House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Speaker: The Honourable Roland Michener

Thursday, January 15, 1959

SECOND SESSION—TWENTY-FOURTH PARLIAMENT—OPENING

The parliament which had been prorogued on the sixth day of September, 1958, met this day at Ottawa for the dispatch of business.

The house met at three o'clock, the Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the secretary to the Governor General, announcing that His Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate chamber at three o'clock on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the session of the dominion parliament.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable house attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And the house being returned to the Commons chamber:

VACANCIES

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that during the recess I have received communications from members informing me that the following vacancies have occurred in the representation:

Of William V. Yacula, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Springfield, by decease.

Of Edward R. Lockyer, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Trinity, by decease.

Accordingly I have issued my warrants to the chief electoral officer to make out new writs of election for the said electoral districts, respectively.

NEW MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that during the recess the Clerk of the House has received from the chief electoral officer certificates of the election and return of the following members:

Of Mrs. Jean Casselman, for the electoral district of Grenville-Dundas.

Of Louis Fortin, Esquire, for the electoral district of Montmagny-L'Islet.

Of Joseph B. Slogan, Esquire, for the electoral district of Springfield.

Of Hon. Paul Hellyer, for the electoral district of Trinity.

NEW MEMBERS INTRODUCED

Mrs. Jean Casselman, member for the electoral district of Grenville-Dundas, introduced by Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker and Hon. W. Earl Rowe.

Louis Fortin, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Montmagny-L'Islet, introduced by Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker and Hon. Leon Balcer.

Joseph B. Slogan, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Springfield, introduced by the Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker and Hon. Gordon Churchill.

Hon. Paul Hellyer, member for the electoral district of Trinity, introduced by Hon. L. B. Pearson and Hon. Paul Martin.

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Speech from the Throne

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that when the house did attend His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both houses of parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I welcome you as you foregather to resume your parliamentary duties.

All Canadians look forward with the greatest pleasure to the forthcoming visit to Canada of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness, the Prince Philip, on the occasion of the official opening of the St. Lawrence seaway. It is particularly gratifying that Her Majesty also plans to visit all the provinces and the two territories in order to meet her Canadian subjects in many parts of our country.

Canada's close relations with the other countries of the commonwealth, and the sense of community of interest within this association of free nations itself, have been confirmed and vitalized by the recent visit of my Prime Minister to the commonwealth capitals of the United Kingdom, Pakistan, India, Ceylon, Malaya, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand. These consultations between heads of government provided an opportunity for an exchange of views on international questions, on the possibilities for expanding trade and on other problems of mutual concern.

Canadians recognize that the most pressing need of all nations is an enduring peace. My government will continue to work steadfastly and in a spirit of genuine co-operation towards the settlement of outstanding issues which threaten that peace.

My ministers are concerned over recent developments in the Berlin situation. They deplore the attempt by the Soviet union to abrogate unilaterally the interallied agreements relating to Berlin, and they believe that the freedom of West Berlin must be assured pending agreement on the establishment of a united and free Germany.

My ministers have been pleased to note that some advance has been made during the past year in the vital field of disarmament. The drafting of an agreement for the discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests is a hopeful beginning.

It is Canada's desire that the scientific achievements which now have made possible the penetration of outer space should be a blessing to all mankind. My government is convinced that international agreement must be reached without delay to ensure that outer space is used only for peaceful purposes with full co-operation among all nations.

In concert with its allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Canada has reaffirmed its determination to maintain and improve the power of the alliance as a deterrent against aggression. You will be asked to provide for maintaining the effective power of Canada's defence forces. The importance of the alliance was re-emphasized by the visit of my Prime Minister to the United Kingdom, France, West Germany and Italy. His consultations with the heads of government in those countries included trade and economic policies, as well as the more general questions confronting the alliance.

Discussions are taking place with the government of the United States to enable Canadian industry to share in the production of equipment being procured by the United States for joint defence purposes.

My ministers continue to recognize the necessity of providing economic assistance to underdeveloped nations. Approval will be sought for the appropriations needed for this purpose, so that Canada may play its full part in helping the emerging states of Asia and Africa, particularly those in the commonwealth.

My ministers expect that the increases which have been proposed in the resources of the international bank and the international monetary fund will be approved by the votes of the member countries and when that has occurred you will be asked to approve the necessary legislation to implement these important measures for improving the facilities for financing world trade and economic development.

In response to suggestions put forward by my government, a commonwealth trade and economic conference was held in Montreal last September. This meeting, one of the most important in the history of the commonwealth, was attended by ministers representing the self-governing nations of the commonwealth and the countries now looking forward to obtaining full sovereignty. A large measure of agreement was reached on trade and economic matters. This has led to far-reaching decisions on the part of the United Kingdom and other countries to restore convertibility of their currencies and to remove restrictions on imports.

My government has taken action to reduce unemployment by expediting national works programs, by programs undertaken in co-operation with the provinces, and by encouraging Canadians generally to undertake constructive activities particularly in the winter season. You will be asked to assist the municipalities of Canada in the financing of work on construction projects which would not otherwise have been undertaken during the winter months.

Certain amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act will be submitted to you.

My government welcomes the evidence of recovery from the recession and will continue to foster and assist this improvement. They believe that as recovery proceeds there will be increasing need for care to preserve the stability and purchasing power of our currency.

My government will continue in its economic policies to lay emphasis upon national development. My ministers believe that by the wise use of the resources with which nature has endowed this country, Canadians can achieve a continually rising standard of living. My government will therefore foster and encourage the proper development and use of these resources and the growth of efficient industry based upon them. Many projects for national development have already been put in hand; you will be asked to vote the supply necessary to continue these projects and to initiate others.

Additional legislation in the field of agriculture will be recommended. A measure will be laid before you to institute a system of crop insurance in co-operation with such provinces as so desire. You will also be invited to make a comprehensive review and revision of the legislation concerning farm credit, in order that credit may be more effective in assisting in the development and maintenance of an efficient and prosperous agriculture.

You will be asked to enact a bill of rights which will make manifest the intent that fundamental rights and freedoms shall prevail and remain inviolate in all matters within the competence of parliament.

At the earliest opportunity you will be invited to authorize the establishment of a national energy board to ensure, so far as it lies within the jurisdiction of parliament, that Canada's energy resources are used effectively and prudently to the best advantage of Canadians.

My ministers have been gratified to see the all-time record in house construction which has been made possible by government loans under the National Housing Act. They will recommend to you further amendments to that act to continue this program and to encourage the flow of private funds into mortgages.

For the purpose of increasing the range and effectiveness of the guarantees provided for financing exports, you will be asked to make certain amendments to the Export Credits Insurance Act.

My government will place before you certain amendments to the laws respecting trade practices.

You will be asked to consider a bill containing numerous amendments to the Canada Shipping Act.

My government will request your approval of its participation in a contributory plan to provide medical benefits for civil servants pursuant to recommendations of the national joint council of the public service.

A comprehensive review of the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act will be proposed and amendments to ensure that veteran farmers also can take greater advantage of modern agricultural practices. Amendments to the Veterans Rehabilitation Act and the War Service Grants Act will also be recommended.

My government will recommend an amendment to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to extend for another year the increase made last year in the provincial share of personal income tax revenue.

My government proposes that the entire subject of financial relations between the dominion and the provinces shall receive continued active co-operative study. All provincial governments are being asked to agree to the use, for this purpose, of the machinery of the existing federal-provincial continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters working under the direction of a committee consisting of the Minister of Finance and all provincial treasurers.

My ministers will recommend to you action to alleviate the discriminatory effects of the recent horizontal increase in freight rates.

Recommendations for a number of changes in the Criminal Code will be placed before you including some to strengthen the provisions respecting obscene literature.

My ministers will propose to you measures to revise the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and to revise and consolidate the relevant pension provisions.

You will be asked to approve a statute to authorize the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers of the crown.

My government will put forward a resolution to establish a joint committee of both houses to review the Indian Act and the administration of Indian affairs.

A recommendation will be placed before you for a statute to continue on a permanent basis the supplementary pensions for retired civil servants, members of the armed services and of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that were provided on an interim basis by an appropriation last year.

My ministers will recommend an increase in the total funds that may be expended under the Trans-Canada Highway Act.

You will be asked to revise the Seeds Act, to approve and implement by statute an agreement with the province of New Brunswick concerning Indian lands, and to extend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act for a further three years.

You will also be asked to amend the Northwest Territories Act, the Public Lands Grants Act, the National Defence Act, the Defence Services Pension Act, the Broadcasting Act, the Public Servants Inventions Act and certain other statutes.

Members of the House of Commons:

You will be invited to establish a special committee of the house to review broadcasting policy and operations.

It will be proposed that the standing committee on privileges and elections review the elections act in preparation for subsequent legislation.

It will also be proposed that the question of ensuring the use of humane methods in the slaughtering of animals be referred to the standing committee on agriculture for consideration.

You will be asked to appropriate the sums required for carrying on the government of Canada during the next fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence bless you and guide you in your duties.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of His Excellency the Governor General to both houses of parliament be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the house.

Motion agreed to.

TRIBUTES TO DECEASED MEMBERS

THE LATE WILLIAM V. YACULA—THE LATE EDWARD R. LOCKYER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems that every succeeding session of parliament hon. members realize something of the shortness and uncertainty of life by reason of the fact that our ranks are thinned by death. Since prorogation two of our members have passed away, and it is of them that I wish to speak today.

First, in regard to the former hon. member for Springfield, William Val Yacula; some 50 years ago he was born in the Ukraine. He migrated to Canada, and in the short few years that were accorded to him he made his contribution to the building of our country. Indeed, he is one of a race which is making its contribution along with other races to the building of that unity which all of us desire. He received his early education in the primary schools of Manitoba, later attending the University of Manitoba, and his career extended from school teaching to business. In later years he served as a school trustee and with various other public institutions.

A kindly man, he enjoyed the affection and respect of all who knew him. He was in the house for only a short time, yet by reason of his breadth of vision, his knowledge of Canadian conditions—particularly those concerning the western provinces—and his desire to co-operate with other members, those of us who knew him were given to realize that in the years ahead he would have made a larger contribution to the affairs of our country. I know hon. members would wish to join with me in expressing sincere sympathy to Mrs. Yacula and the other members of the family, coupled with the hope that his record of service, the affection that he was able to engender and the realization that she and they have the affection of those who knew him will contribute to bringing comfort to her and to the family in their hours of sadness.

One other hon. member passed away during the interim. I refer to Edward R. Lockyer, the former hon. member for Trinity. While a businessman throughout his life, he belonged to that company who believe that it is necessary for those in business to interest themselves in the public service and make their contribution. He was a member of the Toronto board of education in 1957, and in 1958 he served as a member of the city of Toronto planning board. A socially minded person, he belonged to various clubs and fraternities and as a public minded citizen he at all times contributed freely to those objectives which constitute the warp and woof of civic public service.

He was here but a short time, and like Mr. Yacula made a contribution that boded well for the future. He engraved his personality upon the memories of those who had the honour to know him. His loss, too, is the loss of all of us in this chamber. I simply rise to express the sincere sympathy of the members of this house to the widow and surviving members of his family. To the public service these two men gave of their best. Their memories will not be forgotten.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is a melancholy and all too customary circumstance, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has stated, that we are called upon to interrupt the historic, impressive and indeed happy ceremonies of the opening of parliament by the tributes which we pay on this occasion to former colleagues who are no longer with us.

The Prime Minister has pointed out that Mr. Yacula was born in the Ukraine and as such was a representative of that racial stock and ancient nationality which has added so much colour and strength to the fabric of Canadian national life. He did not, as the Prime Minister has also stated, have the time to make the mark in this house that he had made in his own community, but we in this party join the Prime Minister and the members of his party in the tribute of sympathy and respect that he has paid to his memory.

Likewise we join in the tribute that has been paid to Mr. Edward Russell Lockyer, who was the member at his death for Trinity (Toronto), but who was born on Manitoulin island in the constituency which I have the honour to represent in this house. He was a man who had achieved business success and who put at the disposal of his country during world war II his business ability and business experience. I know if he had been spared to work and serve with us he also would have made his mark in the national service of his country.

So the members of our party join with the Prime Minister and other hon. members of the house in this tribute of respect and sympathy to the members of the families of these former members.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of the C.C.F. group I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in expressing our great regret at the passing of two former members of this house who although they had been here but a short time had already begun to make a noteworthy contribution to our proceedings.

I should like to express to Mrs. Yacula and her daughter our sincere sympathy, and say to them that we have esteem for the late Mr. Yacula. Born in the Ukraine, coming to Canada, fitting his life with the life of his neighbours, he came to the House of Commons to represent every citizen in his riding and to play his part as a member of the Canadian House of Commons. He established himself here as a really true Canadian.

I also wish to associate the members of this group with the tribute to the late Mr. Lockyer, the former hon. member for Trinity. This man in his private life undertook many works of a charitable nature that showed he had great concern for the underprivileged and handicapped of this nation. In service work in many organizations and in the educational field he played his part, helping to make life happier for those who were underprivileged or who sought to gain an education. On behalf of this group I express to Mrs. Lockyer and to her daughter our deepest sympathy at this great loss.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an order in council appointing the Hon. Donald Methuen Fleming, Minister of Finance, the Hon. Leon Balcer, Solicitor General, the Hon. George Clyde Nowlan, Minister of National Revenue, and the Hon. Ellen Louks Fairclough, Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of chapter 143 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, intituled: An Act respecting the House of Commons.

STANDING COMMITTEES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the standing committees of this house under standing order 65, the said committee to be composed of Messrs. Balcer, Green, Habel, Pallett and Peters.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the last session the deputy chairman of committees of the whole house was the hon. member for the electoral district of Spadina (Mr. Rea). I believe it is agreed that he performed his duties well and fairly. On that basis I move:

That Charles Rea, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Spadina, be appointed deputy chairman of committees of the whole house.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AFTERNOON SITTING ON FRIDAY, JANUARY 16

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances the motion we made that the Governor General's speech be discussed at the next sitting of the house would mean that we would commence tomorrow morning at 11 a.m. In view of the fact that tomorrow we do not intend to go further than to have the mover and the seconder make their speeches, I ask the consent of the house to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Green):

That when the house adjourns this day it shall stand adjourned until tomorrow at 2.30 p.m., and the provisions of section 1, standing order 2, shall be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this procedure is quite agreeable to us.

Motion agreed to.

PHOTOGRAPH TO BE TAKEN OF HOUSE IN SESSION

Mr. Speaker: Before I leave the chair may I ask the house for leave to have a photograph taken of the house in session tomorrow, Friday, immediately after the opening. This picture will be taken by the national film board photographers without special lights or any interruption of our proceedings. It will be available for public and private distribution. There is no photograph of this parliament, and I hope hon. members will be happy to agree to this procedure.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the house adjourned at 4.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, January 16, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ROYAL VISIT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF TOUR OF CANADA BY HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE PHILIP

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement concerning plans for the visit this coming summer of Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh. Since parliament last met plans have been progressing for a tour which will take Her Majesty to all ten provinces of Canada as well as to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. It has already been announced that Her Majesty and His Royal Highness will arrive at Torbay airport near St. John's, Newfoundland, on June 18, and that they will be here in Ottawa to celebrate our national birthday on July 1.

Next week a more complete outline of the Queen's itinerary will be made public. Suffice it to say at this time that there were certain principles that guided those in charge of the tour in making their plans. One of these is that elaborate state functions be kept to a minimum. It is hoped that Her Majesty and the Prince Philip will be able to see something more of Canada's newer industries, some of the mining areas and some of the parts of this country that are coming into prominence as national development and expansion plans mature. Visits to some of the outlying areas of the country will form a prominent part of the program.

The Queen of Canada will be in her Canadian realm for some six weeks, but, of course, the vast areas of Canada will make it impossible for her to visit as many places as she would like. However, there will be other visits in the future. The facilities of air transport will make it possible then for Her Majesty to see other parts of the country which cannot be included in this tour because of the limitations of time as well as transportation facilities. She will travel some 15,000 miles. The royal yacht Britannia will carry the royal party through the great lakes system, during the course of which Her Majesty will participate in the ceremonies marking the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway.

Next week, when the complete itinerary is available, it will be presented to the house so that hon. members generally will know the nature and scope of the journey she will take, as well as why particular areas are included on this occasion which did not, in the past form part of any of the royal tours.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, all members of the house will have heard with the greatest possible pleasure, as indeed the country will hear, the announcement the Prime Minister has just made regarding the visit of Her Majesty and the Duke of Edinburgh to our country. We will look forward to receiving the details of that visit in due course.

It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that Her Majesty and Her Majesty's consort will receive the warmest possible welcome in this country, especially in those outlying districts which she will now visit and which it had not been possible for members of the royal family to visit in the past. I note the Prime Minister's hope, and the intention of those who are responsible for the visit, to keep formal affairs to the irreducible minimum. This has been a hope and an ideal which has been expressed before every royal visit that has been made to Canada, and I hope perhaps on this occasion there will be more success in realizing it than has been the case in the past.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): On behalf of the C.C.F., Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with the announcement that has been made and the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, by saying we are exceedingly pleased that Her Majesty and His Royal Highness Prince Philip will be visiting our country this summer and will be present at the ceremonies opening the St. Lawrence seaway. We know that Canadians from coast to coast will welcome this announcement. We are pleased that, so far as may be possible, Her Majesty's subjects will be given every opportunity to participate in the celebrations that are contemplated. We hope that the health and convenience of Her Majesty may be kept in mind so that the functions will not be too tiring for her.

We are pleased that she is coming to Canada once again; and while no one in the House of Commons can set the date for prorogation of this session, I would express the hope that it might be possible for the Queen to prorogue this session of the House of Commons.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I be permitted to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the statement he has just made. Has the Prime Minister or the committee appointed for the royal visit yet decided where the official opening of the St. Lawrence seaway will take place?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the hon. member's question will receive an answer when the committee reports next week and the itinerary is brought before the house.

PUBLIC SERVICE

TABLING OF REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two copies in English of the report of the civil service commission of Canada entitled "Personnel Administration of the Public Service". You will recall that Mr. St. Laurent, the former prime minister, suggested that there be this investigation. Mr. Arnold Heeney as chairman of the commission and Miss R. E. Addison and Mr. Paul Pelletier as members undertook a study of the many complex problems in connection with civil service administration. They were also directed to make such recommendations as they deemed fit so that the legislation, which has to all intents and purposes been in effect since 1919 when introduced by Sir Robert Borden, could be brought up to date, removing anomalous sections, if there be such. In general they were asked to make such recommendations as would generally be beneficial in assuring and maintaining the capacity and ability to serve of the civil service. Whatever may be the views with regard to the recommendations made, I am sure that everyone in the house will want to pay tribute to the commission for the work it has done and for the long hours and the devoted attention given by the members of this commission to this very intricate subject.

I am also tabling two copies in mimeographed form of the French translation of the report. This French translation, however, does not contain the appendices shown in the printed copy in English. The printed copies in French containing the report and the appendices will be available from the queen's printer in about two weeks' time and will then be placed before the house. In view of the interest in this subject, however, I thought it well that the recommendations be made available to hon. members of this house. The appendices are merely an amplification in general of the principles and recommendations enunciated in the report. I should like to mention that copies of the report will be placed in the members' mail this afternoon.

FINANCE

"CANADIAN ECONOMIC OUTLOOK FOR 1958"—REQUEST FOR TABLING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister when he proposes to table, as promised, the report entitled "Canadian Economic Outlook for 1958"?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I seem to recall, Mr. Speaker, that an application or a motion was made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) at the last session, and through his actions this matter was relegated to a position that denied further discussion. At that time I undertook to make the report available. I find that there is now a motion on the order paper. When that motion comes before the house I hope the consideration asked for will receive the approval of the house.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I did not wish to interrupt the Prime Minister, but I rise on a question of privilege. The Prime Minister said that action of mine had prevented consideration. I put on the order paper a motion that was not debatable and I took the only course possible to make it debatable.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: A moment ago the Leader of the Opposition asked me a question respecting the "Canadian Economic Outlook for 1958". I find, sir, that the motions are not far enough in hand to enable my hon. friends to have that economic report for this debate.

I undertook on June 18, 1958 that it would be produced immediately after the year end, and again on August 5, that the report would be produced immediately after the end of the year. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) has given instructions that it be tabled today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REPORTED EXECUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to make any statement or comment on disturbing reports of a continuing number of executions in Cuba, and whether in view of Canada's recognition of this government an appropriate Canadian note in this connection is being considered.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as I understand it relates entirely to executions in Cuba, which I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia would not consider to be the responsibility of the minister. Questions should be directed to the public administration under the responsibility of the minister concerned.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest with great deference that since our Department of External Affairs considers Canada's relationships with all nations, when any action in any nation might endanger the cause of freedom as we understand it, I feel it is appropriate for the Canadian Prime Minister to make a statement on behalf of the Canadian government; and I must put forward this precedent, that the Prime Minister in an agreeable fashion during the course of the last session made his opinion and our opinion known about action in regard to Imre Nagy in another country. Therefore I feel that in the field of external affairs this is an appropriate matter for comment, and I might add that in today's newspapers a very high official of the United States state department has made a comment on this matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I realize the feelings that must be engendered in the hearts of peoples everywhere, but I will go no further than to say this. The government is following very closely the events in Cuba as the picture emerges from the various reports, some confused and others capable of a variety of interpretations. In considering the situation the government will have in mind the same deep concern for the respect of civil liberties and democratic ways that it has demonstrated in the past.

CANADA-U.S.—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEETING OF MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to make a statement to the house on the results of the meeting of the ministers of the Canadian and United States governments?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to do that at any time if it is the wish of the house. As my hon. friend is aware, a communique was issued at the completion of the meeting a week ago last Tuesday. I shall be glad to table that if it is the wish of my hon. friend and the house.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—SUGGESTED INTERVENTION OF MINISTER IN LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour a question. What action has he taken, either on his own or through his department, to settle the current dispute between radio and television producers in Montreal and the C.B.C.?

(Text):

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, since I was not prepared with my device for translation and since I did not know the hon. member for Laurier would ask me a question in French, I am going to take his question as notice and give an answer tomorrow.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, now that we have simultaneous translation in the house, and since the hon. minister is listening in at this moment may I be allowed to repeat my question?

Mr. Denis: Ask the hon. minister if he is ready.

Mr. Chevrier: If the hon. minister is ready, here is my question. What action has he taken, on his own account or through his department, to settle the current dispute between the radio and television producers in Montreal and the C.B.C.?

(Text):

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question I wish to state that I was requested by representatives of the producers to intervene in the dispute after this group of producers had gone out on strike in supporting their demands. On January 8 I received a request by telegram signed by Mr. Fernand Quirion, president of the producers association of Montreal, and by Mr. Jean Marchand, general secretary of the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour, stating that the C.B.C. had refused to recognize the producers association or to sign an agreement with it dealing with working conditions of producers, stating that the corporation had refused to bargain officially with the association and requesting my immediate intervention in this dispute.

Inquiries of the Ministry

On January 9 I wired in reply pointing out that there is a provision and a specific procedure established under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act whereby disputes relating to representation and bargaining rights may be disposed of by application to the Canada labour relations board. I pointed out in this telegram that it has not been customary nor is it contemplated by the act that the Minister of Labour should intervene in representational disputes in view of the provisions of the act.

I received a further wire from Mr. Marchand regretting my unwillingness to intervene in this dispute and suggesting that my refusal to intervene was tantamount to supporting the position of the C.B.C., and again urging my intervention. I wired Mr. Marchand in reply under date of January 12 as follows:

Reference your telegram January tenth the Department of Labour has taken no position nor given any advice to either the C.B.C. or the producers as to the status of the producers as employees under the act as this is a matter which in event of dispute can only be determined by reference to the Canada labour relations board. The department has however advised the producers and those interested on their behalf that the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act provides a specific procedure whereby a union claiming to represent a majority of employees for collective bargaining purposes may make application to the Canada labour relations board to establish the appropriateness of the bargaining unit and its authority to bargain for employees in such unit. The decision of the board is final. You are fully aware of the provisions of the act and I would assume that you have advised accordingly. I am always prepared to intervene in a dispute where I can be of service to the parties to assist in settlement but I am not in a position to intervene in representation disputes to resolve representation rights for collective bargaining purposes under the act.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, this reply fully explains the status and gives the reasons why it would not be proper for me to intervene in this dispute. There is very little I can add at this time, except to say that the producers association and the producers have resorted to strike action to resolve a dispute on employee status and bargaining rights in place of taking action to resolve these issues in the manner provided for in the act, namely by application and reference to the Canada labour relations board. In other words, these parties are seeking to short-cut or ignore the provisions of the legislation designed for the final disposition of disputes dealing with representation.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. minister for the answer he just gave me. I listened carefully to what he had to say, particularly when he quoted the telegram to which he had referred earlier.

[Mr. Starr.]

Of course, I am not entitled to make any comments; however I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question.

In view of the answer he just gave me, why did he not take action under section 56 of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act which authorizes him to do so on his own account, or on the request of the union, in order to settle this industrial dispute?

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to say that I have listened to the translations passing back and forth as a result of the introduction of this simultaneous translation system, and I must say it is operating exceptionally well. I did not rise to say that but I thought I should say it, in view of the fact that this is the first opportunity I have had to listen to the translation. The degree to which the translation follows the uttered word is really remarkable.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the supplementary question asked by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), may I point out that section 56 of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act provides for the appointment of a commissioner of inquiry into labour disputes and that means, sir, where there is a dispute between the employees and the employer on the basis of a collective agreement which deals with wages and other similar matters, upon which a decision has not been arrived at. This is not a dispute of that kind at all. It is a matter of representation that is in dispute. There is no working agreement. All those producers have been on individual contracts to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Nowlan, who is responsible to the house for the C.B.C.

Has the minister authorized the recall to work of C.B.C. producers and other employees, over the network of the corporation, at the very moment when the parties concerned were still negotiating in the C.B.C. building in Montreal?

(Text):

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the minister has taken no action whatsoever with respect to this strike. It is a matter of administration. All the negotiations are in the hands of the responsible officers of the corporation and the executive committee of the board of directors. I might say that, as the house well knows from the press, negotiations have been going on yesterday and today with some prospect of success.

As the Minister of Labour pointed out, this is a strike which is extremely hard to deal with because it is entirely illegal. There is nothing one can very well do about it. I think the corporation officers deserve a tremendous amount of credit—I refer to the president and the vice president—for having worked for two or three weeks, largely without sleep for the first ten days, in trying to bring the parties together on some reasonable basis. However, rationality apparently is one thing that has been somewhat lacking in the situation. I am hopeful that the negotiations now going on will be successful when they are concluded. I will certainly be bringing a full statement to the house. I think nothing more should be said at the moment.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for his little speech, but that was not my question. I was simply asking whether the minister had, in the circumstances just mentioned, authorized the recall to work of the producers, while at that time the parties concerned were still negotiating.

(Text):

Mr. Nowlan: All I can say is that if I did not give the right answer, the hon. member is talking too fast for the little instruments we have in our hands. Perhaps he should learn to speak more slowly, as should I. As I said before, the minister has given no instructions and has done nothing in connection with this matter except to get occasional reports from the president as to the conduct of negotiations.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED STATEMENT OF AIR MARSHAL SLEMON AT COLORADO SPRINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish the pleasure of directing a question to the Prime Minister. Before doing so, I wish to say that I am glad his translation device is working well. Mine is not working at all, because I have not one.

In view of Air Marshal Slemon's statement at Colorado Springs last November concerning defence force requirements, with respect to manned interceptors, being considered in some quarters as a challenge to government policy on the CF-105 Arrow, will the Prime Minister inform the house whether he considers it fit and proper for defence chiefs to make public statements concerning defence requirements, particularly, in view of the controversy surrounding the decision with respect to the CF-105?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the preliminary words of the hon. gentleman's question are concerned they, I suggest, do not come within the ambit of the kind of questions to be dealt with on the orders of the day.

Without in any way anticipating any views on an examination of any statements allegedly made, I would say that in my opinion it is not fit and proper for defence chiefs to make public statements concerning policy.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF NOTES RESPECTING CHANGES IN CUSTOMS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a matter that I proposed raising as a question of privilege but perhaps, in view of the fact that this is the first regular sitting of the session and of the apparent good humour of the house, I can raise the matter by way of a question to the minister of external affairs.

Will the minister of external affairs table the note from the United States government to Canada of June 26 last, concerning the proposed amendment of the Customs Act, the further note from the United States dated September 3 last concerning the amendment of the Customs Act, which was then before the house and under discussion, and the Canadian government's reply of October 24, and any other notes that may have been exchanged between the two governments on that subject?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, subject to the usual practice relating to diplomatic exchanges, namely the consent of the two or more parties, I shall do that.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED CLOSING OF COLLIERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. My question is based on a news dispatch in today's Montreal Gazette announcing the intended closing on February 1 of five collieries affecting 4,000 men in the Glace Bay and Waterford areas of Nova Scotia. What steps does the minister propose to take to avert this mass unemployment in a region that is at the present moment experiencing grave and serious unemployment?

(Translation):

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) I too shall speak in my mother tongue. I am sure the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) will not have to use his earphone for I know he speaks French very well. I did not receive any notice from the Dosco company with regard to a cut down in production or a staff reduction. I saw this article in a paper—the Gazette—this morning, and this was the first news I had of it, through the press. However, we shall look into the matter and as soon as I have been officially informed by the company that there has been a reduction of staff and production, or of its plans in the matter, I shall notify my colleagues and we shall make a decision about it.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, were representations made to the minister, either directly or through the officials of the local union of the United Mine Workers of America, in protest against this decreased production?

Mr. Comtois: Mr. Speaker, certain representations along that line, and on other matters, were indeed made to us by the Dosco company. Their representatives came and met with us some time ago. They did make representations, and I must add that the matter is now under consideration and that we propose to come to a decision with regard to this in the near future.

NATIONAL CAPITAL PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Gour (Russell): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the action taken at the last session of parliament setting up a national capital commission, is it the intention of the government to act soon in the matter of appointing the members of the new capital commission?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that it is, and that within two or three days events may take place which will give some explanation as to why the appointments have not been made. The appointments will be made within the next week.

CANADIAN PACIFIC STEAMSHIPS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question I should like to pose to the Minister of Labour. I sent him notice of it, and I hope the notification reached him in sufficient time. Can the minister indicate to the house what have been the results of the negotiations between Canadian Pacific Steamships, British Columbia coast service, and the unions affected by the British Columbia Coast Steamship Service Act of 1958? If no agreement has been reached between the parties, what action is contemplated by the government?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. As most hon. members are aware, legislation was passed by parliament during the last session which provided for resumption of the services of the British Columbia coastal steamship lines.

An administrator was appointed under the act to administer the operation of this line. Following that a commission of inquiry was appointed which brought the parties together in a number of meetings. The result was that the items of disagreement were narrowed down considerably. The points remaining at issue involve rates of pay including overtime, the term of the new agreement and the employees' welfare plan.

In the interim period we have endeavoured to bring both parties together by conferring with the seafarers international union and the Canadian Pacific Railway individually. As a result of this the parties met as recently as last Friday in Montreal, and the result of this meeting is now being studied to ascertain what further steps can be taken to bring the parties together and effect a satisfactory solution to the problem.

Mr. Howard: Is Mr. Taylor of Toronto still the industrial inquiry commissioner, and will he be acting in that capacity until negotiations are completed?

Mr. Starr: His services may be requisitioned again.

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO THE CLOSING OF TRAFFIC LANES DURING ALTERATIONS

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) a question about Victoria bridge, which is partly in my constituency.

Is it true that the Canadian National is planning to close up the upstream car lane of that bridge for at least four months and the other and downstream vehicular traffic lanes for a period of twelve months? If so, does the minister intend to lodge a protest with the Canadian National against the disastrous delays which would ensue for those who will have to travel between the southern bank and Montreal?

(Text):

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will get in touch with the management of Canadian National Railways. I am not aware of the matter the hon. member has raised. I have not heard about it. I will ask them to report as soon as possible.

(Translation):

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Has not the hon. minister seen press reports stating that there has been talk, in the last few days, of closing up the two vehicular lanes on Victoria bridge?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. It hardly seems to be a matter of urgent public importance to inquire what the minister has read in the newspapers, particularly as he has taken the original question as notice.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

REPORTED REDUCTION IN DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister tell the house whether there is any truth in the report in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen that the estimates of his department for 1959 have been cut by an amount of $25 million?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that that hon. member's question relates to the estimates, and it is a well known principle that such inquiries cannot be made in anticipation of the production of the estimates.

CANADA CAR

REPORTED CLOSING OF FORT WILLIAM PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister on a matter of great concern to my constituency and the lakehead area. Has the Prime Minister any word on the closing of the Canada Car plant in Fort William? Is the government contemplating any action to keep the plant open?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in reply to that question may I say that discussions have been taking place, but as yet we have no report to make.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT BY DR. ROBERT CLARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. This is the first opportunity I have had to address him since he came back, and I am glad to see him looking so well. My question is, in view of the indication given by the Prime Minister on August 21 last that Dr. Clark's study of social security would be available last fall, I think in October, has the government received a report and recommendations from Dr. Clark and, if so, whether the government is prepared to make them available to the house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first I do want to thank my hon. friend for giving me a certification of good health from a medical man. In reply to his question, may I say that on a number of occasions in the last few months the minister concerned and myself have been in touch with Dr. Clark who has been preparing a report. In the latter part of last session he felt that it would be available around the middle or latter part of October. Since that time it has become impossible, by reason of personal family matters, for him to complete it. It is a rather lengthy document. He has about three-fifths of it completed and the balance, which will mean the tabling of the report, should be expected by February 9.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF FINANCIAL TERMS OF UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister set any date for a meeting with the premier of Newfoundland in connection with the revision of the financial terms of union? If so, could he inform the house when the meeting will take place.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): There has been certain correspondence between the premier and myself. At the beginning of the week I sent a telegram to the premier, after receipt of a telegram from him proposing a meeting with the federal authorities to discuss the subject. I suggested a meeting in Ottawa on Monday, January 26. I have not yet received word whether that date is satisfactory to him.

(Translation):

CONTROL OF MINING RIGHTS BY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, the hon. Mr. Comtois.

Has the minister conferred or exchanged correspondence with the provinces concerned, with regard to the federal government's intention of "controlling" mining rights in areas located below territorial waters?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): No, Mr. Speaker.

(Text):

HARBOURS

LAKEHEAD—LOCATION OF FACILITIES AND REPRESENTATION ON COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport on an issue that is causing considerable confusion in my region. Can he tell us whether the lakehead harbour commission, not yet appointed, is to choose the site of the harbour terminal and whether the western provinces are to have a representative on the commission, as recently announced by the government's representative in Port Arthur constituency?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the new commission is appointed, which I expect will be in about two weeks time, it will confer with the government regarding the site of the new harbour facilities. What was the second part of the question?

Mr. Fisher: The second part had to do with the western provinces having a representative on the commission.

Mr. Hees: It is my understanding that representatives who are interested in harbour matters in the two lakehead cities have been in touch with the government of Manitoba discussing the possibility of someone being on the commission who would be in a position to represent the interests of that province, and I believe agreement has been reached as to that person.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

YORK TOWNSHIP—REPORTED REMOVAL OF POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General, of which I have given him notice. Can the Postmaster General say whether the report in this morning's press is correct that two inspectors in his department removed the post office from the business premises of Nicholas Manfredo in York township because this gentleman had written to a Toronto newspaper criticizing the government?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, that certainly was not the reason.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Robichaud: Was it only a coincidence?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Manfredo had been appointed on September 4, 1958, and on November 27, 1958, the hon. member for York South, the area in which the sub-post office is located, informed me that this sub-postmaster was engaged in partisan political activity and recommended his dismissal.

On December 3 I directed that this sub-post office be closed because of the partisan political activity of the sub-postmaster, but that in view of the heavy pressure on the Post Office Department during the Christmas period the closing be delayed until the Christmas rush was over. On December 9 confirmation was received from the postmaster in Toronto that the office would be closed following the Christmas season.

Appointment and dismissal of these sub-postmasters is the direct responsibility of the Postmaster General. My action was taken in accord with long-standing practice that where a member of parliament personally certifies to the partisan political activity of a public servant, dismissal may be ordered by the minister concerned. I might say that the limited action which I have taken in this regard has been on a completely non-partisan basis, and has included the dismissal of a postmaster for political activity in support of the present government which was requested by one of the Liberal members of the present house.

The preceding Liberal government, when it took office in 1935, embarked on a wholesale campaign in this regard—

Mr. McIlraith: Order.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member has given a very complete answer.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister say whether the government, in keeping with the statement made in the last session, has discontinued the practice of giving to any member of parliament the right by this means to dismiss any person in the government service, or who operates a post office?

An hon. Member: The bill of rights.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of this matter I had no knowledge indirectly or at all. I was absent from Canada at the time this event occurred. The hon. member was one of those who referred to that absence on a number of occasions in striking if not spectacular language. There is no necessity for me to establish the fact that I was absent, nor that I had no knowledge whatever of this action. The practice has been outlined and the responsibility is that of the Postmaster General. He has stated that, on his responsibility, as a result of political misconduct or political partisanship—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —action was taken. I suggest that the hon. member direct his question to the minister who is responsible, who has taken the responsibility, and who has made it very clear.

Mr. Argue: I believe the Prime Minister misunderstood my question. My question was whether a member of parliament has the right by this means, through any responsible minister, to bring about the dismissal of anybody in the government service or the removal of a postmaster.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the hon. member has secured an answer to the specific question, and he is now reaching out into the realm of the hypothetical.

Mr. Argue: The Prime Minister is reversing his own policy of last session.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether, before a dismissal is made, there is an impartial inquiry into the reported case?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, going back, before answering the member's question specifically, into previous history, I might say—

An hon. Member: You could go back to Sir John A. Macdonald.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I request the minister to keep his answer specifically to the question, because it seems to me this point is developing into a debate and that should not happen during the question period. I hope this will close this discussion.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): My only purpose here is to show the hon. member that this action was strictly in accord with procedure during the period from 1935 to 1940—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): —when there were 325 dismissed for partisan political activity.

Mr. Speaker: The question, as I understood it, related to the method by which a decision was arrived at in this particular case.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): In this particular case, Mr. Speaker, the procedure adopted was the procedure which had been discussed in the house at the last session and with which members of the opposition, including the hon. member for Laurier, were in agreement. This procedure was followed in this particular case. I might say that this is one of only five dismissals for political activity that have occurred under this government in the Post Office Department, in contrast to the 325 dismissed by the previous regime.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should certainly not want the Postmaster General to put words in my mouth which I at no time uttered. In the last session I did discuss the dismissal, the unfair and unjust dismissal, of an officer in the Laurier constituency, but at no time did I admit that the procedure adopted was the one which should have been followed. On the contrary, I condemned that procedure very strongly.

AGRICULTURE

ALLEGED THREAT BY MINISTER TO REDUCE FLOOR PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister table copies of his speech in which he threatened Canadian farmers with reduced floor prices unless the farmers voluntarily restricted production?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I am not sure to which speech the hon. member is referring. I think probably it is the speech I made at the opening of the dominion-provincial agricultural conference, and I shall be glad to table that speech if he wishes it.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO AID COD FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is going to take any action to relieve the distress caused by the failure of the cod fishery in Newfoundland, about which he will recall I wrote him last October, and which he advised me the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Fisheries were looking into urgently?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is still applicable.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister realize that half the fishermen on the northeast coast of Newfoundland have been forced on relief because of the failure of the government to act?

INDUSTRY

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—INQUIRY AS TO PLANS FOR REHABILITATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): If I may I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue as the representative of Nova Scotia in the government. Has the government in mind any plans to meet the distressing situation in Springhill, which plans I would assume would be related to the government's general policy for the decentralization of industry.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Any decision which is taken by the government in that regard will, of course, be announced in due course and at the proper time. As the house well knows, the Nova Scotia government set up a special corporation with capital of $1 million to assist in the attraction of industries to Springhill, and discussions have been going on between myself as Minister of National Revenue and officers of the different corporations as to what way my department or this government could co-operate in their establishment. I am hopeful that some action will be agreed upon in the near future with respect to some of the industries.

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. W. H. JORGENSON AND SECONDED BY MR. LOUIS FORTIN

The house proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, on this occasion I am indeed indebted to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) for the honour he has given my native province of Manitoba and the recognition he has shown to the constituency of Provencher in allowing me to move the address in reply to the speech from the throne that His Excellency the Governor General so graciously read to us yesterday.

In selecting Provencher for this singular honour the Prime Minister has chosen a constituency that is truly representative of a cross-section of our Canadian population, from the Anglo-Saxon and French pioneers who first settled the district along the banks of the Red river; the Mennonites who began settlement in the Steinbach and Altona districts in 1873; and the Ukrainians who established their first rural area in the Stuartburn district in 1896. The story of their gradual assimilation into the Canadian way of life was embodied in the words of Lord Tweedsmuir to the Ukrainian community of Fraserwood in 1936, when he said:

> I do not believe that any people can be strong unless they remember and keep in touch with all their past . . . You will all be better Canadians for being good Ukrainians.

Theirs is a story of incredible hardship and disappointment. The difficulties they encountered in adjusting to machinery, to business life, to democratic processes, even to new clothing, different food and a new language, provide us with our most interesting chapters of history in the development of this part of Manitoba. The Prime Minister has had occasion to visit the thriving district of Steinbach and to see at first hand the results of private initiative and industry. Here is one of the finest examples of what Canadians have done to build their own communities into progressive towns without the aid of government or the benefit of large industries moving in.

Over in Altona the same progressive spirit prevails but the same results have been achieved through co-operation rather than individual enterprise. Following the construction of the co-operative vegetable oil plant in 1946 and investment of $160,000 has grown into an investment of over $1 million. Although only about 50 people are employed here, this industry has had a tremendous effect upon the development of the town and the local agricultural economy. Annual payments to farmers for sunflower seed, soya beans, rapeseed and flax, exceed $1.3 million and half a million dollars annually is funnelled into the town's business enterprises through its operations.

I might add that approximately 70 per cent of Manitoba's sugar beet crop is grown in this area, a fact which is further evidence of the diversity of production and certainly a reminder to me that the problems of the farmer are not all concentrated among one group of producers.

In greeting you, Mr. Speaker, let me say how pleased we all are to see you again in the chair ready to resume your duties. We know that you will preside over this house with the same tact, courtesy and patience that you have shown in the past.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be remiss in my duty at this time if I did not try to say—however haltingly—a few words to this house in our other official language, especially as Provencher has been to a very large extent enriched by French contributions in the cultural, social or economic fields.

I sincerely hope that soon I will no longer have to resort to the system of interpretation newly set up in the house.

(Text):

May I be permitted to add my voice to that of those who have spoken of the passing of two of our colleagues in this house, Mr. Yacula and Mr. Lockyer. Although I have been a member of this house but a short time, I have experienced the comradeship and good fellowship that is as much a part of our parliamentary tradition as are the debates that take place in this chamber and it was with profound regret that I learned of their passing.

In the short time that I had to become acquainted with Mr. Lockyer, I was impressed with his warm friendliness, and his ability to make anyone feel at ease. Mr. Yacula represented a constituency that adjoins mine and I knew him somewhat more intimately. This quiet person caught the imagination of the people of Springfield with his capacity for work and his ability to shrug off adversity. My sincerest sympathy goes out to the members of their families, their relatives and friends.

I would be remiss if I did not at this time comment on our Prime Minister's most successful around-the-world trip. In this atomic age our world becomes ever smaller and nations which were once thought of as far-off foreign lands are today our close neighbours. Journalists throughout the world tour heralded our Prime Minister's visit to their lands as outstanding good neighbour policy. We can only express our heartfelt thanks for a job well done, for from the mother of parliaments even to the gates of India the Prime Minister made the maple leaf shine ever brighter among the nations of the world.

No one can view with passive interest the efforts of the government to increase total trade. Those of us from the west, and particularly those members representing agricultural constituencies, have a vital interest in the expansion of our trading frontiers, not only to dispose of existing productive capacity but to develop markets for the increase in production that will follow as a result of improved technology and science.

It was with great pleasure, therefore, that we watched the significant developments that took place during the commonwealth conference held last fall in Montreal. Surely there can be no doubt in anyone's mind that if trade is to be limited to nations which have comparable standards of living there can be no hope for those countries which have been deprived of the bounties of providence. In the interest of world peace, to say nothing of social justice, we have a responsibility to the underdeveloped areas of the world to give aid, both economic and technical, to narrow the gulf that exists between their living standards and ours. To achieve this goal the Prime Minister has taken a leading role, not only through his efforts in convening the conference itself, but by increasing aid to those countries through the Colombo plan, and now by extending the purpose and facilities of the Exports Credit Insurance Corporation.

Fundamental to the problem of the western farmer has been the wheat surplus. We are indeed gratified by the 15 per cent increase in wheat sales abroad during the past crop year and are encouraged by the prospect that these levels can be maintained during the present crop year. I am sure hon. members will agree that hard work and determination on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) are in no small measure responsible for the success of our sales abroad.

Since the house last met the grain growers of western Canada have harvested a relatively good crop. In July it was anticipated that feed supplies for livestock might be in extremely short supply and persons who should have been in a good position to judge went so far as to suggest that the west was likely to harvest only half a crop. The fact that the crop came through is, of course, vitally important because of the income that will flow to our farmers and the provision of essential feed. Scarcely less important, however, is the light it throws on the trends in agriculture. It seems to me that we can expect less variability of yield in western grain production because the crop can now withstand drought to a degree that was not considered possible in the pre-war period.

I do recall the many statements that were made at that time with respect to the expected crop failure. As a matter of fact this government, on the basis of those reports and requests from the provinces, undertook to bear half the costs of the provincial governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan which were attempting to meet the situation. The fact that does emerge as a result of this experience is that the western crop showed an unexpected ability to withstand drought. Many crops thought to be dead did, in fact, recover.

Hon. members may perhaps wonder what has changed. It is, in fact, a mark of credit to science and to the farmer himself. Our plant breeders have provided us with better crop varieties; farms are better equipped, and the timeliness of operation is improved. Selective weed killers have provided control of certain varieties of weeds and so reduced weed competition for moisture in the growing crop. Crop experience in 1958 does imply that we are not likely to go back to the yield experience of past years. I do not suggest that we shall maintain the phenomenal production of the early 1950's, but given the same conditions we can now raise more grain on a given number of acres than we could even a decade ago.

Our ability to raise more grain on the same number of acres spreads the production costs over more bushels and reduces the variability of yield. It does not, however, justify the contention by many that it compensates for the rise in costs. I am sure most hon. members will agree that running faster just to stay in the same place can be pretty frustrating. What it does mean, in effect, is this: reducing the variability of yield gives rise to the belief that a national crop insurance program, long thought to be out of reach of the farmer financially, is now well within the realm of possibility.

But let me be clear on this point: the belief that we should offset rising costs by increased productivity alone will result in far greater surpluses than we have at present. The hard fact is that in western Canada we depend largely on export markets for the sale of our grain. In those markets we must be competitive. If we are priced out of them by rising costs, the western economy, and, as a result, the Canadian economy will suffer. Experience has shown that Canada still depends in a large measure on western agriculture for her economic well-being. Up until now, farmers have borne the brunt of increased wages and higher profits of labour and industry. This situation can no longer be tolerated. My appeal to the Canadian people as a whole is not to place the farmers in this country in an impossible position.

[Mr. Jorgenson.]

This does not mean, however, that all farmers are operating on a sound economic basis. The economic division of the Department of Agriculture separated out the commercial farms in Canada on the basis of the 1956 census, dividing the commercial farms from the others on the basis of the ability of a farm to produce $1,200 for its operator in the course of a typical year. Few of us would feel $1,200 to be a large annual income, and I would point out that this figure represents total production—the cost of production must be found within the $1,200. But the department found that only 21.6 per cent of the farms in Newfoundland qualified as commercial farms in 1956 under this definition; 38.5 per cent in Nova Scotia; 40.8 per cent in New Brunswick; 53.4 per cent in British Columbia; 72 per cent in Quebec; and up to 95.6 per cent in Saskatchewan.

I would be very interested in knowing the ranges of gross income of the farmers in my riding. I do know that many of them require the further consideration of this government to become classed as commercial farms. Certainly these figures reveal very clearly that Canada has many farmers who gravely require credit which will enable them to convert their present operations to a really economic basis. In all parts of Canada this is the real and pressing need. I am satisfied that it will be a source of great gratification to all farmers and farm organizations that this government has moved promptly and adequately in this direction through the provision of a comprehensive farm credit policy.

The same must be said of crop insurance. This is a technique for permitting a farmer to spread his risks over a long period of years so that he should not be prostrated by one bad crop but can replace periodic grave losses by regular premiums. It will allow farm income to be more predictable and will make possible the elimination of the periodic production crises that, particularly in the west, have plagued our farming industry.

These are policies, furthermore, which have the great merit of bearing some relationship to the trends in Canadian farm production and food consumption. We cannot worsen the position of the livestock producer in the west relative to that of the grain producer, and it is unrealistic to fly in the face of the food preferences of Canada and of our customers. The per capita consumption of cereal grains in Canada in 1957 was only three quarters—75.6 per cent—of the 1935-39 average consumption. The comparable figure for fruit was 159.4 per cent; for vegetables, 122.8 per cent; for eggs, 124.1 per cent; meats, 120.7 per cent; poultry 145.5 per cent; and of milk and cheese, 123.1 per cent.

There is often a tendency within urban and industrial communities to regard the farmers' position within our economy as similar to that of industry or labour in that prices and wages can be adjusted in relation to costs of production and costs of living. We often hear that if the farmer cannot adjust prices in relation to costs, he can adjust costs in relation to prices by adopting more efficient methods of production. This, in effect, can only be done over a long period of time and to do so requires capital, credit and managerial assistance. These requirements seem to be lacking when they are most needed. In effect he adjusts to low prices through reduced income and lower standards of living. Many people seem to think that this state of affairs will force farmers to reduce production or leave agriculture but here again this does not work out in practice for two reasons. The character of the family farm unit is one, but the main reason lies in the nature of the farmer's costs.

In industry operating costs form a large part of total costs but in agriculture a very large proportion of costs are overhead and these costs must be borne whether or not a crop is produced. Industry reduces production but maintains prices. This gives rise to unused capacity and unemployment which becomes a social responsibility. Farmers, however, cannot vary production in step with market conditions. Indeed they maintain production when market demand falls off and receive lower incomes. This gives rise to excess capacity and low incomes on the farm but unlike industry the farmer bears the full responsibility of under-employment.

To further illustrate this point permit me to quote from an article that appeared in Time magazine, issue of June 2, 1958, entitled "Death of Two Maxims" which says in part that prices do not rise and fall in strict relation to the demand for goods and services and that wages do not drop or climb according to the supply of labour or the amount of unemployment. Further along in the article this statement appears:

> Prices are not related significantly to demand, but to costs. The price setting process has been shifted from the competitive market place to the conference table.
> In the same way, wages are growing more and more rigid. They are on a ratchet, clicking steadily higher, but locked against any slippage downward.

It can be seen, therefore, that the bargaining position of the farmer is weak. Wage earners, manufacturers and professional people can demand their share of the national product. The farmer has to take what is left. I am sure that once aware of this basic difference every reasonable person would agree that the farmer's problem requires, not only sympathy but effective aid.

This government recognizes the imbalance that exists in the farmer's bargaining position and has taken steps to remove it. Under the western grain producers' acreage payment act, $40 million has been pumped into the western economy. Assistance on grain storage charges during the past year has amounted to $38,800,000. Twenty-five million dollars is the estimated amount of money that will be paid under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act this year, while assistance under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act will amount to $17,285,000. Hog premiums have amounted to $6,630,000 and the amount of freight assistance on western grains to eastern feeders has been approximately $21 million this year. In addition to these amounts, and perhaps even more significant, are the amounts that were spent under the stabilization act and the cash advance act.

I do not want to leave the impression, however, that the amount of money spent is the yardstick in measuring the success of a farm policy. There must be a purpose and if the amount spent can achieve that purpose then the expenditure can be justified. Our purpose, as I have stated previously, is to correct the imbalance that exists today by the implementation of policies designed to place the farmer in a bargaining position comparable with other groups in our society and not to make him a ward of the government.

There is one further trend in agriculture that is receiving a great deal of attention these days and I could not allow this opportunity to pass without offering some comment on its impact on the Canadian economy. I refer, of course, to the trend toward vertical integration. For the benefit of those who are not familiar with this term I should perhaps take a moment to explain its meaning. The process involves the letting of contracts to farmers by meat packing firms and feed companies for the production of certain types of livestock. In most cases capital is extended to the farmer for the construction of buildings and the purchase of equipment. The farmer in effect becomes the employee of the company. The products that have come under this type of farming today have been hogs, turkeys and chicken broilers. Farmers are concerned over this move toward integration. The dangers of a food monopoly are readily apparent and I need not enlarge upon them here. In addition, and perhaps equally as important, would be the loss of independence that is characteristic of farming today. It would, as one veteran Canadian farm writer has written, set agriculture back a thousand years.

The proponents of this move toward integration say that its advantages are a continuous supply to the packing companies and greater security for the farmer. In point of fact, however, farmers themselves are assuring us of a continuous supply of food throughout the year through a greater knowledge of production methods and greater security for the farmer has been provided under the terms of the agricultural prices stabilization act. As I have stated previously, the real need that exists today is in the field of capital for expansion, diversification and consolidation of the farming community. There is a danger at present that under the terms of the agricultural prices stabilization act the trend toward vertical integration could be encouraged. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), to examine the situation very carefully with a view to removing this possibility.

We are hearing a great deal of talk in western Canada at this time with respect to a march on Ottawa for the purpose of pressing this government to give deficiency payments on the last three western crops, the assistance for the 1955-56 and 1956-57 sales to total some $228 million. Perhaps I should comment briefly on this proposed march.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I was a director of the Manitoba farmers' union for four years. I have travelled throughout the greater part of that province to make speeches on farm policy questions during that time. I have talked to hundreds of farmers on their farms with respect to the problems they face. And finally I decided it was my clear duty on behalf of these farmers for whom I was working to contest the Conservative nomination in Provencher. I did so because of my concern for the farmers of Manitoba, and indeed of Canada, and because of my conviction that we would not get a realistic and helpful farm policy in Canada without a change in government.

When I take my place in this house I am representing those farmers as surely as I was when I took my place at a table for a meeting of the officers of a farm organization or travelled with a delegation to Ottawa, or addressed a farm meeting in a one room country school house. And I have no hesitation in saying that if consideration had been given to the proposals of the farm organizations for an adequate national farm policy years ago, and indeed if the Saskatchewan pool, the sponsors of this march, had joined with them in pressing the government of that day, there would have been no talk of a march today. The stage was set and the course was charted as early as 1946. If we are going to continue to deal with the problems of western agriculture on a crisis to crisis basis, there will be no end to them. Furthermore, future generations of farmers will roundly condemn us for failing to provide them with policies that remove the inherent weaknesses within the price system.

The contention on the part of the Saskatchewan pool is that farmers cannot wait for the results of a long-term policy. That statement has been made on numerous occasions in the past, and perhaps explains why a national policy has never been implemented.

The stated policies of this government are known and generally have the support of the farm organizations. They are intended to remove the root causes of instability in agriculture. True, some of these difficulties will yield only to long term measures. But any effort to jeopardize or prolong the early implementation of a truly national farm policy will be performing a disservice to the farmer.

In agriculture, as in other lines of endeavour, it is essential that we live and operate and plan policies in the real world of today. We would all be delighted to see millions of dollars ploughed into the general improvement of our farming industry. But we must all be very conscious of the grave responsibility of seeing that the industry is not hurt by the policies we implement. Rather we must ensure that the benefits are lasting.

With these remarks and expressing once again the pleasure that the occasion has given me, I have the honour to move, seconded by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), that the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency the Right Hon. Vincent Massey, Member of the Order of the Companions of Honour, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada:

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both houses of parliament.

(Translation):

Mr. Louis Fortin (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, at the very beginning of my remarks I want to tender you the tribute of the members of this house. Long before the voters of Montmagny-L'Islet honoured me by sending me to parliament as their representative I had come to know of you. By regularly reading the official report of parliamentary debates, I have, in the past, been able to appreciate your brilliant abilities as a parliamentarian and, above all, your impartiality.

I know that all members of this house share my feelings in this regard and that they join me in wishing you much satisfaction in the discharge of your responsibilities. I also want to assure you of my entire devotion and unfailing loyalty.

Allow me to express my gratitude to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) who entrusted me with the task—both delicate and difficult—of seconding the address in reply to the speech from the throne. This token of esteem I accept on behalf of my voters and on my own behalf, but I consider it mainly as a token of esteem for my fellow-citizens of the province of Quebec. He has sought to show me his confidence and his friendship, and I feel greatly honoured.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that I am something of a Johnny-come-lately. However, I have had occasion to meet almost all members of this house and, having had the advantage of being elected at a by-election, I have by some strange coincidence been able to meet a goodly number of hon. members who were holidaying in my riding last September.

I would indeed be remiss in my duty, Mr. Speaker, if I did not pay a particular tribute to the electors of Montmagny-L'Islet, whom I am deeply proud to represent here. I am not overlooking the fact that, ever since its establishment twenty-five years ago, the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet has been represented by a Liberal member. Nor am I unaware of the fact that the vote given to me is extremely significant, since I had asked my constituents to say with their votes whether they approved or not, as of last September, the policies of the government. The vote was also significant because my constituency is both urban and rural. It has been possible, therefore, for people of all classes of that community to express their point of view on the policies of this government.

My constituency is located on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, 30 miles east of Quebec city. It is bounded on the north by the St. Lawrence, on the east by the constituency of Kamouraska, on the south by the U.S. border and on the west by the constituency of Bellechasse. As I said, my constituency is both urban and rural. However, nearly all parishes in the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet are farming communities. I am therefore, as it were, a spokesman here of a deserving agricultural class and, at the same time, of a working class earning its daily livelihood with much satisfaction.

May I point out, incidentally, how pleased I was to read in the speech from the throne, that the government was going to introduce during the year, a bill concerning crop insurance. This answers a request that has been made to me many times in my constituency; it is indeed with pleasure that I shall support that measure.

Mr. Speaker, there is one consideration, of a personal nature perhaps, which I cannot leave unmentioned. I cannot adequately express the emotion I felt yesterday when, for the first time, I entered this house. I remembered at that moment that I represent here the third generation of my family. In 1920, my grandfather sat in this house. In 1930, my father did likewise. I am resolved, Mr. Speaker, to follow in their footsteps and to devote the best of my abilities to my country.

While I shall be representing a constituency of the immediate district of Quebec, I think it is proper to point out that I am the only one here with veteran status.

I have always been active in veterans' organizations in my area, and I know they will be counting on my earnest support. It gives me pleasure, therefore, to assure them of my full co-operation.

I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) who, a moment ago, moved the address in a masterful and thoughtful manner. I followed his speech with close attention, and I do feel that the problems of the western part of this country are much the same as those we face in our province and farther eastward.

I am the first French-speaking member to benefit from the simultaneous translation system installed here after the last session. This is something which is closely connected with the matter of bilingualism in the country.

(Text):

I believe it would be quite in order to make these few remarks in English. I wish to extend my most sincere congratulations to all those members who at the last session voted unanimously in favour of the establishment of a simultaneous translation system in this chamber. I read with very great interest the speech delivered here on August 11 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). He said at that time everything that needed to be said on the subject, but he mentioned in particular that from now on members in general will be able to make a better contribution to the debates in this house. I am sure that this new facility will not reduce the enthusiasm shown by so many members to learn a second language.

Last September, in the dying days of the session, Bill C-60 was put forward for the adoption of a declaration of human rights. This piece of legislation was, so to speak, an extension of the universal declaration of human rights proposed by the United Nations ten years ago. It would, of course, be inappropriate at this time to discuss the bill at length. I should like to stress, however, that it is of particular interest in view of its future effects. I would even go so far as to suggest that this piece of legislation is one of the most important ever brought before this parliament. As an illustration of the importance, in the minds of the people, of a bill of this nature, it would be sufficient to mention that last December, seminars were held in many towns of Canada to mark the tenth anniversary of the United Nations universal declaration of human rights. Since then, the question has often been raised as to whether the bill as drafted is adequate to ensure effective protection of individual freedoms. Many consider that it is. Others argue that it would be preferable if this legislation were embodied in our constitution. I will only say at this time that the bill, as it now reads, is a step in the right direction, and may I emphasize that the principle of the bill has received unanimous approval.

Canada, admittedly, is still a young country. We are still developing and I think I can safely say that we are still a long way from full economic, political and cultural development.

Therefore, since we now enjoy these freedoms, since they are ours without our realizing it, we have assimilated them, so to speak, in our minds and in our hearts, and it is time that we take adequate steps to protect them.

If in many countries, steps had been taken to protect the individual freedoms, these countries would not find themselves under the totalitarian yoke of a government which subordinates mind to matter, spiritual values to materialism and, finally, the will of the people to coercion.

The members of the house will be called upon to declare that human freedoms have always existed in Canada and will always exist in the future.

I do not wish to discuss the bill in full detail, but I would like to point out a section which, in my opinion, is important, in view of its potential repercussions. I refer to freedom of the press.

The press plays an extremely important part in our way of life, a part that involves great responsibilities. These responsibilities stem from the fact that it behooves the press to shape national consciousness and the life of our people. It is most important that the press enjoy the greatest degree of freedom, that it always be at its best, that it constantly strive towards a noble goal and that it always seek to safeguard the fine traditions of our Canadian journalism.

Mr. Speaker, the financial situation of this country, in my opinion, gives no cause for worry. Quite happily, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), who had been particularly well trained for the position he now holds, took adequate measures to prevent the particularly difficult situation which was looming. Already, the mere fact of removing credit restrictions has favoured a substantial strengthening of business, has brought renewed optimism to the people of Canada and given confidence to our businessmen. Incidentally, may I be allowed to offer him my sincere congratulations for the spectacular success of the conversion campaign of 1958. In fact, five victory loans totalled $6 billion and, after only a few days of campaigning, $5 billion 800 million were converted. In my opinion, this success is altogether amazing.

The present government, even after being challenged to do so, was successful in reducing taxes in the amount of $200 million, and in record time. However, we can now look forward to a more optimistic stabilization in national affairs.

When considering, for instance, the field of home building, it is noted that all contractors concurred in the belief that the year 1958 would be a bad year; it was, nevertheless, the best that we have known and I think that the increase amounts to about $110 million. Moreover, the year 1959 already gives indications that prosperity is coming back, and coming back to stay.

In the international field, it is interesting to note the extraordinary progress made by Canada in particular. Since the end of the war, we had always expected a situation which sometimes proved difficult and sometimes more comforting. The unity which, at one time, was more particularly reached amongst the members of NATO was such that a new power rose in the world in order to offset, in some measure, communist influence.

It gives me pleasure to stress the increasingly important part the commonwealth is called upon to play in the world. We must admit, Mr. Speaker, that not so long ago, the commonwealth was something known only to our more cultured citizens. But in the last few years, and especially in the last few months, it seems that the whole Canadian people have had their eyes opened with regard to the British commonwealth and realized that this was a true force, a group of nations whose one ambition was peace in this world.

May I also stress in passing that, to my mind, the greatest factor contributing to better knowledge of the commonwealth, and to placing our country at the summit of those commonwealth nations has undoubtedly been the recent trip of the right hon. Prime Minister throughout those countries.

After the war, we have often found ourselves facing a more or less fearsome crisis. Sometimes it was veiled or open invasion of some corner of the world. I believe the government which in our particularly dangerous times manoeuvre wisely in favour of world peace, is to be commended. As we are neighbours of the United States, and closely linked to Great Britain, our situation is extremely delicate. As a member of the United Nations and geographically situated in the front line in case of war, Canada could nevertheless not remain coolly neutral; Canada had to take a definite position and advocated moderation. For moderation has to be advocated. We are happy to note that, while preaching moderation, our government stood firm and strong against the dangerous propaganda which had broken out all over the world.

Allow me also to stress how glad we are to note that the government will do more to help under-developed countries. All over the world, hunger is being felt. There are under-developed countries which, at one time, were in distress, or had always been so. But the difference now is that formerly those countries did not know that they were in distress, because they had no point of comparison. Thanks to modern means of communications the peoples of the under-developed countries are now in a position to realize what goes on in other countries. Therefore, they envy those countries, and being under-developed, they beg help from the first one at hand. Now bread when one wants it, is readily accepted, from whatever quarter it may come. That is why I believe that the first duty of the Canadian nation is to accept generously the sacrifices which may be asked of her, sacrifices which will allow us to help those under-developed nations, so that at last they may turn away from communist propaganda, and may once and for all see the light that is being held out to them by the free nations.

(Text):

The coming year, Mr. Speaker, will bring back to our memory an historical event that should be the object of a special observance. In my home town of Quebec city, we are about to celebrate this year the 200th anniversary of the battle of the Plains of Abraham. Although it is an observance that involves my home town in a most intimate way, I wish to invite the whole population to join in that celebration and to remember that 1759 marks a particular event in Canadian history. It marks the beginning of an experiment that has been very successful. This experiment subsequently required two nationalities to live together and to work together toward the creation of a new nation.

(Translation):

We have now reached an extremely important crossroads in our national history. It must be remembered that 200 years ago, on the heights of Quebec, soldiers were meeting in battle. From enemies that they were then, they have become compatriots, fellow-citizens, friends, and brothers, and both groups have worked, each in its own field of human endeavour, each in its own environment, to build the Canadian nation. After 200 years of efforts and of association, the Canadian nation today feels compelled to analyse and to define itself. Canadians, as a writer has said, are somewhat like youths in search of their own soul and of an ideal.

In the past, and even to this day, there has often been talk of national unity and of Canadianism. These terms, however, are always given too abstract a meaning. They are important so to speak, to the extent where they are translated into practice. Is Canadianism something real, or is it fiction? It is a fact. Indeed, to be a Canadian is to think and act as a Canadian. In order that such Canadianism may become the heritage of all Canadians, of whatever origin, Canadians must remain deeply aware of their origin and must make every effort to understand themselves. A third of the Canadian nation today is of other than French or English origin. In other words, the Canadian family has been enlarged in recent years. In other provinces of Canada, people have entered our country and have given us the benefit of their skills. In addition, they have allowed us to benefit from their wealth, for the economic development of our country.

I am convinced that with the co-operation of all men of goodwill, this national unity about which there is so much talk is so attainable a goal that it is on the verge of becoming a total and complete fact. If we, Canadians of all origins, examine the means at our disposal, that is the means we all share in common, we realize that there is but one race, the Canadian race.

It will be remembered that, in former times, Canadian history was taught in a certain way in some places, and in another elsewhere. Nowadays, our history, relating the facts as they happened, has resulted in our being more united. It will be recalled that, in 1867, great Canadians such as Macdonald, Cartier and Brown understood one another and put in common their goodwill, talents and energy, in order to set up the Canadian confederation of which we are so proud today.

Neither Canadians of English origin, nor those of French origin, could have alone achieved confederation. The contribution of both was required. This was the beginning: the beginning of the unity for which we must always toil and toward which we must always strive.

We also have another thing in common, the effort that each Canadian makes for the cultural, political and economic development of this country. In the field of economy, we notice, in our province, the great developments that are achieved in the western part of the country. We are also close enough to the maritimes to see the gigantic expansion that is taking place there. We, in the province of Quebec, have witnessed a complete transformation of our economy, often due to the new Canadians who have come in our midst.

In the political field, a mere glance around this house reveals that all Canadians, of whatever origin, have sent here members of different origins, who are a new asset to this parliament.

We also have another thing in common: our common effort during the last war. When we hear today of the Royal Canadian Regiment, one name is always mentioned in the same breath, that of the Royal 22nd Regiment.

Mr. Speaker, what I will say now may be a little less important, but it is worth mentioning. There are also these things that are contributing to the emergence of a truly Canadian type. For instance, when a stranger sees the picture of a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, or a maple leaf, or a beaver, what else than Canada can he think of? He does not think of a certain part of Canada, of Canadians of certain origins, but of the whole country. However, it remains that inside this Canadian picture, there is a province which seems to us a little different from the others, because it has special laws and a somewhat different educational system. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I express quite frankly and quite sincerely the true feeling of the province of Quebec.

The province of Quebec is like any other province, it wishes that complete unity be achieved in the country; it is her most ardent wish, and Quebec will work without respite to this end. Obviously, today, the means of communication enable us to have more frequent and immediate contact with Canadians of other origins. We are glad of this and I am convinced that on leaving this house, if all members of this parliament believe that Canada is only one country, that Canadians, whether they speak one language or the other, are all Canadians, this belief will grow and all Canada will share it.

Mr. Speaker, before resuming my seat, I should like to quote from a book I read not so long ago, a creed that was submitted by the author to our Canadian youth. It reads:

I believe in Canada, proud of her past, happy over her present and confident in her future.

I believe in the British commonwealth of nations, among which we have always found freedom, and outside of which our national life would not enjoy so much independence.

I believe that our future will be even brighter than we can possibly imagine.

Let us make this creed ours. It expresses the pride of our people and its ardent wish to see Canada take first place among free nations, where it is so good to live.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Pearson the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the house adjourned at 4.34 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, January 19, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN RADIO PATENTS LIMITED

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES ANTITRUST ACTION ON CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): As hon. members know, Mr. Speaker, concern has been caused in Canada by current United States antitrust action against parent companies of Canadian subsidiaries in respect of the participation of those subsidiaries in Canadian Radio Patents Limited, a Canadian company dealing in radio and television patents. The object of the action appears to be to force the Canadian companies to make important changes in commercial practice which we consider to be the concern of Canadian rather than United States law. Other United States antitrust cases have, in the past, raised similar cause for concern and some of them have been the subject of representations by the Canadian government to the United States government.

As a result of the current case I made informal representations to the United States embassy in Ottawa, which were followed up by a formal note delivered through our embassy in Washington to the United States government. The concern of the Canadian government was also expressed and discussed at the recent meeting in Ottawa of the joint United States-Canada committee on trade and economic affairs. The communiqué issued as a result of that meeting stated:

> It was agreed that the general questions involved would be the subject of further discussions between the two governments at the ministerial level, and arrangements are being put in hand accordingly for a meeting.

I may now inform the house that arrangements have been made for discussions between the Attorney General of the United States and myself to take place in Washington on the 29th of this month concerning problems raised in Canada by the effect in this country of certain United States antitrust cases and the means that may be taken for dealing with such problems.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLOMBO PLAN—TABLING OF SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I desire, Mr. Speaker, to table copies of the seventh annual report of the consultative committee of the Colombo plan. This report is being released today. The report was approved at the meeting of the committee held in Seattle from November 10 to November 13, 1958. On that occasion I had the honour of leading the Canadian delegation.

The purpose of this annual report is to review the progress made by the countries of south and southeast Asia in carrying forward their economic development programs, and in this way improving the standards of living of their peoples. The report also summarizes the assistance in this important task that has been given to the countries of the area by countries outside the Colombo plan area. In a final chapter the report endeavours to assess the magnitude of the task that lies ahead.

The report shows that Canada's total assistance toward the economic progress of the countries of south and southeast Asia, from the beginning of the Colombo plan in 1950 to the end of 1958, was $288.2 million. This includes $56.5 million which has been made available to date to the countries of the area, in grants and loans outside the regular Colombo plan appropriations, for the purchase of Canadian wheat and flour.

Total economic assistance to the members of the Colombo plan in south and southeast Asia from other member countries since 1950 has been about $5 billion. The report points out that this external assistance has been a significant factor in the economic progress of the region, but emphasizes that by far the greater part of the economic resources devoted to development continues to come from the countries of the area themselves.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING STATUS OF NATURALIZED CITIZENS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-2, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the unanimity shown by the house in support of this proposal. I was going to say that the effect of this amendment, if it were adopted by the house, would be to place the citizenship of naturalized citizens on a basis of complete equality with the citizenship of natural born citizens, something which the amendment we adopted at the last session failed to do.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-3, to amend the Interest Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-4, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide that every cheque, draft, traveller's cheque, bill of exchange, postal note, money order, postal remittance and any other similar remittance of any department as defined in paragraph (f) of section 2 of the Financial Administration Act or of any Crown corporation enumerated in schedules B, C and D of the same act shall be printed in both the English and the French languages.

This is in accordance with the principle established in the Bank of Canada Act where it is enacted (subsection (4) of section 21) that the notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation in Canada issued by the bank shall be printed in both the official languages.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH FRENCH AND ENGLISH

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-12 to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this act is to have all negotiable notes printed in French and English.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-5, to amend the Small Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FLAGS OF CANADA

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR A NATIONAL FLAG OF CANADA

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-6, respecting flags of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, it will be seen in the explanatory notes that:

As it is desirable and urgent that Canada possess a distinctive national flag, this bill provides a method of obtaining a flag with the least possible delay. The method adopted is to have the Governor in Council prepare the design immediately upon passage of this bill and to submit the design for approval of the house and the other place at this session.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF STATUTORY HOLIDAYS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-7 to provide for pay for statutory holidays for employees and for pay for work performed on statutory holidays.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROVISION OF MINIMUM RATE OF WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-8 to provide for minimum wages for employees.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-9 respecting the printing of negotiable instruments in the English and the French languages.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to explain this bill in French, thanks to the simultaneous interpretation system, initiated by this government to promote national unity.

The printing of negotiable instruments in both the English and the French languages——and I take pleasure in moving that they be so printed.

—is in accordance with the principle established in the Bank of Canada Act where it is enacted (subsection (4) of section 21) that the notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation in Canada issued by the Bank shall be printed in both official languages.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

EXTENSION OF RIGHT TO VOTE AT ADVANCE POLLS

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-10 to amend the Canada Elections Act (voting at advance polls).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT PUBLICATION OF STRAW POLL RESULTS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-11 to amend the Canada Elections Act (publication of straw poll results).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO PROTECT VOTING RIGHTS OF INDIANS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-13, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-14, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952, with respect to the readjustment of representation of the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to extend the application of the act from the 12th day of December, 1958 to the 30th day of June, 1962.

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL—SUGGESTED INTERVENTION OF MINISTER IN LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) concerning the current dispute between Montreal television producers and the C.B.C., a dispute which is crippling the whole national French network.

Does not the minister think that he should, in all fairness, intervene in this dispute, according to section 56 which states that, when the minister thinks it appropriate, he may, upon request or on his own, conduct or order an inquiry.

Under the circumstances, and in view of this statement and of this section, may I ask the minister if the present dispute—

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Order. Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member has completed a question, but I should like to ask him to give his assurance that this is not the same question which was asked on Friday, before I give the minister the floor.

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not the same question. This question is based on the wording of section 56(1) which I have just put on Hansard.

(Translation):

And, coming to the question itself, I wanted to ask the minister if, notwithstanding the section that I have just quoted, he still claims, as he did last Friday, that he is not allowed to intervene in the dispute.

(Text):

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked today by the hon. member for Laurier, may I point out that even though he claims it is not similar to the one he asked on Friday, the answer is still the same.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

ZINC—INQUIRY AS TO RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to pose to the Minister of Justice. I wonder if the minister could indicate what steps are being taken by the department or by himself with respect to the recommendations of the restrictive trade practices commission regarding the Zinc Oxide Company of Canada Limited and the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company Limited?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his question. In reply I wish to advise him that counsel has been retained and the matter has been referred to him to examine the evidence and report as to his opinion concerning whether or not the evidence warrants prosecution. We are expecting to receive the opinion shortly.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate who is the gentleman he has retained as counsel?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would mind if I take notice of his question. I am not aware of any objection, but I would like to make certain that at this stage it would be proper for me to disclose the name of counsel.

Mr. Howard: Yes. I would like to point out that indications given in the press—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON CLOSING OF TRAFFIC LANES DURING ALTERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Loiselle) inquired about vehicular traffic on the Victoria bridge when changes to the structure have to be made in connection with the St. Lawrence seaway.

The management advises me that the St. Lawrence seaway project has necessitated certain structural changes to Victoria bridge to provide an alternative route for traffic so that it will be completely independent of vessel movement through the St. Lambert lock. Every effort is being made to co-ordinate, program and accelerate the work so as to minimize inconvenience to the travelling public. Beginning in May the downstream roadway will be closed to vehicular traffic for a period of eight to ten weeks. A double shift of workers will be employed on the construction to reduce the length of time the roadway will be out of service. Work on the upstream roadway will not begin until about April, 1960.

During the construction periods, in order to reduce delays, one-way traffic will be operated on the bridge between the hours of 7 and 9 a.m. and 4 and 6 p.m. The earlier hours will be reserved for Montreal-bound traffic and the evening hours for St. Lambert-bound traffic. It will be noted that one roadway will remain open at all times and the plan outlined is aimed at reducing the temporary inconvenience to a minimum.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question arising out of the minister's statement. In view of the fact that the work with reference to the railway aspect of the bridge is not nearly as urgent as that with reference to navigation, will the minister be good enough to ask the Canadian National Railway officials to delay this work until after the construction of the Champlain bridge?

Mr. Hees: Well, I will speak to the management and see whether that will be possible.

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO WINTER NAVIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees).

Could the hon. minister state if his department has decided to maintain winter navigation between Quebec city and Montreal?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I take this question as notice? I will give an answer in French tomorrow.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY RESPECTING AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I apologize for my repetitious use of the words "in view" occasioned by my usual desire for procedural exactitude.

In view of the release given to the press by the Minister of Public Works on December 5, 1958 to the effect in part—

> Steps are to be taken at once to complete an agreement with the United States which will make possible the co-operative development of the river based on co-ordinated operations but retaining Canadian ownership and control of projects built on the river in Canada.

—and in view of the repeated statements by the premier of British Columbia with respect to this Columbia river development, and in view of the tremendous importance of this question to the people of British Columbia, will the minister inform the house of the progress to date with respect to agreement between Canada and the United States on this important question?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I wish to thank the hon. member for Kootenay West for having given me notice of this question. In reply I should like to say that in the latter part of last year the Canadian government concluded that so far as it could see the development of the Columbia basin which offered the best hope of more and cheaper power for Canada and the United States would be one resulting from a co-operative development of that basin.

Accordingly, as stated on December 5, 1958, steps were immediately taken toward negotiation of an agreement with the United States for the co-operative development of the water of the Columbia river. Discussions are now taking place between United States and Canadian officials with a view to expediting this matter. As negotiations are in train, it would not seem proper to say anything further about them at this time. In the meantime, officials from my department are discussing technical engineering aspects of the Columbia river development with officials of the British Columbia government.

DOMINION—PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO CALLING OF CONFERENCE ON FISCAL MATTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Could he state whether he intends to call a conference on fiscal relations with the provinces during the present session of Parliament, or before the end of the current year 1959?

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have nothing to say in that regard at the moment except that on January 15 I directed a letter to the premiers of the various provinces, which I might be allowed to read:

> The speech being read by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of parliament today contains two paragraphs which are of direct interest to provincial governments. I am therefore writing to advise you of them and to ask your co-operation in regard to the proposal in the second. They are as follows:
> "My government will recommend an amendment to the Federal-Provincial Tax Sharing Arrangements Act to extend for another year the increase made last year in the provincial share of personal income tax revenue.
> My government proposes that the entire subject of financial relations between the dominion and the provinces shall receive continued active co-operative study. All provincial governments are being asked to agree to the use, for this purpose, of the machinery of the existing federal-provincial continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters working under the direction of a committee consisting of the Minister of Finance and all provincial treasurers."
> The Minister of Finance will communicate with your minister of finance with a view to arranging a meeting of the proposed committee of ministers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That means there will be no conference.

LIVESTOCK

RABIES—INQUIRY AS TO CONTROL AND COMPENSATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture what steps his department is taking to curtail the increasing spread of rabies disease, and if he would consider seriously paying compensation for those animals lost. In my riding this dread disease has reached alarming proportions, and the number of cases is very serious.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all reported suspected cases of rabies are fully investigated. Exposed animals are quarantined, and where human exposure has taken place medical authorities are immediately advised and given full details. All diagnostic work in connection with animal rabies is handled by the department's animal diseases research institute laboratories. Dog control problems are discussed with municipal authorities, who are urged to establish appropriate control measures. In infected areas free rabies vaccination clinics are held for all pets. Since April 1, 1958, 17 counties of Ontario have been covered by 333 free rabies vaccination clinics at which 92,000 dogs and cats have been vaccinated.

This control work, including the investigation, quarantine and free vaccination clinics, has prevented rabies from becoming established in the dog population to the point where there has not been one case of dog to dog transmission during the current outbreak. This is important as human exposure is usually through dogs.

The reservoir of rabies is established in the wild fox and, as peak fox populations are reached, the incidence of rabies rises proportionately. In order to aid in the destruction of foxes the Ontario government is supplementing various fox bounty programs. Departmental veterinarians supplement regulatory control measures with appropriate publicity and educational programs.

The Animal Contagious Diseases Act provides for the payment of compensation only when animals are ordered destroyed. This authority is provided to prevent the spread of animal diseases. The spread of rabies is dependent upon the introduction of the causative virus of the disease into the flesh of an animal, principally through biting by an infected animal. Because of this mode of transmission the spread of rabies cannot be prevented by ordering the destruction of infected or exposed cattle.

Compensation is normally paid for two classes of diseases, first, when it is necessary to destroy infected and exposed animals to stop the spread of serious animal diseases. Examples of this are foot and mouth disease and hog cholera. Second, compensation is paid in eradication programs for established diseases such as tuberculosis and brucellosis where there are adequate test procedures to identify infected animals. In order to curtail the spread and eventually eradicate such infection, these infected animals are ordered destroyed and compensation is awarded.

The nature of rabies, together with the lack of any diagnostic procedure to confirm the disease in living animals, does not support the destruction of cattle as a disease control measure.

HARBOURS

PICTOU, N.S.—REQUEST FOR USE OF ICEBREAKER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister or his department received any representations to send an icebreaker to clear heavy ice off Pictou harbour in order to permit the shipping of prefabricated buildings from the New Glasgow plant of Eastern Woodworkers Limited and prevent a possible slow-down in operations? If so, what action is being taken in this regard?

[Mr. Harkness.]

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we received such a request, but the ice conditions in Pictou harbour are so severe that it would take two of our biggest icebreakers to perform the task. For the reason that our icebreakers are very heavily committed at the present time, we have suggested other means of moving the goods to the people concerned.

Mr. Robichaud: At extra cost to the company concerned.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

REPORTED INTENTION TO PUBLISH INTIMATE ACCOUNT OF ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister related to the announcement by the Toronto Star that it is to publish an intimate revelation of the activities of the royal household. Has the government considered any action analogous to that taken by the crown in Britain whereby the right of a British paper to publish this particular account has been challenged in the law courts?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The answer is no.

TRADE

RUSSIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister report the state of negotiations with the U.S.S.R. for the extension of the Soviet-Canadian wheat and trade agreement? Can the minister say whether the past quantity of approximately 15 million bushels a year may be provided for?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. The present Canada-U.S.S.R. trade agreement, which includes a commitment by the U.S.S.R. for the purchase of a minimum of 400,000 tons of wheat from Canada each year, or approximately the 15 million bushels mentioned, expires at the end of February. Preliminary discussions between officials of both countries are currently under way in Ottawa looking to a renewal of the trade agreement. We continue to attach great importance to wheat among the commodities which we wish to export to the U.S.S.R. Although I am hopeful that a satisfactory agreement will be reached,

I am not in a position to make any predictions about the outcome of the negotiations now under way.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED SITE FOR BOMARC ANTI-AIRCRAFT MISSILE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. While I recognize that it may not be desirable to give out precise locations of certain types of defence installations, having in mind the importance of the subject matter is the minister now in a position to confirm the Canadian Press story published from coast to coast last week that one of the two Bomarc anti-aircraft missile bases to be established in Canada is to be located near North Bay?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his question, and would reply that several sites in northern Ontario and Quebec, including that mentioned by the hon. member, have been surveyed and soil analyses taken for various defence projects. Until all reports have been received and studied no decision can be made. In any event, it has never been the practice to announce the exact location and purpose of such defence installations.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Friday, January 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. W. H. Jorgenson for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): In rising to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, my first words as the house would expect, must be those of congratulation to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply. I say this very sincerely indeed. It seemed to me that the mover, the hon. member for Provencher, spoke thoughtfully, with restraint and with as much objectivity as one could expect in a situation of this kind. I do congratulate him very sincerely for what was a good initiation of this debate.

I should like also to congratulate the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, especially since this was his maiden speech. He spoke with conviction and with eloquence, and in the concluding part of his speech made an appeal for national unity which I think moved every member of this house. I think, and I am confident, that every member of this house of every party is inspired by the same ideal of national unity to which the hon. member made such eloquent reference.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I may be allowed also on this occasion to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on his return to Canada in full health and vigour from a world tour which must have been to him as stimulating and valuable an experience as it was, I am sure, exhausting. We remember, Mr. Speaker, how great a strain such a tour was on his predecessor, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. Mr. St. Laurent, of course, made his tour after the wear and tear of six years as prime minister which were bound to make the physical stresses of such a tour even greater than they would otherwise have been. The speech from the throne makes a reference to the Prime Minister's visits throughout the commonwealth, and I have no doubt we will be receiving from him, perhaps as he follows me, a report of this trip, which in the words of the speech from the throne served to vitalize our close relations with the commonwealth.

I, Mr. Speaker, intend to use the speech from the throne on this occasion, as the house would expect me to do, to survey and criticize some aspects of government policy. Obviously I cannot cover that very broad field on this occasion, but there will be other opportunities. Today, though I am afraid I shall be speaking at some length, I shall still be selective. The speech from the throne is a list of government proposals and a not very subtle praising of government policy put in the mouth, as is customary, of Her Majesty's representative in Canada by the government of the day which takes the responsibility for the substance of the speech. It gives a most misleading impression, in some cases by giving no impression at all, of the state of the nation in January, 1959, with a very perfunctory reference indeed to some of the most difficult and dangerous situations that have confronted this country for many, many years. You would never know it, Mr. Speaker, from the words used in the speech from the throne.

As was the case last year, the speech is more understandable for what it leaves out than for what it contains. Mr. Arthur Blakely, the columnist for the Montreal Gazette, commenting on the speech the other day referred to the unmentionables that did not appear in it. They are not unmentionables, Mr. Speaker, but they were certainly unmentioned. We on this side of the house, Her Majesty's loyal opposition, propose to mention them during the course of this debate. I begin the process of repairing that omission right now.

The speech begins by a reference to the forthcoming visit of Her Majesty and Prince Philip. As I said the other day, when the Prime Minister mentioned this matter, I am sure we all, on every side of this house, share in the pleasure of this forthcoming visit, and we will participate in the welcome the Canadian people will be delighted to give Her Majesty and Her Majesty's consort. Perhaps at this point I might mention Prince Philip's short visit last autumn. Though it was a short and crowded visit, he managed at that time to visit Springhill and to express on that occasion the shock and grief that all Canadians felt at the disaster which had struck that coal mining town, a disaster which also filled us all with admiration at the indomitable courage shown by those people who were again stricken. The sympathy of all Canadians has gone out to that community, which I once ventured to refer to as "this George Cross community". However, sympathy alone will not be enough. It must be converted, by this parliament, into action which will restore and maintain the economic life of this community.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the speech has a few paragraphs devoted to international affairs. There will, I hope, be an occasion soon to discuss these matters more specifically, because the state of the world at the present time, and the relations of Canadians to that state, would seem to me to warrant as soon as possible a debate on the international situation. The references to that situation in the speech from the throne are so general indeed as to mean very little in relation to the concrete problems that face us, and Canada's position in respect to them.

There is a reference made, of course, to the need for enduring peace. We all appreciate that. It is perhaps realistic to say that during the year there has been little progress, unfortunately, in realizing that need for enduring peace. Certainly the evidence of progress in this regard which is given in the speech from the throne is rather unimpressive. There is some reference to progress in the field of disarmament, but the only illustration given of that progress is the drafting of an agreement for discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests, which is referred to as a hopeful beginning. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that that is the drafting of the technical agreement by the conference of experts at Geneva; but when that technical agreement was discussed on a political level it soon became apparent that it was far easier to reach that kind of technical agreement than it is going to be to reach political agreement, without which technical agreement does not mean much.

There is also in the speech from the throne reference to the desirability of some form of international agreement for the control of outer space. As we look ahead now into dimensions which were hardly considered a year or so ago, I agree that there could be nothing much more important facing us internationally than the persistent and constructive effort made by the United Nations —which is perhaps the only place where it can be made—to bring this new dimension of time and space under some form of international control before the opportunity escapes us. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) and those of his colleagues who worked so hard for Canada at the recent assembly of the United Nations, I think will agree with me that the effort which was begun at this assembly to reach that objective does not warrant—and I am trying to put my words in a responsible way—too much optimism that it is going to be easy to achieve. We on this side of the house will wish them well and will support them in every possible way in any endeavour they can pursue to bring about this result.

As has so often been said in the house, these over-riding questions of peace and war must, if we can possibly bring it about, be discussed and decided in this house on as non-partisan a basis as possible. That does not mean that we shall not have disagreements, because we shall; and I will mention some of them, perhaps, before I finish this afternoon. But we must always at least try to agree, and I am quite sure that we shall be able to agree on objectives even if we are not always able to agree on methods. If we and our friends cannot settle these over-riding questions, as I have called them, of peace and war, none of the other things which I am going to mention this afternoon, immediately important as they are, in the long run matter very much.

I now want to mention some of the domestic problems, questions and issues which arise in our consideration of this speech from the throne and the attitude or lack of attitude of the government toward these problems. This government has now had about a year and seven months in which to show what it can do. It is a time long enough for its method and its manners to become clear, if not its policies. In our view on this side of the house it has shown a genius not for following a straight and steady course but for confusion and contradiction, for wavering instability and, if I may add, a determination to lean positively on one man and negatively on the previous government. Its oscillating and uncertain moves, its lack of steadiness and sureness—and I will have a great deal of documentary evidence to support that statement this afternoon—are in startling and depressing contrast to the vigorous, confident and crusading words which used to pour, if at times a little bit incoherently, from the mouths of its members.

We think now of the ringing declarations of the electoral campaigns, the massive undertakings given so carelessly then to every section of the country and every category of people. We think now of the promises tossed about in those carefree days with such reckless abandon but of which they are now the prisoners. They were promises that ranged all the way from immunity from suffering caused by unemployment to the liberation of the subject peoples of eastern Europe; promises easier to make than to keep, as the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) reminded them recently in a most interesting broadcast he gave in his constituency. I do not know whether or not that broadcast has resulted in his translation from his former seat in the house to his present one at the far end of the chamber.

An hon. Member: He is now in the front row.

Mr. Pearson: We think also of the violent and unrestrained attacks by hon. members opposite in those days on the previous administration for budgetary surpluses, for anti-inflationary measures, for those fiscal and trade and monetary policies which helped to make Canada's economy in those days the envy of the world.

As you will remember, Mr. Speaker, all that was to be ended. It was ended, but not in the way my hon. friends hoped. Taxes were to go down; services were to stay up. How? It was to be done out of the half billion dollars or so which could be saved by eliminating waste and extravagance. Social security payments, provincial grants, farm prices, wages, employment, Canada's prestige in the world, all these things were to go up, without the value of a dollar going down, or, perish the thought, without any trace of that terrible tight money policy, a legacy from the Liberals.

What have we now, Mr. Speaker? This debate will begin the process of making that matter clear and revealing the truth behind the rosy but fanciful words in so many statements issued by members of the government as they greeted the new year. In truth, things are now very different indeed from the vision of Paradise Regained so joyfully proclaimed by the Tories on April Fool's day less than a year ago. Confusion and contradiction, bumbling and fumbling, are the most noticeable features of the activity of the present government, as I hope I shall be able to show in a way which will perhaps convince even some hon. members opposite.

Most of the evidence I shall produce bearing on this statement will deal with economic, financial and defence matters. But there is one matter on which I should like to touch first. As hon. members know, we now have before us a draft bill of rights. It deals with the subject of human rights, in the protection and promotion of which I am sure everyone in this house without exception is united, though we may have strong differences of opinion as to how this can best be done. Certainly no Liberal can be anything but a champion of the rights and liberties of the free man against dictates and pressures, from whatever source they may come. That is what Liberalism has meant through all the years and in all countries; it has fought unjust privilege and power, and in no country more vigorously or more effectively than in our own. The whole record of Canadian history is proof of that fact.

This bill has also now been given a first reading in this house and, indeed, a second reading by public opinion in the country. Its provisions have been scrutinized by a great many highly qualified people with no political interest, in a partisan sense, to disturb their objectivity, and in its present form it has been found wanting. Third, Mr. Speaker it is now clear even from the consideration which has already been given to this bill that in its present form it will not do, just as I hope it is clear that any bill passed on this fundamental matter should in all its terms receive the broadest and most non-partisan support possible in this house.

I hope, therefore, that this draft bill, this bill which was given first reading, may be sent to a joint committee of both houses, as was done previously when this matter was under consideration, so that a report with recommendations can be returned to us by that committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When was the bill under consideration before? When was a bill under consideration before?

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that this matter has twice in recent years been referred to a joint committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This matter.

Mr. Pearson: What I have said is that this bill, which raises the whole question of how this can possibly be done, should be referred to a joint committee so the committee may report and make recommendations which will enable this house and this parliament to take more effective action for the purpose we all desire to achieve than we could ever hope to take through the particular bill which is before us now. I make this proposal in the hope that it may commend itself to the government, and in the hope that this matter may receive broad and non-partisan support in this and in the other house.

I wish now to say a few words, or indeed more than a few words, about the economic picture as it faces us in this country today. It is a picture of recession and unemployment. It is a picture also of inflation and rising prices becoming more and more dangerous. It is, thus, a picture which reflects a dual danger. I do not think it is an exaggeration to say that we are facing the most serious situation since the end of world war II, and perhaps the Minister of Finance will agree with me in this respect.

The Minister of Justice in a speech made a couple of weeks ago, showed once again that this government, which took office in June of 1957, is still hoping in January, 1959 to transfer the blame for its own sins of omission and commission, for its own inadequacy, to the policies of the previous government. No doubt the Prime Minister when he follows me will try to do it too in his usual vigorous, rhetorical way. No doubt he will say, "What did you do in 22 years?"

Mr. Churchill: That is right; what did you do?

Mr. Pearson: I can answer that. It is a good question, and it does not embarrass me a bit. This device has been used by the Prime Minister just to get himself off the hook. He no doubt will say, "Your policies are to blame for everything; we are struggling gallantly against this vile inheritance."

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Somebody says "Hear, hear". I will have some reference to make to this "vile inheritance" in a moment. However, while the Minister of Justice talked as he did, and as the Prime Minister will be talking soon, the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his year-end review argued that our present economic problems—and I quote—are "due to international causes". And the Prime Minister said himself, when he made his report over the air on December 21, that they are part of—and I quote again—"a world-wide economic slow-down". Hon. gentlemen opposite had better make up their minds what is the source of this trouble. I am sorry that business has taken the Minister of Justice out of the house, because I do not like to refer to him in his absence.

An hon. Member: Here he is.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: I am very sorry indeed to deprive the Minister of Justice of that cigarette.

Mr. Fulton: Just finished it, anyway.

Mr. Pearson: No doubt the minister in his speech the other night at the Chateau Laurier had the young Conservatives pale with agitation at the distressing picture of the awful mess inherited by this government.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman says hear, hear—

An hon. Member: The Beacon Arms.

Mr. Pearson: Very well, the Beacon Arms. Now, as to this "awful mess", how did the associate deputy minister of trade and commerce describe it last November 10? The associate deputy minister of trade and commerce holds an appointment made since the election by the right hon. gentleman himself; he is a gentleman—and I say this in no political sense at all—who is very friendly indeed to the present government at this time, and this is how this appointee of the government, the associate deputy minister of trade and commerce, described the "awful mess" inherited by the government. These are his words:

> The 1950's have been years of tremendous development in Canada. In the seven years from 1950 to 1957—

I am amazed that he stopped at 1957; I hope he has not lost his job because of it.

> —Canada's gross national product rose from $18 billion to $31.5 billion, an increase of 75 per cent and in our last boom period of 1955 and 1956, the Canadian economy experienced the most rapid increase in over-all physical output yet achieved in the post-war period.

Well, that is the situation which hon. gentlemen opposite inherited. Perhaps the Minister of Justice ought also to be reminded of the words used by the Minister of Finance in Toronto a year before that, not long after the inheritance was so joyfully received. This is what the minister said not long after this "awful inheritance" was received:

> If this is a national emergency, all I can say is that practically every country in the world would like to have a national emergency like it.

So the national emergency had begun to appear after November, 1957. This desperate device of trying to blame everything on the Liberals has become stale and worthless, and perhaps gentlemen opposite could discard it from now on. Even if their charges were true, and of course they are false as I have shown from the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have not.

Mr. Pearson: —the government has now had more than a year and a half to do something about them.

Mr. Fulton: And we have.

Mr. Pearson: They will be judged by their actions—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —in the last year and in the year ahead, and not by ours ten years ago. I am sure they would like to be judged by our policies ten years ago, but it will not work.

Mr. Pearkes: That judgment has been handed down.

Mr. Pearson: Since the present government insists on continuing to condemn the policies of the previous administration we should perhaps recall what the policies were. It might help the government to follow the right policies in the future; and I offer a review of the policies of the previous administration, as Mr. Humphrey Mitchell used to say, "in a kindly way".

While we were in office, Liberal fiscal, monetary and economic policies were sound, steady—and steadiness is pretty important—flexible and successful. They made it possible for this country to combine startling economic expansion and reasonable monetary stability. They were indeed a contrast to the rock and roll actions of the present government, and as I have already said they helped to make Canada the envy of the world. The previous administration did not hesitate to budget for a deficit when there was a threat of recession. We did not hesitate to tax for a surplus when inflation was the greater danger. How hon. gentlemen opposite roared when they were in opposition, and during elections, against the inequity of a surplus and the immorality of an unbalanced budget, but what they would give now for some of that inequity and some of that immorality.

Mr. Pickersgill: And some of that surplus.

Mr. Pearson: We had then an amazing prosperity in this country with inflation held in check. Indeed, for four and one half years after 1952—and before 1952 because of rearmament in this country and the Korean war, prices did go up but I also know and the figures will show it was not nearly as bad as it is now and is going to be unless the policies of the present government change—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): How can you say such things?

Mr. Pearson: But I also know that for four and one half years after 1952 in a period of great and booming national development there was practically no change in the cost of living. I also know that in the middle of 1956 the cost of living really began to go up. When we were in power at that time and took steps through credit restrictions and budgetary surpluses to meet that danger, what was the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite who formed the opposition of that day? They sneered and jeered at us. And then during the summer of 1957, when the signs of a parallel and serious danger from recession also became clear, what was the new government's attitude toward that danger? Its approach was to get ready for the next election.

This meant in the fall session of 1957 a flat refusal to produce a budget or give a national accounting. It meant also that these people who were later to charge us with ignoring and concealing the recession and with responsibility for it, at that time refused to admit that there was anything seriously wrong. They accused us of exaggerating, for instance, the seriousness of the developing unemployment problem, a charge which now rings hollow and purely partisan. They charged us with not recognizing the recession when it did not exist, those men who later could not see it when they were in the middle of it.

It was only after January 1958, a year ago, when they could not escape the danger any longer that they did admit the recession did indeed exist. But they were far more interested then in distorting and exploiting the facts in order to pin responsibility for it on the Liberals than in doing anything effective to meet it. They alternated between blaming us for the trouble and assuring the electorate that the trouble was not there.

Finally, after the election in June of 1958, the Minister of Finance reluctantly gave an honest account of the recession and its origin. But this was after the election. But at that time he did not give nor did the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) or the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) give, a true picture of business and employment as it was likely to develop in the next year. Indeed, in his budget speech in June of 1958—and not until then, did we get a national accounting—the Minister of Finance had no hesitation, he said, in budgeting for a gross national product of $32 billion or 2 per cent above the previous year and, I quote from his speech, "assuming normal crops and stable prices." And now the minister has the effrontery to claim that his forecast is being confirmed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Exactly.

Mr. Pearson: He has the effrontery to make this claim although any increase in the gross national product will be due entirely to higher prices, according to the bureau of statistics. The minister should know that. If prices have gone up by more than 2 per cent and the gross national product has gone up only 2 per cent, where is the increase? "Subject to stable prices," he said. Why does the minister continue to make these statements which have no relation to the economic facts?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Wholly irresponsible.

Mr. Churchill: You ran away from it all last year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Hon. gentlemen opposite can laugh now at the situation I am attempting to describe, but it is one that requires action, not laughter.

As for employment, we propose to give the facts in this regard in so far as they are available to us, and we are not going to be deterred now as we were not deterred last year by the rather childish charges on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite that in doing so we are spreading gloom and doom. We are spreading facts, something we cannot obtain from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Misleading statements have been and are still being made to obscure the seriousness of the picture. If you relied on the speech from the throne for information about this problem you would be justified in concluding that it did not exist. This omission is consistent with the statements and attitudes of members of the government, and fits in with the Prime Minister's extraordinary electoral declaration that as long as he was prime minister no single Canadian would suffer from unemployment.

A year ago, before the election, the country was being told that the situation was much better and soon all would be well. The Prime Minister assured the people of this country last March that in regard to unemployment—and I quote from one of his speeches—"we have gone over the top and are on the way down." But the Minister of Labour in December 1958, speaking in another election—but it was a by-election—could only tell people on that occasion, though he was more optimistic in some of his other references, that by the middle of next year, 1959, "we will be well out of the woods." In other words, last March we were on the way down into the woods, and we are still in the woods and we are waiting for some indication from the government as to how to get out of them.

Here is another before and after contrast in the words of hon. gentlemen opposite, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Labour again speaking in Winnipeg on March 5, 1958 said—and I quote from the press account of his speech:

> It is our duty to see that no Canadian suffers a single loss of a job this year.

Well, how many Canadians have lost their jobs this year? The minister said the other day—and indeed he repeated the encouragement of some of his colleagues in similar statements; this is certainly quite a retreat from last spring—that the situation would not be worse than last year. If that is the best we can hope from a government which talked so cheerfully a few short months ago about being over the top, and about the crisis of unemployment being over, where is that great billion dollar public works program which, just about a year ago, we were told, was going to put so many people to work. Remember, that was an emergency employment program, not a development program. As such it was put forward to the Canadian people for electoral purposes in eloquent and even evangelistic terms. As such it was criticized by us, as an employment program, as the greatest political hoax in our history, which it was.

Perhaps we will learn in due course exactly how many men have been put to work under this program, especially in the Arctic, by this billion dollar braggadocio. But, said the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his press conference performance a couple of weeks ago:

> Employment is up, even if unemployment is up also.

Well, it certainly should be but it is not, at least according to the last figures. This was the question addressed to the minister by the chairman of this panel:

> But there are still more Canadians out of jobs, walking the streets today—or at least in November—than there were in November a year ago?

This is taken from a verbatim report of the press conference, and it was taken down as it was reproduced over the air. I continue:

> Mr. Churchill: And there were more Canadians employed in November of fifty-eight than in November fifty-seven.

The chairman, who was Mr. Fraser, said:

> The number of employed was a bit lower.
> Mr. Churchill: Well, we haven't the figures in front of us here and I'll accept your word for it.

We have the figures here, Mr. Speaker, the cold, official figures. During the first eleven months the number of unemployed seeking work, in relation to the total labour force, was on the average 61 per cent higher than in the preceding year, which is pretty close to the forecast of 67 per cent made in the so-called hidden report of last year. What is perhaps even more impressive is the fact that during the first eleven months of 1958 total employment was lower than in 1957 on the basis of a month to month comparison except in one month, namely April. Indeed, average total employment for the eleven months was 27,200 below what it was in 1957. I suggest that before he goes on the air again the minister get his facts straight. If he wants them we shall be glad to give them to him.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the problem of unemployment will continue to be serious during the coming months. In 1958, on the average, about 6.5 per cent of the labour force in this country was unemployed and seeking work. In 1959 our labour force should increase by about 2.5 per cent. This means that on the average approximately 9 per cent of our labour force will be unemployed unless the volume of our national production increases. Therefore a rapid upsurge in that production will be required in 1959 to reduce the volume of unemployment to what is considered a normal level. The economic outlook for 1959 presented by the ministers does not contemplate any such rapid pick-up.

On that basis, therefore, we can expect—no one gets any pleasure out of saying this—that unemployment will remain a serious problem in 1959. Yet the speech from the throne barely mentions the problem; it shows no realization whatsoever of its seriousness as a human as well as an economic problem. Because of the seriousness of this problem I would hope that the Prime Minister would consider interrupting this throne speech debate and producing at once in this house the measures which the government proposes to put forward to deal with this matter. The throne speech debate is important, but it can be postponed so that we can receive at once, without delay, the government's proposals to deal with this serious and continuing problem and all the matters that will be related to it.

So much for the unemployment aspect of this problem. What about the parallel danger of inflation, which was also barely mentioned in the speech from the throne? That danger, Mr. Speaker, with all that it means to the welfare of every man and woman in this country, is becoming more and more serious. The consumer price index rose from an average of 121.9 in 1957 to 126.2 in December of 1958, a 3.5 per cent increase, not in a time of boom and development but in a time of recession.

In one year, Mr. Speaker, the old age pensioners have lost about $2 of the $9 increase granted them by this government, and soon that increase will all be gone. I can see the Prime Minister scribbling away. I know what he is going to say. He is going to say, "You did not grant them $9; you gave them $6." The Prime Minister gave them $9, but they are going to lose it all before the next election.

Mr. Starr: Is that a hope on your part?

Mr. Pearson: Certainly it is not a hope, but it is a calculation based on facts, and it is a warning to the government to do something about it.

Mr. Starr: You said it with glee.

Mr. Pearson: If my hon. friend and his government will do something about the cost of living then perhaps the possibility will be avoided. If they do not, in the light of what happened last year, and if that continues, what I have suggested unfortunately may come to pass, will come to pass.

Mr. Starr: Why do you not offer something constructive, then?

Mr. Pearson: That is your job.

Mr. Starr: You have not got anything; you did not have anything in 1954 and in 1955 and you have nothing today.

Mr. Pearson: I would remind my hon. friend that he now belongs to the government, and under the British system of parliamentary responsibility the government of the day is responsible for making proposals to deal with this matter. I, Mr. Speaker, am pointing out the facts of the situation, which the members of the government apparently do not understand, in the hope that if they get possession of the facts perhaps they will do something about correcting it.

Mr. Green: Have you any proposals?

Mr. Pearson: Have you none?

Mr. Starr: You are just as empty as you ever were.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in the face of this serious situation the government seems quite unable to decide what to do or even to make up its mind which is the greater danger, inflation or recession. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), however—and I must be fair to him—has certainly made up his mind. He saw fit to make this quite extraordinary statement, and I refer it to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) too. He will find it interesting. Over the air on January 8 in the particular program I have already mentioned the Minister of Trade and Commerce was asked this question by the chairman of the press conference program:

> Now, which of these two, unemployment or inflation, do you regard as being the greatest threat to our economy during 1959?

The minister replied:

I don't think either will be a threat to our economy in 1959.

Mr. Churchill: I am an optimist.

Mr. Pearson: The minister certainly is an optimist. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), in his speech in Toronto on January 5, 1955, took about the same attitude. He did, of course, mention the fear of inflation but he went on to say, and I quote from the text of his speech:

Inflation has been defined as "too many dollars chasing too few goods."

In the present circumstances, in the light of the experience of recent years, I wonder how many of his experts in the Department of Finance would agree with that as a definition of inflation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Go on. In fairness, read the rest of it.

Mr. Pearson: I am going to read it. The minister went on to say:

There is, however, certainly no scarcity of goods in Canada. The problem with respect to most products and commodities is that we have surpluses of them.

One would also expect to find inflation reflected in the wholesale price index. However, the general wholesale price index is the same as it was a year ago.

That is what the minister said. If he has his speech before him and will look at it he will find those words: "the general wholesale price index is the same as it was a year ago". Well, once again the minister is out in his mathematics and his economic calculations.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the hon. gentleman read the next sentence?

Mr. Pearson: I am quoting now from bureau of statistics figures.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will you read the next sentence?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad if the minister will read the next sentence if he has the text of his speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The next sentence, referring to the present general wholesale price index, was:

It is also 16 points or 7 per cent below the 1951 figure.

That was when my hon. friend was in power.

Mr. Pearson: I am glad to have that on the record but the minister's statement that the general wholesale price index is the same as it was a year ago still stands. That is the statement he made and it has nothing to do with 1951. That statement is contrary to the facts. In December, 1957, according to the bureau of statistics figures, the index was 226.1 and in December, 1958, it was 229.1. Moreover, between October and November, 1958, it increased from 226.9 to 228.5. In announcing that increase the bureau of statistics said, and I quote from its report, not the minister's speech, that it was "the largest increase between these two months since 1950." Surely that is enough to make my words quite accurate that the minister's statement was inaccurate and misleading.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce may not know it, but during this period of abnormal unemployment and of recession there is more and more anxiety being displayed and less and less confidence being shown in the stability of our dollar. Listen to what the president of the Royal Bank had to say on this point a couple of weeks ago. His viewpoint, which I suggest is shared by practically all non-political experts on this matter, is certainly not prejudiced against the government. He had this to say:

This chronic inflation is the greatest single threat to Canada's economic development.

I can hear hon. members opposite say, what would you have done about it? What would you have done about these things had you been in office? What would you have done about recession, unemployment and inflationary dangers? In 1945, Mr. Speaker, we made public a white paper on trade and unemployment. That white paper laid down the principles of economic and fiscal policy by which we were guided during the years when we were in office and which we followed with great success and good results. I ask if there is anything comparable to that guide from the present government.

Under the policy in that white paper which we would have followed—indeed, we mentioned this during the election campaign—there would have been a special budget introduced in September, 1957, with a planned and co-ordinated program of tax reduction to deal with the recession in its earliest stages, following the anti-inflationary measures that we had taken previously and which were condemned in such violent terms by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Perhaps the foremost United States economic expert in this field—I am sure the minister is familiar with his writings—is Dr. Arthur Burns. He has pointed out recently that government action in a situation such as that which we faced in the autumn of 1957 should be quick, co-ordinated, confidence-inspiring, flexible and adequate. These criteria do not apply to anything that has been done by the government in this connection.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, such rot!

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Finance does not like it. He will have the opportunity to get up in this debate and challenge the soundness of my conclusions and the soundness of the conclusions I am putting on the record from non-political economic and financial experts. Dr. Burns also stated—and this confirms the wisdom of the approach our party advocated—in an article he wrote in the Reporter, which is also included in a book he wrote entitled "Prosperity Without Inflation" —if my hon. friend has not read he should—that:

> The emphasis at the start of a recession should ordinarily be on the easing of credit conditions, later on tax reductions for both individuals and businesses, still later on re-scheduling of federal expenditure within totals set by long-term considerations and, only as a last resort, on large public works programs.

Elaborating on this in his article he went on to say:

> It may be useful to observe that a tax reduction would avoid some of the difficulties that often go with a public spending program. Both involve, of course, a deficit but it can make a considerable difference to our economy how the deficit is achieved. A broadly based tax reduction is likely to have prompt effects on private spending during a recession, while the effects of public spending may not come until the recession is over.

The president of the Royal Bank, whom I have already quoted, agreed with this and by inference condemned, as we condemn, the government's approach to recession and inflation when he said in his January statement:

> Last year, as in previous recession years and while the economy was still on the down grade, I urged tax cuts by government and price cuts by business. Instead of tax cuts last year which would have encouraged business activity while reducing pressure on prices, we got increased government spending. Instead of an immediate deficit last year, timed to coincide with the depth of the cycle, we find ourselves today with a delayed deficit which has timed itself to coincide with the present recovery and the emergence of a new inflationary potential.

Mr. Speaker, surely that is the answer to those who say that there would have been no difference between our approach to this problem a year and a half ago and that taken by the government. Those are the principles on which we would have operated and they would have been far more effective in the situation, I believe, than anything the government has tried to do. Anti-recessionary policy based on early tax reductions can be quickly adapted to changing conditions and altered when necessary with very little longterm inflationary effect when the recession ends. It puts the government in a position to balance its budget or to make a surplus as soon as conditions improve. It maintains confidence and minimizes the danger of inflation.

What did this government do? Had they any consistent views or principles or policies to deal with the situation? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that they had not.

Having finally recognized, or some of them having finally recognized the dual and serious nature of the economic problems, they have tried to solve it in a confused, piecemeal, unsteady manner through policies economically unwise but politically, they hoped, popular. This has resulted, not in the end of abnormal unemployment—far from it—but in placing an inflationary time bomb right in the midst of our national economy at the very time when they admit—or some of them do—that inflationary dangers are growing. To the extent that they have consciously followed anti-recession policy, it has been based on longterm permanent expenditures rather than tax cuts, planned and co-ordinated at the early stages of the recession which, as the recession lifted, could have been modified or made to apply retroactively without changing current tax rates.

This would have been sound and sensible economic and financial policy. The government, however, preferred a political approach with unco-ordinated public expenditures which when added up reached a much higher figure than any expert would have said was wise—including, I believe, a lot of experts in the minister's department—and which cannot now be altered, once inflation replaces recession as the major danger. No wonder the government is divided and floundering, wondering which course to follow and meanwhile exhorting everybody else to hold the line. As Mr. Bruce Hutchison pointed out in the current edition of Maclean's magazine, and I quote:

> It is vain for the government to exhort the nation to safe courses, ridiculous for it to tell everybody else to 'hold the line' so long as it is breaking the line itself and generating the very inflation which it solemnly deplores.

So, we ask ourselves that question. Is the policy of this government generating that kind of inflation?

What is the prospect? The prospect is for increasing government expenditures with unemployment still high; deficits not only for this year but for years ahead unless—and this is how the government can get out of it—taxation is sharply increased; expenditures greatly reduced; or inflation is allowed to take its course. Now, there it is. While the government took the decision in the fall of 1957 to increase government expenditures, federal outlays during the fiscal year ended

March, 1958 were not greatly in excess of the previous year under the minister's predecessor. The estimate given by Mr. Harris in 1957 amounted to $5,018 million and the preliminary figures given by the Minister of Finance for 1958 amounted to $5,086 million, and that represents an increase of only 1.2 per cent, in spite of the fact at that time we were in the middle of our recession.

I think, therefore, we are justified in saying that even in the application of their own theories for anti-recessional and non-inflationary policies they were not successful because they acted without vigour at the right time, and that the approach they made at that time along lines which they advocated themselves—and which we still think were wrong lines—meant delayed action. The consequences of this delayed action are now facing us in terms of inflationary pressure.

The Minister of Finance having announced last June in his budget speech that the recession was over, which was not the case, and having recognized last June as I have stated the danger of inflation, and having begun to look for a new course, is now faced as a result of that budget with budgetary expenditures 8.1 per cent higher than in 1957-58 or a minimum of $5,500 million, having regard to that defence budgetary account of which he took advantage last year. Federal cash expenditures, which include non-budgetary disbursements and charges, are expected to increase by 17.3 per cent to a figure of $6,640 million. This is a greater increase than is planned for in the United States, where the increase planned is of the order of 13 per cent. We will have a deficit of hundreds of millions. The minister says he accepts a budgetary deficit of somewhere around $700 million, but there are a lot of people who think it may be more than that. Whatever it may be, it will be hundreds of millions of dollars, and the result of this is that there is now decreasing confidence in the country, in the stability of our dollar, and this means danger. Steps should be taken to remove that danger.

One indication of that fact is contained in the figures for the holding of government bonds by the public. At the end of the year 1958 the Canadian investing public held less government bonds than at the beginning, $7,953 million as against $8,628 million. This occurred in spite of all the exhortations of hon. gentlemen opposite. Far too much money had to be borrowed from the banks, therefore, to meet the deficits which were piling up every month and that has added, as the minister knows quite well, to the inflationary pressures on our economy.

The financial editor of the Montreal Gazette, no member of a political opposition, put the position clearly last autumn when he wrote that the evidence points to a disturbing conclusion that the bond buyer no longer has any confidence in the government. In their preference for corporation bonds, investors are saying in effect that they no longer have confidence in the government to redeem its commitments. The integrity of Canada's credit has never been questioned before as it is being questioned now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does my hon. friend share that view?

Mr. Pearson: I think there is a real danger—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will my hon. friend tell me whether he shares the view expressed in that article?

Mr. Pearson: I am giving my view in this speech and the words will be on record in Hansard.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You dodged the question.

Mr. Pearson: I say, Mr. Speaker, that these are impressive and serious words coming from the editor of a publication which has no reason to adopt anything but a friendly attitude toward the government in a matter of this kind. If that kind of evidence is available, is it not well that it should be made clear so the government will do something about it and so that next year this particular gentleman may be able to write something else?

But, says the minister, look at our amazingly successful conversion operation. Well, I have looked at it, as many others have. I have looked at it long and hard, and with others on this side I shall have something to say about it later as the session develops. I shall content myself with saying now that it certainly was not the dazzling success the minister thinks it was.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What are you waiting for? Why don't you say what you have to say about it now?

Mr. Pearson: The minister says, why don't I deal with it now? The fact is I am trying to deal with the inadequacies, the sins of omission and commission of this government, and if I deal with all of them at this time I shall have to go on for about a week. Furthermore, some of my friends on this side of the house would like to take part in this debate. They will have something to say on the conversion loan so that my hon. friend will not be disappointed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition pointed at the C.C.F.

Mr. Pearson: Some of my friends on my right do not belong to the C.C.F. I have no doubt also that the C.C.F. members will have something to say about it. In this respect we may find ourselves in some measure of agreement.

The hard fact is that government credit has fallen, financially—and these are my views; the minister asked for them—as well as politically. If the government does not take strong and steady action soon—fiscal action primarily—to restore the position, to renew and strengthen faith in our financial future, we may well reach a very dangerous situation, a "crisis of confidence", with rising prices, rising costs, rising deficits and, along with these, rising unemployment. At present the only thing going down is the credit and the prestige of the government which promised its way into power and now is wondering how to offset the deficit which has followed its promises and policies by the most painless fiscal means.

The Canadian people and the Canadian parliament have the right to know in what direction the government is moving on the economic front. In order to clear up the confusion which exists in the country at the present time, ministers should stop making the kind of contradictory and irresponsible statements which they have been making up till now and which indeed destroy public confidence.

Moreover, the government must decide to live up to its responsibilities for more than is indicated in the speech from the throne. As I have said previously, the speech from the throne hardly mentions the problem of unemployment and makes only a vague reference to the steps that might have to be taken at some date in the future to preserve the value of our currency. The only inference that can be drawn from this fact is that according to the government as well as the Minister of Trade and Commerce in particular Canadians are not going to suffer either from unemployment or from inflation in 1959. That is certainly not a realistic assessment of the current economic situation.

The responsibility of the government, however, is not limited to the presentation of a proper and serious appraisal of present economic conditions. That is only part of its responsibility. We are also entitled to get an authoritative statement on the broad policy principles that the government intends to apply in order to achieve a greater degree of economic stability. Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) will favour us with that kind of statement when he rises to take part in this debate.

On September 4, 1958, in this house I urged the Minister of Finance to issue such a statement which would have greatly contributed, I would have hoped, to the restoration of public confidence. The minister did not see fit to do anything like that. Perhaps the Prime Minister will now do so. Surely this is the time for him to put his vision to work. Labour leaders, the financial community, businessmen and the whole Canadian people have the right to expect from him, and now, a formal declaration on employment and prices. What are the major objectives that he and his government are trying to achieve in the field of economic stability? Are they in favour of full employment? Are they determined to preserve the value of our dollar, not only in some distant future but now? How does the Prime Minister intend to achieve those objectives? Is he still in favour of increasing longterm government expenditures in order to fight unemployment? What has he in mind to restore the confidence of the public in the value of government bonds? Is he prepared when inflationary pressures are threatening to accept monetary and credit restrictions, higher interest rates, budgetary surpluses and higher taxation? These are questions which I am putting forward to the government and which I think are justified by the seriousness of the situation. I am hoping that when the Prime Minister rises to speak he will answer them.

The Prime Minister owes to the Canadian public immediate and specific answers to these questions. He surely would be the last person to deny that there is at the present time a deep concern in our country over these basic issues. He cannot delay his answers on behalf of his government without contributing to the worsening of public confidence; and once that confidence is destroyed, it will be extremely difficult indeed to restore it. In other words, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Prime Minister—and I want to emphasize this matter in the strongest way possible—to make now a formal declaration on the economic rights and responsibilities of the Canadian people at this time and, more than that—because without this such a declaration would not be of any great importance—on what they can expect and are entitled to get from their government in terms of employment and price policies. The Prime Minister cannot escape that most important responsibility because no one else now can speak with authority for his government. I suggest that it is up to him to speak.

Closely related to what I have been saying—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Before my hon. friend deals with another subject would he permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would he be prepared to answer the question to which he alluded during the course of his remarks as applying to my colleague? Which in his view is the more serious problem facing the Canadian people today, unemployment or inflation?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is a very easy question to answer when he introduced it by referring to my reference to his colleague. His colleague indeed answered it. His colleague said that neither would be a threat to the Canadian economy in 1959. I say that both will be a threat to the Canadian economy. Of course, it is quite ridiculous to make that kind of a mathematical comparison as to which is the more serious, and say one is 57 per cent and one is 43 per cent.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then why did my hon. friend raise it?

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Finance ought to know that both are serious.

Mr. Churchill: You did not approve of the loaded question I was asked.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister said neither was important.

Mr. Churchill: I did not say that neither was important.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes; you did.

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Trade and Commerce said that I misquoted him.

Mr. Churchill: No, I did not say that; I said you did not approve of that loaded question.

Mr. Pearson: We will let the matter stand at that. Now may I say a few words about the trade position.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Does my hon. friend not think his treatment of the question is rather misleading in view of his answer?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): An amazing question from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend will have an opportunity to take part in this debate.

On the matter of trade, may I say this. It is quite true that exports are holding up and that is an encouraging feature in the present situation. For the first eleven months exports have, of course, declined but the decline was only about $5 million. But one of the important things about this matter, Mr. Speaker, is that we cannot maintain prosperity and employment in this country on a basis of stability in exports. They must keep going up. A decline of $5 million is only a small amount but it is a decline. Exports must expand if we are to maintain economic prosperity in this country.

The other thing about this figure—and it is worth putting on the record—is that while exports have held up, the nature of the statistics with regard to the export trade will show that if it had not been for a few commodities we would have been in trouble there. The most important commodity perhaps is uranium where there was in 1958 over 1957 an increase of exports of $132 million, practically all to the United States. This was because of an arrangement, a contract, made by the previous government with the United States government under which uranium exports are going into that country. That arrangement comes to an end if it is not renewed and the option taken up in 1962, I think it is. I certainly hope that this will be done; I know the government is doing everything it can to have the option taken up.

Couple the increase in cattle exports, which is about $50 million, with the increase in wheat sales due in substantial part to the fact that the Canadian taxpayer financed more wheat exports this year than ever before in history, and the value of aircraft exported which increased from $21 million in 1957 to $100 million in 1958, due again, I suppose—and the minister will correct me if I am wrong—largely to the Mutual Aid shipments of aircraft to Europe, which is also being financed not by the importer but by the Canadian taxpayer, and one finds that these sources alone which I have mentioned showed an increase of $330 million in our export trade, and we would be in a bad way without this increase.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have been boasting in recent statements about the decline in our trade deficit in 1958, especially with the United States. They have not given any particular reason for this decline, or explained how it was brought about, and I will be glad to repair that omission now. Without such an explanation many people relying on election promises will undoubtedly have thought that this reduction in our unfavourable balance of trade with the United States was due to government policy. The real explanation, of course, is quite clear. In the first place, the reduction in our trade deficit is not due to an expanding trade; it is due to the fact that our imports went down far more than our exports. Our imports dropped for the first nine months of 1958—and I understand from figures that came out today which brought the period up to 11 months that the picture is not changed—show that the import drop is 11.3 per cent, whereas the export drop was very small. Our unfavourable balance with the United States was reduced because, and only because of that fact.

It is interesting to see how this reduction in imports is distributed among our various markets. According to the dominion bureau of statistics, imports from the United States went down by almost 15 per cent. Could that possibly be the diversion, the ill-starred and ill-begotten diversion, promised once by the Prime Minister? I do not think so, as the figures will show. During the third quarter of 1958 imports from the United Kingdom declined by 7.6 per cent and for the first nine months of that year they were 1 per cent lower than in 1957. Imports from the commonwealth fell by about 15 per cent for the first nine months of 1958 and by 20.8 per cent in the third quarter of that year. That is strange. We diverted 15 per cent of our imports from the United States. They did not go to the commonwealth, because the commonwealth countries received almost 15 per cent less—to be exact 14.4 per cent.

Where did our imports increase most? From Arabia and from Japan—petroleum from Arabia and textiles from Japan. That is the only group of countries which showed an increase in sales to Canada, and the improvement in their position is very impressive indeed. Was this the direction—to Japan and Arabia—that the so-called diversion was supposed to take? And while we lost 15 per cent of our imports from the United States, which helped to reduce our unfavourable balance, did we receive more imports from the United Kingdom? The answer is: no. But did the United States? The figures which came out a week or so ago showed that United States imports from the United Kingdom increased by about 15 per cent. What a strange result of the diversion of trade policy of the present government.

I think all this justifies my saying that the trade policy of the government, like other aspects of its policy, is wavering and uncertain and in no respect is this better shown than in the way this 15 per cent figure has worked itself out. It has also shown itself in the government's tariff policy. During the last session the government moved in the direction of greater protection. Some tariff increases were effected, especially on wool products, our main item from the United Kingdom, to make clear, no doubt that the diversion policy had been abandoned. Moreover, substantial amendments to the Customs Act were made which gave wide arbitrary powers to the cabinet and to the Minister of National Revenue to establish and increase the valuation of imported goods for duty purposes.

The United States government, we know now, vigorously and formally protested against this legislation. Its first note of June 26th, as we know now, was not even acknowledged. Its second note of protest, dated September 3, was not answered until October 24. In the debate in the House of Commons on this very subject last September 3, the minister had before him, I presume, one note or two notes of protest from the United States government bearing on this very piece of legislation.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister had no notes before him when this was brought up.

Mr. McIlraith: His colleagues had.

Mr. Nowlan: His colleagues had not either.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, these notes have since been published. One is dated June 26 and the other is dated September 3 and they both deal with anti-dumping legislation which the Minister of National Revenue brought before this House of Commons. The minister says now that he did not have those notes of protest before him. Surely a government which, according to its own words, is so careful about its relations with the United States, so insistent on consultation on questions of interest between the two countries, especially with regard to trade questions, should get around to answering a United States note of this importance within four months; and surely this government could refer such notes to the minister who is introducing legislation in the House of Commons dealing with this subject. But now the minister says he never had the note. I was going to complain because he had not put it before the house when the bill was before us, but I understand now that he did not know.

In the reply which it eventually made in October, this government gave a clear undertaking to the United States, four months later, after the bill had passed. I wonder what would have happened if the United States had treated us like that down in Washington. The government gave a clear undertaking that the new section 38 of the Customs Act would not be used against the United States. But how is it to be used? Is there to be discrimination in the application of that particular clause? Is there to be discrimination against the commonwealth in its application? It is not to be used against the United States. But if it is to be used against anybody else, then there is discrimination.

This brings me to the question of the commonwealth conference held last September in Montreal. This conference, I might interject at this point, was one of a number of commonwealth conferences held since world war II but this was not on the prime ministerial level. There was nothing unique about it in its assembling or in its results. It included in its communique the following paragraph which I know the house will listen to with great interest because they may have forgotten it, and it also appears in the speech from the throne:

"A large measure of agreement was reached on trade and economic matters. This has lead to far-reaching decisions on the part of the United Kingdom and other countries to restore convertibility of their currencies and to remove restrictions on imports.

In other words, it was the commonwealth conference in Montreal that impelled the French government, the Belgian government, the German government and the governments of various other countries to restore convertibility. That, Mr. Speaker is another grossly misleading and inaccurate statement.

The conference in Montreal was, of course, a useful meeting as commonwealth meetings always are. For one thing, as the chairman is reported to have said, "It is useful that we ministers have got to know one another." When we were in power we had more commonwealth conferences including prime ministerial conferences in a period of ten years than were ever held in all our previous history.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And you dragged your feet at every one of them.

Mr. Churchill: You scarcely mentioned the commonwealth.

Mr. Pearson: While this recent conference was a very useful one indeed it had about as much to do with recent European convertibility developments as had the revolution in Cuba. If this conference—in the words of the speech from the throne—"led to" recent European convertibility moves why did the Canadian-United States conference communique issued on January 7, only a couple of weeks ago—a little more honest in its assessment of the commonwealth conference in its assessment of the relationship of the Montreal conference to convertibility—merely state that the Montreal agreement foreshadowed moves toward convertibility which is a very different thing from saying it led to convertibility developments.

We were told for months before the commonwealth conference assembled that it was to be a great commonwealth trade meeting.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A trade and economic conference.

Mr. Pearson: It was to be a great commonwealth trade conference primarily for the purpose of expanding commonwealth trade.

Mr. Pickersgill: And recovering markets.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: Yes, and for the purpose of recovering markets that had been lost after ten years during which export figures in Canada reached the highest peak in the history of this country. As a result of this meeting these markets were to be recovered and commonwealth trade was to be expanded.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is.

Mr. Pearson: At this particular meeting, in fact, very little was accomplished in the field of trade. As a commonwealth problem, according to the reports, it seems to have been given extremely inadequate discussion. Certainly the British made no effort at this meeting to repeat their earlier free trade offer. They had been bitten once and were shy a second time. I know that when the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance speak they will probably point out that some United Kingdom import controls were removed with respect to newsprint, canned salmon and machinery from all dollar countries. But as the Ottawa correspondent of the Financial Post pointed out at the time, September 27:

Undoubtedly a good thing for Canada and the United States and Britain; but no bold leap into the unknown. It was more like tidying up the books since salmon quota had been set high at $4,500,000 and licenses for newsprint and most machinery had not been refused for some time.

And what did the Canadian delegation do at this conference to show its devotion to the removal of trade barriers? It promised not to increase the British preferential tariff rates on many products which were bound under GATT procedures. Moreover, and I consider this most important, it is reported that the Canadian government have undertaken not to use the new anti-dumping clauses in the Customs Act against British products although the Prime Minister refused to make such an assurance public because of the implications it would have in the United States. If this report is inaccurate perhaps the Prime Minister will take this opportunity of denying it. If it is true that the British have been given any assurance whatever that the anti-dumping provisions will not be used against them then the amendments we made to the Customs Act last session mean nothing at all because with respect to the recent meeting between United States and Canadian cabinet ministers held a couple of weeks ago the following paragraph appeared in the communique:

The United States representatives set out the grounds for their concern as to the amendments made last year in the Canadian Customs Act. They were assured by the Canadian ministers that it is not intended to apply the new provisions of the act in either a discriminatory or an arbitrary manner and that consultation would be held wherever feasible before applying the new provisions.

If these provisions are not to be applied against the British and if they are not to be applied against the United States in a discriminatory way, they cannot be applied against any one.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is silly. Why do you go on building up straw men and knocking them down?

Mr. Pearson: Will the Minister of Finance rise to his feet and deny that any arrangement, of any kind, formal or informal, was reached with the United Kingdom at this conference which affected the application of the provisions of the Customs Act against the United Kingdom? We are interested in knowing if any assurance, formal or informal, was given concerning the application of this law.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, of course there never was any thought at any time of giving discriminatory or arbitrary application to the provisions that were introduced by way of amendment last session. That was stated in this house at the time by my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) and if it had not been for misleading statements uttered in this house by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) it never would have entered into the minds of the ministers of any other government that those provisions would have been given or would have been capable of being given any arbitrary or discriminatory application.

Mr. Pearson: That is a most interesting statement but it has nothing whatever to do with my question. I will repeat my question and perhaps the minister can set our minds at rest on this matter. I asked him whether at that conference in Montreal through a letter, a conversation, a note or in any other way formal or informal, any assurance or undertaking was given to the British government that the anti-dumping provisions of this act would not be applied against them? I am not talking about discrimination. I am talking about the application of the provisions.

Mr. Crestohl: Especially section 38.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, there was not and could not be any assurance given to anybody that the provisions of the act would not be applied according to their terms. They were not directed against any country. They are not to be applied against any one country, nor is any country absolved from the application of them in any case that falls within the terms of the act. It is perfectly clear.

Mr. Pearson: I would hope that in view of the interest that has been created in this matter the minister at a very early opportunity would table any communications that might exist between himself and any member of the British delegation. He would remove all doubts by tabling any documents that might exist. I am sure he would be able to obtain permission from his opposite numbers in London for this purpose.

I can conclude my remarks on the subject of trade by saying the government started with a policy of diversion, and then moved in the direction of a policy of protection and is now reaching toward a policy of confusion. As for us, we remain firm and faithful to the one trade policy which has been Liberal from the beginning, a policy of expansion.

Mr. Churchill: How many more sections have you?

Mr. Pearson: I have a great deal more; I am sorry, but after all, if the ministers will make those contradictory and confusing statements we must take advantage of the very first opportunity we have to try to clear the air.

Mr. Churchill: You are not being very successful.

Mr. Pearson: I am now coming to a matter where the air certainly needs to be cleared, namely defence. Where do we stand on this question? Nobody knows. However, we will be told before March 31 whether we are to proceed with the CF-105 project. That is all we know. Before March 31 we will be told. Let us look into this Mr. Speaker. The decision to initiate this project was made some years ago by the previous government. According to the Prime Minister's statement—it was a government statement but it was issued in the name of the Prime Minister; most government statements are—

Mr. McIlraith: One man government.

Mr. Pearson: According to the Prime Minister's statement of last September, and I quote from it:

> Since the project began, revolutionary changes have taken place.

He meant, of course, changes in defence strategy and concepts. That is true. Furthermore, the previous government, when it decided to initiate this project, decided also to review it every six months and to decide, in the light of that review, whether to proceed further. So far as we know—in fact, it is quite obvious—there has been no such decision—if there has been we have not heard about it—one way or the other by the present government in the last 18 months. Perhaps I should not be sure about this because the confusion and the contradictory statements of spokesmen for the government have been such that no one knows where the matter stands. I call to witness as impressive evidence of this confusion and, indeed, as one cause of it, the statements of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) himself. Before the estimates committee of this house on July 4, as reported on page 325 of the minutes of that committee, the minister said:

There are, however, important factors necessitating the continued use of manned interceptors in the air defence system for many years, indeed—

And I repeat this:

—indeed for as far as we can see into the future.

Apparently the minister could not see as far as September. Certainly at that time in July before the committee the minister visualized the Royal Canadian Air Force interceptor squadrons on this continent being re-equipped with Arrows, when he said, as reported at page 338 of the minutes of the estimates committee on July 7:

Some time this fall—

That was last fall. I continue:

Some time this fall—

Not March 31, 1959—

—the government must reach a decision as to whether or not it is going to go ahead with the CF-105 or look elsewhere for the type of aircraft which can carry out the function which the CF-105 was developed to carry out. That decision will have to be taken some time this fall.

That is when it should have been taken. I go on:

I am convinced, in my own mind, that we are still faced with the threat of the manned bomber, and that with the developments which we believe the Russians are doing in perfecting, or improving, their manned bombers—we understand that the Russians are building manned bombers—an aircraft of the CF-105 type will be required.

Having just said, I think the day before, as far as he could see into the future it would be required, then for some reason or other the minister's timing and his views both changed. As far as timing is concerned all we know is that nothing has happened. As far as his views are concerned, according to the Vancouver Province, the minister told an audience in Chilliwack on October 17—I will be glad to send him the newspaper reference if he would care to have it—that the CF-105 —this was only October—had outlived its usefulness before it was fully developed.

There was, however, another double reverse play on November 25 when the minister told reporters that he agreed with the conclusion of Air Marshal Slemon that the air force would require a manned interceptor for some years to come. That could only mean the CF-105 or an United States machine for which the Canadian plane would be scrapped, and the minister indicated at that time he did not think very much of that alternative. Perhaps the minister's change of heart in October and his confusion in the matter go back to the Prime Minister's statement of September 23, which certainly made the minister's observations in July to the parliamentary committee meaningless and misleading. I suggest the Prime Minister have a good look at it.

On this September date the Prime Minister issued an important, if somewhat cloudy, statement on the revision of the Canadian air defence program. Included in that statement was this paragraph:

The government has concluded that missiles should be introduced into the Canadian air defence system and that the number of supersonic interceptor aircraft required for the R.C.A.F. air defence command will be substantially less than could have been foreseen a few years ago,—

And then, these words:

—if in fact such aircraft will be required at all in the 1960's, in view of the rapid strides being made in missiles by both the United States and the U.S.S.R.

The Prime Minister in September said that it was doubtful whether those aircraft will be required at all in the 1960's. The Minister of National Defence told a committee of the House of Commons that they will be required in the future as far as he could see. The Prime Minister's statement went on to say that the government would not put the CF-105 into production at this time but would not discontinue its development—and I quote:

—with the international outlook as uncertain and tense as it is.

It is very hard indeed to believe that this current tense international situation was responsible for such an ambiguous and merely delaying decision, especially as, according to the Prime Minister:

Even under the best of circumstances (the CF-105) will not be available for effective use in squadrons until late in 1961.

That same September statement announced the termination of the contracts for the development of the fire control system and the missile system which were to be part of the CF-105, and announced their replacement by United States equipment.

This September statement, though ambiguous, was widely and naturally interpreted as the end of the CF-105, a lingering death, if you like, but a death. It caused uncertainty, bewilderment, disappointment and the loss of some experts to the United States of America. It also caused the deputy commander of NORAD, an air marshal of the Royal Canadian Air Force, to intervene in November in the matter, in vigorous public defence of the CF-105, and take strong issue with the policy that had certainly been read into the government statement. I wonder what would have happened to that official of the Canadian government if he had been an official of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and had been criticizing the United States government's choice of a missile. He would have been reprimanded, but not so in this case. Air Marshal Slemon's statement was widely interpreted as a contradiction of government defence policy on this matter, and that is to us a reasonable interpretation to come to. The government, or at least the Minister of National Defence, seemed at least to welcome the statement. Confusion is now worse than ever, and therefore this plane, which the minister stated in October had outlived its usefulness, basing his observations no doubt on the Prime Minister's statement, suddenly became something else again.

We were again told by the minister in November that a manned interceptor would be required for years to come. So A. V. Roe and Company took heart and the workers at A. V. Roe and Company took heart even though another part of the minister's statement on the same day when he was talking to the press emphasized that there was no change from the policy in the September statement made by the Prime Minister which was interpreted as meaning the end of the CF-105.

Mr. Speaker, no wonder people wondered what was going on and were baffled by all this confusion in a matter of such vital importance. What then should be done about defence and particularly about the decision, the implications of which will be so far-reaching, to go ahead with or to abandon the CF-105, a decision which has strategic, technological, economic and the broadest political implications, especially in the bearing it will have on our relations with the United States of America and on the future of our aircraft industry? The sole responsibility for the policy decision in this matter, as in defence policy generally, remains in the hands of the government, and they should have met it before now. That is the tradition of British parliamentary government and we on this side do not wish, as we did not wish when we were in office, to depart from it in favour of making policies through parliamentary committees.

Nonetheless, decisions made by the government have to be submitted to parliament for approval or disapproval. Every member has his own responsibility in this regard and, not least, members of the opposition. This is especially the case when we face decisions of such far-reaching importance as those which are facing us now in the realm of defence policy. Surely, therefore, it is desirable, surely it is essential that we should be in possession of every fact that bears on this matter, subject, of course, to the overriding claims of security. We have had little or no information from the government up to the present but the press is full of statements from officers, active and retired, from industries and unions and from experts and non-experts dealing with this matter. The confusion that has resulted has not been cleared but, as I said, has even been confounded by official statements by spokesmen of the government.

Therefore I suggest to the government that there should be set up as soon as possible a special but small parliamentary committee—it could be a subcommittee of the committee on estimates; perhaps that would be better—to give this question the kind of searching and complete examination which it has not yet received, and give it immediately. I know that the minister would have to give up a good deal of time to a committee or subcommittee of this kind because he is the one on whom we would have to rely most for information and views, although other witnesses should be available as well. This, Mr. Speaker, would not be a delaying action because the decision is not going to be given to us until March 31. When this decision is made, surely members of the house, before they are called on to consider this matter with all its far-reaching implications and eventually approve or disapprove the decision, should have possession of those facts, and surely the best way to get possession of them is through the kind of parliamentary committee or subcommittee I have mentioned which I would hope would begin to meet almost at once.

I know that you will say that this is an unusual procedure. It is, but the situation is unusual. We are reaching, if we have not already reached, a cross-roads in our defence policy. The developments of the past year or two have been very important indeed. Surely this parliament, representing the Canadian people, cannot afford to consider policy in this matter except within the context and the compulsion of these developments in the last few years. That is why I suggest we must have the facts if we are to find the best and the broadest-based solution for a problem which is of vital importance to our whole national future. The responsibility is on the government. We as the House of Commons cannot take that responsibility even if we desired to do so. It is our responsibility in making up our minds as to the rightness of the government decision to know the facts, and I suggest that perhaps the best way of getting them is by the procedure I have mentioned.

You will be glad, Mr. Speaker, to know that I am getting towards the end of my bill of indictment but I cannot forego the pleasure and responsibility of giving the house some other examples of confused and muddled policies. Turning to agriculture and fisheries, I hope we will have an ample and adequate early opportunity to discuss agricultural matters. All I will do on this particular occasion in dealing with the confusion with regard to this particular aspect of government policy is to compare the emotional appeals of yesteryear of the Prime Minister for "parity, not charity" with the disillusioning warning of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) in Ottawa and in Springfield, Manitoba, a few weeks ago that if the farmers did not reduce their own production in the face of mounting surpluses, down would go support prices.

Then there are freight rates, so vitally important to agriculture and to all producers, indeed, to all Canadians. On November 25 the government announced its approval of a 17 per cent increase in freight rates to take care of wage increases and we were told that this was necessary to avoid a crippling railway strike. That was a crisis all right but how did it become a crisis?

The question of wage increases for railway employees did not arise last November when a strike threatened and when the provinces appealed to the government against the increase in freight rates which then seemed one way of avoiding it. That problem arose on November 12, 1957, when the demand for a wage increase was first made by the non-operating unions. It assumed a definite form in July, 1958, when the conciliation board recommended a specific increase in wages.

During the whole long period when these negotiations were going on the government must have been aware that ultimately it might be called on to take some positive action to settle the matter. However, nothing was done and the matter was allowed to drift. That drifting converted a problem into a crisis which the government has postponed by granting the kind of horizontal increase it had refused previously and against which the Prime Minister had inveighed during the election campaign a year ago.

Then, having got themselves into this contradictory position, they sought to escape from its economic and political consequences, because this decision would have a discriminatory effect against certain parts of the country, the west and all the Atlantic provinces. They hoped to escape from this consequence by promising—it is in the speech from the throne —some form of subsidy to alleviate this discrimination. So now we have a horizontal increase plus a proposed subsidy, plus another application from the railways for a further horizontal increase. Where do we go from here?

It is not possible for me to mention freight rates without a reference to one industry—I wish I could refer to many others—which is languishing largely because of freight rates. I refer to the coal industry. Apart from unemployment caused by the Springhill tragedy, we now have a lay-off beginning in February of 4,000 other miners in Nova Scotia owing to lack of orders for coal. We on this side, Mr. Speaker, repeatedly warned the government last session of this unhappy possibility but our warnings went unheeded.

Then perhaps I should not omit to say one word about the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough). There has been contradictory thinking between ministers regarding immigration policy, and indeed confusion within the mind of the minister who should be clearest about it. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) boasted the other night that his government, amongst other things, has saved us from all kinds of trouble by cutting down immigration, but he did this at the very time the minister of immigration was quoting with approval the view that there is little or no connection between immigration and unemployment. They had better get together on that.

Mr. Fulton: It is because we are cutting down; that is why.

Mr. Pearson: They seem to be a little remote from the practical difficulties and dangers of the times.

May I just say one word about art, about this ill-starred venture of the government into the field of art which has brought a measure of humiliation to our country and some very bad publicity. The question here is not whether it is wise or unwise to buy certain pictures for the national gallery; that is not the point. The question is the permitting of a responsible official of this government, and he must surely have had cabinet or at least ministerial approval, to make an offer which was later repudiated. As I have said the results look pretty humiliating in the columns of not only the Canadian press but of the foreign press and did no good for the reputation of this government.

There are other things of the same kind at which I should like to take a look. There is external affairs, but I shall have another opportunity to do that. I cannot, however, refrain from mentioning at this moment the welcome given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) in Seattle to the presence of Red China at a summit conference at a time when the Prime Minister in Karachi and the Minister of Finance in Tokyo were throwing cold water on any change of Canadian policy regarding that government.

This leads me to my final subject for this afternoon, United States-Canadian relations. I want to touch on this matter, and I can only touch upon it because it is a question of the greatest possible importance. I do so at this time only in the context of government fumbling and indecision in policy. There will be other opportunities, I hope, for a discussion of the more general and substantive aspects of those relations about which so much is being said these days. I will content myself now with the general aspect of the question and by expressing my own hope that we, in Canada, should always consider and discuss this vital relationship with a mature sense of responsibility, and with a full realization of the fact that the destinies of our two countries on the same continent, in a dangerous world, are inseparable. We may wish that it were not so, but wishing will not alter the facts; yet the facts should influence and, perhaps at times, govern both policies and words.

When in opposition my hon. friends opposite had some hard and harsh words to say about these relations. They referred to "Texas buccaneers"; "U.S. domination"; "sell-out to Washington"; "the menace of American financial control"; we were becoming hewers of wood and drawers of water for our neighbours; that we were being throttled and sold out. We remember that talk. Then came the realities and the hard facts of official responsibility, and the talk changed overnight, as well it might. In fact, the Minister of Trade and Commerce in Chicago last November, in one of the first indications of the sober second thought that has come from a member of this government, admitted, and I quote:

> The misunderstanding that has arisen over this matter can be traced to speeches made in election campaigns for the express purpose of embarrassing political opponents.

Mr. Churchill: I was referring to your speeches.

Mr. Pearson: The minister never made a truer statement. He must have been reading some of his old speeches.

Mr. Churchill: I was referring to yours.

Mr. Pearson: The minister must remember that we were on the receiving end of that kind of talk from him and his colleagues, that we were selling out Canada to the United States, and when we tried to put this relationship into perspective as befitted the importance of the subject we were the victims of some pretty vigorous and bitter assaults from the hon. member and others. They ought to go back and read their speeches in Hansard.

Now, what does the minister say? He said this in Chicago:

> There is neither alarm nor fear in Canada over the growth of U.S. capital.

Did he talk like that four years ago? The Secretary of State for External Affairs, speaking at Seattle on the same day, was even more expansive. He had this to say:

> For the United States, Canada has no fear, no jealousy, no suspicion. On the contrary, we have the positive attitudes of co-operation, fairness, justice and freedom.

The first sentence in that statement might be difficult to prove to every Canadian's satisfaction. He might have difficulty in persuading everybody in Canada that we have no worry about some aspects of United States policy. I am glad he put it that way. However, the second sentence which he said, and which I have quoted, seems to me to be entirely admirable. It is an admirable sentence which expresses sentiments in which we on this side of the house share and upon which I congratulate the minister. I wish he had been in this House of Commons during the debates of two or three years ago.

Even more interesting were the political words used in New York by the Prime Minister at the non-political Pilgrims dinner on October 28 last. Here is what they are according to the text of his speech as circulated by his own office:

> Beneficial changes have taken place in these relations (between Canada and the United States) since I spoke at Dartmouth fourteen months ago. The plants in the garden are being more carefully nurtured;—

I enjoy these interruptions and that applause, Mr. Speaker, makes my next observation so much more implicit.

> The plants in the garden are being more carefully nurtured; they are being trained up and guided, not left to grow jungle wild.

Well, what evidence did the Prime Minister give of this spectacular change from Liberal times when the flowers in the garden were growing jungle wild? Here is the evidence that he gave. Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles have visited Ottawa. Well, they have done that before. It is true that the President had not previously made a speech criticizing diversion—Conservative policy—and praising expansion—Liberal policy—as the essential foundation of wise trade policy. This was the first evidence that the gardening was being more skilfully done.

The other evidence that he offered to his audience was that there were now three high level Canadian-United States legal committees. One of these is the parliamentary-congressional committee, proposed first by the Hays-Coffin committee of the United States House of Representatives, taken up by the Canadian government and approved by this parliament. I hope that committee, which has had its first meeting under your distinguished chairmanship, Mr. Speaker, so far as the Canadian delegation is concerned, will prove to be a useful and valuable piece of machinery. I understand that the first meeting was a preliminary one and that the next one will take place six months from now in Ottawa. We wish this committee well.

The second committee referred to in this gardening activity was a defence ministerial committee which I believe has not yet met at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, come up to date.

Mr. Pearson: Or if it has met—and we have not been brought up to date on this matter by the minister—it was a meeting in Paris in connection with the NATO council meeting between the Canadian Minister of National Defence and the United States secretary of defence. If there has been any meeting at all, that was the meeting, or the minister will perhaps correct me if I am wrong. I would remind the minister that that kind of meeting has taken place every year that we have had a NATO annual meeting.

Then there is a third indication of this more efficient gardening, namely the Canada-United States ministerial trade committee set up by the previous government but which met more recently in Ottawa in January. When the Prime Minister speaks I hope that he will have some more impressive evidence of his gardening to produce than the communique of that particular meeting. I have read that communique very carefully. I have had some responsibility and some experience in drafting communiques after international meetings. As I understand it, it took three hours to write this one. I have never seen a communique from an international meeting which was emptier in content than was this particular one or fuller of words. All it did was to promise that in so far as it is possible, neither government will do anything to hurt the other—and that is all right—or, in the case of consultation, there will be consultation whenever feasible, on these matters. Consultation is to be held only when it is feasible, according to this communique. I suggest to the ministers concerned with this particular committee, that they worry less about the three hours' time devoted to the communique and more about dealing with some of the great problems that arise in the relationships between them. The Prime Minister may feel complacent about Canada-United States relationships, but that complacency is not shared in certain non-political reports. One from a high level but unofficial Canada-United States businessmen's committee, which met last autumn, urged > —that no further deterioration in commercial relations be allowed to occur.

In other words they wanted better gardening than the spasmodic digging of the previous sixteen months. The fact that this Conservative gardening has not been as productive as the Prime Minister told the Pilgrims is shown by United States restrictions on imports of zinc, lead and ore; by new ill-judged and inadmissible interference by the United States government on the purely Canadian business of United States subsidiaries in Canada to which the Minister of Justice referred this afternoon; by new United States wheat barter programs; the shocking omission which I have already mentioned of the Canadian government to answer the United States note on the anti-dumping bill for four months, or until after the bill had been passed in this House of Commons. All this would indicate that the gardening, on the Canadian side of the line in the last 16 months, has not been very efficient and certainly has been no improvement on Liberal methods of previous years.

I had thought, Mr. Speaker, that I had reached the end of my specific indictments but there is one other matter on which I will now touch. I should have mentioned it earlier but I omitted it. I refer to federal-provincial relations. In that field we certainly find the same indecision and uncertainty, in spite of the specific undertaking made by the Conservative party before the elections. No federal-provincial conference has been held except that one a year ago which did so little. At that time the country was led to understand—and a specific commitment was given to that effect—that there would be a subsequent meeting which would deal in a more effective way with fiscal relations with the provinces. In a speech made in Winnipeg in May 1957 the Prime Minister, according to the report, said that under the fiscal arrangements proposed by the Liberal government the provinces had been "forced into a starved condition" and that the municipalities were the "forgotten people". On another occasion during the same campaign he is reported to have stated that a conference would be called after the election "in order to assure fairness to all".

We know what happened. The government has not yet called any such meeting. We know now, because of the speech from the throne, that the government has no intention of calling such a conference. We know that instead the government has announced to the provinces the extension of the existing temporary arrangement. That arrangement was made about a year ago on an ad hoc basis. Since that time several premiers have indicated that they were not satisfied with it as carrying out the government's promise. On September 30 Premier Douglas in a radio broadcast said that the dominion-provincial conference should be reconvened "with the least possible delay". During the opening debate of the current session of the Quebec legislature Mr. Duplessis is reported to have reasserted his government's stand on provincial rights in the field of direct taxation. Finally, on September 24, 1958, Mr. Frost, in a speech in Etobicoke, renewed his campaign to secure a more equitable division of tax revenue from the federal government and to get another $80 million annually from the direct tax field. He is reported to have concluded his remarks on this subject by saying this:

> It would be a great mistake for us all—federal and provincial—not to strive for an early resolution of this most important matter.

Is the government striving for an early resolution of this most important matter? The government has ignored these representations. There is to be no conference. Instead the government, as I have just said, has announced, without consultation or conference, its decision to maintain for this year the arrangement which it made unilaterally last year without conference. The speech from the throne and the telegraph company have now become the new lines of communication with the provinces. The provinces read about this new offer in the press and they read about the new offer last year. I am not quite sure, but I believe some of them did not get the telegrams at all. What a startling improvement this is on the take-it-or-leave-it method of that federal despot, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent who, while he was prime minister, when he or his government wished to make in the speech from the throne a reference which affected the provinces, had the courtesy to let the provinces know about it beforehand. But the government is doing something. In the speech from the throne there is a paragraph which reads as follows:

> My government proposes that the entire subject of financial relations between the dominion and the provinces shall receive continued active co-operative study.

The subject is to receive, not only study but continued active co-operative study. Was there ever a better example of an adequacy of words trying to make up for an inadequacy of action? The paragraph continues:

> All provincial governments are being asked to agree to the use, for this purpose, of the machinery of the existing federal-provincial continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters—

They are going to be asked to agree that this committee should continue to do its work. That is all it amounts to. That is the new deal with the provinces. I understand a letter was sent to the provincial governments suggesting that perhaps the ministers of the provinces might exercise supervisory jurisdiction over these people, something which presumably they have been doing all along.

I think I have produced sufficient evidence, Mr. Speaker, to support our bill of indictment. All that remains now is for me to draw the bill to a conclusion and to move the amendment. I think, perhaps, Mr. Speaker, that the government will have realized by now that the honeymoon is indeed over, and the wedding trips too. Now the hard, unglamorous drudgery of housekeeping has descended on the happy party. In fact, the domestic sink is filled with dirty dishes while argument goes on as to how to clean them economically without breaking any politically.

To return to more prosaic prose, Canada, I repeat, is faced with more problems, more difficulties and more anxieties than at any time since world war II. This government has failed to face up to these anxieties, these difficulties and these problems; its own major difficulty lies in getting away from the habit of looking at everything from the narrow viewpoint of political advantage which, perhaps, accounts for so much of the confusion, delay, contradiction and uncertainty of so much of the present government's administration. Mr. Speaker, they have elevated expediency into a national policy. I will give the Prime Minister time to take all this down. I will repeat it at dictation speed. When confronted with a situation which demands action he will make a broadcast or a speech, or appoint another commission. The favoured formula, as I have already shown, is to wait for a problem to become a crisis and then, cheerfully ignoring any commitment previously taken or promise made, to deal with it by hand-out or hold-off. That is not good enough, especially at a time when wise, steady and consistent action is necessary to help us solve our national problems and realize the great destiny which lies ahead of us.

It is a time not so much for ringing declarations of freedom—we have an abundance of them, including one of the noblest of all in the United Nations charter—as for policies of government which will make freedom work for the welfare, security and progress of men and women. Bread without freedom may be a stone, but freedom without bread and work to earn it is a mockery. If we cannot make the freedom we have work, then no declaration of words, however inspiring, will help us much or save us from some other form of government which will have far more of compulsion than freedom about it.

We on this side have no confidence in the ability of this government to give us this kind of leadership at this particular time of need. Indeed, this is a government of confusion, contradiction and unsteadiness; a government which thinks and acts primarily in terms of short range, narrow political advantage, gyrating from one move to another with all the circular sensationalism of a hula-hoop performance. As the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) pointed out in his New Year broadcast, Canada needs something better than this, something better, to use his words, than mediocrity—and he was referring to the present government—which, he says, cannot be tolerated. We feel that way, too, Mr. Speaker, and because of that feeling I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), that the following be added to the address.

We respectfully affirm that Your Excellency's advisers, by reason of contradictory and confused policies; as well as lamentable indecision in dealing with grave national problems such, for example, as those concerned with mounting unemployment, no longer merit the confidence of this house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I begin my remarks by congratulating the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) on the multiplicity of the topics with which he has dealt. He has spread himself out. He has repeated all the speeches which he has not been able to use with much effect in the country.

This speech has been delivered in more or less divided form throughout the recent pilgrimage he made across this country. As long as we have as many members as we started with the answer is given to much of that criticism. I recall almost a year ago in this chamber the amendment moved at that time, done with all the forcefulness that is apparent here today and done with all the effectiveness which was apparent today. But until the hon. gentleman described that speech himself I thought it represented his thinking. What did he say himself in describing what he had done in the amendment that he moved—for in the House of Commons you do not try to put over fast ones—the words he used dealing with the amendment he moved were these: "I tried to slip him a fast one, if you will excuse the expression, but he belted it out of parliament."

We have had another of those fast ones today. I intend to analyse just parts of it and will leave to my colleagues the task of answering those remarks made by the hon. gentleman on this occasion regarding matters relating to their various departments. We heard from the hon. gentleman cascades of verbosity and torrents of denunciation but I shall deal with the facts without employing the attributes that he gave to his remarks.

I was particularly interested in the attempt of the hon. member to paint a picture of Canada as a place fearful in its prospects and frightening in its future. This is a picture not borne out by the facts and one that is not in keeping with the kind of attitude that one expects on the part of those who hold responsible positions.

