POETRY.

In the Night Season.

You are face to face with trouble,
And the skies are dark and gray;
You hardly know which way to turn,
You are almost dazed, you say,
And at night you wake to wonder,
What the next day's news will bring;
Your pillow is brushed by phantom care,
With a grim and ghastly wing.

You are face to face with trouble,
A child has gone astray;
A ship is wrecked on the bitter sea,
There's a note you cannot pay,
Your right hand is feeble,
Your sight is growing blind;
Perhaps a friend is cold and stern,
Who was ever warm and kind.

You are face to face with trouble,
No wonder you cannot sleep;
But stay,—and think of the promise,
The Lord will surely keep.
And lead you out of the snare,
And into the pasture land;
You have only to keep straight onward,
Holding the dear Lord's hand.

Face to face with trouble,
And did you forget to look,
As the good old father taught you,
For help in the dear old book?
You have heard the tempter whisper;
And you have no heart to pray;
And God had dropped from your scheme
Of life.

Oh! for many a day!
Then, face to face with trouble;
It is thus he calls you back,
From the land of death and famine,
To the land that has no lack.
You would not hear in the sunshine,
You hear in the midnight gloom;
Behold his tapers kindle,
Like stars in the quiet room.

Oh! face to face with trouble,
Friend, I have often staid,
To learn that pain hath sweetness,
To know that God is good.
Arise and meet the daylight;
Be strong and do your best;
With an honest heart and a childlike
faith,
That God will do the rest.

SELECT STORY.

GILEAD.

BY ISABEL GORDON.

"You may ride home with me if you wish," said the doctor kindly. "If you live in Fokkie's Hollow, it's a good ten miles from here, too far for an old man like you to walk."

"Thank you, sir," said Mather Pinyney. "If you'll just wait till I go in an' take a last look at Gilead, I'll be obliged. You see it's fifty year come June since I've seen him."

"Don't hurry," said the doctor, "I'll wait."

In a few minutes Mather came good-by to the house after a tearful good-by to an old woman.

It was a lovely morning early in May. Rain had fallen through the night, laying the dust and freshening all things.

"It don't seem jist the sort o' mornin' for a man to die, does it doctor? An' yet to-morrow it'll be kind o' bright as the old graveyard. There'll be posies out there by now, an' our lot's hedged in with them laylocks."

"Were you related to Gilead Pinyney?" asked the doctor.

"Yes," answered the old man tremulously. "I'm Gilead's brother."

"I thought you said you hadn't seen him for fifty year. You've been out of this part of the country perhaps?"

"No, my home's been in Tabor all my life. For fifty year I've stopp'd down there in the Holler, an' Gilead he's liv'd there on the old homestead just about as long. I'll tell you the hull story, doctor; 'tain't such a lengthy one, though it's stretch'd out over them fifty year."

"I was born in the old house back yonder. There was Gilead, an' mother, an' Zoe, an' me. Father died when I were't no higher'n that bit o' poplar tree. Gilead was a pecked little chap, an' Zoe weren't much more'n a baby, so mother had her hands full raisin' us, with nothin' only what the old place grow'd. Land! as I set there through the night holdin' Gilead's hands, which kep' a growin' colder'n a colder, how the old times come back to me! T'was so still an' sort o' lonesome, waitin' for death to come,—an' then, as I looked back on all them year, an' thought o' how things had gone, 't seem'd to me as if nothin' could ever make up for the wrong we'd done each other. No wishin', or prayin', or forgivin' could ever make up for the wrong we'd done each other. No wishin', or prayin', or forgivin' could ever help. It'll stay so till Gilead an' me meet again, when it'll be told out loud an' judged accordingly afore the Lord who knows all."

"Wal, Zoe was as bright an' hearty a gal as you'd see any place; but Gilead—he was allus kind o' sober, an' fonder o' book-larnin' than o' workin'. I guess it was nat'ral to him. He went to school till he was eighteen, an' then he got to fussin' about goin' to college,—was fairly possess'd go. One winter he taught school, meanin' to earn money enough to study a term in New York, but some way he didn't save it; an' when spring come he was more set'n ever about goin'.

"In them days there—'t was a little bit o' a place right by here, where Deacon Pease liv'd. It's a sort o' wilderness lookin' now, but there's the chimney o' the old house an' standin' yet, an' that there thick o' laylocks grew all round the gate o' the old front yard. The Deacon had just one gal—Naomi—an' pretty—she was that sweet an' pretty an' wholesome-lookin' that it did your eyes good to look at her. She an' I'd allus know'd each other, an' all along ever since we'd trudged back an' forth to school together, I'd kind o' set my heart on some time marryin' her. So I started to save, an' kep' a growin'—but slow, 'cause every cent was need'd sore in them days, but what with workin' nights, an' raisin' a calf, an' a pig or two, an' goin' without many a thing, I got a hundred an' twenty dollars together, which in them times was consid'ble. One night, down by that very clump o' laylocks,—fifty-five year ago this May, I spoke to Naomi about it, an' she said in he'shy sort o' way that she'd allus lik'd me, an' would wait as long as I wanted her. So I told 'em all about it at home, an' mother was glad for my sake; said she couldn't wish me a better wif'n Naomi."

