected, still there is a certain section of the people who do not think this is the best place for it. I want to say to my hon. friend that if he thinks I am going to make any statement of policy before it is decided upon, that is more than I can do.

Mr. GOTT: What the minister says is true; 100 per cent of the people of Windsor are in favour of a new building; the three sitting members for that district favour it; the minister favours it, so why should there be any delay?

Item agreed to.

Manitoba

Dauphin public building—addition, $7.500.
Emerson—building for customs and immigration purposes, $32,500.
Transcona—public building, $20,000.
Winnipeg—hospital for Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, $250,000.
Winnipeg—immigration building No. 1—improvements and repairs, $6,500.
Winnipeg public building—improvements and alterations, $16,000.—$332.500.

Mr. GUTHRIE: A very substantial part of this amount is to be spent for a D.S.C.R. hospital in Winnipeg, but I do not know why such a hospital is necessary there nine or ten years after the war. There was a time when the department operated a very up-to-date hospital in that city; that building is still in existence and is now part of the Osborne barracks. I understand that it is a wonderfully equipped hospital, but has an average of only about six patients per day. Why it should be necessary to erect a new hospital for the department is something I do not understand, and I think the minister will have to explain this item to some extent. It is also said that a large medical staff is being carried in connection with the work of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and in Winnipeg it is supposed that that staff will be made permanent if this item goes through. Why not use the Osborne barracks hospital, which is a military hospital practically unused and modern in every respect, instead of spending $250,000 on a new structure at this time?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I regret that my colleague the Minister of Health is not here at present; he would be able to give the reason perhaps better than I can. However, my recollection is fairly accurate, and I think the hospital to which my hon. friend refers has been taken over by the militia, so that other provision must be made for the patients now being looked after in civic hospitals. They have notified the Department of Health that the accommodation in the local hospitals is such that they can no longer accommodate the departmental patients, and other accommodation must be provided.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is abundant room in the Osborne barracks hospital. It was built as a department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment hospital and, when there was no further use for it or not sufficient use to maintain it as a hospital, the patients were transferred to the civic hospital. It has been used as a military hospital by the permanent forces ever since the transfer, and there is an average of six military patients in it. I am informed that there is abundant room in it for all Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment patients now in the civic hospital, and we could save $250,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that the property has not been utilized for hospital purposes for some time.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is available?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It has been taken over by the militia department and is being utilized for their purposes. It has not been available for hospital purposes for some time. There are approximately two hundred patients in Winnipeg for whom hospital accommodation must be provided. Accommodation is provided for sixty patients at Deer Lodge, and 140 are provided for in the civic hospital. .The civic hospital has given the department notice that they require all their accommodation and can no longer continue to accommodate the department's patients there.

Item agreed to.

Calgary—grain inspection building, $2,500.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not object to this amount, but I would remind the Minister of Public Works, after receiving the return showing the amount of rental paid in Calgary for buildings used for government purposes, that he should give serious consideration to the erection of a new post office.

Item agreed to.

Rents, repairs, furniture, heating, et cetera—Ottawa public buildings and grounds—Dominion public building, $316,500.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to say a word or two about the sidewalks which have been constructed around the parliament buildings. The minister brought down a return regarding the contract, and I notice it calls for an inch and a half finish. If the minister examines the sidewalks I think he will find that the finish is very much less than that; I would say it is not more than a quarter of an inch. I should like to inquire of the minister if that is the manner in which such public works are usually carried out. If so we certainly are not getting value for our money.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The return which was furnished to my hon. friend some time ago shows that the contract provides that if the work is not done in accordance with the specifications the contractor will make it good.

The file which I gave him shows that the contractor was notified that the work was not up to specification, and it also contains a copy of a letter—I can show him the original—in which the contractor agrees to make good the walks which have proved deficient.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister must remember that the contract called for an inch and a half finish, and if that was carried out the sidewalks would not scale as they have done during this last spring. What are your inspectors doing to allow work like that to be passed? No doubt you had inspectors on the job, and if that is the class of inspector you have it is time you got others.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will frankly say to my hon. friend that I do not think that job is a very great tribute to the inspector who was in charge of it. However, I am told that the requisite thickness was put into the work, but apparently the frost has affected it. The contractor has agreed to make it good; that is all I can say.

Mr. GARDINER: We will see what happens to it.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Ontario, $716,989.12.

Mr. KAISER: I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works why the harbour at Oshawa has been overlooked. The government built half the harbour and then stopped work immediately after the last election, and nothing has been done since. Does the government propose to do anything to this harbour, or is its intention to let it go to waste? Many thousands of dollars of the public money are being wasted due to the fact that the work is not proceeded with. I would ask the Minister of Public Works if it is the intention of the government to do anything more with it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is under a misapprehension if he thinks it is the purpose of the government to abandon work which has already been done. This matter has been given some consideration and it has been decided that nothing further would be done this year.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to ask the minister why it is that such large amounts appear in the supplementary estimates. Was it not possible to get these items in the main estimates?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps the best answer I can give is to refer my hon. friend to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. He says there is not enough, and the same claim comes from all over the country. These items do not contain nearly all the requests made or nearly all that were perhaps necessary, but they are all we are able to provide.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Saskatchewan and Alberta, $10,600.

Mr. KENNEDY: Has the minister been able to decide whether a telegraph line will be constructed from the Peace river to Fort Vermilion? It is very badly needed.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We will not be able to do it this year, in view of the fact that we have not been able to secure an appropriation.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—British Columbia, $241,100.

Mr. DICKIE: It is painful for me to halt this mad rush, but a number of items were recommended by your engineer in British Columbia and I notice that you have overlooked about nine different suggestions that he has made for money to be expended in the various islands in my constituency. I do not expect everything, but I hoped that when the main estimates did not provide for some of them I would find them in the supplementaries. However, my hope has been dispelled, and if the minister will just promise that anything that is really necessary for these island wharves will be looked after by the general vote, I will withdraw any opposition.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If the engineer to whom my hon. friend has referred had only nine of his recommendations turned down, he is more fortunate than most of the other engineers who have been making recommendations, because there is a much greater number made by most of them that we do not seem to be able to get funds for at the present time. But I will assure my hon. friend that, as far as it is humanly possible out of the general vote to meet the most urgent cases, that will be done.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—chargeable to income—Quebec—Ellis bay harbour improvements, $300,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There is an amendment of mine to this item.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Item No. 137 in regard to Quebec has been carried with the exception of the Ellis bay item, and in view of the discussion that took place and the views that were expressed in various parts of the house I am requesting one of my colleagues to move that the item of $300,000 for Ellis bay be reduced to $200,000 and that the following be added to the wording of the vote:

Conditional upon the public being permitted to use the wharf for landing purposes.

Mr. SHORT: I would suggest that the Minister of Public Works treat this item in the same way as the Postmaster General treated the item in connection with the Winnipeg postal employees, because it is a contentious matter and it is liable to bring forth a reat deal of discussion. At this late hour that would be the best way to treat it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a matter where there is a contract. A year ago the house committed itself to the expenditure in connection with Ellis bay.

Mr. ADSHEAD: In the estimates?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: How much is the contract?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Around half a million—$494,000. An amount of $187,000 worth of work has been done. The balance will be done this year and next year. It is thought, in view of the objections that were raised, it might be a good thing to defer the balance of $100,000 which we are cutting off until next year.

Mr. SHORT: Last year the department expended $150,000. Does the minister expect to expend $200,000 this year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there a contract in existence at the present time for the completion of this work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: It is rather a crude way of doing business to make a contract of that description without the consent of parliament.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We had the consent of parliament last year to the initial expenditure. That is the practice that has been followed practically since confederation. Where we are committed to a work involving an amount larger than can be expended in one year, the department have found that they can get the work done for a much smaller amount per cubic yard by letting the whole contract, and that is the practice that has been followed by the various governments in administering the department.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the department paying per cubic yard under this contract?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Fifty cents per cubic yard for the removal of approximately 623,068 cubic yards of packed gravel and clay and $5.50 per cubic yard for 37,080 cubic yards of rock.

Mr. SHORT: Will this amount of $200,000 complete the contract?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it will take about $175,000 more.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved by Mr. Adshead that the vote of $300,000 for Ellis bay be reduced by $290,000.

Amendment (Mr. Adshead) negatived.

Mr. CARDIN: I beg to move:

That the item for Ellis bay amounting to $300,000 be reduced to $200,000 and that the following be added to the wording of the vote. "Conditional upon the public being permitted to use the wharf for landing purposes".

Mr. GARDINER: What is the intention of the minister with regard to this being conditional upon the public being allowed to use the wharf? What does that mean?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It means that the public shall have all the advantage of this wharf as a public wharf so that vessels of all kinds, whether they are connected with the company or not, shall have the right to use the wharf the same as they can use a government wharf.

Mr. GARDINER: How many vessels will this wharf accommodate?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is a very large wharf. I think it is over a mile altogether and it will accommodate a large number of vessels. Something like three hundred vessels outside of the company's vessels landed there in 1927.

Mr. GARDINER: What business would they be transacting there if they are not transacting business of the company?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Taking supplies, taking passengers, fishermen, and so forth. Then the harbour also provides a very good shelter. On various occasions, vessels have put in there for shelter, and on one occasion, I am informed by the man in charge of a boat that was in distress, that if it had not been for this shelter the passengers on the boat would probably have lost their lives. If anybody will look at the map, he can easily see that it is the most suitable harbour for a shelter in that part of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know that it is of much use for the minister to move for a reduction in this item. I think he might as well take the full amount, because he is going to give this company a good slice anyway out of the public treasury for their own benefit. However, I shall be anxious to see what agreement is entered into with the company as to the rights and privileges of outsiders going upon the island.

Mr. GEARY: What did the company expend on the wharf?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The company built the whole wharf for $2,500,000.

Amendment (Mr. Cardin) agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Reconstruction of the north shore St. Lawrence telegraph system from Murray Bay to Bersimis, $25,000.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I would remind the Minister of Public Works that we have been asking for a telephone service on the island of Orleans for a long time, and I hope that next session, or before, provision will be made for providing the island with a telephone service. There are six parishes on the island, and these people seem to be neglected by the government.

Item agreed to.

Combines Investigation Act, $30,000.

Mr. GEARY: Does this represent the work done last year in connection with the investigation held in connection with the trading in proprietary drugs? Is this a permanent staff?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the general staff. I think the work in connection with that inquiry was extra.

Item agreed to.

Administration, Employment Offices' Co-ordination Act, $17,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Can the minister tell us how many returned soldiers have been placed by the employment bureaus? There seems to be an impression that the employment agencies have not been giving the returned soldier a square deal. I am not making that charge, but I would like to know how many returned soldiers have been placed.

Mr. GEARY: I think the Minister of Labour is doing all right in Toronto in that respect.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The annual agreements between the Department of Labour and the provinces contain a special clause under which the provinces undertake to make special efforts to provide facilities for finding work for partially disabled ex-service men. The department has engaged an additional staff to undertake this work in a specialized manner in certain of the larger centres throughout the country. "Special handicap" sections were created, and they have done quite an extensive work in placing handicapped ex-service men, and they are meeting with a great deal of success through the cooperation of employers in employing these handicapped men. During 1926-27, 7,775 handicapped ex-service men were satisfactorily placed in employment.

Item agreed to.

Technical Education Act, $4,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Can the minister say anything about the extension of the Technical Education Act to the prairie provinces?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I have already given the house information on that point.

Mr. GARDINER: When does the act expire?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Next year, 1929.

Item agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Salaries, $242,800; expenses of committees, clerical assistance, etc., $101,950; contingencies, $48,725; publishing debates, $60,000; estimates of sergeant-at-arms, $187,711.10.—Total, $641,186.10.

Mr. ROBB: I beg to move that the item of $48,725 for contingencies be reduced by $1,950, being the amount estimated to provide for purchase of 650 copies of the Canadian Parliamentary Guide.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY: Do I understand that this is the vote to provide salaries for the staff of the House of Commons? If so, I would like to ask a question in connection with the members' stenographers staff. A petition was signed by about 165 or 175 members, and representations were made to the Speaker of the house, requesting an increase in the salaries of that staff. In view of those representations I would like to know if any increase has been decided upon, and if so, what?

Mr. SPEAKER: I have received representations from the hon. gentleman and from two or three others who presented a petition on behalf of the staff. Every year I am met with the same request on the part of temporary employees in the service of the House of Commons. After receiving a delegation composed of the hon. gentleman and five or six other members of the house, I promised to consult the secretary of the Civil Service Commission. I may say it would be much more satisfactory to me if the whole service of the House of Commons was under the commission because, as I say, every year I am assailed by requests for salary increases. We have an excellent staff of stenographers. Some are paid $3.50 and others $4.50, and two chiefs receive $5, per day. Now, I cannot take upon myself to give an increase to all those employees, for I do not know their qualifications. I may say to the hon. gentleman that our stenographers receive on the average as much as, and in some cases more than, stenographers in the other departments receive. However, I have arranged with Mr. Smith, the very able director of the stenographic staff, to take this matter up with me after the session, and we will then see what can be done.

Mr. KENNEDY: I cannot agree with Mr. Speaker's statement. I was asked to give the question some study by the members in this corner of the house. I have discussed the matter with the secretary of the Civil Service Commission,—

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the correspondence.

Mr. KENNEDY: —I asked him in what grade most of the stenographers would classify under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SPEAKER: How does he know?

Mr. KENNEDY: He said they would mostly classify grade 2 and grade 3. I think it is possible for a grade 2 stenographer in the civil service to earn from $1,080 to $1,380 per annum, with two weeks holidays; and for grade 3 to earn from $1,380 to $1,620, or an average of about $1,500. Under the present conditions the earning of the stenographers must be about $1,200 per annum, or from $100 to $300 lower than the stenographers in other departments of the government who are doing approximately the same kind of work. The longer hours of work of the House of Commons stenographers must also be taken into account, running from seven to ten hours per week in excess of the hours in the other departments. It seems to me that the salaries of the stenographers of this house should compare with those received by the stenographers in the other departments. In my opinion we are voting salaries for the house stenographers that are lower than those paid to stenographers in the civil service doing the same kind of work, and if this is the case I think the Commons staff should be brought in line with the civil service staff generally.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Mr. Chairman, I support the position taken by the member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy). The House of Commons stenographers are receiving a salary for only four or five months of each year, and when the session is over they have to try to find some other employment, which is not at all easy in July or August. I think they are perfectly justified in their demands for increased pay, and therefore I signed the petition.

Mr. WARD: I should like to ask His Honour through you, Mr. Chairman, if the report is correct that the salaries of the stenographic staff of the Senate have been raised.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no Senate Board of Internal Economy to consult with us. There are only five or six stenographers there. But to give the increase which has been requested on behalf of the stenographers by some hon. members would require an additional sum of $26,000. I have not the money.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I am astonished that five or six stenographers in the Senate should receive an increase and the Commons stenographers should not. The work of the stenographers in the Senate is not to be compared with the work of those in the Commons. Because there is a large number of stenographers is no reason why they should not be put on the same footing as the stenographers of the Senate.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Health of animals, administration of The Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, and necessary buildings, $2,270,000.

Mr. PECK: Will the minister give me some assurance that I can go back to Peterborough with the information that the grant which has been made annually to the industrial fair will be continued this season? It is an important matter to the various fairs concerned, I know that in Peterborough provision has been made to spend the appropriation in prizzes. That has been customary. Will the grant be continued?

Mr. DUNNING (for Mr. Motherwell): I cannot add anything to what the minister himself said with regard to the matter when he was present. But I can undertake to say that the representations of my hon. friend will be called to the attention of the minister.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not wish to delay the committee and in order to save time I am going to read a letter which will outline to the minister the facts which I wish to bring to his notice. I read the following letter:

Mr. Wm. Irvine:

Dear sir: In answer to your letter of March 30/28. As president of the Blindman Valley Cooperative Association I am speaking for 1,200 farmers who have expressed their desire to have the condemnation insurance either collected by the government on all hogs and cattle going through the yards and to the packer direct whether by farmers, drovers or packer agents and the buyer to be recompensed to the extent of his loss by tuberculosis or to have it abolished entirely, preferably the latter.

We are well aware this is not a government law but it is a practice carried on by the packers which makes it just as hard for the producer to bear, he being at the mercy of the packer who well knows what percentage of tuberculosis there are in the county hogs. Until the cooperative assocations came into being the packer was not deducting this insurance, but since the farmers have started shipping cooperatively the packer will pay his agents in full for their hogs and deduct the one-half of one per cent insurance from the farmer shipment.

Our association had several shipments of hogs inspected and had the inspector receipts forwarded to us and out of those shipments which cost us some hundreds of dollars insurance, the loss to the packer was only two or three pigs' heads, not carcasses, but the heads only.

Out of the same district the packer was buying at the same time from his own agents and is doing so at present time, not deducting any insurance. As he well knows there is no loss, but is taking the advantage of this insurance to the discomfort of the cooperative shippers. This is also the discussion arrived at the recent live stock convention at Edmonton, March 20, 1928.

Yours truly,

R. E. CHOWEN.

I want to ask the minister whether he knows just exactly how much was collected in connection with this insurance, exactly how much loss was sustained owing to disease, and whether he is willing that the government should take steps for some supervision over the collection of this percentage on diseased cattle and stock? Will he see to it that the practice is prohibited?

Mr. DUNNING: I am advised by the deputy minister that there is at present no provision enabling the department to deal with the matter mentioned by my hon. friend. I will undertake to see that the letter which the hon. gentleman has read is brought to the attention of the minister immediately on his return, in order that consideration may be given the point raised.

Mr. SIMPSON: There has been discussion from time to time during the session about the number of inspectors employed by this department. I took the trouble to look up the Auditor General's report for the year 1927, because I had intended to say something on this item. However, at this late stage of the session I think all I should do is place the figures on Hansard for the information of the house. Without including the inspectors in the civil service here in Ottawa and exclusive of the officials and men on the experimental farms of Canada, the number of inspectors is as follows:

		Year ending March 31, 1927	Year ending March 31, 1922
Dairying:
Cargo inspectors	12
Dairy and cold storage inspector	1
Dairy promoters, graders and testers	89
Inspectors	10
		112	33
Fruit and Vegetable Inspector		120	67
Seed, feed and fertilizer:
Inspectors and analysts		104	58
Live stock and health of animals:
Live stock promoters and inspectors	65
Promoters of egg production and inspectors	84
Sheep promotion	21
Stockyard agents	12
Swine graders	27

A good deal has been said in the last few days about technical men employed by this department, and it has been said they are not receiving enough money. It seems to me that these outside inspectors do a great deal of overlapping; one man will go into a community for the purpose of grading eggs; another man will go in for the purpose of grading and testing butter; another to grade vegetables; another to grade hay and so on. Surely we can get men who have been raised on farms and who have a reasonable degree of education, who can go into a community and grade several of these different products. In this way we could afford to pay them better salaries and still cut down on travelling expenses. According to part A-55 of the Auditor General's report the travelling expenses of officials of the Department of Agriculture for the year ending March 31, 1927, amounted to $843,577.91. If we add to that the expense of delegates to conferences, the travelling allowances of judges at fairs, the travelling allowances to persons making milk tests, the travelling expenses of purchasers of stock in car lots and the travelling expenses of delegates purchasing rams, we have a total of $876,638.39. If we add to that the cost of new automobiles, repairs and renewals, which comes under the head of travelling expenses, we have a total of $902,595.43. If my information is correct we could save a very considerable portion of that sum if we cut out some of this overlapping.

The estimates of the Department of Agriculture since the present minister took charge, as shown in the general estimates, have increased from $5,179,094.50 in 1921-22 to $8,217,025 in 1928-29, an increase of over 58 per cent. An ordinary business concern would not have any objection to an increase of that kind if they were attaining corresponding results, but that is not the case. According to the Bureau of Statistics the value of dairy products for the year 1920 was $288,836,093, while in 1926, it had dropped to $249,710,000. The value of fruit production in 1921 was $45,262,788, and in 1926 it dropped to $21,611,379. The value of vegetable production including potatoes in 1921 was $108,047,600, while in 1927 it dropped to $80,241,000. The value of farm eggs in 1921 was $40,968,841, and in 1927 that increased to $80,110,000. The number of sheep on farms in 1921 was 3,675,857, while in 1927 it was 3,262,700.

I am not going to take up the time of the house with any more of these figures, but it seems the more inspection we have the smaller our production comes, according to the figures I have given from the official returns.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course my hon. friend knows that the minister is absent, and he also knows that if the minister were here he would be quite capable of giving an effective answer to the figures and arguments produced by my hon. friend. I might point out, however, with respect to the overlapping which my hon. friend alleges, that already the inspection of seeds, feeds, fertilizers, insecticides, hay and twine are conducted by the same men, and there are many other instances where inspectors do two kinds of work. It is not technically possible in some cases to do so, however.

Mr. SPENCER: I would like to support the remarks of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin with regard to this stock insurance. That condition has been very unsatisfactory in Canada. The farmer is charged the flat rate whether the stock are healthy or otherwise, and I think something should be done to better this condition.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to ask the minister if he could give the committee any information as to the progress being made in experiments having to do with inoculation for the prevention of bovine tuberculosis?

Mr. DUNNING: It is almost eleven o'clock and we must make provision for going on later; therefore I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move that this house be not adjourned at eleven o'clock p.m. this day.

Motion agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following letter:

Ottawa, 9th June, 1928.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate chamber on Saturday, 9th June, at 11 p.m. for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

James F. Crowdy,

Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

I understand that His Excellency has graciously agreed to come at a later hour.

It is moved by Mr. Robb that I do now leave the chair for the house again to resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Health of animals, administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, and necessary buildings, $2,270,000.

Mr. DUNNING: In answer to my hon. friend's question, I am advised that certain experiments are now being conducted with a new serum both at Ottawa and in Alberta. The experiments are now approaching maturity, and let us hope the results obtained will enable a convention to be held towards the fall when the knowledge thus obtained can be disseminated.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister say how many animals are under observation in Ottawa?

Mr. DUNNING: About thirty.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): I want to say one word in regard to the statement which was read into the record a few moments ago by the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Simpson). As an agriculturist I feel I have not the right to sit here and allow the statement to go without expressing an agricultural viewpoint. The inspections that are made by the Department of Agriculture are made at the request of the agriculturists of this country, and they are doing incalculable good in raising the standard of our product. Many of the inspectors referred to are self sustained, and the farmers are paying the cost of the inspection. They are asking the department to go further than the department is ready to go, and it is unfair to agriculture for a member of this house to put such a statement on record in the absence of the minister.

Mr. SIMPSON: The statement I put on record was from official figures.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): From what figures?

Mr. SIMPSON: The Auditor General's report.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): What you referred to are inspections and not inspectors. The inspectors work in the various branches of the department and make several inspections, and what my hon. friend refers to are the inspections. Many of these are self sustaining and paid for by the farmers and you will find the receipts credited accordingly in the report of the Receiver General.

Mr. SIMPSON: I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman that agriculture is a basic industry and we should vote all the money that is required and which will be properly spent, but my contention was that these inspectors were overlapping.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): I must disagree with that.

Mr. MacNUTT: Since the hon. member for Algoma West (Mr. Simpson) has brought up the question of government inspectors under the Department of Agriculture, I would like to read a short editorial which appeared recently in the Eastern Chronicle published in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia.

The Chronicle is owned and edited by James A. Fraser, one of the most influential Liberals in that province, and the opponent of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) in the last election.

Mr. DUNNING: We will be very glad to have the hon. gentleman put it on Hansard, and we will take it as read.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): We will take it as the opinion of a newspaper editor who does not understand agriculture.

Mr. MacNUTT: This is the article:

On the Farm

Visitor: Are those men I see about your place, your hired men?

Farmer: No, I have no hired men; those men are government experts. That one in the barnyard attends to the health of the cows and sees that they are kindly dealt with; he was sent here by Industrial relations, Halifax. That one down at the gate is there to prevent me selling any vegetables except by weight. I have no scales, hence do not sell any vegetables. Last summer I did quite a business selling early vegetables to wayfarers, but not having scales this year I did not sell any. The man you refer to was sent here by Hon. Mr. Motherwell, Ottawa. He has one on each farm, 9,000 of them altogether, so it is said. Oh, yes, that man over in the turnip field is Dr. Melville Cumming. His job is to prevent turnips from growing big, and to see that one of them does not grow bigger than the other. Not a bad fellow, Melville; but his head gets, at times, not lousy, but buggy, and then he cuts up as queer capers as any of them. But of all the ministers, the Minister of Agriculture has them all beaten. He has his experts, wherever a stalk of grain grows—thousands of experts. The other day in the House of Commons when Motherwell was on one of his particular frolics, all the opposition members were after him; among them Col. Cantley, who said to him, "If you go on as you are going, there won't be a Liberal farmer in Pictou County at the next election." "So much the better for you," retorted Minister Motherwell. Members finally appealed to Hon. Mr. Lapointe to decide whether the foolish laws being passed by the minister were intra vires of parliament. Mr. Lapointe declined to commit himself, alleging that he likes freedom. "Oh," Motherwell replied in effect, "I dealt with his deputy and he assured me that this law to sell roots and vegetables only by weight would be all right until it was appealed against in the courts."

It did not appear that the Premier was present, but curious to relate not one of the Liberal members either praised or blamed the apparently mad minister for his foolish course. But in order to be fair we must relate that a farmer or gardener can sell a bunch of carrots or a bunch of onions without weighing it, providing the green tops are left on.

As a rule, a political party could carry on if the half-baked fools they sometimes elect would act half wisely in parliament. Ministers like Motherwell would kill any government even if the angel Gabriel was Premier.

Mr. WARD: Before this vote passes I would like to say a word regarding the grant to B fairs.

Some hon. MEMBERS: We have passed that.

Mr. DUNNING: That vote was passed long ago.

The CHAIRMAN: I must inform my hon. friend that we are now at vote 48.

Mr. WARD: I rise to protest against the way in which we are passing these items. Sitting in this end of the chamber we are unable to hear what is going on. The chairman speaks in quite an inaudible voice and we cannot hear. I want to protest against the treatment we have received at the hands of the Minister of Agriculture in respect to grants to the B class fairs. We have made repeated representations to him to continue these grants. In the judgment of those who have an intimate knowledge of fairs, the B class is the one fair upon which all other fairs rest. Had the Minister of Agriculture been here to-night and in charge of his estimates, I can assure you this item would not have passed. As he is absent we are perhaps in the position of being practically forced. I appreciate that the minister in charge of these estimates is not in a position to accept a reduction, and I do not wish to embarrass the government. I served notice on the Minister of Agriculture a week ago that when this item was before this house it was my intention to move that this item be reduced by $85,000, the amount that would be paid to A fairs. Perhaps it would be well to examine just why we are protesting against the action of the minister in this regard. As far as I know there is not an A class fair in Canada that has not a very large surplus.

Mr. FORKE: My hon. friend will pardon me, we have had a deficit at Brandon for years.

Mr. WARD: I think you will find that most A class fairs have surpluses, and I venture to say there is not a B class fair that is not suffering deficits. In most cases the directors are carrying a personal responsibility in order to manage the institution. We are asking that the grant of $1,500 which we have been receiving for the last two years be continued. It seems rather strange, Mr. Chairman, that an industry producing several hundred of millions of dollars of wealth in this country cannot pay the small amount of $33,000 to supply a grant of $1,500 to twenty-two B class fairs. While I do not intend to move a reduction of the amount now being paid to A class fairs, it is my intention next year to move that that amount be reduced by the amount paid to A class fairs. I regret very much that we have to go back home this year without this very necessary and needed grant to B class fairs.