During the course of his remarks the hon. gentleman quoted the report of a Canadian bank. I am going to refer to the monthly review published by the Bank of Nova Scotia, November issue, in which it is stated in effect that the recession was much less sharp in Canada than in the United States, which the bank suggests is indicative of the fact that what had happened was largely due to the energetic counter-cyclical measures taken by this government. The report of the Bank of Montreal is to a similar effect.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What did the president say?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce is reported in the Canadian Press of December 31 to have stated that Canada's economy now is heading in the right direction and Canadians can look forward to a better year. While we have had one recent skirmish, the battle is now joined against inflation, the press report indicates.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I cannot resist quoting remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition while abroad because even though the truth has to be exported, nonetheless it is appreciated that he spoke the truth as reported in the Times of London supplement of November 24, 1958. The title of this contribution made by the hon. gentleman is "Old World to Redress Balance of New". I ask hon. members to listen to these words and compare them with the picture the hon. gentleman painted today, one of darkness and danger, planting fear in the hearts of the Canadian people.

He spoke today about policies that he described as uncertain and endeavoured for political gain to frighten the Canadian people, to sow the seeds of fear in their hearts. I do not mind the criticism of the hon. gentleman because he can be extremely helpful when his criticism is offered in a constructive way. But I must point out that the speech he delivered today is not in keeping with his responsibilities as Leader of the Opposition at a time when world conditions are difficult and trying, when the communistic world attacks the free world economically as never before and at a time when one hears remarks such as those made by Mr. Mikoyan last evening when answering questions on "Press Conference". When one considers the difficulties confronting the free world in terms of an economic attack one must conclude this is not the time for the kind of speech that was delivered here this afternoon with such relish.

But now I wish to draw attention to the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition as reported in the Times of London supplement of November 24. The article opens with the following words:

As 1958 draws to a close, Canadians can look at themselves and at their world with both confidence and concern; confidence in themselves, concern not so much with matters strictly domestic as with what is happening in the world about them, the consequences of which—political, social and economic—they cannot hope to escape.

The hon. gentleman then proceeds in this article to set out the dangers because, after all, he is exporting the truth. He pinpoints the dangers of the situation and then continues with a most interesting statement. I will ask him when he has an opportunity to reply how he can possibly reconcile the statements he made today with those in the article I have before me. The article states:

Many of Canada's current problems are similar to those that are troubling other free democracies:

Some hon. Members: That is true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman can endeavour to smile it off but in this article he was telling the truth.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was equally true in 1956.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Today, however, the hon. gentleman endeavoured to paint a somewhat different picture. I wish to repeat the words he used in the article to which I have referred:

Many of Canada's current problems are similar to those that are troubling other free democracies:

Mr. McIlraith: But they have governments that are trying to meet them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, interruptions such as that are not helpful. We on this side sat and listened without interruption.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming)?

Mr. Diefenbaker: He asked a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: He made a speech.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The article continues with these words:

Many of Canada's current problems are similar to those that are troubling other free democracies: dealing with inflationary pressures and recessionary trends at the same time; reconciling the demands for more governmental intervention to advance social welfare with the preservation of individual rights and the encouragement of initiative.

Today the hon. gentleman tried to leave the impression that we in Canada were in a different position. When he wrote this article he realized the situation in other democratic countries of the world. He realized, for instance, the fact that the United States finds itself in a similar position to that which we are in, with some 4 million unemployed and with trade difficulties. But nowhere in the United States does one find an attitude such as was revealed here today with such apparent relish, as the hon. member referred to circumstances to which I shall also shortly refer as being in large part the inheritance of this government.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought it was "world conditions".

Mr. Diefenbaker: The article goes on to state:

Canadians do not underestimate the difficulties ahead especially for a country that has given a formidable hostage to fortune in the form of such a heavy dependence on foreign trade for her prosperity. There is, however, a strong spirit of optimism among the people, and a feeling that Canada's destiny is as bright as that of any country in the world.

Between November 24, 1958 and January 19, 1959, what a change of viewpoint has occurred on the part of the hon. gentleman. Not satisfied with having said that he continues in the article to depict Canada's national pride and concludes by saying:

Canada is growing up in troubled and dangerous times, amid persistent and complicated problems, domestic and international. But what is important is that she is growing up—

Oh, Mr. Speaker, that is true. The article continues:

—she is becoming stronger and more mature as a nation. It is the desire of Canadians to use this strength and maturity not merely to build a sturdy nation as the northern half of the American continent, but also to play a worthy and useful part in the achievement of the goal on which all humanity's hopes now rest in this nuclear age—international peace and security.

Mr. Speaker, those were not pious words; they were facts. They were not debating points; they were the truth. In so far as the major portion of his remarks is concerned in connection with the economic situation in Canada, I give, to begin with, the Times of London supplement of November 24, 1958, which bears out in every degree the viewpoint of this government and the feeling of the Canadian people.

I do not intend to traverse the points one by one, but I have lined up some of them as they have been delivered. I am going to commence with the general remarks that I have made by joining with him in one thing with which I agree, namely in the congratulations extended to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson), an outstanding farmer, and to the seconder, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), who, he was able to say, is a third generation Canadian occupying the position of a member of the House of Commons. He was able to speak of the Canadian unity that we are bringing about in Canada and which is the desire and objective of each and every one of us.

I think I ought to say a word of congratulation to the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman), another lady member of the House of Commons and the daughter of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) and herself a widow of the former dean of the House of Commons. I would also like to add a word of congratulation—and all these arguments were used in the constituency of Springfield—to the new member for Springfield (Mr. Slogan), and also to the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), a former member of the House of Commons and a member of the Privy Council. I say to him in his capacity as a member of the House of Commons my hope is that he, and also the hon. members I have mentioned, will make his contribution to a better Canada and to the highest possible standard of the House of Commons.

Having said that, I wish to mention one other thing which was very interesting. Today my hon. friend used a kind of buckshot speech in which he shot at everything, but he left one or two questions to his co-operative friends to the right. That was very interesting indeed because it has been very obvious lately that that co-operative spirit between the Liberal party that he now leads and the members of the C.C.F. has grown to such an extent that when the Liberal party had its federal national meeting, the postmortem, a few weeks ago, they called in a leading member of the C.C.F., namely, Mr. Dodge, to tell them what was wrong and what had happened. There was that kind of co-operation, Mr. Speaker, but nonetheless I noticed today the great desire of the Leader of the Opposition to pass on to his hon. friends to the right certain problems which were left for them to discuss. That co-operation is certainly even apparent here.

Now, sir, may I speak for a moment on the international situation, and I would only say a word in that regard because, as the Leader of the Opposition said, my hope is that an opportunity will come shortly for a discussion of these questions. In particular, I will then have the opportunity of being able to say something regarding the trip which I took, and the visit which I made, not only to four NATO countries of Europe but also to the countries of the commonwealth in Asia, and to Australia and New Zealand.

While I have seen that some of my hon. friends have expressed doubts as to this world tour, I would remind them that when my right hon. predecessor went on that tour the members of the opposition of that day joined to a degree which is unusual in parliament and pointed out in unanimity the fact that it was a necessary trip to be taken, one that would be helpful and beneficial not only to Canada, but generally. That happened on January 29, 1954, when the right hon. gentleman spoke of his proposed trip. He was followed on that occasion by the then leader of the opposition, the Hon. George Drew, who used these words, as reported at page 1583 of Hansard:

> As he has said, understanding, a feeling of co-operation and a deep and close interest in the countries of Asia are today an essential part of the building of the kind of free world in which we all believe. Naturally the first concern of all of us will be the development of any closer and more effective association which may be established with the nations of the commonwealth that are found in Asia at this time.

Mr. Coldwell went on to join with him in words of approbation. He pointed out that:

> The people of Canada will be well served by the Prime Minister as their ambassador, not representing any party and not even in the capacity, shall I say, of our Prime Minister, but rather in the capacity of a Canadian ambassador of good will making a tour of the world.

My hon. friend has done this, and so has the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). I found wherever I travelled in Asia that he apparently had been there before, and I found the same with regard to the Leader of the Opposition. They left behind them a legacy of good feeling and gained a knowledge which was shown in the debates in the House of Commons thereafter, which again was beneficial not only to those who have honoured them but also the house in general, in consequence of the visitations which were made.

As far as what my hon. friend said on the international situation is concerned, with the exception of the fact that today representatives of the U.S.S.R., the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries in the free world are at least talking things over together, there has been no act in recent weeks which would indicate any major amelioration of the attitude of the cold war which has prevailed. Indeed, as I came back to Canada I began to realize the great danger today to the Asian countries and finally to us in this economic offensive launched against Canada and the United States. Because the defences of the free world have been maintained the only way in which freedom can be undermined is through the economic influences, detrimental as they may be, that may be launched on the part not only of the U.S.S.R. but also of communist China. Indeed, it is very striking in this regard that in connection with cottons—and I digress merely for a moment in this—which the British, and the United States, can supply at $1, in the various parts of Asia they are being supplied at 60 cents by Japan and at approximately 33 cents or 34 cents by communist China. In other words, there is an offensive in trade that is bound to be one of the most challenging dangers of the days ahead.

It is because of that, if we in Canada are to meet it, dependent as we are so greatly on trade, that every consideration must be given to the end that the expanding trade of the past shall be continued. One of my prides in the administration springs from the fact that in spite of the tremendous competition in 1957, particularly in wheat and the like, Canada exported more wheat than in the previous year and greater than the average at any time in the preceding five years.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, at the time of adjournment I had just commenced to refer to one or two general matters and I intend to continue on that course for a few moments. Then, at the end of that time, I shall meet certain phases of the arguments advanced this afternoon by the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

I was somewhat surprised at the jocular manner in which he dealt with Canadian-United States relations, an attitude of jocularity which I did not regard as in keeping with the responsibilities which he had discharged for so long as Secretary of State for External Affairs and also as ambassador to the United States. He indicated that there was little change in the relationship between Canada and the United States. I would point out that when he referred to some of the economic acts of the United States during the last year and a half, he might have referred also to a series of acts throughout the years on the part of the United States in respect of which it was quite clear, and I have the evidence here, that the then government of this country raised little or no objection. Indeed, on two occasions protests were made, and while this afternoon he exhibited shocked surprise that there had not been any reply to one or two of these casual objections raised by the United States, I might say that I well remember the Right Hon. C. D. Howe saying on occasion, we sent them a couple of notes but we did not get any reply; we did not expect any.

So far as our relations with the United States are concerned, there has been something in the nature of a change in that regard. As a matter of fact, the visit of the members of the Canadian parliament to the United States congress was one of the most successful pilgrimages on behalf of our common dedication between these countries that has ever taken place. In that connection, I should like to refer to the Financial Post of January 17, the heading on which is, "Canada gains Congress Ear". I quote:

> A major improvement in Canada-U.S. economic relations may have occurred with the agreement on a Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group.
> This was the solid accomplishment of the Washington conference of nine Canadian senators and m.p.'s and congressional members of the new house and senate Canada subcommittees.

Then, there is another article in the same issue which reads:

> A "Massive Demonstration" of U.S. Attention to Canada.
> History was made in Washington with the visit of the nine Canadian parliamentarians to the U.S. capital.
> Washington rolled out the reddest red carpet it has ever displayed for a visiting group of fellow legislators.
> More fuss was made over the Canadians than over any group of visiting firemen in decades.
> They got almost as much attention as did Queen Elizabeth or Anastas Mikoyan on their Washington stopovers.

Rather than being met by words of ridicule, I would have thought we would be met with words of appreciation of the fact that, while we have our differences, those differences are not insoluble; that each of us owes it to our respective countries to ensure that the stand of our respective countries be made known.

As a matter of fact, my hon. friend made a speech in the United States in November, and when he speaks of harsh words I must say that some of the words he used on that occasion respecting the fact that the United States had, for too long, taken Canada for granted would have, if spoken by any member of this house, been subject to his condemnation. Even today, there is a step forward in that relationship. We Canadians have been most anxious to assure the maintenance and preservation of our sovereignty in northern Canada. Those areas are of maximum importance, not only from the point of view of defence but also from the point of view that they hold vast mineral resources.

Well, the D.E.W. line was built and little consideration was given to Canada. The hon. gentleman was secretary of state for external affairs when this was done. Today, we moved a step forward. The major stations on the D.E.W. line have been, in the past, manned by United States officers with a Canadian liaison officer. We have now reversed that and Canadian officers will man these stations and there will be one United States officer as liaison officer. What is more, we asked for that when in opposition and the answer invariably given was one of indifference. Now that the hon. gentleman is in the opposition he suddenly sees that in all the years he was a member of the government there were attitudes taken toward the United States which were not in keeping with Canada's sovereignty or the responsibilities of Canadian nationality. Furthermore, of the civilian personnel on these stations, 645 of the 790 are now Canadians and these civilians are paid by the United States. This is a step in the direction of ensuring that in the northern territories there shall be no misunderstanding as to whom those areas belong.

Today, a joint announcement was made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) and the secretary of defence of the United States along the lines that I indicated. Now then, I come to one other subject.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That announcement should have been made in this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mention was made today of the Arrow. I have before me the vacillating record, if I may say with great respect, of the Leader of the Opposition with regard to this matter. I am sure there was not that measure of agreement between him and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) during the by-election in that constituency in connection with this subject which one might have expected. Defence today is costly. I think this was well summarized by the President of the United States when he said this:

> The over-all cost of introducing Atlas into our armed forces will average $35 million per missile on the firing line. This year we are investing an aggregate of close to $7 billion in missile programs alone. Other billions go for research, development, test and evaluation of new weapons systems.
> Our latest atomic submarines will cost $50 million each, while some special types will cost three times as much. We are now ordering fighter aircraft which are priced at fifty times as much as the fighters of World War II. We are buying certain bombers that cost their weight in gold.

In other words, there has been a fabulous increase in those costs. In so far as the Arrow is concerned, in the month of September I made a statement on this matter. The responsibility to act rests on this government. The hon. gentleman suggests that a committee be set up for the purpose of determining this question.

Mr. Pearson: I did not say that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He suggests that a committee be set up. If it is not to determine, it is to recommend.

Mr. Pearson: I never said that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, it is just a committee to be set up. He just wants the committee to sit, Mr. Speaker. As far as we are concerned, we made our position clear in the month of September. The views then expressed have not been changed in the intervening months in consequence of the consultation that has taken place in this regard. It is the kind of decision that is not to be taken lightly. It has caused lengthy, almost endless discussions and consultations. What did the hon. gentleman say with regard to this matter? I have here a few quotations as to what he would have done. He starts off by a speech in Edmonton on the subject and he says this:

> We decided when in office two and one-half years ago to go ahead with the CF-105 and review it year by year in the light of developments.

Then here is the statement that he made a little bit later on during the course of his tour:

> Mr. Pearson said when previous Liberal government decided two and one-half years ago to authorize work on the CF-105 Arrow, the intercontinental ballistic missile seemed then to be "many, many years away."
> The Liberal government had reviewed its decision every six months. Had the Liberals been in office when the first I.C.B.M. was fired Mr. Pearson said, "this would have been a major factor in possible revision of our decision."

Then he said this:

> The Conservative government should have cancelled the Arrow production order this fall instead of waiting until next spring.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the statement that he made. That is from a Canadian Press dispatch.

Mr. Pearson: That is a Canadian Press account of what I am supposed to have said which I corrected the next day with the Canadian Press, and then the correction was reported.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have the entire record here.

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman has not it all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I doubt whether the press can keep up with the perambulations of the hon. gentleman. Then he comes along and makes his statement today, and I doubt if you or anybody else, Mr. Speaker, can come to any conclusion as to what he means on the subject. He is on this side and he is on that side. There are difficulties in the way. He asks a question on one occasion. Again he may rise if he wishes to deny that he made the statement, that it should have been concluded in the fall. In other words, a decision should have been made in the fall.

Mr. Pearson: When you said it was going to be made, the minister said it was going to be made in the fall.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is after the event. It is made perfectly clear that we are going to have the support of the Leader of the Opposition in the event that there is a finalized decision in this regard. All the way along he says, "Are we moving out of our own league?" In Edmonton he says, "Are we getting in too deep?" He also said: that the United States had to keep up with each new costly defence development, but Canada should not have to follow suit.

Then again we find another Canadian Press dispatch quoting the Leader of the Opposition as saying that the decision to cancel the Arrow production order should have been made in the fall instead of waiting until March.

The hon. gentleman now says that he corrected these statements next day. As far as we are concerned in connection with this matter we made our decision clear on September 23, 1958, in the statement which I made at that time. At the time the statement was made the situation was particularly dangerous in Quemoy and Matsu islands and in the straits. At that time there were those who felt that a major war might very well break out, that it was within the realm of possibility. If the decision had been made then, it would have brought about the demobilization of the technical men who, in the event that hostilities came about, would have purposes other than the production of the Arrow which would be found necessary in Canada. That was the reason for the stand which we took and made clear. No one who makes a decision such as that can possibly do so lightly.

Since the ICBM's and latterly, the launching of lunik, it is apparent that there has been a tremendous change in the techniques of potential war. It is a disagreeable course. Let me make this matter perfectly clear. Lobbies will have no effect on the decision that this government makes on the question of defence. That statement applies generally. While the government will at all times welcome suggestions, ideas and arguments, I think the experience generally has been that the stronger the lobby, the weaker the argument.

I am now going to deal for a moment with one or two matters in the speech from the throne. I am not going into the detail into which the hon. gentleman went this afternoon but I am going to meet one or two of the arguments which he advanced and which are somewhat threadbare and tattered. They have been used over and over again with the effectuality that the hon. gentleman must realize unless he is getting his opinion from the grass at $25 a dinner.

In the speech from the throne we have set forth the legislative program which includes various fields of legislative enactments and amendments to existing legislation. There is one matter to which I want to refer and to which the hon. gentleman did not refer, namely the item dealing with the setting up of an energy board. We have the recommendation of the Borden commission in a preliminary report. So that there will be no mistake or misunderstanding, let me say this. No prior knowledge of the contents of this report were in the possession of any member of the government. The facts that reports by royal commission are made does not indicate or mean that in every or in any particular they will be carried out, when in the opinion of the government, which accepts this responsibility, those recommendations are detrimental in any way.

I want to make that perfectly clear at this time relative to the various recommendations contained in that report. We will deal with that question when this particular matter comes before the house in the form of a bill.

Now I am going to return to the speech of the hon. gentleman—a speech consisting for the most part of lamentations but with no indication of what suggestions the opposition have to offer, excepting the inference that taxes should be raised, higher interest rates secured and credit restrictions imposed—a speech full of colourful language—jeremiads usually are—and full of forebodings, not uttered with the usual smiling face, except when the hon. gentleman neared the end of his speech, but in lachrymose and funereal tones, spoke about paradise regained. As I listened to his speech I thought of what concerned him most was the paradise lost.

A year ago I had the pleasant duty of congratulating the Leader of the Opposition on his first speech following his election as the leader of the Liberal party. However, I cannot congratulate him to the same warm extent on the speech he made on this occasion. The amendment this year was apparently not drawn up by the brain trust. It is an interesting amendment; it deals with one matter in particular, after a kind of buckshot attack in every direction. I am going to meet it in a very few words at this point.

Last year there was discussion of an economic report. I produced the economic report, as we produced the report for 1957, at exactly the same time and on almost the same date in the year following. What did they do? They had the report but they did not act; they concealed the situation from the Canadian people. Over and over again they tried to disavow themselves of having done that, though without too much success. The record spoke. We found ourselves approaching a recession. The government had been warned, yet the remedies which the hon. gentleman suggests by inference today were entirely omitted in 1957.

Mr. McIlraith: Because the Tory government was not competent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to say to the hon. member that this is the third or fourth time he has made interjections. I spoke once of the cuckoo repeating himself and not being listened to.

In the year just ended, Canadians worked more, earned more, spent more and saved more than in any comparable year in the history of this country. The economic report of 1957 contained a clear and cogent warning of the recession to come. The opposition does not like to hear this, but they acted contrary to what the economists said was the proper action to take having regard to the circumstances. They ignored the recommendations; they seemed to be paralysed by deep-rooted complacency; they budgeted for a surplus at the time when the leading business indicators such as residential construction were plunging down. What is worse, they made no plans to meet the recession of which they had been warned.

What of the economic report of 1958? That report predicted a continuing recession. We took that warning to heart. We planned the budget accordingly, accepting a deficit as the answer to unemployment. It is because we acted in that way that the 1958 forecast and report proved to be more pessimistic than the actual events warranted. That it will be significantly better than the report forecast was not due to faulty forecasting but to energetic action taken by this government. I should like to go into a little more detail in this connection. I can see the dilemma in which the hon. gentleman finds himself. When he was asked the question: is it unemployment or is it inflation which is the serious problem today, he answered by a multitude of words but refused to place himself firmly on one side or the other. When he came to draw up the amendment he made sure that he was not in any way taking one side or the other. A terrific problem was facing the government, as the hon. gentleman so frankly admitted in that article in the London Times —not necessarily one of whether to formulate economic policies to fight unemployment or inflation but rather to develop a set of policies adapted to changing economic circumstances that appear to be in the offing.

The Leader of the Opposition charges the government with complacency and wastefulness. He dealt with the fear of unemployment, and then he spoke of inflation, which is a Janus-faced approach. On the one hand he said: eliminate unemployment, and on the other side he said: do not have a deficit, no matter what the cost may be, in order to alleviate the situation. During last year's election, where was he then? He advocated a deficit over and over again. He said this was the proper type of financing to meet a recession, and at the same time he advocated multitudinous dollar expenditures, tax cutting amounting to several hundred million dollars, tax holidays. Oh yes, we admit there is a problem, and one that has not arisen before, where there is unemployment while price levels generally are rising. The immediate problem was one of recession, which we inherited. We acted with regard to this matter with energy and vigour and all objective analysts agree that we achieved success.

What did we do? We budgeted for a deficit and at the same time we increased welfare payments. Did hon. members ever hear anything to equal the lachrymose concern which the leader of the Liberal party showed today over the increase of $9 in old age pensions? But they would not do anything about it when they had an opportunity. He said that the old age pensioners $9 had been reduced by $2 as the result of inflation. Taking his own figure of 4 per cent, where does the $2 come in? It is just another example of the kind of exaggeration in which the Leader of the Opposition indulged today. We reduced taxation; we provided effective support for the housing industry; we increased public works and public investment, and the figures in this regard when they are placed before the house will once more reveal that we have produced tens of thousands of jobs in consequence of that policy.

According to the 1958 report it was felt that the gross national product would remain almost unchanged with a possible increase of .7 per cent. In point of fact it increased by 2 per cent.

Mr. Pearson: Through inflation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member says "through inflation" but I would remind him that the previous year and the year before it was in the same position when he and members of his party were boasting on this side of the house.

The 1958 economic report predicted that total wages and salaries of Canadians would decline as compared with 1957 by 1.1 per cent. Instead of that wages and salaries increased by 1.6 per cent or some $300 million. Disposable personal income increased in 1958 by 6.3 per cent or approximately $1.3 billion largely I will admit, by the marked increase in welfare payments. Personal direct tax declined by 7.8 per cent during the year. Agricultural cash income to which reference will be made at length, as it was in the opening speech of the hon. member for Provencher, was up in 1958 by 8 per cent. Net farm income increased 22.4 per cent although it was predicted in the report the increase would be only 3 per cent. In view of this, why these doleful statements on the part of the Leader of the Opposition describing the situation in Canada as though it were one wrapped in gloom?

Interest dividends and net real income rose by 6.5 per cent or some $200 million in round figures. Other disposable income rose by 4.5 per cent.

The Leader of the Opposition today mentioned Mr. Muir of the Royal Bank of Canada. If I read the annual report correctly profits for the year for the Royal Bank, after providing for depreciation and income tax, amounted to $15,868,329 as compared to something just over $13 million in 1957.

Mr. Benidickson: With a conversion loan, they could not lose.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I mention that, Mr. Speaker, simply to illustrate how serious things are based on the measurements supplied by the Leader of the Opposition. As I have said, these increases added up to an expansion of disposable personal income in 1958 of $1.3 billion which translated into real per capita purchasing power reveals an increase in 1958 of 1.6 per cent compared to a 1 per cent decline in 1957. The large increase in disposable income was not all spent. Consumer spending did increase by about 4 per cent in 1958 but personal savings increased to about 9 per cent of disposable income as compared with 7 per cent in 1957.

I have before me the record from my own province of Saskatchewan which I wish to read in answer to the professional gloomsters. I shall read from the sales record of the Saskatchewan retailers for the year 1958. Retail sales reached an all time high amounting to $883 million in round figures compared to $848 million for 1957. Purchases per person increased by approximately $43. Grocery and combination stores in Saskatchewan gained almost 9 per cent in sales in 1958 over 1957 while general stores had estimated sales amounting to $83 million in round figures in 1958 as compared to $80 million in 1957. Automobile dealers had sales in 1958 amounting to $181 million in round figures as compared to $177 million in 1957. The income of service station operators went down by about $2 million to $50,600,000. The hardware stores had a good year. I could continue to cite illustrations of increases from this record.

The Christmas season is not long past and everyone knows that not for years has there been the kind of spirit displayed on the part of Canadian consumers as was the case this year. Christmas sales increased this year beyond anything that has heretofore been recorded.

Mr. Pickersgill: Tell that to the people of Newfoundland.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With the inheritance we had of the recession and realizing there would be a certain decline in private investment, I mentioned a moment ago that this government undertook an increased program of public works and provided a massive stimulus to the housing industry, the result of which is as follows. The report predicted that new residential construction would increase by 13 per cent and largely because of this government's initiative and the action of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) the amount of the increase was 23.7 per cent. These are the facts, not the type of statements that are based on generalities that are the product of the thinking of what my hon. friend calls the grass.

Carloadings are always a singularly useful indicator of changes in the economy. Carloadings made strong gains in the year and continued the upward turn taken in mid-December.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about railway earnings?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the last ten days of the year ending December 31, 1958, carloadings jumped 23.2 per cent to 81,325. It was less during the year and carloadings were down 6.6 per cent but in the latter weeks of the year they reflected the same stimulus that is taking place everywhere and to which reference was made today by the President of the United States in his message. While automobile production was down in 1958 by 2.6 per cent there was a 51.1 per cent rise in December.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And more unemployment than at almost any other time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact the hon. gentleman who interjected will remember he has always been taxed with unemployment in his particular locality and has often referred to it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes it is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are 14,000 unemployed in my constituency.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have been pointing out that we have passed through difficulties but I remind hon. gentlemen that we inherited difficulties. Oh, they cannot deny it. The people heard the story, and they had the facts and they knew.

Mr. Chevrier: The people are getting tired of this story too.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not wish to convey the impression of placing more reliance on Gallup polls than is proper but I might point out to the hon. gentleman that our position has gained by 3 per cent over what it was on election day.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, it has not in Springfield and Trinity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot hear these interruptions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: They are just facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Pardon?

Mr. Pickersgill: I just said you were not up in Trinity and Springfield.

Mr. Fraser: And you are up a pole.

Mr. Pickersgill: And those are the polls that matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With the indulgence of the house perhaps I may be permitted to ask the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate if he has been out there in Springfield?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: And he was not in Trinity?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Next time, I suggest that the hon. member go and visit them.

Mr. Pickersgill: But then neither was the Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I now want to deal with the question of exports. The Leader of the Opposition simply juggled figures today. Let me make that very clear. Exports in 1958 have held close to the record $6.4 billion level of 1957; he admitted that. On the other hand, imports declined by 10 per cent. The result is our trade deficit has been cut very sharply. With the United States the trade deficit in the last two years of the Liberal administration mounted and mounted. The hon. gentleman himself admitted that that condition of affairs could not be allowed to continue. Such deficits would ultimately bring about in Canada a situation detrimental to this country.

Our commodity deficit with the United States in the first ten months of 1958 declined to $589 million from $983 million for the same period in the previous year and from a total of some $1,190 million for the whole year of 1956. Britain's share of Canada's imports has increased from 9 per cent to 10 per cent and our purchases from other major overseas trading areas have been reasonably well maintained.

I mentioned this afternoon the question of wheat export. There is no problem more difficult than maintaining our markets abroad for wheat. In the year 1958 wheat exports reached 316 million bushels, up from 267 million bushels the year before. Beef exports —I am going down the line because the hon. gentleman did not tell the story today—increased markedly and the export value surpassed $100 million for the first time in a period of seven or eight years.

With respect to agricultural income, of which one hears so much, I have already referred to the net income and also to the cash income. Earlier I said more was earned in Canada last year. Personal income increased by some 5 per cent.

As far as the gross national product is concerned, it now amounts to more than $32 billion; in volume terms it is about the same as in 1957, but it is still some 7 per cent above the 1956 level, compared with the United States gross national product which was only 2 per cent above the 1956 level.

Why should there be such a picture of Canada in the doldrums, with fear in the hearts, when the facts are that while we have passed through difficult times, we are now moving upwards? That is, in large measure, owing to the action taken by this government.

I mention housing. Housing starts reached 163,000, 30 per cent above last year. The Leader of the Opposition asks, "What have you done?" As a matter of fact, it is chiefly owing to this remarkable expansion in housing that the decline in non-residential construction, in plant, equipment and so on, was almost completely offset. In 1958, total capital outlays, private and public, were about the same as in 1957. All of these things are indicative, not of Jeremiahs such as the Leader of the Opposition but the facts that will give to the Canadian people some realization of the fact that while there have been difficulties, and there are conditions that have yet to be met, we are starting back.

As a matter of fact, in tonight's issue of the Ottawa Journal—

Mr. Chevrier: Will the Prime Minister permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: Will he give the house the latest figures on unemployment?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will give the latest figures I have; in just a moment I will come to that. Even in tonight's Ottawa Journal there is an item which is in answer to Jeremiah's lamentations.

Montreal, January 19.—The trend towards more construction in Canada should continue this year, with a total of perhaps $7,500,000,000, Harold J. Ball, of Kitchener, Ontario, president of the Canadian Construction Association, said today in an address to the association's annual meeting.

This would be a record, somewhat ahead of 1958's figure of more than $7,000,000,000.

Mr. Ball added:

"This means the employment of over 625,000 Canadians in construction operations and an even greater number in manufacturing, transporting and merchandizing construction materials and equipment, or supplying services dependent upon construction activity."

Then, on the same page I find the following:

Toronto, January 19.—Construction contract awards in 1958 established a new record of $3,593,709,200, says Hugh C. MacLean Building Reports.

The total is $699,541,100—or more than 24 per cent—higher than 1957 and $166,803,700 higher than the previous record year, 1956.

Just one further reference to the question of trade; some mention was made of the imports to Canada and Canada's balance of trade. In connection with the table on trade for 1958, as I said a moment ago, there has been a very striking decline in the Canadian trade deficit. The decline was largely the consequence of the change in our trade position with the United States. It goes on to point out in that report that the situation is improving in so far as our trade deficit with the United States is concerned, which the Leader of the Opposition, if he is going to be true to what he said last year and two years ago, will agree was a situation dangerous in its import if continued for any length of time.

Then, you say to me, how about a comparison between Canada and the United States? No amount of argument or equivocation on the part of the Leader of the Opposition can answer this fact, namely that the recession began here in Canada and was under way before it was under way in the United States. I want to compare the course of the recession in those two countries. It can be done very simply. If one wants the facts he should read the reports. Here is a booklet entitled, "Recession in Canada and the United States". It is a statistical comparison issued by the queen's printer, a special reprint from the Canadian Statistical Review of October, 1958. This brief study shows that, aided by large scale support from the government, the Canadian economy came through the recession much more smoothly than did the United States. Canadian industrial production fell only one-half as much as United States industrial production during the recession, namely 7 per cent as against 13 per cent. I mentioned a moment ago Canada's gross national product. At the same time there was an increase of 7 per cent in 1958 over the 1956 level, the United States gross national product was only 2 per cent above the 1956 level.

Housing; I have already mentioned the record in that regard in Canada which, compared with the United States, indicates that in the United States the total expenditures for housing were nearly 10 per cent under the level of 1956, and 13 per cent under the record year of 1955. In the United States downward pressures existed in both residential construction and private investment.

What do other countries say about us? The New York Times on January 14, 1959 reported the following statement by the chairman of the committee of Canadian investment companies:

The speed and effectiveness with which Canada has moved to counter most of the recessive trends of late 1957 and early 1958 continue to demonstrate the high calibre of leadership which Canada has available to foster her long term economic growth.

Wails and lamentations from the Leader of the Opposition! What about the Financial Post? There is a remarkable demonstration of confidence to be seen when one compares business leaders' forecasts in the survey of December 1957 with the similar survey in December 1958. The last survey of December 1958 showed a completely changed mood on the part of business leaders that was almost general in viewpoint whereas a year ago recession was uppermost in their minds. I think a fair summary of that issue of the Financial Post and the views of these leaders is that we may confidently expect moderate expansion this year. Whereas last year they anticipated no growth in the national product, this year they expect moderate growth but no boom.

These are but a few examples of what I am trying to place before the house, and the Leader of the Opposition does no credit to himself in building up a picture that is sombre, fearful and awesome, destructive as it must be coming from a person holding a position such as his.

I am going to refer to inflation for a moment now. The Leader of the Opposition just discovered it today. Let us see what the record is in connection with inflation. He spoke of inflation as a time bomb and he may be right. Set by the former government! Yes, he indulged in post mortems today. I am going to look at the record over the years and let him see why it is that I found it difficult to understand when he painted this sordid picture of the tremendous inflationary trend today.

Mr. Pearson: With a recession.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One would expect to find that inflation reflected in the consumer price index. The index in December showed a slight reduction. Over the last year it has risen only 2.5 per cent. How modest this rise is may be seen when it is compared with the rise of 6.3 per cent in 1945-46. From December, 1946 to June, 1948 a period of 18 months, the increase was 21.2 per cent. From June, 1948 to December, 1949 the increase was 4 per cent; from December, 1949 to June, 1951, 13.1 per cent; from June, 1951 to December, 1952, 1.8 per cent; from December, 1952 to June, 1953 a decrease of .8 per cent; and from June, 1953 to December, 1954 an increase of 1.5 per cent. All of this indicates that the inflationary trend has been with us in abundant measure since the end of the last war and long before.

As a matter of fact when you look at the purchasing power of the consumer dollar, taking 1949 as the base year, we find that in 1936 the 1949 dollar would have had a value of $1.64 and in 1937 $1.59. Down it went and by 1939 it was $1.58 and by 1945 $1.33. In 1949, when the new base was established, it was $1.00. In 1950 it was 97 cents, 88 cents in 1951, 86 cents in 1952, 87 cents in 1953, 86 cents in 1954 and 1955, 85 cents in 1956, 82 cents in 1957 and 79 cents in 1958. It has been continuing this trend all along. I ask you to average these figures throughout the years and simply ask yourselves this question. Why is so much being said at this time in respect of a problem that has been ours throughout the years?

There is something else that was interesting. The hon. gentleman found deficits. He had never heard of deficits before. Well, I have the record of the deficits too. I do not want to put them all on the record but I think it is only fair that the people should know what the actual situation is. There have been budgetary deficits in 21 of the last 36 years.

Mr. Pearson: How many years of war?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Today a deficit is a terrible thing. From 1935 when the Liberal party came into power to 1957 there were 14 deficits, part of them in wartime from 1940 to 1945. I subtract those but I point out the number of times there were deficits throughout the years while the former government was in power.

I come to the matter of unemployment. I mention these things just to keep the record straight rather than to have it befogged by extravagant statements made in exaggerated language. I realize the situation and the seriousness of it. I realize the need of action being taken and I have pointed out the action that has been taken. It is one of those positions in which we find ourselves. In the event that we place money into the stream and expand credit, there is an inflationary trend. If we do not, we allow those who are unemployed to suffer. There is one of the major problems that economists have not been able to answer today, the unusual position with which we are faced. I think it requires action on the part of all of us.

I am deeply moved by what Cardinal Léger did yesterday when he called for the creation of mixed commissions of management and labour and asked responsible people everywhere to do their part to meet the situation. But I think it is only fair to refer to the figures throughout the years because one would think that this situation had just arisen recently. Going back to 1945 and taking the number of persons without jobs and seeking work as a percentage of the civilian labour force, we find that on November 17, 1945 the figure was 3.8 per cent. In February, 1946, it was 4.7 per cent.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the Prime Minister permit a question? Are these labour department figures or D.B.S. figures?

Mr. Diefenbaker: These are D.B.S. figures.

Mr. Pickersgill: Were D.B.S. figures kept that far back?

Mr. Diefenbaker: It continued on and off until 1949, when in March it was 4 per cent; March 4, 1950, 6.1 per cent. Then, we go through a period of years and you find this, again in February and March of 1954, it was 6 per cent and 6.1 per cent; in January, February, March and April of 1955, it was 6.7 per cent; 7 per cent; 7.4 per cent and 6 per cent; in January, February, March and April of 1956, it ranged between 5.2 per cent; 5.5 per cent; 5.3 per cent and 4.6 per cent; again, in January, February, March and April of 1957, it was 5.3 per cent; 5.6 per cent; 5.9 per cent and 5.3 per cent.

I realize this fact, that we have in Canada a winter problem, and in order to meet that winter problem a municipal plan was launched under the auspices of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), with which he will deal in particular. Let me point out that in the latest figures for October and November the percentage in October was 5.1 per cent and in November 5.9 per cent.

Mr. Pearson: Give the figures for the first four months of 1958.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The figures for the first four months of the year were placed on the record several times last session, but I have no objection to doing so again. They were 8.8 per cent; 9.4 per cent; 10 per cent and 8.6 per cent. This indicates that, with the exception of that recessional movement which is present everywhere in the free world, the percentage of unemployment, while high and definitely challenging and worrisome, is nonetheless now, I believe, giving way to the end of this recession. The president said that today in the United States with some 4 million unemployed. My hope is that we will be able to meet this by further action to be taken.

The winter works projects I have already mentioned—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the Prime Minister, before he leaves these figures, will permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can he give a comparison of the latest month this year with the latest month last year, the latest month in 1958 with the corresponding month in 1957?

Mr. Diefenbaker: When the minister speaks he will give the full record. I am just indicating that—

Mr. Robichaud: You are picking your own month.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —at a time when so much is being said about the situation in this country one should compare it with the United States. The figures, when compared with United States unemployment, indicate that we in this country are making the return from the difficulties in that connection. My hon. friends may speak of inflation, and of the effects, but I believe our first responsibility is to do everything we can to meet the problem which we, I repeat, inherited from the Liberal government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the Prime Minister permit a question? I understood the Prime Minister to say that the situation was worse in the United States than in Canada. Does he think that the United States inherited the situation from the Liberal government of Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is exactly the point I was making.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am very glad my hon. friend brought that up because, as I pointed out earlier, we went into the recession first and since then have been affected by the degree of United States unemployment. I am glad the hon. member brought that up.

I am not going to deal tonight with the question of agriculture except to say that we have taken action, and that action will be set out in detail by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) when he speaks. When I spoke in this house on August 30, 1958 I set forth a long term policy on behalf of agriculture. I pointed out the action we intended to take. Today we are taking that action and intend to introduce legislation at the present session to bring about something which, since the earliest days in Saskatchewan and western Canada has been requested, namely a system of crop insurance. In addition to that, we intended to meet a problem which, during the years, has been one upon which agriculture has demanded action, namely expanding credit.

Mention was made by the hon. gentleman of freight rates. He wrapped himself up in inconsistencies and he said, why was not something done? This is not a new problem. In 1948 the former government instructed the board of transport commissioners to proceed with an investigation into discriminatory freight rates to the end that equalization should be brought about so that those in the western provinces and maritime provinces should in no way unnecessarily be discriminated against; that is 10 years ago. They also set up a royal commission, the Turgeon commission. It met and in 1951 it made recommendations, but with the exception of one small change, as I recollect it, the $7 million subsidy in respect of the bridge in the lake Superior area, no action was taken thereon.

Mr. Chevrier: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, that statement is entirely wrong.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Chevrier: The statement the Prime Minister has made is absolutely inaccurate.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have an opportunity to make an explanation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend will be able to establish that, if he can.

Mr. Chevrier: I will, very easily.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not a question of privilege. I am saying they did not do anything effective during those years. They did one thing. They talked about inflation. They cried over it. During the period between 1945 and 1957, freight rates increased by 120 per cent.

An hon. Member: Better check that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In any event, I am low enough at 120 per cent. They talked about inflation, but they took no action. They allowed freight rates to be raised. Last spring, when we met this problem—

Mr. Caron: Before the election.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who made that observation?

Mr. Caron: I did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is apparent the hon. member for Hull does not know the facts. Let me tell you it was not before the election.

Mr. McIlraith: It was during the campaign.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, not during the election; freight rates were raised and Bell telephone rates were raised. We postponed any action thereon until—

Mr. Robichaud: Until after the election.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —until after the election, and then we acted.

Mr. Robichaud: It is even worse; playing politics.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are none so blind as those who will not see. We disallowed that increase because we said it was based on a wrong principle. It was based on a principle regarding depreciation into which I am not going to go now, but on that basis we said the increase was not permissible.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

In so far as the last application is concerned, there was no other course open to the government on the hearing of the appeal than to do as it did. A report had been made by a conciliation board. It was a majority report. That majority report indicated that there must be a major increase in the wage level which would have meant an increase in freight rates, if entirely allowed, of 19 per cent.

There are inequities in the freight rate structure. They have been aggravated through the years. We find ourselves in western Canada and in the maritimes subject to two pieces of legislation, namely the Crowsnest pass agreement and also the Maritime Freight Rates Act. We find ourselves, by horizontal increases, placed in an ever more difficult position. The Leader of the Opposition says "Why do they not act?" For 12 years the increases went on and the government of which he was a member did nothing. They simply gave instructions. We find ourselves in a position in which action had to be taken. As far as the Borden commission report is concerned, it refused to consider additional subsidies. Although it was contended before the commission that the Crowsnest pass rates were non-compensatory, no decisions were made in that regard. I am not in any way accepting the view that they are non-compensatory. However, the position which we took was this. We could do nothing else than take the action which we took. According to the statement made by the acting prime minister at that time in the month of November, we undertook to act as we are now intending to act as set out in the speech from the throne.

There is only one thing I want to make clear at this time so that there will be no misunderstanding in this regard as to the action we are taking. As far as the Crowsnest pass rates are concerned, from the time that I was a boy in western Canada in 1903 and all through the years those rates have been regarded as the Magna Carta of western rights. Those rights shall not be interfered with to the detriment in any way of western agriculture or western people in general.

We now come to the amendment. Last year's amendment was much more massive and contained many more terms. This one is much more simple. The hon. gentleman says that we have lost the confidence of the people. He smiled when he said that. He always does so when he makes statements like that. As far as we are concerned, the action that we are taking is based not on contradictory or confused policy. Those words would be descriptive of the government of another day. We have with decisiveness met the problems as they have arisen. We intend to continue to do so. We realize the unemployment problem as it is. We have acted. We are now criticized for having acted in effect because, having placed $750 million in one stream, namely the housing plan, naturally there would be inflationary influences. I believe our first responsibility is to assure that everything will be done in order to meet the situation of those who, by reason of condition over which they have no control, find themselves unemployed. That is what we have done. We did it in connection with unemployment insurance. We extended the period. We did it in connection with the winter plan. We have done it in connection with housing, with public expenditures and with public works. That course we intend to follow in the days ahead.

As far as the Canadian economy is concerned, I have already told the story of the recession coming earlier than in the United States. We have had deficits. There is no suggestion of over-expenditures anywhere. We were obliged to meet the heritage of unemployment and worsening economic conditions which was left to us. The problems we face, as I said a moment ago, are unusual. No economist has an answer for them. I refer to unemployment and at the same time rising costs and inflation. Inflationary fires have burned since 1945. They have burned more rapidly than at any other time during the last year and half. The unemployment insurance fund has been reduced.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It has been almost depleted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are obliged to do that. We must meet a situation today that among other things contributes to a deficit. But I believe the people of Canada as a whole want us to make the necessary expenditures to meet the spectre of unemployment as it is found. As I said a moment ago, and as the President said today, we are on the way out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, not in that way. We are on the way out of these difficulties. Recovery has been slower than had been anticipated because of the effect of the United States economy on ours. But as the President said in effect, we are on the way to a new plateau of full recovery. What we need today is not the kind of picayune attitude exhibited by the Leader of the Opposition but more hope and less fear. This amendment is one that was conceived in fear. Fear engenders fear. We on this side of the house have confidence in Canada, her present and her future. I simply conclude where I began with the words of the Leader of the Opposition when in that article in the London Times he expressed the situation in a way that any one could understand.

Mr. Pearson: Would the Prime Minister permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am finishing now.

Mr. Pearson: I wanted to ask the Prime Minister if he would deal with one point before he finishes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know the Leader of the Opposition does not like this. I do not think it is good sense to endeavour to fill the hearts of people with fear. It is all right to make fair and strong criticism and to make suggestions as to what should be done. That is what parliament is for. The speech today was a sorry catalogue of the planting of fear in the hearts of people. You cannot build the cornerstone of political hopes for the future by endeavouring to place people who today have fear in a position of having greater fear, those fears created by the kind of speech that was delivered here today by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would deal with a point I raised in my speech in good faith when I asked him if he would consider interrupting the throne speech debate in order to bring forward the legislation with respect to unemployment which the government proposes to bring forward this session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Having regard to the trend of the mind of the Leader of the Opposition today I will have to give the fullest consideration to that, because I would suspect that the purpose would be to instil greater fears in the hearts of the Canadian public.

Mr. Pickersgill: Legislation is not ready.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join the others who have congratulated the mover and seconder of the address on having presented very excellent arguments based on a very difficult and weak case. I do want to say to them most sincerely that I feel each one of them did a first class job in carrying out that important duty, which the Prime Minister had assigned.

Most of my remarks will refer to domestic problems—problems facing the Canadian nation—but before proceeding I want to say that I believe the conquest of outer space which we see going on at this time is the most important thing which is happening in the world to-day and that as people look back on this time I am certain the actions of the free world in this regard will be very important for our destiny. I suggest that at this session of parliament arrangements should be made to allow members to go into this question most thoroughly to see what attitude Canada should adopt, to determine what program we should follow and to decide whether or not, as a first choice through the United Nations or, as a second choice, through co-operation with other free nations, we may develop a joint effort in this regard.

I listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), and I listened to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and each one of them made a good speech—a speech to infuse their followers and to put some fear—I heard that word very often—into their opponents. But those same speeches could well have been delivered in this house two years ago by the same persons sitting on opposite sides, except they would have had to exchange their notes.

We have a government in office at this time which has presented its third speech from the throne. This government, I think, came to office because of two main reasons. First, the Liberal administration had not dealt with certain very grave problems facing the Canadian nation, and secondly, the present Prime Minister and the men around him had been able to put forward very strong arguments and been able to capture the imagination of the Canadian people and persuade them that if they were given the powers of office they would solve the problems which the former administration had not been capable of solving.

What were these problems, and what were the arguments on which the Conservative government came to power? One of them, of course, was that this government would deal with inflation; that the erosion of the Canadian dollar would be stopped and the continual eating away of the value of social security benefits would be arrested. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the Prime Minister helped the government to come to power by pointing out evils which they attributed to the former government's tight money policy and high interest policy. That is one of the reasons why they sit where they do today.

How the government, when in opposition as the Conservative party, wept for the provinces; how they wept for the financial position of the provinces and how they said that the government of that day was allowing rising interest rates to make municipal financing more difficult. How they said: if we are given the reins of office we will call a federal-provincial conference. The Minister of Finance in January of last year said he would call a second federal-provincial conference to make certain that these problems would be solved.

The government appealed to our elderly citizens and said that if they were returned to power, not only would our elderly citizens have a higher pension but immediate steps would be taken to bring about an expanded social security program. They promised a cure for unemployment. The Prime Minister even promised a cure for every individual unemployed. He said no person in Canada would suffer because of unemployment if he were returned as prime minister of this country. The latest figures we have—and there will be new ones tomorrow—show that upwards of 400,000 Canadians are out of work.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): More than twice that.

Mr. Argue: The government came to power by saying they would solve the farm crisis; that they would meet the difficulties faced by the farmers by instituting parity prices and by deficiency payments, thereby removing the farmer from the effects of the price-cost squeeze.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, any reference to a promise of deficiency payments is not based on fact.

Mr. Argue: I have the facts here and it will not be the first time I have placed those facts on the record.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They are not facts.

Mr. Argue: They have not been disputed and I will attribute them to the appropriate minister when I come to that part of my notes. The Prime Minister has said: no deficiency payments. We will let the people of western Canada judge on the basis of the record whether or not such a commitment was made and such a hope held out.

What has been done to deal with the problem of inflation which is a very important and serious one? Inflation does not strike the strong, particularly; it strikes the weak. Inflation eats away the value of the old age pension and of the family allowance; it eats away the value of pension plans to which people have contributed for a lifetime. I am not going to say it is the greatest economic problem facing the people of this country today, but certainly the problem which faces the greatest number is the problem of inflation and the way in which it is eroding the income, savings and credit of the people of this nation. I have here some tables which show the reduction in the purchasing power of the old age pension since 1949. A person who began to receive an old age pension in 1949 would, from that date to the end of 1958, have received a pension amounting to $4,914. But in terms of 1949 dollars a pension over that period of time would amount to just $4,273, a loss of $640 in purchasing power. Inflation has reduced the value of family allowances with respect to the higher payment made of $8 to a present value of just $4.75 in terms of 1945 dollars. It has reduced the value of the $6 old age pension to just $3.56. These are some of the results of inflation.

The Prime Minister's general attitude toward all problems this evening appears to be, "well, we have problems but we have had them before. We have a deficit but we have had a deficit before." Surely the reason the Prime Minister sits tonight where he does sit is because he held out the hope that some of these problems would be solved. In the seventeen months the present Prime Minister has been in office the consumer price index has increased from 121.6 to 126.3, an increase of 4.7 points, and in the previous seventeen months the index went up 4.8 points. In other words, the increase in the consumer index in the seventeen month interval the present government has been in office has been almost the same as the increase that occurred in the consumer index under the previous administration.

Do we have inflation today? Yes, the same kind and almost the same degree of inflation as we had under the previous administration.

What about the tight money policy? We heard a lot about the iniquity of the tight money policy under the Liberal government and we expected that under this government it would have been abolished. Here is what the present Minister of Finance said on August 11, 1956 as reported at page 7462 of Hansard when referring to the increases in the central bank rediscount rates:

> The effect of these repeated increases in interest rates, five in a period of one year, has been a tremendous increase in the burdens cast upon provincial governments with respect to their borrowings and upon municipal governments with respect to their borrowings, and upon business, and punishing losses upon the holders of Canada's obligations. What the government should be directing its efforts toward in facing the threat of inflation is to seek an increase in productivity.

Those were words uttered on August 11, 1956. The Bank of Canada rediscount rate for August 10, 1956, the day prior to this statement being made, stood at 3¼ per cent and the bank rediscount rate on January 15, 1959, stood at 3.61 per cent. And so we see that the tight money policy, the high interest policy, of the Liberal government has become a tighter money policy and a higher interest policy on the part of the Conservative government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Rubbish.

Mr. Argue: The Prime Minister spoke about the efforts of his government to stop inflation and he referred to freight rate increases. I wish to give the Prime Minister full credit for having removed the 3.6 per cent increase in freight rates, the last one, after the election. They talked about it a good deal during the election and the Prime Minister held out the expectation that it would be done after the election. We were happy that the 3.6 per cent was removed. But when the government was faced with a grant of a 17 per cent increase did the government say, "No, we will not allow this to go into effect?" After all the government was very brave when it came to disallowing a 3.6 per cent increase. But no, although the 3.6 per cent increase was not allowed the 17 per cent increase has gone into effect.

The speech from the throne does not say the government intends to take steps to remove the burden of the 17 per cent freight rate increase from the Canadian people. It merely says that steps will be taken to alleviate the burden. Will the Prime Minister say that the steps the government is going to take will remove the discriminatory effect of the full 17 per cent increase?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? Was he opposed to the wage increase?

Mr. Argue: Now we hear from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green). I may say to that hon. gentleman I was not opposed to the wage increase and I do not think anybody in this house was opposed to it because it was recommended by a majority report of the conciliation board, but each of the ten provinces asked the government to take steps to prevent the 17 per cent increase from coming into effect by providing a subsidy.

Mr. Green: Would the hon. member permit another question? Were any of the provinces opposed to the wage increase?

Mr. Argue: Not that I know of. But what is the record of this government in this regard? The 3.6 per cent increase was disallowed right after the election but shortly thereafter the 17 per cent increase was permitted to go into effect. Even if this were the end of the freight rate increases or the prospect of additional increases, that would be bad but apparently this is just another one along the line. There is an application before the board of transport commissioners at present for an unspecified increase in freight rates. Mr. Ian Sinclair says he expects it to be from 12 to 15 per cent. Does the Minister of Public Works suggest the government will take steps to remove the discriminatory effects of such an increase should any part of it be allowed or should it be allowed in full? No. With respect to the 3.6 per cent increase the government was fearless but when it came to the 17 per cent increase it acted in a different way. With regard to the prospect of an additional 12 or 15 per cent increase we shall see what the government will do.

What was the government going to do for the old age pensioner? It appointed a royal commission. Dr. Robert Clark was the commissioner and he was to report within three or four months. Twelve months have now elapsed and we do not know when we are going to get the report. Before the election there was agitation in the ranks of the Conservatives for an old age security system like that obtaining in the United States. Time was of the essence and the report was to have been brought in within three or four months. Now there is no telling when the report will be published and the most disappointing fact is that the speech from the throne contains no reference to action to be taken with respect to providing an improved old age security system. The actions of the government indicate that it has one way of talking prior to the election and another way of talking after the election.

No one was to suffer because of unemployment. In November of 1958 there were 398,000 unplaced applicants seeking jobs and unable to find them, just a little more than when the Liberals were in office.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Twice as many.

Mr. Argue: Someone said, "Twice as many". The previous administration was bad in this regard but the present administration is a little worse.

Some hon. Members: Twice as bad.

Mr. Argue: It is not just the unemployed people themselves that we have to consider because they have families and there is suffering among them.

This government was also going to help the farmer. Oh, yes, the Prime Minister said I was not being sufficiently careful in what I said, but let me remind hon. gentlemen of what the Prime Minister himself said in this house would be done for agriculture under a Conservative administration. On March 12, 1956, the Prime Minister had this to say, as reported at page 2021 of Hansard:

> The squeeze which the farmer suffers results from the disparity in the relationship between the prices of farm products and the prices the farmer has to pay. When they are in proper relationship parity is established, and it is parity that the farm organizations across this country are asking for today. Not charity but parity.

There is no parity. Last session there was a little charity, namely $1 an acre, but apparently this session there is to be neither parity nor charity. The Prime Minister said that no one has ever promised deficiency payments. I quoted an article from the Leader-Post in this house a number of times. I have quoted it before and I have never heard it challenged, and I have never heard it said by the man who made the statement that the quotation was inaccurate. I refer to the report of the Regina Leader-Post of March 21, 1958, in which the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) is reported as follows:

> Future steps included a revolutionary farm credit program, crop insurance, tax reductions, deficiency payments on western grains and many other important reforms.
> "Let's get moving on the big things. Let western Canada give a western leader their support. John Diefenbaker is trusted by all people. He will not betray the trust."

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has said that the government will provide deficiency payments. This is what the statement says, but I have heard no indication from the government that deficiency payments are to be provided.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, this is the same statement that the hon. member made last session. When I spoke on other occasions across Saskatchewan I made it very clear that I was not in favour of deficiency payments but that they would be given consideration. When the proper time comes in this debate I will give a full answer to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue).

Mr. Argue: Long after the quotation in the newspapers we get an apology from the minister that he has been misquoted. The Prime Minister said that he was going to give the question sympathetic consideration. These were the words used. Well, sympathetic consideration or otherwise, there is no action.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is just a statement by the hon. gentleman. I make the statement that at no time did I say that I would give the question sympathetic consideration. I made it very clear consideration would be given to this question. Make no mistake about that.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I quoted it before. I do not have the clipping with me now but the report was made from a speech that the Prime Minister made in the city of Moose Jaw.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will have to accept the statement made by the Prime Minister in his place that he did not use the phrase.

Mr. Argue: I do accept it, Mr. Speaker, and I will at a future date quote from the article that I referred to so that the Prime Minister will understand that I was not endeavouring to mislead the house. I take it that now he is correcting the newspaper account. Well, the Prime Minister used to say in this house, "Parity, not charity." But there is no parity. There is no parity price in the legislation of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness). Why, he has been one of the greatest opponents of parity prices.

The Minister of Agriculture made a speech before the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa on November 12. I want to congratulate the minister on having presented to that conference a very forthright statement of his views. The minister did not mince words. Here are some of the references he made to agriculture. In the second paragraph he said this:

> The difficult position of agriculture in the national economy is a matter of grave concern not only in Canada but in practically every other country in the world.

A little further on he had this to say about cereals:

> Cereals are likely to present a particularly serious problem.

Then he went on to talk about no export outlets for surplus dairy products. A little later on he talks about a mounting surplus of butter.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member just passed over the page which says our prices of most products are better than almost any other country's.

Mr. Argue: It is a strange result of those wonderful prices, is it not, that agriculture is in this very serious position. Then, the minister saw fit to deny his own figures, and he said this about the increase in broiler production:

> It is quite apparent that rates of increase such as this will create in the very near future an impossible marketing and price situation with consequent distress and bankruptcy for many producers.

It used to be parity; now it is distress and bankruptcy for many producers. Well, the Prime Minister has said that he never promised deficiency payments. Many people in western Canada think deficiency payments should be made. There are many people in western Canada who feel that in asking for deficiency payments they are asking for only a small part of what they would be entitled to if they were asking for parity and not charity, in the words of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister quoted, hon. members will recall, increases in one statistic after another in the province of Saskatchewan to show that in his province and in my province everything is well, the province is booming, business is on the increase. But asking for deficiency payments, asking this government to do something about inflation which caused the farmer's cost of production to increase in this country while this government has been in office, resulted in a meeting of farmers and businessmen to the number of 600 people in the city of Prince Albert. They filled the Arcade hall to hear Mr. Wesson of the Saskatchewan wheat pool and vice-president R. R. Atkinson of the Saskatchewan farmers' union. This was on January 9. The people of Saskatchewan are aroused; they are aroused not because they are angry with this government, but—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Because the Saskatchewan wheat pool is spending millions publicizing it.

Mr. Argue: That is not true; that is a very misleading and inaccurate statement.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Read it.

Mr. Argue: And if my hon. friend wants to subscribe to this newspaper he can pay his subscription.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I do not have to subscribe to it; they send me one.

Mr. Argue: I do not get mine gratis; I pay for it.

The Saskatchewan wheat pool held a meeting in the city of Saskatoon and there were 1,900 people at it. They overflowed the ballrooms in the Bessborough hotel. They were asking for deficiency payments.

I said the farmers were not angry with this government particularly. This is a problem that has not come about in recent months; this is a problem that has been growing for a number of years. They have expected action from the government, but we have no action. Last year, when the speech from the throne was presented some hope was held out that something more would be done. When the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne spoke about the question of deficiency payments and the action of the Saskatchewan wheat pool he had this to say as found on page 20 of Hansard for January 16:

> The contention on the part of the Saskatchewan pool is that farmers cannot wait for the results of a long-term policy. That statement has been made on numerous occasions in the past and perhaps explains why a national policy has never been implemented.

He blames the wheat pool for no national agricultural policy.

> The stated policies of this government are known and generally have the support of the farm organizations. They are intended to remove the root causes of instability in agriculture. True, some of these difficulties will yield only to long-term measures. But any effort to jeopardize or prolong the early implementation of a truly national farm policy will be performing a disservice to the farmer.

I would suggest that the responsible wheat pool organizations and the farmers' union are not doing a disservice to agriculture but are doing a very great service by pointing out to the people of Canada and to members of parliament the very serious situation in which agriculture finds itself today.

We had expected that the government would do something to help small business. The Prime Minister is always being misquoted but, as found in the Charlottetown Guardian of February 28, 1958, the Prime Minister is reported as having made this statement:

He announced that if his government is re-elected it is their intention at the first session of parliament to give consideration to a system whereby small business may be able to expand on reasonable terms and have available to it a system of financing which is being considered to enable a small business to meet its responsibility in expanding and assuring extra jobs.

Small business was promised that a credit system would be provided for small businessmen so that they could expand their businesses. They were promised a new system of financing, but the speech from the throne is completely barren on this question. The government has turned its back on its election promises. Instead of a speech from the throne full of forecasts of new steps being taken to provide full employment, to arrest the present inflation, to provide an old age security system as had been promised, to provide credit for businessmen, to provide parity and not charity, we have a speech from the throne that is completely barren in relation to the many promises that have been made. We have an anaemic speech from the throne. We have a policy on the part of the government that is a repetition of the policy of the former administration which led this country into so many difficulties.

I have not the advantage or otherwise of having unlimited time, and in view of some very agreeable interjections and the clock moving on I only have time to make a few further points. I have talked about the government's promises and its failure to implement those promises. But I call on the government at this time in the session to take emergency steps to help those who are unemployed. The government should bring forward immediately legislation to deal with this very serious problem.

The Prime Minister is a capable debater. He is usually able to handle any argument put forward by anyone in the house, but I was most disturbed when he said of the Leader of the Opposition, and I took down his words, "I must point out that the speech he delivered today is not in keeping with his responsibilities as Leader of the Opposition at a time when world conditions are difficult and trying, when the communist world attacks the free world economically as never before, and at a time when one hears remarks such as those made by Mr. Mikoyan last evening when answering questions on a press conference."

I heard nothing said by the Leader of the Opposition to warrant a statement like that by the Prime Minister. This is a free parliament in a free nation and there should be no suggestion that statements made in this house on inflation, unemployment and all these great difficulties are statements that should not be made because they may provide some aid or comfort to communists.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Or embarrass the government.

Mr. Argue: Of course, it is an inconceivable thing that we should embarrass the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government must not be embarrassed.

Mr. Argue: I should like to refer at this time to a report in the Montreal Gazette of last Saturday dealing with the question of unemployment which had this to say:

Cardinal Leger today called for the creation of mixed commissions of management and labour leaders to cope with the "terrible affliction" of unemployment.

That is what he thinks of the situation, a terrible affliction.

In a pastoral letter, which will be read in all parishes of the diocese tomorrow, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Montreal says the situation requires the intervention of government to "take new and audacious steps." . . .

A "just and lasting" solution to unemployment, the Cardinal goes on, involves respect for man's natural right to work, encouragement of a high and stable level of employment, and "a more salutary direction" for the economy.

Here are the words of a very highly placed person in our Canadian life in referring to the great, growing and terrible problem of unemployment. Surely no one can say that any Canadian is not discharging his duty when he puts forward in very strong language his opinion on these very grave issues facing the Canadian public today.

We in this group believe that an economic policy, economic planning and government expenditures in the development of natural resources are necessary if we are to cope with unemployment. Before I sit down I should like to move, seconded by the hon.

member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), the following amendment to the amendment:

That the amendment be amended by inserting after the word "policies" the following words:

"caused by the absence of social and economic planning", and by inserting after the word "unemployment" the following words:

"and their failure to provide agriculture with a fair share of the national income, and their further failure to take effective steps to combat inflation".

The amendment of the Leader of the Opposition referred to one very important problem facing the Canadian nation, namely unemployment. By the amendment to the amendment we have added two further problems that we consider of great importance, the necessity of providing agriculture with a fair share of the national income and the necessity to take effective steps to combat inflation. During this session the C.C.F. party will keep prodding, pushing and pressing the government for action on these three problems.

On motion of Mr. McGee the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I take it tomorrow we will go on with the speech from the throne?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader if it is the intention to go on with the throne speech until it is completed?

Mr. Green: Yes, it is, Mr. Speaker.

At 10 o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 20, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROBICHAUD—REFERENCE TO ANSWER BY MINISTER ON JANUARY 16

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Friday last I asked the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys the following question, as reported on page 11 of Hansard of January 16:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. My question is based on a news dispatch in today's Montreal Gazette announcing the intended closing on February 1 of five collieries affecting 4,000 men in the Glace Bay and Waterford areas of Nova Scotia. What steps does the minister propose to take to avert this mass unemployment in a region that is at the present moment experiencing grave and serious unemployment?

I received the following reply:

I did not receive any notice from the Dosco company with regard to a cut down in production or a staff reduction. I saw this article in a paper—the Gazette—this morning, and this was the first news I had of it, through the press. However, we shall look into the matter and as soon as I have been officially informed by the company that there has been a reduction of staff and production, or of its plans in the matter, I shall notify my colleagues and we shall take a decision about it.

On the very same day, Mr. Speaker, as recorded in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of January 17—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish the hon. member would state his question of privilege so we could follow the relevance of what he is saying.

Mr. Robichaud: I am just coming to the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is that the minister's action in this regard was a shock to parliament and to the rights of parliament, because on that very day, January 17, the minister informed the press, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, as follows:

A memorandum outlining marketing problems facing the Nova Scotia coal industry and containing recommendations relative to subvention payments on movement of coal is under study by the federal cabinet.

Mines minister Paul Comtois told the Halifax Chronicle-Herald Friday the memo was drafted following a series of dominion coal board meetings which heard several delegations from Nova Scotia and the coal operators; and after a conference he held with Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia and officials of Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation.

66968-9—6

Mr. Speaker, we do not assert that we should be told of cabinet's deliberations before a decision is reached—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member state the privilege of the house which he contends has been offended?

Mr. Robichaud: On this occasion the house was misled and misinformed.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Robichaud: On this occasion information which was refused to the house was given to the press. It is a shock to the rights of parliament.

(Translation):

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Gloucester is rather easily put out and is giving a quite personal interpretation of the answer I gave last Friday. As a matter of fact, I replied that the officials of the company had represented to us that the government might perhaps consider the advisability of increasing grants and assisting coal production. I also said that we had not been officially advised that there would be staff reductions.

That is the answer I made in the house and I do not think there is any disagreement between my statement and the press reports.

ROYAL VISIT

TABLING OF ITINERARY OF TOUR OF HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE PHILIP

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the other day when I reported on the prospective visit of Her Majesty the Queen I stated that as soon as the itinerary had been approved by Her Majesty, that itinerary having been submitted to her by General Graham and a committee, it would be tabled. I would also point out that within the next few hours copies will be available in the post office boxes of the members.

FINANCE

WATERPROOF FOOTWEAR—FLUORSPAR—TABLING OF TARIFF BOARD REPORTS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and in French of two tariff board reports. One, reference No. 121, relates to waterproof footwear and rubber-soled canvas footwear. The other, reference No. 126, relates to fluorspar. These reports were received from the tariff board last December and I authorized their release for public distribution at that time. They are now being tabled, together with transcripts of the evidence taken at the board's public hearings, pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board Act.

The contents of these reports are no doubt already familiar to those members who, for one reason or another, are directly interested in them. There may, however, be some members who have not yet had an opportunity to examine the reports. Accordingly I should like to say a word about each of them.

Reference No. 121 on waterproof footwear and rubber-soled canvas footwear was initiated by my predecessor and a first report thereon was received by him shortly before the 1957 election. In tabling that report in October, 1957, I pointed out that the board had not been asked for recommendations. For that reason I referred the matter back to the board with the request that in due course it make any recommendations that it might deem warranted regarding the retention or modification of the present duties.

Pursuant to this request the tariff board considered representations submitted by the Canadian rubber footwear industry relating to both the British preferential and the most favoured nation rates of duty on rubber boots and shoes and rubber-soled canvas footwear. With respect to rubber boots and shoes the industry requested that a new duty of 15 per cent ad valorem be imposed on imports from the United Kingdom and other British preferential sources, and that the present ad valorem duties under the most favoured nation and general tariffs be accompanied by specific minimum duties ranging from 30 cents to 95 cents per pair. With regard to canvas shoes with rubber soles the revised tariff treatment sought by the industry envisaged the introduction of specific minimum duties ranging from 55 cents to $1.25 per pair under the British preferential tariff and from 60 cents to $1.35 per pair under the most favoured nation and general tariffs.

In the report which I have just tabled the tariff board states that it was not persuaded on the basis of the evidence submitted that it would be warranted in recommending the adoption of the duties requested by the industry. It did not recommend any changes in either the wording or rates of duty in respect of the tariff items covering waterproof footwear and rubber-soled canvas footwear.

The report on fluorspar results from a reference which I sent to the board on September 24, 1957. Fluorspar is a product which has not attracted wide attention but which is of very direct concern in two Canadian localities. It is used extensively in the aluminum industry and in the iron and steel industry as a flux. Smaller amounts are used by Canadian producers of glassware, enamels and certain chemicals.

Canada's principal fluorspar mines are located at St. Lawrence, Newfoundland. The larger of these, Newfoundland Fluorspar Limited, supplies acid grade fluorspar to its parent company, the Aluminum Company of Canada Limited. The other, St. Lawrence Corporation of Newfoundland Limited, formerly shipped its entire production as concentrate to an affiliated company in the United States. Following the termination in 1957 of its affiliate's contract for United States stockpiling purposes, the St. Lawrence Corporation's mine has been closed.

Apart from Newfoundland Fluorspar Limited and the St. Lawrence Corporation of Newfoundland, Limited, the only other operating producer of fluorspar in Canada is, according to the report, Huntington Fluorspar Mines Limited, Madoc, Ontario. This firm mines, crushes and hand picks metallurgical grade fluorspar on a small scale.

In its report the tariff board says that at the hearings the St. Lawrence Corporation of Newfoundland and Huntington Fluorspar Mines proposed that the existing duty free entry of fluorspar be replaced by a duty of $10 per ton on all grades from all sources. This proposal was opposed by The Aluminum Company of Canada, which owns Newfoundland Fluorspar Limited, and by Canadian producers of glass, steel and chemicals.

The tariff board came to the conclusion that the closing of the St. Lawrence Corporation's mine was not primarily due to developments in the Canadian market, but rather to the fact that it could no longer sell in the United States market on which it has been entirely dependent.

With regard to the applicants' request for the imposition of a duty of $10 per ton, the board's majority opinion is to be found on page 36 of the report which I have just tabled. The relevant extract is as follows:

> On the basis of the current fair market value, f.o.b. mine or mill in Mexico (the major source of supplies to Canada), a duty of $10 per ton—estimated by the president of St. Lawrence Corporation of Newfoundland as necessary to permit operations yielding a profit of about $5 per ton—would have an ad valorem incidence of something between 60 and 100 per cent. While a duty of $10 per ton would be in the nature of a bonanza to the relatively small operation at Madoc, it would very likely prove—in the opinion of the board—insufficient to permit St. Lawrence Corporation of Newfoundland to compete with the Mexican product. On the other hand, it would be a burden upon the domestic users of fluorspar, especially to those industries competing in export markets.

The board accordingly has not made any recommendation for any change in the provisions of the tariff on fluorspar.

"CANADIAN ECONOMIC OUTLOOK FOR 1958"—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL COPIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he proposes to make available to members of the house and the press gallery copies of the "Canadian Economic Outlook for 1958"?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the number of copies of the Economic Outlook that were printed or at least mimeographed, last year was very limited and it is just impossible to accede to the hon. member's request. I had available only about five of those copies. I tabled two and one was made available to the press gallery, but there certainly are not enough to circulate to all hon. members. No such request was made for the "Economic Outlook for 1957" and I did not anticipate that such request would be forthcoming now.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like formally to make that request because this is a document that should be in the possession of hon. members and of the Canadian people. As to the difficulty of reproducing copies of it, that is really not a serious matter. I should think that at least all hon. members should have copies, and I should think the press gallery are entitled to some copies of a document to which so much importance has been attached.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to raise a question of privilege on this point. I had a motion on the order paper covering this matter. It is true that the motion has not passed, but in my experience it has always been customary for a government producing a document, even if the motion relating to the document had not yet been passed—I suppose as a courtesy—to send a copy to the person in whose name the motion stands. Very late yesterday morning I was finally able to get the copy of the document which was tabled, but this copy is the property of the house. I have yet to receive a courtesy copy. Last year, when the circumstances were different, there was no difficulty encountered by the government in producing hundreds of copies.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Since this question of privilege has been raised, I think someone should set the record straight. I recall many occasions when copies of documents were tabled by the former government in response to motions when no extra copies were made available.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-U.S.—STATEMENT ON MEETING OF MINISTERS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Houck) asked me if I would be making any report to the house on the meetings at the beginning of last week of the joint United States-Canada committee on trade and economic affairs. I intimated at that time that if it were the wish of the house I would make a short report and table the communiqué which the committee authorized to be issued at the conclusion of its meetings.

May I, therefore, now table copies of that communiqué and say briefly that the meetings of the committee proceeded in Ottawa on January 5 and 6. On the part of the United States it was attended by Hon. Robert B. Anderson, secretary of the treasury; Hon. Fred A. Seaton, secretary of the department of the interior; Hon. Lewis L. Strauss, secretary of the department of commerce; Hon. C. Douglas Dillon, under secretary of state for economic affairs; Hon. Marvin L. McLain, assistant secretary, department of agriculture, as well as by a number of high officials from the departments concerned in the administration of the United States.

Canada was represented by my colleagues the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) and myself as well as our officials.

It had been expected that Mr. Dulles, the secretary of state of the United States and Mr. Benson, the secretary for agriculture, would be attending, but within a few hours of the meeting both of them were incapacitated, the one by illness and the other as a result of an accident.

The meeting was carried on in the most friendly and informal atmosphere. A very wide range of subjects came before us for discussion. These subjects included, of course, trade problems; even with the happy relations that exist between Canada and the United States there are still formidable trade problems.

On the part of the Canadian representatives the Canadian point of view with respect to the limitations imposed by the United States on imports of Canadian oil, lead and zinc, as well as certain aspects of United States agricultural surplus disposal policies, were plainly stated and vigorously pressed as was also the firm insistence of the Canadian government upon the fullest respect being extended to Canadian sovereignty in all its aspects.

A question was raised after the meeting concerning the range of subjects that came before the meeting, as to whether matters pertaining to defence purchasing came within the scope of the discussions. They did not, Mr. Speaker. There is another joint cabinet committee, the committee on defence, which embraces within its scope matters pertaining to defence purchasing.

I stress the very happy and extremely friendly and informal spirit which prevailed on the part of representatives of both countries. The meetings were useful. They provided an opportunity for a timely exchange of views, and it is the view of the Canadian government that the meetings served a very useful purpose.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What did they accomplish?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am asking leave, Mr. Speaker, to table copies of the communique which the committee authorized to be issued at the conclusion of its meetings.

WATER RESOURCES

FRASER RIVER BOARD—TABLING OF PRELIMINARY REPORT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the preliminary report of the Fraser river board submitted to the governments of Canada and of British Columbia as of October 31, 1958.

As a result of its three years' study and based on data accumulated for several years by its predecessor, the Fraser river board has made a number of recommendations which deserve careful study by the responsible authorities. These range from expanding the program of collecting basic data regarding the Fraser river basin to multi-purpose development proposals for the basin.

One project, predicated on a partial development of the river and on dyking, offers hope of controlling the disastrous floods which the lower mainland of British Columbia has known. This project, which requires further examination, might achieve flood control on practically a self-supporting basis and with no harm to the salmon industry. If the British Columbia government is disposed to have this matter further examined, the dominion government will consider such a suggestion.

NATIONAL MUSEUM

STATEMENT RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT AND SET-UP

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I should like to make a brief statement regarding the situation in the human history branch of the national museum of Canada.

In June, 1956, a civil service competition was advertised to fill the position of director of the national museum which was to become vacant with the retirement in November of that year of Dr. Alcock, who was formerly its head. After the competition was launched but before the selection of a new director was made, the then government decided, in October 1956, to create two museums, a museum of natural history and a museum of human history. As a result of the civil service competition Dr. Loris S. Russell was appointed director of the natural history branch and Dr. Jacques Rousseau was appointed director of the human history branch.

There has not been and there is not now any difficulty whatever in the natural history branch. So far as the human history branch is concerned, it appeared in June 1958 that there was serious unrest among the senior scientific personnel. An inquiry was immediately undertaken at the direction of the deputy minister. In the course of the inquiry, it developed that the director of the human history branch was in immediate need of two months' leave of absence for medical reasons. This, along with absences of the scientific staff in the field during the summer and fall, as well as absences by the deputy minister and myself on departmental business, delayed completion of the inquiry.

The inquiry has involved the interviewing of a great many people, the checking of many statements, and the examination of a great deal of material that has been submitted. Before it was completed the matter became the subject of reports in the press. The fullest inquiry has now been completed, and a report was submitted to me by my deputy minister on January 15.

May I say at this point, Mr. Speaker, that the report is confidential and it deals, on the basis of confidence between an official and his minister, with many complaints about and reflections on the personalities and character of many people. As such it is a privileged document and it will not now nor, so far as I am concerned, at any time in the future be made public. A copy has, however, been sent to the chairman of the civil service commission for his information and retention.

From the most thorough inquiries it is clear that there are no policy questions of any kind at issue. It is purely and simply a case of violent clashes of personalities. There had, it is apparent, been certain strains among some of the scientists in the branch in the past, but these had never led to difficulties nor assumed serious proportions until now.

The inquiry has revealed that several scientists in the museum have been at fault in the matter in varying degrees. At my direction the deputy minister is interviewing these persons to make clear the deficiencies of conduct that have contributed to the most regrettable flare-up. It will be made abundantly clear to all of these that they will be expected henceforth so to conduct themselves in their relations with one another as to restore to the branch and to maintain in the future the atmosphere that is essential if the scientific work of the museum is to be carried on.

The director of the branch, Dr. Rousseau, is an ethno-botanist of wide reputation. I want it to be perfectly clear that nothing in the matter or in the inquiry or report has at any time or in any way reflected on his reputation or standing as a scientist. The direction of a branch of the museum is not, however, primarily a scientific task. It is primarily administrative. The inquiry has made it clear that Dr. Rousseau's talents are scientific rather than administrative. He is therefore being offered a purely scientific post in the public service which I hope he will see fit to accept. A period of time has been given Dr. Rousseau to consider the matter, and I would not wish to go further at this point.

The civil service commission has been consulted and kept fully informed before decisions were taken. They fully concur in the conclusions that have been reached.

I should like to add, Mr. Speaker, that as no question of policy is involved and as this is purely a matter of personal and internal frictions within the human history branch, I think it would be in the interest of the museum, of the public service, and of the scientists concerned if the healing processes of time could go forward as quietly and with as little further publicity as it is possible for them to do.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION BY GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of the unemployment figures made public today, and showing the highest unemployment for this time of year in Canada since the end of the war. Can the minister say whether emergency action is being contemplated, and whether there is to be a reduction in the qualifying period for seasonal benefits in order to alleviate suffering amongst many Canadians at this time?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, no consideration is being given to a reduction in the number of weeks necessary to qualify for unemployment insurance. Since the hon. member has mentioned that this release shows the highest number of unemployed since the war, may I say that the action taken by the government has resulted in improvement to the extent that there were 22,000 more people employed in December of this year as compared with December, 1957.

Mr. Argue: How does this help the people who are unemployed?

Mr. Starr: In answer to that question may I say that the municipal incentive program which will take effect toward the end of this month will have the result of improving those figures.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister give us the figures covering the increase in the labour force in 1958?

Mr. Starr: I have not those figures available, sir. All I have is the dominion bureau of statistics release which shows that there were 22,000 more working in December of this year as compared with last year.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister a supplementary question, the answer to which will assist us in interpreting the very important employment report given to the country today. Can the minister say whether or not there is any category of workers formerly included in these reports that is not now included in the reports presented to parliament and the country today?

Mr. Starr: The same categories are included now as were included in the past.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not true that fishermen are not included this year, and is the minister's answer that no consideration is being given to a reduction in the number of stamps required also applicable to fishermen; because the minister will recall that he told me the opposite quite recently.

Mr. Starr: In the first part of his question the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is again confused, because he is referring to the national registration figures in which fishermen are not included. Everyone seeking work is included in these dominion bureau of statistics figures, and the qualification period for unemployment insurance also applies to fishermen.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words the government has ceased—

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is not going to enter into a debate on this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I simply want to clarify the minister's answer. The question I was going to ask the minister—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a supplementary question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a supplementary question, and it is this. Did I understand the minister to say consideration is no longer being given to a reduction in the number of stamps required by fishermen for unemployment insurance?

Mr. Starr: I said, sir, no consideration is being given to reducing the 15 stamps that are required for seasonal benefits at the moment, and that includes everyone.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

INQUIRY AS TO READINESS FOR 1959 NAVIGATION SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. G. Allmark (Kingston): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister advise the house concerning the readiness of the St. Lawrence seaway system to handle traffic at the commencement of the 1959 navigation season?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. I shall make the following answer in view of the great interest shown in this matter by the hon. members for Vaudreuil-Soulanges, Glengarry-Prescott and Grenville-Dundas.

At the end of 1958, just four and a half years after the St. Lawrence seaway authority was established, construction of works under its jurisdiction has progressed to a stage which assures that all channels, locks and ancillary structures will be available to shipping at the opening of navigation next spring, although subject in part to a restricted depth of 24½ feet until June 1, when the specified minimum depth of 27 feet will be available throughout.

An over-all insufficiency of equipment suitable for dredging of the various classes and conditions of materials encountered, aggravated by the early advent of winter which so seriously interfered with the clearing of ocean vessels from the Lachine canal and Montreal harbour, has retarded the completion of production and clean-up dredging and the proving of all navigation channels to the specified 27 feet depth and, in a few places, to full width.

All five lock structures undertaken by the seaway authority have been completed and all lock equipment and machinery has been installed and tested. All the work undertaken by the St. Lawrence seaway authority with respect to Jacques Cartier bridge, Victoria bridge, Honore Mercier bridge, Caughnawaga C.P.R. bridge and the Cornwall island high level bridge has been virtually completed. The St. Louis span for the Canadian National and the Valleyfield span for the New York Central over the Beauharnois canal are scheduled for completion by March 15, 1959. The Cornwall north channel bridge is scheduled for completion late in 1960, with tenders for the substructure to be advertised by the end of February, 1959. The seaway authority is issuing a more detailed statement as to completion of various phases of the work.

Before vessels may safely transit the new seaway facilities aids to navigation have to be placed, and this is a responsibility of the Department of Transport. Every effort will be made to have this work completed as closely as possible to the time when navigation normally would commence. This is dependent of course on weather, ice conditions, and a number of related factors. The present objective for the completion of this work is about April 20. However, in accordance with established canal operation practice a more precise statement as to the opening date can be expected toward the end of March.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a further question. It is not really a supplementary question, but it deals with the seaway. Before I do, perhaps I might be allowed to tell the minister that I am very happy to have him make this statement. It is quite clear that the minister is ably following the steps established by the former administration.

The question I wish to direct to the minister, which I feel he may not be able to answer today and if not he may take it as notice, is this. The President of the United States announced yesterday, I think, that for the year beginning July 1 the seaway is expected to collect $12,600,000 in tolls, of which $4,200,000 will go to the United States. He went on to make a general statement about the operation of the United States part of the St. Lawrence seaway, and I wondered if the statement made by the President was correct and whether the minister would not consider making a similar statement to the house in connection with the operation—tolls particularly—of the St. Lawrence seaway as the President made to congress?

Mr. Hees: I expect to be making a statement regarding tolls at a time when the final toll structure has been agreed upon by both the United States and Canadian governments. I shall make it just as soon as possible.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I have a supplementary question with respect to the information the minister gave us. Is he in a position to project the same kind of information or analysis for the upper lakes at this time and give us some indication as to the time schedule so far as deepening is concerned, and whether the ships which are going to be able to come in and take advantage of the deeper drafts of the St. Lawrence seaway will be able to go on further into the upper lakes?

Mr. Hees: The deepening of the Welland canal locks will be finished for the opening of navigation.

Mr. Fisher: The Welland canal is hardly in the upper lakes.

Mr. Hees: Perhaps if the hon. member could get together with me afterwards he could tell me what he has in mind and what difficulties he envisages.

Mr. R. M. T. McDonald (Hamilton South): I have a supplementary question with regard to the bridge going across the entrance to Hamilton harbour, something which the Liberals forgot to do. Can the minister give us the date when this bridge will be completed?

Mr. Hees: No, but I will check into the matter and let the hon. member know.

SUGGESTED OFFICIAL OPENING AT BOTH MONTREAL AND CORNWALL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. The other day I asked him if he could tell the house where the official opening of the St. Lawrence seaway would take place, and his reply was that when he tabled the itinerary of the royal visit I would be able to find out. I have looked at the itinerary, and there is nothing to indicate where the official opening will take place save and except an insertion which says that when the details have been completed another statement will be made at a subsequent time.

I should now like to direct this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that a great deal of preparation is necessary in both the areas where the opening is likely to take place, will the Prime Minister not tell the house now that the official opening will take place at both the city of Montreal and the city of Cornwall inasmuch, as it has been stated in the press on more than one occasion that such probably would be the case?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the interest of the hon. gentleman in Montreal but his vicarious interest in Cornwall does not have the same appeal to me. Representations have been made by the hon. member for Stormont and by many other members with respect to matters such as this. As I stated the other day, I thought the hon. member's question would receive an answer when the committee reported this week and the itinerary was brought before the house. The committee has given the fullest information it has at the moment, and when General Graham is in a position to determine, with the assistance of the committee, the answer to the question asked it will be transmitted immediately to the house. I felt the other day that the information the hon. member asked for would be available at the same time the simultaneous release of the itinerary was made in the United Kingdom and Canada. It is not available as yet.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder if the Prime Minister would allow me to bring this matter to his attention; it will probably reply to his query as to my anxiety for Cornwall. There was a precedent established in connection with the ground-breaking ceremonies of the St. Lawrence seaway, at which time it was decided there would be two official ceremonies, one in the state of New York and one in the province of Ontario.

The question is this. In view of the fact that the situation is the same, would it not be advisable that two official openings should take place, one in the province of Quebec, in the city of Montreal, and the other in the international section? Would the Prime Minister not give consideration to the suggestion, either himself or by means of the committee? There is a precedent for this, as I have stated.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a matter for determination not only by the committee but also after consultation with Her Majesty. Certainly the views of the hon. gentleman will receive consideration by the committee, to whom I will direct them.

TRADE

RECEIPT OF NOTES RESPECTING CHANGES IN CUSTOMS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question in view of the astonishing admission made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) that he did not have at any time before or while the anti-dumping legislation was being discussed in this house last session, the two notes addressed by the government of the United States to Canada dated June 26 and September 3. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether or not he was in possession of these notes at the time, and can he offer an explanation as to why his colleague the Minister of National Revenue was not so informed?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall now the exact dates but I made a public statement with respect to this matter, and I would draw that fact to the attention of the hon. member. My recollection is that this note dated in early September was left in the Department of External Affairs by a junior official of the United States embassy, and it was left by that official with a junior member of the staff of the Department of External Affairs. It was never left with me. Indeed it was never left with the undersecretary of state for external affairs. It was never left with any of the assistant under secretaries. It did not come to my attention until the debate was over with respect to this anti-dumping legislation. I must take responsibility for this matter as the political head for the department, but I can state that as a fact. I saw the United States ambassador on three occasions. One was a social occasion and it is not quite fair to mention that one, but I saw him for discussion on two other matters. No reference was made in any way to the fact that this note had been delivered at a junior level in the department.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He was talking of the note of September 3. May I ask him what the situation is with respect to the note of June 26? Had that note been brought to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and was that note circulated to the Minister of National Revenue and perhaps to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, or were all kept uninformed?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I was aware of the earlier note and, having regard to the normal practice, I would have expected the officials would have distributed copies of it.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question. Will the minister find out whether in fact this June note was circulated, and will he also find out whether the September 3 note was circulated to the ministers concerned and on what date?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): With respect to the observation made by the Leader of the Opposition may I say this. I gave an explanation with respect to the September note, and I can assure the house that if I did not know about the existence of that note, my colleagues did not know about it either.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

ZINC—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NAME OF COUNSEL APPOINTED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yesterday the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) asked me whether I could supply the house with the name of the counsel appointed to represent the government in the zinc oxide case. The name of the counsel is Mr. Pierre Badeaux, Q.C., former batonnier of the Montreal bar.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO NEW EDITION OF BOOK ON PENSION PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, without undue delay I wish to ask the Minister of National Revenue what has become an annual question. In view of the continued interest of thousands of industrial workers in the publication of the revised blue book on pension plans, and in view of the minister's assurance on July 8 last that the blue book would be produced in due course and without undue delay, would the minister inform the house when the administrative tortoise, mentioned in his reply to my questions of June 2 and July 8 last, will reach the finish line and the long expected blue book on pension plans be published?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend that the tortoise is very near the finish line and will cross it in good condition, but due to the probing of my hon. friend it will be a little weary and will have to have a little time to catch its breath before it subjects itself to the critical eye of my hon. friend.

MONTREAL—REASON FOR REFUSAL TO RECOGNIZE PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is it a fact that the C.B.C. refuses to recognize the Montreal Television Producers' Association only because that association is affiliated to the Canadian and Catholic Labour Union?

(Text):

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I did not catch the full and correct wording of the question. Since it is a very technical subject, I think perhaps if my hon. friend will permit me to do so I would prefer to take it as notice and answer him tomorrow. As I said the other day, when these matters are concluded I will be prepared to make a full statement, but I will deal specifically with this question tomorrow.

MONTREAL—TORONTO—REPORTED DIFFERENCES IN SALARIES

Mr. Adrien Meunier (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask another question of the Minister of National Revenue. Is it true that C.B.C. producers in Montreal are getting less pay than C.B.C. producers in Toronto? If so, could the minister supply figures in this regard?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked for statistical information. He might put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I bring to your attention the fact that the first part of the hon. member's question is perfectly within the rules of the house. Perhaps the second part is not within the rules, but the first part certainly is.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The salaries of the C.B.C. are solely in the control of the corporation. I have no idea what the salaries are and I do not intend to find out unless we have an order from the house to that effect because I think that is a matter of internal administration of the corporation. I am quite certain those salaries would be on a comparable level across Canada.

BROADCASTING

TRANSFER OF RADIO REGULATIONS OFFICE, WINDSOR TO LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Transport this question. In view of the representations made to him last fall by myself and, I presume, by my two colleagues from Essex county as to the decision of the Department of Transport to transfer the Windsor radio regulations office to London, and in view of the announcement that this transfer is to take place on February 1, does the minister not consider that it would be a great mistake to transfer this office from Windsor to London? Windsor is a larger community. I would ask the minister to state to the house now whether he cannot—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member may be presenting a good case, but this is not the time to do it. The sequel to this argument is to ask the minister for an opinion, something which is also against the rules of the house at this stage.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, Mr. Speaker, may I say that this is a matter that is to take place on February 1. I am asking the minister whether he cannot reconsider his decision and recognize the priority of Windsor as one of the important cities of Canada.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): No one appreciates more than I do the importance of Windsor as one of Canada's great cities. The hon. member for Essex West got in touch with me, as he has said, and put the proposition before me. We examined it very carefully and I have written to him, as he knows, in some considerable detail explaining—well, I wrote.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You wrote to the hon. member for Essex West.

Mr. Pickersgill: You said "the hon. member for Essex West".

Mr. Hees: Well, I will check; I think I was in touch with the member for Essex East as well. However, as I explained at that time the department considered the matter with great care, and the reason was that additional areas could be better serviced if the operation were centred in London than if it were centred in Windsor. It was solely for that technical reason that the change was made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Real discrimination.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I think you might be interested to know that this whole matter centres around the transfer of only two technical personnel from Windsor to London.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the minister would not want to give the country and parliament a wrong impression. It is not the number of employees but the importance of the bureau that is involved, and the minister has not given the house any satisfactory explanation so far.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The importance of Paul is at stake.

Mr. Hees: If the hon. member will come and see me afterwards I will give him more information which I feel sure will satisfy him.

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—REQUESTED DELAY OF DIVERSION WORK ON VICTORIA BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Laurier inquired if I would ask Canadian National Railways to delay the diversion work on the Victoria bridge until the construction of the champagne—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: —the Champlain bridge had been completed. We are all in a rather heady mood today, Mr. Speaker. I am advised by the management that there is the utmost urgency for the diversionary bridge to be completed so as to avoid interruption of navigation after the opening date of the seaway. The management is preparing a statement of the reasons for this condition, and I shall be glad to provide my hon. friend with the information as soon as I have it.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON WINTER NAVIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Levis, and say that there is no attempt to maintain winter navigation between Montreal and Quebec.

[Mr. Hees.]

Usual ice-breaking operations are taking place to prevent flooding and to help ferry services.

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for his answer, but frankly I do not think it is very clear.

(Text):

The question I asked the minister yesterday, and I will repeat it in English, was whether the department would leave navigation open between Quebec and Montreal this winter, because there were reports in the Quebec press a few days ago that the channel would be open for winter navigation. That was the purpose of my question, to see if officially the department would leave the channel open during the winter months this year.

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I wonder whether I might supplement the answer given by the Minister of Transport. I should like to point out that in Canada we have other ports besides Quebec and Montreal. I refer particularly to Saint John and Halifax, the winter ports of Canada. The minister's answer—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Brooks: The Minister of Transport could very well have answered that there is no necessity for keeping the St. Lawrence open between Quebec and Montreal during the winter months. This winter has shown it would be an impossibility in any case. I suggest that the hon. member forget it.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Bourget: On a question of privilege, the reason I asked the question was that I wanted to know whether the department had enough icebreakers to provide for navigation not only in respect of Quebec but all other ports that need icebreaking. The question asked by the hon. member for Gloucester was asked for that purpose. I have no objection to the ports of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or any other place in Canada being kept open. I also asked the question because the matter was mentioned in the Quebec press.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Winch: You do not need icebreaking in Vancouver.

Mr. Hees: The answer I tried to convey in my imperfect French was that we are going to carry on icebreaking operations between Toronto and Montreal in exactly the same way—

Mr. Pickersgill: Toronto?

Mr. Hees: Quebec and Montreal.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is certainly taking a broad view.

Mr. Winch: It sounds like more champagne.

Mr. Hees: Quebec and Montreal, just to make it as impossible as is possible for the Montreal harbour to become flooded.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the minister has broken the ice too well. Perhaps we might turn now to more serious questions.

Mr. Robichaud: I should like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the well-taken interest in the maritime ports by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, for which I thank him, will the Minister of Transport reconsider his decision not to open Pictou harbour?

Mr. Hees: As I explained yesterday, we would open Pictou harbour for that particular shipment if it were possible but, as I pointed out, it would require the services of our two biggest icebreakers, which are very heavily committed on other extremely important work at the present time. For that reason it is impossible.

Mr. Speaker: May I say to the hon. member for Gloucester that he should not expect an answer to the same question on two successive days.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED CLOSING OF COLLIERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys arising out of telegrams I have received from William Marsh, president of district 26 of the united mineworkers and Allan Foley, president of the Phalen local, dealing with the projected lay-off, in February and for at least four months following that, of 4,000 coal miners.

Will the minister say what consideration the government is giving to the request of the dominion coal board that its powers be extended to include authority to market surplus coal as a means of disposing of such coal and assuring employment by keeping the mines operating?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question a few moments ago. I have nothing to add to what I said last Friday. I did not, however, receive official confirmation of the intention of the company to lay off some men. I have received a telegram along the same lines as the hon. member, and I may say that the matter is under consideration at the present time.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I direct a further question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys of which I have not given him notice, and ask him whether he was informed officially by A. V. Roe that there was to be a shut-down by their subsidiary, Dosco, of the coal mines in Nova Scotia prior to the company's announcement; and whether it is not correct that he has since received a letter from this company, whose actions since entering the province of Nova Scotia have, to my mind, certainly been questionable.

Mr. Comtois: I will check the matter with the dominion coal board to see whether there is any foundation for that statement.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he has received a report which the government authorized a distinguished Canadian soldier to make in the matter of civil defence and, if so, when that report will be tabled.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The report has now been received. It is being studied, and I expect to have an announcement to make in the house in a very few days.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the minister intend to table that report for the consideration of this house?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): My first answer still goes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The answer is no.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Do not put words into my mouth.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, January 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. W. H. Jorgenson for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable trepidation that I venture to make my contribution to this debate following the heavy artillery of yesterday, the sounds of which still seem to echo through this chamber. I should like to express my personal pleasure at finding you still in the chair. I should like further to add my congratulations to those which have already been expressed to your deputy, the chairman of committees, and to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address, and to say that I am happy to see that my admiration for the hon. member for Provencher is now being widely shared in this house. As for the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, there is very little I can add to the universal praise and acclamation he has received from all corners of this house and in every newspaper I have been able to read since his speech was made.

I agree with everything that has been said, Mr. Speaker, concerning the speeches of the mover and seconder. There is one other comment I have to make about the tone of those speeches and their constructive aspect. The benefits which will accrue as a result of the suggestions made will continue for a long time to come. I might add, however, that the tone of the debate changed sharply when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) rose to his feet yesterday.

Referring to battles best forgotten, and taking a narrow partisan view of the various problems facing this country, I am happy to say he reaped the whirlwind later in the day. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had no choice but to reply in kind to that type of speech and to destroy the flimsy structure of those partisan arguments. I mentioned heavy artillery. As we know from experience in the last war, the heaviest artillery barrage still leaves a job to be done by the infantry.

I should like to take issue with the Leader of the Opposition concerning statements made to the people of Canada by members of the Conservative party concerning tight money. I suggest that he examine the record previous to the 1957 election in the riding of York-Scarborough and in every other riding I visited during the election. He would find it was the discriminatory effects of the tight money policy as applied by the Liberal government which were under fire, the fact that the small businessman bore the brunt of that policy. It was not a blanket condemnation of tight money or monetary policies.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to the famous white paper which appeared and disappeared presumably in the same drawer as the famous Canada medal, and other Liberal schemes. A notable feature of that white paper, as I recall it, was the shelf of public works. As I have stated in this house —and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) did not disagree with me—that shelf did not exist, and was not available when needed by the present government.

I found it passing strange to listen to the Leader of the Opposition yesterday and his comments in general about government action concerning recession and inflation. I recall that in a television broadcast he referred in detail to this subject. We do not have the benefit of a staff to sit in front of television sets and make notes, but I do recall specific questions being put to the Leader of the Opposition on that program early in December asking him if there was anything he had to propose in the anti-recession field which the government had not already done; and his answer, as I recall it, was no. He was then asked whether there was anything which the government was doing with which he disagreed, and the answer to that question was also in the negative. I found it passing strange to hear the comments in the economic field yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition in such dramatic contrast to his statements to the nation in a television interview.

He has accused the government of adopting policies in fighting this recession which he characterized as fumbling and bumbling. I would like to take the Leader of the Opposition to my riding and to many other ridings in this country and show him low cost homes, low rental homes, homes that have been built and are now being constructed for the senior citizens of this country, homes being built for young families, homes they can afford to buy and maintain, as a result of these fumbling and bumbling policies. I ask the hon. gentleman if he disagrees. Would he prefer not to have seen these policies implemented which have had what I consider a tremendously beneficial result?

We will hear from hon. gentlemen opposite the words "fumbling" and "bumbling" in relation to almost every department of government in respect of their active anti-recession activities, and I may be permitted to anticipate just a few of the departments that will be subjected to this type of criticism. As long ago as December 1, 1958, the Minister of Public Works announced that jobs for 250,000 Canadians would be provided this winter by the government's housing program. I submit you cannot separate the on-site activities of building from the effect of such construction on the rest of the economy. One must consider the myriad items that have to be manufactured to supply these homes and furnish them when built and occupied. A conservative estimate of the potential indirect employment that could flow from that program is at least as much as the on-site employment, another quarter of a million jobs, and one-quarter of a million and one-quarter of a million make half a million jobs.

We move further into the government's own construction program, which will provide on-site employment this winter for 150,000 men. Certainly the ratio in that type of construction has far wider effects on the rest of the economy, but let us consider just a conservative estimate of 150,000 indirect jobs, or a total of 300,000 jobs, indirect and on-site.

We could go from department to department considering the beneficial results of the acceleration of anti-recession activities undertaken by this government and come to impressive totals which I am not prepared to present at this time. These are but a few of the examples of effective anti-recession activities which by no stretch of the imagination can be described as fumbling and bumbling.

Scarcely any item escaped bombardment yesterday in the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, but from that torrent of words there emerged what is surely one of the most fascinating definitions of Liberalism ever to have been formulated. Hon. gentlemen may perhaps recall these words of the Leader of the Opposition uttered yesterday and reported at page 33 of Hansard of yesterday's date:

> Certainly no Liberal can be anything but a champion of the rights and liberties of the free man against dictates and pressures, from whatever source they may come.

I wonder where were these brave fighters for Liberalism when the dictates and pressures of Mr. C. D. Howe steamrolled certain measures through this house? Where were these brave fighters for Liberalism at the time of a certain division that I recall very well in the 1957 session, when we saw brave Liberals flitting back and forth behind the curtains fearful because they might have won a vote?

I expected from the Leader of the Opposition something of a more positive and constructive nature with respect to the serious economic situation which confronts this country. I have a theory formulated from my studies of parliamentary history in Canada. I call it the "middle year" theory. Parliament is at its best and does its most effective work in the years between elections. In the session immediately following an election there is perhaps too much acrimonious debate with hon. members reminding each other of what might have been said in the heat of debate on the hustings. In the session before an election perhaps too many of us speak too much to the electorate and too little to each other in creative consultation concerning the issues at hand. Certainly if at any time we can have the calm and considered judgment of the representatives of the ridings in this country it should be in these middle years.

I looked forward earlier this session to having such a spirit prevail. This was destroyed completely yesterday by the tone and manner of the Leader of the Opposition when he spoke as I submit he did to the detriment of the deliberations of this house. I say further that we in this chamber would receive the thanks of a grateful nation if we set our minds to the serious tasks confronting us, particularly in the economic field, in seeking constructive solutions to these problems which is surely the highest function of parliament.

I have a few suggestions to offer, and perhaps I may be permitted to voice them. My first reference, of course, must be a plea for a less partisan approach to these difficult problems. Second, I would urge the instigation of a study which may already be under way to equalize the effects of monetary policy to prevent a recurrence of the discriminatory type of effects of the tight money policy of the previous administration, and to protect the small businessman from the squeeze. I also think we would do well to give serious consideration to a more flexible fiscal policy. It has been demonstrated fairly clearly that there are limitations to economic predictions and their accuracy. Great care however should be taken to retain the prerogatives of parliament in this regard.

I would also plead for the retention of the more important and favourable aspects of the housing program which has proven to be so effective as a monetary and fiscal policy. If this should be reduced in years to come when we are involved in another type of battle we will have lost the beneficial aspects of such a program which should be retained. I refer again to low cost housing, low rental housing, housing for senior citizens and urban redevelopment schemes.

As I have said before in this house, we have a form of recession each winter in Canada. These housing programs, particularly in the fields I mentioned, could be related to solving the problem of our annual winter recession. I have seen in my own riding, as I am sure many hon. members have seen in theirs, new construction techniques being adopted. Encased in envelopes of plastic polyethylene film, building can go forward in spite of severe temperatures outside. The adoption of such techniques and the application of new materials in the housing field make it possible for the continuation of an effective construction program despite the Canadian winter.

It was suggestions of this type that I expected to hear—and I hope we will hear many more from hon. members of all parties in this house—during the course of this session. I should like to have heard similar suggestions from the Leader of the Opposition yesterday.

I was particularly disappointed but perhaps not surprised when the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) took the floor yesterday and commenced with the typical pious and sanctimonious denunciation of the government and official opposition. But as I listened to him I wondered where was the brave leader of that group who, speaking on a platform in his home province not long ago, castigated and denounced the Prime Minister while gesturing wildly and wheeling his arms around the world. Surely the hon. member for Assiniboia does not lack the moral fortitude to face the Prime Minister with the type of accusation he had made in his home province; but though I expected to hear something of this kind yesterday there was no mention of it by the hon. member.

I expected to hear something about the reaction of westerners to the situation in his own party which was referred to yesterday in the press. It said that active members are splintering away from the Manitoba C.C.F. party because of the methods being used to create the new political party. I expected to hear something of the platform and program of this new and vital party which it is hoped will receive farm support. Who knows; perhaps this new platform was placed in the same dark spot as the Regina manifesto and other such statements.

There was in the hon. member's speech, I submit, Mr. Speaker, an indication that a little meeting was held. If I had the ability to write a dramatic account of that meeting, Mr. Speaker, I would say that what went on was this. One hon. member said, "I will shout about unemployment; you shout about inflation; we will both shout good and loud." No matter what the government does it is damned if it does and damned if it does not. I do not think the people of Canada will be misled by that shallow subterfuge. I think they know that when the battle of the recession has been won, as it will be won in the very near future, this government will come to grips with the battle of inflation; and further, that the vigorous and aggressive qualities that characterize this government will win that battle of inflation. Of that let there be no doubt.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin with a word of commendation for the way in which you perform your duties. You were the recipient of many compliments and congratulations when you were appointed Speaker of the house. I recall that at our last session every member had a word of satisfaction on your appointment, and as a new member I joined my colleagues in expressing my sincere appreciation. However, it was not until I became better acquainted with the rules of the house that I began to realize the importance of an impartial Speaker.

I recall one instance when I offered an amendment on the second reading of a bill making changes in the Income Tax Act. My amendment called for consideration being given to repeal or reduce the excise tax on motor cars. The Minister of Finance submitted that the amendment was out of order, but after listening to the arguments you allowed the debate to proceed and it was put to a vote, notwithstanding the embarrassment to the government when it was reminded of past Conservative statements and promises compared with performance. On that occasion you earned the reputation of a worthy holder of the high office which you occupy and I trust that you will remain in the chair for a long time, irrespective of the political party which may be in power, for I hardly anticipate that this government will remain in power beyond the foreseeable future.

I also wish to say that I found the Deputy Speaker and the deputy chairman of the committee of the whole worthy of occupying their respective offices.

The mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne certainly deserve congratulations for their excellent presentations, and I certainly hope their expectations regarding the contents of the address will be justified. For my part, I feel that the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition (Mr. Pearson) has made a much clearer analysis of the speech, and I am forced to the conclusion that the government is still unsettled in its policies to meet the many important issues the solution of which is vital to the restoration of an economic climate of confidence, which this nation enjoyed in the post-war period under a Liberal administration.

In its general terms the speech contains some features which are welcomed by most Canadians, such as the reference to the discussions taking place with the government of the United States to enable Canadian industry to share in the production of equipment for joint defence purposes, which I trust will help especially the unemployment situation which is very serious in my constituency. When I say this I do not mean to be a spreader of fear. The situation is threatening to become worse unless the government will do something to ensure the continued operation of the Canada Car plant, which is manufacturing buses and tractor trailors at the present time. The president of the company made the statement in Fort William recently that the decision had been made to transfer all their commercial operations to the Dominion plant in Montreal, and to dispose of their Fort William plant. This announcement was a sad blow to the economy of the entire lakehead. It aroused the entire community, with the result that on January 8 a large delegation from the lakehead met with the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Green) and other ministers to discuss the seriousness of the situation.

I must say that we were cordially received and were given a good hearing, for which I thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), and their respective deputies. Promises of consideration were given, and the delegation left the capital with a feeling that something had been accomplished. I sincerely hope that what the Prime Minister said last night, namely "the stronger the lobby the weaker the case" will not apply in this case. I express the hope that the government will make sure that this plant, which during the last war designed and produced Grumman fighter planes, the Gregory dive bombers and the Hawker Hurricanes and, since the war, the Harvard trainers, street railway cars, electric coaches, gas and diesel buses, Arctic huts for the United States army, tractor trailers, including heated and refrigerated models, will receive immediate consideration in the light of national interest.

The speech makes reference to an increase in Canada's contribution to the Colombo plan. We are all in favour of it, but why should this increase not be made in kind, such as with farm implements? This is a suggestion made by Senator N. M. Paterson to me, which if implemented could induce manufacturers such as Massey-Harris to manufacture these implements in the Canada Car plant in Fort William. Such an enterprise would not be subject to the uncertainties of defence orders to keep the plant in operation. It would also supply all our western farmers with machinery on a permanent basis which, after all, would be more desirable than the relatively short term operation of defence production. I am putting forth this idea as an alternative which I feel has merit.

It pleased me to notice that at last the government has recognized the justice of granting supplementary pensions for retired civil servants and R.C.M.P. members on a permanent basis. Last year I had a resolution on the order paper in support of this measure.

In connection with the clause in the speech from the throne dealing with the establishment of a joint committee of both houses to review the Indian Act, I offer the suggestion that the government should give serious consideration to showing a more sympathetic approach toward the welfare of our Indian population. We have been all too prone to overlook some of their inherent rights in the past and to treat them indifferently. The Indians should not be treated as second-class citizens. Their record in our armed services during the first and second world wars was second to none.

In so far as housing is concerned, there does not seem to be any decline in the demand. Indeed, this is one item for which the demand is on the increase year by year. All one has to do is add up all the marriages taking place in these communities, and then it is easy to calculate the future requirements for housing. The natural increase in population, added to the number of new immigrants, creates a constant demand for low cost housing which the industry is not able to satisfy without government assistance to prospective home-builders by way of loans at a low rate of interest on houses costing $12,000 or less. I suggested last year that a 2 per cent subsidy on prevalent rates of interest be considered for this type of home.

The reference to the housing problem in the throne speech falls rather short of expectations, since the need for dwellings to rent is so great that mere encouragement is not enough. We are faced with an unemployment situation which is critical, and anything that is said to the contrary will not make the thousands of unemployed in my constituency any happier. While an increase in tempo in the house-building industry will not be a cure-all for the ills caused by unemployment, it will at least create jobs in many fields. I am not a pessimist and there has never been depression in my vision, but at the same time I do not share all the optimistic predictions which have been made by members of the government concerning the easing of unemployment. Nothing would please the members on this side of the house more than to see the end of unemployment, but until we see a better picture it appears to me to be our duty to point up the need for transposing those rosy predictions into actuality.

Having served as mayor of the city of Fort William for eight years, I was delighted to hear that parliament will be asked to assist the municipalities of Canada in financing construction projects. I hope this aid will not be limited to the recently announced winter work program in conjunction with provincial governments. In this connection it may interest you to know that this project has only benefited 120 unemployed in the city of Fort William. I express the hope that the assistance will go beyond the presently prescribed limitations.

One of the best forms of assistance to municipalities of which I know would be the establishment of a fund to be used for making loans directly to municipalities at a low rate of interest to finance the construction of essential public works such as sidewalks, sewers, pavements, bridges and schools. Another form of assistance would be the extension of tax relief on municipal purchases. During the last session the government removed the tax on certain purchases such as fire apparatus and road-building equipment. Municipalities should be exempt from all taxes on purchases of equipment and motor vehicles used by the works, engineering and police departments. The federal government could assist municipal councils by recognizing the combined provincial and municipal expenditures for the construction of technical and vocational secondary schools, and by making additional funds available to share in these costs.

Of all the legislation proposed by the Prime Minister none has received so much attention through all the known media of our times as has the bill of rights, which was introduced in parliament during the last days of the last session. There is indeed no shortage of arguments, pro and con, but there seems to be an area of general agreement in the fact that our laws and our courts have always protected our individual liberties guaranteed under our constitution. I am not a lawyer and I do not profess to be in a position to enlighten the house on what may be hidden behind the high-sounding words which appear in abundance in this document. Of course I am all for the things for which it is supposed to stand. After reading about the postmaster of a small sub-post office in York township who was dismissed because of a letter written to a newspaper criticizing the Prime Minister, I would say that the bill of rights falls far short of guaranteeing a man's freedom of expression if vocal expression of a political belief is involved.

So far as I am concerned the Postmaster General's statement that the Liberal administration fired 325 post office personnel since 1935 is not the slightest excuse for meting out such inhuman treatment to employees. This is an action which contravenes any and all rights of free speech and assembly, and is in direct contradiction of the rights in the bill outlined so ceremoniously by the Prime Minister himself in the last days of the last session. If there is a right which should be guaranteed to every man and woman by this government, it is the right to free expression of opinion, even on the political platform, whether he or she is employed by private enterprise or by government. You may laugh if you wish; it is quite all right.

This is one of the most fundamental rights which should be respected regardless of whether or not there have been precedents approved by any government in the past, whether Liberal or Conservative. This government would render a great service to the whole country if it would come out with a declaration that in future there will be no dismissals of any members of the civil service or discrimination shown to anyone because of political activities, so long as those activities do not conflict in any way with the performance of their duties. Without this freedom of action this proposed bill of rights becomes nothing more than a document full of words without meaning.

If we must have a bill of rights—and I am certainly not opposed to it—let us have a bill which will spell out its meaning and which will include the declaration that no person shall be discriminated against because of political affiliations or activities, and which will apply to all persons including those in the employ of the government. Such an addition would give the bill substance, and I would be the first to stand up and cheer for it.

Nineteen years ago Stephen Leacock, in his history of Canada, had this to say about northwestern Ontario:

> Perhaps the brightest page in these annals is the record of discovery and exploration of the incalculable mineral wealth of the central wilderness of Canada between the Hudson bay and the lakes. This means far more than the wealth itself, great though it must be. It removes from our commonwealth its fatal geographical defect of an uninhabited and seemingly worthless central area which broke east and west apart forever. The touch of King Midas is turning desolation into fairyland.

Since the great Canadian writer made this statement, northwestern Ontario has made considerable progress in the development of mines and forest products which has created a great industry, hydroelectric power will soon reach one million horsepower, and there is even a growing farm area. Also new communities have sprung up on the map of this great northern area.

I admit that the Prime Minister's vision of expanding and developing the country's northern regions to unlock its wealth of natural resources has captured the imagination of many Canadians. I submit that our federal government need not seek the very far north of Canada in order to apply this policy of development. The lakehead area in the very centre of Canada from lake Superior to Hudson bay and James bay is the very challenge to the imagination which our Prime Minister is seeking. No railway serves our region north of latitude 50 degrees. No highway goes beyond the Albany river and Red lake. In this vast territory the population averages one person per square mile. That is the situation right in the centre of Canada. What an opportunity there is for the government to open up central Canada with a railway and highway to connect the fresh water coast of lake Superior and the salt water bays of Hudson and James, tapping natural resources for nearly one thousand miles between them; to encourage and assist a new wave of settlement with a selective hardy stock of immigrants, creating new jobs, bringing more people and more wealth and developing strength and security for the whole of Canada.

This great area with the lakehead as its pivot, soon to become an ocean port, is awaiting the construction by the federal government of a modern harbour which has been promised. Notwithstanding divergencies of opinion with regard to the location of the proposed installations, when finally competent engineers decide on the site on its merits, solely from the standpoint of service to the whole area, then objections will vanish and the people at the lakehead will feel relieved from further uncertainties.

One cannot speak of the harbour without expressing disappointment at the delay in the appointment of the harbour commission, for which delay the government tried to blame the two city councils of Fort William and Port Arthur. These two cities appointed their members last July, only to be told later that the appointments were not valid because the bill to establish the lakehead harbour commission had not obtained royal assent.

I express the sincere hope that what the Prime Minister has in mind in his reference to the discrimination in respect of freight rates is to alleviate the discriminatory effects of the freight rate boost on the lakehead. We can all agree that the 17 per cent freight rate increase recently granted to the railways by the government was requested for the express purpose of meeting the wage increases demanded by the unions concerned. This being the case, I cannot help but consider it most unfair to areas such as the lakehead which is approximately 850 rail miles from Toronto.

The distances between our centres of population and between industries are great. Freight rates are a big factor in the industrial development of northwestern Ontario. In the matter of grain movement and the transfer of goods between west and east, we are much more closely connected with Winnipeg and western Canada than with the east. Indeed, our economy is linked more closely with that of the province of Manitoba than with that of the eastern part of the province of Ontario.

I am sure my colleagues from northwestern Ontario will be as pleased as I was to learn that the government intends to spend more money than it has spent previously upon the trans-Canada highway. Because of the deplorable conditions of the trans-Canada highway from Fort William west to the Manitoba border many of our citizens are compelled to travel to Winnipeg via the United States. Quite recently the engineering experts employed by the Department of Transport predicted that from 50 to 100 transport trucks will be leaving the lakehead for the west every day once the lakehead seaway terminal is completed. I would most sincerely urge that sufficient funds be provided by the government to have this portion of the trans-Canada highway completed and ready to receive the increased traffic expected.

I wish to speak now on one aspect of national defence which concerns the city of Fort William. I refer to the Fort William armoury, which ceased operation on the 15th of this month. The building was formerly a hockey arena. It was purchased by the Department of National Defence in 1942 for $14,000. It was originally erected in 1919 at a cost of $40,000, and was of frame construction with timber beams and trusses. The property was owned by local residents who incorporated and were shareholders in the Fort William Arena Company.

Fort William previously had an armoury in a commercial block in the downtown area of the city. The facilities provided there were rather confined. In 1942 the need for a real armoury to train the reserve force became so acute that the Department of National Defence purchased the arena as a temporary expedient. In 1951 the council of the corporation of the city of Fort William offered a site to the Department of National Defence for a new armoury in a very central and suitable location. This site was offered on an exchange basis for the present armoury site. On July 26, 1954, a communication was received from headquarters, prairie command, from which I quote:

> Army headquarters have now advised us that your proposed site is satisfactory to the Department of National Defence. Army headquarters propose to take no further action until the treasury board approve the construction of the armoury in Fort William after which the exchange of lands as outlined by you will be arranged. Army headquarters have requested that the proposed agreement cover the use of the old armoury by the Department of National Defence until the new armoury is completed.

That letter was signed by N. E. Rodger, major general, in command of the prairie command. Sir, the armoury is now closed and the units will be transferred to the Port Arthur armoury. No consideration has been given to the status of the present armoury other than declaring it surplus and transferring it to war assets for disposal.

The city of Fort William objected strenuously to this procedure, for the land on which the armoury now stands is required by the city of Fort William to serve the Fort William Gardens, a large community centre adjacent to the armoury. Consideration has been given to providing accommodation for the cadet units which have been using the armoury ever since it opened, but no consideration is being given at the present time. These units comprise approximately 350 secondary school students who have been training regularly and are now deprived of the accommodation. This will mean that the present strength will eventually disintegrate, as there is no other suitable building to serve the purpose.

Last November I, as mayor of the city, sent a brief to the Minister of National Defence, but the only response received so far has been an acknowledgement. I submit on behalf of the city of Fort William that it has a right to expect some consideration of its proposal, and I trust that the minister will take another look at the situation because I am confident that he will be convinced that a city of 43,000 people guarding the granary of the nation should not be without the facilities to train our young men to take their proper places in the event of an emergency.

I am an ardent advocate of any measure that will bring about the establishment of a loan fund to assist those on undeveloped farms, especially in northwestern Ontario and other similar areas requiring hardy and dedicated people to make a success of such projects. We have that type of people in the district of Thunder Bay, but they find it difficult to obtain loans from established banks.

It seems to me that there should be a liberalization of the act governing the Canadian farm loan board. As an example, I have received several letters from Mr. Gerhard Klinge of Walmsley, a township in my constituency. This chap came to Canada from Germany in 1951. He is married and has four boys ranging from 4 to 18 years in age. In 1954 he bought a homestead in the township of Pearson, and in 1957 he bought a neighbour's farm of 160 acres. With this farm he bought 10 cows as well as some farm equipment. In his spare time he worked in bush camps, and the monthly income of this hard working man from all sources was approximately $500, most of which was being used to make payments on mortgages and equipment. He required a loan of $8,000 and applied to the Canadian farm loan board. He even had the recommendation of the local agricultural representative. The loan was refused on the ground that his income was not sufficient to meet his obligations.

Evidently the farm loan board did not take into consideration two important aspects. The first is the character of the applicant, which to my knowledge is excellent, and the second is the anticipated increase in the income of the applicant as a result of the improvements he would have been able to achieve if he had been able to obtain the loan. I have no quarrel with the idea of helping the farmers of western Canada. I heartily approve of consideration being given to improvements in the Veterans' Land Act. But Canada needs men like Mr. Klinge. Because of men like him we can now boast of the sound foundation upon which this nation is being built.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned I was speaking about the necessity of helping the small farmers. I think we should do something to improve the lot of these hardy pioneers who operate not huge wheat farms but mixed farms, dairy farms, and truck garden farms. These are the people who for the most part are the farmers in the district of Thunder Bay.

I would be remiss if I did not mention the needs of the small tourist operator, the motel owner and others who are engaged in the tourist business of our nation. They too deserve recognition in the form of assistance; not charity, but the opportunity to secure loans and to improve their holdings in order to bring more tourist dollars to Canada. They too serve this country well and are worthy of consideration along with the small businessmen.

The visit of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip for the purpose of officially opening the St. Lawrence seaway will make 1959 one of the most memorable years in the history of Canada. The sailing of the Britannia up the St. Lawrence and on to the head of the lakes, which is the end of the Canadian seaway, will undoubtedly be recorded as one of the great events of our time. The council of the city of Fort William has already appointed a reception committee, and I am informed that it is already at work in preparation for this historic event.

Day after day our newspapers carry the sad story of unemployment and its evil effects upon family life, pointing out the danger to our own way of life. This should serve as a reminder to the government of the gravity of its task. The Prime Minister has found pleasure in referring to the leader of the official opposition as a Jeremiah. I would refer the hon. gentleman to another prophet, Ezekiel, who in chapter 12, verses 22 and 24 warned us to beware of vain visions, in these words:

> The days are prolonged and every vision faileth . . . for there shall be no more any vain vision nor flattering divination . . .

I respectfully submit—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired. Has the hon. member permission to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Badanai: I respectfully submit that the time has come to be less visionary and more practical in our attempts to solve the economic difficulties which we now face. The solution does not lie in trying to minimize, contradict or ridicule the facts about the state of our economy so ably presented by the Leader of the Opposition, whose analysis of the record of performance of this government is without doubt another illuminating chapter in the history of debates in this house.

Mr. Clement O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, my first words are ones of welcome and congratulation to the four new members who took their seats on opening day, January 15. At the same time I extend my deepest sympathy to the relatives and close friends of the late hon. members for Springfield and Trinity who sat with us last session. To the hon. members for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) I offer my special congratulations, first on their having been so honoured, together with their constituencies, and second on the very excellent content and presentation of their addresses to this house.

It will be just one year at the end of this month since my predecessor for the constituency of Antigonish-Guysborough, Mr. Angus R. Macdonald—or "Angus D.D." as he was better known—was stricken critically ill while performing his duties in this house and as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport. Mr. Macdonald somewhat miraculously survived major surgery, and though he is still very far from being a well man I am happy to be able to tell his many friends that his condition is showing constant improvement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. O'Leary: Hon. members have indicated that they join in extending to Mr. and Mrs. Macdonald and the family our warmest wishes for his complete recovery.

The constituency of Antigonish-Guysborough is one whose economy is based almost solely on the successful operation of three of the primary industries, namely agriculture, fishing and lumbering. The largest centre is Antigonish town itself, the home of St. Francis Xavier University, a university which has gained an international reputation in the field of adult education through its extension service. From a strictly academic point of view this university is likewise well recognized throughout this continent, and has among its present student body young men and women from every province in Canada and from many states in the United States.

The St. Francis Xavier extension department has carried on its adult education program for almost 30 years. Significant numbers of students, as individuals and as groups from the Caribbean, South America, Africa and especially from southeast Asia, have been coming for many years now to study the program of this extension department. Three of the faculty members spent some time in southeast Asia promoting the program. Two of them were taken out there by officials of the Colombo plan. One of the department's personnel spent two years in Ceylon, where he set up a little St. Francis Xavier extension department. An associate director of this department for many years was called to India three years ago to promote the program, and just last fall both he and the man who had been in Ceylon were asked to go to Australia to help out on a short course for fisheries leaders of the Asian countries from Pakistan to Japan.

On August 5, 1952, reflecting on the experience of this extension department, Dr. M. M. Coady, for many years the dynamic director of this department and now Monsignor Coady, director emeritus, outlined its fundamental philosophy in these words:

> The general purpose of the St. Francis Xavier extension department was to mobilize the people for continued adult learning. This was based on the conviction that in a democracy, people should not be allowed to float down the river of events but that positive purposeful effort should be put in the business of bringing them along the road of progress. They should come under their own steam, of course, but it is the work of educational institutions to organize them to do this. It is also the work of educators, we believe, to spearhead the thinking of the nation. We expect this in the field of the arts and sciences; there is no reason why we should not have it also in the field of social affairs.

The fishing industry in my constituency as in many sections of Nova Scotia and the Atlantic provinces is of vital importance to our counties. In Guysborough county it is paramount. In Antigonish county it is a very significant and contributing factor to the total income of the people. True, there has been a decline in the actual number of fishermen who previously secured their entire livelihood from this source. The reasons for this are varied and fairly numerous. None the less in the past year, though the total catch was down somewhat, increased prices compensated for this drop in volume and as a result the industry, generally speaking, provided sufficient encouragement to a substantial number of our fishermen to cause them to make plans for an expanded program in the coming year, and to attract others to the industry.

A few shore sections of our counties where the residents are attempting to re-establish themselves in the industry are faced with the problem of finding proper and adequate shelter and docking facilities for their boats nearby. As the industry declined in these areas so did the facilities once placed there, which were maintained only so long as their commercial use justified the expenditure of the public moneys involved. I well realize this sane attitude on the part of the government but I do say that now, if there is any apparent hope of revitalizing the industry, no effort or expense should be spared in providing at least the essential facilities such as wharfs, breakwaters and such dredging as may be necessary to accommodate the fishermen concerned.

As for those fishing districts which have increased or maintained their volume, I must say that the Minister of Public Works has been more than sympathetic, and I wish to thank him on behalf of the fishermen of these areas for his tangible appreciation of their needs during 1957 and 1958. This does not mean that all our requirements have been met, but we are hopeful for 1959-60 and we shall continue our efforts with his office so long as our needs are in evidence and the industry continues to expand.

I believe, too, that this is the proper place to express our appreciation to the district engineer and his hard working staff in the harbours and rivers engineering branch of the Department of Public Works at the Halifax office, for their splendid co-operation with us at all times.

About two months ago I attended the annual meetings of both the Antigonish and Guysborough federations of agriculture, and as recently as the week before last the Nova Scotia provincial federation annual meeting at Truro. I found all three meetings interesting, stimulating and encouraging. The reports and reviews of the past year's operations indicated that progress had been made, that federal and provincial government assistance to the industry contributed immeasurably toward this progress, that some problems were being solved or were capable of being solved by the farmers themselves, and that still others called for further helpful measures of assistance from government. Resolutions were presented, discussed and drafted for presentation to the appropriate bodies. Plans were made for increased production in certain types of products that could be efficiently and profitably produced and marketed. Discussion was live and frank, and as a result approved recommendations were limited to those which were of sufficient and justifiable importance as to seriously pertain to the over-all welfare of the agricultural industry.

I am happy to observe that the speech from the throne indicates that during this present session of parliament we will have an opportunity to review and revise the legislation concerning farm credit. This subject is of vital concern to my constituency and to the Atlantic provinces as a whole, as was evidenced in the resolution drafted by the Atlantic premiers' conference held in St. John's, Newfoundland, last September. A true and realistic appraisal of our family farms and a recognition of their contribution, not only to the economy of a large number of our people, but of equal and perhaps even greater significance, their contribution to the moral fibre of our society, is long past due. We maintain that our average family farm properly managed and with diversified production can provide a comfortable and enviable living for any Canadian family.

I quite agree with the statement that it requires more brains to be a successful farmer than it does to be an average member of a profession or other occupation. Speaking of Nova Scotia, I feel that we will have no difficulty in meeting this challenge because our province has a long but not proud record of exporting brains. Succeeding generations have continued to produce such men in our rural communities, and it is these who can very successfully operate their fathers' farms and bring back into production farms that have been vacated over the past quarter century and more. But in order that our young rural people may take this, their rightful place, as proud owners and successful farmers, they must be given the opportunity to borrow the necessary funds for the many and varied improvements to be effected in their lands, buildings and farm equipment.

At the present time there is no agency that can satisfactorily serve the complete credit needs of these people. True we have farm loan boards, land settlement loans, credit unions and banks, but none of those are so constituted or equipped to serve the long term capital needs of our average small farm. It is for this reason that I see hope for our type of agriculture in that which is proposed in the throne speech with respect to farm credit.

A particular situation with respect to the operations of the unemployment insurance commission and a source of not inconsiderable inconvenience and annoyance to those in my constituency filing claims for benefits has recently been corrected, in that we now have in the town of Antigonish for the first time our own claims agent, which service cannot help but guarantee to our people a definite improvement. Previously many delays were encountered due to improper and incomplete applications being forwarded to the office in Pictou county; and this office being over one hundred miles distant from some of the outlying districts of the constituency, it was well-nigh impossible or prohibitively costly for applicants to appear personally at this office. I wish to commend the Minister of Labour most heartily for having initiated this new improved service.

With the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) and with, I know, all hon. members of this house, I share a very deep concern over the great tragedy that struck the mining town of Springhill last October. The generous and spontaneous response of governments, organizations and individuals right across this continent genuinely demonstrated the solicitude of all. The magnitude of the disaster both in terms of lives lost and its far reaching effect upon the future of this town brought this about.

Recently we have read reports of this town's citizens being offered opportunities of employment other than at home. This effort on the part of public-spirited firms is to be admired and commended. However, when it is appreciated that the greater number of these men are no longer in their youth but are of middle age, unskilled other than as miners, own their own homes and have growing families, I believe anyone will agree that first every effort should be made to find employment for them at home. The government of the province of Nova Scotia has recognized the necessity for such action, and has taken the initial tangible steps for the encouragement of a local industry or industries. However, we all know that a substantial industry cannot come about overnight, so I wish to place myself on record as advocating that if this government is contemplating the erection of any type of institution in the province of Nova Scotia in the comparatively near future, which could give employment to a number of the citizens of Springhill, I strongly support the selection of this town as the site for such an institution.

At this time I will do no more than commend our government for indicating its intention to take action to alleviate the discriminatory effects of the recent horizontal increase in freight rates.

In March, 1953—and I repeat the year, 1953—a paper sponsored by the town council of Mulgrave and the Mulgrave board of trade entitled, a "Brief concerning the future of the town of Mulgrave" was released to governments and to the public generally. By way of introduction it read as follows:

> For more than half a century the community of Mulgrave has been dependent upon the Canadian National Railway. The employment provided by the rail terminus and wharves, and the rail and road ferries connecting Cape Breton island with the mainland, have made possible the building of a pleasant and prosperous coastal town of nearly 1,200 souls.
> Mulgrave is now an incorporated town with 214 residential homes, a modern school that boasts standards comparable with any in the province of Nova Scotia, three Christian churches, recreation halls and playgrounds, and all the ancillary shops and services required by a thoroughly modern and progressive rural community.
> Established on a hillside overlooking the strait of Canso, Mulgrave is surrounded by rocky timbered terrain that has no agricultural possibilities. There is, however, a generous supply of seasoned timber available and a number of freshwater lakes lie in the vicinity. The deep water harbour has for centuries been a stopping place for ships plying the Atlantic seaboard; it is regarded as one of the outstanding natural harbours in the east and during the war played an important role as a naval port.
> Now, after 50 years of stable growth, the community of Mulgrave faces disaster. The haunting fear of insecurity lies pregnant on the thresholds of her home. The stability of her family life is threatened; and the carefully nurtured traditions from which a lively community spirit has been fostered are in danger of fading into oblivion.
> For with the construction of the Canso causeway the raison d'etre of Mulgrave's existence has come to an end. The causeway is being built from a point on the mainland at Auld Cove three miles beyond the old car and rail ferry sites, and all the activities which have provided employment to the people of the town will cease as soon as the project is completed.

Then, following certain proposals, the brief went on to say:

The number of men now employed by the federal and provincial governments with the Canadian National Railway and the car ferry is 288. This represents two-thirds of the total full-time working force in Mulgrave. One hundred and seventy-nine of these men have no security of tenure in their jobs and look forward to dismissal on the completion of the causeway. There are in addition, approximately 100 seasonal workers who will be affected.

Over and above this number there are 63 men now employed with the Canadian National Railway who have sufficient seniority in the company to permit their retirement or transfer to some other locality. This portion of the working force does not itself constitute a problem; but its displacement will result in a serious loss to the community.

Against this background of the working force that will be affected must be considered the social consequences that will accompany their displacement.

At a time when millions of the earth's peoples have become displaced through war, misfortune and persecution, the plight of 1,200 Canadians in the town of Mulgrave may not seem unduly grave. But we would point out that the situation which faces us was brought about not by chance but by the deliberate and planned decision of the public authorities. The people of Mulgrave did not protest the construction of the Canso causeway because it seemed the greater good of the wider community would be served by its completion. We do suggest, however, that in achieving the greater good the needs of the small number who are affected adversely by that decision cannot in justice be ignored.

One of the proposals advanced at that time was that the Canadian National Railways—and again I remind you, Mr. Speaker, this was in 1953—construct and maintain a spur line along the coast from the mainland entrance to the causeway to the town of Mulgrave. It was pointed out that without such railway connection Mulgrave could not hope to attract new industry or even hold the small industries then existing. The spur line requested would run three miles from the causeway entrance to the port.

All of the above was advanced almost six years ago, Mr. Speaker. The causeway to Cape Breton island was completed almost five years ago and the events that took place were almost identical to the predictions made a year previous, as outlined in the brief I have just read.

As recently as two weeks ago I sat down with the town's mayor, council and representatives of other interested groups and organizations, and we discussed at some length their existing problem as presented above. We arrived at the following conclusions:

One, that an engineer and economist should be sent to the strait of Canso area in an attempt to evaluate the strategic importance of this area for shipping and transshipping facilities; two, Mulgrave being the entrance to the St. Lawrence waterway and having one of the finest natural ice-free harbours on the Atlantic coast on this continent, needs this latter fact made better known to all shipping interests. Anything that this government can do by way of publicizing this fact will be deeply appreciated. All of the facts relative to this port are easily available: 25,000-ton ships can enter this port without pilots—it is ice free the year round—during the summer it has both a north and south entrance—the harbour has a rise and fall of tide of only four feet. Every captain who has berthed his ship in this port will attest to these facts which result in a speedy and easy berthing rarely if ever found elsewhere. Three, during the winter of 1957 this port received a fair amount of freight normally handled at North Sydney. Conditions at that time resulting in the use of this port could very easily occur again. At that time all available docking facilities were utilized. As a consequence we deem it expedient that present docking facilities at Mulgrave not only be maintained but even expanded to care for present and future needs as we have good reason to believe will arise.

Four, further we believe that the Canadian National Railways spur line from the entrance to the causeway to the port of Mulgrave should be built as speedily as possible.

We in eastern Nova Scotia are very hopeful that a $40 million pulp mill will be built in the area of this port in the very near future. To date Premier Stanfield and his government have carried on successful negotiations with the company concerned; and when this pulp mill becomes a reality, that which I have recommended regarding the port of Mulgrave will be doubly necessary.

As I resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, I conclude with a general statement indicating my reaction to the speech from the throne. It is comprehensive and all-embracing and will, when its directions are implemented, have a good, positive and lasting effect on the lives of all Canadians.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): In rising to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I want to join with previous speakers in offering my congratulations to the mover of the address, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson), and to the seconder, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin). Both hon. members performed their duties as good parliamentarians, and I am sure they have earned the admiration of their respective constituents.

I well recall in sessions gone by, when members of the present government were sitting to the left of Mr. Speaker, the comments which were made following the reading of the speech from the throne. They characterized it as an empty document, a meaningless presentation or a confused, vague concentration of generalities. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not agree with the concluding remarks of the hon. member who has just taken his seat. I have in my hand a copy of the speech now under consideration during this debate. There is no doubt in my mind that this document gains more prominence by what it does not say than by what it contains. This document barely mentions, and in most cases completely ignores, problems which should have at this time the most careful consideration.

Last evening in this house we witnessed a demonstration by the Prime Minister who was trying to defend the speech from the throne. In the course of his remarks the Prime Minister proudly stated, and I quote from page 61 of Hansard for January 19, 1959:

> —we are now moving upwards. That is, in large measure, owing to the action taken by this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, I hear the "hear, hear". It is true that the profits of the Royal Bank of Canada moved upward in 1958, but the Prime Minister did not state what part the conversion loan of last fall played in these increased profits. Yes, we are moving upward. Figures have just been released this morning concerning unemployment in Canada which show that unemployment has been moving upward to 419,000 workers who were registered for unemployment insurance and claiming benefits in November last. We are moving upward. The cost of living is moving upward; the price index has reached an all-time high at 126.3. We are moving upward. The interest on loans to provinces and municipalities is moving upward. Everything is moving upward but the unemployed are still looking for work.

In the course of his remarks the Prime Minister also cited certain figures showing the percentage of unemployed as compared with the labour force of this country. These figures varied from 3.8 per cent in 1945 to 6 per cent in the months of February and March, 1950; 6.7 per cent for the same months in 1956; 5 per cent for comparative months in 1957. But when he came to 1958, what did the Prime Minister do? He was aware that the comparative figures for 1958 showed that unemployment had almost doubled that of any five or six years previous. When he came to 1958 he deliberately quoted the figures for the months of October and November, and it was only following pressure from this side of the house that he revealed the percentages for the months of February and March, 1958, which were up to 10 per cent, almost double that of any previous 5 or 6 years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize, as does every member of this house irrespective of party, that Canada should continue to recognize the necessity for providing economic assistance to underdeveloped nations. At the last meeting in Paris on the occasion of its fourth annual conference, the NATO parliamentarians gave special and specific attention to the importance of technical and financial assistance to less developed areas. These matters of vital importance to NATO countries were submitted to the NATO foreign ministers' meeting in Paris last December and, without doubt, must have been considered as problems which should be given a high priority in their deliberations. The NATO countries should seek at once the means of adjusting free world economic programs to counter, and to counter effectively, the Soviet bloc economic warfare activities which are aimed at undermining the economic stability of the free world.

May I take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, of extending to you and to the other members of the Canadian parliamentary groups who attended the fourth annual conference in Paris my sincere appreciation for their cooperation and good understanding. Our visit to the Canadian air force and army centres in France and Western Germany was a revelation to all of us. The R.C.A.F. squadrons and the four Canadian infantry brigade groups are part of the international commitment on behalf of the people of Canada. Our contribution to NATO in Europe is a subject of national concern. Every Canadian should be proud of the performance of our servicemen stationed in Europe. They have a duty to perform, they have a role to play, and they are doing it to the glory of Canada in the defence of personal freedom.

But, Mr. Speaker, what do we find in the speech from the throne which could give hope, the faintest hope, for the promises made by the present government with regard to the subject of financial relations between the provinces and the dominion? Where is that new dominion-provincial conference promised for January, 1958 and shelved ever since? What has the present government done to alleviate the heavy burden of municipal taxes? Oh, I know that great publicity was given to the Prime Minister's announcement, prior to his departure for his world tour, concerning federal participation in certain municipal projects to be undertaken during the winter months. The Minister of Labour himself took glory and satisfaction in announcing that this so-called benevolent program would provide additional winter work for about 9,000 to 10,000 men.

How many municipalities are today in a position to accept this offer, at a time when the costs of construction are seriously and substantially increased as a result of the difficulties encountered during the winter months? Why was this program not instituted in September or early fall, a period when such work was practical and economical? In many cases federal assistance would barely cover the additional cost to the municipalities and, furthermore, the total number of workers who can benefit from this program will be just about 2 per cent of the unemployed at the present time, barely a drop in the bucket or a needle in a hay stack. This program is nothing but another example of the complete lack of foresight of the present government and its complete failure to admit the seriousness of the unemployment situation throughout the country.

Where is this grave concern of the past? Where are these bold declarations of the Prime Minister, such as that which was made in Prince Albert on February 14, 1958, when he said:

> As long as I am Prime Minister, no man or woman is going to suffer from unemployment, so long as public works will provide them the assistance they require.

Then a few days later at Brantford, on February 17, 1958, here is what he said. I would ask you to listen to the words of this great evangelist, this new savior of the world:

> The humblest of our people will not be forgotten. The people who are unemployed will not be in the false position of being put on relief.

Then again in Montreal on February 18 last, in a live telecast, he said:

> As long as I am Prime Minister of Canada everything that can be done—everything without regard to limit—will be done to the end that no one will suffer.

Listen to what he said in Cornwall on February 24. The Conservatives had launched a winter works program and were putting forward a huge public works program to take up some of the slack in unemployment. Here are the Prime Minister's own words:

> We have acted. We are meeting unemployment. We have given young Canadians the hope. We have given them the vision.

Yes, Mr. Speaker; they have given the hope and the vision, but still there is no work. What has the present speech from the throne to offer in order to take care of the situation and to implement what the Prime Minister solemnly promised with respect to unemployment? It gives more emphasis to the enactment of a bill of rights and to the approval of a statute to authorize the appointment of parliamentary secretaries who are anxious for those appointments than it does to the plea of the unemployed. What do we find in the speech from the throne? We find less than two complete lines to give hope to the unemployed. We read this:

> Certain amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act will be submitted to you.

That is all we find. What does it mean? We shall wait and see, as will the unemployed. We know that the fund of over $900 million which was available to the present government when it took office has now been depleted by probably over 50 per cent. What a difference in attitude from that of February and March, 1958 when we were on the eve of a general election; and what a surprise it must be to Canadian workers to hear a member of the present cabinet, namely the Minister of Justice, declare before a group of young Conservatives that the present unemployment situation should be blamed on the previous Liberal administration.

An hon. Member: That is for sure.

Mr. Robichaud: From the other side of the house I hear the interjection "That is for sure". Is the hon. member so blind and so much obsessed by the vision that he has failed to realize that his government has been in power for over 18 months? Is not the shock of the present unemployment situation serious enough to inject into his veins and into those of the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Labour and others a sense of reality and, I could add, of responsibility? If the Minister of Justice only knew how futile his arguments were on that occasion and how sterile was his achievement. I am convinced that he would react without further delay to the plea for adequate and more audacious steps to cope with the situation.

Is this the hope, the vision, that was promised in Cornwall on February 24, 1958 by the Prime Minister? For the married workers of the country, for the young and the old of Canada, is this great vision not getting dimmer and dimmer day after day and week after week? Yes, Mr. Speaker, this great vision, with its huge public works program which was supposed to provide jobs for hundreds of thousands of Canadians, has gradually vanished in less than ten months into nothing but a dream; and today we may wishfully say to the Prime Minister, "May your dreams some day come true." How desirable it would be for the Prime Minister and for his government to forget, for some time at least, about being looked upon as men of vision and to settle down to the job of running the affairs of the country.

In the present speech from the throne the plea of the unemployed has been brushed aside. It has been scuttled under the shadow of a meaningless, useless and untimely bill of rights. The right to find work is the bill of rights that the Canadian people are expecting today. If the Prime Minister and his government would give consideration to the recent pastoral letter of His Eminence Cardinal Leger, the terrific affliction of unemployment could be coped with by new and more audacious steps to remedy this unfortunate situation. There are over 80,000 unemployed in the Montreal area alone, and from 10,000 to 15,000 young people are affected. This situation presents a problem which endangers the peace and harmony which are so essential to a sound and balanced economy.

In my own constituency of Gloucester over 7,000 persons are registered today as claimants for unemployment insurance benefits. Yes, Mr. Speaker; over 55 per cent of our labour force is registered for benefits, and even this figure does not offer a true picture of the situation. At least 2,000 more men or women have not gone to the trouble of registering with the unemployment insurance office because they knew they could not qualify, inasmuch as their eight weeks or ten weeks of contributions did not meet the requirements of the act. Proposals which I have made to the government to alleviate this deplorable condition at least in part have as yet been without result.

It does not seem fair that a farmer or his sons cannot qualify under the unemployment insurance regulations when cutting lumber or pulpwood on the family wood lots, while the same men can qualify if they leave their homes to work in lumber camps. In many cases farm owners have disposed of their wood lots at sacrifice prices to lumber or pulp dealers in order to be in a position to be rehired by these same dealers and qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. Our farmers are victims of discrimination, and an adjustment should be made in the unemployment insurance regulations in order to take care of such cases.

Requests from my constituency are at present before the Minister of Public Works for the construction of new wharves and for improvements to various harbours. Last year I expressed to the minister and to his department appreciation for their decision to proceed with major improvements to the Bathurst harbour in conjunction with mining developments contemplated for the area. Unfortunately conditions have changed. All mining activities in the area are at a standstill. Consequently the project did not materialize, and it may not take place for some years to come. The minister will admit, however, that the business interests of the Bathurst area cannot carry on much longer under present conditions. I realize that discussions are under way with the interests concerned, but I would urge the minister to give instructions to his officials to arrive at an early and favourable decision on this important problem.

Again, on numerous occasions I have outlined to the minister the deplorable situation of the fishermen of Maisonnette who are asking for an extension to their present wharf so that it may be used in their fishing operations. I want to repeat that the minister and the government have at Maisonnette an opportunity to provide employment to practically every available worker in the community. A practical wharf which can be constructed at a normal cost would, at the same time, provide facilities for the local fishermen and work to the shore help for at least four to six months of the year. Here the department is facing a problem which can be solved and which should receive immediate consideration.

The minister and his officials should also attempt to solve without delay the situation at Lower Caraquet. If a decision has been reached by the department, for obvious reasons, not to replace part of the present wharf recently carried away in a storm, consideration should be given to an immediate replacement. The need is urgent. A new location has been surveyed. The project is economically justified, and the local fishermen must be provided with adequate shelter and wharfage facilities for their fishing craft. I have enough confidence in the good judgment and ability of the department's engineers and other officials to expect that new construction will get under way at Lower Caraquet at least within the next few months. If no decision is reached at once in this particular case the fishermen of that community will have to wait until 1961 before they can benefit from wharfage facilities and operate with efficiency. It will mean more unemployment, more suffering for the people of this fishing community.

I also understand that the reconstruction and improvement of the Shippegan wharf have received the approval of the minister and his department. Shippegan is one of the largest fishing ports on the Atlantic coast, and it is urgent that the improvement asked for be undertaken without further delay.

The survey now under way by the public works department to provide shelter for the 50-odd fishing boats at Pigeon Hill should also be given priority. The fishermen concerned are awaiting with anxiety the announcement of the department's decision in this regard. The Minister of Public Works must be aware that the construction of public buildings must not necessarily get top priority on his advanced list of projects. The construction of a wharf or improvement of a harbour will not only provide work in the construction period but will provide additional facilities to expand such industries as fishing, shipping and others.

In my constituency we have a difficult problem with regard to the improvement of Tracadie harbour. This is a matter which should also receive top priority on the list of advanced planning projects to be undertaken by the department. Improved harbour conditions at Tracadie would provide facilities leading to the establishment of a substantial fishing industry so urgently needed in Tracadie and adjoining communities.

On May 19 last, Mr. Speaker, while speaking on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I brought to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue and the board of governors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the plea of over a quarter of a million of our population in northern New Brunswick and the Gaspe peninsula who are deprived of practically any television reception or service. Eight months have gone by and our people are no better off today, no further ahead than they were in May of last year. I understand that permission has been granted for the establishment of a privately owned television station at New Carlisle which would serve part of the area concerned with programs 35 per cent in English and 65 per cent in French. This station was supposed to be in operation in August, 1958, but due to unforeseen difficulties it was announced that its operation would be delayed to a later date last fall. A further delay has since taken place, and we are now told that we will have to wait until the fall of 1959 before the inauguration of this television service.

Very little has been accomplished so far toward the realization of this project, and our entire population is showing its dissatisfaction. The proposed service, consisting of 35 per cent English and 65 per cent French programs, will not be satisfactory to our population. Such a service has been tried elsewhere. It has been tried right here in Ottawa and has proven most impractical and unsatisfactory. What our population want—I said it last year and I repeat it—are the same service and the same privileges which are offered today to other populated areas of Canada.

Attempts have been made to misinform our population by telling them that it is impossible for the C.B.C. to extend to our area the service or the facilities of the English television network, for the only reason that the nearest television station at Moncton is privately owned. This is not altogether so, Mr. Speaker, and the people of Gloucester county and northeastern New Brunswick should be made aware of the true facts in this regard. It is true that the Moncton station is a privately owned station, but this does not prevent the C.B.C. from establishing relay stations or microwave towers which could be attached to the English network passing through Edmundston and then extending to Moncton, Halifax and Sydney.

The people of Gloucester county and of northern New Brunswick are Canadian taxpayers who are contributing their share for the operation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Our people have a right to enjoy and to share with their fellow Canadians in their own living rooms a community of interest, and to participate in events of national importance. Why should such a concentration of population be prevented from enjoying on television such instantaneous visual communications as the opening of the Canadian parliament or the important events of Her Majesty's visit to Canada next summer?

All across Canada microwave towers are going up. The Rocky mountains have been spanned and a link has been completed with Canada's newest province, Newfoundland. Yet the residents of Gloucester county, as well as other residents of a largely populated area in northern New Brunswick and the Gaspe coast, are still deprived of participation in the national television system. Again I want to emphasize that the proposed station at New Carlisle, if it ever materializes, will not be satisfactory to a large proportion of our population. It will not be satisfactory to the 12,000 residents of the Bathurst area and to other communities in my constituency and adjoining counties.

It could be difficult to give adequate service to certain remote areas because of excessive costs, but anyone familiar with the present television networks will soon realize that the connections extending through Edmundston and Moncton could easily and reasonably be extended to cover Campbellton in Restigouche and Bathurst in Gloucester county. Such a service is justified by the large concentration of population it would cover, and more so by the absence of technological difficulties which have been encountered in other sections of the country.

We hear these days of meetings in the prairie provinces to organize a march on Ottawa by the western grain producers, fighting for deficiency payments on wheat. If we have a wheat cry in the west, we also have a cry for television service in northeastern New Brunswick. Our people are alarmed. Petitions have been circulated, letters have been sent to the minister and to the C.B.C., and what we want now is something better than consideration or study. We want action, and we want action now. I sincerely hope that the Minister of National Revenue, who has done so well in this particular field for his own communities in Nova Scotia, will without further hesitation transmit to the C.B.C. with his recommendation the plea of the dissatisfied population of northern New Brunswick. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that on January 1, 1960, next New Year's day, my constituents will have the opportunity to hear and share with their fellow Canadians through their television sets the New Year's message of our Prime Minister.

Mr. Pallett: And for many years to come.

Mr. Robichaud: Well, they have to hear it next year because if we wait too long they will not be in a position to hear it at all. When well over 85 per cent of the Canadian population is within reach of good television service, and when over 75 per cent of Canadian households have acquired television sets, it does not seem fair that we in Gloucester county and northern New Brunswick should be prevented from sharing in what has been called the most rapid development of television service in any country in the world.

The time allotted to me will not allow me to discuss freely in the course of the present debate a matter of major importance to most of the fishing communities in the maritimes. It has to do with the serious situation developing in the administration of lobster fishery regulations in the maritime provinces, and particularly in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. I take no exception to the decision of the minister and the department to prosecute, to use the minister's own words, "as vigorously as the law requires" anyone catching or canning lobster illegally. The minister is threatening poachers with stiff penalties, and most unfortunate incidents could follow unless his department at once, without delay, takes a different view of this most serious problem.

Since my first speech in the house I have at every session urged the department to alter its policy toward illegal lobster fishing.

I have repeated again and again that more good could be accomplished by a fishery officer by a friendly chat with the fishermen at the end of a wharf or even at the corner store than by determination to play this game of "hide and seek" in order to catch a fisherman committing the offence of illegal fishing. I am again warning the Minister of Fisheries that the only means of curbing this illegal practice is through education. If the minister would divert less than 10 per cent of his department's estimates for the protection branch alone, and use it towards the education of the fishermen, I can assure him that his problem would be solved in a very short period. If the minister would divert 1 per cent of the protection branch estimate toward the education of the lobster fishermen alone, his problem would be solved. Otherwise if he insists on this rough and tough practice I warn him again that he is looking for more trouble. This Cuban method cannot be allowed in this country, and unless a drastic and effective system of education is introduced at once the minister and his department will be held responsible for the consequences. I will be back on this subject at a later date.

From recent reports which have reached us the coal industry in the maritimes and particularly in Nova Scotia is suffering a depression as serious as the one which it had to face in the spring and summer of last year. Here again we find that the government shows uncertainty and inconsistency in dealing with the problem. On Friday last, as reported on page 11 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys the following very simple question:

> My question is based on a news dispatch in today's Montreal Gazette announcing the intended closing on February 1 of five collieries affecting 4,000 men—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I recall the hon. member reading that earlier today. Could he not trust the memory of the house, without repeating the whole quotation?

Mr. Robichaud: I will endeavour to respect your views, Mr. Speaker.

The minister clearly stated at that time that he did not receive any notice from the Dosco company with regard to a cutdown in production or a staff reduction. When, with a telegram in my hand, I asked the minister a second question—whether any protest or representations had been made by local unions of the united mineworkers of America, I received an altogether different reply. Hon. members may recall that in his answer, as printed on page 12 of Hansard, the minister said:

> Their representatives came and met with us some time ago. They did make representations, and I must add that the matter is now under consideration and that we propose to come to a decision in regard to this in the near future.

What a contradiction in the two replies of the minister. At first, he declared he had no knowledge of the situation. A few moments later he told us that representations along that line and in connection with other matters were made to the government by the Dosco company. The company's representatives, he said, had met with the government some time ago. At first, he had no knowledge of the matter; next, that they had made representations and the matter was under consideration. What a contradiction. It is a confusion which is typical of the government's actions today.

If we go back to the coal debate which took place on July 1 of last year we find that we were told by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), as reported on page 1801 of Hansard of July 1, 1958, that orders were on hand for 4,600,000 tons of coal and that following the five or six weeks shutdown contemplated at that time the crisis in the coal industry would be over. The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys stated at that time that orders were on hand for the entire stockpile and that the company was only waiting transportation. Six months later we are meeting the same situation, a situation which is extremely unsatisfactory to the 9,000 or 10,000 coal miners of the maritime provinces.

Something is just not right in the coal industry, and I challenge the government to take the matter in hand and take action at once to remedy the situation. It does not seem logical that with a stockpile of 1,200,000 tons of coal in Cape Breton there should have been this winter such a shortage of domestic coal in the maritime provinces. It does not seem logical that, under such circumstances American coal should have been imported into Moncton and other centres of New Brunswick. In my own constituency of Gloucester there were shortages of domestic coal in December and early January. This does not seem fair to the coal miners who are being laid off in Nova Scotia, and to the miners of the Minto coal fields in New Brunswick, who were cut down to two or three days of work per week in the last four of five months.

Are the coal companies really making an effort to sell coal as they should do? Action by the government should be taken now before the lay-off of February 1 takes place. It is the responsibility of the government to get the true facts, to get a true picture of the situation in order to give adequate protection to the miners concerned and to make factual reports to parliament and to the country.

Unfortunately I do not have time this afternoon to discuss this matter in as full detail as I should like to do. It is the responsibility of the government to cope with the situation even if this means granting an additional subsidy to the industry. If our miners are allowed to work, the additional expenditure involved would be repaid time and time again by its benefits to the Canadian economy. Otherwise there will again be a merciless curtailment of employment in the coal fields and it is the duty of the government to prevent such a curtailment and such contemplated lay-offs. It is also the responsibility of the government to find ways and means of coping with the situation. They have accepted the responsibility of power, and on them lies the responsibility of action.

There are other matters to which I should like to call the attention of the government, but further occasions and opportunities will be offered to us in the course of the present session. The question of freight rates is vital to the economy of the Atlantic provinces and we will have an opportunity to deal thoroughly with this problem at a later date. The people of the Atlantic provinces are aware that the pledges made by the 32 Tory candidates prior to the election have, to a major extent, been ignored. What about such pledges as those in connection with defence contract expenditures in the Atlantic provinces; the establishment of crown corporations in the Atlantic provinces; and special fiscal considerations to encourage the establishment of industries in the Atlantic provinces? I ask hon. gentlemen opposite how much money has been spent by the federal government out of items which have been included for the last two years in the estimates of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources for the construction of the East Saint John thermal plant. Not yet a single penny, I am informed.

These are matters which we intend to bring to the attention of the house and of the country during the course of this session of parliament and for which the government will be asked to answer.

Mr. A. D. McPhillips (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks I should like to express my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address. I should like to say to the hon. member for Provencher—and I say this as a member who does not represent a rural or agricultural constituency—that I found his speech on agriculture made more sense to me than any other speech on this subject I have heard in this chamber.

To the seconder, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, may I say that the charm of the delivery of his broadly humanitarian speech reminded me of certain occasions in my extreme youth when I had the great pleasure of hearing political speakers from the province of Quebec when they were in my part of the country. They were Liberals, it is true, but they were big shots or big leaguers. Today that party only seems capable of producing bee-bees.

If I may be permitted to do so I should also like at the outset of my remarks to say to you, Mr. Speaker, how glad I am that you occupy the chair of this house.

I wish to to speak briefly today about the province of British Columbia, the Pacific province, and I refer to it as such for this reason. In Canada there is sometimes a little confusion caused by the broad term "the western provinces" or "the west". I think I am correct, both according to history and tradition, when I say that in Canada when the west has been spoken of, or even earlier when reference was made to the great northwest, the meaning intended was that area which now comprises the prairie provinces. British Columbia is the Pacific province. I would like to explode for all time any remnants that may exist in the minds of anyone of the myth about there being a barrier between British Columbia and the rest of Canada because of the Rocky mountains. I have even had people ask me what sort of people lived west of the Rocky mountains. I have been asked, "Are the people there more like Americans?" That kind of thinking has resulted from the old myth about the mountains being a barrier.

All Canadians, including the people of British Columbia, are proud of our national motto that Canada is a nation from sea to sea. We love the words of the poet that are engraved in stone above the door of the main entrance of this building in which this chamber is housed. I refer to the words of the poet:

> The wholesome sea is at her gates, her gates both east and west.