"As the winter wore on, Gilead fretted consid'ble, growin' more'n pecked every day, frettin' 'cause he couldn't have the books he wanted to go to college. At last we'd to have the doctor see him, who said he'd be down in a declair if he couldn't go at the work he was bankerin' after an' quit worryin'."

"Mother an' me set that evenin' talkin' it over for hours an' hours. More'n one big log blazed up, lightin' the little old kitchen, an' then fell in ashes, afore we grew still; an' every once in a while Gilead's ha-k'n' cough would come from the cast room, an' mother'd sob hard but quiet,—for Gilead was the very pride o' her heart."

"That night I resolv'd out that he should have my savin's to go to college; an' Naomi an' me could wait a bit longer. I told him so next mornin', an' he laid his head on the table, sobbin' as hard as mother had done, with that short little cough coming all the time; but he wouldn't take the money, said he'd never touch it, an' spoil all my life."

"He held out as obstinate's any mule about it, but at last he started, for I got our doctor to send his fee to the college, an' then when he was paid he had to follow it. I carried him to meet the stage, twelve miles off; an' I won't never forget the look on his thin face, with his blue eyes sort o' wet, as he held both my hands an' thanked me. Then, when we heard the rattle o' the old stage comin' down the mountain, his last words was, 'Mather, I can't tell you what this'll be for me, but you won't ever be sorry!'

"That night I told the hull story to Naomi, an' she cried some, with her head on my shoulder,—for her life wa'n't none too easy. The deacon was set, an' strict, an' close, an' 'bout as sociable's a stun fence. She had to work hard, an' 'twas lone-ome'n' the grave out there; but after all she give in that I'd done best, an' that we could wait a while longer, bein' both young."

"Mother, an' Zoe, an' me had more'n ever to do in them days, an' every once in a while somethin' had to be sent to Gilead,—for livin' cost in New York even then. Many a long cheery letter came from him, tellin' how he'd lost his cough, an' was studyin' law, an' gettin' on so well, that soon he could buy a big farm for Naomi an' me an' send Zoe to a fine school, an' that mother wouldn't have to work hard all her days. So a year passed, but a dollar and ten cents was all I had saved for money was scarce, an' everythin' dear."

"In the spring, Gilead come home, an' changed—so you'd hardly have know'd him. Naomi laugh'd, an' said he was city'd; but 'twan't that.

He was kind o' impatient o' our slow country ways, though he tried not to show it; an' I know he thought home poorer'n shabbin' ever—an' it fretted him; he talked different, and dressed different, an' acted different; 'twan't the same old Gilead as went away; though they said he was powerful smart, an' learnin' fast, an' makin' his way already in the big city."

"He brought home a hull trunkful o' books, an' did sights o' study'n that summer, out the long days in the woods or fields with his books an' papers; so I didn't see much o' him, for I'd hired to a farmer a good ways off, an' the walk home mornin' an' evenin' took most o' my time. Months passed when I'd only see Naomi Sunday—but every time I see'd her, she seem'd to me sweeter'n prettier'n ever. Gilead an' she grew great friends them days. He'd loan her books, or go over there to talk to the deacon, an' I used to think how good 'twas o' him to try and make her life some brighter."

"Late in the fall, when days began to grow kind o' short an' dreary, an' everythin' seem'd more lonesome, Gilead went back to the city; he'd some examinat'ions to pass, an' study'n to do, for he calculated openin' an office in New York when he got through."

"Somehow or nother it seem'd as if Naomi an' me kinder drew apart that winter, an' yet I couldn't tell how. We hadn't no quarrel; she was as sweet an' lovely'n ever, an' as gentle; but I miss'd the old kindness an' sympathin' ways that used to be such a comfort to me. My heart grew sore enough, to think I couldn't take her to a home; but I know the deacon wouldn't for one minute think o' lettin' her marry a man who had just three dollars to his name. Besides, I hated to have her come to me an' be slav'in' to death from mornin' till night,—though the Lord only knows how I wanted her. That winter was the hardest I've any mind o'. We were snowed up most o' the time, everythin' froze, an' we lost about all our sheep; so when spring come we was poorer'n ever."