Mr. McINTOSH: As a representative of the riding of North Battleford, I must stand up in this house to-night and protest against the action of the Minister of Agriculture in taking the stand he has in connection with class B fairs in Saskatchewan and outside the province. I believe this is one of the biggest mistakes any Minister of Agriculture has ever made in the history of Canada. I cannot understand how any Minister of Agriculture can take the stand that class B fairs ought to be wiped out, so far as grants are concerned. In the province of Saskatchewan $5,000 is granted to the class A fair in Saskatoon and another $5,000 to the class A fair in Regina. Instead of following the sensible policy of decentralization, one of centralization is followed, and that policy is never the real policy of Liberalism. I want to protest to-night, as the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) has protested, against eliminating these grants to class B fairs. I serve notice to-night, as a member from northern Saskatchewan that next year—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No more guns; do not tote any guns.

Mr. McINTOSH: Even guns would not have any effect on my hon. friend. I want to serve notice to-night that I am absolutely opposed to a stand of this kind. If the grants to class B fairs are not to be considered, the ones being made to class A fairs must be removed. There is a well defined public opinion in northern Saskatchewan, so far as the minister is concerned, that great pressure has been brought to bear upon him and his deputy and others in his department by the class A fairs to have this grant eliminated and the class A grant stand. The deputy minister shakes his head, but he can shake his head for a long time because that public opinion is well maintained, and, so far as I am concerned, I believe there is something in it.

Before taking my seat, I would like to give a few figures which were secured from the director of agricultural extension of the province. The average revenue for the years 1921-25 for the class A fairs—Regina and Saskatoon—was $38,158, and the average revenue for the same period for the Saskatchewan class B fairs was $4,264. The average entry fees for the same period for class B fairs was $1,449, and for A fairs $3,166. The average amount received from concessions for the same period for B fairs was $1,867 and A fairs, $27,849. The average total for the class B fairs in Saskatchewan for that period was $7,581, and for class A fairs, $69,174. The average paid out in prizes for live stock in the class B fairs was $7,140 out of an average total of $7,581, or practically 100 per cent, while for the class A fairs there was paid out an average of $20,391 out of a total of $69,174, or barely 33 per cent. That shows the work the class B fair is doing in an agricultural way. They are the fairs of the farmers. The others are entirely different, and the reason I am standing up in the house to-night and defending the class B fairs is that I believe they are doing a great work in the development of agriculture. They can give to the development of agriculture in Saskatchewan a great contribution that the class A fairs can never give. Therefore if the class B grants are to be discontinued, my remarks to-night will serve as notice to the Department of Agriculture that I am going to work tooth and nail until the grants for class A fairs are also eliminated, so that we shall have the two on a strict basis of equality and that is the only fair, just and equitable policy to pursue.

Mr. DUNNING: Before the discussion goes any further, may I call the attention of the committee to the fact that following the discussion the other evening on this item when the minister was here and further discussion to-night, the vote was passed and we are now two votes past it. In fact we are supposed to be discussing just now insect pests. I cannot add anything to what I said a little while ago while the vote was under discussion. The further discussion will be brought to the attention of the minister and more than that I cannot say. I think we have allowed the discussion on insect pests to ramble into class B fairs and I know none of the supporters of the class B fairs wants them to be regarded as insect pests.

Mr. McINTOSH: No person in this corner of the house knew that we had passed the item in connection with class B fairs. If that is the kind of business you are going to do, whether the matter under discussion be "insects" or "fairs," Mr. Chairman, you had better speak out a little plainer.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend surely knows that several members to-night discussed the question of class B fairs when the item was before the committee.

Mr. McINTOSH: The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) discussed it before I did. If he was in order, I must be.

Mr. DUNNING: Long before the hon. member for Dauphin spoke, another hon. gentleman spoke on the question. An hon. member across the way commenced the discussion when the item was before the committee.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I understand that the minister said vote 44 in connection with grants to exhibitions was passed. When was it passed?

The CHAIRMAN: To-night.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Well, it was passed in such a clever way that I hope that all the other estimates are not passed in the same way as this was.

Mr. DUNNING: I am going to object to that on a point of order. One or two members, when the item was before the house, spoke on it. I replied to the members in a very proper way and I resent the insinuation that the vote was put through in some clever sort of way. There was no cleverness about the matter at all.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: There are quite a few hon. members interested in class B fairs and we have been waiting very patiently for the item to come up. I, for one, am very much surprised to learn that this item was passed.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend cannot blame me for his being asleep.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I certainly was not asleep. I was listening and waiting very patiently for the item to come up.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry if hon. gentlemen did not hear the item called. It was certainly called and passed in the way we have passed other votes to-night, but I do not think it is fair to blame the chair for not announcing these items in an audible tone of voice. If hon. members would keep order in the committee, I am quite sure that I would be heard in all parts of the chamber.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I have been listening for the item in regard to grants to exhibitions to be called and I have been in the chamber since these items respecting agriculture were started. I did not hear it called and I did not hear it passed. Once in a while I could hear hon. members talking, and that was all I could hear. This item is the most important item in the whole estimates of the Department of Agriculture. If we are going to crowd the estimates of the most important industry in Canada into the last few minutes at the close of the session, we shall have to see what can be done in another year. I do not want to prolong the discussion at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I recall to my hon. friend the fact that the first estimates taken up this session were those of agriculture? There were several discussions in the committee on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I quite agree with the Prime Minister on that point, but we have only a few minutes to discuss the most important item of the whole estimates of that department. We can vote $18,000,000 for Defence. We can spend $300,000 on dredging in Ellis bay for a private company. We have a vote of only about $7,000,000 for agriculture and now we are cutting down on the best fairs we have in western Canada to which the young fellow can come along and put in an exhibit while, if he is cut out of that and has to go to the class A fair, he is too backward and bashful to put in an exhibit. We are crowding the most important matters into the last few minutes at the close of the session when we have no time to discuss matters which are vital to agriculture.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Loans to Canadian National Railway Company

Amount not exceeding $39,000,000 to meet expenditures made or indebtedness incurred (where amounts available from net operating income or investments may be insufficient) by or on behalf of the Canadian National Railway Company, herein called "The Company," or any company specified or referred to in chapter 172 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, and chapter 13 of the statutes of 1920 or now or hereafter comprised in the Canadian National Railways or by the company in respect of any railways, properties and works entrusted to it from time to time under the provisions of section 19 of chapter 172 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, or any one or more of such companies, on any or all of the following accounts, such expenditures or indebtedness being being herein called authorized expenditures:—

(a) Interest on securities, notes and other obligations; rentals for lease of lines;

(b) Equipment principal payments; sinking funds; miscellaneous maturing or matured notes and other obligations secured or unsecured;

(c) Operating income deficit, whenever incurred or ascertained;

(d) Construction and betterments, including coordinations; acquisition of real or personal property.

The amount herein authorized may be applied from time to time to meet authorized expenditures, in the discretion of the governor in council:—

(a) In respect of railways, properties and works entrusted to the company as aforesaid;

(b) In respect of railways, properties and works not so entrusted by way of loans in cash, or by way of guarantee, or partly one way and partly the other, subject, however, as follows:—

If by way of loans from His Majesty, the amount or amounts advanced to any one or more of the said companies shall be repayable on demand, with interest payable half-yearly at the rate fixed from time to time by the governor in council, secured if and when directed by the governor in council by mortgage or mortgages upon such properties, in such form and containing such terms and conditions, not inconsistent herewith, as the governor in council may approve.

If by way of loans from persons other than His Majesty (without the guarantee of His Majesty) the amounts, terms and conditions of such loans shall be such as the governor in council may from time to time approve.

If by way of guarantee, any such guarantee may be either a general guarantee covering the total amount of the issue, or by a separate guarantee endorsed on each obligation, and may be of the principal, interest and sinking funds (if any) of the notes, obligations or securities of one or more of the said companies specified by the governor in council, which notes, obligations or securities the companies so specified are hereby authorized to make and issue, and such guarantee may be signed by the Minister of Finance, or such other person as the governor in council may authorize, on behalf of His Majesty, in such form and on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine to be appropriate and applicable thereto. Any guarantee so signed shall be conclusive evidence for all purposes that the provisions of this enactment have been complied with.

Should temporary loans be made or negotiated before the lapse of this appropriation either from His Majesty or other persons, guaranteed notes, obligations or securities may subsequently be issued under the provisions of the preceding paragraph of this enactment to renew, refund or adjust such loans, or any part thereof.

Each company herein mentioned or referred to is hereby authorized to aid and assist, in any manner any other or others of the said companies, and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may for its own requirements and also for the requirements of any or all such other companies from time to time:—

(a) Issue notes, obligations or other securities, joint or several, at discretion, for the purpose of any guarantee made or to be made under the provisions of this enactment;

(b) Apply the proceeds of any such guaranteed issue, or the amount of loans received by virtue of this enactment, in meeting authorized expenditures on its own account or on account of any or all of such other companies;

(c) Make advances for the purpose of meeting authorized expenditures to any or all of such other companies, upon or without any security, at discretion.

No purchaser of such guaranteed notes, securities or obligations shall be under any obligation to inquire into the application of the proceeds of any guaranteed issue, $39,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I am in a very difficult position. I desire to expedite the business of the house and yet I must make certain observations with respect to this matter. I will endeavour to do so as briefly as possible because I am sure members of the committee are as desirous as I am to expedite the business, but I must make these observations. Yesterday evening the Minister of Railways said that it was essential that we should build a second hotel at Halifax in order to maintain the morale of the Canadian National employees.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not. The distinction is very important.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the distinction? I will endeavour to read exactly what he said. The minister means that he was told that that would be so. Is that what he means?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend had better read the exact language.

Mr. BENNETT: He says at page 4026 of Hansard:

> Moreover, the president of the railway assures me, has assured me on more than one occasion, that the morale of the men engaged in working on the Canadian National system from coast to coast would be seriously affected if the Canadian National were compelled to back down with respect to the construction of a Canadian National hotel at Halifax.

That statement is one that I think should not be seriously considered by this house in determining what action should be taken, for it is a statement that must be regarded as entirely at variance with what we know. The truth is that in 1926, not 1927, discussions took place between the president of the railway company and certain financiers in Halifax looking to the construction of a hotel. In February, 1927, Mr. Pratt wrote a letter, which I read last evening, in which he said that the president and directors were interested in this undertaking. That is clear. What is more, it subsequently develops that by reason of the very action that he then took, the Lord Nelson Hotel company was organized. The Dwyer property on which an option was taken in the fall of 1926 was acquired, and it was arranged to build an hotel upon it. That is beyond all question.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will permit me, he mentions the option of 1926. That option had long since expired.

Mr. BENNETT: It had long since expired, but is was renewed for the purposes of the Lord Nelson hotel.

Mr. RALSTON: To be quite fair, my hon friend should state that the option of 1926 had no connection with what took place in 1927.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh yes.

Mr. RALSTON: It was an entirely new transaction in 1927.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be observed that the Canadian National Railway Company in their report of 1928 commence their observations with respect to the hotel by saying:

> In 1926 a plan, which had been privately promoted for the erection of a modern hotel at Halifax, was presented to the board of directors for consideration. The plan was found to be unsatisfactory in its method of finance and was rejected. The need of more modern hotel facilities at Halifax was, however, apparent to the board, and it was recognized that, with the establishment in the winter of 1928-29 of the new and important services of the Canadian National steamships between Halifax and the West Indies, this need would become still more pressing.

And it was in February, 1927, February, mark you, February 9, 1927, that Mr. Pratt wrote the letter which I read yesterday.

Mr. RALSTON: I was dealing only with the matter of the option, and I said that the option of 1926 had nothing to do with the purchase of 1927.

Mr. BENNETT: But there was a continuity with respect to the transaction.

Mr. RALSTON: There was no continuity; it was a brand new transaction. The site was not taken until October 17 or 18, 1927, and it was not inconsequence of the option of 1926.

Mr. BENNETT: That does not detract from what I am endeavouring to say. In the spring of 1927 the Canadian National indicated its interest in the undertaking of the construction of the hotel in Halifax, and when it is said that the morale of the road will be in some sense affected, let me say this. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made it perfectly clear that they will turn their stock over, as well as the $250,000, if the hotel wants it. So far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, they are prepared to back down and out and to disappear out of the transaction. The papers published all that. They had only $100,000 of preferred shares in the undertaking and in consequence of the Lord Nelson company being let down by the Canadian National, the Canadian Pacific took, it up.

I am going to point to one thing, in order that there may be no misapprehension. The report of the Canadian National Railways undertakes to indicate that the Canadian Pacific Railway did not care to take up the stock until September, 1928. It says on page 11 of its report:

> The decision of the Canadian Pacific to take up the preferred stock of the hotel company was made by the executive committee of that railway company three days later.

That is, three days after the Canadian National had determined to go into Halifax. That is not in accordance with the facts. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as the public records show, not their records at all, but two gentlemen whose word will be accepted in any court of law saw the president of the Canadian National, and he agreed to take the $250,000 and urged them to get the Canadian Pacific to take the $100,000.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend said that the public records would prove it. What public records?

Mr. BENNETT: The records of the Lord Nelson Hotel Company, and the journey to Montreal of the president of that company, together with the delegation, which reported back, as was published in the press. What is more, the report of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at page 7 says:

> Your directors, after discussion with the National railways and upon the strong recommendation of the latter, agreed to subscribe for $100,000 of the preferred stock in the Lord Nelson hotel at Halifax, Nova Scotia, the National Railways undertaking to recommend the government's approval of a subscription by that company of $250,000 of such stock.

It is admitted by the speeches of the two ministers that that recommendation was made to the government. The government was dissatisfied with it, and it was not carried into effect by the shareholders, the shareholders being the governor in council. A new plan was submitted, but the government was not satisfied with that; the shareholders again disagreed. Then it was that the president of the Canadian National journeyed down upon a special train to the city of Halifax, and made a speech about predatory wealth, and the new hotel was recommended, the new Canadian National hotel. It was after that, that the Canadian Pacific agreed to take $250,000 of preferred stock, and it was then that the report of the Canadian National endeavours to make it clear that the agreement to take $250,000 of preferred shares referred to the whole $350,000, which is not so, and never has been so, because Mr. Silver, the chairman of the Lord Nelson hotel, accompanied the Premier of Nova Scotia and others to Montreal and arranged with respect to the $100,000 subscription of preferred shares by the Canadian Pacific. There should be no difficulty in understanding clearly that point.

One other question arose last evening. It was said last evening that the rebate of a commission that Mr. Bain and others agreed to was a rebate that went to the company, and it is not clear that that was money that went back to the company for work in Canada of the Lord Nelson Hotel Company.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BENNETT: I have received a telegram from the president of the company saying that the newspaper reports did not make it clear that that money was not for the purpose of paying the promoters, but was to go back to the hotel to increase their working capital.

Mr. RALSTON: That is exactly what I said.

Mr. BENNETT: I just mention that in order to clear up any misapprehension that might arise from the press reports, in view of the telegram I have received. I desire to make it clear that such was not the case on the statement that has been made.

I can sum up this matter in this way. My hon. friend referred to the question of impressing this house with his influence. Let me put it this way: When the president of the Canadian National discovered that the minister from Nova Scotia was against the participation of the Canadian Pacific in the hotel, he did what any president would do. He said: Now is my chance to get an hotel, and I am going to get it on my own, and it was the position taken by the ministers in question that put this country to that expenditure. The president of the Canadian National is not to blame; the blame rests with the ministers, and not with the railway company at all, because in this instance an arrangement was made by the government to turn down the proposal to build the hotel, even though it involved a loss of $100,000 for one hotel, and to build a hotel solely for the Canadian National system.

The suggestion that has been made that we should build bungalow camps and hotels that will bring us a more profitable return is one that is worthy of consideration. In this regard I cannot hope to go over this matter in detail. It is sufficient for my purpose to say, and say clearly, that I protest against the investment of capital which involves an admitted loss of $100,000 per annum, according to the reports made by the Canadian National's own expert. The report of the company itself for last year shows that the company did not make interest on a single dollar of capital invested in hotels, but had a deficit in operating the whole hotel system of $15,000. Here are the figures in that regard, to be found at page 8 of the Canadian National report: It says that the losses had been reduced to about $15,000, as compared with a loss of $35,000 for 1926. It is against this reckless waste of public money for the purpose of enabling a minister merely to control the situation in a province that I protest. I protest against it on behalf of the taxpayers who must find the money. Without going into details I have only this further to say. When the Vancouver hotel was brought up last night we had the tu quoque argument.

[Mr. Bennett.]

The Minister of Railways and Canals knows that the settlement was made because of promises by Mackenzie and Mann to the city of Vancouver under their agreement with the government in connection with the Canadian Northern British Columbia railway system, by which they were to build a hotel and do many other things involving an expenditure of millions of dollars. The settlement made by the Liberal government involved a vast expenditure of moneys in British Columbia and then the leasing of the hotel at a rental that would be sufficient to cover interest and sinking fund.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows better than that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the arrangement that was made. Mr. McCrossan, the city solicitor for Vancouver, came down here for the purpose, the arrangement was made and notified in the public press.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the Minister of Railways consistently refused to recommend to his colleagues any such arrangement. It was never so recommended and never so authorized by this government. Where is the order in council authorizing it? My hon. friend says this government did something. There is one way by which governments do things.

Mr. BENNETT: Will my hon. friend just sit down?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and I will get up by and by.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, having sat down—

Mr. DUNNING: I merely want you to speak the truth.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will withdraw that statement, even at this late stage of the session.

The CHAIRMAN: I did not catch the remark.

Mr. DUNNING: I merely request my hon. friend to speak the truth.

Mr. BENNETT: That is unparliamentary.

Mr. DUNNING: I think I may make a request.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not going to be bulldozed.

Mr. DUNNING: Suppose I ask my hon. friend to stick to the facts; is that better?

Mr. BENNETT: That is all right. This is not the Saskatchewan legislature. The hon. gentleman is learning something.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry I cannot return the compliment.

Mr. BENNETT: No, you would not understand it. Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said, we might as well take this thing seriously and leisurely.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

An hon. MEMBER: Haven't you been serious up to now?

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I thought the hon. gentleman the other day made admissions that were sufficiently serious for any of us in this house who understand the English language. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was proceeding to say that the Vancouver situation was a settlement of outstanding claims against the Canadian Northern Railway Company. Those claims involved this country in many millions of dollars. When the agreement was made for the building of an hotel it was signed and sent back to this city. The then Acting Minister of Railways (Sir Henry Drayton) at once had his attention directed to the fact that as the supply bill had not carried there was a question as to the legality of an appropriation by governor general's warrant to meet any possible claim there might be with respect to the hotel. In other words, there was no parliamentary sanction with respect to the money that would enable the hotel to be built. That is the position with respect to that. I have no hesitation in saying that I pointed that out. It was subsequently discovered by the legal gentlemen connected with the department to be a correct statement of the situation. The contract was not signed. It was not proposed to sign it when that was found to be the condition. Then the statement was made that the hon. gentleman referred to last evening as to whether he desired to sign it himself. That is the reason I have made the protest, and if this house does not prorogue to-night I will have an opportunity to deal with it more fully on Monday, but in view of the desire to prorogue I shall make no further observations at the moment.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend has made one statement with respect to the Vancouver hotel which, under the rules, I am not permitted to describe correctly. It has a bearing upon my association with the negotiations with the city of Vancouver prior to the dissolution of parliament in 1926, and it has also to do with what the shadow government then in office did or did not do in reference to an agreement to build an hotel in Vancouver. My hon. friend stated in the plainest terms that the Liberal government had completed the arrangement. Those were his words.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what Mr. McCrossan, the city solicitor of Vancouver, said.

Mr. DUNNING: I sat down when my hon. friend requested it. Will he now kindly keep quiet?

Mr. BENNETT: I will see.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend stated in the plainest of terms—I find he stated it on the word of somebody else outside this house altogether—that the government did so and so. Apparently he does not yet know, or would pretend that he does not know, that any action of that sort by a government is represented by an order of council which is of record. He knows perfectly well that if a decision had been taken by this government to lease or build any hotel at Vancouver, that decision would be found in the records of the Privy Council. There is no such order in council. My hon. friend knew when he spoke that there was no such order.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not. Now, Mr. Chairman, that remark will have to be withdrawn.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that remark is unparliamentary, absolutely, under the rules. There may be no misapprehension about that. It might as well be realized even if this house does not prorogue to-night.

Mr. DUNNING: I await your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. gentleman says he did not have knowledge, certainly his word must be accepted.

Mr. DUNNING: I will accept his word. Of course I accept also the position in which he puts himself, that he knew—that is what he said—that a transaction had been completed by this government—

Mr. BENNETT: I said the transaction had been.

Mr. DUNNING: That the transaction had been completed by this government; and now he says he did not know whether an order in council had been passed in respect to it.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know yet.

Mr. DUNNING: Let me go further. I trust I have cleared up that point. I have a particular interest in it, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that continuous and steady pressure was brought to bear upon me as Minister of Railways and upon my colleagues by interested parties in the city of Vancouver on both sides of politics to complete the arrangements for the building and leasing of an hotel there. I never was satisfied with the arrangement, the government never was satisfied with the arrangement, and I never gave any encouragement to those promoting it that the government ever would approve it. My colleagues, every one, can confirm that. What followed when my hon. friends came into office? We have listened to a very ingenious explanation of a very extraordinary transaction from my hon. friend this evening. Suddenly the shadow government during the hundred days, in spite of the knowledge that my hon. friend says they had with respect to the illegality of financial transactions involving governor general's warrants—I say in spite of that fact, on the seventh day of August during that hundred days an order in council was passed authorizing the expenditure of three and a half million dollars of the money of this country on a hotel in Vancouver.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: Passed by a government which, as my hon. friend stated to-night, knew perfectly well they had no authority to secure money by governor general's warrants for such purpose—nor indeed for any other purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I have a right to deny a statement I did not make.

Mr. DUNNING: What did you say?

Mr. BENNETT: I said that a question as to the legality of it arose, and it was subsequently reported by the legal gentlemen in charge that the decision was properly taken. That is what I said.

Mr. DUNNING: It is very strange, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend now says that a question as to legality subsequently arose. I should like to ask how that government was doing business. Here is the order in council, very carefully and elaborately drawn up. Am I to presume it was not drawn up by legal officers, by someone who knew what the law was when it was being drawn up?

Mr. BENNETT: No, sir.

Mr. DUNNING: Are they to admit that they got someone to draw up an order in council for an expenditure of $3,500,000 without finding out whether or not the transaction would be legal after it was adopted? What does the order in council say? After reciting the problem of the old arrangement between the Canadian Northern Pacific and Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, which my hon. friend, by the way, stated correctly this evening—an arrangement which we inherited when the Canadian Northern Pacific became a part of the Canadian National system, a problem which everyone has been seeking to solve for some years past—after reciting that, I say, this order in council goes on to state:

> That it is the opinion of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railway Company that, in view of the progress made by the Canadian National Railways in revenue receipts during the present year the whole cost of the construction of the proposed five hundred room hotel can be met from the estimates which were submitted to parliament at its last session and approved by the select standing committee on railways and shipping.

That statement is made in the order in council, and even if the estimates had been passed, which they were not, as my hon. friend indicates even if the estimates had been pased, that order in council discloses that the government passing it was willing to spend $3,500,000 for a hotel in Vancouver out of moneys voted by parliament for entirely different purposes.

Mr. BENNETT: Not at all.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the only conclusion we can come to. I had the privilege of placing these estimates before the select standing committee on railways and shipping at the session of parliament referred to, and I can say that the government of which I was then a member did not contemplate, nor did the management of the Canadian National Railways contemplate, the erection of an hotel out of the proceeds of these estimates. The matter was never discussed before that committee, never discussed in this parliament. The shadow government during the 100 days found the necessity, the political necessity—a word which my hon. friend is so fond of using—of rushing into a deal for the building of an hotel in the city of Vancouver. I say political necessity—

Mr. BENNETT: It was never executed.

Mr. DUNNING: The agreement was never executed but this order in council was passed to authorize the execution of it. The government went as far as it could in authorizing execution by passing this document which I hold in my hand. The actual execution of it was in the hands of the minister who is here authorized, and of the Canadian National management, who also are here authorized to proceed immediately with it and to take for the purpose $3,500,000 of money which this parliament voted for other purposes and not for the purpose of the Vancouver hotel. As my hon. friend would say, "That is the position with respect to that". I am speaking with some feeling, I admit.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Always do.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I am speaking with some feeling because my hon. friend to-night sought to fasten upon me an arrangement which I never consented to, always protested against, and refused to have anything to do with. In fact, so far from accepting it, this order in council passed by my hon. friends opposite did not satisfy me and did not satisfy the government of which I am a member. I recommended the cancellation of it; my colleagues accepted that recommendation and it was cancelled. I will not go further into details as to what was contemplated as the result of this order in council. It is not an arrangement of which my hon. friend is personally proud, I know, and yet he was the finance minister of the government which authorized it by the document I hold in my hand.

Now with respect to the Halifax hotel—having cleaned up Vancouver as well as I am able—with respect to the Halifax hotel I have just this to say. With regard to Vancouver the charge is made against me by hon. members opposite and by their press that I had cancelled this order in council—this order I had been referring to, passed by my hon. friends opposite—that I had cancelled it at the behest of the Canadian Pacific Railway because they had an hotel in Vancouver. Nay, it was further stated by gentlemen who sit opposite and by their friends, that I had been bribed by the Canadian Pacific Railway by having an hotel built by them in the city which I have the honour to represent. That was published broadcast through the press of western Canada, at least that portion of the press willing to publish that sort of thing.

Mr. BENNETT: Were they sued for libel?

Mr. DUNNING: They were not sued for libel. I—well, I guess I had better not say it; I will stay within the rules. Now, the estimates presently under consideration by the house, recommended by Sir Henry Thornton and the management of the Canadian National Railways, include an amount of $100,000 towards the construction of an hotel in Vancouver. I can tell my hon. friends it will not be constructed on the plan they devised; it will be constructed in a business-like way. Now reverse the situation and let us go to Halifax. There my hon. friend is seeking to prevent the Canadian National from building an hotel. May I ask, is he acting in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as I was accused by his party of doing when I did what was my public duty in regard to the Vancouver matter? My hon. friend has himself on occasion, when I have taken a position with respect to the department and its affairs, intimated somewhat sneeringly that I am working in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BENNETT: Name me an instance when that was said.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend frequently did during last session. I am within the memory of the house, and my hon. friend will find it in Hansard of last session. It was possibly intended as persiflage, but not of a very pleasant kind.

Mr. BENNETT: You will not find it in the records of the house. I have said it to you personally on the street when we have walked down.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend might search Hansard; I will help him. If he does he will find something which he would not like to see.

Mr. BENNETT: If personal observations of that kind are repeated in the house, well and good.

Mr. DUNNING: Be that as it may, all that I said last night with respect to the Halifax hotel stands to-day. I believe that Sir Henry Thornton is right when he says that whatever may happen to the other hotel the Canadian National hotel at Halifax will develop business and will ultimately succeed. To-night my hon. friend stressed the supposed loss of $100,000 a year which may be incurred in operation on the Canadian National hotel system. If we take his remarks seriously at all he must be arguing that therefore we should not build or own hotels. But he is too wise for that in reality; he knows that the value of a hotel to a railway system does not depend upon the earnings of that hotel but that it has a relation to the traffic handled by the railway. All our hotels are great traffic producers for the road, and although on paper they may lose money in operation, they more than make it up in the contribution they make to the general well-being of the system, and I believe the Halifax hotel will be no exception in this regard.