I wish to deal for a little time with the western gate of Canada. On that day in 1867 when British North America became the Dominion of Canada those words of the poet would not have been applicable because a barrier did exist as a result of the Rocky mountains. West of the mountains lay the crown colony of British Columbia which had recently fused with the colony of Vancouver island in 1866. Following confederation in 1867 the legislature of the crown colony of British Columbia took up an important debate. I was taught in school that the question in issue in this debate was whether or not they would remain a crown colony or join Canada. When I grew older and became a law student I had the opportunity of reading the verbatim record of those debates. To my amazement and somewhat to my horror I learned that although these venerable old gentlemen did discuss the question of joining Canada they also discussed whether or not British Columbia would join the United States in preference to joining Canada. Thank goodness the result has been what it was. British Columbia did join confederation in 1871. The Rocky mountains ceased to be any sort of barrier and the province became the greatest junction in the nation.

I shall not deal in detail with all the terms of union but under one of those terms the transcontinental railway was built under the vision of Sir John A. Macdonald and Canada became a nation extending from sea to sea with a national railway transportation system.

I should like to read from a recent article by Gus Sivertz which appeared in the good old Liberal Victoria Times in November 1958. Dealing with a statement made by a highly distinguished visitor to that area he said:

> But for this momentous decision on the part of British Columbia to remain British, and to unite with the almost unkown Canadians far away to the east . . . the Canadian nation of today would have been impossible, even unthinkable!"

The province expanded and under the policies of Sir John A. Macdonald which had nation-wide application it prospered in those early days. He had great regard for the west coast and its importance. In fact at one time he was a candidate in the riding which I now have the honour to represent. I have in my hand a statement taken from the Victoria Colonist of October 22, 1878. This paper is the oldest continuously published daily newspaper on the entire Pacific coast and celebrated its hundredth anniversary on December 11. On that date it had published a newspaper every day for a hundred years which is probably a record for more than the Pacific coast. The article to which I referred is entitled, "City Elects John A." and as I said it is dated October 22, 1878. It reads as follows:

> The election of representatives for the House of Commons for Victoria district took place yesterday and resulted in the return of Sir John A. Macdonald at the head of the poll—and also the election of Mr. Amor de Cosmos.
> Shortly after the result of the election was declared a number of persons congregated at the corner of Government and Yates, where a cord of wood was deposited and ignited.

Of course, the Liberal government came into office in Canada in 1896.

Mr. Winch: What about 1958?

Mr. McPhillips: I shall deal with 1958 later. At the moment I am referring to 1896 at which time the Liberal government came into office and the Pacific province was assigned a back seat in the affairs of the nation because that particular party had not been very interested in British Columbia and its inception, confederation or anything else. However, we were lucky in that we had a strong provincial administration under a gentleman who was later to become Sir Richard McBride and that Conservative government came into power in 1903 and remained in office until 1916. He was probably the greatest premier British Columbia ever had and so the province progressed internally.

In 1911 the Conservative government of Sir Robert Borden came into power and British Columbia came into its own again. Great improvements were made in the harbours of Vancouver and Victoria among other things and I shall deal later with these harbours and particularly that of Victoria. After careful consideration the Borden government decided to enlarge the outer harbour of Victoria to approximately three times its size. They built two magnificent ocean docks at Ogden Point and a large sum of money was expended for this purpose. That government also built a breakwater to protect the docks on the side from which the worst storms arose. Another breakwater was promised but unfortunately world war I came along and as we know that war brought in its wake a period of depression and nothing further could be done during those years.

In the harbour of Vancouver the Borden government built the great Ballantyne pier, which was recognized at that time to be the finest ocean pier in the entire world, and the first foundation upon which the great grain elevators in Vancouver were constructed, with the result that the golden harvest of the prairies could come to the west for the first time and find a storage place.

A little later, after the first world war, we were lucky in having as the federal representative from Victoria, Dr. Simon Fraser Tolmie, who afterwards became the premier of the province. Toward the end he was the minister of agriculture in the Borden administration and he was also in the Meighen government. Dr. Tolmie decided that the promise of the Borden government of those outer harbour installations in Victoria would be implemented. He had another idea also, namely, that the west coast of Canada should have the biggest drydock in the world. The government could not afford both and he was given his choice. Very wisely he chose the drydock, and that drydock was built as a Conservative project. It was the biggest drydock in the world at that time and it is still one of the biggest. It has brought great prestige to Canada as a maritime nation; it has brought millions of dollars worth of work to the west coast and it has been responsible for millions of dollars in wages to Canadian workmen.

Incidentally, it is remembered by many people that during the last war, after Singapore had gone to glory, it was the only other drydock on the Pacific ocean that could handle the great ship the Queen Elizabeth, the largest vessel in the entire world. This great ship had to come all the way into the north Pacific to reach our drydock on the west coast, which providentially was there. It handled that vessel, although the superintendent told me that when she was in the dock there were only six inches to spare on either side and 10 feet forward and 10 feet aft. The Canadian shipwrights and artisans clambered on board and they converted that great ship from a luxury passenger liner to a troop and ammunition ship. On her first trip as a troopship she actually carried 10,000 troops to the south Pacific in connection with the war with Japan.

Then the government of Mr. William Lyon Mackenzie King came into power, and again the Pacific province received a body blow. Mr. King and his Liberals were not interested in continuing the project of the Borden government, oh, no! The outer harbour of Victoria remained without its second breakwater, the Macaulay point breakwater. I suggest to this government that the time has come for the promise to be fulfilled and for the outer harbour of Victoria to receive the extra protection of the Macaulay point breakwater so as to render the harbour perfectly safe for the big vessels which come in there and encourage more vessels to come in because, believe me, Mr. Speaker, some of the pilots are in quite a nervous state when they have large vessels under control. They have to go so slowly that they almost lose steerage way. If there is a slop from the southwest it is a mighty tricky business.

I wish to say something with regard to the docks themselves. What did the Mackenzie King government do? They took them out of the management of the Department of Public Works in 1923 and gave them over to the Canadian National Railways. Ever since then the Canadian National Railways have allowed them to deteriorate and now the sheds, along with those magnificient ocean docks, are in a state of dilapidation as a result of the maladministration by the Canadian National Railways.

While I am on this subject, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say this. It is not entirely related but it has to do more with the management of this great company. What about the great Queen Elizabeth hotel in the city of Montreal which cost the people of Canada over $27 million; not the city of Montreal or the province of Quebec but the Canadian people? What do we find? I think the Canadian people are generous enough and sporting enough to pay for that hotel and have it receive the benefit of being part of a chain of railway hotels across this country such as the Chateau Frontenac in Quebec city, the Chateau Laurier in Ottawa, the Macdonald in Edmonton and, of course, that gem, the Chateau Lake Louise in the rocky mountains. I am sure the Canadian people would have been happy if that great hotel had received the name of an early and great Canadian. That hotel should have been called the Chateau Maisonneuve. But the name it received, Mr. Speaker, was not chosen; it was dictated. What did we find when the cat came out of the bag? Yes, the big tom cat came out of the bag. We found that this $27 million gem of hotel construction, which was built by the people of Canada, was given away by the management of the C.N.R. and made an integral part of the hotel empire of Conrad Hilton. This is another illustration of the way the Canadian National Railways operate. I will have a little more to say on this point when I reach it.

They tell me that Conrad Hilton is looking for a hotel site in the city of Vancouver. I suppose he is looking for a group of people of the type that Barnum said was born every minute, but I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that with the present administration in office we need to worry that the Canadian National Railways are going to pull that stunt again through Conrad Hilton.

Actually, this is not what I rose to say. I wanted to deal with another phase of the facilities in the port of Victoria. I now refer to the inner harbour. At one time there was a very fine dock in our harbour of Victoria, a government dock built first by the Grand Trunk Pacific railway and then taken over, of course, by the Canadian National Railways. Those wharves were right downtown because our harbour is in the heart of the city. The Canadian Pacific railway docks were on one side and the Canadian National Railways on the other. The Canadian National Railways did not run so many ships, with the result that ferries and other vessels coming from Seattle or Port Angelus could dock at the Canadian National Railways. The Canadian Pacific railway did not want them at their docks. They could dock at the Canadian National Railways for a nominal and proper dockage fee.

What happened? In 1947 a change took place, and a sand, gravel and cement company brought their cement mixers and machinery on to this dock site and the business people of Victoria believed that the Canadian National Railways had leased out those docks. But that was not the case, because it developed that the Canadian National Railways had sold that asset of the Canadian people in the inner harbour of the port of Victoria. Now, of course, it is no longer available to other vessels, and it is a very awkward matter for the transportation system in to that port. Because we had a government-owned dock all those years we should still have it. I ask the present government to replace that dock and that we have facilities again where ships can come and pay reasonable dockage charges.

But this is only part of the story. This is the part that I really want to draw attention to, Mr. Speaker. We have never been able to find out how much money the Canadian National got for these docks because this big pooh-bah down in Montreal says he will not tell anybody. He sold an asset of the Canadian people, but he will not say how much he got for it. The first session I was here I put a question on the order paper and got an answer. They said the date of sale was 1947, and that it was sold to Evans, Coleman & Johnson Brothers. However, the answer I really wanted does not appear. I was told it is not the policy of this company to give this sort of information.

Mr. Winch: Ask the minister. He is a member of your own party.

Mr. McPhillips: I know who I am going to ask. I am going to ask that fellow I mentioned before by description when he comes down to the committee, and I shall wring the answer out of him, do not worry.

The amazing thing is that in 1947 the city of Victoria was represented by a cabinet minister in the Liberal administration, and an important one, too. He was such a palace favourite that he afterwards became ambassador to Japan. Apparently he could not obtain this information, or would not. In any event, such entities as the chamber of commerce of Victoria and so forth still do not know how much was paid for these wharves. In any event, we shall find that out. In the meantime, I should like to urge this government to replace them because they never should have been sold and the port of Victoria is suffering because they were.

There are some people who will say, after all, the port of Victoria is not one of the great ports of Canada. I am just going to give you some figures on that aspect of the matter. It is not as important, of course, as the port of Vancouver or Montreal, but I have here a clipping from the Victoria Colonist of December 31, 1958 containing a statement by the harbour master of the port of Victoria. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, this is a good answer or one of the many good answers to those dispensers of gloom yesterday in regard to the economy of Canada.

This is the heading: "One of Our Best Years: 301 Deep-Sea Ships Use Docks in 1958". The article reads:

> Victoria's outer wharf is drawing to the close of one of its best-ever years for deep-sea traffic—and there is no reason why 1959 can't be that much better.
> Capt. Ronald Newell, harbour master, said yesterday that by midnight tonight 301 deep-sea ships would have used the outer docks, discharging and taking on cargo.

The vessels that come to the port of Victoria are all big ones. They are about 10,000 tons or over, so simple multiplication shows that we had about 3 million tons of shipping, which is about one-half of the amount for Vancouver. The large ports on the Pacific coast are Vancouver, Seattle and San Francisco. Vancouver reported about 6 million, Seattle about 11 million and San Francisco was up around 42 million; that is a lot of shipping.

The article goes on to say:

> Incoming ships bring a great variety of goods for use and consumption in Victoria.
> These include cars direct from the old country; liquor and wine from Britain and from 'down under'; Japanese oranges from the Orient; quantities of naval supplies; many food items from Britain and the United States; meat and wool from Australia and New Zealand; steel for the shipyards.
> The deep-sea vessels leave Victoria heavily laden with lumber and grain. Exact figures for shipments of these exports were not available yesterday, but grain exports were substantially up from 1957 and lumber shipments almost 25 per cent above the previous year's total.
> All this activity was achieved despite a five-week longshoremen's strike which idled the docks for that period.

There again we have a contradiction of the kind of gloom that was dispensed here yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). Incidentally, when he undertook to say that there were dirty dishes in the governmental sink, I should like to inform him that that is not so. However, when this government took office there were dirty dishes in the sink, and furthermore there was no soap.

Mr. Denis: You did not wash them. They are still dirty, if they were at that time.

Mr. McPhillips: I should like now to deal with another question entirely, and to make another recommendation to the government. Because of the beauty of the southern tip of Vancouver island, and because of the salubrious climate which makes it unnecessary to buy much fuel to keep warm in winter, this area is a haven for retired people. I have many of them in my riding who are living on pensions. The question with which I am going to deal now is the payment of the old age pension outside of Canada. I cannot see any reason whatever, particularly since the pension is on a contributory basis now and has been for some years, why Canada should not pay the pension outside of this country if the pensioner desires it.

We have the best of precedents for that course. This action has been taken by Great Britain, by the United States of America, by Australia and by New Zealand. This is only a humanitarian proposition. There would be only a very few such pensioners and there would only be a trickle of dollars going outside the country when compared to the total amount paid. I have so often seen this rule work hardship. You may have an old couple who have lived their lives in this country, been good citizens, paid their taxes, and then when they are old they find their family has been dispersed. The only people in the world whom they have may be a brother or a sister in Scotland, England or France and these pensioners cannot go there. I think this is entirely wrong, and I recommend to the government that the act be amended accordingly.

I would not be dealing with Pacific problems properly if I did not say something about the activities of our premier, this sawdust Caesar who struts around the province of British Columbia like a barnyard rooster talking about the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars. We have a very serious situation there now, and that is the great giveaway to the Wenner-Gren interests in respect to the power on the Peace river. He may have fooled some, but he did not fool me with all this talk about mineral claims, and this and that. No, it was the Peace river water power that they wanted. Now, he says, we have not given away anything; I have not given away a teaspoonful of water—not yet. What he has done is this. He has put a reserve on that water and that land and only allowed this outfit to go in and make surveys.

You know what is going to happen when the surveys are completed and they want to use it. No one else will be able to get it because this organization has it under reserve. There is just one hope for stopping this terrible giveaway, this terrible steal in the province of British Columbia, and that is action by the parliament of Canada. The Peace river crosses the provincial boundary and flows into Alberta. This fact gives us a toehold to stop him; under existing legislation we have something to say about it. I have every confidence that my government will take the proper steps in that connection.

I have requested certain things for British Columbia. I came here as a Canadian first, a British Columbian second, and a Victorian third. But the things I have pressed for are Canadian. The most westerly port of Canada must be a proper port in every respect. The west coast of Canada is every bit as important as is the east coast. I should like to suggest to this government that they might take a little bit longer look at the western Arctic. There is plenty being done in connection with the eastern Arctic. However, the western Arctic happens to be a great deal closer to the U.S.S.R. than is the Atlantic Arctic. I deprecate it when I hear Canadians indulging in such phrases as "When Russia attacks", "If we have a war with Russia", and "If and when Russia attacks". I do not believe in that sort of thing. I think it is war mongering. It is not good. Nevertheless, let us be realistic. There are places on the Bering strait where you could almost come across from the U.S.S.R. in a rowboat as the area is so narrow. I would commend to the government that more attention be paid to the western Arctic in all respects.

I have just about exhausted my time. I find it most edifying to be here and to be a supporter of this government. My support of the right hon. gentleman who occupies the chair of the Prime Minister in this chamber goes back a long way. I was just looking at the smiling face of the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Walker) this morning and remembering the time when, away back in 1942, he and I were two on the team—a very small team it was; a corporal's guard you might say—and we supported that gentleman in his first run for the leadership of the party in Winnipeg in 1942. Our horse did not win but we ran again. We were back in Ottawa in 1948. But then we had a general in charge in the person of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes). We lost again.

In those conflicts that group was obliged to take a certain amount of laughter from some of the big wheels in the party and the odd sneer and jeer. One does not like that sort of thing. I do not like to be laughed at. I do not know whether or not some people like it. However, there is an old saying that he who laughs last, laughs best. When the objective was accomplished years later I must say that I did not feel like laughing. Rather I felt edified. I felt that we had accomplished the thing that Canada needed.

As I said before, we are here as Canadians first. If I do not get for my port these things from the Minister of Public Works, at least I will feel that as a Canadian, over those years I have mentioned, I have been in some small but persistent part responsible for placing at the Prime Minister's desk in this chamber the greatest Canadian of all time.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. McPhillips) I may say at the outset that at one time many long years ago—I believe it was 21 years ago now—I also thought that the hon. member for Prince Albert had considerable ability as a leader and that some day he ought to go far. I must say that it was about 21 years ago that I changed my mind about the abilities of that man to occupy the post of Prime Minister of Canada. I am hoping that the day will yet arrive when the people of Victoria will have a representative who will come to the same conclusion as that to which I came away back in 1938.

I am sure that the people of Victoria who were unemployed last December 31—and there were 4,981 of them, according to the figures of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) —do not have very much to do. They will therefore, without a doubt, take a great deal of pleasure in reading the remarks their member has just made on their behalf in this House of Commons. He reviewed for them some of the history of the province of British Columbia. He castigated the activities of the Mackenzie King government. He complained about the management of the C.N.R. in regard to the new hotel in the city of Montreal. He complained of the rate of fees that ships are obliged to pay when they come to Victoria. I am sure they will somehow be a little bit more brilliant than am I and that they will be able to see how that will help supply them with employment so that they might meet their grocery bills at the end of this month.

Like millions of other Canadians, now that we have returned to what may be called a normal session of parliament, I had expected to see a sincere effort on the part of the government of Canada to meet the needs of the nation. I must express my great disappointment at the absence of progressive, forward looking and aggressive measures in the speech from the throne. I fail to find them. The needs of the people of Canada are great. There is an area of uncertainty that obtains in all walks of life. The millionaire is almost as worried as are the unemployed. Most of us Canadians were looking to this session for some measures to be undertaken that would assure a little bit of stability to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, opposition members are often misunderstood both by members who support the government and by the electorate at large. We have in this House of Commons a responsibility that members on the government side may not have. There are eight of us in this group compared with 208 on the government side. There are all kinds of members of parliament whose responsibility, without a doubt, is to tell the people of Canada what wonderful things the government has in mind for them. It is our responsibility to tell the people of Canada of the failings and the shortcomings of the government of Canada. One thing that we intend to do not only this year but in the years to come is to keep on reminding this government of the promises they made in order to obtain the confidence of the Canadian electorate. I think members of this house must agree that that is one of the responsibilities of the opposition.

I am not one who will fail to acknowledge that many good things have been done by this government as well as by former governments. This is my government exactly as it is the government of every other Canadian, and I accept it as such. However, Mr. Speaker, I am not willing to lose my speech in my efforts to become bilingual or to wrap myself in the old flag or some version of a new flag or to have my mind taken away from the needs of the day by some northern mirage or vision. I believe there are urgent problems facing the Canadian people at this time, problems that should be met at a normal session of parliament when political considerations ought to recede into the background. These urgent national problems are not being met by what is contained in the speech from the throne that has been presented to us.

I should like to go a little further afield than our national problems for a moment, Mr. Speaker, because yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) did so. Yesterday my house leader listed the urgent national problems. However, I want to say that we in the western world are facing a decision that we must make. Unless we are willing to plan our own economy and integrate it with the economies of all the other nations of the western or so-called free world we cannot hope to survive in the battle to which the Prime Minister referred yesterday. The well organized, well planned, well integrated nation to nation plan of the communist world is going to win the cold war unless the western world wakes up and decides that we can no longer carry on under the economic anarchy that many of us choose to call free enterprise. We must tighten our belts and buckle on our armour. We must convince the world that people under liberty, freedom and democracy are able to do more than people under a totalitarian regime. We pay a ridiculous lip service to a free enterprise that has long ago ceased to exist, that is nothing but a wonderful name for economic anarchy which is going to lead us as a nation to a state of chaos and which will lead the western world into losing the battle against the more highly organized and more ruthless totalitarian regime that exists in the world today.

Most of the western world realizes the necessity for taking action. Look at what the nations of western Europe are now doing in forming a common market. But we in Canada and our friends south of the border, and I regret to say that latterly we have made efforts to pull the people of the United Kingdom down with us, think that we can afford the luxury of letting every interest within our borders carry on in its own merry, sweet and selfish way without regard to the effect on our whole way of life and on our society. At this time I should like to read a few words of warning, as found in the Toronto Telegram of August 23 last, that were sounded by Cardinal McGuigan of the city of Toronto when he said:

> Perhaps one of the most widely known of all forms of this un-Christian political theory is economic nationalism which often results in waves of propaganda piling up a spirit of insularity, of national hyperconsciousness, of antagonism toward neighbour nations, and excessive tariffs—

I hope the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) is listening. I continue:

> —embargoes and exchange restrictions backing up in practical form a buy-at-home advertising barrage.

I hope the Canadian Chamber of Commerce is listening. I continue:

> Once this tendency to build up nationalism and restrict world trade develops, we note the inevitable consequences of aggression (or defence) for economic reasons and increased poverty and unemployment.

I hope that the people responsible for the government of Canada will think over very carefully the warning sounded by the cardinal in that article. Before I left home we had what we call a legislators' advisory conference. There were other conferences held, and from the hundreds of representations recently made to me I find that our problems are very much the same as when I first entered the House of Commons five years ago, the only difference being that some of them are more acute today than they were at that time. These problems have not been met. One of the favourite reasons put forward by former governments and the present government for not meeting these problems is that we have to spend so much of government revenue to defend ourselves against possible communist aggression.

I have with me a photograph which appeared in the Vancouver Sun on Wednesday, December 17 last. It shows a man sleeping on a parking lot. For a mattress he has newspapers and for a blanket he has more newspapers. I think it is about time that we took another look at our so-called defence expenditures which now total $1,700 million a year because not attending to the needs of this unemployed man, not attending to the needs of many others like him in Canada, will do more to bring communism than anything the master minds in the kremlin may devise.

I wish to return to the election pledges of the government. I know that they have kept some and may keep others. We are told that some form of crop insurance and a roads to resources program can be expected. We are told that we can expect some action to alleviate discrimination in freight rates and that we can expect more farm credit legislation. I have also noticed in the newspapers that the city of Prince Albert can expect the government to share the cost of a new bridge across the river. I should like to sound a note of warning to the government. I am very happy to read that the government is prepared to share the cost of a bridge in the city of Prince Albert but may I ask this question? Is it a navigable river or will the bridge join two provinces? If the city of Prince Albert is entitled to this, then people in many other parts of Canada have an equal right to ask the government to share the cost of a bridge that may be necessary in their own area.

I have before me a book of election promises of the Prime Minister, other ministers of the cabinet and supporters of the Conservative party. I am only going to refer to the election pledges in the 1958 campaign, although I have with me a much heavier volume containing the election pledges of the 1957 campaign. However, the 1958 book says, among other things, that all the pledges given in 1957 are valid and will be honoured. I have not bothered to look through Hansard in order to refer to all the other promises made on the floor of the house in the past five or six years. However, I believe that the people of Canada have a right to expect the government to show that it takes something more than simply a Machiavelian approach to its election promises and that the government should supply some signs that it intends to honour its election pledges. I am sure if the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) or the hon. member for York East (Mr. McGregor), or the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) had been leading the Conservative party, 10 per cent of those pledges would have been more than adequate for them and for their sense of responsibility; but we had such a vast array that it is not surprising that from the 1958 campaign I was able to find over half a hundred election promises which so far I have seen no attempt to meet.

First of all, agriculture was assured that floor prices would bear a fair relationship to the cost of production. The pulpwood farmers were assured that pulpwood would be given a floor price; potato farmers were assured that their commodity would be given a floor price; and farmers as a whole were assured that no Canadian farmer would be allowed to suffer because of the dumping of agricultural products by the United States. Those who think there is too much spread between the price the farmer receives and the price the consumer has to pay were assured—and I am using the words given in the paper—that this "layer of fat" would be trimmed so that the farmer would receive more. Western farmers were assured that the making of deficiency payments would receive some consideration, unless our newspapers are wrong. The Montreal Star of March 17 reported a meeting held in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan on March 15 and the quotation is ascribed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister now says he never gave this assurance; we have to take his word for it, and I do. However, many farmers were under the impression that deficiency payments would receive serious consideration.

I should like to refer now to the vision and to other election pledges which have not been kept and with regard to which there is very little sign that they will ever be kept. There was the promise of an Arctic research program and the development of Arctic sea routes; we were promised that there would be increased self government for the Northwest Territories; it was said we had to speed up development of our Arctic resources because by 1988 Canada's population would reach between 40 and 50 millions. Judging by the way in which the minister has slammed the door on immigration these days I do not think our population will be anywhere near 40 or 50 million people by that date.

We were assured that access roads to the north would be built and that the government would provide $15 million to the provinces towards this end. A railroad was to be built into the north; a road program for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories was going to cost $100 million and, in addition, a federal-provincial cost-sharing program of access roads would, in the words of one minister, cost $75 million—in fact, he got so excited he said it might even be $150 million.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) predicted that the program of road building in northern Canada would mean employment for hundreds of thousands of Canadians. The retired employees of Canadian railroads were assured that their demands for pension increases would receive full consideration. We were assured that one of the first acts in the session of the twenty-fourth parliament would be to abolish the rule of closure in Commons debates. We in the province of British Columbia were assured that there would be a joint investment program or other sound financial assistance in the development of Columbia river power. Nothing has been heard of that. Of course, we could not expect anything very definite in March because we were told that no basis of finality could be arrived at until the month of October. October has come and gone and we still have not heard of any basis of finality.

The co-operative movement was assured that the Conservative party would encourage it in every way. Mr. Speaker, I know that movement so well that I can safely say that this government has done absolutely nothing in regard to this particular election promise. We were assured that the leader of the government had very much in mind a second trans-Canada highway. At a later meeting he became a little more excited and added the words "at the earliest possible date". However, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) told us in effect during the last session that we would not be getting any second trans-Canada highway until we had finished the first one and, as he well knows, one of the provinces of Canada has not even begun the first one yet, so the rest of Canada is going to be held up once more in the development of a necessary project because other parts of Canada are slow.

The textile workers were assured that no industry would be subject to the ill effects of dumping. Fruit and vegetable growers were assured that they, too, would be protected against dumping and against the importation of earlier ripening vegetables and fruit. We were told the Canada Elections Act would be amended to reduce the time allowed for election campaigns; we were told that advance poll provisions would be widened so that more than three classifications of citizens could take advantage of the advance poll; we were assured that Canada would assert her sovereignty over her northern territories. Absolutely nothing has been done. A lot of violent anti-American feeling has been aroused, it is true, but no single action has been taken to assure Canadian sovereignty over her northern territories. Indeed, if anything has been done, the signing of the NORAD agreement has robbed us of some of our sovereignty over our northern territories.

We were assured that by processing in Canada to the largest degree possible all our raw materials we would no longer have to ship them to the United States. I have yet to hear any minister rise in his place and mention one single thing which this government has done to prevent the continuing and growing export from Canada of our raw material resources. Our provincial governments were assured of a new deal and, for a time, we were almost fooled. Sixty-two million dollars more was given to the provincial governments. However, because of the decline in revenue, $50 million of the $62 million has already been lost to the provinces, and the recent rise in interest rates has caused the provincial governments to lose even more. So that under the present government the provinces will get less than they received hitherto under the Liberal government. The municipalities, of course, did not get a new deal at all as they had been led to believe. On October 6 and 7 they were told to go home and raise their tax rates and assessments; they were told that if they could not sell their bonds and debentures they ought to consider carefully raising the interest rates offered.

Our fishermen were assured that they would receive the benefit of floor prices fixed with regard to the cost of production. Nothing has been done about that. A firm stand was promised with regard to the protection of Canadian inshore fisheries against foreign trawlers. Again, nothing has been done about that; the Icelandic government is the only government which has taken a firm stand. We have yet to see what action this government will take to remove discrimination in the matter of freight rates. We were assured that the tight money policy of the former government would be reversed. In fact, exactly the opposite has taken place.

We were assured that interest rates were needlessly high. They are even higher today. In fact, this government handed on a silver platter to the moneylenders of Canada an undeserved gift which over the course of the next twenty-five years, using the Minister of Finance's own figures, will amount to over $1,000 million. That is how the government handles the taxpayers' money with respect to moneylenders but when it comes to the unemployed the government says, "we have to fight inflation and balance the budget."

The Conservatives assured us they would call a conference on national conservation in the fall of 1958 but that has not been done. They assured us that the application of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act would be extended to all parts of Canada but that has not been done. They told us in certain terms something would be done about the natural gas pipeline but nothing has been done except the appointment of a royal commission. They held out to the people of Newfoundland the hope of aid for the development of hydro power projects and the building of transmission lines. We know what has been done in this respect.

In the city of Vancouver last March we were assured that as far as the recession was concerned we had passed the peak. I find it difficult to believe that the Prime Minister of Canada, a responsible and highly respected man, could look at the figures and statistics and read the economic and business barometers and shout out to an audience of 13,000 that they are to ignore all these facts because, "I, the Prime Minister, personally assure you we are past the peak." Mr. Speaker, the mills of God grind slowly but they grind exceeding fine.

I remember one other prime minister who in an election in the 1930 campaign put bands of honor on the arms of the unemployed but the revenge came in 1935 and that man went out with a bigger bang than that with which he came in. This may well happen on the Canadian scene five years following the last election.

We were assured that the province of Quebec could rest content in the knowledge that its provincial rights would be safeguarded and cabinet representation from that province would be respected. I notice no leading member of the present cabinet representing that one-third of the Canadian population in the province of Quebec. We were also assured that Canada would not allow United States domination of Canadian industrial enterprise. Absolutely nothing has been done in this regard.

How the Conservatives wept for the plight of the small businessman but there is no indication that financial aid will be made available so that he can expand his business. He was assured of credit so he could expand and meet his larger competitors on more equitable terms. Nothing has been done. The sum of $30,000 was voted in the estimates last year which is enough to build one filling station in one small village in Canada. That illustrates the sympathy this government has shown toward small business.

One of the most pathetic cases of all is that affecting the old age pensioners of Canada and the understanding they had of what might be done for them by this government. I attended some of their meetings just before the new year. Many pensioners mentioned the fact that this government is going to bring in a new social security system and they are hopeful that the Prime Minister will keep that election promise and that they will receive a higher income. What a terrible hoax this is because the implementation of the Clark report or any other report setting up a new national insurance plan will result in the government saying to these old people now on pension, "Look, folks, you did not pay anything into it. This has to be on an actuarial basis so just be content to continue receiving what you now get." It is an appalling thing to mislead these old age pensioners into thinking their cash income will be increased if the government has no intention of doing so.

We were assured that taxation would be revised downward. First of all there would be a radical income tax change affecting most Canadians. There was the vague promise of a tobacco tax cut. Our investors were to be placed on an equal footing with foreigners. We were assured that this government would recapture foreign markets that had been lost, would begin trade with the Chinese communists and would take some trading eggs out of the United States basket. I do not think any minister can cite a single action of this government that has been taken to implement those election promises in regard to recovering our foreign markets.

And then we had the election promise of them all. We all remember how that five-cent piece used to haunt Mackenzie King. I think he had a nickel in his pocket when he was buried. How we heard about that in the 1930 election campaign. But there is another election promise that is going to haunt some people in Canada and it is to the effect that no man or woman is going to suffer from unemployment. I give fair warning that as long as there are unemployed in this country there will be C.C.F. members in this house to rub it in time and time again until this government realizes that it cannot ride out the storm, that the situation is extremely serious and the government is responsible for the welfare of the Canadian people. Certainly an unemployed man sleeping under newspapers in a public place cannot be told he is not going to suffer from unemployment.

I have omitted the pledges made by members of this government to those interested in education or with respect to the rights of parliament, Senate reform or the question of removing the review of divorce from the House of Commons but I feel I have listed enough clear illustrations to demonstrate the record of the government in terms of keeping its election promises.

I say the government cannot deliver the goods because it is enslaved to the moneylenders of Canada. That is so obvious. Its one major economic influence since it took office has been the bond conversion deal. It found $30,000 for the small businessman; $9 million for education and although I do not know what its winter works program will cost I know from personal observation it will not be too much. This government was able to find $1,000 million for the moneylenders of this country and as a result the interest rate will be raised for every provincial and municipal government, hospital and school board, every business enterprise and every individual in Canada. In giving a 50 per cent increase in the take-home pay of the moneylenders of Canada this government did our country more of a disservice than has been done by any government in many a day. The history of the monetary system in Canada in years to come will bear out what I have now said.

The old philosophy that he governs best who governs least is completely obsolete today. Those who subscribe to that philosophy should move into the heart of Africa where there is no government or taxes. Adequate government and a growing concept of the role of government are marks of civilization. The people of Canada will some day realize they will get nothing from the Conservative government and this will be true because they did not sacrifice to elect the present government. Rather the advertising agencies and moneylenders of Canada elected this government and as long as people are willing to sit back and allow vested interests to elect their parliament so long will the people derive little benefit from parliament. They will get only as much as those in office feel they must give in order to once more lure their vote away from them at election time.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Are you against the people of Canada receiving interest on their savings which are invested for them by the moneylending institutions of this country?

Mr. Regier: I am in agreement with interest rates being high enough to cover the cost of collection and the risk involved. Anything over and above that is usury which used to cost people their membership in civilized christian society.

Mr. F. C. Stinson (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I first express the sense of privilege which I feel in returning to this House of Commons as the member for York Centre and in having the opportunity of taking part in the work of parliament.

[Mr. Regier.]

I would first congratulate my friend, the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee), on the fighting speech he made at the commencement of to-day's proceedings, in which he set out so clearly the measures taken by this administration in the past 18 months to meet the problems of the nation. I would also like to express my congratulations to the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia (Mr. McPhillips), who gave us just a little while ago such a colourful account of the history of his province and of the problems affecting his native city of Victoria. I am sure that many hon. members long after they have left this house and in their old age will remember that speech and read it in Hansard, as I will, with a great deal of pleasure.

These are exciting and critical days and the things that we decide here will have important effects not only on the people of this country but on many people throughout the world. For this reason, I consider it a privilege to be here.

In recent months I have met and talked to a number of people who have come to this country from Europe and other places. They are grateful for the material advantages they find in this country but the most precious thing to them is the freedom which they have in Canada. This parliament is the guardian not only of many of the rights that make up this freedom but it is also the symbol of our democratic tradition. For this reason also I consider it a privilege to be here.

The citizens of Canada, Mr. Speaker, are expecting great things of us in this second session of the twenty-fourth parliament. The problems facing us are complex and in many ways unique. The working out of solutions will require industry, insight and, if I may say so, a certain measure of restraint in the matter of speech-making. We are here primarily to get things done. And, Mr. Speaker, no hysterical, emotional speeches such as we have just listened to from the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) will assist us at all in the solution of those problems. I listened to that speech with careful attention and I must say that in the whole of it there was not one positive, creative idea presented which would assist the administration in the solution of the great problems facing this country.

Mr. Howard: Have faith in John.

Mr. Winch: We thought you had the answers.

Mr. Howard: That was before the election.

Mr. Stinson: All of us will agree that in these days there is a new political climate in Canada, an awareness of the role of parliament and Canada's place in the world. This has not come about by chance. It has happened because of the inspired leadership given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), a kind of leadership without parallel in this country since the days of Sir John A. Macdonald.

May I also express my respect—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It would be appreciated if hon. members permitted the hon. member for York Centre to carry on his remarks without too many interruptions.

Mr. Stinson: May I also express my respect for the colleagues of the Prime Minister who share with him the responsibility of government. I think I have some little idea of the weight of the obligations they have and the constant pressures which surround them. I have said on the hustings and I say here that these are ministers of whom every Canadian can be proud.

I think that the Canadian people expect us to do two principal things during this session: first, to take measures which will promote prosperity and, secondly, to adopt policies and to take actions which will help promote peace in the world. Notwithstanding a slow beginning, 1958 turned out to be a better year than many observers predicted. Our gross national product increased by two per cent. Total exports remained almost unchanged from the year before. Wheat exports increased by almost 50 million bushels. Farm implement sales were greater than the year before. There was also a substantial decrease in our world trade deficit. Personal incomes of Canadians—and this term includes many thousands of Canadians represented by our friends to Your Honour's left—rose by about five per cent and consumer spending was four per cent higher than the year before.

While these are substantial achievements, Mr. Speaker, there are still thousands of Canadian out of work, and it is the first responsibility of this parliament to assist business and industry in the solution of the problem of unemployment. I sometimes think that "problem" in this connection is a pretty inadequate word; for it fails so badly to describe the distress and misery that a man goes through when he cannot find a job.

Equally disturbing is the problem of inflation, which is recognized as the basic danger to the health of our economy by every responsible leader in business and in the trade union movement. One of the contributing factors, of course, has been the increase in the money supply, a 12 per cent increase in the one-year period beginning October 1, 1957. While this increase had some effect in speeding the economic recovery, it is a trend that must be stopped. Another factor has been the huge spending program on the part of governments at all levels. I think we have to learn that the transfer of money from one sector of the tax-paying public to another does not necessarily produce wealth and that it can have serious inflationary effects.

The only effective answer to inflation is increased production and increased production is achieved only when people work harder and improve their techniques. No democratic country can undertake to force people to do these things. It is our responsibility as individual Canadians to accept higher incomes only when we have earned those incomes by greater productive effort.

One of the major reasons for the economic upturn in many parts of the country has been the government's policy with respect to housing. In the first half of 1957 there was a serious decline in residential construction. Upon coming to power this government introduced legislation which had the effect of requiring a lower down payment and lower income eligibility of people applying for loans under the National Housing Act. More than half a billion dollars has been made available for the construction of houses and other residential units. The government has encouraged limited dividend projects providing low rental housing and the redevelopment of depressed areas in co-operation with the provinces and municipalities.

These policies, Mr. Speaker, have resulted in a spectacular record for residential construction, with housing starts in the year 1958 reaching 163,000, one-third more than the figure for 1957. In my own community of North York township the value of buildings for which permits were issued last year rose to $130 million as against $76 million in 1957, with 10,000 new dwelling units being commenced during the year. It is impossible, of course, to estimate the social effects of this policy of promoting home ownership. The economic effects are felt throughout the whole economy. Serious problems remain. The high cost of serviced land in the suburban areas makes it difficult to build houses at prices that can be paid by low income workers. While municipalities have the major responsibility in this field, this government and the members of this party recognize the need for assistance.

Perhaps the most significant step taken by the government in recent months was the convening of the commonwealth trade and economic conference in Montreal. Here was a meeting of the representatives of 600 million people living in that unique family of nations known as the British commonwealth. Much was achieved. It was agreed that it was desirable to expand the resources of the international bank and the international monetary fund. It now appears that there will be a substantial increase in the resources of each of these important international financial agencies. The government of the United Kingdom announced the removal of dollar import restrictions from raw materials and industrial machinery. It was agreed that consideration should be given to the problem of the disposal of subsidized surplus products so that the legitimate markets of the members of the commonwealth would not be impaired. One of the major accomplishments, of course, was the recognition by all representatives of the need for more rapid economic development of the underdeveloped countries. I think we can all take great satisfaction in the increase in Colombo plan aid recently announced by the Prime Minister of this country.

This record certainly is good but, Mr. Speaker, it is still a fact that in this country and in all the western countries we have not yet begun to realize what is going on in the other half of the world in science, in industrial production and in education. While we in this country have been concentrating on becoming more comfortable, reducing our hours of work and finding amusements for our leisure time, the Russians and the Chinese are changing the face of the world. Not only that, but the Russians have reached out into the heavens and a man-made planet is now making its way around the sun. Consider, for example, the comparative figures for the production of steel. In 1958, Great Britain produced 18,902,000 tons of steel, 3 million tons less than was produced the year before. Canada produced 4,359,000 tons, about 2 million tons less than her capacity. The United States produced 85 million tons as compared with 112,700,000 tons the year before. Russia in 1958 produced 60 million tons, an increase of 4.5 million tons over 1957. Production in China was 10,700,000 tons, an increase over 1957 production of 4,800,000 tons.

These are plain facts, which are not changed by conversation about low wage rates and the long working hours of the Russian and Chinese workers. The spectacular achievements of Russia in the scientific fields are well known. Less well known are the accomplishments of the Chinese. Professor J. T. Wilson, who was in China last summer, has recently reported in the Saturday Review on a visit he made to the city of Lanchow. Here, in a city of 800,000 people, there has been established a scientific centre where within 10 years 15,000 technical people will be employed. He saw a library containing 2,600 science periodicals. The equipment was of a high quality and much of the work under the direction of western-trained scientists.

If we fail in this race against the Russians and the Chinese and the other Asian countries we will fail because we have become lazy, fat and complacent. Nowhere have we become more complacent than in the field of education. Last summer I had the opportunity of reading a report made by a young Canadian teacher, Mr. Anthony Frisch, who has made a careful study of the curriculum of the East German and soviet high schools in science and mathematics. Mr. Frisch has studied at Cambridge and McGill universities and has been a classroom teacher in Ontario schools. His report compares the soviet and East German curriculum with that in each of the provinces of Canada.

He points out that in Ontario the courses in mathematics are behind the soviet courses by about three years in the soviet equivalent of grades 9 and 10. In physics, Ontario is behind the soviet by two years in the soviet equivalent of grade 7; one year in the soviet equivalent of grade 9; one year in the soviet equivalent of grade 10; and one to two years in the first part of the soviet equivalent of grade 11. In Ontario, there is no attempt to teach mathematical molecular physics and the thermodynamics which are taught in the Russian counterpart of grade 11. In chemistry, Mr. Frisch reports Russian children are taught more in two years than Ontario children in five. In the final year in Russia, the whole course is devoted to organic chemistry, whereas in Ontario the upper school course includes only three weeks' work in this subject.

In British Columbia, Mr. Frisch reports that in mathematics the courses trail the soviet courses by three years and that the matters covered in the final two years of the soviet high schools are not touched at all. In physics, most of the work taught in the final 2½ years of the soviet high schools is not attempted at all.

In the Atlantic provinces, the teaching of mathematics and science falls even further behind what is being done in the Russian high schools. In Russia there are 71 subject units taught in mathematics, physics, chemistry and biology in the secondary schools, and in the provinces of Canada the figures are as follows:

British Columbia	34
Alberta	42
Saskatchewan	43
Manitoba	40
Ontario	54
Quebec (Protestant schools)	48
Quebec (Catholic schools)	28
Atlantic provinces	42
Newfoundland	27

This concentration on intensive training in science and mathematics is not confined to countries under the Russian influence. In the Gymnasia Ivrit secondary school in Jerusalem, the curriculum taught in these subjects is similar to that given in the schools in Russia and in East Germany, and this in a country struggling to meet the basic material needs of the people.

It is my opinion that three things are urgently needed. The first is a vigorous effort on the part of ministers of education to revise the curriculum in mathematics and science. I am persuaded that such a step would be well received by the secondary school students of this country, many of whom would prefer a more exacting curriculum to some of the extra-curricular amusements which are offered up these days.

Second, we require more public money to be spent on education, for equipment, for teachers and for scholarships. At the present time ten per cent of the money spent each year for national defence would pay the total budget for education in the province of Ontario.

Finally, we need to arouse the people of the country to an awareness that this matter has become a national crisis.

As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) said last summer at the Couchiching conference, "crisis" is a very common noun these days, partly because it fits neatly into a headline. As we read the newspapers, every day seems to bring a new crisis. I suggest, however, that some of the most critical things which are happening seldom reach the headlines, and that this falling behind in education is one of them.

I would also propose that in addition to the scholarships agreed upon at the commonwealth trade and economic conference, this government establish awards for study in other parts of the commonwealth in science and in history, the recipients to be known as "commonwealth scholars". While there may be constitutional difficulties in the way of federal government action in this field of education, I think these can be overcome if the Canadian people can be brought to realize that their children and grandchildren may not be equipped to meet conditions in the world as they will find them.

Mr. Speaker, I have touched on some of the things which I believe to require attention in this session. In a free country governments alone do not determine whether or not our goals are achieved. Much depends on the will, the enterprise and the judgment of individual citizens. Government policies and actions, however, remain terribly important. It is our duty as private members in all parties to recommend to the government of the day policies and actions which we think advisable.

We are living in an important era in the history of our country, and we cannot permit ourselves to become downhearted or easily discouraged. I was reading the other day, on the wall of the office of a good friend of mine, a few lines written by Edmund Burke which were as follows:

> Those who would carry on great public schemes must be proof against the most fatiguing delays, the most mortifying disappointments, the most shocking insults and, worst of all, the presumptuous judgment of the ignorant upon their designs.

While I believe this statement to be true, I also believe that all of us in this House of Commons can receive great rewards, rewards that will come from great public schemes courageously undertaken.

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased that I am being given such an early opportunity to speak in the debate on the speech from the throne so that I may give to members of this house an on-the-spot account concerning the great economic difficulties which our area necessarily suffered since the last session of this parliament.

At the outset I must say that I fully realize that the problem was a provincial one and that, primarily, it had to be settled at the conference table by the union and the management. However, I am pleased to pay tribute in this house to the union of mine, mill and smelter workers, local 598, for the manner in which the strike was undertaken and carried out. As far as I have been able to read in the newspapers, we in our area all feel confident that the strike was carried out with the best of discipline. I am also pleased to congratulate the company which at that time was necessarily faced with a problem. We heard yesterday that there was no existing problem of recession or inflation. I feel that the workers in my area in the face of the rising cost of living, were definitely entitled to make demands for higher wages, something which they have been accustomed to do. I also fully realize that the company, in the face of the present recession and in view of the figures on its books, could not very well afford to increase the cost of its production. That is why I am pleased to offer to both the congratulations which they deserve. Later in my address I will speak of the problem involved, but first I should like to state how greatly the population of our area have appreciated the assistance from the Catholic charities, the Salvation Army and the newspaper Le Droit of Ottawa. All have made charitable donations for the purpose of assisting the needy people in crises of this nature.

Yesterday we had the privilege of hearing three extremely important speeches. As a newcomer in this twenty-fourth parliament, I must say how greatly I was impressed by the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and the manner in which he described to this parliament the problems of today. It is my intention to say a few words later about the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) but, if I may be permitted to do so, I should like to discuss the less important matters first.

I should like to make a few remarks about the position of the C.C.F. group in the house. At the beginning of his speech the leader of the C.C.F. group said that as far as he was concerned there was no difference in the speeches delivered by the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister and that if they were to change seats in the house all they would have to do would be to exchange notes. I understand this is possible because it is a known fact that the Canadian people have never required the C.C.F. group either to undertake the duties of government or of the official opposition.

The role of the C.C.F. group may be similar to that of an old maid who would undertake to give advice to a young bride on the intricacies and difficulties of marriage. I have heard the further reference that possibly the C.C.F. group in this house may be compared with a drum majorette. There is much high kicking and twirling but the sound does not come from there. The music of proper policies for our country is very confused unless the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) would like to have the house believe that the advantages or disadvantages of queen bee jelly are a major Canadian problem.

Before I go further I should like to take the opportunity to congratulate the young member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) for the wonderful contribution he made in moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I trust that the hon. member may have further opportunities to present to the house the opinions which he elaborated so well.

(Translation):

I would feel remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I failed to congratulate the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) who, at the very beginning of the second session of this 24th parliament, made in the house the usual remarks in support of the motion on the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

[Mr. Godin.]

I noted that he stressed two particular points. First, he outlined what the Conservatives mean by true Canadianism, and he strived to explain Canada's true position within the commonwealth of British nations, as Conservatives see it.

I also appreciated, Mr. Speaker, his reference to the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent's statement that the province of Quebec is a province like all the others. Nevertheless, I am sorry he omitted the substantial attribute added by the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, when he stated that the province of Quebec was part of Canada, and Canada part of the commonwealth, so that the whole should be comprised in a single union, though not necessarily a unity, but that there should be union in diversity, without any part being subordinate to the other, so that this country might continue to march forward towards the bilingualism which was the aim of the Fathers of Confederation.

I wonder right now, Mr. Speaker, if the province of Quebec is a province like all the others, in the Conservative sense, when the leader of the Conservative party of the province of Quebec refuses university grants. Moreover, on reading over the remarks of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) and those of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) in regard to "O Canada", a song which is so highly appreciated in Quebec, I wonder if that province actually is considered a province like the others.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that we now have simultaneous interpretation in the house, a move which, as a matter of fact, I supported last year, together with all the other hon. members. However, Mr. Speaker, for all its present convenience, is not this system a complete admission of failure with regard to the progress foreseen by the Fathers of Confederation in a bilingual nation? Mr. Speaker, I believe that this system of simultaneous interpretation is somewhat like the case of a Christian who pays his neighbour to go to church for him. And on this point, I must say that I highly appreciated the position taken by the present leader of the opposition, when this system was up for discussion last year. He wished that the system would soon become unnecessary. I am sure all hon. members will welcome such time as we can probably appoint to the other place the gallant interpreters who are doing such a fine job of simultaneous interpretation.

As to Canada's position within the commonwealth, I wonder if it can be judged by the results of the Montreal conference, where there was more eagerness to get than willingness to give. Is it possible to recognize the true position of Canada within the commonwealth, in the statement of the Prime Minister who wanted—and I think I am repeating his very words—to divert to Great Britain 15 per cent of our trade with the United States.

(Text):

A few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, I said that I should like to say a few words about the speech of the Prime Minister yesterday. First, I must say that I was much surprised when he began his speech by saying that the Leader of the Opposition had just repeated what he had been saying throughout Canada. On this score I should like to state that the Prime Minister has bettered that in that yesterday he repeated to us the speech he made a year ago in this very house. Hansard is there to check. First he began with an attack on a two year old motion made by the Leader of the Opposition when he was appointed leader of the party.

An hon. Member: One year old.

Mr. Godin: I should have said two sessions ago. That was the beginning. The Canadian people—I base this on confirmation I have received from my riding—were also very surprised that the speech contained nothing but doom, gloom, lamentations and the heritage of the government from the former administration.

Possibly his speech was slightly different from last year in the sense that he took ten minutes to introduce remarks concerning his trip around the world, but my recollection is that the only reference made to that tour since the house began was in the form of congratulations by two members who said we were happy to see him return in good health after such a strenuous and possibly fruitful visit. I am pleased at this time to add my word of appreciation on his return, and I am sure I will be supported in this by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) because I recall very well viewing a television performance in which the minister was running out of aspirins as the Prime Minister was away. Last year, during more genial moments, there was laughter brought about when reference was made to the Conservative backbenchers as trained seals. May I be permitted to give a word of warning to the frontbenchers, since they must know that during the course of his visit the Prime Minister has also become an elephant trainer?

Now in referring to this heritage which this present government claims it has received, I wish briefly to describe conditions around Nickel Belt. Firstly, however, may I say we fully recall a certain heritage in the history of Canada, and that was the one left in 1935. We all know that the talk of those days was not gloom and doom; the talk of those days was to rebuild Canada and to bring about the solution of social problems for which I am sure hon. members of the C.C.F. party were very happy to vote—such measures as family allowances and unemployment insurance. This was done, and the Liberal government carried Canada through an awful heritage, through the prewar period, through a very difficult war which was the costliest Canada has ever known, and through an equally difficult postwar period. This, the Canadian people all remember. The Prime Minister has produced statistics to show that everything is on the upswing, that there is no recession and no inflation. I have statistics of my own; they may not be all figures, but they are facts, and I think facts sometimes speak much better than figures.

The people in my area refer to the policy of the present government as an accordion policy; you squeeze both ends against the middle, and in the middle are the Canadian people. I say this because the facts I shall give will bear it out. We had a wealthy industry in our area in the Nickel Belt but the recession is doing something to it. The workers were accustomed to making demands for increases, and they did make those demands on account of inflation and the rising cost of living, but they could not obtain satisfaction. I must say this, and it is a known fact in my area: since the Conservative party came into power 11 voting subdivisions have been closed because lumbering industries have been closed and because there are no people living there. In addition, mines have closed and, with regret, I must say that four mines have been closed in my own area since the Conservative party came to power. These may not be statistics but they are facts. I say with regret that the Conservative candidate who opposed me was an employee of one of those mines which have closed, and that he became unemployed thereby.

The Prime Minister indicated to this house that he did not follow the calculation of the Leader of the Opposition when he stated that the old age pensioners had lost $2 of their pensions. I think I can better this, Mr. Speaker. Visiting my riding a short while ago I met an old gentleman of about 72. He had three sons. Of course, we discussed politics as people usually do when they meet their representative in parliament, and he stated that he was a supporter of the present government and that he was impressed by the $9—that was the major reason for his support of the party. That was his confession to me. He told me he wanted me to meet his three sons. I was introduced to the three sons, all fathers of young families, and then he said: "Sir, these three boys had been working steadily for 15 years, earning $300 a month each. What happened was I got my $9 by voting for the present government, but my family has lost $900 a month." That speaks more strongly than statistics.

Now I turn to the Inco strike. As I said earlier, I fully realize that this is a provincial matter and that it involves a dispute between labour and management, but the cause is very interesting to seek. What actually happened? Hon. members can check Hansard for last year, and they will find that when I had occasion to make my first speech in this house I asked the government to give us the accustomed Liberal prosperity, in which case they would solve 85 per cent of the problems in my riding. We have known for many years that we are a wealthy section, but we also know that we could lose all that very quickly. The people of my area remember what happened last fall. How did it occur?

The workers were asking for more because the cost of living was higher, and that was correct. However, the company felt that it could not increase its cost of production at that time because they had lost markets, possibly due to the diversion scheme, and because they were not able to sell to the extent they were selling before. Here I have a copy of a brief in which is set out a good foundation for the understanding of the problem which arose in the nickel industry. After 18 pages of statistics and an analysis of the conditions facing the company, the submission concludes with a passage which I would be pleased to call as a witness and make part of Hansard. It is the conclusion of the brief presented to the conciliation board, and I quote:

> These current conditions have been clearly reflected in the company's profits. As compared with 1956, the year in which the last negotiations with the unions took place—

That is true. The last negotiations in the area in the industry took place in 1956 before this government was elected.

> —the net earnings for 1957 were down by an amount in excess of $10 million. So far as the first quarter of 1958 is concerned, the net earnings were little more than one-half the net earnings for the same quarter in 1957. The net earnings for the second quarter of 1958 are substantially less than one-half the net earnings for the second quarter of 1957. In short, the net earnings of this company for the first six months of 1958 are $21,401,000 as compared with $45,601,000 for the first six months of 1957—

And listen to this:

> —and compared with $51,772,000 for the first six months of 1956.

That is the heritage which was left in 1956, and that is what the present government has done to it. I may say, further, that in a notice published in the local newspaper the company repeated the difficulties which it was encountering, and we read the following paragraph:

> Against this background it was obvious that the company could not raise its production costs by continuing the unbroken record of substantial increases in wages and fringe benefits it had maintained over the past 14 years.

That is the heritage about which we are now complaining. That is what happened. Crude statistics cannot compare with a proper review of conditions in the Nickel Belt area.

On many occasions I have had the pleasure of discussing with municipal officials the problems with which they are confronted. It has been announced that within a few weeks that a program of winter work will come into effect to cure various problems. What problems will this cure? Winter work is nothing but relief. We are all happy to accept winter work for our municipalities because there is no doubt that the unemployed must find a means of providing food for their families but the tendency to rely on this type of program as a remedy for situations of this kind is an old routine. In my younger days I was employed in the same fashion under the Bennett regime digging ditches on highways and cutting brush along creeks. A program of this kind is not a valid solution to the problem which the Canadian people expect this government to solve.

The people of this country do not wish to be kennel dogs living off unemployment relief or family allowance checks and give-away winter jobs lasting three weeks. The Canadian worker wants instead to be a bird dog, one that can go out and catch a bird and thus feather the nest for his family. They want the opportunity of securing permanent employment. I realize that the unemployed worker must accept the employment offered him under programs of this kind in order to provide for the immediate needs of his family but his ambition is to find permanent work. I am surprised that the attitude of the present government should be one of patting the unemployed worker on the head and telling him not to worry because the winter works program will soon come into effect. The government has had many opportunities in the last seventeen months to undertake constructive measures to meet this situation. The attitudes presently displayed by members of the government are those we have witnessed before and they do nothing to alleviate the hardships created by the problem of unemployment.

A matter of some interest to the people of my riding is the objection this government had to a motion which I had occasion to bring forth at the time when the question of income tax deductions was under discussion in this house. A little bait was introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in that the cost of an ambulance to a licensed hospital was to become deductible from income tax. I have discussed this with people in my riding and they asked me to come back and tell this government to amend this statute further. Of course the government had ample opportunity to do it last year. The deductibility of fees for ambulances to licensed hospitals extends to a small group in Canada and applies to a group that does not need such assistance. We know that ambulance service exists only in the larger centres in Canada and extends only within five or ten miles of a licensed hospital.

Mr. Fraser: You are wrong there.

Mr. Ricard: He has been wrong all along.

Mr. Godin: I have no figures to produce but there is no ambulance service whatever in my riding. My riding is five miles from Sudbury. You can call an ambulance to Foleyet but it will take two days to arrive from Sudbury and will have to traverse five ridings in order to get there.

An hon. Member: But it will be deductible just the same.

Mr. Godin: But a man injured in the bush will be dead by the time the ambulance arrives or at least by the time it reaches the hospital. I see no argument against extending this principle. It is definitely a flaw in that legislation as it stands. A person who lives far from a licensed hospital receives no benefit from this provision.

Hon. members appear to want to ask me questions and I would like to have the same right at this time. I want to know why only those people who can obtain ambulance service are entitled to make the deduction?

Mr. Fraser: Are you against it?

Mr. Godin: Let the Minister of Finance explain to this house why only the cost of ambulance service should be deductible. We know that in cases of emergency people must sometimes be flown to hospital.

I could speak of many other problems that confront the people of my riding but I realize that I shall have other opportunities to bring them to the attention of this house. I am pleased on this occasion to support the amendment presented by the Leader of the Opposition. This amendment provides the government with an opportunity of thinking things over and bringing about concrete solutions to the serious problems it is called upon to remedy. I noted that the Prime Minister begged from the Leader of the Opposition and other hon. members advice as to what solutions might be introduced by it and I recommend to them the words of my leader. But at the same time I note that the Prime Minister refuses to permit the adjournment of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne in order to discuss concrete measures which this government might adopt to meet the grave and pressing problems besetting the Canadian people.

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, as one of the older of the new members, I wish to congratulate you, your deputy and the chairman on your appointments to the important positions you hold in this house. In your office as Speaker you have the responsibility of upholding the rights of both the minority and the majority and we are all confident that you will as you have demonstrated in the past.

This is my maiden speech, Mr. Speaker, and I deem it a great honour to be standing up here in the House of Commons only a few seats from where my uncle, the late W. G. Weichel, sat more than two score years ago. As a young boy, I avidly followed the career of my uncle in parliament and never dreamed that some day I would succeed him. As it turned out, I was elected the first Conservative member in my constituency since my uncle was defeated in 1917. I hope that my stay here in Ottawa will be as productive as was that of my uncle and that he, as the parliamentarian he was, will be proud of my efforts here. Even over that long span of 41 years, there are still members in this house, like the hon. member from Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) who remember my uncle in parliament.

I would like to add my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the speech from the throne. I am sure that the country will hail the many worthwhile things the government expects to do in this session as outlined in the throne speech. Probably of most significance to my riding of Waterloo North were the planned aid to farmers, the boost for home building and the assistance to exporters, veterans and the unemployed.

The many exporters in my industrial riding of Waterloo North probably see much good in the government's aim to change the Export Credits Insurance Act, which will help to insure them against non-payment by foreign buyers. Farmers, too, gained much hope from the contents of the throne speech. The move to institute farm crop insurance and the planned review and revision of farm credit legislation should be a boon to my agriculture-conscious riding, as well as to others.

Although Waterloo North has not been hard hit by unemployment, the changes proposed in the Unemployment Insurance Act prove the intention of this government to deal effectively with this problem. I cannot pass by this opportunity to congratulate the government on its proposal to establish a national energy board. Oil and natural gas interests have been awaiting this move and the formation of such a body will regulate the proper use of these important resources.

Before giving hon. members an outline of the highlights of my constituency I would like to say that it has produced some of Canada's greatest statesmen. The long-time prime minister Mackenzie King was born in Kitchener. His birthplace "Woodside" has been maintained by citizens who honoured and respected him. The hon. member of the Senate, W. D. Euler, was elected to this house in 1917, and since that time has sat either here or in the Senate. To continue my relationship with former members in this house, the Hon. Mr. Euler is my cousin. Not a relative, but a close friend and distinguished statesman, the Hon. Louis O. Breithaupt is also Waterloo North born and bred. As hon. members know, he served Waterloo North for many years before being elevated to the post of lieutenant governor of the province of Ontario. Another friend was my predecessor, Norman C. Schneider, who is known to many hon. members here. An old army buddy of mine in the first world war, Mr. Schneider served the constituency well during his stay here.

Waterloo North, which I inherited from Mr. Schneider, is one of the most heavily concentrated areas in Ontario in both industry and population. It boasts one of the best farming areas in the dominion. Waterloo North was settled by Mennonites of Pennsylvania German extraction, who came to our district on a 600-mile-long trek in Conestoga wagons from Pennsylvania. They were joined by British settlers and down through the years by Polish, Ukrainian, Hungarian, German, Austrian, Italian, Jewish and many others, making this one of the most cosmopolitan centres in Canada. The Mennonites of the district, a sect not unlike the Quakers, have stayed on and today operate a big portion of the rich farms of Waterloo North.

The twin communities of Kitchener and Waterloo, with a total population of some 80,000, are the largest municipalities in my constituency. These two cities have a total of 280 firms manufacturing hundreds of diversified products. Kitchener, the larger centre, has 205 industries, with a yearly production valued at $181,321,000, a figure which places this city fourth in Ontario and ninth in the Dominion of Canada. Gross value of production has increased over 100 per cent since 1944.

With a large acreage of land now available for industrial expansion, indications are that many more firms from the United States, England and continental Europe will settle in the city. Many of those which now rate as the city's leading industries had humble beginnings and are managed at the present time by third or fourth generation descendants of the original founders.

Probably Kitchener's best-known industries are its rubber and meat packing firms. The meat packing plants are J. M. Schneider Limited and Burns and Company (Eastern) Limited. The rubber industries, B. F. Goodrich Canada Limited, Dominion Rubber Company of Canada and Kaufman Rubber Company, along with Kitchener Button Industries Limited, hailed the government's move last year to tighten anti-dumping laws. It was proof to them that the Conservative government is interested in all their problems. However, leaders of these firms and others look for more assistance in the future.

Another young and thriving industry in this city is the Dominion Electrohome Industries Limited which has expanded considerably recently because of the public's interest in its products, namely television and electronic devices.

In an effort to keep these factories humming, the Kitchener chamber of commerce has designated February 13 to February 23 as Kitchener's products week. Every retail store in the city will donate a window for the display of products made by Kitchener workmen. To lend novelty to the mass merchandising display, a jewellery store will display meat products, for example, and possibly a ladies' wear store will show tires. It is hoped that the displays will encourage area consumers to buy Kitchener-made goods and keep the home town workmen busy throughout what is usually the peak unemployment season.

Kitchener's twin sister, Waterloo, is probably best known as the Hartford of Canada. Within its borders are the head offices of six insurance companies employing about 1,500 people. Total assets of these companies exceed $750 million. No other city in Canada has such a large percentage of its economic activity embodied in the insurance business. Their business covers the length and breadth of Canada and includes branches in several foreign countries.

Although insurance rates as Waterloo's chief industry, the city's fame has also been spread through the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. Joseph E. Seagram and Sons Limited, which celebrated its hundredth anniversary last year, has grown to become the world's largest distiller. The Seagram organization includes not only six large plants in Canada but others in the United States, Scotland, Jamaica and Puerto Rico.

On the other side of the thirst-quenching scale, Waterloo also produces beer from the large concern of Carling Breweries Limited. It employs 385 people in its Waterloo plant and its annual payroll is $1,450,000. Another well-known brewery, Dow-Kingsbeer, makes its home in Kitchener.

Waterloo College associate faculties is the centre of one of the newest experiments in higher education being conducted in Canada. Two years ago it introduced a co-operative engineering course that combines periods in the classroom with alternate stays in industry. The co-operative plan, revolutionary in Canadian education, has focussed a great deal of interest on the Waterloo College campus. By 1965 the college which now has close to 1,000 students expects to expand to have an enrolment of 3,500. Coupled with this is an energetic construction program which will give the campus 19 new buildings in the next seven years. It is expected early in the new year that the Waterloo institution will be given a degree-granting charter and become Waterloo university.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Weichel: May I continue my remarks about the city of Waterloo, Mr. Speaker? Waterloo is also the home of the biggest band festival in Canada, and probably in the world. This band festival yearly attracts to the city between 15,000 and 20,000 people and provides competition for over 1,000 young musicians taking part in the brass, bugle, trumpet and reed bands as well as individual competitions, a real worthwhile effort to assist our youth in music. This year some 80 bands from Canada and the United States took part in the three-hour long parade to Seagram stadium, a $250,000 structure donated to the city last year on the occasion of the Seagram firm's centennial.

While there naturally is friendly rivalry between cities set so close together, there is also co-operation. The cities derive the benefit of a common hospital, a common secondary school educational system, trolley bus service, orphanage, service clubs and sports organizations. Thousands of Kitchener and Waterloo residents travel between the two cities daily to and from their employment. As an illustration of the complexity of the situation, I may say that only a few years ago the mayor of Waterloo worked in Kitchener, while the mayor of Kitchener lived in Waterloo. Twin city residents are proud of their homes and they are great churchgoers. More than 90 per cent of the people belong to the many churches situated there, and the cities rank among the top three in Canada in home ownership.

In discussing my constituency, I cannot forget my home town of Elmira where I was supervisory postmaster for over 35 years. I might say that at the moment my brother is the mayor of Elmira. It is a thriving little centre of some 3,000 people and its largest industry is the Naugatuck Chemical Company which pioneered in the production, so far as the British empire is concerned, of a type of synthetic rubber, 2-4D, and D.D.T. Under the direction of the Elmira recreational council, this town has won some 15 Ontario hockey association and Ontario minor hockey association championships. The Ontario minor hockey association, of which I had the privilege of being president in 1952 and 1954, is the largest minor hockey organization in the world, and sponsors almost 30,000 boys yearly. I might mention too that it has been my privilege to be associated with the Ontario hockey association, and the Toronto hockey league, two of the finest organizations in the world.

Whatever I am now, and whatever I have been in life, Mr. Speaker, there are two things I most assuredly am, a sportsman and a veteran. There is a tie-up between those two things because it was the loss of my right leg in the trenches during the first world war that cut short a possible professional sports career for me. It is on these two subjects, sports and the world of veterans, that I should like to speak now.

In the last few years international sports have become of increasing importance to countries. Russia, which has made amazing strides militarily, economically and scientifically in the past three decades, has vaulted into the spotlight of the sports world through its olympic victories. Canada, too, has gained a good share of that spotlight, largely through the winnings and losings of her hockey teams in international competition. My own constituency of Waterloo North was proud to send its Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen to Cortina in 1956 to compete in the olympic games. Although the Dutchmen lost, they added to Canada's stature by the good impressions they made in Europe when they played in Germany, Czechoslovakia, France, Holland, Italy and Great Britain. Everywhere they went they were hailed as sportsmen, fine competitors and good ambassadors for this country. Mr. George Dudley, veteran secretary-manager of the Canadian amateur hockey association announced on January 2 that the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen were named as Canadian representatives to compete in the 1960 winter games at Squaw Valley, California. They will be noteworthy representatives of Canada, Mr. Speaker.

These teams are always hampered by lack of funds. While the governments of other countries back sports development programs financially, our federal governments so far have offered no encouragement to athletics. The big stumbling block is money. It takes a lot to provide adequate facilities and operate a development plan. So far the federal governments have not assumed any portion of the costs of either training athletes or sending them to international competitions. Organizations such as the Canadian amateur hockey association in hockey and the Canadian Legion in track and field, and individuals, have had to carry the heavy financial burden. It is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that it is now time for our government to take a look at things. A ministry of sports and athletic development might be the answer. With government assistance, we might reach the day when we could send national teams abroad without forcing their leaders to go begging for funds to make the trip.

Millions of dollars are spent each year on cultural development in this country. I am in total accord with this, as any fair-minded sportsman would be. I also feel, however, we should spend a similar amount on the physical and athletic development of our young Canadians. Let the government look at the by-product of sports events. There is the goodwill the competition fosters for Canada; the easing of international tension through international sports; the raising of the prestige of the country through participation; and the example the sportsmen on these teams set for our youth. So far Canada has not achieved the place in international competition which the potential we have warrants. However, with proper assistance that goal is attainable.

[Mr. Weichel.]

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I am a veteran, and as a veteran I have strong feelings about Remembrance Day and its observance. Although I feel in my own heart that a day with such resounding significance as November 11 should be observed as a holiday, I realize that this is not the wish of all veterans' organizations. Both these organizations, however—and I join them—strongly urge the government to lead the country in a proper observance of this day that means so much to us. Perhaps the main thing this government can do is to stifle any move to shift the observance of November 11 to the nearest Sunday. If the observance of this occasion were moved to any other day, it would be to brush off with little thought the contribution our veterans have made by laying down their lives for our freedom. I, as a veteran who has hobbled on one leg for longer than I walked on two, cannot forget the contribution of those who lost eyes, arms, legs and even their minds in past conflicts. I cannot see how any group would back a move to lessen in any way the importance of our Remembrance day.

It is beyond my comprehension why some school officials, who have backed a move to abolish Remembrance Day as a school holiday, are still content to let the children out of school on days that have no significance to them, such as Victoria day which is not even recognized in England, the home of that gracious queen. It has been said that school children cannot understand the significance of Remembrance Day. Those who have fathers who were wounded or who died in past conflicts surely have some comprehension of it. If the others do not, it is time they were taught in the schools. A child's mind can comprehend much more difficult things than that.

I plead, therefore, with the government to lead this country in a more significant remembrance of those days in 1918 and 1945, so that Canadians do not fall into a lethargy in which praise of our dead becomes merely a sentimental practice.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I want to associate myself with previous speakers in tendering my most sincere congratulations to the hon. members for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) who respectively moved and seconded the address in reply.

As I am one of the first if not indeed the first, member from the provincec of Quebec to rise in this debate, I would reserve the right to comment on certain parts of the speech made by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet.

In my humble opinion, the speech from the throne contains nothing which might restore that confidence and feeling of security given to the Canadian people by the former government.

Yet, in this period of uncertainty, the people of Canada had reasons to count on government action to solve, if not entirely, at least in part the problems we are facing.

I have listened with great attention to the speech which the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) made last night and he left us with the impression that everything was going fine in this country. I wonder whether, if he had made the same speech before an audience made up of unemployed people or of farmers hard pressed to dispose of their products, he would have scored as much success as he did achieve in this house, before his numerous supporters.

I believe the picture drawn by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) gives a much better idea of the economic situation confronting us at this time. Unemployment is an evil which is still rampant in Canada, and our workers are in a situation they are helpless to relieve, since it is largely a responsibility of our leaders and it remains with the federal government to do something about it. In fact the federal government has recognized its share of responsibility, and brought down at least one measure designed to check that plague. I refer here to the action proposed by the right hon. Prime Minister shortly before his trip, and contained in a telegram which he sent to the premier of the province of Quebec, as well as to all the other premiers of the provinces of Canada, I suppose.

It was an offer by this government to take care of 50 per cent of the salaries and wages to be paid directly by municipalities to their contractors from December to April inclusive, on works which normally would not be undertaken in the wintertime.

On November 20 last, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) sent us copies of federal government proposals in connection with its program for promoting winter employment in our municipalities. The suggestions were contained in the copy of a letter addressed to the provincial premiers.

After considering that offer of encouragement by the federal government, our municipalities were alarmed at the scanty benefits provided by that federal assistance offered as an encouragement, and instead they gave way to despair.

The financial situation of our municipalities is most precarious, and we have only to glance at the statistics to realize that, far from getting better, the situation is getting worse. Thus, municipal liabilities which amounted to 466 million dollars in 1945, exceeded one billion dollars in 1956.

In the present state of their finances, municipal corporations and authorities will be largely compelled to forgo this program. The share promised by the federal government will be of no use to them, because the works recommended have to be carried out in winter time, will therefore cost more than if carried out in the summer time, and the percentage of this extra cost is far in excess of the proffered federal assistance.

Some of the permissible works can be carried out in winter, but engineers agree that they require so much additional care that the percentage provided by the federal government is way below the actual costs involved.

It is no easy matter to put in waterworks and sewers, especially in heavy snow, and I suppose that the Montreal authorities are perfectly aware of this just now. It is no cinch either to build sidewalks in a temperature of 20 below zero.

In our district, at least, those projects will in no way contribute to relieve unemployment, because our municipalities will not be able to take advantage of them, and will act wisely in not overlooking the fact that if the federal government offers to pay only half of the salaries, and the municipality has to pay the other half, in addition to other costs, they will be compelled to borrow at rates which are currently higher than they have ever been in Canada.

In my humble opinion, the program proposed by the federal government will fail of its objective and will in no way help relieve unemployment.

If the government really wanted to help the municipalities, it would loan them the necessary funds, without interest, or at least at a very low rate, to enable them to undertake municipal works at any time. This would also help relieve their financial burden and would enable them to provide certain urgently needed services in many communities.

Another problem which I should like to point out, one which is highly prevalent in my area, is the problem which faces thousands of people in my riding and, of course, in the whole area, who have to go across the border to work in the bush camps of Maine and New Hampshire.

I discussed this matter at length last session and pointed out to the Minister of Labour the situation facing these thousands of bush workers who could not qualify for unemployment insurance benefits.

I understand that agreements now exist between Canada and the states of Vermont and New York, and I urge the Minister of Labour to do whatever is required so that these thousands of people who earn wages in the United States and spend them in Canada may qualify for unemployment insurance.

On this particular point, I hope the hon. members representing this area, who were joined recently by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, will take a stand on this issue, and will urge the federal government to get in touch with the authorities concerned, in order that an agreement be reached as soon as possible for the benefit of the many citizens of our area.

I also wish to submit to the house a resolution I have received from the local employment advisory committee of Beauce county, urging an increase of the allowable earnings, for the purpose of unemployment insurance. This would have the effect of stimulating the workers' search for employment.

In this same connection, it would help if December were added to January, February and March for the purposes of seasonal unemployment in rural areas and if November were considered the waiting period. These changes would allow contractors to keep their heavy equipment in good repair and would more effectively interest them in the matter.

Last year, the government made a substantial attempt to promote housing construction in this country, but unfortunately, this effort has not been and will not be as successful outside the cities.

Housing capital is largely supplied by life insurance companies, and these are hardly interested in rural investments.

It might be a good thing if the federal government were to guarantee housing loans made by credit unions on the same basis as it does for life insurance companies, so as to favour construction and give all families a chance to become house-owners. Indirectly, this would surely ease the pressure of seasonal unemployment.

In the field of agriculture, recent statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) have puzzled many farmers.

In a Canadian Press dispatch published in Le Droit, last November 12, the hon. minister is quoted as saying:

> If surpluses become so large that they can't be disposed of or even, in some cases, given away it will be impossible for us, under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, to keep prices at present level, and even less to increase them.

And the hon. minister added:

> I do not believe that the Canadian people would accept quotas on farm production; my own convictions and those of the government are entirely opposed to such a regimentation of the farming industry.

And the minister goes on to say:

> There is no other choice but educational work, propaganda and the pressure you can put on those you represent, so that they voluntarily refrain from producing more than Canadians are capable of consuming, and than our world export markets are able to absorb.

The minister stated these gloomy findings in connection with the federal-provincial conference of the ministers of agriculture, which took place in Ottawa last November 12.

I do not know which particular product the minister had in mind, but it must be admitted that it is difficult to see how our farmers, either in my riding or in any area of eastern Canada, could possibly cut down their production which in some cases, at this time, already yields them inadequate revenues.

I hope and wish that the government will take every appropriate action to dispose of our farm produce, for if our eastern farmers should decrease their production, I am afraid it would mean the death knell of farming in our area because farmers would not earn enough to stay on the farm.

I cannot possibly talk about agriculture without drawing the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to a problem which exists in and around the constituency of Beauce. Hon. members will not be surprised if I say a few words about maple products.

It certainly will be no surprise if the member from Beauce talks about maple products. Besides, my predecessors have done so in the past, and last session I personally drew the minister's attention to this matter. If I find it necessary to bring it up again it is because there has been no change in the picture. However, one thing did change, and it seems to me that hon. members of constituencies where maple products are on the increase are less insistent than some of their predecessors in requesting that the government include those prices in the agriculture stabilization act.

I do hope that several members will cooperate and urge the government to make it possible for our farmers to take advantage by next spring of legislation which surely would help them out.

And whatever importance may be attached to the material aspect, one should not overlook the intellectual aspect. It seems to me that a good way to assist in the field of education would be for the government to raise the age limit of those qualifying for family allowances.

Family allowances now range from $5 to $8 a month and stop at age 16, an age when a youth still in school needs them most, and at a time when parents' obligations are heaviest if they want their children to carry on their studies.

It would therefore be most important to provide parents with the means of dealing with the situation, and the best way to do so would be to prolong and increase the family allowances for students, male or female, aged 16 or more, who are carrying on advanced studies.

Such a solution would certainly help many Canadians and facilitate access to high school and university education.

Furthermore, the detailed implementation of such a system would be accepted by all and would not involve any problem of intervention or autonomy, while respecting, under the circumstances, the authority of the parents.

Finally, I should like to make a few remarks about certain points raised in the speech made by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, particularly in regard to federal-provincial relations and more especially in regard to the province of Quebec.

As a matter of fact, the speech made by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet is, on several points, at variance with statements made by his colleagues of the provincial government in our province.

Among other things, he had this to say about the Colombo Plan:

> That is why I believe that the first duty of the Canadian nation is to accept generously the sacrifices which may be asked of her, sacrifices which will allow us to help those under-developed nations, so that at last they may turn away from communist propaganda, and may once and for all see the light that is being held out to them by the free nations.

Here is now what he had to say about immigration:

> We, in the province of Quebec, have witnessed a complete transformation of our economy, often due to the new Canadians who have come in our midst. In the political field, a mere glance around this house reveals that all Canadians, of whatever origin, have sent here members of different origins, who are a new asset to this parliament.

And then the hon. member added that the province of Quebec was not different from the others, and I quote another passage from his speech:

> I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I express quite frankly and quite sincerely the true feeling of the province of Quebec. The province of Quebec is a province like any other province.

Mr. Fortin: Quite true.

Mr. Racine: I am glad to hear this applause by many members from the province of Quebec when I say that the province of Quebec is like the others. As recently as September 9, 1958, according to a Canadian Press dispatch, the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn) stated that Conservative members from the province of Quebec were of the opinion—as are Mr. Duplessis and the provincial cabinet—that federal subsidies were an encroachment on provincial rights in the field of education.

What then shall be done with the millions of dollars earmarked for us if, on the one hand, Quebec is like the other provinces? I wonder why we should not accept those grants. If, on the other hand, the province of Quebec is different from the others, I wonder why Conservative members from that province have not laid down any conditions when, at the last session, those grants were increased.

As far as gifts under the Colombo plan are concerned, why did Conservative members from Quebec, during the last session, vote in favour of an increase while saying in their province that the provincial government gave to Quebec and the federal government to foreign countries?

Mr. Tremblay: This has nothing to do with the matter.

Mr. Racine: There are many questions we could put to Conservative members from Quebec!

Some hon. Members: Put them.

Mr. Meunier: You never answer.

Mr. Racine: It might be well to repeat what the Right Hon. Prime Minister said yesterday when he stated: "they remind me of cuckoos who repeat themselves and whom nobody listens to". This sentence could well be applied to hon. members who are always butting in.

Mr. Johnson: Would the hon. member from Beauce permit a question? I heard him say several times a few moments ago—he even quoted the hon. member from Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) amongst others—that to his mind the province of Quebec was like all other provinces. I would like to know if the hon. member for Beauce shares the views of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet?

Mr. Racine: Mr. Speaker, I shall gladly answer the hon. member who just asked me a question. In the past we did approve the policy of the former Liberal administration; we approved it in the province of Quebec as well as in other parts of the country. We did not have one policy for the province of Quebec and a different policy for the rest of the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh! Oh! Answer the question!

Mr. Racine: Now that we are a province similar to the other provinces, will we take advantage of a piece of legislation passed in 1955 by the Liberal government, providing for the payment of a special financial allowance to the unemployed who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits or do not qualify for such benefits? The federal government pays 50 per cent of these allowances which are enjoyed by the provinces other than Quebec.

I also ask the Conservative members of Quebec province whether our province shares in hospital insurance and in the extension of the trans-Canada highway.

An hon. Member: Ask Mr. Jean Lesage.

Mr. Racine: We would be most interested to know the position of Quebec Conservatives on these various matters during the present session.

In a word, to summarize the speech from the throne, I would refer to an editorial which appeared in the Gazette of January 19, over the signature of Mr. Arthur Blakely. I quote this statement which, to my mind, contains that which certain Conservative members regard as most important and most interesting:

(Text):

You can bet your bottom dollar that as far as some 175 members who are concerned the most interesting question of the speech from the throne was the one which gave notice of the government's intention to seek the passage of a statute to authorize the appointment of parliamentary secretaries to ministers of the crown.

It is high time that members of the government come out of their lethargy. It is high time that they stop making speeches and take positive steps likely to bring wise and worth-while solutions to the many problems which have spread anxiety and concern among the people of Canada. Let them do that before trying to prove that the government is dealing with existing problems, and is not entirely taken up in playing politics.

Mr. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish, first of all, to offer my warmest and sincerest congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Mr. Jorgenson and Mr. Fortin). What impressed me most in these two speeches, was first of all the true personality of those two young members. They represent here very dissimilar parts of this country; they have different cultures and professions, different family backgrounds. The member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) is, I think, of Nordic origin; thus, he represents quite gallantly this valiant Scandinavian race from the North and others who have come to this country during the last few years, and particularly since the beginning of the century, and who have contributed, like other groups of this country, to our development. On the other hand, the member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) represents the French Canadian race. He is a descendant of the pioneers of this country, whose grandfather and father sat in this very house. One of them represents a western riding, Provencher, in Manitoba, gateway to the great prairies which comprises such a promising area and which is now blessed with a remarkable development. On the other hand, the member for Montmagny-L'Islet represents a riding lying at the very heart of this country. It is linked with the fertile lands of the St. Lawrence river and is quite close to the old capital city of the province of Quebec, close to the citadel which Canadians know, admire and in which they find inspiration.

Those two members have a different culture. One of them, in addition to being a farmer, is a farm leader who knows how to express himself and who discussed agricultural issues with such accuracy and clarity that it was stated on the floor of the house that his was the best speech made on agricultural problems.

The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet is a young lawyer. Although he comes from a family of professional people he has developed an interest in problems encountered in all walks of life.

Those two young men speak different languages, but they speak it with the same accent, the same ideal and the same love for our Canadian country.

That is a living proof, I submit Mr. Speaker, of national unity. Incidentally, it is not by stirring up strife and quarrels such as some members have tried to raise, that national unity which we cherish so much will ever be achieved.

Mr. Speaker, a great leader of our party, and also a great Canadian, one of the makers of this country, one of the fathers of confederation, once said that the Conservative party would be a national one, or would not exist at all. Nowadays it is again the spirit of our party, in the person of a great Canadian, the Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker, our present Prime Minister, who was able to introduce unity into this diversity, has restored our country to the rank of nation and will direct her towards the destiny which we know to be in store for her.

This is the reason why we are going to struggle and work to solve the serious problems which face our country today.

Mr. Speaker, wailings and lamentations were not a creation of the Liberals. They have always existed.

If we study the history of an era not so remote, the end of the Middle Ages, the period of great discoveries, for instance the time when the discovery of printing had spread new ideas and also the time when adventurous men looked beyond known frontiers and moved towards the unknown, an era when men were not afraid to go forward and discover America and that era of prosperity, of adventure and of greatness that humanity has known, we note that there existed then, just like today, calamity howlers. Moreover, if we draw nearer to our time, again we find calamity howlers. At the end of the last century, those calamity howlers took pleasure in saying that the end of the world was at hand.

When the first motor vehicle and other such inventions were launched, those calamity howlers then declared: "You cannot make use of those things, because man was made to travel at a maximum speed of 28 miles an hour. If you exceed this limit, you are exposing yourself to danger and you will perish."

However, we now live in the 20th century and we know what progress has brought, not only to Canada, but to the whole world. One thing is remarkable, the more we hear lamentations, the closer and the greater the ensuing progress.

That is why I am inclined to think after hearing the Liberals' continuous wailings ever since we came into office that once again we are on the eve of an era of unheard of progress.

Mr. Speaker, the new members, and I am one of them, are determined to find an adequate solution to the problems now facing us and it seems to me that the amendment moved yesterday by the leader of the official opposition in the house is in no way a program of recovery.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, at this point I should like to continue in the English language. I wish to put forth the proposition that when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) spoke yesterday and proposed his motion of non-confidence in the government, supported by lengthy arguments and a brilliant discourse, he was not serious but was only fooling. I shall endeavour to establish that premise by arguments which I believe are solidly based.

First of all I wish to make it clear that I would be the last person to attempt to belittle the personality of the Leader of the Opposition. Certainly he has won great renown as an international statesman, diplomat and minister of external affairs. I also know that he is a ball player of some repute.

An hon. Member: Foul ball.

Mr. Martineau: But what is less generally known, I believe, is that the Leader of the Opposition is also an accomplished comedian of more than mediocre talent. He is, I submit a first-class jester. He displayed that talent not only yesterday but on previous occasions and it began to emerge more apparently since he became Leader of the Opposition.

We had yesterday a motion of non-confidence in this government. I seem to recall that just about a year ago, almost to the day, a similar motion was also put forward by the Leader of the Opposition. Do you know what that motion contained? It contained an invitation to the Conservative government to resign its place, to abdicate to the Liberal party, and all of this without the benefit of an election. We know what became of that joke and we also know the answer the Canadian people gave to it.

Our jester has certainly gained in experience in the last year. The jokes our comedian makes today are somewhat less crude. He is a much more practised comedian although I submit he is still the same old jester, the same old beguiler with his wonderful, engaging and charming smile. And all the time he is painting a dark picture of gloom and despair and listing the catastrophes that are besetting the nation he beams his engaging smile. If these calamities were really about to happen do you not think he should wear a somewhat less happy expression? Should his smile not be replaced with a serious expression of concern? But no, only a smile lights the rather engaging face of the hon. gentleman as he speaks his words of gloom and doom.

In effect the Leader of the Opposition is saying, "Now, fellows, do not take me too seriously. You know I have to tell you all these things. You know what politics are. I do not really believe a word of this." That was certainly evident if you examined with care the words and more particularly the facial expression and the broad smile of the Leader of the Opposition when he spoke yesterday, as I am sure you did, Mr. Speaker. For this reason I repeat that he was only joking yesterday and must not be taken too seriously.

Mr. Habel: Do you think he was joking when Cardinal Leger wrote his pastoral letter?

(Translation):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I think it might be appropriate for me to continue in French, particularly in view of the hon. member's interjection. He has spoken about unemployment. Well, we too are going to speak of unemployment. It is a serious problem. Like the hon. member, I also have read the pastoral letter of His Eminence Cardinal Leger. It is certainly a document full of concern for the lot of the workman. It must, however, be noted that it rises far above partisan politics. That is precisely the position we want to take when speaking of unemployment and our reason for setting the facts in their true light.

Mr. Habel: This is why your leader does not want to hear about it.

Mr. Martineau: Our leader wants to hear about it and we want to discuss it. We wish to co-operate in finding a remedy to end the plague of unemployment. Unemployment was not invented yesterday and does not only exist since 1958, 1957 or even 1956. It is part of our economy. We are a northern country where every year business slows down in the wintertime.

Mr. Denis: You said you were going to settle the matter of unemployment; well, go ahead and do it!

Mr. Martineau: Let me go on with my remarks, please.

Let us go back to the pastoral letter of His Eminence Cardinal Leger. In this letter, His Eminence states that the first responsibility for settling the unemployment crisis lies with the people themselves, i.e. in the co-operation of employers with the labour force. It is the duty of employers, their essential responsibility, to find employment for workers. He also said that it is up to the state to see that an atmosphere most favourable for employment is created. The part played by the state in this unemployment crisis is only that of a supplier. Neither His Eminence the cardinal nor this government ever thought of taking the place of the employer and of hiring collectively the whole unemployed population.

It was stated that nothing was being done to cope with unemployment. An attempt was made to suggest that the Prime Minister was contradicting himself when he stated: "As long as I am prime minister, nobody in this country will suffer from unemployment." It is true that he did say so. But the Prime Minister did not mean there would never be unemployment in this country. He did not say that. That's not what he meant either—

Some hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Martineau: —in the construction you put on his words.

Mr. Habel: What did he mean then?

Mr. Martineau: What the Prime Minister did promise, and the promise which he made, which he is anxious to keep is that his government will take every strong measure to remedy unemployment and check its disastrous effects.

Some hon. Members: When?

Mr. Martineau: But what we now see and what we are going to go on witnessing is the spectacle of those who, today, do the greatest disservice to our country by spreading this lack of confidence. The phrase was used by His Eminence the cardinal himself, when he said that the crisis stems mainly from a lack of confidence. And who is responsible for this lack of confidence? Precisely such people as the members of the opposition who do not hesitate to exploit the difficult situation created by unemployment to attain their political ends. You have there the true answer.

(Text):

To continue with the economic picture of our nation at the present time, I should like to repeat that the Leader of the Opposition again committed grievous sins of omission yesterday when he painted a picture of gloom with regard to our economic condition. After all, in this country we have economists and we have specialists in various departments. They have gauged and they have analyzed the economic trends in this country. As far back as 1957, they predicted a decline in the affairs of our country and yet yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), on the basis of figures that have been verified, could point out that despite those predictions the year 1958 was actually a better year than had been predicted. It cannot be denied that in the year 1958 more Canadians were working, more Canadians earned more, spent more and saved more. When these conditions exist, Mr. Speaker, there are certainly not the gloomy prospects that we are asked to believe in. Moreover, even last year we were one of the few nations that was able to hold its own in foreign trade. Our exports almost matched the record year of 1957. If you analyze the figures, if you analyze department by department and industry by industry, you will find that 1958 was one of the greatest years in our history since confederation. I am sure that when we compare the statistics in the years to come we shall find that 1958 will certainly not rank among the dark years of our history.

Mr. Winch: What can a dead man do with a statistic? There are 449,000 out of work. How about that? Is he just a statistic when he is dead and buried?

Mr. Martineau: Another proof of the levity of members of the opposition is seen when they talk about inflation, when they tell you that it is terrible and that we have a shrinking dollar. It is true that the value of the dollar may be shrinking; no one refutes it. The Leader of the Opposition said that someone had placed an inflationary time bomb under our economy. I would like to point out that time bombs take quite a while to explode, and that time bomb was planted there many years ago and we are beginning to feel some of the effects of that inflationary time bomb which was placed under our economy by an administration which had been in power for 22 years.

Then, Mr. Speaker, they tell us that we must cut down on expenses; we must reduce taxes. They also say that we must increase social benefits; we must increase defence spending; we must do all kinds of things, and yet they allude to some of the difficult problems which have been created in the economic life of this country. These problems are found not only in this country but in all modern countries. A great struggle is going on and a great battle has been joined. Some members of the opposition do not seem to have taken stock of that reality.

Mr. Winch: Including yourself.

Mr. Martineau: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I have not found the solution, but at least I am trying to look the facts squarely in the face.

Today, we have recurring unemployment. We also have a threat of inflation. We have serious defence decisions to make as a result of situations beyond our control. We must think, first of all, about automation in industry, and of the spectacular revolution that has occurred during the last few years in production methods. What remedies are the members of the opposition going to suggest for the problem of automation? What suggestions have they for putting an end to the spiral of rising costs, often driven upwards by the excessive demands of unions. How are they going to counter the effects on international trade of the new common European market? How are they going to counter the effects of the resurgence of these new industrial giants of Western Germany and Japan? How are they going to ascertain how to pacify these new nations of Asia? Even more important, Mr. Speaker, what suggestions have the members of the opposition put forth to solve the trade war which has been launched by soviet Russia?

These are the real facts at the bottom of the crisis, if the word is not too strong, that exists in the Canadian economy today, and not only in the Canadian economy but in the economy of the western world. Yesterday the opposition said that the government had made a mess of defence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martineau: I submit that the only messy thing about defence right now is the way the opposition has tried to use a very, very important decision this government must make in order to gain political ends; that is the messy part. The only fault the opposition had to find with the government in so far as defence is concerned is that there may have been some delay in arriving at a decision on the production of the CF-105; that is the only reproach that can be made by the opposition. However, the majority of opposition members admit that the decision must be serious; that its effects will be felt not only today, not only in the next election, but for generations to come. Do they also admit that revolutionary changes are occurring in defence and in defence production? Nobody but a stark-eyed lunatic would refuse to admit that defence methods are changing. Every day and every week we read about and we see the discoveries brought about by nuclear science.

We see the arrival of the space age and space travel. We see the intercontinental missile being thrown all about this planet. Not only is this planet being threatened by invasion, but also other planets and other systems. These things are not fancies, are not dreams. When you look up at the sky, you see these new engines that are girdling this globe. I submit that under such circumstances any decision taken concerning the production of manned interceptors, the Bomarc missile and so on, must be taken only after the utmost scrutiny.

There are other problems involved. There is the problem, for instance, of safeguarding our sovereignty. What suggestions will the opposition make to the government for safeguarding our sovereignty in a world that has suddenly shrunk in the way it has? What limits must be placed on defence expenditures today, having regard to the resources of our country? These are the reasons why it is most wise, before the final, irrevocable decision is taken, that careful consideration be given to these matters; that is what we are doing.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the proof that the Leader of the Opposition was joking yesterday when he painted the gloomy picture he did paint is found in the type of speech which he made. He was asked by members of the government, what are your proposals? He said that proposals are not made by us; we are the opposition. It is not up to us to suggest remedies to today's problems. That may be true, it is no doubt true, but I submit that if the dire emergency which was outlined to us yesterday really exists then it is the sacred duty of the members of the opposition not to make political capital of it but to come out in the open and make suggestions for improvement.

Mr. Winch: What do you think you have been doing for the last 40 minutes?

Mr. Martineau: I have been probing the climate in a serious and sincere attempt to try to find answers to our problems. If the population of Canada has relegated both opposition parties to the miserably small space they occupy in this house, it is because those parties tried for too long to fool the people. This reminds me of the words of Abraham Lincoln who stated:

—you may fool all the people some of the time; you can even fool some of the people all the time; but you can't fool all the people all the time.

[Mr. Martineau.]

There was a declaration made in the press a few days before this session started by members of the opposition who said that this is going to be a fighting session. The manner in which they have acted so far has not indicated any fighting, but I can assure you there will certainly be fighting done by members of this party. They will be fighting, not to establish position for the next general election but they will be fighting to find a real solution to the problems of this country. The other day I saw an article which was not the result of any vision by the Prime Minister or any members of the government, but of hard thinking of a political journalist in Britain. The article was reproduced in the Ottawa Journal and it was entitled "1999". It was stated that by 1999 our country will—

An hon. Member: We will all be dead.

Mr. Martineau: No, not all—our country will have a population of some 70 million. It will be inhabited by a vigorous, forward-looking and adventuresome population such as that which we have today. It will be the envy of the world. In his heart of hearts the Leader of the Opposition, who is most certainly an intelligent man and a great Canadian, I am sure knows that that is true. He knows that our country is the envy of the world. We know that we have problems. Today the problem may be unemployment; tomorrow it may be inflation or a combination of both. But nevertheless we on this side of the house have found something which is precious, something which will not fall apart. I refer to the union of the best forces and the best brains of this country in order to find a solution to our problems so that we may forge ahead. May I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if anyone is swinging hula hoops by the time the next election rolls around, it will be members of the opposition.

(Translation):

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I am sure it will be proper for me to congratulate both the mover and the seconder (Messrs. Jorgenson and Fortin.)

The hon. member for Provencher, speaking with moderation, endeavoured, above all, to outline and praise the agricultural policy of the government.

I was particularly pleased with the speech of the hon. member who supported the address, the new representative for Montmagny-L'Islet. I was equally pleased to read it over in the official record. I had the honour to meet him during the by-elections but, as you will readily understand, Mr. Speaker, we were not on the same hustings. The new member made a courageous speech and we, from this side of the house, were particularly happy to hear a different note from the one we had heard in the past, both here and outside this house.

Most particularly, I wish to convey my sympathy to the families of members who have passed on. I want to associate myself with all my predecessors in congratulating the newly elected members and, you will understand, more particularly the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer).

While listening to the hon. member who spoke before me, I thought it proper to make a brief incursion into the political history of Canada. Thus I realized that from 1896 to 1911, the Liberal party was sitting on the other side—

Mr. Parizeau: Unfortunately.

Mr. Roberge: The same situation prevailed from 1922 to 1930 and from 1935 to 1957.

Mr. Parizeau: That was when disaster broke out!

Mr. Tremblay: What a marvellous historian!

Mr. Roberge: During those periods, Canadians have known eras of prosperity as they had never known before. However, if we recall those periods during which a Conservative government was presiding over the destinies of the nation, we realize that we have lost ground during the period from 1911 to 1921. We found ourselves in the depths of an abyss from 1930 to 1935, and unfortunately, we are sinking again at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, there was talk, recently, about the function of the government and of the opposition. I just happened to read today, I believe it was in the Citizen, that the role of the opposition, as defined by the present Prime Minister, is "Hit hard, hit always". We intend to do just that. That is what we have been doing since this session started, and that is what we will continue to do. We will play our part as Her Majesty's opposition.

Mr. Ricard: That suits us fine.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Speaker, we have reached mid-January, and so far this winter, there have been heavy snowfalls in the province of Quebec, as in the rest of the country.

Mr. Tremblay: Listen to the great historian!

Mr. Roberge: Spring will soon be here—

Mr. Tremblay: What an amazing historian!

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that a university professor, particularly a professor of French, would show more intelligence and perhaps better manners.

As I was saying, before I was interrupted, that spring will soon be here, which is a fact—

Mr. Tremblay: That is something new.

Mr. Roberge: The hon. member for Roberval is also something new in this house.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the province of Quebec particularly, and part of Ontario, part of Nova Scotia and part of New Brunswick are approaching what we, at home, term the sugar season, an event which is of no interest to the member for Roberval.

An hon. Member: He has never heard of it.

Mr. Roberge: Last year, my colleague and neighbour, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Racine), and myself discussed this matter of maple products, and we called for something which we feel would benefit producers of maple products.

The members from the Quebec area, and not those from Lake St. John, used to rise here to call the attention of the government to the problems facing maple producers. I regret, as my hon. colleague a few moments ago, that last year we were alone, I believe, in making representations on behalf of maple sugar producers. The member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) and the member for Dorchester (Mr. Drouin) could have very well dealt with this problem, since the farmers in their respective ridings are affected like the farmers in our districts.

I will not repeat the statistics that I put on record last year at pages 2947 and 2948 of the English text of Hansard. The speech is published in French on those pages and since the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) can read French, I invite him to read them.

Mr. Tremblay: I do not understand that brand of French.

Mr. Roberge: May I say however that, last year, as the year before, the production was mainly of maple syrup rather than of maple sugar. Perhaps the member for Roberval would like to sweeten his tongue. I may say also that the marketing of last year's production was perhaps more difficult than the year before.

We have here, Mr. Speaker, a difficult problem, and the government should tackle it right now. The maple season will start in late February or early March and, while I am no expert in the matter, judging by the quantity of snow that has fallen and by the present temperature, I feel we should have a pretty good crop.

So much the better! But, let us not forget that if the trend of past years increases, those products will not be so easily disposed of and our farmers, this spring, will consider either giving up production or a cut down in production, for if they have to keep their sugar all summer they will sustain a heavy loss.

The various solutions that come to mind would probably not bring any definite results, but would be at least temporary measures that would help maple sugar producers both in the province of Quebec and in the parts of the other three provinces who are engaged in this industry.

I can do no better than to repeat, at least in part, what I said last year concerning those different solutions and I refer to pages 2947 and 2948 of Hansard of August 1, 1958.

Here is what I had to say:

In fact, I have realized that the best way to facilitate the marketing of maple products was to carry on a proper sales promotion campaign on a national scale, not one limited solely to the province of Quebec. The campaign might also extend beyond our own borders.

That is why I think that every Canadian citizen should be able to buy those maple products at his local grocery or supermarket. No better way can he find of satisfying his palate.

And, may I add, the palate of the member for Roberval.

In doing so the consumer would help to a considerable extent those farmers who, each spring, are engaged in this particular phase of agricultural operations.

And I quote again:

Mr. Chairman, the central government should take particular interest in a sales promotion campaign of this type. This matter could be considered at meetings between provincial and federal agricultural ministers. In this way an integrated sales promotion effort could be launched in all provinces to the advantage of farmers engaged in the production of maple syrup or maple sugar.

There is another way of helping the maple producers and that is through price support. This might not perhaps be fully efficient, in view of the ups and downs of the market, but it would be a good thing, in my opinion, and not later than this year—

Because, since last year, I can say not later than this year—

—to establish a support price for maple products. This would allow farmers engaged in maple product industry to make both ends meet and earn enough to meet their production costs. If the support price I am suggesting were inefficient—as I fear it would be—it could be replaced by an adjustment grant on deficiency payment.

In my opinion—

And I am still quoting from my speech of last year.

—it would be proper to extend throughout the whole country the price adjustment legislation enjoyed by prairie farmers.

As I see it, it is not just the western farmers who should derive benefit, as at present, from the Prairie Farm Assistance Act; all our farmers should enjoy these adjustment grants. This would not only mean that the maple industry farmer would be just as sure of obtaining deficiency payments for his maple, but also that during unproductive years he would have the incentive to work on his maple trees—and also to hire helpers (for it is only fair to bear in mind that often, in such years, he works all around the clock). In this way he could increase his annual income, and could more easily make ends meet.

I note in the speech from the throne the following sentence about the measures that the government wants to adopt in the field of agriculture.

A measure will be laid before you to institute a system of crop insurance in co-operation with such provinces as so desire.

The province of Quebec being now a province like any other, as repeated by the member for Montmagny-L'Islet, after the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, I hope that the government will be in a position to include maple products in the crop insurance plan and that the government of the province of Quebec, with the recommendation of its friends in Ottawa, will decide to co-operate in this regard.

Incidentally, may I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) for considering the extension of crop insurance legislation to all provinces.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to touch upon the employment situation in my riding of Megantic which, as I mentioned last year, is half urban and half rural. The employment situation in our industrial towns is no better in 1959 than it was at the same period in 1958. I therefore urge the government to take action to correct this situation. Personally, I do not believe that the winter works program offered to municipalities settles the matter, but I hope nevertheless that the forecast made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) will come true.

(Text):

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Does the hon. member know that the number of unemployed in Megantic this year is more than 300 below the number at the same time last year?

Mr. Chevrier: But in the province of Quebec unemployment is worse than in any other region.

Mr. Starr: He is talking about his riding.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the minister not know that?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Who has got the floor?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Megantic has the floor?

Mr. Pickersgill: Let the minister make his own speech.

Mr. Pallett: He is just getting the right figures on the record. That is all.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There will be nothing left for you to say when he is through.

(Translation):

Mr. Roberge: I know, Mr. Speaker, that at the unemployment office in Thetford Mines, there are perhaps less unemployed than last year, and also that the Minister of Labour is aware that a section of the constituency of Megantic comes under the Victoriaville office; and then there is no way of striking a proportion. Another part of Megantic comes under the Lac Megantic office, in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I hope that the prediction made by the Minister of Labour this morning will come true.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that there is a huge difference between what government supporters said in 1957 and 1958 and what the government has done in many fields since it took power. What I just said applies most especially in the province of Quebec where, unfortunately, the keynote of both the 1957 and 1958 campaigns was a far cry from what it was in other provinces.

It is particularly true in the field of dominion-provincial relations. Throughout the electoral campaign of 1957, the Prime Minister and his colleagues at the time kept repeating that once in power they would immediately settle that question of the fiscal relations between the dominion and the provinces.

Before that period, on January 18, 1957, the present Prime Minister who was then leader of the opposition, dealt with the matter during a debate on a resolution to present legislation providing for the establishment of a council for the advancement of the arts, humanities and social sciences in Canada. This is what he said, as can be seen in Hansard, page 400 of the English edition:

> What is envisaged here will simply postpone the day. The whole question of dominion-provincial relations will have to be faced.

Criticizing the government of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, the then leader of the opposition added:

> We simply postpone again facing the problem that must be faced in this country, a problem which cannot be faced by bits and pieces, but which must be faced at an early date.

Hence the promises and statements throughout the country on the matter, which I have mentioned before and which, as a matter of fact, my leader has discussed in his eloquent indictment of the government, last Monday.

What did the government do by way of keeping its promises? A conference was held on November 25 and 26, 1957, a little more than five months after the 1957 election, a conference which—so the Canadian people had been told—was to settle all taxation problems facing the federal government and the provinces. At that conference, the provinces made their representations and claims. At the end of the meeting, the Minister of Finance said it was impossible to grant what the provinces were asking. And, at that time, a solemn promise was made to the effect that a new conference would be held in January 1958.

What happened on that date? Has any conference been held in accordance with the promises made and the solemn pledge taken? On the contrary, a mere telegram, as was recalled by the Leader of the Opposition, was sent to the provincial premiers, saying: "Here is what the federal government is doing or has decided to do." A unilateral conference and, if I may add, a one-party conference. Were the provinces satisfied with that arrangement? Certainly not, if we go by the comments of the provincial leaders of that time. The same promises were made on the occasion of a new election. Did a new conference take place? Not at all.

The speech from the throne however tells us that the government intends to do something to solve those problems. But how are they doing it? Once again unilaterally. Let me quote the relevant part of the speech from the throne, on page 3 of Hansard. It reads:

> My government will recommend an amendment to the Federal-Provincial Tax Sharing Arrangements Act to extend for another year the increase made last year in the provincial share of personal income tax revenue.

My government proposes that the entire subject of financial relations between the dominion and the provinces shall receive continued active co-operative study. All provincial governments are being asked to agree to the use, for this purpose, of the machinery of the existing federal-provincial continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters working under the direction of a committee consisting of the Minister of Finance and all provincial treasurers.

On the same day, January 15, the Prime Minister wrote to the premiers of the different provinces, simply quoting this sentence from the speech from the throne, and inviting the provincial treasurers to co-operate with the Minister of Finance within the continuing federal-provincial committee on fiscal and economic matters.

We are very far, Mr. Speaker, from the statement made by the then leader of the opposition on January 18, 1957, which I quoted earlier. Again, it is the statu quo; the government hesitates, takes indifferent action, and fails to face the problem squarely. These are new contradictions between election speeches and the action taken.

To this problem of fiscal relations, Mr. Speaker, is related another problem that is essential to our cultural development, that of the assistance to be given to the institutions of higher learning. I spoke briefly on that matter last year and I would like now to discuss it further, and express the opinion not of a jurist, but of a lawyer who thinks that constitutions are made to be changed rather than to remain static. I feel I should repeat now what I said last year. I refer to Hansard of May 22, 1958:

The right to education belongs first of all to our children and should not depend on the financial means of their parents but on the young people's talent and future opportunities. With regard to this right there is, of course a corresponding obligation on behalf of parents to provide this education. The state however should play a supplementary part, which belongs in the first place to the provinces.

However, in 1958, when science is fast developing, when artificial moons circle around the earth, when long range missiles can be launched farther and farther, education is becoming more and more an intercontinental problem, and at least an interprovincial problem. I do not see any reason why the central power should not contribute its share in this field, without infringing upon the rights of parents and of the provinces.

If we must give assistance to the children who want to go to university, it is also imperative to assist our universities themselves, which at the present time all complain of lack of funds.

In this respect, the Liberal government of the right honourable Louis St. Laurent had provided a sizeable financial help to universities; but, unfortunately, the universities of my province have been able to benefit from those grants only once.

And later, I said:

As far as the children are concerned, the federal government could, while respecting the autonomy of the provinces as well as the rights of the parents in the field of education, as I have already said, give substantial assistance to those who have talent, as well as the will to succeed and to prepare adequately for the future. This government help could well be implemented through the agency of the national conference of Canadian universities. The government would then have no control whatever over anything save over the amounts which it could put at the disposal of that conference.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, there is always that complicated problem of provincial autonomy in the field of education. It seems now that there is unanimity on that matter and that federal aid to the institutions of higher learning is not an infringement of provincial rights in matters of education since the provinces retain the right to control and supervise the establishment of institutions and the drawing up of programs in certain matters. Going back to September 4, 1958, we see that members of all parties voted the appropriations asked by the Minister of Finance for help to the universities. In fact, a vote was taken in committee and there was no dissenting voice.

Two days later, the Minister of Finance asked that this appropriation be increased by 50 cents per capita or from $1 as it stood, to $1.50. The hon. minister stated on that occasion that his government would always respect the autonomy of the provinces in this matter. This statement is in no way contrary to all the statements made in the past by the Right. Hon. Louis St. Laurent when this appropriation was introduced for the first time in 1951, and was voted every year thereafter.

Since 1951, therefore, all universities throughout the country have been able to receive from the central government, either directly or through the national conference of Canadian universities, or through the provinces, quite a substantial amount out of taxes collected by the central government. Therefore, we find that only the universities of the province of Quebec have been unable to receive their share, except in one instance.

From a practical point of view, the problem is therefore still with us, and I feel I must lay stress on two aspects of this problem, first the legal side, and second the practical side.

I read with close attention the brilliant speech made last year, on September 4, 1958, by my colleague from Hull (Mr. Caron)—

Mr. Tremblay: Brilliant!

Mr. Roberge: —a speech—

Mr. Tremblay: A masterpiece of ignorance.

Mr. Caron: Tremble, the ground is splitting open under your feet.

Mr. Roberge: This speech contained a number of statements and quotations, and I do not intend to repeat these statements and these arguments here, although it might do some good to a certain member.

I wish, however, to put on the record a personal interpretation which I think is valid, whatever the hon. member for Roberval may think, and which, I trust, will be agreed to by all members of this house, and by all those who are interested in the matter of federal grants to institutions of higher learning.

It cannot be denied that the provinces have a fundamental right in the field of education. However, I believe it can truly be said and reiterated that all governments have the responsibility to give assistance.

On January 18, 1957, during that same debate I mentioned a moment ago, the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent, in expressing his opinion on this matter, made the following statement as reported on page 398 of Hansard.

> But at the same time we recognize that the wealth of the mind expressed in the arts, humanities and social sciences is not a private prerogative but may rightfully belong to all people who wish to seek for it. Therefore it seems to me that governments have a duty to assume some responsibility of providing not control and direction of the arts but leadership in making available the assistance which is so greatly needed.

When we look closely at Section 93 of the British North America Act, we have reason to believe that the fathers of confederation, in 1867, could not foresee and in fact did not foresee what the situation would be in 1950. Actually, the main paragraph provides that the legislatures shall be allowed to enact exclusively legislation in the field of education, on and in accordance with the following conditions. Four paragraphs follow, of which the first three refer to separate or dissident schools, and to school trustees. One readily realizes that, at the time, schools and not institutions of higher learning were considered. Besides, if I am not mistaken, universities at the time were private institutions. At least, it is a well known fact, in so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, where, for instance, Laval University had been established in 1852 by the Quebec Seminary. In 1867, that university had but a few faculties, namely Law, Medicine and Theology. Therefore, I repeat that in my opinion the fathers of confederation, in good faith, did not think in terms of universities, when section 93 was enacted.

The following legal point is now raised: Has the federal government the right to levy taxes, and then earmark part of those funds to help universities? Or else, to put it differently, have the provinces alone the right to financially help institutions of higher learning?

I must say, at this point, that I am not approaching the matter from the standpoint of autonomy or centralization, but that I am merely trying to find new arguments to solve the problem. Section 91, paragraph 3, of the British North America Act, gives the following right to the central government:

> The raising of money by any mode or system of taxation.

On the other hand, section 92, paragraph 2, gives the following right to the provinces:

> Direct taxations within the province in order to the raising of revenue for provincial purposes.

Therefore, it seems that the provincial right of taxation is limited to the levying of funds for provincial purposes.

On the other hand, section 91, paragraph 3, makes no restriction.

Therefore, I believe that one may draw the conclusion that the federal government has always the right to financially help the provinces through subsidies—besides, that was one of the foundations of the confederative act—and also to financially help the institutions located in the provinces.

This right may as a matter of fact be reversed, and nothing is said about a province not being entitled to help the institutions of the neighbouring provinces. In any way, this has been done in several cases. I do not think I am mistaken when I say that all funds provided by federal taxation are converted in the consolidated revenue fund. It is then up to this house to decide in which manner these funds will be distributed.

In concluding this part of my remarks, I hope that my fellow lawyers, particularly those from my province, will take my comments in good part, because I am making them in good faith. I also hope that my speech will not exclude any other discussion and I trust that others will also deal with the matter.

I am now coming to the practical side of the assistance for our universities. Is that assistance necessary or superfluous? May I quote again the resolution voted by the national conference of Canadian universities in 1956:

> Resolved: that the representatives of Canada, having given full consideration to the matter, express the opinion that it is their responsibility to give urgent warning to the people of our country that the problem facing the universities has taken the proportion of a serious national crisis, which is indeed jeopardizing the advance of our country and its place amongst the nations of the world. They also are of the opinion that only an immediate and vigorous intervention and the co-operation of all governments in our country, of business, industry and private employers will solve this problem.

I also would like to quote part of what Mr. N. M. A. MacKenzie said in "Government Support of the Universities":

From these important viewpoints, the universities are an essential element of our provincial institutions and therefore have to seek an important part of their financial resources on the local and provincial levels. However, it cannot be said that the work of a university is circumscribed by the boundaries of a province, neither with regard to its scope nor with regard to its significance. There is not a single great university in our country which does not take students from all provinces. In some cases, students coming from other provinces can make up a third of the student body. Likewise, the graduates of our universities are scattered throughout our national territory.

I shall not quote further for time is short. Consequently, it is undeniable that the universities lack not only money, space, and the necessary equipment for education but they also lack personnel.

In view of the arguments submitted and the extraordinary scientific development which has taken place, the federal government cannot turn a deaf ear to this appeal by the institutions of higher learning. The government and especially the Conservative members of the province of Quebec must do everything in their power so that the institutions of the province of Quebec may benefit from those funds which are at present available to them.

As the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent once said: "Quebec is a province like the other provinces." We recall how sharply he was criticized at the time by his opponents, especially in his own province.

"Quebec is a province like the other provinces", the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet stated last Friday. I am convinced that he does not regret that statement. I am also convinced that with his talent and his capacity for persuasion, he will succeed in persuading his colleagues really to set down to work and to solve that question which is so close to our hearts.

I remember that in the early part of last September, the member for Quebec South (Mr. Flynn) stated that federal assistance to institutions of higher learning could perhaps take the form of assistance to scientific research or to construction. The point is not to seek reasons for or means of evading the question, but to consider it squarely with courage and with the same good faith which inspired the fathers of confederation in 1867.

We all hope to see a true form of Canadianism develop in this country. No particular group favours the assimilation of other groups, but all favour the enrichment of the nation through the diversity of cultural contributions.

If all are agreed that from a practical point of view, as was proved in this house last year, the federal government must do its share to help this enrichment process and to develop Canadian culture, there should, I think, be a way to reach unanimous agreement from a legal point of view.

I said that the Minister of Finance and the provincial treasurers have been asked to get together. When this happens, and I hope it will be soon, they will have to discuss this matter. If there is any doubt as to the interpretation to be given to the Canadian constitution, let us take the necessary means either to clarify it or to amend it accordingly.

Those who founded Canada in 1867 did not fear to take their responsibilities. We, their sons, and those who now direct the course of the nation and of the provinces, must not lack courage and refuse to find solutions.

When the matter is finally settled, Canadians, whatever their origin, will continue to live together, to enrich one another intellectually and will contribute to give this country the choice position it deserves.

(Text):

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne on their clear thinking and on their clear delivery. I would like also to add my congratulations to the new members from Grenville-Dundas, Montmagny-L'Islet and Springfield. Of course, I must include my friend and former opponent in Davenport, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). I regret that he is sitting on the Liberal side of the house but I hope that we may pursue our political differences on the floor of this house at the same high level that we were able to pursue them in the constituency of Davenport.

I note with some satisfaction, Mr. Speaker, the theme of the speech from the throne and that many of the hon. members who have spoken recognize the urgency and the importance of the threat of communism to our way of life and also the importance of meeting the competition of Russia and her satellites. We must unfortunately accept the premise that the Russians intend to spread their version of communism throughout the world. It is not necessarily a struggle which will culminate in an armed conflict although we must be prepared for that military eventuality. The main issue will be on the economic and scientific front. When we consider the scientific and economic front, it is not my purpose at this time to count our many blessings but to speak briefly on two problems which show our system to disadvantage. The question is whether we can today by self-discipline, co-operative planning and hard work do what the Russians and communist China are doing by compulsion. In many ways we still maintain advantages. We start off with better economic conditions; the individual is given more respect.

The two problems which I wish specifically to mention are those of recurring unemployment and the needs of our educational system. It is not sufficient for the opposition to taunt us with not solving the unemployment problem in one year and a half. It is no answer for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) to pussyfoot on both sides of the economic fence as to whether we should solve unemployment or inflation. The record of the former Liberal government is not such that they can sit back in a hypocritical and complacent attitude and heap ridicule on the present government. We recall the past crisis. The great depression is mentioned in the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, the depression of 1929 to 1933, the recession in 1937 and 1938, the recession in 1953 and 1954 and the recession that started in 1957. Who was in power at that time? The Liberals. Therefore, they knew unemployment was a recurring problem. Yet, in the 25 years, with their lengthy experience and their brain trust, they did nothing to solve either unemployment or inflation. Now they expect us to solve in one-half year what they could not do in 25 years. I thank them for the compliment of expecting us to be able to do it.

We cannot solve this problem, Mr. Speaker, by hurling abuse across the floor as to who is to blame.

Mr. Chevrier: You are doing pretty well.

Mr. Morton: I am reminding hon. gentlemen opposite that when they hurl abuse at us they must look at their own record.

Our Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), with the co-operation of the various groups across the dominion, has been endeavouring to set up temporary work programs to ease the periodic unemployment. Our ministers have been on trade missions; they have been busy in trade conferences. However, Mr. Speaker, I think all of us must admit that public works programs, essential as they are, are not the entire answer. They are like an aspirin to deaden the pain of a headache but they do not solve the problem. I think there is a challenge, as there never was a challenge before, to the various labour leaders, industrial leaders, manufacturers and political leaders of all levels of government to sit down with specialists to consider the problems that create unemployment.

The problem is how to produce without pricing ourselves not only out of our own market but out of the markets of the world. Employment depends on trade and the ability to sell our services and products at competitive prices in Canada and abroad.

On motion of Mr. Morton the debate was adjourned.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE—
ENGINEERING INSPECTIONS

Question No. 18—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did an inspection engineer of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys visit the following mines in 1958 in connection with the administration of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act: Cochenour Willans Gold Mines Limited; Dome Mines Limited; Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines Limited (Hollinger); Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines Limited (Ross); Aunor Gold Mines Limited; Delnite Mines Limited; Kirkland Minerals Corporation Limited; Lake Shore Mines Limited; MacLeod-Cockshutt Gold Mines Limited; McIntyre Porcupine Mines Limited; McKenzie Red Lake Gold Mines Limited; New Dickinson Mines Limited; Pamour Porcupine Mines Limited; Pickle Crow Gold Mines Limited; Preston East Dome Mines Limited; Renabie Mines Limited; Starratt-Olsen Gold Mines Limited; Sylvanite Gold Mines Limited; Tech-Hughes Gold Mines Limited; Upper Canada Mines Limited?

2. If so, what were the names of the inspectors, the dates of their visits and the duration of their visits?

3. What were the technical qualifications of the inspectors?

4. At how many of these mines in 1958 did the inspectors enter upon and examine the underground works and premises?

5. What mines were so entered and examined in 1958?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys):

1. Yes, with the exception of Starratt-Olsen Gold Mines Limited which ceased operating in July, 1956.

2.

Mine	Name of inspection engineer	Date of visit
Cochenour Willans Gold Mines Limited	J. W. Patterson	April 8
Dome Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	Feb. 27
Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines Limited (Hollinger)	T. W. Verity	Feb. 28
Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines Limited (Ross)	T. W. Verity	Feb. 25
Aunor Gold Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	March 1
Delnite Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	March 3
Kirkland Minerals Corporation Limited	T. W. Verity	March 4
Lake Shore Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	March 4
MacLeod-Cockshutt Gold Mines Limited	J. W. Patterson	March 31
McIntyre Porcupine Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	Feb. 28
McKenzie Red Lake Gold Mines Limited	J. W. Patterson	April 8
New Dickenson Mines Limited	J. W. Patterson	April 9
Pamour Porcupine Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	Feb. 26
Pickle Crow Gold Mines Limited	J. W. Patterson	April 1
Preston East Dome Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	Feb. 27
Renabie Mines Limited	J. W. Patterson	April 14
Sylvanite Gold Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	March 5
Tech-Hughes Gold Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	March 4
Upper Canada Mines Limited	T. W. Verity	March 5

The duration of each visit was generally half a day.

3. The inspection engineers are graduates of Canadian universities in mining engineering and mining geology with several years experience in underground mining practice.

4. Of the mines listed under 2 above, none were examined underground.

5. During the inspection of the San Antonio Gold Mines Limited property at Bissett, and the Britannia Mining and Smelting Company Limited mine at Snow Lake, Manitoba, an underground visit was made by the inspection engineer.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS ACT, B.C.

Question No. 19—Mr. Howard:

1. For each of the years 1957 and 1958, and with respect to grants pursuant to the Municipal Grants Act and for each of the village municipalities of Terrace, Smithers, Hazelton, Telkwa, Stewart, Houston and Burns Lake; the city of Prince Rupert and the district of Kitimat, what was; (a) the accepted value of the federal government's property; (b) the amount of the grant; (c) the dates upon which the grant was paid or if paid by instalments, the amount of the instalments and the date upon which they were paid?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Of the municipalities listed, no grant is payable to the village municipalities of Terrace, Hazelton, Telkwa, Stewart and Houston.

Grants paid under the Municipal Grants Act to the other municipalities are:

Name of Municipality	Year to which grant relates	(a) Accepted value of federal property	(b) and (c) Payment and date
Village of Smithers	1957	$ 82,680	$ 2,165 Sept. 16, 1957
	1958	82,680	2,081 Oct. 30, 1958
Village of Burns Lake	1957	5,400	158 Sept. 16, 1957
	1958	grant not yet paid
City of Prince Rupert	1957	448,205	10,000 Feb. 6, 1958
			6,557 Nov. 4, 1958
	1958	456,935	18,829 Nov. 4, 1958
District of Kitimat	1957	112,338	3,302 Nov. 12, 1957
	1958	118,250	3,646 Dec. 19, 1958

Wednesday, January 21, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT GENEVA WHEAT CONFERENCE

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make an announcement with regard to the United Nations wheat conference, the second session of which will be convened at Geneva on January 27, and Canada will be represented there by a strong delegation.

The first session was held at Geneva from October 28 to November 7, 1958, and was attended by 41 countries as members and 9 as observers. They discussed ways and means of meeting current world wheat problems through an international wheat agreement. A preparatory committee was formed to consider the proposals that were advanced, and to submit its conclusions for the consideration of government representatives at the second session.

The Canadian delegation will be headed by Mr. J. H. Warren, assistant deputy minister of trade and commerce. Alternate delegates on the Canadian delegation are Mr. W. Riddel, assistant chief commissioner of the Canadian wheat board, Winnipeg, Manitoba; and Dr. C. F. Wilson, commercial counsellor at the Canadian embassy in Copenhagen, Denmark.

Official advisers on the delegation are Mr. C. B. Davidson, executive assistant, the Canadian wheat board, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Mr. R. M. Esdale, assistant chief, grain division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa; Mr. J. B. Lawrie, European manager, the Canadian wheat board, London, England; and Mr. W. Frank Stone, first secretary, permanent mission of Canada to the European office of the United Nations, Geneva.

Producer advisers on the delegation are Mr. J. E. Brownlee, president, United Grain Growers Limited, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Mr. A. P. Gleave, president, Saskatchewan farmers' union, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; Mr. G. L. Harrold, president, Manitoba wheat pool, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Mr. A. Platt, past president, Alberta farmers' union, Edmonton, Alberta; and Mr. J. H. Wesson, president, Saskatchewan wheat pool, Regina, Saskatchewan.

Mr. N. W. Boyd, commercial secretary at the Canadian embassy in Berne, Switzerland, will be secretary of the delegation.

AIR TRANSPORT

TABLING OF REPORT ON APPLICATION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR LINES

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I should like now, Mr. Speaker, to table in English and in French copies of the report of the air transport board to the Minister of Transport on the need for additional transcontinental air services in Canada, and on the application of Canadian Pacific Air Lines for a licence to operate a scheduled service serving Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, Saskatoon, Regina, Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal.

The investigation of the board and its hearing of the Canadian Pacific Air Lines application was dealt with in regional hearings in Vancouver, Edmonton, Regina, Winnipeg and Moncton between October 6 and October 15, 1958, and in final hearings commencing October 20 and terminating December 3, 1958, in Ottawa; and involved consideration of several dozen briefs and well over a thousand pages of oral evidence.

The board found that additional transcontinental air services could not be introduced at this time without major detrimental effect to existing operations, and without economic hardships and possible disadvantages for scheduled air lines, including the applicant. The board found that the application of Canadian Pacific Air Lines should be denied because its expense estimates were computed on an unreasonable added cost basis, with no projection on a fully allocated cost basis; its revenues were estimated without any traffic study; and the schedules for its proposed service appeared to have been based on optimistic block speeds.

However, the board also found that the position of Canadian Pacific Air Lines as an international air carrier needed strengthening, and it has recommended issuing to Canadian Pacific Air Lines a licence to operate a domestic scheduled service from Vancouver to Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal, to connect Canadian Pacific Air Lines' existing international operations. This new service would be limited to one return flight a day, on which domestic as well as international passengers could be carried. It recommended that the adequacy of this arrangement be reviewed again in two years to see whether additional services would then be warranted. The board also recommended that where limited controlled competition would result in improving the position of regional air carriers, this be authorized, and has indicated that it feels it should make an intensive investigation of the position of regional air carriers in this connection.

I have informed the air transport board that I am prepared to accept their findings in regard to the foregoing.

The board has also recommended that a substantial portion of the government work now being performed by the R.C.A.F. be diverted to commercial air carriers. There is, of course, an obvious requirement that the Department of National Defence maintain a military air transport organization in being. At the same time, military authorities have always recognized their interest in maintaining civil air transport services which can assist them in time of emergency and, indeed, much of the present work of the larger regional air carriers in Canada is in the direct supply of military installations in the north. This particular recommendation of the air transport board will require further careful examination and I propose to consult with my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, about it.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask the minister a question. Is not this recommendation of the air transport board diametrically opposed to the views held for a long time by the minister?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker. These are in exact conformity with the views held by the minister and as the former minister knows very well, last February I made a speech expressing the government's view on these matters in which I indicated that our policy was that where competition could be economically sound on any particular route we would be in favour of competition being introduced. The policy which has been announced here is in conformity with those views.

TRADE

TABLING OF NOTES RESPECTING CHANGES IN CUSTOMS ACT

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) requested on Friday last that the two notes received from the United States—the notes of June 26, 1958 and September 3, 1958—and our reply of October 24, 1958 be tabled. I desire to table those documents now. Members of the house are aware that these notes were made public some time ago, and that the main points set out in the various notes have appeared in a number of newspapers. These notes will, I believe, warrant careful reading by hon. members, as they provide a detailed exposition of the views of the United States government and of the views of the Canadian government on these matters.

In the United States note No. 284 of June 26, 1958, written and presented to us after a general reference to amendments to the Customs Act by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech of June 17, 1958, the ambassador of the United States drew our attention to the main point on which his government saw cause for concern. The note of June 26 was not a protest; in effect it requested that the Canadian government should not introduce any provisions in the amendments to the Customs Act which would be contrary to our international obligations under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. We gave due weight to the observations of the United States while the proposed legislation was being prepared, and we drafted a bill that does not contravene the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

The note dated June 26, 1958 was delivered on June 30, 1958, and it was forthwith brought to the attention of the Department of Finance, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of National Revenue; copies with comments were circulated to them and to the Department of Agriculture on July 16, 1958. The note dated and delivered on September 3 was circulated to the departments concerned on September 8. I now table these notes.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of the statement he made in tabling the exchange of notes between the United States and Canada earlier this afternoon. My question is in two parts. First, can he tell the house whether or not the government gave any assurances to the United States government that the proposed revision of the Canadian customs legislation would be consistent with the general agreement on tariffs and trade, as requested in the last paragraph of the United States note of June 26, 1958?

The second part of the question is, can he explain to the house why he withheld from the house the note of September 3 on this very important subject when the very subject matter of the note was before the House of Commons, and why he also withheld it from his colleagues at that time?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the second part of the question, that identical question was asked yesterday and I gave an answer to the house. With respect to the first part, if the hon. member will peruse the notes he will see that Canada's stand is set out fully in the note of October 24.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure the house is very grateful to him for the statement he made today which clarifies the matter, depending upon what one means by the word "clarification". The minister said that due consideration was given by the cabinet to the United States views as put forth in the note of June 26. If that is the case, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs explain why his colleague the Minister of National Revenue was not aware of this note, and likewise the reported unfamiliarity with the note on the part of others of his colleagues? If the cabinet was familiar with these views—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I have followed the previous question and answer and the question which the hon. member for Essex East has asked. It seems to me that as this relates to a matter in the past and is now taking the nature of a debate, it might much better be brought up in a debate than as an oral question. Actually what the questions are directed to is criticism of government conduct rather than a search for information, and to my mind that is a subject matter of debate at the proper time rather than oral questions.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on this point, and with great respect, we would be very interested indeed in discussing this particular episode in the debate which is now going on, but we would like to have the necessary information with regard to the details concerning the matter so that our intervention in the debate will be accurate.

Mr. Speaker: I have tried not to interfere with any genuine search for the details by way of questions seeking information.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I make a further comment on the point you raised?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it that the hon. member wishes to speak to the point of order I have myself raised.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister made a statement on motions when there was no opportunity, as there is on orders of the day, for wide interrogation. The question I asked, as well as the question put by the hon. member for Ottawa West, was by way of seeking clarification of a statement that had been made in the house. Surely it is within the rules of the house for any hon. member to ask how the minister reconciles one set of circumstances alleged by the administration with the statement he made today. That is what I sought to do, to ask the minister how it was possible, in view of the fact that he said that the government had before it—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —the views of the United States government, for the Minister of National Revenue not to know what was going on.

Mr. Speaker: I understood that was what the hon. member was bringing up, and it seemed to me that the observation I made was in accordance with the practice of the house.

INDIAN ACT

AMENDMENT TO GIVE INDIANS RIGHT TO VOTE IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-15, to amend the Indian Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND ABSENTEE VOTING PROVISIONS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-16, to amend the Canada Elections Act (absentee voting).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT REQUIRING RETURNS SHOWING INCOMES OF POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-17, to amend the Canada Elections Act (election expenses).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESTRICTING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT TO CERTAIN OFFENCES

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-18, to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, which is not unfamiliar to this house, is to provide that hereafter no person shall, except where the offence is treason, levying war or piracy with violence, be sentenced in Canada to suffer death but that such person shall hereafter be liable to imprisonment for life.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH IMPOSITION OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-19, to amend the Criminal Code (corporal punishment).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide that corporal punishment shall be abolished from any of the offences for which it is presently prescribed in the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRADE

REPORTED REFUSAL TO SELL ALUMINUM TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister give the house an assurance or, if not, endeavour to secure an assurance that no pressures from outside Canada were brought to bear on the Aluminum Company of Canada or on Aluminium Limited in the refusal of a $1 million aluminum order from communist China?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this subject matter was brought to my attention today, and I note that it has been referred to in the press this morning. I cannot at this stage give a complete answer to the hon. gentleman without an investigation of the questions he has raised on this occasion and without a complete investigation to verify the accuracy of the reports that have appeared in the press.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house whether the report in the newspapers to the effect that a valid permit for the export of aluminum was issued by his department is correct? If so, because of the interest of all of us with respect to export trade, could the minister give us any information with respect to the newspaper report which stated that Alcan has refused to make aluminum available for sale in accordance with the permit?

Mr. Churchill: I think the second part of my hon. friend's question was answered when I was replying to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). As to the first part of the question, an export permit was granted.

SALT FISH—WITHDRAWAL OF NAFEL LICENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister give the house a statement on what the government proposes to do to meet the marketing problem for salt fish in Newfoundland created by ending the licence for NAFEL?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) also drew this subject to my attention. In November, 1958 a committee of senior officials of the departments of trade and commerce, finance and fisheries was established to conduct an inquiry into the marketing of Atlantic coast salted groundfish after July, 1959. This committee is now completing its investigations and will report to me soon. An announcement will be made in due course.

ROYAL VISIT

INQUIRY AS TO OMISSION OF NIAGARA FALLS FROM ITINERARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I am wondering whether there could not have been a very serious mistake made, or perhaps an oversight, in the itinerary of the Queen's visit to our country when the most important and most beautiful place in Canada, namely Niagara Falls, was not included.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the number of prospective questions to the same effect that are before me, may I say this. Each of us regards his own constituency as meeting the qualifications and having the superb advantages to which the hon. member referred in connection with his. Taking that for granted, the committee under the chairmanship of General Graham has endeavoured to achieve an itinerary for Her Majesty the Queen that will cover Canada from coast to coast in general and in particular those areas which heretofore have not received such visits.

All I can say to my hon. friend is this. Realizing all the advantages of Niagara Falls, the decision arrived at with the assistance of the committee cannot, of course, be changed from day to day in order to meet the requests of various members, however desirable those requests might be. I think my hon. friend will understand that the purpose of the trip is to enable the Queen to visit as many parts of Canada as possible. On the other hand, regard must be had to her comfort and to the opportunity to give her reasonable rest. Therefore I cannot hold out to him or to any other hon. members who have placed similar questions before me any hope of any material alteration in regard to the itinerary as already published.

Mr. J. M. Forgie (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I sent a question to the Prime Minister this morning which he has already answered, but I consider the situation as far as the Ottawa valley is concerned to be a little different. I received some hope from the statement just made by the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Forgie: —that the visits were to be restricted to places that had not been visited before. I call the attention to the Prime Minister to the fact that it is 50 years since we had a visit from the royal family and that the Ottawa valley extends from Sudbury to Ottawa. I should like to have some consideration given to a stop-over in Pembroke, the county town of the county of Renfrew, which is in the centre of the Ottawa valley.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member appears to be reverting to his maiden speech.

GRAIN

WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY—INTERIM PAYMENT ON 1957-58 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house if the Canadian wheat board will be making an interim payment on the 1957-58 wheat, oat and barley crops and, if so, when we can expect such payment?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. No decision has been made yet with respect to further payments on the 1957-58 pool account for wheat. The Canadian wheat board was consulted by me with regard to this matter a few days ago, and has the problem under consideration. In view of the success of our wheat export program I think it is reasonable to expect that an interim payment will be made early in 1959.

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he has yet received Mr. Bracken's report on box cars, which on August 8 he told us was being written.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the information I gave on August 8 was accurate. I have received the report. It is in the hands of the printer, and will be available very shortly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if in the meantime the minister would mind tabling the order in council appointing Mr. Bracken, and any order in council relating to this inquiry giving the terms of reference and the powers of the inquiry.

Mr. Churchill: I think, Mr. Speaker, all relevant material will appear in the preface to the report.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister consider tabling the orders in council in the meantime?

Mr. Churchill: I shall look into this. I thought it had been done, but I shall see what has happened.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

D.E.W. LINE—FLYING OF U.S. FLAG—FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of a statement he made in the house with regard to the change in the D.E.W. line, as reported at page 56 of Monday's Hansard. In that statement he said:

> This is a step in the direction of ensuring that in the northern territories there shall be no misunderstanding as to whom those areas belong.

My question is this. Will the Prime Minister tell the house whether or not the United States flag will continue to fly over these sites on Canadian soil?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): At the present time, Mr. Speaker, owing to weather conditions no flags are flying over them.

Mr. Hardie: Will the United States flag continue to fly over these sites in future?

Mr. Pearkes: That depends on weather conditions.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of National Defence whether the flying of the Canadian flag in Canada is dependent upon weather conditions?

Mr. Pearkes: It is not customary to fly the Canadian flag in Canada or any other flag during severe weather, owing to the destruction caused to the flags.

Mr. Hardie: I should like to ask another question with regard to the statement of the Prime Minister on Monday. With regard to this statement I should like to quote from the original agreement, as a basis for my question, paragraph 8 concerning the financing of the line.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is not the kind of question that should be asked on the orders of the day. The hon. gentleman is referring to certain remarks I made in the house during the course of the debate on the address and certainly it is not a proper question under these circumstances. It is not that I am objecting to the question, but rather to the fact that it is improper procedure to be asking questions of this type on an occasion such as this before the orders of the day are called.

Mr. Hardie: Then I shall direct my question to the Minister of National Defence, who made a statement to the press on Monday of this week. Can the Minister of National Defence tell me whether or not there has been any change in paragraph 8 of the original agreement between the United States and Canada with regard to the financing of the D.E.W. line?

Mr. Pearkes: There has been no change in the financial agreements with regard to the financing arrangements in connection with the D.E.W. line.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN SETTLING DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, who is the minister who reports to parliament for the C.B.C. Can the minister give us any further information as to what progress is being made in the settling of the dispute in Montreal between the C.B.C. producers and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give any further information about that matter. The reason I was late in coming into the chamber this afternoon was that I had a telephone call from the vice president and acting general manager in Montreal. He advises me that as the result of certain communications which emanated from the corporation there is a possibility of resuming negotiations this afternoon or tomorrow, that the matter is still open, and that conversations at least are going on today. Under those circumstances I would prefer not to go into the matter further for another few hours or a day or two until the matter is clarified.

MONTREAL—REASON FOR REFUSAL TO RECOGNIZE PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Denis asked me a question with respect to the strike which I could not catch at the moment over the translation sysem. Having read the question afterward, I can advise the house that the answer is no.

[Later:]

NEWSPAPER ARTICLE RESPECTING RELATIONS WITH PARLIAMENTARY PRESS GALLERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister who speaks for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a story in the Thomson press papers by a member of the press gallery dated January 15, written by a Mr. Patrick Nicholson, which attacks the C.B.C. and raises serious questions about the ethics and propriety of the corporation's relationships with the press gallery and certain of its members? If so, has the minister any comment to make on whether such charges are under consideration by the corporation?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the story in question was sent down to me from the press gallery a few moments ago, which is a strange coincidence. I have not yet had an opportunity to do more than scan it hastily, and I am not in a position to pass judgment upon it. I know, however, that this was written by Mr. Patrick Nicholson, an experienced member of the press gallery who is, of course, entitled to his opinions, and I am sure they will carry such weight as his comments deserve.

I do not think the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), who enjoyed himself so much before the television cameras last night, would agree that the people who interviewed him had no experience in writing news, or that they were not in touch with the tide of events. At least they seemed to have a reasonable knowledge of what is going on. I do think there is some merit in the suggestion that the number of appearances of other personnel could be extended beyond the circle or group which has appeared very frequently in the past.

This, however, is a matter for management; it is a matter over which I have no control whatsoever, nor do I intend to exercise any such control. As the house well knows, the board of directors has only held one meeting, a couple of weeks ago. Since then the executive committee has been meeting almost daily in connection with the strike. We hope this strike will soon be terminated, and then I will draw this story to the attention of the directors for such action as they may consider fitting.

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON DELAY OF DIVERSION WORK ON VICTORIA BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I advised the hon. member for Laurier that I would make a further statement as soon as I received it from the management of Canadian National Railways regarding his request that the railway be asked to delay the diversionary work on Victoria bridge until the construction of Champlain bridge had been completed. The management have now given me the following statement.

The Victoria bridge is considered the most important railway transportation link in Canada. Across it passes well over a half million railway cars a year carrying commerce valued at about $2 billion and constituting by far the greater part of the traffic to and from eastern Quebec, the maritime provinces and the United States. It is necessary, therefore, that co-ordination between the Victoria bridge and the St. Lawrence seaway should be such as to present a minimum of delay, since the consequences of any interruption of this huge traffic flow would be incalculable.

With the construction of the seaway project it was necessary to arrange for the opening of the bridge to permit passage of vessels through the canals. A simple lift span would have a disastrous effect on railway and highway traffic. It was therefore considered necessary to construct a rail and highway diversion for the purpose of providing an alternative route for rail and highway traffic when the lift span is in operation at the St. Lambert lock. The co-ordination of Victoria bridge with the navigation channel has constituted a most complex problem, but the management is satisfied that the method of co-ordination finally evolved embodies the best possible solution under all the circumstances, in that it will achieve a complete separation of all types of traffic—marine, rail, and highway—without interruption to any one of them.

There was a dispute between the seaway and the railway as to which ought to bear the cost of the diversion and related facilities. This dispute was temporarily resolved by the terms of an agreement executed between the seaway authority and Canadian National Railways dated January 12, 1956, when the hon. member was president of the seaway, under which Canadian National Railways undertook to construct a diversionary bridge and to complete it, as far as practicable, concurrently with the construction of the lift span at the St. Lambert lock. There was a further understanding between the seaway and Canadian National Railways that it was vital for railway traffic to have uninterrupted movement, and that until the diversionary bridge made this possible the railway is to have control of the opening and closing of the lift span. Consequently shipping in the canal may be seriously delayed until the diversionary bridge is ready for use. The urgency for completion of the rail diversion is, therefore, definitely related to the needs of navigation, since any interruption of movement will affect shipping and not the railway.

Following construction of the diversion and related facilities, the responsibility for payment of the costs involved will be determined by the governor in council.

[Later:]

Mr. Egan Chambers (St. Lawrence-St. George): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of his statement regarding Victoria bridge. I wonder if he would inquire of Canadian National Railways whether, being unable to delay the diversion work on Victoria bridge until construction of the Champlain bridge has been completed, they would be willing to delay it until the extra lane on the Jacques Cartier bridge is completed early this summer.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): From information I have they feel it is important to get ahead with the work immediately. However, I shall make inquiries.

Mr. Chevrier: You have already answered that question.

LIVESTOCK

EFFECT ON CANADIAN EXPORTS OF U.S. BRUCELLOSIS CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister seen the statement in today's Globe and Mail that exports of cattle from Canada to the United States will be seriously curtailed by the new United States brucellosis control program, and will he inform the house what effect this program will have on exports from this country to the United States?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have seen it. I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I think it is desirable that I should make a statement in connection with the matter so that fears on the part of cattlemen which this and similar reports are likely to have aroused should be set at rest.

The implication in recent press reports that exports of cattle from Ontario will be limited mainly to the counties of Oxford and Prince Edward is misleading. On November 8, 1958 the United States introduced new cattle import certification requirements for brucellosis disease. These new regulations permit the entry into the United States of six classes of cattle:

1. Cattle from brucellosis-free listed herds.
2. Cattle from brucellosis-certified areas.
3. Cattle from herds which are neither listed nor in certified areas but which have passed a negative herd test within 90 days.
4. Cattle up to 30 months of age, officially calfhood-vaccinated against brucellosis.
5. Range cattle of the beef breeds from western Canada.
6. Cattle for immediate slaughter.

There are in Canada approximately 5,000 herds under the brucellosis-free listed herd policy. Cattle from all these herds are eligible for export. In Ontario two counties, Oxford and Prince Edward, are already certified areas. Three other counties, namely Halton, Stormont and Dundas, will be certified within the next few days. Nine other counties are under test, all of which should be completed before summer. In the meantime, as herds in these counties or elsewhere pass a negative test they are eligible for export. These 14 counties include most of the major Ontario cattle export areas. A further 17 Ontario counties have been accepted for testing and will be proceeded with as quickly as possible.

Elsewhere in Canada, the province of Prince Edward Island has been completely certified. Three counties have been certified in Nova Scotia and five in New Brunswick, and three additional counties are under test in each of those provinces. Seven areas are under test in Quebec, although none has been certified to date. Testing is proceeding in western Canada, and some areas have been certified.

As a result of the progress in brucellosis testing and the provision for the export of western feeder cattle and cattle for immediate slaughter, the new United States requirements should not seriously restrict Canadian cattle exports. As I stated at the beginning, I hope this statement will set at rest the fears which have been communicated to me from several quarters that our exports of cattle to the United States are going to be seriously curtailed.

PENITENTIARIES

WESTERN CANADA—INVESTIGATION OF SITES BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Having read in a recent edition of the Calgary Herald a news item stating that a federal government committee will visit the town of Fernie, British Columbia, before spring to consider constructing a penitentiary there, I should like to ask whether it is the intention of this committee to visit other places in western Canada. Is it the intention of the committee to visit the district of Drumheller?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. Perhaps I should take this occasion to confirm to the house a statement which was issued some time ago announcing the appointment of a correctional planning committee within the Department of Justice. This committee consists of Mr. A. J. MacLeod, director of the remission services; Mr. J. A. McLaughlin, an assistant commissioner of penitentiaries, and Colonel J. R. Stone, who at the time of his appointment was provost marshal of the army.

This committee was set up following unanimous agreement reached at a conference among myself and other federal officials and attorneys general of all the provinces and other provincial ministers and officials concerned with the correctional system in Canada. The committee has as one of its functions, under the terms of reference under which it has been appointed, to visit all the provinces to discuss with provincial officials the details of the plans necessary to be made to implement the agreement in principle arrived at at the conference. As a particular part of their function they have to assess the need for further penitentiary construction, and the suitability of various areas for such institutions.

It is out of the reports in connection with that committee and with that particular part of their function, that the press report to which the hon. member refers has arisen. The committee has just completed its tour of the maritime area in the course of carrying out this function, and during the first half of this year it will be visiting all other provinces of Canada. Details of their itinerary in the west have not yet been settled, but they will investigate likely sites for construction and report to me on them. Certainly I can advise the hon. gentleman that the interests of Drumheller have been brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River takes the floor, I think I should say, and I hope the ministers will not take it amiss, that we have had three quite long statements in answer to questions. I presume it is the objective at this time to have short questions and short answers. Perhaps there is no harm done in producing answers to questions if they concern something that could be produced as a minister's statement under the routine heading of motions. However, I just call the attention of the house to the fact that we are having rather lengthy answers to oral questions.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PENSION NEGOTIATIONS—REPORTED WITHDRAWAL OF PASS PRIVILEGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder if he would inform the house as to whether or not discussions have been proceeding between the management of Canadian National and the employees aimed at a revision of the Canadian National pension regulations. These discussions were proceeding satisfactorily, and might even have been concluded by now, had it now been for the fact that the management of the Canadian National saw fit to withdraw the long-held passes of employee representatives at the conference.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I shall be glad to speak to the management and find out about that matter.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether in view of the unemployment figures made public yesterday, and in view of the government's intention as announced in the speech from the throne to introduce legislation in this connection, the Prime Minister will not reconsider his earlier refusal to interrupt the course of this debate so that this legislation may be introduced at once?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): My answer is this. The hon. gentleman said this government had lost the confidence of the people. We want to have that determined by a vote, and then we shall immediately proceed with our legislation.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the reason for not accepting the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition the fact that the government's legislation is not yet ready?

Mr. Diefenbaker: As usual, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is wrong.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Since the Prime Minister has told us that legislation to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act is ready, would the minister put the notice on the order paper in order that the public may know what is involved in this legislation. That probably would affect the question of confidence to which the Prime Minister referred.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: My question was a serious one.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the Prime Minister referred to unemployment insurance amendments at all in answering any question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman was not listening.

Mr. Starr: You were not. I do not doubt that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is probably as confused as he always is.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly as confused as he always is.

WATER RESOURCES

CHICAGO DIVERSION—INQUIRY AS TO U.S. LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister or the government aware that bill No. 1, which is at present before the United States congress would, if passed, authorize an additional diversion of 1,000 cubic feet per second from lake Michigan at Chicago? Does the government consider that the implementation of this legislation would have adverse effects on Canadian interests such as hydro, shipping and our present dock and harbour facilities?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am grateful to the hon. member for Lambton West for giving me notice of this question. Our embassy in Washington has brought to our attention bill H.R. 1, which was introduced by a private member in the House of Representatives of the United States on January 7. Officials of the several departments concerned are examining carefully the implications of this proposed United States legislation.

The proposed legislation has many ramifications with respect to the water levels of the great lakes, connecting channels, the St. Lawrence river and also with respect to hydroelectric generation at Niagara Falls, at the international section of the St. Lawrence river and at Beauharnois. The hon. member will recall, I am sure, that an aide memoire on this subject was delivered to the United States government on January 6, 1958, and was tabled in the house on August 2, 1958.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that according to a study made by a subcommittee of the international joint commission power development in the international section will be materially affected by this diversion, and that the water level in Montreal will be reduced by three-quarters of an inch?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I am not aware of this report, but I can assure the hon. member that that, along with other matters, is now being considered as I have intimated in my reply.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a further supplementary question. Is this particular bill similar to the one which was introduced on this subject last year in the United States congress, and concerning which the government said it had no objection to its passage?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I have not seen the bill and I have not compared it, but I do understand that it is almost identical.

FINANCE

REPORTED MISUNDERSTANDING BETWEEN CHARTERED BANKS AND CREDIT UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, of which I have given him notice. Has the minister's attention been drawn to an article which appeared yesterday in Le Droit of Ottawa relating to misunderstandings between the chartered banks and les caisses populaires and the credit unions?

If the answer is in the affirmative would the minister be disposed to offer his good services so that a fair and equitable solution may be reached?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman was good enough to give me notice of his question just before I came into the house. The answer to the first question is, therefore, no. However, I think I may guess that the purport of the article concerned service charges which the chartered banks propose to impose on the transactions in the chartered banks for the accounts of the caisses populaires and the credit unions. This matter has been the subject of frequent correspondence with the Department of Finance in the course of, I should say, the last two months.

With regard to the second question, may I gratefully say to the hon. gentleman that I am touched and flattered by the implication of his question in assigning to the Minister of Finance his favourite and most appropriate role of peacemaker.

Mr. Bourget: A supplementary question. I wish to thank the minister for his answer and to assure him that the interested parties, particularly the caisses populaires and the credit unions, would greatly appreciate the services of the minister. I feel sure that the minister will agree with me that such an important problem, affecting over two million Canadians—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member rose to ask a supplementary question, but he is taking a long time about it. Perhaps he has made his point.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—EMIGRATION OF DOUKHOBORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister in a position to inform the house whether any information has been given to his department by the appropriate authorities of the U.S.S.R. that the sect of Doukhobors in British Columbia known as the sons of freedom will be admitted to the U.S.S.R. and, if not, does the federal offer of financial assistance toward handling this problem in British Columbia still apply?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): In answer to the first part of the question I can advise the hon. gentleman that we have received no communication whatsoever from the government of the U.S.S.R., either directly or through its embassy in Ottawa, in this regard. That is the latest information I have. I will consult with my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make certain that my answer is up to date, and if it is not I will give a further answer tomorrow.

With respect to the second part of the question, I may tell the hon. gentleman that we have informed the representatives with whom we have been dealing on behalf of this particular sect of the Doukhobors that our offer still stands. It was made in good faith and still stands, and we have told them we are prepared to fulfil it if and when they fulfil the conditions laid down in respect of that offer, one of them being that we should receive satisfactory evidence that the Soviet authorities are prepared to accept those members of the sons of freedom sect who wish to go to Russia.

POWER

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—STATUS OF AGREEMENT RESPECTING THERMAL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Will the minister tell the house whether a specific agreement between the government of Canada and the government of New Brunswick has been signed relating to the construction of the thermal power plant at East Saint John and, if so, would the minister advise us when he expects to table this agreement?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Robichaud: A supplementary question. Would the minister, in view of the long delay, consider communicating with the government of the province of New Brunswick in order to reach a signing of this agreement and allow the project to be proceeded with without delay, thus providing much needed employment?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The government is in constant communication with the government of New Brunswick on this subject.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

WINDSOR—INQUIRY AS TO ADDITION TO FEDERAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. L. Spencer (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister an explanation to give to the house as to why construction has not begun on the addition to the federal building in Windsor, which construction would in part relieve unemployment in that city?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question.

The contract was called on the basis of a mat foundation. Subsequent to the award of the contract the consultant architects recommended that the department investigate alternative types of foundations. These investigations are now complete, and the contractor has been instructed to proceed in accordance with the type of foundation originally specified. He has assured us today that work will start tomorrow. The contractor is Eastern Construction Company, and the amount of the contract is $1,395,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the minister.

Mr. Green: Unfortunately I had no help from the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is not the minister aware that just before Christmas I made two telegraphic representations of an urgent character in this matter?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REPORTED INSTRUCTIONS TO DEPARTMENTAL OFFICES TO NOT RELEASE FIGURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Have the unemployment commission offices in the country been notified in any way not to give out any unemployment figures?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, January 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. W. H. Jorgenson for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last night I was speaking of one of the problems affecting unemployment, and I stated that the problem is how to produce without pricing ourselves not only out of our own market but out of the markets of the world. I indicated that employment depends on trade and the ability to sell our services and products at competitive prices in Canada and abroad.

As I understand it there are several industries across Canada today, particularly the clothing and garment industry and some parts of the electrical industry, that must consider moving their factories from Canada because they cannot compete even in Canada or meet competition from outside countries such as Japan. Another factor contributing to unemployment has been the result of disputes between management and labour sometimes resulting in strikes. In a democratic system we must rely on the responsibility of the leaders of both management and labour to settle these disputes without government dictation, and I hope the leaders on both sides will consider the over-all effect of these actions. These are not decisions for government but rather for labour and management. Many of these problems cannot be solved entirely by legislation, subsidies, tariffs or artificial stimulants. These problems require co-operation of all the people concerned.

May I make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that I do not say these things because I believe we are now in a disastrous or perilous situation, but rather because I am concerned that perhaps we might be pressured in the wrong direction, and I am voicing my concern before it is too late.

It has been a platform of our party, and I think it is the hope of every hon. member in this house, that we in this country will be able to develop our resources for the benefit of our people and to provide for a larger population. But if we price ourselves out of the markets of the world and even out of our own markets we shall become little more than the distributors of our own raw materials, and history will record us as a nation not worthy of its heritage. I therefore suggest, in view of the importance of this to our future, that the government consider convening a national conference on unemployment and related subjects the membership of which might be composed of representatives of the three levels of government, of industry, labour, agriculture and economics, in the hope that we might solve this problem by a comprehensive and co-operative plan rather than spending time in this house hurling abuse across the floor as to who is the cause of the problem of unemployment.

Another area in which I believe we as a democratic nation are not measuring up to the competition which is being offered by the communist nations and satellites is the field of education. The implications of the scientific achievements of Russia are self-explanatory. We can no longer pretend that we have a superior system; we must now prove it. We admit that in Canada we have no central body responsible for national leadership in this field. We must depend on the alertness of the ten provincial governments to co-operate in unison to meet the national need for high educational standards.

I commend the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Stinson) for bringing to our attention yesterday a study of our educational system as compared with those of East Germany and Russia. This report was prepared by Mr. Anthony Frisch, who was born of Austrian parents in Naples, Italy and studied science at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and McGill University. He came to Canada and during the war served with the R.C.A.F. Because of his knowledge of what has happened in Europe he became greatly concerned about the educational system in Canada. Through co-operation he obtained textbooks from Russia and Germany and from each Canadian province to use as the basis of his study. I think it is to his credit that he has given us this report so that it might be studied by educational authorities across Canada.

As was pointed out yesterday by the hon. member for York Centre, the study contains a table showing a break-down of related headings of subjects in the field of science such as mathematics, physics, chemistry and biology as taught in Canada, Russia and East Germany. This indicates that 71 headings are in use under the Russian system in the study of science, 13 being under mathematics, 19 under physics, 25 under chemistry and 14 under biology.

In comparing these subjects and relating them as closely as he could to equivalent teaching in Canada he found that the province with the nearest approach to teaching the 71 subjects was Ontario with 54. In the matter of mathematics, where there were 13 units, the nearest province was Ontario with nine; in physics with 19 units the nearest province was Saskatchewan with 16; in chemistry with 25 units the nearest province was Ontario with 18; in biology with 14 units the nearest province was Quebec, the English section, with 14.

In respect of education in Ontario he made the following comments:

Mathematics

Ontario courses trail the soviet courses by about three years in the soviet equivalent grades 9 and 10. In the soviet equivalent grade 11, analytical calculus, as is the case with all other provinces, is not mentioned on the Ontario syllabus.

Physics

Ontario trails the soviet by two years in the soviet equivalent grade 9; one year in the soviet equivalent grade 10; one to two years in the first part of the soviet equivalent grade 11.

Chemistry

Ontario trails by three years the first two years of high schools; by two years the soviet equivalent grade 11; and does not touch at all the final soviet year, which is devoted exclusively to organic chemistry.

Biology

Grade 13 zoology and botany cover, however inadequately, the work of the soviet equivalent grades of nine, 10, 11 and 12.

He sets out in detail tables to back up his analogies. He came to the following conclusions:

1. The soviet are able to teach their students, at an early age, to manipulate creatively abstract terms.
2. At no time is subject matter repeated in subsequent grades.
3. Subjects are not popularized to spoon-feed lower grades.
4. Practical applications of laws and phenomena receive marginal treatments.
5. Generally, we trail the soviet three years in mathematics and two years in science.
6. The curricula of the 10 provinces show marked differences.

He makes the following suggestions for consideration:

Consequently, to ensure the survival and development of our talented children, most of whom survive despite the school system, it is suggested:

1. That the federal government declare that there exists a state of emergency in education;
2. That the federal government, through yearly I.Q. tests administered in consultation with the provinces, select the most talented students at the grade nine level, irrespective of geographic residence or academic performance;
3. That these selected students be called "Canada scholars";
4. That these students, provided they attend school and only that they pass their grade, be paid scholarships of the value of old age pensions through the welfare branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare but under no circumstances through the Canada Council as constituted at present;
5. That the federal government, in consultation with the provinces, administer a further set of yearly I.Q. tests to all students at the grade 12 level;
6. That the most talented of these students, provided only they pass their year, and irrespective of geographic residence, be called "Queen's scholars";
7. That these students, as long as they attend a school or university, receive scholarships amounting to twice the amount of old age pensions.