"Jest sech a mornin' this is, Gilead come home agin to stay all summer, an' git ready for his lawyerin' work in New York the comin' winter. One Sunday night, when 'twas as sweet an' still as ever a June night was, Naomi an' me went walkin' in the pine woods. Then I spoke to her about gettin' married in the fall, an' facin' poverty together, which wouldn't be no harder'n this waitin' an' waitin' from year to year; an' with such love as ours, life couldn't be so very lonesome. While I was talkin' she was right 'longside o' me, an' I was goin' to take her in my arms; but she pushed me away, an' cried in a hoarse, strained kind o' voice:

"Don't touch me, Mather Pinyney for God's sake—don't—for I can't bear it. I ain't good enough for you to love an' true no more. I ain't with your trust honest heart, an' I hate myself a thousan' times more'n you ever can."

"With that she slipped down all o' a heap, on a bank green with partridge berry vines, an' leaned her head up agin a tree, moanin' an' cryin' as if her heart would break. I thought, then she was out o' her head, an' I was most distract'd as I kneel'd by her. But not a word would she let me say; then all of a sudden she burst out with the hull story."

School Premises.

[The following essay was written by Miss Bessie J. Douglas, at the Normal School, and received the Governor-General's bronze medal.]

We often ask the question, "How can we cultivate the habit of regular attendance at school, without using compulsory means?" I have noticed that the first suggestion in answer to this question, is always or nearly always "make the school room and surroundings attractive." Children are naturally bright and cheerful, and delight in all that is beautiful. How desirable then that we as teachers should do all in our power to make their young lives bright and happy.

We can imagine the martyrdom to which a child is subjected, when he is shut up for the best part of a bright sunny day, in a close, ill-ventilated school room, with nothing to cheer him but the thought that school will soon be dismissed, and he may soon leave the dusty school room and run in the field or garden, enjoying the birds, flowers, and the sunshine. Why does he like the field, the wood, the garden, or his mother's sitting room so much better than the school room? He loves these better because he finds here no monotony. He feels that he is, as it were, in a different atmosphere, where he can breathe the pure air, and enjoy the beauty of art and nature. I do not say that the child realizes all this. If he were asked why he preferred playing in mama's room, or romping in the garden to being in school, he no doubt would say, "Oh I don't know, I hate that old school house." Should we wonder then that we so often hear a teacher say, "Oh, these tiresome children, it is impossible to keep them still" or, "why do these children not attend more regularly?" We give the old answer, "make the school premises attractive." The question now arises, "how can we make the school premises attractive?" In the first place the teacher will find that if it is once begun, the work does not wholly depend on her; though the result depends nearly wholly on the tact and good judgement of the teacher. Children are always ready to help when the work is rightly begun. I shall endeavor to illustrate this fact by a picture which is formed in my mind of the old school house at home.

A large dilapidated school room with no other ornament than an old rusty stove, the ball frame, a map of Nova Scotia, and one of North America. It is scrubbing day, we are all assembled, teacher and pupils, some of whom are more a hindrance than a help. When a certain amount of last winter's filth had been disposed of and our school room begins to wear a brighter aspect, a suggestion is made. Wouldn't an evergreen wreath improve the appearance of that blackboard. No sooner said than a host of little voices are saying, "I'll go teacher and gather some vines; willing hands make quick work and the old blackboard has undergone a change for the better in a short time."

We now notice that some other articles are not quite in keeping with our pretty decorations. A little boy is sent to the nearest shop to buy a cake of stove polish and in a short time our old stove is nowhere to be seen, in its place is a beautifully polished one. The children now say, I like to go to school—everything is pretty there now, and we are going to have an Arbour Day soon and we are going to plant some trees; I am going to name mine after papa and I must attend every day to see that my tree is properly taken care of. This shows us how the interest of children can be aroused. We can also show various ways in which the mind may be cultivated by planting a few trees and helping to make the school room the cheerful place which it should be.

What child does not delight in a picture or a flower, the botany lesson is always looked forward to with pleasure. How delightful to have our own plants in the school room where the children may watch their progress and become as familiar with their plan of growth as they are with their own names. Pictures in addition to being a thing of beauty to be admired by children, furnish excellent subjects for language lessons. If the children once understand that the teacher is trying to make school life as bright and happy as possible they will soon follow her example and delight in bringing some new plant, picture, or other ornament, to the school room, and they should be encouraged in making suggestions regarding the improvement of school grounds. Children should also be trained to take pride in keeping the school room as free from litter of all kinds as possible. Thus in various ways children are taught habits of neatness, cleanliness and good taste, and a love for the beautiful is cultivated.