Mr. RALSTON: I just want to say one word in order to put my hon. friend right in the matter of dates. He has suggested to-night that the subscription of the Canadian Pacific Railway was made before the announcement by the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the whole subscription, but $100,000 of it.

Mr. RALSTON: Well, the whole or any part of it. I want to say to my hon. friend that if he will look at the record he will find that on July 6, the Lord Nelson Hotel Company advertised in the Halifax Herald, and in that newspaper appeared a letter signed by H. R. Silver, president, in which it is stated:

It is confidently expected that in the event of Canadian National Railway Company purchasing this amount of preference shares, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will also subscribe for $100,000 par value of the preference shares on the same terms.

The Canadian National Railway Company did not subscribe, and I want to tell my hon. friend that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did not subscribe at that time. On July 14 the announcement was made which I read to the house last night, to the effect that I felt satisfied in my own mind that the item would be placed in the estimates if the management of the railway recommended it. On July 20, Sir Henry Thornton stated that the board of directors of the company would put this item in the estimates, and not until September 26, over two months later, did the Canadian Pacific Railway announce having taken up that subscription. That announcement is contained in the Halifax Chronicle of September 28, in a letter from Mr. Beatty under date of September 26 to Mr. H. R. Silver which has the following to say:

Our executive committee to-day approved a subscription by this company to the preferred stock of the Lord Nelson hotel to the amount of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars par value, conditional upon the bonds and balance of preferred stock being sold.

Let that settle the matter of dates. The Canadian National Railways made their announcement on July 20 and the Canadian Pacific subscription and announcement were made on September 26, so when my hon. friend suggests that a portion of the subscription was taken up before he is palpably in error.

He is seeking to blame the minister; for what? I have told him the reason why this proposition was turned down; one reason was because it was too expensive. I quote the statement made by my hon. friend last night, in which he said:

That in my judgment was a proper view to take, having regard to the fact that the commission to be paid was much larger than should be paid for securing capital under these circumstances.

The other reason was that parliament had not authorized that expenditure, which was commended by my hon. friend. I do not know how he blames the ministers under those circumstances. The proposition was turned down on July 14 and immediately after that the announcement was made. I think with this matter of dates straightened out the house will have no difficulty in coming to a conclusion on the argument made by my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: The only difficulty about it is that the statement of the hon. gentleman with respect to dates is not borne out by the record. Would my hon. friend mind reading the exact words of that letter again?

Mr. RALSTON: This is what I read:

It is confidently expected that in the event of Canadian National Railway Company purchasing this amount of preference shares the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will also subscribe for one hundred thousand dollars par value of the preference shares on the same terms.

The other letter, from Mr. Beatty, was as follows:

Our executive committee to-day approved a subscription by this company to the preferred stock of the Lord Nelson hotel to the amount of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars par value, conditional upon the bonds and balance of preferred stock being sold.

Mr. BENNETT: And the date?

Mr. RALSTON: September 26.

Mr. BENNETT: Previously the company had agreed to invest $100,000. Now I will read from the statement of the president.

Mr. RALSTON: I am giving the statement made by the Lord Nelson Hotel Company.

Mr. BENNETT: The statement made by the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is as follows:

Your directors, after discussion with the National Railways and upon the strong recommendation of the latter, agreed to subscribe for $100,000 of the preferred stock in the Lord Nelson hotel at Halifax, Nova Scotia, the National Railways undertaking to recommend the government's approval of a subscription by that company of $250,000 of such stock. This arrangement was not given effect to owing to government objection, and your company was pressed to increase its subscription to $350,000. Your directors considered that, in view of your ownership of the Dominion Atlantic Railway serving the important tourist centres of the Evangeline country and connecting through the Eastern Steamship Company with the port of Boston, the local project, which received general support in Halifax, should be assisted to the extent mentioned. The subscription was accompanied by an offer to the National Railways to transfer to that company or the government $250,000 of the preferred stock at cost up to July 1st next—in other words, renewing the proposal made by the National Company to this company.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the subscription of September 26.

Mr. BENNETT: No, renewing an offer to take $250,000 of stock if the Canadian Pacific Railway took $100,000.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the subscription of September 26.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that subscription was for $350,000. Does not the hon. gentleman see the position he is in now? There were two subscriptions, an initial subscription for $100,000 followed by one for $250,000, making a total of $350,000 as stated in the letter of September 26. Does the hon. gentleman say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company never agreed to take anything except $350,000 in stock?

Mr. RALSTON: I say on the authority of Mr. H. R. Silver, president of the company whose stock was being subscribed, that it was expected that if the Canadian National would subscribe for $250,000 the Canadian Pacific would subscribe for $100,000. That is the letter which appeared in the paper.

Mr. BENNETT: And the company's report say they did agree to subscribe for $100,000.

Mr. RALSTON: I am taking the public announcement.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Silver confidently expected it in July, and his expectation was realized. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company agreed to subscribe $100,000.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend will not find any agreement to subscribe $100,000 after July.

Mr. BENNETT: Does my hon. friend say that they never agreed to subscribe $100,000?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, on the authority of Mr. Silver.

Mr. BENNETT: Then they agreed to subscribe $350,000 because the Canadian National would not subscribe $250,000?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Then they must have subscribed $100,000 first.

Mr. RALSTON: No, because they subscribed $350,000 in September.

Mr. BENNETT: No; they agreed to make their subscription $350,000, because the president of the company in his annual report says that they agreed to subscribe $100,000.

Mr. RALSTON: All the president said was that on September 26th they agreed to take $350,000 in stock.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course, because the Canadian National did not subscribe the $250,000.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend should not split hairs.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not splitting hairs; this is a question of fact. The fact is that the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in the presence of witnesses, agreed to take $100,000 in the hotel.

Mr. RALSTON: No doubt that is where Mr. Silver got his expectations.

Mr. BENNETT: He was surrounded by witnesses who went up as a delegation. The Canadian Pacific did not want to go into this venture, but the Canadian National urged them to, and they did it for the sake of Nova Scotia as a whole. The Canadian National did not take the $250,000, and the Canadian Pacific have been compelled to take $350,000, or else let the enterprise be abandoned.

Mr. RALSTON: That is my hon. friend's construction.

Mr. BENNETT: It says so. There is a further statement made by the president of the company.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Can we carry this item?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have advised His Excellency that it will not be possible to prorogue this parliament to-night. The house therefore, will resume on Monday.

Mr. BENNETT: At what hour?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At eleven o'clock. I might say to the hon. members that with the exception of the one item we are discussing at present, we have concluded all the business of the session so far as the government is concerned.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure) moved:

That the third report of the joint committee of both houses on the printing of parliament, presented to the house on the eighth instant, be concurred in.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): This resolution involves an increase in salary for an official who comes under the Civil Service Act, and is subject to all the regulations of that act. I have nothing to say against this official, but I submit that if we are to permit officials whose case has been reviewed by the Civil Service Commission to go over the heads of the commission and of the treasury board and come to parliament, we are introducing a precedent which may have very far-reaching effects. On these grounds, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this resolution should not pass. Indeed I question whether it is in order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is not in order, nor is the report, because a committee can take cognizance only of matters which are referred to it. The matter which is the subject of recommendation in this report was not referred to the committee by the house. In addition to that, the official referred to is an employee of the House of Commons and I was not consulted in the matter. The permanent employees of the House of Commons are under the Civil Service Commission, and the case of this excellent employee was reviewed by that commission. I regret to say that they did not find that he should get an increase, and then he went over my head and put the matter before the joint committee of both houses on the printing of parliament. I rule that the motion is not in order.

Mr. MARCIL: In justice to the committee I would say that this report has been adopted by the Senate, and we find ourselves in the peculiar position of having a report adopted by one house and rejected by the other. This official is paid out of the general vote for the printing of parliament. He has had no increase since 1915, and the committee recommended that he be placed in a higher class.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 12.05 a.m.

Monday, June 11, 1928

The house met at eleven o'clock.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MARINE AND FISHERIES—BROADCASTING STATIONS

Mr. GEARY:

For a copy of all correspondence between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or any officer or official of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and (a) broadcasting station CKCL (The Dominion Battery Company Limited), and (b) broadcasting station CKNC (Canada Carbon Company, Limited, Toronto), relative to the change of such stations from the 840 kilocycle channel to the 580 kilocycle channel.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

Mr. BLACK (Halifax):

For a return of a statement showing in full (a) the total amount spent from the year 1911 to date on the Hudson Bay railway by the Railway department; (b) the total amount spent by the Railway department in the port of Nelson; (c) the total amount spent on the port of Churchill by the Railway department; (d) the costs to the Railway department in full in the purchase and transport of all supplies to the ports of Nelson or Churchill in connection with the Hudson Bay railway and its terminals and their facilities; (e) the total amount expended by the Marine department in connection with the port of Nelson or Churchill and the Hudson Bay railway and in the survey of navigation in the straits or in Hudson bay and in the placing of aids to navigation in the Hudson straits or Hudson bay and at the ports of Nelson and Churchill; (f) the total cost of aerial surveys in Hudson straits and Hudson bay in connection with the navigation to the ports of Nelson and Churchill; (g) all other expenditures for any department of the government in connection with the Hudson Bay railway, its terminals at Nelson or Churchill and in the navigation of the Hudson bay and straits.

All such statements to include expenditures from the year 1911 to date, inclusive.

IMMIGRATION—DESTITUTE MENNONITES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) to the fact that seventy-five families of Mennonites lately out from Europe have been left for some time without any means of support. The large land owners have moved to Mexico, and although their bishop has secured from $10 to $15 from the head of each family they are still without any means of support or of getting work.

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration): There is a special agent at present investigating the different Mennonite settlements and I have had no report from him in regard to the matter my hon. friend mentions. If such is the case I will look into it.

Mr. EVANS: The firm of Sibbald and Caswell, solicitors, of Saskatoon, have charge of the matter.

GRANTS TO AGRICULTURAL FAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): I am glad to see my genial friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) back in his place. It would have been very wise had he been present Saturday evening; he might have taken cognizance of some of the remarks that were then made regarding one section of his department.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is not a question on the orders of the day.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I want to ask the minister a question because I am interested in the matter myself. There was a good deal of criticism Saturday night regarding the repeal of grants to class B fairs. There is one of these fairs in my own county and I know what a good thing it is. Will the minister say whether he will change the arrangements in respect to these grants to class B fairs and give them the usual amount?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I want to ask the minister a question along the same line.

Mr. SPEAKER: Perhaps the minister will be allowed to answer one question first.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I read a synopsis of the discussion that took place last Saturday. There was a full discussion and it was intimated that consideration would be given by the government to the representations made.

SUPPLY

COOPERATIVE SOCIETIES AND CUSTOMS VALUATIONS FOR DUTY

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Before you leave the chair Mr. Speaker there is one matter which I desire to bring to the attention of the government. It will not take more than five minutes for me to present the facts, seeing that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) already has notice of my intention. I move:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:—

"seeing that certain rules and regulations prevail in the Customs department by which appraisals are made which absolutely prevent the successful operation of cooperative societies for the distribution of supplies of certain industries—particularly Agriculture—and the necessaries of life—it is the opinion of this house that all goods imported shall be assessed at purchase price only unless such price is lower than the manufacturer or vendor charges in the country of origin."

I will not enlarge upon the amendment, but I wish to state briefly the conditions under which agricultural cooperative societies are now working. It appears that there is in the Dominion a distributing combine which has set up certain rules and regulations under which goods throughout this country shall be distributed. It appears that we are all classified under one of five or six classifications; at the bottom is the consumer; next to him comes the retailer, then the wholesaler, the jobber or dealer and the manufacturer. Under this rule a cooperative company is always classed as a consumer, and it cannot buy goods from the manufacturer at first cost, whether in Canada, in the United States or any other country in the world. We want all cooperative companies to have the right to purchase their goods at first cost. A cooperative conference will be held at Edmonton next month and the attitude of the government will be placed before that conference to show why cooperative companies in Canada have failed, why they are prevented from operating successfully at present, and the difficulties with which they will have to contend in the future if the present system is continued. We have been endeavouring for a good many years, through farmers' organizations in the country, to distribute our goods at first cost; we have tried the distribution of agricultural implements but these regulations of the distribution combine, recognized by the Dominion government through the customs appraisers, have practically put us out of business. To-day we are still at the mercy of the distributing combine.

I have sent notice to the Minister of Customs with regard to this amendment and in view of the fact that the session is about to close I shall not enlarge on what I have already said.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, for many years the discrimination practised against cooperative organizations was merely on the part of wholesalers and manufacturers; in other words, for many years the cooperative organizations were not allowed to buy their goods at wholesale prices. Now we have come to a different period; the time has come when the cooperative movement is generally recognized as one of the outstanding features of this age. The remarkable success of the wheat pools in the west—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask my hon. friend a question? I think the mover of the amendment made the statement that cooperative societies could not purchase from the manufacturers. Is that correct?

Mr. EVANS: That is quite right.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend mean to say they are prohibited from purchasing from manufacturers?

Mr. EVANS: They will not sell.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): And is my hon. friend intimating that there has been discriminatory action on the part of the government?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think I can answer that. I was going to say that for many years the manufacturers and the wholesalers did discriminate against cooperative organization.

Mr. MALCOLM: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I do not think he should make that broad statement in this House of Commons without illustrating his point and giving the names of manufacturers who did discriminate. I do not believe the statement is correct.

Mr. CAMBPELL: I might remind the Minister of Trade and Commerce that a good deal of evidence on this very point was brought out before the special committee on agricultural conditions in 1923. I was going to say that this condition does not exist to-day, or at any rate not to the extent which was the case many years ago. We have come to a period now when discrimination on the part of manufacturers and wholesalers against cooperative organizations has very largely disappeared. That is not our grievance at present. We find in the Customs department that there is a regulation which assesses goods brought in by a cooperative organization for duty purposes at the retail price in the country of origin. That is our grievance. It seems to me that with the cooperative movement recognized as it is to-day, and taking an outstanding place in the business of the country, the time has come when this discrimination should be removed. I do not propose to take up any more of the time of the house, but I think the Minister of Customs might very well give us some assurance that in the future this will be done.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will my hon. friend answer another question? Probably he is well aware of the conditions which existed when the Grain Growers' Grain Company were in the implement business. They were buying largely from American manufacturers and selling the implements to the farmers. I never heard that they were charged excessive duties on goods brought into this country.

Mr. EVANS: I would like to answer the Minister of the Interior in this way: No Canadian concern would sell to the United Grain Growers so they were forced to go to foreign countries to purchase their supplies. Every time they brought in a consignment of goods the dumping clause was applied, and the extra duty was always just about sufficient to cover the profit of all the concerns which stood between the manufacturer and the consumer. Under the rule of the combine of this country, which was recognized by the customs officials when making appraisals, the United Grain Growers could not get any different treatment, and because of this the duty that had to be paid on these implements in some years amounted to over 78 per cent.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Is the hon. gentleman replying? There is no reply allowed to the mover of an amendment.

Mr. EVANS: I was merely answering a question.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend mentioned that the Minister of Customs had been given notice of this proposed amendment.

Mr. EVANS: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know when the notice was given, but this is the first intimation I have had of any intention to move an amendment on going into supply this morning. Therefore I am a little surprised that my hon. friend has brought up his motion at this time. If it has been introduced for the purpose of bringing this matter again to the attention of the government in order that it may be examined with care I would say that I am sure the Minister of National Revenue will be glad to join with his other colleagues in seeing that that is done. I would remind the hon. gentleman, however, that his amendment as brought forward, constitutes a motion of want of confidence in the administration, and if we were to debate the motion probably we would enter on a prolonged discussion.

If what I have said to my hon. friend is sufficient to meet the purpose he has in view, with the assurance that this matter will be carefully considered, well and good; if not I think we had better vote at once on the question.

Mr. EVANS: I would be very pleased to let the matter rest there, on the understanding that the Minister of Customs will make a statement and give us some information in time to lay it before the conference which meets in Edmonton next month. Under these conditions I will withdraw the resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. gentleman shall have leave to withdraw his amendment?

Amendment withdrawn.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Loans to Canadian National Railway Company

Amount not exceeding $39,000,000 to meet expenditures made or indebtedness incurred (where amounts available from net operating income or investments may be insufficient) by or on behalf of the Canadian National Railway Company, herein called "The Company," or any company specified or referred to in chapter 172 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, and chapter 13 of the statutes of 1920 or now or hereafter comprised in the Canadian National Railways or by the company in respect of any railways, properties and works entrusted to it from time to time under the provisions of section 19 of chapter 172 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, or any one or more of such companies, on any or all of the following accounts, such expenditures or indebtedness being herein called authorized expenditures:—

(a) Interest on securities, notes and other obligations; rentals for lease of lines;

(b) Equipment principal payments; sinking funds; miscellaneous maturing or matured notes and other obligations secured or unsecured;

(c) Operating income deficit, whenever incurred or ascertained;

(d) Construction and betterments, including coordinations; acquisition of real or personal property.

The amount herein authorized may be applied from time to time to meet authorized expenditures, in the discretion of the governor in council:—

(a) In respect of railways, properties and works entrusted to the company as aforesaid;

(b) In respect of railways, properties and works not so entrusted by way of loans in cash, or by way of guarantee, or partly one way and partly the other, subject, however, as follows:—

If by way of loans from His Majesty, the amount or amounts advanced to any one or more of the said companies shall be repayable on demand, with interest payable half-yearly at the rate fixed from time to time by the governor in council, secured if and when directed by the governor in council by mortgage or mortgages upon such properties, in such form and containing such terms and conditions, not inconsistent herewith, as the governor in council may approve.

If by way of loans from persons other than His Majesty (without the guarantee of His Majesty) the amounts, terms and conditions of such loans shall be such as the governor in council may from time to time approve.

If by way of guarantee, any such guarantee may be either a general guarantee covering the total amount of the issue, or by a separate guarantee endorsed on each obligation, and may be of the principal, interest and sinking funds (if any) of the notes, obligations or securities of one or more of the said companies specified by the governor in council, which notes, obligations or securities the companies so specified are hereby authorized to make and issue, and such guarantee may be signed by the Minister of Finance, or such other person as the governor in council may authorize, on behalf of His Majesty, in such form and on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine to be appropriate and applicable thereto. Any guarantee so signed shall be conclusive evidence for all purposes that the provisions of this enactment have been complied with.

Should temporary loans be made or negotiated before the lapse of this appropriation either from His Majesty or other persons, guaranteed notes, obligations or securities may subsequently be issued under the provisions of the preceding paragraph of this enactment to renew, refund or adjust such loans, or any part thereof.

of the foregoing, may for its own requirements and also for the requirements of any or all such other companies from time to time:—

(a) Issue notes, obligations or other securities, joint or several, at discretion, for the purpose of any guarantee made or to be made under the provisions of this enactment;

(b) Apply the proceeds of any such guaranteed issue, or the amount of loans received by virtue of this enactment, in meeting authorized expenditures on its own account or on account of any or all of such other companies;

(c) Make advances for the purpose of meeting authorized expenditures to any or all of such other companies, upon or without any security, at discretion.

No purchaser of such guaranteed notes, securities or obligations shall be under any obligation to inquire into the application of the proceeds of any guaranteed issue, $39,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This resolution, involving the expenditure of some $47,000,000, is a matter of very great importance. I have ventured to point out to this house that I think it should take the form of a separate bill, introduced and passed as a statute, and that question has not been discussed by members of the government or by the house.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend just permit me one interruption? I know he wishes to state these figures accurately; the vote in question is for $39,000,000. The total of four or five votes is $47,000,000 including that to provide for maritime freight rates.

Mr. BENNETT: Apart altogether from the question of whether this vote should appear in the supply bill, there is another point which I think the Minister of Finance would do well to consider. This particular vote is for $39,000,000, but it does not indicate where the money is to be expended. It has been the custom of this parliament when granting money to indicate exactly what is to be done with it, but this estimate does not in any sense indicate where that money is to be expended. This is done in the Public Works estimates, in the National Defence estimates, in the Customs, and in other estimates. My contention is that these particulars should be set out in an act of parliament, and not in the proceedings of a select committee which does not bind this parliament nor bind the persons affected. I do know that the permanent officials of the Department of Finance have found the gravest difficulty because of this circumstance, through money that was intended for one purpose being applied, very properly, by the railway company to another, because there is no statutory or parliamentary restriction placed upon its use. I think the Minister of Finance should take this into consideration. I insist that we have the right, as parliament, to have these estimates contain a clear statement as to where the money is to be spent and the amount to be applied for each purpose, and its mere inclusion in a statement or report of the proceedings of a select committee does not in any sense meet the requirements of this parliament with respect to the expenditure of public money. We should have the details as given in other estimates.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The other evening I ventured to draw the attention of the house to the fact that obligations in respect to equipment trusts were being paid out of capital or money borrowed from the country, and the minister very properly observed that these moneys should be paid out of income. It will be seen from the statement of the National railway system for 1927 that the funded debt outstanding shows an increase of $55,901,492.03. Four and a half per cent equipment trust securities, series J, having a par value of $15,000,000, were issued, and it appears that various equipment trust obligations, amounting to $5,291,400, were retired out of capital. The proceedings before the select committee show that this was not an initial payment, because the initial payment for equipment is provided for in these estimates. I took the trouble to check this up with the Department of Finance. If the $5,291,400 were used to make a down payment, one could understand it, but in looking over the evidence before the select committee it will be found that this year a million dollars is to be used for equipment trust and $7,841,000 is required to make payment of equipment principal certificates during the next year. If the minister will say whether or not these are principal payments for new equipment, it will shorten the argument. If he will say whether they are principal payments on equipment already purchased, it will make it much easier.

Mr. DUNNING: They are both.

Mr. BENNETT: My impression was that it must have been both because it is too large an item for this year. This answers to some extent, the observation made by the minister the other evening that this should be paid entirely out of income.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend misunderstood me there.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman so stated in Hansard. He said the equipment item should be paid out of income after the equipment is purchased.

Mr. DUNNING: My intention was to state the common practice, that when equipment purchased in this manner is retired from service it must be replaced out of the charge of revenue and not by the creation of an additional revenue charge. That was the point I had in mind the other evening, and if my language did not convey that, I wish it to be understood now.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman said that equipment trust obligations should be paid out of income, that is, after the down payment is made and the certificates are issued which mature from year to year and should be paid out of income. I think that is a correct statement of what the minister said. I was pointing out that according to the return made and the evidence given before the select committee, a large sum is paid as principal, that is as capital, to retire certificates that are payable out of income, as is the practice with other railway companies. That matter was not gone into in any detail before the select committee.

This money is to be used for other purposes, one of which is the commencement of hotel operations at Vancouver. There is also a million and a quarter for a hotel at Halifax. I am bound to say that the intemperate language used by the Minister of Railways the other evening makes it necessary for me to deal at some length with the Vancouver situation. One would have thought, from what he said, that the Vancouver situation was brought about by what he termed the shadow government, and that we had incurred the obligation under an order in council. I am going to point out to the minister that either his memory was not to be relied upon with respect to the transaction, and no man's memory should be relied upon with respect to the hundreds of orders in council that are passed, or that in the endeavour to close this session on Saturday night he thought it desirable not to give all the facts. The order in council to which he referred was an order in council prepared by the president and chairman of the Canadian National railway system.

Mr. DUNNING: I quoted it.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister made a charge against the administration during the shadow days—I have taken his language from Hansard—having prepared an order in council for political purposes. I hold in my hand a letter written by Sir Henry Thornton, under date of August 3, 1926, addressed to the Hon. Sir Henry Drayton, K.C., Acting Prime Minister of Canada, and which was attached to the order in council:

I enclose herewith draft order in council with respect to the construction of a hotel in the city of Vancouver by the Canadian National Railways, and in support of this proposal I beg to advise as follows.

When the Canadian Northern Railway secured its entrance into that city, a contract was entered into between the city and the company under which the railway agreed to assume certain obligations which are set forth in the attached draft order. The fulfillment of these obligations would cost the railway company about $8,150,000. The city is prepared to forego them provided the railway company will construct, or cause to be constructed, a first class modern hotel in Vancouver, containing approximately five hundred rooms, and to maintain and operate it.

The abandonment by the city of obligations which approximate $8,150,000 is in itself a convincing argument, but it had the additional advantage of placing in the hands of the company a much needed facility and clearing up a controversy with the city which is rapidly becoming serious and if allowed to continue will unquestionably result in bad feeling with consequent loss of traffic.

From the point of view of the company's business, a hotel at Vancouver is probably one of the most important and pressing matters between the head of the lakes and the Pacific coast. I need not remind you how utterly we are at the mercy of our principal competitor in Vancouver in this respect, and I believe we are losing a good many thousands of dollars worth of business each year through absence of our own hotel facilities.

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railway Company, the opinion was unanimous that the company should, for the reasons given above, operate a hotel in Vancouver, and appropriate resolutions to bring this about were passed.

Will my hon. friend be good enough to listen carefully to the balance?

You will observe that the draft order in council indicates that the results from the operation of the railway this year are so satisfactory that the railway company can provide the necessary funds for the purpose from the estimates which were submitted to parliament at its last session and approved by the select standing committee on railways and shipping.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will surely admit that I quoted exactly what he is now quoting.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend read the paragraph I have just read but he did not complete the letter. The letter continues:

I do not know that I can add anything to what has been said except to repeat with all of the emphasis at my command that a suitable hotel in Vancouver is necessary to adequately protect the company's revenue. Such a hotel would attract much additional business to the lines of the National railway and, in addition, would serve the rapidly growing needs of Vancouver for increased hotel accommodation. The present hotel accommodation in that city is entirely inadequate to take care of the large number of tourists who visit that city not only in the summer but during the winter to a considerable extent also.

I trust that the proposals herein contained will be expedited as rapidly as possible by the government, because if there is any material delay the opportunity of making a satisfactory settlement with the city will be withdrawn and an important traffic producing centre will be changed from a friendly district into one which will be distinctly hostile. Aside from all other considerations, this would incur a liability which the national railways, with its need for increased traffic, can ill afford.

Yours faithfully,

H. W. Thornton,
Chairman and President.

P.S.—I neglected to say that negotiations for a suitable hotel at Vancouver have been in progress with increasing activity for at least two years. Also the estimates of our hotel department indicate the net profit from operation will meet all capital charges and leave a small margin besides.

I read that communication because it was attached to the order in council. It was not referred to by the minister. It is the very basis upon which the order in council was framed from a draft prepared by the president and chairman of the company with his assistants. That was when Sir Henry Drayton was acting Minister of Railways and acting Prime Minister.

Mr. DUNNING: What is the date of that?

Mr. BENNETT: The third day of August, 1926. Let us look at the facts. If my hon. friend will turn to the statutes of British Columbia for the year 1913, he will find set out the agreement between the city of Vancouver and the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern Railway. That agreement imposes upon the Canadian Northern railway system many large obligations and I suggested the other evening that these had been settled before the shadow government, so-called, came into power. My hon. friend disputed that, but the evidence of it is in the very order in council which he has produced but with respect to which he did not read the paragraph that is relevant to that allegation. I now propose to read the order in council as a whole, much as I regret doing so, in order that at least those who may not now speak for themselves, the former acting Minister of Railways, Sir Henry Drayton, who is not now in the house, and the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, who was then Prime Minister of Canada, who is also not in the house, may have their position vindicated with respect to this matter, for be it known that only last session the Minister of Railways alleged that a certain letter, which I have not seen, had been written by Sir Henry Drayton with respect to the Carillon falls and a public statement was made in the Canadian Press that Sir Henry Drayton on his return from the West Indies went into the department and in the presence of the deputy minister, who is present here to-day, found the letter in question. I only want to say that the statement appeared in the Canadian Press.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member is wrong.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman says that I am wrong. It would be just as well to make the correction now. I shall be glad to sit down in order that he may do so. It will expedite the business.