Hon. members will note that he makes perhaps an indirect criticism of some of the teaching and methods of choosing our students on academic performance only because, in talking to me, he said that in some of our courses our students are taught to parrot back their knowledge rather than think on their own, and he felt that by emphasizing the intelligence side you would get a more independent type of student.

We may not all agree with the conclusions that he has brought before us, Mr. Speaker; we may not feel that the Russian system is perhaps as advanced as it is made out to be. Perhaps the Russian system of schools is not distributed across the country to the same extent as ours may be but I do not think we can afford to ignore those comparisons. I am also informed by Mr. Frisch that, according to his study, the Russians compare favourably with us in the humanities.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that since we have no central body responsible under government for this leadership in education as such, this might be a task that might well be gone into by the Canadian education association across Canada, which represents the ministers and the educational heads of all the provinces. Because of their experience they could study this problem and perhaps give us some leadership in the country in this respect. I think it is most important that we take those warnings now before it is too late.

We all look back at our history and we sort of laugh at those who during the days before it was discovered that the world was round clung to the idea that the world was flat. Perhaps we are in the same situation today in our history with respect to education. Many of our concepts of education and of the universe are changing and we must accept the fact that as the explorers of old, together with the leading scientists, proved that the world was round. So because of explorations now being made into space and the demands and the problems of the future world are going to be such that our present system of education, regardless of how well it may have served us in the past, is not adequate to serve our future needs.

It would be interesting to know, Mr. Speaker, among the experts whom we have employed in our various industries and research centres how many are from other countries. How much have we had to rely on experts from other countries? It is not a bad thing. We welcome those who come from other countries and we welcome their knowledge. I am almost sure that in its present development our educational system has not produced all the experts we have needed. As a matter of fact—this is an aside—we were discussing the matter of the Arrow with the members of the union in Toronto last week and they made the comment that the staff they brought together came from all countries of the world and that it would be a shame if that staff had to be dispersed. The thing that caught my attention was that in order to build up the expert staff for that task it was necessary to draw on outside experts to get the efficient team that was required.

We cannot be too proud, we cannot be blind, Mr. Speaker. We must give the Russians credit for advancement in their education. Perhaps those advances are our ultimate hope. They will learn the wisdom of letting other nations live side by side, each maintaining its own system. There is already slight evidence that the educated in Russia are seeing the folly of the dogmatic and rigid concepts of communism. I only hope that our educational leaders will swallow their pride and give us constructive leadership in improving our educational system and that we in government will give leadership in providing the funds that may be necessary.

I understand that at the present time about 3.11 per cent of personal income is being spent on education and that about 10 per cent of all the money spent on government affairs is spent on education. I should like to urge again that a select committee of the house be set up to study the financial needs of education in Canada. It is a problem that we must face. I think it is time to forget our regional prejudices and think as Canadians in developing educational systems across Canada in accordance with the needs of the provinces and of our growing nation. We should study how the central government can help financially without interfering with the rights of the provinces.

I again urge the Canadian educational association to undertake the sponsorship of a research program as to the future requirements of our country. I also urge the extension of the scholarships now provided. In the brief of the Canadian teachers' federation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) last year the following statement is made and I think that we should bear it in mind.

> The full development of this country economically, culturally, socially, and spiritually demands the full development of the potentialities of its youth. The extent of education of a Canadian boy or girl should depend upon his or her ability to benefit by further education and not upon geographical location and the parent's pocketbook. Whether or not one concedes that a full education is the birthright of every citizen, there surely can be no doubt that the best interests of the nation require that every citizen be educated to the fullest extent of his capabilities.

I trust that we as Canadians, while proud of our resources, will recognize our destiny and combine in a constructive effort within our nation and with our friends to prove to the world that our system is better than that of the communists and that it gives greater hope to the individual.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in this debate. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), in a remarkable speech on Monday, brought to the attention of the house the inadequacies of the policies of the government in practically every field. He also chastised the government for its indecision, for its confusion and for its fumbling. I should like to limit myself this afternoon to one or two heads of government policy which to my mind are responsible in no small measure for the disastrous condition in which the country finds itself today.

Before proceeding, however, I should like to follow the tradition of the house from time immemorial and extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), who discharged in excellent fashion the tasks of moving and seconding the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I want to refer particularly to that part of the speech of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet which dealt with national unity. It has always been the doctrine of the Liberal party and all its leaders to uphold national unity in the house and throughout the country.

I should now like to refer to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had to say on Monday when he stated that the speech delivered by the Leader of the Opposition was not in keeping with his responsibilities. This to my mind was unfair criticism and I should like to tell the Prime Minister today that that part of his speech was not in keeping with his responsibilities as Prime Minister. The particular inference that he tried to leave that the criticisms of the Leader of the Opposition were similar to those made by communist leaders and especially Mr. Mikoyan is certainly not in keeping with the kind of leadership that the Canadian people have the right to expect at this moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was no such implication.

Mr. Chevrier: After having made that reference to Mr. Mikoyan, the Prime Minister went on to say, as found on page 53 of Hansard for January 19:

When one considers the difficulties confronting the free world in terms of an economic attack one must conclude this is not the time for the kind of speech that was delivered here this afternoon with such relish.

What were the points made by the Leader of the Opposition with reference to the economic situation? He outlined the unemployment problems in the country in realistic terms, at all times basing his argument upon figures taken from government statistics. On that basis he criticized the inadequacy of government policy and he urged the Prime Minister to take new steps to deal with this very serious social evil. My leader was in very good company indeed when he made these statements because, the archbishop of Montreal, Cardinal Leger, dealt with this problem on at least two occasions. Here is what he had to say.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Not in the same sense.

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: I hear someone say, "not in the same sense." Just let him listen to this. On September 18, 1958 the cardinal spoke to the delegates at the annual meeting of the federation of Catholic workers of Canada and, as reported by La Presse of Montreal, here is what he had to say:

His Eminence deplored that hundreds of thousands of workers are without work in a country immensely rich and in full development. "We cannot hide the anxieties that are inspired in us by the considerable amount of unemployment which took place last winter and which unfortunately strikes today in the homes of many workers.

I should also like to read from the pastoral letter of the cardinal which was read to all his diocesans in the archdiocese of Montreal on Sunday, January 18. Cardinal Leger said:

A Christian cannot remain indifferent in a situation which creates such great suffering. Behind the statistics and figures we must discern the men and women, the children and the aged who are reduced to poverty and exposed to the terrible temptations of despair.

Then again:

A just and lasting solution to unemployment involves respect for man's natural right to work, encouragement of a high and stable level of employment and a more salutary direction for the economy.

Note these significant words.

The situation requires the intervention of government to take new and audacious steps.

I ask the house, is that so different from what was said by my leader when he asked the Prime Minister the other day and again today whether he would interrupt the speech from the throne in order to bring forward new measures to deal with unemployment.

I should like to discuss this question. In so doing I feel that I am in better company with the cardinal and with the Leader of the Opposition than I am with the government. But I am not alone with these two distinguished gentlemen, Mr. Speaker. Listen to what the hon. member for Prince Albert, now the Prime Minister, had to say in 1955 when he sat on this side of the house and when conditions were in no way comparable to the serious situation the country faces today and which year was the most prosperous of the 1950's. I quote from page 2034 of Hansard of March 15, 1955:

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said he very seriously regretted the developing unemployment across the country when he spoke in the house some weeks ago . . . they express solicitude. They mobilize statistics. But the Prime Minister, from whom the people of Canada want to hear, with the prestige of his position, remains silent in the face of a problem that wrings the hearts of the people.

The hon. member for Prince Albert went on to say this:

What a hopeless picture! The government, faced for the first time with serious unemployment . . . is unable to give any hope. We are unable to rouse them into placing before the people of Canada some of the picture.

Later on he said this:

We do not believe in preaching pessimism; we do not want to see the condition of affairs brought about which will create panic; but we are asking the government to act now—

Then dealing with the figures of the Canadian National Railways, which were then much better from the point of view of revenue than they are at the present time, here is what the hon. member for Prince Albert said:

Why not face that picture? Is it not a fact that some 10,000 men have been laid off? The railwaymen ask: what is the picture for the future? After all, it is a government corporation and they have a right to expect information regarding the railway company owned by the dominion.

Then still further:

The municipalities are loaded down with unemployment relief . . . What is the attitude of the government?

Those are words which were used by the present Prime Minister when conditions were far better than they are today. Yet the Prime Minister dares to criticize the Leader of the Opposition because of the language which he used in his speech on Monday. I can only say:

(Translation):

Other times, other ways.

The Conservative government is starting the session on the wrong footing. Its finances are in poor shape. Over the whole fiscal year, the government's total deficit—including budgetary and non-budgetary items—will reach $1,600,000,000.

Where will we find the money to offset this deficit? Either by increasing taxes or by borrowing. As you know, the government decided to borrow by selling bonds. Everybody knows today that this financial policy of the government is causing a steady fall in the value of government bonds. In fact, last year in mid-December, $100 government bonds were down to $94.50.

At present, being less and less able to borrow from the public, the government is facing a financial crisis. But this is not the whole story, for the financial responsibilities of the government will cause a new increase of expenditures during the new fiscal period so that next year again the government will face another large deficit, unless it decides to increase taxes. Even if it should do so—and taxes are already high in Canada—its disastrous financial policy would nevertheless, this year, contribute to inflation and rising prices.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, prices are already on the way up, as official government statistics well show. Indeed the consumer's price index has gone up 3.5 per cent since 1957. The general wholesale price index shows that they have risen by two points in less than two months, that is last October and November, which means, as stated by the dominion bureau of statistics itself, the largest increase in two months since 1950. And, as proved by experience, an increase in wholesale prices always foreshadows a rise in retail prices, so that we must expect a record increase in the cost of living in the next few months.

We are in the very midst of inflation, and nothing can be more disastrous for a country than this. Indeed, inflation touches everybody, particularly those who are defenseless and who suffer, and especially those whose salaries do not rise as quickly as the cost of living. When prices go up, it is the white collar worker, the civil servant, widows and small wage earners who take the brunt of a lower standard of living.

The government has no overall program to fight this plague. There again, it wallows in confusion and uncertainty. With this financial crisis created by the government, and with soaring prices, there is more unemployment than in 1957. The unemployment situation remains very serious.

Not only was unemployment higher in 1958, but the number of workers was lower than in 1957. As we were told yesterday, in mid-December there were 440,000 unemployed in Canada. In the province of Quebec, the situation is more serious than anywhere else, with the exception of the maritime provinces.

There are today, in the province of Quebec, 185,000 people looking for work. This is more than 8 per cent of the available labour force, or about one third of all the unemployed in Canada. In Montreal, 80,000 people are out of work. In Sorel, in Arvida, in the asbestos and textile industries that our hon. friends, particularly the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) were supposed to help out, conditions have never been worse.

Representatives of the textile industries complained about it yesterday, at a meeting held in Ottawa. Consequently I have no hesitation in saying that, with respect to unemployment and to the financial situation, the government has no comprehensive plan to cure the evil. Besides, the speech from the throne is non-committal and announces no new measure to cope with the situation.

We no longer hear about the great billion-dollar public works program, so often mentioned during the last elections. We hear, instead, of the winter program of assistance to municipalities.

This idea, Mr. Speaker, is not new. Indeed, the Liberals suggested it during the last election campaign, and even proposed it, as did the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) during the parliamentary session. We tried, by all possible means, to convince the government to put into force this policy. We did not succeed at the time, but the government finally decided to accept our proposal, but unfortunately its decision came too late. The plan was announced too late to improve the lot of those who suffer in these winter months. It was put forward in late October, at the very time when the Prime Minister was about to leave on his trip around the world.

Actually it was then too late for municipalities to plan such works, which should have started by early November if they were to have any effect in relieving seasonal unemployment.

Besides, the program put forth by the government is much too restrictive to deal with the problem. On December 24, 1958, the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) announced that, between December 1 and April 30, his program would cost the federal government $3,900,000. Will you please tell me, Mr. Speaker, what good an outlay of $3,900,000 can possibly be in helping the country's 440,000 unemployed? The hon. minister admitted that at the time the province of Quebec had submitted no project in connection with this winter works program.

This winter works program for municipalities can therefore be of absolutely no use to the province of Quebec, because so far she did not take advantage of it, although at this time 185,000 persons are seeking jobs. Yet in Montreal, on March 20 last, the Minister of Labour did not hesitate to forecast that unemployment would have vanished by mid-June.

What about the oft-repeated words of the right hon. Prime Minister to the effect that no one would suffer from unemployment on account of him? Will he take offence if I tell him that, at the present time, there are 440,000 unemployed in Canada?

(Text):

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), in his intervention in the debate referred to the speech of the President of the United States. I wish he had gone on to deal further with that speech which the President made to congress, his usual state of the union speech, because if he had he would have noticed a part having to do with inflation. He would have noticed that the President said that because of the serious condition vis-à-vis inflation, because of the danger of future soaring prices and to keep the economy sound and expanding, he would present to congress at once certain proposals. He went on to list them. The first was a balanced budget for next year. This is advice which the Prime Minister might well follow.

Apparently the government, in dealing with unemployment, intends to follow the kind of approach that we on this side of the house have criticized, namely increased government expenditure. At least, this is what the Prime Minister led us to believe in his speech on Monday as recorded at page 65 of Hansard for January 19, 1959. He said:

> But I believe the people of Canada as a whole want us to make the necessary expenditures to meet the spectre of unemployment as it is found.

Well, you have listened to this statement by the Prime Minister. Now, contrast that with what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) had to say in Toronto in his famous speech on January 5. After going on to say that the expenses of government were high; that the line must be held; that expenditures must be paid; that a high standard of living and of social services and the like must be maintained, he said this, and I quote:

> Nevertheless the treasury board in its current review of estimates is, I assure you, applying a firm hand to controllable expenditures.

On the one hand, the Minister of Finance is saying he is going to hold the line, but the Prime Minister is saying, when circumstances warrant it, there will be no hesitation about additional public expenditures. There is another example of contradiction and confusion.

It is equally evident that in following that object to fight unemployment, the government, as in so many other fields, lacks imagination in finding new and useful projects to initiate. When we speak in this house we are interrupted by ministers and others who say, well, what are your proposals; what have you got to offer? Even if we do not agree fundamentally with the government's approach, as was made clear by my leader the other day, I should like at this juncture to make some suggestions to the government. Unemployment, as I said earlier, is more serious in the province of Quebec and in the city of Montreal than in any other part of Canada with the exception of the Atlantic provinces. I am going to make three suggestions and I hope that they will receive serious consideration.

The first is for the immediate appointment of a board of engineers for the purpose of studying and reporting upon the economic advantages of linking the St. Lawrence river with the port of New York via the Richelieu river, lake Champlain and the Hudson river. This matter was taken up in the house and is contained in a resolution by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin). It is a problem which is not new. Representations have already been made to the government. This matter was referred in 1937 to the international joint commission. I hold in my hand a copy of the report which was made at that time, and in effect it states this: As soon as the St. Lawrence seaway has been completed this matter of the Champlain-Richelieu canal should be given consideration by the international commission.

I wish I had time to go into the matter more fully. All I can say at this time is this: If it were given consideration and put into effect by a recommendation, of course following a report of a board of engineers, it would put to work thousands of people in an area where work is required.

The second suggestion I have to make has to do with the joint development of power and navigation in the Lachine section of the river. I will be told at once that this is purely a provincial matter. This is true to some extent, save that in 1947 a board of engineers appointed by the government reported that navigation and power production in the Lachine section was feasible and that if it were put into effect it would bring about greater savings in power development in the Montreal area. It is quite clear that if the recommendations contained in this report were given effect, thousands of people could be put to work.

All we have to do is see what happened in the international section of the river in so far as the St. Lawrence seaway was concerned where at least half if not more of the 25,000 men employed on that project were put to work on power development. If it were possible for the government, which is extremely friendly I understand with the government of Mr. Duplessis in the province of Quebec, to make the requisite representations and to convince him—incidentally it has already been announced by a commissioner of Quebec Hydro—that this is a project which should be undertaken without delay, as I am sure he himself is convinced, it would be a great boon to the area of Montreal.

Finally, I suggest the construction of a new bridge linking Montreal and the south shore downstream from the Jacques Cartier bridge. I am sure, from what I know of the traffic conditions, that there is no member in this house, no matter on what side of the house he sits, who would not be in favour of the construction of such a bridge. As I said earlier, I wish I had more time to deal with these three matters, but unfortunately I must go on.

Mr. McGee: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Providing I am given credit for the interruption because I have a number of matters here with which I should like to deal. Yes, on that condition.

Mr. McGee: I was wondering how the hon. member squares his criticism of government public works projects as an anti-recession measure with his own suggestion for a further extension of public works?

Mr. Chevrier: If the hon. member had listened to what I said he would find that most of these projects are self-liquidating. The bridge is self-liquidating, the power project is self-liquidating and the Champlain-Richelieu project would be self-liquidating if tolls were to be charged.

I should like to commend the government for recommending to parliament the establishment of the Canada-United States interparliamentary group. I believe that that is a useful body. The Canadian section was enthusiastically received in the United States and the speakers of both houses, I have no hesitation in saying, handled the meetings with tact and diplomacy. I should like to warn the Prime Minister, however, that he should not overstate the case, as he did the other day because, after all, this is only one of many such committees and it is hard to say how much will be accomplished by it. A large number of questions were mentioned for discussion—they did not come up for discussion, but a large number were listed for discussion—and of all these questions two seemed to stand out above all the others. The first was defence, and the next was trade.

On the question of defence I should like to say this: we are told that defence must be continental; we are told that defence must be arranged jointly with our friends in the United States, and to that there can be no objection. But defence, I think, is a two-way street. It must be joint not only from the viewpoint of the military aspect but also from the viewpoint of the economic and industrial aspect. What I want to suggest to the government in this respect is the revival of the Hyde Park agreement. This agreement was established in 1941. It was a declaration between the Right Hon. Mr. King and Mr. Roosevelt and it was established for two purposes, the first of which was to relieve the substantial adverse balance of trade which had developed between Canada and the United States at the time and next to make sure that no useless defence production facilities would be produced in either country. The circumstances today are exactly the same as they were then, and it seems to me that the time has come for a revival of the Hyde Park agreement or something akin thereto.

It is all very well for us to be told that there should be joint defence between the two countries, but how can it be joint if on the one hand we are refused the entry of our exports such as oil, lead and zinc. I notice that there is something in the speech from the throne having to do with this question, but that is not enough. I think there has to be far more than that and I think there should be a determined effort by the government to make sure that Canadian companies have the opportunity to bid in the United States market with regard to defence orders. There is very little in the way of defence orders that cannot be manufactured in Canada by our own industry.

I could take as an example the CF-105, and while I know of the difficulties in the way I will suggest that in view of the statements made by Air Vice Marshal Slemon and General Partridge it is an efficient manned interceptor in the light of the requirements for which it was produced. It would seem to me that this would be a good place at which to start by selling this aircraft to the United States. That is just one example. There are hundreds of other things which could be produced in Canada and which could be sold in the United States.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. gentleman allow a question, because I know he took a considerable interest in the revival of the Hyde Park agreement on the occasion of this meeting in August, or so I am informed. Did he find any reaction favourable to the CF-105 being purchased by the United States during his visit to Washington in August?

Mr. Chevrier: I did not discuss the purchase of the CF-105, but I did discuss the revival of the Hyde Park agreement and while I am precluded from mentioning names it was clearly stated to me by one member of the group that there was no reason why Canadian manufacturers should not be allowed to sell their products on the United States market.

Now I want to say a word about the dispute which arose sometime ago between the radio and television producers in Montreal and the C.B.C. which has caused the interruption of the normal operations of the whole French network during the last three weeks and which may destroy the good relationship which existed between the C.B.C. and its employees. This is a matter of deep concern, not only for the parties immediately involved in the dispute but also for all Canadians interested in an efficient broadcasting system in our country. And yet the government has done nothing to help the two parties come to a satisfactory agreement.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) stated in the house last Friday that he had taken no action whatsoever with respect to this strike, but then he went on to say that the strike was entirely illegal and, in his own words, that "rationality apparently is one thing that has been somewhat lacking in the situation." The minister, as he said, has done nothing to settle the dispute, and the words he used last Friday to describe the situation will not be useful in bringing about a satisfactory solution.

On the same day, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) said he was not prepared to intervene in the dispute, adding that the parties were seeking to short-cut or ignore the provisions of the legislation designed for the final disposition of disputes dealing with representation, and he implied that he could not intervene under section 56 of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act because that section provided for the appointment of a commissioner of inquiry into labour disputes on the basis of a collective agreement. I say to the house and to the minister that this very narrow interpretation is not compatible with the wording of the act. Section 56, subsection 1, reads as follows:

> The minister may either upon application or of his own initiative, where he deems it expedient, make or cause to be made any inquiries he thinks fit regarding industrial matters, and may do such things as seem calculated to maintain or secure industrial peace and to promote conditions favourable to settlement of disputes.

Our legislation provides, of course, for a procedure of certification by the labour relations board. However, that procedure is not compulsory. Representation can still be a matter of negotiation between parties. When it is so negotiated and when such negotiations lead to a dispute, then the minister can intervene and he should do so in major conflicts such as the present one. The failure of the minister to act in this case is another example of fumbling and uncertainty on the part of the government.

The proposal made by the C.B.C. on January 16 was to the effect that the corporation was prepared to recognize the producers association and to discuss with it general working conditions, provided that if at any time there was disagreement between the two parties the dispute would be submitted for final decision to an arbitrator who would be the president of the corporation. This proposal was certainly unacceptable to the producers and would have put the president of the C.B.C. in a most embarrassing position where he would have been at the same time judge and employer.

According to press reports, the producers submitted another proposal to the C.B.C. which seemed far more reasonable. That proposal has now been refused by the C.B.C. which according to a news bulletin this morning has issued an ultimatum to its employees to return to work on Thursday of this week or else lose their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, this dispute has been allowed to go on far too long. Is the Minister of Labour going to sit idly by and allow the C.B.C. to put this ultimatum into effect? If this strike were in the minister's constituency would he allow the situation to develop as it has? If it were in his constituency would he allow his colleague the Minister of National Revenue to rise and say that the strike is illegal? I doubt very much that he would.

If the C.B.C. is allowed to implement its ultimatum not only the producers are in danger of losing their jobs but the French network will lose highly qualified personnel, which cannot adequately be replaced at this time and the public, which foots the bill, is the one that in the last analysis will suffer. It is the clear responsibility not only under moral law but under the statute, subsection 1 of section 56 which I have just quoted, for the minister to intervene and to do his utmost to bring about a settlement of this dispute.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, in closing I should like to touch upon another subject. Recently, two ministers of the Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker's government, speaking of our national anthem, said that Canada's national anthem is God Save the Queen, and that it is ridiculous to think otherwise. O Canada, they said, was a pretty song, but does not enjoy the status of a national anthem.

There we have two ministers who, in my opinion, never understood either the word or the spirit of confederation, two ministers who never understood the true Canadian spirit. And their recent statements are much more calculated to split than to unite this country. Yet when either of them goes abroad, as often as does the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith), to represent Canada, it is not God Save the Queen, but indeed O Canada that is sung at official meetings.

Under the Liberal government this matter was gone into, and the former prime minister, the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent himself, definitely stated the position. In reply to a question from the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) asking whether, in fact, God Save the Queen was Canada's national anthem, Mr. St. Laurent replied that God Save the Queen had never been adopted either by the Canadian parliament or by resolution or by proclamation as a national anthem, and that, for many Canadians, O Canada was considered as the national anthem.

It is therefore not for two cabinet ministers of the present government to tell us that God Save the Queen is Canada's national anthem.

For my part, I shall always respect God Save the Queen, and will sing it in chorus with other Canadians when the occasion offers, recognizing it as the royal anthem. But in my estimation, and in the judgment, I am sure, of many Canadian citizens, the national anthem of this country remains O Canada.

In closing my observations, I should like to recall the words of Sir George Etienne Cartier, a great Conservative, but first and foremost a great Canadian.

Mr. Tremblay: The words are synonymous.

Mr. Chevrier: He wrote:

Comme le dit un vieil adage:
Rien n'est plus beau que son pays;
Et de le chanter, c'est l'usage;
Le mien je chante à mes amis.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

(Text):

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I should like to join with others who have preceded me in offering my congratulations to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) for the excellent contributions they made in the course of this debate. They have indicated, as has been indicated in earlier sessions, that the Conservative party has a wealth of able young men fully competent to take part in the deliberations of this august assembly.

On this occasion I wish to deal with remarks that were made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in his lengthy—and I may add far too lengthy—discursive attack on the record of the government. I shall pass over comments with regard to the somewhat similar remarks made by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who has just taken his seat because I am sure that other hon. members who will follow me will want to deal with some of his statements and will indicate very clearly that there is more confusion and indecision in the ranks of the Liberal party than elsewhere in this house. I believe that the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) would do well to confer together a little more carefully before they appear in public and make speeches enlightening the people of Canada as to the confused policy of a confused party.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They irritated you. My hon. friend does not like criticism. My hon. friend does not want parliament to sit.

An hon. Member: Oh, we saw you on television.

Mr. Churchill: I shall perhaps have some comments to make that will interest the hon. gentleman with reference to his performance last night. He has encouraged me so to do.

In his remarks the other day the Leader of the Opposition, contrary to the practices of this house and in violation of the courtesies of parliamentary debate, drew attention to certain remarks which had been made by the associate deputy minister of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the express purpose of causing embarrassment to a civil servant. The Leader of the Opposition was at pains to point out that Brigadier Roberts had been appointed by this government and that he is friendly to this government. Is this an unusual state of affairs? Are we to infer that there are civil servants not appointed by this government who are unfriendly toward it?

Mr. Hellyer: Yep.

Mr. Churchill: The Leader of the Opposition had a long experience in the civil service. He was appointed in 1928 by the liberal party of that day and I presume he was friendly to Mackenzie King. In the period from 1930 to 1935 we must assume that he was unfriendly to R. B. Bennett. Allow me to point out to the Leader of the Opposition that the associate deputy minister of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Brigadier Roberts, is one of Canada's most distinguished citizen soldiers and that his appointment has been a singularly appropriate one.

The Leader of the Opposition apparently took a great deal of interest in the program "Press Conference" held on January 7. He obtained a typescript of the proceedings and selected bits and pieces which he thought could be used to bolster up his weak arguments. I also have a typescript and will give a more complete account of the proceedings.

Of course, the television series "Press Conference" which originates in Ottawa is the modern form of the Spanish inquisition. The questioners—they are all friends and will not mind these casual comments—are serious minded individuals obviously out to make a kill.

Mr. Pickersgill: And sometimes they succeed.

Some hon. Members: Yes, last night.

Mr. Churchill: I think perhaps the hon. member for Essex East will agree with me that questions that have a concealed time bomb attached should be presented with a smile to give the person being questioned some idea of what is being asked. But the members of the inquisition, armed with facts, figures and documents, with careful preparation beforehand—sometimes I suspect in collusion—attempt to lay traps for the unwary.

It is an interesting experience. I did not mind it in the least; the usual pleasantries before the program; the drive home together afterwards with an intervening 30-minute period of cut, thrust and parry. I would like to offer my sympathy to the hon. member for Essex East for the difficulties which he encountered last night and my congratulations to him on the nimbleness of his evasive tactics. I think he was saved by the bell, and that he was just about to mop his brow, as Mr. Mikoyan did the other night in his press conference, when the camera faded out. I was disappointed with the hon. member, though, knowing his skilfulness in debate that he so frequently said in answer to a question, "Well, Mr. Pearson answered that the other day", or "Mr. Pearson will answer this tomorrow; you will have to see what Mr. Pearson has to say about it." I had thought that a prima donna waiting in the wings for a call would be able to answer some of those things himself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure that in the constructive vein in which my hon. friend is making this very interesting speech he will permit me to ask this question. Does he not think that he and his colleagues would possibly get themselves into less difficulty if they relied more on their leader than they sometimes do?

Mr. Churchill: We have the greatest reliance on our leader; I wish I could say the same for my hon. friend.

In the course of the press conference in which I was engaged there was one double-barrelled question which the Leader of the Opposition mentioned on Monday and of which he did not approve. Here it is verbatim. He gave it; I will give it. This is the way it was phrased:

> Now, which of these two, unemployment or inflation, do you regard as being the greatest threat to our economy during 1959?

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) put this question to the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the Opposition quibbled and evaded and said, "Of course, it is quite ridiculous to make that kind of mathematical comparison." I gave a much more forthright answer and I am going to give it in full here today. I said this:

> I don't think either will be a threat to our economy in 1959. I think 1959 is going to be a good year, and so it says in the document "The Year-end Review" which came out just at the end of December, because the recession which plagued us and the United States, starting in 1957, has pretty well come to an end. We have made a recovery from that, and 1959, with the way things are going, should be a good year for us. More people will be employed and conditions generally will be better.

The Leader of the Opposition did not read out those words of mine which would have been helpful to him. Then, the members of the press conference came back to the question of inflation later on and I will indicate to my hon. friend that there is no confusion in the minds of the members of the party on this side of the house. We are all together on these problems. Mr. Blair Fraser asked me this question:

> Did I understand you to say you do not think inflation is a threat in 1959?

I replied:

I do not think it is anything like as serious a threat as people have been trying to make out. I think there has been a great deal of talk about inflation, I doubt very much if it is a threat in 1959.

Then I asked this question.

What are the signs of it?

Of course, I was wrong. I should not ask questioners a question. They did not have the answer, anyway.

Mr. Pickersgill: Neither did you.

Mr. Churchill: They went on to talk about inflation. Mr. McKeown said:

Well, is inflation bad enough now that you are in a position that you must take dollars out of circulation in order to equalize the situation?

I replied:

I think the Minister of Finance dealt with this subject in a speech yesterday in Toronto. Have you got that in front of you? You people are very well briefed. He is not alarmed over inflation but he offers the caution to everyone to be careful. Don't blame everything on the government. Other people have to be just as cautious in regard to the handling of money as the government.

Then, let me give you the words of the Minister of Finance himself when he spoke in Toronto in a speech which was praised just a minute ago by the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: It was not praised; it was cited.

Mr. Churchill: It was praised so much I thought he was enthusiastic about it. The Minister of Finance said this:

I do not deplore the current evidence of concern over inflation. On the contrary, I think it is a healthy sign that people are showing concern for the preservation of the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar. That degree of public concern will, I trust, assist governments and others in grappling with the problem. I am concerned, however, that the discussion of this subject should be realistic and balanced. The danger of inflation exists, as it has existed for the last 20 years. We will not, however, overcome it by exaggerating it beyond all recognition.

Therefore, I say unemployment and inflation are not threats in the sense that the Canadian economy is in danger of collapse from these two problems. They are serious matters that have to be dealt with courageously and vigorously and that is what this government is doing.

The greatest threat to Canada's economy is the attitude of mind displayed on Monday by the Leader of the Opposition. Talking blue ruin, spreading gloom and despondency, arousing fear in the minds of our people, that is the method by which progress can be retarded, that is the method by which confidence can be destroyed, that is the method by which Canada's name can be smeared and doubt and uncertainty aroused in the minds of foreign observers.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a question? Did the hon. gentleman have that view when he and his colleagues made those gloomy speeches about unemployment in 1955?

Mr. Churchill: I am much more an optimist than my friend, formerly from Manitoba. He has lost some of that western spirit and optimism about life. He is fogbound, I think. I was saying, how typical of the Liberal party. That is the age-old weakness of the Liberals, little Canadianism, no breadth of vision, no inspirational leadership; just expediency, carping criticism and small-mindedness. No wonder the people of Canada revolted and by the peaceful method of the ballot swept out of office these men of little vision.

Canadians are proud of their country, inspired by the prospects of a glorious future, eager for advancement and development and ready to follow inspiring leadership.

The leader of the Liberal party is engaged with his brain trust in a task of rebuilding a bomb-shattered party. I suggest to him that he examine the history of his party over the years. He will find that the greatest weakness of the Liberal party from confederation to the present time has been its inability to raise its eyes from the ground and see the far horizon.

Had the Canadian people placed their confidence in the Liberal party from 1867 to 1896 there would have been no transcontinental railway to link the provinces together; British Columbia would not have entered confederation, as was pointed out so forcefully yesterday by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. McPhillips); the prairie west would have been handed over to United States railways; Canada would have failed to achieve her destiny.

The narrow point of view of the Liberal party was demonstrated by the leader of that party during the spring election campaign. His reaction to the Conservative policy of developing the Canadian northland, a policy so brilliantly depicted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), a policy being so ably developed by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) was ridiculed by the Leader of the Opposition. In his words you can see the attitude of the Liberal party toward development. This is what he said as reported in the Montreal Star of March 1. These are his very words:

They are going to build a highway in the Arctic, beginning at one igloo and ending at another.

The same attitude of mind has characterized the Liberal party with regard to the commonwealth. "Play down the commonwealth" has been the Liberal slogan for 40 years. In his speech on Monday the Leader of the Opposition once again played down the commonwealth. Here are his words, as reported at page 44 of Hansard, with regard to the commonwealth conference held at Montreal in September last:

> There was nothing unique about it in its assembling or its results.

I was not surprised at his statement, for a few years ago I examined the record of the hon. member with regard to the commonwealth. I searched Hansard for his comments and I read his words. It was an unrewarding experience. I then recorded my findings, and as he has been quoting from some of my speeches I will quote from some of them too just for the record and for the advice they may offer to the Leader of the Opposition. This is what I said on November 27, 1956, as found at page 101 of Hansard. I was speaking then of the person who was then secretary of state for external affairs, the present Leader of the Opposition, and this is what I said:

> I wish he would speak more frequently on the commonwealth in the House of Commons. I have examined the number of times the Secretary of State for External Affairs has dealt with the British commonwealth of nations in the House of Commons. He has been goaded into making statements by people mentioning the subject here or asking him questions; but he has not, certainly in recent years, himself made a speech on the British commonwealth of nations.

Then, on January 22, 1957, I was speaking on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I hope the last speech from the throne that will be issued by the Liberal party certainly for a generation. In that throne speech were these words:

> My ministers remain convinced of the need to maintain the basic unity of the commonwealth—

As found at page 524 of Hansard for January 22, 1957, I said:

> This is indeed an unusual sentence. No such reference to the commonwealth appears in any speech from the throne from 1949 to the present time. Here and there in the preceding sessions casual reference was made to the commonwealth in those years in which commonwealth conferences were being held but this is the first occasion since 1949 on which the commonwealth has received special attention in the speech from the throne.

I suggested that the phraseology should have been as follows:

> My ministers, and particularly the minister of external affairs, have suddenly discovered the British commonwealth of nations. Heretofore they have been only half conscious of its existence and have made little or no effort to maintain the basic unity of the commonwealth or even mention the subject.

The commonwealth conference held at Montreal was far from being just one among many. It was a unique conference. It was the first full-scale commonwealth conference on trade and economic problems held since 1932. It was the largest commonwealth conference ever held and one of the largest international conferences held in Canada. It was unique in scale, in the coverage of trade and economic policy matters that were dealt with, in the intensive preparations preceding it, in the number of ministers and senior officials attending from each government and in the scope and far-reaching nature of its results. It not only strengthened trade and economic ties among the commonwealth countries but it gave new impetus to multilateral policies on a world-wide basis. Many of the matters on which agreement was reached at the Montreal conference are now being followed up in broader world-wide forums such as the international monetary fund and the GATT.

This commonwealth conference came about as a result of Conservative party policy expressed repeatedly down through the years, and no one has expressed that policy more consistently or more vigorously than the Prime Minister. It was his suggestion that such a conference be held. The groundwork was laid for the conference at Mont Tremblant a year earlier when the finance and trade ministers of the commonwealth assembled.

The results have been excellent. A basis has been laid for enlarging commonwealth trade and a basis laid for strengthening the commonwealth. The Prime Minister's recent visit to most of the member countries of the commonwealth has been just one more piece of evidence of the importance that the government places on this association of free and independent nations, and one more instance of the inspiring leadership of our Prime Minister.

What the Liberal party has never realized and does not now recognize is that Canada's status in international affairs owes much to her membership within the commonwealth. Nor does the Liberal party see that by the turn of this century Canada will occupy a position of even greater importance within the commonwealth and that that free association of nations, united under the crown and operating under the parliamentary system, will be an even stronger force for the maintenance of the freedom of mankind.

The Leader of the Opposition's flippant attitude towards the commonwealth is paralleled by his equally flippant attitude towards Canadian-United States relations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman has just said that the Leader of the Opposition made flippant remarks concerning the commonwealth. Surely the hon. gentleman meant the commonwealth conference.

Mr. Churchill: I accept the correction—the commonwealth conference. On some occasions the hon. member for Essex East can be unusually helpful.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am always happy to help drowning individuals.

Mr. Churchill: I am sorry I was not standing beside the hon. member last night at the conclusion of the press conference. I say that the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition towards the commonwealth conference is paralleled by this attitude towards Canadian-United States relations. He accuses the government of uncertainty in its attitude to the United States. The fumbling and bumbling of the Liberal party over the years with the United States has been part of the multitudinous errors of the former government that we have been successfully overcoming.

Thanks again to the leadership of the Prime Minister, Canada has made another advance in international affairs and relations between our country and the United States are on a better footing than they have ever been before. The Prime Minister faced up to the issue with courage in his speech at Dartmouth over a year ago. He has established the friendliest relationship with United States leaders. He has given encouragement to the meetings of cabinet ministers with the United States administration. Under his direction the latest development has been a committee of both houses to confer with representatives of the United States senate and house of representatives. At no time in our history has there been a better understanding by the people of the United States of the Canadian position. Never before has there been as wide a coverage of Canadian affairs in United States papers.

The timorous attitude of mind, so typical of the Liberal party, was due to the policy pursued by the Leader of the Opposition when he was secretary of state for external affairs. In those years he was tip-toeing through the tulips, afraid to say boo to a goose, and during the last two years he and his colleagues have attempted to portray the Conservative party as being anti-American. I well recall that when we took office 18 months ago the official Ottawa attitude was: Be careful what you say to the Americans, they might take offence. Members of the Liberal party have endeavoured to convey that type of fear ever since.

The Leader of the Opposition made some remarks concerning a speech I delivered in Chicago some time ago, and he thought that this was an expression of opinion at which he might cast some ridicule. I was referring, and the audience in Chicago understood this very well, to the type of remarks made by our political opponents. As a result of this attitude during the last two years the impression created in the United States was that Canada was turning anti-American.

I had the good fortune to speak to the economic club in New York earlier. I am sorry that the Leader of the Opposition did not read my speech there and quote from it. The executive director of the economic club of New York came here twice to confer with me with regard to the nature of the speech I might make there. He said, "The impression that has been created in the United States"—it could only have been created by our political opponents—"is that your new government is opposed to Americans." He said, "Come on down and tell us about the things that are bothering you in Canada." I said, "All right, I will speak about the irritants in Canadian-United States relations", and I did. Of course, I was advised that I would be considered anti-American so I took the audience in New York into my confidence. I told them I had been advised by certain people that if I spoke in this fashion I would be considered anti-American.

They just loved it. After the conclusion of the speech the chairman said, "If this is anti-Americanism, give us more of it". I am sorry I have not the time in which to give some quotation from that speech I made in New York. I followed a somewhat similar line in a similar speech made in Chicago. The Americans like straightforward talk. They understand Canadians and we understand them. They are prepared to consider the difficulties that arise normally in the trading relations between our two countries.

The Leader of the Opposition then went on to talk about our trade with the United States and he again passed the remarks that he has made so often with regard to what he has called a policy of diversion of trade. Our policy has been an expansion of trade. Over the years we have taken the stand that it has been wrong to have all of our trade with the United States of America; that our trade should be world-wide; that if our trade is concentrated with one country, then we are likely to suffer when that country has a set-back or perhaps has a change of opinion with regard to some of the things that enter it. When there has been over the years a serious imbalance in our trade with one country, it is only prudence to attempt to expand your trade elsewhere in the world. That is exactly what we have done and we have had success in doing it.

Hon. members on the other side, members of the Liberal party, spoke words of derision with regard to the trade mission which visited the United Kingdom a little over a year ago. It was so successful that, of course, they had to find fault with it; and the long term results of that trade mission are being felt now in Canada. That was just one move in the general direction and following the general policy of expanding our trade throughout the world. After all, Canada is a trading nation. It is the fourth largest trading nation in the world. About one out of every five Canadians is dependent upon our export trade.

The Leader of the Opposition attempted to show that our export trade and our trade generally had declined. Let me put this on the record. On the basis of figures available to date—that is from the dominion bureau of statistics—world trade declined by approximately 7 per cent in 1958 and United States industrial production was also appreciably lower. The fact that Canada's exports were maintained in the face of these adverse conditions is a reflection not of weakness but of the underlying strength in Canada's present trade position.

In this connection a comparison of current trends with those in 1954 is relevant. The 1954 recession in the United States was milder than the recent one and European economies had continued to expand. Nevertheless, Canada's exports in physical volume terms declined three per cent between 1953 and 1954. In short, our exports have faired better in 1958 despite a weaker international situation. Our exports have been equal in 1958 to those in 1957 which established a record.

The Leader of the Opposition and his colleague talk about trade but they do not get down to the basic facts or give us the information which is required in connection with these matters so that the people can form a fair comparison. The Leader of the Opposition also talked about our wheat exports and once again, as he has done in the past, he mentioned the fact that they had exceeded those of the previous year. Then, of course, he threw in a gibe about this being due to gifts and long term loans under the Colombo plan. I hope the Leader of the Opposition was not attempting to give the impression that he is opposed to making gifts of surplus food to hungry people within the commonwealth but that is the impression that he is creating by these remarks.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nonsense.

Mr. Churchill: Our wheat and flour exports in the crop year 1957-58 reached a total of 316 million bushels, an increase in actual cash sales of 22 million bushels without taking into account the gifts and loans which followed and put the total over the 300 million mark. That has been a substantial achievement and has greatly improved the economy of western Canada.

As a matter of fact, for those who are critical of the government's policy with regard to the export of wheat and with regard to agriculture, the following information might be interesting. In the year-end report of the minister of agriculture of Manitoba, Mr. Erik Willis, I find that everything was better in Manitoba in 1958, with one small exception. The field crops brought in a return of $168.2 million; farm animals, $64 million; wool, $128,000; dairy products $32,600,000; garden products, $9 million; poultry products, $28,725,000; and fur farming, $3.6 million. All of these figures are higher than the figures for 1957. The only place where there was a lower income to the agriculture population of Manitoba was in the production of honey and wax which dropped down about $50,000. I suppose that is the fault of the bees and not of the bee farmers.

We find there an instance of the actual practical effects of the policy followed by this government with regard to the export of agricultural products and the stabilization of the industry of agriculture.

Mr. Benidickson: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Surely.

Mr. Benidickson: I was wondering whether the minister would bring the house completely up to date and give it the information that his department gave to the country yesterday, namely that exports in the first four months of the crop year are at a three-year low with respect to wheat.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder whether my hon. friend is accurate in his statement. The beginning of the crop year is August 1.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes.

Mr. Churchill: From there up to January 7 the figure for the export of our wheat is close to what it was last year. I think it is a matter of only 10 million bushels below that figure of last year. That fact can be accounted for because of the longshoremen's strike which prevailed in Vancouver during the summer and cut down our shipments of grain from that port. However, the prospects are for the exports of wheat to come close to what they were for the crop year 1957-58. I think my hon. friend should check his figures again before he makes a statement such as the one he made.

Mr. Benidickson: I am referring to the minister's release of yesterday which was reported in the press this morning.

Mr. Churchill: Has the hon. member the figures there?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes. Of course the dominion bureau of statistics simply refers to the first four months of the present crop year and refers to the fact that only the United States among the four of the world's major exporters, showed an increase in that period. According to the minister's latest report Canada's exports went down. I have not, of course, the minister's information up to January. I was glad to get it.

Mr. Churchill: I was giving the figures for six months. I am sure my hon. friend is completely reassured and knows, as we do, that the export position with regard to Canada's wheat and flour is in good shape. I hope he will not worry too much about that matter and that he will have a better outlook on life.

I was going to say that what the Leader of the Opposition overlooked when he was talking about loans and gifts of wheat from this country is the effect those have on increasing employment. It is a very interesting table when you examine the amount of employment that is caused by the shipment out of this country of, say, one million bushels of wheat or, as it was under that plan of long term loans and gifts, 32 million bushels of wheat.

It runs into so many thousands of truck loads from the farms; hundreds of box cars are required to be loaded with this product and a large number of ships. All the way down the line you have the farmers bringing the wheat in to the elevator, the elevator agents checking it, railway cars carrying it to seaboard, and longshoremen assisting in loading it. It requires 600 cars to move one million bushels of wheat. All the grain moved during the last crop year required 280,000 cars. About $700 million was paid out to farmers during the last crop year for their wheat, oats and barley. This is a tremendous business in which the Canadian agricultural population is engaged, and it constitutes one of the largest factors in maintaining our export trade.

Mr. Speaker, my time is running out, and I do not intend to burden the house with tables of figures. Some of this information can be given at a later stage in the debate. However, I should like to point out and re-emphasize the fact that despite the recession which affected this country, the United States and some other countries, Canada's export trade established a record in 1957 and it was maintained in 1958. The prospects for 1959 are very good indeed. On the basis of the information which has been assembled, we face a future in which we can have confidence. All the talk we heard from the blue ruin boys can be dismissed.

There is before us an opportunity to enlarge our trade with the United Kingdom, with the commonwealth generally and with the world as a whole. We will do our level best to enlarge our exports to the United States. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) mentioned something about this a little while ago, but his government did nothing about it. Now, he tells us to take a firm position on some stand or other which they, themselves, never took. Our trade position is good. It is improving, and conditions generally throughout Canada are improving. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has pointed out, we are not suggesting that a boom is in prospect but a steady upward growth, and that is precisely what is good for the economy of this country.

When we come to the amendment moved by my hon. friends and the suggestion they make that that amendment is a reflection of the opinion across this country, I will say to them that the amendment is going to be overwhelmed by the votes of this house and it will be overwhelmed by the opinion of the people across Canada. They have confidence in the government of this country, and they have confidence in the inspiring leadership which is being given by the Prime Minister.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): In rising to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I first want to congratulate the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply for their contributions. They both did exceedingly well. I realize, however, that the speech from the throne was not of their making. In my opinion there is nothing in the speech from the throne to correct the ills that beset us in this country where we have so many natural resources. Traditionally, these hon. members made reference to their own constituencies and this was very interesting. I should like to follow their example and make some reference to my own constituency of Welland.

We have fine people living in the constituency of Welland. Anglo-Saxon people comprise the majority of our population, but during the last generation or so we have had a great influx of French-speaking Canadians as well as people from southern and western Europe. These people live in complete harmony, and they and their descendants are making a fine contribution to our Canadian way of life. There is no other part of Canada that I would rather represent than the constituency of Welland.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) graced Welland with a visit last March during his election tour. No one took the trouble to invite me to that meeting but I learned what occurred there. I can assure the Prime Minister that if he will come back now, he will have an even larger meeting. Some of the people who attended the last meeting said they would provide him with a theme song, "Oh, Promise Me". The meeting the Prime Minister held in Welland was, in part at least, composed of a captive audience because school children were brought in by the bus load from schools in the surrounding school areas. Then, too, many people arrived at the meeting at no cost to themselves because a canvass had been made and car drivers were paid $5 and $10 to deliver loads of people to that meeting.

There were many people, however, who attended the meeting without any urging. I refer now to the unemployed and the fruit and vegetable growers. What they heard from the Prime Minister in the way of promises must have been music to their ears. According to the press, he promised the unemployed that no one would suffer as a result of unemployment as long as he was Prime Minister of Canada. He went even further than that, and this was afterwards echoed on television by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) when he said that the unemployment would be pretty well cleared up by mid-summer. Mid-summer has come and gone and many of these same men and women are still unemployed. Their numbers have greatly increased in the Welland area.

At the time of the June election when this government came into power, we had comparatively few unemployed. When the Prime Minister was in Welland the number stood at about 2,400. Today it is difficult to ascertain the exact number. I am told it is in the neighbourhood of 4,000. These figures used to be published, but they are not published any longer. The reeve of one municipality told me that the relief rolls were up by about 400 per cent over those of a year ago. In the practice of medicine I meet and treat many of the unemployed. I know that they want work and not the dole. Many of them have purchased homes, furniture and the other necessities of life. They have had to go into debt and they cannot meet their obligations. Surely this government should soon realize that it does not help the peace of mind of the unemployed to be told that while unemployment is greater this winter it is not increasing as greatly percentage-wise. Last night I believe the Minister of Finance, speaking in the Chateau Laurier, used the word "proportion", and said that the proportion of increase of unemployed was not as great.

When a man is out of work, just getting a mere subsistance for himself and his family, these vague percentage quotations by the government do nothing to lighten his burden. I feel heartily sorry for the unemployed and our government is doing nothing to provide work for the younger people coming into the labour market. The new federal-provincial scheme to help municipalities provide work for the unemployed by helping to provide new projects for the municipalities is of little use. It is too little and too late.

The St. Catharines Standard for example, a few days ago had an article which said that not one man hour of work had been provided in that city for the unemployed by this scheme. Also, I have a letter here from the city of Welland claiming that the help provided under this scheme is too restricted. This was written to me by the city clerk of Welland, and he says that the council and corporation of Welland at its meeting on January 6, 1959, viewed with alarm the narrow limits of unemployment assistance and work projects available to the smaller cities in the province of Ontario. I know that this scheme is of little help in the towns and smaller cities. I am not familiar with how the scheme might work out in the larger cities, but I fail to see that it can be of any great help, particularly since I have seen the figure given out by the Department of Labour. Canada cannot afford to have so many people unemployed and non-productive. There is nothing which breaks the spirit and morale of a person more than idleness. Canadians deserve the right to work.

At the meeting in Welland the Prime Minister also dwelt on the poor returns received by fruit and vegetable growers for their products. I agree with the Prime Minister that they should have had a greater share of the national income. But what has happened since this government came to power? Many of these fruit and vegetable growers tell me that their costs have risen and their returns for 1958 in respect of their crops have been the worse since before the war. The Prime Minister made a very emotional appeal. There was a fine old lady at that meeting who came from a farm community. She wept because she said she had never heard a man speak with such sympathy for the farmers as did the Prime Minister that day. The price of asparagus was very much to the fore.

Spring was coming on, and these producers were very much concerned about the price. In the year before, under the Liberal government, the price had fallen from 23 cents to 22 cents and in some cases to 21½ cents. Now what has happened? The present government set the floor at 18 cents under which they placed a three cent deficiency payment, and asparagus has never since that time sold above 15 cents in Ontario and 14 cents in British Columbia. In the province of Ontario the government paid a deficiency payment of three cents a pound so that the producer in Ontario got 18 cents and the producer in British Columbia received 17 cents.

As for peaches, the floor price was set at $83 a ton which is the lowest price received by the peach growers for grade A peaches since before the war. I understand that the government has not yet settled with the growers for this year. We understand that cherries could not be all sold and that much of the crop rotted on the trees. The cold storage plants took all they could but according to the last information I received before Christmas the farmers had not been paid for this fruit put into cold storage. There is one big chain store in the Niagara district which was selling American table corn when our corn was ripe. You could stand in the store and look out the window and see the farmers harvesting their corn in the adjoining fields.

I think that our unemployment and our depressed economy are in a considerable part due to the trade and fiscal policies of this government. I will give some examples of each. Hon. members will recall that in June of 1957 our economy was good. In fact, it was so good that the Prime Minister said he could divert 15 per cent of trade from the United States to Great Britain. Hon. members will also recall that about the same time, or shortly afterwards, the United States accommodated the Prime Minister by cutting off 15 per cent of our oil imports into the northwestern United States. Then, in December of 1957, this government sent a buying mission to Britain; they were to buy and not to sell Canadian products and this was done at a time when unemployment in Britain was very low and when in Canada we had plenty. We got a report from that buying mission. This report was printed in Toronto and not by the queen's printer. Oddly enough, that report refers to nothing that was bought. It reads something like the social column of a woman's page in a newspaper. It says whom the delegation visited, by whom they were received, how they were entertained, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) joined the group, when he left it and when he rejoined it.

The only inkling I received that a big trade switch was on was in a Port Colborne newspaper. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was there, according to the paper, and he announced that the government intended to switch even more trade from the United States to Britain than it had already done. I can thank the hon. minister for helping to elect me because by that time our unemployment in the Welland area had increased from practically nothing to about 2,400. I argued that if the big switch had helped produce that many it was surely time to call a halt to that type of cause of unemployment.

This evening I heard the minister refer to the fact that we would in time see the long term result of this attempt to switch trade to Britain. I do not know anything about the long term result; I am giving one of the short term results. I have always been greatly interested in Canada's effort to promote trade with Britain. Since our trade with the United States has been cut by about 15 per cent I wondered why our trade with Britain had not been increased. Following our buying mission to Britain, however, our imports went down by 7.6 per cent in the third quarter of 1958 and by about 1 per cent for the first nine months of 1958.

It appears to me that before our government meets in conference with the United States or even with members of the commonwealth it always seems to give them a slap in the face first. We all recall the first conference of our four ministers with their opposite numbers in the United States when secretary of commerce, Sinclair Weeks, said to reporters: "we fixed them." I know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) got another explanation to mean that he meant: "We fixed them up". But the newspaper accounts, even in the Toronto Globe and Mail at that time talked about the brush-off our ministers received in Washington.

The United States is our best customer, and living along the border as I do I have an opportunity to see many of the Buffalo and Niagara Falls newspapers, among others, which circulate in our area. I have had the opportunity to read them over the years. Some have said quite openly that if the Canadian Prime Minister and his followers acted as some of them were talking, the election foreboded a difficult period in trade and other relations between the United States and Canada. One paper in my area—a paper that supports this government—went so far as to say it would not be surprised if incidents occurred between Canadians and Americans living in the Niagara district.

The United States press referred to the diversion of trade proposed by this government and later on in one or two dispatches from Ottawa it was stated that Canadian raw materials such as iron ore would be processed in Canadian plants and not shipped south of the border to give jobs to people in the United States. I think it is fine to process all the raw materials we can but I could not conceive of a worse preparation for a conference with our United States friends.

How about the commonwealth conference itself? We have had two of them, first the Mont Tremblant conference and latterly the Montreal conference. The preparation for the Montreal conference involved an added tariff, as hon. members will recall, placed on British woollens, a procedure of this government that certainly did not go unnoticed by the British government.

I have in my hand a copy of Hansard of the British House of Commons of December 2, 1958 when the government of that country debated commonwealth affairs and I shall quote extracts from the speeches of a Conservative member, a Labour member and a Liberal member. I should like to ask some of the members of the Conservative party in this house to read what Sir Albert Braithwaite said about the Montreal conference. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) said that the commonwealth conference was unique. We shall see how unique it was. These are the remarks of Sir Albert Braithwaite the Conservative member for Harrow West:

> First of all, I should like to pay tribute to the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the president of the board of trade for the brilliance which they displayed in leading our own delegation to the Montreal conference. Reading between the lines, it seems to me that what they did there literally saved the conference from being almost a stalemate. They infused some life into it. At the same time I am not satisfied that the conference report is by any means a document upon which to rebuild and revitalize the British commonwealth of nations. Its implications are narrow. It is phlegmatic. It is not precise enough in its conclusions, and it gives no real, positive direction on how even those conclusions will be carried out.
> I wanted something much more vital to lead our commonwealth affairs than a lot of pious platitudes. Many people have said a great many things about how we should develop the commonwealth but there has been a remarkable absence of action since the Montreal conference took place. The Canadian Prime Minister came over here and made great speeches on what should be done, but I have seen no real reflection in deeds implementing the words which he uttered.

Mr. Benidickson: They make nice speeches.

Mr. McMillan: I shall quote a brief extract from the remarks made by the Labour member, Mr. Douglas Jay, Battersea North, who after speaking about the imbalance of trade between Canada and Great Britain, went on to say:

> Yet what has happened? Only this summer Mr. Diefenbaker's government actually raised their tariff against British woollen goods, only a month or so before the Montreal conference. If I am wrong and this increase has not been put into force, I hope that the president of the board of trade will tell us. Here is an essential British export to a dollar market, produced by one of our most important industries, which at the moment is acutely depressed, and yet Mr. Diefenbaker, who professes, I am sure sincerely, to have great enthusiasm for Anglo-Canadian trade, raises the tariff against British woollen goods just before the conference.

I shall quote just one sentence from the speech of the Liberal member, Mr. Arthur Holt of Bolton West, who put his reaction to the conference in these words:

> The government appears to be advancing backwards by stealth.

Mr. Benidickson: What government was he talking about?

Mr. McMillan: The British government.

Mr. Fulton: Too bad.

Mr. Benidickson: Good try, though.

Mr. McMillan: I was interested to hear my leader put on the record the statement that our imports from the United States were down 15 per cent and in fact dropped 1 per cent from Great Britain and over 15 per cent from other parts of the commonwealth. Why did we send a buying mission to Great Britain? What did it accomplish? The United States increased its imports from Great Britain by 15 per cent without sending a buying mission to Great Britain. We increased our imports of oil from Arabia and textiles from Japan without sending a buying mission there unless the Minister of Finance himself was a buying delegate in Japan to bring in more textiles from that country thus putting more of our men out of work.

I have already criticized the conversion loan in this house. Among the costly failures in Canada's history I think it ranks in first place. It was costly to the taxpayers who are being called on to pay high conversion costs as well as high interest rates for a generation. It was costly also to the bond holders themselves who listened to the great patriotic appeal of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. I understand these bonds hit a low at $93.50 in Toronto. Their depreciation was much faster than the 4½ per cent interest could accrue to them. The Minister of Finance referred to the conversion as an outstanding success. It was a success in magnitude only but in no other sense. These bonds have depreciated because of the minister's need for new money to satisfy this government's wild overspending.

I know the Minister of Finance says he will have a current deficit of approximately $700 million but when you take into consideration $171 million, the last figure I heard, taken by sleight of hand from the defence equipment account which had nothing in it to start with, and when you also consider the extra amount of deficit for the Canadian National Railways and other accounts and also consider the depletion of the unemployment insurance account—which I understand decreased by $21 million last month alone—this government will have cost us well over $1 billion in excess of revenue this current fiscal year.

It is difficult for us to conceive what $1 billion means and to appreciate at what a rapid pace this government is overspending. The first world war lasted about 4½ years from the declaration of war until complete demobilization. In that time about 644,000 men and women were in uniform of whom approximately 500,000 went overseas. And yet, by comparison, that war cost only $1.6 billion. This government approximately every 18 months is overspending at a rate equal to the cost of that war which lasted 4½ years. I know that someone will say there is a difference in the value of money between then and now and I appreciate that is so, but meats in those days were high, furniture was just as costly as today and I recall that an ordinary tailored suit of clothes cost approximately $90. I remember that sugar at one period was selling at close to $30 a hundredweight.

A billion dollar deficit equals a deficit every day of the year amounting to approximately $3 million or about $125,000 an hour. Most towns in Canada with a population of from 3,000 to 5,000 have an assessment of approximately $3 million. This indicates that our Minister of Finance is overspending by the amount of the assessed value of one such town every day of the year and we do not have too many towns of that size in Canada. Or, in other words, the value of a $10,000 farm goes down the drain in overspending every 4½ minutes. The man who goes into a bank to buy a $1,000 bond should realize he is providing this government with its overspending—not its spending—for just one-half minute.

The total budget of the state of New York including revenue and expenditure is only $1.6 billion and I have here the New York Times to prove it. Our total increased debt this fiscal year will almost equal that amount.

Today Canadian bonds are not too popular in New York. I have the New York Times of January 18 here for anybody to see, which reports all foreign bond transactions for the previous week on the New York bond exchange. One lone Canadian bond, a $1,000 two-and three-quarter per cent bond, due in 1974, sold for $85.50; as against this, $395,000 of Australian bonds exchanged hands. One $1,000 bond of revolutionary Cuba, 4½ per cent, due in 1977, sold at $104.25. This particular Cuban bond had a 1958-59 low of $102 and a high of $106. The financial markets evidently consider the 4½ per cent long term Cuban bonds, either under the Batista or Castro governments, a better risk than the 4½ per cent long term bonds of the Diefenbaker government.

I have often followed the bond market and I have never seen so few Canadian bonds traded in New York as during the last six or eight months. Is it because the financial people of the United States started to discount the fiscal policy of this government long before we did ourselves?

One big argument in the conversion loan was that the Minister of Finance did not want to have so many bonds overhanging the market; therefore, he called in all victory bonds up to 1967. Today he has many millions of dollars overhanging the market in 30, 60 and 90-day and other short term loans, and the bond buyers have lost confidence in this government, as they will not buy even though bank deposits are the highest in our history.

A banker lends money to a creditor if the manager thinks he is a good risk; but if he becomes a spendthrift or otherwise shows that he cannot handle his money wisely the credit is withdrawn. This is exactly what the people of Canada have done to the Minister of Finance. They have called a halt to his wild spending by refusing to buy his bonds at the fast rate he requires. It is just as simple as that, no matter how much the Minister of Finance confuses us with such terms as bank rate, bills of exchange rate, short and long term money rates, and so on.

The bank presidents and many other financial men have been giving pretty pointed direction to the Minister of Finance, but he has paid no attention to them during the last year. He paid attention only when the people started to cut him off from unlimited funds. Only the other night in Toronto did he relent and say that he would have to cut down on his spending to save the value of the dollar. To paraphrase Winston Churchill, surely no one in the history of our country has done so much to so many. He has spent all the money that had been saved up over the last 10 years; he has rolled back our debt structure to that of 10 years ago, and he is in a fair way of spending much more, but the Canadian people are not going to let him. They are already saying, "no" in no uncertain terms.

This government has discouraged investment capital from the United States. The Bank of Canada and the other banks are glutted with bonds, using money which is on deposit and which is needed to help us out of this recession and to develop our economy. The Minister of Finance has led us to the brink of financial catastrophe and I can assure him that the Canadian people do not want any more of that brinkmanship in our fiscal policy. Our financial policy is serious and the fiscal policy of our government is contributing to unemployment by setting a pattern of high interest rates for our provinces, our municipalities and our large and small businesses.

As an example, our municipalities cannot pay high debenture interest on capital expenditures for projects that might provide employment. Our fiscal policy is also inflationary, as heavy short term borrowing is not too much unlike the printing of new money.

The other day the Prime Minister, in justifying a deficit, said that there had been budgetary deficits in 21 of the last 36 years. In other words, the Liberals in that time had 15 surpluses. This compares with only two surpluses of as much as $1 million that the Conservatives have had altogether since confederation. I do not think there is much chance of the present Minister of Finance ever reversing himself because he is wallowing deep in debt.

I heard the Prime Minister criticize the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) concerning an article written for the Canada supplement of the London Times. I am sure the Prime Minister knows that no decent Canadian would ever want to wash so much dirty Canadian linen in a British newspaper.

Mr. Pallett: One cannot believe what he writes or says, then.

Mr. McMillan: It put me in mind of the time Winston Churchill was in New York and was asked what he thought of the Attlee government. He replied that when he was out of his country he never criticized his government but when he was home he never left off criticizing it. Surely, this great Conservative leader of all time, Winston Churchill, has by example long since shown us the way to keep our Canadian family affairs at home and the Leader of the Opposition has done just that. For doing so, however, he has suffered unfair criticism and ridicule from our Prime Minister.

I hold in my hand an editorial from the December 31 issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail. I wish to read two sentences from it. The heading of the editorial is, "Twelve Months of Mystery", and reads in part as follows:

> In his New Year's message to the Canadian people, Liberal Leader Pearson refers to the "distressing dilemma" of rising prices and inflationary pressures in a period of recession and unemployment. Dilemma, irony, anomaly, farce or tragedy, mare's nest or monkey puzzle—one might call it a great many things.

Let us call a halt to this monkey business in finance. We do not want to sink into another mess like the conversion loan.

Last year the Minister of Finance said that this government did not need to take advice from anyone, and he emphasized this by saying, "let there be no question about that".

I used to listen to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell). I am sorry he is not in his seat. He was the opposition financial critic of the former government. I could not always agree with him, yet I thought he spoke responsibly and his views on finance were, in my mind, sounder than anything displayed by anyone so far in this government. I cannot help but express to this house the secret hope that the Minister of Finance would consult him for direction. I feel that if he had done so from the start he would not be in the financial mess in which he finds himself today.

I would like to quote one last paragraph from this Globe and Mail editorial "Twelve Months of Mystery". Perhaps it should read, "Mystery of Life Under the Tory Government." However, in the last paragraph of this editorial in the Globe and Mail I find the following:

> As we say, a peculiar year; a year in which our economy found itself very much out of balance, if not indeed out of control. Sweeping changes are obviously in order from top to bottom of our economic life; and this will require strong leadership. We have a right to expect, and demand, such leadership during 1959 from those in a position to provide it.

I hope the government can provide it.

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, before embarking on a few comments I should like to add my voice to the congratulations to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Like previous speakers, I was very impressed with the speeches that the hon. member for Provencher and the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet made, and I congratulate them.

I was surprised, Mr. Speaker, and continue to be surprised that we should have heard so much gloom, doom and criticism from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and now from his followers. I was surprised because it is quite obvious that he is still far removed from the grass roots in the country. You will remember that when he became leader of the party he said that it was time that the Liberals got away from the brass and back to the grass. I was surprised to hear all this gloom and doom because, as I think most of us will agree, one would have thought that after our four-month recess the Leader of the Opposition would have a better idea of what the people of Canada, the grass roots, are really thinking.

Personally, I am extremely gratified at the political consciousness of the people, certainly those in my constituency of York-Humber, and I am grateful for their awareness of the problems that face us all in Canada. I know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has played a major role in sparking the interest of the people in our national welfare. He has the great gift of getting close to the people, of inspiring belief in him and in his honesty, courage and deep sense of responsibility.

On the other hand, nothing will convince me that the Leader of the Opposition, in his pitiful pessimism, is speaking for the people of Canada, the grass roots of Canada. He may have been speaking for the sadly decimated Liberal party but certainly not for the people of Canada. There are three or four items I should like to speak about with reference to the speech from the throne. Shall I go ahead or shall I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. lady leave to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, with out question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

INDIAN AGENCIES AND BANDS—VISITS BY MINISTER

Question No. 8—Mr. Howard:

1. Has the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration visited any (a) Indian agencies; (b) Indian bands or villages?
2. If so, which ones and upon what dates were the visits made?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. (a) Yes; (b) Yes.

Questions

2. October 1, 1958, Six Nations Indian agency; Six Nations of the Grand river band. October 2, 1958, Walpole island Indian agency; Walpole island Indian band.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 22—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the amount remaining in the Unemployment Insurance Fund, on December 31, 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

Balance at credit of fund:

December 31, 1955—$890,857,489.63
December 31, 1956—$926,776,830.22

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, January 22, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—REPORTED ULTIMATUM TO PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether in view of the fact that the ultimatum issued by the C.B.C. to its producers in Montreal expires today, and in view of the most undesirable consequences of the implementation of this ultimatum on French language broadcasting, he would not intervene even at this late date in an effort to avert these unhappy consequences.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question will be answered by the minister who reports to parliament in respect of the C.B.C.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I am not aware of any such ultimatum as the hon. gentleman mentioned. There were discussions going on until four o'clock yesterday morning and, I know, during the night, and I understand there were also discussions going on last night. I have not been advised this morning of the situation. This is a matter entirely in the hands of the management of the corporation. In view of certain reports I heard yesterday I should like to make it clear that any steps which might be taken to bring this matter to a head were decided upon last week in consultation with the officers there, and there is no intention of delivering any ultimatum whatsoever; but sooner or later this matter must be brought to a head. I am told by the corporation that this was the plan of Mr. Ouimet, and this was the matter he was working on at the time of his collapse on Sunday.

The house will be glad to know that he is resting reasonably comfortably considering the very severe attack he had, and there is every reason to hope that if his present condition continues for a few more days he will be restored to health.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder if I may ask a supplementary question. Since this unfortunate dispute has continued for some time, could the minister say on behalf of the government rather than in the capacity as reporting for the C.B.C. whether the government or any ministers have considered making their good offices available for bringing the parties together so this dispute might be settled? There are many precedents for this being done in other instances affecting government corporations.

Mr. Nowlan: The government has not given any consideration to this whatsoever. This is a matter for the management and staff of the corporation. The suggestion certainly has been made. There were 15 different proposals, I am told, 15 suggestions made by the management to the producers, every one of which was refused. The primary suggestion was to go to the Canada labour relations board and deal with that board and obtain recognition, and that also was refused. The management feel in the circumstances that there is no further suggestion they can make, but they are very happy to welcome any suggestion that might be advanced by the producers.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STATEMENT ON NUMBER OF UNPLACED APPLICANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question. Can he give us the latest available figures for the month of January of the number of unplaced applicants for employment? This question is based on the fact that the report given out by the minister two days ago—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —gives the figures for December 11. Could the minister bring it up to date? On December 11 I think it was about 570,000.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Essex East I have the latest figure of registrations at our national employment service offices for the week ending January 8, which is 749,886 as compared with 796,371 a year ago, which is a decrease of 46,485, and which is also 250,000 less than the hon. member for Essex East predicted last July.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, will the minister tell us whether or not with regard to the increase of some 170,000 within a month, the new figure as well as the old figure in December did not and does not include the category of fishermen representing in terms of unemployment some 50,000, which would bring the figure up higher than that mentioned by the minister?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the two figures I gave for comparison purposes, the figure for this year and last year, do not include fishermen.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They are not included.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Wrong again, Paul.

(Translation):

QUEBEC—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN WINTER WORK PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rodolphe Leduc (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton).

Would he mind telling me if the Quebec government has accepted the federal government's offer to share expenditures, under the special winter works program, for the construction of forest approach roads and the development of camping grounds?

(Text):

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was handed notice of this question as I was coming into the house. I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of it. To my knowledge, up to yesterday the answer is, not yet.

UNEMPLOYMENT—PUBLICATION OF LOCAL FIGURES IN LOCAL NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the Minister of Labour or anyone in his department any objection to the publication of local unemployment figures in the local newspapers?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McMillan: Would the Minister of Labour issue a directive to that effect?

Mr. Starr: A directive to that effect has already been issued and is in existence.

[Mr. Starr.]

(Translation):

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) a question. Is he aware of the statement of His Eminence Cardinal Leger, as reported in Tuesday's press, to the effect that the present situation requires the government to take further special action to deal with the serious problem of unemployment in Canada, especially in the city of Montreal?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I seem to recall that this question was dealt with a couple of days ago, if I am not mistaken.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Might I ask the hon. Minister of Labour a further question?

Could he tell the house what further projects he has in mind to solve the problem of unemployment in the city of Montreal, where conditions have never been as serious there being 88,000 people out of work?

(Text):

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): In answer to the first part of the hon. member's question, I wish to say that I admit immediately that I have not had an opportunity to discuss this matter with Cardinal Leger. I also wish to add that I can only commend him in the highest terms possible for the true Christian spirit behind the program he has launched. Like measures undertaken by the government and motivated by the same spirit, the cardinal's program is aimed at coming to grips even in a limited way with the economic situation which has developed. He has taken action that I commend to all leaders of this country to try to help in the alleviation of the problem, and in the same positive way that the government is taking action.

As to the second part of the question, I am happy to report that the province of Quebec is now participating in the winter work program, and close to 100 projects will be submitted and some are being processed by our department at the present time.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the minister tell us whether the government has been asked by the city of Montreal to share the costs of specific unemployment relief projects?

(Text):

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the city of Montreal is taking the lead in the 100 projects I mentioned as coming from the province of Quebec, and I am sure these projects will help a great deal in alleviating unemployment in the city of Montreal.

FINANCE

CONVERSION LOAN—REPORTED INCREASE IN INTEREST CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if the figure he is reported to have given in an address to the Canadian club in Toronto on January 5, 1959 is correct, namely that there would be increased annual interest charges of $48,225,000 as a result of the conversion loan.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if that is a question for the orders of the day—as to which I am in some doubt—I can say to my hon. friend that all the figures which I gave in that address are correct.

INQUIRY AS TO INCORPORATION OF CO-OPERATIVE BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice arising out of a dispute between the caisse populaire and the credit unions and the chartered banks as to charges to the credit unions for clearance purposes. In light of the growing suggestion among credit union leaders that a co-operative bank should be incorporated in this country, has the government or any department given consideration to the possibility of legislation to incorporate co-operative banks in this country?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, any such question must be hypothetical until somebody makes an application.

Mr. Argue: In view of the statement made by the president of the co-operative union of Canada, has any such application been made?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not aware of any application for incorporation of a bank of that nature.

TRADE

REPORTED REFUSAL TO SELL ALUMINUM TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Yesterday, in reply to a question from the Leader of the Opposition with respect to the Aluminum Company of Canada's reported refusal to sell a certain amount of aluminum, the minister indicated he would have to investigate the report. I wonder if he has had an opportunity to do that.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asked me if I could give the house an assurance that no pressures from outside Canada were brought to bear on the Aluminum Company of Canada or on Aluminium Limited in the refusal of a $1 million aluminum order from communist China. In so far as I can find out, no pressure was exerted from outside Canada.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I might ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether or not he would recommend to his colleagues in the cabinet that appropriate legislation be enacted to ensure that such problems may be overcome in the future, and that companies such as the Aluminum Company of Canada will be obliged to act in a more responsible manner toward Canada, or failing that, that there be established an export board part of the function of which would be to arrange for exports of commodities which private corporations are afraid to export.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is raising a pretty broad field of policy and legislation. I do not say the minister may not answer if he wants to, but it seems to me this question goes beyond what can be dealt with in a summary way at this time.

ROYAL VISIT

REPORTED MEETING OF QUEEN ELIZABETH AND PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I would like to know whether his attention has been drawn to a press release emanating from Washington, by the press secretary to the President, which states that President Eisenhower plans to meet Queen Elizabeth in June, probably on the United States-Canadian border, when she inspects the St. Lawrence seaway; and has the Prime Minister any comment to make on this statement?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): So far as the first question is concerned, the particular press dispatch has not been brought to my attention. As to the second question, whenever the committee under General Graham is in a position to give a report it will be brought to the attention of parliament.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

STATEMENT ON PENSION NEGOTIATIONS AND REPORTED WITHDRAWAL OF PASS PRIVILEGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) inquired regarding revision of the C.N.R. pension plan, and in that connection made reference to the passes of labour representatives. The management of Canadian National Railways advise that following discussions by the Canadian National Railways pension board, which comprises both management and employee representatives, a revision of the pension rules was approved by the directors of the company and came into effect on January 1.

The matter of passes is not related in any way to the question of pension regulations. In any event, employee representatives have received, or will receive, the same kind of Canadian National Railways pass for 1959-60 as they held in 1958.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Would the minister indicate whether they had been notified that they were withdrawn and have actually been restored.

Mr. Hees: I cannot say anything regarding that; all I can say is that they will receive the same passes in the coming year, and I am sure that if they do not know about it now they will know about it very shortly.

Mr. Benidickson: They had been withdrawn.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ARTHUR CHAPMAN—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE ACTION TO PREVENT HANGING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Reports in the press at the coast show that the trial of 20-year old Arthur Chapman of Chilliwack for killing his brother was recently concluded. He was found guilty and sentenced to hang on March 31 next. The jury deliberated for four hours and made a strong recommendation for mercy.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hicks: I believe the defence counsel is appealing the decision.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question he should present it.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Hicks: The question is, what steps can the people take to save this boy from the gallows?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in reply I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask about this matter. I should advise him that all capital sentences are automatically reviewed by the governor in council. Any person has an opportunity to make representations to the governor in council. Of course the review by the governor in council will not take place until all rights of appeal have been exhausted and only if the appeal or appeals, if there be any, result in the appellate court confirming the finding. Perhaps I should say that such representations, if they are to be made, should be addressed in the first instance to the Solicitor General.

OIL

ALBERTA TAR SANDS—INQUIRY AS TO USE OF ATOMIC BLASTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Has the minister or the government received a request from Richfield Oil for permission to use atomic blasts on its lands in the Alberta tar sands area?

(Translation):

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the Richfield Company has informed us of its intention to proceed with nuclear experiments on Alberta sands. Our mines division officials are now considering the matter and the committee set up for this purpose has not yet submitted its report.

(Text):

BRIDGES

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT RESPECTING WORK ON VICTORIA BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister table the agreement to which he referred yesterday in reply to a question of mine, which agreement is dated January 12, 1956 and has to do with the St. Lawrence seaway, Canadian National Railways and the co-ordination of work on Victoria bridge, the agreement also being one that does not concern the internal management of Canadian National Railways?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to do so.

BURLINGTON, ONT.—LOW LEVEL BRIDGE ACROSS HAMILTON HARBOUR ENTRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. M. T. McDonald (Hamilton South): On January 20 I asked a question of the Minister of Transport with regard to the construction of a low level bridge across the entrance to Hamilton harbour, but I should like now to direct the question to the Minister of Public Works, as it is under his jurisdiction. What is the expected completion date of the low level lift bridge across the entrance to Hamilton harbour, something which was requested by the former member and which was refused by the Liberal government.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): In reply to this question, Mr. Speaker, may I say that work is under way on the substructure of the Burlington low level bridge across the entrance to Hamilton harbour, and tenders for the superstructure have been called for February 3, 1959. Present estimates are that this bridge will be open to rail traffic by March 15, 1961, with final completion by June 30, 1961.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Did I understand him to say that two separate contracts were being called for this single project?

Mr. Green: I have here only the report from the department dealing with this particular question. I would take it from the reply that there was a contract for the substructure, and that tenders have been called for the superstructure.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—REVIVAL OF HYDE PARK AGREEMENT AND COMBINED PRODUCTION BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether any representations have been made to the United States government concerning the revival of the Hyde Park agreement, and particularly the combined defence production board which operated so successfully under that agreement during the war?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not having received notice of this question, I shall take this as notice.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER TO PROVINCIAL TREASURER CONCERNING TAX AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I wonder if, in accordance with many precedents established last session in connection with dominion-provincial tax agreements, the Minister of Finance would table his recent letter to the treasurer of Saskatchewan in which the press indicates the minister alleges that the Saskatchewan treasurer has, in his public statements, made many misstatements indicating misconceptions of the recent agreements.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): If my hon. friend wishes I shall be glad to table that letter, which was dispatched within the last 48 hours to the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan, and was in reply to statements which were attributed to him in the press within recent weeks, which statements on his part contain certain errors which I felt it desirable to correct.

SHIPPING

COASTAL TRADE—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION ON REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can he say whether or not the government intends to take any action in connection with the report of the royal commission on coastal trading?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I have received that report and given it a great deal of study. I shall be discussing it with my colleagues in the near future, and will be making a statement in the house.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, January 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. W. H. Jorgenson for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): When the six o'clock adjournment interrupted proceedings last night, Mr. Speaker, I was expressing surprise at the gloom we have heard from the opposition in the last few days. It seemed to me that they are viewing with alarm on all sides, and I do not believe they are speaking for the people of Canada when they express this gloom. Certainly pessimism is not a characteristic of Canadians and, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) said yesterday, Canadians are today greatly inspired by the prospects of a glorious future and are certainly ready to follow the inspired leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his cabinet.

There are three or four items in the speech from the throne on which I want to touch briefly. We are informed that we are to be asked to pass a bill of rights. Ever since the Prime Minister announced last year that he was going to introduce a bill of rights, lawyers have been having a heyday with it, arguing over all kinds of legal and jurisdictional difficulties between the federal and provincial governments. Like all other hon. members of this house I have been inundated with briefs, submissions and letters pro and con a bill of rights. I remember that last year the Prime Minister asked the people of Canada to give some thought to this proposal, and they certainly have done so.

I welcome the introduction of a bill of rights for two basic reasons. First of all, as I have said in this house before, it seems to me it is a good thing for all of us to take time occasionally to assess and evaluate the freedoms that we cherish. It is a good thing to stop and spell out democracy as we see it. The second reason that I welcome a bill of rights is that we of the western world can certainly do a much better job than we are doing of selling democracy. We take too much for granted in the rights and freedoms that we enjoy, and we expect other people in other parts of the world to take them for granted also.

The Prime Minister made a speech in Toronto recently when the University of Toronto bestowed an honorary degree upon him. He warned us all that democracy is losing the struggle for the minds of men in Asia and in other undeveloped areas. I think democracy is losing the struggle because we are not highlighting those things of the mind, heart and spirit that mean so much to us in democracy. Hence for those two reasons I welcome a bill of rights so that we may tell the world about the freedoms we enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, I address my next point to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan). In raising this matter I am probably speaking with a minority voice in this house. However, I believe there is existing an incongruous and discriminatory tax situation and that it should be corrected. I refer to what is informally called the cosmetic tax, which is a 10 per cent excise tax. It is incongruous because presumably cosmetics are considered to be luxuries. They may have been luxuries at one time, but they are certainly not luxuries any more. Who would call toothpaste a luxury, or baby oils and powder, or shaving cream or shampoo and hand lotions?

An hon. Member: And lipstick.

Miss Aitken: Yes, I include lipstick in this list. I do not expect hon. members in this house to agree with me that lipstick is a necessity, not a luxury, but I believe that half the electors in this country would agree wholeheartedly.

Curiously enough the previous government removed this 10 per cent excise tax from several items but left it on cosmetics. The items that were removed from the incidence of the tax are ones which I consider to be luxuries such as fishing rods, cameras, golf clubs and soft drinks. However, the tax was retained on toothpastes, mouthwashes, medicated creams and many other items essential to good health and good grooming. I draw this matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue in the hope that they will review this incongruous situation and remedy it.

In the speech from the throne there is promise of certain amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I do not know what those amendments are going to be, but I am sure they will be good and beneficial ones. There is one matter, however, that bothers me about the unemployment insurance benefits, and I am going to present this problem to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr). In the past, many times and oft, we in the Conservative party raised our voices against extravagances of the previous government. One glaring extravagance was the continual flow of publicity releases and pamphlets that poured from the various government departments. I am happy to note that this government has cut down a great deal on that flow. As a journalist I know what a waste it was, because these things would come into newspaper offices and simply be thrown into wastepaper baskets unread. However, at the risk of being paradoxical I am now asking the Minister of Labour to start a publicity project of his own or, as it may be more properly described, an educational program on the real purposes of unemployment insurance.

As I see it, unemployment insurance is insurance against the misfortune of being unemployed. But to be unemployed is not the real misfortune. To be unemployed and unable to find work is the real misfortune. I feel that there is a wrong concept about this matter of unemployment insurance. People who take out automobile insurance are only too happy to assert that throughout their life they have never had to make a claim, and they certainly do not expect to get anything back from it. People who take out health insurance are only too happy that they are not obliged to make a claim for hospital care, and they do not expect to get anything back. But there seems to be a different concept about unemployment insurance. Far too many people appear to feel that since they have paid into this unemployment insurance fund, it is a sort of pension which must come to them sooner or later.

I should like to give three examples of what can and does happen with respect to unemployment insurance. Case No. 1 is that of an older woman who retired with a fairly substantial pension. She had paid into the unemployment insurance fund all her life and felt that it owed her something. When she retired she regarded herself as unemployed, applied for unemployment insurance benefits and obtained them. I do not believe that the unemployment insurance benefits were ever meant to be a sort of supplement to a retirement pension.

Case No. 2 is that of a young woman who had a highly specialized job but lost it. She applied for the same kind of job knowing full well, I am sure, that those jobs were not available. She was not able to get such a job, and she was quite happy to stay home and collect unemployment benefits.

Case No. 3 is that of a woman office worker who decided to stop working. Her husband was quite able to support her. Someone told her to be sure to get from her employer a letter to the effect that her services were no longer needed. He, I suppose trying to be a good fellow, gave her that letter and she collected her unemployment benefits.

I have given these three examples of the way in which I think this really great social security measure is being abused. I am sorry that all my examples happen to be women. I am quite sure there are an equal number of men. There may be hundreds or there may be thousands of such cases. They are all on the unemployment list and are included in the figures that we hear so much about these days. I believe there is really a great need for an educational program so we can appreciate that this is not a pension; that it is not a fund for people who do not want to work for a while but who want to take a short holiday; that it is not a little investment nest egg for those who do not want to work any more. It is for those who have suffered the misfortune of becoming unemployed and who cannot find jobs.

Finally, in his speech the Leader of the Opposition, who was a great athlete in his day, did some extraordinary mathematical gymnastics which I had great difficulty in following. He said that between 1957 and 1958 the consumer price index rose by 3.5 per cent, and then he informed us that the old age pensioners had lost $2 of the $9 increase granted by this government. Mr. Speaker, 3.5 per cent of $9 does not come to $2 according to my calculations. I realized later, after figuring it out, that the hon. gentleman was taking 3.5 per cent of the entire $55. However, he certainly gave the inference that it was calculated on the $9.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask this house what would have become of the old age pensioners if it had not been for the change of government? The increase given by the previous government was $6 a month, or 20 cents a day. If we had not increased the pension to $55 I suggest that the old age pensioners would practically be giving the government money today.

There are a good many champions of the old age pensioners in this party. I have certainly been one of them ever since I entered the House of Commons. So has the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and all the cabinet ministers. We have proved that our concern was not merely talk. We have fulfilled our promises and proved that their faith in us was justified. We shall continue to prove that their faith in us is justified, because the record speaks for itself.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I say to you first of all, as have some other hon. members, how pleased I am to see you presiding once again over our deliberations in spite of rumours some weeks ago which might have altered that situation. I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) on their speeches in moving and seconding the address.

(Translation):

May I be allowed also to offer warm congratulations to the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), for taking in his stride a task which is difficult to a new representative. I listened with watchful attention to the hon. member's very sensible remarks on national unity and was very pleasantly surprised by his somewhat novel attitude in the matter, as compared with the views of his fellow members from the province of Quebec. I therefore do want to congratulate him once again, in the hope that he may win over to this cause several of his colleagues.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister in replying to the comprehensive and responsible statement of the Leader of the Opposition on Monday last gave one the impression that he deplored any criticism of a character which suggested that all was not well in the country. I should have thought that a man who had proposed a bill of rights, inadequate though it may be, a man who had championed for such a long time the rights of parliament would have been the last person to complain about a speech which involved criticism of the administration of a free and democratic society.

The Prime Minister is familiar, of course, with Mr. Dicey, the author of the Law of the Constitution. He will recall as elementary the postulate of Mr. Dicey that the essential condition of parliamentary government is that the government should govern by agreement with the opposition, and that it is equally vital that the opposition should be at liberty to criticize the government. That is an essential basis in our parliamentary system. I say to the Prime Minister that he did not strengthen his position or defence by deploring the kind of criticism which was made from these benches, criticism which we have the right and indeed the duty at this time to put forward. The Prime Minister, good lawyer that he is, will recall the words of the late Chief Justice Duff who in the padlock case defined free discussion as meaning criticism, answer and countercriticism; attack, defence and counterattack.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What case was that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The padlock case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In what year was that judgment given?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I forget the exact year. It was about five years ago, I think. By this the chief justice meant the freest and fullest analysis and examination. These are important words by the chief justice, and they signally apply to all ministers of the crown and members of parliament. The real reason why the Prime Minister did not like the speech of the Leader of the Opposition was that it hurt; that it was an indictment of an administration which gave certain assurances and pledges to the people of Canada which this government in large measure is not fulfilling.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask a simple question. I am interested in this padlock case of Mr. Justice Duff five years ago. What is the case to which the hon. gentleman is referring?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will note the time taken by this intervention; I do not propose that the Prime Minister shall divert me from the main thesis I am advancing. Whether or not I was correct in my citation, the fact is that the chief justice defined freedom of discussion in a manner which was not recognized on Monday last by the Prime Minister of Canada.

I should have thought the Prime Minister would have taken advantage of this debate, in the light of the criticism which exists throughout the country, to make an objective statement as head of the government about the current economic situation, explaining what the difficulties are and being prepared to accept the kind of criticism which must come from an opposition, and yet at the same time urging the house and the country to appreciate the difficulties involved. Instead, what did he do? He did not address himself except for a few moments to the economic situation which confronts the country. He gave us no lead, certainly not the kind of lead which under our parliamentary system we have the right to expect from the man to whom has been entrusted the responsibility of directing the affairs of this nation.

However, the Prime Minister did at one point in his speech seek to do the very thing I am now complaining he did not do. He made a statement during the course of his observations as reported in Hansard at page 58, which I quote:

> In the year just ended, Canadians worked more, earned more, spent more and saved more than in any comparable year in the history of this country.

Of course his followers applauded that statement with wild enthusiasm. Now, if that was a correct statement it would be a perfect defence against the charges which have been levelled at the government by members of the opposition. But let us see whether or not this statement by the Prime Minister represents the situation in accordance with the statistics provided by that organ of the government which is responsible for such computations, the dominion bureau of statistics, which is at the disposal of the Prime Minister more than it is at the disposal of hon. members sitting to the left of Mr. Speaker.

Let us examine the statement that Canadians worked more. The dominion bureau of statistics figures show that total employment in 1958 was on the average 23,000 below what it was in 1957, so that in fact a smaller number of Canadians worked in 1958 than in 1957.

Now let us examine the next statement, that Canadians earned more. The dominion bureau of statistics points out:

> Real wages and salaries in 1958 have declined by 1.6 per cent. Moreover, national income at factor cost (that is the sum total of wages, salaries, farm income, corporation profits as well as other incomes) rose by 2 per cent in 1958 from $23.8 billion in 1957 to $24.3 billion in 1958.

However, as reported by the dominion bureau of statistics, final product prices also rose by about 2 per cent, so that the net national income in real terms did not, as the Prime Minister suggested, increase in 1958. In 1958, the bureau points out, population increased by 2.3 per cent, with the result that in real terms and on a per capita basis Canadians earned less than in 1957. And so the Prime Minister was wrong again.

Then the hon. gentleman made the statement that Canadians spent more. Let us see what the dominion bureau of statistics itself has to say about this:

It may be noted that on a per capita basis consumer purchases in real terms showed a year to year decline in all categories of expenditure in the first nine months of 1958.

This was the period taken by the Prime Minister himself. The result is that Canadians in fact spent less in 1958 and the Prime Minister, with these figures of the dominion bureau as my authority, is consequently proven wrong again.

And then, as reported on page 59 of Hansard of January 19, the Prime Minister stated that according to the 1958 economic report it was felt that the gross national product would remain almost unchanged, with a possible increase of .7 per cent. In point of fact, said the Prime Minister, it increased by 2 per cent. Let us see what the bureau of statistics says on this point at page 5 of its report. Here are the actual words of the dominion bureau of statistics on this question:

Taking the change in the price of all components together, it is estimated that the implicit price deflator of total gross national expenditure was higher by about 2 per cent in the first 9 months of 1958. As has been noted, this price advance accounted for virtually all the increases in the value of production from one year ago, so that in volume terms the gross national product remained substantially unchanged.

So once more, according to the bureau of statistics, the Prime Minister was proven wrong. Then at page 59 of Hansard the Prime Minister said:

The 1958 economic report predicted that total wages and salaries of Canadians would decline as compared with 1957 by 1.1 per cent. Instead of that wages and salaries increased by 1.6 per cent or some $300 million.

The dominion bureau of statistics provides this conclusion:

On the average the consumer price index stood at 121.9 in 1957 and at 125.9 in 1958 which represents an increase of 3.2 per cent. This means that real wages and salaries—or the purchasing power of total wages and salaries—have declined by 1.6 per cent in 1958.

The Prime Minister is proven wrong again. Then, at page 59 of Hansard the Prime Minister said that consumer spending did increase by about 4 per cent in 1958, and I remember the way he said that with all the authority of his office and with his sweeping gestures and debating skill. Consumer spending did increase by about 4 per cent in 1958, he affirmed. Here is what the dominion bureau of statistics says about that, at page 7 of the report:

In the first 9 months of 1958, total consumer expenditure on goods and services was higher than the same period of 1957 by nearly 4 per cent. About two-thirds of this increase represents higher prices prevailing in the consumer sector. Expenditures on non-durable goods were up 4 per cent in value terms, but only 2 per cent by volume. Expenditures on durable goods increased by 1 per cent, but showed little change in volume terms. The gain of 5 per cent in outlays for services was largely offset by price increases, so that the increase in volume terms in this component amounted to only 1 per cent.

And then it goes on to state:

It may be noted that on a per capita basis consumer purchases in real terms showed a year to year decline in all three categories of expenditure in the first 9 months of 1958.

And so the Prime Minister was proven wrong again. Then, as reported at page 59 of Hansard the Prime Minister said:

I have before me the record from my own province of Saskatchewan which I wish to read in answer to the professional gloomsters. I shall read from the sales record of the Saskatchewan retailers for the year 1958.

What the Prime Minister did not do was refer to the retail sales for the whole of Canada. Those sales, according to the dominion bureau of statistics daily bulletin of January 21, increased in value by 2.3 per cent during the first 11 months of 1958. However, over the same period the retail price index increased by 3.2 per cent, which means that in volume, retail sales declined by 0.9 per cent in 1958. Moreover, since population increased by 2.3 per cent, retail sales in volume terms and on a per capita basis declined by 3.2 per cent in comparison with 1957. And so the Prime Minister was proven wrong again.

Mr. Fulton: Would the hon. member identify the source of his last statement?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): These are figures put out by the bureau of statistics under the control of the distinguished Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Fulton: Would the hon. gentleman kindly remember to give us the references as he proceeds?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us examine what the Prime Minister said about the gross national product, as reported at page 60 of Hansard:

As far as the gross national product is concerned, it now amounts to more than $32 billion; in volume terms it is about the same as in 1957, but it is still some 7 per cent above the 1956 level.

The real fact is to be found on page 1 of the bureau of statistics report. It should not have been difficult for the Prime Minister to find it, because it appears on page 1. The report states:

On the basis of present evidence, it seems likely that the gross national product in 1958 will be about 2 per cent above last year's figure of $31.4 billion. With final product prices also higher by about 2 per cent in the first nine months of this year compared with a year ago, the physical volume of output in 1958 will likely show little change from that of the year 1957. This would represent the second year in succession—

And my hon. friend has been in office for 17 months—

—in which the Canadian economy has shown no change in the physical volume of production.

Then the dominion bureau of statistics goes on to point out that this would compare with a gain in the physical volume of output of 7 per cent between 1955 and 1956, 9 per cent between 1954 and 1955, and a post-war average for the years 1947 to 1957 of 4 per cent per year. And so the Prime Minister was proven wrong again.

Then on page 61 the Prime Minister said:

There has been a very striking decline in the Canadian trade deficit. The decline was largely the consequence of the change in our trade position with the United States. It goes on to point out in that report that the situation is improving in so far as our trade deficit with the United States is concerned.

So concludes the Prime Minister. Well, what does the bureau of statistics say on page 9?

A major factor contributing to the reduction in imports has been the lower levels of business investment in Canada in 1958 in machinery and equipment items, construction materials and inventories.

It is generally known that Canada depends mainly on imports from the United States for such products, so the change in our trade position with the United States is the result of the recession in our country, not to government policy, as the Prime Minister led us to believe; and so the Prime Minister was proven wrong again.

Then on page 62 the Prime Minister said:

Over the last year it has risen only 2.5 per cent.

He was referring to the consumer price index. He continued:

How modest this rise is may be seen when it is compared with the rise of 6.3 per cent in 1945-46.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Of course the Prime Minister arrived at his figure of 2.5 per cent by comparing December, 1958 with December, 1957. If he had compared the two full years instead of only two months the figure would have been 3.2 per cent. Moreover, was it fair for the Prime Minister to compare in this respect the recession period of 1958 with the period of 1945-46, when wartime price controls were abolished?

Then the Prime Minister concluded his economic analysis saying:

From 1935 when the Liberal party came into power to 1957 there were 14 deficits, part of them in wartime from 1940 to 1945.

Why did not the Prime Minister conclude this economic dissertation by saying that since world war I the Conservatives, when they were in office, had always shown deficits, and the other fact that since world war II the Liberals were able to reduce the public debt by almost $2,500 million? That was the economic statement given to this country on Monday last by the Prime Minister in respect of a situation which has provoked condemnation by presidents of banks, by labour leaders, by those who are on retirement and pension plans, by all classes in the nation including agriculture; yet all we have had from the Prime Minister, for whom personally I have the highest regard, as he knows, was a wholly inaccurate statement of the economic conditions that now face this country.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to give us the D.B.S. publication or publications from which he says he got his figures, with the page reference in each case? Perhaps he can give them now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend will read the text he will see that I have given them.

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have answered my hon. friend's question in so far as I propose to answer it.

Mr. Fulton: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Chevrier: Sit down. The Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Fulton: —the hon. gentleman well knows that it is a rule of this house that if he is quoting what he says are official figures he has to identify the source. If the hon. gentleman tells me that in each case he has enabled the house to identify the source of the figures he quoted as official figures I will be satisfied, but I do want to know. If the hon. gentleman assures me that the identification is there I will take his word for it, but I did not get the identification as he went along.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I hope the time taken up by the Minister of Justice has been noted so that I may be allowed to develop my argument.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friend's figures need careful checking.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In his speech the Prime Minister did not address himself to the problem of unemployment in the way which I believe that problem deserves, particularly in the light of the assurances he gave to the people of Canada in so many places in the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958.

We were told two days ago that there are 440,000 individuals without jobs, 79,000 more than in the previous month of November and 48,000 more than in the comparable month of a year ago. That situation in itself is serious. Those are the D.B.S. figures; but I invite the attention of the Prime Minister, of the Minister of Labour and of hon. members to table 2 of that same report, which was made available to the public on Tuesday last, which shows that on December 11 there were 574,237 unplaced applicants for jobs with the unemployment insurance commission offices. I also call the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that in table 2 the second sentence reads:

> The count excludes registrations from persons known to have a job and applying for another one.

I call the Prime Minister's attention to the answer to my question this morning by the Minister of Labour that as of January 8, instead of there being 574,000 persons in the unplaced applicants' list there are now 750,000 persons, a rise of almost 200,000 in one month.

That statistic in itself should arouse the Prime Minister and cause him to give some attention to the promises he made in this country, namely that no one will suffer because of unemployment as long as this government is in office. He should realize why we on this side of the house and why the country bear at this time in many places deep resentment against this administration.

To the number of 750,000 must be added the number who do not register because they have now lost any entitlement to benefit. I suggest to the Minister of Labour that I would not be inaccurate in suggesting that this number might be as high as 13 per cent, bringing the number up possibly by another 50,000. Then when you take into account the fact that fishermen are not included in this list, and they are estimated by some employment officers to number 50,000, you have a possible unplaced applicants' list not of 750,000 but conceivably of 100,000 in addition. Then when you bear in mind that the dominion bureau of statistics does not include people who are working fewer than 35 hours a week it will be seen that the nation is confronted with the most serious problem of unemployment that we have had since the dark days of 1930.

Another reflection of this situation is to be found in the status of the unemployment insurance fund itself. We are running dangerously close to the point where, if this kind of situation continues to develop, next year there may not be sufficient money to pay benefits. When one thinks that the fund was as high as $925 million, that as of November it was down to $641 million and at the end of 1958 had been reduced by another $252 million, one can see why the government is anxious to do something about increasing contributions so that the fund will not be completely or dangerously empty.

I suggest that by the end of March 31 this year, on the basis of present figures, some $400 million or so will be paid out in benefits. If that is the case, then the government and the country will be confronted with a situation which justifies my noting at this time that in 1959-60 there will not, in the light of the existing law, be enough money to provide benefits for the unemployed of our country if the situation at that time is at all comparable to the present period. This is a serious situation. One is not supposed to talk about these things according to the Prime Minister, but this fund was built up by the contributions of management and labour, not only by lesser contributions by the general taxpayers or by the state. We owe to those who from 1941 on have made these contributions some assurance that in the face of unemployment they are not going to find that the unemployment insurance fund, which is theirs, has been violated as a result of lack of foresight on the part of the government in dealing with the very serious unemployment situation, now confronting us.

Just think; in 1957-58 some $385 million was paid out of the unemployment insurance fund, more than was paid out from 1941 to 1951. Yet the government says, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce said yesterday, "There is no serious problem of unemployment; I look forward to a buoyant year in 1959."

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, I did not use that word. I said it was a serious problem and that the government is facing it courageously.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My friend may say that, but the fact is that he did give the impression that there was no serious problem. As a matter of fact the whole government, in the relaxed way in which it confronts this problem, is so out of step with the views of the majority of the people of Canada in this regard that the situation is alarming. I say to the Prime Minister that the situation with regard to the fund is serious, and I hope he is not going to seek to replenish the fund at the expense of employers and employees who are not responsible for the failure of the government to discharge its promises and take the necessary preparatory steps to meet the situation.

Those steps were pointed out in the months of May and June. The Prime Minister will remember my saying to him, "These are my projections for the future. They may be wrong, but will the Prime Minister not take steps now, in the likely event of unemployment, to provide programs in the month of June in accordance with the capacity of municipalities to participate in those programs?"

Mr. Diefenbaker: Your misinterpretation is just as bad today as it was then.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What did the Prime Minister do? The Prime Minister was going away on his world tour. I do not criticize him for that; but just a week before he went, knowing that the people were being confronted with unemployment, he said that the government was prepared to provide financial assistance on a 50-50 basis with the provinces to help put men back to work.

The Minister of Labour points out with pride that out of an unemployed population of almost 500,000 according to D.B.S. figures, with 750,000 unplaced applicants, 15,000 men have been put to work under this scheme. Should the Minister of Labour be proud of being able to produce as the only bit of evidence of the government's work program the alleged fact that the government has been able to provide financial assistance to the municipalities which, with the co-operation of the provinces, has resulted in placing 15,000 men?

Mr. Starr: Would you want them to remain out of work?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are almost half a million men out of work. Why was this program not started earlier? Why did the government wait until the month of October? Speaking in the house on March 15, 1955 the Prime Minister said, as found at page 2037 of Hansard:

> You say to me: What suggestions have the opposition to offer?
> [Mr. Churchill.]

These are the words of the Prime Minister.

> I repeat that we do not believe that inaction should be allowed to continue.

These are words that are applicable today.

Mr. Pickersgill: Far more applicable.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister said:

> I repeat that we do not believe that inaction should be allowed to continue.

Then the Prime Minister went on to say:

> As to our suggestions, the Leader of the Opposition suggested that there should be a dominion-provincial conference on unemployment . . . Why could not this conference in April be held with reference to this matter and plans made respecting other fiscal matters? That is the first question I ask.

I ask the Prime Minister today, having in mind that he said in the election of 1957—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What date was that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is page 2037 of Hansard, volume II, 1955.

Mr. Pearson: When unemployment was half what it is now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Having in mind that my hon. friend said in the election of 1957 that if elected he would resolve the fiscal difficulties between the provinces and the federal government—

Mr. Pickersgill: And the municipalities.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —having in mind that there was a conference held in this chamber in December of 1957, having in mind that the Prime Minister said that the conference would reconvene in January, bearing in mind that the premier of Manitoba, Mr. Roblin, would like to have a dominion-provincial conference, bearing in mind the carefully selected words of Conservative premiers who have reacted to the latest statement of the Prime Minister on this subject, I say to him: In the light of his own recommendation in 1955, in the light of the serious unemployment problem confronting the country, why in the name of heaven does the Prime Minister not reconvene this conference? If the only way to cure the problem, as the Prime Minister said in 1955, is with the co-operation of the provinces through a dominion-provincial conference, why does the Prime Minister renege on his promise and fail to act in the light of this serious emergency situation?

The Prime Minister did, of course, meet the municipalities in September. He would not meet the provinces, in spite of his assurance, but he did meet the representatives of the municipalities in Ottawa in the month of September. When one looks at what the Prime Minister said on that occasion one wonders what the mayors of our municipalities thought of the Prime Minister's assurances, just as we in this house could not help but regard with some amazement the conduct of the Prime Minister at that conference because of the assurances he gave to the people of Canada and to the municipalities in two recent federal elections.

Were any assurances given to the municipalities that anything would be done about the matter of unemployment? No. Under our constitution, said the Prime Minister, well informed and documented lawyer that he can be, this matter is not within our power. The municipalities are creatures of the provinces. There is nothing I can do to help you. We are overburdened with defence obligations. The expenditures of the federal government are frightening. I cannot do anything for you, but it was very pleasant to have you come this long way.

So I say to the Prime Minister, having regard to that abortive conference, having regard to this anaemic works program which is costing the federal government only $6 million, when one considers the millions that were spent at other times to meet unemployment does the Prime Minister not really agree in his heart or in his mind, I think I should say, that if there is any indictment that is justified against the government it is that it is not living up to its promises, that it is not giving any evidence of an ability or capacity really to do something about this very serious problem with regard to which the Prime Minister of Canada told the people of Canada on television and on platforms from one end of Canada to the other, "Elect me and I will see that no man suffers from unemployment as long as I am at the head of the government of Canada".

He says now to those who suggest anything else that they are giving assistance and aid to communism. This is the defence of the Prime Minister, who took such a positive line in the two recent federal election campaigns.

Now, in so far as this works program is concerned I should like to know, to the extent that it is meeting the problem at all and of course it does not by any means, just how these jobs are dished out. Does the Prime Minister condone the statements in this press clipping I now have in my hand from the Winnipeg Free Press? It says. "I Hand Out The Jobs Says Minnedosa Tory". Then the article reads:

> Walter Weir, a prominent Minnedosa Progressive Conservative, says Nicholas Mandziuk, Conservative M.P. for Marquette riding, has given him the authority to hand out winter jobs in Riding Mountain national park.
> —Mr. Weir described the method of allocating labour to park projects in an interview. "We have agents in a number of centres throughout the constituency," he said, "and they refer names of people seeking work to me for approval."

Is that the way this abbreviated and anaemic works program is being discharged by the government of the day through its representatives in various parts of Canada? I am sure the Prime Minister would be the last man in the world to give work to a particular individual because of his political affiliation. I have no doubt that the Prime Minister would never think of doing anything like that, but apparently that is what is happening. I hope he will take steps to correct it.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, would have us believe that everything is well in the nation. Indeed, he quoted from a letter written by the statistician of the Bank of Nova Scotia commending the government for certain of its policies. Then he cited the article in the London Times written by my leader. Did he expect that my leader would be disloyal to this country when writing for a publication outside of the country? The Prime Minister said there were no criticisms from labour or agriculture, and that even in Saskatchewan they are happy. Yes, this government is resolutely facing its responsibilities in accordance with the economic situation in the country, the demands of the people and the assurances given the people during the election.

What are the real facts? The real facts are, first, that every responsible labour leader is condemning this government. The leaders of farm organizations are condemning it, and for the first time in the history of Canada within my knowledge six bank presidents have not only commented on the economic situation in our country but have directly criticized this administration for its failure to deal adequately with unemployment and with inflation. Those bank presidents were the president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, the president of the Bank of Nova Scotia, the president of the Bank of Montreal, the president of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, the president of La Banque Provinciale and the president of the Royal Bank of Canada, who made the last indictment which I am sure the Prime Minister recalls. These are gentlemen normally regarded as strong supporters of my hon. friends opposite. These are the people who welcomed the conversion loan, with the consequential burdensome debt which it has created.

Some hon. members opposite may laugh, but this is no laughing matter. We have been called upon by those whom we represent to thoroughly discuss the problems that confront this nation at this time. The Prime Minister knows now better than anyone else the deep concern that prevails all over the country. If the Prime Minister cannot bring forward a program to meet unemployment; if his government after the most honourable and careful consideration finds that it cannot bring forward an acceptable program to deal with inflation, then the Prime Minister should rise and discuss these matters frankly in the house.

The Prime Minister is an avowed reader of political biography. He knows what happened on one occasion when one of his favourites, Mr. Disraeli, was confronted with an analogous situation. The British prime minister rose in the house and frankly said the government could not fully cope with the situation. He acknowledged he had made promises in the election campaign to the effect that he could deal with the kind of situation which then confronted him, but he wanted frankly to take the house and the nation into his confidence. He said that in this situation he wanted to put the interests of his country above the interests of his party and to clearly and dispassionately set out the facts. Our Prime Minister does not do that. Instead he resorts to unworthy debate—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have allowed the hon. member to continue his speech for a couple of minutes because of interruptions, but his time has now expired.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the Prime Minister will pay heed to what I have said.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): My first words, Mr. Speaker, will be words of congratulation to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne for the fine way in which these two young men acquitted themselves and the logical way in which they presented the situation in Canada, the one with respect to the agricultural position and the other with respect to unity in Canada. I am sure their contributions did a great deal to add to the debate; that they will serve their constituents well, and that their constituents as a result will be proud of their achievements. We in this house will also be proud of them as members.

I listened with greatly mixed feelings, Mr. Speaker, to the speech of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). I may say that he was far more vocal today than he was on the television press conference the other night. He spent a great deal of time endeavouring to present figures which would agree with his forecast of last July in this house. I can only say that in past years, as a politician, he has been held in high regard in this house and in this country. I have a high regard for him as a personal friend, but I must say that he has declined somewhat in his endeavour to take on the role of a prophet, and in this respect he has been a complete failure. In his prophecy of last July he said that during the month of December there would be 550,000 unemployed and seeking work according to the dominion bureau of statistics survey. He is only out 110,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend—

Mr. Starr: He endeavoured to build up that figure today so his prophecy would be a reality.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend knows that is not a fact. I estimated 500,000 and there were 574,000 on December 17.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Essex East is confused about these figures. He is quoting 574,000. Let me point out to him that those are the N.E.S. figures, and I was talking about the D.B.S. figures. I will come to the N.E.S. figures for the month of December. These are on record in Hansard. He estimated one million registered for employment with the N.E.S. offices, and as a matter of fact he is just out 250,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is wrong, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman has no right to take the stand he has taken.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. The Minister of Labour has the floor. If the hon. member for Essex East has a question he wishes to ask the minister he should ask it in the regular way. If permission is given he may ask it.

Mr. Chevrier: It is a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not asking a question, Mr. Speaker; I am speaking on a point of order. No hon. member has a right, unwittingly or otherwise, to deceive the house as to what another hon. member has just said. I have said that in the month of January, as of the 8th of this month, there are over 750,000 applicants for work. To this figure I have added certain categories that have been excluded, which brings the figure up to almost 850,000.

Mr. Harkness: What is your point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Labour knows that.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Starr: That is exactly what I have tried to point out in an effort to give the facts rather than the myth which has been perpetuated by the hon. member for Essex East, who endeavours to lend reality to his prophecy. He points out that a category is left out, and he refers to the fishermen. He also uses the figure of 50,000, which in fact is quite wrong. For fishermen at any time, particularly last year, the figure amounted to only 30,000. Even if he does add the figure of 30,000 he is still out 220,000.

This present concern about unemployment on the part of the hon. member for Essex East has me rather puzzled. I welcome his concern for people who are unemployed. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I wonder why when he sat on this side of the house and was an occupant of the treasury benches, when the unemployed in his own city of Windsor amounted to 12,000, 14,000 or 15,000 people, he never once uttered any word nor did he urge his government to do anything about that situation, nor did we hear anything about it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Harkness: Sit down, the Speaker is on his feet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Did the hon. member for Essex East wish to ask a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. As a matter of privilege, when the minister says that never, when we were confronted with this situation, did we do anything, I will say this to the Minister of Labour. Will he not agree that when I was a minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I should like to know what it is. The hon. member for Essex East talks about a question of privilege. I did not quite catch what it is.

An hon. Member: He wants to make a speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says that when my city was confronted with an unemployed population of some 14,000 I did not raise my finger at any time as a member of the government to do something about the matter. That is a serious indictment and a reflection on any member of parliament. By way of answer to that allegation I should like to say that my record in this house—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. We cannot have two hon. members making speeches at the same time. The Minister of Labour has the floor.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have raised a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I am sorry, but I do not recognize the question of privilege. All I seem to hear from the hon. member for Essex East is a speech. If he has a question of privilege I should like to hear it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I shall be glad to restate it, and I would ask Your Honour to pay close attention to what I am saying.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am objecting to what the hon. gentleman said, which was to the effect that when I was in a position of responsibility I did not raise my finger to help the unemployed in my own city.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My question of privilege is this. That statement is a reflection on my conduct as a member of this house and as a member of the government of Canada at one time, and I say that I have a right to answer it. I answer it now by saying this. The hon. member knows that no one in this house has worked harder for the welfare of the people of Canada than I.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I hope you are taking note of the time the hon. member for Essex East has taken which rightfully belongs to me, I hope that I will be allowed extra time.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that when the hon. member for Essex East was on the treasury benches and when unemployment in Windsor was as high as it is today and in some cases higher—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was never higher.

Mr. Starr: We have figures to prove it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just like the Prime Minister's figures.

Mr. Starr: When we were on the other side of the house, where he is now, and when we asked that seasonal unemployment benefits be extended to help those who were unemployed—and we had in mind the people of Windsor among others—the government took no action whatsoever.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not what the minister said.

Mr. Starr: While the opposition criticize our efforts now, when we have sought the co-operation of the provinces and of the municipalities, in putting people to work, and when the hon. member minimizes and ridicules the fact that 16,000 or 15,000, as he asserts, will be put to work—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Out of half a million.

Mr. Starr: —we are proud of the fact that we are able to put 16,000 people to work. As a matter of fact, within the next few weeks on site there will be more than 20,000 people employed. When you count those who are in industry supplying materials you can safely bring that figure to 60,000 people. That is what we are proud of, namely that we are taking action. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that as long as I am able to put one person to work I will be proud of the fact.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We want you to put many thousands to work.

Mr. Harkness: We have done that.

An hon. Member: That is not what was promised.

Mr. Starr: If we had from the members of the opposition the same co-operation and constructive and reasonable suggestions as we get from the provinces and the municipalities and organizations and individuals across this country who are endeavouring to co-operate with us to overcome and alleviate the situation, we would put thousands of people to work. But we are not getting that co-operation from the opposition. All we are getting is destructive criticism.

It is my intention today to put forward in simple and forthright terms—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the minister would permit me to ask a question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. Does the minister wish to allow the hon. member to ask a question?

Mr. Starr: I will do so, Mr. Speaker, if I am assured that the time taken up by these interruptions will be added to my regular period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): The Speaker cannot change the rules, which provide for 40 minutes.

Mr. Pickersgill: There will be no objection from this side of the house.

Mr. Starr: I would ask the hon. member to withhold his question.

Mr. Pearson: I think in this important debate the minister should have all the time he needs.

[Mr. Starr.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): With the consent of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to put this question to the minister. Did he not receive from me a thoroughly constructive suggestion for dealing with the unemployed fishermen, and did the Prime Minister not tell us on Friday that it was still being considered? Then did the minister not tell us this week that it was no longer being considered?

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate eventually and at last made a constructive suggestion.

Mr. Pickersgill: In October.

Mr. Starr: I am surprised, because when he sat over on this side of the house he had none of these suggestions nor was anything done about the situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is no answer to my question. That is no answer to the fishermen.

Mr. Starr: It is my intention to show that the action this government has taken has been effective. The attitude taken by the official opposition has been throughout, one of negative and destructive criticism. Our stand is this. We came into office on June 21, 1957. We saw the situation. We analysed it. We took immediate and positive action to deal with that situation, and our action has been effective within the limits of any action which can be undertaken by a government dealing with a situation which has world-wide ramifications and repercussions. The consensus of commentators and analysts not only in Canada but in other countries is that the action we took was wise and effective, and in this respect we came off better than the United States.

In proof of this contention I should like to read a number of sentences from Labour Research, a publication of the Canadian Labour Congress for June, July and August. First I should like to read this sentence:

> The recession now seems to have hit bottom, and recovery seems to have started.

Then, after dealing with the employment situation and quoting figures comparing Canada with the United States, the article expresses the opinion, "Manifestly, Canada has come off better here." The article ends by saying, "Here again, Canada came off better."

This is the view of the Canadian Labour Congress. The opposition in the course of this debate, and particularly the Leader of the Opposition, claimed that any government action so far has been one of confusion. I say that the actions we have taken compose a record of sober and positive achievement, and I intend to show that the actions of the government have been positive and constructive in nature.

We recognized the situation in June of 1957. Unemployment was rising, there was no question about that; the figures proved it. This situation was complicated by a large volume of immigration. We took immediate steps to curb the flow of immigration in order to give us an opportunity to level off the economy so as to provide jobs for those immigrants. The action of the former government was to allow this mass of immigrants to come here and walk the streets of Canada, the land of milk and honey, without jobs.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Starr: I wish the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would hold his question until I am finished.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. The Minister of Labour apparently does not wish to have a question asked at this point.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I have one other course, and it is to raise a question of privilege. The minister stated that the present government had stopped immigration. Well, the Minister of Justice told us, when that view did not seem to suit his argument, that this was done by the previous administration, and I want to ask the Minister of Labour if it is not true that all the government did was to confirm an order I had made in April, 1957.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I cannot see a question of privilege. May I at this time refer hon. members to Beauchesne, fourth edition, citation 126, which reads as follows:

> If a member desires to ask a question during debate, he should first obtain the consent of the member who is speaking. If the latter ignores the request, the former cannot insist, even if he thinks he is being misrepresented. He cannot make a denial during the speech, but he must wait until the member has resumed his seat and then he may ask leave to make a statement, or he must wait until his turn comes, to address the house.

Mr. Starr: Subsequently, Mr. Speaker, legislative measures were introduced, a great number of which had as their objective the curbing of the unemployment situation. I may say, as a start, that we as a government, not in the same negative fashion as the former government, realized that unemployment was a situation concerning all Canadians. We took the responsibility. That problem, to us, is above politics. We have recognized that responsibility from the very beginning, not as the former government had done in 1955, when unemployment was as great as it is at this present time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: There were 425,000 unemployed in 1955. The objective was to add to the purchasing power of the Canadian people and to create work for persons unable to find employment. In June our objective was to stimulate the Canadian economy which was suffering from a number of recessive factors, factors which we inherited at that time. In briefly reviewing these facts it is very evident that had the government not taken immediate and positive action the situation would have been much worse.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It could not be much worse.

Mr. Starr: Well, it could possibly be as bad as the hon. member would like to see in order to bring his prophecy into reality.

It is now evident to the unprejudiced mind that the action taken by the government was effective in blunting the sharp edge of the recession and providing the Canadian economy with a stimulus which enabled it to regain to a considerable degree the buoyancy it had been losing when this government took office. In this connection I should like to point out that the effects of the recession were much more severely felt in the United States, and I have already quoted the comments which have been made on that point by Labour Research, the publication of the Canadian Labour Congress.

Among the immediate measures which were taken were the increases in the old age security benefits and the rise in pensions for veterans and blind persons, which had the effect of adding to the income of a great number of Canadians. Would the Leader of the Opposition say there was any confusion about this? Does he think for one moment that there was confusion in the minds of those who received these increases? I think the only confusion that existed was in the minds of the opposition. Last September the government revoked section 161 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the section which imposed additional conditions for the receipt of benefits by married women. The amendment enabled married women who became unemployed to benefit to a greater degree with regard to the receipt of unemployment insurance. Was this action taken by the government an evidence of confusion? Most certainly it was not in the minds of those who benefited by it, but it was in the minds of the opposition. Then we removed the threshold under the Unemployment Assistance Act in order that participation in the benefits of that act might be made more widely available. Was this confusion? Certainly not. The only confusion was that which arose in the minds of the opposition.

Shortly after that a massive stimulus was introduced into housing construction in Canada which, over a period, meant that a total of more than $350 million was made available through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The effect of this measure in the housing field has been to produce a greater number of Canadian homes in 1958 than at any previous time. A record has been set. Would hon. members opposite claim that this action by the government was an evidence of confusion? It certainly was not to the people who were able to buy these homes or the people who were employed as a result of the construction of these homes. The only confusion, Mr. Speaker, is in the minds of the opposition. The action of this government in the housing field alone provided employment for many thousands of Canadians. Certainly in the minds of the 620,000 Canadians who have been given jobs as a result of this action there is no confusion about the steps taken by this government. The only confusion exists in the minds of the opposition.

I should like to point out also that last session Bill No. 71 was passed amending the Unemployment Insurance Act and extending seasonal benefits for a period of two months, something we had long advocated in this house. The only time confusion existed was when the opposition was sitting on this side of the chamber and would not listen to reason or help those who were unemployed. Certainly those Canadians who had the benefit of the two extra months of seasonal benefits felt no confusion about the direct action of the present government. Again the only confusion that exists is in the mind of the opposition. I sometimes wonder whether or not they approve this sort of action.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you going to do it again this year?

Mr. Starr: With the further object of increasing the purchasing power of Canadians the personal income tax was reduced in September and the excise tax on automobiles was also reduced.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Five per cent.

Mr. Starr: Certainly I would like to see it reduced further, but the government must be aware of its financial responsibilities. I come from a constituency that is similar to that represented by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us, you and I, get together and talk to the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Starr.]

Mr. Starr: But we must do these things as we find ourselves able to in the light of our financial responsibilities. No confusion existed in the minds of Canadians with respect to this action, Mr. Speaker.

Last summer I called a national winter employment conference in Ottawa in order to obtain the advice of the leaders of this country in industry, in the provinces, the municipalities and national organizations with a view to seeing what could be done about helping unemployment during the winter months, and again there was no confusion in the minds of the people of this country in that respect. We called a municipal conference for the first time in the history of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: That happened every year under the previous regime.

Mr. Starr: We sat down with the mayors of municipalities, and as a result of that conference the municipal works incentive program was initiated. This was a suggestion of the municipalities of Canada. We were willing to co-operate to an even greater extent than was first suggested to us when they discussed this problem. As a result, on October 27, 1958 the Prime Minister announced that the federal government would pay 50 per cent of the payroll costs of municipal works carried out between December and April. I shall deal with the result of that municipal program later.

Now, what has been the reaction of the Leader of the Opposition to this plan? In a borrowed phrase I might say that his reaction was "too little and too late". When he appeared on a television press conference I was amazed, when he was asked what he would suggest should have been done and when it should have been undertaken, that he replied that nothing could be done now; it should have been done in the fall of 1957. We do not subscribe to that theory. Any time is the right time to take action if the situation demands it. This government cannot condone the excuse that we cannot do anything about it because it could have been done a year ago. That is not the attitude of this government.

Mr. Pickersgill: What are you going to do now?

Mr. Starr: I should like to recall to the house that last January the government announced an offer to the provinces to pay 50 per cent of the cost of construction of forest access roads where construction was undertaken before June 30, and also to pay 50 per cent of the cost of construction and improvement of picnic grounds. This was welcomed by the provinces. They immediately put thousands of men to work. Was this an action of confusion? Again I say the only confusion that exists is in the minds of the opposition; and if we had not put these things into effect I am sure that hon. members of the opposition would probably have been overcome by a sudden kindness of heart and would have suggested these measures themselves in order to get the credit for them.

The house will recall that in January of 1958, Bill No. 247 was introduced providing financial assistance to the Atlantic provinces in order to stimulate industrial development in those areas. Did this cause confusion? Were the Atlantic provinces confused when they accepted it? Most certainly not; they recognized it as a direct and positive action on the part of this government.

Once again, in May of 1958, this government took concrete, constructive action. Bill No. C-9 was passed to provide a temporary six weeks extension of seasonal benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Do hon. gentlemen in the opposition think there was confusion in the minds of those who received those benefits for an additional six weeks? Certainly not; members of the opposition were the only ones who were confused by these direct and effective measures that have been taken to alleviate the situation.

Mr. Robichaud: Ask the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) if there was confusion.

Mr. Starr: May I also remind hon. gentlemen that an agreement was signed with the Saskatchewan government in relation to the South Saskatchewan river project. Was that confusion? Do you think for one moment that the people of Saskatchewan and surrounding provinces believe that was an evidence of confusion? They recognize that it provided employment for hundreds of people on the project. The only confusion that existed was in the minds of the Liberals, who for 16 years did not do anything about it; and they are still confused.

Let us examine the reaction of the provinces to the municipal incentive program. This has been greeted with enthusiasm by all the provinces. I am happy to say that they all approved of this plan and nine of the ten provinces, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, are now participating. We have well over one thousand projects approved at this moment.

I sometimes wonder where certain hon. members of this house obtain the information they use in an endeavour to criticize and embarrass the government in relation to this program. I listened with interest to the program "The Nation's Business" a week or so ago and heard the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) indicate that on a project costing $100,000 a certain percentage went into the cost of material, a certain percentage went into the cost of machinery, and only $2,500 represented the cost of labour; this on a project amounting to $100,000. Are we seriously expected to believe that the labour content of municipal projects represents only 2½ per cent of the cost, and that the government's share is 1¼ per cent? Let me inform the house that so far over 1,000 projects have been undertaken, and the percentage of labour content of all of these projects is 39 per cent. That proves how inaccurately this whole situation is being presented to the Canadian people by some hon. members of this house who choose to base their statements not on fact but only on desctructive criticism.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock I was discussing the municipal incentive plan, and I was informing the house of the cooperation we were receiving from the provinces and municipalities in implementing this plan in order to provide work for Canadians. But I wish to say at this time that the attitude of the opposition toward this plan has been a negative destructive approach. It has been an attitude of carping criticism; of treating lightly the fact that some 20,000 people will be employed on site and some 40,000 off site. That has been their position right along, Mr. Speaker.

The Leader of the Opposition the other day delivered himself at some length of an analogy relating to newly married couples, and made the statement that the honeymoon was over. But I will say that his party and his approach remind me of an old maid screaming about a man under the bed. That is all they are doing, Mr. Speaker, just screaming. There has not been one constructive, positive suggestion so far. While they have been screaming, Mr. Speaker, this government has been taking action.

What actually has been the reception accorded our program, Mr. Speaker? There have been varying reactions. I will say that for the most part reactions across Canada have been positive and constructive, and there has been a readiness, indeed in most instances an eagerness, to take part in the plan which indicates the need of this sort of program at the municipal level. At the same time I should also like to indicate that the provinces have been wholehearted in their co-operation. The plan has been in effect now, from the practical point of view, for only a little over six weeks. At the present time applications are coming in at a rate which indicates that the result over the next few months will be fruitful and positive.

What has been the reaction amongst the commentators and analysts? For the information of the house, Mr. Speaker, and with your permission I should like for a few moments to dwell upon that point. I take the liberty at this time of referring to the Toronto Daily Star of December 27. In an editorial under the heading "A Good Start" the Star commented as follows:

> By paying 50 per cent of the labour costs of municipal winter work projects the federal government has so far helped to create temporary jobs for 9,400 Canadians. While this is a small number against the 361,000 Canadians who are unemployed at last report it is an encouraging start all things considered. With improvements and additions the plan could become an important remedy for winter unemployment.
> The showing is not bad considering that the municipalities had little time to prepare for it.

I should also like to refer to an article in the Montreal Gazette of December 30 under the heading "Record Construction Forecast". I quote:

> Volume of construction in Canada in 1959 will exceed the record total of 7,100 million in 1958 by from 3 per cent to 5 per cent, Howard J. Ball, Kitchener, Ontario, president of the Canadian Construction Association, forecasts.
> Like each successive year in the post-war period Mr. Ball said 1958 was the biggest construction year in Canada on record.
> With the continuance of this trend in 1959 construction will retain its position as Canada's largest industry with a direct labour force of some 620,000.

The information I have from New Brunswick, Mr. Speaker, is that a record winter works program is under way there. The minister of labour in New Brunswick, Mr. Skaling, has announced more than 100 projects valued at $5 million are under way or about to be undertaken. In Nova Scotia the minister of labour, Hon. Stephen Pyke, has announced that several winter work projects amounting to $3,167,318 which will provide 127,322 man-days of work have been approved. Mr. Pyke has added that this is a direct result of efforts put forth by the federal and provincial governments to increase employment during the winter months.

In the city of Ottawa a very substantial winter work program is being undertaken, and it is pretty much the same in all major cities across Canada. In Winnipeg particularly, Mr. Speaker, the situation has assumed a very favourable appearance. From reports I have received both from the unemployment insurance commission and from the Winnipeg newspapers, the situation in Winnipeg has greatly improved in the last year. I quote at this time from an article in the Winnipeg Free Press, a journal which I might say can hardly be considered as biased in favour of the present administration. On January 8, 1959, the Winnipeg Free Press said as follows:

> Winnipeg is going back to work. Employment here has improved to such an extent that the number of job seekers at the end of 1958 was nearly 3,000 less than at the end of 1957 and this in spite of the fact that the total labour force is higher.

The Winnipeg Tribune of Thursday, January 1, said in a New Year's day editorial:

> Indeed in the Winnipeg area the picture is considerably brighter than at this time last year.

I should like to quote another article which appeared in Time magazine, a well-known United States publication, on January 5:

> As 1958 was soon to prove the gloom sayers were wrong . . . the nation survived a difficult year without falling into the vee-sloped chasm that threatened briefly to trap the United States. A part of the reason was the rapid turn around in the United States. Much more was Canada's own doing. The natural resilience and sensible hard work of a developing nation.
> It was reasonable to expect that Canada's recession would be even worse than the slump in the United States. As it developed Canada's down turn was much the milder. Aside from the winter months unemployment hit a smaller proportion of the working forces than the United States. Industrial production sagged less sharply and recovered early.

I quote further from the article in Time magazine, Mr. Speaker:

> A second major difference between Canada and the United States was the way government handled recession. Unlike the Eisenhower administration which decided against large-scale priming of the economic pumps John Diefenbaker's Tory government put more spending money in wage-earners' pockets with tax cuts, it increased social welfare payments and provided $43 million for the grain growers.
> The most impressive help of all went to housing. The Tories pumped $350 million into mortgage loans for housing much as the United States helped its home-builders. While the United States aid was largely a spot injection to help a particular depressed industry Canada's program was a vitamin pill for the entire economy. In the biggest boom in history 160,000 new homes were started, providing jobs directly to some 250,000 workers and touching off subsidiary booms in a dozen home supply industries. Another area where the government helped was in the outpouring of funds for defence. For Canada consumers all this and more money than ever before to save, spend or just jingle in their jeans.

I continue to quote from Time magazine:

> Going into 1959 Canada still faces some knotty problems.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister's time has expired. I believe there was some suggestion this morning that he might have more time, but was an order made?

Mr. Pickersgill: Go ahead.

Mr. Chevrier: I think the minister should be allowed to carry on.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister has leave to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wish to thank hon. members for allowing me to proceed. I shall continue with the quotation from Time magazine:

> Unemployment will continue to be a rough winter problem. Yet, the major lesson of 1958 is that Canada's growing economy is increasingly stable and increasingly confident of managing its own affairs.

That to me, Mr. Speaker, does not indicate any confusion on the part of anyone except the opposition.

Mr. Pickersgill: Except Time magazine.

Mr. Starr: Public works expenditures for for 1958 totalled $250 million, and of this amount $145 million was for construction, which again added to the number of jobs available to Canadians. In addition, the department expended $28 million on behalf of other departments, and I should point out that in all these public works expenditures, both by the Department of Public Works and other departments, the main consideration has been that of providing employment where employment is needed. There has been no confusion.

I shall be dealing at greater length with the winter employment program, but at this point I should like to say that it has been a two-phased program dealing first of all with governmental departments and government agencies and, second, dealing with groups outside the government all across Canada where winter employment committees have been formed in most of the major cities of the country. In the government field construction work and purchasing have been to a great extent shifted to the winter months wherever this has been possible. Repairs, renovations and maintenance work all are now carried out during the winter whenever this can be done. As an example of these expenditures by the Department of Public Works, building repairs last winter were double those of the previous year. This year the program is expected to be half a million dollars more than the figure of last winter.

With respect to the matter of co-operation, I might say that there has been no confusion in the minds of those who have co-operated with us, the leaders of industry, leaders of provinces and municipalities. Surely the Leader of the Opposition did not mean that in participating with us in this direct action there is some confusion in their minds.

Last winter the employment provided through the Department of Public Works in building construction work was approximately 3,800,000 man hours, an increase of 31 per cent over the previous winter, and present indications are that this figure will be exceeded this winter. Public works highway programs will provide increased employment in many areas in Canada and are providing increased employment at the present time.

Quite recently the Minister of Public Works announced a program of small post office buildings in various communities across Canada. As of November 24 a total of 63 of these projects had advanced to the stage where tenders were being called, and in many cases contracts have been awarded. That provides jobs. Also this winter, as occurred last winter, the national winter work campaign of the Department of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission was greatly stepped up. The slogan, "Why wait for spring, do it now" which sparked this campaign has become known across Canada. There is encouraging evidence that the extent of co-operation is becoming greater each winter, and people who are not confused are co-operating with us.

I have reviewed a number of positive actions that the government has taken to alleviate the situation. I can only say to any member of the opposition or the whole group, if that is necessary, which one of these actions that we have taken are they opposed to? Which one of them do they think is confusing? Is this part of the program about which they charge the government with being confused?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is that a question you are putting to us?

Mr. Starr: I should point out also that much of the impact of government action both in the fiscal field—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I answer the minister's question?

Mr. Starr: —and in the field of work provision and job creation has not yet been fully felt.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister who is speaking did ask a question, but it did not appear to be one that called for an immediate answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: He did not want an answer.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has the floor unless he sits down.

Mr. Chevrier: He asked a question.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I can say that you also are not confused. I repeat, I should point out also that much of the impact of government action, both in the fiscal field and in the field of work provision and job creation, has not yet been fully felt. It takes considerable time for such expenditures and commitments to work their way down into the income and employment streams of the economy. I might say that this is particularly true of increased public works expenditures.

Dealing with the figures of unplaced applicants provided by the national employment service, I should like to point out that on December 24, 1958, the total of unplaced applicants was lower by 14,874 or 2.2 per cent compared with the previous year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It did not include fishermen.

Mr. Starr: This was the first decrease in the N.E.S. figures on a year to year basis that has been registered since December 27, 1956. On January 8 the N.E.S. figure was 4.3 per cent below last year, and that meant a decrease of some 46,485. Because of our action to help the placement of people seeking work, I am glad to report that during the past month, December, 1958 we placed 69,571 people in jobs, the highest placement on record since 1952. These facts show that we are well on our way out of the recession.

Mr. Denis: Who was in power in 1952?

Mr. Starr: Yes, but you were also in power in 1953, 1954, 1955 and 1956.

Mr. Pickersgill: And there was no unemployment to speak of.

Mr. Starr: The responsibility in these matters is ours. We cannot depend on the opposition, because they have nothing to offer. On behalf of the government I can honestly and conscientiously say that under the present government Canadians will get a fair deal. We took action, effective action. We are now on our way out of the difficulty, and this is borne out as I have indicated by expert analysts, economists and even critics.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the minister takes his seat, may I ask him a question? I understood him to say that unemployment was higher in 1955 than this year. Could the minister give us the D.B.S. figures, and I mean the D.B.S. figures, for December 1955 and December 1958 to prove the point?

Mr. Starr: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have not those figures with me at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister put them on the record tomorrow?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Starr: I shall consider that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robichaud: May I ask another question. Was I correct in understanding the minister to say there were only 13,000 fishermen eligible for unemployment insurance benefits?

Mr. Starr: I said 30,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: This year or last year?

Mr. Starr: I said there are some 30,000 fishermen, approximately, who would be eligible for unemployment insurance.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I will take advantage of simultaneous interpretation to deliver my speech in French. I ask the interpreters to forgive me if, at times, I forget myself and speak a bit too fast. It is a matter of temperament.

First, I join the leaders of the parties and all the members who spoke before me to express my deepest sympathy to the Yacula and Lockyer families.

May I also congratulate the new members. It is a noteworthy circumstance to be granted the confidence of the people of a constituency. Therefore members for Springfield (Mr. Slogan), for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), for Trinity (the Hon. Mr. Hellyer), and for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman) deserve our sincere congratulations.

May I also say to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet whom I have had the pleasure of meeting during his election campaign, that we were genuinely impressed by his speech. He has made what is, from a Conservative point of view, a discovery: the fact that the province of Quebec is part of Canada, and I am glad that he has so stated here.

I am also very happy to congratulate the hon. member for Trinity who, by his work and his conviction, has helped the people of Trinity to understand that the time has come for the Conservative party to do something, instead of always hiding behind the old Liberal administration. I congratulate him; we are very happy to see him back in this house.

As for the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas—who is not here at the moment—may I say that, in her case, the voters were probably little impressed by the Conservative or Liberal programs, but they wanted to give some recognition to her feminine charm.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the speech from the throne. Having read the speech, I think that it is perhaps time to consider certain necessary changes. It seems almost improper to me to put such fulsome praise into the mouth of Her Majesty's representative. To me, it practically amounts to dragging the Queen's representative into politics. It seems to me that, while retaining the principle of the speech from the throne, we could ask the Queen's representative to come to parliament, welcome members in his words and pray God to guide them. The right hon. Prime Minister could move a vote of thanks, seconded by the Leader of the Opposition, and right after the unanimous adoption of this motion, the government could place before the house the legislative program planned for the session.

This would enable us to get to the budget speech earlier, and so that members be allowed more latitude, we could spend 15 or 16 days, instead of 8, on the budget debate. Thus, the crown would keep its prerogative of making a speech from the throne, without being forced to praise the achievements of the government, be it Liberal or Conservative.

I hope that the government will give this matter due consideration. Nor am I alone to hold this view. In the Ottawa Journal of 19 January last, I read an article, written by Mr. Norman Smith. I shall not quote from it but it was entitled:

My P.M., My Government
My Ministers—My Word!

Those are samples of the words that are being put into the mouth of the Queen's representative. I think anyone interested would find inspiration in this article, which they could read quietly at home, and which I am not going to put on record.

I take this opportunity to congratulate the leader of the Liberal party (Mr. Pearson) for his clear, precise and informative analysis of the present situation. For many years now I have been hearing party leaders make speeches, and I think it is seldom that one can hear a statement so clearly and so pointedly made as that which was given us by the Leader of the Opposition. It gives me pleasure to tell him that the members of the Liberal party are increasingly proud to follow his directives, for they are wise and they are clear.

As far as the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is concerned, I have often listened to him. He has the reputation of being an outstanding orator, yet this year, well, he has been pathetic. To my mind, his speech was the poorest he ever made in this house.

Mr. Chevrier: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caron: He has kept harping on his old themes. He evaded the issue, and even tampered with the facts in an attempt to improve his case. He even denied acknowledged facts. This incidentally turned against him this morning, when the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) proved to him that he had altered the facts to bolster his case. In fact, all that can be construed from the Prime Minister's speech is this: Anything wrong that happened since the Conservatives are in power can be blamed on the Liberals, and anything right is the work of the Conservatives.

An hon. Member: Quite true.

Mr. Caron: But when did he ever prove that this is so. Never. Oh, he does have a marvelous mind, he is a gifted speech maker, and he has a remarkable mimicry which allows him to express himself as do top Hollywood actors, but he has been unable to convince either the house or the press, or the Canadian people.

We have come up against problems, says he—

Mr. Harkness: So you would hope, but it is not true.

Mr. Caron: Would the minister repeat that, either in French or in English so that I may understand him?

(Text):

Mr. Harkness: That is what you would like to believe, but it is not true.

Mr. Caron: I am not surprised at that coming from the minister, because he is one who can also distort the facts.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should withdraw that statement.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Harkness: I am speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: You are not on a point of order; you have not said so.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member should withdraw the statement that I distort the facts. There is no evidence at any time in this house that that has been the case. In fact the evidence is completely to the contrary.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may be allowed to interrupt—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The minister has raised a point of order. I shall be glad to hear any comments. The words complained of have been used previously. However, I am not averse to hearing what the hon. member for Laurier has to say.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the minister stated that what the hon. member for Hull was saying was not true. Then he complains about the same language being used against him.

Mr. Harkness: Once more, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laurier has not stated what I said. What I said was this. The statement made by the hon. member was to the effect that the Prime Minister's speech was not convincing to the house. I said that he would like to think that was the case, but it was not true.

Mr. Chevrier: Let the hon. member make his own speech.

Mr. Speaker: The objection taken was to the statement made by the hon. member for Hull about the hon. Minister of Agriculture, to the effect that he had distorted facts or was one of those capable of distorting facts, or could distort facts. If the hon. member for Hull does not wish to modify his statement I shall give my views on it.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to withdrawing what I have said: but facts are facts, let him face them as he sees fit.

Mr. Harkness: Thank you.

Mr. Caron: The Prime Minister said: "We have faced the problems as they came up". It is precisely about this that the Leader of the Opposition chided the leader of the government and the government itself. Instead of having prepared a program, instead of having foreseen what was coming, they waited until the worse came, and then they tried to put up with the situation as best they could. It is precisely what we had against him, and the Prime Minister admitted it himself when he stated: "We faced the problems as they came up." Now there is an old principle which says that "to govern is to foresee". As the present government cannot foresee, one must conclude that it does not know how to govern. Its policy is one of drifting, a policy of doing the indefensible. That is why ministers opposite have so much trouble trying to defend this policy. And we are being told that the duty of the opposition consists, as stated by the Minister of Labour, in suggesting to the government what has to be done.

Well, if we read over the speeches made by all those who were here in the opposition before the Conservative party came to power, including those of the Minister of Agriculture, we realize that they were merely destructive in their criticism, and that they never offered any suggestion that could be of any help to the government. That is what they have done, and we had nothing against that; today we have the right to adopt the same method, the same means.

As stated by the Leader of the Opposition after the convention where he was chosen leader of his party, the role of the opposition is to fight and to criticize the government. Our attitude has been the same as the Prime Minister's at the time he was leader of the opposition. We are going to fight and criticize the government; furthermore, we are going to remind it that it is not keeping its promises. We were promised that the country's evils would be remedied. During the election campaign, we did not hear the Liberal party being reproached for what it had done in the past. We were told that the Conservatives would cure the evils that now beset this country. That is why I say to the Prime Minister, and to those around him: now is the time for action. Put up or shut up.

I have here an article or rather an excerpt from an article by Mr. MacDonald in the Canadian Commentator. It says this:

> During the first few months of 1959, the eyes of Canada will be turned on Ottawa, watching the discussions of a party strong in power but wavering in principle.

That is exactly what the Leader of the Opposition has said. Here is another article, this one from Le Droit, signed by the parliamentary correspondent Pierre Chaloult, to this effect:

> Mr. Diefenbaker knows more than anybody in this country that the time for promises is past; that the next months will be difficult ones; there will still be unemployment; that, if there is any hope of improvement in the fall, it should be explained meanwhile why Canada's domestic and foreign trade has slowed down. There should also be some explanation as to why the Americans, the British, the French, the Canadians and others cannot agree on everything and more particularly everything that has to do with the problems of collective security, while each nation's financial responsibilities are increasing instead of diminishing.

These are statements of people who cannot be called rabid followers of this or that party.

I see in the Citizen the following article written by Mr. Swanson:

(Text):

> Whatever was wrong with Canada today was the fault of the Liberals; whatever was right with it had come because of the far-sighted, statesmanlike actions of his government.

And, later:

—Mr. Diefenbaker once advocated as the main function of an opposition—to fight. If parliament is to be preserved as a living institution, he said, Her Majesty's loyal opposition must fearlessly perform its functions.

(Translation):

Now, they are the ones who ask us to stop criticizing them and to offer suggestions. Well, the day has not yet come when the party in power, or the opposition, can expect the opposite party to sing its praises in parliament, and we shall have to wait a long time before this happens.

The speech from the throne refers to the visit of Her Majesty. All Canadians are happy to know that our gracious sovereign will visit us next summer, and Canadians, especially the average citizens, hope that, during her trip, Her Majesty will be given a chance to get a bit closer to the people, because this is not a totalitarian country where people's lives are in danger. The Canadian people are disciplined, they love their sovereign, and want to take a close look at her. This visit of our sovereign should not be just for the "brass hats", while people are kept 200 feet away behind ropes.

I remember that, when I was mayor of the city of Hull, the Queen Mother came to see us. At the time the Secretary of State Department had asked us, had in fact ordered the R.C.M.P. to let no one but officials and guests into the city hall. When I entered that hall and felt its chill atmosphere, well, against the wishes of the Secretary of State—I admit this remissness today—I gave instructions that the public be allowed to enter city hall. We installed ropes to prevent Her Majesty from being too pressed by the crowd. And when she went by—

Mr. Speaker, I hear laughter from the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) and every time I hear his inane laughter, I wonder how it is that a Canadian university could hire as a professor a man of this stamp. He should stand up so that all may see his silly grin.

An hon. Member: He failed at his exams.

Mr. Caron: And when the Queen Mother went by, so close to the people, a woman held up her baby and the Queen Mother went up to the child and patted it. Imagine the feelings of this mother seeing the sovereign of Canada go up to her baby.

Now the same thing could happen again. I hope that during the visit of the Queen who, we know, loves simplicity we ourselves will be unassuming and remain within the bounds of moderation in the matter of receptions or gifts. Indeed, I hope the gifts that will be presented to her will be typically Canadian. For instance, she could be offered volumes of folklore both in English and in French, also some sculpture; for there are many well known carvers in French or English Canada, or among Indians or Eskimos. The Queen might be given something really Canadian which she would enjoy taking home and be proud to show close friends who visit her at Buckingham Palace. Let us keep in mind that our people are glad to see the Queen, but that they would be sorry if expenses were unduly high, particularly when we are going through a depression like the present one.

In the speech from the throne there was a reference to Berlin and to the difficult international situation. To my mind the Prime Minister and the other ministers were right to mention it, because we are living under constant tension and difficulties, throughout the world, far from disappearing, seem to be growing instead. The main reason for this state of affairs, is, I think, that there has been steady adherence to the old principle of pagan Rome: "If you want peace, prepare for war."

Oh, I do not want to say that we should neglect our defences. There must be a modicum of defence. If only we sought to apply the golden rule to our international and domestic relations, which Christ taught us when he was among us, we could spread some of the kindness which should grace man. I believe that in time we would succeed in making this a better world, where it would no longer be necessary to spend billions and billions for the country's defence. Those billions would be earmarked for the welfare of our population, and for those peoples in the world who now are suffering from hunger and from cold.

Reference is made in the speech from the throne to economic assistance to under-developed nations. Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party has always been in favour of helping under-developed countries. Yet, I recall that during a certain election campaign, our Conservative friends in the province of Quebec were shouting at the Ottawa Liberals: "Ottawa gives to foreigners." Well, since these people have been here, the federal government has increased subsidies and gifts under the Colombo plan. We have congratulated them for it and we still congratulate them. And even at the Montreal conference, I mean the commonwealth economic conference, I believe the Minister of Finance pledged himself to increase up to $700 million, over three years, the assistance we could give to under-developed countries, both within the commonwealth and in the rest of the world. And yet, not one of these gentlemen was heard criticizing what they formerly reproached the Liberals with doing. Ministers, no less than ordinary members, have kept mum on this matter. Yet, once again, we Liberals are going to approve this assistance. Liberals favour the idea because they believe that help to under-developed countries is a principle of Christian charity which must spread throughout the world.

Likewise increased has been assistance to universities. Did any of these gentlemen rise in further criticism of this policy as applied at the time we were in power? Oh no; silence is golden when you are in power.

We all know that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough), is a charming, sweet, amiable and agreeable person, whom we all like to meet; but we also know her to be ultra-British, and to be bodily in Canada, while her mind is in England. Recently she stated that our national anthem is not "O Canada", but "God Save the Queen". The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) voiced his approval. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think when we hear "God Save the Queen", we can only look upon it as an anthem purely designed for royalty. It is not even a national anthem. It is greater than a national anthem, for it sings the glories of royalty, and it is also a religious hymn, containing an appeal to divine guidance and the Lord's protection for our sovereign, whereas "O Canada" is truly a national anthem, since it sings the greatness of our country, a country that has now come of age.

Canada has come of age. No longer is it a colony as in the days of Sir John A. Macdonald, or even those of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Today we can walk alone, unassisted, without being held by the hand. Have we heard a single protest from the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois), from the Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche), and from other members, from the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley)—he is not here at the moment—from the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), that great Conservative chieftain for the province of Quebec? Not yet. Why? It is, I believe, because the Prime Minister has chosen his Quebec ministers among the yesmen, rather than men who are able to take a stand.

Mr. Asselin: May I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Caron: Please do.

Mr. Asselin: Does the hon. member recall the statement made by the Minister of Defence Production regarding the statement made by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, when that statement was made?

Mr. Caron: I shall reply to that at once. The Minister of Defence Production said that he would be in a position to talk after he had consulted his colleagues in the house. He has consulted them, but has not replied yet.

Mr. Tremblay: That is not at all what he said.

Mr. Caron: Could the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) repeat exactly what he has just said? I did not catch his remark.

Mr. Tremblay: In due course.

Mr. Caron: I appreciate the fact that the hon. member is not intelligent enough to remember his own words.

Mr. Johnson: Just look who is talking about intelligence!

Mr. Caron: I appreciate too that the hon. member would wish to come to the defence of the member for Roberval!

Mr. Johnson: He is a nice chap. Could it be that you are talking like this at the instigation of the member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis)?

Mr. Caron: I do not mean to whisper sweet nothings to him.

Mr. Johnson: We shall refer the matter to justice Léger. There will be another inquiry on morality.

Mr. Caron: He is a charming fellow.

Mr. Johnson: We can't say as much of you.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, if I have offended the hon. member for Roberval, I am sorry.

I hope that Quebec members in the cabinet will let us know of that reaction, at least before the end of this session.

The speech from the throne also mentions the economic conference. Yet we had been told that the conference had been successful. We heard criticism from Great Britain and from all over the place, about that famous conference. It was promised that such and such a thing would be applied here or there, but we have heard no authoritative statement that the economic conference had really been a success. However, this morning the hon. member for Essex East clearly showed that things were not quite as represented by the Conservative ministers. The speech from the throne also deals with unemployment. I do not propose to dwell unduly on this topic because we will have a chance to bring it up when we come to the estimates of the Department of Labour. Still we know that the right hon. Prime Minister stated on several other occasions, and more particularly in Prince Albert:

(Text):

As long as I am Prime Minister, no man or woman is going to suffer from unemployment so long as public works will provide them the assistance they require.

(Translation):

And what do we hear today? As stated by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) and other ministers: "It is because of the Grits: the Liberal party left us this legacy."

Yet this is not what the right hon. Prime Minister said when he promised that nobody would suffer from unemployment. He did not say: "We shall try to relieve unemployment." He said: "Nobody will suffer from unemployment," though right now hundreds of thousands of people—and not only unemployed themselves, but their families as well—are suffering.

Some time ago I read in the Citizen an article entitled "Winter Work Program", which said:

(Text):

It now seems clear that not many more than 10,000 men will get jobs under the winter works program to which the federal government is contributing 50 per cent of the labour cost.

(Translation):

I also read in the same paper, dated January 13, 1958, an article entitled "The Blame for Unemployment".

(Text):

Although the Diefenbaker government has been in office for about 18 months, Mr. Davie Fulton, the Minister of Justice, the other day tried to place the blame for unemployment on the previous Liberal administration.—His attack on the previous government is purely a symptom of the Conservative party's bankruptcy of ideas.

(Translation):

I also read in Le Droit an article by Mr. Pierre Chaloult, in which he said:

The Minister of Justice knows very well that the government will be judged in 1962, not on the basis of what the Liberals have done or failed to do just before being swept out of office, but on the basis of whether or not prosperity will then have been restored at that time.

That is exactly the point. This morning, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) tried to explain and question figures given by the hon. member for Essex East. He said he was expecting more practical co-operation. To this I replied in the same words used by the present Prime Minister when he was in the opposition. "All we got," he stated, "was criticism". Does the hon. minister expect us to sing his praises?

I have known the Minister of Labour when he was a little more responsible and was not merely trying to play politics with his department; I had much more liking for him at that time.

He now tells us that after the government had realized the situation it took immediate steps to improve it. Yet, I recall that, in 1957, when we told them that the unemployment situation was serious and that immediate measures should be taken to deal with it, when labour leaders throughout the country were also telling the government that the situation was serious and had to be remedied at once, everyone replied then, as now do the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Finance, the right hon. Prime Minister, and all those who have spoken about it: "But this is just ordinary winter unemployment; it is not dangerous". Having done nothing, they are now faced with the worst crisis we have ever known. In fact, had it not been for the Liberal party, which introduced the social legislation now in force in Canada, namely the Unemployment Insurance Act, the unemployment problem would be such that all Canadians would ask the government to resign at once.

I say it is their responsibility, not the opposition's, to find an answer to the problem. The opposition is stating the facts as they are: you have failed to act on your promises, people are feeling the hardship of unemployment, thousands of people go to bed hungry, suffer from the cold, lack proper clothing and proper housing. The Government stands pat and contents itself with saying: "We did not do anything to help them". Go ahead: tell the 700,000 unemployed from coast to coast that you are satisfied, and watch their reaction.

The Minister of Labour appears satisfied with the fact that the figures he gave out are slightly lower than those given by the hon. member for Essex East. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Labour is satisfied to know that there are over 700,000 unemployed in this country, I personally am far from being so and I am thankful for not being a Conservative, if that is Conservative policy.

He also discussed the federal government winter building program. It was not until recently that the province of Quebec authorized the use of funds originating from the federal government—

An hon. Member: Autonomy!

Mr. Caron: And because of this famous autonomy, municipalities were unready, for it requires planning to undertake works that are normally done in the summertime. Since the funds have to be spent before April 30, what will be the position of municipalities that start such works in February or in March? They will have to bear the major part of the cost, because that situation was not foreseen, and there is no provision in the act to extend into the summer or fall the benefit of the 50 per cent contribution, to allow for completion of jobs undertaken before April 30. Still, in the face of this situation, the minister is satisfied. I have had the occasion to meet people who know about municipal affairs. Engineers have told me that the cost of winter works is 12½ per cent higher than that of summer works; that the wages paid to the men for winter works, because of the increased use of machinery, represent about 25 per cent of the total costs. This means that half that percentage is also 12½ per cent. If we so increase the costs of winter works, it is of no help to the municipalities. Then, there is the increased interest of between 1¾ and 2 per cent, resulting from the government's conversion loan. This means that, instead of benefiting from this program, municipalities are losing out, and yet they have at this time to shoulder the cost of public relief, they have to help those who do not qualify for unemployment insurance, and so exceed their budget. All this because the government has failed to act at the proper time. The government claims it does want to help municipalities, but it has nothing new to offer.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if this is what the government is satisfied about, I prefer to be a Liberal and not be content with a situation such as this.

Large public works were also mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, I will have to shorten my remarks. I would have liked to touch upon more very interesting matters, but there is one that I do want to point out now. The speech from the throne mentions that certain civil servants should receive certain government benefits. Well, when I saw that sentence in the speech from the throne, I wondered why it is that the civil servants have been dissatisfied ever since the Conservatives came to power.

Why were they not allowed to meet the cabinet? I wondered if this was not some planned action against the civil servants, on the part of this government; and I need no further proof than the words used by a minister of the crown on October 28, 1958, during the last election campaign. It was the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley) who said:

> We have not yet managed to get the Civil Service Commission boys well in hand, but we will do so; then we shall be the ones to manage this business.

And the Conservatives seem to agree to that. I was wondering whether this represented the views of the Prime Minister and whether the other ministers mean to break up the civil service commission so they could exercise shameless patronage, such as we can see in some provinces. I wondered if this was the reason behind the Prime Minister's reappointment of Mr. Heeney, chairman of the civil service commission, as ambassador to Washington, because Mr. Heeney apparently was too much in favour of granting civil servants bargaining rights. I have asked the question, but the government dares not answer. The ministers dare not answer. When will our members of the province of Quebec answer all those questions? No mention of these matters has been made by those who spoke so far.

Mr. Courtemanche: The hon. member for Hull will not be appointed.

Mr. Caron: I hope that you will speak so as to be understood by the people of this province and of the country as well.

Mr. Courtemanche: None so deaf as those who don't want to hear.

Mr. Tremblay: For twenty-two years they have failed to hear.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Does the hon. member wish to raise a point?

Mr. Allard: May I ask the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) a question?

(Translation):

In 1948 the Liberal cabinet passed an order in council which amended and ratified the military regulations of 1939 providing that when a Canadian soldier had to salute the flag, the national anthem or O Canada, or any other foreign national anthem could be played. I would ask the hon. member for Hull what meaning he gives to this Liberal order in council as to the designation of the national anthem?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I believe I should be allowed to answer the question that has been put to me. I was not here in 1948, but I am not afraid to say that if I had been, I would have opposed any order in council or any action likely, in my estimation, to be prejudicial to Canada or to French Canadians. I would have had the courage to rise, to speak and to vote against such measures.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question. It is not possible to prolong an hon. member's time of speaking by asking questions after he has resumed his seat. The question should be asked when the hon. member is on his feet.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, may I be so bold as to compliment you, not in the exact words of the poet but with a meaning somewhat similar, namely that I admire the way you keep your head while those around you are losing theirs.

To begin with, I wish to commend this government on having installed the simultaneous translation system. I had some doubts as to how it would work, but I for one am very happy to admit that I have enjoyed the simultaneous translation of speeches made by our French-speaking colleagues which I would have missed otherwise, nor would I have time to read the English translation the next day. I think it is a step that will really bring us up to date on everything that is said, and it will be understood by every one at the moment it is said.

I wish, not because it is a habit, to congratulate the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson), the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. He spoke as the voice of the farmer, and I have no doubt that his constituents are proud of him. I also wish to congratulate the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) on his maiden speech. By the way, owing to the simultaneous translation, I was able to follow it as he was speaking. His speech on unity was very timely in these days of stress and difficulty that the free world is facing. We must be united in order to be strong in Canada, and strength like charity begins at home. The place to start the principle of unity is right in this country. I congratulate the hon. member and I forecast a bright future for him in this assembly, as he has displayed eloquence, ability and far-sightedness.