The teacher should always bear in mind that ornamentation, cleanliness, neatness and good taste, not only secure good order, attention, and the cultivation of good habits, but is also the condition of the general character of the school. Children also soon learn that they are not in keeping with the surroundings if they appear at school with unwashed hands or faces or in slovenly attire. How important then that the teachers should realize her responsibility, as the habits formed in childhood generally become fixed as the child advances in years. The teacher is thus aiding in forming the child's character for better or for worse.

Why not make school days happy days, days on which children can look back when grown to be men and women and say "Oh my happy school days and my dear teachers."

A great deal more might be said in reference to the way in which children who are excellent imitators introduce sunshine and happiness into homes which were before as dull and dreary as the school-room described. We also see the teachers' influence for good or bad going on, even after she has quitted her narrow sphere on earth and gone to her reward in Heaven.

God a Prohibitionist.

At the Anglican Synod recently held in Montreal, in the course of the discussion on the report of the Church of England Temperance Society, Rev. G. Osborn Troop, speaking against prohibition, remarked that Gilead was not a prohibitionist. Dean Carmichael made an impassioned speech in favor of prohibition. "I have been 30 years in the ministry," he said, "during all my labors and plans and thought, I have been pursued by this sin of the cursed drink; through all the years I have had to deal with the cursed drink, and to-day the cursed drink stares me in the face. (Applause.) I never appeared upon a prohibition platform, I have never made a prohibition speech, but if voting papers were placed in my hands to-day and I were asked to vote 'yes' or 'no' upon this question—(here the dean paused, raised his arms, and then spoke amid the most impressive silence) "for the sake of the church, for the sake of souls, for the sake of happiness of the home, I would vote 'yes' and thank God for it. (Loud, long-continued applause.) A new race of men must teach me that God is not a prohibitionist." (Loud applause.)

Revising Voters Lists.

As perhaps is generally known the Revision of the Voters List for Federal Elections is now in progress in this County, and we wish to impress upon all those entitled to registration the necessity of having their names placed upon the Lists. The law contemplates the enfranchisement of all persons who are residents of the County, and it rests entirely with the people themselves whether or not they will have their names registered. There are nine different kinds of qualifications, the following four of which will probably include all persons in this County who are entitled to registration, viz: 1. Owner of Real Estate in the Town of Kentville of $200, and elsewhere in the County of $150. 2. The Tenant for one year last past of Real Estate in the County valued at least $150. 3. Income of $300 per year, and applicant must have resided in Canada for one year last past, during which time he has been in the receipt of an Income as above from his earnings, investments, etc. 4. Owner's Son. The applicant must be the son, grandson or stepson of an owner of Real Property, and must have resided with his father or mother at least six months during the past year, provided that the owner has owned property to qualify himself and the son or sons applying; allowing $150 first to the owner, and then to the sons in the order of their seniority. Absence from school is considered as residence with the owner for the purpose hereof. Any person whose name was not on the last year's list may have his name placed thereon by sending a proper application to F. A. Masters, Esq. These applications will be received up to the 31st inst, after which the Lists will be printed and published. Both political parties have had agents through the County getting names on the Lists of those qualified to vote, but some may have been missed, and it is desirable that not a name of any person qualified should be left off. It will be their own fault if they are left. Now is the time to have your names on the Lists.

Small Fruits.

Year by year the growing of small fruits appears to steadily increase, and those who first embarked in this branch of agriculture have been reaping the benefit of good prices and an increasing market. This year the strawberry crop is said to have been above the average, and judging from the reports of the product of individual growers an immense amount must have been grown in this county. Still the demand has been greater than the supply, and even in our local markets there has been a quick sale for all the fruit offered. This shows that the demand is increasing and that there is still room for the cultivation of the strawberry to be increased in our valley. That the business is a profitable one has already been simply proved, and we believe there is yet a good opportunity for many others to engage in the business and make money without interfering in any way with those who are already engaged in it. Beside the strawberry other small fruits are being grown in large quantities in this valley with large profit. With the introduction of a canning establishment in the valley the demand for small fruit is bound to increase, and the time is not far away when the Annapolis Valley will be as much noted for the growth of small fruit as it is now noted the world over for the growth of apples.

Mr. Allison's Presidency.

The regents of Mt. Allison University have by a unanimous vote invited Dr. David Allison, superintendent of education in this Province, to accept the position of president of that institution. Dr. Allison was president of Mt. Allison University from 1869 to 1877, when he resigned to assume control of the department of education in Nova Scotia. We have no doubt but that the Methodists of the Maritime Provinces would be gratified if Dr. Allison should accept the proffered presidency, but we trust that he will prefer to retain his present office which he has held for fourteen years, and in attending to the duties of which he has given general satisfaction. His retirement at the present time would be Mt. Allison's gain, it is true, but it would prove a very serious loss to the education department in Nova Scotia.