Mr. DUNNING: I will deal with the matter later.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I will also deal with it later. I will now read Privy Council order No. 1218, and I desire to direct careful attention to it:

The committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 3rd August, 1926, from the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, representing:

1. That under date the 5th day of February, 1913, an agreement was entered into between the city of Vancouver, in the province of British Columbia, of the first part, and the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company, of the second part, and the Canadian Northern Railway Company, of the third part; the said agreement being hereinafter referred to as "the agreement", the city of Vancouver as "the city" and the said railway companies as "the companies".

2. That under the agreement the companies covenanted with the city, inter alia, to do and perform certain matters and things specifically set out in the agreement clauses numbers 12, 13, 14, 16 and 17 thereof, and in the whole generally in effect as follows:

(a) That the approach of the railway "through the high grounds lying to the south and east of the railway property shall be by means of a tunnel of double track capacity or two single track tunnels, the tunnels to be electrified and permanently maintained;

(b) That a permanent station be established at the south or east portal of the tunnel, and if the north portal is more than three-quarters of a mile from the Union station, an additional permanent station to be constructed at the north portal;

(c) That no engines in False creek shall at any time be operated by steam from coal oil other substances emitting fumes, gas or smoke to such an extent as to make a nuisance;

(d) That within five years from 1913 a 250-room first class hotel shall be constructed and thereafter permanently maintained within the limits on property other than railway property;

(e) That, if required, a spur-track crossing Main street to the city market be constructed.

That ends that.

3. That the companies have not carried out the provisions of the agreement, clauses 12, 13, 14, 16 and 17 thereof.

4. That the city is pressing for the immediate performance of the provisions of the agreement, clause 16 thereof, urging, that the present needs of the city require a larger hotel than the one proposed under the provisions of the said clause 16.

5. That the estimated cost to the companies of carrying out the works called for by the agreement, clauses 12, 13, 14 and 17 thereof, is $8,150,000.

6. That the board of directors of the Canadian National Railway Company is of opinion that the companies' liability under the agreement, clauses 12, 13, 14 and 17 thereof, is questionable, and that it is not in the public interest that the companies undertake to comply with the provisions of the said clauses of the said agreement, the agreement in respect of which was improvidently entered into.

7. That the cost of the construction of the proposed 500-room hotel is estimated at $3,500,000.

8. That during the past two years—

And I direct the minister's attention to this.

That during the past two years negotiations have, with the approval of the Department of Railways and Canals, been carried on between the authorities of the Canadian National Railways and the authorities of the city with an endeavour to effect a settlement between the companies and the city providing for the erection by the companies of a hotel within the limits of the city of approximately five hundred renting rooms to be operated by the companies and providing for the release by the city of the carrying out by the companies of the provisions of the agreement, clauses 12, 13, 14 and 17 thereof.

Now this is the really relevant section:

9. That the negotiations in the immediately preceding statement referred to have been carried on to a successful conclusion.

And they were carried on by the government antecedent to the advent into power of the Meighen administration.

Mr. DUNNING: Not at all.

Mr. BENNETT: After the advent into power of the Meighen government no negotiations were carried on with the city of Vancouver.

9. That the negotiations in the immediately preceding statement referred to have been carried on to a successful conclusion, the authorities of the city making stipulation that action under agreement reached through such negotiations be taken immediately, in which immediate action the authorities of the Canadian National Railways concur.

10. That the council of the city—

That is the city of Vanvouver—

—passed a resolution on the 15th day of April, 1926, (copy of the resolution hereto attached marked "A") making reference to the agreement, and, in particular, to clauses 12, 13, 14, 16 and 17 thereof and to the matter of hotel requirements in the city, and under said resolution resolved as follows:

"That, in consideration of the said railway companies, or either of them, immediately erecting, or causing to be erected by an arrangement with any other person or company, a first-class modern hotel containing not less than five hundred rooms, and forthwith to maintain and operate the same, the city hereby releases the company from its obligations under clauses 12, 13, 14 and 17 of the said agreement of 1913.

The agreement, which is marked exhibit "A," I hold in my hand. It reads:

Moved by Alderman Almond.
Seconded by Alderman Gibbons.

Whereas an agreement was entered into on the fifth day of February, 1913, between the city of Vancouver, of the first part, the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company, of the second part, and the Canadian Northern Railway Company, of the third part;

And whereas under the said agreement the said railway companies, and each of them, covenanted with the city, inter alia, to do and perform such matters and things as are more specifically set out in clauses 12, 13, 14, 16, and 17 of said agreement;

And whereas the said railway companies have not carried out the provisions of the said clauses;

And whereas the city has been, and is now, pressing for the immediate performance, particularly of clause 16 of said agreement, and has urged that the present needs of the City require a much larger hotel than the one proposed in the said clause;

And whereas the company has indicated its willingness to take immediate steps to procure the erection of such larger hotel and maintain and operate the same, but is desirous of being relieved of any obligations under clauses 12, 13, 14, and 17 of the said agreement;

And whereas it is not deemed that the undertaking provided for in said clauses are required for the present needs of the City;

Therefore, be it resolved that, in consideration of the said railway companies, or either of them, immediately erecting, or causing to be erected by an arrangement with any other person or company, a first-class modern hotel containing not less than five hundred rooms, and forthwith to maintain and operate the same, the city hereby releases the company from its obligations under clauses 12, 13, 14, and 17 of the said agreement of 1913.

Carried.

Certified a true copy of resolution passed by the council of the city of Vancouver on the 15th day of April A.D. 1926.

(Sgd.) Wm. McQueen,
City Clerk.

(Sgd.) Louis D. Taylor,
Mayor.

Who was in power then? What government had control here? Mr. Meighen's government was not in power; the so-called shadow government was not in power. There is the document attached to the order in council that at once destroys the statements made in this house on Saturday night as to whether or not the arrangements had been completed with respect to a settlement between the city of Vancouver and the government of this country. There is the document and the order in council produced by my hon. friend the minister himself. He made reflections upon men who may not speak for themselves, who are attacked for having done things that they did not do, and for that reason it is essential that there should be placed on the record the facts with respect to this transaction.

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear. I heartily agree.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us go further with the order in council. Paragraph 11 states:

That it is the opinion of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railway Company that, in view of the progress made by the Canadian National Railways in revenue receipts during the present year, the whole cost of the construction of the proposed five hundred room hotel can be met from the estimates which were submitted to parliament at its last session and approved by the select standing committee on railways and shipping.

That is a repetition of the statement made in the letter of Sir Henry Thornton, the chairman of the board, in an official communication to the government as to where the money was to come from. He said, "Here is the money because we have done so much better than we expected that we will have sufficient in the $10,000,000 voted by parliament to make the $3,500,000 available for that purpose." Incidentally that supports the statement I made to the Minister of Finance, that if you desire to treat these funds as earmarked for a particular purpose, you must so state in the estimates. Paragraph 12 of the order in council reads:

That the chairman and president of the Canadian National Railways under a letter dated the 3rd day of August, 1926, addressed to the Honourable Sir H. Drayton, Acting Minister of Railways and Canals (copy of said letter hereto attached marked "B"), submitted the above arrangement, together with a copy of this draft recommendation to council—

It did not originate from the old shadow government at all. It was done by the chairman and president of the railway company and his directors:

—submitted the above arrangement, together with a copy of this draft recommendation to council covering the same, and advised in effect that the board of directors of the Canadian National Railway Company at a recent meeting of said board unanimously expressed the opinion that the companies should operate a hotel within the city and had passed appropriate resolutions to give effect to the arrangement and recommending confirmation of the arrangement generally hereinbefore referred to between the city and the companies in the matter.

The minister submits the above and, upon the advice of the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, recommends that approval be given to the recommendation of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railway Company to construct at the approximate cost of $3,500,000 to the Canadian National Railways of a hotel in the city of Vancouver of an approximate capacity of five hundred rooms, and to fully equip and thereafter permanently operate the same in consideration of the city of Vancouver releasing the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Railway Company of any and all obligations and liabilities under the provisions of clauses 12, 13, 14 and 17 of the agreement dated the 5th day of February, 1913, made and entered into between the city of Vancouver, party of the first part, and the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company, party of the second part, and the Canadian Northern Railway Company, party of the third part, and that authority be given to the said railway companies to enter into an agreement or agreements with the city of Vancouver to give full effect accordingly.

Not to the crown:

—and that authority be given to the said railway companies to enter into an agreement or agreements with the city of Vancouver to give full effect accordingly.

That is the position. The authority was given to the railway companies to complete the agreement, not to the crown:

—and that authority be given to the said railway companies to enter into an agreement or agreements with the city of Vancouver to give full effect accordingly.

(Signed) G. G. Kezar,
Acting Clerk of the Privy Council.

I have read the order in council, and I have read the letter of the chairman and president of the board together with the appropriate action taken on the 15th of April by the city council of Vancouver, and have done so because it does appear to me in view of the observations that were made here the other evening that it of first-rate importance that the facts as the documents indicated should be placed on the record. It is true that the agreement was not signed. Why? Although the right hon. the Prime Minister himself charged that reckless expenditures of moneys were being made by governor general's warrants during the regime of the so-called shadow government, I can say this, and the Minister of Finance will bear me out, that as Minister of Finance in that administration I took the statutes and set up a trust account with respect to every dollar of expenditure of every department in accordance with the provisions of the Audit Act and other enactments, and the Minister of Finance himself bore tribute to our care when he rose in this house in the next session to point out that every single departmental expenditure that had been made was within the terms of the trust thus set up at my instance by the Auditor General of this country. The Minister of Finance will recall that circumstance in connection with the validation of governor general's warrants. It was thought that we were passing governor general's warrants in blanket form. That was not done. Each appropriation was treated as an appropriation bill, and the funds were marked as trust funds, set up as such in the books of the country, as required by the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act of this Dominion. When this order in council came under my attention as it naturally would in the end, I having been absent in various parts of the Dominion in the meantime, I pointed out that under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act there is no power to pass a governor general's warrant for $3,500,000 and that parliament had not made provision for that amount. The agreement was not signed. I must accept the responsibility for that, jointly, of course, with my colleagues.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend said that the moneys were not to come from the crown. How would a governor general's warrant be necessary if they were not to come from the crown?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman does not mean that seriously. The Canadian National was to get the money from the crown, and had to make an agreement with the city. That was stated in the order in council. The hon. gentleman can read what is written. Do not try to get away with inaccurate statements with respect to this matter this morning. The real truth is that the documents we have now negative entirely the statements made the other evening, and what is more, the money was to come from the crown as a loan to the Canadian National railway system.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Did not my hon. friend say the other day to the house that he thought the Canadian National moneys ought to be voted separately? Why, if they were not coming from the crown?

Mr. BENNETT: No. My hon. friend surely does not mean that. I said they were not supplied to the crown.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the same thing.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the exact opposite.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Where does the crown get its supply, except from parliament?

Mr. BENNETT: The Canadian National Railways is not the crown. Let us read the supply bill. The Prime Minister has stated the exact opposite of what is the fact, and I am glad that he has interrupted, because I shall now endeavour to make that point quite clear. Take the appropriation bill. It reads:

Most Gracious Sovereign,

Whereas it appears by message . . . . that the sum hereinafter mentioned is required to defray certain expenses of the public service of Canada, not otherwise provided for—

My contention was, and is, that with respect to the Ottawa Federal District Commission, with respect to good roads, with respect to other matters in which moneys are being expended for specific purposes, the expenditure not being under the control of this parliament, that is not supply for the crown, but loans made by the crown to various organizations, and should be the subject matter of special legislation, which the right hon. gentleman himself believes to be the proper procedure for in connection with the Ottawa Federal District Commission he introduced a special bill to deal with that situation, and with respect to other matters, with respect to the battlefields, and in other cases where money is loaned to other organizations to be expended by them, and the expenditure is not under the control of this parliament in the sense that we may direct it. And in this case, the money was to be loaned by the crown for the railway—$3,500,000, but the money was being expended by the railway companies, and the agreements were being made by the railway companies. That is the clear distinction, just as in the Federal District case, the money comes from the crown but is spent by that commission. We cannot direct its expenditure; they direct its expenditure. I thank my hon. friend the Prime Minister for directing attention to this point for apparently he was under the impression that I was contending for something entirely different from what I was in fact contending for. Now, that is the position with respect to the Vancouver hotel.

The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals after he came back into power cancelled the order in council to which I have directed attention. The question of the execution of the agreement turned entirely on the ability, of course, to get the money, and in my judgment as a lawyer, having regard for the conditions with respect to governor general's warrants, the sum of three and a half million dollars not having been voted or authorized by parliament, could not be withdrawn from the treasury by governor general's warrants, because the necessity for it was was not so urgent as to bring it within the terms of the statute, although possibly had it been done—

Mr. DUNNING: So I was quite right, in recommending the cancellation of the order.

Mr. BENNETT: Not at all. All the hon. gentleman had to do was to hold his order, because no agreement was executed. He withdrew the power to execute the agreement.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the whole point.

Mr. BENNETT: There is nothing else in the order in council except authority to the railway company to sign, and that authority was cancelled. At the next session of parliament the money was not found for that purpose, but this year, according to the evidence given before the select committee, a hundred thousand dollars was placed in the estimates for the Vancouver hotel, and I believe certain moneys have already been expended with respect to the site. I am not sure whether it has been secured by expropriation or otherwise, but a site was pointed out to me in Vancouver as being owned by the Canadian National Railways and intended for a hotel. I do not know whether that is so or not, but probably the minister can clear it up. I have not access to orders in council, naturally, and can only speak from what I find otherwise.

I think I have made it abundantly clear, Mr. Chairman, that these are the facts. They speak for themselves. They leave no room for inferences to be drawn. They indicate what did take place. At least, they indicate that Sir Henry Drayton and the so-called shadow government acted upon the recommendations of the responsible head of the Canadian National Railways, who believed the matter urgent, who believed that immediate action should be taken, and who believed that otherwise the settlement which in his wisdom he considered should be carried through would fail, because it was based upon immediate action being taken and was so stated. That is the case with respect to the Vancouver hotel.

Now I come to the Halifax hotel, and once more the dates which I have verified do not agree with those given by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston). They are entirely at variance with his statements, and I am certain now that in view of the evidence given by Sir Henry Thornton before the select committee, which is contradictory of the reports made by the Canadian Pacific Company and its directors, and is at variance with the statements made by the mayor, I think it is, of the city council of Halifax—I am certain, I say, that this matter can be cleared up only by the evidence being taken under oath before a select committee next session. This session no evidence was given under oath; a statement was made ex parte, and no cross-examination was had, except that Mr. Bell asked a few questions. The question as to what actually did take place must be considered. But these facts can be verified, because there are still living witnesses who are not connected with either railway system. They state that having come to Montreal as early as April, 1927, to obtain the assistance of the Canadian Pacific Railway to build a hotel, appropriate action was taken by the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific as appears in their minutes; further, that the matter was left entirely to the executive committee and the president, as matters of this kind are, and that in June—it is no good to call for documents; I do not have them.

Mr. DUNNING: I was talking to the Prime Minister about an entirely different matter.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to the allegations of my connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DUNNING: I made none.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know anything clearer than what was said the other evening. In June of 1927, action was taken in consequence of a delegation further discussing the matter with the Canadian National Railways that they should take part in this enterprise. In June, 1927, the president and chairman of the Canadian National railway system promised to take $250,000 worth of shares in the venture, and urged the delegation of three gentlemen to go down and see the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway and urge that his company take $100,000. The Canadian Pacific Railway finally agreed to take $100,000 prior to August 1, 1927, and definitely committed themselves to do so because the Canadian National system had agreed to take $250,000, subject to an order in council being passed. That was rejected in July for reasons stated by the minister. A new scheme was put forward, and the Canadian National Railways were asked whether they would put in $250,000. They replied in the affirmative, and the Canadian Pacific Railway $100,000 stood. Then it was that the gentlemen visited the minister at Yarmouth for the purpose of endeavouring to induce him to realize how essential it was that action should be taken by both systems to participate in the undertaking. The Canadian Pacific Railway at no time would have more than $100,000 out of a capitalization of several millions.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend knows the figures. Why does he say several millions?

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. RALSTON: The authorized capital is $640,000 of preferred shares and $600,000 of bonds, together with common shares of no par value.

Mr. BENNETT: $1,240,000 outside the common shares.

Mr. RALSTON: But I do not find any cash value for the no par shares.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. Those common shares were given as a bonus to the preferred shareholders in proportion to their subscriptions.

Mr. RALSTON: Surely my hon. friend does not call that "millions" of dollars. Everybody admits that the total cash to be expended on the proposition, even under the new scheme of financing was only $1,146,000 bonds and all.

Mr. BENNETT: If my hon. friend prefers I will say that it was less than two million dollars.

Mr. RALSTON: A million and a half would be better.

Mr. BENNETT: The original proposal contemplated a larger expenditure.

Mr. RALSTON: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; it contemplated exactly the same expenditure.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend is wrong because the price at which the securities were originally to be sold would not have realized sufficient money. It was proposed to issue the bonds at 95 and the preferred at 90. However, the details of the financing are not important beyond this, that the word two means several.

Mr. RALSTON: It is the difference between a million and a half and several millions.

Mr. BENNETT: We will say it is less than two millions. I am perfectly content to make it a million and a half.

Mr. RALSTON: If you made it a million and an eighth it would be better.

Mr. BENNETT: I am perfectly content, it does not make any difference for the purpose of this argument. I point out that it was not a Canadian Pacific hotel. The Canadian Pacific had no interest in it beyond the $100,000, and the bonus of the common shares. The Canadian Pacific's interest in proportion to the Canadian National's was to be as 100 to 250. I am sure my hon. friend will agree with me as to that. Therefore it was not a Canadian Pacific venture; that is clear. They only came in because the Canadian National had suggested they should, controlling as they do the Dominion Atlantic railway running through the land of Evangeline. It was admitted they were interested in the tourist traffic to the extent of 100 as compared to the Canadian National's 250. That I think the records clearly indicate. My hon. friend the Minister of National Defence declined to go on with that venture in July. He says the cost was too great if the railway companies were to take $350,000 of shares, and he was correct in revising the finances.

Mr. RALSTON: I did not revise them.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, the suggestion was that it was too large.

Mr. RALSTON: I did not suggest anything. I said it was altogether too great.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, if the hon. gentleman did not revise the scheme at least he did not desire the hotel to be proceeded with.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not care what my hon. friend says so long as he states the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: That is, my hon. friend advised that the Canadian National hotel be built.

Mr. RALSTON: From first to last I was for the Canadian National Railway hotel. There is no misunderstanding as to that.

Mr. BENNETT: I am going to read the minister's statement as given out to the press. According to an official statement given by him and appearing in the Halifax Chronicle on September 24, he closes with these words.

Mr. RALSTON: Read it all.

Mr. BENNETT: I will read it all; I shall be glad to. The text of the telegram follows:

Further reference your telegram as I wired you I had not seen new proposal. Matter was given consideration by council this afternoon and it turns out that this proposal like the previous one, is for purchase minority shares in privately-owned hotel, proposed to be erected in Halifax. Council adhered to the decision reached in July 14 with reference to this same proposal, which decision was announced at the time, namely that large expenditures of this character, which are outside ordinary railway operations, should be included in the railway budget submitted to parliament. Since then, Sir Henry Thornton has publicly announced the intention of the Canadian National management to include in the next Canadian National budget provision for railway terminal hotel at Halifax. Railway hotel is what I have been working for, and I will continue to support it strongly unless private interests think fit to take on project.

Those were the words of the government: "unless private interests think fit to take on project". Did they take it on? They did.

Mr. RALSTON: Read the other two telegrams.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not the correspondence. This I take from the public press.

Mr. RALSTON: It is in the public press.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not seen the others.

Mr. RALSTON: You have made some study of it.

Mr. BENNETT: I made a study of it because I wanted to find out what the minister said on September 24, and on that date he told the people through a telegram, made public in a journal, that he had been working for a hotel project and would continue to support it strongly "unless private interests think fit to take on project". Those words are not mine. Now, did they take it on? The hotel is in process of being finished; it will be finished in the next few months.

Mr. RALSTON: I am asking you to read the other two telegrams.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not have them, but if the minister will hand them to me I shall be glad to read them. If I had them I would read them. This one I had copied this morning out of the Halifax Chronicle; I sent my secretary to copy it for me. If there is other correspondence, well and good; at any rate I have not got it. Now I desire to point this out to the government: this private interest, the Lord Nelson hotel, had sought subscriptions from various people throughout the country. Insurance companies have bought the bonds; the banks purchased the bonds; private individuals bought bonds, individuals in Halifax and other parts of the country bought preferred shares in Halifax and in other parts of the country; corporations doing business in Halifax put money into the venture. And how does that venture stand to-day? The windows of the hotel are in and the structure is in process of completion. I do not know but I am informed that the hotel will be ready for occupation by Trafalgar day this year at least, which is now only a little more than four months off. Therefore, before a single dollar has been spent on the other undertaking we have this privately owned hotel practically completed. I thought the other day that some moneys had been spent on the other project, but I am informed that these moneys may be referable to the terminal and not to the hotel, because parliament had not given sanction to the work being carried on. The position, then, is this: Without any work having been done on our hotel, to be publicly-owned, this privately-owned hotel will be ready for occupation within the next few months, and we are now asked to put a million and a quarter into a public undertaking which will render that private investment a failure. My hon. friends may laugh and say, "Oh, well the Canadian Pacific can afford to do it. Sir Henry Thornton said they wanted to do it, and their directors have considered it". But here we have the language of a minister of the crown, "Unless private interests think fit to take on project". And they have taken it on; and now this house is asked to sanction putting into competition with that privately-owned hotel this public enterprise, on which no money has yet been spent. According to the report submitted by Mr. Pratt, the head of the hotel department, to Sir Henry Thornton, that privately-owned hotel, the Lord Nelson, will lose $100,000 a year. One of the newspapers this morning is of the opinion that I pose as an expert in hotels. Now, I do not know anything about hotels except that I pay large sums of money, thousands of dollars, into them annually. I do know, however, that the expert upon whose judgment we have a right to rely says that it will lose $100,000. So "that is the position with respect to that", to quote once more the language of the Minister of Railways.

I ask the government this question: Would a business enterprise put up another hotel in Halifax under these circumstances to compete against a new hotel just created? Would that be done in a city of 60,000 or less? We are now asked to spend a million and a quarter—or, according to the Minister of National Defence, $1,146,000—so that we shall have in Halifax two hotels costing over $2,000,000 altogether, one competing against the other. In other words, the taxpayers of this country will have to find a million and a quarter for the construction of an hotel to compete with a private undertaking carried out under the circumstances I have stated. We as a parliament are taking the money of the taxpayers as a whole and devoting it to the purpose of destroying an investment of part of our own taxpayers. That is what it amounts to. It must not be forgotten that the Canadian Pacific—I am carrying the figures in my head and I am of course subject to correction—has paid into the country in taxes during the last three years an average of over $5,000 a day. I believe this is the figure mentioned the other day by the president. This means that one dollar out of every $175 of taxes collected in this country is paid by that enterprise; and every time $175 is lost in this new hotel one dollar is to be paid by that taxpayer, the rest by the taxpayers of Canada as a whole. I am content to have the Minister of National Defence or anyone else go out to secure votes and power under these circumstances. The people put their money behind a private hotel because they could not get the railways to build one. They had no desire to put their fortunes into the enterprise, but having done so in good faith, and the minister having stated that he was strongly for a railway hotel "unless private interests think fit to take on project"—private capital, I say, having practically completed that hotel before we have spent a dollar on the other undertaking, I protest against the House of Commons putting a million and a quarter into any enterprise to duplicate an existing facility which the minister himself said would not be done "unless" private enterprise undertook the work. That is my position, and I think it should be the position of every reasonable man. I appeal to the Prime Minister who desires, I am sure, that we should not waste our money, to consider the statements made to the president of the railway, given by an expert, with respect to one hotel losing $100,000. I do not pretend to know; I hope it will not be so. It is true, as was pointed out this morning, in the newspapers, that a single hotel, the Lord Nelson, might make money. But what will happen if you have two? This hotel is a 200-roomed building; the other is to have equal capacity. We have not seen the plans, but that is what the press states. And it is stated by Sir Henry Thornton that this is only about equal to the capacity of all the hotels at present in Halifax. I assume there is no question about that. There are of course several hotels in Halifax besides the Queen and the Halifax. We are now to have two new modern structures, one down at the ocean terminal and the other on Spring Garden road. The statement has been officially made that the Canadian National hotels last year lost $15,000 on operating account alone, paying not a cent of interest on investment, and now in a city of 60,000 we are asked to duplicate the Lord Nelson by putting up another hotel at the terminals for the purpose, not of carrying out an arrangement that has been made, but merely of adding this hotel to the terminals. I submit that it is not sound business, and no business man would do it. Would any one of the members of this committee here this morning sit down at the meeting of a board of directors and vote a million and a quarter dollars for this purpose? Would the Minister of National Revenue do it? Would the Minister of Railways do it? I am sure from what I know of the attitude of mind of the right hon. Prime Minister that he would not do it, but that is what we are asked to do. Once more I get back to where I started the other evening. We represent the shareholders of this enterprise. It is provided that the governor in council shall represent the shareholders; the governor in council means the government, and that means that as long as a majority of the 245 members of this house support the government, they represent the shareholders of this vast system, the greatest business in Canada to-day. As shareholders, we are asked to vote confidence in the directors appropriating $1,250,000 for that purpose. Why not wait and see the result of the operation of the privately owned hotel, before we vote further money? Why not see what the demands are and what the requirements are from day to day? It is said that there will be ocean traffic coming in and so on, but my observation has been that special trains are usually standing at the dock to take passengers away as quickly as possible, because the third class traffic must be moved out at once. I am sure hon. gentlemen realize the seriousness of this matter.

The Minister of Railways complained that it was suggested by members on this side of the house that the Saskatchewan hotel had been a bribe to him, because the Canadian Pacific hotel did not encounter competition at Vancouver. I am bound to say that I never heard that observation made by any one until the minister made it the other evening. The only observation I ever heard made in that regard was that the construction of the hotel at Regina served a very useful purpose to the gentleman whom he succeeded, which is an entirely different thing. I have never suggested that any bribe was offered to the Minister of Railways; he might as well say that the position I take to-day with respect to this matter is because I am friendly or favourable to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DUNNING: I suggested that neither was creditable to any one.