I should like to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on the success he achieved on his tour of countries of the commonwealth. Regardless of the partisan feelings of some Canadians, I think we are all proud of the triumphant reception that was accorded him wherever he went. I believe there is general agreement in Canada that he accomplished a great deal of good; consequently, as a result of his visits and his candid talks with the leaders of the different countries, we shall benefit. Expanding trade and markets of the world should be forthcoming to this country of ours.

I know that from some quarters criticism was directed against the Prime Minister for being out of the country, while those criticizing knew full well that a capable cabinet was left here to run the affairs of the country in his absence. Therefore, I would like, Mr. Speaker, if I am permitted, to put on the record a quotation from a foreign newspaper, shall I say, but a newspaper from across the border, namely the Christian Science Monitor, from the pen of Peter Lyne, parliamentary correspondent. The headline and article reads:

> London Warmed by Diefenbaker
> Climax of Mr. Diefenbaker's visit to the United Kingdom came in London on the night of November 4 when an audience of more than 6,000, including British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan, packed the Albert Hall to hear one of the most fervent and inspiring speeches delivered in a long while on the theme of how the British commonwealth has a tremendous role to play in hurling back the communist attempt to destroy the free world.
> Mr. Diefenbaker as a personality has aroused great interest here and great hope. Millions of Britons have seen on T.V. this handsome, dynamic figure with the blazing eyes of a revivalist. They have been warmed by fresh evidence of this man's 100 per cent enthusiasm for the commonwealth.
> Mr. Diefenbaker scorned the "little faithers". He called on his audience to "banish doubts". He said, "Speaking here in London in this shrine of freedom, I believe that this commonwealth has today a greater appointment with destiny than in all her glorious history".

I quote from the same article:

> When Mr. Macmillan came to speak for Britain he said that from his first meeting with Mr. Diefenbaker he realized that here was a great man.

This in spite of the fact that the opposition tries to belittle him at every opportunity in this house and outside. Mr. Macmillan said: "Great because he has the one vital thing that any great man must have—faith." This, Mr. Speaker, is the opinion expressed in the press of our neighbours across the border.

At the outset I wish also to commend the opposition for its activities throughout the country since the last session. I think Canadians did want to hear what the Tories had done to them. Canadians, of course, were mildly interested to hear that there was a new party still in the incubator and therefore unnamed which, when it hatches, will wipe the Liberals from the political field in Canada. The prophets of this new party say that the Liberals have had it. Canadians were no less interested to hear the challenge accepted by the Leader of the Opposition who stated that the Liberals have not had it and that there was no room for a third party in Canada. I am inclined to agree with him if we judge the matter by the results of the general election last March when one of the splinter groups was wiped out altogether and the other was badly depleted. But the electors of Springfield apparently considered that they both had had it and we know the results. They elected as their representative a member who supports the government and I take this opportunity of congratulating the hon. member and the constituents of Springfield for their good judgment.

There are many projected pieces of legislation outlined in the speech from the throne. I only intend to touch on a few of them. I am happy that the speech from the throne does not neglect agriculture and that additional legislation is forecast. One does not need to be a farmer or an agricultural expert to realize that we have a farm problem. The Leader of the Opposition admits that we have a farm problem, and I should like to quote from an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of October 6, 1958 where under the headline "Pearson Has No Immediate Farm Answer" there is the following:

> Liberal leader Hon. Lester B. Pearson Friday admitted that farmers, caught in a "price-cost squeeze", have a problem but offered no immediate solution. "I recognize that a problem exists. It is clear that agriculture hasn't had a fair share of the income of this country in the last 10 or 15 years."

Who was in power ten or fifteen years ago? I am glad that the Leader of the Opposition recognizes that we have a farm problem, late as this recognition comes. I continue quoting from the same article:

> The former external affairs minister said a special Liberal party committee will formulate a farm policy this winter.

We are looking forward to hearing what this farm policy is. But I am proud of the fact that the government realized that we had a farm problem and realized it from the day it took office in June, 1957. I do not want to be repetitious. I do not want to set out all the emergency legislation that was passed and all that was done by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) and other cabinet ministers in their respective departments. But I do want to point out that this party recognized that the problem existed and put price stabilization legislation on the statute books under which the government is permitted to establish forward prices on the basis of production costs and, where necessary, assist the farmers of Canada through deficiency payments in order to bridge the gap between costs and prices. While the procedure is applied to a limited degree, we have reason to believe that the board has now had time to do the necessary research on costs of production and will give further relief to the agricultural economy.

In my personal and humble opinion it is economic nonsense to expect an individual or organization to dispose of his or their product without any regard to the cost of production. If the primary producers of Canada are obliged to do that very thing and in effect subsidize the consumer, surely they have a right to expect some assistance in the process.

We realize also that continued penetration of the world market is contingent upon our remaining competitive. Losing sight of this breeds a dangerous situation for Canada, and it is high time that labour and industry matched the resourcefulness and efficiency of the farmer in cutting costs to the bone. I am not thinking of the farmers of Marquette alone; I am thinking of the farmers of Canada. Let us, their representatives, try to understand them. They have been fooled so often, they have been misled so often, that today they are impatient, suspicious and distrustful.

A farmer may not be a bookkeeper or an accountant, and even if he is he has not the time to do much bookkeeping, but the farmer realizes that in 1958 it took as much land, as much seed and as much labour to grow 1,000 bushels of wheat as it took in 1948, ten years ago. He also realizes that it cost him more in 1958 to grow 1,000 bushels of wheat than it cost him in 1948, ten years ago, because of the higher cost of labour, the higher price of machinery and the higher cost of repairs.

But he realizes also that his 1,000 bushels of wheat do not buy the same quantity of processed or manufactured goods in 1958 as they did in 1948, ten years ago. Whether these products are from the mines, forests or waters or even if they are products he produces and then repurchases after they are processed, he has to pay a higher price for them. Let us, the farmers' representatives, try to understand them. Let us realize and admit that the prices received by the farmer for wheat during the last ten years have fallen 20 per cent, that the prices of the commodities he has to buy have risen 50 per cent, as some say, or possibly less. That is a moot point. But the point is that we have a farm problem. I am happy that we took emergency steps to alleviate the situation.

I am happy also to note that in the speech from the throne there are indications that other steps will be taken to improve the plight of the primary producers. They trusted us. They sent us here to represent them. I am happy to note that the farmers, and particularly the western farmers, are not going to go into politics. I wish to point out that at its convention last December the Manitoba farm union decided against joining this new party which is still in the making. They almost unanimously refused to tie themselves up with the socialists. I think that this is a commendable step. According to press reports many farmers in Manitoba are surrendering their memberships in the C.C.F. party.

The farmer does have his problems, but he does not leave the farm. As I said, the farmer is desperate and, like a drowning man, he will clutch at a razor in order to try to save himself.

I have said before that labour and industry should try to match the resourcefulness and efficiency of the farmer. Let them cut their costs to the bone, and I am sure we can get rid of these spectres which are causing us so much concern, namely unemployment and inflation, and which have been with us for so long. I see the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) smiling.

Western agriculture and business, of course, will be pleased to note that the government will take some action to alleviate the discriminatory effects of the recent horizontal freight rate increase. This matter has caused the farmer a lot of concern. While the cumulative effect of the recent increases granted to railway workers and the resultant general freight rate increases are still not known, I might just cite one example of the effect of these things. A piece of machinery, if delivered from an eastern factory in Ontario to Manitoba will take a freight rate of $2.69 now as compared with $2.30, and that is a full 17 per cent increase. I am very happy to note that the government is going to try to remedy the situation.

I am sure that Canadians will welcome the statement in the speech from the throne that Canada will strive toward a settlement of outstanding issues that threaten peace. Who does not want peace? We all want peace. I am sure Canadians will welcome the statement that the government is concerned over the soviet attempt to abrogate or change the interallied agreement relating to Berlin. I am sure Canadians will welcome the government's determination to strengthen NATO as a deterrent against further aggression. These are serious problems which face us and they should receive serious consideration, regardless of our party politics.

This reminds me of a statement made by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek on Formosa. May I be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to quote what this gentleman said?

> Our role is to be the lighthouse of freedom—

That is our role on Formosa.

> —a beacon of free people giving hope to those who struggle to regain their freedom in whatever country they may be. Our constant effort must be to remain free and ready so as to hold out hope to others who are in chains.

The western world has so few bastions of freedom left that we must cling to Berlin, to Formosa, to South Korea and these other places. The offensive against us is not only on the economic front but on all fronts, including the military front if necessary. Canadians must be concerned over the mounting costs of our defence department. They are concerned also about our inability to buy the most expensive defensive weapons. We must rely on our neighbour to the south to assist us in that respect.

Not more than 20 years ago we in Canada thought we were absolutely safe from any invader. We thought our front line of defence was the Maginot line and the front line of offence was the river Rhine. We thought we were absolutely safe behind our frozen north. We felt so safe we did not even bother to claim sovereignty over many of the islands to the north of Canada. Today, this situation has changed. We are scanning the skies for an invasion which we hope will never come but which may come. With the help of the United States, we have built the D.E.W. line. It was a costly affair, and it is going to be even more costly to set up more proper defences.

Now, against whom are we spending all this money? Why are we making all these sacrifices? Against whom are we preparing to defend ourselves? We might as well name the enemy we expect to attack us. We should know his habits. We should know his psychology. We should know his achievements in the past and his aims today. Let me, Mr. Speaker, take this house back a bit into history. Over 800 years ago in northeastern Europe a Slavic race was born called Muscovites. This race had the misfortune, from its birth to the present time, of never having the opportunity of learning the concepts of democracy, whether it was ruled by the autocratic, orthodox czar or whether it was ruled by the atheistic dictators of the Kremlin like Khrushchev. From the very first they have applied an expansive and aggressive policy toward their neighbours, and once they conquered their neighbours they introduced a policy of persecution, oppression and political assimilation as well as economic exploitation. Out of the last 200 years the czars or atheistic dictators have devoted 128 years to aggressive wars and only 4½ years to defensive wars.

If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from words written 400 years ago by Dr. Giles Fletcher, the British ambassador to Russia, who wrote:

> They (the subjects of the czars) are kept from travelling that they may learn nothing or see the fashions of the countries abroad.

Today these people behind the iron curtain are also kept from travelling abroad.

I quote again:

> You shall seldom see a Russe a traveller except he bee with some embassadour or that he makes an escape out of his countrie which he can hardly doe by reason of the borders which are watched so narrowly and the punishment for any such attempt which is death if he has been taken and confiscation of all his goods.

Mr. Speaker, this can apply today to the people behind the iron curtain. I know constituents of mine, men whose wives have been left behind the iron curtain. They cannot get their wives or their children to this country. They cannot get permission from the soviet government to bring them in. The situation is that these communist dictators sitting on the czar's throne today ruling over most of Europe and over most of Asia are the ones whose claws or clutches we are afraid of lest they may bend across the north pole and invade us.

Mr. Speaker, it is with understandable emotion that I make reference to this day of January 22. Reference to it can be made only outside the iron curtain but cannot be made in the land of my fathers. Today, January 22, is independence day of the Ukraine. On January 22, 1919, after the fall of the czar's throne, a race of 40 million people after being persecuted, exploited and assimilated for several centuries broke their chains and declared themselves to be free. On January 22, 1919, at the ancient capital of Kiev, in the golden domed cathedral of St. Sophia, through its provisional government these people declared independence. This new republic of the Ukraine was recognized by Great Britain and France at the time. If the Ukraine were free she would be celebrating her forty-first independence day.

Her fate was that of many other peoples who were incorporated into the imperialistic designs of the man or men who succeeded to the throne of the czars. The Ukraine republican army, owing to lack of armaments and medical supplies—whereas the bolshevists inherited all the supplies and armaments they needed from the czar's army—were defeated after a bloody struggle of almost two years; and today you know where the Ukraine is. Only in a free world like Canada can her sons celebrate the event. Only there can survivors of the great days, comrades at arms who fought in that great liberation movement, get together and simply talk about the past.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am not losing sight of the fact that when the throne of the czars fell approximately fifteen other nations arose out of the ruins of the czar's empire. I mention the Baltic states of Estonia and Latvia —and I am speaking of the period right after the first world war—Lithuania and Poland. Poland with its glorious history regained its independence or declared its independence after or toward the end of the first world war. There were also white Ruthenia or Belorussia, Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Caucasia and others. As soon as the bolshevists had strengthened their hold on Moscow they started an aggressive war against all of the states that I have named.

I would say that only Poland and Lithuania and the Baltic states survived. The Ukraine and the others were all conquered back into the fold of a new dictator but of course not without a bloody struggle in each case. So, Mr. Speaker, Poland and Lithuania and the Baltic states survived. Czechoslovakia and Hungary rose on the ruins of the Austro-Hungarian empire. What have we today?

The dictators at Moscow have two classes of oppressed people. One class is those whom they want the world to call Russian peoples and those are fifteen different nations incorporated into the U.S.S.R. They want the world to know them as Russians. However, they are no more Russian people than we are in Canada. The other group are the satellites.

I am going to make a brief reference to those whom they want the world to call Russian peoples. The Baltic states of Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, the Ukraine, white Ruthenia or Belorussia, and Caucasia, they want the world to know them as Russian peoples. They are people with a different language, different history, different customs and different background and are altogether different from the race that originated in northeastern Europe around their capital of Moscow. What a fallacy it is, Mr. Speaker, to call Ukrainians Russian people. It is about time the western world exploded that fallacy. I heard Mr. Mikoyan last Sunday on television. I know the Ukrainian language. I could not understand Mr. Mikoyan. Therefore my language and the language of my people and the language of the Russian people are different. We are different races. Our history is different.

The history of the Ukraine is 200 years older than is the history of Moscow. Our history is steeped in democratic tradition. Our princes intermarried with the royal houses of western Europe. The wife of Harold, who was defeated by William the Conqueror—I just do not remember the date—was a Ukrainian princess. At the same time her sister was the wife of the king of France.

Mr. Speaker, how about the Cossack republic of the Ukraine? When a hetman was elected, he could be deposed. It was a race steeped in democracy, a race that developed a different culture. We drew our religion from Constantinople, we drew our culture and our civilization from the west. What a fallacy to class Ukrainians as Russian people! I am mentioning this about the Ukraine because I am most familiar with Ukrainian history. But I have some knowledge of the history of Georgia, Azerbaijan, Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia and same applies to them. Some may say, "What are you complaining about? The Ukraine is a member of the United Nations." That is true, Mr. Speaker, but do you know why? After the revolution of 1917-1918 even the bolshevists could not erase the name of the Ukraine from the map of Europe, something which the czars had succeeded in doing. Soviets wanted to have a few extra votes in the United Nations assembly. Some may say, "Look at the constitution of the U.S.S.R. The Ukraine can secede, can get out of the union at will." Certainly that provision is in the constitution of the U.S.S.R. The Ukraine, as well as other countries—and there are fifteen of them incorporated into the U.S.S.R.—according to the constitution every one of them should be free to secede. Hungary is a satellite with a certain amount of autonomy. She asked for her freedom, and see what happened to her in 1956. All the so-called members of the free Union of Socialist Soviet Republics are free to have diplomatic intercourse with other nations. Have you ever heard of a Ukrainian ambassador to any country in this world? Have we got one in Ottawa? Have you heard of one from Georgia, from Lithuania or from white Ruthenia or Belorussia—that is another name? No. That constitution is just on paper, just to blind the western world.

There is that other group, the satellites. One would think the satellites were a bit more free behind the iron curtain, and to a certain extent they are. These people had held on to their independence from the end of the first world war, to the second world war, but are they free? Hungary asked for freedom and any Canadian's blood still boils at the thought of all these innocent, unarmed men and harmless women and children being crushed by soviet tanks. I am proud that Canada opened its doors and that Canadians opened their hearts to these Hungarian refugees.

What about Poland, that proud nation? Is Poland free? These people have a glorious history. These people were very powerful at one time. How is their church? How is it being persecuted? How free are they to secede and get out of the clutches of the soviet regime? How free is East Germany? Where are the free elections in any one of these satellites?

It is easy enough to ask the west to get out of Berlin. Is there anybody on earth who can ask Comrade Khrushchev to get out of East Germany? Is there anyone on earth powerful enough to ask him to get out of Poland, to get out of Hungary and to get out of the Ukraine? Is there? I throw out this challenge to the world. This is our potential enemy. This is why we are spending millions —to meet the insatiable greed of the dictator who has swallowed up most of Europe, most of Asia and extended his clutches towards the free democracies.

Mr. Speaker, I hope hon. members will forgive me if I was carried away. I warned them that the subject of the freedom of these peoples—a freedom which we can discuss in this free world—has certain emotional effects, more so, probably, since I am descended from a race which is 45 million strong and which is today behind the iron curtain. And the dictator wants to call them Russian people. The same applies to them all. There are 15 of them, as I have said. And the same applies to the satellites.

It is true enough that these people fought among themselves at some time or other in history, but I think they have learned their lesson and are prepared to bury the hatchet. I think they are prepared, when the time comes, to take up the call for freedom and work together. I do not hope for war. I do not want war. I do not want my son who is in the Canadian army right now to be sacrificed. But when the time comes—and God forbid it should come—I hope we are ready, I also hope that those people behind the iron curtain have not lost their will to live, because the dictator is trying to break their will and stamp out every thought of independence or freedom in their hearts or soul. I hope that they still have some of the fire for freedom burning in their hearts because they are our potential allies. If we forget that, we are lost.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) I am going to take advantage of the new arrangement making possible instantaneous translation. Normally I try to say a few words in the French language, but unfortunately I am still not as proficient in French as I am in English and I will therefore take advantage of this new invention and make my remarks in the English language.

I should like to add my congratulations to those which have already been extended to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address. I should like also to say a word about the remarks made by a couple of hon. members on the government side, in particular the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk), both of whom seemed to be very aware of certain newspaper reports which emanated from the province of Manitoba recently. I remember a newspaper report which emanated from Ottawa during the March campaign in which it was said that the Ontario C.C.F. party has resigned themselves to the fact that they were going to lose the Timmins seat to the Conservatives, and I suggest there is no more credence to be placed on the reports which they are reading now than there was at that time. In fact, I think it would be much more to their advantage if they referred to newspaper reports from the province of New Brunswick, because I see that a member of their party is reported as having said in the Ottawa Journal of January 8 as far back as December that he could no longer remain a supporter of the government and watch his constituents suffering because of the government's unfulfilled employment promises. So I think the government had better watch what is happening within its own ranks.

I was also interested in the announcement, after parliament has only been sitting for about a week, that two of our major problems have already been solved. I am referring again to the hon. member for York-Scarborough who indicated that something to the tune of 300,000 new jobs had been provided in the housing field, and of course, to the hon. member for Marquette who has solved the farm problem.

With regard to the provision of 300,000 jobs in housing, I should like to compliment the government. While I do not believe the hon. member's figure—he said it was a conservative estimate but I would be more inclined to think it was a Progressive Conservative estimate—I do think that this has been the government's most successful venture. This project to create more jobs in housing has, I believe, done more good than any other project on which the government has embarked.

As far as the hon. member for Marquette is concerned and his contention that the farm problem had been solved, on the face of it there is great difficulty in disputing that fact. Certainly the people in the farming riding of Springfield were not interested in sending a farmer down here. They preferred to send a dentist so we can only assume their problems are not too great.

The program of the government which has received the most attention this fall has been the program to relieve unemployment. When we examine it carefully I am afraid we must count it as an extremely severe disappointment. It has been said that as a result of this program 10,000 people would be provided with employment and various other figures have been cited. But certainly 10,000 in the face of present day unemployment is not much of a solution to the problem.

We have heard comments tossed back and forth across this chamber about the Liberal shelf of public works projects and that when the Conservatives got there the cupboard was bare and there was no tool kit and so they could not build one of their own. The limited attempt at introducing public works projects points up clearly one essential fact and it is that public works programs are not an adequate measure of relief for unemployment in this present day. Because of the changes that have transpired in the last 25 years hastily improvised programs of this nature are a most inadequate solution. The time has come when the government of Canada must devise new answers to this old problem. With machines taking the place of manpower in public works projects such as the building of roads, sewer lines and water lines these programs do not relieve unemployment to the extent that was possible a few years ago and I would suggest that the government cast about for new ideas in its efforts to seek relief for unemployment.

I should like to compliment the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Stinson) and the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton) on the courageous way they brought into this house the comparative study on education standards in Canada and the Soviet union. I agree with the hon. gentlemen that the report reveals facts that should not be concealed. These are things that must be faced and I believe the Canadian people, if jarred to consciousness, will face up to the situation. I compliment the hon. gentlemen because this is a question which has held my interest for many years. Some hon. members may recall that when I made my maiden speech in this house as reported at page 191 of Hansard of October 27, 1957, my remarks were similar to those of the hon. members to whom I have referred although my presentation of the situation was not as well documented as were theirs.

I have grown weary, as I believe many people in Canada have, of the everlasting bombardment across the floor of this house with the Liberals blaming the Conservatives and the Conservatives blaming the Liberals for every situation with which parliament is confronted. This type of behaviour is becoming stale and certainly it is accomplishing nothing in terms of solving present problems. I do not believe that the Canadian people, with the election three or four years away, are interested in hearing disputes concerning who is to blame for the present mess. The time of parliament would be better spent finding solutions to these questions. The government should not hide behind the fact that the opposition is prophesying gloom and doom whenever hon. members of the opposition point out weaknesses in the government's policies.

I wish to turn now to an urgent question that faces us at this time. I refer, of course, to the strike at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Montreal extending over the past five or six weeks. I am convinced that this is more serious than many of us realize. While it produces English programs I am informed that the C.B.C. in Montreal is the largest producer of French language programs not just in Canada but the world. I think that many of us fail to appreciate that in producing these French programs the C.B.C. in Montreal is producing one-half of the Canadian culture in this medium. We have excellent studios in Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and elsewhere but these produce only English programs, one-half of the Canadian culture in this field. After all, this is a bilingual country with a dual culture. Through the work of the C.B.C. Montreal studios Canadian television truly represents our culture in both its aspects.

This strike was not something that transpired overnight; there has been a long, steady process leading up to the present situation. Many of the producers concerned in this strike were in on the ground floor of the C.B.C. and built it up to what it is today, some of them working 16, 18 or 20 hours to make the network what it is. Slowly over the years there has also been built up on their part a sense of insecurity and frustration which is finding expression in this form. It has caused a section of management, in fact, to feel that in order to protect themselves they must organize along trade union lines.

To demonstrate that they are justified in doing so I wish to read an extract from the Quebec regulations, S.R.Q. 1941, chapter 162, article 2 of section 1, which states:

> Twenty persons or more, Canadian citizens, engaged in the same profession, the same employment or in similar trades, or doing correlated work having for object the establishing of a determined product, may make and sign a memorandum setting forth their intention of forming an association or professional syndicate.

That is very clear. It is also clear that the real issue in this dispute is not wages or working conditions or the normal things we generally find in disputes of this nature. The point at issue is very clearly summed up by an article taken from L'Action Catholique as reported in the Ottawa Citizen of January 21, 1959, in these words:

> The paper insisted that the crux of the problem was whether the right of association should be allowed. The paper also believed that the strike would open the public's eyes to the need for revamping labour legislation which, far from protecting the right of association, restrains it and in many cases even suppresses it.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the crux of the dispute: do they or do they not have the right of association. This strike has been honoured by many other unions involved in the membership of C.B.C. employees. I am informed that as recently as last evening one of these unions which refused to cross a picket line took a secret ballot among its members and 92 per cent still favoured not crossing the picket line and so endangering the keeping of the peace and possibly causing disturbances.

The latest move on the part of management in this case, that of intimidating the wives of these employees by sending telegrams and contacting them by telephone, is a move that is worthy of Mr. J. Y. Murdoch in his infamous strike at Murdochville but certainly is not worthy of this government or any of its crown corporations.

I would like to turn for a moment to some matters in my own riding. Again I would like to compliment the government on the fact that they left open the door this winter for the provinces to come in on a 50-50 basis with the federal government, which they did, on roads opening up new country. I am also very pleased that finally the Ontario provincial government has got around to taking advantage of this offer and at the present time roads are in process of being cut. I am thinking of the road between Foleyet and Chapleau, which will join the Porcupine gold-mining area with Sault Ste. Marie and the United States across the new bridge. This is going to open up a vast new territory which will be a mecca for tourists.

At this time I should like to invite any hon. members, and particularly the hon. members on the government side, to visit my riding. Do not wait until prior to the next election before you come into my riding. You are welcome at any time. This part of the country is completely dotted with lakes, rivers and forests. It is a fishermen's paradise; it is filled with moose. Moose is one of the greatest exports we have in the north at the present time. This will also open up a loop by which American tourists can come up and visit the mining areas, and I am sure both United States and Canadian tourists will be interested in visiting the fabulous Porcupine gold-mining camp. Either this summer or the summer after will be an excellent time because the communities of South Porcupine and Porcupine will celebrate their fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the town during the summer and next year it will be followed by the town of Timmins itself.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there is one blot on the present optimistic outlook for the Porcupine area and it is one that this house should not only be interested in but, in fact, has a responsibility for. I, of course, am referring to the stand of the gold mines at the present time in the labour dispute which has been going on up in that area for two years. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, and probably hon. members will recall, the efforts of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and myself last year during the passage of the bill to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. We tried in every way possible to convince the government that it should keep a few strings attached to the increase in the gold subsidy. I think the evidence I can give the house today will prove that perhaps the government should have listened a little longer to us at that time. Oh, I recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) quoted a letter as a final squelch last year to show that the government had in fact solved the problem up there. This letter is contained in Hansard of August 18, at page 3742. It includes the following resolution:

> Proposed by H. Brunette
> Seconded by W. Brewer
> "That a letter of thanks and appreciation be sent to the Honourable Donald M. Fleming, Minister of Finance, and that this commission go on record on behalf of all gold mining communities of Canada in supporting the announcement of a 25 per cent increase in the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, and that this commission is vitally interested in the longevity and continued extension of the said act on a longer term basis, so that gold mining communities may have a better opportunity for long-range planning."
> Again, Honourable sir, we thank you and your colleagues, the federal government, for your kind interest in alleviating in some way the problem facing the citizens of gold mining communities.

One thing the minister forgot to mention that day, Mr. Speaker, was that the mover of this motion was the brother of the defeated Conservative candidate and the seconder, Mr. W. Brewer, was the secretary of the Timmins Conservative association. Therefore, I do not know what sort of a letter they expected from those two gentlemen, but certainly they could not expect to get a very critical one.

The last time the gold miners in the Timmins area received an increase was away back in 1954, just at the completion of a strike of about eight months. Since that time the federal government has paid over $10 million in subsidies to the nine gold mines covered by the bargaining unit in Timmins; in fact, almost $5,750,000 to the two mines of Hollinger and McIntyre alone. As I said, that is since the last increase was given to the miners. As hon. members will recall, during the last session the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act was extended for another two years and a 25 per cent increase was also given, retroactive to the first of 1958. In all fairness to the members of the government I am sure that most of them thought, as most of the municipal officials and in fact the people of the Porcupine camp thought, that in making this move to assist the gold mining industry some of it would automatically brush off on the miners. Unfortunately, that has not happened. Despite this increase, despite this extension, not one cent has been offered to the miners in those nine mines covered by union agreements. At the Hollinger mine, for example, negotiations have been going on since September, 1957. Last year, following through the normal procedure of bargaining in this province, the miners took their case to a conciliation board and that board sat in Timmins in the month of June. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, they were sitting on the very day that the proposed increase was announced in this house.

This board did not make any snap decision. It weighed every factor very carefully; in fact, it sat on its report for a matter of three months. The report was not delivered until September of last year. I would like to list a few of the things recommended by the majority report of the conciliation board which was signed by the chairman and the union nominee:

> 1. Two-year agreement;
> 2. Forty-two hour work week in the first year of the agreement and a 40-hour week incorporated in the second year of the agreement.

They are still working a 44-hour week in that area. I continue with the recommendations:

> 3. Five cents per hour increase in pay and that this payment should be made retroactive.

This was to be at a time negotiated between the two parties. I continue:

And adjustments to be made upon the reduction of the work week, to guarantee no loss in pay.

4. Four cents an hour shift differential for afternoon shift and six cents for night shift.

5. A recommendation of six statutory holidays. With the recommendation that the holiday pay be the equivalent of 20 hours for eight hours work on such days.

6. That there shall be an extra week vacation for a total of three for all employees with a total of 15 years or more seniority.

7. The board recommended that a pension plan should be negotiated and to become effective on the second year of the two-year agreement.

Of course, they have no pension plan. I continue:

8. The board recommends that the contribution to a medical plan would be on the 50-50 basis.

9. The board recommends a check-off of union dues.

As you can very well imagine, they have no union security there. This was the recommendation of the conciliation board and it amounts to a package deal of well over 20 cents an hour. In that report the chairman had this to say:

In the opinion of many, the only real value from a report from a board of conciliation is to consider a likely, or at least possible, realm of settlement and to point out a position to which each party might come. With this in mind the only matters which have been considered in preparing this report are the ability of the company to pay and the adjustments which might be accepted by each party in an effort to decrease the discrepancies in monetary matters and working conditions which exist between these employees and those in industry in general in Ontario.

With reference to emergency gold mining assistance, when the act was originally passed it was supposed to be for the miners of the mining municipalities. That was the announced intention of the legislation. When the act was passed it was not supposed to be just for the gold mines. It has been stated on different occasions that its purpose is to assist gold mining municipalities. This is what the chairman of the board had to say:

This improvement was stated to be to promote the well-being of our northern gold mining communities. One can hardly comprehend the view of the commitment which does not also assist the employees living in the community, but only to the corporate entity which is geographically located.

The mines have just been granted a 25 per cent increase by the federal government and yet they refuse even to recognize the report of the board. They have refused even to discuss it or negotiate on the basis of it. So the union, in an effort to try to get things settled without having to go on strike again, voluntarily moved away from the report. The representatives of the union said, "All right, if you will not talk about that, what will you talk about?" A meeting was then held with the chief conciliation officer for Ontario but so far nothing has developed from the point of view of a settlement.

But here is something that has developed over these months which I think is of vital importance, particularly in view of the letter I mentioned a while ago which was put on Hansard last year by the minister. I have here a resolution passed by the Timmins town council on January 5, 1959. It was moved by McDonald and Burnette and, incidentally, Mr. Burnette is the defeated Conservative candidate. The resolution reads as follows:

That Timmins council go on record as supporting collective bargaining and suggest that management recognize collective bargaining and sit with the representatives of their employees and settle these disputes at the earliest possible date so that the uneasiness that prevails in this area at this moment be done away with.

Along the same lines, the union also had a meeting with the local member of the provincial legislature, who is minister of lands and forests in the Ontario government. From a report of the meeting in the Timmins Press of January 17, 1959, I read the following:

Lands and forests minister J. W. Spooner told a 16-man delegation of the united steelworkers of America last night he would meet with labour minister Daley and Louis Fine, chief conciliation officer, Monday, to urge them to request top management of McIntyre Porcupine Mines to negotiate with the union. Mr. Spooner referred to existing relations between the union and McIntyre. He said conditions "are not good for the workers involved or for the community". "There should be a willingness", he said, "on the part of parties involved to meet and negotiate. There should be no war of nerves."

Referring to collective bargaining, Mr. Spooner stated it is the law of the land—that should not be a question but should be understood by everyone.

That is the situation, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier, the miners have not received one cent of this increase that is supposed to benefit the gold mining communities. These nine mines have received over $10 million in such assistance. I say that it is the responsibility of members of the cabinet and all members of the house to use any influence they have in any way they can to see that the money which has been voted for this purpose winds up being used for the purpose for which it was intended in the first place.

Mr. A. R. Webster (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, like others who have spoken before and, I am sure, like others who will follow me, I want to welcome as warmly as I can the new members who took their seats for the first time last Thursday. At least one of the new members has made a great contribution already in making the members of the house as a group easier to look at. I am sure that in the months and years ahead all the new members will play a full role in the business of governing our country.

To one of them, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), has already gone the honour of seconding the address in reply to the speech from the throne. As an English speaking member from the province of Quebec, I can only agree as strongly as possible with the sentiments regarding national unity so well expressed by him. In past years much lip service has been paid to national unity, and I think most of us will agree that since the war great improvements have taken place. I am proud to be a supporter of a government which is carrying this tradition forward in practical terms that will have everlasting benefits to the Canadian nation.

I must also congratulate the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) for his able and articulate speech in moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

January, as we all know, is the month both for looking forward and looking backward. Before discussing current affairs I think it only fair to congratulate the government and the house for the legislation processed during the last session. This legislation has been criticized in the past and is being criticized again during this debate. But I would remind my friends to my right and to your left, Mr. Speaker, that the people have already passed judgment on the work of the government and parliament. There have been four by-elections, and candidates who based their appeal on the policies of the Progressive Conservative party and the record of the government in its short period of office won three of the four elections. That is answer enough for the criticism but it is no reason for complacency on the part of the government or any member of the House of Commons.

The speech from the throne is evidence enough, I believe, that the government is not complacent. To my mind it is a workmanlike document. There is a lot of work ahead of us. But what impressed me most about the speech from the throne was the tone of confidence. The country and the government face many problems, many difficult decisions. But surely if the government was not confident how could it expect the people of the country to think, to work and act confidently?

Before I deal with other items, I know the people of St. Antoine-Westmount, whom I have the honour of representing in the house, would want me to express their pleasure in anticipating the visit of Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip to this country for six weeks. We were pleased to note that Her Majesty is going to be seen in areas in which no monarch has been seen before. The visit to the Yukon and Northwest Territories should be a great inspiration to the people on the Canadian frontier.

But, of course, we in Montreal were greatly gratified, despite some malicious rumours, to find that Her Majesty and Prince Philip will spend two days in our city. They will arrive and leave aboard the royal yacht Britannia, which serves to underline the great purpose of this visit and that is to open the St. Lawrence seaway. I was interested, as I am sure many Canadians were, in the suggestion of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) on Tuesday that, if necessary, there should be two official ceremonies opening the seaway. I quite agree. I recognize the necessity of co-operating with the United States in some kind of international ceremony, no doubt along the international border. However, the seaway does begin at Montreal; much of the work was done along the south shore, and the seaway was developed by Canadian initiative. I think that this initiative, and our national pride, make it imperative that Her Majesty preside at some all-Canadian ceremony in the Montreal area.

I am glad to see that such wide use is being made of the Britannia in this tour. The progress of this beautiful yacht through to Chicago and the head of the lakes will dramatize to the world that Canada has a new coastline. It will also give to many of the lakeside communities a unique opportunity to be host to the Queen and her consort prince.

The seaway has always been important to Montreal, even when that particular stretch of water was only passable by canoe bringing furs to trade. Ever since Canada decided to go ahead with the construction of a 27-foot deep waterway there has been a great debate raging in Montreal. Fears have been expressed that much of the traffic which has been the backbone of Montreal's development and prosperity would pass the city by. But these, in my opinion, are short-sighted fears. The seaway will be a great spur to the development of the entire Canadian economy, and in a stronger and growing economy Montreal will have no place to go but up.

We, in Montreal, are pleased to see that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) does not share the views of the pessimists. Montreal harbour is getting new piers, new grain elevators, new storage sheds and the deeper berths and turning basins required to share fully in the benefits of the seaway. As a result of the Queen's visit and the opening of the seaway this is going to be a great year for Montreal and for Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we have already heard a great deal in this debate about the state of the Canadian economy. We have heard the government damned for not doing more about unemployment and damned, in almost the same breath, for not curbing inflationary tendencies. The opposition seems to want its cake and eat it too. When this government took office unemployment was already mounting and foreign trade was dropping off. Our trade deficit was higher than it had ever been before.

This government took the necessary steps, and today we see the results. The recession is ending with far less impact on the Canadian economy than it has had on other economies, peoples and their standards of living. Recovery has reached the point where many responsible authorities are talking about the threat of inflation. This talk is positive proof of the end of the recession. Winter unemployment, while still serious and worrisome, is showing a much slower rate of increase than it did last year. Our overseas trade is picking up.

In this connection I think we should note the benefits already flowing from the Montreal conference on trade and economic affairs. Trade barriers between Canada and the United Kingdom have been reduced and similar improvement can be expected in so far as other members of the commonwealth are concerned. This government gave notice then, and has repeated it in the speech from the throne, that it intends, on Canada's behalf, to continue shouldering the responsibility for increased economic assistance to the underdeveloped nations. The long term benefits of such a program are impossible to assess. We are meeting the communist threat of expansion on its own terms, and we are building the ability of other countries to become, in the years ahead, important customers of Canadian products.

If we should continue to trade only with countries enjoying roughly the same standards of living, then there could be no hope for less fortunate countries to improve themselves to the point where they may become important markets for our surplus products. We cannot remind ourselves too often, when we think of international trade, that we cannot get rich taking in each other's washing.

There is one other paragraph in the speech from the throne to which I should like to refer. It states, and I quote:

> Discussions are taking place with the government of the United States to enable Canadian industry to share in the production of equipment being procured by the United States for joint defence purposes.

I noted with interest that the delegation from this house and the other place which was in Washington recently discussed this subject with members of the United States congress. There were some suggestions at that time, again I think by the hon. member for Laurier, for a revival of the Hyde Park wartime agreement. Under this agreement, negotiated as you will remember between the then prime minister, the Right Hon. Mackenzie King, and the then president, Franklin D. Roosevelt, the United States placed defence orders worth close to $1,500 million during the second world war. Some of us seem to have forgotten that the principles set out in the Hyde Park agreement were carried into the post-war period of reconstruction and conversion of industry to peacetime tasks. This was accomplished through an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States in 1945.

I want to underline that this did not supersede the Hyde Park agreement, but only carried the same principles forward. Then, five years later, in 1950, Canada and the United States agreed on a statement which has become known as the principles for economic co-operation. One of these principles is, in effect, that the United States and Canada should co-ordinate their requirements, their production and their procurement, to get the best production for common defence. These principles are still in effect, Mr. Speaker. There seems to me to be no need for any new statement of principles, the negotiation of which would only take much valuable time. I commend to the government a policy of underlining to the United States, in the most forceful terms possible, this 1950 statement of principles for economic co-operation.

There have been suggestions already that the actions of this government in demanding consideration for Canadian industry are having an effect in Washington. A story last week in the Financial Post set out that the Pentagon in Washington has asked its suppliers to let Canadian firms tender on the same basis as United States companies.

In Montreal we are hopeful, of course, that the United States will make a decision to buy the CL-44 aircraft developed by Canadair. The feeling is that this four-engined long range aircraft, a leader in its type, would be ideal for use as a picket radar plane carrying the radar warning system far out over the Atlantic flank of the North American defences.

There is one other item in the defence field which I feel should be underlined. I was happy to hear the Prime Minister (Mr.

Diefenbaker) refer on Monday night to lobbies. Too often I think Canadians, and particularly members of parliament, have been too sanctimonious. We like to think that there are not any lobbies in this country, that we are free of the odious reputation that has been attached to lobbies and their pressures on government in Washington. We all know this simply is not so. I think it is time this was made quite clear. Every one of us knows he is subjected to hard and repeated lobbying on every conceivable subject that comes before us and some that do not. We hear the excuse from the United States that powerful lobbies there would not stand for it if the Pentagon decided to order a Canadian fighter aircraft; that they influence decisions against Canadian lead and zinc producers and against Canada's gas and oil industry.

By admitting that we, too, have lobbies and pressures upon us here in Ottawa, I believe our bargaining hand with the United States will be strengthened. It is time that people both inside this country and outside it knew that there are in Canada pressure groups which must be reckoned with.

There are other topics in the throne speech with which I might deal, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to conclude with just one more thought. As members of parliament and as legislators we should find it interesting and valuable to check this speech from the throne against those of thirty years ago. Then this parliament seemed largely concerned with developing the physical assets of the country. Today we have before us a large body of legislation relating to improvements in the social welfare of our people. We are concerned too, of course, with the economic necessity of developing our natural resources to provide the strong economic base for these social welfare programs.

Canada is fortunate in its relative youth. As a result we have not had the same opportunities to waste our natural resources. Today we must be careful to see that these resources are developed, not primarily for the benefit of the few but for all the people and that they make a contribution to this country on which a better standard of living for everyone can be based.

With good planning, intelligent execution and the resources we have, Canada can remain and develop as one of the world's most prosperous nations. My hope for this session is that the work we accomplish here—the criticism heard and the defence made; the legislation discussed and passed—will contribute substantially and significantly to the achievement of this goal.

[Mr. Webster.]

(Translation):

Mr. Adrien Meunier (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, rising today in this house, I join with the members who spoke before me in congratulating the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Mr. Jorgenson and Mr. Fortin). Both, by the lofty tone of their speeches, and the ideas embodied in them, have given evidence of their ability.

The debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne gives members of this house an opportunity to make known to the government the needs of their constituency and the living conditions of the people they represent. It is for Canadians an invaluable opportunity which allows them to give an accounting of their needs and thus to contribute to the stability and security of Canada.

We live in a troubled world where peace is constantly threatened, and the most vital need of a nation is after all, to feel that within itself and in neighbouring countries there reign the peace and the security to which they are entitled. The previous government, like this government, has indeed made it its concern to give this nation peace and security and, jointly with other nations, to ensure world peace. I hope this government will continue to pursue this policy and that its efforts will soon be rewarded.

As I said a while ago, people need and crave peace. But international peace is not enough; one must feel within himself security and inner peace. The people of Canada want full employment. They want to earn a decent living for themselves and their families.

At this time, the country faces two very serious problems, unemployment and inflation. When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) was making his speech, some ministers of this government asked him which of the two problems he considered the more serious. I must draw the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that it is not up to the Leader of the Opposition to dictate the government's policy because the government has been elected to administer the country's business, and to choose the necessary ways and means to remedy the prevailing uneasiness. We have known times when, under Liberal rule, there was some uneasiness affecting this country, and the government of the day took action to correct the situation.

We should keep in mind those four years, years of reconversion, when jobs had to be provided for returning men. The Liberal government at that time administered the country's economy so that each could return to civilian life and easily find a job.

To ease unemployment, the government has suggested winter projects for which it undertakes to pay the municipalities half the wages required for such projects as sidewalks, streets, waterworks, sewers and municipal parks. Now are these projects practicable for all municipalities in Canada and, moreover, do those municipalities have the necessary funds to carry out this work?

Representing a riding of the city of Montreal, I do not hesitate to say that none of the projects listed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), in the brief he addressed to us on November 20 last, can be carried out.

The city of Montreal is now facing a problem of snow removal which absorbs all its energy and affects its budget. It is impossible to build sidewalks when there is a foot of snow on the ground. It is also impossible to lay sewers when the streets are bordered by seven foot snow banks and more snow is falling every day. It is impossible to clear park areas that have been filled with snow removed from the streets. Also, most of Quebec municipalities lack the means to undertake such work in winter because labour would be more expensive than in summer and the share put at their disposal by the federal government would be absorbed by the extra cost of labour.

The government is perfectly aware of the financial position of municipalities, and of their ability to pay, for it summoned them to a conference, here in Ottawa, last fall, to assess their needs; and nearly all of them told the government how hard-pressed they were for funds. This winter works program is but a second-rate stop-gap for those who suffer, and will in no way relieve the present situation.

It is inconceivable that, in a country as rich as ours, there should still be people who have to beg for their daily bread and live in miserable conditions. In view of this alarming situation, His Eminence Cardinal Leger, Archbishop of Montreal, had really every reason to suggest the setting up of public works programs in order to alleviate the misery of those who are suffering, and to appeal to the charity of all citizens of Montreal to raise the funds required for the implementation of such projects.

This winter works program came too late for municipalities which wanted to take advantage of it to get ready for it. It was announced at the end of October by the Prime Minister, and the municipalities got the government offer in writing only about two weeks later.

In the house, last July, when the estimates of the Minister of Labour were being voted, we pressed him with questions about his plans for the relief of unemployment during the coming winter. The hon. minister announced nothing. If he had then and there announced his program, the municipalities could have got ready and the jobs provided would have relieved the hardship now being suffered by my fellow citizens in the province of Quebec, especially in Montreal, where there are 80,000 unemployed.

The government also faces another paradoxical situation: inflation. While, on the one hand, unemployment is rife, prices are soaring and no one can tell where this dizzy rise will stop.

The government lacks a planned economy and a flexible policy to face the situation. In his annual report, the president of the Royal Bank of Canada refers to that inflation crisis in the following terms:

> Last year, as in previous recession periods, when the economy was on the decline, I recommended tax and price cuts; now, instead of tax cuts which might have spurred business and lowered prices there has been an increase in government expenditures expenses.

In fact, it is to be wondered whether these government expenditures have not contributed to inflation.

Last year, during the 1957 session, the government had hundreds of millions of dollars voted for home building, believing that such expenditures would relieve unemployment and improve the standard of living of the people of Canada.

There is no doubt that this industry has achieved part of its objective, but it is none the less true that the price of land, and of materials, has increased to such an extent that the selling price of a house has become a problem for the builder. Besides, Mr. Speaker, new housing has become so expensive for the builder that he has to rent it, and cannot find a buyer because he is asking too big a price for it. Yet he has to rent it at that price if he wants to break even.

In his report on the matter the deputy minister of Public works says that the building industry has increased its production in a spectacular way. On the other hand, Mr. W. N. Shortill, chairman of the Toronto Real Estate Board, also expressed his opinion on the matter, which may be found in the Gazette of January 15 last, when he stated that it is getting harder to sell a house. Mr. Shortill claims that there will be competition in the sale of houses, because the supply is greater than the demand. He claims that there is bound to be a price war in the sale of houses, if building construction is carried on on the same basis in 1959 as it was in 1958.

All those government expenditures have caused inflation and, in my opinion, the government would have been better off in building a limited number of houses each year instead of creating surplus which we now have. In Montreal, many builders have stopped operating because they can't sell the houses they built last summer. I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) will follow up the statement he made recently, to the effect that he would fight inflation by cutting down on government expenditures.

This government does not seem to be alarmed at budget deficits. Thus Monday night, I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) mention that from 1935 to 1957, while the Liberal party was in power, there had been 14 deficits. However, there are justifiable deficits, and others that give cause for alarm. Those mentioned by the Prime Minister under the Liberal administration included years of depression and years of war. At the moment, the country is in the throes of inflation, yet the government records the greatest deficit in Canada's history.

Mr. Speaker, I will only say that the speech from the throne mentions nothing that could give hope to Canadians that the present situation will be corrected.

The Prime Minister recently made a trip, but he has not said yet whether, as a result of the meetings he had during this trip, other markets will be opened to Canadian products. Canada needs an expansion policy, the opening of new markets to sell its products.

Like other members who spoke before me, Mr. Speaker, I heard and read with interest the speech from the member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin). If Quebec is a province like any other, it must play its part in the confederation and co-operate to the greatness of the country.

Since the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne is in a co-operative mood I am sure that he will make use of his resources to settle the thorny issues that have come up between the province of Quebec and the federal government for some 15 years.

These are matters of vital importance and they cannot be neglected indefinitely. The matter of grants to universities is an urgent one. If we want those institutions to achieve the goal for which they were founded, the matter must be settled soon. We all know that education is a provincial matter, but it seems that a grant or aid given unconditionally for the cultural development of a nation does not infringe upon its rights and prerogatives.

The province of Quebec is also interested in the problems of health insurance. If the former federal government initiated this social measure, and if the present government has implemented it, it is because it was a good measure and because the people of Canada wanted it.

Several provinces have joined in, but the province of Quebec has not yet said what it proposes to do in this regard. The people of Quebec, like those of all other provinces, pay heavily for hospital services and provincial participation in this plan would relieve Quebec taxpayers.

The speech from the throne also tells us that further funds will be required for the completion of the trans-Canada highway. This is another question which has been eliciting a negative answer from the province of Quebec for almost 10 years. Is that highway, started by the Liberal government, and which this government is still building, of any use to this country? It is unmistakeably useful in wartime as well as in peace time, and if those amounts of money were used in the province of Quebec, they would alleviate hardship and could provide work for many jobless.

For all those nationwide projects, the Quebec taxpayer has been paying taxes and it is only fair that they should bring dividends to him in improvements which will ensure his security and welfare.

I grant that the opponents of such projects use arguments of questionable validity, but if everybody sticks to his guns and never tries to reach an agreement or an honourable compromise, the population in a province will be indefinitely deprived of invaluable advantages.

If the intention is to play politics with those issues forever, to make a political football out of them and to appeal consistently to emotion, the Quebec taxpayer will in the long run be the loser and feel cheated of his rights.

Again I submit, Mr. Speaker, that none of those matters will be settled by a negative approach, and that among people of good will you can reach an agreement without disregarding fundamental principles.

Another point I should like to mention in my remarks, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the Canadian contribution to the Colombo plan.

Of course we must help underdeveloped countries to build up their economy and, later on, when their expansion is in full swing they will be able to become customers on the international market where we can dispose of our products.

This year, Canada undertook to provide $50 million under this plan. Can we really afford this expenditure, or is Canada making commitments out of all proportions to its finances?

I know that under the Liberal government, when contributions were of the order of 8, 10 and 12 million dollars, Quebec Conservatives criticized these gifts, and labelled them extravagant. I wonder what their attitude is today. Perhaps, in the light of the facts shown to them their opinion has changed, but it would be interesting to know their stand on this matter.

There is also, Mr. Speaker, another matter that I would like to take up with the house, particularly with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), and I refer to the C.B.C. producers' strike in Montreal. We know that the C.B.C. enjoys independent status but is answerable to the Minister of National Revenue. The strike has gone on since December 29, and it appears that neither party is ready to reach agreement with the other. We know that the producers want to have their right of association recognized and that the C.B.C. refuses, on the grounds that they are part of management. We cannot know who is right, because of the little information we have on the matter, but it seems that the minister could at least step in and try to settle the dispute which is crippling the network and depriving part of Quebec people of favourite TV programs.

Several previous speakers have said that the government has no coordinated and definite policy. This is causing concern to the public and besides, it seems that certain cabinet members are making irresponsible statements and spreading confusion on many matters.

Canada has made much headway these last 25 years in the field of national unity, and no one has worked harder and more sincerely to this end than the former Liberal prime minister, the Right Hon. Louis S. St. Laurent.

Now, it happened that, quite recently, two government ministers have made the statement that our national anthem is God Save the Queen. They know perfectly well, however, that Canada has no law nor statute to confirm this. I very much admire our gracious Queen and I like to sing her anthem when it is proper to do so, but it seems to me that when a fact is not clearly established, one must be careful not to wound feelings or create confusion in order to belittle another anthem highly considered throughout Canada and even abroad.

I say abroad because I remember the statement made by the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, here in this house, on March 18, 1954, which appears in Hansard of that date, when he gave a report of his world tour. He said this:

> I want to assure hon. members that everywhere I went as a representative of Canada I was received with enthusiasm and every evidence of friendliness and good will. Everywhere I went I heard "O Canada" sung, and I was always moved and touched at the feeling of pride it gave one to be there as a representative of that country for which the hymn was being sung or played.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what right the ministers of the crown have to proclaim one national hymn instead of another, when this one hymn is recognized abroad.

I would now like, Mr. Speaker, to deal briefly with the comments made by the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley) which the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) has mentioned during his remarks. I may say to the hon. minister that the Civil Service Commission is composed of honest and competent people, and that it is playing an important part in our administration. This commission has been founded so as to prevent the civil service from becoming chaotic and a political football, and so that government employees should enjoy security in their jobs as much as it is possible. During its 22 years in power, the Liberal government created a very competent Civil Service Commission which is admired in other countries. I consider that the commission which administers this institution should not become subject to politics and become the creature or the screen of a single party.

Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages (Laval): Mr. Speaker, during the last session, I did not have the pleasure to rise in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I preferred to listen, to learn parliamentary procedure so that I could better discuss things this session.

Mr. Denis: Including Liberal M.P.'s.

Mr. Bourdages: Today I want first of all to speak about this beautiful county of Montreal-Laval which I have the honour to represent. I have, Mr. Speaker, the pleasure and honour to represent one of the most beautiful counties of the land, whatever my hon. fellow members may say, which is also one of the most densely populated areas of the country, with a population of almost 250,000, comprising about 80,000 voters. The county of Montreal-Laval is situated north of the city of Montreal. It also comprises Jesus island, bound on the north by the Thousand Islands river and on the south by the Prairie river. Jesus island, Mr. Speaker, which is about 20 miles long and about 10 miles wide, is composed of 17 islands and municipalities, and also includes 22 school boards.

I need not mention that every day I receive many requests particularly from the municipal councils of those cities and municipalities. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the postal system in our county of Laval and, more particularly, the postal system we have on Jesus island. As I said, Jesus island comprises 17 towns and municipalities which have to administer a population of more than 100,000 people. There are also several towns and municipalities that are grouped together for postal delivery. There are 7 towns: St. François, St. Elzear, Ste. Rose, Fabreville, Laval West, Ste. Dorothee, and Laval Islands. We have for instance towns like Laval des Rapides which, in 1951, had a population of about 3,000 and now has more than 15,000, but has not yet its own post office.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Post Office Department will give serious consideration to the matter, so as to improve the postal system in the constituency of Laval. There are also in my beautiful constituency of Laval a good number of farmers; each year they have to face the same problems in connection with their agricultural products. Should it be possible to establish a seasonal tariff on farm products and even put an embargo on imported products, I am sure that would be of great help to the farmers, not only of the constituency of Laval, but of the whole of Canada.

There are also, Mr. Speaker, many railway crossings in my constituency. Each year, many accidents, often fatal, occur. Why? Because there are no fences nor traffic lights. The hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) will assuredly want to give very special attention to the need of my constituency, and, in that connection, I am sure he will see to it that it gets the share to which it is entitled. I should now like to deal with a matter in which I am specially interested. I refer to the deepening of the channel in the Prairie and Thousand Islands rivers to facilitate the use of pleasure craft.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bourdages: These two rivers cross the constituency of Laval from end to end. If you go round Jesus island by boat, you will travel a distance of about 50 miles, and you will also note from 3,000 to 3,500 motorboats of all kinds. I believe that development of these two rivers for the benefit of pleasure boats only, has become absolutely necessary, and that, for several reasons. First of all, according to the Financial Post in 1957 the sale of pleasure boats in Canada alone increased by $30 million over the previous year. Think of the ever increasing number of pleasure boats, of the fact that these cruiser type boats are now within reach of anyone's purse, that the number of persons making a living out of the pleasure boating industry, and of the increased value it would mean for land adjacent to navigable rivers. Consider too that the navigable waterways of some lakes and rivers are the sole means of communication, and that over 90 per cent of riparian proprietors own some sort of boat. Do not forget the commercial expansion that navigation means for riparian proprietors, municipalities and cities; think of the tremendous development of aquatic sports, of their popularity, of the power and speed of outboard motors and yachts, and consider also, more especially, that our navigable waterways offer panoramic and tourist attractions unexplored until now, not to mention that, in case of emergency, navigable rivers are the only means of transportation. Let us consider too the expansion of industry, the success of enterprises and professions connected with it, such as insurance, sale of oil and gasoline, sale of boat, life saving and fire prevention equipment, of marine paints and varnishes, as well as boat and motor maintenance and repair services. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, in deepening these rivers it would make it possible to clean up their waters and would permit the development of beautiful beaches. Action on this highly important matter would benefit the entire population of the Laval constituency, which I am intent on helping.

Please be assured, Mr. Speaker, that the people place high hopes in the new administration to study and solve the many problems of my constituency.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say just a few words on unemployment.

Of course, some unemployment exists. It always has existed and always will.

In the constituency of Laval perhaps I am rather privileged, as this is a residential constituency and the majority of the people there are home owners so far and have not suffered too much from unemployment. However, I think it is important to prepare a broad plan providing for the construction of industrial and commercial buildings, and giving due consideration to available manpower in each section of the country. Under this plan, an attempt would be made to obtain advance information on the rate of construction in each area, and to ensure that at least 90 per cent of skilled workers were kept employed. An effort would be made to have new construction projects undertaken in all areas where a slowdown occurred.

I realize that the implementation of this plan would probably entail a great deal of work, but perhaps there might be created a new department, which might be called the Department of Town Planning, Construction and Housing, which would take in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the population of the constituency of Laval for their confidence and co-operation. In return, I promise them my best efforts on their behalf.

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, it is a duty this year for all members of this house, to voice the opinions of their constituents, in view of the serious situation facing all constituencies throughout the country.

I have been listening with much pleasure to the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages), making his maiden speech in this house. He did quite well, and I congratulate him on this first effort. I hope we shall be hearing more of him.

Mr. Speaker, may I, as did all previous speakers, congratulate the proposer and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Messrs. Jorgenson and Fortin). I wish, particularly, to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) who, in a speech that lasted over two hours, drew a true picture of conditions facing Canadians under a Conservative government.

I can recall how during the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958, our hon. friends across the room openly criticized the Liberal government and asked people to elect a Conservative government that promised heaven on earth.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party has been in power only slightly over a year. In a matter of a few months, Mr. Speaker, we are back to the empty and dark years with which Conservative governments have always plagued this country throughout its history: the Borden government, the Bennett government, and now the Diefenbaker government.

Mr. Speaker, how often have we heard it said: "Beat the Liberals and there will be no unemployed in the country. Beat the Liberals and we will settle the problem of federal-provincial relations. Beat the Liberals, and Canada will enjoy prosperity such as it has never known." Since the beginning of this session, certain members of the right—who will come to the left very soon—have shouted at every turn, as do, for instance, the hon. members for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay), for Joliette - L'Assomption - Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), who are all Union Nationale Conservatives from the province of Quebec, and who were elected because they promised in all ridings of the province of Quebec to lead Canada to the very peak of prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I would prefer that, instead of interrupting the speeches of those who are discharging their duties, hon. members, and particularly the member for Roberval, described to their voters and to us the situation that existed when he won the riding in 1958, and of the situation in which the Conservative party has placed the same riding a few months after gaining power.

In regard to the Roberval constituency, for instance, this afternoon, I secured the latest statistics, and they are not at all pretty. In fact, I would be ashamed to rise in this parliament of Canada and to be part of the Conservative team that was so critical of the St. Laurent government, the government which led the country to the highest peak of achievement since confederation, and end up with the result that is experienced now since the professor of Laval University, a 100 per cent "duplessist" was elected to this house.

In the riding of my friend from Roberval, in May 1957, under the Liberal administration, there were 1,589 unemployed. A year after our friend's victory, in May 1958, in the same constituency of Roberval, under the leadership of the great and worthy new member, there were 3,794 unemployed, an increase of 2,205 in a year.

In June 1957, in the riding of Roberval, there were 1,186 unemployed, and since our friends took power, in June 1958, there were 2,713, an increase of 1,527 in a single year.

And, I look now at my friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) he of the serene smile, that ex-private secretary to the "duplessist" minister of labour—who also likes to sing the praises of the Conservative administration. Well, may I advise him to think of the change that can happen under a new government; I will give him the figures on his own constituency, the figures for "his village" as Mr. Duplessis would put it.

At Joliette, in May 1957, 1609 unemployed were registered at the unemployment insurance office; in May 1958, a year after the election of the devoted secretary to Mr. Duplessis' minister of labour, there were 3,410 unemployed receiving unemployment insurance benefits, an increase of 1,801.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville is mistaken. According to official figures, there is less unemployment this year in the Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm constituency than at any time in the past.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville has the floor. If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm wishes to make an explanation I would appreciate it if he would reserve it until the end of the speech.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, these figures were given to me this very afternoon by the secretariat of the unemployment insurance commission; they are therefore official figures of the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of privilege?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no matter of privilege there.

Mr. Dupuis: With pleasure.

[Mr. Dupuis.]

Mr. Pigeon: Am I allowed a question?

Mr. Dupuis: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Pigeon: Who gave you those figures?

Mr. Rouleau: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, after the statement made by the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley), I will certainly not divulge the names of civil servants.

Mr. Speaker, I think the standing orders provide that the word of a member must be accepted when he quotes statistics and informs the house where he obtained them. If my hon. friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had better knowledge of the standing orders, he would not ask such a question.

Mr. Johnson: You were only asked to give additional details.

Mr. Dupuis: Well! Now another voice is piping up. I think I have additional details also for the constituency of Chambly-Rouville.

Mr. Speaker, I can well appreciate that this is not especially pleasant to my hon. friends, particularly those who represent a "duplessist" constituency, that is, a constituency where a "duplessist" minister boasts that he is giving the people all they get. You know, they have the giving habit; in fact they are always giving. As they say, "we have given and consecrated". Indeed, they have consecrated a good deal of unemployment within a few months.

Mr. Speaker, before I was interrupted by the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—I truly believe he did it because the truth always hurts—I was stating the number of unemployed in the beautiful constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. In the month of June 1957, there were 1,282 unemployed workers; that was when the Liberals were thrown out of office. However, after my hon. friend grew hoarse from making speeches in the three counties and was elected, we find that in a year, the number of unemployed rose to 2,742, an increase of 1,460. Mr. Speaker, I shall now deal with the constituency of Sherbrooke, which is known as the queen or the pearl, I am not sure, of the eastern townships. There was at Sherbrooke also in 1957, a Conservative candidate who promised heaven and earth to the voters, and undertook to free the country from the evil Liberal administration. He was elected. Well, do you know how many unemployed there were in Sherbrooke in May 1957, 3,068. A year later, in May 1958, under the Tory Conservative administration which was to save the country, there were, in this same riding, 6,048 unemployed, an increase of 3,340. This in a single Conservative constituency, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Dupuis: In the month of June 1957, Mr. Speaker—

(Text):

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask two questions of the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville. I would like to ask the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville to give us the figures about the increase or decrease of unemployment from June 10, 1957 to this day, in his constituency. As a second question, I would like to know—

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order, and I would ask the hon. member to let me speak because I do not have much time left and I have much to say. However, I will answer his first question.

An hon. Member: Do not wait for Mr. Maurice Lamontagne to answer.

Mr. Dupuis: In regard to the increases and decreases that have happened during one year, the hon. member for Sherbrooke will be able to calculate them. We find that there is much more unemployment now than under the Liberal administration.

Mr. Speaker, in June 1957, in Sherbrooke, there were 2,872 people getting unemployment insurance benefits, and please note that I give only the number of those who were entitled to these benefits. The number of unemployed is even higher. In my hon. friend's constituency of Sherbrooke, where he promised to free the province and the country of the Liberal party, there were under the Tory-Conservative administration, in June 1958, 5,002 unemployed, an increase of 2,130.

I come now to another constituency, that of my hon. friend from Lake St. John (Mr. Parizeau), who specializes in shouting while his colleagues are making their speeches.

In St. Joseph d'Alma—

(Text):

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether it would be in order to ask the hon. member to speak a little louder.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, there are none so deaf as those who don't want to hear.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to Lake St. John constituency. I hope that the hon. members are proud of these statistics. I hope that they feel the Conservative blood running in their veins at this moment. In Lake St. John district, in May 1957, there were fewer than 1,000 persons registered with the regional unemployment insurance office, more precisely 966. But, when my hon. friends came to power, there were, one year later, in 1958, in the great constituency of Lake St. John, 2,081 unemployed, an increase of 1,115, and this, in one year only with the Conservative springtide.

In the same constituency, in June 1957, 743 people were drawing unemployment insurance benefits. One year later, in June 1958, 1,493 people were drawing those benefits, an increase of 750 and this, again, in one year only.

Mr. Speaker, we could visit in this way the whole province, and everywhere we would find a similar situation; the province of Quebec is in a slump, like the rest of the country. However, our hon. friends praise the right hon. Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister himself praises his own deeds. I have at home, in my music shop, a French record that I will send to the right hon. Prime Minister as soon as I get back to St. Jean. That record is entitled: "Johnny, you're no angel". Mr. Speaker, the more I study the deeds of the present government, the more reason I find to sing this French song.

We have accurate figures concerning the city of Montreal. Do not wait for the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) to give them to you, because he does not seem in a hurry to do so. In Montreal, in the local office of the unemployment insurance commission in May 1957, under the Liberal government, there were 24,460 unemployed registered. One year later, in May 1958, there were 59,883, an increase of 35,423, and again, under a Tory-Conservative administration.

In June 1957, again in Montreal, there were 22,858 unemployed. A year later, in June 1958, there were 53,666, an increase of 30,808. And here again, when I give the number of unemployed, I refer only to those who draw unemployment insurance benefits.

To please my hon. friend the member for Sherbrooke, I shall say that in St. Johns, in the St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville constituency, instead of growing, the population has decreased. Many people are leaving St. Johns because they cannot find any work. I shall say to my hon. friend from Sherbrooke that in St. Johns, the oldest concern, the Singer Sewing Machine has laid off a very great number of its employees, men who had been working there for 15 or 16 years and who thought they were enjoying the security they had known during the 15 or 16 years of the Liberal administration, men who are now out of work and had to leave St. Johns to seek employment elsewhere. Is the hon. member for Sherbrooke satisfied with my answer?

We have found that everywhere factories are laying off employees in great numbers; Conservatives are complaining, not only in St. Johns, but also in Sherbrooke, in Lake St. John, in Beauce, in Abitibi, everywhere. Business is in a bad way and the effects are really being felt. We feel that things are really changing, but changing for the worse.

Mr. Speaker, do you think that we are happy about this distressing situation? If I had been a Conservative candidate in 1958 and I had promised my constituents everything the Conservative candidates have promised in their constituencies, I would find it very embarrassing to rise in the house to praise a government who has failed to fulfil all its promises. However, I am proud to belong to the Liberal party, a middle-of-the-road party, a party that has made Canada the beautiful country it is and has given to it the most prosperous years of its history. I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to think of the names of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, William Lyon Mackenzie King, Louis St. Laurent, and to compare them with Messrs. Borden, Bennett and the new one.

Mr. Pigeon: It is you who have crucified Mr. St. Laurent.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, you have just heard another expression of Duplessis supporters "With the crucifix", always the crucifix.

An hon. Member: The one you have discouraged.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, you will note that my hon. friends are angry; it pleases me to note that nothing hurts like the truth, Mr. Speaker, I wonder which one of my hon. friends—and I would ask those who are listening to me by means of the simultaneous translation system to answer me by the same system—I would ask them to tell me who, in the province of Quebec, did not, in the campaign, promise to send a delegate to the Vatican. Who did not promise, during his campaign in the province of Quebec—

[Mr. Dupuis.]

Mr. Johnson: I did.

Mr. Dupuis: —to be against the Colombo plan.

Mr. Johnson: I asked for it, I did not promise to send a delegate to the Vatican.

Mr. Dupuis: Your brother the minister did promise it.

Mr. Johnson: He never promised it. And I defy you to find a single passage in any speech where he would have done it.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I listened personally to my hon. friend's brother. I personally heard him in the St. James riding in Montreal speak about the ambassador to the Vatican. And you were probably there, you were following him everywhere. The hon. provincial minister, brother of my hon. friend whom I have just annoyed, promised over the radio—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am not quite sure whether the hon. member is speaking on the amendment to the amendment or on the amendment itself.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: You were very nice, Mr. Speaker, to my friends opposite and I thank you on their behalf. Mr. Speaker, I was saying that our friends promised prosperity, and oddly enough throughout the years the various Conservative administrations did not change and their stand is always similar, indeed identical, and they are always the same.

Two days ago, I heard the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada reply to the magnificent speech made by the Leader of the Opposition. What did the Prime Minister say? Oh! and with his well-known effectiveness he exclaimed: But you are going to spread distrust! Those are wailings and lamentations. And our Prime Minister was definitely scandalized, the Leader of the Opposition had been bold enough to claim that there was unemployment under the new Conservative administration.

Mr. Speaker, it will be six o'clock in a couple of minutes. I promise you to come back after. Don't be too proud. We are going to have supper and I promise as a dessert to give you some evidence of how Conservative administrations never change. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No, no, there are still two minutes left.

Mr. Dupuis: I move the adjournment of the debate.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has said it is six o'clock; that being so, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, allow me at the opening of this sitting to raise a question of privilege. I should like to put a question to the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville.

What does he think of the statement made by—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I had not called the house to order yet. The hon. member is a little bit previous. Has he a question of privilege? If so, I will hear the hon. member.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: What does the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville think of the statement made by Maurice Carmel, manager of the local employment service of the unemployment insurance commission in Joliette, who was reported in the Etoile du Nord of December 17, 1958 as saying that there is less unemployment in Joliette this year than last year for the same period.

(Text):

Mr. Habel: There is no question of privilege there, Mr. Speaker. After all, he is replying to the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis). He will have an opportunity to reply in his speech. There is no question of privilege there.

Mr. Speaker: What question of privilege does the hon. member wish to raise?

Mr. Habel: None whatever.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville has made a statement which I think is not true on the employment situation in Joliette. I have an official document which proves that what he said is false. He attacked me—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) feels that some statement made by the hon. member who has the floor is not correct, he has the opportunity to make an explanation, if it relates to him, at the end of the speech. But if it is just a contradiction of something the hon. member has said, that is a matter of debate and not a proper point of privilege. It is simply that the hon. member does not agree with what the hon. member who has the floor has said. I will ask the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville to continue.

(Translation):

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, I am well pleased to see that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) before digesting his dinner had already something to say, and that shows that my remarks have stung him deeply.

So I shall resume my remarks and I have no intention of repeating what I said before recess.

The statistical data which I gave were obtained from a reliable source and if the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is satisfied with what he reads in the newspapers, I must tell him that I went to the best official source, to the unemployment insurance head office. So the figures I mentioned were the authoritative ones.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall carry on with my remarks to fulfil the promise I made before dinner, namely of proving to you that the Conservative party, whether at Lake St. John or elsewhere is always the same.

Indeed no matter how the Conservatives change, they always remain the same. Mr. Borden was like Mr. Bennett. Mr. Bennett was like Mr. Borden. Now the new one looks strangely like the other two.

As I said, when the right hon. Prime Minister replied to the substantial, serious and intelligent speech of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) he said to this house and to the whole country that there was nothing in it but wailings which could but create an atmosphere of distrust towards Canada.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said nothing new. He only repeated what his predecessors had said, and to prove it I can call no better witness than Hansard.

On October 10, 1932, when the prime minister was the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett and when the leader of the opposition was the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, the leader of the opposition pointed out to the prime minister that the unemployment situation was alarming, that the new administration was bringing about in the country a disturbing atmosphere. Do you know what the then right hon. prime minister answered? Listen carefully, Mr.

Speaker, and you will have the impression of listening to the head of this government. Mr. Bennett said:

> When it is said that the conditions in this country are worse, when an effort is made by the jeremiads of a Jeremiah to make it appear that all is not well in this country, to paint everything in the darkest possible colours, to have the right hon. gentleman stand in his place today and minute after minute for almost half an hour paint the evils of present conditions in this country and deprecate the efforts that have been made by the government to sustain the morale of the Canadian people, I say it is not worthy of a great opposition or of a great party.
> It is the duty and function of those who govern for the moment to endeavour by every means in their power to restore the morale of the people and to create confidence in themselves and in their country that all was and would be well.

And a little further on, in the same speech, the Right Hon. Mr. Bennett referred once more to the opposition's jeremiads, real Jeremiah's lamentations.

Mr. Speaker, the extracts I have just quoted may be found on page 49 of the official record for 1932, and they indicate that the more the Conservatives change, the more the situation remains the same, and the more the old Tory guard remains what it is. In his election campaign of 1930 Mr. Bennett's slogan was: "Canada First". However, on the first occasion, he went over to England to be knighted.

In the course of his 1930 campaign, Mr. Bennett blared all over Canada: "We are going to put a stop to unemployment, we are going to increase the standard of living of Canadians, we are going to develop the country's resources". You know what happened, Mr. Speaker. History repeats itself, but the more it changes, the more it remains the same. It is with those words I have just quoted the Right Hon. Mr. Bennett replied to the then leader of the opposition. Therefore, it is clear that the present leader of the government has just said the same thing.

As in Trinity, there was, after Mr. Bennett's election in 1932, a by-election. And in that by-election, the Conservatives lost some ground. Mr. Mackenzie King pointed out the result in this house. Mr. Bennett then said that it did not mean a thing, as our friends say in Trinity. I take this opportunity to mention the arrival amongst us in this house of a minister in the former Liberal cabinet, who will certainly be one in the next Liberal cabinet which will be elected a little later.

And, as in 1932, we heard our friends opposite say that the by-election did not mean a thing. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to read out what the then hon. leader of the opposition replied when it was stated that a by-election had no significance. He merely read out some verses of Kipling, which made them think. The situation is so much alike this year, that I would regret not to read them out again.

I understand that the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson), has never read Kipling. He has never read anything; he is like his leader of the Union Nationale.

Here are Kipling's lines.

An hon. Member: He reads the Devoir—

Another hon. Member: He reads Montréal-Matin—

Mr. Speaker: Only one at a time, please.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, thank you for having spoken in French and, in order to show you our appreciation I shall now speak to you in English.

This is what Kipling said and I shall repeat it to our friends following their fiasco in Trinity. And strangely enough, Mr. Speaker, our friends opposite are in the same situation as in 1932.

(Text):

> Let us admit it fairly, as a business people should,
> We have had no end of a lesson: it will do us no end of good.
> Not on a single issue, or in one direction or twain,
> But conclusively, comprehensively, and several times and again,
> Were all our most holy illusions knocked higher than Gilderoy's kite.
> We have had a jolly good lesson, and it serves us jolly well right!

(Translation):

This afternoon I heard the Minister of Labour—

Mr. Johnson: May I ask you a question?

Mr. Dupuis: You wish to ask me a question?

Mr. Johnson: I should like to know of the member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville the reference to the text he quotes from Kipling, if he does claim to read Kipling.

Mr. Dupuis: If my friend is not well read enough to know the page, I am not here to tell him. Besides, he only has to consult the professor from Laval university, the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay).

The hon. Minister of Labour stated this afternoon—or perhaps it was this morning—that many municipalities had asked for winter unemployment relief work. Well, Mr. Speaker, as was so truly said by the hon. member for Essex East—we are so used to calling him Mr. Minister, and so confident that we will be calling him again Mr. Minister, that we forget the name of his constituency—the hon. minister of national health and welfare in the St. Laurent cabinet made a brilliant speech in this house this morning, showing point by point that the assertions made by the Prime Minister were false. It would have been the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Labour to correct the former health minister's assertions had they been untrue. However, he did not do it, because he knows the Prime Minister has juggled with the figures, and he himself, the Minister of Labour this morning wanted us to believe all was well in this country led by a Conservative government.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have proven that, in the constituencies that I mentioned earlier during my speech, those of my friends from Lake St. John, Roberval, Sherbrooke, Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, etc., everything was as bad as possible, where everything was going fine at the time of their return to power.

And, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour, when he brings up the matter of these winter works, makes the whole country laugh. Imagine, he has paid, in the city of Ottawa, for 8,000 unemployed, he, the great treasurer of labour, the sum of $1,500,000 for winter works.

(Text):

Mr. Monteith (Perth): You're not up to date.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Do you know how many people will be able to get a job, thanks to that federal government's assistance? Steady yourself, Mr. Speaker. One hundred and fifty unemployed will get a job in the city of Ottawa, out of a total of 8,000, and the present government flatters itself with having efficiently solved the unemployment problem.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I say with the Leader of the Opposition that the present government does not deserve for one more day the confidence of the Canadian people, because all the promises it has made have been null and worthless. It has fulfilled none of its commitments, so that at the present time, the whole country is now going through a period such as we have known in the dark days when Mr. Bennett was at the head of the Canadian nation.

In my constituency of St. Jean as elsewhere unemployment has increased considerably, Mr. Speaker. In the constituency of Sorel unemployment has increased so much that sometimes some of the unemployed make off to some other districts where they are not likely to find jobs either.

Let us look with our hon. friends into the situation as it exists in Richelieu district, which our historians claim to be one of the richest in the province and even in the entire country. It is a fertile district watered by a clear river. We know, Mr. Speaker, that in Sorel, in Chambly—my hon. friend cannot deny it—in St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville unemployment has increased materially since our Conservative friends came to power. And, Mr. Speaker, as was so ably pointed out by the former Minister of Transport, the deepening of the Richelieu river in order to provide jobs for our workers and to find further commercial outlets between New York and Montreal immediately comes to our mind.

Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the Prime Minister talks about the lamentations of a Jeremiah, I should like to read to you the statements made in 1955 by the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) when the issue was merely seasonal unemployment, and the statements made by the present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) when the issue was merely a gap in the field of labour. Let me quote what the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) said when he spoke to the same effect, as reported on page 138 of Hansard for January 13, 1955. Here is what the present Minister of Transport said in 1955. The issue then was merely a small-scale seasonal unemployment compared with what we are experiencing today. Here is what he said when he sat on the opposition side as the private member for Broadview.

Here is what he said as reported on page 138 of Hansard for January 13, 1955. And the Prime Minister dares tell us that we are fiery, that we are spreading distrust, that we are creating an atmosphere of uncertainty. At the time unemployment was merely a drop in the bucket and was almost nil.

Here is what the Minister of Transport said at the time:

> If a man or woman is willing and anxious to work, and through no fault of his or her own cannot find work during the months preceding the first of the year—

As you see, that was seasonal unemployment—

> —then somebody must assume responsibility for that person and his family. The municipalities have no funds to do it; the provinces have no funds to do it. For some years past it has been the overwhelming opinion of all people who have made studies of this problem that this is a federal responsibility. They have urged the federal government to assume its responsibility in this matter. However, despite this overwhelming body of opinion, this government has continued to duck its responsibility, and I believe that by so doing it is showing a shocking lack of concern for the people for whom it has a primary responsibility.

What could we not say today, Mr. Speaker? The present minister, who was then the member for Broadview, added this:

> For two or three years past I have asked the minister to tell the country what his views are on this problem, and the minister on behalf of the government has refused. I am going to ask him again today. I hope he will give us an answer, because the country is waiting for that answer.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope this government will give us an answer, because the country is waiting for one and none is coming from the government.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: May I call your attention to the fact that I started to speak at 18 minutes to and that I still have three minutes to go.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I cannot allow the hon. member to contest the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my appreciation for this opportunity of taking part in the debate on the speech from the throne, and to bring up several matters of interest to my constituents. I should like to associate myself with those other hon. members who have congratulated the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply. Their speeches did credit to themselves and credit to this house. I feel the opposition should also be congratulated on the enthusiasm and even the fervour with which they carried on their duty of criticism, especially in view of the fact that they have such a weak case on which to work. As is customary in throne speech debates the opposition has seen fit to move an amendment which implies want of confidence in the government. I, of course, along with my colleagues am very much opposed to any such amendment. We feel the government has done a good job and we wish to congratulate all concerned on their administration.

While the effects of government policy bear unequally on different groups in our economy the overall results of these policies have, we believe, been good for Middlesex West and good for Canada. All government is a compromise. In our intricate present day society when one group is helped another group may be hurt. We cannot all benefit equally through government policies all of the time. Equity is an ideal that we have to strive for but which we have no hope of attaining. Care must be exercised by government to promote equity. We believe our government has exercised such care.

All of us when considering economic propositions must remember to consider what their future effects will be as well as the present advantages of such propositions. For instance, it is folly to set farm prices at a level which will produce unmanageable surpluses. It is folly also to set up unemployment insurance plans that defeat themselves by destroying the incentive of people to work. Constant increases in wages and prices can only result in ever increasing spirals of inflation and end in financial disaster. We must remember that every time we increase our social security we must sacrifice a corresponding part of our individual freedom in the spending of our income. As a people we must give if we are to get. We cannot take from our national pool of wealth more than we put in. We submit that the caution with which our government has moved in the exercise of its functions has inspired confidence among people everywhere.

I have great faith in our Canadian people. We will stand together to maintain Canada as the best country in the world in which to live. In 1957 Canadians chose a new government which they believed would best serve Canada's needs. In 1958 they confirmed that choice by returning the government to office with the greatest majority ever given a government in this country. There are no grounds for belief that the confidence of the people in our government has weakened in the slightest degree.

Federal-provincial relationships have improved since this government took office. Never before has this country been so united as it is today. Commonwealth bonds have been strengthened by the commonwealth conference held last year and by the Prime Minister's recent visit to commonwealth countries. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and our government have clearly demonstrated their dedication to the cause of commonwealth development and their belief in the great role which the British commonwealth can play in world affairs.

Our good relationships with the United States have been maintained and improved. Our interests have been stated frankly and frankly discussed. A greater measure of mutual respect and trust has been the result. Our interests in trade and defence are so closely bound to those of our southern neighbours that the best and most cordial relationship with them are essential for our mutual benefit.

The constituency of Middlesex West, which I have the honour to represent, is a representative Canadian riding. It is both urban and rural, industrial and agricultural. Although we are an inland area the great lakes are near enough that the future of the St. Lawrence seaway has a very significant place in our future plans. Our constituency is characterized by numerous new suburban homes, light industry and diversified agriculture. Our factories make aluminum products, tubular fittings, plumbing and heating supplies, woollen goods, furniture, drainage tile, agricultural chemicals, mobile homes and store equipment. We have plants which process meat products, poultry products, dairy products, fruits and vegetables and also plants which mill flour and feed. Our farmers produce in some quantity nearly every product of agriculture that can be produced in any part of Canada: grain and seeds, fruits and vegetables, every kind of livestock and tobacco. From our woodlots come Christmas trees and large quantities of hardwood for manufacturing.

We have ethnic problems similar to those in some other parts of the country. The first settlers in Middlesex West were almost exclusively of British descent; English, Irish, Welsh and Scottish. In recent years the character of the population has changed and in some areas nearly half the population now are new Canadians. Because we are both urban and rural, industrial and agricultural, owners and wage earners, importers and exporters, old Canadians and new Canadians, debtors and creditors, we find ourselves on both sides of nearly every social and economic argument that is taking place in Canada today.

Middlesex West welcomes the announcement that a visit to the city of London is to be included in the royal tour this summer. Since our constituency includes the western suburb of the city this announcement is of special significance to us. Our people greatly appreciate this honour and I am sure will cooperate in every possible way to prepare a royal welcome.

We are thankful to be able to say that unemployment in our area is not as serious as in some other places but we have it. Our people endorse the various policies of the government aimed at easing its effects. The extension of seasonal benefits under the unemployment insurance plan and the removal of all restrictions in connection with federal sharing of direct relief costs has been of great assistance. The government's public works program of construction, and the encouragement of special municipal programs of winter work by a federal grant of 75 per cent of the labour costs should also help to provide jobs. The "why wait until spring" and "do it now" publicity programs carried on by the Department of Labour should help in promoting winter work.

Middlesex West has enjoyed a fair share of the home building boom that has prevailed across the country since the last war. The year 1958 was a record one in our area, and the prospects look good for 1959. Our people appreciate the encouragement being given to home building. In 1957, and again in 1958, large sums were made available to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to bolster the building industry that had previously been slowing down for lack of funds. This home building policy serves two purposes; it provides much needed homes for our rapidly expanding population on terms that people can afford to pay and it provides jobs.

Our Post Office Department has kept abreast of our home building in Middlesex West. During 1958 several important extensions of house to house deliveries were made in the suburban area. This service was extended to 965 homes in Oakridge Acres and to 191 homes in University Heights. The Post Office Department conducts a continuous survey of suburban development with a view to extending house to house delivery service as soon as any area reaches the necessary density of development. The standard required is an average of 40 yards between delivery calls. I am advised that the Orchard Park subdivision is rapidly approaching the necessary standard for house to house service. This diligence of the Post Office Department in providing extensions of service as soon as possible is greatly appreciated.

On page 2744 of Hansard of July 26, 1958, the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) stated that house to house delivery is not provided in municipalities where delivery calls number less than 2,500. The reason behind this policy is that house to house delivery is most economical where six carriers can be used, five for regular five-day week route work, and one spare man to alternate over the five regular routes so as to furnish six-day service.

It is respectfully suggested to the minister and the government that consideration should now be given to providing house-to-house delivery in smaller towns and villages where there is sufficient work to provide full-time employment for one man. Rural free delivery is almost universal; so is house to house delivery in the large centres. It would appear that the people in the smaller towns and villages may be under a disadvantage compared with others from the standpoint of mail service. A number of extensions of rural mail routes to provide more convenient service for individuals were made in 1958 and were much appreciated. Much appreciated also is the planning of a new post office building in the town of Strathroy. We hope that the selection of a site satisfactory to the town and to the Department of Public Works will not be unduly delayed.

The people of our constituency owe a debt of gratitude to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the officials of his department for assistance in several ways during the last year. Through the mediation of his department an advantageous rental agreement for the use of the C.N.R. stock pens at the village of Ailsa Craig by the farmers' co-operative was arranged. This department also aided greatly in clearing away the difficulties which delayed for a considerable time the building of the Hutton sideroad underpass in London township. Construction of this underpass is now scheduled to begin early in 1959.

We have in Middlesex West a large Indian reservation. As their representative in parliament I am most anxious to assist them in obtaining help to help themselves. I am glad to see that a new central school is to be constructed by the Indian affairs branch on this reservation. I wish to commend the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) for this action and to express to her the appreciation of our people that it has been found possible to increase the educational facilities here. I have had the privilege of visiting several of the classrooms on the reserve and watching the pupils at work and I would say, judging from what I saw, that those boys and girls on the reserve will make the best possible use of the new facilities. I have been assured that the facilities provided will be of the highest standard. I am glad of that assurance because those people deserve the best. As their representative it is a part of my responsibility to see that they get the best.

The most noticeable feature of the reserve that strikes one when driving through it is the growth of weeds and brush everywhere in evidence. This reserve has in it some very fine agricultural land. I feel that it should not be lying idle and growing up to weeds. In bygone years this land was used for growing crops, but of late years agricultural activities on the reserve have been curtailed. There are a number of reasons why this has happened.

Most reserve land is divided into small farms of fewer than 50 acres; parts of these farms have never been cultivated, so that the fields that once were cultivated would range in size from 2 to 20 acres. There are some large fields and some large farms on the reserve that are farmed with power machinery but small farmers cannot afford modern equipment with which to carry on their agriculture, and so the fields have been abandoned and are growing up to weeds and brush.

Another reason for the abandonment of those fields is the lack of tile drainage. When horse power was used drainage was not so essential. Horses do not get stuck in mudholes as tractors do. In our constituency tile drainage is essential for farming with power equipment. There is little hope of reviving agricultural activities on this reserve without more tile drainage. Our Indians have requested assistance in reviving agriculture on their reserve. On their behalf, therefore, I request that the government give consideration to having a tile drainage plan prepared for this reserve and that tile drainage work be undertaken.

To prevent a further deterioration of reserve land and to make it possible for small land owners to use their land to advantage while still holding jobs in industry, or after retirement, I request that farm equipment, together with trained operators, be made available on a custom work basis for the use of small land owners on the reserve.

The people of Middlesex West are seriously disturbed about the ever increasing power of labour bosses and their ability to paralyse our economy with strikes. Our people feel that the time has come when serious consideration should be given to the provision of safeguards against the abuse of union power. This suggestion implies no hostility whatsoever to the legitimate aims of labour unions.

Not only does this uneasiness prevail among non-union people but in the ranks of organized labour as well. Much is read and heard these days of the unscrupulous conduct of some labour leaders, and the seeming inability or lack of desire on the part of the unions to control or replace them. One explanation is that the rank and file of the membership in some unions have lost control through lack of interest and non-attendance at meetings and a situation develops where control cannot be regained. There are stories of hoodlum tactics being used by labour bosses to retain their power when criticism of them within a union develops.

Regardless of how their control came about, the hard fact remains that labour bosses are in a position to impose their will on essential parts of our economy. Our people feel that this should not be. We have legislation to curb improper exploitation of the public by big business and many believe the time has come when serious consideration should be given to the imposition of safeguards against unscrupulous abuses of power by big labour.

Now that labour unions have become so powerful that they can impose their will on the country by strikes or threatened strikes which would paralyse our economy by tying up transportation or cutting off essential supplies such as fuel or electricity, without which many communities could not survive, our people say that it is time to take remedial action before the situation gets out of hand.

Labour unions were organized originally to raise the wages and improve the working conditions of the low-paid workers in industry. The trend now is to help the highest paid workers to get more. Today big labour is being used to boost ever higher and higher the wages of those already at the top of the labour scale. We are building up in this country a high-cost economy which constantly increases our difficulty in competing for world markets. We are pricing ourselves out of business. Our people feel that this problem of high-cost production must be faced and steps taken to prevent our economy getting further out of line with world markets.

The ability of big labour to dictate ever higher wages in the industries under their control is creating unrest among all groups in our society and is one of the principal contributing factors to inflation. Earners of smaller wages and salaries in industry, agriculture and the professions are demanding that they be kept in line with labour on a percentage basis. This constant pressure on the wage and salary line, this "keeping up with the Joneses" in industry is probably one of the main factors in increasing costs.

Labour is not alone to blame for our present economic instability. It is a trend of the times. Everybody is out for himself; everybody wants more. What makes big labour show up so boldly in this mad race is that they have the inside of the track and are taking full advantage of it. Some day, somehow, this mad race must end. Our people are looking hopefully to the government to provide the incentive which is necessary and which only the government has the strength to provide to guide our economy into a more stable condition. Our people believe that one incentive to stability would be to restore the control of labour unions to the rank and file of the membership and to curb the ever-increasing power of the labour bosses.

Our people will expect the government to give the most careful consideration to the recent civil service commission recommendation that certain collective bargaining privileges be extended to civil servants. This is a new departure in Canada and requires most careful consideration on the part of all concerned. Such action might ultimately lead to the unionization of the civil service under foreign labour control. We believe that such a development would be most undesirable.

Middlesex West was endowed by nature with some of the finest agricultural land to be found in Canada. We can grow everything that will grow in any part of the country. Our agricultural products are much diversified. Some of our farmers are still labouring under the effects of an adverse cost-price squeeze but others have enjoyed a good measure of prosperity in 1958. It depends on the line of production in which they are engaged. Crops this year were good. We had record yields of grain and apples. Higher prices for cattle in 1958 have given many of our farmers a great lift.

Our wheat producers took an active part in organizing the Ontario wheat marketing board. This board got into operation just as harvesting began in 1958 and some difficulties were experienced in handling the first of the crop. As time goes on, however, the difficulties are being ironed out and this wheat marketing board should prove of great benefit to Ontario wheat producers by helping to stabilize the price. The departments of agriculture and trade and commerce have assisted in the solution of some of these Ontario wheat problems.

Ontario corn producers have been working for some months to establish a corn marketing board. We wish them success in their efforts. They have requested that corn be designated a commodity for support under the Agricultural Prices Support Act but we regret that so far no satisfactory formula for supporting corn has been found. Negotiations are still continuing.

Comments have been made in this debate about the improvement in our adverse balance of trade. We have a suggestion to make in this regard. Normally large quantities of soya beans are imported into this country. We use about 15 million bushels per year and we grow about half of our requirements. We are quite capable of producing all of our requirements of soya beans and we believe that it would be good business to encourage our farmers to increase their production.

We request that consideration be given to increasing the support price on soya beans to encourage greater production. In addition to improving our foreign trade deficit by cutting down our imports, we would take acreage out of the production of surplus commodities such as wheat. Soya bean growers are irked because there is a $1.20 per bushel tariff against our soya beans going into the United States but United States soya beans enter Canada free. Our producers would welcome some adjustment to decrease this discrepancy.

The program of price supports under the Agricultural Prices Support Act has operated with reasonable satisfaction in our area. While our agricultural producers have argued for higher support prices, they appreciate the caution of the government and the board in setting prices. Our people agree that it is better to start low and make increases where necessary than to start too high and get into trouble with unmanageable surpluses. We subscribe to the theory that the law of supply and demand will ultimately prevail, and that while temporary support prices may be desirable to soften the efforts of sudden and drastic market changes, price supports should not be considered as permanent fixtures in regard to any commodity.

We feel that the best and soundest method of obtaining fair prices for agricultural products is the organization by the farmers themselves of commodity marketing boards and that such boards should accept the responsibility for adjusting production to market requirements.

We welcome the announcement in the speech from the throne that our present farm credit facilities are to be reviewed with the object of making it possible for farmers to obtain financial assistance in modernizing their operations. Improved credit facilities should go a long way in helping farmers out of the present cost-price squeeze by providing for necessary expansion of operation and the installation of labour saving equipment.

Again we wish to urge upon the government the advisability of bringing farm labour under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Farmers are finding it ever more difficult to get help. People tend to avoid farm jobs because they get no unemployment insurance credits. Farmers are having trouble enough in competing for labour because of high industrial wage rates. They should not be further handicapped by lack of unemployment insurance coverage. We request that the government give further consideration to this matter.

We welcome the statement in the speech from the throne that the humane slaughter bill is to be referred to the agriculture committee. It is our opinion that the agricultural representatives in the house, who are most closely associated with the production and care of farm animals, would appreciate most keenly the necessity for promoting humane methods of slaughter.

A matter of immediate concern to our people is the extension of the current rabies epidemic into Middlesex county. Animals in several parts of the county have been diagnosed as rabid and several people have taken anti-rabies treatments. On January 6 the agriculture committee of the Middlesex county council called a meeting of county officials, federal and provincial members of parliament, health officials, conservation officers and others to discuss the situation. A resolution was passed asking that clinics be established to immunize pet animals as a safeguard against the infection of humans. We were informed by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) by telegram on January 8 that the rabies situation in Middlesex county was being closely watched, that a survey of the county would be made but that present commitments prevented the immediate establishment of inoculation clinics.

A story has been circulating in our area that no more heads of animals are to be sent to the Hull laboratory for examination unless human beings have been exposed. At the same time the story states that until there is more evidence of an increase in the incidence of the disease, clinics will not be established. Our people are wondering how we are to find out whether the disease is increasing when no more heads of animals are to be examined.

I have been informed by departmental officials and by the minister that the intentions of the health of animals branch are very much misunderstood in this regard. In areas such as Middlesex West where the disease has only recently made its appearance the laboratory is examining as many heads as they can get in order to keep track of developments. But in areas such as Grey county and the counties in the northern part of the province where the disease has been established for a considerable time and has probably reached a maximum of intensity, it is a waste of time to continue to examine animal heads unless for a specific purpose such as to determine whether or not a person has been exposed to infection by a rabid animal.

Our health officials favour setting up the clinics at the time when they are most likely to exert the maximum deterrent effect on the spread of the disease. They are watching Middlesex county closely with this fact in mind and as soon as the time is ripe for action clinics will be established.

We have a woollen industry in our constituency. It is not a large industry, but it is important to many of our people. This industry is having serious difficulty in meeting the competition of imported goods from low cost countries. They contend that tariff protection alone cannot solve their problem. They request control of imports by quota so that a fair share of the Canadian market may be retained for Canadian manufacturers.

Because of the relative size of the markets in the United States as compared to the size of the markets in Canada, the unit cost of tooling up for production is lower in the United States than it is in Canada. Our manufacturing industry needs protection because of this and probably will continue to need protection for a long time to come. Some Canadian industries, such as the farm implement companies, may have grown to a size where their volume permits them to compete on equal terms with United States industry, but this is generally not the case. Our smaller industries especially are in need of special consideration if Canadian industry as a whole is to survive and prosper.

I wish to express our appreciation to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) for a very interesting and educational tour with him through the fisheries research laboratory in London. I was much surprised at the magnitude of its operation. This laboratory carries on the departmental research program for all fresh water fisheries in Canada. We of Middlesex West appreciate the location of this fine institution in our area.

The new national hospitalization plan, as it applies in Ontario since January 1 of this year, has been well received. More than 91 per cent of the people of Ontario are now covered. This exceeds expectations. Individuals are included in the plan on a voluntary basis, and people have signed up faster than was expected. This is a good indication that the plan fills a need in our economy. The plan will assist municipalities by eliminating much of the need for indigent hospital care. Because the plan permits hospitals to increase their rates to cover costs, hospital deficits which municipalities have been compelled to carry heretofore should disappear. Relief from this indigent hospital care and these hospital deficits should provide substantial assistance in the preparation of municipal budgets. Our government is entitled to much credit for speeding up the establishment of this new social service.

Nothing in the government's record of accomplishments since they took office has brought more satisfaction to our people than the administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs. The people of Middlesex West, together with the people in all parts of Canada, will stand firmly behind the government in providing a fair deal for our veterans. All proposals and recommendations made by the Canadian Legion for improving the legislation and regulations in connection with veterans affairs have been given sympathetic consideration and, when possible, put into effect.

I have heard much recently about repeal of section 34 of the Combines Investigation Act. I believe that this proposal involves fundamental rights of individuals as well as fundamental rights of the public. Before a decision is made I would suggest that this matter be referred to a competent independent tribunal for investigation and recommendation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the record of our government and the confidence which they enjoy amongst the people in all parts of Canada, constitutes abundant reason why these amendments now before us should be voted down.

(Translation):

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we usually see in the chair the Speaker of this house and we take pleasure in telling him how we appreciate his work among us. Tonight I am happy to see the Acting Speaker occupy the chair as this gives me the opportunity to pay him a tribute for his sense of fairness and also for his sense of humour, although the occasion to show the latter seldom arises.

I would beg the Acting Speaker to be kind enough to convey to the Speaker the following message. I too have great pleasure in seeing again this year the Speaker of the house preside over the sometimes stormy proceedings of this assembly. Even though we are all aware that in view of the deeply human phase of his training, his extensive knowledge and his culture he is destined to still higher functions, if possible, we will be sorry to see the day when we are deprived of the pleasure of appreciating daily his sense of fairness and also, as in your case, Mr. Acting Speaker, his sense of humour which makes things so much easier in the heat of the debates.

Like the previous speakers, I congratulate the movers of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Mr. Jorgenson and Mr. Fortin).

Both were a credit to their party and to their constituencies by the way in which they fulfilled the difficult and challenging task given to them by the right hon. Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Diefenbaker).

I will no doubt have the indulgence of the house if I am a bit more personal in my remarks in regard to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, not because I failed to convince his constituents to elect another representative, not because he tried himself to convince my constituents that they should vote for someone else, but rather because I have known him since my college years, as well as several members of his family.

Let me say that his distinguished brother Andre and I were fellow students. This brother is now a Catholic chaplain with our army. I also know other members of his family, and I can say with every sincerity and honesty that every one of them is a credit to their distinguished parents.

However, I would not want the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet to infer from these remarks that I wholly endorse the actions and policies of the new Conservative government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, first I wish to thank the Conservative government for having provided this house with simultaneous translation. I do not believe that there is anything humiliating nor degrading for any one to recognize the good one finds in his opponent, and it is for this reason that I will rather speak in French, thus breaking away from a tradition which I used to observe, that is to speak at least fifteen minutes in English and fifteen minutes in French when delivering a speech in this house.

Mr. Speaker, what I should like to establish in my speech, is that there is a lack of cohesion among the ministers who lay down the general policy or administer our national affairs.

Let us examine for instance the field of agriculture, for one. I do not need to remind the hon. members that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) who, fortunately, is in his seat tonight, addressed the Saskatchewan Farmers' Union not so long ago. He then expressed before the members of that group his personal ideas on agriculture in our country. The press made much of his speech and did not fail to recall what the right hon. Prime Minister had said on the same subject on another occasion. If the house will permit I will quote the Western Producer of December 18, 1958 in order to show to what extent the Minister of Agriculture and the right hon. Prime Minister are in perfect agreement on Canadian agricultural policy. I will put on the record part of the report in the Western Producer of December 18, 1958. I quote:

[Mr. Brassard (Lapointe).]

(Text):

In his address to the annual convention of the Saskatchewan Farmers Union Mr. Harkness, the Minister of Agriculture, touched on the question of reducing production. He was throwing out a strong hint when he said: "I feel that some voluntary reduction of wheat acreage in favour of diversification should be undertaken to relieve congestion in the wheat trade." Arguing in favour of this suggestion he went on to state: "In these days of a semi-controlled economy it seems natural to suggest that control be exercised at the producing level as well as at the marketing level, for it is at the production level that alternatives exist."

Mr. Harkness has been giving air to these similar sentiments off and on for some time. It is no exaggeration on our part when we say that we see in this an appalling state of affairs. It indicates a total lack of understanding of world conditions as they exist now. This in a minister of the crown, a leading member of the Diefenbaker cabinet, is a very serious matter.

One wonders whether Mr. Harkness realizes that he is taking direct issue with his own leader when he proposes restricting production? Perhaps it will refresh his memory if we quote again the remarks made by Mr. Diefenbaker when he opened the Saskatoon exhibition after his first victory at the polls last year. The new Prime Minister then said:

"To those who think that in agriculture we have arrived at a point where we need no longer expand I say to you this:"—

And you know, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister is a very good orator.

"—I learned one lesson at the commonwealth conference in London. We must expand our agricultural development.

"With one quarter of the world's population going to bed hungry at night methods must be found to enable the distribution of our surpluses to the end that happiness will come to the peoples of the world.

"Together we must preserve the peace of the world and hold ourselves through agriculture as a bulwark against communism."

Who speaks for the government, Mr. Harkness arguing for restriction or Mr. Diefenbaker advocating expansion?—

Yet Mr. Harkness talks of restriction. Let him read these further words of his leader. Speaking in New York on the eve of his departure on his world tour Mr. Diefenbaker said:

"The great triangle of nations—Great Britain, the United States and Canada—must join with others of like mind in a common effort to assure new hope for the betterment of peoples who have been disfranchised from the bounties of providence.

"It is a primary duty to be our brother's keeper to those underdeveloped areas of the world and to give aid, both economic and technical, so that the gulf between their living standards and ours shall become narrower.

"Since we in North America are blest with more than our share of the good things of life we have an overriding mandate in that we must help those who have less."—

And Mr. Harkness wants to reduce production! How can he win with plenty if he deliberately promotes scarcity? How can he eradicate want in needy countries unless he can devise acceptable methods of distributing food to those who haven't ready cash? Mr. Harkness and his colleagues have a lot to learn before they catch up with and fully understand the policies enunciated by their leader.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, we fully support the policy advocated by the right hon. Prime Minister when he said he wanted to assist underdeveloped countries where people by the thousands die of starvation. I wonder however, if we will ever hear in this house some members from the province of Quebec—and I say this without bias or malice—speak in support of this policy of assisting within our means the underdeveloped countries.

In the province of Quebec there are many people—I will not mention any of them—who speak against communism. In my opinion, one of the most effective measures to fight communism is to close the door to communist countries with regard to their possible influence in the countries which are not yet open to that influence.

I hope that the members from the province of Quebec who will speak after us in this debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne will clearly express their views on the matter.

May I be allowed also to say a few words about dominion-provincial relations. I followed quite closely, and you will easily understand why, Mr. Speaker, the electoral campaign of 1957. Shortly after the people of Canada had clearly expressed their opinion about the government they wanted, an outstanding member of the Liberal party compiled the promises made by the right hon. Prime Minister throughout the country when he was touring the ten provinces to canvass for the votes of the Canadians at the election of June 10. He spoke with eloquence—everybody knows it—in the ten provinces of this country. He dealt with every subject. He committed himself. He committed himself, I repeat, in many fields. He staked his name. He even committed the future Prime Minister of this country—of course he did not know at the time who it would be, otherwise he would not have spoken so much. He committed the future Prime Minister of this country in many fields of politics. He spoke especially and repeatedly about dominion-provincial relations.

I should like to quote, for instance, what he said in April 1957—on the 25th to be more precise—in Toronto. His speech was published in the Montreal Star of April 26, 1957. According to the Montreal Star he said:

(Text):

There could not be national unity if the provinces were handcuffed by inadequate sources of revenue, with several of the provinces unable to discharge their constitutional responsibilities and promote the development of natural resources. A Conservative-organized dominion-provincial conference would settle this problem in a spirit of unity, amity, and with good will, tolerance and respect.

(Translation):

He has travelled throughout the country. His colleagues have also travelled in many provinces assuring that if a Conservative government came into power, the matter of federal-provincial relations would be settled once and for all. What happened after the elections? I must admit that a federal-provincial conference was convened. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) was there; I don't know whether he was tired, but he was there. The Prime Minister was there. They listened to the claims of the various provinces and what did the Minister of Finance have to say after hearing the claims of premiers. He said: You ask an enormous increase in the amount you are getting. You are to go back home, we are going to study your suggestions, and we shall call another federal-provincial conference for the beginning of 1958.

What happened. Oh, in the very first months of 1958, the Minister of Finance sent a telegram to all provincial treasurers, outlining the terms offered by the federal government to the provinces regarding fiscal matters. There has been no other federal-provincial conference, yet the Minister of Finance had definitely promised that there would be another one at the beginning of 1958. The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, as well as all their colleagues, were secretly plotting something else. They were plotting another election.

I am not blaming them because they did not have a sufficient majority to speak with authority in the house. But why not say so to the people, why make promises when you know beforehand that you cannot fulfill them? I realize that the Conservative government was not able to keep its promises. What I do not understand as easily is that at the present time, it does not even think of convening the representatives of the provinces to discuss fiscal problems. It could also take this opportunity to discuss unemployment.

The speech from the throne dashed all our hopes in that respect. The provinces were asked to show understanding in fiscal matters. The Prime Minister informed us that he had written to the provincial premiers to tell them that they had to co-operate in the study of that problem. Such a request is contained in the last speech from the throne. And I am positive that there will be legislation laid before the house to ask us to approve of the ideas of the cabinet concerning the extension for a further year of the dominion-provincial agreements. But why doesn't the cabinet or the government simply tell us the plain truth about it? They do not specify why they do not intend to call a meeting of representatives of the provinces in Ottawa this year. And if the Prime Minister intends to call such a meeting, being so jealous personally of the prerogatives and rights of parliament in every field, why does he not say so? It is a fact that the Prime Minister, with his strong voice, his gestures and his personality, has convinced the Canadian people that the Liberal government had not done justice to the opposition when the Conservatives were sitting on this side. Why does the Conservative government not give the example today by saying why it has no intention of asking provincial governments to examine our problems? He could also call a conference to look into the matter of unemployment. I do not wish to play politics with unemployment. Too many members in this house use this calamity to play politics.

Mr. Speaker, I hear our hon. opponents applaud my statement that too many members in the house try to play politics with unemployment. I believe—and you can applaud again—I believe that we should consider the question of unemployment from a human point of view and try to find a solution.

I listened very carefully to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) when he spoke today. He is a man I admire and for whom I have great regard. He tries to consider the problem and find a solution, but at the same time he blames the opposition for not offering any suggestion. But, is the Conservative cabinet made up of a group of ministers who work only on suggestions from the opposition? They are there precisely to work and to find solutions. The Diefenbaker cabinet is responsible for the administration of our country's affairs. They are the ones who went to the people and said: "We have problems in this country; you elect us and we shall solve them". Once in office, the Conservatives want the opposition to find every solution for them. To be honest I must say that the Minister of Labour and a few of his colleagues did try in vain to find solutions, but they did not solve the problem. Unemployment is still here and I believe we should find a solution to the unemployment situation in Canada. There is such a thing as the dominion bureau of statistics, the D.B.S. There is a big difference between figures released by the D.B.S. and those provided by employment offices throughout the country. I know from experience—I have never been Minister of Labour and I shall never be, thank heaven for our people—but I know from experience that the Minister of Labour is in possession of statistics which are much higher than those given by the dominion bureau of statistics. I was a civil servant before becoming a lowly member of parliament, and I know that those statistics are much more alarming than those published by the dominion bureau of statistics. I shall not quote any figure, though the figure is known to me. But when one looks at the number of persons without jobs or looking for one throughout the country, it is something appalling, something pitiful. There are not only people seekings jobs, not only thousands of people receiving unemployment insurance benefits, not to mention the few thousands who are not even receiving such benefits, but there are all those who are depending on their father or mother, and who are receiving absolutely nothing. At this stage, I might as well add a word about my constituency. The Aluminum Company of Canada, whose main plant is in Arvida, has twice reduced its working staff by 10 per cent. There are also, in my constituency, two mills operated by Price Brothers. They have now reduced the work week to between 24 and 32 hours.

Those are the only two basic industries in the constituency of Lapointe. We have lost part of the British market and part of the French market for aluminum. England, which I deeply respect as a country, is the mother country of a great number of my fellow-citizens as France is the mother country of a great number of my fellow-citizens too. England is part of the commonwealth, but it buys part of its aluminum from Russia, which doubtlessly is also part of the commonwealth of nations. I find this situation painful. I am all for helping our two mother countries, France and England. We are making sacrifices to help other nations in many fields, and I would mention NATO as only one example. But why, when the time comes to reciprocate, why is no consideration given to the sacrifices we have made?

Mr. Speaker, having been myself a civil servant under the former Liberal administration—it is perhaps for that reason that we were defeated—I am fully aware of the sacrifices that Canada has made for England and France. As I said a moment ago, these two countries are our mother countries, and I know that we must help them. But why do they not take into account what we have done for them? If cuts in personnel had to be made in the Arvida aluminum company, I think it is due to the fact that we have lost a great part of our external trade with the English and the French.

The same situation obtains with regard to paper. We used to sell much of our paper to the United States, but thanks to the very friendly policy of the Conservatives towards the United States, we lost a part of our U.S. paper market.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives are logical people—I do not ask you to applaud, because you will be disappointed if you do—they are a tremendously logical lot!

In the field of trade, for instance—and I said it here myself last year—in the course of the last election campaign, the Conservatives, led by the Prime Minister, kicked the American government—and I hope that this time the Canadian Press will not mistranslate words.

What have the Conservatives done in the field of defence? After kicking Americans in the pants, they kissed them on both cheeks. They entrusted to an American citizen the integrated defence of Canada and the United States. I am not criticizing the fact that we have entrusted our integrated defence to General Partridge. I am only blaming the inconsistency of their conduct. In the field of trade, we kick them in the pants and in the field of defence we kiss them on both cheeks. That is a typical example of the tremendous logic of the Conservative government which is governing or perhaps I should say ruling us at this time.

Not only in this field have the Conservatives given us a truly magnificent show of consistency. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the speeches made in 1957 by the right hon. Prime Minister and by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes). I note that the latter is now using his interpretation earphone. You will recall that the Minister of National Defence promised to cut down the defence appropriation by $500 million. That department, in his view, was running into staggering expenditures that were not justified. That was his position before the elections. What happened after June 10? There was a conference in London, and my hon. friend the Minister of National Defence attended this conference with the Prime Minister. No sooner had he returned to Ottawa than press reporters, who quite naturally are always on the look-out for news, hastened to query our distinguished Minister of National Defence. He was asked then if he intended to implement the promise that was made of reducing defence expenditures by $500 million. The minister, who was arriving from London, replied that this was impossible. He excused himself on the grounds that the blame must always be put on the Liberals—that he never had enough information when he sat on this side of the house and that the promise that had been made was due in part—he did not use the word ignorance, but it looked like that—to a lack of information. Consequently, taxes were reduced by $225 million, instead of the promised $500 million.

Mr. Speaker, it is by making promises of this kind to the people, and by not implementing them, that one convinces people that politicians are all birds of a feather, whether they are "blue" or "red", that they are men who say one thing during the election campaign and who act differently once they sit on the government side.

I wanted to direct some remarks to another hon. gentleman but, unfortunately, he is not here at the moment. I refer to the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton). Before I became a member of parliament, as I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I used to sit—

(Text):

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, it is with a profound feeling of humility that I take my seat in the House of Commons. I have hardly thawed out as yet from the deep freeze by-election. I am rising in this great council of Canada for the first time and I should like to extend to you, sir, and to all members in this house the sincere best wishes and greetings of all the people of Springfield. You, sir, execute your duties in that manner of impartiality and restraint that adds dignity to your high office and inspires respect from both sides of this house.

I should also like to express my sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson); my neighbouring constituency; and to my neighbour in the house, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin). Both of these hon. gentlemen made masterly speeches in moving and seconding the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne. I should also like to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman) and to the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) on their victories.

I should also like to join with the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk), who drew to the attention of the house today the fact that this is the fortieth anniversary of the declaration of independence by the Ukraine. As you know, sir, my forebears came from that country and it is indeed fitting that I should make my debut in the house on this day.

I am here only as the medium through which the people of Springfield expressed their confidence in our great leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and in the policies which this government has implemented, especially the agricultural policies. Therefore, I should like to express my gratitude to the people of Springfield for placing their trust in this government. Those people of all nationalities, religions, political affiliations and stations in life now place their faith in me to present their cause in this house and to offer leadership on their behalf. My only hope is that both in and out of this house I may justify that trust and earn that respect that is accorded to all members of parliament who dedicate themselves humbly and sincerely to the service of the principles of democracy.

In those principles we have a rich heritage. It took men of vision, courage and conviction to crystallize that heritage; it took statesmanship, diplomacy, and years of struggle. By that struggle our fathers of confederation conceived a new nation, uniting two languages and two creeds, and dedicated to the principles of unity, equality, opportunity and freedom. Today the familiar words of those men and of those who passed before them and their deeds are seldom heard and even less appreciated.

Springfield is a relatively new constituency, Mr. Speaker, having been created in 1914 and altered in 1924. It boasted only one Conservative representative in its history, Tom Hay, who was first elected in 1925, until our late member, Val Yacula, won it in 1958. Mr. Yacula was a quiet man who did a good job. In his memory I wish merely to quote a few words by Lord Baldwin:

> A few years, and the voices of those addressing the house today will be silent, too. A few more years and their voices will be forgotten. But the character and the spirit remain to fortify the coming generations and to illuminate their paths.

I am proud to represent Springfield, because Springfield is a large, diversified and cosmopolitan constituency. Our people range from native Indians and metis, to the descendants of the Selkirk settlers. But the majority are the colourful people of European descent who colonized the area at the turn of the century. I say "colonized" deliberately, because still today we have villages that are distinctly Ukrainian, Polish, French and German and others. Today, as time marches on and new generations are conceived, there is emerging by interaction and intermarriage that brand of distinct Canadianism, tolerant and stable of character, of which we are all so proud, each with a different and distinct background, each with a common dedication of loyalty and devotion to this country.

As I pass among the pioneers of Springfield, I see that time takes its toll. I see less and less of those gnarled hands, those deeply etched faces, those stooped backs of those hardy people, often illiterate, who were dumped off the C.P.R. at East Selkirk in their sheepskin coats, with nothing but their love of the land and enthusiasm for hard work. They did not think of themselves; they thought of the future. They were not ambitious for themselves but for the future generations. They carved a civilization out of the wilderness. But, more important still, they carved their brand, that sterling character of pioneering Canadianism that was instilled in their children and has carried them to respected positions of leadership on the broad frontiers of the world today. That inherent quality is emerging from an amorphous mass and crystallizing into a distinct Canadianism. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that those pious pioneers will find in their afterlife the peace and rewards that were never theirs on earth.

Springfield stretches from the metropolis of Winnipeg to the barren and inaccessible expanse of the pre-Cambrian shield in the north. In the bosom of these rocks lies the great wealth of gold, chrome, beryllium, nickel and other metals. We in Springfield share the vision of the north. We have placed our faith in men like our Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton), a hard-working minister whose efforts are often unrecognized and even less appreciated. At Bissett we have a thriving gold-mining community. In those northern areas there are also many trappers. Along lake Winnipeg we have a large commercial fishing industry which is being faced with grave and trying times by conditions in the lake and problems of marketing. I am sure all hon. members know of and have tasted the famous lake Winnipeg goldeye.

At Victoria Beach and Bird's Hill and at other areas we have a multi-million dollar mink-farming industry. At Pine Falls we have a pulp and paper industry which employs 550 people and whose payroll is $2,500,000 annually. Nearly all the power generated in Manitoba is generated within Springfield along the Winnipeg river. At the present time we are constructing a great steam power plant in the town of East Selkirk, which will be converted to an atomic power plant as soon as it is feasible. We have at Lac Du Bonnet, our gateway to the north, an aeroplane and seaplane base. This town has an annual retail sales turnover of over $2 million. It has seven small industries in its vicinity, including the wild rice industry and granite quarries. We have the famous limestone quarries at Tyndall and Garson. Just east of these towns we have Beausejour, which is the principal town in the constituency.

At Molson we have a big peat moss industry. In Springfield lies a great part of Manitoba's playgrounds. At Grand Beach we have beautiful white sand hills and in the Whiteshell area we have numerous resorts. We have hundreds of lakes and streams where sportsmen can enjoy the thrill of game fish and there is good hunting in our forests. We have a large oil refinery at East St. Paul, and we have numerous small industries and businesses.

But the welfare of Springfield as a whole depends upon agriculture. We have market gardening, mixed farming and grain growing, and the problems of agriculture are particularly pressing in my constituency because the farms are relatively small and therefore the cost-price squeeze bears more heavily upon us.

May I say that now we are going through the throes of an agricultural revolution very similar to the industrial revolution that other countries went through earlier. We appreciate the actions of the government with regard to agriculture. For the first time in history a policy of bumbling and fumbling has been replaced with a national policy for agriculture. We recognize the problem of the cost-price squeeze, the variability of crops from year to year due to weather conditions and fluctuations of price due to world markets and world conditions.

Our policy is a practical and workable one. Already the government has brought in the price stabilization act, increased farm credit, introduced cash advances, which C. D. Howe said would wreck the wheat board, amended the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, initiated higher rates of compensation for cattle slaughtered due to contagious diseases and commenced the South Saskatchewan river dam after years of promises by the Liberals.

In this session we are looking with anticipation to the legislation on farm credit and crop insurance. But there are a few matters that are of grave concern to my constituents and there are some things which I should like to commend to the attention of the ministers. To the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) I wish to commend the extension to Manitoba and the western provinces of import controls which have been implemented in the maritimes against United States potatoes. To the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) I wish to commend the initiation of payment for farm storage of grain. It is only fair that in a time of surplus the farmer be paid for storing his grain rather than having the money go to warehouses and elevators at a cost of some one cent per bushel every thirty-five days.

I recommend that the farmers be allowed to load their own grain directly into box cars rather than having it go through an elevator at a cost of some four and a half cents per bushel to the farmer. These are not new ideas as they were first adopted by Dr. Manion and the Conservative party in the Regina manifesto of 1940. However, I shall present my arguments on these matters at a more appropriate time.

I have visited the various areas of Springfield. I have listened to the many problems of my constituents and my duty now is to do my utmost on their behalf. This I shall do, Mr. Speaker, through the proper channels as, unlike one of our former members, I do not want to be charged with talking my way right out of parliament in the same way, indeed, as the C.C.F. talked themselves out of the by-election in my constituency.

I feel very much at home in this chamber and this building because I have only to look at the walls about me to notice that distinctive and beautiful Tyndall stone that comes from Springfield. Indeed, in walking through the hall of honour and the hall of confederation I have noted that the main pillar which symbolizes the unity of confederation and the strength of Canada is constructed of that stone. I owe some thanks for my election to Tyndall stone. I did not allow the Liberals to forget that they had wasted a lot of money on the public printing bureau and, indeed, they had wasted a great deal of money on importing stone all the way from Virginia for that building, when they could have used the finest building stone on the continent, Tyndall stone from Springfield. Yet the Liberals wonder why imports from the United States are going down. It must inspire a sense of guilt in the members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition each time they look at the walls of this chamber and each time the Liberals come into Springfield in the future and lament their attitudes, platitudes, and beatitudes, to the good people of Springfield I am sure they will blush a little for their betrayal of the people of Springfield and for having so little pride in the products of Canada. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I must also commend Tyndall stone to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green).

I come now to the opposition. I commend the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) for a fighting speech and, of course, no member from Springfield ever shirked a fight. I have watched the members of the opposition very carefully, and there is at least one member of that group who qualifies to be called a politician. As you know, Mr. Speaker, a politician is a person who approaches every situation with an open mouth. Indeed, this member seems to have contracted foot-and-mouth disease as well.

I should like at this time to make a few observations regarding the by-election in Springfield. I recall the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) finding himself one night upside down in a ditch and, indeed, the Liberal party took an inverted position throughout the by-election. I am sure it brings no comfort to the Leader of the Opposition to know that one of their former Liberal members of parliament contested the Conservative nomination.

Mr. Pickersgill: You can have him.

Mr. Slogan: I am sure that the former Liberal premier of Manitoba, who spent most of his time during the election repairing political fences in Springfield when he was not in the ditch himself, found no comfort when he saw that one of the former Liberal members of the legislature was also on our side in the campaign. I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition gets little comfort from reading such articles as the Canadian Press dispatch of February 27, 1958, which reported that Mr. Ben Nobleman, vice-president of Trinity riding association, had resigned from the Liberal party and would support the Conservatives. I should like to quote the following from the dispatch:

> He said he attended the Liberal convention in the hope that grass roots opinion would be heard but "came back greatly disappointed".
> "Since returning from Ottawa I have been given the deep freeze apparently for daring to express my opinions. My role as first vice-president is rather farcical for I have not been consulted on any matters for the past month."

Mr. Hellyer: I am sure the hon. member would like to know that the poor disillusioned man would now like to come back to us.

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Is that your maiden speech?

Mr. Slogan: I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would like to know that several young Liberals have spoken to me and expressed their envy of the young Conservatives because they say that they do not have the same freedom of expression which we seem to have. I think it is this attitude on the part of young people all across Canada which has contributed to the large number of young members on this side of the house. I have been very active myself in the young Conservative organization and also as national president of the Progressive Conservative Student Federation. I have only mentioned this matter to ask the Leader of the Opposition to give the young people of his party a chance.

Earlier in the debate the Leader of the Opposition said that in some respects the Liberals and the C.C.F. may find themselves in some measure of agreement. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the position of both parties is so weak that they may find themselves soon in a position of more than agreement. I should like to quote from an article that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of February 27, 1958. The article is headed, "Speakers Link C.C.F. With Tyranny." The dispatch comes from Regina and reads in part as follows:

> Two speakers linked the C.C.F. with communism Tuesday as the throne speech debate continued in the Saskatchewan legislature.

Both these speakers were Liberal members of the legislature. The article goes on to say:

> Mr. Barrie said no one admires what has gone on behind the iron curtain and under Hitler and Mussolini, "but we have had it in Saskatchewan and Canada for 25 years—they are celebrating the 25th anniversary of the C.C.F. this year".
>
> Since its formation the C.C.F. had used the same methods of infiltration to gain control, including infiltration of non-political bodies.
> Look at school boards, municipal councils, co-operatives and even church organizations.

Let me go back to the young people of Canada to see what is prevailing in the other political parties. I should like to quote an article appearing on the front page of the Winnipeg Free Press of December 13. I hesitate to bring this matter up because it concerns my own alma mater, and a matter that has recently been settled, in some measure, due to the good offices of our Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill). This article is headed 'Young C.C.F.er Charges Cynical Group Engineered Crowe Issue". It reads:

A leader in the C.C.F. youth movement says a "phony issue" has been created out of the case of Professor Harry Crowe because a small group wants to gain control of United college.

The Crowe affair, says Stuart Barber in a letter to C.C.F. provincial leader Lloyd Stinson, has been used as a "cloak" by this group to cover its "own brand of cynical bitter socialism".

The letter urges the C.C.F. party publicly dissociate itself from "the activities of some C.C.F. supporters" at the college.

Mr. Barber, a fourth year law student at the University of Manitoba, is a former leader of the university C.C.F. group and a graduate of United. He was this year's speaker of the university mock parliament.

I should like to quote a few lines from his letter because I think it demonstrates the sincerity of his belief in that party:

As you know, I believe that true democratic socialism can bring the greatest measure of happiness and justice to the people of Canada and the world. Indeed, I hope to devote some part of my life in working for the objectives of the C.C.F. movement.

What did the leader of the C.C.F. say after he received this letter? He disowned this sincere and critical young man by saying that Mr. Barbour did not have a membership card in the C.C.F. party. Well, sir, things are pretty tough for young people in these parties.

I should like to quote a few words from what Stanley Knowles said of the Liberals on December 17 just after the Springfield by-election. He said:

The Liberals are dead but they won't lie down. They can gasp a few more times before they finally die.

In the Winnipeg Tribune of December 8, 1958 the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is reported as having said this:

The C.C.F. is a party which is not going to be in existence in a year and a half. By its own admission it is a dying, if not already dead, party.

At least, Mr. Speaker, these two parties think alike. Both of these tired old parties, which revel in the past and depression, conjured up the ghost of R. B. Bennett. They went about Springfield haunting the people, as indeed some members have been haunting the chamber today. However, they found the people of Springfield do not frighten easily. Indeed, the only ghosts about today are the ghosts of those members of the opposition whom the people of Canada have sent to a happier haunting ground. In fact, we have one lone member of the opposition from the three prairie provinces.

I merely bring these facts out to indicate to the opposition parties that we are aware of their plight and that we sympathize with them.

Mr. Mitchell: You are funny; you should be with Wayne and Shuster.

Mr. Slogan: Coming back to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition, I should say I enjoyed listening to him talk for the speech was subtle in substance and fickle in fact. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) attacked our policy of positives with a nattering of negatives. Both these hon. members showed an obsession with recession and opposition without proposition. It is obvious from the speech from the throne that the motto of this government is progress not perdition, initiation not procrastination, legislation not agitation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope that anything I have said will in no way be taken as a personal reflection upon any member, as it was not meant to be such.

I should like now to make some further observations. As I stand here, I cannot help but realize how great and diversified a country we represent. I realize that no matter how cosmopolitan we try to be, we feel a duty to defend our own provincial cause. But more than anything else in this chamber we learn to appreciate each other's point of view, for we can see the underlying unity in our diversity. As we meet today, we stand on the threshold of new frontiers, the frontier of the north, the frontier of the shrinking world and the frontier of outer space. Sir Winston Churchill said, in accepting the Nobel prize a few years ago, and I quote:

Today more than ever in history, events have dwarfed personalities.

Mr. Speaker, the destiny of nations lies in the personality of men. Today we are living through the pages of history. Today demand for leadership is as great as it ever was. Today, more than ever before, we need men of vision, of courage, conviction and perseverance like the father of the fathers of confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald. It was a Conservative government that bound this country together with the iron ties of he Canadian Pacific Railway against a defeatist opposition that ridiculed our policy as wigwam to wigwam. What Sir John A. Macdonald bound together no man has yet been able to pull asunder. The Conservative party has written the brightest pages of Canada's history in the past. The Conservative party will write the brightest pages of Canada's history in the future because it is to this task that our leader and our members are dedicated, as indeed all members of this house are dedicated.

The hour of 10 o'clock having arrived, Mr. Speaker, I should like to adjourn the debate.

On motion of Mr. Slogan, the debate was adjourned.

At 10 o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

RAILWAY GRADE CROSSING FUND

Question No. 16—Mr. Chevrier:

1. What were the expenditures from the railway grade crossing fund from and including April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958 inclusive?
2. What were the commitments of the railway grade crossing fund outstanding at 31st December, 1958?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. $3,165,399.34.
2. $19,118,405.01.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, January 23, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PEARSON—DISTRIBUTION OF "CANADIAN ECONOMIC OUTLOOK FOR 1958" BY LIBERAL PARTY

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Friday, January 16 at 2.30 p.m. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) tabled two copies of the document "Canadian Economic Outlook for 1958". This was done before the exchange between the Prime Minister and myself on this matter. On January 20 I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he would make additional copies, or some copies, of this report available to hon. members of the House of Commons and to the press gallery. The minister replied, and I quote from page 75 of Hansard of that date:

—it is just impossible to accede to the hon. member's request.

I consider the refusal of these additional copies to the members of the House of Commons to be a breach of privilege and, to the press gallery, a discourtesy. In order to repair that omission, Mr. Speaker, at my request the national Liberal federation reproduced 400 copies of this document, which are available to members of the house and members of the press gallery.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO VISITORS IN GALLERY FROM INDIA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the house will allow me I should like to refer to the fact that in the gallery today are Shri S. V. Krishnamoorthy Rao, M.P., deputy chairman of the Rajya Sabha, council of states or upper house of the Indian parliament, and Dr. the Hon. U. Krishna Rau, M.L.A., Speaker of the Madras legislative assembly. They have been attending the general council meetings of the commonwealth parliamentary association in the Barbados and have come to Ottawa to meet Canadian parliamentarians and see something of the Canadian parliament in action.

I should like, sir, to invite the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) to join with me in extending to them a warm welcome, and at the same time ask them to convey not only to the parliament of India and the legislature of Madras but generally to the Indian people, cordial greetings from the parliament of Canada.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our party I should like to join the Prime Minister in the welcome he has extended to our fellow legislators from another country in our commonwealth of nations, and I do so not merely because of the fact that they represent India nor because of their own qualifications, but because we are very conscious that only a short time ago the parliament of India gave a very warm welcome to our own Prime Minister, as they had done some years before to his predecessor.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this group I wish to say that we most heartily and sincerely endorse the words expressed by the Prime Minister and the leader of the official opposition.

LATE DISTRIBUTION OF "HANSARD"—SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATION SYSTEM

Mr. Speaker: May I say I am sorry that Hansard was not here in time to be distributed. It is being distributed by the pages now. I hope hon. members will leave their copies on their desks so the page boys may put them in the files afterwards.

Another item of business of the house I would like to mention is that it would be very helpful in the operation of the new sound equipment if members would turn down the volume of their ear phones when they are not using them. If they are left on full and the members leave the chamber the ear phones continue to operate, and sometimes they can be heard for a distance of several feet. If many of the ear phones are left on they make a buzz in the house that interrupts the debate. It would be very helpful if hon. members when they are in the house and are not using their ear phones, or when they leave the house, would pull the ear phone out of the plug or turn down the rheostat.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

STATEMENT ON UPSTREAM CHANNEL DEPTHS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asked for information regarding channel depths between the Welland canal and the head of the lakes. I told him I would get that information for him. Since I believe there is general interest in this matter, I should like to give a very brief report now.

The United States corps of engineers continues to assume responsibility for the deepening in the channels upstream from the Welland canal. The limiting depth from the Welland canal to lake Superior is 21 feet in the upbound channel at Amherstburg; the downbound channel at that point has a depth of 25 feet. The Detroit river dredging is expected to be completed in 1960 to a depth of 25 feet, which will provide a draft of 23 feet.

Dredging is in progress in the St. Mary's river, but until completion about 1962, the existing depth of 21 feet for upbound navigation and 25 feet for downbound navigation will remain in effect. The deepening to regular seaway standards—that is, over-all depth to 27 feet—is scheduled for 1963 in all channels.

TRADE

ALCAN—POSSIBLE PROSECUTION OF U.S. DIRECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether his attention has been drawn to a report from Washington that a United States official has refused to give an assurance that United States directors of the Aluminum Company of Canada would not be prosecuted under the trading with red China law if that Canadian company sold aluminum to China.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the article to which the hon. member has referred, but I thank him for drawing my attention to it.

WATER RESOURCES

CHICAGO DIVERSION—INQUIRY AS TO OBJECTION TO U.S. LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, by way of clarification I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of the question of the Leader of the Opposition to the minister on Wednesday dealing with the diversion of water from lake Michigan at Chicago. My question is, did the Canadian government raise any objection to the bill concerning the Chicago diversion which was before the United States congress last year?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I must emphasize in reply that the Canadian government did make lengthy representations in writing which are contained in an aide memoire to the United States Department of State of January 6, 1958 and which, as I said on Wednesday, was tabled in this house on August 2, 1958.

The aide-memoire registered the serious and deep concern of the government with respect to the injurious consequences which would result from any considerable diversion of water from the great lakes system.

Mr. Pearson: Did the particular note to which my hon. friend refers express objection to the passage of this particular bill?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): It did, sir; in essence it did.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) asked me a question regarding municipal incentive programs in the province of Quebec, and particularly with respect to Montreal. In the answer I gave I regret that I possibly caused him some discomfort or embarrassment. I was informed that the province of Quebec had some 100 projects submitted by various municipalities in that province. Some of these have already been processed and approved by the federal government. However, since then I have been informed that while the city of Montreal submitted a number of projects to the provincial government amounting to some $8 million, they were not submitted on the proper forms. The province of Quebec has returned them to Montreal in order that they may list them on the proper forms, and I understand that is being done now.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES FOR 1955 AND 1958

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he would now give to the house the figures I asked for yesterday—I refer to the dominion bureau of statistics figures—for total unemployment for December of 1958 and for December of 1955.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the figure for December, 1958 is, of course, 440,000. The figure for December, 1955 is 200,000. When I referred to unemployment in 1955 I referred to the period in March, 1955 when the figure was 403,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: In order to complete the figures, would the hon. gentleman give us the figure for March, 1958?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, it is well known to the hon. gentleman but I will repeat it to him in case he has not heard it. It is 590,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly. It proves that the statement the minister made was wrong.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman wants to waste the time of the house.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—RECOMMENDATIONS BY AVRO RESPECTING PRODUCTION CUT-BACKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is the minister in a position to confirm a statement of the mayor of Sydney Mills, an ex-member of the coal board, that three months ago A. V. Roe of Canada submitted recommendations to the dominion coal board designed to alleviate prospective cut-backs in the Nova Scotia coal industry, but the board has not dealt with them?

(Translation):

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, as I previously indicated, we have had representations from the dominion coal board, or rather from Dosco, in connection with coal production and the assistance which the government might provide. I have already told the hon. member, and I now repeat, that the matter is being considered and that we have had no official notice from the company regarding any staff reductions or production cut-backs.

(Text):

Mr. Robichaud: Will the minister explain to the house why there are no representatives from Nova Scotia on the dominion coal board?

(Translation):

Mr. Comtois: Mr. Speaker, the matter was also referred to the dominion coal board, and I understand that Mr. Hartigan, the former director, will be replaced shortly.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—REPORTED MARCH ON OTTAWA BY PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan)?

According to yesterday morning papers, the Montreal T.V. producers are planning to come to Ottawa next Tuesday to submit their grievances to the Minister of National Revenue who reports for the C.B.C.; could the minister tell us whether he proposes to meet that delegation?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will appreciate that he is asking a hypothetical question, namely that if a certain event takes place what will the minister do, and I think he might await the event rather than ask for a decision in advance with regard to something that has not yet occurred.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, may I put my question differently and ask the hon. Minister of National Revenue whether the striking C.B.C. producers have asked him to meet them next Tuesday?

(Text):

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. As far as I know, unless it has come in within the last hour or two, I do not have anything in my office about that.

(Translation):

Mr. H. Pit Lessard (St. Henry): In case the minister concerned is unable to meet the producers, could the government do so?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I did not understand the hon. member's question. Will he repeat it?

(Translation):

Mr. Lessard: I should like, if I may, to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In the event of the minister concerned being unable to meet the producers who are coming here Tuesday, could the government do so?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether or not the hon. member heard my remarks about the earlier question, but his question is in exactly the same category. In my opinion it is hypothetical.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): May I ask a question on the same subject, Mr. Speaker. If the minister has not received any communication requesting an interview, has the Prime Minister or any member of the cabinet received one?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member directing his question to a particular minister?

Mr. Caron: I am directing my question to the Prime Minister. If the Minister of National Revenue has not received any communication requesting an interview with the group of producers in Montreal, has the Prime Minister received any communication making such a request?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have no recollection of any such message having been received, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking from recollection now, but I think I would remember.

(Translation):

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), as senior minister of the province of Quebec.

It is still on the same subject—in view of the breakdown of negotiations between the Montreal television producers and the C.B.C., does the Solicitor General propose to intervene either by approaching his colleagues or otherwise, in an attempt to find a solution to this conflict which has lasted long enough?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this situation is, of course, most regrettable. It is regretted by the people, by the ministers of the province of Quebec and all others. However, as everyone knows, this is a dispute between C.B.C. producers and C.B.C. authorities. Both the Minister of National Revenue, who reports to the house for the C.B.C., and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), have very closely followed developments of the dispute. Unfortunately, under the circumstances, I cannot say how it will turn out, or what will happen. It would be mere conjecture and I do not know what we will be able to do in the circumstances. However, you may be assured that we are following developments very closely. We hope that on both sides common sense will prevail and that an agreement will eventually be reached so that the Canadian people, who foot the bill, may enjoy first-rate television programs.

[Mr. Speaker.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ISSUE OF STAMPS COMMEMORATING BATTLE OF PLAINS OF ABRAHAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton).

Could he say whether his department will issue a commemorative stamp to mark the second centenary of the battle of the Plains of Abraham?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will have one.

(Text):

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—LIQUOR RIGHTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question, sir, which I should like to direct to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Unfortunately I have not given her notice of it, but it is something of which I am sure she will have immediate knowledge. I did not want her to think she was being neglected in this presentation of questions. I wonder if the minister has received from the government of British Columbia a request for federal cabinet approval for complete liquor rights for native Indians out there and, if so, what action is contemplated.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No representations have yet reached my desk. If they are in the mail no doubt they will come forward in time. I have received nothing to date.

(Translation):

POSTAL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO RESTORATION OF TWICE-DAILY MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton).

To help relieve unemployment, does the hon. minister propose to realize his dearest wish, that of restoring twice-daily mail delivery service?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Not right now, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: He has changed his mind.

(Text):

FISHERIES

SALMON—REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN MIRAMICHI DRIFT NET SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Did the minister receive representations from the Miramichi salmon drifters association requesting changes in the Miramichi salmon drift net season? If the minister did receive such representations, will this matter be referred to the Atlantic salmon co-ordinating committee?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I want to thank the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi for giving me notice of this question, which I received since coming into the house. I may say that such representations have been received. The normal procedure is that they will be referred to the Atlantic salmon co-ordinating committee.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

NELSON, B.C.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF MOUNTED POLICE HEADQUARTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the current unemployment situation in the city of Nelson, B.C. and the desire of a good number of persons to obtain employment, can the minister inform the house when construction of the proposed headquarters for the R.C.M.P. in that city will commence?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have not had word within the last few days, but that contract has already been let and I believe work is already in progress.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ESKIMOS—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "MACLEAN'S" MAGAZINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I wonder whether the minister would care to comment on the article written by Farley Mowat and appearing in the current issue of Maclean's magazine, which article deals with government policy with respect to Eskimos in the north?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest it is hardly appropriate to invite general comment on such a broad subject on the orders of the day.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SEARCH AND RESCUE

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ATLANTIC COASTGUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement attributed to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of November 13, 1958, to the effect that the government is still considering the establishment of a coastguard for the Atlantic coast, can the Minister of Transport tell the house if action will be taken to establish such a coastguard at this session of parliament?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this matter is still under consideration.

TRANSPORT

CHIGNECTO CANAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON COST SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister now prepared to report to the house on the progress of the cost survey of the Chignecto canal to be undertaken by the Department of Public Works, as announced in this house on August 28 last, when he promised to report at a later date?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

Mr. Robichaud: I have a supplementary question. Has the survey been undertaken?

Mr. Hees: The survey certainly has not been completed. I will confer with my colleague the Minister of Public Works to find out what is the position.

Mr. Robichaud: Has it been started?

Mr. Hees: I told the hon. member I would speak to my colleague. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works will answer now.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): If the hon. member will check his Hansard for last year I think he will find that I said a study had been undertaken by the department.

Mr. Robichaud: Is the Minister of Public Works prepared to report on the progress of that survey?

Mr. Green: No.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

D.E.W. LINE—FLYING OF CANADIAN FLAG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence arising out of a silly answer I got from him the other day.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the hon. member will—

Mr. Hardie: I should like to ask the minister if in view of the fine weather which has been forecast for Canada today he would permit the Canadian flag to fly over defence establishments in Canada.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I explained the other day, flags are not flown over Arctic stations during severe weather nor are they flown during hours of darkness, and there are long hours of darkness in the Arctic at this time of the year. When it is suitable to fly a flag at the Arctic stations, the Canadian flag will be flown.

Mr. Pearson: Is it a fact, then, that our flag can brave the battle but not the breeze?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. The minister has referred to what he classifies as the Canadian flag. I wonder if he could indicate what he means by that.

Mr. Pearkes: The flag which is recognized at the present time as the flag to be flown over the Canadian stations of the Canadian armed forces is that usually described as the red ensign with the coat of arms of Canada in the fly.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the minister a supplementary question. Can the minister say by what authority that flag is flown?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mackenzie King's.

Mr. Speaker: I may be presuming too much, but it seems to me that is a matter of law, and the hon. member should not really be asking the opinion of the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Pickersgill: The order in council of September 5, 1945.

Mr. Hardie: I will ask the Minister of Defence now if he would be good enough to answer the question I asked the other day. Will the United States flag fly side by side with the Canadian flag when the weather does warm up in the Arctic?

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Speaker: I was about to suggest that that was a hypothetical question, but I expect the weather will warm up in the Arctic.

Mr. Pearkes: It has been customary that when there are special occasions flags of other countries should be flown as a courtesy in conjunction with the flag of Canada, and on such occasions those flags are flown. For instance, on certain national or international days the flags of many countries are flown in front of the parliament buildings. If a United States flag or any other flag is flown over an Arctic station it would be done as a matter of courtesy.

Mr. Hardie: In that event I should like to direct a further question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister tell me now what change in the sovereignty over the Arctic D.E.W. line stations there is now that was not there a week ago, before he made his statement of last Monday.

Mr. Speaker: I am not very clear as to what the hon. member is asking, but if it is what I think it is, it is out of order.

INQUIRY AS TO COST OF BOMARC INSTALLATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. According to the newspapers he is reported as having said that the cost of the installation for the Bomarc missile would be between $10 million and $100 million. Could he give us a more accurate figure today?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker; it is impossible to give an accurate figure today.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MCGEE—OCCUPANCY OF COMMONS SEAT BY FORMER MEMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege. An event occurred in this house last night which as far as I know is without precedent in Canadian or British history. A former member of this house was observed to take his seat on the floor of this chamber.

Those of us who observed this occurrence were, I must confess, so startled at the temerity and presumption of such an action that before we were able to draw the matter to the attention of the incumbent of the Speaker's chair the gentleman concerned escaped. I have a twofold request to make to you; first that you clarify the position of former members who resume their seats without proper authority. Secondly, in the event of a man being taken into custody by the sergeant-at-arms, I am wondering where that person would be confined.

Mr. Speaker: Questions of order and privilege should be taken up at the time they arise. Of course it would be improper for anyone not a member of the house to enter the house without its permission, but I am afraid that was a matter of yesterday, and we are dealing with today's business.

CIVIL DEFENCE

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR—REQUEST FOR REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and ask him if he expects to be able to announce the appointment of a civil defence director in the course of the next few days or, if not, when he expects to be able to make such an announcement.

Is the minister also in a position to tell the house when we may expect to see the report prepared by the former chief of staff in respect of civil defence?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not yet in a position to make the statement to which I made reference in my reply to a similar question on January 20. General Graham's report is still under active study. I think I should point out, however, in view of the hon. member's inquiry as to the possibility of tabling the report, that this is a report prepared at the request of the government by a man who, in addition to being a distinguished Canadian soldier, was also at the time and continues to be a member of the public service of Canada. General Graham did not cease to be a member of the public service when he retired from his post as chief of the general staff on August 31 last. He was merely seconded from the defence department for a period of four months to prepare the civil defence report, which he has now completed.

This report must therefore be considered a privileged document, containing the views and recommendations of a member of the public service of Canada submitted for the consideration of the government. This was General Graham's understanding in the preparation of the report. Because of this, in addition to the considerations I have already mentioned, references appeared in the report to Canada's defence arrangements, all of which require the report to be treated as a privileged document.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I have an answer to the first question, namely when the civil defence director for Canada will be appointed? That post has been vacant now for some eight months.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The hon. member is quite right. The post has been vacant, and I am unable to state at this moment when it will be filled.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who is acting now as head of civil defence in Canada?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Major General G. S. Hatton is deputy co-ordinator.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Thursday, January 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. W. H. Jorgenson for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I never anticipated that it would take me two days to deliver my maiden speech.

At this time I should like to join in the welcome that has been extended to our two distinguished guests from other nations of the commonwealth who are visiting us today. I hope their stay here will prove to be as rewarding and educational as it has proven entertaining.

Last night at the hour of adjournment I had disposed of that part of my speech in which I dealt with the position of the opposition. I had gone on to outline some of the great challenges we face in the world today. I discussed the great demand for qualified and dedicated leadership. Of what does leadership consist? The greatness of a leader lies in his dignity, his diplomacy and his belief in democracy. Dignity consists of simplicity, sincerity and seriousness of purpose. Diplomacy consists of the ability to respect the other person's point of view, the ability to reason and the ability to co-operate.

In brief, democracy consists of the fundamental freedoms; freedom to believe, freedom to speak those beliefs; freedom of the press to perpetuate and criticize those beliefs. There is also freedom from fear of persecution for your views; that is, the right to be wrong. I suggest that this last is the most important for without it the others perish. More recently a new freedom has evolved, freedom from want, and we all subscribe to it to a degree. However, when economic freedom is overextended it tends to infringe on political freedom. There is a danger of drifting in that direction today. Economic freedom versus political freedom is the biggest issue of the day and one that will hold the stage for many decades to come. We must find a formula of the relativity of the two that is consistent with the principles of democracy.

Just as there is a demand for leadership, there is a demand on leadership. A leader must be prepared to give far more than he will ever receive, for leadership is a life of selflessness, service and sacrifice. High as are the qualifications of leadership that I have outlined there are, I submit, hon. gentlemen in this chamber who meet those qualifications. But I would also submit that there is one man who meets those qualifications in an outstanding manner and his name, like that of Abou ben Adhem, leads all the rest. I refer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

To hon. members of this house of all parties may I say this, Mr. Speaker. All of us have a great heritage to which we must live up, and as individuals we should stand for principles we know are right. There is a great challenge before us. As individuals we should not bow before overbearing majorities or vociferous minorities whoever they may be. Nor should we yield to the defeatist cry that "It can't be done". That cry has re-echoed on Canada's frontiers in the past, when it could be done and was done. Our people place in us their faith and hope for peace and progress. It seems to me that all of us in this chamber are pressing our shoulders to that great wheel which turns the gears of democracy and leads to progress. I am sure that somewhere in that great book in which the annals of Canadian history are written each one will make his little mark with a job well done.

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, at the very outset may I say that one returns to a new session of parliament with mingled feelings. One experiences a sense of anticipation, looking forward to meeting various members of parliament in sincere friendship and wondering how they are faring in their individual ridings. But one is also touched with deep regret when one learns, as generally happens, that we are called upon to pay our respects to a few of our number who have been called to their great reward.

I believe we also return with a feeling of anxiety about what the speech from the throne is going to contain. To the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne may I repeat what has been said so well on many previous occasions. I felt they brought honour not only to themselves but to the party they represent and to the House of Commons as well in the fine and masterful way they talked about this speech that contained so little about which one could talk.

I also want to say, and I say this seriously indeed, that I extend a hearty and warm welcome to the new members of this house. Unfortunately our party did not fare too well in terms of strengthening its representation in this chamber, but I was especially glad to welcome to our midst the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) who has a wealth of experience in parliamentary procedure and who will contribute much from his vast experience and ability.

I also wish to extend a sincere welcome to the hon. lady who represents the riding of Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman). I say that because I have always had a soft spot in my heart for her father, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), with whom I have enjoyed a warm friendship extending over many years. He and I have in common something which is not shared by many other hon. members in this house, in that we both were born in the Unted States, and this has served to draw us together more closely than the reins of his race horses.

I hope it will be of interest to hon. members if I devote some time reporting to the house about the recent meeting in Washington of the joint Canada-United States interparliamentary committee. I feel I owe it to the house to report about our meeting. Before doing so, however, I want to say a hearty word of thanks not only to the Prime Minister but to my leader for honouring me by allowing me to serve on the committee. This was not only an honour to me but to the riding of Niagara Falls which I have the honour to represent, and the people of that area accepted it as such.

A few weeks ago, as hon. members will recall, some of us had the honour to serve on a committee appointed by this house to meet with a similar committee from the house of representatives of the United States to discuss important problems of mutual concern respecting our two great countries. It might be amusing to hon. gentlemen to know that at our very first meeting we discussed the proper name for this body. There were many good suggestions made, and after they were all taken and shuffled we finally decided and had rather a small baptismal service—that the committee be christened the Canada-United States interparliamentary group.

I wish to say that I was proud of our speaker in Washington and proud of the speaker of the other place as well because of the leadership they gave us, as the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) so well said the other day. I can say this, Mr. Speaker, that in the limited experience I have had—and I know I am speaking the thoughts of the other members of the committee—we never experienced such wonderful hospitality as we met when we arrived and during our stay in Washington. I pay my utmost respect, and I find it rather difficult to find words adequately to express our sincere appreciation, to our embassy in Washington. I am so glad the Prime Minister has seen fit finally to appoint our ambassador to Washington, but his aides down there were performing a wonderful job. On leaving there I felt that they had left nothing undone that could have been done for our enjoyment. I think they are servants of whom we in Canada can be justly proud.

I also wish to say a word in regard to Mr. Merchant, who most hon. members know very well. He was formerly ambassador from the United States to Canada and now serves as undersecretary of state of the United States. I wish to thank him for the wonderful reception he and his wife gave to our committee. I was so glad we were allowed to take our wives along. I doubt, Mr. Speaker, whether the United States ever saw any better looking women than we had with us on that day. One of the highlights was that we were allowed to go to the White House and meet the President of the United States. It was a wonderful reception. We were invited into his office. He shook hands with each one personally; then he talked to us off the cuff, if I may use the expression, for about 10 minutes, and then he posed for a picture at his desk with our visiting Canadian group and before we left he shook hands with each one again.

I want to say that was one of the thrills of our meeting. He said then, and I noticed he used it in his speech to the nation, and these words will always stay with me in regard to our group visiting Washington; and I think it well for us to follow this on our side: "One basic purpose unites us; to promote strength and security side by side with liberty and opportunity."

Perhaps hon. members would like to know the composition of the committee. I shall go over it very quickly. First there was the Speaker of the other place, Senator William R. Brunt from Hanover and Senator Sydney John Smith from Kamloops. From this house we had our own esteemed Speaker and the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Thrasher) and myself. We felt honoured to act on that committee.

Why was there such a committee? Why did the Prime Minister see fit to appoint such a committee, and why did the house discuss at no great length last session the formation of such a committee to meet with our friends to the south of us? May I put on record what some of the United States senators had to say? This is what Senator George Aiken from Vermont, one of the older senators, a very fine man, chairman of that committee, performing a wonderful job not only on behalf of his state but on behalf of the United States, had to say:

> Reports of friction are exaggerated. Areas of agreement and co-operation are far more numerous than areas of disagreement.

Senator Richard Neuberger of Oregon, who was not on the committee, said:

> Relationships have worsened during the past year because of needless irritations over tariffs, world wheat markets, mutual use of the upper Columbia river and similar problems. Canadians have exaggerated the degree to which their pride in national growth must be turned against the United States; this may have been agitated during the last Canadian election. Relationships could be improved by a plan for gradual elimination of all tariff barriers over a five-year period.

Senator Warren Magnuson of Washington said:

> Relations slipped badly last year but Canada and the United States reassessed their stand. As a result relations are now on upturn.

Representative Frank Boykin of Alabama said:

> Our relations did deteriorate during the past 12 months but are now on upswing.

Representative Sam Rayburn from Texas is certainly a man about whom we read in the press. He continues to be one of the finest men in the House of Representatives. Indeed, he could have had the nomination for President of the United States at different times, but he said, "If I had taken nomination for the presidency of the United States I would be out of a job at the present time." He has been Speaker of the House of Representatives for many years, and to know him is to appreciate him. He said:

> Our relations are good because they must be.

Truer words were never spoken, Mr. Speaker. He said:

> I expect to do everything I can to keep them on the highest level.

Representative Henry Reuss of Wisconsin said:

> Slightly improved. Biggest single factor was the passage by congress of an amendment that requires our surplus disposal program to be so administered as not to interfere with the marketings of free countries. This would alleviate displacement of Canada's wheat exports.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that one could not help believing that those business meetings we had with representatives of the United States opened a new chapter of splendid friendship pertaining to Canadian-United States relations.

We decided at the meeting—and I think this will be of interest to all members of the house—that in addition to our committee of nine we would ask this house, and the United States committee agreed with this—to permit at future meetings 15 to 24 members of the house to accompany the committee. We decided that we would not necessarily hold all the meetings in Washington and Ottawa. We felt that if we had something to discuss with the United States about the Columbia river or some British Columbia problem it would be only right that we should go to British Columbia. United States representatives felt that if it was something having to do with the western United States it would be well for the committee to travel out to the western part of the United States.

I think it was a good thing that the committee felt that all hon. members should have the same status and the same opportunity as the regular members of the committee, and that they should be permitted to take part in discussions as well. Therefore when we have our next meeting I hope we shall have other hon. members with us. If we go to Quebec I hope we shall have Quebec members accompanying us.

Then we discussed the time and place of the next meeting. We decided we should meet at least twice a year. We decided that our meetings would be absolutely informal. Although we felt we could not bring forward any definite resolutions at the present time—that rests with the higher levels of government—we felt we could at least make recommendations and give some advice to the higher levels of government, and we thought that would be a good step toward the solution of some of our problems.

We decided that our next meeting would be in June, to correspond with the official opening of the St. Lawrence seaway. We would also like the members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives to be here while our house and Senate are still in session so they can see how we act here and, if possible, witness the prorogation of parliament. We also decided that, if possible, the committee should not only visit Ottawa and the St. Lawrence but we would take the members to various parts of Quebec as well as having them sail the length of the Welland canal and, of course, we would never overlook having them spend a day in Niagara Falls.

We decided that at the next meeting we would discuss certain problems. We had a round table discussion, and each member put forward what he thought would be the most important problems to discuss. The problems that were put on the next agenda were, first, defence relationships, and then trade problems, boundary water issues, water disposal, investment policies, revival of the Hyde Park agreement, fisheries problems, defence production questions and the co-ordination of Canadian and United States foreign policies.

When the opening of congress took place, Mr. Speaker, we heard the President of the United States make his address to the nation and I was most impressed, as I am sure you were, Mr. Speaker, with the opening of congress that day. Naturally security guards were all over the place. The galleries were packed, and when everything was ready Speaker Rayburn and Vice-President Nixon came to the platform. Then the usher-at-large announced that the ambassadors from foreign countries were entering the house, and they formed a wonderful group for us to see. Then the judges of the supreme court, in their full flowing gowns, walked down the aisle to their seats at the front. Then the members of the cabinet were introduced and walked down the aisle in a body. Then, as is the usual custom—no doubt many of you have seen this on television or listened to the proceedings on radio—the Speaker appointed four or five senators to accompany the President of the United States into the chamber. The President, of course, received a great deal of applause when his entrance was announced.

In the afternoon we were taken to the United States Senate where they have, I believe, 92 members, and one thing struck me very forcibly. Senator Aiken, one of the finest and oldest senators, said to me, "The welcome will take about five minutes. I will simply introduce each of you individually, and then you will walk halfway down the floor of the Senate and stand there. The whole thing will soon be over." I want to say to hon. members that the reception accorded us in the Senate that afternoon, as many senators told us afterwards, was unprecedented in the history of that chamber. Instead of the welcome taking five minutes it took a full 40 minutes, and it certainly warmed the cockles of our hearts when one senator after another rose to his feet in order to welcome us. It made us feel very much at home.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and the permission of the house I should like to put on Hansard as an appendix the proceedings on that occasion as found in the Congressional Record. I am sure the speeches of welcome by the senators will be of interest to all members of the house. I should like to have permission, Mr. Speaker, to put this on the record.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Niagara Falls is suggesting that the house give leave to print as an appendix the words of welcome spoken by United States senators to the Canadian delegation. Is it the pleasure of the house to agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Houck: I think, Mr. Speaker, the Speaker of the other place expressed the purpose of our meetings very well when he said:

> This committee will fill a gap in the exchanges of thought between our two countries. We now have exchanges on the diplomatic level and the cabinet level, both confidential, but these exchanges between the rank and file of our legislatures will be less secret and meet an apparent need.

We as members of this committee look forward to important mutual benefits to Canada and the United States from the possibilities of future understanding and cooperation. A short time ago two reports were presented to the eighty-fifth congress, second session, House of Representatives, by Hon. Brooks Hays of Arkansas and Hon. Frank Coffin of Maine. I want to refer to what they said in summing up the situation. I was greatly impressed when I read their report. The thing that impressed me most was that after ten months of investigation on their part into our trade relations with the United States and the influence of the republic to the south on our overseas markets, we were really going to get some place. It was refreshing indeed to see a United States congressional committee arrive at some very definite conclusions, conclusions that virtually agreed with those of our statesmen.

I am sure these conclusions summarize the opinions of the predominant majority of Canadian businessmen. Their report recommended that Americans investing in Canada ought to be doubly responsive to Canadian sensitivity and employ as many Canadians as possible. The report adds that Canadians fear that Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies will be shut down if depression hits the United States, and that the Canadian market will again be saturated with United States products. It also urges that no upward changes in United States tariffs should be made without exploring all other possibilities, that revisions of tariffs should always be subject to review, and that businessmen should not be involved in too much red tape at the border. It recognizes as well that the great Canadian aluminium plants were developed to supply the United States market and that Canadians do not therefore appreciate the United States imposing a duty on a product that is being produced here at their request. The report is also critical of the recent report of the United States tariff commission proposing increased duties on lead and zinc which might throw whole Canadian towns on the unemployment lists. They also recommended, and I think rightly so, that the United States consider the interests of Canada as an exporter before dumping goods on foreign markets or selling them on terms that practically exclude Canadian competition.

One thought that struck me forcibly was that seldom since the beginning of the high tariff age has a United States congressional report been so unselfish in its proposals. Certainly if it is accepted by congress it will be of great benefit to Canada at the present time and will give our own businessmen more confidence in the future. I know that we as members of parliament, including those who were members of the committee that visited Washington, certainly hope that the old guard will not liquidate the report, and that it will meet with the approval of congress. There were, of course, more recommendations made but the fact remains that something is being done, and I think this is the important thing, to improve relations between the two countries.