A correspondent to the Hants Journal, signing T. B. S., explains that the large ships referred to in another column were of a very different class from the Canada and the W. D. Lawrence, being flat-bottomed and almost as wide at the ends as in the middle. They were a kind of ocean sloop, and an experiment were complete failures, and being lost on their first voyage.

The Good Templars.

The grand lodge of Nova Scotia, I. O. G. T., met in 25th annual session at Acadia Mines on Tuesday evening, 7th inst., Wm Smith, of New Glasgow, G. C. T., presiding. After the usual opening ceremonies and reception of the report of the credential committee the grand lodge adjourned to attend a reception in St. Bridget's hall, which building was filled to overflowing. Addresses of welcome were delivered by S. G. A. Morrison, chairman; Rev. J. Tweedie, R. G. Leckie, manager; Mr. Ruggles and C. W. Tatten, on behalf of the citizens, the churches, the industries, the educational institutions and the good templars of Acadia Mines respectively. Responses were made by A. B. Fletcher, Rev. A. G. Jones, Edward Fullton, J. J. Hingle, A. S. Wolfe and Rev. A. G. Lane. Excellent music was furnished by the choir of Acadia Lodge. The grand lodge resumed Wednesday morning and conferred the grand lodge degree on a large number of applicants. The usual session committees were appointed. The reports of the following officers were read: G. C. Templar, G. Secretary, G. Treasurer, G. Supt., J. T. delegates to R. W. G. L.; also reports of the executive committee and agency committee. The reports showed the order to be in a healthy condition, with a fair increase in membership and the grand lodge clear of debt. At the afternoon session the following officers were elected: G. T. C.—Wm. Smith, re-elected, G. C. O.—A. S. Wolfe, G. V. T.—Mrs C. W. Totten, G. Secy.—J. B. Black, re-elected, G. Treas.—Mrs C. Dickie, G. Supt.—J. T.—W. O. Croighton. The salary of the grand secretary was fixed at $250. Wolfville was selected as the next place of meeting.

Kentville News.

Mr Alfred Jordan has removed his harness rooms across Main street next to the Porter House. He has now sufficient room for himself and those in his employ. P. O. Inspector McDonald was in Kentville on Tuesday last. Mr A. S. Hunt, of the Hospital for the Insane, Halifax, and his brother, Dr Lewis Hunt, were at the Kentville Hotel this week. Major of Marine Art, Wm. P. Wright, of H. M. S. Bellerophon, is spending a few days in town. Carpenters are now at work enlarging the office of Messrs Webster & Robinson. A room is to be put on the north side and another story added to the building. The old fence in front of the Court House has been torn down and a new board one is being put up in its place. This will be quite an improvement in the looks of that part of the town. The work of excavation for the new chapel has now begun in earnest and is being rapidly pushed since the first of the week. The new site is a few feet east of the old one. A handsome chapel will soon be occupying the place of the old one. The hand was out last night and played at the station after the arrival of the evening train with the new passenger car. The car itself is magnificently fitted up. It was built by J. Harris, of St John, and named the Blower de Luc. Mrs McRae, wife of the late David McRae, of Canada, has purchased a house and lot from Dr Webster and will move there in the autumn. Mr Clifford Jones and Miss Millie McLean of next year's Junior class, and Miss Ette Cook, of next year's Sophomore class at Acadia and residents of Wolfville, are passing examinations for licenses here this week. The Annapolis Valley is to be visited by a delegation of New England newspaper men as soon as the Missing Link is formally opened by the Dominion Government, on invitation of the Yarmouth Steamship Co., the Western Counties, Windsor & Annapolis, Nova Scotia Central and Cornwallis Valley railways. The party will probably number about twenty-five, and will be in charge of Thomas F. Anderson, of the Boston Globe, press agent of the Yarmouth Steamship Co. A visit from these gentlemen will tend to do much good, and bring the many points of our country and the beautiful scenery of interest beyond the American people. It is difficult to get the precise proceedings before the Investigating Committee at Ottawa. The city papers, who get their information direct have their reports colored according to their respective party views, as if the matters involved were more important as to the direct bearing upon party than as affecting the fair fame of the Government of Canada, irrespective of party. The true patriot wish must be that our Government and its members shall come out from the investigation with unimpaired reputation while desiring that all wrong doing shall be exposed. Recent statistics show an enormous development of the frozen meat trade between New Zealand and England. In 1882 the number of sheep exported to England was only 8,839. In 1890 the number had risen to 1,629,247. The transit charges now amount to only 1 1/2c per pound, and it is probable they will soon be reduced to the even penny. The national rifle association opened its annual meeting at Biely on the 13th. There was a marked decrease in the attendance noticeable since the meetings have been transferred from Wimbledon. The Canadians won the match against Cambridge by 28 points.