Mr. BENNETT: The observations of the hon. member afford me an opportunity to say that prior to 1911 I was solicitor and counsel for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Before I was elected in that year I tendered my resignation, and I have never since been appointed by that company. I have taken cases against them; I have been retained by their local solicitor to take, I think, two cases for them since that time. I have taken a case to the Privy Council against them since that time and I have taken one for them, but after I was elected leader of this party in October, 1927, I disposed of every single share of Canadian Pacific Railway stock which I owned, in order that I might be free from any influence of any kind. I felt the dangers of conflict between duty and interest. I knew the terrible urge of interest as against duty, especially when the interest is financial. I disposed of every share I had in that enterprise, and I had been an interested shareholder for many years. I took that action reluctantly, but I did it because I conceived that the contest between duty and interest should never arise while I had to discharge public duties such as those which now devolve upon me. Therefore I trust that I now approach this matter in a sense of fairness; I have endeavoured to look at it fairly. It has been my privilege during the years which have passed since I was a young man to sit upon the boards of many enterprises, banks, insurance companies, electric companies and other corporations engaged in various forms of industrial activity, and I have endeavoured to gain some little experience in matters of business. So I say to-day, without fear of contradiction, that I do not think there is living in Canada a board of directors which would ask its shareholders for $1,250,000 to put into an enterprise which would compete with a privately owned enterprise in a city with a population of only 60,000, where the public requirements were being amply met. At least any board of directors would delay action. Is there any business man here who would not do so? They would delay it until some future date, until they had further information; they would try to obtain all the facts and to secure a better appreciation of what the traffic might be, because as the minister said the other evening, we are experimenting with public ownership. I think it is true that we are experimenting; that we must give public ownership a chance. What chance are you going to give public ownership to succeed if you take the enormous sum of $1,250,000 from the taxpayers of this country, a very large sum involving an interest charge of at least $50,000 per annum, and put it into a venture where, as far as the report of the experts is concerned, a venture with a monopoly of that class of trade in that particular community would not make ends meet? Then there is the further fact that we are advised that the hotel operations of the system as a whole did not earn operating expenses last year by $15,000.

I may sacrifice the support of friends and of electors, but that will not deter me from contending against and protesting against the investment by the people of Canada, at the instance of this government, of $1,250,000 in a hotel enterprise at this time, in view of the evidence which is now before us. Go on with your terminals; finish them, because they have no relation to the hotel except as they may be connected with it hereafter, but let us wait to find the facts from the actual operation of the new hotel before we make this additional expenditure. I suggest in all good part, although it means perhaps the alienation of friends and of electors, that that course should be followed. I am sure that if the Minister of Finance had to deal with this as he has been dealing with joint stock companies all his life he would not ask his shareholders to sanction the raising of money for the purposes indicated unless he had some assurance of what the result of the investment would be.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish to congratulate my hon. friend upon the more moderate tenor of his remarks to-day, and I shall endeavour to emulate his example in that respect. In dealing with complex legal matters such as surround the negotiations with respect to the Vancouver hotel my hon. friend, with his great legal training, has of course a distinct advantage over me, and in diverting attention from the main issue with respect to the Vancouver hotel by reciting, as he did, the preamble to the order in council to which I briefly referred in its essential particulars the other evening, he recites what I presume to be well known to members of this house, because on more than one occasion the matter has been discussed in this house and has been very frequently discussed in the press, particularly that of the Pacific coast.

I refer to the difficulties which arose between the Canadian National and the city of Vancouver, due to the existence of an agreement between that city and Mackenzie and Mann and having to do with certain obligations assumed by the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company in return for certain concessions granted to the company by the city many years ago. My hon. friend quite correctly stated what those obligations were, and may I say to him that they did not change in the short space of time during which my hon. friends opposite were in power. The attitude of the city of Vancouver with regard to putting the agreement into execution did not change during that time; their attitude continuously was one of constant pressure to have the agreement of the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company implemented by the Canadian National Railway Company. While we were in office during the month of April, 1926, there was communicated to me the contents of a resolution passed by the city of Vancouver, to which my hon. friend made reference this morning. That by-law or resolution, whatever it was, conveyed the unanimous consent of the Vancouver city council to abrogate certain sections of the agreement between the city and the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company, except that part concerning the hotel operation. The resolution provided that the railway company would enlarge the provision relative to hotel accommodation to the extent of five hundred rooms. My question to the management of the railway company in April, 1926, was, "Where do you propose to get the money to build this hotel? Your estimates are in and are before the House of Commons now, and there is no provision there for the erection of a 500-room hotel. Where do you propose to get the money?" The answer was that certain private parties were prepared to build a hotel in Vancouver to be leased to the Canadian National Railways, and that the Vancouver city council would regard such arrangement as a complete discharge of the obligations of the railway company with respect to a hotel. This was what my hon. friend had reference to the other evening when he said this government had encouraged these negotiations and had carried them on. I would inform my hon. friend that this government absolutely refused to consent to such an arrangement with respect to the hotel at Vancouver. That is a matter of fact. The very fact that no order in council was passed by this government giving approval to such a scheme is the best evidence I can offer in regard to that phase of the matter.

When we went out of office on the first day of July the city of Vancouver was quite certain that while we might agree in principle to the erection of a Canadian National hotel at Vancouver as complete satisfaction of what was involved in a former agreement with the Canadian Northern Pacific, we were not prepared at that session to make provision in the estimates for that purpose. The question between us and the city of Vancouver was not one of whether a hotel should be built, for the government agreed with the Canadian National management that the Canadian National should have a hotel at this great Pacific gateway. The question was, as it is with a great many other matters recommended by the Canadian National, how soon, having regard to the financial situation of this country, such and such an enterprise could be carried out. That was the position in regard to the building of a hotel, but I want to make it doubly clear that this government absolutely refused to have anything to do with the arrangement whereby private parties would put up a hotel which would be leased to the Canadian National at a rental sufficient to pay a handsome profit on the investment to the promoters, and to ensure them completely against any loss in conection with it. I pause to say that to my mind one of the greatest dangers—I have mentioned it in the house before—we encounter in connection with this great public ownership experiment we are conducting, is the effort made by philanthropically disposed private individuals or private corporations to erect some sort of structure, a hotel or something of that nature, for the Canadian National, or have the Canadian National invest something in their enterprise. and thereby completely guarantee its financial success so far as they are concerned. In other words, to have a substanial profit, in most cases, guaranteed by the people of this country. To my mind it is only in rare and exceptional circumstances that it is desirable for this publicly owned railway corporation of ours to enter into that kind of arrangement with private individuals. That is one of the reasons I never liked the Halifax proposal whereby the Canadian National would have invested $250,000 in a company which would be controlled by others. I may say in passing, the original arrangement with respect to Halifax was one which certainly involved the mulcting of private investors by the promoters of an extortionate amount. I use that term advisedly, and I believe my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will agree with that.

Mr. BENNETT: Not extortionate, because other promoters have received as much; it was too large a compensation for the services rendered, in my judgment.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will agree that it is much too large.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: If the word "extortionate" is felt to be too strong, I will agree with him that "much too large" is probably better.

Our hon. friends opposite came into office —not into power—around the 1st of July, and immediately I presume—and here I can only presume—the city of Vancouver and the private interests who were so anxious to confer favours on the Canadian National, brought the same pressure to bear on my hon. friends as they had been exerting upon this government during the preceding month. What was the result? Conferences took place and it was quite evident to men possessing the astuteness of my hon. friends opposite that it would not be possible or practical or politically wise for that government to authorize the arrangement we had been continuously refusing to authorize. That must have been apparent, but it did not deter the ambitious gentlemen from the Pacific coast who were promoting this enterprise. They started advocating a different arrangement, and before this order in council was passed by the government the government was made aware by letter of the precise terms under which that hotel would be built, if authority were granted.

Mr. BENNETT: That is probably the reason it was not built.

Mr. DUNNING: But the authority was granted after the government knew the terms upon which the hotel would be built. A letter was received from Sir Henry Thornton addressed to Sir Henry Drayton, and my hon. friend was in error when he said Sir Henry Drayton was Minister of Railways; he was acting minister.

Mr. BENNETT: I said acting Prime Minister and acting Minister of Railways, both.

Mr. DUNNING: Sir Henry Thornton indicated under the date of July 29, 1926—and I would ask the house to remember that the writs for an election had been issued; an election was actually on in this country—the nature of the deal proposed for the construction of a hotel in Vancouver. On the 7th day of August this order in council to which my hon. friend has been referring this morning was passed.

Mr. BENNETT: Would you read the letter?

Mr. DUNNING: With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. BENNETT: It was the letter that was not carried out.

Mr. DUNNING: The letter which produced the order in council authorizing what was contained in the letter.

Mr. BENNETT: It did not.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: But which was never implemented, because the people of Canada subsequently refused at a general election to endorse my hon. friends; that was the reason.

Mr. BENNETT: There was no agreement signed at any time either before or after the election, let us be frank about this. Giving authority does not mean signed.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend must then admit that it was completely deceiving the people of the city of Vancouver and the private parties interested in it.

Mr. BENNETT: The order in council recites that $3,000,000 was available out of the $10,000,000, and I concluded, as a matter of law that it was not proper to do it by that order in council, and the Department of Justice or the legal department of the railway sustained that view.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is again confusing two matters.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a bit.

Mr. DUNNING: It will be interesting to him, I am sure, to learn that in spite of the fact, as he says, that money was not spent because it was not legal to do so, as he is now saying—

Mr. BENNETT: There was no agreement signed.

Mr. DUNNING: There was no agreement signed to have the money so spent under the authority of the order in council. My hon. friend is not speaking of the matter which I am discussing, that is the trouble. I am discussing the kind of arrangement which was authorized by that order in council, and I say "authorized" advisedly, because the letter indicating the nature of the deal reached the government of the day before they passed the order in council authorizing it. What does the letter say? It is as follows:

Montreal, July 29, 1926.

Dear Sir Henry:

Re Vancouver Hotel

We had a conference this morning with Mr. Evans and Colonel Ryan, Mr. L. J. Ladner also being present, and agreed as follows:

Who was Mr. L. J. Ladner? Mr. L. J. Ladner was a successful candidate in a Vancouver seat in the election then going on.

1. The railway company will purchase from Mr. Evans, Colonel Ryan and their associates the land representing the site of the hotel, at whatever the cost is to them as shown by their books; this to include purchase price, carrying charges and other items of expense to which they have been put. The total figure, it is anticipated, will be something between $400,000 and $45,000. In addition to this we have agreed to pay them $10,000 over and above the cost of the land and carrying charges as compensation for their services in securing the site. It is realized that since this project started the value of the site decided upon for the hotel has considerably increased, and that the promoters are entitled to a commission for securing the site at a reasonable figure.

2. Mr. Evans and Colonel Ryan presented to us an itemized statement of about $17,500 which included their personal travelling expenses, certain fees and other legitimate items of expense which had been incurred in advancing the proposition. We have agreed to pay them $15,000 in liquidation of this item, especially having regard for the fact that they used their good offices in getting the city of Vancouver to discharge certain of our obligations in return for the construction of our hotel.

3. The construction of the hotel is to be awarded to Mr. Evans, Colonel Ryan and their associates on the basis of cost plus 7½ per cent. We have made a careful investigation of the usual percentages for work of this sort, and we are told by competent authorities that 7 per cent would be fair and that 7½ per cent would be perhaps on the generous side. Again having regard for all of the circumstances we desired to deal fairly with these people, and have accordingly agreed to 7½ per cent.

4. The architects in Vancouver, Messrs. McCarter & Nairne, have prepared plans for the construction of the hotel and done a certain amount of preliminary work in connection therewith. We agreed to pay them a reasonable fee for their work and to retain them as inspecting architects:—

An hon. MEMBER: What has that to do with the matter?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend asked me to read it and I want to read it in all fairness to the Conservative government which was considering the matter at the time.

—in other words they from now on will be our representatives in so far as the construction of the hotel is concerned. We reserve the right, of course, to alter the plans in any way we may see fit, and will probably have to secure further expert advice in this connection.

The above arrangements were entirely satisfactory to Mr. Evans and Colonel Ryan, and were agreed to by Mr. Ladner; in other words, the other side are quite content with the agreement reached to-day. A draft order in council will immediately be drawn up and sent to you: and as soon as it is passed we can make whatever announcement you think proper and get on with the work.

Yours sincerely,

H. W. Thornton.

P.S. I enclose two copies of draft order in council referred to above, which I hope you will have passed as soon as possible.

Mr. SIMPSON: Who signed that?

Mr. DUNNING: Sir Henry Thornton, of course.

Mr. BENNETT: This is splendid.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend says, "This is splendid". It demonstrates one or two things. It demonstrates, first, that Sir Henry Thornton was pressing very hard for an hotel at Vancouver, not only on our government when we were in power, but on my hon. friend's government when they were in power; that Sir Henry believed it was in the best interests of the Canadian National that they should as soon as possible have an hotel in Vancouver. I assume it is the duty of the government of the day—and no one has been more emphatic in stating this than my hon. friend—to see that a proper arrangement is made. My hon. friend has depicted in strong terms my duty as Minister of Railways to look into the proposals no matter where they may emanate, he has pointed out time and time again that an ordinary business man would do this, and that the fact that anything is recommended by the management does not relieve me of my responsibility. If that statement on the part of my hon. friend is correct, it does not relieve him or the Minister of Railways of that government of his responsibility in respect to the matter. That is the whole point with respect to that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. My hon. friend is learning the habit.

Mr. DUNNING: I admit that I can learn many things from my hon. friend, but I hope that I do not acquire that particular mannerism. What was wrong with the whole Vancouver matter had nothing to do with the contention of the city of Vancouver based upon the old agreement under private ownership with the city. It had to do with the manner in which it was proposed to carry out the new agreement. That is the whole point. I point out in that connection that while this order in council was cancelled as soon as we returned to power, we have not said to the city of Vancouver: "We will have nothing to do with you; go to court." We negotiated; we made the best bargain we could for the people of Canada with the city of Vancouver, and we ultimately reached an agreement, which has been duly authorized by the government, that the Canadian National Railways will build an hotel in Vancouver and will commence construction in the fall of the present year.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that on the same site as is mentioned there?

Mr. DUNNING: As regards the site, I will admit that due to what my hon. friends did when they were in office, we are in considerable difficulty, which I would prefer not to discuss here, because of the legal considerations involved. I hope my hon. friend will not press me on that point and I shall not make any representations with respect to the site, not because I do not feel free to discuss it, except for the legal aspects.

Mr. BENNETT: If the minister says that it is in the public interest not to discuss it, I shall not proceed with that aspect of the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: I only wish to say that what was done with regard to the site was done by my hon. friends opposite. I will say that much and I believe my hon. friend will agree that that is fair. Beyond that I do not wish to go.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot let that pass. It was done by the railway. The railway bought whatever site was bought.

Mr. DUNNING: Under the authority of this order in council—

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. DUNNING: —as part of the arrangement decided in this letter which I have just read and upon the basis of which the order in council was passed. How are we going at the matter? An agreement has been entered into and has been confirmed by order in council by the government, under which agreement, on account of the modification of some of the obligations on the part of the city of Vancouver, and the complete elimination of others, the Canadian National Railways are to construct an hotel in Vancouver, commencing construction in the fall of the present year, 1928. We come to parliament this session with $100,000 in the estimates of the Canadian National Railways for the purpose which I have just indicated. That amount of $100,000 is expected to be expended in the present calendar year and that provision is being asked for as part of the $39,000,000 appropriation which is now under consideration by the committee.

No, our condemnation, if condemnation it be, of the Vancouver situation, does not rest upon the dispute between the Canadian National and the city of Vancouver itself under the old agreement, nor upon whether or not an hotel should be built there by the Canadian National as a means of settling that dispute. It rests upon the means which were taken to carry out that undertaking. That is our quarrel with the whole transaction.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my hon. friend will admit that the Canadian Pacific construct some of their hotels on a cost plus basis.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: I believe in some instances that is the case. Perhaps my hon. friend will be kind enough to tell me when the Canadian Pacific paid cost plus 7½ per cent for the construction of an hotel?

Mr. BENNETT: My recollection is that one of the contractors told me he was getting that now.

Mr. DUNNING: I would like to have some proof of that.

Mr. BENNETT: I may be mistaken, but I think that is what he told me.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will admit this, I am sure, that only under very exceptional circumstances would he adopt the cost plus method and that he would censure us very severely if we undertook as a general principle the cost plus basis for our public works.

Mr. BENNETT: As a general principle.

Mr. DUNNING: And particularly where the construction is of a standard type such as a hotel similar to that contemplated in Vancouver.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the reason it is done on the cost plus basis, because it is not standard.

Mr. DUNNING: We will leave it at that, and the next time I feel compelled to do something on the cost plus basis I feel sure that I shall have the support of my hon. friend if the matter comes up in the house for discussion. I try to avoid cost plus as far as possible, because there is always around it an element of suspicion in connection with public works. Private enterprise can sometimes make a better deal on a cost plus basis than public enterprise in calling for tenders, but always those opposed to the administration of the day will be suspicious of an undertaking involving the cost plus basis, except in very exceptional circumstances. Those circumstances do sometimes arise in connection with all public undertakings. After all, we must look at a matter of this sort from a broad standpoint, apart from the discussions that occur between my hon. friend and myself, and I ask this committee to consider whether, seeing that we have a publicly owned railway system extending from coast to coast, with harbour terminals on both the Atlantic and the Pacific, is it not desirable, having regard to modern transportation developments, that the railway system should have an hotel of its own at each of its ocean portals?

My hon. friend keeps talking about what private enterprise would do. By private enterprise the Canadian Pacific has built a very large hotel at Vancouver. It has also a heavy interest in a hotel at St. John, and in the Lord Nelson hotel at Halifax. My hon. friend says, if it is not good for the Canadian Pacific, it cannot be good for the Canadian National; that was the substance of his argument. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Pacific has been and is expending large sums of money on the building of hotels, although my hon. friend will be the first to admit that the Canadian Pacific hotels are not profitable undertakings, any more than are the Canadian National hotels. They may make a slightly better showing, but they are certainly not a profitable part of the Canadian Pacific Railway undertaking separately considered. My hon. friend says that business men would not do it because the hotel itself will not pay for some time. Well, the Canadian Pacific has built a large hotel in Toronto, and has recently built a large hotel in the city of Regina, and is undertaking enlargements of its other hotels, but the hotels as hotels, as my hon. friend knows, are not profitable.

Mr. BENNETT: Some of them are.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend said that the Canadian National hotels were losing a lot of money. The Canadian Pacific hotels are not profitable either.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the report shows that they did not lose money on their entire hotel system.

Mr. DUNNING: They did not make money. My point is that the hotels in connection with the railways, considered by themselves, are not profitable undertakings. The Canadian Pacific considers it wise to build hotels, not because they want to go into the hotel business, but because of the value of the hotels as a traffic contributor to the railway system. My hon. friend's attitude this morning would be to debar the Canadian National in large measure from exercising the same kind of business foresight in that direction as the Canadian Pacific has been exercising for a number of years past, and is now exercising.

I desire to make only one more personal reference. My hon. friend spoke of a letter which was referred to during last session with regard to another matter entirely, and which he says that I stated a year ago in this house was not upon the files, but which was subsequently found to be upon the files.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the same file. I said a file. I was very careful. I said Sir Henry Drayton said he had found a letter on the files and the Canadian Press carried a despatch to that effect.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not wish to introduce the name of Sir Henry Drayton, who is not now a member of the house. I would not refer to it if my hon. friend had not introduced the matter, but he introduced it in a manner that would imply a lack of good faith or something not quite proper on my part.

Mr. BENNETT: No, as an illustration of how one may overlook things.

Mr. DUNNING: In regard to that I just desire to say this, and I can call all the chief officers of the department as witnesses with regard to the accuracy of my statement. When the matter was under discussion one year ago in this house, before making any statement in regard thereto I ordered the files searched and any documents brought to me which had any bearing on the subject. I was more astonished than anyone else at the time that there was no record of any communication from Sir Henry Drayton, as Acting Minister of Railways during that one hundred days, or from anybody else. I was astonished, and I asked the deputy minister to bring the files into my office, and we went through them together. There was no communication on the files, and every one of us who had anything to do with the search is prepared to swear to that. In speaking to my colleagues I remarked how strange it was that with respect to such a matter there should be no communication on the files. It is true that on the return of Sir Henry Drayton some three months later he asked to see the file, and at that time one letter was on the file. Neither Sir Henry Drayton himself nor the deputy minister nor any of the chief officials can explain why it was not on in the first place, and was on in the second place, but I think my hon. friend knows me well enough to know that there would not be any deliberate suppression of the letter on my part.

Mr. BENNETT: I entirely agree with that.

Mr. DUNNING: How the accident, if accident it was, happened I cannot say, but it is only fair to myself to say, however, that the letter in question had not any important bearing on the matter which was then under discussion.

I have only one word more to say in conclusion. I believe it will prove to be in the best interests of the Canadian National railway system to have hotels entirely under its own control at both the great ocean terminals of Halifax and Vancouver, and the present policy of the government is to bring about the ownership of terminal hotels by the Canadian National and operated by them, without any private interests in them whatever, at both Halifax and Vancouver.

Mr. BENNETT: What about St. John?

Mr. DUNNING: That is a matter for the future, except for this. My hon. friend mentioned the other day that some time ago the Canadian National did take a financial interest in a privately owned hotel at St. John, and wanted to know why that was not held for a vote of parliament. The amount was $22,500. That was the investment of the Canadian National in that enterprise, and while it is a little difficult to say just at what point parliamentary approval should be sought for a given sum, I feel sure that hon. gentlemen opposite will admit that there is a vast difference between an investment of $22,500, and an investment of a quarter or of half a million dollars. There must be some place where we shall say: "You must include that in your budget and it must be approved by parliament." We took that attitude in connection with the possibility of the investment of a large sum in a privately owned hotel in Halifax. I have no apologies to make for the owning and operation of its own hotels by the Canadian National railway system. I might mentoin that I have been advised only this morning that the Lord Nelson hotel, which has not yet been opened, is almost completely booked up for next winter. Does not my hon. friend appreciate—I am sure he does—how well located hotels tend to attract business to themselves? I have noted the experience in my own city of Regina, where private enterprise was erecting a hotel, and the owners thought it was particularly hard for them that the Canadian Pacific should come in and build a large hotel there. Does my hon. friend know what the result has been?

Mr. BENNETT: It is not the same class of hotel.

Mr. DUNNING: There might be some difference of opinion about that; but the owners of the privately owned enterprise deemed the Canadian Pacific competition so serious a factor as to unfairly prejudice their own enterprise. But what happened? That privately owned hotel has since extended its accommodation, and the Canadian Pacific hotel since its completion has done considerably better than the company anticipated it would. I am content to take the word of Sir Henry Thornton in this regard, that the Canadian National railways system needs in its own best interests hotels at Vancouver and Halifax owned and controlled by itself.

Mr. BENNETT: A terminal elevator is being put up at Victoria, and in connection therewith it has been stated that private enterprise is to construct the facilities to transfer cars from the mainland to the elevator. I should like to have the assurance of the minister on that point.

Mr. DUNNING: I know nothing of it myself. The Canadian National do operate a car ferry from Vancouver to the island, as my hon. friend knows. I cannot understand why private enterprise should want to go into that business from what I know of it. But I agree with my hon. friend that control of such facilities should be in the Canadian National Railway system itself.

Mr. BENNETT: And the minister will see that they are? Can we have the assurance of the minister that nothing will be done in respect to the acquisition of the Pacific and Great Eastern railway until the House of Commons again meets—because surely this house must have something to say as to that.

Mr. DUNNING: Surely my hon. friend does not mean that negotiations which have been going on for some time, and of which members of this house are well aware, should not in the meantime be advanced if possible. I said the other evening with respect to this question that no purchase could be completed without the approval of parliament, but it is quite possible under existing legislation for the railway to make such arrangements for the operation of the other road pending approval by parliament of a purchase agreement. So far as that is concerned my hon. friend need have no apprehension.

Mr. BENNETT: It involves fifteen to twenty million dollars I am told. I desire to ask the minister whether or not he would permit the agreement to be completed and signed? In that event we would, if not satisfied, have to move that it be not adopted —that is, a motion of want of confidence. My view is that just as was done here in this order in council, the agreement should not be executed until such time as parliament has approved of it. In other words, the railway must not commit itself without the consent of parliament. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, except as to his reference to this order in council. This order in council does dispose of a matter which never had been voted by parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend misunderstands me. There should be no execution of the agreement, as there was not in that case, until parliament meets. Suppose the Pacific and Great Eastern and the Canadian National get together and arrange for the sale and purchase of the property for X millions of dollars; then I submit the agreement should not be executed by the Canadian National Railways until it has been submitted to this house and approved. In other words, we should not give approval after it is an accomplished fact.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not want any misunderstanding on so important a matter as this, relating not only to the Pacific and Great Eastern negotiations, but also to all the other negotiations which are now going on. This is what I apprehend will occur. My hon. friend will interrupt me if I am not stating it clearly. Negotiations will continue with respect to all these various propositions. Once the president and management of the Canadian National have reached an agreement which is satisfactory to them and to the prospective vendors, they will submit that agreement to the government for the purpose of finding out whether or not the government will approve of the terms and will recommend the agreement to parliament at its next session. Now, the proceedings may go as far as this point in some cases, not all—I cannot tell, but they may. The Canadian National Railways may negotiate an agreement which proves to be satisfactory to the government, and the government may then indicate its satisfaction and its intention to place the matter before parliament at the next session for approval. That may happen—I am not anticipating it will in many of these cases—but I do not want any misunderstanding as to what might happen with respect to, say, the St. John Valley railway or any of these other roads.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. DUNNING: There is one exception which would apply to the roads connecting with the Intercolonial railway, possible acquisition of which is provided for by existing legislation.

Mr. BENNETT: Unless the statute is amended it would have to take the ordinary course.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: But to make it perfectly clear I would strongly deprecate the government passing an order in council approving negotiations unless parliament has had an opportunity to pass on them. The point I was endeavouring to make on Saturday and to-day is that before orders in council are passed the matters so dealt with should be submitted to parliament, as we did, for instance, with the Ottawa district commission—we should discuss the matters before the government has committed itself.

Mr. DUNNING: I will give consideration to it. I do not wish to be any more definite.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has made certain personal references to myself, which if it were not one o'clock I would reply to. In order that the resolution may carry, I forego my right to reply to those references. I may take another occasion to deal with them.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

PRIVILEGE—MR. LUCHKOVICH

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Being one o'clock—

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, might I suggest that the faithful who are assembled here would probably prefer to reassemble at two o'clock, rather than at three, to assure the prorogation of parliament sometime to-day at all events. If that is acceptable to the house generally, I should be pleased if Your Honour would so state.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think it would facilitate matters if we had concurrence now. It will take but a few minutes, and then the hon. gentleman may state his question of privilege.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: It will not take very long, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday night when the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) were brought down, the chairman made this statement:

The Chairman: I am sorry if hon. gentlemen did not hear the item called. It was certainly called and passed in the way we have passed other votes to-night, but I do not think it is fair to blame the chair for not announcing these items in an audible tone of voice. If hon. members would keep order in the committee, I am quite sure that I would be heard in all parts of the chamber.

I asked him whether item 44 had been called, and this is the discussion that followed:

Mr. Luchkovich: I understand that the minister said vote 44 in connection with grants to exhibitions was passed. When was it passed?
The Chairman: To-night.
Mr. Luchkovich: Well, it was passed in such a clever way that I hope that all the other estimates are not passed in the same way as this was.
Mr. Dunning: I am going to object to that on a point of order. One or two members, when the item was before the house, spoke on it. I replied to the members in a very proper way and I resent the insinuation that the vote was put through in some clever sort of way. There was no cleverness about the matter at all.
Mr. Luchkovich: There are quite a few hon. members interested in class B fairs and we have been waiting very patiently for the item to come up. I, for one, am very much surprised to learn that this item was passed.
Mr. Dunning: My hon. friend cannot blame me for his being asleep.
Mr. Luchkovich: I certainly was not asleep. I was listening and waiting very patiently for the item to come up.