During our recent visit to Washington one United States senator said to me, "We feel it is important to know what you Canadians really think about us." My obvious answer to that, of course, was, "We would like to know what you think of us." But I also added that we could get along famously if the United States did not take us for granted, which would be a very great mistake. It is most important, Mr. Speaker, that we in Canada do not take the United States for granted, and that the people of the United States do not take Canadians for granted. I could not help but feel as a result of this conference—I know this feeling will be stronger as time marches on—that although there are a lot of dark spots in this troubled world there are certainly a number of bright spots as well, and one of them is the genuine friendship Canadians and Americans have for each other and the deep respect each country has for the other. We need only to think how different it is in other parts of the world where troops guard frontiers, where suspicion and mistrust are rampant, and where the attempt to spread an undemocratic ideology has resulted in chaos and has handicapped the reconstruction of the world after the most disastrous war in history.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is some 140 years since the Rush-Bagot treaty was signed which brought peace between our countries. We have gotten along very well since then, although at times there have been sources of irritation. Even after this treaty was signed there were still two sources of irritation to be settled, one of which was cleaned up by the Webster-Ashburton treaty of 1842 which settled the boundary line between New Brunswick and Maine. Then there was a further arbitration in 1846 which decided the boundary line between Canada and Alaska. The story from that time on has been one of increasing co-operation between Canada and the United States.

I want to say this, Mr. Speaker. We say we do not have any forts along our boundary line between these two countries. As I said in Washington we have larger forts over here, and the thing of which I am proud, and I say this to hon. members of this house, is that these forts are strong structures that will stand for a lifetime because they are based on what we call friendship. We invite the people of the United States to come here. I might use that old, familiar saying in this connection: "Happy to meet, sorry to part, happy to meet again". Why should we not welcome these people? We have been partners in two of the greatest wars ever fought. Our soldiers have fallen side by side with those of the United States in the common defence of a way of life which we believe to be best.

These two wars, especially the last one, have been followed by the cementing of closer ties. As I said, I live on the border between our two great countries, so I am continually reminded of the fact that the unguarded border between the United States and Canada is indeed a magnificent symbol of the real meaning of friendship. One cannot help but feel that if the world wants a formula for peace it should turn to the northern hemisphere. Our two great countries, Canada and the United States, have proven to the other peoples of the world that two nations can live side by side, not in fear but indeed in friendship. Over the years we have demonstrated again and again, as we did in the conference just concluded and will continue to do in the future, the value of getting together on problems of mutual concern.

In my opinion the real significance of our relationship with the United States is the fact that in spite of differences we have had peace, and in spite of our difficulties we have, indeed, had friendship. Surely it is a comparatively easy thing to get along when there is nothing to quarrel about. We have had disputes, and we are going to have future disputes. We will be able to settle them in a friendly way, though at times we will have to talk frankly to each other. Certainly these discussions will not threaten our friendship in any way whatever. So far as I am concerned the United States-Canadian border is the main street of North America. Our fellowship with one another finds its inspiration in our mutual respect for freedom and our joint belief in the dignity and worth of the individual human being. It is further buttressed by our determination to safeguard the welfare and security of our people, and our resolve to maintain and defend the essential values of our society.

I have always felt that Canadians are like the people of the United States in their strong determination never to be found on the backs of the weak or at the feet of the strong, but we will be at the side of those who believe in freedom and democracy as we do. I think our history is now at the crossroads. Our deliberations in parliament, and the policies we follow, will affect future generations to come. I feel we must never lose sight of the fact when we are defining these policies that the great question of our time is whether the world will follow the high road to freedom or stumble into the dead-end street of communism. This government, as well as we in the opposition, has two or three aims. First, we must safeguard our freedom; we must maintain economic stability, and we must care for the human problems of individual citizens. In my opinion the greatest threat to democracy and freedom comes from within ourselves. We as members of parliament must have the courage to lead and to discharge our responsibilities in an effective and fearless way. Democracy, freedom and responsibility go hand in hand. If we lose one we lose all.

I always take a lot of pride, Mr. Speaker, in talking about the rainbow arch at Niagara Falls, which is visible most of the time during the day. It always seems to me that is a symbol of peace and friendship between two great countries.

They told us in Washington that history was made as a result of the formation of this interparliamentary committee. Senator Aiken said he did not know of any other countries the two legislative bodies of which had met at the same level. I should like to refer to what the correspondent of the Financial Post in Washington said. He said that a major improvement in Canada-U.S. economic relations may have occurred with the agreement on a Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group.

I think the Speaker of our house said, and it was very apropos, that this fills a gap in the relations between the two countries, and we hope these discussions will be as broad as possible.

Then again, the Financial Post said that it is from congress that most of Canada's miseries with Uncle Sam stem, and hence a better congressional awareness of Canada can be a highly beneficial result of these parliamentary-congressional meetings. When Senator Aiken, the senator to whom I referred a few minutes ago, said good-bye to us he said that never before in its history had the United States congress established such close legislative links with another country. I say, therefore, that this interparliamentary group has made history, and as one newspaper so rightly said it will give us a direct channel into the United States congress.

I should like to plead with this government, Mr. Speaker, to do something about paying at least 50 per cent of the expenses of the Belleville McFarland's hockey team which will carry Canada's colours into the world hockey tournament in the coming months. As I understand it this club is looking for $50,000. I think it is a disgrace to the Dominion of Canada that this club has to ask councils in various cities and towns of the province, as well as various citizens, to share in the expenses of this team. I understand the larger cities have been asked for one-tenth of one cent per person. This does not amount to much, but it certainly seems to me that when we consider the honour this team will bring to Canada, the province from which the team comes and the federal government should each share 50 per cent of the cost. I do not feel the cost is excessive, because hockey seems to be our national game and we should at least be financially responsible for the expenses of this team. Many of these boys have good jobs, many of them have families to support, and certainly it is no encouragement to the boys on this hockey team to have to go begging for their expenses before they attempt to bring this signal honour to Canada. I hope that the Minister of Finance and the provincial treasurer will see fit to make contributions toward the expenses of this team, and I know every member will wish them good luck, feeling that they will bring us a lot of credit and honour.

There is just one more thing I wish to mention, Mr. Speaker, and then I shall be finished. I should like to speak on something that is close to my heart in my own riding of Niagara Falls. This matter affects not only silverware companies in Niagara Falls but indeed silverware companies all over Canada. I must admit that it is rather rough going when these companies are up against the price competition of stainless steel from Japan.

In the first place, Japanese imports of flat silverware into Canada for the first six months of 1958 were 1,368,000 dozen. In the second place, that amount is three times as much as Japan has imported into Canada in any equivalent period. In the third place, Japanese exports to Canada in the month of June last exceeded exports to the United States for the first time in history, the actual figures being more than 300,000 dozen to Canada versus 260,000 dozen to the United States.

Japanese imports into Canada last year by volume were about double the output of all Canadian manufacturers combined. It seems obvious that the Japanese are dumping into Canada the production that the United States quota prevents them from shipping to that country. Certainly the final result of this situation will be that unless we make some quota arrangements in the near future, we shall have no stainless steel industry here in Canada. The only conclusion one can draw is that once this industry is forced to close down because it cannot meet Japanese competition, it is doubtful if it will ever start again. The decline in Japanese exports to the United States was more than offset by the increased export shipments to Canada which took place during the first six months of 1958. In June, 1958, Canada's purchases of stainless steel tableware from Japan topped purchases made by the United States.

In Niagara Falls we have three large silverware companies. Because of the importation of this flat silverware from Japan, employment in at least two of these companies has been decreased by over 50 per cent as compared with what it was twelve months ago. I certainly hope the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance will take steps to correct this situation as soon as possible. It is an alarming situation as far as we are concerned. If this condition could be rectified it would be of material assistance with regard to the unemployment situation in the Niagara district.

May I say this in closing, Mr. Speaker, and I say it with all the sincerity possible. I hope the members of this house will take a great interest in this committee which was formed some time ago and about which I spoke. When hon. members are asked to serve on this committee I hope they will find the time to do so. They will find it well worth while to meet these gentlemen from the United States.

I want to say this, and I do so because of experience. When you are talking to these senators and members of the House of Representatives, you are in the world series, you are talking in big time, and you must be on your mettle. They have the same feeling that we have. It is the uppermost feeling in our hearts and minds that we want to do everything we can for Canada. They want to do everything they can for the United States. We want to stand on our own feet. We are out to protect the rights of Canada. They are out to protect the rights of the United States. But when the final conclusion is arrived at, it will be a definite conclusion to the benefit of the great republic of the United States and of our great Dominion of Canada.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add my congratulations to those already proffered by so many members of the house to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It is a particular pleasure for me to congratulate these gentlemen. The mover made an excellent speech on agriculture, a subject on which he is particularly well qualified to speak. The seconder made one of the finest maiden speeches which has ever been heard in this house.

I am going to devote my remarks today entirely to agriculture. I have, of course, practically nothing to deal with in the way of criticism as far as the Leader of the Opposition is concerned. In his speech of two hours and twenty minutes, or 140 minutes, he devoted nearly half a minute to agriculture. This was rather summary treatment, Mr. Speaker, for the industry on which more of our people are still dependent, either directly or indirectly, than on any other industry in Canada. However, when the Leader of the Opposition was engaging in such great flights of fancy and imagination probably we should not expect him to devote his thoughts and his time to anything so down to earth as our food supply and the farmers who produce it. The closest the Leader of the Opposition managed to get to agriculture, practically, was the setting up of straw men and then knocking them down.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, what did he say in this nearly one-half minute which he devoted to agriculture? It consisted chiefly of a gibe at the Prime Minister and myself, and a statement that confusion existed with regard to agriculture. I think in the next few minutes I can demonstrate that there is not and never has been any confusion as far as we are concerned in our agricultural policies. This attempt on the part of the Leader of the Opposition, which was followed up by one of his supporters, to demonstrate or make out that there is a difference of opinion between the Prime Minister and myself with regard to agriculture is completely without foundation.

On numerous occasions the Prime Minister has spoken on the desirability of a world food bank and of a NATO food bank, and by this means making use of the large agricultural production which we have in Canada. I think everybody in this chamber and everybody concerned with agriculture throughout the country is aware of the desirability of those ideas coming to fruition. However, at the present time neither of those schemes is in actual operation. Under these circumstances it is necessary for us to tailor our agricultural production to the markets which we possess and those which we have any reasonable possibility of securing. To take the statements I have made on these matters and then contrast them with the statements the Prime Minister has made as to the world food bank and the NATO food bank and so on, and attempt to show that there is a conflict between them is, as I say, a mere political trick without any foundation in fact.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) dealt with agriculture at greater length than did the Leader of the Opposition, but to no more effect. His remarks consisted chiefly of the usual loose and inaccurate statements of the type which characterized the speeches he made throughout western Canada last fall and early winter. Those speeches really all boiled down to the statement that the Conservative government had done nothing for agriculture, and the attempt was made to leave the general impression that farmers are no better off now than they were before we took office and perhaps are worse off.

Let us look at the record, Mr. Speaker. There is on the record plenty of evidence to show what is the actual situation of agriculture and of our farmers. It shows conclusively that these allegations on the part of the hon. member for Assiniboia and others are not correct. First of all I should like to mention the large number of things we have done to aid agriculture and the farmers since we came into office. Most of these things are in the records of the house. I have not time today to review them all or even to mention them all, but I should like to summarize a few to refresh the memory of hon. members opposite.

Immediately after taking office we took action to dispose of some of the surpluses which were in the hands of the price support board and which had been there for a considerable period of time, to get rid of them so they would not continue to overhang the market. Within a few weeks of assuming office we put import controls and price supports on turkeys and fowl. We put into effect a starch diversion program for potatoes as far as New Brunswick was concerned, a freight assistance program for hay in Nova Scotia, and import control on dried skimmed milk. In the first session after the election we put into effect cash advances on farm-stored grain, something we had advocated for years but which the Liberal party claimed could not be done. We placed all forms of butter and butter fat under price support and import control; we set up a royal commission on price spreads which is still sitting and which has made a very exhaustive investigation of price spreads, and the effect of its activities and its report will, I think, be very beneficial not only to farmers but also to consumers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the present chairman of that board going to continue?

Mr. Harkness: Dr. Andrew Stewart is continuing as chairman of the board at the present time in order to complete the report.

We placed sugar beet under price support; we made an agreement with the United Kingdom to purchase Canadian apples; we concluded a large number of agreements under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act to enable co-operatives of various kinds to market their products; we set up a system of tobacco grades to assist tobacco growers in marketing their product. At the last session of parliament we passed amendments to the Animal Contagious Diseases Act to increase the payments made for animals slaughtered under the tuberculosis and brucellosis reduction program from $100 to $140 for purebred cattle and from $40 to $70 for grades.

The Canadian Farm Loan Act was amended to increase the maximum amount available for loans from $80 million to $120 million. In addition we have been carrying on a very active prairie farm rehabilitation program. Over 2,500 farm dugouts and small irrigation projects were constructed in 1957, besides a considerable number of small irrigation projects in over 70 communities; water storage projects, and work on several large dams. In addition we made a start on the South Saskatchewan dam, a project which the Liberals played around with for several years, always making excuses for not doing anything and never really getting started or showing any intention that they were going to get started.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The first funds for that were put in by Mr. Gardiner.

Mr. Harkness: The only money that was ever paid in for this was for engineering services under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was a notice of intention.

Mr. Harkness: The previous leader of the Liberal government, Mr. St. Laurent, said several times in this house, as is well known, that the Liberal government did not consider that this project should be proceeded with.

There were also considerable programs carried out under the maritime marshland rehabilitation project, in particular two large dams which are under construction at the present time. We provided assistance to Manitoba and Saskatchewan for the movement of hay and cattle if necessary as a result of last summer's drought. We provided supplementary payments to western grain producers of $1 an acre up to a maximum of 200 acres, the cost of which will work out eventually to somewhere between $41 million and $42 million. We took very active measures to increase the sales of wheat abroad and, of course, we very considerably increased those sales, as was indicated the day before yesterday by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Most important of all, we put on the statute books and into operation the Agricultural Stabilization Act, which has been of very great benefit to farmers and about which I will have more to say a little later.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a very brief summary of some of the things we have done so far as agriculture is concerned. In the election campaign of 1957 the Conservative party outlined a national program for agriculture. Since assuming office we have gone steadily forward to implement this program. I have outlined some of the steps we have actually taken. On August 30, 1958, the Prime Minister outlined the further steps we are taking, and I should like just to refer to these now and indicate the progress that has been made in connection with them.

The first of these is provision for an improved farm credit scheme. As everyone here knows, this was included in the speech from the throne, and it was indicated that legislation to bring this into effect would be brought down this session. The next is a system of crop insurance which, as was similarly indicated in the speech from the throne, will be implemented by legislation this session. The next is the soil and water conservation program. The first conference in connection with this was held on November 17 last and attended by representatives of all the provinces. Preliminary plans were laid in order to work out a practical soil and water conservation program for Canada in conjunction with the provinces, and this must be done in conjunction with the provinces because the provinces control their own natural resources.

Next is the rural redevelopment program on which we have been working from the point of view of research. In the course of time we will be making an announcement of a program to implement this research. The next is a forage bank—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What does that mean?

Mr. Harkness: —in order to provide forage, particularly in the drier parts of this country, to ensure that a satisfactory livestock economy can be maintained.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the rural redevelopment program?

Mr. Harkness: The hon. gentleman will find a brief outline if he will look up the speech made by the Prime Minister on August 30 of last year; I have not time to go into it in detail now.

Another important phase of our program is to increase exports. We have done that, as I have indicated, as far as wheat and certain other agricultural products are concerned, but we intend to do more, as has been indicated to the house, under the Colombo plan and other aid programs. This is an essential feature of our agricultural program, a constant effort to take advantage of every opportunity possible to increase our exports of agricultural commodities.

Mr. Speaker, I have listed some of the things we have actually done, and given the house an indication of our program and the progress we have made in connection with it. I think what I have said is in itself a complete refutation of the allegation that nothing has been done, and the allegation that there has been confusion. The only confusion has been on the part of our political opponents. They have attempted in every way possible to sow confusion and give the farmers of Canada a completely incorrect idea of what their situation is and of what the Conservative government has been doing to assist agriculture. Their efforts, as was demonstrated in the last election, have been notoriously unsuccessful, however, and I am quite sure they will continue to be unsuccessful.

I should now like to look at the statistics to show what the position of the farmer has actually been during the past year as compared with his position in the immediately preceding years when the Liberals were in power. The Leader of the Opposition of course paints a picture of gloom. Everything has gone to pot, according to him, including agriculture, but the record shows that exactly the opposite situation prevails. Agriculture and our farmers are in a better position today, and were in 1958, than for several years previously. All we need to do in order to demonstrate that this is the case is to look at the cash income from the sale of farm products for the past several years.

I have in my hand a summary of cash income from the sale of farm products covering the years 1954 to 1958 and taken, of course, from the records of the bureau of statistics with the exception of the figures for 1958, which are not yet published. However, the figures for that year are those estimated by officials of the economics division of the Department of Agriculture and they will bear a close resemblance to the final figures.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I believe the figures for 1958 are available, with the exception of the last three months of that year.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, but they are not available for the total year. Let us examine these figures and see the true situation. In 1958 wheat produced cash income amounting to $415 million as compared with $375.9 million in 1957, a very considerable increase. This same commodity produced income amounting to $323.9 million in 1954, $331.8 million in 1955 and $461.8 million in 1956.

What has been the situation with respect to potatoes? They produced cash income in 1958 amounting to $42 million as compared with $37.2 million in 1957, $43.4 million in 1956, $34 million in 1955 and $29.3 million in 1954.

Fruits and vegetables are also of interest. Fruit in 1958 produced cash income of $41.5 million as compared with $39.9 million in 1957, while vegetables produced income of $65 million in 1958 as compared with $58.1 million in 1957. Yet, in spite of that fact, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) in speaking last Wednesday, as reported at page 165 of Hansard of January 21, 1959, stated:

> Many of these fruit and vegetable growers tell me that their costs have risen and their returns for 1958 in respect of their crops have been the worst since before the war.

As a matter of fact they have been the best they have been in the last five years, as these figures definitely show. This is the type of inaccurate statement which hon. members of the opposition constantly make. Now let use examine cash income produced by tobacco. In 1958 tobacco produced income of $87 million as compared with $73.1 million in 1957 and $66.9 million in 1954. Cattle, which commodity is perhaps the most important listed here, also shows a remarkable increase in returns, $607 million for 1958 as compared with $482.3 million for 1957 and $392.2 million for 1954. Hogs produced $312 million in 1958 as compared with $292.3 million in 1957. Poultry produced $195 million as compared with $168.6 million in 1957; and in all these cases the preceding years indicate returns that are much lower.

I shall not endeavour to place on record all the figures contained in this summary, but let us also consider dairy products, which produced income of $491.5 million in 1958 as compared with $459.6 in 1957; and again the returns for the previous years are lower.

These figures indicate as clearly as anything could indicate the fact that the Canadian farmer is better off in 1958 than he was in any of the preceding four years under the Liberal administration. Let us now examine the total cash income as contained in this summary. In 1958 the total cash income of farmers was $2,869 million as compared with $2,593.8 million in 1957. Let us also examine the percentage increase over the years. In 1958 it was more than 10 per cent greater than in 1957 and 7½ per cent greater than in 1956, 20 per cent greater than in 1955 and also 20 per cent greater than in 1954.

Another notable point in this connection is that the improvement was not confined to any one region of Canada but extended right across the country. The provincial improvement in cash income was very close to the national average of a little better than 10 per cent in all provinces except Prince Edward Island, where it was not quite as large. As a matter of fact all of the provincial estimates of farm cash income for the first nine months of 1958, the only published figures presently available, indicate that farm cash income was higher than in the same period in 1957. And so, as far as the nation as a whole is concerned, cash income is 10 per cent greater for 1958 than for 1957 and 20 per cent greater than for 1954 or 1955, and this condition extends across the country, not being restricted to one area. I believe these figures are pretty conclusive.

Of course some hon. gentlemen opposite will say this does not present a true picture of the situation because the cost of goods and services used by farmers went up more than the income did, and therefore the cost-price squeeze was still operating. I am a little surprised that someone has not expressed this view already, and had the hon. member for Assiniboia been here I am sure he would have stated this to be the case.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All the farm organizations have, of course. That is their main grievance, is it not?

Mr. Harkness: That was always their grievance under the Liberal administration.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not to the same extent.

Mr. Harkness: But it cannot be so at the present time because it is no longer correct. It was not the case in 1958. In other words the cost of goods and services used by farmers did not rise more than their cash income did; this cost rose very little indeed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Three and one-half per cent.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member says "Three and one-half per cent", which shows how very little he knows about the subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just the consumer price index from the bureau of statistics.

Mr. Harkness: I should like to quote from The Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada, the January 1959 issue. This is a publication issued by the economics division, marketing service, Department of Agriculture, and is referred to as the "Situation and Outlook" issue. I recommend to hon. gentlemen opposite who are interested in agriculture that they secure a copy of this review, which I might state is distributed without charge to all hon. members on request.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are they available?

Mr. Harkness: Yes. I think the hon. member has shown his ignorance sufficiently and should avoid further interruptions. On page 5 of the report to which I refer we find these words:

> Prices paid by farmers in 1958 for commodities and services used in production and for living were only slightly more than 1 per cent above those of 1957.

And below it states:

> Although both cash income and operating expenses advanced during 1958, the greater increase was in cash income, and therefore realized farm net income was higher than in 1957.

Realized farm net income is defined at the bottom of the page as farm cash income plus income in kind minus operating expenses and depreciation charges. The paragraphs I have read illustrate the point I am making. Gross cash income went up by a little more than 10 per cent. The cost of goods and services which farmers have to buy went up by a little more than 1 per cent. Therefore I feel it is quite apparent that the cost-price squeeze which was a cause of hardship to the farmer under the Liberal administration ever since 1951-1952 has been finally halted and reversed.

Our political opponents, Mr. Speaker, are constantly seeking to give the impression that Canadian prices of agricultural products are lower than those of other countries. Actually the very reverse is the case as far as most of the major agricultural products are concerned. Our prices in Canada for most of those products are as high, or higher, or nearly as high, depending on what product one takes, as those in any other country. I have a compilation which I had made up by the economics division of the department to indicate the prices in various countries of the world for some of the major agricultural products. It is entitled "Average Wholesale Prices of Agricultural Products in Selected Countries." The figures are for the third quarter of 1958 and are expressed in terms of Canadian currency in all cases.

Take the case of good steers. As I say, these are wholesale prices and the markets taken in Canada are in all cases either Montreal or Toronto. Good steers, United States, $24.27 per hundredweight; West Germany, $23.87; Canada, $22.59; United Kingdom, $18.61; New Zealand, $9.44; Australia, $8.37. Our price in Canada was nearly up to the prices of cattle in other countries. In the United States the price was about 1½ cents to 1¾ cents above us. Hon. members can see how the prices in other countries dropped down. In the case of Australia it was a little more than one-third of the price in Canada.

Mr. Herridge: The cost of living is much lower.

Mr. Harkness: The cost of living is not anything like as much lower as that. There is no comparison on those prices at all, as far as what the Canadian farmer received as compared with what the Australian and New Zealand farmers received.

In the case of hogs the price in West Germany was $33.21 per hundredweight; in Canada, $30.21; in the United States, $28.24; in Denmark, $26.26; in Australia, $24.15. The only country with a higher price was West Germany.

We now come to the price of butter. In Canada the price was 62 cents a pound; in the United States, 58 cents; in Australia, 51 cents; in New Zealand, 37 cents; in the Netherlands, 34 cents; in Denmark, 27 cents; and on the London market, which is the only place that is anything like a free market as far as butter is concerned, the price of New Zealand butter was 28 cents a pound and Danish butter 32 cents a pound. We see from these figures that the price of butter in some of those countries is just about half the price in Canada.

We now come to cheese. In Canada the price of cheese was 34 cents a pound; in the United States, 33 cents a pound; in West Germany, 28 cents a pound; in Australia, 28 cents a pound; in New Zealand, 21 cents a pound; in the Netherlands, 19 cents a pound.

Let us take eggs. In the United Kingdom eggs were 60 cents a dozen; in Canada, 55 cents; in West Germany, 49 cents, and in the United States, 42 cents.

These figures illustrate without any question at all, I think, that as far as the majority of the major agricultural products are concerned Canadian prices are either nearly as high as or higher than those of any country in the world. Somebody will ask, what about wheat? As far as wheat is concerned this is not the case, but this is the one major agricultural product in which Canadian prices are not right up at the top.

Mr. Peters: Will the minister permit a question? Will he put on record the producer figures rather than the figures he has given which include mark-ups of various kinds?

Mr. Harkness: It is impossible to get any comparative figures on that basis, because the return to the producers varies from town to town depending on transportation facilities, truck and water competition with rail transportation and so forth, and it is the same in other countries. The only comparative figures that one can get are those wholesale prices, as I say, which are quoted regularly in every country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In some of those other countries they have cost of production figures which are more scientific than ours.

Mr. Harkness: That may be the case; nevertheless this comparison shows what the prices are, and I think everybody will have to admit that is the case. They are exactly comparable types of prices and they show that the position of our farmers, rather than being very much worse than the position of farmers in other countries, as far as almost all products are concerned is far better than that of farmers in other countries.

These good prices relative to those in other countries, Mr. Speaker, are due to the operations of the Agricultural Stabilization Act and to the great improvement in our exports of agricultural products, particularly of cattle, to the United States. The value of the Agricultural Stabilization Act to farmers is not, I think, appreciated by very many people. The members of the opposition, particularly the members of the C.C.F. party, have always tried to measure the value of the old Liberal farm prices support act and of this stabilization act by the number of dollars that are paid out under it, or the losses which are incurred under it. This, of course, is no measure whatever of the effectiveness of farm prices support legislation. Its value or effectiveness is not measured by the actual amount of money which is paid out under it to support prices, but by the extra number of dollars which are put into the pockets of the farmers.

This can best be illustrated by the case of dairy products during the last year in Canada. We estimate that the farmers of Canada have received at least $100 million more for dairy products than they would have received had the stabilization legislation not been in effect. The reason this is so is that had we not had the stabilization legislation in effect and import controls to protect those stabilized prices, which we could not have had otherwise, the prices the farmers would have received for butter, for cheese and for other dairy products would have been the world prices plus our tariffs.

Now, the general world price, the export price that butter was coming in at, would have meant that butter would have been coming into this country at the most at not more than 40 cents a pound, and probably less. If you take it at that level the effect of the stabilization act was to add $80 million to the returns to farmers over what they would have had if it had not been in effect. In the case of cheese it would have been about $10 million; in the case of dried skim milk and manufactured products of that kind, another $10 million; and the cost was very much less to keep this cheese program in effect which, as I say, added $10 million to the farmers' income. It will cost the taxpayers about $1 million—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but it being one o'clock I now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, before the luncheon adjournment I had been pointing out that the value of the Agricultural Stabilization Act to the farmers of Canada cannot be measured by the amount of money paid out under that legislation but rather by the great increase in the amount of money which it puts into the pockets of the farmers. I had taken as an example the chief dairy products which we support. I would finish with respect to that matter by saying that as far as butter is concerned the increase in the amount of money the farmers have received over what they would have received had this act not been in effect is in the neighbourhood of $80 million in the past year. To date we have probably spent about $1 million. We will have to spend considerably more before we finish disposing of the butter we now hold but I must say that even if it costs the taxpayers between $5 million and $10 million that is a very small amount in comparison with the value of the legislation to the farmers of the country engaged in the dairy industry and to the economy as a whole. Sixty-nine per cent of all the farmers in Canada secure either all or part of their income from dairying.

I should like to say a word about the scope of the stabilization act. During the past year we have had 23 commodities under support. I do not have time to outline what they are but any member can get a list of them at any time if he wishes to apply to me for it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Are there any others to be added?

Mr. Harkness: However, I would point out that under the Agricultural Prices Support Act, which the Liberals had in effect for 12 years, only 15 commodities were supported in the entire 12 years that the legislation was in effect and in any one year only a very few commodities were ever under price support whereas during the first year the stabilization act has been in effect we have had, as I say, 23 commodities under price support.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think the minister heard my interjection. Are there any others to be added?

Mr. Harkness: That will appear in due course as it becomes necessary to put them under price support. In that connection I might say that I hold in my hand a very interesting article written by the Right Hon. James G. Gardiner and entitled "Test of Tory Farm Policy". He is talking about the stabilization act and he maintains that we set prices too high. Members of the C.C.F. party, of course, say that we set prices too low. People can draw their own conclusion from that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Where did that article appear?

Mr. Harkness: It appeared in the Leader-Post under date of January 13, and if the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) wants some fairy tales to read to put him to sleep at night I recommend this as one that he should put first on his list.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If it is from Mr. Gardiner it must be a very substantial document.

Mr. Harkness: It is the most peculiar reasoning in connection with farm matters that I have ever seen. I should like to say something, however, about the amount of money which has been put out under the stabilization act. First of all, in the period from March 1, 1958, when the act came into effect, to December 31, we spent $73,841,000 out of the revolving fund for goods. That does not mean that money or a good portion of it will not come back into the revolving fund, but nevertheless during that nine month period $73,841,000 was expended in buying agricultural products in order to support prices. In the period April 1 to December 31 the losses we took amounted to $10,211,000. We estimated that for the fiscal year April 1, 1958 to March 31, 1959 the losses or the cost—I will say "cost" rather than "losses" because it is a more accurate word—of our agricultural stabilization operations will be $18,741,000. As I have pointed out before, that does not indicate in any way what the value of the legislation has been to the farmers of the country. I should like to say a word—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the minister would—

Mr. Harkness: Just a minute. I only have about five minutes and I do not have the time.

Mr. Pickersgill: With the minister's usual courtesy.

Mr. Harkness: We have made very large direct expenditures to or on behalf of the farmers during 1958, much greater than most people realize. I have here a list of some of the most important and I will just read it. With respect to acreage payments during 1958—that is the $1 an acre up to a maximum of 200 acres—for which we put an amount of $40 million in the estimates, actual expenditures before the program is over will be closer to $42 million. Storage charges on grain under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act will amount to $38,800,000. We estimate that payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act will amount to $25 million. Payments under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act amounted to $17,285,988 while those under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act amounted to $2,275,000. Quality premiums on high grade hogs amounted to $6,630,000. Freight assistance on western feed grains amounted to $21 million and the amount spent in 1958 under the stabilization act, to which I have just referred, will be at least $15 million. That makes a total of approximately $166 million in direct payments on behalf of agriculture.

In addition, up to the middle of December we had paid out $30,717,000 by way of cash advances on farm stored grain. Quite a respectable total of money has been paid directly in aid to the farmers of the country in spite of the cries of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) and others that we have done nothing for agriculture and these figures indicate how completely incorrect these allegations are.

I think this brief examination of the agricultural situation shows conclusively that the downward drift of agriculture so apparent under the Liberal government from 1952 onward has been halted and reversed. The Liberal policy, or lack of policy, of sit and drift—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, no.

Mr. Harkness: —has been replaced by a definite and dynamic policy which has already produced results as all the statistics show.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that the minister seems to be nearing the end of his speech but his time has actually expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Go ahead. Let the minister finish.

Mr. Harkness: I will just take one minute.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do not condemn the Liberal party in that remaining minute.

Mr. Harkness: As I said, the statistics show that very impressive results have already been achieved and I am sure that the continuation of our polices will produce much greater results as we have time to develop our program. I should also like to point out that these encouraging improvements in 1958 were accomplished in spite of the fact that the North American continent was suffering from a recession during that year. The fact that so much improvement was secured under these circumstances is something in which the Canadian farmers, the Canadian people and the present government are entitled to take considerable pride.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, since the hon. gentleman's time was extended he would not mind answering my question? It is a very simple and factual one. Has the minister given any consideration to including pulpwood amongst the commodities under the prices stabilization program as the Prime Minister indicated in Rimouski was being considered?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, we gave very serious consideration to that and put a considerable amount of study on it. I believe, however, and hope that the action taken under the Combines Investigation Act against the pulp companies in connection with the purchasing of pulpwood will have very beneficial results and will look after the problem better than putting pulpwood under price support would do.

(Translation):

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, before I deal with the subject of my remarks, I should like to congratulate the new member for Springfield (Mr. Slogan) for the magnificent election speech he began yesterday evening and concluded this morning. I congratulate him on his being elected member for the constituency of Springfield. I might also tell him that if he got in with a lower majority in the by-election, he need not ascribe this to loss of personal popularity but rather to the unpopularity of the government now in charge of the destinies of this country. I wish him a rewarding stay in our national parliament, albeit a short one, as you will readily appreciate, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to refer to only one remark made by the hon. member for Springfield, the one about the young Liberals of Canada. Yesterday evening, the hon. member for Springfield said that Canada's young Liberals do not have, within their own party, the same freedom of expression which the young Conservatives enjoy. Well, Mr. Speaker, I must tell the hon. member that I have had the privilege and honour of being president of the Young Liberals Association of Canada, and that at no time were its members hampered in their work. On the contrary, Liberal party officials always sought out the advice of the young Liberals, and such suggestions as might contribute to the welfare of our fellow citizens. They always took keen interest in proposals put forward by the young Liberals, and young Liberals have at all times enjoyed full and complete freedom within the party. I do not know how it is with young Conservatives in Canada, and my interest in the matter is only lukewarm, I confess.

I should also like to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Messrs. Jorgenson and Fortin).

The hon. member for Provencher, honoured by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) by being entrusted with the task of proposing the address, did so in concrete, concise and intelligent fashion. I congratulate him. He told us about an area of Canada which is of interest to all of us in western Canada.

I should like also to offer special congratulations to the new member for Montmagny-L'Islet. I had the opportunity of meeting him during the last campaign and, needless to say, it was in the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet, where I had gone to help in the election not of him but of someone else. It is however with pleasure that I listened to him when he spoke in support of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I congratulate him in particular on his election, and say to him that he is assuming a very great responsibility, because he now has a rich heritage to develop, the heritage of 25 years of Liberal representation in the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet. He is the successor to a man who honoured the province, a man who did much for Canadian politics, the Hon. Jean Lesage.

If the Hon. Jean Lesage has left the federal scene, it was not of his own choice. He did it out of a sense of duty, to help fight the dictatorship which is plaguing the province of Quebec, and the work he is now doing in the province is for the defence of democracy. I am sure that this task he has undertaken, with all the sacrifices it involves, will bear fruit and that the man who will crush dictatorship in the province of Quebec and who will become the province's next prime minister will be the former representative of the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet in the House of Commons, Hon. Jean Lesage.

Mr. Speaker, I was deeply impressed by the speech made by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, particularly when he touched upon national unity. One of the main reasons that led me to enter politics was my desire to contribute to the building up of national unity in this great and beautiful country. I was most particularly impressed when the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet stated in his speech:

> I honestly and truly believe these views to be genuinely representative of the province of Quebec.

He said that the province of Quebec was "a province like any other province". Indeed it is true, Mr. Speaker, that the great majority of Canadian citizens in the province of Quebec believe their province is like other provinces.

A few years ago, when that great statesman, Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, was prime minister of this country and represented a constituency that is located in the very heart of the province of Quebec, he stated in a memorable speech that he too was of the opinion that the majority of citizens in the province of Quebec believed their province like any other province.

Who, at that time, rose to say that the province of Quebec was not a province like the others? It was the premier of the province of Quebec. He protested the words of Mr. St. Laurent, branding Mr. St. Laurent a traitor to his province.

And who, following the lead of the premier of Quebec, rose to say that the province of Quebec was not a province like other provinces? Ministers, Union Nationale members of the legislature, and Union Nationale party hacks.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to congratulate the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet and to assure him of my unreserved admiration for having the courage to assert in this house, that the province of Quebec is a province like any other province.

Mr. Louis Fortin (Montmagny-L'Islet): Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Rouleau: Yes.

Mr. Fortin: When quoting me, would the hon. member kindly not confine himself to the words he chose but read on a few lines down to preserve the context?

Mr. Rouleau: I have been reading this out of Hansard and the sentence I just quoted is a full sentence.

Mr. Speaker, I do not feel I have distorted the words of the hon. member. I said a moment ago that I admired his courage, and congratulated him on making this statement. I hope he will not weaken now, and back down.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that the province of Quebec is like any other province. We, Canadians of the province of Quebec, have the same opinions regarding Canadians of other provinces, and we are entitled to the same prerogatives and the same rights.

Therefore, when I hear the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet speak as he did, I wonder why, in Quebec, the provincial premier refuses to let us share in national projects, such as the trans-Canada highway.

I also wonder why the premier of the province of Quebec systematically refuses to allow young Canadians in his province to enjoy the same rights and privileges as are enjoyed by Canadians in other provinces, and to benefit from the grants which are distributed by the central government?

Mr. Lucien Grenier (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I submit that, in speaking before the House of Commons, the member who now has the floor is out of order in discussing the attitude of a provincial leader.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a free parliament.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, I submit that these problems bear on the matter of federal-provincial relations. I am now discussing national issues, as would any Canadian of whatever province.

[Mr. Rouleau.]

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: As I followed the hon. member who has the floor, it occurred to me that his references to the premier of one of the provinces went outside of the necessary discussion of his conduct in so far as it is involved in federal affairs. I quite concede that it is in order to discuss provincial men in so far as their conduct is involved in what is properly the subject matter of debate in this parliament. However, I thought that the hon. member was getting a little bit afield at the time the point of order was taken.

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. As usual I shall comply with your directions and will discuss problems that concern the central and provincial governments, as in the case of grants to universities.

When my hon. friend interrupted, I was commenting on grants to universities. Not only does the government of the province of Quebec refuse to make such grants; it forbids those institutions to accept them. There is another matter in the same field, Mr. Speaker, that I want to mention. If the province of Quebec is like all the other provinces why does its premier systematically refuse to join the hospital-insurance plan initiated by the former Liberal government and implemented by the present government?

If the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), is sincere, and means what he said in this house, I ask him to use such influence as he may have on the provincial government to say to the leader of the government of the province of Quebec, that since Quebec is a province like all other provinces, it should participate in the Canadian way of life, and in all truly Canadian projects. Moreover, the best emissary he could send to the premier of the province of Quebec—in case he has no direct access to him—would be the Hon. Antoine Rivard, a member of the Duplessis cabinet, who campaigned very actively in favour of the new member for Montmagny-L'Islet and who, in fact, is largely responsible for his victory.

The great majority of Canadians, Mr. Speaker, of whatever racial origin, in whatever province they were born, have realized they are part of a large family, the great Canadian family. I am glad that Canadians from sea to sea, have finally realized that they belong to Canada first. As a young Canadian from the province of Quebec, who has had the opportunity to travel across the country, I do say that, personally, I feel just as much at home in Vancouver, in Winnipeg, in Saskatoon, in Toronto or anywhere else in Canada, as I do in my province.

It is for this reason that I wanted to offer very special congratulations to the new member for Montmagny-L'Islet.

He made very appropriate remarks on national unity, although he could perhaps have gone a bit further, particularly in the light of recent statements by two members of the present cabinet. In fact, quite recently in a speech which she made in Toronto the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) stated, in the face of all of Canada, that the national anthem O Canada was perhaps a pretty song, but was not the Canadian national anthem.

I sincerely regret that, while speaking of national unity, the member for Montmagny-L'Islet did not see fit to point out those falsehoods. As was said by the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Meunier), even if the national anthem O Canada is not set down as the national anthem of this country, since Canadian parliamentary institutions all came down to us from British parliamentary institutions, where tradition prevails, and since O Canada has been sung and accepted for years and years, I say that the only national anthem we have is O Canada.

Besides, along similar lines, Mr. Speaker, I really regret that, after dealing with national unity, the honourable member for Montmagny-L'Islet did not see fit to suggest the adoption of a distinctively Canadian flag, one that all Canadians could be rightly proud of, whatever their country of origin, whatever the province they live in, and which would be a symbol through which they would honour their country.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to this house and to the country that I am in favour of a Canadian flag having no sign emblematic of other areas than our own. I want an essentially Canadian flag, devoid of any mark which might suggest to other countries that this is not a free country.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet deserves the congratulations of all the members and of all Canadians for speaking the way he did on national unity. But we cannot say as much about the other issues he covered.

This country is facing a problem which should be of concern to all Canadians, especially those in the province of Quebec. I refer to the C.B.C. producers' strike. The hon. member for Montmagny-l'Islet did not see fit to bring up that subject, but I must say that the stand taken by the government in the dispute between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Montreal Producers Association is really incomprehensible and unwarranted.

Yesterday the Prime Minister refused to answer the question asked by the leader of the opposition. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) maintains he cannot intervene in this dispute, even though, under section 56 (1) of the Act, as was pointed out by the member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), he is allowed to intervene.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) claims he must stay out of the dispute and not interfere in C.B.C. matters. However, he had no hesitation in stating that the strike was illegal. He did not even try to justify this serious charge which, in fact is unwarranted. Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, there has been no talk of raising the hon. minister to the bench, or of his being so raised to the bench, even though he might wish to be, and he is not at all qualified to express his views on the legality of this dispute.

Later on, in reply to a question asked by the member for Papineau (Mr. Meunier), the same minister stated that he had "no idea what salaries are being paid to C.B.C. personnel". However, that did not prevent him from stating at the end of his answer: "I am quite certain those salaries would be on a comparable level across Canada". In this answer, not only did the Minister of National Revenue contradict himself, but he misled this house, since all those who have even the slightest interest in the matter know—a fact of which the minister is not aware—that the salaries of the Montreal producers are anywhere from $2,000 to $5,000 lower than those of the Toronto producers.

Furthermore, last Tuesday the C.B.C., through their representative, Mr. Carter, sent an ultimatum to the producers, instructing them to report for work by noon yesterday or else they would lose their jobs. And here I quote Mr. Carter's letter:

> Normal television service has been suspended for the past three weeks during which the C.B.C. tried, through your association, to work out a solution to the strike you started. The C.B.C. must always consider the public first. Consequently, I am instructed to tell you that if your association does not substantially modify its attitude, the C.B.C. will not be able to deal with it any more, and will have to take the necessary steps to restore regular service as from twelve o'clock, Thursday, January 22, 1959, It is after serious consideration and with much regret that the C.B.C. was forced to take this decision.

It is indeed an ultimatum. And yet, yesterday, the Minister of National Revenue was not afraid to state in reply to the Leader of the Opposition, and I quote:

I am not aware of any such ultimatum as the hon. gentleman mentioned, and there is no question of delivering such an ultimatum.

Besides, yesterday evening, in the news broadcast which it used as a medium of propaganda, the C.B.C. announced that it was suspending all negotiations with the producers' association and that it would attempt, with or without them, to resume normal operations.

Following all those contradictions on the part of the minister, it is difficult to put any confidence in his statements on the matter. It is most unfortunate that the government should have appointed him as its spokesman in this matter, considering the attitude he has taken. The responsibility really belonged to the Minister of Labour, who failed in his task, by his refusal to intervene. The same could be said of the Quebec ministers who remained completely mum on the question, except the Solicitor General who, when pressed by the member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard), did not want to commit himself, and adopted the same attitude as that of the Ministers of National Revenue and Labour.

And yet, following the C.B.C. decision to stop all negotiations, the situation will become more and more serious. Here is what André Laurendeau wrote in yesterday's edition of Le Devoir:

—in its recent statement, in which it took pains to exclude all loop-holes, the management, with its threats, is condemning the strikers to the following alternative: either grovel in the dust and cringingly return to work, or fight to a finish.

I remain convinced that a shameful return to work, without dignity or honour, is of no interest to anyone. It would snap the spring. Producers, the performers, technicians, in fact all C.B.C. personnel are not engaged in the manufacture of raspberry jam. The work they do can only be done when their heart is in it. Humiliated men will no longer be able to do it.

We dare think that a dispute paralysing the whole C.B.C. French network,—thereby affecting nearly a third of the population, and all those in Canada who speak French and pay taxes,—we dare think that such a dispute deserves an hour of attention from Ottawa, as well as some efficient gesture of conciliation on the part of the supreme authority.

The Liberal party prides itself on having contributed, in the last few years to the development of an excellent French radio and television network. If this undertaking, so essential to our country, should be paralysed through the obstinacy and harshness of certain officials, the government should be held accountable, because it failed to take action in seeking an adequate solution to the dispute. The producers, the actors and the public in general will also call it to account, and rightly so, for its failure to protect their interests.

Now, what is at stake?

Not a small radio station in some remote hamlet of the Great North, but the whole French network, —both TV and radio,—the whole government-controlled French network in a bilingual state.

There was a time when Parliament was convened to deal with a railway strike. Can Parliament persist in its wait-and-see attitude. Is it that, as seen from Ottawa, a strike which paralyzes the whole radio and TV French network, seems so trifling a matter. Are we to believe that the central government supports the C.B.C. in all its positions? Finally, is it reasonable that the central government should let the C.B.C. scuttle its whole French network?

Whether it be mediation, arbitration or special legislation: anything will be better than washing one's hands of the whole matter.

[Mr. Rouleau.]

Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) could have mentioned, for instance—a matter which he failed to mention in his speech—are measures which should be taken by the government to stop inflation, recession and unemployment which are now plaguing Canada. If the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet did not talk very much about this matter, it is because there is almost nothing in the speech from the throne which might have given him a chance to do so. Everyone is of the opinion that the three matters I have just mentioned are the basic problems of the Canadian economy at the present time, problems affecting Canadians in all walks of life. Yes, we are now faced with all these problems I have just mentioned; they are facing us at the present time. And only a few members of the cabinet are aware of the seriousness of the problems they are facing: inflation, recession and unemployment.

The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) stated a few days ago, before a meeting of young Conservatives in Quebec city, that unemployment in Canada should be considered as an heritage left by the previous government. Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be more wrong. The Conservative government has been at the helm of this country for almost two years, and it has done nothing to solve these problems.

The present government has been unable to deal with these problems because it lacked foresight. There are other members of the cabinet who pretend to be unaware of what is going on at the present time in the country and, instead of assuming their responsibilities, merely say that everything will be fine next year.

The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) said a few days ago, as reported in the Gazette, that everything was fine in the country and that we were heading again for a golden era. That is not what I would call facing up to one's responsibilities to ensure a bright future for our country.

There are others who are more optimistic than that. In fact, no later than yesterday, I heard the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), complain that the opposition was pessimistic with regard to the problems that face us, and he added: "Pessimism is hardly a characteristic of the Canadian population". I am in complete agreement with the hon. member when he says that pessimism should not be a characteristic of the Canadian people. Our country is wealthy, it has influence in world affairs, and therefore its population should not be pessimistic as to the future of the country. However, I should like to know the thoughts of the 440,000 people who were jobless in December. I should like to know the thoughts of fathers who cannot find a job, who have no money to pay the rent or to buy food and clothing for their children; I wonder what these people think of these statements made by members of the present government, and how they could feel optimistic.

If in a country as rich as this, a man with a family is unable to earn a living, how can the people have confidence in this government? While Canadians can rightly feel confident of their country's future, it is also true that they have grounds to feel pessimistic with respect to the leadership given to the country by this short-sighted government on whose shoulders rests the responsibility for unemployment, for the recession and for inflation. The members on the government side apparently have not yet recovered from their honeymoon. They never expected to gain power in 1957, and they travelled across the country making irresponsible promises.

Mr. Speaker, my attention is drawn to the fact that there is at the moment no minister in the house. This shows the extent of their interest in the affairs of the nation, and it also shows, as I have just stated to the house, that the members of the cabinet are still on their honeymoon.

As I was saying, the members of the cabinet and members of the government stalked the country in 1957, promising heaven on earth.

Mr. Speaker, I greet the hon. Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton), who has just entered the house.

Mr. Speaker, when they stalked the country in 1957, they represented themselves to the people as supermen. They were allegedly able to distribute all the wealth of the country and to make everybody happy. But what has happened since they took power? Today, Canada is faced with the situation I have described. Because of their lack of ability, their lack of foresight and their short-sighted policies, they have plunged the country into a situation such as we have never known in 30 years. Those supermen, Mr. Speaker, in the eyes of the whole country, those supermen now appear as experts in the art of metamorphosis and disguise. During the election campaign, in 1957, they disguised themselves as Santa Clauses, promising, as I said, heaven on earth in order to grasp power. To my mind, they have become such comedians that they should be called in as guests on the Ed Sullivan show, or perhaps act as substitutes on the French T.V. network, for all those actors they want to fire.

An hon. Member: They gave themselves the boot.

Mr. Rouleau: After being elected to manage the affairs of this country, they disguised themselves, after the last session, as carrier pigeons, I must point out here that I am not alluding to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). I understand he has hopes of becoming parliamentary secretary, or even a cabinet minister, but in fact, he has not had the opportunity, as did the others, to travel in the fashion of a carrier pigeon.

During the last session, members of the cabinet took the guise of carrier pigeons. They travelled all over the globe. While one was in South America, another was in Japan, and another in Europe. And during their stay abroad, as carrier pigeons, they underwent a metamorphosis and became parrots. While one was saying one thing in South America, and the other was saying something else in another country, still another one was saying just the opposite in Japan. And when they came back, they were interviewed by newsmen.

Mr. Grafftey: This is the same speech you made to McGill students.

Mr. Rouleau: And you were defeated, too, at McGill. Since the hon. member has interrupted, may I explain that I had the opportunity to be present with him on the same stage, in front of McGill students, in the course of a debate as to whether the government deserved confidence; and the students defeated the government.

Mr. Grafftey: Yes, but not when they came before the people.

Mr. Rouleau: When they were questioned by newsmen, we heard them say: "I did say it; I did not say it; it is not what I wanted to say; I was misquoted". The result is, in so far as vital questions affecting the Canadian economy are concerned, that the Canadians do not know where they stand, they do not know where they are going and, like the members of this house, they do not know yet what to expect.

Mr. Speaker, after their transmogrification, after shedding the guise of quondam supermen to take on the guise of Santa Clauses, carrier pigeons and parrots, members of the cabinet decided, when faced with the problems submitted to them by the opposition, to turn their backs on it, on this country's problems, and to change themselves into ostriches, so as not to see the dangers that threaten us.

Just like ostriches do, they bury their heads in the sand and show only the other end of their tuft, which they spread out in the wind, as if everything were just fine in this country.

Others who managed this country before them used to wear their plumes high on their heads and knew how to face Canada's problems. Laurier, King and St. Laurent have faced Canada's problems, and instead of hiding, like ostriches, so as to avoid looking for solutions, they knew how to meet the situation and solve these problems adequately, in the best interest of Canada.

When we came here, in Ottawa, for the opening of this session, Mr. Speaker, and even earlier, the government knew very well that it would have to meet serious financial problems. Yet, in the speech from the throne, and since that day, there has been no clear indication that the government has definite plans to meet them. Will the government reduce taxes to help Canadians? Will the government increase taxes to meet this situation? Will the government substantially reduce federal expenditures, as it had promised earlier? No one knows. The people of Canada do not know. The members of the government continue to prove that all they know is how to improvise. Some cabinet members and others on the government side, when interrupting members of the opposition, who were chiding them for their indifference, asked us to find suggestions.

During the last two election campaigns and the last two sessions, the leader of the opposition and members of the opposition have made practical suggestions to the government. We all know that it is not the role of the opposition to govern. The government has to face its responsibilities and settle the problems with the help of advice given to it.

Finally, I want to make some constructive suggestions concerning the city of Montreal, the metropolis of Canada, which I have the honour to represent here.

Yesterday, I asked to the Minister of Labour if he had definite plans to relieve the unemployment situation in Montreal and to give employment to the 88,000 jobless in the city.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if these problems that I have mentioned, and that are of interest for the whole country, do not apply to the city of Montreal.

Since I represent the riding that is part of the island of Montreal, for a few minutes, I will speak of the problems we have to deal with in Montreal. Yesterday, I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) if he had any concrete suggestions to make in order to settle the problem of unemployment in Montreal where at present there are 88,000 unemployed. The minister, in an attempt to dodge the question, answered that at the present time there are 100 projects to reduce unemployment in the province of Quebec, and that most of those 100 projects were in the city of Montreal. After this answer, I made some inquiries. I phoned Montreal authorities and, Mr. Speaker, what was the truth in all this? Well, the answer I got in Montreal was much different from the one given to me by the Minister of Labour who, besides, had to withdraw his statement, no later than today. At the moment, no project has been accepted by the federal government to help settle the unemployment problem in Montreal, for the simple reason that no project has been submitted. Why did the Minister of Labour tell us yesterday that public works projects had been approved by the city of Montreal when none had been submitted?

Mr. Speaker, we are now nearing the end of January and the arrangements which enable us—

Mr. Grafftey: What page are you on now?

An hon. Member: Be quiet. Be a good little boy.

Mr. Rouleau: The same thing will happen to you as at McGill!

Mr. Speaker, we are now nearing the end of January and the works to be carried out under the offer made to municipalities have to be completed by next April 30. If our municipal authorities do not get approval for their works projects before the end of February, how can they help the unemployment situation in Montreal? According to the information I have received from municipal authorities, the proposed works, even if carried out, would provide jobs for only a few hundred unemployed, whereas there are as many as 88,000 in the city.

We were asked to submit definite projects regarding the works which could be carried out. For the city of Montreal itself, there are scores of major works projects which could be implemented.

Everybody knows that a large tract of land belonging to the federal government, in the city of Montreal, is located behind the court house and the city hall. It is the property usually referred to as the Champ de Mars. On January 8 last, the city of Montreal on the motion of councillor Gagliardi, seconded by mayor Sarto Fournier, asked the federal government for permission to erect a reinforced concrete structure on the Champ de Mars for parking purposes. A copy of the resolution was sent to the right hon. Prime Minister as well as to the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche). This letter was sent on January 8 and since then nothing has been done. However, such a project would not only contribute to alleviate the parking problem in a congested centre of Montreal but would also provide employment.

I shall now mention briefly some other projects which could be carried out in Montreal and which other members for Montreal will advocate in the coming days.

The federal government could build a four-lane highway alongside the river, on the Montreal harbour, since it is federal government property.

The government could also consider the feasibilty of contributing to the construction of an east-west north-south subway in the city of Montreal. A subway of this kind could be used as an underground shelter in case of war.

It would also be possible for federal authorities to contribute to the construction of a road under the mountain, which would also relieve traffic congestion in Montreal.

It would also be appropriate for the federal government to contribute on a large scale to the construction of a metropolitan boulevard in Montreal to serve as a section of the trans-Canada highway. Incidentally, when will the Quebec premier agree to participate in the national life of our country?

It would also be in order for the federal government to participate in the construction and development of municipal parks. More municipal parks are needed in Montreal, and I am convinced that some contribution by the federal government, not only would help relieve unemployment in Montreal, but would assist our young fellow Canadians.

Furthermore, it would be in order—and I referred to this in the course of the last session—to demolish the twelve slum areas we have in Montreal and replace them by houses which could help improve the welfare of our people.

At this stage I should like to support heartily the resolution adopted by the real estate board for the replacing of slums by co-operative apartments.

These are, Mr. Speaker, some of the projects I am suggesting to the government. I spoke about projects of interest to the city of Montreal, but the federal government could undertake similar works in all other Canadian cities, in view of the fact that it has decided to fight inflation, recession and unemployment through a huge public works program.

The present government determines what course is to be followed, so let the government accept its responsibilities, and let it undertake work projects, in places where such projects can relieve the unemployment crisis.

There would be other methods, much more effective, such as those put forward by the Leader of the Opposition during the last election campaign, to stabilize the Canadian economy. However, the government has embarked upon a program of public works, so let us have some immediate action, let us have public works immediately. In that way, work will be provided for those who are idle, and at the same time, things will be built that will remain as monuments in which everyone may take pride.

Mr. Speaker, I have in the course of my remarks expressed certain criticisms, but this was done in a constructive spirit, in the hope that we may always be proud of our beautiful country and also in order that our fellow citizens may confidently expect to continue enjoying the standard of living to which they have been accustomed.

Mr. Speaker, I speak sincerely and have no intention of stooping to petty politics, my only ambition being to help my fellow citizens, as it is my duty as a representative of a Canadian constituency.

(Text):

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, may I first join with several hon. members who have preceded me and who have expressed their approval of and their satisfaction in the fact that you will again preside over the deliberations in this house. During the period that I have had the honour to represent Queens-Lunenburg I could not help but be impressed by your ability, your fairness and your sense of duty and I am certain that the affairs of this house will be conducted during this session as in the past in fairness to all and with approval of the whole house.

I would like at this time, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the mover, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson), and the seconder, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Though separated by great distances these two hon. gentlemen have two things in common. They have youth and an earnest desire to assist the people who have elected them to this parliament.

As one of the members from Nova Scotia I should like, on behalf of the people of that province and of the people of my own constituency of Queens-Lunenburg, to have the opportunity to voice our appreciation of the outstanding work done by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) in the past year. He has at all times lent a very sympathetic ear to our problems and the people of my constituency are pleased with the work that has been done and the work that has been planned for the coming year. Many of those projects are long overdue. In addition to providing much needed facilities for the people in the riding they are also providing work. In complimenting the minister may I say I hope he will not become complacent because there is still a number of projects awaiting his attention in the constituency, and if I should be insistent and impatient I hope he will realize that I am only trying to better the condition of the people I represent.

In complimenting the minister I would also like to make reference to the simultaneous translation system which has been installed in this chamber in a building which comes under the supervision of the Department of Public Works. I am sure all of us appreciate the provision of this new facility; it has improved our enjoyment of the debates and I would like to suggest to the government that this facility be extended to the galleries so that those of the public who are interested in the affairs of parliament and in the government of this country may also enjoy the debates as they are carried on in both languages.

I should like at this time, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Queens-Lunenburg to renew our pledges of loyalty to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). My words are most inadequate to express to him our feelings for what he has done for my constituency, for Nova Scotia and for Canadians generally. His recent tour did much to strengthen the ties of friendship among the countries which he visited and in travelling throughout my riding I found that there could be no mistaking the great depth of feeling and admiration in which he is held by everyone.

I have the honour to represent the constituency of Queens-Lunenburg in Nova Scotia. It is a constituency that is bound on the east by the dual riding of Halifax and Colchester-Hants, on the north by the riding represented by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), Dibgy-Annapolis-Kings, on the west by Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare and on the south by that mighty, moody, restless taskmaster, the Atlantic ocean.

My people in Queens county are primarily engaged in lumbering, farming, fishing and industry. They have one of the largest pulp and paper mills in Canada, located in Brooklyn, and certainly one of the most efficient. In Lunenburg county my people are engaged in farming with some lumbering and manufacturing industries, as well as both inshore and deepsea fishing operations. In this county my home town was founded in 1753 by thrifty, God-fearing Hanoverians, French and Swiss colonists. Lunenburg preserves today a quality and an atmosphere unique among towns in the maritimes. There is a quality of individualism about those people which extends throughout the length and breadth of my constituency.

When Queens-Lunenburg was settled there were the usual hardships which the colonists endured; occasional and bloodthirsty attacks were made on outlying farms by Micmac and Malecite Indians, and during the American revolutionary war the coastal towns of Liverpool and Lunenburg were frequently raided by ships from Salem and other east coast ports. In spite of those handicaps, however, our people progressed and the heritage of the original settlers has been cherished from generation to generation. Because of our geographic location our economy throughout the years has revolved around ships and the sea.

In its wake the fishing industry has brought to my constituency a whole fleet of allied industries, all of which are in a healthy and expanding condition: marine engine manufacturers in Chester, Lunenburg, Bridgewater and Liverpool and builders of wooden ships of all sizes in Chester, Mahone Bay, Lunenburg, Dayspring and the Liverpool area. In addition to this, Liverpool and Lunenburg can boast of marine railways for the hauling of ships as well as adequate refitting yards to carry out necessary repairs, and during the past war those yards contributed to the war effort by suitably refitting naval vessels, minesweepers, corvettes and frigates.

I mention these facts, Mr. Speaker, because here is a constituency that has literally pulled itself up by its own bootstraps. Forced from the beginning to make their living from the soil or from the sea, there is no more rugged group of individuals in Canada than the good people of my riding. By their own efforts and with very little help they have maintained a fairly high level of employment throughout the years. This was accomplished by careful planning, saving, perseverance, diligence and hard work, and the same is true today.

We have heard since the beginning of this session about the unemployment problem that affects some parts of Canada and the insistent effort by members of the opposition to lay the unemployment problem at the feet of the government. We are all aware of the unemployment situation existing throughout Canada today and every responsible member of the house is kept constantly informed of conditions within his own riding. Unemployment is not something new. Recessions and unemployment go hand in hand, and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) left no doubt about the inheritance of the government when he used these words on Monday, January 19, as found at page 35 of Hansard, as he looked across at the government benches, "those men who later could not see it when they were in the middle of it."

Yes, Mr. Speaker, in 1957 we were in the middle of our inherited recession. We took over a leaky ship of state and we immediately set to work to make our ship seaworthy. We are now on course and we are sailing steadily forward despite efforts by members of the opposition to rock the boat. Unemployment is not something that just happens by itself and it will not be cured by the foghorn-like bellowing we have experienced in the last few days from hon. members of the opposition and the C.C.F. The government has instituted a most effective program of winter work to cope with this situation but the two opposition parties have as many criticisms of this program to relieve unemployment as there are dogfish on a summer trawl line and they are about as valuable.

Increased social and welfare benefits, as suggested by both opposition parties, are not the answer at the present time. Such programs only redistribute money. They do not create wealth. For the most part the people in my riding, who make their living from the sea and the soil and from lumbering, know that you can only share that which is first earned and the greater the earnings the greater the share for each person. They long ago learned that the only way their standard of living could be improved was by increasing production and sales, and their present standards were achieved by hard work and dedication to their tasks.

I believe the time has come for Canadians to stop and consider the foundations upon which this country's progress and the people's high living standards and the social security they now enjoy really rest. It was not socialism that built Canada's great cities, towns and villages. It was not state planning that directed the pioneers to explore and open up this great country or provide Canada with the manufacturing industries that give employment to many thousands of people. It was not government that brought the country's great resource industries into being. It was not officialdom that created an economy prosperous enough to provide such things as unemployment insurance, old age pensions and family allowances. No, Mr. Speaker, Canada's growth, prosperity and high living standards were built in a different way.

They developed because people were able to save with confidence, to invest freely, to take risks in new enterprises and to expect a reasonable reward for their initiative. These were the foundations upon which confederation was established and, while some of them lost money, while others were rewarded for their risk-taking, the greatest beneficiaries were the people of Canada themselves. They were provided with the goods and services they needed or wanted at prices that they were willing or able to pay. These prices were determined freely by bargaining between buyers and sellers in the open market place. I believe these basic truths are worth remembering today because the growth of Canada and the prosperity of Canadians in the future, certainly no less than in the past, depend upon such factors as incentive, savings and investment.

There is a dangerous trend evident in the thinking of many Canadians. This trend is fostered and abetted by socialist groups in Canada, not all of whom travel under the label of the eight members in the far corner of this chamber. These socialists abhor the word "profit" ignoring the fact that when we do not have profits business and industry close down and we see loss of employment. Without profits less funds are available for expansion of existing industries and for the opening up of new industries. These are the two big sources for new jobs. Without profits less funds are available for the purchase of better tools, and in today's business world modernization is the key to success. The firm that cannot buy new tools cannot compete with those who do and goes out of business. Without profits there are no funds for new research or new product development and growth and expansion are stopped.

The plain truth is that profits create more jobs while losses create unemployment. If we are to move out of the present unemployment situation we must provide a healthy economic atmosphere in Canada for the free growth and expansion of our large and small business enterprises.

My home town of Lunenburg this year celebrates 206 years of free enterprise and progress. There is a business firm there named Zwicker and Company which has been active for 170 of those 206 years and their belief is that such a record would not have been possible under socialism, communism or any of the other isms except, of course, capitalism. This is the point I wish to prove and the belief to which I subscribe. In a growing nation with an expanding economy I believe that capitalism and free enterprise, if given an opportunity, can and will provide the answer to all our employment problems.

As I come from a maritime riding I should like to say a few words about shipbuilding, ship repairing, their allied industries and their importance to Canada. I am pleased to note in the speech from the throne that an amendment will be presented to the Canada Shipping Act. Canadian shipyards are widely separated geographically. To take care of the needs of international sea transport and the coasting trade, shipyards are required in the maritimes, the St. Lawrence area, on the great lakes and the Pacific coast of Canada. In fact, fully integrated organizations of design and technical forces and skilled shipyard personnel and facilities must be maintained in four separate and distinct areas for commercial purposes as well as for reasons of national security.

Shipyards and navies go together. The Royal Canadian Navy cannot function without shipyards in Canada to service and repair its ships and to build new ones as required. It must also have the assurance that shipyards will be available and ready to repair major damages that its ships may suffer in the event of war. In addition, facilities must be available for servicing Canada's inland and coastal fleets, the government's own service vessels and foreign vessels calling at Canadian ports.

The level of employment in the shipbuilding industry is steadily dropping and unless positive steps are taken it will continue to decline. At the peak of the naval building program more than 15,500 men were working in the shipyards. In October of this year employment had dropped to slightly over 10,000, the lowest figure since 1950 when the naval rebuilding program was first started. Of the fourteen destroyer escort vessels in that program, nine have been commissioned and are in service with the Royal Canadian Navy. The remaining ships will be completed and commissioned some time this year. This shipbuilding program enabled shipyards in the four strategic areas of Canada to build up competent teams of skilled workers. The completed ships have undergone tests and their performance has exceeded the expectations of their designers and builders.

They have drawn praise from our friends and allies the British, Swedes and Norwegians. The shipyard teams, with their special skills to build these fine ships, are now being rapidly disbanded as a result of the slowdown in naval shipbuilding. It is true that this condition has been alleviated to some extent by shipbuilding orders placed by the Department of Transport. While this work has been helpful, it is not sufficient to keep a reasonable proportion of our yards busy.

Our Canadian way of life, with its high wage structures, results in Canadian shipbuilding prices being considerably higher than those applying in Japan, Germany, Great Britain and other competitive shipbuilding nations. Since Canadian shipyards cannot match competitive costs, orders for export shipbuilding are out of the question. Few orders can be expected from Canadian ocean ship operators who feel they cannot add to the relatively high operating costs the first cost of building their ships in Canada unless some special incentive is offered to offset the high first cost. The only remaining potential source of commercial orders is the building and repairing of ships for the Canadian coasting trade and the fishing industry.

In the event that the recommendations to the royal commission on the coasting trade are looked upon with favour by the government, this source of business will disappear entirely. Despite the predictions that Canadian flag shipping in the coasting trade will end when the useful life of the existing fleet is terminated and its place taken by ships built and registered in the United Kingdom, the royal commission took the view that the marine industry in Canada should be dispensed with rather than helped. The fate of the Canadian shipbuilding industry, according to the royal commission, is to become little more than a repair industry. This, Mr. Speaker, is dangerous thinking. Most trading nations of the world have recognized the need to foster the development of their shipping and shipbuilding industries, and they have adopted policies of one form or another to encourage their maintenance.

The United States has the most liberal policy of all nations for aiding its marine industries, and I am not thinking of "Liberal" in the sense that the opposition may be thinking of it. From as far back as 1817 United States coastwise trade has been reserved by statute to vessels built in the United States and owned and operated by United States citizens. This assistance takes the form of cargo preference provisions, tax benefits, mortgage aid and trade-in allowances. All of these things have served to keep a large tonnage of United States merchant ships on ocean trade which otherwise would have disappeared. A study of other major shipping nations, including the United Kingdom, will show that they have found it necessary to grant some form of assistance, financial or otherwise, to maintain their fleets and to compete in the highly competitive field of international shipping.

I do not suggest that this government propose a program of aid as extensive as that being carried out by the people of the United States. However, I do believe we should have a well defined national policy of aids, similar to those adopted by other large shipping and exporting nations, which would create the proper economic climate in which our shipyards could secure orders. I believe a shipbuilding and ship-repairing industry in Canada, with adequate continuing production, is an indispensable need in a troubled world. Canada and Canadians cannot afford to allow their shipyards to become progressively less busy until they disappear. Without some measure of aid the Canadian shipbuilding industry will gradually disappear and Canada will have lost an essential instrument of defence.

Speaking of defence, Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of another important point which I would like to bring to the attention of this government. The speech from the throne makes reference to NATO in these words:

> In concert with its allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Canada has reaffirmed its determination to maintain and improve the power of the alliance as a deterrent against aggression.

We are all aware today of the great expense involved in maintaining the early warning radar bases in the northern parts of Canada and of the great emphasis placed upon the government's decision regarding the CF-105 and its alternative the American-made Bomarc missile. I do not wish to minimize the importance of these decisions, but wish to point out that all of them are based on the theory that Canada and the United States only need defence on a north and south basis. What about our east and our west coasts. Canada is touched by the sea on both the east and west coasts. The great oceans of the world are essential to the economic well-being of our country in that they produce a yearly harvest of fish and carry our commerce to the four corners of the world. They are, therefore, vital to our continued existence as a free and civilized nation.

These same great oceans, however, also shelter within their depths the greatest threat to the security of this country that we have ever been called upon to face. This menace is the submarine, a sinister black shape, lethal, invisible, and stalking its prey from under the sea. Today, the Russian undersea fleet numbers between 500 and 600 submarines. This total is increasing steadily under the impetus of a huge naval building program. While some of these submarines may be obsolete it is known that following the armistice the Russians acquired several of the most advanced types of German U-boats developed in the late stages of the war.

The harnessing of atomic power has seen its first application to ship propulsion in the submarine, and has immediately resulted in higher speeds, especially when submerged, and in the capability of remaining under the surface for almost indefinite periods. The submarine was always a formidable weapon of war, and it would now appear to have acquired a measure of superiority over its enemies which makes it extremely difficult to combat. In addition, when you add to its already greatly increased efficiency the capability of launching ballistic and guided missiles, not only from the surface but from submerged positions as well, the submarine becomes a most dangerous foe.

Let us analyse this threat to Canada. We have heard discussions of this subject. We have heard questions asked about where ballistic missile bases would be placed in Canada. We place a great deal of importance on this problem. The modern submarine can be employed as a commerce raider attacking merchant ships singly or in convoy, as a minelayer or as a missile launching platform. As a minelayer it is quite capable of entering a port, laying mines and leaving the area without anyone knowing that it has done its work. It is as a guided missile launcher that the submarine poses its greatest threat. From a position off either of Canada's three great coastlines, the Atlantic, Pacific or Arctic, which are approximately 60,000 miles long, a missile-equipped submarine could send its death-dealing projectile far into the heart of this country. Whole cities, huge industrial areas, and many of our most important defence installations lie within range of these invisible foes. One missile, fitted with a nuclear warhead, is enough to destroy any one of these areas.

Any aggressor nation planning an atomic war could not find a more suitable weapon than the modern missile-firing submarine. Under international law and because of its own invisibility such a submarine can roam the oceans of the world at will. It can carry out surveys—believe me they are carrying out surveys, for I am in the fishing industry and receive reports from my captains that these submarines of unknown origin are operating on the Atlantic ocean, some of them fairly close to the fishing banks that lie off the east coast. As I said, it can carry out surveys and compile the charts that are necessary to determine the exact position from which to launch an attack, so the danger and the threat are obvious. It is an extremely difficult and tremendous task, requiring large numbers of men and materials, to counter this threat.

However, it must be done; and with the full support of the people of Canada and our allies of other NATO nations, it can be done. The prize in any future war will not be Europe with its overcrowded cities, but Canada with its unlimited resources and its room to expand. Here then is a challenge to the people of this country and to the government to take immediate steps to increase our own submarine fleet. In this way we could demonstrate that any attack against us would be doomed to failure and also that we possess the means, if necessary, to counter-attack.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I should like to say a few words about our fishing industry. During the past year there has been a marked shortage of groundfish on the Atlantic coast. When I spoke of groundfish, my seatmate asked if that was something similar to hamburger. I should therefore like to explain, to those who are not familiar with this term, that groundfish is not hamburger made out of fish. The term applies to those fish which are caught in prolific quantities off the east coast and which consist mainly of cod, haddock, pollock, hake, cusk, and rosefish, to name some of the leading varieties. As I say, during the past year there has been a marked shortage of groundfish on the Atlantic coast, with exceptional declines shown in the landings of cod and haddock, with catches of both species being down 18 per cent and 23 per cent respectively as compared with last year. This shortage has resulted in a staple market for fresh and frozen fish and has improved the prices paid to the primary producer. In fact, there has never before been a time in Canada's history when prices paid to the primary producer, the fisherman, were as high as they are today under the Conservative government.

I am glad to see that the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) is present with us this afternoon for he is also to be complimented on the implementation of the new fresh fish inspection program which will become effective in April. This program will mean greater control over the quality of fish packaged by the many shore processing plants throughout the maritimes, and will enable fishermen who land a high quality product properly cleaned and iced to receive a better price for their catch, as the emphasis is now on quality. This emphasis has made the fisherman realize he is handling a food product, and this year, for the first time in Canada's history, fresh and frozen fish will be labelled "government inspected" or "Processed under government supervision". The implementation of this program should provide a boost for fishery products generally, for the Canadian housewife will be able to buy fish so labelled, with every confidence that she is getting the finest product available.

In the salt fish industry, however, there is a different story, with some troublesome marketing problems. Our salt fish exporters have had a favourable market in the Dominican Republic. However, this republic has a very unfavourable trade balance with Canada, and we know what that means. We have heard a good bit of comment about unfavourable trade balances. In 1957 they imported from Canada goods to the value of $5 million, and their exports to Canada had a value of only $1.3 million. The prosperity of the Dominican Republic depends upon agriculture, with sugar being their chief crop. Canada has not imported any raw sugar from the Dominican Republic since 1955, and the amount imported at that time was only 12,850 tons. The reason for this situation is that Canada extends a tariff preference on the raw sugar imports from commonwealth countries of $1 per 100 pounds, which tariff discriminates against non-commonwealth sugar producing countries such as the Dominican Republic. The inequity of this situation is that Great Britain extends a lower preference on commonwealth raw sugar than does Canada, and Britain now imports the bulk of its sugar from the Dominican Republic.

On the other hand, Canadian fish exports to the Dominican Republic amount to about $1.5 million a year, and practically all of this fish consists of dried salt pollock, hake and bloaters. In fact, it is the most important single market for these products, taking over 50 per cent of the annual output of Nova Scotia's fishermen. It can readily be seen that this market constitutes an important source of income for a great number of our fishermen, particularly in western Nova Scotia.

Recently a Norwegian trade mission was in the Dominican Republic with a view to fostering greater trade between Norway and the republic. Should the republic take steps to divert its purchases of these fishery products to Norway, Mr. Speaker, you can well imagine the impact this action could have on this particular segment of our Nova Scotia fishing industry. Frankly, I know of no alternative market because, apart from British Guiana, salted pollock and hake are not preferred over salted cod in the Caribbean countries. Quite apart from the fact that sales to British Guiana could not be increased to a point of absorbing the surplus which would result through the loss of the Dominican Republic market, the republic invariably pays higher prices for these products.

In view of the importance of this matter, I would request that the government review Canada's tariff preferences on raw sugar with a view to lessening the present discrimination against sugar imports from these non-commonwealth countries which are the most important salt fish markets for our maritime exporters. For the information of the house, I should like to point out that we sell more salt fish to non-commonwealth countries than we sell to commonwealth countries, and that existing tariff preferences to these commonwealth countries in the Caribbean are detrimental to our fishermen and work a hardship on the industry.

In the fresh fish industry the government's present assistance policy of $160 per gross ton on ships up to 65 feet in length has been of material help to many fishermen who operate small boats. However, experience has proved that on a year-round basis these small draggers cannot be operated economically. They are handicapped from December through to the following March by high winds and winter weather and consequently cannot operate, while they are faced with fixed charges such as radar rentals, radio telephone rentals and insurance which constantly add to their expense and decrease their earnings.

I believe the time has arrived to encourage the building of larger boats which can fish twelve months of the year and can utilize the resources of our great offshore banks. Canada today is lagging behind some other countries in modernizing her fishing fleet, particularly trawlers; and any changes made in government policy should be with a view to assisting and encouraging the fishing industry to acquire the most modern implements of production. In my opinion, this step is absolutely necessary if our Canadian industry is to compete successfully in the catching of fish and to keep pace with these other producing countries. I believe this step is necessary if we are properly to expand and develop markets on this continent in the most economical way and if we are to operate efficiently and maintain full employment in the industry. I believe this step is also necessary if our processing plants are to have an adequate year-round supply of quality fish. To this end more encouragement should be given to the building up of a modern fleet of large trawlers which are the only productive units capable of keeping an adequate supply of fish on the market every month of the year.

With these objectives in mind I respectfully suggest that the government give consideration to the building of a modern fleet by instituting a system of investment allowances as is now being done in the United Kingdom. These increased depreciation allowances should run as high as 65 per cent and should apply on all ships built in Canadian yards. To guarantee the expansion of the fleet, the amount accumulated by these allowances should be made to apply toward the construction of new fishing draggers. In addition to this, I believe the present assistance plan offered by the government should be increased, as the cost of ship construction has advanced materially in recent years.

Of further and final interest to the fishermen of my riding is the present regulation which requires large Canadian trawlers to fish outside the 12 mile limit, while all trawlers, regardless of size, of any other nation are permitted to fish within three miles of our shores. I believe it is time this regulation was revoked, for it is a ridiculous situation which permits foreign trawlers to fish within three miles of our shores while it is illegal for some of our Canadian trawlers to fish within 12 miles of our coast. I realize that it is the desire of the Canadian government to bring about an international agreement on a 12 mile fishing limit, but charity begins at home, and until such time as this can be accomplished, this discrimination against our own larger trawlers should be removed. I firmly believe that implementation of these recommendations would be a great forward step for the Canadian Atlantic coast fishing industry and greatly improve working conditions for these hardy men who make their living on the sea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It would be appreciated by the chair if hon. members would try as far as possible not to read every word of their speeches. I am not implying that this was done by the last speaker, because he certainly did not do so, but it is preferable that hon. members should deliver their speeches rather than read them. The co-operation of hon. members in this respect will be appreciated.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like first of all to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) who has just completed what I consider to be an excellent analysis of the problems of the fishermen on the Atlantic coast, and I hope that his representations with respect to year round fishing and with respect to the elimination of the foolish 12-mile and 3-mile limit business will eventually lead to action. I cannot, of course, extend any such remarks to him with respect to what the capitalist system can do and what it is good for; we all know that he and I disagree on that.

It appears to be a coincidence that today, as on the last occasion when I rose to take part in the debate on the address, the only cabinet minister present in the house should be the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean). I hope that he and I are not going to develop this into a regular practice; the comments I may have to make about fishing will be reserved for another time when I am able to deal with this subject more specifically.

It is in no perfunctory way that I wish, in addition, to extend my congratulations to the hon. and attractive member for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman) on her election to this house. It has always been my thought that there are far too few women who participate in politics; certainly far too few who have the privilege of being elected either to this house or to the provincial legislatures or to the municipal councils. I am sure that if we had more people in our public life possessing that peculiarly womanly trait of being able to get to the heart of a problem and then to suggest a solution, we would probably have much more sense arising out of the legislation we make. I say this in a general way, because, naturally, all members of the hon. lady's sex are not endowed with the same measure of ability. I wish her well, and I hope that she along with her two colleagues, the other two lady members, will have some influence in the party caucus and bring some sense and logic to the decisions of this government, because certainly if there ever was a government which needed sense and logic brought to its attention, and influence imposed upon it, it is this one.

It is fitting that the opening of this session should take place in the month of January, because if I recall accurately what little knowledge I have of Roman mythology there was a Roman god called Janus after whom this month was named and this government, like Janus, has two faces, one of which it presents to the general public at election time, on television broadcasts and at social events. This is the face of help, the face of assistance, the face of promise. But it wears its other face when action is desired, whenever action is necessary as far as legislation is concerned.

Some of the backbenchers of the Conservative party who have taken part in this debate appear to have concentrated their attention on one small sentence in the speech from the throne. They appear to have been blinded by a mere 20 words in that speech and to have forgotten all the other matters which were omitted from it. The fascination and charm exercised by that one sentence have resulted in far too much buttering up of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker)—far too many laudatory remarks about the government, references to individuals being the greatest Canadians who ever lived, and so on—the hope being that as a result some of them would be among those chosen few who would end up by being parliamentary secretaries.

Mr. Pallett: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is now making an allegation about the motives of other hon. members who have spoken, and I suggest it would be proper for him to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Howard: I thank the hon. member for having raised whatever he did raise.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that apart from this—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Howard: I would remind the hon. gentleman down there that he is not sitting in the chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must remind hon. members that if they wish to ask questions while another hon. member has the floor they must first obtain his permission. They may then ask the question. However, hon. members are not permitted to interrupt a speaker.

Mr. Pallett: I notice that another hon. member was at the side of the chair speaking to you during the time I rose. I rose, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Did you mention that you were raising a point of order? An hon. member must mention that he wishes to raise a point of order.

Mr. Pallett: The point of order was this: the hon. member for Skeena referred in his remarks to backbenchers on the government side complimenting ministers on the excellent work they were doing with a view to obtaining promotion within the government ranks, and I suggest to you that by that reference he is making an imputation of motives which is quite improper and which should be withdrawn.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, parliamentary ways of doing business have many variations and some of us at one time or another may have different points of view as to what is and what is not correct. We tend to learn as time goes by.

Mr. Pallett: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Howard: I assume you are considering the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Beauchesne's 3rd edition, at page 106, contains article 256, which reads as follows:

> The imputation of bad motives, or motives different from those acknowledged, misrepresenting the language of another, or accusing him, in his turn, of misrepresentation, charging him with falsehood or deceit; or contemptuous or insulting language of any kind; all these are unparliamentary and call for prompt interference.

I believe in this case it can hardly be implied that the compliments which some of the hon. members have paid to the Prime Minister and some other hon. members can necessarily be intended as meaning hon. members are doing this for ulterior motives. It is not the opinion of the chair that we can call the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) out of order for the actual remarks which he has made. However, it would be appreciated by the chair if at all times the hon. members in their speeches refrained from direct attack upon other hon. members in this house in unparliamentary style.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the manner in which this house over the years has developed its systems of conducting business would appear to require some changes. I intend to suggest some changes that should be made without in any way implying that there is any parliamentary wrong being done. Originally under this parliamentary system we had what is known as responsible government; that is, a government which was supposed to be responsible to parliament. Gradually that has been developed to the point where we now have parliament responsible to the government and not the other way around as it should be.

We have 23 hon. members of this house who are members of the cabinet and who in effect run practically every phase of our parliamentary discussion, debates and decisions. I do not think we can assume for a moment that in every government the members of that government represent the brightest people in the House of Commons because, as we know, to a degree political consideration is given to the selection of cabinet ministers in order that they may be representative of provinces across the nation.

In think we can offer a number of suggestions for the operation of this house in the consideration of its business which would give the opportunity to parliament to draw upon the best brains in the house and, give an opportunity for members to freely express their ideas and to vote freely on individual matters. In the first instance I feel there are far too many things that are classified as being want of confidence or indicating a lack of confidence in the government. If we were to confine what is or what is not a want of confidence to the motion we are now considering, to the budget debate and to the six supply motions there would be adequate opportunity for those in opposition to express by amendment their feelings with respect to what they feel the government has failed to do and in what this house should express its confidence.

When it comes to legislation and considering the laws that are to be applied to the Canadian people these, I think, should be debated freely and the votes taken on them should be allowed to be free votes so there would be provided freedom for the crossing of party lines. In that way individual government backbenchers would not feel required to support a piece of legislation merely because it had been introduced by a cabinet minister belonging to their own party.

I feel there should be far more reference of legislation to committees of the house where also free discussion and free votes should be allowed and dictation by party not imposed on members participating in the sittings of the committee. In addition, this would allow any interested citizen of Canada who cannot now appear before parliament itself the opportunity of appearing before the committee to express his ideas and thoughts on the legislation. As a result of all this I am sure we would be able to develop and enact legislation which would be to a far greater extent than is now possible legislation enacted in the interests of the Canadian people based upon the freely allowed expression of opinion and free votes of hon. members of this House of Commons.

The question of private members' bills must also be considered in a discussion of this kind. We have notification of a number of such bills on the order paper at this time. These private members' bills are representative of each political philosophy that exists in the house. I hope that this session we will not follow the practice we have in past sessions of talking out private members' bills and not allowing the house the opportunity of voting "Yes" or "No" on the idea embodied in the bills drafted by private members. We should be sufficiently conscientious to allow votes to be taken on these bills which again should be referred to standing committees for full discussion.

Motions fall into the same category as do private bills as being an expression of opinion on the part of an hon. member of this house and a free vote should be taken on the motions introduced by individual private members. These should not be talked out. The government that now controls the operation of parliament should either publicly, by saying so in the house or privately in the secret back room where they hold caucuses, reach the decision to allow this type of free expression to take place. A government sponsored bill which met amendment in committee stage or which even met defeat by free vote of hon. members of this house would not curtail the length of time the government would have in office. The government would not need to be afraid of having to call a new election nor would the government be defeated every time a piece of legislation was freely voted upon.

There are probably two bad features to the proposals I have advanced, neither one of which in my opinion is sufficiently valid to negate my proposals. One such feature is that if these proposals were put into effect they would represent an invasion of the present cabinet control over our parliamentary functions and, secondly, the adoption of the proposals would upset ministerial ego.

I believe it was two days ago that an announcement was made by a very large private corporation in this nation, namely the Aluminum Company of Canada, to the effect that it was not going to participate in selling for export to China an order for 2,000 long tons of aluminum. A question about this matter was put to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) and he replied to it. The answer is to be found in yesterday's Hansard. It is to the effect that as far as he knows no outside or foreign influence has been exerted upon the Aluminum Company of Canada in deciding whether they would sell this particular block of aluminum to China. I am going to suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not make an extensive enough investigation, or he has been ill-informed about this matter. I think it is quite evident that the Aluminum Company of Canada has certainly been dictated to by forces outside of this nation in its decision not to sell this particular amount of aluminum.

Alcan made reference to the fact that the decision had been made because it might lose some of its present customers if it sold to China. Let us look and see what nations are considered to be some of its customers. One of the largest purchasers of aluminum in Canada is in the United Kingdom. In the 11-month period ended November of last year we sold $63,500,000 worth of aluminum ingots to the United Kingdom, and we ask, was it United Kingdom influence, was it the United Kingdom market that Alcan was afraid they might lose if they sold aluminum to a country under communist domination? I think we can be fairly certain that since the United Kingdom has extended diplomatic recognition to China it would not declare that if Alcan sold aluminum to China it would lose any of its markets in the United Kingdom. We also know that the United Kingdom imported aluminum from Russia, another communist country, at a price which was lower than that at which Alcan sells aluminum. Therefore, the concern of the United Kingdom is not so much that of buying from Alcan or from anybody else but in buying where they can get the best possible price.

West Germany bought $12,500,000 worth of aluminum during the same period of time, which is a minor amount compared with that bought by the United Kingdom and by the United States. United States purchases amounted to $82,200,000 during that same period. The United States and the United Kingdom are by far the two largest purchasers of aluminum from the Aluminum Company of Canada. Their purchases amounted to something in the neighbourhood of 85 per cent or better of the exports of aluminum from Canada. But we must think in terms of the United States as to whether or not that was the influential body outside of Canada that had an effect upon Alcan in its decision not to sell.

Let us look and see who are on the board of directors of this company which claims to have no ties with the Aluminum Company of America. We find that Aluminum Limited, the holding company, owns the Aluminum Company of Canada. One-half of the board of directors consists of American citizens and have their addresses listed in such places as Westport, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Boston, Washington and New York. Incidentally, there is another chap on the board who is well-known to Canadian parliamentary life, namely the Right Hon. C. D. Howe. Therefore, certainly, United States influence has been used against Alcan. Whether it be economic or political intimidation, that is another matter but in essence it was United States influence which disallowed this potential sale of aluminum to another country. That, of course, was admitted by officials of the Aluminum Company of Canada, as reported in yesterday morning's Globe and Mail. Mr. Duncan Campbell, the spokesman for Alcan, said, and I quote:

> You know what the attitude of Americans is on sales to Red China.

He was obviously indicating that it was United States interference in one form or another that prevented the Canadian company from selling this particular commodity to another country at a time when we know how much we need to expand our exports for a variety of reasons.

Let us analyse what this potential sale would have meant had it been consummated. There is first the possibility of expanding our markets for aluminum which, as we know, has been declining over the past number of months to the point, incidentally, where the Aluminum Company of Canada is now operating at about 65 per cent of capacity. There is the question of markets and the effect the sale would have had upon employment in the aluminum smelters in Canada which have been slowly, month by month, laying off production employees. That one sale would have meant approximately $1 million, or the equal of the total sales we have made during the past year to India and to Hong Kong. It would have amounted to three times what they have sold to New Zealand in that year and five times what they sold to the Argentine. It would have almost equalled what we sold to South Africa and would have compared favourably with what we have sold to other countries during the past year.

We have the question of employment to consider. Within the last year and a half the Aluminum Company of Canada has been following a policy of curtailment of production, and a discontinuance of plant expansion, all of which is connected with their laying off of employees, thereby adding to the unemployed rolls of our nation. In Kitimat, which is in the constituency which I have the privilege to represent here, about a year and a half ago the Aluminum Company of Canada suddenly overnight decided that they were not going to proceed with any further expansion and laid off more than 1,500 construction employees, thereby wreaking havoc upon those construction workers and their families, many of whom had moved to Kitimat because the Aluminum Company of Canada told them that it was a 10-year project and said so just a few months before they laid them off. There has been a steady reduction in production, and there was a recent announcement that another 10 per cent reduction in production by the Aluminum Company would take place. This has had an effect in Kitimat, Arvida and Isle Maligne and throughout the Alcan empire. Approximately 700 employees are being affected by this recent reduction.

Apart from the economic results that that sale would have had on Canada, apart from the market question, apart from its effect upon employment, there is another phase which we should consider also, namely the political results. Some time ago this government saw fit to send out trade commissioners from Hong Kong into the mainland of China to discover what the trading potentials were or what markets were there. Since the government has said over the past months that it is concerned with expanding trade it should also look at this from the point of view of its political impact on the world. We know that Russia has been able in the past year to offer aluminum on the world market at prices lower than those at which the Aluminum Company of Canada, Alcoa, Reynolds and others are selling aluminum. We also know that Russia did not offer to sell aluminum to China at those prices. I am sure we can sense the division in the unity which has existed between the Soviet union and China and which, if present developments continue, will divide those two nations politically even more.

Apart from the immediate market question, apart from the immediate employment picture, here was an opportunity for the Aluminum Company of Canada to do something on behalf of world peace by assisting in widening the division between the Soviet union and China and attempting to draw the Chinese nation closer to the western world politically if that nation has not gone too far the other way. It is certainly one aspect which should have been taken into consideration.

Yesterday I posed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce which was not answered because of a statement by the Speaker that it probably was not the time and place to pose such an all-embracing question, but I shall ask it again. Not only from this decision of the Aluminum Company but from decisions of other private corporations in Canada, some of whom are direct subsidiaries of United States corporations, it appears that they are unable, unwilling or afraid to make sales to certain countries. In this case the Aluminum Company of Canada was afraid for one reason or another or there was intimidation of some kind used which made them decide not to sell aluminum to China.

Having in mind the words and phrases spilled all over the country by the government about wanting to expand trade it would appear that there is ample room among the various agencies of government for the establishment of an export or import-export board, whatever you want to call it, part of whose function would be to purchase from the company concerned and make the sale to the country wanting to buy the aluminum. If we had had such a board it certainly could have played a part in the situation which developed the other day with respect to the Aluminum Company and the sale to China. Certainly as a government agency established by the authority of parliament and representing the views of the Canadian people it would have been in a position to take the Aluminum Company of Canada off the hook, having in mind that company's fears of some sort of retaliation against it by United States interests if it should make this sale. I certainly hope that the time will come when we will have such a board or agency which, in addition to other questions of trade, will be able to deal with similar situations should they arise in the future in order to ensure that our markets are expanded, that employment possibilities are increased in Canada and perhaps assist in the political sphere by promoting a somewhat more sensible approach among nations towards the common goal of world peace.

I should like to say a few words about an important question that was debated at some length in the first session I was here, 1957, was debated again in the last session, and which appears to be going to receive adequate discussion and debate this session. I made some slight reference to unemployment in discussing the question of the Aluminum Company of Canada and the proposed sale to China. We have listened to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) on a number of occasions, and on each occasion it has seemed to me that these gentlemen appear to be more concerned with statistics than they are with people. Every time the Minister of Labour has an opportunity to discuss unemployment he mentions statistics. He does not mention the impact that unemployment has on people. He does not mention the sorrow and suffering of individual families. I think the Minister of Labour has probably been seduced by the statistics compiled for him and has forgotten entirely the unemployed people who are involved in the compilation of such statistics. I do not want to get into the realm of the different sets of figures used by the minister and others and the question of which set is correct and which is not, which one is incomplete because it does not contain certain types of workers and which one is more than complete because it contains people who are not unemployed. By doing so I would be allowing myself to become involved in figures in the same way as the Minister of Labour who is concerned solely with what the graphs show and forgets entirely that it is men and women who are affected.

In Vancouver, for instance, there are approximately 11,000 to 12,000 unemployed people at the moment who cannot qualify for unemployment insurance because they were not even able to get sufficient work during the past year to qualify for the benefits paid. Because of the failure of the government at the last session to carry out its throne speech promises—never mind its election promises—we have these 11,000 to 12,000 people in Vancouver who could not secure enough work in the last year to accumulate enough contributions even to draw the pitifully small amount paid by way of unemployment insurance.

I grew up in Vancouver around 1937 and for the first time that I can remember there are bread lines and soup kitchens. To my personal knowledge this condition has not existed for many years. The fact that there are bread lines and soup kitchens in Vancouver is certainly not the fault of the hundreds of people who have to stand and wait for hours for a sandwich that some charitable organization is able to provide. It is certainly not their fault that they do not have sufficient money unless they had money and spent their savings hoping that prosperity was just around the corner, in accordance with the Prime Minister's foolish suggestion that we should spend our way to prosperity.

The Minister of Labour forgets or maybe he does not even know of the situation I encountered personally in Prince George last fall. Prince George is in the constituency of my neighbour and friend from Cariboo. It is the central location for employment in the lumbering, construction and logging industries for the entire north central portion of British Columbia. Many loggers, sawmill workers and construction workers go to Prince George in the hope of finding employment there or being sent to a job somewhere out of the city.

In the latter part of October I was in Prince George for a few days and I met two friends of mine I had known in the logging industry and with whom I had worked. They had been sleeping in parked cars in parking lots for a whole week because they could not get work, there was no place for them to stay and they had not had sufficient work last summer to entitle them to unemployment insurance benefits. There was no charitable organization there to provide even a soup kitchen or bread line.

It is that sort of thing that goes into making up these statistics. It would do the Minister of Labour and the rest of his colleagues in the cabinet, who have been so blinded by this graph they have been talking about, a lot of good to go out and stand in a breadline once in a while.

Mr. Grafftey: Have you tried it?

Mr. Howard: They should sleep in a parked car as these two lads I know had to do in Prince George.

Mr. Grafftey: Have you tried it?

Mr. Howard: Let the hon. member ask his question in the proper way instead of sitting down on his fanny and yapping.

This government has to realize the human suffering that is involved in these statistics. They no longer ought to be concerned with the Prime Minister's pre-election statements, which meant nothing apparently at that time, because the actions of the government do not bear them out.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for having given me an indication that my time is running out. I had one or two other comments I wanted to make, but perhaps another occasion will arise when I shall be able to make them.

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pride that I rise in my place today, but a kind of pride which I hope few members are called upon to have because it only results from the fact that on October 23 last year in my constituency the people of the town of Springhill were called upon to go through a type of ordeal that few people in this world have to suffer. On that evening there was a bump in No. 2 colliery of the Cumberland Coal Company which resulted in the loss of 75 lives, 75 hard-working men, 75 very brave men.

Along with those 75 brave men, we must give credit to a great many more brave men who went down into the bowels of the earth, danger lurking at every turn, and as a result of their courageous efforts were able to bring from that mine 18 survivors. These 18 men had remained below ground with little or no food, with little or no water and with only the hope that their buddies would come to get them, and come to get them they did. No one, and I say no one, could appreciate the sorrow, the sadness, the physical and mental condition of the people of Springhill, unless that person were there amongst those people during those days.

We get up in this house and we talk about courage. We do not know what courage is until we go into an area where a tragedy of this type has occurred and watch the people face it. We do not know about courage until we watch them get together, face up to their problems, and as a result come out on top. It is indeed a sad thing, Mr. Speaker, to go into a home and hear small children tell you they are waiting for their daddy to come home when you know their daddy will never come home. There were a good many homes I went into where that occurred. When one thinks of the tragedy to these families, one is amazed that people could hold up under such strain. It is indeed great credit to their community and to their way of life that they have been able to stand up under this ordeal in the way that they have.

When speaking on this subject, I should like to compliment the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) upon the manner in which the R.C.M.P. kept things in order at all times; the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) upon the manner in which the civil defence people came in and did such an excellent job; the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) upon the manner in which the C.B.C., through radio and television across this country, brought this tragic occurrence not only to the people of Canada but of the world. I should like to thank not only the people of Canada but of the world for the manner in which they got behind these courageous people and built up this wonderful fund that will be of material benefit to the widows and the families of those miners who have lost their lives.

When I think about these people in Springhill, I think about the company that for so many years operated the mines there. This company is called the Cumberland Coal Company. It is owned by Dosco, which in turn is owned by Avro, which in turn is owned by the Hawker Siddeley group. Let me give you some idea of the size of this gigantic concern. The Hawker Siddeley group has assets of £200 million; last year their sales amounted to £250 million and their employees number 100,000. This is indeed a gigantic concern. There is no doubt that this concern should do a great deal for the courageous people of this town.

This is an editorial which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of November 12, 1958. It is entitled "Avro's Obligation". Avro is a subsidiary of Hawker Siddeley. The editorial reads:

The Windsor Daily Star which, like many other newspapers of Canada, has been showing a mixture of high admiration and deep concern for the community of Springhill in recent weeks, has expressed a view, republished elsewhere on this page today, which merits some particular consideration.

It has suggested that the primary responsibility in saving the town—as it must be saved—lies not with governments, as many will be quick to contend, but with A. V. Roe Limited, the parent firm of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation which has been exploiting the coal resources of Springhill for many years.

"Avro", it says, "is a strong, powerful enterprise. It has no fewer than forty subsidiaries or affiliates. And, in many ways, it has proven itself an enlightened enterprise . . . Surely it shouldn't be beyond its ingenuity and ability to locate a plant in Springhill requisite to that town's needs. And to do this without depriving any other community of an existing Avro plant."

This is something, we hope, that will be discussed by Premier Robert Stanfield and Allan C. MacDonald, chief of Dosco operations for the A. V. Roe complex, when they meet in Halifax this morning and when Mr. MacDonald meets with the citizens of Springhill tonight.

There must be in all the considerations that are given to Springhill these days one overriding thought which was well summed up by the Toronto Globe and Mail a few days ago in restating its admiration for the courageous mining folk of that town:

"A town which produces men like these ought not to be casually dissolved.

—What must be provided is simply the opportunity to make new, productive lives, and Canada will be the loser if that opportunity is not provided. As far as possible, work should be provided for them near the community to which they have shown such great attachment—"

Certainly, if private enterprise will not do something on its own, either in the resuming of coal mining operations, which can be depended upon for safety and permanency, or in some alternative industry, then governments must step in. And there is plenty of public opinion in the country in support of federal action. But certainly, too. A. V. Roe Limited, which took over the huge Dosco empire only a short time ago with the feeling, publicly expressed, that it could make its future better than its past, should give Springhill some special thoughts first. As the Windsor Star reminds us, "in this modern age, there is, or should be, a social consciousness (and) if private enterprise fails to recognize this, then it is a black mark against private enterprise".

Let us now look and see what Avro has done. To date they have done this. They have found jobs, they say, for 200 persons—out of a total unemployed group of 900—outside the town of Springhill. This is a company that is owned by a company with group assets now put at £200 million. They have really done a great deal for the people of Springhill, have they not? They have said to them, "We will not help keep your community; we will take 200 of your people away for you. That is what we will do for you for working for us over the years in our coal mines". This is indeed a great tribute to such a great corporation. Here is a company with 40 subsidiaries. Yet they cannot find anything, so they say, that they can place in this town that has these courageous men. What kind of company is this that would have this feeling and yet go into our area and tell us that they are going to make our future better? If this is the way in which they make our future better, I do not want any part of it.

Fortunately, both the provincial government of Nova Scotia and the federal government have seen fit to endeavour to establish industries that will give the people of this town the stability they so rightly and justly deserve. Only the other day notice was given in the Halifax paper that a woodworking concern is to be established in Springhill. Not long ago a committee from the Department of Justice was in Springhill endeavouring to ascertain whether or not Springhill could be used as a logical site for either the construction of a federal penitentiary or the establishment of a prison farm. Both these matters will indeed take time. However, it is my sincere hope that before this session ends we shall have a definite answer as to whether this can be done in the town of Springhill. I pray that the answer will be the one that we all must hope it should be.

I should like to thank the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. O'Leary) for his kind remarks with regard to Springhill. I should also like to thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). But I must also say that I was somewhat disappointed that the Liberal party did not have some constructive suggestions to make with regard to Springhill.

I should now like to turn from Springhill, Mr. Speaker, but not because I could not speak at greater length about it, and the attitude, the courage and the ability of its people. However, my time in the house is limited. I should like to turn now to something else about which I was extremely pleased, namely the announcement in the speech from the throne that subsidies would be considered to offset the adverse effects of the 17 per cent increase in freight rates. In the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition I note that he was greatly concerned over the increase in freight rates and indicated that it probably had something to do with the problems of the Dosco corporation and its present statement with regard to layoffs in the Cape Breton area of Nova Scotia. That suggestion might very well be correct but it also might not be correct. I ask the Leader of the Opposition whether in 1948 he was concerned about coal and the marketing problems in connection with it when the then government allowed a 21 per cent increase in freight rates; in 1949 when an 8 per cent increase was allowed; in 1950 when the 8 per cent was increased to 16 per cent; and again in 1950 when the 16 per cent was increased to 20 per cent; in 1951 when a further 12 per cent increase was allowed; in 1952 when the 12 per cent was increased to 17 per cent; in 1953 when a 9 per cent increase was allowed; in 1953, when a 7 per cent increase was allowed; in 1956, when a 7 per cent increase was allowed; and in 1957 when the 7 per cent was increased to 11 per cent.

Where was the concern of the Liberal government for the coal industry in Nova Scotia? They were concerned about the coal industry only when they got on the other side of the house; and even then, one sometimes wonders about their concern. The only government that has ever been concerned about us is the government that is now in power. The east has shown clearly that no longer are these so-called feelings for the people of Nova Scotia going to be interpreted as being genuine. They were interpreted as such, too often without any results. This is the only government which has ever given the people in the east results.

Why, all of a sudden do we find a government which is interested in seeing that something is done about freight rates? I will give hon. members one reason why—a single reason: it is that this country will be made equal from east to west, and one of the ways in which this country be made equal from east to west is by having a Conservative policy put into effect—a policy which will provide equality to the people no matter where they live, and a policy which will not force people from the east to move to the central provinces of Canada. It will be a great many years before we see any other government in this country, and during those years we will see the east slowly rise up. One of our greatest problems in the east is transportation, and one of the greatest dangers to our economy lies in these horizontal increases in freight rates. This is the first time a government has endeavoured to do something about it.

Speaking of transportation I should also like to mention a project which is very important to Nova Scotia and not only to Nova Scotia but to all the maritime provinces, namely the construction of deep water wharves which would be the means of putting into effect a scheduled service between Parrsboro and Kingsport in Nova Scotia. Until the war years there was a ferry service, but together with so many other things we have lost that. Today it has been proven that a great deal of traffic would travel via a ferry from the Annapolis valley and south shore areas of Nova Scotia through Parrsboro on to the province of New Brunswick. Not only would this cut down mileage a great deal but it would make for efficiency and speed in a manner which is not possible today. In addition, it would be a tremendous inducement to the tourist trade. There has been some debate with regard to the figures produced by the Acadia institute concerning traffic. However, I feel, after reading this report very carefully that even allowing for local prejudice and bias, which might have increased the estimate to a small degree, there is still a very apparent necessity for this project to be undertaken, and I must recommend to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) that every possible consideration be given to this work.

I should also like to dwell for a short time on the problems of agriculture, a very important industry not only for Nova Scotia but for the maritimes in general. I should like first of all to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) on the crop insurance legislation which will be forthcoming this session. This will indeed be a godsend to all farmers in this country.

I should like, in the main, to speak on credit. We in the east, if we are to have a healthy agriculture, must have better credit facilities. It is my hope that in the very near future we shall see new credit legislation placed before this house, legislation which will allow the farmers in Nova Scotia both to increase their acreage and to stock their farms more adequately. It is wellnigh impossible today to obtain credit on the basis of stock and machinery; the value of the land is the important aspect. However, today, with the price of stock and machinery so high, it is often difficult or impossible for farmers to stock and mechanize their farms properly. This problem must be given very careful consideration.

We must also provide a means for our young mean to obtain farms which are properly stocked and mechanized. Today we see young men leaving the farms mainly because it is impossible for them to obtain the financial assistance which is necessary if they are to farm in a modern manner. It is my hope that when this legislation is presented it will embody some of the aspects of the Veterans Land Act which has provided a very efficient and acceptable type of farm credit.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the opposition in this House of Commons. During the first session I sat in this house I watched the opposition party. They were fairly keen and did their work fairly well because they knew that any day an election might come along. They never knew on what day, so they had to be on their toes. During the last session of parliament we had a let-down from the opposition. Before this session began the newspapers indicated that this was likely to be a fighting and exciting session. However, if the few days that have gone by since this session started are an example of either fighting or excitement, I say to the people of Canada that on the other side of the house they do not know what either fighting or excitement is. What do we have on the other side of the house? We have 48 or 49 members.

An hon. Member: I thought there were 50.

Mr. Coates: No matter how many it is we would never be able to find out. We have six or seven hon. members in the opposition who get up on their feet and criticize this government. What about the rest of them? We find they are still the same old trained seals they were when they were in the government. There is no difference now. They never say anything about the government of this country. In order for the government to be efficient in carrying out the will of the people it must have a two-fisted, hard-fighting and hard-working opposition. This is the government of this nation. How can six or seven men stand up against any government? They cannot do it.

What did we hear last year from the opposition? A few of them rose to their feet groaning and whining about committee work. "We cannot be here and there at the same time," they said. Why? Simply because six or seven men were running the opposition and doing all the work and because they still refuse to assign work to the backbenchers in their party. They never gave them anything to do when that party formed the government and now they do not let them contribute to a constructive, active opposition party. I believe every man in opposition should rise to his feet and fight and I do not hesitate to say that if I were in opposition I should be happy to do it.

Mr. Habel: You soon will be.

Mr. Coates: Oh, don't you worry about it, my friend. If you keep on the way you are behaving you will always sit on that side of the house. The only difference will be that your numbers will diminish and you deserve that.

It is not difficult to anticipate what we are going to hear from hon. gentlemen opposite in the next election campaign. They will go about the country stating that they need more members in the opposition. The opposition does not need more members. They need only to put to work the members they have. In my view they are not utilizing the talents of the members they do have over there. They kept the backbenchers in their seats for 20 years without doing anything and now when they should be participating actively in the affairs of this country the backbenchers do not know how to get out of their seats.

Mr. Deschatelets: What about parliamentary assistants?

Mr. Coates: Do not worry about them, my friend. It is needless for you to worry about parliamentary assistants because you will probably always sit on that side of the house if indeed you stick around. But if you continue to sit in your seat the way you always have, you will not be around too long, I can assure you of that.

Mr. Deschatelets: If I ever decide to deal with you, you will have cause for regret.

Mr. Coates: This, Mr. Speaker, is the type of opposition we have. Most of them cannot even get out of their seats when they speak. They have to sit down and talk to us. When you speak in this house you are supposed to stand up in your place.

I should like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your patience in listening to my remarks. There are many other matters I should like to call to the attention of this house but I realize I shall have later opportunities to do so.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, may I first congratulate the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the motion to adopt the speech from the throne. May I also say it is a pleasure to be back in this chamber presided over so pleasantly by a witty and able speaker.

Since I was in this house last, I have spent considerable time in my riding of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and covered most of that quite extensive district. I was as far north as Nain and in one respect the far north was better than the southern districts for the fishery was better than average in northern Labrador while it was a total failure elsewhere. Unfortunately there are comparatively few fishermen in this area, the great bulk of them being on the island of Newfoundland where the fishery was very poor.

There is one point I should like to mention in this respect. There is a small but locally important sea trout fishery in this area. I am told that the smoked sea trout from Nain is one of the great delicacies in food.

Unfortunately there have been difficulties in transportation. Perhaps if the C.N.R. boat which operates in these waters had a small refrigeration unit on board it might be possible to ship more of the fish to Goose Bay where it should find a ready market. Goose Bay, as hon. gentlemen know, is the site of a large and famous airport and is relatively populous.

The principal needs of southern Labrador from the federal standpoint are still communications and marine works. Some wharves and slipways are needed and air strips are badly required among other places at Cartwright, Port Hope, Simpson and Hopedale. The provincial department of highways have constructed two air strips at Nain and North West River and some further work may be needed, particularly on the latter. An air strip is also being constructed in St. Anthony by the provincial department of highways. These air strips are designed to fill the great need which exists during the period of freeze-up and break-up.

The provincial department of health operates planes for the Grenfell mission. These planes operate on floats in summer and skis in winter. But there are the periods of freeze-up and break-up, when there is too much ice and slob for floats and not enough firm ice for skis, when these planes are grounded. During these periods air strips are invaluable in these northern areas where the plane is often the instrument of life. During the fall before last eleven people died in Nain because the plane could not land with medical aid. More air strips are required to prevent recurrence of such tragedies.

Another need is for additional radio telephones. Progress has been made in this respect but there are still places which are completely isolated when winter locks up the Labrador. Small radio telephone sets can summon a doctor in time of need.

At the present time the C.B.C. operates a television station at Goose Bay but it is of low power and some increase is desirable to assure better reception at North West River some 16 miles away. The R.C.A.F. operates a radio station and within its limits gives good service. There is some desire for the C.B.C. to operate a radio station giving a broader coverage. A radio station in the St. Anthony and Battle Harbour areas to serve the Labrador is also desirable and I trust this matter will receive sympathetic attention.

However, the principal matter which I wish to stress in these remarks is the serious situation in which our fishermen find themselves.

A large proportion of the fishermen of Newfoundland live in my constituency and I might say that what applies to them applies generally throughout the province. The cod fishery is still the basic industry of our province. It is the historic industry of Newfoundland and it has had historic problems. But these problems were aggravated last year when economic disaster struck and the fishery failed. There were just no fish. With the almost sole exception of northern Labrador the fishery was practically a total failure. This was certainly true of the northeast coast much of which I visited personally. I travelled from place to place where the total catch was but a fraction of what it usually is and when some fish did appear there was no bait. This was doubly devastating. As there was no alternative employment the result was inevitable. Hardship and want occurred and this was followed by the toughest winter that many fine, independent fishermen have experienced for many years and this, of course, through no fault of their own.

The inevitable plight of Newfoundland fishermen was, of course, foreseen.

On October 21, 1958, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) wrote the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) as follows:

> I have recently returned from a visit to my constituency where I have found that the failure of the cod fishery which is the mainstay of more than half the population of the northeast coast of Newfoundland is of even more serious proportions than earlier reports had led me to expect.
>
> I should estimate that, because the fish were scarce and because bait was even scarcer, up to two-thids of the full-time fishermen will not have enough stamps to entitle them to unemployment insurance which alone saved a serious situation last winter.
>
> In a normal year, even with a failure of the fishery, many of the fishermen would be able to supplement their incomes with earnings from work in the woods, but owing to the recession in the pulp and paper industry, there is little or no woods work in most areas in Newfoundland.
> It is no exaggeration to say that half the fishermen on the northeast coast of Newfoundland will be forced to go on relief in the coming winter unless action is taken by the federal government to treat this failure of the cod fishery as an emergency situation calling for action similar to that taken by the government to assist the prairie grain farmers who experienced a crop failure this year that is certainly no more serious for them than the "crop failure" in the cod fishery is to the fishermen of Newfoundland.
>
> You will recall that on August 30 when you announced the intention of the government to ask parliament to vote $40 million of special assistance to the grain farmers you stated that your government's "concept" of a national policy is based on the belief that the national welfare demands positive action to meet the basic causes of distress and maladjustment in particular industries and regions."
>
> The situation of the fishermen of Newfoundland this year calls urgently for positive action to meet acute distress in the fishing industry.
> The simplest way to meet this problem would be for the government to use the agency of the unemployment insurance commission which has the necessary machinery and, through the commission to provide every full time fisherman with the minimum contributions to entitle him to unemployment insurance. This method would ensure that assistance went to those who actually had a failure of the fishery. The government could make a special contribution from the treasury to reimburse the fund for the full cost of these "crop failure" benefits to the fishermen. The federal fisheries officers have full records from which it would be easy to determine who were full-time fishermen.

I have referred only to the northeast coast of Newfoundland because that is the only area of which I have personal first-hand knowledge but obviously any national policy to meet the basic distress of the fishermen should be applied to the whole Atlantic region, including Gaspe and the Saguenay.

I am, therefore, sending a copy of this letter to all members of parliament from fishing constituencies in the Atlantic region as well as to the ministers of fisheries and labour and the minister from Newfoundland with a request for their support in this appeal to the government of our country to give treatment to the fishermen who have experienced a disastrous "crop failure" equal to that already given to the grain farmers of the prairies.

I cannot emphasize too strongly that the problem calls for an early statement of positive action by the federal government, if many thousands of fishermen are not to be driven to accept relief in order to provide for their families in the coming winter.

I quote this letter in full because it sets out a plan whereby assistance could have been granted to Newfoundland fishermen. In fact, I think I might safely say it was a constructive suggestion advancing an idea calculated to be helpful. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) replied on October 28 saying, and I quote:

The matter is being looked into thoroughly by my colleagues the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Fisheries to whom I have forwarded copies of your letter.

I might add that I wired the Prime Minister on October 27, supporting the letter I have just quoted. Actually, I sent the wire on the eve of his departure from Canada and he had the thoughtfulness and courtesy to acknowledge my telegram from London.

On December 1 the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate wrote the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) in connection with his letter to the Prime Minister and he said, and I quote the pertinent parts:

December 1, as you are aware, is the first day on which seasonal benefits can be paid under the unemployment insurance law and I am sure most of the fishermen who, through no fault of their own, cannot qualify for seasonal benefits will be greatly disappointed that no decision has yet been announced by the government about the suggestion for emergency "crop failure" benefits I made in my letter.

I am sure you realize, as I know the Minister of Fisheries who has been in Newfoundland does, that the need is urgent and that many fishermen have already been obliged to accept relief.

The method of meeting the problem suggested in my letter would be simple to administer and fair to the fishermen, but if the method is not acceptable to the government, I strongly urge that action be taken in some other way to meet this pressing need.

[Mr. Granger.]

The Minister of Labour replied:

You may rest assured that every possible action will be taken to assist the Newfoundland fishermen.

I must say that I really believed assistance to the fishermen would be forthcoming. But as time went on faith began to wane. On January 8 I wired a query to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) and received the following reply:

You are aware community stage program proceeding several localities. In addition department public works has extensive winter work program in many areas. Fishermen also eligible work on federal-provincial road programs sponsored by northern affairs and national resources. All these projects will assist fishermen through work provided and lasting benefit of facilities.

This made me fear that no effective assistance would be forthcoming, except in a few places where it may be possible to get ahead with community stages during the winter. However, on Friday, January 16, I was encouraged again when the Prime Minister replied to the following question of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, as reported at page 16 of Hansard:

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is going to take any action to relieve the distress caused by the failure of the cod fishery in Newfoundland, about which he will recall I wrote him last October, and which he advised me the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Fisheries were looking into urgently?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is still applicable.

However, on Tuesday, January 20, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked the Minister of Labour the following question:

I have a supplementary question, and it is this. Did I understand the minister to say consideration is no longer being given to a reduction in the number of stamps required by fishermen for unemployment insurance?

The answer was:

Mr. Starr: I said, sir, no consideration is being given to reducing the 15 stamps that are required for seasonal benefits at the moment, and that includes everyone.

I share the feeling that fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador have been wronged by neglect. There was no similar attitude on the part of the government toward the prairie farmers last summer. Certainly, a Canadian fisherman deserves the same assistance as a Canadian farmer. I did not know that there was a double standard for Canadians.

I have quoted heavily from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, and while on this subject I should like to make this comment. The Minister of Labour asked a day or so ago what he did when he was in the government. I would like to reply that when he was a Liberal cabinet minister he obtained unemployment insurance for fishermen. It was also said that his suggestion contained in his letter of October 21 to the Prime Minister came late. I can only say that it was made six days before the program of aid to municipalities was announced.

In fairness, I do not want to belittle what has been done by the federal government and in particular I would like to mention the program of community stage construction. Community stages will fill a real need. It has been experienced in the past that where small landing wharves were built in fishing settlements the wharf tended to be the focal point for fishing activities. So important did they become for the handling of nets and the processing of fish that when, as occasionally happens, one of these installations is wrecked by storm the fishery in that place is threatened.

The community stage is designed to fill this need even more efficiently. It has been increasingly expensive and difficult to get material for fishing premises and the community stage will provide much improved facilities for handling fish. It is an important evolutionary step and should contribute substantially to the preservation and improvement of the fisheries. I would also like to express my appreciation to the Minister of Fisheries for the interest he has taken in the bait situation in Newfoundland.

I have talked at length on what was needed and was not done. At this eleventh hour I want to appeal again to the government to reconsider their decision regarding special assistance to fishermen who, through no fault of their own, have not enough stamps to qualify for unemployment insurance. There are approximately 17,320 fishermen in Newfoundland and 880 in Labrador, a total of 18,200. The number of claimants for unemployment insurance on December 31, 1958, was 5,617, less than one-third. Fishermen are in need, are on relief, are unable to maintain their property. Last fall through personal visits I saw whole communities in a state of hopelessness and want. Independent people should not be condemned to relief because a freak of nature has ruined their harvest. Many fishermen will not be able to prepare properly for the fishery this spring. They will not have money to spend on necessary repairs to gear and boats. Direct assistance is needed and additional work provided during the spring months of April and May so that the fishermen of Newfoundland may be prepared for the coming voyage which I am sure we all hope will be a bountiful one.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks I want to take this opportunity to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) on their most excellent speeches in moving and seconding the address. I hope that one or two prominent front bench Liberals listened intently to the remarks of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet because they could learn a lesson from him. May I also join with other hon. members in extending my congratulations to the newly elected members of this house.

There are many points in the speech from the throne that could be discussed but I should like to mention one of them at the moment. I refer to freight rates. For my people, the people of the province of Nova Scotia generally and, indeed, for those in all the maritime provinces, one of the most encouraging aspects of the speech from the throne is that it discloses that the government will recommend action to alleviate the discriminatory effects of the recent 17 per cent horizontal increase in freight rates. Even more encouraging is the pledge of the government made in December to institute a full study of the entire transportation problem. We in the maritimes regard this investigation as a hopeful sign that the inequities in the freight rate structure, which have contributed in no small measure to the fact that our provinces have not marched with the quick step of the other provinces in industrial progress, may finally be removed.

Our whole economy revolves around our ability to get our natural resource products to the rich central Canadian market. Located as we are on the eastern extremity of the nation and separated by hundreds of miles, we have to rely on efficient transportation at a price which will permit us to produce and give us a fair return. With the rapidly rising increases in the cost of transportation we are finding it increasingly difficult to progress. The high cost of freight has prevented us from getting a better share of markets for coal and steel produced in Nova Scotia.

At this very moment Nova Scotians are pondering another stark reminder that it costs us too much to get our goods to market. I am referring to two things. The first is the announcement by A. V. Roe of Canada Limited that its subsidiary firm, Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, will have to lay off 4,000 men from its coal mines for at least a month because of lack of orders, plus another 500 construction workers. The second is the decision of the A. V. Roe Company not to expand its steel making facilities in Sydney but instead to invest $20 million on a cold rolling mill near Montreal. One of the reasons is plain and simple. It is high transportation costs. We need government action to help to alleviate these problems but by the same token I feel that we should have the utmost co-operation from those who are involved in our industrial life. I repeat that we should have the utmost co-operation from those who are involved in our industrial life.

I stated on Tuesday last that to my mind the actions of the A. V. Roe Company since acquiring control of Dosco last year were questionable, and at this time I should like to elaborate on why I made a statement of that nature and why I should have these convictions. I feel that there are many thousands like me in Nova Scotia who hold the same convictions because of the action, or should I say lack of action, on the part of the new controllers of our destiny. There are 150,000 people in Nova Scotia dependent on this great corporation even for their very livelihood. It came to Nova Scotia with the deed of ownership to Dosco securely tucked in its pocket, with promises and assurances of better days. There were fears expressed in many quarters that the coal, steel, shipbuilding and railway car manufacturing industries would be carted off to the central provinces as has happened before under new ownership in the case of so many of our industries. But Avro spokesmen said that this was an unwarranted fear. In one of his official press releases Avro president Crawford Gordon said:

> We have but one aim, to expand this Canadian enterprise so that it will be stronger, more enduring and more profitable to its shareholders and employees and, at the same time, contribute something strong, solid and substantial to the development of the Atlantic provinces and their people.

These are very fine words. This statement prompted Nova Scotia premier Robert L. Stanfield, after Avro's campaign for Dosco control had succeeded, to state:

> You have stated your confidence in this area and your intention to develop Dosco as a maritime enterprise. We accept your assurances and we look forward to a happy association which will be beneficial to us and profitable to you. You realize, I am sure, that Dosco is not just an industry in the ordinary sense; it is the staff of life for many communities in Nova Scotia. It is something much more than just a matter of dollars and cents. I am sure that in assuming control of Dosco you have accepted in full the major responsibilities that go with that control.

But what have we found since that time? Despite its avowed policy of getting out and selling coal, enforced holidays were imposed on our miners last year. This came after a series of denials by company officials that any cut-backs would be necessary. The miners were asked to boost their production. This they did. What did they get in reward? Lay-offs. Is it not a strange coincidence that these lay-offs should occur right in the midst of the wage negotiations now going on?

At this point I should like to refer to the co-operation that has come from the coal miners of Nova Scotia. There has not been one strike in the coal mining fields of Nova Scotia since 1947. As I have said, the coal miners have co-operated in every way possible. They have maintained a hold-the-line policy as far as wages are concerned. They have certainly done their part.

To return to the corporation, despite its fervent pledge to contribute something strong, solid and substantial to the development of the Atlantic provinces and their people, Avro took a decision to erect a $20 million steel plant outside Montreal. What about its Sydney steel plant? We are told that it will benefit in that it will be asked to supply the raw steel for the finishing plant in Montreal. But will the Sydney plant be called upon to supply that raw steel or will it be acquired from other steel mills closer to the plant at Montreal? I have reason to believe it will be some time after the Montreal mill is opened, a long time at that, before Sydney's plant will supply the new gigantic mill in Montreal.

Now we are faced with another major lay-off in our coal industry. This seems to Nova Scotians to be out of keeping with the professed determination of Avro to contribute something strong, solid and substantial to the development of the Atlantic provinces and their people.

Mr. Speaker, Avro spokesmen have been dealing Nova Scotians a continuous hand of conflicting statements. "We want to progress", they say, and then they lay off our workers. "We will not do anything to hurt the maritime economy", they say, and then they shift the heart of their steel making industry from Sydney to Montreal. Nova Scotians have begun to hold new fears and doubts about the intentions of the Avro organization. The only expansion proposed by this company is a cold rolling mill near Montreal.

In addition to this, a series of company statements issued in recent months make it apparent that the company entertains long-range plans for a basic steel plant on adjacent property. If this comes to pass, then the future of Sydney as a major steel production centre will not be bright. When blast furnaces join the Montreal units to provide fully integrated operations in central Canada, what will happen to Sydney?

The Avro organization was born and has been nurtured on government contracts. The company has grown as a result of these government orders to become one of the giants of Canadian industry. Is it unreasonable, then, to expect that such a company should be among the first to gear its productive power to the wishes of the government and the public? Is it unreasonable to ask Avro to develop maritime economy and contribute towards the decentralization of industry?

It is my view, and one that is shared by many Nova Scotians, that the government has a right to expect co-operation from Avro and other companies that have thrived on government work. Since this government took office in 1957, it has offered material assistance to Avro and its subsidiary, Dosco. On August 22, 1957, additional assistance over and above the subvention provided on movements of all Nova Scotia coal, was authorized on shipments of coal from the Springhill collieries. On January 15, 1958, the House of Commons passed the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act. Amongst other things, this act authorized the payment by the government of Canada of a subvention on coal mined in eastern Canada and used in the four Atlantic provinces in the production of electric power by steam driven generators. This was to help stabilize and ultimately increase the market for coal.

Again on February 18, 1958, the cabinet issued a directive to government departments that Canadian coal be used in all government coal-burning installations where the laid-down cost of such coal did not exceed the competitive cost of other coals by more than 20 per cent. Again on April 14, 1958, the subvention policy was revamped raising the amount of government assistance on transportation of Nova Scotia coal to Ontario and western Quebec from 45 per cent of freight rates to 60 per cent; offers were made to the company of assistance of $4 per ton on movements of coal from Nova Scotia to Europe, and on the same day, the special assistance to the Springhill mines was extended to March 31, 1959. Of course, this does not apply to Springhill mines at this time because of the disaster that occurred there.

I join with my colleague, the member for Cumberland, in extending to those brave people my sincere sympathy. Mere words of mine, in fact mere words of anyone are not any use to people who have gone through what these people have gone through. Having worked in the coal mines myself, and having come through a gas explosion in a coal mine, I know in a very small, and very minute way what some of these men have gone through.

On June 10, 1958, an order in council was approved granting an additional 55 cents per ton subvention assistance to permit the sale of approximately 175,000 tons of Nova Scotia coal in Belleville, Ontario. Again, on June 27, 1958, the federal government broadened the base of its subvention payment schedule so as to include amongst the cost audit items to be determined by the comptroller of the treasury the amount of the insurance, stockpile and interest charges on excess coal stockpiled in 1958. It has been estimated the additional cost will be $500,000. The provincial government of Nova Scotia assisted in this measure by agreeing to contribute one-fifth of the cost, and the federal government will contribute the balance.

Another indication of assistance is the fact that on August 18, 1958 parliament accepted a government measure granting the Dominion Coal Company a five-year recess in payment of a $5,198,242 loan which it received from the federal government to assist in the cost of mechanization of the mines. I understand that the federal cabinet now has under consideration the recommendations of the dominion coal board concerning the industry's application, made in December, for increased subventions which, it is claimed, will be needed to penetrate the heavy consuming Ontario power production market. I mentioned December as the time when these submissions were made, in order to make it clear, it was not three months ago as was noted in the Halifax newspaper recently in a statement made by a former member of the dominion coal board. I feel that in making a statement of that nature he took advantage of a situation such as this, when people are going to suffer, to make a statement for political purposes. However, I could be wrong. He is only the past president of the provincial Liberal association.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is hardly worthy of the rest of your very good speech.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I shall ignore that comment, as I usually have to do in so far as comments by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) are concerned. I should like him to go back to his newspaper if he does not wish to listen to me.

It is my hope, and certainly the hope of all Nova Scotians—the hon. member may not even be interested in our coal miners, so it might be better if he did read his newspaper —that the government will see its way clear to providing, within the framework of national and international policies, favourable action on the application in order to prevent further lay-offs and possibly reduce the length of the lay-off currently proposed by the company. I urge this sincerely and wholeheartedly, although I do know that in the short period this government has been in power it has certainly done its part.

In conclusion, I should like to refer to the statement of Sir Thomas Sopwith, chairman of the Hawker Siddeley group which controls Avro, made at the annual meeting. I quote:

> One final word on Canada. Your interests there are in good hands, with the company being well and efficiently managed by a team of energetic young and capable Canadians. The future of Canada is bright and glowing with promise. Because of the spread and the diversification of our holdings in Canada, it is our belief, that your company is well placed to grow and to prosper with Canada itself.

Does this mean that we in the maritimes will share in this growth and prosperity to which he refers, or does it mean more closed mines and possibly a closed steel plant? Does this mean a new series of conflicting statements which are damaging to the morale of the people who live in the maritimes? Does this mean that their boasting in a recent issue of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald about their assets really indicates that Dosco is going bankrupt? Does this mean that the company will encourage its salesmen to get out and try to sell more coal, or does it mean we will be importing American coal into the maritimes to the very back door of our own coal mines? Does it mean, perhaps, that the proposed march on Ottawa by the coal miners of Nova Scotia should be diverted to the company's head office in Montreal or even to London—although I thought we were no longer colonials? Does this mean that despite the utmost government co-operation which has been forthcoming Avro will continue to mislead many breadwinners who are dependent on the company for a livelihood? Does it mean that, at long last, the people of Nova Scotia can rely on the word of this gigantic corporation and place their faith in it? We must remember that faith without works is dead. We have not seen much evidence of the work, so it is rather difficult for the people of the maritimes to have faith.

This gigantic corporation has the future destiny of Nova Scotians in the palm of its hand. It is gigantic. It appears that the more gigantic a corporation becomes, the more ruthless it can be. I am sure that all members in this house and all Canadians who contribute through taxation to the development of industry are awaiting the answers to these and many other questions.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder whether the hon. member who has just resumed his seat would permit a question?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes.

Mr. Fisher: Has he brought his views on this matter to bear upon the government as to the need for government intervention with this particular company?

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria.)]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Intervention in which way?

Mr. Fisher: That is what I want to ask; what sort of intervention?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes. My views have been brought before the government.

Mr. Fisher: If I might just put another question to the hon. member, I should like to know whether he is aware of the fact that the people of the Canadian lakehead share exactly the same views as those entertained by the maritime people about A. V. Roe Limited.

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, it being nearly six o'clock, may I be allowed to adjourn the debate?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. Go ahead.

Mr. Green: Go ahead.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I too should like to add my congratulations to those which have been expressed to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I was particularly proud of my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher, for his address on agriculture. It certainly should show this house that we in the west have an extremely able spokesman for agriculture.

I should also like to congratulate the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet on his extremely able address on national unity particularly. I was greatly interested in listening to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) the other day when he made some statements with regard to the Liberal party and national unity. I do not know whether he will fool anybody in eastern Canada with that kind of talk but we in the west have realized for the last 20 years how the Liberal party went about national unity. They split us into so many pieces that we could not possibly have an effective voice in the working of this country. As I have said, my colleague, in moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne, made some pertinent remarks with regard to the agricultural situation in western Canada particularly. I should just like to make some comment in that regard.

We all know that for the first time we have an energetic government working to solve the problems of agriculture. For the first time we have a government which has recognized that agriculture has problems. That is the first important step. As you listened to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) in today's debate, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will have realized two major things. The first is that this government has gone a long way in implementing its national policies for agriculture. The second thing is that the Liberal party is completely barren of any policy on agriculture. We in western Canada who are dependent upon our trade and our export markets were highly pleased with the trip of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to the commonwealth countries and to the other nations of this world. Surely we have no better salesman in all of Canada than the Prime Minister.

I should like to add a word of thanks to the Minister of Agriculture for several things which have improved the lot of the small farmer in my constituency. First of all, the acreage payments were indeed a boon to these small farmers and meant a great deal. The change in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act has made it possible, for the first time in 25 years, for those farmers in my constituency at least to qualify under these regulations.

Further, I should like to thank him for what he has done to have Johne's disease or paratuberculosis in cattle included in the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, as I mentioned in a speech in the house last year.

The new agricultural subjects which the speech from the throne indicates will be brought forward in legislation at this session include the crop insurance program and the new credit arrangement for farmers. These are things which the farmers have been working for over the years. Under the previous regime nothing was done. The farmers were told, "We are not worried about you. We have you all split up amongst a bunch of splinter parties. You have not any effective voice. We are not even going to the bother of doing anything about it"; and they did not do so.

We are also happy in western Canada, as I am sure are people in all of Canada, that this government is going to bring forward a conservation program. Conservation is an important thing. It is important to conserve our land because that is our greatest natural resource. We must look after it.

An hon. Member: What about the march on Ottawa?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): One of my friends has asked me about the march on Ottawa. I should like to make a comment on that march. I am not at all worried about the farmers in my constituency not having any faith in me as to whether or not I will bring their problems to the attention of this house. I would suggest sincerely to the leaders of the farm unions in all of the prairie provinces that they be extremely careful that they do not get entangled in what has become a political march or in what some people would like to make a political march. The fact that they do not have the backing of the majority of the farmers in western Canada was shown on March 31 and will be shown again at the next election.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. The hon. member may now call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing orders.

APPENDIX

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY MEMBERS OF THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT

EXTRACT FROM CONGRESSIONAL RECORD OF JANUARY 9, 1959

Mr. Aiken: Mr. President, many of us have been looking forward to this day with great pleasure. Senators will recall that on August 8, 1958, the Senate adopted Senate Resolution 359 reading as follows:

> Resolved, that the Senate committee on foreign relations shall establish a subcommittee for the purpose of exploring, with appropriate officials of the government of the United States and with members of the Canadian parliament, the desirability and feasibility of increased systematic discussion between legislators of the two countries on problems of common concern.

I shall read two sentences from the committee report of Senate Resolution 359 to indicate the motivation behind the resolution:

> It was the feeling of the committee on foreign relations that an attempt should be undertaken to strengthen the bonds between the United States and its great neighbor, the commonwealth of Canada. In these critical times, it is of crucial importance that the friendship and understanding between our nations be deepened in every possible way.

Mr. President, this Senate resolution did not simply happen. For some years, members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs have been keenly aware of the special relationship between the United States and Canada and the useful results which might flow from increased contact between legislators of the two countries. In May, 1957 a report by Representative Frank M. Coffin and Representative Brooks Hays suggested that some form of parliamentary consultation between the two countries be established. In a speech at Wesleyan University on June 8, 1958, Prime Minister Diefenbaker referred to this concept. The subject was further discussed last July by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States.

Pursuant to Senate Resolution 359, I was privileged to be named by Chairman Green of the Committee on Foreign Relations to be the chairman of a liaison committee. My colleagues on that committee are Senators Mansfield, Capehart, and Morse. Last September I went to Ottawa where I was joined by Senator Capehart and we had a preliminary discussion with members of the Canadian parliament, some of whom are here today. Later in September, Representative Brooks Hays and Representative Frank M. Coffin held similar discussions in Canada. As a result of these discussions it was determined that a delegation of members of the Canadian parliament would come to Washington at this time. Acting Chairman Morgan of the House Foreign Affairs Committee has appointed a liaison committee composed of Representative Edna F. Kelly, chairman, and Representatives Frank Coffin, Walter H. Judd, and Chester E. Merrow.

Mr. President, this is in brief the background of the introduction which I am about to make. A delegation of most distinguished members of the Canadian parliament is now with us to continue the consultations begun in Canada last fall. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the record at this point in my remarks certain biographic information about the Canadian delegation.

Mr. President, it is indeed a high privilege to present to this body the Speaker of the Senate of Canada, the Hon. Mark Drouin. [Applause, Senators rising.]

Mr. President, it is also a high privilege to present to the Senate the Speaker of the House of Commons of Canada, the Hon. Roland Michener. [Applause, Senators rising.]

Speaker Drouin is accompanied by two of his colleagues, the Hon. Sydney John Smith and the Hon. William R. Brunt. [Applause, Senators rising.]

Speaker Michener of the House of Commons is accompanied by five of his colleagues, the Hon. Lionel Chevrier, the hon. Hazen Argue, the hon. William L. Houck, the hon. Richard D. Thrasher, and the hon. Erik Nielsen. [Applause, Senators rising.]

Mr. President, if the rules of the Senate permitted it, I would call attention to the fact that the wives of seven members of the Canadian delegation and the daughter of one member are in the gallery. [Applause.]

Mr. President, I know that other members of the Senate wish to pay their respects to our distinguished guests. I am happy to yield at this time for that purpose; and after they leave the floor, they will go to the office of the Vice President, where other Senators may meet them.

Mr. Capehart: Mr. President——

Mr. Johnson of Texas: Mr. President, before I yield to my delightful friend, the Senator from Indiana, I wish to commend the Senator from Vermont for bringing into the chamber these very able and distinguished Canadian neighbors of ours. There is no nation for which we have more love or affection, and we are pleased beyond compare that they are here to visit with us. I look forward with great anticipation to meeting them in the office of the Vice President, and listening and learning.

I yield now to my friend, the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. Capehart: Mr. President, last fall I had the pleasure and the good fortune of visiting with these gentlemen in Ottawa, along with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Aiken]. I urge all other members of this body and also all members of the House of Representatives to visit with these distinguished members of the Canadian parliament. I do not know how these gentlemen could have been any nicer to us than they were. If my colleagues want to encounter real hospitality and real friendship, I suggest that they visit Canada and these gentlemen.

I say to our distinguished guests that we in the United States need their co-operation and support, and we appreciate their co-operation and support. I hope we can have many meetings similar to the ones Senator Aiken and I enjoyed with them in Ottawa; and I hope that they and all other members of their parliament will visit us here.

Mr. Dirksen: Mr. President——

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. Dirksen: Mr. President, understanding and friendship are a two-way street. Out of friendship comes understanding, and out of understanding comes friendship; and of course, that process makes our relationship so pleasant and makes understanding so very easy.

Of course, our two countries have the common experience of Anglo-Saxon background and a common language; and out of that has come, over a long period of time, the felicity which makes you call us your neighbor, and makes us call you our neighbor.

I am glad you are here; and I believe that from parliamentary meetings such as this one and the one I enjoyed attending in Europe so recently, there comes better understanding which advances the whole cause of progress. So I am delighted to see you here.

Mr. Langer: Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. Langer: Mr. President, I wish to say to our distinguished guests and friends that I am their neighbor; I live in North Dakota. I have had many delightful experiences in meeting citizens of Canada who have visited North Dakota.

Of course, I, in turn, like to visit Canada, both to enjoy my experiences there and meetings with its fine citizens and to enjoy the fishing. In addition we have the benefit of the great Peace Garden.

I want to compliment our distinguished visitors for the fine way their government treated the farmers of Canada after World War I. Within a year Canada cancelled every seed and feed loan. But in North Dakota alone there were 34,000 farmers; and today our government still is charging 4,000 of them 6 per cent interest a year, and the result is that the interest amounts to a great deal more than the principal.

So when we meet in the Peace Garden and when our farmers join your farmers in celebrating, our farmers are very much distressed to find that they have not received from their government the fine treatment that your government has given to the farmers of Canada.

I join my colleagues in bidding you welcome. It is most delightful and indeed a very great pleasure to see you here.

Mr. Morse: Mr. President——

Mr. Johnson of Texas: Mr. President, I yield to my distinguished friend, the Senator from Oregon, who is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. Morse: Mr. President, I wish to say to our Canadian friends that I have the privilege of serving under the leadership of Senator Aiken, who is chairman of our so-called Canadian subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee, of which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Capehart] is also a member; and then I have the privilege of having them serve with me in my capacity as chairman of the subcommittee on Latin-American Affairs.

The message I would leave with our distinguished Canadian brothers is that in my opinion we have a comity of interest and obligations in respect to Latin America. I have said at meetings of the Foreign Relations Committee, and I wish to say now to our distinguished guests, that in my judgment Canada and the United States should proceed as brothers in the attempt to solve the relationships with Latin America, to the end that they may be improved and that there will be a better understanding throughout Latin America in regard to her two northern neighbors.

My conversations with members of the Canadian parliament in the past lead me to believe that you gentlemen share that point of view. Therefore, in my capacity as a member of Senator Aiken's subcommittee and as chairman of the Latin-American subcommittee, I invite you to join with us in a partnership arrangement, to the end that we may strengthen the policies toward Latin America on the part of both Canada and the United States.

Welcome to Canadians by U.S. Senators

Mr. Javits: Mr. President——

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to my friend, the Senator from New York.

Mr. Javits: Mr. President, I, too, would like to join my distinguished colleagues in a word of welcome to our dear friends, these distinguished members of the parliament of Canada. I represent in part the state of New York, a state with which they have many important relationships, both in the economic field, in social terms, and in governmental matters. I hazard the guess that they visit my state perhaps more than any other state in our nation.

Of course Canadians are always very welcome in New York, as they know. We count them as brothers, and we mean that very literally. Furthermore, the state of New York prides itself on its economic relations with Canada. Canada joins us in connection with the St. Lawrence Seaway and in connection with the use of the waters of the Niagara river and its tremendous power development and the great community of interest that exists between us.

I think I speak advisedly when I say that today our new Governor, Nelson Rockefeller, has very close to his heart the entire matter of United States-Canadian relations, particularly in terms of the interests of our own state; and as these gentlemen have experienced with our governors prior to Governor Rockefeller, I believe they will find a welcome hand, a warm understanding, and a spirit of great co-operation added to a spirit of new enterprise in terms of the government of the state of New York. I know I certainly bespeak the views of my colleague from New York, who does not happen to be on the floor at the moment.

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President——

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to my friend from Montana.

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues in welcoming our neighbors from across the border, members of the parliament of Canada.

Because I represent, in part, the state which has perhaps the closest contact with the most Canadian provinces, since Montana borders on British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan, and because I know something about the many problems which sometimes cause us trouble and difficulty, but never divide us, I am delighted that these members of the Canadian parliament are here to visit with us, to discuss these difficulties, and to arrive at common understandings.

I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. Aiken] for taking the initiative in the establishment of this interparliamentary group, so to speak, and I wish to point out that he got the idea from Premier Diefenbaker, who, while visiting Trinity College, in Connecticut, made a speech to the effect that a liaison group of this kind would be in the best possible interest of both countries.

So I am delighted that these gentlemen are here. I hope this meeting is only the beginning of many similar meetings in the future; and I know that from them will come a better understanding, a better feeling, and an accentuation of the good will which has marked the relationships between our two countries, not only since both of our countries became independent, but even before then.

Mr. Humphrey: Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to my friend, the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. Humphrey: Mr. President, I wish to join my colleagues today in extending the warm hand of friendship and welcome to these distinguished members of the parliament of Canada.

It is my privilege to represent, in part, in this body the great state of Minnesota. Of course, Minnesota joins territorially and geographically the great country of Canada; and our relationships are cordial, friendly, and, indeed, helpful to both areas.

Likewise, we are at the end of the great St. Lawrence seaway. So that our relationships in the area of commerce with Canada are closer than ever. Many people from Minneapolis and St. Paul travel to Winnipeg, Canada, and many persons from Winnipeg come to the Twin Cities.

When I was mayor of Minneapolis, I visited Winnipeg, and the mayor of Winnipeg came to our area. Those relationships are very happy memories. But I believe now, as has been suggested today, we would do well to talk of the future, and resolve to solve our problems as good friends do, respecting the rights of each other, and making such accommodations as will provide for unity through understanding and mutual respect.

I join with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Aiken], and wish to commend him upon his worthy endeavors and leadership in establishing, on our part, this very fine example of co-operation between two great countries. I am looking forward to the coming days when we can be together again.

Mr. Case of South Dakota: Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. Case of South Dakota: I think probably I am one of the very few members of the U.S. Senate who found it convenient and desirable to go home last August by way of Canada. I live in South Dakota, but I went to New England, and, from lake Champlain, went to Canada. I visited Ottawa, and saw the government house, and some of the very fine and outstanding buildings there. In fact, it was my thought at the time that Ottawa was splendidly equipped to be the scene of international conferences and international groups, as it has been in the past. I am sure it will be in the future.

From there I went north, to Algonquin provincial park. I may say to my colleague from North Dakota that I saw a shorthorn cow which I thought was the largest cow I had ever seen. [Laughter.]

I have a picture of it. I am exhibiting it to my friends in South Dakota and saying, "Take a look at that, and do your best." We spent a few days at Huntsville, in the beautiful lake country of that area. It is magnificent. I was proud that it was a part of a country that is our friend, Canada.

You are most welcome here. I hope some of you will visit us in South Dakota.

Mr. Yarborough: Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to my colleague.

Mr. Yarborough: Mr. President, as one of the representatives in the Senate from the state of Texas and as a member of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, I want to join in these words of welcome to our friends, the members of the Canadian parliament with us in the Senate today. The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has no jurisdiction over legislation dealing with foreign relations but does have jurisdiction over laws relating to foreign commerce.

In the last session we had the privilege of passing two bills which furthered commerce between Canada and the United States. One of those bills extended the time during which a Canadian-owned steamship line may serve the 49th state by furnishing service between Alaska and the other 48 states. I think it is an anomaly that the only regular steamship service between Alaska and the other 48 states is furnished by a Canadian steamship line.

Many citizens from my state have been to Alaska. The only way they can get to Alaska overland is by going through Canada over the Alcan highway. The only transportation ties between our old 48 states and the new 49th state by land or water have been by Canadian aid, either through using Canadian steamship service, or overland, across Canada itself. Such transportation bridge between our newest state, Alaska, and the older 48 states across the Dominion of Canada, serve to strengthen the ties of commerce and bonds of friendship that link our two nations and peoples.

In the last session of the Congress there also was passed a bill which permitted foreign-owned vessels—British and Canadian owned barges primarily—to use the inland waterways of the United States. Such laws deal with commerce, and not with treaties. They deal with people-to-people relations, further promoting the commercial relations of our two nations.

There is another phase of this subject in which our people are directly interested, and that is gas and oil lines from the great reserves in Canada to markets in the United States. More gas and oil pipelines have been projected.

Our friends will recall that during the dark days of World War II our war effort was crippled by the fact that so many ships were sunk by German submarines. The enemy at that time had only about one-eighth the number of submarines now possessed by countries behind the Iron Curtain.

In the event another such tragedy should befall us, the oil and gas pipelines which link these energy reserves with the industrial centres of our two nations would provide the means of furnishing fuel and energy to both of our countries, to help us survive in any assault which might possibly be made against us.

We want our Canadian friends to know we are appreciative of their co-operation. You have permitted the building of the D.E.W. line, the radar observation chain, in your northern territories, so that the first warning of attack on the United States or Canada will come from your territory. We are grateful to you for the great friendship and co-operation of your people in these endeavors.

I am glad to help welcome you to the floor of the U.S. Senate.

Mr. Cotton: Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. Cotton: As a representative of a state, New Hampshire, which is a neighbor of Canada, on behalf of Senator Bridges and myself I want to express my sincere sympathy for your having had to listen to me and to other Senators in bidding you welcome.

Mr. Lausche: Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Welcome to Canadians by U.S. Senators

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. Lausche: As the senior Senator from the state of Ohio, which is in physical contact with Canada except for lake Erie, I wish to extend a welcome to you in your visit to the United States. I believe I speak the will of the people of Ohio when I say to you we have recognized the mutual interdependence which exists between Canada and the United States.

I feel positive that the people of Ohio recognize that the things which hurt Canada will eventually hurt Ohio. We believe that as Canada grows stronger, the United States will grow stronger. We believe that if we grow weak, Canada will inevitably grow weak. We are neighbors standing shoulder to shoulder, lifted and dropped by every good thing or every bad thing that affects us.

As a member of the Senate, I should like to say to you that in my approach to my responsibilities with respect to Canada, I will constantly have in mind that anything imprudent which I did, prejudicially affecting your dominion, inevitably will affect my nation. I think I speak the thinking and the will of the citizens of Ohio when I deliver that message to you.

Mr. Wiley: Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. Wiley: My friends from Canada, as a representative of a state bordering on lake Superior, a large part of which provides the southern line of Canada, and speaking also on behalf of the Senator who now occupies the Chair, the junior Senator from the state of Wisconsin [Mr. Proxmire], I bid you welcome. It is good to see some old acquaintances in this delegation, friends I made in connection with meetings of those interested in the St. Lawrence development. One I knew when attending sessions of the United Nations.

Canada has been of interest to me from the days when I was a boy and read the story of Evangeline. As I grew into manhood, I visited the cities of Quebec and Montreal. I travelled through the lake country and across the continent on the Canadian Pacific, up to Lake Louise and Banff, and on to the west coast. It seemed to me that God Almighty had created this continent to be one geographically, to be one in its political approaches, although our governments were separate as nations, one in the religious approach of our people, and one in the economic approach to domestic and world problems.

I think it is a wonderful thing, gentlemen, that this exchange of members of parliamentary bodies has gotten underway to such a point that groups such as yours, who really are the ambassadors of good thinking and good living, visit their neighbors. It makes for the constructive building up of relationships in every direction. We welcome you, and may you begin today to have the time of your lives in the good old U.S.A.

Mr. Thurmond: Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. Thurmond: I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. President, since I come from one of the states of the far south, South Carolina, I take this opportunity to extend the glad hand of welcome to these distinguished gentleman from the far north, from the great republic of Canada.

Mr. Saltonstall: Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. Johnson of Texas: I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. Saltonstall: I may say to you gentleman from Canada that I come from Massachusetts. I was in Ottawa when the idea was first fostered of the exchange of greetings between members of the parliament of Canada and ourselves. As a Massachusetts Senator, knowing that many good Canadians are in Massachusetts and that they generally vote Republican, I am very glad to see you here.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. President, I wish to thank the majority leader, the Senator from Texas, for yielding the time for the paying of tributes by the members of our body to our Canadian friends who are visiting us today. I think this is a great day for the United States and for Canada. As I stated earlier, our friends will be in the Vice President's room for a short time, where they will be glad to meet any members of the Senate. I hope all those who have not spoken, at least, as well as all those who have spoken, will meet our friends personally.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, January 26, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

IMMIGRATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RIGHT OF APPEAL OF DEPORTATION ORDER

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-20, to amend the Immigration Act (jurisdiction of courts).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Speaker, by section 39 of the Immigration Act an appeal against a deportation order is restricted to Canadian citizens and to those domiciled in Canada only. The purpose of this bill is to make the right of that appeal available to everyone.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL CAPITAL PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can explain to the house why the appointments to the national capital commission were not announced in the house, as indicated by him on January 16 would be done, with an explanation for the delay. I would like to ask him also whether he can explain why neither the mayor of Ottawa, the mayor of Hull, nor any representative of either corporation has been appointed to this commission.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, announcements such as these are not ordinarily made in the house. There was no reason whatsoever for not making them here.

So far as the latter part of the question is concerned, it was felt that in view of the fact that this commission represents the nation as a whole, the two municipalities in question should not be directly represented by their respective mayors.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—SUGGESTED INTERVENTION OF MINISTER IN LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister now say whether he is prepared, because of the continuation of the producers strike in Montreal, to invite the parties to the strike into his office to see whether the strike may not be settled? I ask the question, Mr. Speaker, particularly because of the action of the C.B.C. management in hiring 100 private police, according to newspaper reports.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I met with the representatives of the C.C.C.L. and one representative of the producers on Friday afternoon. No other action is contemplated at the moment.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a supplementary question. Does this answer to the hon. member's question mean that notwithstanding section 56(1) of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, the minister still proposes to take no action?

Mr. Starr: No, it does not.

Mr. Chevrier: May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the government still refuses to intervene in the dispute which is paralysing the French network of the C.B.C., and since the corporation is ultimately responsible to parliament, will the Prime Minister take the necessary steps to convene immediately the special committee on broadcasting for the purpose of hearing the parties to the dispute?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question, of course, at this time is hypothetical. Any question of convening a meeting of a committee would, of course, have to await the termination of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to ask this additional question. Does the Prime Minister not consider that by virtue of the rules of the house the government may interrupt the debate at any time with the unanimous consent of the house to consider a matter of this kind?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any committee that was ever set up before the conclusion of the throne speech debate.

Mr. Pearson: That is no answer.

Mr. Argue: That is not any answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has happened often.

TRADE

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC—EXPORT OF CANADIAN FIGHTER PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is in a position to say whether Canadian jet or any other fighter planes have been or are being supplied to the Dominican Republic, and what steps are being taken to ensure that in any such export to the United States the planes will not reach a third country?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, no export permit for the planes in question has been issued.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Has application been made?

Mr. Churchill: Application was made and the export permit was not granted.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend know whether or not the planes have been sent to the United States and will be sent on vicariously?

Mr. Churchill: I have no knowledge that the planes have been sent to the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Was the application refused?

Mr. Churchill: The application was refused.

Mr. Harkness: He has already told you that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. McIlraith: No, he did not. He was very careful not to say that.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

SUGAR—PROSECUTION OF B.C. SUGAR REFINING COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Justice; I hope that notification reached him in sufficient time. Will the minister tell the house whether he has received any opinions from Mr. F. O. Meighan, Q.C., regarding the prosecution of the B.C. Sugar Refining Company Ltd. and, if so, will he report to the house on the present status of this case?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. gentleman for sending me notice. I have to advise him that the case is still under discussion with counsel, and I am therefore unable to report to the house at the present time.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

QUEBEC CITY—STATEMENT AS TO SALE OF IMMIGRATION HOSPITAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister received any offer from the provincial government of Quebec or other persons for the purchase of the immigration hospital in Quebec city?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No direct offer has been received. Consultations have been taking place, and when any further information is available I will be glad to inform the hon. member.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR RECONVENING TO DISCUSS FISCAL MATTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder whether I could ask the Prime Minister if he has received a letter from the premier of Saskatchewan asking the government to reconvene the federal-provincial conference to discuss fiscal matters, and if any reply has been made to any such letter?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from the premier of Saskatchewan, and I will ascertain the extent to which the requests in that letter are in accordance with the suggestions of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it the intention of the government to reconvene the federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: When any decision is made an announcement will be made.

HIGHWAYS

BOUCHERVILLE-CAUGHNAWAGA—REPORTED CONSTRUCTION OF FOUR LANE SCENIC ROAD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It was announced in Saturday's press that a four lane scenic highway is to be built between Boucherville and Caughnawaga on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river opposite Montreal, a large portion of which highway will pass over lands expropriated by the seaway authority. Is the minister aware of this, and did the province enter into an agreement with the seaway authority for the purpose of constructing a road on this land, which it was announced not long ago would be used for park and recreational purposes?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. We have heard of this matter through the officials of the highway department of the province of Quebec. There has been no formal approach made to us by the province of Quebec, and I would think this would be a matter for discussion between the interested parties, the province of Quebec, the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the municipalities concerned.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR SALARY ADJUSTMENTS AND COLLECTIVE BARGAINING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General arising out of a telegram I have received. Is the minister giving consideration to the requests of the federated association of letter carriers and the Canadian postal employees association for salary adjustments to compensate for the increase in the cost of living, as well as the request for collective bargaining rights for postal employees?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Matters of that kind, Mr. Speaker, are not the responsibility of the Postmaster General but of the civil service commission, whose functions include recommendations on salary levels and changes in all branches of the civil service, as well as working conditions.

TRANSPORT

GREAT LAKES PILOTAGE—REPORTED REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEW REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport relating to press reports resulting from the joint meeting of the dominion marine association and lake shippers, which indicate that pilotage regulations will not be approved by either the American or Canadian governments in time for the opening of the shipping season, and also indicate that foreign and British ships will not be required to use pilots on the lakes to a greater extent than they do now. I wonder if the minister would comment on these reports and give us some indication as to when legislation may be considered in this house, and whether it will be before the opening of the shipping season.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): This matter has been under intensive consideration by the Department of Transport, and as it is a very detailed and complicated matter it is not one which can be answered at such a time as this. I would suggest to the hon. member that the time to ask this question and get an answer would be when the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act are before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, I hope some time in the near future.

BRIDGES

PRINCE ALBERT—REPORTED FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO COST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the federal government agreed to pay a part of the cost of a new bridge in the city of Prince Albert? If so, is this payment being made because the river there is navigable, is the proposed bridge an interprovincial one or is this part of the second trans-Canada highway? What is the principle underlying the agreement?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I think this question should be directed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Regier: Would the other cabinet minister reply?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Will the hon. member repeat the first part of his question?

Mr. Regier: Has the government agreed to pay part of the cost of a new bridge in Prince Albert? I should like to know, if it has, on what principle the grant is going to be paid. Is this an interprovincial bridge, or is it part of a new highway, or what?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I made this clear in the standing committee last year, but I shall repeat the answer. The bridge at Prince Albert is part of the roads to resources program in co-operation with the province.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Friday, January 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. W. H. Jorgenson for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): At the hour of adjournment on Friday, Mr. Speaker, I had commented with regard to the so-called march on Ottawa. I should like to comment on that a little further by issuing a personal warning to the officers of the farm union in western Canada to be very careful about becoming entangled in this march, because it is becoming political in nature. I say that because in the last two years when the farm unions of western Canada have come to Ottawa they have been well received by this government, in marked contrast to the manner in which they had been received by previous governments. I would think that it would be extremely dangerous for them to upset the confidence which they have already gained.

To comment further with regard to the agricultural situation I should like to say something with regard to the production of hogs. We all know that we are facing a pork surplus. I would suggest to the Minister of Agriculture—and I hope he will give the matter consideration—that if there is necessity to lower the pork floor price, it should not be done but rather that commercial producers be excluded from that floor price. In other words I suggest that the support be made available to bona fide farmers only. I think this will do more than anything else to preserve our small farmers and family farms and to prevent vertical integration.

I should now like to make a few remarks with regard to the employment situation. First of all I should like to commend the Minister of Labour and the other members of the cabinet. Because of their actions and the actions of this government I can report to the house that unemployment in my constituency is at a minimum. It is less this winter than it has been in previous winters under the Liberal regime. This situation is a direct result of the action of this government, particularly with regard to housing. This has put to work this winter many hundreds of our loggers who would not otherwise have been employed, together with the action of the Minister of Labour in instituting the municipal work program. As you may have realized, Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta is a leading province in taking advantage of this program. I should like to say to the minister that this program is working out very well. I can say to him that he has put hundreds of men to work in my constituency alone.

I also commend the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources for the work program in Jasper park. It is getting some vitally needed work done. It is not a relief program; it is a program for the development of our resources.