The Best Time to Cut Hay.

Experiments carried on at the various farms connected with the Dominion Experimental Stations go to show that the best time to cut grasses most commonly grown for producing hay, is when they are in full flower and before the seed is well formed. The nutritive value of hay lies in its ratio of digestible albuminoids on the one hand and that of fat, fibre and carbo-hydrates on the other. In the case of timothy grass which is the best known and most grown of all our grasses that go to make hay, the analysis made of grass in different stages of growth emphatically points to the advisability of cutting it while in blossom. In one ton of timothy hay cut when in bloom there is 42.01 lbs of albuminoids, 7.39 of fat, 69.55 of fibre, 109.48 of carbo-hydrates. In one ton cut after the seed had formed there was 30.32 lbs of albuminoids, 5.13 of fat, 113.71 of fibre, 231.09 of carbo-hydrates. In fact the food value of the early cut hay was much greater than the other. The early cut grass showed 83.58 per cent. water to 16.42 per cent. dry matter, the later cut 73.55 water to 26.45 dry matter. Hence it would take a little more time to cure the early cut grass before being ready for the barn or stack. Larger Ships. A correspondent of the Toronto Empire who writes from Brantford, Ont., takes exception to the statement that the Canada and the W. D. Lawrence were the largest ships ever built in Canada. He says:—"It will interest your readers to learn that on Isle Orleans, near Quebec, was built in 1817 the four-masted timber ship Columba, 300 feet long, 50 feet beam and 30 feet hold or depth, with a measurement of 4,000 tons which carried to London an immense cargo of timber and deals. She was followed by a still larger ship called The Baron of Renfrew. Mr Charles Wood, a famous ship-builder from Port Glasgow, on the Clyde, was the constructor, for a company in London. The arrival of the Columba in the Thames was one of the wonders of the period, and the Duke of Clarence, lord high admiral (afterwards William the IV) with a distinguished company of 100 guests, was entertained in the cabin of the ship, the father of the writer presiding upon the occasion. Both ships were unfortunately lost, the Columba on her return voyage to Quebec, and the Baron of Renfrew on Goodwin sands, the crews of 100 or more each being happily saved. The Congregational Union and the "Bell". History repeats itself. In an old phrase but a true one. Fourteen years ago the Bell was launched at Kingsport. At the time the Congregational Union was in session there. And now it seems as if the Bell had come home after her wanderings to attend the Union of this year, and witness those blessings bestowed on the Canada, which were once bestowed on her. At the Union fourteen years ago, the captain of the Bell invited the brethren to hold divine service on board the ship, and those prayers were offered for the success of the barque, and those prayers most certainly have been answered for she has been fortunate from the start. The captain of the Canada, Mr Munroe, thought it would be well to follow his predecessor's example. On Tuesday evening the closing meeting of the Union was held on board the ship. There was a large attendance, and the workmen were heard to say "it was a fine meeting." Mr Burgess was unavoidably absent, but he had instructed the captain to make everything pleasant and comfortable, and he did so. May the Canada's life be as successful as the Bell's.—Canning Gazette.

Ladies' Bazar.

Summer Clearance Sale of Stamped Linen Goods, Tray and Carving Cloths, Lunch Cloths, Doilies, Toilet Sets, and cheap for cash, Ladies' and Misses Hygienic Waists, White Wear, Corsets, Dress Shields—warranted. M. A. Woodworth, Webster St., - - Kentville, N. S. Agent for McCall's Bazar Patterns. The Age of Patent Medicine. There are a great many preparations on the market designed to cure or alleviate the various ills to which the human flesh is heir. Some are good, positive blessings to humanity; others are of doubtful benefit. A good medicine will if given a fair trial, accomplish the work for which it was intended. It will save a visit from the doctor, and more than that it may save life as it can always be kept on hand to be used upon the appearance of the first symptom. One does not want to call a doctor until the case becomes really serious, and with delay on the part of the patient, and delay on the part of the doctor, the case may get beyond recovery. It is never safe to neglect even the mildest symptoms. A slight cold may develop into pneumonia, or a deeply seated cough that may lead to consumption. A disordered state of the stomach or liver or impure blood not only causes feelings of lassitude and weariness, but leaves the individual in a weakened condition and a ready prey to the deadly "grip" or any other epidemic disease. The number of remedies that need to be kept constantly on hand for cases of emergency is small. There is one which has lately been introduced in this vicinity which seems to be rapidly taking the place of all others as a liniment and pain killer. We refer to Seay's East India Liniment. This liniment is not suitable for putting onto open sores, but whenever a liniment is required to bathe the seat of an ache or pain or bruise, this seems to be just the thing. Bad cases of sore throat are cured in a night, while pain in the stomach or bowels are instantly relieved by its use. For dysentery or diarrhoea it is said to be a sure cure, and indeed is regarded in the East as a specific for cholera in any form.