The Minister of Agriculture was not in the house at the time. I am referring to vote 44. I stated that I did not hear this vote called, and the Minister of Railways said that the vote was brought up. I notice from the votes and proceedings it would appear that this item did come up; but I have read Hansard very carefully and I fail to find anything there about the item. I do notice, however, that item 46 was dealt with at the time. It is said we were asleep. If we were, Mr. Speaker, then the reporters in this house also were asleep because they did not report anything about a discussion of item 44 at that time. I can quite understand how the chairman might initial an item and pass it on to the clerk; I understand that the other day the votes and proceedings showed that an item had been passed, but the chairman admitted that it was not passed. I know that the Minister of Railways is a fair-minded man, and I am sure when he called us sleepy—

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

Mr. JOHNSTON (Long Lake): I think I should correct my hon. friend. He said the chairman agreed that the item had not been passed, but I did not agree in that way at all.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: It is in Hansard, although I have not time to look it up.

Mr. DUNNING: I know my hon. friend does not want to be unfair to me. If he will look at page 4111 of Hansard, in the second column at the bottom, he will find that under the health of animals vote Mr. Peck and two or three other hon. members discussed class B fairs. I replied for Mr. Motherwell:

I cannot add anything to what the minister himself said with regard to the matter when he was present. But I can undertake to say that the representations of my hon. friend will be called to the attention of the minister.

That was the discussion bearing upon the very matter to which my hon. friend is referring.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: But I still repeat that nothing is stated in Hansard to show item 44 was passed, and I take this occasion to express my indignation with the way this item was put through, if it has been passed, as I hold it has not.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am informed by the Deputy Speaker that if the hon. gentleman will confer with the clerk of the house he will show him the scroll, which shows that the item was passed.

Mr. GARDINER: That does not solve the question. If the item was never called how could it be passed? The item was never called in this house.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am informed that the item was called by the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: It is not in Hansard.

Mr. GARDINER: I take it that the Hansard reporters would know whether this item was called. Many members on this side of the house as well as members opposite were waiting for an opportunity to speak on that item.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is in the scroll which I hold in my hand. At any rate, I cannot allow this discussion to go on. The scroll of the house and the votes and proceedings contain the item, and I am informed that it is in the supply bill.

Mr. DUNNING: If I might supplement your remarks in that regard, Mr. Speaker, in any case the item was discussed later under another item; several members spoke on class B fairs then, so surely there can be no complaint now.

Mr. GARDINER: I just wish to make a statement with regard to your reference a moment ago, Mr. Speaker. When it is brought to your attention that members of this house take exception to a matter, and when we produce what we believe to be good evidence that something has not occurred I do not think you, sir, as the Speaker of this house, should take the position that merely because it is inscribed on the scroll is evidence of the thing having transpired. I do not think you are justified in taking that atttitude, and I wish to resent the statements you made.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but if the hon. member will refer to Bourinot he will find that the scroll of the house is the evidence which is produced in the courts of the land as a true statement of what has happened in the house When I am handed these scrolls by the clerk of the house, when I am handed the votes and proceedings, when I know that the item is in the appropriation bill, and when in addition I have the word of the Deputy Speaker, it seems to me that my good faith must not be questioned. However, the incident is closed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE

Mr. ROBB moved that the reports of the committee of supply made to the house on February 14 and 17, May 3, 4, 10, 11, 18, 21, 23, 25, 26, 29, 30 and 31, June 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 be read the second time and concurred. in.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE—MR. THORSON

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I am quite willing to speak to it this afternoon if the house desires to adjourn now, I shall not be very long

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman might bring up his question of privilege while the house will be awaiting the supply bill from the Senate. Meanwhile we might complete this procedure in order to facilitate matters this afternoon.

Mr. THORSON: Very well, provided I have an opportunity to speak to the question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Certainly.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. ROBB moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service of the financial year ending 31st March, 1929, the sum of $244,477,639.96 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Robb thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 359, for granting to His Majesty certains sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1929.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second time and the house went into committee thereon. Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On schedule C.

Mr. BENNETT: What is schedule C?

Mr. SPENCER: We have not a copy of the bill before us; will the chairman tell us what these various sections are?

The CHAIRMAN: They are the estimates adopted by the committee of the whole.

Mr. BENNETT: Which supplementary does schedule C cover?

The CHAIRMAN: Based on supplementary estimates, 1928-29. The amount hereby granted is $10,468,611.91. Schedule D is based on further supplementary estimates, 1928-29. The amount hereby granted is $1,000,200.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What is schedule B, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Schedule B covers the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. BENNETT: At the next sitting of this house, this day.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. THORSON

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Winnipeg South Centre): I rise to a question of privilege. On Saturday the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) made certain remarks with regard to myself which are quite inaccurate. On page 4088 of Hansard he is reported as having made this statement with regard to myself:

> He himself is a member of the profession; he assisted in the prosecution of those who originated the effort to establish a soviet in the city of Winnipeg. He was one of the prosecuting counsel.

I might quote several other inaccurate statements made by the leader of the opposition with regard to the part which I played in the prosecutions which followed the failure of the strike of 1919 in Winnipeg, but I cite this merely as an instance of the many inaccuracies of which he was guilty.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not privilege. The hon. member can direct attention to specific items in regard to himself, but these blanket charges do not constitute privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Would the hon. gentleman quote the words, because strictly speaking, a question of privilege is only with regard to character. This may be a personal explanation.

Mr. THORSON: I made that remark in an effort to save the time of the house. There are several other inaccuracies which I shall now cite. Hansard, on page 4090, reports the leader of the opposition as saying:

> This was brought about to some extent, through the efforts made by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, in the legal knowledge he brought to bear upon the prosecution of the offenders. His knowledge and training as a lawyer helped and assisted in the securing of a conviction against some of them.

Then at page 4091 Hansard reports him as follows:

> If the government had yielded readily to the pressure brought to bear upon it, it would have been unworthy of being a government, it would have been unworthy of supporting the prosecution carried on by the hon. gentleman as a lawyer.

At page 4092 Hansard reports my hon. friend as follows:

> My hon. friend put this case. He said: Other employers take back their people and give them positions. Let us admit all that. That has nothing at all to do with this case. This is the body politic fighting for its life. This is the nation fighting for its existence. This is the struggle between constituted government and bolshevism. It was a struggle between the municipal institutions at Winnipeg and the soviet form of government and that was the case put by my hon. friend in his prosecution. He may not have put it in those words, but that is the case he put and that is the case upon which a conviction was made.

The leader of the opposition in this manner attributed to me a leading part in the prosecutions that took place after the failure of the Winnipeg strike of 1919. I did not hold the exalted position which the hon. gentleman assigned to me. The case which went to the privy council was a conviction of one of the strike leaders for seditious conspiracy. That conviction was upheld in the court of appeal of Manitoba. An application was made to the privy council for leave to appeal. That application for leave to appeal was refused by the privy council. I had no part whatsoever in that particular prosecution. Subsequently a similar prosecution was instituted against six other men on a charge of seditious conspiracy. Five of these men were convicted and one of them, the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), was acquitted. With that prosecution I had nothing whatsoever to do. The only part which I played in the prosecutions after the failure of the strike at Winnipeg was in a very minor capacity. I acted as assistant crown prosecutor in the city of Winnipeg police court, and assisted in the prosecution of a number of men who were guilty of disturbances on the day when the shooting took place and the strike was finally broken. I took part in none of the major prosecutions with the exception of one. I was associated as junior counsel in the prosecution of Mr. F. J. Dixon, a respected citizen of Winnipeg for whom I have a high personal regard. Mr. F. J. Dixon was acquitted on the charge of seditious libel which was preferred against him. That was my connection with the prosecutions that followed the strike of 1919.

I am quite sure that the hon. leader of the opposition did not intentionally mislead the house, but I desire to put on record correctly the part which I took at that time. I am quite willing to believe that the hon. leader of the opposition when he spoke with regard to me as he did, spoke without knowledge of the facts.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The question of privilege to which the hon. gentleman has spoken is a question affecting the correctness of certain observations made with respect to a member of this house on Saturday last. After listening to the hon. gentleman, and reading from

Hansard the extracts to which he directed attention, it is reasonably clear that no statement was made that he appeared before the privy council or took part in the Russell case. He was prosecuting counsel in connection with one of the offenders, and I assure him that I knew he did not appear in the Russell case

Mr. THORSON: May I direct the attention of the hon. leader of the opposition to the first statement which I cited:

He assisted in the prosecution of those who originated the effort to establish a soviet in the city of Winnipeg. He was one of the prosecuting counsel.

He goes on to say:

I ask him to say to this house whether or not he thinks the conviction obtained in one of these cases was improperly obtained.

Then in the other statement which I quoted, at page 4092 of Hansard, he says:

It was a struggle between the municipal institutions at Winnipeg and the soviet form of government, and that was the case put by my hon. friend in his prosecution. He may not have put it in those words, but that is the case he put, and that is the case upon which a conviction was made.

The only major case in which I assisted resulted in an acquittal.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will see that the word "case" did not refer to a particular instance like the Dixon case.

Mr. THORSON: I think the leader of the opposition should now frankly accept my statement as to the part which I took.

Mr. BENNETT: I do. I entirely accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but I contend that his statement is not at variance in any sense with what I said on Saturday last. I merely said that he was one of the prosecuting counsel. I paid tribute to his ability. If the hon. gentleman thinks that I was in any way reflecting upon his connection with any specific case which went to the privy council or otherwise, I assure him that such was not my intention, and I gladly accept the statement which he has made.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL—TARIFF BOARD

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I have an amendment to move, Mr. Speaker. It does not involve much in money, but it involves a principle. I beg to move that:

The bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions to the said committee that it have power to reduce vote No. 309 by the sum of $10,000, being the salary of the chairman of the tariff board.

I shall endeavour to confine my remarks to a very limited space of time. I am in no sense reflecting upon the qualifications of the chairman of the tariff board. I dealt with that question on another occasion. I am merely directing the attention of this house to what I conceive to be a principle, the operation of which we had illustrated on Saturday last.

Succeeding governments have claimed the right to remove from office those who are partisans if it is established that they are partisans when they are occupying a place in the public service. Mr. Moore was a defeated candidate supporting this government in the constituency of Ontario in the last election. The fact that he was a candidate and defeated does not in any sense deprive him of the qualifications to serve the public in any capacity in which it may be thought he may be able so to do. I desire to make that perfectly clear. If the government feels that a defeated candidate is a satisfactory person for appointment to the bench, to the tariff board, or any other position, it follows that the government may make such an appointment, but when a gentleman who was a defeated candidate is appointed to a position in the public service, my submission is that he should terminate his political activities. By not doing so he is subject to dismissal, and the instance of the dismissal of the postmaster at Lafleche is an illustration of the position I take.

I submit to this house that since his appointment, Mr. Moore has continued to be a partisan, and by partisan I mean that he has taken active steps to promote his future candidature in the riding of Ontario. This is not simply hearsay. It is published in the public press with reference to his connection with one or two matters, and there are those who are well acquainted with the politics of the province of Ontario with whom he has discussed the probabilities of his success in the riding at the next election. My submission is that if a returned soldier in Lafleche saw fit to speak in terms not laudatory of the Prime Minister or in terms of criticism of the Liberal party, and thereby made himself liable to dismissal as a postmaster in the constituency of Willow Bunch, it follows that a gentleman, however eminently qualified, who was a defeated candidate at the last election as a supporter of the government, which appointed him to a very, very important position where freedom from political opinion is almost a sine qua non to the occupancy of the position, when we find that he is still engaged in political activities, he should either resign his position or be dismissed, if his partisanship can be established. While there is no member of parliament to make a charge to the administration which the administration would deal with, I do assure the right hon. the Prime Minister that were a commission appointed the facts could readily be established. I am certain as to that, because part of them are established already in the public press, and of his exercise of patronage, whatever little there may be left, in the constituency of Ontario.

I understand that since my observations on the budget the gentleman in question has taken less interest in political matters, and recently announced that he is out of politics, but I have lived long enough not to attach very much importance to that observation, remembering as I do. "When the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be; when the devil got well, the devil a monk was he." It is for that reason I make this motion, to vindicate the principle that those who occupy public positions to which they are appointed requiring freedom from political bias, which is the first essential to the successful discharge of their duties, should not be maintained in a position merely because they occupy a position to which a salary of $10,000 per annum and expenses are attached, as against one of those of whom we had the records some days ago who occupies a position as postmaster in a small community, receiving small compensation, and not being able to command the influence and power that attaches to one who occupies a more important place. It is for that purpose, and not because of the gentleman himself or of anything concerned with his past or present attainments, that I make this motion. For it is a striking illustration of a departure from principle if the same measure of justice is not meted out to him as was meted out to the returned soldier who happened to be a postmaster at Lafleche.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear my hon. friend say that his motion is in no way actuated by the circumstance that the present incumbent of the office of chairman of the tariff board was a defeated candidate in the last election. I think when this matter was previously discussed reference was made to the circumstance that he had been in active politics, and therefore it was implied that he should not have been subsequently appointed to his present office.

Mr. BENNETT: That merely had to do wth the government making the appointment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But at the moment my hon. friend says he understands that the present incumbent of that office is looking forward to being a candidate at the next election. If that be so, I must say that he is more in the confidence of the chairman of the tariff board and of those of the Liberal party who have to do with these matters than I am myself, because I have never heard, directly or indirectly, any intimation to the effect that that gentleman is contemplating such action. I think before my hon. friend suggests that a commission be appointed to discover whether or not this gentleman has such intentions, we ought to have something much more definite to go on than has thus far been brought forward. If my hon. friend or anyone else on the other side of the house will prefer a charge against the chairman of the tariff board which would justify the government in taking action of the character he has suggested, namely, the appointment of a commission to inquire into the facts, the government will consider the matter, and will I think consider it in a manner that will be satisfactory to the house. But I do say that a general statement, such as that which has been made by my hon. friend this morning, namely, that he has reason to believe there is an intention on the part of the chairman of the tariff board to run at the next general election, and that the latter is inquiring what his chances may be—

Mr. BENNETT: And exercising partronage.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to know what patronage the chairman of the board has exercised. Let us have the facts. A general statement such as is now made, I submit, is no ground for an inquiry, and certainly is no ground for moving that the estimate be reduced on the third reading of this bill. I do not think I need say more, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BENNETT: Do I understand the right hon. gentleman to say that a complaint similar to that which brought about the appointment of a commission to investigate the cases tabled this session will be regarded as sufficient to warrant the issue of a commission in this case?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said that any hon. member of this house who will prefer a specific charge against Mr. Moore will be entitled to have that charge investigated in a manner satisfactory to the house.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not my question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is my answer.

Mr. BENNETT: My question is, whether or not the same complaint which brought about an investigation with respect to rural postmasters whose names are in the report on the clerk's table will bring about the issuance of a commission in this case. That was not done on the complaint of members of this house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the amendment. Shall I read the amendment?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Dispense.

Amendment (Mr. Bennett) negatived on division.

SUPPLY BILL—REPRESENTATION AT TOKYO

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is now on the main motion.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): I wish to say a few words in regard to item 342 of the estimates providing for representation at Tokyo. As we are approaching the end of the session I will not speak at any great length on this subject, although it is one I have thought a good deal about, and naturally so, inasmuch as for a number of years I was representative of Canada in London. With regard to this proposal to send a minister to Tokyo my main objection is that it creates a precedent. Canada has a representative at Washington. There were special reasons for a minister being appointed there. The United States is our great and friendly neighbour to the south, with whom we have more trade than with any other country in the world. There were therefore special reasons put forward on those grounds. A vote has also been passed for a representative of Canada at Paris, and there are special reasons why that too should be done. These are largely sentimental reasons. Two-fifths of our population are of French origin and it is a fine gesture that Canada should have a representative in Paris, Moreover, we have a good deal of trade with that country, and our minister should be able at the same time to attend to that trade.

Regarding this particular vote I do not raise any special objection to the appointment of a minister at Tokyo. Japan is our friendly neighbour across the Pacific, and I should have the same objection to the appointment of a minister from Canada to any other country, apart from the United States and France, as I now voice in connection with the proposed appointment of a minister to Tokyo.

My reason for this objection has reference to what I hope will continue to be the status of this country in relation to the other dominions of the British Empire or, perhaps I had better say, the British commonwealth, Under our present relations with Great Britain and the various self-governing countries that compose the British commonwealth, it seems to me that we should be ill advised to adopt a policy of appointing any more ministers from Canada than the two I have mentioned. When I say this I assume that we wish to keep the British commonwealth of nations intact and that we prefer to try to make permanent this wonderful organization which has grown up through the centuries, called the British empire or the British commonwealth. To my mind, the future holds only one of two alternatives for Canada. One of these is independence. I know there are some people in this country who desire that and who look forward to the time when it will come about. But I for one hope it will be very long delayed. The other alternative before us is to remain with Great Britain and the sister dominions as the British commonwealth. We are at this moment in fact a self-governing nation as far as it is possible for us to enjoy these rights under the present statutes of the old country. The rights of autonomy or self-government we certainly will never give up, but I firmly believe that the best chance Canada has for a full and satisfactory development in the future is in conjunction with Great Britain and our sister dominions. Now how can this problem be worked out? How can half a dozen separate nations, each with complete autonomy in relation to its own affairs, act together in their relations with foreign countries? I submit that this cannot be done in practice, if each part of the British commonwealth is to have separate and independent representatives in foreign countries. I take it that the government has definitely adopted a policy of this kind. The natural sequence to the appointment by Canada of a minister at Tokyo would be that Australia, South Africa and the other dominions would do the same, perhaps not immediately; but that would be the natural thing for them to do.

Can we imagine the curious state of affairs that would ensue under those circumstances? What would happen if the British commonwealth had half a dozen separate ministers in Tokyo? Let us suppose that some grave question arises affecting Great Britain, ourselves and our sister dominions; how would it be possible in practice for us to all act together? What course would be taken by this government and by the other governments? The obvious answer is that the governments would communicate with each other, put forward their views and endeavour to reach a common point of agreement, and after that each government would have to instruct its representative in Tokyo in identical terms in order to bring about the desired result. If that did not happen, if instructions went out to the different representatives in different terms it would mean the breaking up of the British empire. I claim that this position would be full of danger in time of stress; I do not see how it could be otherwise.

I will admit that the whole question of the foreign policy of this British commonwealth is very serious and difficult, if the commonwealth is to be maintained and made permanent. I have an idea of my own how this might be worked out, but I will not take time to explain it this afternoon. However, I do say that in foreign countries we must have one voice if we are going to preserve this commonwealth of nations; we must present a united front to foreign countries in all matters of foreign policy which affect every portion of the commonwealth. I do not think we should follow out the present plan; If we are to make a success of the British empire we must have some other method of choosing and appointing the various ministers or ambassadors at foreign courts in order that they may represent the whole empire. I know there has been some objection raised to the suggestion that the foreign affairs might be administered by a committee on which each part of the empire would have a representative; some people say it would be dangerous to give so much power to anyone, but whoever was representing Canada would be definitely under the authority and the instruction of the government here, and it would be just as easy to keep him in order as to keep the minister at Tokyo in order. If that were done we would have a central body which would discuss these questions when they arose; each would advise his own government by cable or otherwise regarding the actual facts and would receive instructions from his own government in return. Then they would sit down together to talk over the question and try to find a solution. We have adopted that principle on several occasions. I remember that in Geneva, when some question came before the assembly about which there was quite a difference of opinion among the delegates from the various parts of the empire, we sat down in a room for a couple of hours one day, threshed out the matter. and found a solution.

All I wish to say to-day is that I think the government have made a mistake in this proposal; I think they have been in too much of a hurry. It seems to me that this is one of the most serious questions which must be faced by the British empire. This problem of keeping the British commonwealth of nations together has been called insoluble, but I believe it can be solved with patience and good will. The vital need is that we should present a united front to all other countries. I suggest that before the government appoint a minister to Japan this question should be more carefully considered and that it should be discussed at length with the other parts of the British empire, with an effort made to arrive at a satisfactory solution which will conserve our rights of self government, which will give us a voice in the appointment of foreign representatives and which at the same time will make sure that this commonwealth will become permanent. So I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the appointment of this minister to Japan be delayed and that the government take the first opportunity to try to thresh the question out, to find a solution of this most difficult problem.

Before I sit down I wish to express my feeling that this question should not have been brought up in this way. This appointment to Tokyo has been included as one of the items in the estimates, and until this time there has been no opportunity of discussion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; the estimate was called in committee, but at the request of the acting leader of the opposition it was held over for the express purpose of allowing the leader of the opposition to be here.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Quite so; I was here when the Prime Minister acquiesced in that request.

Mr. BENNETT: And on Saturday night we said that rather than take time then we would discuss it on the third reading of the supply bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Now we have come to the end of the session, and no one wishes to keep the house much longer. However, I consider this one of the most important matters to come up this year and I wish it could have been discussed at greater length. In Great Britain they try to keep all questions with regard to foreign relations out of party controversy. The leader of the opposition is kept well posted with regard to matters as they come up, so that if by the turn of the wheel he becomes Prime Minister he will be au fait with the situations which may arise. I am strongly of the opinion that the relations between the different parts of the commonwealth should be dealt with in that way; I do not believe the government of the day should take a step of this kind, which is really the adoption of a definite policy in regard to a very important matter, without having a full discussion beforehand. It is true that the Prime Minister will tell us that this house has the right to vote against this proposal, but as a matter of fact the house cannot do that without putting the government out of power.

Mr. ROBB: Yes, my hon. friend could vote against it without putting the government out of power.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I said the house could not vote against it without putting the government out of power, and in my judgment this is not the best way to deal with this matter.

Let us look at what has happened this session. On the question of increasing the salaries of our judges, a purely local matter pertaining only to this Dominion, the government were unable to make up their minds as to whether or not this should be done. They came to this house and asked for a committee to discuss the question, when it seems to me it was something the government should have decided for themselves. On the other hand, regarding the appointment of a minister to Tokyo, they did not appoint a committee for that purpose. That was a proper question to have discussed by all sides of the house before any action was taken. I go further than that; regarding the matter of the appointment of a minister to any of these foreign countries, other than the United States and France, I claim the proper method would be for the question to be brought before this house first and discussed; for the Prime Minister to rise in his place and say that every member of this house might consider and discuss it and vote as he thought best, and not tie the hands of the house as he has done by first making an agreement, subject to the approval of parliament, and bringing it down in an estimate which makes it impossible for the house to reject the idea without its being a vote of want of confidence in the government.

I do feel strongly that the government has taken a step in the wrong direction. I believe that the members of the government on the whole wish to preserve the British commonwealth, and to look forward to our full development as a self-governing nation within that commonwealth. That is my firm belief, but I feel that this action is on the path towards independence and if that policy continues, and other dominions adopt the same policy, I cannot see how it will be possible in the future for the various component parts of this commonwealth of nations always to act together without friction in regard to the serious matters of foreign policy. Therefore, I move, seconded by Mr. Ross (Kingston):

That all the words after "that" in the motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor, namely:

The bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions to the said committee that it have power to reduce vote No. 342 by the sum of $49,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before I take up the argument of my hon. friend with respect to the advisability of opening a legation at Tokyo, may I refer to the concluding part of his address in which he made mention of the fact that we were considering this item only at the last moments of the session. May I say to my hon. friend that no one regrets more than myself that it does so happen that we are, during the last hours of the session, endeavouring to discuss this all-important subject. I would, however, point out to my hon. friend and to the members of the house that it is not the fault of the government if there has been delay in the discussion of this matter. The government took the earliest possible opportunity to acquaint hon. members of its intention in this matter by making mention of it in the speech from the throne, and my hon. friend was one of those who, on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, made very much the same speech as he has made this afternoon. His hon. leader also spoke at considerable length and I venture to say presented the very arguments in the course of his address at that time which he will present this afternoon or on some other occasion when he may speak. As I recollect, the matter was very fully discussed on the address. May I quote the paragraph in the address: It has mention of other features which help to explain the reason why the government is taking this particular step at this time. The paragraph in the speech is as follows:

As contemplated by the conclusions of the Imperial conference of 1926, provision was made on July 1 for direct communication between His Majesty's government in Canada and His Majesty's other governments of the British Empire. The further implementing of these conclusions which aim at more effective consultation through personal contact by the appointment to Canada of a representative of His Majesty's government in Great Britain is being discussed between the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs in Great Britain, who is at present in Canada, and members of my government. By agreement between the governments of France and Canada and the governments of Japan and Canada it is proposed that each of these countries shall be represented in the other by a minister plenipotentiary.

So that, as early as January of this year, the house had before it, in a form which permitted full discussion and debate, the question of the advisability of opening a legation at Tokyo. Then a short time ago we had an amendment moved by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) which was brought in on the motion to go into the supply of the Department of External Affairs. That amendment dealt with external affairs and was very largely concerned with just such questions as the one we are now discussing. The debate occupied considerable time and opportunity was given for hon. members to discuss their views on the subject of legations. Then we moved into the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, and those estimates, as I recollect, took two days of discussion, including the time occupied on the motion to go into supply. When these estimates were before parliament, among others assented to was the estimate for the legation at Washington, and the estimate for the opening of the new legation at Paris. I submit that it was quite permissible during the discussion on either one of these estimates, for hon. members to discuss, to the extent that my hon. friend has discussed this afternoon, the advisability of a legation being opened in any part of the world There was plenty of opportunity then. Then, again, some days ago when we were proceeding with miscellaneous estimates, we came to the item on Tokyo, and the acting leader of the opposition requested that the item be held over pending the return from a trip to the west of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. It is quite true that in further discussing the items on Saturday my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, in order to help us expedite business, did not take up the discussion of the item at that time. I think he was guided in that purpose by the desire to assist the government in bringing prorogation about speedily, and I wish to thank him for his courtesy in that regard.

Mr. BENNETT: I said we would discuss it on the third reading.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend made it clear that we would discuss the item on the third reading of the bill at the time of concurrence. If this item is being discussed at the last minute it was not from any desire of the government to avoid an earlier discussion, or because of any lack of opportunities for discussion.

May I say to my hon friend from Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) that his speech seems to me to be, in many particulars, as much in support of the policy of the government in opening legations as an argument against it. His first objection was that it was creating an unwise precedent. May I point out to my hon. friend that he preceded that remark by drawing attention to two cases where the precedent had already been made? A legation has been opened at Washington and a legation has been authorized for Paris, and therefore the precedent has already been established. The precedent was fully discussed when the question of representation at Washington was before the house, and it was again opened for full discussion when the question of representation at Paris was being discussed. My hon. friend says there is a difference between Washington and Paris and Tokyo. Certainly there are some major differences, but there are also important considerations which are applicable to all. My hon. friend spoke of the circumstance that the United States was a near neighbour. The United States is our nearest neighbour on the south, but Japan is our nearest neighbour on the west and France is our nearest neighbour on the east. One thing which I should like to draw to the attention of the house is the peculiar and rather remarkable position in which Canada stands in relation to the countries in which we are opening legations. I was very much impressed the other day by a remark of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) who was referring amongst other things, I think, to the orient and speaking of the influence of Canadian thought on many public questions. He hoped to see Canada playing more and more a part in the councils not only of the empire but of the world, because he believed Canadian opinion would make for friendly relations as between the different countries, and that we were in a peculiarly happy position of being able to interpret the views and opinions of other countries to one another. As he spoke, I thought of a remark a friend of mine recently made respecting Canada's position in that connection.