With regard to some of the speeches which have been made in this house by members of the opposition, I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Edmonton Journal in the early part of November. It is entitled "Playing Politics with Misery". The first paragraph of that editorial gives some figures which are not now relevant, but it goes on to state as follows:

> The jobless totals include many unemployables, farmers and farmers' sons who register for other jobs as soon as harvest work is completed, persons changing jobs of their own volition, and so on.
> While farm employment was down, employment in several other lines was higher. Non-farm employment was virtually at the same level as last year although, of course, Canada's working population is greater. On the prairies, persons with jobs totalled 1,641,000 which was 17,000 more than last year but 6,000 fewer than September. Nevertheless, the picture of a substantial number of Canadians able and willing to work and unable to find jobs is not one to gloss over.
>
> What must be deplored is the eagerness in certain quarters to play politics with the misfortune of thousands of fellow-Canadians. Stanley Knowles, executive vice-president of the Canadian Labour Congress and former C.C.F. member for parliament, was swift to demand that Prime Minister Diefenbaker break off his world tour and rush home to deal with the unemployment situation. Liberal Leader Pearson's position was little more creditable when he tried to create the impression that government policies are responsible for the unemployment total. He knows perfectly well that such is not the case.
>
> Mr. Diefenbaker can do much more good by seeking markets for Canadian products abroad than by rushing home and calling a special session of parliament. However, his efforts and the efforts of everyone else in promoting trade will be worthless if industry and labour continue on their merry way pursuing policies that price our goods out of the world market and stoke the fires of inflation at home.
> Socialists who never overlook a chance to exploit dislocations in the economy have a private motive. Their burning ambition is to destroy our free enterprise system. Those who are deceived thereby should know that if free enterprise is destroyed everything else free, including personal liberty, will be destroyed with it. Inflation does not disturb a socialist; he sees it as a means to hasten the overthrow of our system.

I think that editorial neatly sums up some of the speeches we have heard in this house regarding unemployment and the situation in Canada. We do need to have more insight shown by our labour union leaders, and, probably one of the reasons they have not time to show this insight is that they are becoming involved in politics and because they, like the farmers union leaders, can no longer speak for the rank and file. That is the important thing they should be considering at this time.

We do not only have to consider labour when we are asking ourselves how well a job is done, but management also. We have too many large corporations whose management is topheavy. We ask labour to increase production when they want a raise in wages; we must also ask management to increase production before they receive an increase from investment. Indeed, if they are to maintain the benefits which they now receive they must show this country that they can produce more at less cost and with smaller executive power.

We have heard a great deal with regard to inflation. Inflation is not something which began last year or the year before. It has been going on for a long time, since even before the second world war. I think the basic explanation of inflation is that the cost of goods or services is above their actual value. As I say, this is nothing new; it has been going on for years, and one of the major causes of inflation, and particularly of its rapid increase over the past ten or twelve years, has been the extravagance and misspending of the former government. We in western Canada do not need to look at the printing bureau. We have our own printing bureaux in every one of our western constituencies. I have one in particular in Jasper park, where buildings were erected at fantastic prices and where roads were built at fantastic prices, roads which failed to stand up for even a limited period of years.

There is nothing wrong about government spending to create employment, and this will not cause inflation as long as we are diligent to ensure that value is received in return for this expenditure. This requires leadership, and I am sure the whole country agrees we now have that leadership under the present government.

I should like to make a few remarks with regard to the operation of the Canadian National Railways, because they are the vital link in my constituency. Here I point the finger at management, and at the failure of the management of the C.N.R. to use some imagination and initiative in order to establish that railway as a proper competitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway. When we talk about freight rates, rates upon which the whole of our economy in western Canada is based, this is the first thing we think of; and we ask ourselves, can management improve its competitive position? We think it could. We think more could and should be done by management to bring our freight rates into line. I think it is an admission of failure on the part of management when every time costs go up, they immediately go to the board of transport commissioners asking for an increase in freight rates. I know that some of the railroads in the United States made money during the past year and are now paying 4 per cent to their shareholders. We in western Canada were, of course, very happy at the assurance by the Prime Minister that the Crownsnest pass rates will not be altered. We depend on them for our livelihood.

Now I should like to make a few remarks on the oil and gas industry. If I may I should just like to note the very inaccurate statement made by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) in this connection speaking in the debate last Wednesday, as recorded at page 166 of Hansard of January 21. The hon. member said:

> Hon. members will also recall that about the same time, or shortly afterwards, the United States accommodated the Prime Minister by cutting off 15 per cent of our oil imports into the northwestern United States.

Mr. Speaker, that speech indicated that the Liberal party knows absolutely nothing about the oil industry in western Canada. We have heard that before in western Canada. Our friends in the Liberal party walked up and down our constituencies that produced the oil and said, "this government has now cut off 15 per cent of your exports," and so on.

This was not true. This is obviously inaccurate, for the simple reason that the exportation of oil into the United States does not depend on any government action but rather depends on available markets. We have today a world oil surplus. We have not been able to export to the United States even the amount of our allowable quota of oil, and never have we been able to do this. The hon. gentleman was completely wrong when he said there was any discrimination on the part of the Prime Minister or this government with respect to the exportation of oil.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal party is now so dead that it does not have the imagination or scope to know how big the oil industry is in western Canada or how much it can do for this country. I should like to cite a few figures concerning last year's oil operations in Alberta during a period of recession and in the face of a world oil surplus. The oil industry has confidence in the leadership of this government. To prove this I need only mention that those involved in the industry went ahead with exploration and the drilling of new wells. While our oil production was down 13 per cent last year our oil well completions were up. Total drilling footage was down 11 per cent but our total exploration expenses were up 7 per cent. For the education of hon. members opposite I should like to state that if a market for Canadian oil could be found we could wipe out our entire trade deficit with the United States in one fell swoop. That is an indication of how big the industry is, and it is just starting.

The oil wells in my constituency produce well over 35 per cent of all the oil produced in Alberta, and new fields are now being developed. One of the largest gas wells in the world is located there from drilling which has recently taken place on the Little Berland river. The new areas known as Swan Hills and Virginia Hills are the hottest finds in western Canada. These are situated right at the top of my constituency. All these things will require imagination and initiative in enacting legislation that will enable the oil industry to develop. This is one of the major industries in Canada and one of the most significant developments in our economy.

At the extreme western end of my constituency, of course, there is Jasper national park. I wish to say a few words in this regard, because the change in government has meant a great change for the people living in this park. For the first time in history the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) visited the park, sat down with the people there and discussed with them their problems. That was never done before. The former minister under the old regime came out to Jasper but would not talk to the people there. He said he was not interested in the people but was worried about the bears.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is ridiculous.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I should like to congratulate the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources for his attitude and the interest he expressed in the problems of those living in this park, because they do have problems. I should also like to remind him of the promise he made to establish a commission to study the question of municipal government in the national parks town sites in western Canada with a view to solving many of the problems presently confronting the people in those areas.

We cannot talk about Jasper national park without talking about the Yellowhead highway. We are very happy that in the near future, within three or four years, we will have a highway running through Jasper. I hope arrangements can be made with the government of British Columbia so the route from Kamloops to Yellowhead may be completed.

Before taking my seat I wish to support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McPhillips) to the effect that the old age pension should be extended to old age pensioners living outside Canada. This is fair and just, in my opinion, and I trust the government will give this matter sympathetic consideration.

[Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson).]

In conclusion may I say that we in Canada are on the verge of a great development. We need in this country the leadership of our Prime Minister. There is no room in Canada, in view of its challenging and progressive future, for speeches such as have been made by some hon. members of the opposition. We need imagination and initiative and young people who will develop our northland. Opportunities have never before existed in Canada to the extent that they now exist in our northwest, and they should constitute a compelling challenge to young Canadians.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should not like to begin my remarks without extending the conventional—and perhaps a little bit more than the conventional—compliments to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It perhaps will not surprise anyone in the house if I address my observations first to the seconder, because I think all of us were curious to see what kind of person would succeed in the historic constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet the most promising Canadian of his race who has come into this house since the war, a man who is now giving to his province the kind of leadership many of us feel it has needed for a long time.

I think the hon. member who now has the honour to represent this constituency acquitted himself with distinction. I believe, too, we can say that he expressed the kind of sentiments one would have expected to hear expressed by the successor of Mr. Lesage.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I wish to sincerely congratulate the hon. member, especially for having referred to national unity in the accents, even in the very words, of the greatest Canadian of our time, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent.

(Text):

The mover of the address comes from the province where I spent the greater part of my life. He is, like most Manitobans, competent and modest.

Mr. Churchill: Those who stay there.

Mr. Pickersgill: Those are qualities we normally regard as being characteristics of Manitobans.

Mr. Fulton: Is that why you had to leave?

Mr. Pickersgill: But the hon. member for Provencher is a veteran of two parliaments. When I read in the newspapers that he was to be given the honour of moving the address this year I confess that I thought this was another example of the confusion of the government, and that the Prime Minister had confused Provencher with Springfield; because it seemed to me almost unprecedented for a government, especially this early in a new parliament, to pass over all the members elected for the first time to this parliament, and pass over two members who had been elected at by-elections, and give to someone who was elected to a previous parliament, and who had spoken on a previous address, the honour of moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne. But I confess, sir, that when I heard the hon. member for Springfield later in the address I realized that this was one case where the Prime Minister had not been confused.

I believe all of us on this side of the house, and I fancy most hon. members in this chamber, were a little disappointed that the Prime Minister had not seen fit to confer this signal honour upon the hon. lady who was recently elected in Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman), and whom we are looking forward to hearing at an early stage in the debate. I may say, however, that it was no surprise to me, if to no one else, that the Prime Minister, even though he did go back to an earlier parliament in selecting the mover, did not ask the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) to move the address. Some of us doubtless remember the appeal the Prime Minister made to the constituents of the hon. member at a rally on May 4, 1947, at Campbellton. That was in 1947, sir, not 1948 or 1949.

Here are the Prime Minister's words as reported at that time:

> Charlie Van Horne has made a contribution, has placed before the House of Commons problems peculiar to this province, and in particular to this historic constituency, worthy of the finest traditions of representation in the House of Commons.
> I count him as an exceptionally good friend of mine, one who throughout the period of time he has been in the House of Commons has been one for whom I have had the highest respect, and I simply end my remarks in this direction by saying I want you to send Charlie Van Horne back to the House of Commons. This party wants him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but just for the record he is 10 years out on that, too.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the Prime Minister for noting my very slight statistical confusion which, I may say, cannot even begin to compare with the enormities of his statistical confusion, as pointed out by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) the other day. It was in 1957, sir, that this statement was made by the Prime Minister. But times have changed, sir, and we now see the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska perhaps not purged but so near the door that one more little push would put him out. And, sir, it does seem to me that it would not be surprising if the Prime Minister, like other leaders in other times, had a little list. The Prime Minister will remember Gilbert's little list of those who never would be missed, and I am sure that on the Prime Minister's little list Charlie's name heads all the rest.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman does himself an injustice.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the Minister of Justice does the Prime Minister an injustice. I am sure the Prime Minister would miss me very much.

I must say, sir, that like the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska, though perhaps I will speak in somewhat more moderate language than the hon. member habitually does, being a Manitoban in origin, I regard unemployment as a serious and continuing problem; and I agree, sir, with the Prime Minister before the election, not after the election, that unemployment is not a statistic and that it is a human problem and it is as a human problem that it should be treated. The unemployed do not want history from the Prime Minister or from anyone else; they want action, and they want the kind of action that was promised before March 31, 1958, of which we have seen very little evidence since. But, sir, I for one feel that if statistics are to be used they should be accurate. In telling us that more Canadians worked more in 1958 than in any previous year the Prime Minister was not accurate. It would be impossible when 23,000 fewer Canadians were employed on the average throughout that year for more Canadians to have worked more in 1958. As the Prime Minister said eloquently the other day, you cannot have it both ways.

Now, sir, I was not altogether surprised that the Prime Minister was a little careless about those statistics, because it is not the first time the Prime Minister has been a little careless about facts. The Prime Minister devoted a certain amount of rather flattering attention to me during the election campaign. He made a reference at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, which is reported in the Toronto Telegram of March 26 by Peter Dempson, and which I think it would be useful to have on the record for future reference. If I am inaccurate in any way I hope the Prime Minister will correct me at once. He said:

> Mr. Pickersgill said we were raising old age pensions too high. He said if we boosted them any highest some pensioners would be receiving more than some who worked. "That is one of the silliest stories that could have been made anywhere," the Prime Minister said, as the crowd clapped in glee. "It is almost the Pickersilliest."

Mr. Hees: That is the ultimate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can understand, sir, that such wit must have been irresistible and I think, sir, that no one is in a better position than the chief of the clan, Mac-Diefenbaker, to appreciate what an appropriate subject for subtle wit family names can be. I agree with the Prime Minister that this remark would have been the Pickersilliest if it had been true. But, sir, it bore no relation whatsoever to the facts. I should like to put the facts on record from Hansard of October 25, 1957, when I spoke in the debate on the Old Age Security Act amendment to which the Prime Minister referred at that time. I said at page 427:

I say at once, sir, I am going to support it. I am going to support it, but it does present a real problem for all of us—

And it still presents a real problem. I continued:

—who are conscientious representatives of constituents on the Atlantic seaboard. The effect of the legislation the government is now proposing will be—perhaps not for anyone more than myself and the hon. members for Burin-Burgeo and Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador to give to the retired adults in many of our communities larger incomes than those of the working members of their families who have to contribute through the sales tax towards the payment of these pensions.

Later on I added:

Some of us represent, as I do, constituencies where the fishery has been poor, where the income is going to be a great deal less than it was a year ago. I am not blaming the government for that but it is a fact, a fact which the government, if it professes to be equally interested in all Canadians in all parts of the country, should be just as much concerned about as they are about the plight of the old age pensioners or the plight of the wheat grower, because a fisherman can starve just as effectively as can a farmer. There are going to be a great many people in the eastern part of this country, fishermen and woodsworkers who are going to be much worse off this winter than many of the old age pensioners.

And if that was true for the winter of 1957-58, unhappily it seems likely to be even more true for the winter of 1958-59.

When I made that statement one or two hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the house got up and said, "Why didn't you do something about it?" That, of course, was a very natural retort to which I really did not feel I could take any particular exception at that time. But I do not think, as the Leader of the Opposition said earlier, that it means very much 18 months later. Now, if incomes in the Atlantic provinces were low in relation to those in other parts of Canada when we left office in 1957—unhappily they were in many cases, although they were a great deal higher than they had ever been before in the history of Canada—they are a good deal lower now in many sections of that community. That is perhaps not so for civil servants and members of the armed forces who, because they are concentrated in quite considerable numbers in some parts of the Atlantic provinces and have a national level of income, do help to bring up the total. But for many of the producers in the Atlantic provinces incomes have been substantially lower in 1958 than they were in 1957.

In no case can that have been much truer than it was in the case of the coal industry. The other day hon. members had their attention drawn to this advertisement which appeared in the Halifax Mail-Star inviting people to vote Conservative on June 10, 1957, and which said:

Your Progressive Conservative candidates are in favour of a coal policy that will increase coal production. Do a good turn for Nova Scotia. Turn out and vote Conservative on June 10th.

I am not going into a statistical analysis. I have the figures here as to how coal production was reduced in 1958 over 1957, and we know there are threats of very much more substantial reductions in the near future. Every reduction in the production of coal means a reduction in income for one of the basic industries of the province of Nova Scotia and, indeed, one of the industries also of the province of New Brunswick.

But it is not only in coal production that incomes and production have declined in the last year. This is also true of steel production. I have in my hand a communication which was addressed to the Leader of the Opposition by the united steelworkers of America on December 12, 1958. I am not going to take the time of the house or my own time to read it in full because there are a number of points I must make, but it drew attention to lay-offs in the steel plant at Sydney which had already taken place and more that were under way. There is no doubt whatsoever that in this field as well, incomes in the Atlantic provinces are certainly not going up; and if these lay-offs should reach any proportions then unfortunately incomes will go down.

The pulpwood figures have been drawn to the attention of the house on a good many occasions. We know that in the case of both pulpwood and newsprint, which are so important to the whole Atlantic seaboard of this country, incomes declined very substantially in the year 1958 over the year 1957.

But no hon. member would expect me to pay more attention, though I try to pay as much, to any other occupation than to the plight of the fishermen. With respect to the fishery I certainly cannot indict the government in one regard, because I am not one of those who believe that even the confusion and indecision of the government are responsible for the fact that the codfish did not come to Newfoundland this past year. That was one of those of freaks of nature that we hope will not happen again. It was perhaps one of those misfortunes that sometimes coincide with Tory governments, but I certainly do not blame the government for it.

But, sir, what I do blame the government for very seriously is their failure to do anything about this situation. When the Minister of Labour was speaking the other day I asked him if I had not made a constructive suggestion about dealing with the plight of the fishermen on the east coast, which is certainly as bad as, if not worse than, that of the people of any other community in Canada at this time. The minister said that my suggestion had come too late. My suggestion was made on October 21, five days before the Prime Minister announced his municipal works program. If my suggestion on October 21, which in any case could not have been implemented until the first of December, was too late, what is the minister saying about the government's own winter works policy which was not announced until October 26? The minister convicts the government out of his own mouth, because the suggestion I made was a simple and practical one that could have been put into effect in 24 hours if the government had had a mind to do it, whereas the municipal works program required planning by municipalities after it was announced. Now, sir, whatever may be said about anything else the government may have done, there is nothing whatever to be said in defence of the lateness of that announcement.

Mr. Starr: If the hon. member will permit a question, I wonder whether the hon. member would tell the house what his suggestion was to give employment to the people of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am going to come to that at the end of my speech, and I hope that some of the suggestions I will make then will have more appeal to the minister than the suggestion I made for dealing with this very serious human problem that the government pretended to be dealing with for three months and then suddenly told us they were doing nothing whatever about.

Mr. Starr: I think the hon. member misunderstood my question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I may have misunderstood the minister's question. If he would like to repeat it at the end of my speech I would be delighted to reply to it then. On August 16, when the minister's estimates were before the house, I asked the minister to delay the passing of one of the items until he could bring in a report on the winter work program. He refused. I asked the Minister of Public Works, who was leading the house that day, and he refused. Finally the Prime Minister came in to the house to rescue the Minister of Labour from his confusion, and the hon. member for Laurier asked the Prime Minister if they would not hold up this one item. Such a request when made to us when we were in office was always acceded to, but they turned it down three times. They denied it three times. Why? Because they had no program, and did not have any program until two months later. Then, when they did produce a program, what was it? It was to pass the buck to the municipalities without any notice, and on the eve of the Prime Minister's departure from the country.

I come back again to the suggestion I made to the Prime Minister which he transmitted to the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) on October 21. I am not going to outline what was in my letter. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Granger) put the text of that letter on Hansard the other day and that will suffice. But what I am going to do is quote three or four sentences from the statement the Prime Minister made in the house on August 30 last, when he came in and announced that $40 million was to be paid out of the treasury to the grain farmers of the west because there was a threatened crop failure in western Canada and because it was considered that grain prices and certain other factors made this desirable. As found on page 4345 of Hansard for August 30, 1958, the Prime Minister said:

> Our concept of a national policy is based on the belief that the national welfare demands positive action to meet the basic causes of distress and maladjustment in particular industries and regions.

He also said, as found on page 4348:

> What we are trying to do is establish a concept of national policy designed to ensure equality of opportunity for all Canadians . . . The immediate and long-term approach to the basic problems facing Canadian farmers is a recognition of the fact that the prosperity of Canada is indivisable and that a reasonably high and stable level of income in Canadian agriculture adds to the welfare of all Canadians.

It seems to me, sir, that if it is expedient, as this parliament agreed without dissent, to take $40 million out of the treasury in order to pay $200 to virtually every grain farmer in western Canada, it is surely equally incumbent upon any government which makes a profession such as the Prime Minister made in that speech to do something for the fishermen, who through no fault of their own had a crop failure of such proportions that two-thirds of them, as the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador pointed out, had not enough stamps to qualify for unemployment insurance and were obliged to go on relief this winter.

The government has not seen fit to do anything whatever about this situation. I know the Minister of Labour would like to get up and remind me of the community stages. I know that one of the other ministers would like to tell me something about the roads to resources program. Of course we are always told about this municipal aid program.

As soon as I heard about the community stages I gave the government full credit for it, as the Minister of Fisheries well knows. Unhappily, here again the decision was reached so late and winter came so early that it is going to be very difficult to get many, if any, of these works started in time to provide winter work. I know the Department of Public Works is doing its utmost to get work started, and I have no criticism on that score. What I do criticize is that this program could just as well have been decided on last July or August as at the stage it was done. If it had been decided on then the materials could have been available on the sites and work could have proceeded.

I have no criticism of the roads to resources program but I hope the minister of northern affairs, when he speaks, will tell us how rapidly this program has been proceeding in the Atlantic provinces and how much progress has been made, because it does seem there has been a good deal of delay. However, that is a very good program so far as it goes, but it does not even begin to take care of this emergency problem about which I am speaking now.

In so far as municipal aid is concerned, it is almost totally useless in Newfoundland because of the nature of the municipal structure there. There are not municipalities of the character and kind that can take advantage of this municipal aid program.

Mr. Starr: Will the hon. member permit me to say, sir, that we have made that program so flexible that where a province looks after the organized municipalities the public works department of that province can act as the contractor and we participate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Again, perhaps at some future time the minister would tell us how much it has been possible to accomplish under that provision. I have another point I should like to make in that connection. It is not merely that the fishermen have a serious problem in the Atlantic provinces, but there is also a very, very serious problem indeed of general unemployment in the Atlantic provinces. It is much more serious than it is in the other parts of Canada. As the minister knows, the volume of employment has been declining as between this year and last, the volume of unemployment has gone up and the ratio of unemployed to employed is, unhappily, higher in the Atlantic provinces than it is elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Starr: For the information of the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would make his own speech on his own time.

Mr. Starr: There are 17,000 fewer in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know the minister is quoting the N.E.S. figures, which are the only ones he has for January. I know exactly what he is going to say. We know why the N.E.S. figures are away down in the eastern provinces. I shall tell the minister why. According to a clipping I have here from the Toronto Telegram the jobless figures do not jibe. No doubt the minister has read it, and it says that the officials are confused because from Ontario west the D.B.S. figures are lower than the N.E.S. figures and from Quebec east they are higher.

Mr. Starr: They have always been that way.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can tell the minister why, and there is no difficulty about telling him. So many people in the eastern provinces cannot qualify for unemployment insurance that they do not believe it is worth while registering. Any hon. member on this side of the house or the other side of the house from the Atlantic provinces knows that quite well.

Mr. Starr: The figure is only 1 per cent different from last year.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not wish to engage in a battle of statistics with the minister because I know the minister would like, as I would like, to do something about the problem instead of arguing about statistics.

Mr. Starr: Well, do not mention them then.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do urge the minister, if he is anxious to do something, to accept the suggestion I made on October 21, a suggestion of nothing less than plain justice for the people engaged in the oldest industry in Canada. I suggest he reconsider that recommendation and either carry it out or adopt something better.

Mr. Starr: What was the suggestion?

Mr. Pickersgill: My suggestion was, as the minister knows quite well, that these fishermen who through no fault of their own do not have 15 stamps should be given enough stamps by the government to make 15, and that the cost of the insurance they would thereby earn should not be charged to the fund but charged direct to the government in the same way that the $40 million for the farmers was. If that is not simple justice and the obvious way to do it without upsetting the unemployment insurance scheme —well, if the minister can produce a better scheme, I would say at once it was better. However, he produces nothing. He just says no.

A moment ago the minister said that in provinces where the municipalities were not in a position to undertake the work themselves, provision had been made for allowing the provincial government to substitute itself for the municipalities. I am just going to make one point about that. In so far as Newfoundland is concerned, if the government had done what the legislature of Newfoundland unanimously asked them to do in a motion moved by the premier and seconded by the leader of the Conservative opposition in that assembly; if the government had paid the McNair award as every member of the opposition asked them to do last year, the provincial government would have been in a better position to cope with the problem than it is. We all know that today the premier of Newfoundland is seeing the Prime Minister.

Mr. Starr: Why did he not use part of the $9 million they got from this government last spring?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister is meeting today with the premier of Newfoundland about this problem. I do not intend, sir, to say anything about it except to express the hope that the government will take early and favourable action on that request for the implementation of the constitution of Canada.

I should like, if I had the time, to go over the Atlantic charter that was produced by the Tory candidates at Moncton in May of 1957, and which I am sure is very much in the mind of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks). I should like to go over it point by point, and on some occasion during the session, if I can find the opportunity, I intend to do that. I am sure if I do not I can count on the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska reminding the government about it. I doubt if any other supporter of the government will do so. They want this Atlantic charter forgotten.

The situation is rather amusing, Mr. Speaker. The Tory party, like the United Nations, has its Atlantic charter and, like the United Nations, it has a bill of rights. If the bill of rights is as empty as the Tory Atlantic charter for the Atlantic provinces has proved to be, it will not contain much for anyone.

I told the Minister of Labour that before I concluded I would have a few constructive suggestions to make, and I have a few. On October 21 last year I made a constructive suggestion which the minister apparently comprehended so little that he asked me to repeat it today. I sincerely hope that the government will act either on that suggestion or on some alternative that will help all the fishermen in all the settlements. I can tell the minister this. Welcome as the community stage may be in Twillingate, a community stage in Twillingate is of no help whatever to the fishermen in Fogo. That is the kind of situation we have all around the coast. In my riding we have seven community stages for which I thank the government sincerely; that is, there are seven community stages for about 200 settlements. That is not an adequate means of dealing with this problem of human suffering; and human suffering is involved.

The second constructive suggestion I have to repeat to the government is that they should act promptly to implement the recommendations of the McNair report, and do better than that. The third thing, about which I made some inquiry of the Minister of Agriculture the other day, is that they should treat pulpwood producers in the same way as other farmers are treated in this country. It seems to me that if a floor under sugar beets is justified, a floor under pulpwood is equally justified.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Have you not a provincial government down there?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think there would be any argument that the farmers producing pulpwood need help at least as much as those producing sugar beets.

Mr. Starr: What is the provincial government doing about the matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course this suggestion would not apply so much in Newfoundland, as the hon. gentleman realizes, because in Newfoundland we do not have farmers to any extent and they do not produce much pulpwood. It is cut for the companies. This suggestion is therefore made in the interests of pulpwood farmers in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The minister had better ask the provincial governments themselves what they are doing.

Mr. Starr: The other provincial governments are doing their share.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister can ask the Tory provincial governments of those two provinces if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Morris: Talk about Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must ask hon. members to give the hon. gentleman who has the floor the opportunity to make his speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the moment one on this side of the house attempts to make the kind of constructive suggestions the Minister of Labour asked for, there are constant interruptions.

The fourth suggestion I have to make is that the government should get ahead with the electricity program which was initiated by Mr. Harris and Mr. Lesage in the spring of 1957, and about which nothing has been done since this government has come into office. In addition, they should take such steps to change the legislation as are necessary to make it apply effectively to the province of Newfoundland, something which they refused and continued to refuse to do a year ago.

My final suggestion—and it is final, Mr. Speaker, because I notice that you, like I, are looking at the clock—is that the government should undertake at least 90 per cent of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway in the four Atlantic provinces. I may say that is the part of the program of the Liberal party adopted at our convention, and we note that the Minister of Public Works is proposing to bring in legislation at this session respecting the trans-Canada highway. Because of the disparity in income, the lesser ability of the Atlantic provinces to pay their share of the cost of this road, and the urgent importance of effective transportation in those provinces, I believe this suggestion that 90 per cent of the cost of the trans-Canada highway in the Atlantic provinces be paid by the federal government, if adopted, would be a most constructive contribution not merely to the relief of unemployment but would provide an invaluable national asset to that part of Canada.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be words of congratulations to the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, namely the distinguished hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson). Despite his youth he has become one of the leaders of the farm community in Canada. He is an expert, and he has given us a most instructive and constructive speech dealing with farming problems in Canada, and I want to congratulate him.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I should like also to congratulate the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, (Mr. Fortin) who gave us a sample of the speaking ability which contributed to his victory in that historic constituency, previously represented by a former Liberal minister, the one whom the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) referred to as one of the greatest leaders that Quebec had known since the war. Unfortunately, we are still waiting for concrete evidence of the value of that former Liberal minister as leader of a political party, since he does not seem too eager to occupy a seat in the Quebec legislature.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the new hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Slogan) on his splendid victory. I should also like to congratulate the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). We are all glad to see him back in the house, and we wish him well. As to the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman), my congratulations go first of all to her electors who have been king enough to this House of Commons to send us such a charming colleague. All those who knew her distinguished late husband and all of us who know her father, the dean of this house, I am sure are extremely happy to see her in this chamber.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, ever since the beginning of this debate, our hon. friends opposite have been harping exclusively on unemployment, emergency cataclysm, economic depression and, with tears in their eyes, all gave vent to utterances of despair. Frankly, it sounded as if they were bewailing the decline of the Liberal party and the cataclysm which almost annihilated them on March 31 last, and the unemployment to which several of their former colleagues have been condemned as a consequence of the last general election. Mr. Speaker, we are all convinced that these airs of discouragement they are putting on, and the crocodile tears they are shedding are simply due to the fact that business is recovering so fast in Canada. It is a great disappointment to them that Canada is not bankrupt and that there are not a million or a million and a half unemployed in Canada; and if there were, we would hear them make happy speeches.

Mr. Chevrier: There are half a million of them.

Mr. Balcer: The discouragement that seems to grip them stems mainly from the fact that the wheel has begun to turn, and that the tide of unemployment is now ebbing. Thus, Mr. Speaker, we saw that during the recent holiday season, retail sales throughout the country increased by 15 per cent over last year's figure. In fact, they were the highest ever recorded in this country's history.

That is a very good beginning, and it is certainly an indication that the recession is on the way out. As a matter of fact, Canadians, who are sensible people and have business sense, realized this fact and gave spectacular proof of it on March 31 last.

Mr. Speaker, when we were elected on June 10 last, the situation was certainly not too bright. When we were sworn in on June 10, we were immediately made aware of the economic situation of the Canadian nation. Prior to June 10, the former government had pictured the situation in rosy colours, had failed to reveal that its economic advisers were predicting a recession and a wave of unemployment. Rather than to lose votes in the June 10 election, the Liberal government preferred to maintain its tight money policy, a policy that was driving small manufacturers and small businessmen to bankruptcy. They preferred to hang on to this tight money policy, rather than to tell the people the truth.

At a time when taxes were gripping the Canadian economy as in a vise, the Liberal government preferred to continue its policy of taxing to the limit. At a time when the people faced all kinds of economic difficulties because there was not enough money in circulation, the government of our hon. friends opposite continued to put the squeeze, preferring to accumulate surpluses.

Mr. Speaker, after being sworn in on 21 June last, we were able to read the reports of government economists and to become acquainted with the information held in the department of my colleague, the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr). From that very moment, we knew that Canada was facing a recession, and that the winter of 1958-59 would be a period of severe unemployment.

Well, Mr. Speaker, under the leadership of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), we did not rest on our laurels. On the contrary, we faced the problem squarely, and took action where the urgency was greatest.

The first step was to revive the confidence of the Canadian people, because business had slowed down. Industrial construction had begun to slacken, and feelings of "recession", mainly of a psychological nature, were in evidence, as the people had lost confidence in the economic future of the country.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the first task was to restore people's confidence and this we decided to do by circulating more money. It was a matter of putting money into the people's hands.

The situation was the more difficult as a similar recession was also beginning to make itself felt in the United States. Now we know that by and large the Canadian economy is geared to that of the United States. Well, without waiting to see what they would do, the government, under the present Prime Minister, took the lead and through various measures decided to put money into the hands of the public.

The first social measure which we tackled was that of old age security. Admittedly, this was relatively easy because, under the former government, old age pensions had remained so long at $40 a month that anyone who had at all considered the problem, could realize that the situation called for immediate improvement. That is why we raised those pensions from $46 to $55 a month, always in order to put a little money in the pockets of those Canadian citizens, to restore their self-respect and provide them with the bare minimum to face their obligations.

Later on, to relieve the economic squeeze crushing the people of Canada as a result of the former government's fiscal policy, we decided to cut taxes. We did cut them to the extent of $189 million, while the Liberals, barely a few months before, and in spite of the predictions made to them by their economists, preferred to keep on taxing to the utmost the Canadian people and thus accumulate surpluses.

Of course, at the previous session, the Liberal government had cut certain taxes, but always on some insignificant items, such as chewing gum.

Mr. Speaker, when we decided to cut taxes, we did so having in mind primarily low wage earners and large families. In this way we have made available to the public an amount of $189 million which was actually needed.

We also launched a vast construction program. As everybody knows, construction is one way to deal directly or indirectly, with recession and unemployment. Well, we gave Canada the strongest home building policy it ever had. We gave impetus to lagging construction. We made $750 million available to builders and breadwinners. We improved legislation to make it easier for home builders and owners to borrow and repay.

Well, let us take a look at the results of this splendid policy. In 1957, 122,340 dwelling units were started whereas in 1958, not in the full year, but only during the first eleven months, there were 155,036 starts; as to housing completions, there were 117,283 in 1957 but 133,217 in the first eleven months of 1958. This is an all-time record in the history of this country. Through these efforts, huge sums were put at the disposal of the Canadian people, so that now in January 1959, we are beginning to see a decrease of unemployment and we can look forward to an early solution to this problem.

And all along, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) was extending unemployment insurance benefits and was launching a winter works project. This campaign launched throughout Canada has already started to give results and everywhere, in spite of our harsh winters, like this year when the temperature is often below zero and people in all parts of Canada have put up with heavy storms, we see that in cities, large or small, construction is in full swing, people are improving the inside of their homes, putting in basements, or partitions, or new roofs, etc.

Well, as a result of a campaign sponsored by the Department of Labour, it was found that construction is no more expensive in winter, and perhaps less so than in summer. This is why builders and contractors have now decided to build during the winter, to the benefit of all concerned.

We took the necessary steps. First we upped security payments, we reduced taxes and finally we made several hundred million dollars available for construction, not to mention our public works program, the largest ever undertaken in this country. We went ahead with these measures before our neighbours to the south had made up their minds to do anything about them. Right after we had adopted these measures, the American press came up with similar proposals; but we were the ones who had taken the lead. Of course, in the meantime, our hon. friends opposite were saying that it was not enough, that our legislation was coming too late, that it was not adequate, and so on.

Well, the Prime Minister decided to ask the people what they thought about it. As we all know, whenever, in the past, a general election was held under the Liberal administration, it was always held at the most favourable time of the year, when either the crops, employment or trade were at high levels. In the past, an election was always called either in June or in August, always at a time when, according to past experience, unemployment was at its lowest level or the harvest in full swing.

Well, when faced with the criticism of our hon. friends opposite, the Prime Minister of Canada did not wait for the best time of the year as regards employment—he could have waited till June, July or even August, because, as we recall, during the winter session of 1958, the Liberals were not particularly anxious to face the people once again. After planning all the program I have outlined earlier, our Prime Minister decided to face the nation again and to ask the people whether they accepted our party, which had fulfilled its promises. Furthermore, he asked the population to support the great program that had been launched on June 21. That is why he made his decision right in the middle of winter, when seasonal unemployment was at its peak and just when Canada was experiencing a wave of unemployment such as it had never seen before. Well, the people showed its confidence in the government and the government has not failed them.

The government carried on its work. It has always endeavoured to restore confidence among the people. That is why at the present time our foreign trade, just like our domestic and retail trade are reaching an all-time high so that we can look forward to increased prosperity in the coming months.

The construction program is going ahead, and, as mentioned in the speech from the throne, it is the intention of the government to speed up this program by making additional hundreds of millions available to the public, to provide jobs for the people of Canada.

And since we are on the subject of housing, I believe the people of Canada are confident that under the present government, this upsurge in house building will continue. Besides, economists agree on that necessity, since, as we know, children born in the early war years—and, at that time, Canada had the highest birth rate in its history—will, in the course of the next three, four, five or six years, reach the age when they will want to settle down. They will require houses and so, we can expect this gigantic building effort in Canada to extend into the next five or ten years. Another encouraging feature, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that not only is house building on the increase but industrial building also, which, as we know had so significantly decreased, to the detriment of our economy, that this decrease can be considered as one of the great factors of this recession.

Well, we are happy to note, right now, in this very month of January, that in 1959, industrial building in Canada will expand as never before.

Let us take a look, for instance, at the picture in my own province of Quebec. In a single area of the province, the British Aluminum Company will spend $175 million the Quebec North Shore will spend $100 million while the Cartier Mining will spend $250 million and the Quebec Hydro $42 million. In addition, grain elevators, to be built in Baie Comeau, will involve an expenditure of $18 million. And, Mr. Speaker, this applies to only one area of the province, the newest, the Ungava area. This industrial construction is no doubt a harbinger of a well-balanced prosperity in this country.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the hon. minister allow me a question, at this point?

Mr. Balcer: Certainly.

Mr. Chevrier: How is it then that, in spite of all that industrial construction, unemployment is more widespread in the province of Quebec than in any other province, except the maritimes?

Mr. Balcer: This industrial construction is just starting out. For instance, the Cartier Mining contract has just been awarded and the Quebec Hydro works on the Manicagouan river have barely started. We are just on the threshold of this amazing development in this area of the province. Soon, two other railroads will be built alongside the line connecting Seven Islands and Schefferville. May I, incidentally, express the hope that the pleas of the hon. members for Charlevoix and Saguenay (Messrs. Asselin and LaRue) for the building of a railway between Murray Bay and Seven Islands by the Canadian National will soon be successful, so that this industrial empire may finally be connected with the rest of the country.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this industrial progress I was mentioning a moment ago, in one area of the province of Quebec, will no doubt benefit all the rest of the province. In fact, I am happy to note that in the constituency of Three Rivers, for instance, my own riding, the Canadian Iron Foundries will develop in a remarkable way during 1959. These people are planning a huge extension of their plant in Three Rivers. In addition, Mack Brothers will now be making trucks at Three Rivers, while the federal government is planning to build an airport there, and a technological institute is to be constructed by the provincial government at a cost of $3 million. Across the river, the Reynolds Aluminum Company plans to spend close to $4 million on an extension to its superb plant at Cap de la Madeleine.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are examples of the industrial upswing which is in evidence and which is anticipated in the spring of 1959. That is why I say that our hon. friends opposite have no reason to display such gloom, to worry as they do, because evidence of bright outlook can be seen throughout the country.

We also plan to expand the help being given to both home and industrial construction, and we propose to continue bringing before the house legislation which will be of greatest possible benefit to the Canadian people.

I am convinced that under the leadership of the right hon. Prime Minister, Canada faces an era of prosperity such as it has never known in all its history.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the hon. minister allow me a question, before he resumes his chair? Since he chose to omit all reference to the dispute taking place in his own province, I would ask him why the government does not intervene in this dispute which is causing such damage—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: —to the C.B.C. French network?

Mr. Balcer: As I was saying only two or three days ago, Mr. Speaker, this is of course a very sad problem, which we earnestly hope will be settled soon. It is, however, a problem which concerns the management and employees of the C.B.C. Therefore, personally, I do not intend—

An hon. Member: To defend—

Mr. Balcer: —to become involved in this problem any further at this time. I am convinced that the management of the C.B.C., the union members and the producers can certainly reach an agreement without any intervention on the part of the Minister of Labour, or of myself, or of other members of the cabinet. Furthermore, the latest reports show great improvement in the situation. I am confident, therefore, that common sense will prevail and that the people of the province of Quebec will soon be able to enjoy the programs they deserve.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the hon. minister believe the strike to be illegal, as stated by the Minister of National Revenue?

Mr. Dorion: May I be allowed—

Mr. Chevrier: I have put a question to the hon. minister, and I am entitled to an answer.

Mr. Balcer: I do not believe that the strike is illegal.

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take part in this debate, and if I have to criticize the government as it deserves I intend that my remarks shall be as constructive as possible.

I should like first to pay tribute to you, Mr. Speaker, and tell you how we appreciate the manner in which you preside over the proceedings of this house. I should like also to convey our gratitude to the Deputy Speaker of this house (Mr. Sévigny). We congratulate him on his sense of justice and his kindness to the hon. members when he occupies the chair in your absence.

We are glad, also, to see that the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Rea) has been re-elected as deputy chairman of committees of the whole; we want to give him the assurance that we will always gladly co-operate with him.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join all those who spoke before me to offer my sincere congratulations to the movers of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Messrs. Jorgenson and Fortin).

The hon. member for Provencher has launched the debate very well, and the member for Montmagny-L'Islet has amazed us by his maiden speech here. His friends from Quebec should note his stand and try to imitate him on many of the points he mentioned which are, in brief, the fundamentals of the Liberal policy in this house and in the whole country.

Last Monday, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) made a remarkable speech. According to press comments and public reaction, we see that he was quite right when he said that the government had shown almost a kind of genius in straying from the straight line to plunge into confusion, contradiction and wavering instability. The Leader of the Opposition was quite right also to say, last Monday, that the speech from the throne was more understandable for what it leaves out than for what it contains.

In my opinion, it is no exaggeration to say that the government, in outlining its legislative program for this session, has failed woefully by leaving out, and disregarding the three problems it was supposed to look into and which are of greatest concern to the Canadian people; unemployment, inflation, national defence, more particularly, air defence. Mr. Speaker, I shall not dwell on the latter subject. Our leader talked about it with authority. He stated the position of our party when he said that it is essential that we should be informed of all the aspects of the problem, either by parliamentary committee or by a sub-committee on estimates.

The Leader of the Opposition was right when he said last Monday that we have come to the crossroads in the field of defence and that, if we want to find a solution, we must give to this problem the best and most exhaustive consideration, since it is a matter of vital importance to the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we now face the problem of inflation and it is the responsibility of the government to take the necessary steps to stop the depreciation of our dollar, the rising cost of living and rising prices in all fields. Once again, the Leader of the Opposition had reason to criticize the government's failure to take action. We find nothing or, at least, very little, in the speech from the throne that could lead us to believe that the government intends to take the necessary and vigorous measures that will stop inflation. Inflation is detrimental to everybody. It is the main handicap to our country's economic development.

Increased costs of production are just about the most challenging problem at the present time, since Canadian producers are hardly able to meet foreign competition on world markets, indeed on the domestic market.

Of course, the responsibility for this does not lie at the door of the central government only. Provincial governments will also have to reduce their expenditures, private enterprise will have to co-operate to a larger extent and all Canadians will have to do their share in helping to step up production. Even though this problem is not the sole responsibility of the federal government, it remains with them to take the lead and to implement the measures which are imperative.

At the annual general meeting of the Banque Canadienne Nationale, the president, Mr. St. Pierre, said at the end of his remarks on price inflation:

> It is therefore imperative to resort forthwith to all possible means to control the erosion of currency which is threatening the welfare of our people and the future of Canada. It is the duty of the government to insure monetary stability through an adequate policy, and the first step in that direction is the elimination of the budgetary deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I now come to a problem which, in my opinion, is the most serious one at the present time, a problem which the Canadian people must face and which, in the words of His Eminence Cardinal Leger, is having many far-reaching consequences, and which the government must strive to solve: unemployment. It came to me as a surprise, Mr. Speaker, that the government hardly mentioned it in the speech from the throne. What is still more astonishing, is the fact that when a member on this side of the house deals with the problem, our hon. friends opposite get angry, charge us with spreading fear in the hearts of the Canadian people and with being uncooperative. They even go so far as to say that even though they have been responsible for managing the affairs of Canada for the past 18 months, the remarkable thing is that it behooves us, the opposition, to find the required solutions and to hand those solutions and suggestions over to them on a silver tray.

Mr. Speaker, there has been unemployment in the past and there will probably be some in the future. In the past, however, when there was unemployment, members who were then in the opposition did not fail to level harsh criticism at the government whose responsibility it was to remedy the situation. Now the shoe is on the other foot, with this difference that, during the years we were in power, we took all steps called for by existing conditions. As far as I am concerned, our honourable friends' tantrums leave me cold; moreover I am going to say that I quite intend to keep pleading in favour of my distressed fellow citizens.

Some areas of Canada are more affected than others, nevertheless unemployment today is too widespread.

For example in my constituency there are too many workers who are out of a job. And what is more serious is the fact that in my riding as well as elsewhere, workers who have run out of regular and seasonal benefits find themselves in an unbearable predicament. In addition, those who get a temporary job but who will not be in a position to keep that job long enough to be entitled to benefits are in the same boat, and it is then that the situation becomes serious.

Mr. Speaker, there are people now who do not receive either regular or seasonal benefits and who live in small communities or in cities where other problems have come up.

For instance in my riding the people of two cities are hard-pressed because of the closing of industries which were operating there some time ago. Therefore civic authorities are quite unable to look after the unemployed who do not receive regular or seasonal benefits and who need something to live on. Of course, this matter comes under provincial jurisdiction, I grant you. It may be that provincial authorities were remiss in their duty, but in cases like these, additional provision should be made to help out those people who have families to support.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention again to put all the blame on the government for the emergency which has been lasting for some time now. It would not be fair either to suggest that the government must bear the full responsibility for the recession which is felt with more or less intensity here as elsewhere. However, we are justified in criticizing the government policy. Unless evidence is forthcoming that constructive measures will be taken to remedy unemployment or to help those who have not the wherewithal to meet the needs of their families, we shall keep pressing the government and insist that steps be taken as soon as possible.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), in the course of this debate made a review of the measures taken by his government since June 10, 1957, and which were meant to promote employment and help the unemployed. At the time of that discussion, he showed great displeasure with the opposition's criticism. He does not appreciate the opposition pointing out the government's weak points.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we criticize the government in the first place because of the exaggerated promises it made to obtain the popular vote. We also criticize it for having been so slow to take action once it had obtained power; we find fault with the government because most of the measures it did take have proven inadequate. We have protested, we are still protesting and we will go on protesting, against the weakness with which the government has tackled the job in hand, which was to create economic conditions conducive to higher employment throughout Canada.

You will recall that there was reference to great public works. We were given to understand that if the Conservative party came into power, a new public works program would be launched, whereas, in fact, the famous billion dollar program was merely the continuation and completion of projects undertaken by the former government, and we are still waiting for the government to announce that those major works will be undertaken in conjunction with the provinces and private industry. There was also a reference to a large scale plan to settle the far north, although the government must have known that, for the time being at least, such an undertaking was impracticable. That the government should pursue the air-mapping work already started in the north, finish the aerial photography work in that area; do topographical, geological and other surveys of the more accessible areas; that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources should set up a development program for the future, well and good. We agree and have no objection whatever. But to claim that to speed up the country's development, we will have to leave unexplored and, of course, undeveloped thousands of square miles located more to the south, and go into an area where transportation is difficult, water power lacking and where for many reasons it will be extremely difficult to attract the necessary labour, that, Mr. Speaker, is quite another matter.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock, when the debate was adjourned, I was saying that the development program in northern Canada, as understood by the government, is not practical, at least for the time being; that it is a program which cannot, for instance, promote the nation's economy, and provide more jobs. For that reason, I said that, there again, the population has been somewhat misled. I said also that we would favour the idea of the government undertaking research projects of all kinds and preparing a program for the future, and that we are fully of the opinion that the Canadian north can be developed later, on a large scale.

That is why I say that, for the moment, if we wish to spur the country's economy, provide jobs, promote fuller development of our known natural resources which are located in easily accessible places, the government should turn its attention farther south, to easily accessible districts, such as the southern Yukon and the Northwest Territories, the northern areas of the western provinces, northern Ontario, Quebec and Newfoundland, since there is there ample space where the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources could, by itself or in co-operation with the provinces, according as to whether the territories or the provinces are concerned, carry on their work.

This brings me to suggest another government project, that is the construction of access roads to put within easy reach the natural resources located more to the south, a project which naturally should be implemented in co-operation with the provinces.

In my opinion, such a project is in keeping with plain common sense; it is applicable, and if it were carried on with vigour, it could prove a practical way of providing more jobs and of spurring the economy throughout the country.

However, this access roads construction program has remained in abeyance, Mr. Speaker, because of the government's failure to call, as it should have done, a conference of parties interested in such a project.

It is true that there has been correspondence with the provincial authorities concerned. It is also true that last week it was announced in the press that possibly within a month, the province of Ontario will be signing an agreement with the federal government. However, as this method of communicating by letter with the provinces is much too slow and quite ineffective, and since it is important that at least a majority of the provinces agree to such a plan, the government should have used other methods.

However, there is still time to correct the situation, and as the saying goes, better late than never. The government should first revise its plan so as to make it more flexible and less costly for the provinces. Then a conference of the provincial and federal ministers concerned should be called as soon as possible, and at such a conference the ministers might lay the foundations of such a plan and decide how to go ahead with it.

I should like to mention to the house, as an illustration, a development project which is just being started in our area, more specifically at lake Matagami, in the constituency of my good friend the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Martel).

Hardly more than a year ago, about one hundred miles north of the cities of Amos and Senneterre, a group of syndicated mining firms discovered a rich deposit of base metals, a few miles south of the great Matagami lake. The proven ore content of this deposit has since been established at 25 million tons, with a total value of over $600 million. Needless to say that immediately after this discovery, large numbers of mining firms invaded this area, with the result that there have been three other discoveries, also very substantial, of base metal deposits of still undetermined value.

The area can be reached only by air. Development, therefore is slow, difficult, and above all very costly. Fortunately, last fall, the firms involved reached an agreement with the provincial government, and the government is now building a winter road fifty miles long. There remains a distance of about 23 miles to be built by the mining firms. In a few days, Mr. Speaker, this road will be open to traffic.

This low-cost winter road will make it possible to develop an area where there is a great wealth in base metals. Of course, soon we will have to build a permanent hard-surfaced road and a railway branch line about 50 miles long that will be linked to the C.N.R. line between Senneterre and Lake St. John, via the Chibougamau region.

Incidentally, I want to remind the house that this latter railroad was built under the former government. It must be realized that the lake Matagami ore will provide much freight to this C.N.R. branch line and that, in the near future, it will become one of the most profitable branch lines in Canada.

Everybody knows that in a few years, and I repeat, in a few years only, in no more than a decade, there will be a well organized population of more than 10,000 people in the Matagami area.

There is fertile land up there and, if the provincial government would take the trouble to do so, in a few years, it could surely settle 200 or 300 or even more farmers who could benefit from the proximity and development of this new industrial centre.

That is not all. This development, perhaps modest at the beginning, is bound to thrive, and I predict that in a few years, there will be many base metals mines in the Matagami area. It is one of the most promising mining areas of the province of Quebec and, perhaps, of the whole of Canada. Curiously enough, the soil of this region is also very rich. Because outcrops are few, prospecting is rather difficult. The overburden varies in thickness from a few feet to more than 300 feet.

So, it is not surprising that many people are inclined to say that this mining area should have been discovered long ago. Well, it is precisely because outcrops are few, and the overburden varies in depth from a few feet up to 300 feet, that these mineral deposits could not be discovered earlier. We had to use modern methods and to make geophysical, magnetic and electromagnetic surveys to locate these deposits and, today, we have to make expensive diamond borings to confirm the findings of these geophysical and electromagnetic surveys and to prove that there are really mineral deposits there.

Because of the richness of the soil in that area, Father Henri Cloutier predicted, as reported in an article entitled The Kingdom of Matagami, published in Relations of March 1947, the expansion that would take place some day in the Matagami lake district:

> The Matagami lake basin, with its vast forests, waterways and lakes, is the greatest untapped reservoir of arable land remaining in Quebec; in other words, it is the only significant area available to us for the launching of a great and progressive enterprise. Suppose you are told to settle, in the shortest possible time and at the lowest cost, from 100,000 to 200,000 young people and families, overflow of old parishes—

One could say that they are now unemployed.

—suppose you are also asked to provide for the prosperity of the 50,000 settlers who are now in Abitibi. The proposal is ambitious but reasonable, and it is imperative.

And then, Father Cloutier goes on to explain that all these people should be directed toward the Matagami lake district. A little farther down, he writes:

Is the present Abitibi an obstacle barring the real route to the north? Or is it a springboard from where we should start occupying the real important district, i.e. the kingdom of Matagami, and set up the capital, which cannot be set up elsewhere, since nature decided so?

Well, Mr. Speaker, this article clearly shows, in a few words, the importance of the Matagami lake district.

Here is an area where it would be possible to settle hundreds of thousands of people. The mere construction of a railroad will make it possible to develop rich ore deposits which, when mines go into operation at some future date, will provide employment for thousands of workers.

Why can't the federal government reach an agreement with the government of the province of Quebec for the construction, in the Matagami area, of a whole network of winter roads to make prospecting easier and less costly, and to speed up research in the entire area? Last year, a few hundred men found employment in the Matagami area. Yet, as I mentioned a moment ago, the only means of transport was by air. Knowing the cost of such transportation, and the difficulty of moving large groups of men by air, we find that now that there is a road, a winter road, more workers will be able to enter the area. Moreover, if a road-building program such as I have mentioned were rapidly carried out, I am sure that before 1960 over a thousand workers could find jobs in the Matagami area.

Why couldn't the federal government also do the same in the accessible parts of the Yukon, in the Northwest Territories, and the northern areas of the western provinces and Ontario, and in other parts of the province of Quebec, as well as in Labrador, in Newfoundland and in the maritimes?

Mr. Speaker, this program makes sense, but the federal government must show more daring. The government must convince the provinces that current unemployment has to be checked, and that this is one way to do it. There are many other ways of checking unemployment. Perhaps it cannot be stopped completely, but surely there are means of improving the situation.

I recognize that a program such as I have described will not provide employment for hundreds of thousands of workers, but if this were done throughout the country—and there is no reason for not doing it—in the Yukon, for instance, in the Northwest Territories, in the southern part of those territories, in the Peace River district, in northern Manitoba, where the International Nickel Company is operating a nickel mine of unprecedented capacity, at Mohawk and Thompson lakes, —and there are indeed other lands or parts of land that may hold very rich mineral deposits; if all would co-operate and if the federal government would call a conference here, in Ottawa, of provincial ministers of mines and colonization—I mention provincial ministers of colonization because this is very important, particularly in the region like that of Matagami, where, for instance, the land is fertile—if we could have, side by side, the mining industry, the lumbering industry, and agriculture, we could be sure to make good. We would make good because those who would settle as farmers in this area could, in their spare time, find employment in the industry, because they would live close to large centres.

As I said earlier, in a few years we would have in the Matagami area, a community of some 10,000 people. Well, it means something to have such a large community. It is large enough to help 200 to 300 farmers to make a living. So, we should make a careful study of the situation and revise the methods used to this day, particularly in the field of colonization.

You cannot expect today to go up to a man and say: "You are going to settle in range so-and-so of such-and-such township; then, you will build your own log camp and you will clear the first acres". You can't do that. The government has the responsibility, today, of finding places in which to settle new farmers. The government should clear the first acres, build comfortable houses, where these people could live with a certain degree of satisfaction. Then, it would be much easier to sell them those lands at $5,000, $8,000 or $10,000, if necessary, on easy terms, than to give them the lands, in the form of tenancy tickets, at the low price of $10 or $15. Then many people would settle out there, farm that land and make this particular region grow. This could be done everywhere in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the government should think things over and make arrangements so that we might start first by speeding up the development of easy-to-reach regions, where there are adequate natural resources for many years to come.

Mr. W. F. Matthews (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I wish first to congratulate the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Second, your fine record as Speaker of this house has pleased everyone. As we all know, you bring honour to this parliament. I also wish to join with other hon. members in congratulating the Deputy Speaker and the deputy chairman. The hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Rea) has been a great help to me since I came to Ottawa, and I wish to thank him very much.

The House of Commons, I have been told, is big league, and it did not take long to establish who are the big leaguers. Your fame, Mr. Speaker, was known to me before I left the coast and now, having seen you work, I know why you have the admiration and respect of all parties. Before coming to Ottawa I thought of the House of Commons as being two rows of trenches separated by a no man's land. I admire your courage, Mr. Speaker, sitting as you do between the rows. I was of the opinion that a member never crossed this no man's land except to join another party. You can well imagine my amazement when I noticed members of the opposition going across from time to time and talking to the various ministers. However, that was last session; this session I have not seen it happen. There has certainly been a change somewhere along the line.

This being my first speech in the House of Commons I feel very much as I did when I first went solo in an aircraft, the difference being that now at least I shall not be hurt. The kindness of members of the House of Commons to a member making his first speech is traditional and, as in the case of the aircraft, if I keep my nose out of the dirt I will come to no harm.

I wish now to pay tribute to two former members of this house who have passed away. I speak first of William Val Yacula. In the short time I knew him I became aware of his many qualities, and I am confident that had he continued he would have contributed greatly to the welfare of Canada as an elected member of the House of Commons. He was a very friendly man, and I am pleased to say that in the very short time I knew him I was able to call him Val.

It was my good fortune last session to share an office with the late Edward Russell Lockyer. Ed Lockyer was the type of man who should be elected to parliament. In Toronto he gave as much of his life as he could to the service of that city, being always active in performing such services as were for the advancement and betterment of his fellow Canadians. We can well understand why Ed was elected and, if he so wishes, I know he will be elected to the grand lodge above.

As hon. members know, I represent the constituency of Nanaimo, which is that central part of Vancouver island extending from Englishman river on the north to Cobble Hill on the south, including the beautiful gulf islands. As a candidate it is necessary that you become a salesman or, better still, a super salesman, and your first selling job is to sell yourself to the people of your constituency. Then, after you are elected you come to Ottawa and sell your constituency to your fellow members of parliament. I could do a real selling job among my colleagues in this chamber if it were possible to take them all by jet aircraft to beautiful Nanaimo and the islands. It would take about six hours to make the flight to Nanaimo.

Nanaimo is known as the gateway to Vancouver island, and all roads lead to this gateway. There are 21 ferry sailings daily to and from Nanaimo by the finest ferry ships in the world. In 1957 the ferry boats carried 1,710,934 passenger cars and 201,383 freight cars from Vancouver to Nanaimo, and in the same year 61,000 tourists registered at the chamber of commerce. Seven hundred and twenty-three foreign vessels and 3,471 coastal ships cleared Nanaimo in the same year.

It was very interesting during the recess to have the Minister of Fisheries in Nanaimo and to have the pleasure of spending a day with him looking over the wonderful biological station there. If any hon. member should have a mind to travel and see something of interest I would suggest that he visit this marvellous station. They have a model there of Hecate strait. This is an exact model. The tides go in and out, and it all happens at the same hours as the tides in Hecate strait itself.

Anglo Canadian Timber Products operate a sizeable industry in Nanaimo and of course, as hon. members all know, MacMillan and Bloedel Ltd. have a tremendously big pulp mill there. Sometimes between 400 and 500 big fishing boats are in the harbour, and that sight in itself is certainly well worth seeing. We have two branches of the legion there, Canadian Legion No. 10 and Canadian Legion No. 256. I just mention these two facts in order to give hon. members some idea of the variety of industries and interests we have represented.

As to sports in Nanaimo, we have a famous team there which won quite a number of hockey championships, and it was two years ago in the Maple Leaf gardens that a Nanaimo team won the Mann cup for Canadian senior lacrosse. This is the first time the Mann cup has ever been won in the east by a western team though, to be honest about it, I must add that we did bring some very fine boys from the province of Ontario who like Nanaimo so well that they are living there, have their families there and intend to stay.

At this point I might mention that sport, to me, is a very important thing. I was pleased to hear recently that the John Labatt company under Mr. J. W. Murray are sponsoring that lacrosse team this year. If any big company in Canada wants to do a real service I would say that the sponsoring of good hockey teams, baseball teams and lacrosse teams is one of the finest forms of advertising and one of the best things they could do as Canadian firms.

We have a very nice ice rink in Nanaimo, and we have a curling rink, too. Anyone interested in curling should remember that we have eight rinks on Vancouver island and, as I said, we have one in Nanaimo. The fishing there is tremendous. I will not dwell on this, but I recommend anyone here to go out and try some of our fishing when the session is over.

I must thank the hon. member for Hastings South (Mr. Grills), who invited us to go over to the Hull arena yesterday to see the Belleville Macs play against the Hull senior team. It was very enjoyable, and I might mention that the coach of this Belleville team comes from New Westminster. Going back some years to the period when I had first a juvenile team and then a junior team, I can remember that he was always a thorn in the side of our club at that time. I should like to wish Ike Hildebrand of the Macs team every luck in the world championship games.

Continuing this tour of my constituency, from Nanaimo I should like to take hon. members out by bus, if it were possible, on a tour of this beautiful country. They would call at the city of Ladysmith. I wish they could go from there into the logging camps and see the actual logging conditions, the tremendous diameters they take out, trees which are the finest and largest in the world. I might remark at this time that in my constituency they brought out a 225-foot Douglas fir spar tree, about five feet at the butt, as I remember. That was sent over to England, and hon. members can imagine that tremendous 16-ton spar tree going over to England. I would be very happy if we had one on the lawn in front of this building. They also have Canadian Legion No. 171 and the Comox Logging and Railway Company.

Leaving Ladysmith we would then go up to Cowichan lake and Honeymoon bay. Here you would find large scale logging operations and sawmills that would amaze you. If you were driving through here in the summer and had a fishing rod in your car you probably could not resist the temptation to do a little fishing, because it is a sportsman's paradise. At Cowichan lake there is Canadian Legion No. 210. At Honeymoon bay is situated the Western Forest Industries Limited and the Cowichan Copper Company. The latter produced ore amounting to $1,200,000 in 1958. There is also the Mayo Lumber Company at Honeymoon bay.

Leaving this area we would then go down to the beautiful city of Duncan, that will delight and interest all hon. members. I am sure you would find you would want to spend at least a day here examining the many historic points of interest. There is an Indian reservation nearby, and the famous Cowichan Indian sweaters come from here. There is a curling rink and a progressive chamber of commerce which does a splendid job. Hillcrest Lumber Company is situated here, and there is Canadian Legion No. 53.

Leaving Duncan we cut back to Crofton and go through the new and up to date pulp mill that was recently opened there by British Columbia Forest Products Limited, and then go on to Chemainus to inspect the large lumber mill and watch the workers cut Douglas fir and load cargo freighters with British Columbia lumber for all parts of the world. MacMillan and Bloedel Limited is also located there, and there is Canadian Legion No. 191.

We now come to a most exciting point in our tour, because we now return to Nanaimo where we board a power boat and take a cruise through the beautiful gulf islands. I am sure hon. members would enjoy the thrill provided by passing through Dodd narrows where the tide runs at from ten to twelve knots. In a small craft this makes the journey an exciting one. The international cruiser race is held practically every year commencing at Seattle and concluding at Nanaimo. There can be as many as 125 cruisers in the race, and many may reach the narrows at approximately the same time. It is very exciting to watch the small boats bobbing in the water like corks, almost brushing one another as they speed ahead. Few can resist the excitement the race provides.

As we continue our tour, Gabriola island will be on our left. This area was first settled by people who came from California and from England years ago. They are a fine and happy people. We then pass on to Galiano island and cross over to Mayne island, where we spend a few hours. Reluctantly we leave these pleasure spots and proceed to Saturna island for another interesting event, the annual lamb barbecue. A few years ago a small group of perhaps 25 people from cruisers that had come up from the United States and British Columbia met and held a lamb barbecue. It is now an annual event and the attendance has increased considerably. Games and various other activities are now associated with the barbecue, and it is a source of pleasure to many tourists. There is excellent fishing, and some fine summer resorts are located on the islands.

From Saturna we proceed to north and south Pender islands before docking at Ganges harbour, which is on the south end of Saltspring island. I had the pleasure of attending the opening of the modern hospital at Ganges harbour, and it is indeed a wonderful building. We then go to Bedwell harbour where commencing this summer a customs and excise office will be situated. Pleasure boats coming up from the United States will be able to dock there before cruising on. There are many fine things to see in this area including hotels, golf courses and ferries. I might add that as many as 800 or 900 pleasure boats pass through Nanaimo every year coming from various parts of the United States. The people of Ganges harbour are active and progressive. They have a branch of the Canadian Legion and a chamber of commerce. They do not hesitate to write me about their problems, and all hon. members appreciate it when their constituents acquaint them with their difficulties rather than allowing them to become the cause of unrest.

It will be difficult to get you to leave any of these island beauty spots, but we must be on our way back and I know that all hon. gentlemen will want to return to Nanaimo and the island. And now permit me to tell you something about the people who live in this riding.

We have there our pioneers who helped build our country. We have war veterans who fought for our country. We also have young Canadians who are eager to build a better Canada. We also have a large number of industries, including our commercial fishing, our many logging camps and sawmills and at the present time two large pulp mills. We have loggers who can handle the largest timber and log the steepest grades of any loggers in the world. If I wanted practical advice on commercial fishing, logging, lumber milling, road building or power development, I could get it from men who not only know how to do it but who can do it. I have had a flow of letters from the people in my constituency demanding a humane method for the slaughter of animals. I assure them that this matter is of great concern to me and I will do all I can to support their appeal.

I should like to compliment the hon. member for Victoria for his stand with respect to the right of old age pensioners to receive their pension even after leaving Canada, and I will support this position. When a pension of any form is given it should be an earned pension. Canadian pensions given in the form of old age pensions or pensions to members of the civil service, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the armed services are well earned pensions. All these people are shareholders in the building of Canada and are entitled to draw their dividends when they retire.

In the building of Canada a number of machines have come into being from time to time to assist in this work. As a boy I can remember the stone boats used on the farms. These were used to clear rocks from the land so it could be tilled and cultivated. It was a most useful article. There was also a machine called a fertilizer spreader and, of course, there was a seed spreader, probably created by Massey-Harris, and these too were useful inventions. When I walked up to the House of Commons just a week ago I saw a new machine on the street, a truck belonging to the public works department of the city of Ottawa. It had a chain drive from the rear wheel hub which when thrown into gear spread sand on the streets. It had a sign on the back that read "sand spreader". But I was to see another new machine that same day. It was a machine put out by a desperate group of left-overs, a new Liberal machine called a "gloom spreader". This machine, so far as thinking Canadians are concerned, is about as effective in this day and age as the Wright brothers' first aircraft would be on a trip to the moon.

If we read back in history we find that all dictators in their attempts to conquer have used fear as their weapon. They used fear not only on the armies they were fighting but they carried as much fear and terror as they could to the civilian population. Even women and children were exposed to as much of this fear as could be directed their way. Any political party that attempts to take over and control Canada, using fear as a weapon, will only destroy itself. Fear has always been used as a weapon to kill faith. A party that destroys the faith of its own people also kills the faith of other countries, and that goes a long way toward causing a depression.

At this point I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister for having visited so many countries on his tour. Other countries with which we trade and that wish to trade with us are watching and looking for good reasons to have faith in Canada. It is our duty and purpose to supply them with reasons for having faith in our great country.

It took no great vision, no great courage, for us to make this six-hour trip to Nanaimo; but when we think of the pioneers who came by ship, taking months to make the trip, when we think of the hardy people who came from eastern Canada across the country by wagon train or later by railway, with no hospitals, no unemployment insurance, nothing but their great faith, their courage and their desire to build a new Canada, I wonder how any of us can be uncertain about the future of Canada. In the descendants of those pioneer builders of our nation we still have men and women of faith, courage and ability; we still have a country second to none in national resources. All that the people have been waiting for is a government with vision and faith, and we all agree that on March 31, 1957, the voters of Canada supplied just that.

It should be the purpose of this government to get on with the job. Our pioneers, the builders of Canada, our senior citizens and our war veterans should receive more than just enough to live on. We know that the wage earners of Canada want these old people to have a good standard of living, and I will always work to achieve this end.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, it is very much of an ordeal for hon. members of the opposition to sit in this parliament, but to them I say "Be of good cheer". When you are old you will look back to these days and will be able proudly to say, "I sat in parliament when Canada's greatest development took place under the leadership of Prime Minister John Diefenbaker and the Progressive Conservative banner."

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the amendment as amended; and to refresh the memories of hon. members, because of the diversity of topics discussed to date. I am going to read the amendment as amended by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue):

> We respectfully affirm that Your Excellency's advisers, by reason of contradictory and confused policies caused by the absence of social and economic planning, and their failure to provide agriculture with a fair share of the national income, and their further failure to take effective steps to combat inflation, no longer merit the confidence of this house.

Before proceeding, Mr. Speaker, I must say how much it delights me to have my old friend the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, (Mr. Rowe), our topnotch free-enterpriser, sit in his seat this afternoon to listen to the philosophy of the C.C.F.

I want to say that my remarks this afternoon will in particular be related to the absence of provision for economic and social planning in the throne speech, social and economic planning which we in this group think is essential to meet the needs of the unemployed in Canada, the needs of the farmers for markets and the instability that is in our economy at the present time.

We in this group give this government full credit for proposing certain measures that will be of value to Canadians and in some cases, as in the case of farmers, veterans and civil servants, of value to particular groups. However, I must emphasize this. We feel that the political medicine provided in the throne speech lacks the potency required to cure the ancient maladies of inflation, the growing unemployment and the lack of markets that particularly concern all Canadians at this time.

I want to say this, Mr. Speaker. We in this group do not profess to have all the wisdom and all the knowledge but we do think we have a sounder approach to our problems than that proposed by the other parties. We have sat and listened to the speeches of hon. members, and regardless of our differences in economic theory policies we recognize that members of this house, whatever their point of view, are making their contribution from their own particular point of view or lack of understanding and so on.

Speakers on the government benches or the opposition benches have used what I would term a welter of words to criticize one another, and it has been quite a skirmish at times. The debate seems to oscillate these days between a lullaby and a baseball game. In our opinion the criticism of one another's policies on the whole has been somewhat superficial, and that is because there is no fundamental difference in approach to social and economic problems between the old parties. I think that is a correct statement. They are both parties supporting a so-called free enterprise system which no longer exists. However, I must say that a few speakers have recognized and mentioned the disease of unemployment, but they have failed to offer a remedy or, shall I say, a fundamental remedy. They have in each case—and I listened with interest on two or three occasions—presented their problem to the government only. They stopped short then with respect to offering or making some definitive and concrete proposals.

Both old-line parties proposed various degrees of tinkering with and patching up the present incorrectly termed free-enterprise system, which is more and more being revealed as the days go by—and I am sure the future will emphasize it—as nothing more or less than economic anarchy.

What is the situation we face today in this house? I am sure that hon. members here, when they speak on this question, are conscious of the unemployed and of the difficulties of the farmers, of the small businessmen and of other groups in our society. What is the situation we face in Canada some 14 years after the second world war, after one of the greatest and most prosperous periods in our history? We all know that there are approximately half a million unemployed in our country at this time, and a large surplus of unsold stocks of agricultural products and industrial commodities. While that condition exists in Canada at this time we all know that about half the people of the world go to bed hungry every night, and that great numbers are in need of the commodities which we have in such great supply. I think that is a fair statement of the situation.

I rise this afternoon particularly to emphasize the fact that the C.C.F. offers a constructive alternative to meet the present economic dilemma. We have mentioned our policies on many occasions in past years. We think that particularly on the throne speech we should re-emphasize our approach to the situation in view of the remarks we have made all throughout the years and their particular application to the present circumstances.

Our alternative to the policies offered by the government and the official opposition parties is known generally as democratic socialism. I can see the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe beginning to blink already. In other words, that means a consciously planned economy with the consent and cooperation of the people of this country. We in this group believe we can have a planned economy and have all the basic freedoms we enjoy at this time.

I will come back later to policy, Mr. Speaker, to indicate the lack of confidence that is growing among business and industrial leaders in Canada, in the United States and in other countries at the present time over the effects of Soviet competition and competition from other countries. I am going to quote very briefly from the Ottawa Citizen of Saturday, January 24. I think this is rather remarkable coming from people who resent government interference with free enterprise. They firmly believe in free enterprise. Very often they have criticized the aged, the ill and the disabled for requesting higher pensions in order to have a decent standard of living or some opportunity to enjoy national health insurance and things of that sort. They say, "Oh, oh, there they are again running to the government."

What are these people doing at this time? They are in a dilemma. These free enterprisers are running to the governments of their respective countries, as they have done in Canada before, to bail them out. The article is headed, "United States Business Worried by Soviet Competition", and reads as follows:

> American business leaders are said to be giving serious consideration to the prospect that rapidly growing communist competition—

Fancy them being frightened of competition. Why, that is the basis of their whole lives but they are frightened of it now.

> —in world trade markets might result in the fairly near future in the government moving into a field hitherto regarded as sacred to private enterprise. The research institute of America, a private organization which claims contacts in the communist world as well as in high level United States circles, has circulated among United States business leaders a "report to management"—

Always to management, not to the people.

> —which claims Washington already is considering some sort of government take-over in the foreign trade field.

Then there is the heading, "Figures Cause Dismay."

> The report, which contains statistics from Russia and communist China indicating that the two big communist powers are rapidly overtaking the United States in almost every production field, says the surge in the east has caused "particular dismay" in Washington with the result that "senior United States officials have been seriously considering how to make politically acceptable"—

That means acceptable to the business strata of the community.

—"the establishment of a government foreign trade monopoly"—

My goodness, Mr. Speaker, we have advocated that in this house for a number of years and it was anathema to the Conservative and Liberal parties. It was an invasion of free enterprise. However, these gentlemen, who are now in a dismayed state of mind, are going to suggest a government foreign trade monopoly.

—"which might be able to compete"—

"Might".

—"with the communist monopolies on something approaching equal terms. It is not too much to say that continuance of communist economic growth and the increase of 'unfair' communist price competition"—

Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, how certain business elements in this country opposed the resale price maintenance act as it interfered with what they termed fair competition?

—"could cause the end of private enterprise in international trade in the years immediately ahead."

What a disaster!

Soviet goals in the current seven-year plan would surpass the United States in most economic fields by 1965, the report says. Even if Russia fell far short of these goals it "would nonetheless develop into a much more formidable competitor in world markets than it is now."

The economic advances would be over and above the production and development of weapons in the military field in which, the report concedes, "the Russians are clearly ahead of the United States."

So they admit they are ahead of them in a military sense and overtaking them rapidly in an economic sense. Then follows the headings, "Red China Menace."

Red China's transformation, however, is regarded as even more portentous than that of Russia. "Peiping's staggering goal", the United States leaders are told, "is nothing less than the transformation of China's primitive economy into a modern industrial heavyweight capable of competing with either or both the Soviet union and the United States within ten years."

The entire report, with one exception, is one of pessimism for the future of business in the western world. The exception is the "underlying possibility" that Russia might be forced into seeking an alliance with the west because of fear of "the surging Far Eastern threat of military and economic dominance."

As usual they are hoping that some quarrel between some people or nations will provide the answer to their difficulties. I am serious about this, Mr. Speaker. We continually talk of free enterprise in Canada. In that connection I want to quote a sentence or two from an editorial that appeared in the Globe and Mail of Thursday, January 22. We must not forget that generally speaking the Globe and Mail supports the policies of the government of the day, and it is a paper I read with a great deal of interest. This is what I find in one editorial in the Globe and Mail in our free enterprise Canada:

This newspaper's quest for facts was occasioned by increasing evidence that Canada was being negotiated into economic as well as military servitude to the United States.

I think there is a great deal of validity to that statement. What further evidence do we want than the refusal of Alcan to sell aluminum to China after receiving an export permit from the government? Does that company accept no responsibility to Canada as a whole? Does it accept no responsibility to its employees? It refuses this opportunity to trade. For what reason? Because it is contrary to the policies of the United States state department. We are being influenced from that direction. They do that while hundreds of their own employees are unemployed and seeking work.

As I proceed with my argument let me emphasize once again the fact that we in the C.C.F. are strongly opposed to the political dictatorship of communism and the economic dictatorship of monopoly capitalism, the type of dictatorship in North America which is providing increasing evidence that Canada is being negotiated into economic as well as military servitude to the United States.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, the C.C.F. offers a democratic alternative policy based on a study and knowledge of Canadian history, Canadian psychology and the present circumstances. We propose a dual or mixed economy based on constitutional and parliamentary procedures. We believe that there are these two great forces in the world and that a clash will inevitably result in the days to come between what I might term the extreme right and the extreme left in politics and economics unless we take some middle course and utilize our intelligence, our constitution and our parliamentary procedures to find another program that will give us the results we seek.

First of all I might mention that we in the C.C.F. recognize that the satisfactory development of a dual or mixed planned economy in Canada rests essentially on co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. That is essential. Otherwise we will not have the success that is necessary. It is up to the leaders of the federal and provincial governments to forgo their petty political differences and their wish at times to gain political advantage for the welfare of the Canadian people as a whole in the development of such a policy as we propose.

When I refer to a mixed or dual economy I mean exactly that. We believe that we have got to have the conscious planning that will provide an opportunity for the development of public enterprise in the federal, provincial and municipal fields according to the circumstances of the time and to the advantage of the Canadian people as a whole. We believe in a great expansion of co-operative ownership and the development of the co-operative philosophy. There is nothing like the experience of working in a co-operative movement, whether it is a producers' co-operative, a consumers' co-operative or a credit union, to give one a good understanding of the administrative principles of democracy. I think it is good groundwork for anyone seeking to serve in the political field.

We in this group also believe that there is a tremendous opportunity for what we would term legitimate private enterprise. We mean private enterprise where a genuine element of competition comes into play, where the consumer is protected by a measure of genuine competition and where the enterprise, whether industrial, engaged in distribution or in service, is rendering a necessary service to the community.

Sometimes I am criticized by some of my socialist friends for taking the stand to which I am about to refer. I do not mean the group behind me. I am thinking of persons whose views are more doctrinaire in some respects. There is a distinction to be made between the effect of foreign investment in a country and internal investment. Foreign investment means that at the end of the year there is an export of capital from Canada and a net loss of total wealth to the Canadian people. Canadian investment, local or community investment, means that an industry through operations carried on, perhaps not directly in line with our philosophy and theories, results in no net loss to Canada in wealth because the profits are re-invested in our country. There is, therefore, no drain on, shall I say, our total wealth by Canadian ownership.

Now, I want to emphasize this. While we have been criticized for emphasizing the need for planning, I must say that planning is something which is essential in a modern society. What we are concerned about is that we do not have the planning as a result of the corporate state, but that we have planning by the people and for the people. It is for that reason we are concerned about developments in our country. I should like to quote from a letter which I read in the Globe and Mail. I see the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) is rather amused at my reading the Globe and Mail so frequently, but there is a very thoughtful approach to the present situation in this letter. I quote in part from this letter to the Globe and Mail of Saturday, January 24:

> The real reason for the development of the new system of state-aided enterprise, which we are now enjoying, is the basic fact that production has overwhelmed the old order where supply and demand could indeed exert its influence.

That is one reason why we are not overcoming inflation. There are certain rigidities in our economy today as a result of price control and as a result of wages that do not permit the law of supply and demand to work as usual. It is not possible for anybody today to correct the price situation by lowering the workers' wages.

> What we now witness is a frantic effort on the part of government to maintain private enterprise and at the same time nullify the effects of competition, which was the heart of the private enterprise system.
> Obviously it is absurd to speak of free enterprise in this context, but it doesn't appear to have deterred anyone. None of our major political parties have faced up to this truth, nor has there been any concern with the inevitability of changes in our political and economic pattern as a result of this dichotomy.
>
> Free enterprise has gone not because of the actions of wicked radicals, but because the inherent imbalance of capitalist production and the growing technology that accompanied it have forced upon the state a set of what first appeared to the politicians as a series of ad hoc measures designed to relieve immediate crises, but which now show themselves to be permanent in their nature. Production outpaces consumption at such a rate and brings with it such dangerous social implications that the state is forced to step in and take up the surplus. But, of course, this sort of "solution" can only be temporary.
> It is therefore not hard to envision that, because of the deficits incurred by the new system of state-aided enterprise, and the psychological effects of the stored surpluses that nobody knows how to get rid of, plus the growing unemployment, the state will move into its next stage—control of prices and production in a manner that will ensure a high rate of profit to the larger units of production, and the control of labour to ensure such profit. That is to say, free enterprise having already ended, and our existing system of state-aided enterprise being only a temporary botch of things, it is inevitable that the corporate state must move into the saddle in an attempt to restore order. In the U.S. first, of course, but we will follow in the usual way.
> Some of us may not be enthused over this prospect, but that is the logic of events.

He is quite right; that is the logic of events, in our opinion, unless we are willing to accept very soon some planning based on democratic procedures. As I said before, co-operation between federal, provincial and municipal governments is essential for success in developing a planned economy.

I am just going to outline what I consider to be one or two of the essential steps. I have not the time to deal with this subject very fully. I do feel that, first of all, we must make sure of our raw materials. We say one of the first steps is a national policy for the conservation and development of natural resources, as a result of co-operation between all levels of government. There is no use having fiscal policies or other good legislation without having your natural resources conserved and developed, having in mind the need for a constant flow of wealth to meet the needs of the increasing population, and future generations.

What is the present situation? So far as the development of resources in Canada is concerned, it is chaotic, it is wasteful and it is irresponsible. I shall demonstrate why. I would cite the proposals of the government of British Columbia for the development of the Rocky mountain trench, which comprises about one-tenth of the area of British Columbia, by international financiers whose interest is purely profit. They have no interest in the people of British Columbia. Mr. Wenner-Gren came, said how do you do, goodbye, and went away. What would happen with that development? From our point of view, it is an improper development, a wasteful development, that could damage the possibilities for public hydro development on the Columbia. This hydro development would supply the power required in British Columbia for some years to come. It could affect adversely the established mining and lumbering industries in British Columbia.

At the present time we have lead, zinc and other mines closed down for lack of markets. There are sawmills closed down for lack of markets, as well as sawmills operating under great difficulties because of low prices and competition. However, the plans are for this group of financiers to move into British Columbia to develop the Rocky mountain trench, without any concern about the damage it might do to British Columbia's economy. This development would be under monopoly control and would damage the possibility of a sound development of the Columbia river with its hydro resources, and this would constitute a threat to the incomes, to the employment and to the lives of thousands of employees who are working in other industries in the other developed parts of British Columbia. We say that is completely chaotic and irresponsible, development of resources.

Let us look at the expansion in other fields. There is a declining world market in nickel and other metals, and this has been obvious for the last two or three years. While that state of affairs exists, we have the unnecessary expansion and development of nickel, lead and zinc mines, as well as some other metals, without any sense of social responsibility for the welfare of Canadians as a whole or the industries concerned. Some of these activities are entirely unrelated to the welfare of Canadians, having in mind only one thing, the profits possible from mining or, in some cases, a rise in the value of the stocks.

What other illustrations do we find? What about the closing of the coal mines in Canada without any consultation with the federal or provincial governments? Why did they close the coal mines in Fernie last year? They are owned by a United States corporation. This corporation did not close the coal mines because they were losing money in their total operations. They had mines at Fernie and other points. The corporation closed these mines because they wanted to maintain the rate of profit. Was there any concern for the Canadian communities, the Canadian businessmen or the employees? There was none. Without any consultation with this government or the government of British Columbia, they exercised their judgment in their own interests.

What about the coal mines in Nova Scotia? I listened, I think it was Friday, to the two speeches made by two members from Nova Scotia concerning the closing of the coal mines at Springhill by Dosco, which I understand is now owned by Avro. I was very sympathetic to what they had to say. Before proceeding, I want to say that we in this group heartily support them in their efforts to get something done for these courageous miners who have suffered so much, and whose reward for that suffering is unemployment.

I now want to quote the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) as reported in Hansard because it is obvious that these members have witnessed the effects of an unplanned economy and of the irresponsibilities of large corporations at this time. As reported at page 278 of Hansard, this is what the hon. member for Cumberland has to say in part:

> Here is a company with 40 subsidiaries. Yet they cannot find anything, so they say, that they can place in this town that has these courageous men. What kind of company is this that would have this feeling and yet go into our area and tell us that they are going to make our future better? If this is the way in which they make our future better, I do not want any part of it.

We congratulate the hon. member for sticking up for the people he represents. We realize that he is a member of the Progressive Conservative party giving expression to the fact that he recognizes that this large corporation does not think of the employees and the people of Springhill first but that it thinks of the total rate of profit first.

I should also like to quote from the speech of the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) as reported at page 286 of Hansard of Friday, January 23 as follows:

> This gigantic corporation has the future destiny of Nova Scotians in the palm of its hand.

Not the government of Nova Scotia, Mr. Speaker, but this gigantic corporation.

> It is gigantic. It appears that the more gigantic a corporation becomes, the more ruthless it can be.

We have said that on this side of the house for a good number of years, and a great deal of displeasure was expressed on the other side of the house on occasion. Members thought we were exaggerating. This is a Progressive Conservative member giving expression to his opinion of the delinquencies of large corporations. He says this:

> It appears that the more gigantic a corporation becomes, the more ruthless it can be. I am sure that all members in this house and all Canadians who contribute through taxation to the development of industry are awaiting the answers to these and many other questions.

I may say that so are a good many people in Canada. May I give just one concluding illustration of the chaotic way in which other services are carried on without any sense of responsibility to the nation as a whole by capitalist interests. This has not to do with the development of natural resources but with our railway transportation. What about the action of the C.P.R. with respect to the reduction of its passenger service on the Kettle Valley railway to one Budd car twice a week? Here is the C.P.R., the parent company of Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company which has made hundreds of millions of dollars in profits which have benefited the C.P.R. This Kettle Valley line of the company, because of the large tonnage it hauls from Consolidated Mining and Smelting company's mines and plants, is an extremely profitable line. Regardless of the needs and wishes of 100,000 people who live in southeastern British Columbia and who produce the wealth of that country which provides the business for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the company reduced the passenger railway service to twice a week with one Budd car.

What are the people asking for? All they are asking for is that there be attached to this Budd car a sleeping car for the older people and mothers with children and a cafe car so that they can get something satisfactory to eat while on the way to Vancouver or to the interior. That is all they are asking. What has happened? The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) went to see Mr. Crump, the president of the Canadian Pacific railway. Mr. Crump said no. Who is in control of this country, Mr. Speaker, so far as transportation is concerned? Is it the government of Canada or is it Mr. Crump? We do not believe in that sort of thing. I can say this, Mr. Speaker: when a C.C.F. government gets into office, that sort of situation will be remedied quickly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Dictatorship.

Mr. Herridge: An hon. member says "dictatorship". That is his conception. Dictatorship, from his point of view, is the will of the people expressed through parliament rather than through the president of the C.P.R.

In connection with this necessity for a national policy for the development of natural resources, may I say this. I know the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has indicated some interest in this question throughout the years and more particularly recently, as well as the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton). I have heard rumours of the possibility of a national conference on conservation being called some time in the future. However, I make this suggestion. I hope that conference will be arranged as soon as possible because I think it is basic. Mistakes can be made in the monetary system and mistakes can be made in the building of structures but when serious mistakes are made in the management of our natural resources they cannot be easily remedied or if they are remedied it can only be done over a long period of time, at a great expense. In the meantime I suggest that surveys, including land use maps, are essential and I suggest that they should be undertaken immediately.

We have the forest inventory in Canada fairly well completed. I understand that we have a fairly accurate survey of our hydro resources. We now need a survey of our land resources and land use maps. This government and the preceding government or the people of Canada, shall I say, have provided land use maps for the people of Pakistan and the people of Ceylon, I believe, under the Colombo plan, and rightly so. If we can do that for these distant countries, surely we can get to work now on these surveys which are so necessary, to the end that when the conference is called it will have the basic information needed to formulate policy. I urge that these land use surveys be carried out at the first opportunity.

Before going on to another aspect of our program, I wish to say this. We hear about the untimely development of natural resources which we criticize, or development purely at the whim of large corporations or the waste in development because of the desire to get into operation as quickly as possible. What do we consider to be a planned expansion of our natural resources? We in this group say that the planned expansion of the economy and its natural resources in a stable manner should be sufficient to absorb the increasing labour force which results from the birth rate and from immigration as a result of a planned policy in that respect. We would much prefer to see a steady, and stable development of our resources rather than the boom and bust which exists in capitalist society and which in many cases leaves the people who have produced the wealth to suffer afterward.

We also believe that we need a planned fiscal system and planned credit policies to meet the requirements of planned production and development of resources. I am not going into that matter at length this afternoon, but I am just going to say this. The people all across Canada are concerned with inflation, which is another word for the increase in the cost of living. Particularly is this so of the lower income people, those on pensions and incomes of that type and also business people. Nothing can erode the stability of a country faster than continuing inflation. That lack of stability prevents enterprise, saving, investment in houses and all things of that type. I am just going to deal briefly with what are the causes of inflation. One of our members later in this debate will give to the house our policy with respect to meeting the present inflationary situation.

First of all may I say that the inflation after the war without a doubt was caused by accumulated savings during the war coming into the market shortly after the war was completed. I suppose the next serious inflationary period was at the time of the Korean war which provided a scramble for materials, commodities and services. Another factor causing inflation which we must not forget is the large expenditures on defence, a non-productive activity. Billions and billions of dollars have been poured into defence expenditures which are non-productive or non-wealth-producing. The people who are receiving incomes from defences production are also making claims on the production of the productive workers, and that has had an inflationary effect on the economy since the second world war.

Then, further, we have the wasteful and unplanned development of resources, a scramble for material for industrial requirements and services in our unplanned development, with companies competing against each other for their requirements and services. Another factor has been the increase in speculation in land values because these values have been increasing as a result of the actions of governments, whether federal or provincial, and because of developments which have been taking place in society. Certain people were able to foresee these things, or to have information about them, and to speculate in land values. That is another reason for inflation.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Finally—and I am only able to mention a few of these causes, the large increase in government expenditure has naturally had a bearing on the inflationary trend. It is a very complicated situation, particularly in an unplanned economy, and it cannot be solved without some correlation of our economic activities and planning.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that my time has almost expired, and I am only about half way through. However, we say that a national investment board is desirable in order to direct funds into socially valuable projects. I wish to say in this respect—and I am not suggesting we support the form of the government in question—that we may have something to learn from events in Yugoslavia since the end of the second world war. Yugoslavia is a country which has a population of about the same size as Canada. The postwar government inherited a war-devastated land whose forests and mineral wealth were owned by international financiers. With all their difficulties—and I might explain that the Yugoslav economy is somewhat more flexible than the Soviet—that government was able to produce an economy in which there is not one iota of inflation, and in which there has been no inflation for years, and under which not one Yugoslav citizen who is able to work need be unemployed. Again, I am not suggesting we should accept the Yugoslav political philosophy, but it is evident that this government has made great strides in planning.

I suggest we have something to learn from these people in this respect. Let us get some of their experience tacked on to our natural wealth and to our intelligence and our free institutions. With co-operation we can build in this country the planned economy which is required to give our people the living conditions and stability they seek at this time.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have participated in a debate in reply to the speech from the throne, which gives me an opportunity to pay my compliments to the mover of the address, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and to the seconder, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin).

I think the house has recognized the calibre and the future potential of these two young members. The thoughtfulness of the hon. member for Provencher and the honesty of his ideas are reassuring to the agricultural industry all across Canada. I think we recognize that the point of view of agriculture when expressed through him will always receive a mature presentation in this house. The Canadianism which ran through the speech of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet will, I think, give rise to a corresponding faith and inspiration in all parts of Canada.

Speaking of the amendment put forward by the C.C.F. group, I have noticed that one of the characteristics was the friendliness displayed between the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and the house leader of the C.C.F. group. This friendliness has intrigued me. When I think of the support given to the Leader of the Opposition by the house leader of the C.C.F. group some days ago my mind went back to some of the speeches made by that hon. gentleman when he was back in the west, and I would advise the Leader of the Opposition that he should beware: the things that are said by the C.C.F. leader in the house are not always the same as the things he says when he is out in the country. I have a clipping here dated Thursday, November 27, from the Regina Leader-Post. I will not read it all, but this is a taste of the type of thing we have to bear. This is a report of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) speaking in Regina, and this is what the paper said:

> In his criticism of the Liberal party he attacked Liberal leader Lester Pearson saying "Mike Pearson isn't taking the Liberal party anywhere, because Mike Pearson himself doesn't know where he is going."

I have sympathy with the leader of the C.C.F. group here because I know it is not a very pleasant thing to have a crown prince lurking in the background, particularly when the heir apparent is advising labour unions to go out and get all they can, regardless of the consequences to the rank and file of those labour unions, and regardless of the consequences to the Canadian consumer or to Canadians in general. I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia realizes the predicament he is in. I think he knows that a King Richard on a crusade can be very unhappy with a King John conspiring in the background.

The political peregrinations of the C.C.F. house leader before the session opened carried him to many places and saw him make many strange remarks. One of those places was Springfield, and I know the house will be interested in some of the comments made on that occasion in connection with the byelection. I have here the Winnipeg Free Press of December 11, 1958, from which I intend to read certain extracts to the house so that we may understand precisely what goes on in the west between sessions and be able to compare it with what happens here. This is the quotation:

> Federal reinforcements re-entered the Springfield byelection battle on the C.C.F. front here Wednesday in the person of Hazen Argue, and the party's house leader promptly opened a vicious attack on the Tories for not keeping election promises—
> Noting that certain western farm organizations were considering a march on Ottawa to demand deficiency payments, Mr. Argue said there was a more effective way to show the government it had done wrong.
>
> "You can do that by electing Jake Schulz," he stated. "Politicians are deaf to many things, especially delegations, but if you vote for Jake they will hear the ballots drop as far away as Ottawa—"
> The speaker also slammed the Conservatives for the "galloping inflation" which has reduced the value of the dollar to 45 cents in terms of what it would buy in 1939.

I hope the C.C.F. leader was incorrectly reported, since to accuse the government of making such a mess of things that it has reduced the value of the dollar to 45 cents in a year and a half is getting into the realm of slight exaggeration. I suggest to the hon. member that if he intends to use this as a political weapon he had better have a talk with Mr. Knowles before he starts speaking about inflation, because Mr. Knowles believes that a little bit of inflation is a good thing. He is going to need some advice from the hon. member for Assiniboia, as I say—but do not let him give it to us in the west because, unfortunately, we know the situation too well. I should think we could all deduce from this that the hon. member for Assiniboia and the aspiring crown prince in the wings are riding off in two different directions.

There is something more in this article in which I think the house would be interested. These are remarks of the candidate in the riding of Springfield, a former hon. member of this house, Mr. Jake Schulz. I wish to place this portion of the article on the record:

> The candidate, recalling his defeat in the last election, likened that election to the hula hoop craze. It took a strong mind "to resist the barrage of Diefenbaker propaganda."
> But there's no "Diefenbaker hula hoop campaigns" this time, said Mr. Schulz. They can't get to the people this time, it's too cold. And when people are left alone they will do the right thing.
> "The right thing," he aded, "is to vote for me." If you elect a Conservative you will be endorsing the government's policy.

Mr. Speaker, it was cold in Springfield. Several blizzards during the period of the campaign forced the cancellation of many meetings including those of the premier of Saskatchewan. On election day, when daylight came, the temperature was 24 degrees below zero, according to my information. On election evening when the ballots were counted the C.C.F. ran third. The C.C.F. candidate who had won the seat in 1957 ran third in 1958. The people of Springfield did speak and Canada heard them.

Springfield is a representative riding having a large farm population combined with a large urban population. In the constituency there are trappers, farmers, miners and people in many other occupations. The Liberals threw in their first team and the C.C.F. had at least one member of parliament there during the period of the campaign, or rather a former member of parliament from Saskatchewan. The government was represented there by brief visits from four cabinet ministers. Because Winnipeg is a C.B.C. serviced city, television could not be used. All parties were faced with the same 30 inches of snow, blocked roads, high winds; it was a fair fight. It could not be considered a Conservative constituency by tradition. In 1957 only 1700 people voted Conservative. Springfield was won because of the policy of the Diefenbaker government. Although traditionally Liberal, that seat was won by the Conservative party because of its agricultural policy and its development policy.

I also noticed that the house leader of the C.C.F. visited another town in that constituency and this time he discussed freight rates. His first move was to make a statement of government policy. Let me read a press clipping from the Winnipeg Tribune of December 12, 1958:

"The federal government will announce through the Hon. Gordon Churchill on Friday in Beausejour action equivalent to lowering the recent 17 per cent freight rate boost to 10 per cent", Mr. Argue said.

I have often wondered where some of these stories appear from and I think we have established a source. This should be a lesson to the hon. member for Assiniboia. On at least two occasions since the change of government he has attempted to anticipate government policy and by so doing he does not build up for himself a reputation for accuracy.

Mr. Argue: I had some faith in you. I thought you were better than you are.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Let us read some additional comments in his speech as reported in the Tribune:

—the C.C.F. leader said that any change in the present freight rate structure will come because of the Springfield by-election. "Springfield has more influence on the government than the eight provinces combined that protested the freight rate increase", Mr. Argue said.

Well, Springfield spoke and we know the answer. I do not know what the impact on the government will be, as a result of the C.C.F. candidate running third there, but I do know the people of western Canada are very glad and grateful that the present Prime Minister is in power when it comes to the matter of discrimination on freight rates that the Liberals allowed and refused to correct in their long period of office. I believe that Canadians generally will be pleased at the Prime Minister's statements about the statutory Crowsnest pass rates. I trust that this will put an end to the rumours, innuendoes and distortions that have mysteriously sprung up all over the west in the last few months.

Another interesting example of contradictions and confusion in the ranks of the opposition lies in their statements on the disposal of surplus wheat. Everyone remembers the strong opinions held by the hon. member for Assiniboia about the necessity of disposing of our surplus wheat. Yet I find in an article in the Kingston Whig Standard of December 10, 1958, over a Canadian Press by-line, the following statement attributed to the C.C.F. house leader:

But I think it would be misusing the general overall purpose of the Colombo plan if we use it as a means of getting rid of surplus wheat.

This is most unusual, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister made it very clear last August 30 how the Conservative party was adding a third dimension to the Colombo plan. The house leader of the C.C.F. rose in his place and, as reported at page 4351 of Hansard of that date, said:

"We, in the C.C.F., have asked for a surplus wheat disposal program for many years."

He made no mention of criticism with respect to adding this third dimension to the Colombo plan. He does not refer to it as an additional means of getting rid of surplus wheat.

Mr. Argue: Those statements are not contradictory. If the hon. gentleman will permit me to do so I will explain it to him.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): You will have to explain it—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wishes to obtain the permission of the minister to ask a question he may do so but he cannot interrupt the minister in the course of his remarks.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might say a word at this time?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think the hon. member—

Mr. Argue: I would like to ask the minister a question—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Argue: Does the minister not know that there is a difference between making gifts under the Colombo plan—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must repeat once again to the hon. member that if he wishes to ask the minister a question he may do so with permission from the speaker who has the floor but he cannot make a speech at this time.

Mr. Argue: I would remind you that the minister sat down in his seat when I asked permission.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes he did.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I might point out to the hon. gentleman that I took my seat when I observed Mr. Speaker on his feet.

Regarding the question of the Colombo plan I know as well as any hon. member of the house the various components that make up the Colombo plan, the technical and economic assistance as well as the aid of other types. What I was saying was that last summer, on August 30, when the Prime Minister added a third dimension to the two previous dimensions of the Colombo plan there was no opposition in this house from the C.C.F. or anyone else as far as I can ascertain and yet we have statements appearing in the press that seem to indicate that the C.C.F. party through the person of its house leader is casting doubts on the use of this third dimension of the Colombo plan to help those people who so desperately need help and at the same time dispose of our surplus wheat.

Mr. Argue: That is not true.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The hon. gentleman will have ample opportunity in future debates to make his position clear. I am simply saying that when I read these statements in the press I reached the conclusions I have mentioned.

We as a government through the leadership of the Prime Minister are trying to put vigour into Canada's efforts to dispose of wheat abroad. The Prime Minister was in India, Pakistan and other commonwealth countries discussing, among the other important things he discussed, the disposal of our surplus wheat. At the same time that this was going on we have the leader of the C.C.F. house party squawking in public gatherings in western Canada that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) was hunting tigers.

Mr. Argue: Was he not?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): And assuming thereby that the people would think that he was wasting his time.

Mr. Argue: Was he not?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I would ask the hon. member for Assiniboia not to take my word for it that he was not wasting his time but to read an editorial in the January 22 issue of the Western Producer; two long columns of approval of what the Prime Minister is doing for Canada, not only in the realm of world peace but also in the realm of getting rid of some of our surplus products.

Everything I have said adds up to only one thing. These angry squawks, these incorrect predictions, these wild statements, these contradictory opinions expressed by the leader of the C.C.F. party in this house and across the country add nothing to the body of constructive thought in Canada. It is his failure, and his party's failure, to refrain from irresponsible actions that are causing the difficulties that the party is having today.

I hold in my hand a copy of the Gallup poll and I do not want to—

Mr. Argue: This is the most attention I have had in years.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): —fill the record up too much. However, I will just point out—

Mr. Argue: The greatest compliment I have had in many years.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): —that in July in western Canada the C.C.F. support was shown as 19 per cent. In October, as the hon. member for Assiniboia got his campaign rolling in western Canada, it dropped to 17 per cent. Then, on January 14, the date of this poll, it was down to 16 per cent. Naturally, as politicians, we want him to go up and down the country making those irresponsible statements because it destroys the party. But I might point out before I go on that the Liberals are dropping in the west, too. They have dropped two points in the last two months and we have gone up three points.

Mr. Robichaud: What about the maritimes?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I will let the hon. member for Gloucester look after the maritimes.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is doing it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am not the only one who shares these views about the C.C.F. I have here the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science, for May, 1958, which contains an extract from the minutes of the C.C.F. national council. This is a statement by one of the very top C.C.F. leaders, according to this account. Let the house listen to what a very top C.C.F. leader says is the cause of the C.C.F. failure. I am quoting:

"We have to look very realistically over the period of the last 10 or 15 years and recognize that we have lost ground. The best indication of our weakness is that the old line parties are no longer afraid of us. The average person on the street doesn't keep backing a fighter who has been knocked out five or six times in a row and has no prospects of ever becoming champion. You have to have a party that looks as though it is going somewhere, a party that is increasing its prestige and its strength and frankly I don't think we are."

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Leave it to the end of my speech.

Mr. Fisher: Will the minister give the date of the quotation, not the date of the article?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The date of the quotation is 1956.

Mr. Drysdale: Still going down.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am not accusing the hon. member for Assiniboia of being knocked out five or six times or of being punch drunk, but I am saying that he would do a service to his country and to agriculture in particular if he would make an effort to be more consistent and more responsible, and I know he can do it. I hold in my hand an article from the Winnipeg Tribune of November 28, 1958, in which the hon. member proposed a bill of rights for agriculture consisting of 12 points. I can honestly say, Mr. Speaker, that the great majority of farmers in western Canada could support almost every point of this 12-point program. It is a constructive program; it is a thoughtful program and if the hon. member really believed it he would walk across the floor of this house and support the government, because almost every point, except one, is part and parcel of the national agricultural policy of this government.

Mr. Argue: He is on both sides in his own argument.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I want to be kind; I always like to find some good in every one. In the house on Friday the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) told us about a quotation from a former member of this house who has now turned author, a man by the name of Right Hon. James G. Gardiner. He quoted from this new author's published articles the fact that the Conservatives were setting agricultural prices too high. The minister then went on to remind the house that the hon. member for Assiniboia was saying that we were putting them too low. And he said he would leave it to the house to judge between the two statements. I am saying that from what I have already said the people of western Canada have also judged, if the Gallup poll is any indication, and if the election of last March was any indication.

I would like to put on the record for the first time some of the figures which show the thinking in my own province of Saskatchewan. I can do this with some feeling. In 1953, the P.C. vote was 43,677; the Liberal vote was 133,495; the C.C.F. vote was 156,306; others were 20,605; and a total of 317,000 people turned out to vote. Many thought there was no chance of defeating the Liberal government. Some stayed at home; others voted C.C.F. and for other splinter parties. But, in 1957 a change is noted: 90,359 voted P.C.; 118,282 voted Liberal. That was a drop of about 15,000. The C.C.F. dropped to 140,293 and others received 41,292; but this time more turned out, 390,000.

The next spring, 1958, 205,452, 52 per cent, voted P.C.; the Liberals dropped further to 78,124, 19 per cent; the C.C.F. continued their avalanche downward to 112,800; and others were decimated, 2,349, or one per cent. In that winter election 398,000 people in Saskatchewan turned out. Surely, this is some evidence of a tremendous demonstration that something had been wrong and that the people had faith in the Conservative party led by John Diefenbaker, that he would help us do something about it.

For years we had sought for a comprehensive farm program in the west because we knew this was necessary to get at the basic troubles of agriculture. On Friday the house heard the Minister of Agriculture describe the progress to date in that program. I think there is reason, Mr. Speaker, why we held Springfield and why our vote is still going up in western Canada.

I was very pleased myself to hear the Minister of Agriculture tell the house how this year the cost to the farmers rose one per cent but that the gross income rose 10 per cent. This trend of rising costs and declining revenues has been checked; at least we are ahead a little bit. I do know, looking at the figures of Saskatchewan and the prairie provinces generally, that the impact of this government's policies has been most pronounced in the prairies. I could recite to this house not only the impact of the housing program, the impact of the start of the work on the dam, the impact of the northern roads, the impact of the new discoveries in oil and gas, the impact of the potash industry, the impact of all the cattle we are producing, which are up nearly 170,000 head in the last two years, but the effect of the stabilization prices is giving peace of mind to the farmers of the west for the first time. But all this reciting would not destroy the fact that we know and western Canadians know that the task is not yet completed. Therefore, to assume that we are satisfied with this gain of 10 per cent in the gross revenue or nine per cent in the net is not to prematurely measure this government.

We are pledged to a policy of bringing to the people engaged in agriculture all across the country, not only in the west, a fair share of the national income. To that policy we will remain dedicated and we will keep working with the idea that year by year this thing will pick up and we will be able to give these people, who have borne such a heavy load in this country's growth, their reasonable, fair share in the years to come.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the minister would permit a question?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am waiting until the end of my speech for all questions. I do not intend to dwell much longer on the C.C.F. but there is one personal matter I should like to clear up once and for all. The hon. member for Assiniboia stated once last session and again this session that I had stood for deficiency payments during the election campaign. Last Monday I stood up and repudiated this suggestion and said that I would speak at greater length upon it. For the sake of the record I should like the house to judge the truth of this whole matter. I am going to read the actual words I used at Grenfell, Saskatchewan, on February 22, 1958, when speaking at my nominating convention. Because of the television cameras, the radio equipment and all the reporters in front of me I spoke from a prepared text. This is what I actually said:

> "Representations have been made by the wheat pools and the Canadian federation of agriculture to the federal government concerning deficiency payments on western grains. This matter is now being considered. However, we would be very unwilling to support any proposal where 80 per cent of the money went into the hands of 25 per cent of the farmers. Our minds are completely open and we are willing to meet the challenge to provide a fair share of the national income to agriculture."

Those are the words from the prepared text. Here are the words of the Canadian Press dispatch, and I ask the house to compare them:

> "As for deficiency payments, the matter is being considered. However, we would be very reluctant to support any proposal where 80 per cent of the money went into the hands of 5 per cent of the farmers."

I think the statement in the Canadian Press dispatch is a fair one, but much better evidence than that is the fact that all across Saskatchewan during the campaign I was distinctly conscious that C.C.F. candidates throughout western Canada used this Canadian Press statement and other similar statements in other places. As late as March 28 the premier of Saskatchewan, speaking in the same town of Grenfell, castigated me over a provincial-wide radio hook-up for having made a speech of that nature. I simply say that the people of the west knew fully what our stand was. Our minds were open. We were considering the matter but I did put it very clearly that we would be most reluctant to do anything whereby 80 per cent of the money would go into the hands of 25 per cent of the farmers. I think there was a very clear understanding by the people of the west as to where I stood on this matter.

In fairness to the hon. member for Assiniboia, I think he knows that I know that he based his remarks on a newspaper clipping which I have seen but perhaps he should have read all the other newspaper articles in which were listed the whole series of problems to which the government was giving consideration. If you read the statement in the light of all the other statements I think it can be said that the people of Saskatchewan fully understood the issue.

In my final ten minutes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to turn to a subject which will be of never-ending interest to Canadians. I refer to the government's "national development program". Recently I have noticed hints in the newspapers that the vision is fading and is growing dim. I am not going to bother to read these statements. All I am going to do is to state flatly that as far as the government is concerned exactly the opposite is true. Never has the government been so busy as it is at the present moment in pushing forward its plans and programs that comprise the first stages in our blueprint of a plan to build a nation of 50 million to 100 million people. The first phase of the development program can be divided into three main parts.

The first of these is delineation of resources. In this country we have no Paley report but through the Borden commission, through our roads to resources program, through research and through a new motivation in our drive north we are making rapid progress on this first part of our development program.

The second part of the "national development program," dealing with the development of power and the things that go with it in the Atlantic provinces, in the prairies and in British Columbia, is moving satisfactorily.

The third part of the development program is conservation, and I think the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) can join with me in everything I say from now on. On no subject has more been written than on conservation but on no subject has there been less done at the federal level. However, at long last the wheels have begun to turn. On November 17 last representatives of the ten provinces met with me and my colleagues to lay the plans for a national conservation conference in 1960. All of us recognized the unlimited scope of the problem and the need to establish desirable conservation programs across Canada.

Within the next two months the provinces will present statements of what they are doing and the gaps that they see in a desirable conservation program. From then on the machinery will begin to roll. I think it would be preferable, Mr. Speaker, rather than giving the details at this time, to say that I will make myself available in the standing committee to go into the details of this operation. With respect to the suggestion of the hon. member for Kootenay West about land use maps in the national parks and all across Canada, may I say that that is one of the proposals we have already offered to the provinces as part of an over-all program in 1960.

Mr. Herridge: Good.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): It is my firm conviction that the provincial governments and the federal government can co-operate to formulate the principles under which governments, conservation districts, private organizations and universities can operate. I feel that in 1960 we may have begun a program of conservation and resource management unparalleled in this country and equal in importance in my mind to the contributions made by Theodore Roosevelt to the United States nearly 60 years ago.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, since the opening phases of the national development program, as announced by the Prime Minister almost a year ago, are now well in hand, I think that it would be of interest if I gave the house some indication of the research projects and activities of the government leading to greater and broader knowledge and better organization of our national development program. Under the leadership of the national research council we have embarked on a study of long range transmission of electrical power.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was begun about four years ago.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The accomplishments of Russia, Sweden and of one of our own Canadian companies in developing high voltage transmission lines have not passed unnoticed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Was that not begun about four years ago?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): It does not require too much thought to realize the direction in which the government's program is heading. I should like to point out to the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) that the scientific committee of privy council had not met for many years until this government took office.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course that is not true, and you know it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I know what the records show.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But you are wholly inaccurate. Understandable but inevitable exaggeration.

Mr. Argue: You have been inaccurate all afternoon.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I would not let the hon. member lead me into the position where I could tell him what actually went on in the last few years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Say what you think. This is the place.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): My department has worked out a five year program of accelerating forest research, both basic and applied. The first stages of this go into operation in 1959-60. The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has worked out a program of building new hydrographic ships and the improvement of existing ships that should result in five years in a doubling of the effort in this field in which we are very far behind in our governmental responsibilities. Plans are also being prepared by the department that should result in the doubling of activities in the geological and geophysical services to this country.

Last year the house approved a vote to move material to Resolute Bay in order that our research program on oceanography and geophysical survey, as well as other forms of research, could be undertaken this year, that is in March 1959, in the Queen Elizabeth islands in the Arctic. I should like to tell members of the house that it seems fitting that the bases used in this program rest on islands named after Borden and Meighen, members of a government which nearly 50 years ago authorized Stefansson's expedition.

The Department of Transport is studying the matter of atomic icebreakers and atomic submarines. Both the national research council and the department of northern affairs are accelerating experimental work on better and cheaper housing for northern areas. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the pulp and paper institute, with government assistance, are working on new techniques for sewage disposal.

Atomic Energy of Canada, in co-operation with the provincial government of Ontario, has started a large scale multimillion dollar program on development of large and medium-sized atomic plants.

It is the hope of our department that, in co-operation with Atomic Emergy of Canada and a Canadian electrical company, we will be able to work out the difficulties of building a nuclear power plant for use in the far north. We hope that this plant will provide not only economic heat and power for northern communities, but will also become another Canadian product available to the markets of the world. This private company, which is a subsidiary of a United States company, should be congratulated for entering into a research program in co-operation with the federal government which should enable us to produce a competitive Canadian product and better nuclear plants in the future.

Research by itself is not enough. There must be careful direction and co-ordination over all areas at the executive and administrative levels. The government has taken action to provide this direction and co-ordination. In addition, there has had to be some reorganization of government departments. The Department of Agriculture has already announced its reorganization with a special division for research activities. My department has completed a major internal reorganization which I shall outline, if I get the opportunity, to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters.

In the last session, Mr. Speaker, I spoke of the necessity of effective occupation in the north. I think hon. members will approve of a short report in this field. There are now increasing numbers of Canadian weather stations in the north. These are very important to our plans for improving communications by sea and air to our northern islands. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) has announced plans for taking over four airfields on our northern coast. This will mean increased convenience to geological parties operating in these northern areas. Canadian companies supplied all the western D.E.W. line stations in 1958, and in 1959 it is expected that all D.E.W. line stations will be supplied by Canadian agencies. Last Monday the government announced the taking over of operational control of the D.E.W. line.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): Following the time-honoured custom, Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I think they did credit to themselves and to their constituencies. I am sure all members of this house are pleased that you, Mr. Speaker, are still with us. We were all disturbed over the rumour that your splendid services might be lost to this house as a result of appointment in another field of the public service of Canada. This other field of the public service has suffered a loss by you remaining here, but we have gained.

The speech from the throne covers many measures to come before this house. However, until those items are presented in legislative form little, if any, detailed information is available to the members of the opposition. The first words in the throne speech advised us of the forthcoming visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip. This announcement was welcomed with the greatest of pleasure by all Canadians. The itinerary for the Queen's visit has now been released. While it is realized that all sections of Canada cannot be visited by Her Majesty, it seems only reasonable to expect that in so far as possible the itinerary will include places which the Queen did not visit on her last tour. The itinerary for New Brunswick follows the same course as was followed during the last visit.

Once again, it is found that Her Majesty will not visit the north or northeast part of the province. The citizens of Northumberland-Miramichi had high hopes they would be given the honour and privilege of welcoming the Queen and her consort. It was hoped the tour would include a motor trip from Fredericton down through the beautiful Miramichi valley to the towns of Newcastle and Chatham, or, as an alternative, a flight by air to the Chatham R.C.A.F. station with the opportunity of a stop-over at government house in South Nelson, the residence of the Hon. J. L. O'Brien, New Brunswick's lieutenant governor, the Queen's representative in our province.

Your efforts, Mr. Speaker, toward putting an end to the reading of speeches are commendable. In the past efforts have failed to bring about the desired result. It is understood and agreed by all parties that this restriction will come into effect following the throne speech debate. This may prove to be a handicap to many members for a time, but in the end it will result in better debates, even if the choice of words and phraseology suffers somewhat. These efforts toward eliminating the reading of speeches will be watched with keen interest. The results, if achieved, will take time. The use of notes will have to be clearly defined, as the use of copious notes borders closely on the reading of a speech. I am sure all members are anxious to co-operate. However, some latitude will have to be given at the outset, with restrictions being progressively more strictly applied as the session moves forward. If this is not done, many members will be timid about taking part in debate. No doubt this restriction will shorten the length of the debates, but it will not take away any worthwhile contributions.

Two serious problems face Canada today, unemployment and inflation. Despite the statement that unemployment has passed the peak, indications point to serious unemployment during 1959. This is particularly true of the Atlantic provinces. Inflation is also a most serious problem. Despite the statement of a member of the government that inflation and unemployment will have no serious effect on our economy in 1959, I am sure the majority of Canadians do not share that feeling.

Unemployment has been the topic of many Conservative members speaking in this debate as well as of opposition members. Members of all parties from all sections of Canada have called upon the government to take action to combat rising unemployment. Responsible civic organizations and other levels of government across Canada have also called upon the government to take action to combat unemployment. Government action to date has failed to bring about any worthwhile results. For government spokesmen to say that unemployment is on the decline is a misrepresentation of the actual situation. Figures can be twisted around to make the situation look better or worse than it actually is. I doubt that any one would conscientiously say that unemployment is not a serious problem and that the future looks bright. The fast-depleting unemployment insurance fund is proof of the seriousness of the situation, and this depletion of the fund does not show the full impact of unemployment.

The state of unemployment is particularly true in the Atlantic provinces where unemployment figures are rising rapidly to new all-time high records. The official forecasts for March for the maritimes present a bleak picture, based on the continuing loss of markets in mining, forest products and fishing.

Grave concern is felt in the maritime provinces over the plan to keep the St. Lawrence river open on a year-round basis for the export and import of commodities by water to and from Canada particularly during the winter months. If this plan is put into operation the maritime ports will suffer and serious adverse effects will follow for the economy of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in particular and the maritimes in general. I join with other individuals and groups in protesting against action that will adversely affect our maritime winter ports. If Canada is to survive as a nation of distributed wealth, a plan of "live and let live" must be followed.

Mr. Speaker, we are still waiting for a report on the study of the feasibility of a causeway between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. This survey was started by the Liberal government in 1956 and the people of these provinces are looking for an interim report in view of the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on February 5, 1958—almost a year ago—when he said that the federal government had ordered an immediate engineering study of this project. We wait patiently for an interim report on this matter.

As to the Chignecto canal, the survey was promised and possibly it was started but apparently it bogged down because the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), when asked for a report on this project in this house on Friday last, refused to give one. I am not going to spell out the many advantages that could have been derived from the construction of the Chignecto canal—they have been placed on the record many times in the past—over the years since it was a firm commitment at the time of confederation.

Most of the maritime members of both parties are on record in favour of the early survey and construction of this Chignecto canal. Maritime municipalities, city and town councils, have made representations, for the construction of the Chignecto canal and have urged that the pledge of confederation be honoured as a vital asset to the economy of the maritimes. The need of the Chignecto canal has been recognized in the maritimes over the years. The need is much greater now with the construction of a large oil refinery now under way at Saint John. Proof of the much talked about "aid to the maritimes program" could become a reality by the undertaking of this project.

Since the bill of rights was introduced at the last session, many qualified groups across Canada have expressed the opinion that, desirable as a bill of rights might be, there is no particular rush for the passing of this bill at this session. These groups contend that further study should be given by both houses of parliament at this session, when an exacting study which the legislation deserves can be given with a view to improving the proposed legislation and at which time representations can be heard from interested groups before a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons.

I turn now to a matter that has caused a good deal of concern and, may I say, a good deal of criticism in the constituency I represent and in all of northeast New Brunswick. At the present time in the constituency which I represent television reception ranges from black-out to snow flurries to rolling pictures to fair reception under ideal conditions. This television service is received from privately owned stations located at Moncton and Saint John. The reason for the poor reception is the fact that these stations are upwards of 100 miles distant. The northeast counties of the province, namely Gloucester and Restigouche, are without television services owing to being an even greater distance away from the stations.

The people of the area which I represent have no quarrel with the privately owned stations with regard to the television reception. On the contrary, they appreciate the programs they are able to receive when conditions are good. They realize that the giving of service to that part of the country, owing to its location and other features, is the responsibility of the C.B.C. The people of Northumberland-Miramichi and the people of northeast New Brunswick feel that they are entitled to their share of the C.B.C. publicly-owned television services. Most Canadians enjoy good C.B.C. television or are located within areas adequately covered by privately-owned stations. Many Canadians have a choice of four or more channels.

Previous requests to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan)—the spokesman for the C.B.C. in parliament—and to the C.B.C. board of governors for C.B.C. television services for northeast New Brunswick have failed to bring about the desired result. The northeast part of New Brunswick can readily be served by the C.B.C. from its system on the west side of the province. There is no good reason why a C.B.C. satellite or repeater or translator, whatever it may be called, cannot be erected on the high ground at the county boundary line between Northumberland and Gloucester counties and be hooked up with the C.B.C. system on the west side of the province. This hook-up would provide good reception in northeast and eastern New Brunswick, an area with a heavy density of population which is now quite without television reception except in the fringe areas where reception is not constant.

I wish now to say a few words with regard to the fishing industry and in particular in connection with fishing on the east coast of Canada. Fishing, as I am sure every hon. member knows, is very important to large sections of the Atlantic provinces, and in this regard problems are mounting almost daily. The most serious aspect of these problems in the Atlantic fisheries is the future of our markets. Newfoundland has a most serious problem in this regard. The Department of Fisheries is striving to improve the lot of our fishermen by research and other methods. What is causing so much distress in the industry is the lack of markets and the loss of former markets. This has jeopardized our position in the traditional fish markets. Markets for Atlantic fish products must be recovered and new ones opened up if the industry is to survive.

The Miramichi fishing industry remains, on the whole, fairly steady. Catches of the different species of fish fluctuate, however, and the economy of fishing villages and of the Miramichi fishing industry has its ups and downs. Most of the products are in the delicacy class and a ready market is found for them. The problem is the lack of quantity, which makes conservation measures of prime importance for the future. Public attention was focused on the Miramichi area last year when lobster poachers became very aggressive and in one instance resorted to the use of firearms to scare off protection officers. Illegal fishing, and in particular tactics employed to scare off protection officers are condemned by the vast majority of fishermen who are law abiding citizens, who work the hardest for the smallest remuneration, and who realize that illegal fishing has serious effects on future stocks, a factor which subsequently affects the livelihood of all those engaged in the various phases of the industry.

On previous occasions I have requested the Department of Fisheries to provide a series of talks to fishing groups in their respective localities augmented by the showing of films, slides and charts in order to emphasize the importance of conservation and the drastic results of illegal fishing, and to impress upon fishermen the dangers of taking undersized fish, in particular fish that are necessary for propagation.

Although an educational program would bring about splendid results there will always be a few men who will fish illegally. It is necessary, therefore, to maintain active and progressive protection measures in order to protect the industry and safeguard the livelihood of law abiding fishermen. More aggressive measures should be taken against purchasers of illegal fish. If the outlets where illegal fish are sold are put out of business illegal fishing on a large scale will be eliminated, particularly in the lobster fishing industry.

A request has been made by the Miramichi salmon drifters association for a change in the drift net fishing season dates. The minister has informed me that the matter will be referred to the Atlantic salmon co-ordinating committee. Other representations have been made from time to time by the Miramichi commercial fishing association and the Miramichi salmon association incorporated. All aspects of Miramichi salmon fishing should receive exhaustive study by the co-ordinating committee before the committee makes its annual recommendations to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) with regard to bringing about mutual agreement on the fishing dates among the three groups, namely the drifters, the set netters and sport fishermen.

Fishing facilities on the Miramichi river are, on the whole, fairly adequate. There are, however, a number of small fishing areas which lack adequate facilities and I trust these will be provided in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I have said on former occasions in this house: the status of the Department of Fisheries should be raised and additional moneys provided so that the department may do the things that are necessary to be done in order to bring the Atlantic fishing industry into its proper perspective so that it can fully promote the industry which is so vital to the economy of the Atlantic provinces.

In conclusion, I urge the government to put into effect now a plan of action designed to ease the recession and to bring back the stability of the Canadian dollar. Whatever action is required, drastic though it may be, the Canadian people look to this government to measure up to the task, while the people, for their part, are prepared to do whatever is necessary to safeguard the future of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul Lahaye (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings of apprehension and pride that I accept the responsibility of speaking for the first time in the House of Commons.

Like those who spoke before me, may I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I admire the dignity and the competence with which you are conducting the proceedings of this house and which give them the sober character that becomes the highest chamber of this country.

[Mr. McWilliam.]

May I congratulate also the deputy speaker (Mr. Sevigny) as well as the deputy chairman of committees of the whole (Mr. Rea).

I feel bound to refer to the last by-election which brought new members to this house. I congratulate those new members, particularly the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman), who adds to this house a new note of brightness. On this point, I recall the particularly pleasant remark of one of my predecessors here, now president of the legislative council of the province of Quebec, the hon. Jean Louis Baribeau, who used to say that "an assembly without women, is like a garden without flowers", a statement I am pleased to endorse at this time.

I want to congratulate particularly the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Mr. Jorgenson). I listened to his speech very carefully, because he is a western farmer. Being a farmer myself, I was particularly interested. He said that western Canada faces a very serious problem, perhaps the most serious of all, that of wheat. I was glad to see that this year, the Conservative government has succeeded in exporting more wheat than ever before. This is a proof of the government's efficiency. I rejoice with the western farmer about that.

Nor did I fail to note, Mr. Speaker, that in the course of his remarks, the hon. member referred to problems which are similar to those of the eastern farmers. I take this opportunity to say that, for the first time, and in an efficient way, a government has shown concern for the eastern farmers of Canada. We had been used in the past to consider agriculture as a western business. I am glad that active consideration is being given to the benefit of the Canadian western farmers, but I am now much happier to note that the government now concerns itself with the problems of all Canadian farmers, both of western and eastern Canada.

May I merely mention, as evidence of that, the magnificent bill introduced last year, that is, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, which helped the eastern farmers—those small farmers still operating a family farm—to face the future with a little confidence and to stop being the victims of that uncertainty which had always been their lot under previous regimes.

As soon as the Conservative government came into power in 1957, I had the opportunity and pleasure of being part of the Quebec delegation which had come to meet those of the other provinces, and ask the newly-elected government—in fact, it was so recently elected, at the time, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) was still only acting minister—to do something to stop the dumping of poultry, and more particularly of turkeys, on the Canadian market. The situation was such that in the fall of 1956, Canadian producers had to sell at a loss on a dwindling market. I am happy to state that from then on, the Conservative government began to concern itself with the plight of Canadian poultry breeders and that, right away, we obtained from the ministers who met us on that occasion—I attended the meeting as the representative of the turkey breeders of the province of Quebec and also, if I may be allowed to mention this, as president of the biggest and best turkey hatchery in Quebec province, the Batiscan hatchery—as I was saying, we immediately obtained the establishment of a control over imports of turkey meat from the United States. As a matter of fact, I think it was the following day that a cabinet order settled the situation, with the following results: while we had imported 6,500,000 pounds of turkey and chicken meat from the United States in 1957, the figure for 1958, following establishment of this control and despite certain protests to the Minister of Agriculture, was only 167,000 pounds of old turkey meat suitable for soup, and about 300,000 pounds of roasting turkey. Those were the imports made up to last October.

This shows the difference, Mr. Speaker between the situation existing in 1957, when our imports reached 6½ million pounds of turkey meat, and the situation in 1958, when the figure was kept down to about 500,000 pounds. Here is a case of action to improve agricultural conditions in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, to assess improvements that have occurred in the agricultural field, I think it can still be useful to review the situation previously obtaining. I shall not go back very far, but it is a historical fact that at the end of the Korean war, we, the farmers of the province of Quebec, felt at the time—that was in 1950-51—that our income could compare quite favourably with that of other classes of society. We then sold beef at 40 to 50 cents a pound, pork at about 50 cents a pound, and milk at $3.50 a hundredweight, which made the situation normal. Later on, agricultural conditions in the province kept deteriorating, reaching a period where milk sold at $2 and a few cents per hundred-weight. The price of pork fell to 22 or 23 cents a pound, which was the minimum price at the time, and beef fell as low as 20 cents a pound.

This drop in prices made the farmer's situation absolutely unbearable, and forced farmers' sons to leave home. These young farmers, the very life blood and future of our country, were moving to the cities.

Hog prices, at the time, fluctuated to an extent that I would describe as indecent, if I may be pardoned the phrase. Some farmers were buying hogs 4 to 5 weeks old, when prices were running between 35 and 40 cents, in the hope of selling them at the same price; but, when the time came to sell them, prices had dropped to 23 cents, with disastrous results for many of our breeders. Such was the situation facing our farmers when the government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker came to power. At present, the price of hogs is at a minimum, I'll grant you that. This is understandable, since hog breeding has developed in an extraordinary way in Canada. Therefore, we are glad that prices have remained stable and that the United States are there to absorb our surpluses in that field. The situation will probably remain the same with minimum prices, for we must necessarily face the situation as it is now. We are glad that prices remain reasonably fair, because at the present time the United States are still importing our surplus quantities.

With regard to an important point referred to the other day by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) when he spoke of what he called... vertical integration—I apologize for having hesitated over that word —I fully agree with his remarks.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the difficulties we are experiencing in the sale of pork, and which seem to be extending to poultry as well, are the result of the purchasing policies of certain firms, but mainly stem from the fact that certain firms dealing in feeds strongly insist that farmers get organized to practise what is termed speculative raising.

Mr. Speaker, I caution our farmers against this danger, and urge them to retain their independence. I would hate to see our agricultural class play into the hands of firms that are more concerned with their own interests than with the interests of our farmers. I urge our farmers to remain free, and should they decide to go into speculative raising, I remind them that this represents an initial outlay of about $5 for a heavy grade turkey, quite a considerable investment for a type of raising that has almost reached the point of saturation. Before going into speculative raising on such a large scale, they must first seek out sure markets where their products will be purchased at a reasonable price.

Mr. Speaker, may I also take this opportunity to express special congratulations to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), who has made one of the best contributions to the Union Nationale—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lahaye: —to national unity. I said that on purpose, to provoke a reaction from our friends opposite. I am quite pleased at having done so, because they have paid one more compliment to the government of my province, as well as to the Conservative government, because when a government is not worth criticizing, it is proof that it is hardly worth anything.

I have special congratulations for the hon. member who had the honour to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne. He made the finest contribution possible for national unity, as we, the Conservatives, understand those words: the perfect union of two great races whose best qualities we choose, in order to make a united and strong nation. I congratulate him quite sincerely for his great contribution to national unity.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a few minutes of my maiden speech to speak briefly about my constituency. The constituency of Champlain, Mr. Speaker, bears an historical and symbolic name. Last summer, in Quebec city, we had the pleasure of celebrating the third centenary of the arrival of Samuel de Champlain and of the foundation of the city. I wish to talk about Champlain constituency because the name of Champlain has not come up for many years. I will speak objectively, reasonably and fairly. Champlain constituency, Mr. Speaker, is on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, overlooking the city of Three Rivers and extending east. You will understand, Mr. Speaker, how proud I am to be located so close to the heart of the province of Quebec, and the outpourings of a generous heart necessarily overflow on the neighbour constituency.

The Champlain constituency takes up about 30 miles of the north shore of the St. Lawrence. It is a very promising place from an industrial standpoint. I should like to give an obvious proof of this in saying that the city of Cap de la Madeleine, particularly well known to Catholics, because of its pilgrimage shrine, has nearly doubled its population in the last ten years and that new industries are being set up there constantly. I am convinced that, with transportation facilities, the quality of the soil—although I am not a geologist—and the advantage resulting from its proximity to the St. Lawrence river, that city is bound to develop rapidly and I think that before long some industries will move east to Champlain, Batiscan and Ste. Anne de la Perade parishes, the latter being a large village already boasting of a few industries.

Though I am not much of a prophet, I expect that in the future, the constituency of Champlain will develop as a great industrial district. And I see no reason why the St. Lawrence, whose channel runs particularly close to the shores of my constituency, should not give rise to considerable development.

This is not to imply, by any means, that the constituency of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) will suffer from it. I also hope the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), whose constituency of Three Rivers is next to mine, will not feel jealous because of developments taking place to the east. I think I am realistic enough to be allowed to touch upon these matters.

I foresee for the constituency of Champlain, where the deep water channel nearly touches the shore, the early development of all kinds of industries. Those lands cannot conceivably remain farm lands. I also think I can state—although this is somewhat more difficult—that soon winter navigation on the river will develop, and that, probably, the cities of Three Rivers and Cap de la Madeleine will become terminal harbours for winter navigation. Again, I say this without prejudice to the hon. members for the ridings situated below Three Rivers, as well as those from Montreal ridings.

However, I honestly believe it will always be hard, especially in the wintertime, as we can see this year, to cross Lake St. Pierre, a sea of still water, a widening of the St. Lawrence river, 20 miles wide, where there is no current. For this reason, I feel that even if the suggestion is disregarded regarding winter navigation as far as Montreal, except in a case like this year when severe cold has held up ocean-going vessels, it would be easy in ordinary times to extend winter navigation as far as Three Rivers, which would result in further expansion.

This brings me to the present situation concerning navigation. I am familiar with this subject because many navigators come from my constituency of Champlain. There are some 500 navigators in my riding and certain problems are of special concern to them. In the first place, inland navigation, according to them, should be left specifically to our Canadian fleet. It is obvious that an ocean-going vessel can certainly carry a shipment as far as Fort William, Chicago and Milwaukee, in the United States, but in my opinion we should also control coastal shipping, inland navigation, so that it would remain in the hands of Canadian ships and Canadian companies. Maybe a lot will have to be done before applying this principle all down the line, but I believe an attempt should be made to carry it out.

There is also another situation I am particularly interested in. While I was reading the papers recently, an article caught my attention; perhaps it will be gratifying for my hon. friends opposite to hear that I read it in Le Devoir of Saturday, January 24 last. It dealt with a protest made on behalf of pilots, with regard to a statement reportedly made at a meeting of the Dominion Marine Association and of the Lake Carriers Association of the United States, in Ottawa, when opposition was made to the compulsory payment of pilot fees to the Pilots Association of the Montreal and Quebec area, and it was suggested that almost anyone could do the job. I am quite familiar with the usefulness of this association, since many pilots in my small community belong to it. To become a pilot in the St. Lawrence river, a sailor has to go into apprenticeship for at least ten years, and then work many more years as an apprentice. Therefore he does not become a full-fledged pilot until he is almost thirty. In my opinion, such a training is necessary. As a matter of fact, if there is any important profession, it is that one, because pilots are responsible for a ship worth 3, 4 or 5 million dollars. I fail to see how the helm of a ship could safely be left in the hands of a man who never learned from experience how to steer a ship in a channel which is hardly more than a ditch, which a navigator has to know like he does the palm of his hand. I do not think any inexperienced person should be allowed to pilot a ship on the St. Lawrence, where there is danger not only for the ship itself but for the other ships it might meet. It is somewhat like the granting of a licence to a car driver. No licence is granted to a ten-year old child; but it will be to someone who has given evidence of his ability to drive. All the more care should be taken when a million dollar ship is at stake.

Allow me also to make a suggestion with regard to piloting between Montreal and Kingston. Some six or seven pilots in my constituency work in the Montreal-Kingston area, and they complain that they do not enjoy the same benefits as those enjoyed by the pilots of the St. Lawrence, from Montreal to Three Rivers and from Three Rivers to Quebec. I agree there is no obligation to employ licensed pilots. Most ocean-going vessels hire pilots, but there is no rule requiring ship owners to employ licensed pilots. I am aware of the particular difficulty involved due to the fact that part of the waterways is American. Besides from Cornwall to Kingston, arrangements would have to be made with the U.S. government in regard to those pilots. Just the same, it remains a fact that from Montreal up to the approaches to Cornwall, it should be easy to grant our pilots in that district the same status and the same guarantee as those enjoyed by the Montreal pilots. Therefore I would ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), a far-sighted man, to do all he can and give serious consideration to the problem.

Mr. Speaker, from the beginning of the session I have heard speakers of opposite parties making nebulous speeches and constantly chiding us claiming that the country was going down the drain. Allow me to say that had the opposition represented the situation more truthfully and realistically, we would not have been forced to make optimistic speeches in order to balance the picture. For two hours the Leader of the Opposition twisted the statistics and the reports in an effort to extract facts showing that under the present government, everything is going to pot. I realize that this is a method of practising politics, but to me it is definitely too one-sided. And I am most sincere in saying that such theatricals are apt to discredit him and to sow the seeds of uncertainty among the Canadian people. Fortunately, we are getting used to such pictures, and they make little impression. Still, there is quite a contrast between their speeches made before the 1957 election and their speeches today. At that time, they would promise general and practically eternal prosperity, whereas today everything has changed overnight. Today, they show constant pessimism, an attitude that I think is dangerous and unhealthy.

Mr. Speaker, we hear statements from the opposition to the effect that this government has done nothing to relieve unemployment. Preposterous! I say to the hon. members of the opposition, what about the $500 million which were released to the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation in order to promote housing, to say nothing of the additional funds invested by loan companies as a result of this measure? What about the 200,000 additional workers—and that is a conservative estimate, in the original sense of the word—who found employment this winter as a result of the winter building program?

Mr. Speaker, you cannot be completely realistic and say that nothing had been done in this field.

Post offices are now under construction. It may look like quite ordinary things to you, but if I take a look at my riding,—I do not pretend to be a national administrator, even though I am that as a member of parliament,—I notice we have now a post office under construction. In fact, this very winter, a large dock will be built, for which tenders should be called very soon.

Construction in Cap de la Madeleine is substantial. We even notice a considerable increase over what it was last year.

I could mention many other works, but my time is limited.

Gentlemen of the opposition, instead of looking at things in this manner, instead of spending your time blackening the situation,—on purpose, I believe,—try to be reasonable. Give the true picture of the situation, stop looking for the worst, just for the sake of darkening the picture.

Mr. Habel: What are we going to say to the unemployed of the country?

Mr. Lahaye: Try to find the good points of the situation—

Mr. Habel: Tell me, what are we going to tell the unemployed?

Mr. Lahaye: We are considering this very important problem, but you should also admit that this government has done plenty to improve the situation.

[Mr. Lahaye.]

Mr. Habel: Not enough!

Mr. Lahaye: I read in the January 23 issue of the Gazette an item entitled: "Newsprint Output Shows Late Pick-Up", which says that last December paper production was 476,232 tons, while in December 1957, it was only 435,269 tons. There is an evident increase of about 41,000 tons and, to avoid criticism by the members of the opposition, may I say that the increase amounts to exactly 40,963 tons.

I could also mention a paper mill of my constituency, which, up to the end of 1958, gave its employees only 6 hours of work a day. Since New Year's day, the regular employees of the same mill have been working eight hours a day. That is another indication that conditions are improving in the paper industry. The situation there had been somewhat uncertain in the last few years owing to a 14 per cent decline in the economic activities of the United States, who are major importers of paper. This situation is steadily improving and if we look around we can find obvious signs of economic recovery.

Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believe that the present situation is in no way tragic. When there was a 14 per cent decline in United States economic activity I dare say that Canada, through an efficient Conservative government, got by with a decline of only 7 per cent. We now have sure indications of an economic recovery and as did other qualified persons, I ask our manufacturers, our businessmen, to take part in it. This is not an abject supplication; it is a rational and normal request. I therefore ask manufacturers and businessmen to carry out, and at once, aggressive construction programs that will be of greater help in improving the situation.

Mr. Speaker, I am not afraid to state that a young and strong country like Canada with competent and progressive leaders, enjoying a sound financial situation, will have suffered only a temporary delay, a consolidation of the prosperity realized in the past and in which the previous government has reasonably taken part in spite of its faults. I do not doubt that Canada will keep achieving new successes, and a degree of prosperity that cannot fail to be hers in the future.

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like, as the previous speakers did, to congratulate the movers of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Mr. Jorgenson and Mr. Fortin).

I wish also to congratulate the hon. member for Provencher upon the way he spoke as well as upon his knowledge of farming.

I must also congratulate the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet for his contribution to national unity, which the greatest prime ministers since confederation have worked to achieve. I am referring here to Laurier, King and St. Laurent.

Mr. Speaker, in the province of Quebec a deplorable situation has been prevailing for almost four weeks in the relations between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its producers. Feelings run high and the whole population depending on the French network feels concerned and remains unaware of the facts.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) claims he cannot intervene, although, as pointed out by previous speakers in this debate, section 56 of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Act states as follows:

> The Minister may either upon application or of his own initiative, where he deems it expedient, make or cause to be made any inquiries he thinks fit regarding industrial matters—

Another cabinet member, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), who reports for the C.B.C., stated emphatically that this strike was illegal. This strike is illegal, he said, and no more. He did not prove his statement. Is it not strange to hear such irresponsible talk coming from the Minister of National Revenue on so serious a matter? He should be more adept at footwork. He should learn how to do some footwork as some of his colleagues do.

An hon. Member: As you do.

Mr. Tremblay: Expert at footwork.

Mr. Racine: The hon. member for Roberval is again being heard.

Mr. Boulanger: If the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) has any question to ask, I am prepared to answer it.

Mr. Tremblay: I put questions only to reasonable people.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the house that, since the beginning of this session, the hon. member for Roberval has been heckling, which shows that his political education could have been acquired only at the Duplessis school.

It is also the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), together with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough), who gave us a fancy footwork exhibition, which nobody had asked for, when they stated that O Canada was not our national anthem, but a pretty song. Those two ministers have displayed their narrow-mindedness in thus riding rough-shod over the ideals of all right-thinking citizens of Canada. And they did the same thing to the Canadianism for which we have been fighting for so long. At the same time, they subjected all Conservative members to ridicule for none of them protested.

Mr. Speaker, it is equally strange to notice the courteous attitude taken by the government with regard to the settlement of the dispute which occurred between Canadian National employees and the management of that company. Everyone knows that the cabinet, even though the Prime Minister was away on his world tour, took the initiative of settling the question by promising an increase of 17 per cent in transportation rates, an increase which now affects the whole population and especially the farmers. The Prime Minister seems much more prone to settle commonwealth problems than those existing within this country. If he does not want to intervene, or if he does not authorize his ministers to act, so that the dispute may be settled favourably for both sides, they shall have to do so in a more humiliating fashion in the near future.

The people served by the C.B.C. French network are beginning to feel annoyed at paying taxes for a service which has already cost so much money.

Mr. Speaker, I will in the course of my speech, talk about another matter which is of concern to the population of Ontario and Quebec in particular, and more particularly to people in the province of Quebec: that of the textile industry.

I would have liked to deal with farm problems, but I believe that the problem of the textile industry is more important at this time. However, may I inform the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) that, time permitting, I will have a few words for him at the end of my speech. Last year, the house had quite a debate on textiles when the matter of tariff on imports of woollens and of the anti-dumping legislation came up. Unfortunately, being in hospital at the time, I could not take part in that debate.

At the time, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and several members on the government side went all out in their attempts to show that the slump in the textile industry of Canada was due to the Liberal party. The Minister of Finance had this to say. I quote from page 3470 of the Hansard:

I have stressed that this problem was not our creation. This was one more of the problems to which we have been heir when our predecessors—our do-nothing predecessors—went out of office. Surely the textile industry and the tens of thousands of Canadian workers in that industry are entitled to receive some intelligent understanding of their problems and some sympathy in the light of their difficulties.

And later, he said:

This industry deserves something more than words and it will require more than words to meet its needs.

We were all anxious to know the magic formula that the Minister of Finance would use to restore that industry to its original strength. This formula was a 2 per cent tariff increase on woollen goods, which means, in practice, an increase of 15 cents in the cost of woollen goods used in the manufacture of clothes, and an increase of about 25 cents in the cost of material used in the manufacture of an overcoat. These were the words the Minister of Finance used to indicate that the consumer would not be really affected by this increase and that the textile industry would be saved. He had just saved the country's textile industry; the workers would henceforth have jobs; gone would be the days of unemployment in the cities of the eastern townships, and in cities with textile plants.

How far can the Minister of Finance go to mislead the people, and to have them believe that he has done wonders for the textile industry?

The government has the same attitude as it had during the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958. We were told that the Conservative government, once in office, would settle the problem of the textile industry. The Minister of Finance himself came to Quebec to say that a vote for Conservative candidates was a vote for a solution to the problems of the textile industry.

The Prime Minister, at certain points, and in preparation of his election campaign wrote in 1957, in the textile industry manual, the following comments:

(Text):

It is a complete indication of what the industry's spokesmen have been saying for a very long time and particularly in the past few years when you had special reason to ask for a better understanding of your needs and problems.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

(Translation):

In the course of that debate last year, the member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) quoted figures to prove that it was the fault of the Liberal government that the textile industry was in a slump. He added the following words, which I quote from the Hansard of August 13 1958, page 3467:

While in 1930, that industry was supplying 71 per cent of the national consumption, in 1957 it got only 57 per cent of the domestic market, always under a Liberal regime. From 1950 to 1955, still under a Liberal regime, foreign producers were allowed to grab 43 per cent of our national consumption.

I must say that the figures quoted by the member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot are meaningless, having no direct bearing on the primary or secondary textile industry.

He closed his remarks by claiming to represent the textile workers of St. Hyacinthe in thanking the Minister of Finance for the position he had adopted towards the textile industry.

Another member from the Eastern Townships, the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), also expressed his thanks, and I quote his words as reported in the Hansard of August 12 1958, page 3443:

Mr. Chairman, with regard to item 554B, I thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for accepting the Tariff Board's recommendation for a slight increase in the rate of this item. I also very greatly appreciate his stating, in his budget speech of June 15 last, his intention to amend the definition of the term "dumping" so that the value of the price of foreign products shall include production costs, and a reasonable margin for sale costs, carrying charges and profit.

As the present discussion relates to the textile industry, I take this opportunity of commending the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) on adding 40 more assessors to the staff of various customs offices in this country.

Again it is the hon. member for Sherbrooke who said in the house, on May 16 1958, as recorded on pages 175 and 176 of Hansard:

On discovering so much uneasiness and unemployment in our textile industry we must expose the profound and remote causes. Nothing satisfactory was done by the former Liberal administration since 1935, either to adjust the customs tariff or to prohibit the import into Canada of foreign products which flood our markets and paralyse production in our own industry. More especially, during the past 10 years, the former Liberal administration has been giving free rein to foreign competitors and, in a blind and improvident manner, has left our Canadian market at the mercy and whim of imports coming in from Japan, the Indies, Italy, England, West Germany and the United States.

What has happened since the Conservatives came into power? Has the situation improved? No, Mr. Speaker, the situation is worse than ever. The number of people employed has been steadily decreasing and the volume of importations has been greater than ever.

There are facts and figures which are more eloquent than some honourable members' fine words. Let me quote some of them in order to prove that this government did nothing to better the lot of the textile industry in Canada.

I refer to our cotton primary industry. If we look into the Cotton Institute of Canada report we find that, for the quarter ending June 30, 1958, the share left to our industries in the production of cotton fabrics for our Canadian requirements is 43 per cent. That is the lowest level ever reached by that industry. In 1957, that share was 46 per cent; in 1956, it was 51 per cent; in 1955, 54 per cent. If we were carrying our enquiry further, we would find that the share then left to our industry was even greater.

In the first eight months of 1958, American exports in Canada increased 225 per cent compared with the same period in 1957, in regard to drill, twill, sateen, broadcloth, twilled cotton material, etc.

In fact, between those two periods, our imports from the United States increased from 6 million yards for the first eight months of 1957 to 13,528,000 yards for the same period in 1958.

The amount of imported materials during the last eight months is therefore much higher than during the twelve months of previous years.

The main reason, although not the only one, is the sharp increase of imported American materials on our Canadian markets, the entry into Canada of a great quantity of first quality American products that are passed as second quality products.

An investigation conducted among Canadian manufacturers who use the materials mentioned above, in the manufacture of garments, has shown that 50 per cent of the fabrics used in 1958 were imported into this country as substandard products thus enjoying the discount provided by the act, a discount reaching as high as 10 per cent, depending on the class.

I emphasize especially that the United States, to promote their sales on foreign markets, pay a premium to American mills which ship manufactured cotton goods to Canada on the basis of the raw cotton content of the product. The premium is approximately six cents a pound. The premium thus paid by the American government is a definitely unfair practice detrimental to our Canadian producers. It is a particular incentive for Americans who thus make more profit on their sales, or lower prices when competition gets too tough.

Other tactics sometimes used to a certain extent by American manufacturers consist in deliberately placing a piece of fabric of a different colour into a bale of some first quality material, thus contributing to lower its class and price, or in intentionally cutting a yardage into pieces of various lengths, acceptable to the buyer, thus making possible their classification into a lower category, and even including first quality pieces in the same shipment bearing the second quality label, always for the purpose of securing a lower excise tax rate or customs tariff.

Those practices are detrimental to our industry and to our trade; they are slowly destroying what is left of factories in this country and forcing Canadian workers into unemployment.

I read in a report of the Cotton Institute some comments which aptly describe the present situation:

> It is difficult to understand why Canada was required in 1957 to accept 67 per cent of all bedspreads exported by the United States, 64 per cent of all cotton towels, 78 per cent of all cotton drapes and draperies, and 34 per cent of sheets and pillow covers.
>
> The most tragic aspect of the situation is the fact that American exports to Canada are ruining the Canadian textile industries to the benefit of the United States factories, however insignificant and negligible such advantage may be to them. The 213 million yards of cotton cloth which the United States exported into Canada last year represent 77 per cent of the Canadian production, but only 2.5 per cent of the United States production. In other words, if the United States had not exported cotton cloth to Canada last year, the American factories would have lost only two hours a week, and Canadian factories could have increased their production by 75 per cent and paid $45 million more in wages and salaries to Canadian workers. If imports from the United States had been cut down by half, this would have meant a loss of only an hour a week in the United States cotton factories, but $22 million more in wages and salaries for these Canadians.
>
> The 22 million yards of processed drills, twills and cotton satin which will have entered Canada at the end of that year (1958) will have practically ruined this market for Canadian factories, but represent only 2¼ per cent of the 981 million yards of goods of these categories, produced in the United States.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I was saying before recess that last year, in the cotton textile industry, employment has decreased by 2,700, that is from 21,300 to 18,600 on July 1st, 1958.

In the wool textile industry, there was a decrease of our manufacturers' production of 860,000 yards of fabric during the first six months of 1958 and a reduction of 2,000 employees, in comparison to last year.

This is another record that the government could inscribe in the annals of the Conservative party, worthy follower of the Bennett administration.

In the field of synthetic fibres, there was a decrease just as in cotton. According to the report of the Silk and Rayon Institute, our manufacturers' share for the first six months of 1958 was only 68 per cent of the production of commodities needed by the country while it was 70 per cent in 1957 and 74 per cent in 1956.

The number of employees, which was 15,900 on July 1st, 1957 fell to 14,400, a decrease of 1,500.

I have dealt with the primary textile production and I would like now to say a few words about the clothing industry.

Our greatest competitor at the present time is no doubt Japan. Our imports of any textile product except hats, was $8,812,000 in 1957 and for the first eight months of 1958 our imports had increased to $9,186,795. And for 1958, the estimated figure was $11,500,000, which is a 30 per cent increase over 1957.

All told, Mr. Speaker, the textile industry as a whole has reached its lowest level of activity ever recorded. Certain segments of the industry have already folded up under the pressure, and others will follow suit if adequate action is not taken to ensure the industry's survival.

The manufacturers—we can say this in fairness to them—have done their part to improve equipment and production methods so as to compete with other countries.

Workers have waived salary increases so that employers might hold out and keep the plants in operation. In fact, comparing average earnings of textile workers with earnings in various other trades requiring similar training and qualifications, it is found that an assembler in one of our automobile plants earns $1.94 an hour; an electrician, $2.24; whereas a weaver in the textile industry earns $1.36, and a carding machine operator, $1.24 per hour.

Neither the workers, who have endured great sacrifices, nor the employers, who have kept abreast of technical progress, are to blame for the dilemma with which the textile industry is faced. The matter of its survival now rests with the government, as was stated by Mr. H. Dobbie, president of the Woollen and Knit Goods Manufacturers Association. Another expert, Mr. Roy Crabtree, president of the Basic Textile Institute, recently stated that "the industry has done just about everything possible to help develop its own protection against this tremendous competition" from countries with low production costs. The industry must now look to the government to take remedial action.

This is what the mayors of Sherbrooke, Granby, Cowansville, Three Rivers, St. Hyacinthe, Richmond and Princeville are asking in the petitions sent by Mr. Marcel Marier, mayor of Drummondville, to the Prime Minister on February 11, 1958, and on January 12 of this year. It is also the request of the Eastern Townships Textile Association, sent by its president, Mr. J. S. Moynan, and its 130 directors and technicians, and the request also of the Chambers of Commerce of the region as well as other Eastern Townships organizations. These requests made by the population of the region I represent here are merely a consequence of the glittering promises made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to go on, but I am told that my time is up. May I say in conclusion that the confusion in which the government finds itself becomes increasingly intolerable for the public in general, and especially for those who are interested in the textile industry. If the government does not renounce this policy of confusion and announce a more definite one as soon as possible, in this regard, I intend to come back on that matter at each opportunity that I will have during this session to remind him of the fine promises he made to the industry for the sole purpose of having its term of office renewed.

(Text):

Mr. N. L. Spencer (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, as I rise this evening to make my first contribution to the debates of this house I should like first of all to associate myself with all the felicitations extended to you, sir, during the first session of this parliament and again this session, and with all the expressions of confidence in your ability and high sense of fairness and impartiality while presiding over the deliberations of this house. One of the first experiences I had when I came to Ottawa and visited one of the offices in the Senate side of the parliament building was to be greeted as Mr. Speaker. Having previously heard and read about the esteem and high regard in which you are held by all hon. members I must say I was greatly flattered and not a little startled and it was with considerable reluctance that I disillusioned the gentleman who had addressed me in this fashion.

I also wish to congratulate Mr. Deputy Speaker and the deputy chairman of committees of the whole house upon their appointments and to extend to them my sincerest good wishes.

I must also with a deep sense of regret and sorrow join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the leaders of the opposition parties in the tributes they paid to Mr. Val Yacula and Mr. Edward Lockyer who since the last session have passed on to their great reward. It is not possible in a short session to become personally acquainted with the members of this house as one would wish to do but it happened to be my good fortune to have become well acquainted with both of them and for that reason news of their deaths came to me as a great shock. I express to Mrs. Yacula and Mrs. Lockyer and to their families and relatives my sincere sympathy.

Next I should like to congratulate the four hon. members who took their seats in this house at the opening of this session on January 15 upon their election as representatives of their respective constituencies.

Likewise, I offer my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Despite what has been said in this house, the selection of these hon. members to perform this traditional function was a happy one, indeed. The hon. member for Provencher as everyone knows is a native-born Canadian and a descendant of Norwegian and Swedish parents. This is just another factual indication of the truly national aspect of the Conservative party which embraces Canadians of almost every ethnic origin and is also a demonstration of the phenomenal extent to which immigrants to Canada have contributed to the growth and expansion of our great country. It also points up the opportunities that prevail in Canada for Canadians of all national origins to have a voice in and to make their contribution to the conduct of affairs of our country. No longer do we have second-class citizens. There is equality of opportunity for all regardless of ancestry and this is as it should be.

The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet is also deserving of very great commendation. His selection to second the motion, and more important still his speech, evidenced the tremendous strides which have been made under the present government toward national union of all of our people of diverse racial origins. As he so appropriately mentioned, one-third of our population today is of neither French nor English origin. It was reassuring and refreshing indeed to hear from his lips, expressing as he did the point of view of his compatriots in the province of Quebec, that national unity, about which there has been so much talk over the years and so much credit unjustifiably claimed by the Liberal party, is now under a Conservative government a reality. The creed he cited and his impassioned appeal to all our people to make that creed their own was indeed a heartwarming and patriotic plea.

Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to speak for a few minutes about my own constituency of Essex West. It comprises the major portion of that dynamic city of Windsor and all of the contiguous township of Sandwich West. It is the only Essex riding almost entirely urban in character. The rural areas of Essex county are generally speaking about equally apportioned between the constituencies of Essex South and Essex East. Until the last election no Conservative had been elected in Essex West since 1930.

Statistics are usually boring and uninteresting and for that reason I shall not unduly burden the house, but there is much about the city of Windsor and its environs that is not generally known and certainly not fully appreciated. The latest statistics I have available were compiled by the Windsor chamber of commerce as at August 1 last. I shall at this point refer rather extensively to the data thus acquired. Windsor is Canada's largest city on the United States-Canada border and situated on the busiest waterway in the world. During the 1957 season, a period of 282 days, vessel passages in both directions upon this water totalled 20,642 or 73 vessels per day, or one vessel every 20 minutes, carrying a total of over 130 million tons of cargo on this waterway. There were ships of great length, as long as 729 feet, carrying iron ore, coal and grain through this great inland water route of the great lakes system.

It is a geographical coincidence that in Windsor we are south of the United States and between Detroit and Windsor there cross in both directions each year over 17 million persons, close to 5 million of whom are United States visitors to Canada. The metropolitan population of Detroit alone is 3,670,000. Windsor is one of Canada's great industrial communities, manufacturing a wide variety of products in 475 industries. Only four cities in Canada produce more than Windsor. Windsor's selling value, according to statistics of the dominion bureau of statistics, in one year was $474,634,000.

During the past year there has been a monthly average of 36,148 employed in Windsor industries. While Windsor is well known for automobile manufacturing, and I mention the products of Chrysler Motor Corporation, engines and parts of the Ford Motor Corporation and engines for General Motors Corporation, it produces many other products such as a wide range of pharmaceutical and other nationally advertised products, one of which I may mention, namely Walker's Canadian Club, an industry of which we are very proud and which provides year-around employment for many, many people in our city.

According to official estimates for 1958, Windsor is also fifth in Canada, according to volume, in capital investment in new industrial construction, machinery and equipment. The figure for one year, 1958, was $30.1 million. An annual average of 1,282 new homes have been built in Windsor during the past four years. The area is also well served by five main railroads and one terminal line, the trans-Canada network airlines and adequate highway transportation facilities.

Windsor, too, is determined to realize every advantage of the St. Lawrence deep waterway after it is built, which now provides great lakes transportation. With all recent improvements costing $9.37 million, Windsor has the second lowest per capita gross debenture debt in Ontario, according to the latest available statistics. Windsor has completed the construction of a municipal courts building and has started plans for development of over 1,200 feet of river-front property in the downtown area where there will be initially erected a civic auditorium and a convention hall. The Hiram Walker historical museum was opened on the site on May 7, 1958. Now completed is the new city hall to be fronted by an esplanade extending to Riverside drive. We also have the best facilities for education and a university, Assumption university of Windsor, with Essex, Holy Redeemer, Holy Name, Canterbury and University colleges as affiliates.

Perhaps I should also say something about the county of Essex. Windsor and Essex county, together having a population of 246,000, enjoy the news services of an outstanding Canadian newspaper, the Windsor Star with a circulation of over 78,000, ten weekly newspapers, radio stations CBE, CJSP and CKLW, and television station CKLW-TV, the most powerful television station on the North American continent, with an approved rating of 325,000 watts.