Weston.

The Cheese factory is doing a good business under the efficient management of C. E. Sanford, Esq., who has had this work in charge for the past 21 years. A number of tourists are visiting here. Among them we see the familiar faces of our old friends, Mr Holmes from Halifax, Misses Curry, Woodworth and Strong from Boston, and Charlie Sanford, a law student from St John. Mr Isaac Clowery, from Fairview, has bought and moved onto the Jno. Melanson farm. Mr C. is an enterprising and well to do farmer and receives a hearty welcome to his new home. Haying, although somewhat backward, is getting well under way and promises an average crop. Oats and other grains are looking well. Potatoes never looked better, but a hard tussle is being waged between the grower and the beetle. Small fruits are plentiful and the apple bids fair for an abundant yield. The past one has been a successful school term under the wise tuition of Miss O. B. Burgess, of Somerset. Our section never looked better nor were the people ever more hopeful and prosperous. Allen's Lung Balsam. Coughs, Colds, Croup. Allen's Lung Balsam was introduced to the public after its merits for the positive cure of such diseases had been fully tested. It excites expectation and causes the Lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus; changes the secretions and purifies the blood; breaks the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive organs; brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours' time, if not of too long standing. It contains no opium in any form and is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child. There is no real necessity for so many doses of consumption when Allen's Lung Balsam will prevent it if only taken in time. For Consumption, and all diseases that lead to it, such as Cough, neglected Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma and all diseases of the Lungs, ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM is the Great Modern Remedy. For Croup and Whooping Cough it is almost a specific. It is an old standard remedy, and sold universally at 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle. The 50-cent bottles are put out to answer the constant call for a Good and Low-Price COUGH CURE. If you have not tried the Balsam, call for a 25-cent bottle to test it.

Hot Weather Drinks.

Wear workers often do much damage to their system by drinking copiously of ice cold water, milk, or other beverages. A farm lad came in the other day from the harvest field and threw himself face downward and drank as much as he could from a cold spring. In three hours he was dead. Whenever over-heated, the hands and face should first be bathed and cold water poured upon the wrists. Then drink a very little at a time until you feel refreshed. Eight or ten minutes are none too long to sup a glass of water or milk.

Milk should be taken even slower than water, in order that the saliva may have a chance to mingle with it while swallowing. A glass of milk taken at one draught has a detrimental effect on the digestion, outside of the fact that it may chill the stomach. The ideal way is through a straw.

Water, with a addition of sugar, and the pure juice of the fruit in season, is the best drink for most people; like the old-fashioned, unfermented currant wine for instance. A tablespoonful of good raspberry vinegar to a glass of water is cool and refreshing. To cool, refresh and strengthen at the same time, we have found nothing equal to an egg phosphate. An egg is beaten, a spoonful of acid phosphate is added and both beaten again, and then add some soda water.

Whenever you drink, drink slowly.

A Good Investment.

Several winters ago a woman was coming out from some public building where the heavy doors swung back and made a groaning noise. A street urchin sprang to the rescue, and as he held open the door she said, "Thank you," and passed on. "Crazy! d'ye hear that?" said the boy to a companion standing near. "No; what?" "Why, that lady in seal'kin said 'thank ye' to the likes o' me."

Amused at the conversation, which she could not help over-hearing, the lady turned round and said to him, "It always pays to be polite, my boy; remember that."

Years passed away, and December last when doing her Christmas shopping this same woman received an unexpected courtesy from a clerk in Boston, which had caused her to remark to a friend who was with her: "What a comfort to be civilly treated once in a while—though I don't know that I blame the clerks for being rude during the holiday trade."

The young man's quick ear caught the words, and he said: "Pardon me, madam, but you gave me my first lesson in politeness."

She looked at him in amazement, while he related the little forgotten incident, and told her that that simple "thank you" awakened his first ambition to be something and applied for a situation as office boy in the establishment where he was now an honored and trusted clerk.

Only two words, dropped into the treasury of street conversation, but they yielded returns of a certain kind more satisfactory than investments in stocks and bonds.

Not to be Taken in Twice.

A young gentleman who lately left his father's home, having exhausted his credit belonging to his parent.—"Your son was killed this morning by a falling chimney. What shall we do with the remains?" In reply a cheque was sent for £20, with the request, "Bury them." The young gentleman pocketed the money and had an elaborate spree.