We are as intimately associated as possible with Great Britain; we are all part of the British Empire; we are all one in the political institutions we possess, and we are all one in our allegiance, our loyalty and our sovereignty. In regard to France we are in the exceptional position of being related by kinship, by past tradition, by sentiment and by language in large part. We have with France an association that no other country in the world begins to parallel. In regard to the United States we are so situated geographically that between us we occupy practically the whole of this continent. Our people are travelling back and forth across an invisible line and I imagine we in Canada understand the people of the United States better than they are understood by the people of any other country in the world. There again we are in a happy position with respect to our neighbour. Now it so happens that Japan is our nearest neighbour across the Pacific. Thus as a country we are situated, so to speak, in the centre of the four great powers that are instrumental in controlling world affairs as far as they relate to peace and war. In connection with the invitation that was issued by the United States in respect to the renunciation of war, that invitation was issued in the first instance to Great Britain, France and Japan as three of the great powers. We are in the happy position of having this close relationship and association with all of those great powers and one of the strongest arguments that could be urged for the opening of legations in those countries is that it will enable us as Canadians to gain the attention of those countries on matters that are of concern to our immediate neighbours, to gain a knowledge of the problems that are affecting them in relation to the problems that affect ourselves and that it will put us in a position to exercise, in a manner that will be helpful to all, that exceptional knowledge which we may come to possess in this way and the exceptional opportunity which is ours as well.

May I, just to hurry along, refer to the other points which my hon. friend has brought up? He said that the alternatives as to the future of Canada were alternatives of independence and continuance in the British Empire. I hope my hon. friend in his remarks did not wish to infer—and I do not think he did—that in taking a step of this kind there was anything which savoured of a desire for independence on the part of this country.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I had no idea of suggesting that the right hon. gentleman had any desire for independence, but I did say that I thought this path he was taking, if followed through, would lead there.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is straying up the wrong path when he speaks in that way. I submit that quite the contrary is the case. I submit that the action which the government is taking is along a line which is going to help to maintain our relationship within the British Empire, a line which might I think come to be directed in another way were we to pursue the avenue that my hon. friend has been advocating. That point I want to make perfectly clear in dealing with these questions of foreign relations and we might as well face the broad issue at once. We are as respects methods of representation face to face with the alternatives he has suggested. One is the old conception of a centralized single control, no matter by what other name you may describe it. The other is the method of a joint control. The centralized control conception had its day for some years in the advocacy of an imperial parliament by imperial federationists. Anycne who opposed the idea of an imperial parliament was described as a separatist or out for independence just because he could not approve a parliament highly centralized. To-day you will not find any advocates of imperial federation. Then the next attempt we had was to bring about an imperial council, to have some body sitting in London as a council which would be able to control the affairs of the empire. I doubt very much whether anyone to-day would advocate that method of centralized control. Now there is proposed another step in the same direction. My hon. friend would have us represented in different parts of the world by one of those centralized bodies who would act for the whole. The way to maintain the British Empire in its foreign relations is not by monopoly of control on the part of any one part of the empire, but by a joint control on the part of all.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I was advocating joint control.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When my hon. friend looks into his own argument he will see that it comes down pretty much to a single control.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: His whole argument was this: How is it going to be possible for half a dozen people to represent the different parts of the empire at Tokyo? How can the British Empire be represented at Tokyo by half a dozen representatives from the different dominions? Half a dozen representatives means joint control. One representative means a monopoly of control on the part of that portion of the British Empire which places that particular representative there. There is no more reason why there should not be single and united action on the part of a group of men in Tokyo than that there should be single and united action on the part of a cabinet. Indeed the rest of my hon. friend's argument—and that was the point I wanted to make—was a direct proof of the accuracy of what I have been saying. He spoke about all the different dominions being represented at Versailles; he said: We got into our quarrels there amongst ourselves; we went into a room and threshed those things out for a whole day at a time, I think he said.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Not a whole day. An hour or two.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, that is not so bad. At Geneva the representatives of the different dominions and the British government, after an hour or two of threshing out differences came to one opinion and acted with a united front. Why can they not do that in Tokyo just as well as in Geneva? Certainly differences will arise and they will be solved exactly as all differences are solved under our British institutions. They will be solved by collective opinions to which individual opinions will give way. I submit very strongly that such a method of representation is a method that is going to help to keep the British Empire united, because back of whatever expression of policy is put forward where different parts are affected there will be the knowledge that that policy is part of the united opinion arrived at by the different countries that are there represented.

May I say to my hon. friend there is another feature to be thought of in connection with the representation of different parts of the empire, at particular centres? Not only is there the benefit of consultation among all the groups immediately affected, but there is also the creation of new ties and links of empire. May I point to what is taking place in the United States at the present time? In the United States we have the British ambassador, Sir Esme Howard, working in cooperation with the Canadian minister and the minister from the Irish Free State. Does my hon. friend mean to tell me that Ireland and Canada and Great Britain are not being united more closely than they have ever been in the past, by virtue of these three gentlemen working together in Washington. I say to him that the fact that you have there at Washington these three representatives of different parts of the British Empire conferring together on matters respecting their respective countries, is the surest way of bringing about that unity of opinion that is going to prevent differences within the British Empire. What is the alternative? The only alternative is to have some single minister who acts for all the others, and if a mistake is made, who is going to be blamed for the mistake? My hon. friend says that you could easily deal with a single minister and bring him back. I would like to know how you are going to deal with him. If the British ambassador at Tokyo made a mistake, for instance, on a matter very seriously affecting British Columbia, does my hon. friend mean to say that just by some action of this goverment we could deal with that British minister? I say to my hon. friend that one of the ways to prevent friction arising within the empire is to see that with respect to its external affairs, the different parts of the empire are represented by ministers who are responsible to the government of the country which they represent, and who may be recalled by them if the necessity arises. Let me give my hon. friend, not my view, on that point, but the view of a British ambassador himself, the ambassador at Washington, given since the present legation has been opened. What he says applies equally to Tokyo, Paris and elsewhere. Sir Esme Howard speaking before the Canadian Club at Vancouver in May, 1927, had the following to say:

> Now may I say one word more with special reference to the relations of Canada to the United States of America. In the last few months, as you are aware, a new step has been taken in the relations of Canada and the United States by the appointment to Washington of a special Canadian diplomatic representative in the person of my friend Mr. Vincent Massey. Whenever I have been asked, long before the appointment was made, what I thought about it, I have always been able, fortunately, to say quite unreservedly that in my humble opinion it would be an excellent thing to have a Canadian representative at Washington. Canada has now so many and so important questions to treat with the United States governmen that it is certainly better that these should be treated by someone who being a Canadian will be better prepared to handle them than any regular British representative could be. The matter was I think largely a question of expediency and opportunity. The question presented itself thus. How soon will it be worth while for the Canadian government to bear the expense necessary for setting up a legation at Washington? The Canadian government has decided that that time has come and, if I may say so without impertinence, I think the establishment of the legation was a wise move, and that nothing could have been happier than the choice of Mr. Massey to launch the ship. Proud as I was to represent Canada at Washington, I always felt that some day—perhaps in my time perhaps later—Canadians might feel rightly or wrongly that their business was not being handled properly by the British embassy. Now that I have passed the buck to Mr. Massey he will get all the blame if there is any going and I shall be able to sit back quietly in my chair unperturbed and at ease.

May I say that that is true equally of our representation at Tokyo, and perhaps even more true in that case, seeing that in relations with the orient there are in some particulars questions which affect this Dominion to a greater degree perhaps than any other part of the British Empire. I think it is all important, and for the good of the empire, for the preservation of the empire and for the unity of the empire, that there should be representing Canada at Tokyo someone who knows Canadian problems, who understands the situation, for example, in the province of British Columbia with respect to immigration, with respect to trade, and with respect to the hundred and one other questions that have already arisen and are appearing in our relations with Japan, who will be able there, in Japan, not only to make known Canadian opinion, but be in a position also to give us through Canadian eyes a knowledge of the questions that are arising in Japan itself, and of the atmosphere in which they are being discussed. That is the point I would like to make. I am afraid that in hurrying over this subject so rapidly I am not developing it as well as I should.

I would say to my hon. friend that already the method of having different parts of the British Empire represented at a single centre for the purpose of conferences on matters affecting the empire as a whole, but having special reference to their own particular part, has already been tried out and has worked very successfully. It worked out at Versailles, dealing with the great question of the settlement of the war, at which conferences all parts of the British Empire were represented. It has worked well at the conferences at Geneva, and at the different conferences that have been held at Washington. Wherever there have been conferences at which all the different parts of the British Empire have been represented the result up to the present moment has been success, success and success. We have sufficient in the way of evidence to believe that in connection with these legations, if they are established, the same methods and the same attitude will prevail, and prevail for the good of all.

In regard to my hon. friend's reference to independence, may I say that he has got hold of the wrong word. It is not independence, it is self-dependence we are thinking about in the appointment of these legations, self-dependence and self-reliance in larger measure as we have increased responsibilities and increased obligations. My hon. friend, I presume, would be agreeable to having all our foreign business conducted at the expense of Great Britain.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is his alternative? It is to tax the Canadian people and pay part of the expenses of the British officials to look after our affairs?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Certainly not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then the other way is to let the British government do it at its own expense?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: My suggestion was that we should have some system whereby each part of the empire would pay a share of the expense and each part would have a say as to the appointments, and that the foreign staff should no longer be appointed solely by the foreign office of Great Britain.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will strive from now till doomsday but never succeed in working out a plan of that kind. You will never get the foreign office in Great Britain to allow this country to say who is to run that office in any particular, any more than you could get the people of Canada to agree to allow somebody to come here from the Old Country and say how the affairs of this Dominion shall be run.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does the Prime Minister know whether the statement that was made by Mr. Asquith that the foreign policy of Great Britain could never be shared by the different parts of the empire, but must be dictated by Downing street, has ever been refuted by any responsible statesman?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think we might say such an opinion by whomsoever expressed has been refuted by experience.

I do not think it would now be maintained that Downing street was claiming the right to determine the foreign policy for all parts of the empire. The facts are quite the contrary, and that is recognized by the British government itself. Take the different treaties that have been negotiated by this country and by this government; they have been negotiated with the full approval of the British government. That of itself is an answer to my hon. friend's question.

With respect to the introduction of this policy, may I say that before the government decided to open a legation either in Paris or Tokyo, the government had one of its ministers, the leader of the government in the Senate, visit England and confer with the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Great Britain, advising him of Canada's wish and intention in the matter, and also of the desire of the Dominion to have the good offices of the British Foreign Office in obtaining the necessary introductions for a discussion of the opening of legations in Paris and Tokyo with the foreign ministers of the countries concerned. Sir Austen Chamberlain offered every facility he could possibly offer, and I would like to take the opportunity of expressing the appreciation of our government of the helpful cooperation of His Majesty's government in Great Britain in this matter, and also of the services of the British ministers at Paris and Tokyo in having the representations of our government made known to the ministers of foreign affairs of both France and Japan. What we have done, we have done with the full knowledge, consent and approval of His Majesty's government in Great Britain. Indeed it is exactly in accord with the procedure laid down at the last Imperial conference.

I do not wish to take up too much time. I have a note on one or two other points that I thought might later be taken up. I will hasten to anticipate them.

The hon. leader of the opposition when he spoke previously, developed at some length a doctrine of sovereignty, and I think rather stressed the point that the oriental mind would not be able to distinguish our action in appointing a minister to Tokyo.

Mr. BENNETT: In the light of international law.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that I do not think we need worry about the oriental mind. It is the Tory mind that cannot understand these problems. It is the Tory mind that cannot get out of its ambit the view that all these matters relating to our external affairs must somehow or other be dealt with as my hon. friend who has just spoken (Sir George Perley) has said, by some individual other than a citizen of our own country.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let me put this question to the hon. gentleman: Does he think other parts of the empire would be content to have Canadians manage their external affairs?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes, I think it would be quite proper for a Canadian to be the representative of the whole of the British dominions at Paris or Washington or Berlin.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: How much support does my hon. friend think he would get for that proposal in the British parliament?

Mr. BENNETT: Sir Robert Borden was discussed as an appointee to Washington.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. But what was the view of this parliament with respect to Sir Robert Borden or anyone else acting as British minister at Washington?

Mr. BENNETT: As a minister for all the commonwealths.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Put it that way. The view held here when the subject was discussed was that it would be a most lamentable and unfortunate position for this country to be put in to have one of its distinguished citizens representing at Washington not only Canada but all other parts of the empire, for the simple reason that if a mistake were made there with respect to the affairs of another part, this country would be held wholly responsible. May I put the question concretely to my hon. friend: Assume for a moment that Sir Robert Borden were acting as the minister at Washington for the whole of the British Empire, and Sir Robert were to take a course of action on some subject that was not in accordance with the will and wish of the government of Great Britain; who would recall Sir Robert? Would he be recalled by the British government, by this government or by the Australian government? I submit you can have power only as you pay the bill, that the country responsible for raising the taxes must have the power of carrying on its own business and controlling its own agents, and that you will get into an endless mix-up if you try to divide authority in the matter of control.

With respect to sovereignty, in the management of our domestic affairs we have sovereign power already. We have sovereign power in regard to external affairs in so far as they relate to this Dominion. The Imperial conference has distinctly stated that Canada's position in that regard is precisely the same as that of Great Britain herself. I know my hon. friend does not wholly subscribe to the doctrine of equality of status, and I am not going to discuss that question to-day, but I do want to give to this house once for all a statement that I propose to rely on in the days to come as my authority respecting Canada's position in the matter of equality of status when dealing with this question. I hold in my hand a volume entitled, Our Inheritance, being a collection of speeches and addresses delivered by the Right Honourable Stanley Baldwin, M.P., Prime Minister of Great Britain—a book which I think every citizen of the British Empire will be proud to read. Among the addresses are several delivered in Canada and one which Mr. Baldwin delivered within the walls of these houses of parliament on the occasion of the visit of himself and His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to Ottawa last year. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition was there on that occasion, and heard this speech delivered. I shall not read the whole speech, but just one or two passages dealing with the significance of the Imperial conference of 1926. Mr. Baldwin spoke in the presence of all the members of the Privy Council on all sides of politics who were able to attend, and in the presence of other distinguished citizens and visitors. He said:

> I had the great honour of being chairman of that conference, and I think that it marked an epoch in the relations between the various parts of the British Empire. . . . .
> So perhaps it may be of interest, not only to you but also to Canada generally, if I try to explain very briefly how I personally interpret the main results of the conference.
>
> Its most important work was, by common consent, the unanimous report of the committee on inter-imperial relations, a committee which had the good fortune to be presided over by one who was a master of language no less than of thought—Lord Balfour.
> What that committee did was to attempt to define in a phrase the living relationship of all parts of the British Empire to one another, and to begin to work out the practical application of that relationship.
> The phrase to which His Royal Highness has already alluded has been widely quoted, and I think I can say without fear of contradiction that it will go down to history. You will pardon me if I repeat it here:

And this is the phrase which His Royal Highness himself gave to that gathering on the same evening:

> "Great Britain and the dominions, are autonomous communities within the British Empire, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs—"

Mr. BENNETT: That is in the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

> "—though united by a common allegiance to the crown, and freely associated as members of the British commonwealth of nations."

That paragraph, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition remarks, was quoted by His Royal Highness from the report of the committee on inter-imperial relations. Then Mr. Baldwin goes on to say:

> This formula is founded on two principles, the essential equality of status of all the self-governing parts of the empire, and the unity of the whole empire under the crown. . . . .
> We may well be content with the declaration thus unanimously completed and agreed.

The words I particularly direct attention to are these:

> To define in a phrase the living relationship of all parts of the British Empire to one another, and to begin to work out the practical application of that relationship.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that with respect to domestic affairs we have full and complete sovereign power; that with respect to our external relations, our powers are just as complete as they are with respect to our domestic affairs; the same is true of the powers of the British parliament as to their domestic and external affairs; the same is true of all the self-governing parts of the British Empire. That being so, we believe we should now work out the application of a living relationship that is fundamental. When we have great questions arising between ourselves and a country such as Japan—which we have—we feel that the practical application of this living relationship which Canada bears to the British Isles is to associate with the British ambassador at Tokyo a minister from Canada who will understand Canadian problems and be able to interpret them direct to the Japanese, and also to the other representatives of the British Empire who may be associated with him at Tokyo. We believe there is no danger of the Japanese or the oriental mind mistaking in any particular what as a consequence is involved with respect to sovereignty. Indeed, I think my hon. friend would be the first to admit that the Japanese are not oblivious to what has taken place at Washington; they are not oblivious to what has taken place at Paris. If the oriental mind is to get wrong impressions with respect to Canada's relations with the other parts of the empire, or of possible independence, that difficulty will have arisen already. But I do not think that any people anywhere will be quicker to appreciate the accuracy of the relationship which exists than will the Japanese nation itself.

Now, in the paragraph from the speech from the throne which I read, reference was made to the importance of personal communication, of personal contact in international relations. I submit, from what little experience I have had thus far in dealing with these external affairs that too much importance cannot be attached to immediate personal contact between representatives of different countries when considering in common some large problem of mutual concern. May I cite a matter which comes to my mind. Hon. members will recall a speech made in this house, in the course of the debate on external affairs, in which a friendly nation to my mind had reason to feel it had been insulted, at least indirectly, by the remarks of a certain hon. gentleman. I will not say more than that. The remarks, however, I may observe were made in application to the people of the orient. Those of us who are assembled here know how easily the hon. gentleman who spoke rolls off some of his various remarks, and we know how much to discount his language. But words of the character to which I refer sent across the Pacific and repeated in another country, as coming from one who has been not only mayor of a great city in Canada for seven years or more in succession but also a member of this parliament for several years, are likely to assume a significance in the orient which they do not begin to assume here. How are you to explain to the oriental people or to any people the significance of many such public remarks which do more mischief in international relations than anything else? Yet a thing of that sort can be explained in a moment, through personal contact, where it could not be explained by weeks of correspondence.

I desire for a moment now to stress the importance of the trade which is growing up with the orient. Do hon. members realize that Japan is our third or fourth largest customer in the matter of trade? The exports to Japan in 1926 amounted to $35,000,000, and in 1927, to $30,000,000; the reduction in 1927 is to be accounted for by the war in China as well as commercial depression in Japan. In 1926 Japan was our third best customer, our exports to that country being exceeded only by those to Great Britain and the United States. In 1927 she was our fourth largest customer. Our exports to Japan are 300 times as great as they were thirty years ago. And our imports from Japan, while only about one-sixth of our exports are still large enough to give Japan rank as sixth in the list of countries from which we purchase goods. It is a striking fact that our exports to Japan in 1926 were greater in value than were our exports to the United Kingdom and France combined in the first year in which we sent a High Commissioner to London and an agent to Paris.

May I now refer to what I believe to be the true significance of the step we propose taking in this regard? Action in this field is a natural and necessary development of self government. The different self-governing units of the British Commonwealth have great traditions and many interests in common. But they have also distinct problems to solve. As Canada has grown in population, industrial development and foreign trade, it has become necessary for her to make provision for her special interests abroad. We began by sharing in making commercial treaties with foreign countries, and later in making them ourselves. We are now participating directly in general treaties affecting wider political interests. We are sending representatives to Paris, Washington and other places to deal with special and individual problems arising between foreign countries and ourselves, and the natural, necessary and inevitable development is to send as conditions warrant permanent representatives to the capitals of foreign countries.

As a concrete indication of the advantage of the step we now propose, may I say that since this government decided to ask parliament to appropriate a sum sufficient for a legation in Tokyo, the government of Japan has asked its parliament to appropriate a similar amount for the opening of a legation in Ottawa. The discussions which took place with regard to the opening of these legations were supplemented by discussions with respect to the great question of immigration from the orient, more particularly immigration from Japan. As a result of these discussions, and largely as an expression of good will on the part of Japan herself at this new step which is about to be taken, we have succeeded, as I mentioned to the house the other day, in materially modifying the agreement which was formerly concluded between this country and Japan. Japan has to-day undertaken to restrict the total number of immigrants coming to this country per year as agricultural labourers, domestic servants and the wives and children of Japanese immigrants resident in Canada to 150 persons. Moreover, Japan has agreed that, as respects these persons leaving their country to come to Canada, our own minister in Japan shall vise their passports, so that in future there shall be no question about the genuineness of any passports presented or accepted. Japan has also agreed that, despite the provisions of the commercial treaty in existence which gives certain rights to her people in travelling to and fro, our own officers of the Department of Immigration shall apply to Japan the immigration laws of Canada in the same manner as they are applied to all other countries, regard being had of course to the limited restriction of numbers to which I have referred.

I should not be doing justice to the attitude of the Japanese government in the negotiations towards this end if I did not express, on behalf of the government of Canada, our high appreciation of the manner in which the negotiations were conducted on behalf of Japan by Mr. Tomii the present Consul General of Japan at Ottawa. These negotiations were carried on largely between Mr. Tomii and myself, they were further carried on of course by immediate reference on my part, to the other members of the Canadian government, and by reference to the Japanese government on the part of the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Japan. I wish to say that throughout the entire negotiations every effort was made by the Japanese representative here to have it clearly understood on the part of Canada that Japan was seeking only the friendliest relations with this Dominion and that she was prepared to go to very great lengths in the matter of accepting conditions which in some respects are wholly unwelcome to her as an evidence of the international goodwill which it is her hope and ours that these legations in Tokyo and Ottawa respectively may serve to maintain.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The right hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie King) has very correctly indicated that in committee the other evening we dispensed with discussion of this matter in the hope that we might be able to complete consideration of it before prorogation, which was expected to have taken place on Saturday night. That is the only reason why the matter was not discussed at length in committee of the whole when the estimates were under consideration.

There would not appear to be very great difference between the right hon. gentleman and ourselves with respect to one matter, although there are very vast differences between us in another regard. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has referred to what he calls the Tory mind. May I point out that it was the Tory mind in Canada that gave this country trade commissioners. It was the Tory mind that conceived the idea that this country should be represented by Canadian rather than by British trade commissioners in every part of the world. It was the Tory mind, speaking through a Tory government that made possible the development of this trade in Japan to which the right hon. gentleman has referred. And other trade commissioners were appointed by this so-called Tory administration. Of course, there are no Tories in the world now; everyone knows that. There are no Tories nowadays; there have not been any Tories since the days of Peel, who coined the phrase "Liberal Conservative", for the reason that the toryism of Wellington had ceased to exist, as Trevelyan tells in his History of the Nineteenth Century. The word "Tory" disappeared with the death of Wellington and Lord Eldon. That is the fact, as the right hon. gentleman no doubt knows. There are great differences between us, I say, with respect to some matters, and I cannot better summarize our position than in these terms.

First, we say there is no complaint that existing arrangements for the transaction of Canadian diplomatic business at Tokyo are unsatisfactory. We have no minister at Tokyo, yet the Prime Minister tells us that he has just concluded a most satisfactory arrangement with respect to Japanese immigration. That in itself is conclusive proof that existing conditions are satisfactory. In the old province of Quebec they have a maxim which hon. members from there will bear me out is correctly stated in these words, "Whenever no change is necessary it is necessary not to change." Therefore, there being no necessity for change, and the Prime Minister just having indicated the satisfactory character of existing diplomatic arrangements, which enabled him within the last few weeks to conclude arrangements entirely satisfactory to Canada, there is no necessity for the contemplated change.

Secondly, in dealing with our relations with other states it is essential to the maintenance of the commonwealth of free communities known as the British Empire that there should be but one foreign policy. I think no one will dispute that. How is it possible to maintain unity among the free communities which we call the British Empire if Australia has one foreign policy, New Zealand another, Canada another and the remainder of the British Empire another? It follows beyond question that if we are to maintain the life of the free communities as an empire—the British Empire—there must be but a single foreign policy.

Thirdly, this leads us logically to the next point, that independence of action in diplomatic matters is not compatible with the ideas of partnership and of a united empire

We say we are a partnership of free peoples. Has any hon. gentleman in this house ever heard of one partner sending one representative, another partner sending another representative, and another partner still another representative with respect to business matters? How is it possible in a partnership consisting of four people for each partner to have his own special representative for the transaction of business with distant peoples? The partnership deals as a unit with respect to business and speaks with a single voice, and when it fails, so to speak as a unit, disruption and dismemberment are inevitable.

Fourthly, that leads us logically to the next statement, which is this: The appointment of a minister by Canada implies by international law that the Dominion is a sovereign state. We are not, and that implication will create misunderstandings at home and abroad. The Prime Minister dealt with that matter, and all I wish to say in answer is to read from a recent authority on international law. I quote Oppenheim, section 64, "Conception of the State":

> A state proper—in contradistinction to so-called colonial states—is in existence when a people is settled in a country under its own sovereign government. The conditions which must obtain for the existence of a state are therefore four:
> There must, first be a people. A people is an aggregate of individuals of both sexes who live together as a community in spite of the fact that they may belong to different races or creeds, or be of different colour.
>
> There must, secondly, be a country in which the people has settled down. A wandering people, such as the Jews were whilst in the desert for forty years before their conquest of the Holy Land, is not a state. But it matters not whether the country is small or large; it may consist, as with city states, of one town only.
> There must, thirdly, be a government—that is, one or more persons who are the representatives of the people and rule according to the law of the land. An anarchistic community is not a state.
>
> There must, fourthly and lastly, be a sovereign government. Sovereignty is supreme authority, an authority which is independent of any other earthly authority. Sovereignty in the strict and narrowest sense of the term includes, therefore, independence all round, within and without the borders of the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: "In the strict and narrowest sense of the term."

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, with respect to the other matters. I repeat:

> There must, fourthly and lastly, be a sovereign government. Sovereignty is supreme authority, an authority which is independent of any other earthly authority. Sovereignty in the strict and narrowest sense of the term includes, therefore, independence all round, within and without the borders of the country.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, that is only in the strict and narrowest sense.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but you must deal with it in every sense. That is the very point I desire to make. We are not a sovereign power even for domestic purposes, and I can best illustrate that statement by a reference to one house of this parliament. The Supreme Court of Canada has decided that women may not be appointed to the Senate, and we have not the power to change our constitution in that regard. That must be done by an amendment to the British North America Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a matter of method, that is all; the power comes from us.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the legislative power is exercised at Westminster, not at Ottawa, and the same thing applies to other matters which were dealt with the other day by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). The Merchant Shipping Act is another example; there can be no such thing as domestic sovereignty so long as this parliamment occupies under the constitution, and the statute which created it, a subordinate position with regard to any matter. We may not change the constitution of the Senate; we are not a sovereign power even for domestic purposes. With respect to foreign matters it is admitted that we are not a sovereign power, because only an independent state may be a sovereign power, and not being an independent state we are not a sovereign power in foreign matters in the proper and legal sense in which that term is employed. The Prime Minister has said that Mr. Baldwin stated that we had equality of status. Mr. Baldwin's say-so is no more authoritative than that of the Prime Minister; It is no more authoritative than that of any member of this house, because the word of no single man can change the legal position. This constitution is divided into three parts, the legislative, the executive and the judicial. The judicial interprets the constitution and determines what is our position; that judicial determination does not rest upon resolutions of the Imperial conference, which cannot be even considered by it. When our constitution is construed and our powers determined by the courts, it has been decided time after time that such a resolution cannot be considered, and that even a resolution of this parliament has no authority before a court. The parliament of Canada and the parliament of Great Britain each speaks as a parliament assembled; in England it is His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords and Commons, while here it is His Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons, and unless there is action taken by appropriate legislatures and parliaments the equality of status of Canada cannot be established.

To what equality are we looking? Great Britain has an independent status; do we desire to be placed in a similar position? If so this is a step in that direction. That is our position with respect to it, and the people must decide upon this matter as they decide upon all other matters, after it has been properly and clearly presented to them. It will be recalled that I mentioned in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne that I believe every student of international law, even the casual reader, would admit that there is no equality of status as between Canada and Great Britain and that there can be no such thing in international law as equality of status between Canada and Great Britain until such time as this country has the powers of a sovereign state and absolute independence both within and without our country. Then, and then only, may we have equality of status. I have said, and I repeat, that as far as I am concerned I propose to die protesting against that independent condition being achieved. That is all I can say with respect to that.

I submit further that such appointments make for separation as against solidarity. How must this Britannic commonwealth of nations speak with respect to foreign policy? As I have said, it must speak either as a unit with a single voice or as individual partners with many voices; it must speak with one voice or many. Can it speak on matters of foreign policy with more than one voice? It cannot and remain united. When it speaks with many voices then you have disunion and you destroy the solidarity we now possess. The difficulties which arose in connection with the making of the Versailles treaty were matters which could be taken up easily and decided this week or next week, or hour by hour or day by day. It took a long time to negotiate the treaty and they discussed matters and arrived at compromises and conclusions. The Assembly of the League of Nations at Geneva does not always arrive at the same conclusion. There was a vote recorded last year in which Canada voted one way and another part of the British Empire voted another way. My friend the Minister of the Interior knows that is so, for he was present, I think, on that occasion. So you see you can hardly compare that—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That did not disrupt the empire.

Mr. BENNETT: It did not, nor is it likely to. The League of Nations is nothing more than an organization set up by various countries in the world, and has nothing to do with the question of peace or war, or the status and position of this country or any other. I put this question to the right hon. the Prime Minister: How can you have at any capital ministers from Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa together with a minister from Great Britain? How can they differ and have unity in the empire?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why should they always differ?

Mr. BENNETT: The point I am coming to is this; I do not think they would always differ, I hope they might always agree, but this empire should have but one representation of its foreign policies. It can never speak with many voices, it must always speak with one. In every great capital where it is necessary that there should be representatives of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, there should be an ambassador who speaks for the empire. Who is going to speak for the partners who comprise our commonwealth of nations? Not Sir Austen Chamberlain, as was said the other day. Suppose a difficulty arose in France. Sir Austen Chamberlain consults the French foreign minister and he determines upon a course of action, so far as he is concerned, speaking for Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand. But Canada has a representative there, and he says, "No, I do not agree to that; I will have to wire my home government." He wires his home government at Ottawa and they do not agree. Then what happens? It means one of two things; either Sir Austen Chamberlain speaks and says, "I cannot speak for Canada;" and simply speaks for the rest of the empire. Are we ready for that?

It means that if the Canadian representative in Tokyo is confronted with a problem that affects Canada and other parts of the commonwealth of nations, and the ambassador of Great Britain agrees upon a given line of action, and there are no other representatives of any part of the king's dominions there except the ambassador of Great Britain and the Canadian minister, and the Canadian minister says, "I cannot agree to what you propose doing," the ambassador of Great Britain must agree with our minister or no action can be taken. What if we are faced with a condition similar to that which confronted Mr. Ambassador Goschen, at Berlin, or Sir George Buchanan at St. Petersburg? You cannot take weeks to decide a diplomatic matter, you can only take hours. The ambassador of Great Britain says, "I can speak for everybody but Canada." Can we then remain within the empire, remain a partner of the commonwealth of nations called the British Empire? We cannot. There is no difficulty in understanding that.

That is the reason we proposed, and it was not an improper proposal, that we should establish at Washington, as was originally intended, not our own embassy or our own legation, but that our representative should work with the ambassador of Great Britain. I had even hoped that the time would come when the British commonwealth of nations might be represented in foreign countries by Canadians.

Gentlemen here have visited foreign lands as I have, and have experienced the same pride as they looked upon the union jack and the coat of arms of his Britannic Majesty's embassy. We go into the embassy and over the entrance are the arms of his Britannic Majesty and the British flag. What is going to be put over the Canadian legation door?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend intimate that Sir Robert Borden advocated that the Canadian representative should be attached to the British embassy at Washington?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think the word "minister" was used. It was intended that our representative, as the minister probably knows, should find quarters in an addition to be made to the embassy of Great Britain at Washington. That was the original idea,—that they would work together so there would be no chance of any disagreement.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You do not get that idea from his public utterances.

Mr. BENNETT: You should have got it in this House of Commons. What will you find upon the shield outside the Canadian legation? His Majesty's government in Canada with the British flag and the Canadian flag. Let us look at this thing as practical men. We go down to Washington to-day and we find a Canadian flag and the Canadian arms. That is easily understood on the American continent; but you get out to Tokyo and there is a British embassy with the British shield and British flag upon it, and at another place is the Canadian legation with the Canadian arms and Canadian flag. A question comes up which affects every partner in the British commonwealth of nations. What is the ambassador of Great Britain going to do about it? He arrives at his conclusions as to what should be done, and he goes to the government he is accredited to with his determination. The Canadian minister is advised. If we are going to act in unity with him, then we should be side by side and acting as one people speaking for the whole commonwealth, and not for that partner called Great Britain or that partner called Canada. The Prime Minister says there will be no difficulty because you can compromise and agree, but the world's history is filled with the record of cases where they did not agree. The disagreement of ambassadors brought about wars in times past. Look at the great congress of ambassadors which was supposed to preserve the world's peace after the treaty of Vienna and the Napoleonic wars. This congress was to keep the peace of the world, but differences arose, the first I think being in connection with Brazil.

Let us look at these matters frankly. We are predicating this experiment upon the possibility of men always being able to agree. It is illogical to conclude that this commonwealth of nations can speak as several entities when we know that in matters of foreign policy it must speak with one voice or perish. There can be no division when you come to a question of foreign policy. The king cannot be neutral in one country and at war in another. We cannot be at peace and war at the same time, and this commonwealth of nations must speak with one voice. It cannot speak with one voice if power is given to the representative of Canada or any other part of the commonwealth to speak with a dissenting voice. This is the real reason I make a protest against this expenditure.

Then there is the further question of the expense involved at this time for no corresponding results. What do we offer as a substitute? We say trade commissioners, high commissioners if you will. The trade with Japan has not been brought about by diplomatic interviews. Their business is not trade, it is diplomacy. Ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if the business, with the United States has been improved by the Minister at Washington or through trade commissioners. A trade commissioner's business is trade, not diplomacy, and your trade commissioners bring about the expansion of business. We could keep up five trade commissioners at $10,000 per year for what this one minister is to cost us. Think what that would mean. It would put trade commissioners in different parts of the world, an additional one in China, two more in Japan, if you will, to expand and develop our oriental trade through the means we have found so satisfactory in the past. We suggest, so far as it is possible for us to do this, that contact and communication by Canada with foreign powers should be maintained through a single office speaking with authority as a single voice representing all communities of the commonwealth. If necessary Canada can have representation in those offices for discussion, for the presentation of her views; but the league or commonwealth of the British communities is the greatest assurance the world has of its peace to-day, and now we are going to make it possible that some man with a strong determined view, yielding not to pressure or to compromise, may for this country speak with a voice different from that of the other communities of the empire and thereby imperil its solidarity and unity and destroy the whole idea that underlies this free community of nations we call the British Empire.

For that reason, without elaborating the matter further at this late hour, I am compelled to place myself on record as against these proposals with all the implications that are involved—and the implications are more powerful still—the implications of protection in a foreign land, when Canadians rush to their own flag to find protection in their own legation. Where are our fleets? Where are our police? Armies are but policemen; where are they? Where are our police patrols—our cruisers abroad? Where upon the high seas are our destroyers, as Kipling says, "the stripped hulls, slinking through the gloom"? In the east to-day we find ferment, great conflict of ambitions between China and Japan. Some day China will be consolidated; some day their internal differences will be settled. Then we have those ambitions clashing in Manchuria, and we know what has taken place there. Manchuria is our great rival in the production of wheat for the great flour mills of Japan. Questions of trade we can understand; but when other moments come; when difficulties arise; when British subjects rush for the protection of their own country, to their ministry, to their legation, the implication is at least that we can afford some protection. What protection can we afford? None. This is putting on show, a pretence, without having behind us power, authority or means with which to assert ourselves should difficulties arise. And the same reliance which in days gone by we have had to place upon the fleet and might of England, the taxpayers of England, to protect the lives and property of our citizens, we shall once more have to place upon them as against this bogus representation of nationality, this false representation of sovereignty which we do not possess and which places us in the eyes of the world in a position wholly unwarranted either in fact or in law.

Amendment (Sir George Perley) negatived on division.

SUPPLY BILL—CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS —HALIFAX HOTEL

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word, on the third reading, with regard to the item which was under discussion this morning and as to which I stated that I would forego my right to speak at that time in order not to delay the passage of the bill. I will take the time of the house very shortly, but I feel that there should be placed on record one or two matters with regard to the observations made by my right hon. friend this morning so that my remarks may be read along with his.

First, with regard to a suggestion which my hon. friend made to effect that definite subscriptions had been made by the Canadian Pacific, I now have information which shows that the subscription must have been of the most informal kind, because, as I now ascertain, the scheme of capitalization of the present Lord Nelson hotel project was not completed until October 7, 1927. I find that the original capitalization of that company as it appeared on the records in Nova Scotia in 1926 was 8,250 preference shares and 16,500 no par value shares. I find that that same capitalization continued, no change being made until a special resolution was filed on October 7, 1927, when for the first time on the official records appeared the capitalization which had been the subject of all the discussion and advertisements during the summer, namely, a capitalization of 6,400 preference and 3,200 no par value shares. I refer my hon. friend to that when he suggests that some subscription was made, as he said, prior to August 1st. I point out to him that if such a subscription was made it was not made to the present shares on which the operation of the company is founded. This indicates to me, and, I think, to the house, that there had been an entirely informal and tentative dealing with this matter until some time after the Canadian National Railway announcement.

Mr. SPEAKER: Might I inform the hon gentleman that there is no amendment, but perhaps it is a question of privilege or personal explanation.

Mr. RALSTON: There is the matter of the third reading.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my hon. friend is wrong in going on, but I did not want to take the question up myself.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman may proceed.

Mr. RALSTON: I understood the motion was for the third reading and I am speaking on that. I will not be long and I think what I have to say should be put on record. Further, my hon. friend has intimated that there was some disposition on my part against this proposition, and that objection should have been removed when the change in the financial arrangement was made. May I point out that when the change in the financial arrangement involved a payment of something like 7.31 per cent on the money going into the company, and when this country can borrow money at 4¾ per cent, it seemed to me that it was not good business to take part in a proposition in which the financing cost as much as that.

In the matter of control, as I also intimated, there was no control whatever by the Canadian National. The whole purpose of the hotel was to be a feeder to the railway. That purpose was gone completely if the control was held by individuals who had not the interest of the railway at heart, but whose first endeavour was to earn interest on the bonds and dividends on preferred stock. The advertisements disclose that the chief ground upon which the public were asked to subscribe was that the railway had subscribed to this undertaking and it was further pointed out in the advertisement that the public subscription would be annulled unless the railway subscription were gone on with, indicating clearly that the whole basis of the financial scheme was that the railway should support it. If that was so and the railways were to stand behind the scheme, and if the scheme was really dependent on the railways, then it seemed to me that there was no reason why the company should pay the $94,000 to underwriters which was required under that scheme. It seemed to me that the situation was this. If the project was going to be successful, there was no reason why the railway should not take it on entirely as a railway proposition, and if it was not going to be successful the railway would eventually have to take it over anyway to save their investment and to see that the interests of the road were protected.

My friends opposite have been very solicitous in suggesting hands off the Canadian National Railway, but they only wanted hands off the railway when the situation was that the railway was, for want of something better, acquiescing in a scheme which they desired, but when the railway propose a scheme that is more for the interests of the railway, the suggestion is now that the management of the Canadian National Railway in that respect shall be blocked and throttled.

There is one other thing to which I want to refer, and that is the telegram read by my hon. friend which was sent by myself to Mr. Silver in which at the end of the telegram I said something to the effect that I would continue to support the Canadian National railway hotel unless private interests saw fit to take the project over.

Mr. BENNETT: What was the date of that?

Mr. RALSTON: September 23. I asked my hon. friend to read the other two telegrams.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not have them.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Silver's telegram of September 24 reads:

Telegram received. Regret your decision which people here find hard to understand, as it is felt that the participation of all transportation lines entering Halifax is essential to any modern hotel proposal irrespective of who builds it. This is the broad view held by other transportation companies, and it was thought would appeal to you especially as your objections have been so fully met. You, of course, are entitled to your personal views, but in the interests of the province generally, don't you think the proposal which has been approved of by the responsible heads of the two great transportation systems, and I am informed the Minister of Railways also, is worthy of consideration from the broad standpoint of the benefit the immediate construction will be to the whole province?

I wired him on September 25, as follows:

Wire received. Regret do not see how government's position can be made any plainer than in my wire. Participation of both railway companies is not a new feature. It was involved in scheme first submitted, but that is not the point of government's decision. Let me repeat that the decision of the cabinet was not to approve large expenditures like this for matters outside ordinary railway undertakings without their being submitted to parliament in railway budget. This decision was arrived at and announced on July fourteenth, and therefore do not see how there can be the difficulty you suggest in understanding the situation. Your information is quite incorrect when you suggest that Minister of Railways did not share this view; he concurred in it fully. Concerning approval railway heads, may I refer again to Sir Henry's statement published in Herald July twenty-first to effect that C.N.R. hotel was in accordance with original desire of management and that appropriate amount for this purpose would be submitted in next railway budget. It is because considerations which are simply local have not been allowed to govern that the conclusion arrived at has been reached, and you may be assured that the action in this matter is governed by broad viewpoint of interests of the province generally.

I point out to my hon. friend that the suggestion which was made at the end of the telegram to which I referred was a purely negative suggestion. I want to say to him that it was not intended at all as an undertaking or an assurance. It was simply a reservation. It was in order that there might be no danger in the future of somebody in Nova Scotia coming along and demanding: Now you support and see that there is built a Canadian National railway hotel in Halifax, notwithstanding the fact that there may be a privately owned hotel as well. It was in order that I might have the opportunity of seeing what the views of the Canadian National railway were and of considering the new situation if it arose that I was very careful indeed to make that reservation. I regret if anybody took it as an undertaking that I would not support a Canadian National railway hotel if it was decided that the interests of the railway required one, but I do not think anybody was misled in the slightest because I find that almost immediately Sir Henry Thornton himself made a statement, on September 27, which is reported in the Halifax Herald of September 28 is follows:

Montreal, September 27—It was officially announced by Sir Henry W. Thornton, chairman and president of the Canadian National railways, to-day that the Canadian National system will erect its own hotel in the city of Halifax. Owing to preliminaries involved no further announcement will be made at this time.

As I have pointed out, express notice had been given previously by Sir Henry Thornton and myself repeatedly that a Canadian National railway hotel was in contemplation. Hon. gentlemen will find in the statement made by Mr. Silver himself as late as October 15, that he rather expected the Canadian National railway hotel would still be considered, and it was with his eyes wide open that he went ahead in connection with the Lord Nelson hotel. Mr. Silver makes this announcement. He says:

The announcement of Sir Henry Thornton yesterday would appear to be in line with previous announcements made by him, and there does not seem to be any sound reason to believe that a government-owned hotel will be considered until after the next session of parliament.

In view of that fact, President Silver said, the Lord Nelson hotel company were going right ahead with their plans and will immediately proceed with construction.

No one could have had his eyes more wide open than Mr. Silver on that occasion. It was simply a case of competition, a case where the Canadian Pacific Railway felt that an opportunity had come to them so that they might take stock in that hotel and get it started, and they were able to get it started more quickly than the Canadian National. As I have said, no one was misled; they had before them the statements made back in July and before the company was organized on the present basis at all, that there would be submitted to parliament at the next session an estimate for a Canadian National railway hotel in Halifax, which estimate is in the supply bill now before us. They also had my interview with the Board of Trade in August. May I say further that all the announcements of Sir Henry Thornton had been made and the plan for the combined station and hotel was known before the Lord Nelson contract was authorized. According to the press the contract was not authorized by the directors at least until as late as October 15, the site was not approved by the directors until October 17, the contract for the excavation was not closed until October 19, and as I indicated previously the capitalization had not been legally fixed and recorded until October 7, some time after Sir Henry Thornton announced definitely that he would build a hotel.

Just one word on the merits, and I have finished. One thing which influences me and which will influence this house and be regarded in this country as important is this, that Mr. Silver himself in advertising the Lord Nelson hotel securities in July points out:

Based on comparisons with other hotels of approximately the same size, it is estimated on the most conservative basis, that the gross earnings for the first full year's operation will be $246,456 and the operating expenses, taxes, insurance, and so forth, will amount to $105,225, leaving a balance of $141,231 available for bond interest and preferred stock dividends which amount to $83,800.

That would indicate at least that Mr. Silver did not entertain the same gloomy views which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has suggested.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not suggest that he ever entertained gloomy views. I gave the statement of Mr. Pratt to the president of the railway company.

Mr. RALSTON: That would suggest that Mr. Silver did not entertain the gloomy views which my hon. friend thought were entertained by Mr. Pratt.

Mr. BENNETT: Not "thought were entertained by Mr. Pratt," but were entertained by Mr. Pratt.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend said that the combined capacity is 400 rooms. My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what Sir Henry Thornton says.

Mr. RALSTON: The proposal is that this shall be a combined station and hotel, that there shall be 160 rooms, not 200, and the combined capacity of the two hotels will be 360 rooms, and that is I understand less than the present hotel capacity in Halifax to-day? Further than that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways mentioned this morning that there are indications already that the Lord Nelson hotel will be booked up to capacity. Let me read from the bond circular of the Lord Nelson hotel which corroborates that exactly. They say:

> Already it is considered that the demand for such accommodation will be greater than the Lord Nelson can supply, without consideration of the stimulus such hotels invariably have on further travel.

I do not think there will be any doubt that with the statements of Mr. Silver concerning the Lord Nelson in the original prospectus and in the bond circular no gloomy views need be entertained as to the Canadian National hotel succeeding. My hon. friend overlooks that this is a station as well as a hotel, that there will be located at the terminals, where the steamship and the rail traffic all meet, a station and hotel combined to take care of the traffic.

I think my hon. friend realizes full well, as no doubt does this house, that the management of the railway have in view their experience in meeting competition from the other railway at Quebec, for instance, where large tourist parties have actually been taken from them on account of the Canadian Pacific Railway hotel there. They will soon have to face similar competition on account of the new Canadian Pacific hotel in Toronto, and there is the same experience in Regina, in Calgary and in Vancouver. And it does seem to me, sir, that it is only fair to the people's road, as I said the other night, that power should be given to the Canadian National Railways to compete in the matter of hotel accommodation in Halifax when it is so vital to traffic going all over the system. It does not concern Halifax alone. I presume I would be popular in some quarters in Halifax if I opposed this hotel, but I am not looking for popularity by so doing. But I believe it is in the interests of the whole province of Nova Scotia that not simply one but both these great railway systems should be allowed to provide hotel accommodation which will be feeders to their lines not only in the province but all over Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: On page 150 of the evidence given before the select standing committee on railways and shipping there is the following:

> Mr. Bell (St. Antoine): I was wondering whether there was business for two hotels in Halifax.
> Sir Henry Thornton: That is a matter of opinion. I might observe for what it is worth, that the capacity of the two hotels under contemplation represents the combined capacity of the present existing hotels in Halifax. Without any reflection whatever upon those hotels, they have not been regarded as adequate, nor of a satisfactory character for the hotel trade in Halifax. In other words, this is a substitution of what might be described as really modern hotel accommodation, in an equal quantity to that which existed before, and which has not generally been regarded as of a modern character. It only represents about three hundred rooms.

It only represents about three hundred rooms Sir Henry Thornton says; not 160.

Mr. RALSTON: What does?

Mr. BENNETT: This new hotel.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is wrong. It means two hotels.

Mr. BENNETT: It could not be two.

Mr. RALSTON: There cannot be any question about that.

Mr. BENNETT: I am reading from Sir Henry Thornton's evidence.

Mr. RALSTON: But there must be a mistake. The plans for the Canadian National Hotel are for only 160 rooms.

Mr. BENNETT: Sir Henry Thornton told the committee:

> It only represents about three hundred rooms.

The Lord Nelson hotel represents 193 rooms. That is the position in regard to that. My hon. friend said that the Canadian National was preparing to meet hotel competition in Calgary. I do not see it in the estimates. Is that settled?

Mr. RALSTON: No, I said they had had experience of trying to meet hotel competition in Calgary.

Mr. BENNETT: I am grateful for that. I did not so hear it.

Motion (Mr. Robb) agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PRIVILEGE—MR. LETELLIER

Mr. J. E. LETELLIER (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. Before the house rose at one o'clock the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich), on a question of privilege stated that item 44 of the agriculture estimates had not been called by the hon. chairman in committee of supply. It does appear in unrevised Hansard of Saturday last, as follows:

The following items were passed in committee of supply:

Agriculture

And on the following page in the last paragraph under that heading I find this:

Live stock, including grants to exhibitions, feeder shows, etc., $1,480,000.

This is the item that appears in the agriculture estimates. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this should be sufficient to establish that this item was called and voted in committee of supply on Saturday last.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: The hon. member says that item 44, with regard to class B fairs, had been discussed, as would be seen in Hansard. May I point out that what appears in Hansard is simply a list without any record of discussion in the house. I was very sorry on Saturday night that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) could not be here. Regarding his absence, I might express myself in rhyme:

Oh where, oh where is our Minister of Agriculture gone?
Oh where, oh where can he be?
With the B fair grants cut short and the grant to Toronto cut long,
Oh where, oh where can our Minister of Agriculture be?

We are going to fight this thing to a finish and I can tell the Minister of Agriculture that we shall meet him at Philippi.

Mr. LETELLIER: I may say that I did not use the word "discussion;" I said that the fact had appeared in Hansard. I may also point out that the question was raised the other night by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken.

QUESTION

BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS—COMPENSATION FOR ANIMALS DESTROYED

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Is it the intention of the government to pay to owners of animals which are destroyed because they are affected with tuberculosis the full value of the animals so destroyed by order of the government's inspectors?

2. Has the government paid the owners of animals which were recently destroyed for such cause in the county of Compton in the province of Quebec?

3. If not, when will such payments be completed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. No. Sections 6 and 7 of the Animals Contagious Diseases Act limit the valuation of an animal and the compensation that may be paid. The compensation is two-thirds of the appraised value up to the limit allowed by the act.

2. Compensation was awarded and payment made or will be made when the owner has fulfilled the requirements of the regulations, such as the disinfection of the premises where his animals are kept.

3. Answered by No. 2.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following message:

Ottawa, June 11, 1928.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate chamber on Monday, June 11, at 5.20 p.m. for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
James F. Crowdy,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

At 4.55 p.m. the sitting was suspended until 5.15 p.m. this day.

The house resumed at 5.15 o'clock.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

BEAUHARNOIS POWER COMPANY

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): There was a question I wanted to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) during the progress of his estimates, but in order to expedite matters I refrained from doing so. I observe by the Gazette that an application is to be made by the Beauharnois Light and Power Company to divert certain waters of the St. Lawrence into a canal. I am advised that the effect of this would be to destroy the Long Sault rapids which are now navigated by ships. I propose to ask the minister whether or not in his opinion the department would have the power to deal with the matter in that way and thus prevent further navigability of the rapids, destroying the scenic attractions that go with them, without the consent of parliament?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): In the first place, the question is not properly addressed to me, inasmuch as the Navigable Waters Protection Act is under the administration of the Minister of Public Works. There is of course a very important legal question—almost an international legal question—involved in my hon. friend's query. I appreciate his thinking me sufficient of a legal expert to be able to give an opinion on such a matter, but I assure him I do not aspire to such eminence.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my hon. friend admitted it.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no. However, my hon. friend's question will appear in Hansard in the natural course of events, and will be directed to the attention of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. BENNETT: And of the Minister of Public Works?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: It may have escaped the attention of some hon. members that all the documents relating to that diversion have been brought down. There are some very interesting documents among them which would take a considerable time in order to be duly appreciated.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

In the Senate chamber, His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1929.

To these bills the royal assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In His Majesty's name His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please your Excellency:

The Commons of Canada have voted supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons I present to Your Excellency the following bill:

An act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1929.

To which bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of His Excellency the Governor General, did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the second session of the sixteenth parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I desire to express my appreciation of the careful attention you have given to the various measures submitted for your consideration during the present session of parliament.

It is a source of special satisfaction to note that the public accounts of the fiscal year recently ended disclose a substantial surplus and that you have been able to effect a further reduction in the public debt as well as a further material reduction in taxation.

The trade of our country continues to expand. Exports of manufactured goods are being well maintained and our total exports to foreign countries show a considerable increase. It is anticipated that the volume of foreign trade will reveal a further increase as a result of the trade agreements just concluded.

I am gratified to observe that the interest and benefit of ex-service men and of their dependents has had particularly close and sympathetic attention during the session. As a result of the consideration you have given to this most important subject, an act has been passed which considerably extends and improves the provisions made for pensions in respect of disabilities and deaths connected with the war, also an act reviving the beneficial provisions of the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act, and an act affording further material relief to soldier settlers.

The amalgamation of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and the Department of Health into one department to be known as the Department of Pensions and National Health accords with a natural evolution and is a step which should serve to promote efficiency and economy in administration.

The general subject of immigration, including the work of the Department of Immigration and Colonization, has received careful study throughout the session by the committee on agriculture and colonization. After months of inquiry into the many phases, both national and international of this important and intricate problem, the committee has reported its conclusions and recommendations, and the report has been adopted.

The extensive and important recommendations of the commission recently appointed to investigate all phases of the fishing industry of the maritime provinces, the Magdalen islands, and the coastal portion of the province of Quebec, have been met in part, and will continue to receive the attention of my advisers.

The report of the National Advisory Committee on the St. Lawrence Waterway project together with the views expressed thereon by the government of the United States in an exchange of correspondence, which was submitted to parliament at the present session, will continue to receive careful consideration. In this connection, provision has been made for referring to the courts certain questions as to federal and provincial jurisdiction with respect to navigation and water-powers.

The offer of assistance in the formation of civil flying clubs has met with a wide-spread response. Flying training has already been started by clubs both in eastern and western Canada. The construction of the airship mooring tower at St. Hubert aerodrome, near Montreal, is being pressed with energy.

The special provision made for the establishment of national research laboratories should greatly facilitate industrial research and prove an aid to the more thorough utilization of our natural resources.

The provision made by the amendments to the Federal District Commission Act, with a view to commemorating the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation, will serve materially to enhance the position of Ottawa as the capital of the Dominion.

The appointment by His Majesty's government in Great Britain of a high commissioner to represent its interests in Canada has been received with much satisfaction.

The appropriations of this session will enable steps to be taken shortly to establish Canadian legations in France and Japan. It is gratifying to know that the arrangements recently made for the further restriction of immigration from Japan, combined with the exchange of ministers between Japan and Canada, give promise of affording a satisfactory solution of this long standing question.

The Canadian government has learned with deep interest of the proposals which the Government of the United States, following extended discussions with the Government of France, has advanced for the renunciation of war, and, in accord with His Majesty's other governments, has accepted the invitation of the United States to participate in the signature of a multilateral pact directed to this end and which it is earnestly hoped will materially strengthen the cause of peace throughout the world.

Members of the House of Commons.

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

Abundant evidence surrounds us of the increasing prosperity of our country. For this and other blessings I join with you in humble gratitude to Divine Providence.

This concluded the second session of the sixteenth parliament.