When in condition for writing he sent his father the following note.—"I have just learned that an infamous scoundrel named Barker has sent you a fictitious account of my death, and swindled you out of £20. He also borrowed £10 of me and left the colony. I write to inform you that I am still alive, and long to see you again. I am in somewhat reduced circumstances, and if you only could spare me £20 I would be ever so thankful for your favor. Give my love to all."

It Worked.

He was such a looking man as might easily be expected to be able to put up at a respectable second class hotel, and when he went into one last night down town the clerk met him pleasantly.

"Have you any quarters here you could accommodate a man with at this time of night?" he inquired, as he laid a paper bundle on the counter and reached for the register.

Don't.

Don't forget that you are a citizen of this town and of no other. Don't forget that you are expected at all times to speak well of the town.

Remember that you do not help the town by speaking ill of it.

Don't forget that Wolfville is the best town in Nova Scotia to live in, do business in, etc., etc.

Don't forget that all your influence is needed all of the time.

Don't tell outside people that this is the worst town in the world and that you are behind the times.

Don't tell all the bad things that you can think of, that the town is dead, etc., but tell its good points.

Don't forget that a true citizen ought to do the same by his town as he would by himself.

Don't be backward or afraid to recommend your town to anybody.

Remember that we have dry goods stores, grocery stores, clothing stores, etc., at which you ought to trade.

Remember that every cent you spend in the town helps it and every cent you spend out of the town hurts it.

Remember that if you don't help yourself nobody else will, and consider the town yourself.

Remember that the town has educated you and your children, and is ready to care for you when you are in want. What have you done for the town?

Women as Detectives.

An old detective announces as the result of long experience that women possess qualifications that fit them specially for detective work. "Men as a rule are not as close observers, and do not give what I call detective descriptions of people. I remember trying to catch a woman counterfeiter once who had been described to me by several men. I found half a dozen women who would answer to her description. Finally a woman who had seen her gave me a description with one strong detective point—the way she tilted up her hair—and on that description I very soon arrested the right woman. Women have peculiar observations in details, and are sure to notice and remember some small but definite point that men would overlook. It is the pleasant work for a woman, but she has detective instincts."

No Class in Dress Here.

The Canadian woman does not admit that anything is unseemly for her if she can raise the money to buy it. There is no such thing known in Canada as a class dress. Everybody dresses as well as she can, and the only difference distinguishable are those of expense and taste. This is radically different in other countries. Everyone has noticed the neat black uniform of the French and often of the English, saleswomen and cashiers in shops and restaurants. The dress is perfectly fitted and well made, and has the best of all styles, an admirable appropriateness. The Parisienne has her own special costume too, and the English maid, and it never occurs to her to be dissatisfied with her fit and comfortable dress.

Improving Their Figures.

Mothers ought to put corsets upon their young daughters for the first time and begin the process that will improve their figures (if should read the account published recently in a French medical journal of the experiments of a French physician. While travelling in India he procured a number of female monkeys, whose forms he explains were very similar to those of women, and enveloped them in a plaster of Paris jacket as near like an ordinary corset as possible. Then he gave them chloroform to see the effect of the chest stricture upon the respiration. Several of the monkeys died very quickly. All suffered seriously. In these days of dress reform, hygienic waist and the like, a trim figure is easily attainable without the strappy corset, like a coat of mail, which has been thought necessary.

Sir John's Repartee.

Col. Wylie, the father of the Canadian press, is an octogenarian. Although so low he can only at times speak so as to be understood, he was able recently to tell the following reminiscence: He met Sir John on the occasion of a press excursion some ten years ago, at Riviere au Loup. Sir John asked Col. Wylie how old he was.

The Colonel said: "I'm older than you, Sir John."

Sir John replied: "The nearer Heaven, then."

The Colonel said: "We'll, Sir John, if all the stories they tell about you are true, I am afraid you will never see Heaven."

A Desperate Chance.

A Russian exile relates how he once saved himself by a desperate rifice. A police official searched his house for compromising papers. There was in his possession a document the discovery of which meant serious danger to himself and his friends.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

It's flowery beds of fees that lawyers love to sleep on.

When you hear a woman declare that she married the best man that ever lived, it is pretty safe to assume that she is a widow.

Don't be discouraged about that eczema till you have given Ayer's Sarsaparilla a persistent trial. Six bottles of this medicine cured the complaint for George S. Thomas, of Ada, Ohio, when all other remedies failed to afford any relief.

"Excuse me," said Gus de Jay, "I was swamped in thought." "Your own thought?" asked Miss Sharpton. "Certainly." "Weren't you afraid of taking cold?"

The evils resulting from habitual coarseness are many and serious; but the use of harsh, drastic purgatives is quite as dangerous. In Ayer's Pills, however, the patient has a mild but effective, superior to all others, especially for family use.