Windsor's industry is well balanced with a prosperous agricultural community well known as the sun parlour of Canada where 33 different fruit and vegetable crops are produced. Because of the favourable climate, with an average winter high of 35 degrees and a low of 27 degrees, an average summer high of 78 degrees and a low of 58 degrees, and a long growing season averaging 171 days, the county produces fruits and vegetables which reach market one to five weeks earlier than any other area in Canada. The farms of Essex county have a higher per capita production than anywhere else in Canada.

I should like to make some particular observations with regard to our industrial workers. A survey made by the Battelle memorial institute on the economic development opportunities of Windsor reveals that no Canadian metropolitan area is as dependent upon the manufacture of one type of commodity for its well-being as is Windsor upon the automotive industry. Consequently when economic factors adversely affect this important industry the people of Windsor suffer in direct proportion thereto. Furthermore, when government fiscal policies place a further handicap upon the industry by way of a special excise tax, insult is added to injury and our people suffer to an unjust and disproportionate extent. That is why we in Windsor over the years have appealed to the Liberal government of the day time and time again but without marked success to remove what must be recognized by all fair minded people as a rankly discriminatory tax against one segment of our economy.

I shall return to this topic later but the point I want to make at the moment is that one of our greatest assets in the greater

Windsor area is our industrial workers. In the past as in the present we have had in the area a heavy concentration of industry and because of that, we have a manpower pool of workers and technicians possessing mechanical skills and talents to a greater extent, relatively speaking, than anywhere else in Canada. They are, taken at large and despite some beliefs to the contrary in some quarters, fine, intelligent well-informed and conscientious citizens, and I am proud of them. It is true that our people are perhaps more unionized than in other communities. It is also true that our union leadership leaves much to be desired. Our municipal authorities in years past have also contributed to much of our industrial strife. But those are all things of the past. We have today a healthy industrial climate and, generally speaking, good labour-management relations. In 1957 there were no man days lost in Windsor's automotive industry due to strikes.

Another point I should like to make is that our workers do not submit to dictation or domination by their political leaders. I think perhaps that is general across the country. The Windsor political action committee, which professes to speak for labour and endeavours to control and direct its voting, has over the years endorsed the candidates of the C.C.F. party. On occasions in the past it has had a measure of success. In the last two federal general elections in 1957 and 1958 an intense and concerted effort was made to swing Windsor labour to the support of the C.C.F. party. They concentrated their efforts upon Essex West possibly because there appeared to be little hope of defeating the deeply entrenched hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) who had been given in 1953 one of the largest majorities in Canada.

They selected a well-known formidable candidate and experienced campaigner, he having been a city alderman, and undoubtedly the strongest candidate they could find. What were the results? In 1957 he secured almost 22 per cent of the vote and running again in 1958 secured only 19 per cent and made the usual contribution to the country's exchequer. No, labour by and large supported the Conservative party and I agree with an observation to that effect made by the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Campbell) during the last session. But, Mr. Speaker, I must be excused for correcting his statement that in the last election labour in Windsor supported the Liberals. I would not be here today were it not otherwise.

Let us take a look at what happened in neighbouring Essex East. The hon. member for whom I have the highest regard, as he knows, must surely have been shocked and must have suffered qualms of trepidation when the returns came trickling in and he saw his huge majority of 1953 dwindle away and his percentage of the vote drop from 67 per cent to the minority percentage of 42.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Spencer: I am not habituated to provoking controversy, as the hon. member for Essex East knows, but I do say that he can be thankful indeed and he must be most grateful to the rural areas of his riding which gave him the modest majority that enabled him to stand off the tremendous surge of the Conservative candidate, Mr. Roy Hicks, a labour man himself with whom I was proud to be associated in our campaign in the city of Windsor. My hon. friend should give an assist, I believe, to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) who came to Windsor in the dying days of the campaign to save the crumbling ramparts of his party stronghold and rescue the hon. member from enforced retirement. It is well for the Liberal party that the leader did, because the hon. member for Essex East for whom I say again I have the highest regard as he knows, would be sorely missed in this chamber. He is undoubtedly the most effective debater on the opposition side—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Spencer: I said on the opposition side—and heaven knows, they need him badly.

I should like now to return to the excise tax on automobiles. This tax was originally imposed as a wartime expedient, and I do not quarrel with that. However, there is no basis for its retention in peacetime. It has not been completely removed since the last war, and it should never have been increased by the Liberal government in 1947 to 25 per cent. On March 23, 1949, it was reduced to 10 per cent, and the record since then is as follows: On September 8, 1950, it was increased to 15 per cent; on April 11, 1951, it was further increased to 25 per cent; on April 9, 1952, it was reduced to 15 per cent; on April 6, 1955, it was further reduced to 10 per cent. On December 7, 1957, the Conservative government under our esteemed Prime Minister further reduced the tax by one-quarter to 7½ per cent. I congratulate the government upon this action, and I urge the Prime Minister and his colleagues to give favourable consideration to a further reduction and the eventual elimination of this tax at the earliest possible date compatible with the needs of the economy.

The hon. member for Essex East, and the former member for Essex West failed dismally to sufficiently espouse the cause of their constituents, while they were supporters of the Liberal government, to see to it that this discriminatory tax was removed at a time when additional tax revenue was no longer required for government operations.

A few months hence a period of daylight saving time and confusion will begin. Some municipalities will adopt daylight saving time while others will refuse. Some areas will move their clocks forward at one time, and others at another. Some will return to standard time later than others. A traveller will never be sure until he arrives at his destination and sees a clock whether he is an hour ahead of time or on time or an hour late for his appointment, or whether the places of business are open or closed. This could be quite disconcerting if, after a long day's drive, the vendor dispensing liquid refreshments should be closed. All in all, it is so confusing and needless.

During the war we quickly ended this nonsense. We decided that daylight was worth saving. A federal regulation switched the whole country over and back again simultaneously. There was a minimum of confusion, and no one seriously complained. Why should it not be done again? Surely there can be a happy medium struck between the conflicting time changes and an end to this annual muddle and perplexing state of confusion. I urge the government to give serious consideration to the removal of this annoying and unnecessary period of uncertainty.

I should like now, in the few minutes at my disposal, to speak very briefly of the unemployment situation in general and that pertaining in Windsor in particular. The favourite theme of the Liberal party has been unemployment and from the speeches and comments of the opposition, particularly those of the hon. member for Essex East, one would conclude that unemployment is a tragedy which only descended on us in the last year or two since the present government took office. Of course, this is just plain nonsense. It would be ludicrous if it were not for the fact that we on this side of the house are genuinely disturbed about the ill effects of the economic recession, and the government has shown its concern by taking effective action to alleviate the situation. I am not going to review the measures taken by the government as I would be repeating what has been said in this house and, in any event, they are well known.

What I want to stress, however, is that we had a serious unemployment problem before the present government took office. I have before me a report on unemployment as recorded in the Windsor office of the unemployment insurance commission since the beginning of 1953. Without going into details, the record certainly reveals a need for action to stimulate the economy. I have made a search, and I can find nowhere the advocacy by the hon. member for Essex East in this house, while he was a member of the government, of the elimination of the excise tax on automobiles in order to stimulate the sale of automobiles throughout the country and thus create jobs for our unemployed in the city of Windsor. The then member for Essex West was obviously aware of the situation because I found recorded an inquiry of the minister of labour as to whether anything could be done to rectify the serious unemployment in Windsor. This was on February 7, 1957, at a time when it was becoming embarrassing in view of the expected general election.

What remedy did the government provide for our people? Sometime in May an announcement was made that the moving expenses of our unemployed would be paid by the government if they could secure employment elsewhere. This was the cure for our ills prescribed by the former minister of labour.

In conclusion, I should like to contrast that record of indifference and neglect of the mounting unemployed rolls with the record of the present government. There was an immediate appreciation of the gravity of the economic doldrums into which the former government had allowed us to drift and a program of remedial measures was initiated and since pursued with vigour, the beneficial effects of which are now revealed in the upswing which has begun. The people of Canada made a wise decision when they turned out the former government before conditions became irremedial, because under the leadership of this government and our Prime Minister we can go forward with confidence and optimism toward a more prosperous and still greater destiny.

Mr. J. O. Gour (Russell): Mr. Speaker, before I deal with the subject of my remarks, I want to congratulate you on the ability and the integrity that you have shown during the last session and during this one. I also congratulate your deputies, the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Sevigny) and for Spadina (Mr. Rea) who quite capably acquitted themselves of the difficult task of presiding over the debates of the house.

It is also with pleasure that I join with those who, before me, congratulated the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Mr. Jorgenson and Mr. Fortin).

I am very happy to support the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Pearson), an honourable and distinguished gentleman who is known and respected by all the nations of the world. I support his motion of non-confidence concerning the way the affairs of this country have been administered by the Conservative government for the last 19 months. What has been the result of that administration? There are 750,000 people looking for jobs, which means that about 3 million of our fellow citizens are living in worry, misery and discouragement in a country of 17 million inhabitants. Nearly 18 per cent of our population, if we take into account only those who are unemployed at this moment, are in a sad plight indeed. How many more will be added to this number from now to next May?

Inflation has affected at least 6 million individuals with fixed revenue, that is pensioners, small wage earners, small merchants and farmers. These people are discouraged and lack the necessary money to buy the bare necessities. There is at present a slump in business from one end of the country to the other, and when we refer to those facts we are branded as defeatists.

What have you done, my friends of the Conservative government, since 1957? You have spent the surplus, $350 million that the Liberal party had accumulated in 1956 and 1957. You have shown a deficit of $50 million for the administration of 1957 and 1958. Furthermore, you have spent about $300,000 belonging to the unemployment insurance fund; you have shown a deficit of several million dollars for old age pensions, and probably a deficit of a billion dollars for the administration of 1958-1959. This is not too bad! What good administrators you are! The country was in full prosperity when you took power, when everything was going fine. In fact, the situation had never been so good, with the exception of the slackening of business which always occurs during the few months preceding a general election. It is not extraordinary for our country; this slowing down lasted only a few months, but in the United States it is felt for three or four months before each general election. Compare yourselves to us, Liberals, who had to take charge of the administration of the country in 1935. At that time most Canadians were in bankruptcy. It took but five years of a Conservative administration, from 1930 to 1935, to plunge the country into debt and to take it to the brink of bankruptcy. We will soon find ourselves in the same economic difficulties if, by mischance, you stay in power for five years. The situation will get worse. This is what happened between 1931 and 1935, as I just said, and I should know because I was in business then. Two thirds of our farmers were under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act or were going to be so placed; otherwise, they would have lost their farms. Three out of five general stores in my village of Casselman went bankrupt and their owners lost all their personal property. I survived, but not without struggle and hardship. I was mayor of my town from 1931 to 1934; three quarters of the people were on relief; across the whole country, thousands of municipalities were bankrupt and under trusteeship of provincial governments. In my constituency there were four such towns, including the beautiful and prosperous city of Eastview, which since then has grown about one hundredfold. It is not, at the moment, under trusteeship of the government.

And you, hon. Conservative ministers and members, have the gall to ask us, here in this house: what have you Liberals done during your 22 years at the head of the country? As, apparently, many of you have a poor memory or are too young to know what we did during those 22 years, I shall recall a few facts. However, it would take over a week to mention everything we did to make the country prosperous, as it was when you took office in 1957.

I described a moment ago the situation existing in 1935, in the municipalities, in the provinces and for individuals, but I said nothing of salaries which were paid at the time by the Conservative government. A certain amount of preliminary work had been started for the construction of the Rockcliffe airport, and a kind of concentration camp had been set up, where men with families were paid two cents an hour, ten cents a day, that is 20 cents or $1.20 a week for 60 hours of work. Those men were fed and were supplied with overalls, but when the overalls were worn out, the men had to spend a week's salary on a new pair and two week's salary to buy a pair of shoes, or a pair of mittens. Just imagine how much was left to support their family!

Mr. Speaker, I know there are other members who wish to speak after me. I could speak for fifteen days on end about my leader's motion, and I may add that I have many suggestions to make to you. In fact, I could write a 100-page volume of suggestions which you never even considered. As early as August you should have called a conference of the provinces and the municipalities to devise a plan, and not wait until October or December. In fact, you should call a conference in June at the latest, in order to prepare the winter program, and another one in October in connection with the summer work.

What have you done to curb inflation which is mainly due to the conversion of bonds which bore 3 per cent interest, and which you raised to 4½ per cent, and, which now nobody wants? It is so true that I tried to sell mine this morning in order to pay my debts, because everything has been in a bad way ever since the Conservatives began to run the country's business. And do you know how much I was offered for bonds falling due in 1979? I was offered exactly $82.50 for one bond of $100.00, which means that I must take a loss of $17.50 for each $100.00 if I want to pay my debts.

Not so long ago, an interest rate of 3 per cent was considered a good return. But since the Torys came to power, what is it worth now?

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that time does not allow me to deal with other matters. However, I intend to resume later. I think I have made enough practical suggestions to the government to have the right to refresh the memory of those, and especially young men like you, who do not seem to have experienced the effect of the thirties, under the Conservative administration. Canadians need three meals a day, and perhaps you do not remember the days when many of my voters had to be satisfied with only one.

(Text):

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks must, of course, be ones of congratulation to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and to the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I know, sir, that there have been many remarks made already in this chamber congratulating those two hon. gentlemen and it would be simple enough for me to agree in principle with what has been said. I think, too, that the press of Canada has perhaps paid the greatest compliment to them—a compliment far greater than any individual member of the house could convey—by describing their remarks in this chamber as setting the keynote for this debate, something which has not been done in many years.

I took a great deal of interest, in particular, in the remarks made by the mover of the address when he gave his very mature appreciation of the problems of agriculture. He not only did that, but, without emotion, he described the history of the industry and explained how we find ourselves in our present situation. He recommended, as one would expect from an hon. member on this side, some constructive suggestions to the government and accordingly his stature in this house improved with each syllable he uttered. As I walked out of the chamber and listened to the comments being made I was particularly impressed by some words by a member of the protective staff who had been listening. He said this was the first speech on agriculture that he had ever understood. And as I watched the leading exponent on this topic, that great agricultural expert, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), I gathered that he found himself in the same category as the gentleman who made that observation.

I should like, also, to compliment the seconder of the address because all too often do we hear people in our country, whether in parliament, in this chamber or outside, speak of national unity as something which we can accept without working for it. I propose in the latter part of what I have to say, not to offer a suggestion to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet but, rather, to take up his challenge, because the keynote of his address was to me the fact that the area which he represents has given the lead to each and every province to make certain that we accept the challenge of national unity such as he has described.

The nature of this debate finds me in practically the same batting order as I was a year ago. I have no intention of labouring unduly the weakness of the opposition. However, I will not resist the temptation to draw to the attention of this house one rather interesting aspect—that on every occasion on which we have seen the opposition speak or engage in any conversation over C.B.C. television stations we have seen no indication of this desire to come out fighting which we have heard so much about. I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, with regard to this group of gentlemen who wanted to come out fighting that after the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had torn their arguments apart piece by piece their front bench members began to slip slowly further down in their seats until all we could see of them was the heels of their shoes before the Prime Minister was through.

I do not intend to say any more about the contribution they may or may not have made to the debate, but I should like to say a word about the television performance of the hon. member for Essex East, because at that particular time he was asked a number of questions about what he would do in the event he ever found himself again in government. On each occasion he replied that not having all the facts in front of him he was not able to come to a firm conclusion. I remember, in particular, a question asked by Mr. Charles Lynch with regard to his opinion on the recognition of communist China. The nimble piece of footwork performed by the hon. member would have done credit to the best ballerina in the country; he literally danced off the stage before he made any reply at all.

And now, if I may, I should like to turn my attention to a matter of more serious and, I hope, of a more consequential nature. I am sure all of us were delighted that Canada today is participating in discussions on an international basis with the United States. I refer to the Canada-United States joint committee. I was very happy to hear the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Houck) tell us of the part he had played in this. I congratulate him on his contribution to this debate, because it was a most important one. We in the city of Calgary enjoy a relationship with the United States which is very unusual and it is perhaps significant in this respect that in our consular area we have more than 60,000 United States citizens, the greatest concentration of Americans outside the United States itself. We have enjoyed a relationship which is an example to the rest of the world. These United States citizens are not just welcome transients but men and women who have made a contribution to the business, industrial and social life of our city. I think we have set an example to the rest of the world in being able to get along with our neighbours.

I do not think any of us would disagree that with regard to diplomatic problems—and perhaps I should say not so much diplomatic as economic problems—there has been some erosion of our relationship with our great neighbour to the south. But it would be equally wrong for us to suggest that the problems we have before us are insurmountable, and the important part of this committee's work has already been established in so far as it is going to be asked to define where the area of disagreement actually lies. We will, in effect, separate fact from fiction; we will determine what the problem is and attempt, as members of two legislative bodies, to resolve it, bringing recommendations back to our respective governments in the hope that some action can be taken to reconcile the differences which are before us. I suggest that the most important advance we have already made lies in the fact that this committee has been established.

I congratulate this government, which has been alleged in the past to have been anti-American, upon taking the first step toward some constructive action to improve our relationship with our fine friends south of the border. The difficulty with regard to our relationship with the United States lies, in so far as we have been concerned, in the fact that we have at times felt ourselves to be neglected—maybe misunderstood is the better word. I suggest that the action taken by the United States congress and by its speaker gives a clear indication that they recognize the problem.

I wish to call the attention of the house to four particularly important actions taken on their part. The first, of course, was by the President of the United States coming here to discuss mutual problems in this very chamber. The second was when the United States congress extended the reciprocal trade act. The third was when Mr. Brook Hays and Mr. Frank Coffin presented their report, and the fourth was when the President, on the suggestion of the Prime Minister, appointed the United States counterpart of the Canadian committee. This is a very clear indication that the United States realizes that our difficulties can only be surmounted by a frank understanding as to where the problem actually exists.

I believe that the committee can accomplish a great deal. It is not an instrument that will become a debating society because the two countries recognize that the differences are economic. My hope is that the citizens of both Canada and the United States will stop shooting verbal rockets at one another based on differences and issues that do not really exist, but rather that having defined the area of their disagreement they will like mature men and women resolve their differences. I suggest that this can also be done at the legislative level.

Perhaps if I were to say a word about defence it might be construed that having had the privilege of serving as chairman on the committee on estimates last year, which committee examined the estimates of the Department of National Defence, I am setting myself up as an authority on the subject. This is most certainly not the case. But having made reference to the estimates committee may I be permitted to take advantage of this my first opportunity to do so and to thank, first of all, the committee members for making our work all the more agreeable. Through their co-operation we were able to complete our work in very short order.

I should like to extend to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) the sincere appreciation of the committee for the time he gave to us. Whenever he attended meetings of the committee he answered in detail all the questions that were put to him, and he made himself available at all times. I also wish to say to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) that their co-operation was greatly appreciated.

Having made reference to the work of that committee may I perhaps suggest that hon. members of that committee had full opportunity last year to discuss the question of defence in minute detail and I feel it would serve very little purpose to attempt to go back and review any of that discussion in this session of parliament in the light of any change in the international situation or the defence picture for we must realize the restricted nature of any new developments.

But what is our defence picture? In the past year we have seen introduced in this house what I suggest is a rather narrow form of nationalism on the part of a few hon. gentlemen who have indicated a resistance toward any suggestions for the integration of Canada's defence forces with those of the United States in any form of defence alliance and particularly through the NORAD agreement. Surely it is time we set aside this question of having our rights infringed upon when mutual defence is in the interest of our national survival. We must realize that national defence is not something one can arrange to suit one's own convenience and there must be cognizance of national and international needs. There can be no question of this house not having been given every opportunity to debate the question of joint defence. The most important aspect of this matter is that we are conducting our defence on a co-operative basis and thus are providing protection not just for either country but for the continent as a whole.

Perhaps the most important aspect of defence this year is the recognition that we are in a transitional period. For example, with respect to manned aircraft, whether it be the CF-100, the Sabre or the CF-105, they have a life expectancy that cannot be calculated beyond a few years. We also know that missile warfare is something that will soon be upon us if it is not already. Let us recognize that this is a transitional period and bear in mind that in expending monies for defence we must do so with one eye on the present and one eye on the future. It is ridiculous for us to expend large sums of money on the development of any piece of military equipment which in only a few months will be obsolete and of no value to the defence of the country as a whole.

I am, however, one of those who believe there is a period in the foreseeable future when a manned interceptor may be required to meet the 1,500 to 1,700 existing manned bombers of a potential enemy. Until this situation changes it is unthinkable that we should put ourselves in a position where we could not defend ourselves on that basis. I do not intend to enter into the argument about the relative merits of the CF-105, the United States CF-106 or the F-108 that will not be off the production line for some four years, but as one who has flown in defence of our country I believe we must maintain a flexible defence policy involving the flexibility of military equipment. Any aircraft we adopt should be capable of being related to our missile program but not dependent on it.

About missiles themselves, we know they are weapons that can be employed with great accuracy but of course they have shortcomings. While it is important to think in terms of defending ourselves on the home front we must also consider the commitments we have under the NATO agreement which will require additional types of weapons.

I have brought to the attention of hon. members matters that are perhaps already only too familiar to the Department of National Defence, but before leaving the subject I should like to say a few words about home defence. There has been no conflict whatsoever on the part of the government in any statement it has made and particularly concerning whether or not we will likely require a first-class two seat interceptor. Every statement that has been made by this government clearly indicates the need for a combination of weapons and every statement that was made in the committee on estimates when it examined the estimates of the Department of National Defence supports this position. What I want to make clear is this: last year the government spent $174 million for a one year extension of the Arrow program, and at that time had flown only four of the CF-105's. Certainly the government is not going to accept or reject this particular aircraft until it is fully acquainted with its flight characteristics.

Recognizing that we are passing through a transitional period in defence, it does not make sense to say that we must evolve a hard and fast rule concerning what type of weapon or group of weapons we are going to employ until we know what the qualifications of those weapons are. The government must have the full facts at hand before making a decision, and it will test and review various types of equipment in order to decide on their suitability to fit into the pattern of international defence under the NORAD agreement. Then and only then can a decision be made. No attempt on the part of hon. members of the opposition and particularly on the part of the Leader of the Opposition, who on many occasions in the past few days has expressed some doubt about the acceptability of the Arrow, is going to force this government into a premature and untimely decision.

Before leaving the subject of defence may I make a second suggestion that applies to the defence of our country. Our commitments under NATO are gradually disappearing. Many of the responsibilities we have will be relinquished. Some of the airfields we have in Canada will doubtless be abandoned. I would suggest to the Minister of National Defence that in co-operation with the Department of Transport consideration should be given to the question of how these airfields can best be utilized.

In my own city, for example, we have an airfield, formerly the No. 3 service flying unit, which will become surplus at some point. Canada has a growing civil aviation problem and to some extent private, commercial and executive aircraft are cluttering up the principal airfields in our cities. I think it is time we recognized that we should transfer our civil aircraft to those subsidiary fields which are about or nearly about to be declared surplus. If we did that we would accomplish two things. First of all, we would have alternate air fields near our cities for defence purposes in the future. But what is more important, we would be providing incentive for civilian aviation to develop to a greater extent than it has in the past without in any way complicating commercial air routing.

While I am on the same subject I should like to suggest the advantage of giving some thought to permitting our auxiliary squadrons to have an additional role, namely that of carrying out air search and rescue in many areas of our country not adequately covered today. For the most part auxiliary squadrons have been transferred to air transport command where they use twin engine expediter aircraft. They are comparable to any of the light bombers which were used in the early stage of the war. I think the squadrons would be more effective in providing more help in search and rescue, which to some extent has been neglected in many sections of Canada.

I come now to a subject which perhaps has been introduced in this chamber before and about which I have seen a rather interesting change. I refer to the amount of lobbying which exists in parliament today. I refer to lobbying by outside interests which in itself is in no way offensive. In fact, I did some research and drew a parallel with some pressure groups, or lobbying of legislation, in the United States. It is not unlike our own country some 25 or 40 years ago. I recognize the constitutional difference between our parliament and the United States congress. In the United States, because of the constitutional differences lobbying can have a great deal more effect than it has here, but what I would point out is that in the United States as early as 1867 there was a group of gentlemen who decided that lobbying had reached such proportions as to become extreme. The first attempt at a bill was introduced at that time. Some years later the bill on lobbying was introduced and only as recently as 1946 did we see any legislation which had any teeth in it.

I do not for a moment, Mr. Speaker, deny the right of individuals either in a body or as a group to approach any member of parliament on any business with which they may be concerned. Because of the very nature of our constitutional right here we make ourselves accessible to anyone within Canada who has a problem. But I suggest that the history of pressure groups and lobbying in the United States is not unlike our own in this respect. These groups, because of their size, because of their operation and because of their effectiveness in obtaining the legislative result they required eventually were asked to file with the United States administration two facts, namely their source of income and their affiliation with the people with whom they were doing business.

I think that at some time we may be forced into the position of referring to a committee of this house whatever information we can to determine whether lobbying has become so effective in Canada today that similar legislation to that passed by the United States is required here, namely legislation having to do with the registration of lobbyists. I am not speaking mainly of those who may wish to make a phone call and describe a problem to a member. I am not referring to those who may wish to make an appointment and present a problem to an individual. I am referring to that vast army of people who descend on the capital. They may describe themselves as public relations men or even members of the press. They have been known to be members of that very important profession, the legal profession. I am not confusing those of the legal profession who are here set up as agents to do business on behalf of companies, but rather to that group on the outside who know that legislation may be introduced at this session or at some future session and who think they should be here to make absolutely certain that the greatest and most effective pressure can be brought to bear on every member of this chamber.

It is quite possible that we may not have reached the day when legislation is required. I realize, too, that any legislation that may be introduced would not necessarily be the whole answer to the problem because in the United States since 1946 some 2,800 lobbies have been registered which operate within the law. What I do suggest is that it is a regulation which, if it is not required at present, may at some time in the future be of great help to the individual member, not that hon. members need to be protected. I would not be so naive as to suggest that an hon. member is not familiar with the subject that may be discussed with him, but only that he should have the opportunity of discerning the particular objective required in the lobby which is undertaken at that time. As I said initially in introducing this matter I do not suggest that there should not be any information given nor do I deny the individual the right to be given the opportunity to carry out whatever undertaking he has in mind.

I am going to close the remarks I have made tonight with a reference to the oil and gas industry and it will be brief. Shortly there will be introduced in this chamber legislation having to do with an energy board, something that has been long required in the history of the petroleum and natural gas industry. We assume that the legislation will involve on the one hand the interests of the consumer and on the other hand provide some help to the industry which it will govern. I will not at this point make any reference to it but I would like simply to introduce a note of optimism at this time which is the first time I have had the opportunity of speaking on oil and gas in the past two years. The marketing of our petroleum products has taken the first encouraging upturn that we have seen in the past two and one-half years. This has been due largely to the expansion of the Ontario market which has more than doubled itself in the past two years.

The most significant aspect of the Ontario improvement has been the desire on the part of the industry itself to divert portions of crude which at one time were taken from foreign sources. In addition, crude was forced back which had been coming in from Montreal refineries, thus limiting again foreign imports into the country. I think too it can be said that the hope for a future market in the United States has improved, again because on the one hand General Petroleum Corporation and their refinery at Ferndale in Washington state have replaced foreign crude with Canadian crude from western Canada which was also under their control.

The point I make, is that the industry for the most part has corrected to a very large degree its own problem. I think it is to be congratulated first of all on recognizing that that problem is best left in the hands of the industry itself, with the minimum amount of control or regulation. I do not for a moment suggest that there is not going to be a demand or a desire for the eventual construction of a pipe line to the Montreal area. In my opinion it is only a matter of time before that will take place. The marketing picture will improve which will clearly indicate that the market demand has taken up some of the slack of the overproduction which we have had in western Canada. But in the long term our ability to produce will, as it does today, far exceed our ability to sell oil. Therefore it is essential, not only from the point of view of the economic picture in Canada but in the interests of national defence, eventually to move oil into the Ontario and Montreal refining area.

Second, I would say this. Our hope of moving more oil into Montreal or of increasing the market in Ontario is in my view at present second only to the necessity of improving market export into the Pacific northwest and the great lakes area of the United States. In any event, it can be said that for this year, certainly for the first two months of the new year, the market picture for export and for domestic demand has increased beyond all expectations. In fact, in the first two months of this year we are only a little below the record year in 1957 during the Suez crisis.

I think if anything is to be said about oil and gas we have to comment on two other aspects. First of all, there is the fact that the Venezuelan government has seen fit to increase taxation on the companies operating in that country. This could have a very interesting effect because it will inevitably bring about an increased price for Venezuelan crude which must move into foreign markets. It would be wrong for me to suggest that these oil companies or, for that matter, the government will attempt to outprice themselves completely so far as foreign markets are concerned, but it is significant to note that any suggestion of further concessions by these producers, either in Canada or the United States, which in the past has made it impossible for Canadian crude to compete will be certainly short lived if not completely eliminated. I hope that the market for Canadian crude, both in the Pacific northwest and also in Ontario and Montreal, is broadened considerably, first of all by the more efficient manner in which we produce oil and, second, because of the change in the international situation as it affects Venezuela.

Finally, so far as oil and gas industry is concerned, there will be introduced into the house more oil and gas legislation than at any time in the whole history of the Canadian parliament. I suggest this is going to be something with which each and every member must concern himself because this is Canada's No. 1 mineral industry, one which today has grown to maturity, which affects not just the four areas in which the product is produced but which has an influence on every province in our Canadian economy. Therefore it is my hope that hon. members will not only look into the recommendations contained in the Borden report but will examine the areas where this industry affects the particular economy of their own constituencies.

Speaking as a member of parliament I say that we need the greatest help from every section of the community to put together the best recommendations which can be introduced into legislation. We also know that there are going to be many new and interesting events which will affect the industry. A few of us had the opportunity today, for example, to view, certainly for the first time in some years, an experiment which conceivably may be carried out in the very rich Athabasca tar sands. This area, as is well known to the House of Commons, contains the greatest known reserve of oil. The experiment which was demonstrated to us through a motion picture will be carried out by the Richfield Oil Corporation as a possible answer to the separation of the oil from the sand, thus making available in some future year this great source of crude oil.

There are, of course, a great number of others who are interested in this prospect, but what it amounts to is that the year 1959, with the improvement in the domestic oil picture, with the opportunity that may exist in future demands from United States sources and in view of the eventual construction of pipe lines, improvement in oil and gas policies both on the provincial and federal level and the effect of more important improvements in the technological field, will unquestionably be the industry's greatest year.

As I close my discussion of oil perhaps I should say that I know that very shortly the petroleum and natural gas conservation board will make available its decision on whether or not to recommend a permit for export. This is something which will be in the hands of the federal government to consider, and I know I speak on behalf of my constituents when I say for them that I hope the government will give the earliest consideration to this matter. I say this because, assuming that an export permit is considered and recognizing that the Borden commission and the petroleum and natural gas conservation board have both suggested that we have gas reserves far beyond domestic requirements for Canadian consumption, I think it can be said that the export of our surplus requirements is a most beneficial thing so far as the Canadian economy is concerned.

I close on the theme introduced by the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne when he discussed in such eloquent terms the need for national unity. I think he will agree with me, as I am sure every other hon. member of the house will, that while national unity is something that is present today we have achieved a measure of economic unity which permits each province, each section of each constituency for that matter, to be able to be a part of the family of confederation and feel that they are not poor relations because if you understand where your problems exist and survive that is what creates national unity. I believe and I am sure that the majority of the people of our country believe that if we have any portion of national unity, as the hon. member suggests, and I agree with him, certainly we have attained it because of our achievements in economic unity and equality which include the construction of the railroad, the improvement in the farm population's rather difficult situation of a year ago, the improvement of the position of the maritime provinces, the improvement of the picture in British Columbia today, all of which have been part and parcel of the operations of Conservative government. That is the reason we enjoy national unity today, because this is the government that has made it possible.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the closing moments of the discussion of the subamendment to state the position of this party in respect thereto. Before doing so, I should like to say that I have listened with great interest to the interesting and, I thought, on the whole constructive contribution made to the debate by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. He mentioned among other things the desirability of proceeding carefully and not making premature decisions in regard to such an important matter as the CF-105. I would remind him, if a reminder is necessary, that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) told us in the committee over which he presided with such efficiency last session that the decision in this matter would be made in the autumn, last autumn. Certainly the statement of the government on that matter in September did not constitute that decision which we had been led to expect would have been made at that time. If a decision has to be made, and we on this side appreciate the difficulties of that decision, perhaps it would have been better if it had been made last autumn and before March 31.

The hon. member also expressed some suspicion about the development of what he called lobbies, and suggested, as I understood him, that the time might be coming when we would have to register those who could be called lobbyists, as is done at the present time in the United States. I hope, Mr. Speaker, we will not have to consider any such procedure as this when it comes to the right of Canadians, individually or collectively, to make their views known to the government of the day. We remember in that connection the statements that were made not very long ago that the doors of the government would always be open, I hope not only to those who are registered for that purpose.

We on this side had hoped that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), in that intervention which he made with his usual vigour and forcefulness a week ago today, would have given us and the country a considered and constructive analysis of the economic and other problems which face the country now, and the principles on which the government proposes to act through legislation in meeting those problems. The Prime Minister, on that occasion at least, did not give us that kind of statement. He criticized me for taking an unduly gloomy and pessimistic view of the situation. He said that I spoke irresponsibly and in a way—I hope I am not misinterpreting what he said—which was not consistent with the danger which we faced at this time from communism. Communism, Mr. Speaker, had nothing to do with what I was talking about on that occasion. I suggest that we do not assist the fight against communism abroad by not dealing effectively and immediately and constructively with the problems that we face at home. I do not believe it was in accordance with what I said to interpret my remarks, as the Prime Minister did on page 52 of Hansard for January 19, 1959, as painting a picture of Canada as a place, fearful in its prospects and frightening in its future.

There is only one thing which can prevent Canada from achieving the destiny which is hers if her people desire to achieve it, and that is the loss of peace and world war III, which will prevent any country from achieving any destiny in this world. Inadequate policies of government can postpone, and I suggest if we do not get the right policies from the present government we may postpone the achievement of that destiny, but no Canadian, whatever party he belongs to, lacks faith in the achievement by Canada of the destiny which is hers and the realization of the national vision which we all have before us.

The Prime Minister also thought that we were exaggerating the economic and financial difficulties that face us. I made certain specific statements and colleagues of mine followed them up with other specific statements which we attempted to support by the official statistics which were available to us. We gave certain concrete evidence in support of those statements, and I do not feel the Prime Minister or his colleagues in government have dealt effectively, and as we had reason to believe they would, with the points of criticism which we advanced. I asked certain questions of the government which are recorded on page 41 of Hansard for January 19, 1959, very definite questions. They were meant to be constructive questions. They were meant to elicit from the Prime Minister and the government the principles upon which they were going to act in the introduction of their legislation. These questions have not been mentioned, let alone replied to by any spokesman for the government since this debate began.

I also made three additional concrete, and I thought constructive suggestions concerning other matters and how we should proceed in regard to them. They also have not been referred to by any speaker on the government side in this debate. I wish I had the time to put those questions which appear on page 41 on the record again, but they are there.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) made an interesting intervention in the debate which included very little indeed about the policies of his government, but a good deal about the policies and personalities, particularly this personality, of the preceding government. He told us once again with some satisfaction how the commonwealth had been saved by a government which had always believed in the commonwealth from a party which had never believed in the commonwealth. Once again he has not produced the evidence to support that kind of wrong statement. I refer the minister, not to his own words but to his own actions. I refer him to his trade diversion policy which has resulted in exports from the commonwealth to the United States being increased by 15 per cent, as I pointed out the other day, and exports from the commonwealth to Canada being decreased. I refer him to the free trade offer made by the British government a year or so ago, about which nothing has been done. I refer him to the increase in wool duty. It is a homely old saying, Mr. Speaker, but it remains true, that actions still speak a good deal louder than words, even the words of my hon. friends.

My hon. friend also said with some satisfaction that he and his government had saved us from the United States. He expressed his preference for jackboot over tiptoe diplomacy in relation to that country. He did a great deal of threshing of old straw, but once again we can let the record speak for itself. Perhaps it would have been more useful if we had at this time from the minister some indication of the trade policies of this government, some views on the proposals that have been made on this side concerning the restoration of the Hyde Park agreement; some indication of the attitude of the government toward economic and trade developments in Europe which will have, if they develop in a certain way, a far-reaching effect indeed on the trade of Canada as well as on the trade of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we have before us the subamendment moved by the C.C.F. One part of that subamendment refers to the government in agricultural and anti-inflationary policies, which of course we can unreservedly support. We could have found even more examples, but we thought it wise to concentrate, by exclusive mention, on unemployment, which is such a pressing and immediate problem in human and social as well as economic terms. There is another part of the C.C.F. subamendment. A reference to the absence of social and economic planning which calls for approval of a socialist approach or a socialist solution for national problems would make it impossible for us to support such an amendment to the address.

On this occasion, however, Mr. Speaker, and this is in contrast to previous occasions when these words were used, we have noted a reference specifically to the confused policies of the government which were criticized by us, among other reasons, precisely because they were unplanned and were carried out in a piecemeal, hit-and-miss, short-sighted fashion. We agree that there is not the kind of economic planning which is both desirable and necessary to meet these problems which are before us today. Because we feel that that kind of planning is essential for this particular purpose, we shall be able to support and vote for the C.C.F. subamendment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: In addition, Mr. Speaker, a vote against it would imply confidence in the government which is certainly not our purpose or our feeling. I have already begged the government to interrupt this debate so that its unemployment legislation could be brought forward at once for immediate action. Surely the seriousness of the situation required this procedure at this time. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has twice refused this request.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: I have only until a quarter to ten in which to finish my remarks. If I finish before a quarter to ten I shall be delighted to have the hon. member's question. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister once brushed aside my request with what I thought was a somewhat frivolous observation.

I now wish to make another request, indeed an appeal, to the government. It is that immediately this vote is taken on the subamendment we proceed without delay to take the vote on the amendment and on the main motion or, in other words, that we conclude this general discussion, this throne speech debate, tonight and proceed tomorrow with legislative and other business giving priority to unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: The Clerk informs me that it is 9.45 o'clock p.m. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 38, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith to put the question on any subamendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Argue) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. McQuillan: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: It being after ten o'clock the house stands adjourned automatically.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask a question of the leader of the house. I wondered if he would indicate whether we would take the vote on the amendment to-morrow?

Mr. Green: We will proceed with the debate in the ordinary way, Mr. Speaker, and if the hon. member and his followers have run out of ideas I am sure they could get some from their new brothers in the C.C.F.

It being seven minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

COLD STORAGE ACT PAYMENTS, ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 24—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Have any subsidies been paid or approved under the Cold Storage Act in each of the Atlantic provinces for the years 1956, 1957 and 1958? If so, how many?

2. What was the amount of the subsidy in each case and to whom was it paid?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1. (a) Subsidy contracts, under Cold Storage Act approved:

	1955-56	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59*

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 27, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PICKERSGILL—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT IN DEBATE ON JANUARY 23

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the privileges of all hon. members. In Hansard for January 23 will be found an answer given by the Minister of Labour to a question I asked him—I am making this as brief as possible, sir—in which the minister states, as recorded on page 241, that the unemployment figure, the D.B.S. figure, for March, 1958, which he said was well known to me though in fact I do not carry all these figures in my head, was 509,000. He did not give more than the rough figure, and I do not criticize that. But, sir, on examining Labour Force, November, 1945, to July, 1958, reference paper No. 58, 1958 revision, published by the dominion bureau of statistics, the figure given for March 22, 1958 is 597,000. Therefore the minister was 90,000 out and in addition he was wrong in saying that this figure was lower than the figure in 1955.

HOUSING

WINDSOR, ONT.—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO BLIGHTED AREA CLEARANCE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house that the federal government has approved a contribution to the city of Windsor under the National Housing Act to assist the municipality to acquire and clear a blighted area in the central portion of the city.

The proposals put forward by the city of Windsor envisage the clearance of an area of some 28 acres. Approximately one-half of this land, when cleared, will be sold by the city to the federal government and the province of Ontario for the construction of a low rental housing project consisting of some 280 units, the cost of which will be shared 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by the province in accordance with the provisions of section 36 of the National Housing Act. These units will provide accommodation for the families living in the area.

The remaining half of the land will be used for civic and institutional purposes as well as for private housing. The city has estimated that it will cost approximately $4,300,000 to acquire and clear this land. Under section 23 of the National Housing Act the federal government will contribute 50 per cent of the cost and will also share in any proceeds from the sale or lease of the land.

I am informed that the province of Ontario, in addition to its participation in the financing of the housing project, will also contribute financially to the cost of acquiring and clearing that portion of the area which will be used as the site for the housing project. The remainder of the acquisition and clearance cost will be borne by the city.

This project is bound to have an important impact on the structure of the central area of Windsor. It will provide additional employment opportunities as demolition progresses and a start is made on reconstruction but, above all, it will provide a new environment and new homes for approximately 1,000 persons. It is expected that the taking over of the land will commence almost immediately. This, of course, is in the hands of the city, and there will be expropriation and demolition. When the housing project itself is undertaken there will be a cost of probably $3 million. The project should be started during the summer.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I thank the Minister of Public Works for making an announcement which, in principle, was made about five weeks ago by the mayor of Windsor. The regrettable feature of this of course, as the minister knows, is that the opportunity which this project provides for giving immediate work does not afford any relief in terms of the present unemployment. However, I should like to say to the minister that this project will be of great assistance to Windsor if not in the immediate future then in the longer term, and I thank the minister very much for his interest in making this project possible to a city which he recognizes as one of the outstanding cities in this country.

Mr. Green: I should like to add just a word. The hon. member for Essex East has mentioned that this will not be of great help in respect of unemployment during this winter. May I point out to him, sir, and to the house that if he had been on his job as the member for Essex East while he was in the cabinet this work would have gone ahead some years ago.

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I should like to ask him whether grants from the federal government will be made available to other centres such as has been announced in the case of Windsor. I have in mind areas where there is considerable unemployment, and where they have low-cost land in their municipalities.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, this government is very anxious to see redevelopment projects go ahead in any part of the country, but the initiative must come from the municipality in question. In the case I mentioned it came from the city of Windsor. There are several other projects either completed or under construction; for example, in the city of Vancouver. We hope there will be requests from that city for a development scheme, but in each case the initiative must come from the city itself.

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I have received inquiries, Mr. Speaker, from a group of members of parliament from Montreal and the surrounding district relative to the progress being made in the building of the Champlain bridge—

Some hon. Members: Champagne.

Mr. Hees: No champagne this morning—and suggestions that there have been delays in its construction. As this is a matter of great interest to the Montreal district I would like to make a statement about it.

The national harbours board advises me that the bridge, as a project, is comparable to the Jacques Cartier bridge, which took 5½ years to design and build. It is estimated that the completion of this bridge will take approximately the same period of time.

Any delays which have occurred have been due largely to the fact that three years ago, when the original plans were started, overall responsibility was given to one consulting engineer, Dr. P. L. Pratley, and his illness and death have resulted in some delay. A portion of the work is being carried on by Dr. Pratley's son, Mr. H. L. Pratley, and associated with him are the firm of Lalonde and Valois, consulting engineers in Montreal, in order to speed up this project and remove the possibility of any further delay. The national harbours board report that no further delays are anticipated.

The bridge will be approximately four miles long, and will clear the seaway. It was originally intended to build this as a four-lane project, but due to representations which I received from the Montreal members of parliament, pointing out the tremendous growth which has taken place in the past few years in the Montreal area, we decided to build the project as a six-lane structure. It is estimated, because of the extra wide lanes, that the bridge will have a capacity about equal to that of Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges combined.

To date six contracts have been awarded for the construction of sections of the bridge as follows: three for fill; one for the main piers at the seaway canal; one for a temporary causeway from the Montreal shore to Nuns island, to assist construction, and one for piers in the channel from Montreal to Nuns island.

Tenders will be opened on February 12 for the main bridge structure between Montreal and Nuns island. It is expected to call tenders for the other main sections between Nuns island and the south shore within the next two months.

The target date for completion is the summer of 1961.

NATIONAL CAPITAL PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): In respect to the omission of the mayor of Ottawa and the mayor of Hull from the national capital commission, I wonder if the Prime Minister could explain the contradictions between the statement he made in the house yesterday explaining these omissions and that given out by his office, as reported in the press.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that the hon. gentleman has not read the Federal District Commission Act and the new act that took its place. In the Federal District Commission Act provision was specifically made that the mayor of Ottawa and the mayor of Hull should be members of the commission. In the new act no such provision was made. The act was made available to parliament in bill form for consideration and examination, and at no time was any suggestion offered on the part of the opposition with regard to the change which was most apparent.

Mr. Pearson: I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would now answer my question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I think the draft of the bill—and I am speaking now subject to correction—was made while the former government was in power, and specifically removed the mandatory appointment of the mayor of Ottawa and the mayor of Hull.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister has said is quite correct, and has nothing to do with the appointment or non-appointment of the mayor of Ottawa. It has to do with the mandatory provisions of the act. I asked the Prime Minister if he could explain the contradiction between the explanation he gave the house yesterday for this omission and the explanation given to the press by his office.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think the contradiction is in the mind of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would care to comment on the report of Greg Connolley in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen that, because of the omissions, the municipalities are going to believe that the federal government under this arrangement intends to implement a federal district commission similar to the federal district in the United States.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) has given notice that he intends to ask this question. May I say that the report has no foundation in substance or in fact, and is purely fictional in every respect.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO CABINET MEETING WITH PRODUCERS DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask of the Prime Minister a question in another field. In view of the magnitude and seriousness of the continuing producers strike and the need to effect an immediate settlement, can the Prime Minister say whether he is in a position, along with the majority of the members of his cabinet, to meet the large delegation that we understand will be in Ottawa momentarily?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no request has been made in that behalf to meet the Prime Minister, and I am sure the hon. gentleman has not the authority to speak for any delegation. May I also say that the attitude I took on previous occasions is unchanged. I seem to remember that in the past hon. members on the other side of the house took the strongest possible objection to any action being taken by this government in respect of the C.B.C.

Mr. Argue: Will the Prime Minister say whether he will meet the delegation and whether, because of the seriousness of the strike, he will bring the parties together?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member heard the Prime Minister's answer, which was to the effect that he had not been asked to meet the delegation.

(Translation):

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is he aware of the opinion expressed by Rev. Father Jacques Cousineau, S.J.,—an authority on labour relations,—in last Saturday's Montreal papers, about the legality of the C.B.C. producers' strike? If so, could he tell us what he thinks about it?

An hon. Member: What a jurist!

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister of Labour cannot answer my question, I believe the Minister of National Revenue is equally interested in it, so I would ask him to answer it.

Mr. Grafftey: What question?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I understand the question, and I was following it in the translation, the hon. member is asking for an expression of opinion from the minister on a legal matter.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, no; that is not the point. The question was—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I am in error I should like to be corrected, and I should like to hear what the hon. member has to say.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to assist you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for St. Denis first directed his question to the Minister of Labour and then to the Minister of National Revenue. The purport of the question was simply to ascertain if, notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of National Revenue had stated in the house that the dispute was illegal, he had now changed his mind in view of the opinion of the expert in Montreal. The question was simply that, and I submit it is perfectly within the rules of the house, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member who asked the question would indicate which minister he wishes to answer.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, we can rely on the Minister of Labour, who is looking into the matter. I presume that if he cannot give an answer to-day, he will give one tomorrow or later.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked his question. It is apparently a question of the state of mind of the minister, and I want to know which minister's mind he is inquiring into.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): In order to clear up the situation, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I have never expressed an opinion as to the legality of this strike, nor have I any comment to make on the observations contained in the newspaper report.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I then direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the opinion given in Montreal by an expert in industrial relations having to do with this matter, I now ask the minister whether he is still of the opinion that the strike is illegal, as he called it.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Having first inquired into the state of mind of two ministers we are now getting into the realm of legal opinion. I have not seen the opinion to which the hon. member refers; therefore I am unable to comment upon it. However, I personally have not changed my opinion in the slightest degree. With picket lines preventing over 1,000 people who are under contract to work from fulfilling that obligation, and in view of the fact that approximately 1,000 who have attempted to cross the picket lines have been subjected to violence and threats, there can surely be no question whatever about the illegality of this strike. I would suggest that you do not need an expert on law in order to reach an opinion. You just need a little common sense.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of National Revenue did not read that expression of opinion, would he allow me to offer him a copny of it?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not an opportunity to make statements. It is an opportunity to ask questions, and the hon. member is free to supply the information to the minister privately.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the opinion which has just been given by the Minister of National Revenue alleging violence and the breaking of the law in connection with this dispute, I ask the minister how it was that yesterday he declared that this strike in his opinion was legal.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, if the law has been broken there is no doubt that those acts have been illegal, but the question asked by the hon. gentleman yesterday was whether in my opinion this strike was illegal, and I said that in my opinion the strike was not illegal.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question. I am interested in finding out on what ground the minister could make the statement that the picket line prevented 1,000 people from crossing it, when we understand that more than 1,500 employees will be in Ottawa supporting the strike.

Mr. Nowlan: There will not be 1,500. There may be 1,500 coming from various sections of Montreal and various political parties, but there will not be 1,500 employees of the C.B.C.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

TOBACCO—ALLEGED RESTRAINT OF COMPETITION IN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice whether any action is being taken by the combines branch as a result of complaints made to the branch that a combine exists to restrain competition in the purchase of tobacco from Quebec growers.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. I am able to advise him that immediate steps have been taken to interview the complainants in order to ascertain the specific grounds of their complaint and the reasons they have for thinking a combine exists. The information obtained from these interviews will be studied promptly and carefully.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SUDBURY, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF ARMOURIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the press release last week from the Department of Labour to the effect that in the Sudbury and nickel belt area there were 8,607 unemployed as compared with nearly half that number last year, or 4,352, and in view of the press report in the Sudbury Daily Star to the effect that unemployment amounted to only 1,800 in 1950, may I ask the minister whether the plan to erect new armouries in Sudbury which has been under study for some three years, and with regard to which the present government spoke of taking action, will be implemented shortly in order to alleviate the present unemployment position.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be funds available in the vote of the Department of National Defence to enable us to begin construction of that armoury shortly. We recognize the necessity for having an armoury there, and as soon as funds can be made available further consideration will be given to the building of the armoury.

TRANSPORT

GREAT SLAVE LAKE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON ECONOMIC SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister table the report which has been in his hands now for over a year on the economic survey made by the two railway companies with regard to the construction of a railway from Alberta to the shore of Great Slave lake?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The report I have from the two railway companies is not a public document. It is a report they have made to me, and I do not propose to table the document.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

REPORTED REINTRODUCTION OF PEERAGES AND SIMILAR HONOURS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wonder if I might address a question to the Prime Minister. It is not a matter of urgency, but it is one of general interest. In view of the stimulation aroused by the story in last Saturday's Citizen as to this government's intention to reintroduce peerages and similar honours, would the Prime Minister end such discussion by giving a negative indication?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will appreciate that he is entering into the realm of policy which might better be left to be declared when it is decided.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I suggest that the reaction to this question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Port Arthur has asked a perfectly legitimate question, and it is up to the Prime Minister as head of the government to indicate whether or not he wishes to answer it. I suggest that the question is a proper one, and the hon. member has a right to expect some kind of answer from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry that I cannot agree with the hon. member for Essex East, who is a very experienced member and who knows what it is proper to ask in matters of policy. This is an inquiry into something which has no immediate urgency or reality, as the hon. member himself stated. If it were a question of whether any recommendation had been made, or something of that kind, I would permit it; but a simple question as to policy in general is, I think, going too far.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I be allowed to point to a precedent in this case. I remember that when I sat on the other side of the house a similar question was asked of a former prime minister under similar circumstances, and he made a reply and stated quite clearly what the attitude of the then government was with reference to this question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, apparently that event must have remained in the hon. gentleman's mind, because that would be the only occasion when such a thing had actually happened. So there will be no misunderstanding about this question I have simply to say this. This is another of the speculative articles whose only foundation is in the mind of the person who wrote the article.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister say whether he considers this parliament bound by the Nickle resolution?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking the Prime Minister to express an opinion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Speaker: That is an opinion on law and he knows that opinions on questions of law are not given in the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: With great deference, Mr. Speaker, I was asking an opinion on a question of fact.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the reason I asked the question originally was the type of question the Prime Minister used to ask regarding the Canada medal when he was in the opposition. I wonder whether I could ask a supplementary question with regard to the Canada medal. Has the Prime Minister given any consideration to introducing the Canada medal into active service?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No consideration whatever has been given to it. I seem to recall that Mr. King brought this into being, and having brought it into being it became one of the finest and most sought after collectors' items in this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: No one has ever got one yet.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—REPORTED REDUCTION IN PRICE BY WESTERN PRODUCE ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of information I have that the western produce association ordered a reduction of 3 to 5 cents in the price of grade A large eggs and 3 to 4 cents in the price of grade A medium eggs.

Will the minister say what steps have been taken to assure to producers a fair support price on all grades of eggs, and whether both these reductions have now been prevented?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I think the hon. member's information is incorrect. I have no information along that line. I think there is some confusion over the fact that some 10 days ago the western produce association members met together and decided to reduce the price of extra large grade A eggs by some 3 to 5 cents, thereby, I think, perhaps laying themselves open to investigation under the Combines Investigation Act; but in any event we took steps something over a week ago now to ensure that this reduction did not go into effect.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, there was a typographical omission in the question. As the minister very properly said, the question was with regard to grade A extra large eggs. I had intended this as a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice in any case after the reply of the Minister of Agriculture. May I ask the Minister of Justice whether the officials of the Combines Investigation Act are making an investigation into the very serious charge by certain agricultural representatives that the western produce association in practice appears to constitute a combine under the Combines Investigation Act?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): This is the first time that the matter has been brought to my attention; therefore I am not posted on it. But I will inquire and give the hon. gentleman an answer later.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXTENSION OF SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATION SYSTEM TO PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Boivin (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether he has had set up, in his office, a listening device connected with the simultaneous interpretation system of the house?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question for the Prime Minister but for the House of Commons.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I can simply say very definitely no. I tried that last year as an experiment. I found out, however, that there were always certain voices on the machine.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR COMBINATION OF ALL STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of the confusion that is in many minds regarding unemployment statistics, for which we seem to have three sets of figures, namely D.B.S., unemployment insurance registration and the Martin bureau figures. Will the minister consider the production of new statistical means of following the course of unemployment that would combine the unique features of all three?

HEALTH INSURANCE

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO INTENTION TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and ask him whether or not any negotiations are under way between the province of Quebec and the federal government with respect to the possible participation of Quebec in the hospital insurance plan, which was passed in this house as a result of the initiative taken by the St. Laurent government?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I may point out, despite what the hon. member for Essex East said about the legislation having been inspired, one might say, by the St. Laurent government, that it was the Diefenbaker government that made it possible for this act to come into force six months earlier than would otherwise have been the case.

I would say there are indications that the province of Quebec is interested in the hospital insurance plan.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My question was whether there were any negotiations between the minister and his opposite number in the provincial government.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): No negotiations are going on at the moment.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, January 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. W. H. Jorgenson for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson.

Mr. H. C. McQuillan (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my congratulations to the many that have already been extended to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I should like to say to the hon. member for Provencher that I have been thoroughly indoctrinated in agricultural thinking, because I find I have little support in this particular section of the house. I also wish to extend congratulations to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet who seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I want to thank him for the effort he made to bring about greater unity in Canada.

The speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) was also particularly masterful in that his accusations against the government of fumbling and bumbling were a bold attempt to cover up what has plagued his party for a good many years. Some of his fellow members betrayed him rather badly in subsequent speeches. The Liberal party professes to be a free trade or low tariff and free enterprise party, but almost invariably its members cry in the house, if not directly then by inference, for tariff protection or federal financial assistance for industries in their own constituencies.

The Liberals got along fine as a government as long as Canadian industry had a sellers' market in a goods-hungry post-war world, as long as Canadian industry could keep pushing up the prices of its products to meet increasing costs created by spiralling inflation and taxation in the post-war years. But, Mr. Speaker, when we hit a buyers' market the Liberal balloon soon deflated, and it is going to take a lot of patching before they will ever get it into the air again. Speaking of fumbling and bumbling, they bumbled their way last night into supporting a socialist amendment in the house.

The leader of the C.C.F. group also did a good deal of fumbling in his half hour masterpiece. He talked about the plight of the poor farmers in Saskatchewan, that C.C.F.-governed province, and how inflation was squeezing the life out of them. Yet one of the leaders of his party, a former member of the house, advocates a policy for labour that must inevitably lead to increases in the cost of the goods and equipment that the farmers must buy.

I have every sympathy for the farmer. I was born on a farm, and as a boy I worked many a long day on the land. I worked on a Saskatchewan farm in the days of the harvest excursions, when men used to come from the far west and east to help in the harvesting of the crop. Those were the days of an earlier radical group known as the I.W.W. I refused to be prevailed upon by members of that group to throw a pitchfork into the separator, weary as I was sometimes and tempted to do so.

I have been in Saskatchewan several times in recent years, and I spent some time there last fall. I drove through most of the agricultural area of Saskatchewan, even getting up to their prosperous timber area. I am a fairly observant person, but I did not see any evidence of the dire poverty and distress that we hear so much about in the house from the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I can be broadminded enough not to condemn all the farmers of Saskatchewan if the proposed march to Ottawa takes place by some of them who have been whipped into mob hysteria by irresponsible people both in and out of Saskatchewan. I do not know where they think the money will come from to give them approximately $250 million in so-called deficiency payments which they are demanding. I do not think they really care. Perhaps they are naive enough to think it can come from increased taxation of other Canadian industries. They may even think that it can come from an industry with which I have been connected for a great part of my life. I refer to the forest industry.

I wish to speak about the forest industry for a few minutes. I think most hon. members are aware that the forest industry is by far the biggest employer of industrial labour in Canada. It provides a larger share of the payroll for Canada's industrial labour force than any other industry. It has the biggest capital investment in plant and equipment and is responsible by far for a greater part of Canada's export trade than any other segment of our economy. Its exports amount to approximately $1½ billion annually, or 30 per cent of Canada's total exports.

The industry has weathered the recession fairly well, largely through its own initiative in selling to export markets, and this despite the fact that our lumber exporters, mostly centered in British Columbia, have had to face a 20 per cent drop in export market prices during the last two years in order to meet world competition. The industry has been primarily responsible for the fact that unemployment in British Columbia, according to the latest figures, has not worsened over what it was at this time last year. In fact on my last check I found that there was considerable improvement in my own constituency. If mother nature does not throw too much snow, such as we are getting in Ottawa, on British Columbia's coast, I believe we can look for considerable improvement in the province's employment picture.

The forest industry is the highest taxed in the nation in two of Canada's major producing provinces, Ontario and British Columbia. This is because of discriminatory provincial income taxes that are a legacy of provincial tax-sharing agreements made by the former federal government, which left the way open for money-hungry provincial premiers to impose income taxes over and above those levied against any other industry. The royal commission on Canada's economic prospects stated in its report:

> —Canadians must guard against overrating the strength of their position in forest and mineral products; for most of such commodities, there are many closely competitive sources in other parts of the world.

I should like to suggest to the Minister of Finance that the first step in implementing this recommendation of the Gordon commission would be for him to help these industries to rid themselves of the iniquitous, discriminatory taxes from which they suffer in the two provinces I have mentioned. I know that in British Columbia these taxes are discouraging much potential new capital investment which would go a long way toward beating the unemployment problem there. In my opinion that is the right way to defeat the unemployment problem.

I also suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that his department should spare no effort and, indeed, that they should extend themselves in helping the forest industry to maintain and expand its markets. Sometimes I get the impression from statements made in the house that the only export commodity Canada has is grain. I should like to remind the house and particularly the Minister of Trade and Commerce that there are many other commodities with respect to which the officials of his department could extend themselves. These forest markets are British Columbia's living.

In view of the tremendous part that the forest industry plays in Canada's economy I should like to make a suggestion to the Prime Minister, and I hope he will not treat it lightly. I think the time is long overdue for a government department which is primarily concerned with Canada's forests and forest industries. Some of you might think I am looking for a job, but that is far from my mind. The need for this department is obvious if one just reads the trade statistics.

Another problem which faces our forest industries in British Columbia, and a very pressing one, is that of freight rates. If I might misquote a song from the musical play "Oklahoma", that last one was about as far as we can go, in fact it was a little bit farther than we can afford to go. If there were another such increase we would be faced with the loss of most of our rail markets. I do think it is high time we faced our railway problems realistically. It may be that we will have to sacrifice some of our unnecessary and costly passenger or freight services throughout the country. We must hold the line on freight rates or our export industries will soon find themselves priced out of their markets. If the prairie grain producers need, and I do not dispute that they need, special consideration in the form of the Crowsnest pass freight rates, then I do not believe it is fair that other exporters should have to pay for this special treatment.

While on the subject of freight rates, I may say that on the Pacific coast we have a coastal freight rate problem which I am afraid is worsening very quickly. Up to last spring we had three major steamship companies serving the British Columbia coast—the Canadian Pacific, the Union Steamship Company, which served the coast for over 50 years, and the Northland company. I do not count the Canadian National. They have one luxury cruise ship which makes a few trips during the summer, but its sole contribution during the winter months for the last few years has been to provide accommodation for visiting Grey cup fans. For many years the Canadian Pacific and the Union Steamship Company received varying subsidies and did provide an excellent coastal service.

Shortly after the war the Northland Steamship Company entered the coastal service and last summer acquired two vessels from the Canadian Pacific, and the Canadian Pacific retired from the upper coastal area and the west coast of Vancouver island. It is my understanding that they agreed to stay out of these areas as long as the Northland company provides service. The management of the Northland company succeeded in arranging for quite a substantial subsidy from this government. The Union company, which had been operating without a subsidy since January 1958, continued operating but were unable to successfully negotiate a subsidy. Their financial position steadily worsened, to such an extent that a few days ago they found it necessary to sell their fleet to the Northland company. Now, instead of two or three junk fleets, we have one great big one. The Northland company now has a virtual monopoly of the British Columbia coastal steamship service, except from Nanaimo south along Vancouver island.

Recently I have received a number of communications on this subject, and I should like to read one or two excerpts from them. These are the first communications I have received, but I know there are many more to come. I have a telegram here from the village of Sointula on Malcolm island. It reads in part:

> With the cessation of Union Steamship services last week we find that Sointula is deprived of southbound passenger service entirely. Northbound being restricted to eight passengers on a tramp freighter which accommodation is intended to take care of other ports besides. This situation is ridiculous and we trust that you will take it up with the Minister of Transport for early correction.

I have another letter here from a man who has spent his life in the upper coastal area where he and his son operate a small sawmill. He says:

> Again we are being thrown to the wolves. Yesterday we were informed by the Union Steamship Company that they were being taken over by the Northland company and that the Catala was off the run. We were also notified that our mail and perishable freight would be delivered either at Alert Bay or Beaver Cove as we wished, but no days yet announced.

It goes on to say many more things, and he informs me that if I do not do something about this I will not be down here after the next election. He is quite justified in telling me that.

There will be disruptions and cancellation of service, as well as rapidly increasing freight rates. They have a little gimmick in coastal freight rates in that they have cubic and per ton rates. I do not know just who decides whether an article is to take the cubic or per ton rate, but 40 cubic feet are supposed to represent a ton. Wherever there is no competition the steamship company uses the cubic rate. As a result it simply means that to send 100 loaves of bread a couple of hundred miles up the coast it will cost somewhere between 6 cents and 10 cents a loaf. I have another letter here from a man who lives 100 miles north of Vancouver, in which he points out that it costs him $24.70 to get 1,000 feet of lumber from Vancouver.

As I said before, there will be disruptions and cancellation of service, as well as rapidly increasing freight rates, unless the government provides subsidies in order to maintain the rates at their present level. These subsidies are going to be on the Northland company's terms, or there will be no service or freight rates will be so exorbitant they will seriously jeopardize the economy of many communities and undoubtedly drive many businesses and residents out of the area. This is an area, Mr. Speaker, which is one of the first to have a short labour supply whenever there is anything resembling prosperous conditions in the country, because of the isolation and the fact that people with families do not want to live there. This area produces much of the raw material for the plywood plants and other industries on Vancouver island and the lower mainland.

I have been concerned for the past year about the possibility of such a situation as has arisen, and have repeatedly brought the matter to the attention of the minister concerned and some of his officials. However, the concern seemed to be all mine, and here we are with the worst coastal transportation problem in British Columbia's history staring us right in the face. I should like to tell Vancouver members to take an interest in this matter, because if those mills in their constituencies run out of logs because no one will live up the coast to produce them, they are going to have an unemployment problem that will make their present one look like prosperity.

Even without any deterioration of the coastal service as it has existed for the past few months there is the matter of the mail service to many of the small coastal communities, which is a source of annoyance and inconvenience. Some of the communities are fortunate enough to have first class air mail service, while others receive their mail by infrequent boat service. This situation exists despite the fact that small float planes shuttling passengers to and from Port Hardy airport frequently pass by all these communities. I have taken this matter up with the Postmaster General, and he has undertaken to investigate it and have a report made.

The second class mail constitutes a real problem. Very few people in that area subscribe to newspapers any longer, because by the time they get them they are perhaps 10 days or two weeks old. One woman told me that second class mail service is so poor that when she ordered a pair of shoes for one of her children, by the time she received the shoes the child had outgrown them.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment this government, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and in particular the Minister of Trade and Commerce, for the lead they took in arranging for the commonwealth trade conference held in Montreal last fall. There is no question but that this was a worth-while conference. Much was accomplished and I think much more can be accomplished by another one in the near future. I would suggest that the motto be to have a commonwealth trade conference again in 1959.

Mr. Broome: In Vancouver.

Mr. McQuillan: Yes, in Vancouver. I want to pay tribute to the Prime Minister and his ministers for the lead they have taken in, as one might say, rejuvenating the British commonwealth of nations. It is showing increasing strength day by day. The Prime Minister's journey to the commonwealth nations scattered throughout the world was a worthy effort to make a stronger commonwealth. I sincerely believe that the British commonwealth of nations is and can be for many years to come the greatest force for peace that we have in the world.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, before saying what I have to say about the address in reply, may I tell you how happy I am that you are again presiding over the proceedings of this house. I am confident that, as in the past, you will be doing so with tact, judgment, impartiality and at the same time with some leniency.

I should also like to mention, Mr. Speaker, that one of our colleagues who took sick some ten days ago is with us today, and back in good health. I refer to the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter).

I too would like to join the previous speakers in extending congratulations to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) of the address in reply who spoke knowingly of the problems of his electors, who are farmers. I think he performed his task in responsible and eloquent fashion.

As to the seconder of the address, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) a distinguished son of the constituency of Levis which I have the honour to represent here, I want to say that his was an excellent speech. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that he will follow in the footsteps of his father and grandfather, and will worthily represent the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet.

I was particularly happy to hear it stated by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet that he considers the province of Quebec to be like any other province. It was something new, Mr. Speaker, because ever since we have had the Union Nationale in the province of Quebec, I do not recall having heard a French-Canadian Conservative member of the province make such a statement. I congratulate him, because he thereby recognized that we Liberals, in the past, were right to say that the province of Quebec is a province like all other provinces. I hope, for the good of our fellow citizens, that these words will not only be repeated but acted upon.

May I be allowed also, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the presence this morning in the gallery of our good friends from Montreal, the radio and T.V. employees, who, despite their long drive of 120 miles, despite the hardships they have put up with these last four weeks, seem to me, although I can only see them some distance away, to still display that smile that we are so happy to see on our T.V. screens in the province of Quebec. Well, may I give them a word of encouragement. I believe there is a glimmer of hope for them, because yesterday, following the questions asked by the member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) who, since the beginning of the session, together with his colleagues from Montreal in particular, has shown interest in their problem, a minister has said here yesterday, and even has repeated today that their strike is not illegal.

My colleague from Gloucester, N.B. (Mr. Robichaud), has just been telling me that His Eminence Cardinal Paul-Emile Leger, Archbishop of Montreal, referred to the C.B.C. producers' strike in an address given yesterday evening before the alumni of College Ste. Marie. His Eminence stated, and I quote:

> Like the Ste. Marie alumni, everyone has the right of association. The C.B.C. strike is nothing else than that. That right, and we have examples of this every day, must be asserted.

Since we were told yesterday and again to-day by a minister of the crown that this strike is not illegal, there is every reason to hope that, in due course, the government will do something or, at least, will agree to the hon. member for Laurier's request that the negotiating committee on radio be convened at once to hear this case and the government's case at the same time.

At any rate, on behalf of my colleagues, I welcome these visitors and hope that their stay among us will be as fruitful for them, their families as for all those who, in French-speaking communities in Canada, and particularly in the province of Quebec, are anxious to see these smiling faces again on television.

An hon. Member: Cheap politics.

Mr. Bourget: Cheap politics! There again, Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) who, each time a member from the province of Quebec has the floor, indulges in interruptions, each one of them more stupid than the last. Instead of making those stupid interruptions, if he is not interested in the debate, why doesn't he stay cooped up in his office and try to find ways which might spur the government of his friends of the Union Nationale to allow universities to accept federal grants, for instance, and the province of Quebec to get the funds which the federal government puts at the disposal of the provinces.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I should like to point out to the speaker—

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order! Order!

Mr. Chevrier: Order!

Mr. Bourget: If the hon. member has any question to ask me, I have no objection to answering him, but if he wants to make a speech—

Mr. Tremblay: On a point of order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the hon. member for Levis to sit down when the Speaker is standing. May I point out to the hon. member for Roberval that he is allowed to ask a question to the hon. member, but that he may not interrupt and make a speech of his own while the hon. member for Levis has the floor.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed a remark? My point of order was that the hon. member for Levis has credited me with remarks that I did not make in this house. I made no comment; I simply pointed out to the colleague with whom I was chatting that the hon. member was being a demagogue. I also would point out, Mr. Speaker, that not only am I not opposed to the producers, but that I even made unofficial representations on their behalf.

Some hon. Members: Order! Order!

Mr. Habel: This is a speech!

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I find that the hon. member for Roberval did not ask a question. If he has not said the words I attribute to him—

Mr. Tremblay: I don't put questions to ignoramuses.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member talks of anyone acting like a demagogue, we know that he has perhaps been more of a demagogue here than anyone else.

Mr. Tremblay: Liberals are pretty good at it.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that we are being demagogues at the moment. They are the ones who, in the province of Quebec, practised demagogy more than anyone. So much so that today, they are forced to take back all that they have ever said.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I regret this digression; however—

Mr. Tremblay: Your eloquence is missing the mark.

Mr. Rouleau: The professor again.

An hon. Member: He will never learn.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, is there a special set of standing orders in the house, for any special member?

Mr. Rouleau: A special professor!

Mr. Bourget: When the hon. member for Roberval wishes to have the floor, he can have it. I must tell him that I am not in the habit of interrupting other members. I have been sitting in this house for 19 years, and I do not think I have a reputation for butting in. When I put a question to the person who has the floor, I at least have the courtesy to ask his permission.

Mr. Chairman, I shall go on with my remarks.

I was saying that I wanted to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply, and also Mr. Speaker. However, I am sorry I cannot so heartily congratulate the government which has been managing the affairs of Canada since June 1957.

Since the opening of this debate, our leader and other Liberal members have shown up with undeniable evidence the weaknesses of the present administration.

In the few minutes I have at my disposal, I should like to deal chiefly with one of the most significant problems of the day, unemployment, and particularly to analyse, in the restricted field of unemployment, the effectiveness of the winter works program put forth by the federal government.

The letter that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) sent to members of parliament last November 20—informing them of the government's proposals to the provinces in connection with the campaign for the promotion of winter employment in the municipalities, was accompanied by a copy of the letters he had sent to the various provincial premiers, outlining the same program. In these letters to the premiers, the Minister of Labour stated in detail the conditions governing the federal government's offer. There were fifteen conditions, and the third listed the types of allowable projects, subject to acceptance of each winter works project. Among the projects that could be undertaken by municipalities and in which the government agreed to share the costs, were the following:

(a) Construction and major reconstruction of streets, sidewalks and roads, except main highways.

(b) Construction and major reconstruction of waterworks, sewers and storm sewers, not including buildings.

(c) Construction and development of municipal parks.

Later on, the following were added:

Municipal playgrounds, whether located inside or outside a municipal park, excluding school playgrounds.

[Mr. Bourget.]

For these classes of acceptable projects, the government of Canada, subject to approval of each project by the provincial government, will refund to each municipality one-half the direct cost to the municipality (or to its contractors or subcontractors) of salaries paid during the period from December 1, 1958 to April 30, 1959 for the carrying out of accepted winter works covered by this proposal.

Such was the outline of the offer made by the federal government to the provinces for its winter works program. The program was widely publicized, the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche) even gave a talk about it on television on December 22 last—the producers were not on strike at the time. In the course of his remarks he said among other things:

However, the Diefenbaker government has taken every possible step for relieving unemployment on a large scale. This comes as a surprise to many Canadians. The Liberals had accustomed them to another, somewhat ostrich-like, policy. The ministers were content to deny that there was any unemployment, leaving provincial governments, municipalities and individuals to face the problem.

No matter how much we protested, or pointed out all kinds of dangers and threats that could easily have been met or averted, the previous administration always disclaimed responsibility. For them it was enough to say for instance: "We must not allow ourselves to be intimidated by the fear of unemployment, leaving provincial governments, unemployed, provincial governments and municipalities.

The response of the Diefenbaker government has been different. It has not eluded the problem. It has accepted it and is doing its level best to find an adequate solution.

Mr. Speaker, I point out that the Secretary of State claimed that the government had not eluded the problem, but then I say to the Secretary of State that the government did not solve the problem either.

Before going any further, I want to tell the hon. Secretary of State that if we Liberals had accustomed the people of Canada to an ostrich-like policy, we certainly did not keep our heads buried in the sand as long as did the Conservatives, because workers never had to put up with as much unemployment as there has been since the Conservatives took power.

I wonder also if before delivering his address, the hon. Secretary of State carefully considered the practical impact of this winter employment program on the unemployed and the municipalities of this country.

Before telling him exactly what this means, I would like, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words on the background of the unemployment question. We recall, no doubt, that during the fall of 1957, when employment was growing alarmingly, Liberal members, one after the other were trying to induce the government to take the necessary steps to alleviate the situation. Contrary to what the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche) said in his talk it was not the Liberals who were in power then but the Conservatives, and the Conservatives were the ones who refuse to admit that there was unemployment then. And, it is only by the end of January, on the eve of the general election, that the Conservative government recognized that the country had unemployment and that the situation was becoming alarming. It is then that it admitted the existence of unemployment and claimed that if there was, it was the fault of the former administration. On March 31, during the election, the hon. Secretary of State as well as the other ministers and the Conservative members from the province of Quebec and the rest of the country emphasized the famous special public works program which was to cost $1,185 millions. Well, Mr. Speaker, we realized soon afterwards that the famous special undertaking of public works costing $1,185 million, publicized over television and radio, existed only in the minds of our opponents, because in the final analysis the amount of $1,185 million which was mentioned represented only the sum total of the amounts spent each year by every department which performs construction work. And, furthermore, the bulk of the projects included in that program of $1,185 million had been conceived and developed by the former Liberal administration.

Subsequently, during the session which opened in May of last year the Liberal opposition asked the government on different occasions to take the necessary steps to spare thousands of Canadian workers the distress they had to suffer during the winter months of 1957-58. It was only in July, on the 14th and 15th of July, to be exact Mr. Speaker, that a national conference on winter employment was called last year in Ottawa. Representatives of all provinces, and representatives of many Canadian associations, workers' unions, industries along with prominent economists took part in this conference. It seems to me that, after that conference, when the government could have taken advantage of the suggestions offered by that group of persons, the people of Canada were entitled to expect the government to come up with a faster and more generous solution than the one I mentioned in my earlier remarks. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the offer came too late because, according to the letter of the Minister of Labour to the provincial premiers, it was only in October, three months after the conference took place in Ottawa, that the provincial premiers were informed by telegram of the offer the federal government wished to make.

Anyone who has some knowledge of municipal affairs knows in the first place, that it takes several weeks to survey the sites, to draw up plans and specifications, to have them approved by council, to call for tenders and to go ahead with the work. Moreover, and I am referring to my province in particular, I must say that it was only on December 11 or 12, three weeks after the provincial session opened in Quebec, that the Union Nationale government enacted legislation authorizing municipalities to take part in this project and giving them the right to borrow the necessary funds to carry out those works without referendum. This, Mr. Speaker, was a further three week delay after the already belated offer of federal authorities in regard to those works. But what is even worse, in my opinion, than the delay in announcing this program, is the futility of the reimbursement offer made by the federal government to the municipalities. As a matter of fact, and still according to information provided by the hon. minister, the federal government agrees to repay to each municipality half of total salaries paid between December 1, 1958 and April 30, 1959. Now, Mr. Speaker, as an engineer with some experience in the type of works referred to in this offer, I can state positively with many others that labour costs in those various projects represent at most 20 per cent of the total costs of works when performed in the summer. I would not like to venture an opinion on the higher cost of winter works in the other provinces since I did not practise my profession in those provinces. However, I do know from experience that, in the province of Quebec, and particularly in our area, winter works cost from 15% to 20% more. This increase, Mr. Speaker is made up of higher labour costs amounting roughly to 80 per cent; and 4 per cent higher cost of materials, machinery, "borrowed material" and other things to which the government offer does not apply because the government is not paying anything as regards materials or machinery.

Let me give you as an example a waterworks project. I use that example because I think that, in Quebec or other parts of Canada where almost the same climate conditions prevail, it would be quite difficult, to undertake anything but waterworks and sewer projects. Let us say, for example, that a municipal corporation has in mind some waterworks project which would ordinarily cost $100,000, i.e. $20,000 for labour and $80,000 for equipment and material. The same work done in the wintertime will cost $119,200, i.e. $36,000 for labour and $83,200 for equipment, materials, etc. Then, in the present case, under the federal offer, the municipal corporation would get 50 per cent for labour, 50 per cent on $36,000, or $18,000. The municipality will therefore have to pay an extra $1,200, i.e. the difference between $19,200 and the $18,000 it will get from the federal government.

I don't believe it can be said that the government has been over-generous and that our municipalities should be enthusiastic over that highly publicized offer. The example I just gave is based first on my own experience of municipal works and my opinion is corroborated by studies made by the city of Quebec technical services on some projects which they propose to submit to the federal government.

In the paper Le Soleil of December 17, 1958, there is an article which reads as follows:

> Quebec will launch a $500,000 works program to cut down unemployment.

Two days later, on December 19, the same paper published an editorial entitled:

> The city—

—meaning Quebec.

> —will do its share, but without much enthusiasm.

And here is a part of the article that will be of great interest to hon. members. I quote:

> Municipal authorities have decided to take advantage of the federal law which provides financial assistance to municipalities for winter works projects to reduce unemployment throughout the country. The council's decision was not taken in a surge of enthusiasm. Council members resigned themselves to the idea with the conviction that it was only a lesser evil. Explanations which were given at the last council meeting when a list was drawn up of works to be undertaken in mid-January,—

And, according to the latest information, these works will be undertaken only by mid-February. Then—> —showed that municipal authorities are convinced that they are making a bad deal. The works amounting roughly to $500,000 will yield $186,000 in salaries. From 100 to 200 persons will be employed for about three and a half months.

[Mr. Bourget.]

I repeat, 100 or 200 persons, when there must be at least 15,000 unemployed in the city of Quebec. They will employ from 100 to 200 persons during two or three and a half months.

> Even if the federal government is to pay half of the labour cost, the city would spend $5,000 more on that works program than if the work had been done during the summer, at the city's own expense. It is obvious that this initiative on the part of the city which it could hardly avoid taking, will be of little help in relieving unemployment within the city. A small fraction only of our unemployed will benefit from it, and on the whole it will be a very slight impetus to the Quebec economy in general.
> That is why council members said that the federal legislation is inadequate.

Furthermore, the mayor of Quebec stated the following, as recorded in Le Soleil of December 1958. I quote:

> The city is undertaking those projects solely to help the unemployed; in fact, from the administrative point of view, the city is not making a good deal.

This seems to me a good example to bring forward at this time. Besides, other municipalities are reacting in the same way. After all they fully realize that they will be called upon to pay 100 per cent or even more of the costs of the works which they would decide to undertake in the course of that period.

I should like to add that in the province of Quebec municipalities are worse off than elsewhere; indeed in certain provinces, like Ontario, Prince Edward Island, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, it was deemed proper, no doubt after considering the program and what I would call the federal government's measly offer to municipalities, to contribute additional amounts varying between 25 to 30 per cent of the cost of salaries.

In the province of Quebec, the Union Nationale government usually proves itself quite large-handed when awarding contracts, yet it did not see fit to vote a penny to assist the 175,000 or 200,000 unemployed we now have in the province. However, the provincial government keeps repeating, especially in election time, that the financial situation of the province is just fine, that it is the best of all provinces in the confederation. Well then, why not help out the municipalities under the circumstances?

In the past our opponents consistently claimed that the responsibility for a solution to the unemployment problem lay mainly at the door of the federal government. Well, it is a sad thing to see this fast reversal of policy, since after all, as I said, the share paid by the federal government in those projects is nominal and, in the province of Quebec, the financial assistance given by the Union Nationale government is nil. As was so pointedly stated last Wednesday by the hon. member for Laurier, it is certainly not with four, six or eight million dollars that we can hope to improve the situation of the 600,000 unemployed in Canada.

I was therefore correct in saying that this federal government project, like last year's famed public works program, is nothing but eyewash.

I shall be urged to be objective, to state what solution the Liberal party would have offered under the circumstances. I see that my speaking time is running short, but I would suggest that my hon. friends look up the program that the Liberal party offered to the Canadian people in the last election. They will see, in the section dealing with aid to the municipalities, what we would have done, they will find that we would have paid a greater part of the total cost of the works, so as not to let the full burden rest, once again, on the municipalities, which, Mr. Speaker, now have to pay at least six, and in certain cases up to seven per cent interest on loans.

In my constituency, no municipality is sharing in this program, because they cannot afford it. I know that my hon. friends opposite share my view in this regard and realize that our municipalities, particularly in the province of Quebec, cannot afford to share in this program. The reason is not, Mr. Speaker, that we have no unemployment, no cases of hardship. Actually, in mid-December 1958, there were 4,447 applicants registered at the Levis office, and the figure must now have reached close to 6,000, not including those who have not registered.

I said a moment ago that we would have contributed a larger share of the total cost of the works. In fact this government could have done as much if it had known how to manage those expenditures wisely, without any extra cost to the Canadian taxpayer. It only had to grant ½ of 1 per cent less interest on the bonds of the last conversion loan. This would have meant a saving of at least 15 to 20 million dollars which could have been applied to this winter work program. But this was not done, Mr. Speaker, because it is quite apparent that, since they took office, our friends opposite have no time to think; they are satisfied with proceeding on a piecemeal basis.

As I said, this government must take the blame for its lack of action and for having no definite projects in mind to alleviate the problems which we must meet, and also for failing to take steps which were imperative.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall not be told that my approach has been merely negative. On the contrary I have tried, during those few minutes at my disposal, to be as unbiased as possible in showing the weaknesses of that program while suggesting one way to solve the problem or at least to improve in a substantial way the winter works program now submitted to the population by the Conservative government.

(Text):

In my closing remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wish to repeat my leader's appeal to the government to conclude this debate immediately and proceed at once with legislation to deal with the unemployment problem. So long as the government persists in prolonging the debate and delaying action the Liberal party will take its part in the debate, but we are ready to have the vote now and get on with the nation's business.

(Translation):

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I admit that at first this session of parliament had me scared. There had been talk, on the Liberal side, of a definite offensive, of a bold stroke. All the press had been forewarned and we were promised a battle worthy of Thermopylae. The Liberals, according to the press were coming to Ottawa armed cap-à-pie.

Mr. Speaker, I have always feared war. But the knowledge that you would again referee our debates brought me a measure of comfort. I told myself that your qualities, which I had had the opportunity to appreciate, would constitute a defence in case the enemy attempted to pulverize me. Besides, I knew I could count on the courage and the virtues of the hon. Deputy Speaker, (Mr. Sevigny), who is also a great fighting man.

Very fortunately, to take our minds momentarily away from the atrocities of war, there were the magnificient ceremonies which marked the opening of this session and the encouraging addition of three new members to our ranks. I offer my most sincere congratulations to the new members for Grenville-Dundas, for Springfield and for Montmagny-L'Islet, (Mrs. Casselman, Mr. Slogan and Mr. Fortin).

Yet, ours was not unalloyed joy for at the same time, came into this house a new Liberal soldier, wounded, it is true, but victorious in the short counter offensive of Trinity (Toronto). With all my heart, Mr. Speaker, I offer to this hon. colleague my humble congratulations.

The speeches heard subsequently were quite reassuring. The mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson), who had told us quite realistically of farm problems, deserved for his contribution as many warm congratulations as the seconder of the address, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), who gave us his views on national unity.

But Mr. Speaker, it was no longer possible to put off the fray. I shut my eyes when I heard the first shot of harquebus from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson); but at the second shot, I opened them. At the third shot, I watched the Liberal captain sighting his weapon. It failed to go off. His powder-horn was empty. I realized, that after all the harquebus is a rather obsolete weapon and I realized that the war was over. And now the arrows of the old pensioned officers or the pea-shooters of the adjutants cannot scare me. Their fighting methods are much too primitive.

Mr. Speaker, before I deal with the subject I intend to discuss, I should like to protest with the utmost vigour against the words and ulterior motives which the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) ascribed to me a while ago. I stated, when a point of order was raised, that I had not said the words that were put into my mouth, for I indeed did not say them.

Mr. Speaker, not only did I not show any intention of rising in protest against the demonstration we witnessed today but for the past week I have been sitting down with C.B.C. producers for hours, and even late into the nights, discussing the matter so that I could have a fair view of the situation and that I could enlighten, if possible, my government.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to comment beforehand on the rights and facts involved in the C.B.C. producers' strike, but I shall state here most emphatically that due process of law, fairness and uprightness should prevail all along the line, instead of sheer electoral demagogy.

[Mr. Tremblay.]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member allow me to ask a question?

Mr. Tremblay: Certainly.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, it is in the name of this fairness, referred to by the hon. member, that I ask the following question: Why should not the government intervene to settle this dispute?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laurier's deftness in dealing with questions in the past should now enable him to answer the one he just asked me. For the last few days, he has been asking questions in the house on this subject and answers were given. It is not my responsibility to answer on behalf of the ministers of the Crown, but what I want to say and state again is that I favour law, fairness—

Mr. Bourget: So do we.

Mr. Fortin: You are not that many for that purpose this morning.

Mr. Tremblay: —and truth.

Mr. Speaker, in closing my remarks on this subject, I must say that, like everybody else, I am anxious that this strike should come to an end according to the principles of justice and order, because as a professional teacher, I appreciate the importance of radio and television for the Canadian culture.

At the opening of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I said that we had come to this session expecting it was going to be like war but I realized that we had better come back to peacetime and adapt ourselves to those conditions better than the Liberals adapted Canadian politics to peacetime after the 1939-45 war. In view of the general economic recession, this is indeed the chief cause of the conditions now prevailing in the country, conditions that are difficult without being extreme, even if we must understand that words alone will not improve them. The Liberals are attempting to show that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) contradicted himself on this matter. Because he stated that the Liberals are responsible for the present uneasiness and because he said, on the other hand, that there were signs of recession almost everywhere in the world, a contradiction has been discovered. Quite the contrary one statement only confirms the other. One indeed could expect that, following high-gear wartime production, industrial and commercial activity would slow down to a level of stability. This quest for stability was necessarily accompanied by some groping and uneasiness characterized by a more or less severe recession. Such is the situation at the present time. It is in order to minimize the disastrous effects of this period of economic instability that the Liberal government should have taken constructive action. It must be recognized that no action was taken by that government because, as recently as the end of 1956, Canada was in the throes of recession that touched off a drastic business slump and unemployment.

This confirms and substantiates the hon. Prime Minister's claims that depressed economic conditions the world over are responsible for those now being felt here in Canada and which are all the more serious for the Liberals' inability to prevent the effects of this general recession.

That is why the Liberals are wrong in trying to evade their responsibilities. They say that the hardships facing the population of this country are no concern of theirs. They hypocritically wash their hands of the matter, because, as many of them have stated here, the Conservative government has been in office since 1957. They forget that when the government took over, the recession was already here. The Liberals knew it perfectly well, for before the election they concealed an economic report which cautioned them against impending dangers. Now, of course, they would like to pass the buck. They have neither the courage nor the sincerity to stand by their past actions. However, perhaps they still have the sincerity of the principles which they now dare to express, for instance: " to govern is to foresee". Why did they not foresee? Since the end of the war, from 1945 to 1957, twelve years have elapsed, mind you. Twelve years during which the Liberal government has had all the time it needed to adapt our country to peacetime conditions, to accumulate reserves, to restore the Canadian economy to normalcy and to foresee all the shocks which, in the international economic field, would necessarily follow in the wake of wartime conditions. They did not do anything of the sort. That is why they have no right now to cover their faces and say: "to govern is to foresee". They had to account for their actions. The people of Canada have judged them and have condemned them precisely because the Liberals had been unable to foresee. And if, in 1957, the people of this country, despite all the clamours of the Liberals, and despite their charges concerning unemployment or the recession, gave their support to the Conservative party, it is because people realized that the Conservatives were not responsible for these difficult times. They asked us to take over the government of the country and straighten things out. They asked us to provide for the future first by facing the problems of the day, and by repairing as best we could under the circumstances, the economy that the Liberals had let go to ruin.

Scarcely two years have elapsed, and already those Liberals, so vigorously castigated by the people whom they had mocked, were beginning to raise their heads once more, and trying again to capitalize on the good faith of the Canadians. They launched a press campaign to prepare the ground for this session; they prevailed upon newspapermen to write that the real problem of our present policy is not to try to find who is finally responsible for the economic recession, but to find a solution. Nobody will claim the contrary. But the press also has a no less imperative duty, that of recognizing the efforts of the government and to help the population to understand that no one can repair, in a few months, an economic structure whose foundations were so deeply shaken. This is the statement I found in L'Action Catholique of January 21:

> Indeed, each citizen has the right to discuss the advisability of such and such measure with a view to curing unemployment, but every citizen is bound to admit that the government faces its responsibilities and fulfills its duty by trying to promote employment.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals have again taken up a tune which helped them to delude the Canadian people during the difficult years of the world economic depression. In 1930, after a bitter defeat, they secretly enjoyed seeing the Conservatives fight unemployment. In 1935, they beguiled the people by saying for instance: we will put an end to the recession and to unemployment. Everybody knows that, when the international situation had slowly recovered under the impetus of preparations for war, the Liberals had still done nothing to help the population, so that the new Quebec government, from 1936 on, had to—

(Text):

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, before recess, I was saying that the Liberals had deluded the Canadian people by saying: "We will put an end to the recession and to unemployment." I added that it was a well-known fact that when the international situation had slowly recovered due to war preparations, the Liberals had still done nothing to assist the population so that the new Quebec government, from 1936 on, had to give direct assistance to the people of our province through public works and social security measures.

The war in 1939 saved the Liberals who were haunted by the depression and unemployment. The people credited them with Canadian prosperity until, around 1955 and 1956, they saw our economy floundering. They worried to the point of asking the Conservative party to take over in June 1957.

This time the Liberal party will not be able by means of a smear campaign to grasp control over the nation's affairs. People are watching, day by day, the work of the government they elected. They realize that this government is going out of its way to find efficient remedies to the evils which beset us. Above all, they accept the sacrifices made necessary by the nation's economic recovery. They do this to follow the example set by other countries which must also, in order to face their difficulties, impose on their taxpayers a regime of austerity; such is the case in Argentina and in France.

Another thing that people see is the unhealthy use being made by the opposition of the difficulties facing the government and the citizens. Political capital is being made of unrest, unemployment, and the suffering of citizens. Politics are being played with matters which, on the contrary, should call for reflection, sympathy and positive action. What have we been hearing here since the debates have been resumed? Cries of alarm, affected indignation, hypocritical profession of faith in principles of humanity and social benevolence so often betrayed and despised. Who spoke about unemployment in a way to unduly frighten the Canadian people? Who moaned, cried, vociferated about imminent catastrophes and irreparable disasters?

This show of assumed compassion has been given us by seasoned actors, by men who know every trick of expediency and artifice.

Mr. Speaker, one of the beneficial effects of this sadistic propaganda was to disgust an hon. member of the opposition who seems to be a member of that party without being one of its supporters. I quote him from Hansard of January 22, 1959, page 19 of the English appendix:

> I do not wish to play politics with unemployment. Too many members in this house use this calamity to play politics.

And later, he added:

> I believe that we should consider the question of unemployment from a human point of view and try to find a solution.

This was, Mr. Speaker, the voice of reason, of common sense, and in a word, of decency.

This call to order was bound to ring out amidst the shrieks of political passion. And it is interesting to note that that intervention came from the most fanatical of the opposition groups. Within the Liberal camp, such a note must really be too jarring, but in any event, it reveals that after two sessions, several Liberals have reached the point of saturation. There is certainly a new trend in the making, a trend which we feel sure will be in the direction of honesty and fair play.

We hope, for our part, that this change of heart on the opposition side will result in positive suggestions being made, instead of the bitter and negative criticisms we have been hearing so far. Indeed, it must be recognized that if, in fact, the situation of this country is as tragic as it is being represented to the people, it must also be admitted, Mr. Speaker, that we have been left alone to improve it. Who, in the opposition, has come forward with practical suggestions? Oh, of course, Mr. Speaker, there have been suggestions! The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) stated, for instance, to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr): "It is your business". And the improbable member for Hull (Mr. Caron) who, as the man in the fable, would have pumpkins grow on oak trees, advanced the suggestion that to end unemployment Her Majesty the Queen, when she visits Canada, should pat Canadian babies on the cheek. On that occasion, he wrote this statement, which is well worthy of the dadaist school, and I quote from page 197 of Hansard:

> And when the Queen Mother went by, so close to the people, a woman held up her baby and the Queen Mother went up to the child and patted it. Imagine the feelings of this mother seeing the Sovereign of Canada go up to her baby.

Mr. Speaker, with all due deference to Her Majesty, I do not believe that the proposal of the hon. member for Hull could in any way relieve the present unemployment situation.

Who did provide us with suggestions for restoring the Canadian economy? The Liberals claim that they have always been wise and careful administrators. Have they? If this is so, why don't they put their wisdom and their experience at the service of the citizens and of the government? Do we have to corner them into doing it? Where are the improvident administrators that the people have condemned twice, in 1957 and 1958, and, in this case, why do they criticize and why do they spread confusion in the minds of citizens? If they are experts in the field of administration, they have no right to deprive the government of their valuable advice.

It must be admitted that the Liberals' contribution to the people of Canada has been rather poor these last few months. This contribution has amounted to no more than the selfsame grievances, voiced by the Liberal chieftains, parroted by the party's rank and file, and heeded only by professional agitators, whose function is to spread trouble and strife.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the similarity of the methods of those who, in Canada, incite aggressive claims, manage to insinuate themselves into our labour organizations, capitalize on the difficulties and disputes that happen between employers and employees, and the methods used by marxist propagandists.

This similarity is evident in their common desire to create disturbance in the minds and conscience of people, to alarm citizens by setting up the cry of real or fancied injustice. This first step is soon followed by the running down of authorities at all levels. They work on the principle that authorities always favour the strong, that the weak are necessarily always right, and that whatever governments might do, they will never be able to restore equity. This is the normal process of an impulse which, bred in the discontent which it has managed to create, leads to aggressive claims through direct attacks on authority and an assault against law and order.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I know what weakness and cowardice can often hide behind those words: order and authority. But beyond the people and individuals who, at a given time, hold the power, there is a principle which must be preserved, that of authority without which all is disorder and anarchy. I believe the time has come in this country to think about safeguarding this most important asset of society. Let anyone induce people to lose confidence in the institutions which govern them, and the decisive step has been taken towards irreparable social catastrophes. And here I am reminded of the warning given by Cardinal Leger in his recent pastoral letter on unemployment, and I quote:

> Labour unions may try through collective action to interest public opinion in their legitimate claims provided however that truth, justice and charity are always respected. Organizations must keep away from demagogy which is always an obstacle to genuine solutions, generates an unhealthy climate of class struggle and uselessly and dangerously increases bitterness and resentment. The activity of the organizations must tend to enlighten the minds and stimulate the wills towards practical achievements. This is the climate that will generate an authentic spirit of co-operation without which there can be no real solution.

This appeal in favour of honesty, truth and charity is not directed solely to labour organizations but to all those who, in some degree, are responsible for government and public opinion.

It seems to me that the press, particularly a certain leftist press that will not let up until it has undermined order in Canada, should take this appeal to heart. Opposition members, in particular, should ponder those words, because they suggest a straightforward policy which does not exclude sound and constructive criticism, differences of opinions, re-examination of some problems and the criticism of institutions and of the men who operate them.

Those words of Cardinal Leger put us again in the face of our duties, the least of which does consist in trying to spare our country the political and social mistakes which paved the way to marxism in many countries. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I should like to impart to you certain thoughts that occurred to me following my stay in New York as Canadian delegate to the General Assembly of the United Nations. And I take this opportunity to thank the Prime Minister, in my own name and on behalf of my constituents, for thus honouring the constituency of Roberval.

The time I spent there enabled me to realize more fully the threat of communism to world peace. I realized that the efforts of official diplomacy cannot alone defeat communist ideology. We must, by our example and by positive action, show to the world a philosophy that is carried into everyday life, and is practised in such a way as to win the acceptance of anyone sincerely concerned with promoting, in one way or another, the well being of mankind. We must win acceptance, in our society, for the principle of authority and also for the principles of justice and charity without which all authority is sham and tyranny in a more or less disguised form.

I spoke approximately in these terms to the people of my constituency on the evening of January 3rd last, through the medium of television. Discussing the emergence of nationalism that is apparent in the countries of Asia and Africa, and the resentment felt by these people towards the nations that long dominated them, I laid stress on our duty to help by every means at our disposal, these people that have but recently achieved political independence. I said particularly that we must, in the eyes of these people, give renewed value to the principles of our western and Christian civilization through the practice of genuine charity, equally free from shabby interest and from scornful condescension. I therefore called upon my constituents to lend their support to our government's participation in the plan to give technical assistance and aid to underdeveloped countries. This is what I said on that occasion:

> The communist regime is largely the product of social injustice. It is the responsibility of the countries that still understand the value of spiritual ideas to remove, in so far as possible, the causes of hardship and injustice. That is the only way in which we can defeat an atheistic and materialistic ideology that promises people their freedom and lures the meek by the false promise of illusory happiness born of equality among all classes of society. This task prompts us to share fully in the assistance and international mutual aid program. We can no longer afford to lag behind. It behooves us to provide our financial share and it is in this fashion that we shall contribute to the achievement of world peace.

If my colleague of the constituency of Lapointe (Mr. Brassard) had heard me that evening, he would not have stated so firmly the other night that no Conservative members from Quebec had yet pronounced itself on that question of assistance to under-developed countries.

I can only explain his attitude by his unawareness of that fact, because I know he is honest enough not to wilfully hide the truth. Besides, he belongs to a different school and is of different background from those of several colleagues of his party, those young and even not so young demagogues who will never learn, during the debates, to remain at the level of the principles of politics, history, political economy, legal economy and social philosophy. And may I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am ashamed to hear fellow-citizens of my province expressing themselves like anarchists when it comes to anything concerning Quebec, its prerogatives, its traditions and its institutions. I do not believe they rise in anybody's esteem by smearing those who control our affairs in Quebec. That they do not share the political beliefs of their opponents, that is their privilege, as men and citizens, but this does not give them the right to smear and insult the people of Canada who, by democratic means, have chosen their government.

Mr. Speaker, the exercise of democracy as we know it entails one handicap: that of electing to power, among fair-minded men, among men imbued with sound ideas and principles, dubious individuals and political adventurers. Fortunately, in this field also, immanent justice eventually prevails and only in rare cases do vituperators like those we have heard in recent days, last very long. They are soon swept out by the same wave which had momentarily held them afloat.

Last year, during the budget debate, I said that we, Conservatives from Quebec, have no lessons to learn from the Liberals. I was emphasizing in particular constitutional facts and problems. I was stating especially that the difficulties we are now encountering in this field are due to the fact that the Liberal party has forced the constitutional development of our country. This phenomenon has taken concrete form in the constitutional solutions of the Liberal party, and the least that can be said about them is that they are not always wholly in keeping with the nature and spirit of the British North America Act.

Thus it is, for instance, that adepts of Canadian neo-federalism are slyly attempting to shift the objectives of constitutional struggles. They would substitute an economic system contingent in itself, and subject to the changing conditions of our national economy, to a constitutional formula which in itself has a much more permanent value, for it is founded upon the lines of force of our history and the essential factors of the psychology of our ethnical groups. The undertaking is significant, but how perilous.

I submit that the Liberals are ill-advised in plying us with questions on constitutional problems and especially on fiscal problems. They need not fear. We shall, in due course stand by our convictions. Their experience will probably help us to avoid serious mistakes. In particular have we nothing to learn from Liberal members from Quebec?

Too long have they been tongue-tied on this subject, for us to be so naive as to believe the moon is made of green cheese. They are now like the monkey operating the magic lantern, save that they too have forgotten to light the lamp. The pronouncements made by the right hon. Prime Minister on education should sufficiently indicate to them that the Conservative party is intent on abiding by the constitution of this country. The representations made by the Liberal opposition will leave us unimpressed. It takes time to iron out certain delicate issues: it takes time and thought because a problem of such moment does not admit of a rash solution.

Last year, the most obscure and the most mixed up member of the Liberal party tried to take the Conservative members from the province of Quebec by surprise by asking for a vote after an inane speech that will remain as a model of what can come out of sheerest ignorance. After saying that the French element had died in 1760, after picking all concepts to pieces—

An hon. Member: What an intellectual!

Mr. Tremblay: —the member who, on that occasion, was dabbling in the field of education, concluded what one can not even describe as remarks, with a piece of clownery. His gesture was intended to have high meaning. It was meant to be a rallying sign.

This cheap ranting, Mr. Speaker, was greeted by public opinion with impressive silence. The only consolation of the member in question was that he had fulfilled the task entrusted to him. But those who, not personally desirous of saying what the member had said, had entrusted him with this demagogic mission, must have finally realized that, ass of Balaam though one might be, one is an ass for all that.

Again in the area of constitutional problems, the debate on the address gave us, Mr. Speaker, an exceptionally moving moment: the conversion of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). The other day, he spoke like a convert, an egregious convert. At the close of his speech, he suddenly broke into unwonted nationalist accents. I say accents, but perhaps I should say outcry. The whole house was shaken by it. But after going over as far back as 1935, I found nothing in the hon. member's speeches that sounded like a nationalist profession of faith. So, Mr. Speaker, I find myself compelled to revise my remark and say that the hon. member for Laurier has let out a nationalist cry, the first of his career, a sort of swan song, the last roar of an aging lion currently being displayed in the province of Quebec for lack of native fauna.

I hope that star does not take himself too seriously. The fact is, Mr. Speaker that in this field, we, in Quebec, do not like imported goods. We prefer genuine Quebec Liberals of Quebec; they amuse us without annoying us.

Mr. Speaker, I would still have many things to say on the problems of particular concern to the constituency of Roberval. Today, however, I shall confine myself to the remarks I have made so far. In conclusion, I would like once again to challenge the allegations that were made against me this morning and the malicious intentions gratuitously credited to me. At a time when there was in the public gallery an audience whose presence was well calculated to elicit demagogic statements, an attempt was made, by insidious questions, to stir public opinion and to create the impression that the Conservative government has not really dealt with the country's problems. My remarks, Mr. Speaker, were possibly unpleasant, but my purpose in making them was to keep the record straight and to give credit where credit is due. I hope I have not spoken in vain. I hope all this will be taken as evidence of my good will, the good will of a Canadian from the province of Quebec who has understood that the welfare and prosperity of Canada are based on unity. However, that unity finds expression in mutual understanding of the ethnic groups that make up this country and in the pooling of their respective heritages. And this, Mr. Speaker, must be based on the constitutional law and the history of our country. That, Mr. Speaker, is precisely the political ideal I intend to promote in this house.

(Text):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I do not apologize for rising to take part in this debate for a second time. I wish this afternoon to discuss two questions which affect in a special manner the citizens of the province of Quebec, but before I do so I hope the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat and who has complained so bitterly about the language used by hon. members on this side of the house, and especially about the language used by the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget), will not complain when I say to him that the language he has used has gone far beyond reason and that suggested by the hon. member who spoke this morning.

So far as his remarks with regard to myself are concerned, I pay not the slightest attention to them. The reason is that I hold my seat in this house as a member from the province of Quebec and as the member for the constituency of Laurier, and I have no lesson to learn from the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. Furthermore, if the hon. member thinks he is going to teach anyone in this house a lesson by the kind of language he has used this afternoon he is entirely mistaken, because all he has done is go to the other extreme; and I say to him this: there are none so blind as those who will not see.

The first matter to which I should like to call the attention of the house is one which is to my mind of considerable importance not only to the people of Canada as a whole but in a particular degree to the people of the province of Quebec. I refer to the Chicago water diversion scheme. There has been some discussion of this in the house, and perhaps I can go over the matter again very briefly. By virtue of a decree issued in the United States supreme court it was provided that on and after December 31, 1938, the diversion of water from lake Michigan through the Chicago canal should be limited to 1,500 c.f.s. in addition to domestic pumping for the city of Chicago. Ever since that decree was made by the supreme court, Chicago and the metropolitan sanitary district of that community have sought to increase the diversion permitted; and while it was increased very slightly in 1940, in 1942 and again in 1944, the additional amount, I am told by the authorities, was not serious.

Since then, however, there have been three bills introduced into congress seeking to authorize an additional diversion of 1,000 c.f.s. Two of those bills have been vetoed by the President. In 1954 one bill was vetoed by the president. In 1955 another similar bill died. In 1956 the President vetoed a further bill and finally, in 1958, a bill failed to pass the Senate.

There is now before congress, as this house knows, another bill known as H.R. No. 1, the purpose of which is to divert an additional amount of water from lake Michigan into the Chicago drainage canal, which would have a serious and detrimental impact on down-river rights. Here I should like to refer to a question I asked of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on January 21, which will be found on page 148 of Hansard:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that according to a study made by a subcommittee of the international joint commission power development in the international section will be materially affected by this diversion, and that the water level in Montreal will be reduced by three-quarters of an inch?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I am not aware of this report, but I can assure the hon. member that that, along with other matters, is now being considered as I have intimated in my reply.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a further supplementary question. Is this particular bill similar to the one which was introduced on this subject last year in the United States congress, and concerning which the government said it had no objection to its passage?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I have not seen the bill and I have not compared it, but I do understand that it is almost identical.

Then again, sir, at page 240 of Hansard, dealing with the same subject, the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) rose on January 23, 1959 and asked this question:

Mr. Speaker, by way of clarification I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of the question of the Leader of the Opposition to the minister on Wednesday dealing with the diversion of water from lake Michigan at Chicago. My question is, did the Canadian government raise any objection to the bill concerning the Chicago diversion which was before the United States congress last year?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I must emphasize in reply that the Canadian government did make lengthy representations in writing which are contained in an aide memoire to the United States Department of State of January 6, 1958 and which, as I said on Wednesday, was tabled in this house on August 2, 1958.

The aide memoire registered the serious and deep concern of the government with respect to the injurious consequences which would result from any considerable diversion of water from the great lakes system.

Mr. Pearson: Did the particular note to which my hon. friend refers express objection to the passage of this particular bill?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): It did, sir; in essence it did.

Now, sir, I say that in that reply the minister misled the house. And immediately, so there will be no indication on my part to be unfair to the minister, I say to him I am sure he did not do it willingly because, knowing the minister as I have for years, that is not his method of approach to a question. But none the less that statement made by the minister is a misleading statement, because these are not the facts as I have ascertained from the report of the international joint commission.

What are the effects of the 1,000 c.f.s diversion out of the great lakes, as found by the international joint commission? I hold in my hand an interim report made to the international joint commission by the international lake Ontario board of engineers on this whole matter. This report is dated June 14, 1955. The purpose of the report is outlined at page 2, and I read:

The purpose of this interim report is to determine the effect on the levels of lake Ontario of 1,000 cubic feet per second increase in diversion out of lake Michigan at Chicago for a period of three years. The consequent effect of the lowering of lake Ontario upon navigation in lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence river and upon the generation of hydroelectric power at Niagara and in the St.

Lawrence river are also determined on the assumption that the three-year period of increase in diversions would commence on July 1, 1955.

Now, what are the facts? According to this report, if this diversion were to take place there would be a maximum reduction instage of lake levels in lakes Michigan and Huron of .05 feet; lake Erie, .03 feet; and lake Ontario, .03 feet. In so far as navigation is concerned the reduction in levels in inches would be at Montreal harbour, three-eighths of an inch; in lake St. Louis, one quarter of an inch; in the harbours on lake Ontario, three-eighths of an inch; and in the harbours of other lakes such as Michigan and Huron, five-eighths of an inch.

This report also goes on to deal with the effect of the diversion in so far as power development in the downstream areas of the river is concerned. In the St. Lawrence river plants it is stated that reduction in flows of the St. Lawrence river, because of this 1,000 c.f.s. increase in Chicago diversion for three years, would reduce the water available to the plants now under construction at Barnhart island and the existing Cedars and Beauharnois plants, and the proposed addition to the Beauharnois plant and any proposed plants which may be constructed in the Lachine rapids section. Then the document concludes that the total energy losses at the Beauharnois, Cedars and Lachine plants will be in the neighbourhood of 86,600,000 kilowatt hours. Later on in the report, at page 12, it is said:

The total computed loss in energy at the above plants is 420 million kilowatt hours. Of this amount only 276 million kilowatt hours would be lost at existing plants and plants either under construction or actually scheduled for construction.

I should like to pause here for a moment to say this. While the bill will help to solve the sewage and drainage problem at Chicago, there is no justification for taking such an amount of water out of the great lakes basin, and it cannot be justified by any stretch of the imagination because it is not right from a moral standpoint. The waters belong to all the citizens of the great lakes, and if this is authorized then another additional amount will be sought by the Chicago drainage commission.

Perhaps the minister does not know, but it is a fact that at one stage the Chicago sanitary commission sought to get an additional amount of great lakes water in order to develop hydroelectric power in the Chicago area. That has been stated already before the rivers and harbours committee in the United States, where it has been said that the real motive behind this demand for increased diversion, according to the great lakes harbour association which gave evidence before that committee, is the desire on the part of the sanitary district of Chicago to obtain additional hydroelectric power to be developed by the facilities they own and operate, namely the hydroelectric project at Lockport, Illinois. In 1946 the assistant chief engineer of the sanitary district commission asserted that increased diversion could double the power output at the Lockport plant of the sanitary district, and in 1947 the suggestion was made that increased diversion of water was needed for the development of atomic power because of the establishment of the Argonne laboratory on the banks of the sanitary district canal some 20 miles southwest of Chicago. Then in 1950 an appeal was made to President Truman to obtain additional diversion in order to obtain additional hydroelectric power during the coal strike.

Therefore it appears from those statements which are public and can be read by the minister, that the Chicago sanitary district is interested in obtaining additional diversion for power purposes.

The minister referred to an aide memoire which he tabled and which contained a protest against the possible diversion. I have obtained this aide memoire, which was printed as an appendix to Hansard; and while I am unable to find in this the kind of protest I would like to see, what I would like to bring to the attention of the minister is this. On page 2 of the aide memoire which has been given to me, while there is some general reference to the fact that it is assumed by the United States administration the diversion will have a detrimental effect on navigation and hydroelectric power generation in both countries, the reasons are not set out therein. In the concluding paragraph there is set out in some detail what the effect of this diversion will be on upriver interests, on lake levels in the upper regions of the lakes and on the international section, but not one word is said about downriver interests, and it is against this that I rise to protest today. I should like to quote what is said in the aide memoire.

However, if it were possible to offset part of the effects of the Chicago diversion by inflows from the Albany basin in Canada it would be equitable that an equivalent amount of water should remain available for use in hydroelectric power generation by the Ontario interests at St. Mary's falls, Niagara falls and in the international section of the St. Lawrence river until the effects of the proposed temporary diversion will have ceased to be felt in the great lakes system.

It is there that it seems to me that the aide memoire is deficient. It seems to me that there is no protest in the aide memoire about what will happen or is likely to happen to power development at Beauharnois, at Lachine, at Cedars. I noticed in the press this morning that the minister of hydraulic resources, of the province of Quebec, indicates that there will soon be a development of hydroelectric power at Lachine. I welcome that announcement. I think it is all to the good. But if because of the 1,000 c.f.s. sought to be taken out of the great lakes over a period of three years that power development is affected below there should be the strongest protest on the part of the government.

There is also nothing in the note having to do with the water levels at the port of Montreal. If anything is done in the upstream end of the lakes that affects water levels at Montreal, navigation may be seriously affected. What is going to be the effect of the lowering by three-eights of an inch at the port of Montreal and the loss of these many millions of kilowatt hours that I mentioned earlier? I am not an electrical engineer and am not in a position to say. All I can say is that experts say that it is serious. Those who have knowledge of the matter in the United States have stated before a public committee there that it is the intention of the Chicago sanitary district authorities, if additional waters can be diverted from the great lakes, to develop power in that area. It seems to me that it would be unconscionable if water were taken from the great lakes for the development of power in that region.

Then there is no protest against the new bill itself, and that is what prompted me to say a moment ago that the minister had misled the house. There is no protest against bill No. 1. No protest has been launched against this particular bill. While a protest was launched against an anterior bill, which to my mind is a very weak protest, there has not been launched against this bill the kind of protest I should like to see and the kind of protest that I am sure the citizens of Canada want to see.

This is not a new problem. It is one which has attracted the attention of the country before. It is an old question that comes up from time to time, and Canada must be on its guard continually so that our rights with regard to the development of power in the international section as well as of navigation in the St. Lawrence will be protected.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. How could we, in a note presented in 1958, speak to a bill that was put before congress in 1959?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the aide memoire sent by my hon. friend is dated in 1957 and, as I said earlier in my remarks, there were other bills. There were bills in 1954, 1955, 1956, 1958 and another in 1959. So I say two things. I say first that the note prepared by my hon. friend is not a proper protest. Second, I say that so far as the new bill is concerned he should prepare another note of protest and put in that note in detail how the downriver interests on the St. Lawrence at Montreal and elsewhere will be prejudicially affected.

In any event, may I ask the minister this question. Does the minister think this is the kind of matter which should be disposed of by congress? After all, there is a treaty between Canada and the United States incorporated in the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act which clearly establishes the position of the two countries. With all respect, it seems to me that this is a matter which should be dealt with by the international joint commission, since to a large extent it is a boundary waters matter.

Mr. Murphy: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit me to ask a question.

Mr. Chevrier: If that is the case, it would strike me that the proper thing to do would be for the minister first to protest as I have suggested; then if the protest has no effect, to ask that the matter be referred to the international joint commission.

Mr. Murphy: I wanted to ask whether the hon. member who now has the floor is aware that lake Michigan does not come within the purview of the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act.

Mr. Chevrier: As my time is fast coming to an end, there is another matter that I should like to bring to the attention of the house.

(Translation):

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that there is another subject the hon. members may not like to hear about but if they care to have a little patience I shall try to discuss with calm and moderation this second subject, so interesting for a large number of the people in the province of Quebec. In discussing this problem I shall not attempt to use the words we heard earlier but rather I shall try to do it in the way the right hon. Prime Minister would do himself were he sitting on this side of the house.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind you that last Friday, in this house, the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) expressed his opinion about the actual contradictions with regard to the dispute between the C.B.C. and the radio and television producers. However, since Friday, the situation has been deteriorating instead of improving. In the first place, on Friday afternoon, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour, in the course of their annual interview with the C.C.C.L., again refused to intervene in this dispute. The right hon. Prime Minister recalled, in the course of the meeting, that his predecessor himself had already been blamed for intervening in C.B.C. affairs. He went on to say that it was not his intention to intervene in this dispute for fear of laying himself open to the same criticism.

This argument of the Prime Minister's is surely unacceptable. It is but a pretext used, I think, in an effort to justify the incomprehensible stand taken by the government. We of the opposition have been asking every day, from the beginning of this session, through our questions to the Minister of Labour and to the Minister of National Revenue, to intervene in this dispute and to offer their good offices to both parties. In fact, we thought there was no reason why the government should not intervene within the terms of section 56(1) of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

Nobody could seriously claim that the government would exert undue influence by taking advantage of powers conferred upon it by this section of the act; on the contrary, it would only be doing its duty. So far, it has obstinately refused, without any good reason, to perform its duty. It seems to me that such an intervention would have been useful, and could have been of some help to the parties concerned who, at that time, were still in communication with each other. It would therefore have been possible to settle this dispute.

But, to revert to the reply given the C.C.C.L. by the right hon. Prime Minister on Friday, I must say that an intervention like the one mentioned by the Prime Minister is in no way comparable to the one he made during the visit of Mr. Macmillan last year, when he tried to prevent a C.B.C. employee from performing his professional work as he saw fit.

Some hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Chevrier: At that time, it was a question of interference with the freedom of information and of expression on the C.B.C. network. Today, what is the point at issue? It has to do with freedom of association, which authorities are duty bound to protect whenever the occasion offers. It is so true that yesterday the head of the Catholic church in Montreal, his Eminence Cardinal Leger, addressing a group of former pupils of College Sainte-Marie, said this:

> Everybody has a right to associate. The C.B.C. strike is nothing else than that. And, as we can see any day, this right must be asserted.

However, according to the Minister of Labour, that right ought not to exist. After having said that the strike is illegal, he changed his mind and said that it is legal. Moreover, this morning he again clearly stated that in this instance there was no justification even for the right to associate.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say that the uncompromising attitude of the government showed itself again to-day. During the interview that the Minister of Labour and the Solicitor General had at noon to-day with the delegation of Montreal radio and television producers and union men, the Minister of Labour still refused to intervene and simply told the delegation to go back to the C.B.C. and resume the negotiations with the corporation which, quite obviously, is responsible for the breakdown of the parleys. This attitude on the part of the minister shows, in my opinion, too much ill-will, since he found nothing else to tell the delegation, which had taken the trouble to come a long way, at considerable expense, to see him.

As far as we are concerned, we shall not permit the government to justify its lack of action by specious arguments like those put forward by the Minister of Labour and the Minister of National Revenue, since we consider that this dispute is very important. In fact, it might involve serious consequences, not only for the artists themselves, but for all those who are directly involved in that strike and, besides, for the whole future of the C.B.C. French network.

According to yesterday's papers, Mr. Speaker, C.B.C. officials are reported to have stated they were prepared to start over from scratch, rather than resume negotiations which they themselves had broken off with the producers. I submit that even if the C.B.C. officials wish to take this autocratic attitude, the people of Canada, who are paying the operating costs of the C.B.C. and who are interested in the French network, are not prepared to start again from scratch. The French network, as the English one, has made tremendous progress since the beginning of television in this country, and taxpayers will not tolerate that the government allow such a catastrophe to occur without even attempting to intervene.

We are told that during the meeting between government authorities and representatives of the C.C.C.L. last Friday, the Minister of Labour claimed he never said the strike is illegal. So, according to the Minister of Labour himself, his colleague the Minister of National Revenue was wrong in declaring that it is illegal. Here, therefore, is a first contradiction between the two ministers.

But that is not all. It was reported also that, at the same meeting, the Minister of National Revenue declared that "he throught he had gone too far in his statement". This time, the Minister of National Revenue is in contradiction with himself and refutes his own statements.

Yesterday, the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), answering my question as to whether he believed the strike is illegal or not, answered that, as far as he was concerned, it is legal. Hence, another further lack of action and another contradiction. A minister on the right declares that the strike is legal and another on the left says it is illegal. Is there no more ministerial solidarity in the government?

Therefore I am right when I say, Mr. Speaker, that in this dispute there is too much inaction, and there are too many contradictions in the attitude of the ministers. It seems to me—

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question?

(Text):

Mr. Chevrier: Provided I am allowed the time at the end, I have no objection.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

An hon. Member: Do it quickly.

Mr. Dorion: What kind of intervention would the hon. member for Laurier suggest, and what part could the government play on such an occasion?

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the hon. member for raising that question. I shall suggest a form of intervention.

If I were sitting opposite and one of my colleagues in the cabinet stated that the strike is illegal, I would ask all my colleagues from the province of Quebec to join with me in telling him the score. And I honestly believe that if the fifty government members from the province of Quebec went to this autocrat and said: "We want to see that strike settled", it would be settled. To answer the query of the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion), I will say that if you want to use your influence, as you are entitled to do, you can, by using common sense, try to sway the minister who, in my view, is preventing a settlement of the strike by saying to the management of the C.B.C.: "Don't negotiate".

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed—

Mr. Dorion: May I be allowed a further question?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, if the member wishes to put his question after I am through with my remarks, I shall be pleased to agree.

Mr. Dorion: Very well.

Mr. Chevrier: I have something else to suggest to the government. I would ask the Prime Minister—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I was just about to say that the hon. member who wishes to intervene must secure the consent of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Chevrier: I have given consent after I have completed my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Here is my suggestion. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister to postpone this debate and to set up the committee on broadcasting so that the parties might submit their grievances to the committee and so that the committee might hear the arguments of both sides. I believe this would be to the benefit of all concerned. The Prime Minister has rejected my suggestion and that is his prerogative. I now renew my suggestion, Mr. Speaker, because I think it makes sense. In the case of disputes involving government agencies, such as the disputes in the telecommunications field and in the railway field, as well as the present one in the field of radio and television, the matter is the responsibility of the government. It is therefore my view that the government should do something to try to bring the parties face to face. Unfortunately, the government keeps saying that the matter is not its concern.

The Minister of Labour tells us he will not intervene. The Minister of National Revenue replies that the strike is illegal. The Solicitor General assures us that the strike is legal. Why not, then, take appropriate means to settle this matter, which is the responsibility of the federal government?

If the dispute involved other groups not directly under the responsibility of the federal government, then I could see a reason for the government's refusal to intervene; but such is not the case here, as the C.B.C. comes under the federal government. I therefore repeat the suggestion I put forth a moment ago, as I believe this is the only way out; otherwise, the situation will become intolerable. I do not think it is fair, under the circumstances, that thousands of people should suffer, as is the case of the people involved in this dispute.

This struggle, I repeat, has been going on too long. And if the government persists in maintaining its "hands off" attitude, let it at least accept my last suggestion. It is, I feel, a most reasonable suggestion on our part, and a practical one that would no doubt lead us out of the present deadlock.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to repeat my leader's appeal to the government to conclude this debate immediately. So long as the government persists in prolonging the debate and delaying action, the Liberal party will take its part in the debate; but we are ready to have the vote now and get on with the nation's business.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity of extending my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I am certain that they will not believe that I am the less sincere because my congratulations are short. I expect that they have heard these congratulations so often now that they are apt to take them as a matter of form. However, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that they are far from being a matter of form but are a matter of real conviction.

We have just listened to an interesting speech delivered by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). Although it was not my main intention to deal with what the hon. gentleman has said, some of what he has said has been of such an extraordinary nature that I think it deserves at least a reference. The extraordinary nature of the hon. gentleman's remarks may be indicated by a realization of the position in which he found himself in making them at all.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the official opposition has adopted an attitude of anxiety to conclude the throne speech debate. They say that the throne speech is not important. They say, "Let us get on with important matters", such as matters in the field of unemployment which they are adopting the attitude of trying to have us believe they are anxious to discuss. If that be their attitude, is it not rather strange that the hon. member for Laurier should feel this debate to be so important that he participates in it not once but twice? Then, Mr. Speaker, having given his second speech—and I will not describe his statements; I will not use harsh language—

Mr. Chevrier: No; do not do that. I would be highly embarrassed.

Mr. Fulton: As I say, having made his second speech, the hon. gentleman makes the extraordinary statement that no one else should be allowed to speak at all. I find that sort of untenable position is typical of what he said during the course of his remarks this afternoon.

While I did not follow the detail of all that he said with regard to the C.B.C. strike in Montreal, Mr. Speaker, I should imagine that his contribution there was not particularly constructive, at least if it is measured by the sense or the lack of sense of his statement with regard to the lake Michigan-Chicago diversion. There he made a suggestion which I think even the hon. gentleman on reflection would realize is difficult, to say the least, to carry out because it is certainly difficult to contemplate how the international joint commission which has jurisdiction over boundary waters could be given jurisdiction to settle anything with relation to lake Michigan which is not included under the boundary waters treaty.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: How did the international joint commission get authority to deal with the question and make the report which I quoted a moment ago?

Mr. Fulton: I am not familiar with the details, but I am advised that there was a reference for the purpose of an investigation and study but not for the purpose of settling any question. If I understood the hon. gentleman correctly, he would refer the matter to the international joint committee for settlement.

My intervention in the debate this afternoon gives me the opportunity to refer to those matters which the official opposition allege are matters that should be discussed as being of paramount importance. I find it difficult to understand the extraordinary suggestion that the debate be adjourned, because the debate gives them full opportunity to discuss this question of unemployment and the economic situation in which the country finds itself. I cannot avoid the conclusion that the reason my hon. friends are so anxious now to have this debate end is that they realize that they have debated some positions and have put upon the record some statements and some alleged statistics which are so extraordinary and so far from the facts that they would like to have the debate ended so that no one could expose the nonsense which they have been talking. I shall analyse some of the claims made by my hon. friends opposite during the course of my remarks.

One thing I should like to emphasize at the outset is that from the beginning of the debate they have shown an extraordinary reluctance to accept their share of the responsibility for the situation with which the country is confronted. I refer to responsibility either with respect to what they did before they were dismissed from office or indeed any responsibility whatsoever with respect to suggesting what might be done now by way of dealing with the situation.

I know the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and his colleagues are annoyed when we remind them of it but it is something of which they require to be reminded. The Leader of the Opposition showed his annoyance in his reference to a speech that I delivered to the young Conservatives on January 10. But we take the view that the country should be reminded of where the responsibility for the situation properly lies. We do not say and never have said—and I did not say it in that speech—that the Liberal government deliberately created the recession. No one goes so far as that. But I said —and I repeat it—that when we took office in June of 1957 we found as our chief inheritance the recession which had started while my hon. friends opposite were in power.

Mr. Pearson: Nonsense.

Mr. Fulton: I said and I repeat that my hon. friends when they were in the government knew the recession was coming and did nothing about it. In fact, the action they did take served only to aggravate the causes of the recession that were then incipient. I shall have occasion to refer to this in more detail later. In assessing the responsibility for creating the recession and bringing it to the pitch it was before we were able to bring it under any degree of control, my hon. friends budgeted for a substantial surplus in a year when there was an incipient recession.

Mr. Pearson: Incipient?

Mr. Fulton: And then they talk about cyclical or anti-cyclical budgeting. What they did in fact was to undertake measures that aggravated the recession.

I also said, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat that we acted to deal with the recession as soon as we took office. We did not try to hide the recession or pretend it did not exist as our predecessors did and had we not acted when we did and as energetically as we did the recession would have been much worse than it in fact became.

I also said and I repeat here that we do not claim to have completely mastered the situation or cured the recession. We have never made that claim. Unlike my hon. friends opposite we do not claim to be supermen. In the first place we know it takes more than the action of the government alone to deal with and master a recession. But we do claim with justification that the fact that the recession was brought to a climax—and indications are now that it is definitely receding—and the fact that it was halted as soon as it was are in large measure due to the energetic and vigorous actions of this government.

I shall be returning later to discuss the record of the actions that were taken by the government and actions that are still being taken and which, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has indicated, will continue to be taken to deal with these problems with which we admit the country is confronted. It is disappointing to say the least that when hon. gentlemen opposite are given as many opportunities as we have given them in this house they should decline to take advantage of them to let us have their views concerning what additional measures we might take to deal with the recession.

Mr. Bourget: We did.

Mr. Fulton: For the sake of argument let us assume that it is not the job of the official opposition in the house to make these suggestions. But there are other forums. There is the forum of radio and of television and of press conferences. Those are not the House of Commons. My friend, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), when given repeated opportunities on television to tell the nation how the Liberal party would solve the problem which members of that party say exist, displayed a coyness and shyness which are rather out of keeping with the hon. gentleman's normal mode of behaviour.

Before coming to the positive measures which are being taken to deal with the recession and unemployment I should like to deal with the situation as it is and to expose some of the criticisms and exaggerations that have been placed on the record and before the country by the official opposition because to deal with the problem it is necessary to understand it and know its extent and its causes and implications. From what they have said it is clear that my hon. friends neither understand it nor do they desire to make an accurate assessment of the actual extent of the problems with which we are confronted.

I shall be dealing specifically with the criticisms and suggestions of both the Leader of the Opposition and more particularly the alleged statistics produced by my hon. friend the member for Essex East which were in large part, of course, fabrications pure and simple; and as fabrications—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman said that words which I used in this house were a fabrication.

Mr. Fulton: Not words, statistics.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I submit, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has the right to say that what I said was in error or inaccurate but he has no right to accuse any hon. member of having deliberately deceived this house and I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Fraser: He never said that.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my friend the hon. member for Essex East is too good a parliamentarian to really believe he can get away with that. I did not say he deceived the house.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Pickersgill: You said they were fabrications.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East has raised a question of privilege and I would be glad if the hon. member who has the floor would address himself to that before proceeding.

Mr. Fulton: I am, Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friends opposite will permit me. I did not say the hon. member had deceived the house and indeed it could not be deceived by the extraordinary and nonsensical statistics which he put on the record. But what I do say, Mr. Speaker, is that in so far as they purported to be statistics they were fabrications and I shall demonstrate the truth of what I have said. There is nothing unparliamentary in that expression.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Pearson: Wait until you find out whether or not it is unparliamentary.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the word "fabrication" is a borderline word. If the hon. member had said they were "inventions" it perhaps would not have imputed motives or cast any reflection on the moral turpitude of the hon. member for Essex East. But in the word "fabrication" there is perhaps a suggestion of this and perhaps the minister would consider substituting another word.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to take advantage of your suggestion, wise and temperate as always, if I may, and substitute for the word "fabrication" the word "invention". With regard to these alleged statistics which my hon. friend has placed on the record—and here I will be careful because there are parliamentary rules and I make no assessment or imputation as to motive because to do so would I think be unparliamentary—I point out as a fact that whatever may have been the motive the effect of placing on the record and making speeches in the house which it is known will be reported in the newspapers has been one of exaggerating the seriousness of the situation and increasing to an unwarranted extent any feelings of uneasiness, alarm or concern that may exist.

We do not and never have criticized the opposition when they stick to facts. We do not resent its criticism when it is based on facts and particularly when it is constructive. We ourselves do not deny the situation with which the country is confronted. It deserves and is receiving the serious attention of this government. We admit it is serious and do not criticize the opposition for pointing out its seriousness. We do, however, criticize our hon. friends opposite for trying to pretend that the situation is worse than it is and for putting on the record inventions which are passed by the name of statistics and thus presenting an inaccurate and exaggerated case. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the fact that my hon. friends are driven to the resort of using figures and analyses which are not accurate, and which I must say it is difficult for me to believe they did not know were not accurate, provides a pretty accurate measure of the real seriousness with which they themselves regard the situation. The fact that in discussing it they are driven to exaggeration to make a case at all shows that they themselves realize the situation is not as bad as they are trying to make out.

Starting with some of the figures used by my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition, may I say that he was guilty of a gross statistical miscalculation in his reference to the effect of the increase in the cost of living on the old age pension. His words on this subject are to be found at page 37 of Hansard of January 19:

> In one year, Mr. Speaker, the old age pensioners have lost about $2 of the $9 increase granted them by this government, and soon that increase will all be gone.

The implication of that statement, of course, is that out of the $9 increase $2 has been lost.

We do not deny the seriousness of the increase in the cost of living. That increase in the year has been 2.6 per cent and on the basis of that percentage the loss out of $9 is some 23 cents.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the rest of the $55 pension?

Mr. Fulton: The Leader of the Opposition has been guilty of inaccuracy and miscalculation by the mere amount of approximately 1,000 per cent. Then there are other inaccuracies which he perpetrates and which he insists on repeating and which, of course, can only, as he knows, have the effect of getting into the newspapers.

Some of them make headlines—scare headlines—and the hon. gentleman is not entitled to resent it if we charge him with trying to scare the people. Just as his old age pension speech made a prominent news story, so did this one, reported in the Toronto Telegram of November 19, when he said the Prime Minister would reap the whirlwind in a billion dollar deficit. He repeated this assertion about a billion dollar deficit whereas in fact the deficit will be in the neighbourhood of seven hundred million dollars as reported by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming); serious enough, it is true, but not as serious as a billion dollar deficit would be.

Some hon. Members: Wait and see.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman has in this case indulged in an inaccuracy of some $300 million, or in terms of percentage, an inaccuracy of 30 per cent.

But the Leader of the Opposition is just an amateur in this field, as we shall see by comparing the inaccuracy of his statistics with those of the hon. member for Essex East. This also must be said, that at least the Leader of the Opposition does not try to make out that someone else is responsible for the incorrect statistics that he puts on the record. He is big enough to claim his errors as his own. However, in the hon. gentleman from Essex East we have a most remarkable statistician. His is a practice born of long experience. He is perfectly at home among figures—so much so that he can use them with perfect ease in an attempt to prove that things are, which, in fact, are not. On a number of occasions in the speech he made in this house on January 22 we have evidence of that. This is the serious criticism which I make of the hon. gentleman: not only that he is inaccurate—because we can all be inaccurate, though not quite as inaccurate as the hon. gentleman—but that he has attempted to attribute his inaccuracies to the dominion bureau of statistics.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you will have shared this thought with me, that after the Liberal leadership convention of a year ago we had all imagined that the hatchet was buried, that rivalries were discontinued and that all was sweetness and harmony in the Liberal camp. But now we find that is not so because apparently the hon. member for Essex East is determined not to be outdone by his leader either in the scope or the size of his inaccuracies or in the sources of his information. As I have said, the Leader of the Opposition made no attempt to suggest that his statistics were other than his own, inaccurate though they were. The hon. member for Essex East, however, not content merely with inaccuracy, has sought to give his statistics an authority which they do not in fact possess by attributing them to the dominion bureau of statistics, thus seeking to outdo his leader.

It is not difficult to find a number of examples in the speech which the hon. gentleman made on January 22. He was criticizing the Prime Minister for a statement he had made that in the year just ended Canadians had worked more, earned more, spent more and saved more than in any comparable year in the history of this country, a statement which in virtually every particular, as a general statement, is true. The hon. gentleman did not wish to accept it. He did not wish to accept the truth of anything which the Prime Minister had said, because he knew it would not fit in with the propaganda which the Liberals were trying to sell in the country. Accordingly, he tried to show that the statement was not true in a number of particulars. Here is one example of what he did. The hon. gentleman said, referring to the Prime Minister, as reported in Hansard on page 181:

> Then the hon. gentleman made the statement that Canadians spent more. Let us see what the dominion bureau of statistics itself has to say about this: "It may be noted that on a per capita basis consumer purchases in real terms showed a year to year decline in all categories of expenditure in the first nine months of 1958."

Then, missing some of the following sentences, he says:

> The Prime Minister, with these figures of the dominion bureau as my authority, is consequently proven wrong again.

Here we have a very odd piece of statistical reasoning on the part of the hon. gentleman. The Prime Minister in his statement referred to spending—general spending—when he said that Canadians spent more. In seeking to refute that statement the hon. member for Essex East has made a selective quotation from the dominion bureau of statistics dealing exclusively with consumer spending and, having found there one sentence referring to a decline in consumer spending, he says: "Therefore, on the basis of the dominion bureau of statistics, the Prime Minister is wrong."

Let us see what the dominion bureau of statistics did actually say. I have the document in front of me. The hon. gentleman from Essex East was very coy the other day; he would not give us any page references when we asked him for them, but I have the source of his information—the chart at the top of page 6 dealing with percentage changes in expenditure by value, volume and price. This shows that gross national expenditure increased in the nine months reviewed in 1958 as compared with the nine months under review in 1957 in all three categories of value, volume and price.

The hon. gentleman must therefore admit that this shows clearly that the Prime Minister's statement was perfectly accurate and that his attempt to prove otherwise, and the quotation he used, was one of the most artificially selective of any I have heard used in this house for such a purpose. Then, carried away by his apparent success in this one attempt, the hon. gentleman persisted several stages further in his statistical magic. On the occasion I have just cited he did use the actual words of the dominion bureau of statistics, and attributed them accurately to the bureau. However, carried away by his apparent success he then proceeded to work up his own facts and attribute them to the dominion bureau. Let us look at an example, because this is really an extraordinary piece of statistical manoeuvering on the part of the hon. gentleman. He attacked the Prime Minister for an alleged inaccuracy in connection with a statement he made that Canadians earned more, and then the hon. gentleman says this—and I am quoting from the bottom of page 180 and the top of page 181—in an attempt to prove the Prime Minister wrong or, rather, to convince the house that the Prime Minister was wrong:

> The dominion bureau of statistics points out:
> Real wages and salaries in 1958 have declined by 1.6 per cent. Moreover, national income at factor cost (that is the sum total of wages, salaries, farm income, corporation profits as well as other incomes) rose by 2 per cent in 1958 from $23.8 billion in 1957 to $24.3 billion in 1958.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not alleged to be a quotation at all.

Mr. Fulton: Well, I was asking the hon. gentleman whether I could have his source but he very coyly refused. This now appears in Hansard, and it was stated in the house to be something that the dominion bureau of statistics had pointed out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

Mr. Fulton: There is no point of order before the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is for the Speaker to decide.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman is saying that I have said that the bureau of statistics is the authority for my statement. What I said, as the hon. gentleman will find if he looks at page 180, was this:

> Now let us examine the next statement, that Canadians earned more. The dominion bureau of statistics points out—

I did not say this was an actual quotation. It is an extract.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Speaker: Unless there is more to it than that both the hon. minister and the hon. member for Essex East who raised this point of privilege have read the actual words, so there can be no misunderstanding.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes; but, Mr. Speaker, with great deference—

Mr. Fulton: The house will judge for itself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What the hon. gentleman is seeking to say—

Mr. Fulton: I think I have the floor.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let me explain my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member wish to raise a further question of privilege?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would like to state my question of privilege which, apparently, I did not state with the succinctness which I usually do. The hon. gentleman is saying that I had sought to attribute these words as directly coming from the bureau of statistics. What I did say, as the hon. gentleman will find in the speech, was that every statistic that I used came from the D.B.S. bulletins—

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —or from the national accounts, income and expenditure, and when there was a direct quotation I referred to the page. If the Minister of Justice does not understand what the daily bulletins are that certainly is not my fault.

Mr. Hees: Badly cornered.

Mr. Speaker: I think the minister may proceed. It seems to me that what the hon. member is raising as a question of privilege is really an objection to what is stated, and he wishes to give an explanation, which he can only do if the member who has the floor allows him to interrupt; otherwise, it should be done at the end of the speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman knows—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —allow a misinterpretation of my statement to go on record.

Mr. Speaker: I have perhaps been too final if the hon. member wishes to comment, but I really have made my decision with respect to what the hon. member has said on this point; unless there is something new I hope the minister will be allowed to continue.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the house will be able to judge for itself whether the hon. member purported to quote from the dominion bureau of statistics by the words that he used where he said:

> The dominion bureau of statistics points out:

Then, we have a colon and then we have the form which Hansard uses when it is reproducing a quotation. My hon. friend knows perfectly well the small type which Hansard uses when it is reproducing quotations. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the impression which he created inevitably and inescapably is that he was purporting to quote from the dominion bureau of statistics. He said just now, "Oh, no, I did not mean to say I was quoting from the dominion bureau of statistics but only the fact that every figure was taken from the dominion bureau of statistics".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to expose the hon. gentleman once more, because—and this is another part of my objection—the alleged quotation starts out with the words:

> Real wages and salaries in 1958 have declined by 1.6 per cent.

I am informed that the dominion bureau of statistics never attempts to put out a figure on real wages and salaries because they say it cannot be done.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have not read them.

Mr. Fulton: It cannot be done accurately and anyone who compiles his own must take the responsibility—

Mr. Pearson: Who told you that?

Mr. Fulton: —for that compilation. And that is exactly what the hon. gentleman sought to avoid doing. He made the calculation and said, "This is what the dominion bureau of statistics said". Of course, Mr. Speaker, his calculation is completely wrong.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: Not at this stage.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is fine. I did not think he would.

Mr. Fulton: The other example that I refer to, Mr. Speaker, is found at the bottom of the first column of page 181, where the hon. member for Essex East is attacking a quotation of the Prime Minister with regard to the total wages and salaries. I had better read the whole quotation. The hon. gentleman quotes the Prime Minister at page 59 of Hansard as having said:

> The 1958 economic report predicted that total wages and salaries of Canadians would decline as compared with 1957 by 1.1 per cent. Instead of that, wages and salaries increased by 1.6 per cent or some $300 millions.

That is the quotation of the Prime Minister that the hon. gentleman quoted. Then, he continued:

> The dominion bureau of statistics provides this conclusion:

Then, we find a colon in Hansard and then again there is, of course, the reproduction in small print in the insert fashion which Hansard uses when it is reproducing a quotation. Therefore, once more the hon. gentleman is creating the impression inevitably that he is quoting something that the dominion bureau of statistics said, and this is what he says the dominion bureau of statistics said:

> On the average the consumer price index stood at 121.9 in 1957 and at 125.9 in 1958 which represents an increase of 3.2 per cent. This means that real wages and salaries—or the purchasing power of total wages and salaries—have declined by 1.6 per cent in 1958.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend say that the dominion bureau of statistics does not provide that?

Mr. Fulton: Not only was my hon. friend guilty of gross inaccuracy in attempting to suggest that this came from the dominion bureau of statistics, which it did not, but the whole calculation is clearly and demonstrably in error.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member raising a question of privilege?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The language which I used is clear and is to be found on page 181.

Mr. Fulton: I have just read it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said:

The dominion bureau of statistics provides this conclusion:

Then follows the conclusion. There is nothing there to suggest that these particular comments are actually contained in the—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —national accounts, but they are contained in the statistics provided by the dominion bureau of statistics. I raise a question of privilege. No hon. gentleman, the Minister of Justice or not, has the right by the use of words to imply that another hon. member has deliberately sought to deceive this house, and that is what the Minister of Justice is doing. Mr. Speaker, I have been in this house for 23 years—

An hon. Member: You got away with it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and there is no hon. member who can cast a reflection on my honour and get away with it.

Mr. Speaker: The proposition that the hon. member for Essex East states is perfectly correct and it is a proper matter of privilege if that is what has been done. As I see it, we are dealing with an interpretation of a page of Hansard which is before all members. If the hon. member states that he did not intend to give the impression that what appears as a quotation in Hansard was in fact a quotation from the dominion bureau of statistics, I am sure the house will accept his explanation but to raise it as a matter of privilege when we have the thing before us seems to me to be rather more in the nature of a disagreement with or a contradiction of what is being said. It should be raised, if at all, at the end of the speech.

Mr. Harkness: He got caught, that is all.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, of course, I was careful, I think you will realize, and I know my hon. friend will if he thinks of it, not to impute motives or intent in anything I said. I pointed out what the hon. gentleman in fact said and what the result of his saying it must be. I leave it to the house to draw its own conclusion from that point on.

The hon. gentleman has just furnished another interesting sidelight in the very implications of what he himself said in protesting. He said, "I did not say this was quoted from the dominion bureau of statistics; I said dominion bureau of statistics provides this conclusion".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fulton: I point out the dominion bureau of statistics does not provide this conclusion; it is the hon. member for Essex East who provided it, and the conclusion is wrong and not borne out by the statistics put out by the dominion bureau of statistics, as I shall now show—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are wrong again.

Mr. Fulton: —in this passage in dispute. It looked as if it came from the dominion bureau of statistics, but now we have his admission that it did not come from the dominion bureau of statistics at all. He said:

On the average the consumer price index stood at 121.9 in 1957 and at 125.9 in 1958 which represents an increase of 3.2 per cent.

He said that the dominion bureau of statistics said that. Mr. Speaker, both the calculation and the statement are wrong. If you do the arithmetical calculation you will find that an increase from 121.9 to 125.1 represents a percentage increase of 2.6, not 3.2 as stated by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pearson: He got that from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fulton: He said he got it from the dominion bureau of statistics.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We say we got that from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fulton: You see, Mr. Speaker, they are caught out in their trap and now both of them are trapped. The Leader of the Opposition has just said that the hon. member got that figure from the Minister of Finance but the hon. member said that he got that figure from the bureau of statistics.

Mr. Pearson: Your figures.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are confused.

Mr. Fulton: He said it this afternoon and he said it before as found in Hansard. The actual dominion bureau of statistics figure shows that there was a percentage increase in the cost of living of 2.6 per cent, not 3.2 per cent as used by the hon. statistician from Essex East.

Mr. Harkness: He had better improve his arithmetic.

Mr. Fulton: You see what has been happening, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentlemen, not content when they find that the facts show that the country's economic position is not so bad, have to manufacture facts and then attribute them to the dominion bureau of statistics. Let us see what the dominion bureau of statistics actually says on this point. What are the statistics that the bureau has put out with regard to incomes and earnings in Canada in 1958? Here are the bureau's actual words. I quote from page 3 of the dominion bureau of statistics' publication, National Accounts, Income and Expenditure, third quarter, 1958. They say:

> While national income has risen by about 2 per cent over the year, personal income has increased by 5 per cent and disposable income by more than 6 per cent.

Yet the hon. gentleman has the gall to say—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a different thing altogether.

Mr. Fulton: —that the Prime Minister was wrong when he said that Canadians earned more in 1958.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the minister is not equating earnings and personal income.

Mr. Fulton: What about the effect of prices on these figures? My hon. friend tried to make out in his speech that they are all inflated by price increases—

Mr. Pickersgill: So they are.

Mr. Fulton: —and therefore they represent only a fictitious increase and not a real increase. Here is what the bureau has to say about the effect of prices of this increase in 1958 compared with 1957. I read from page 5:

> It will be apparent that price factors were less conspicuous as an element of the value change in gross national product between 1958 and 1957 than in the preceding year. All components of the gross national product registered smaller year-to-year advances in 1958 than in 1957. The price of consumer goods and services showed a further rise of close to 3 per cent, a more moderate advance than in 1957.

So what the bureau says about this is that the effects of price increases were markedly less in 1958 than in 1957.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You do not understand it.

Mr. Fulton: What does the bureau say about inflation? The hon. gentleman criticized the Prime Minister's remarks about inflation and had some interesting remarks of his own to make, all his own, not from the bureau of statistics. The dominion bureau of statistics had this to say about one aspect having an important bearing on inflation, as found on page 7:

> Thus the rise in personal expenditure in the first three quarters of 1958 has fallen short of the rise in personal disposable income. The relatively high rate of personal saving is one of the notable developments of the year.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, we spent less.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: So we see Liberal efforts—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That just proves the opposite of what you said.

Mr. Fulton: —exemplified by the hon. member for Essex East and by the Leader of the Opposition himself, apparently determined to persuade the Canadian people that the situation is worse than it is, and when they find that the facts do not fit their theories, instead of changing their theories they try to change the facts. Hon. gentlemen remind us of the man who said, "My mind is made up; don't confuse me with the facts."

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is confused without the facts.

Mr. Fulton: All they have succeeded in doing is confusing themselves. I do not believe they have confused the people of the country to the extent they would like to have done.

Contrasted with this, I think it is useful and appropriate that I should say a word or two about what the government has actually done and what it is continuing to do to meet the emergency situation which we inherited from the Liberal government.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the minister a question before he leaves this topic?

Mr. Fulton: My time is nearly up.

Mr. Pearson: I am sure he will be given extra time. Before he leaves this interesting part of his policy statement, will he deal with the unemployment statistics that his colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), has given to parliament in the last few days?

Mr. Fulton: I will be glad to do that on another occasion but I do not have the time at my disposal this afternoon. The Minister of Labour has dealt authoritatively with these statistics. I am dealing with the discrepancies and inaccuracies of my hon. friend and I have a hard job compressing them into forty minutes.

Mr. Harkness: I do not wonder they would like to see a change in subject.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Very weak. Pretty bad.

Mr. Fulton: I can understand why in our predecessors' time the then minister of trade and commerce seemed to grow greyer, older and more worried. He must have had a really desperate task to keep the dominion bureau of statistics under his control and to prevent it from sliding out from under his grasp and into that of his colleague from Essex East. Rather than the hon. member doing what he did on January 22, I suggest that he would probably be better advised to set up his own statistical service and quote himself. At least he would always be entertaining. When we examine the record of what the government has been doing we find an interesting and effective contrast to the criticisms and inaccurate statements made by the opposition.

We inherited the recession in June of 1957. Within a matter of months we had put $150 million into housing and we are still continuing to put money into housing. Within a matter of a few more months we had made considerable cuts in taxes. Within a matter of months we had substantially increased welfare payments. At the first opportunity to present a full budget we budgeted deliberately for a deficit. We have instituted and are continuing these and other work-providing programs. In addition to the housing and public works expenditures, which are continuing, there are the special winter works program started this year and the renewal of the northern affairs program of expenditure and work in the parks which was started last winter. We took the 1957 economic outlook report to heart although the Liberals had ignored it.

We are still grappling effectively, vigorously and consistently with the problem of unemployment in Canada. The Prime Minister, unlike hon. gentlemen opposite, is not reluctant to say that he regards it as a primary obligation of the government. He has stated that the government regards it as its continuing obligation to deal with unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, go on. Let the minister proceed.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Agreed. The minister is very entertaining.

Mr. Fulton: I am grateful to the house. I am not going to impose upon the house. I have practically finished. The details of the program I have outlined can be filled in at another time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Give us that program.

Mr. Pearson: That billion dollar program.

Mr. Fulton: But it might be interesting to deal with what amount of work some of these projects have created. This is an estimate prepared for me by my colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), and I am sure he would agree that it can only be described as an estimate. Nevertheless it is the best estimate that we can produce. Some 36,750 national housing loans were taken up during 1958. The total of federal funds made available under these loans was $375 million. It is estimated that these federal housing loans provided around 92,000 man years of employment. This impressive total is made up of about 46,000 man years of on-site labour and the same amount of off-site labour. This, of course, relates only to the federal funds made available and does not take into account the tremendous flow of private mortgage funds that has been going into housing construction under the stimulation of the policies of my colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green). It has been estimated that the total number of men employed in the housing program generally is certainly, at a conservative estimate, at least 600,000.

In addition to housing loans, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been engaged in the construction of public housing and other buildings. The expenditure involved in these has amounted to over $30 million.

Then, other departments responsible for construction programs include the Department of Transport, and their program includes the development and maintenance of airports, the construction and maintenance of harbours, the St. Lawrence seaway and large expenditures by such crown corporations as the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines. Well over $400 million of federal government expenditures have been made on works projects in this field during 1958. It is estimated that at least 80,000 man-years of employment, including both on-site and off-site work have resulted from these expenditures.

With respect to the Department of Public Works, it is estimated that all their normal expenditures during the year 1958 have meant employment over the course of a year for at least another 25,000 men, on-site and off-site. These statistics are in terms of man-years, Mr. Speaker, and this is an impressive total.

Then, the northern affairs and national resources program continued from last winter, it is estimated is providing employment on a continuous basis for at least 3,000 men to date. In so far as the special municipal winter works program is concerned, the latest estimate which my colleague the Minister of Labour has furnished me shows that it is expected for Canada as a whole there will be 1,086,895 man-days of work provided by that program to be initiated between December 1 and April 1.

I should like to mention others, but these are only some of the ways in which this government is continuing its consistent and successful program in accordance with the promises made by the Prime Minister to combat the recession inherited from our predecessors, and which he said we would do our best to halt and take every measure at our disposal to see to it that during the time the recession continues no one suffers as a result of being unemployed. This is the first instalment of the government's attempt to implement that promise.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) was kind enough, Mr. Speaker, to say he would answer my question when he concluded his remarks. My question is this: If, as the minister says, the recession was inherited from the previous administration and if the government discovered this inheritance in June when they took office, can the minister explain why his colleague the Minister of Labour said on December 10, 1957, as reported in the Montreal Star and never denied, that there is hardly an economist or student of the siuation who does not feel that the unemployment situation is merely temporary, and that given a brief breathing pause the natural buoyancy of the economy will assert itself? Why did the Prime Minister, at the federal-provincial conference, say that unemployment in 1954-55 was considerably greater than it was in 1957?

Mr. Fulton: The statement the hon. gentleman has quoted from my colleague the Minister of Labour does not require any explanation because it is consistent with the facts. We have confidence in the buoyancy of the Canadian economy. We know that it will eventually work out of the mess we inherited from our predecessors.

Mr. Pickersgill: He did not say anything about any mess.

Mr. Fulton: We are acting accordingly. I should remind the hon. gentleman that the first step we took after taking office was to reduce the flow of immigration, by which action we have saved an accumulation of an extra 100,000 unemployed. We have also put into circulation, and at the disposal of the people of Canada, vastly increased social security benefits. These are two of the actions we took.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit another question? Did he not state in this house that all they did about immigration was to continue an order I had made in April, 1957?

Mr. Fulton: No, I did not, because the order had not been made. We had to make it. My hon. friend had thought about it, but he had not done it.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I have never followed John, but on this one occasion in the throne speech I am following Dave. I must admit this has been a rather amusing session, with so many statistics flying around. I think it is understandable why so many people are a little confused at the moment. They do not know whether the figures are lying or the liars are figuring. It is one or the other.

It is quite evident, also, that there has been a lot of political name-calling during this session in attempts to place responsibility. This reminds me of the story of two men who went out on a bender. It was a real drunk. When they woke up the next morning they found themselves in bed with a corpse between them. Fearing the consequences, they both dashed to the police station and blamed the other for homicide which was, of course, of no interest to the corpse at all. Basically, this is what has been going on since this house met, especially on the question of unemployment and right now the problem of the producers of the C.B.C.

Basically, we are not going to solve anything by even trying to find out who was responsible. The point is that there are certain circumstances extant in this country which require to be handled, and our responsibility, irrespective of party, government or opposition, is not to damn each other so much for the evils of the past, but to see if we cannot be good right now and in the future. I was interested in all the statistics put forward by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) and all the others. But a man or a woman who is unemployed or on strike or locked out is not a statistic. He or she is a human being in need of something being done about their problem. I was most interested in the closing remarks of the Minister of Justice when he dealt once again, almost word for word, with the statement the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) made in the campaign of last year. The Prime Minister said that if he were elected no one would go without or suffer in this country.

The reason why we have to get up and speak on these matters so often, and perhaps be so repetitious, is that people are suffering and are hungry in Canada and the government has not done anything about that. Admittedly you can bring forth all these figures showing increased emloyment and increased income. Of course, this country is not static; it is growing. People are being born every day. People are going into the employment field every day. Immigrants are coming in, or they have been, by the thousands. We have what almost looks like a paradox but is not, and that is employment going up at the same time as unemployment is going up. Of course, we are happy about the increase in employment.

What we want to know is what you are going to do about your promises to those who are unemployed. You admit that there are 749,000 who are asking for employment. Whether it is 100,000 or 749,000 I ask what about those who need that work? Last May—I have the actual dates here, May 12 of last year, May 28, July 9, July 12 of last year—I have all the Hansard quotes here—the Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) said—because they must have had some recognition of the dangers of unemployment and suffering this winter and spring—that they would introduce changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. They never did and we are still waiting for those changes.

But because they neglected their responsibilities, because they did not fulfil their promise made on all the dates I have given you last year, Mr. Speaker, there are thousands upon thousands in this country who are no longer eligible for unemployment insurance, nor can they get work. The government say they take care of them. They go on welfare. What is welfare? In one of our provinces, it is about half of the amount they would receive were they eligible for unemployment insurance. Nobody on unemployment insurance is living in the lap of luxury. What do you do about those who have to depend upon welfare? I say this to the government. Why sit back so smug and holy about the fact that you are paying 50 per cent of starvation sustenance for those people who, because of your negligence, are not now covered by unemployment insurance and who have not jobs?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: Stop all this eyewash you are spouting all the time, recognize the situation and see what we can do about it on an emergency basis.

An hon. Member: Louder.

Mr. Winch: It is necessary for me to speak loud because of all the thickness over there on the government side which it is necessary to penetrate in order to reach understanding. Of course all hon. members can always tone down their volume, except me.

Not only was that matter forgotten, Mr. Speaker, but something else was forgotten. I refer to the domicile laws on welfare which are established by agreement between the federal government and the provinces and which vary from province to province. With men moving around, as they do, in order to find employment—because they do not want charity—unless they come within the domicile regulations of a particular municipality in the province they cannot even get welfare. They are therefore doomed to a Conservative position of starving to death. Let me say that I am not being dramatic or melodramatic when I make that statement. To find confirmation, Mr. Speaker, all hon. members need to do is read their newspapers and look at the photographs in the newspapers of men collapsing from hunger in Winnipeg and Vancouver; something which we have not had for years in British Columbia. I refer to soup kitchens, with men lined up in queues for blocks for a handout of two sandwiches a day.

An hon. Member: The Bennett days are back again.

Mr. Winch: We are not purveyors of gloom. We do not want to emphasize these things. What we say to the government is this. They said they would take care of these people.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the point.

Mr. Winch: We are just asking you to take care of them on this short term emergency basis until you bring in those policies and those noble plans about which you told us that are going to solve for all time the problem of unemployment.

Time after time at this session the Prime Minister has appealed for co-operation. Let me say this to the hon. members on the government side of the house. As far as Vancouver is concerned, he has offers of co-operation right down the line from the trades and labour council, unemployment committees and so on. Before this house was called together elected members of all parties were called in to discuss the situation. The parks commissioners of Vancouver called in the elected members to talk over their problems. The Vancouver city council called in the representatives to talk over the situation and the problems. There was co-operation on the labour level, on the parks committee level and the municipal level, recognizing that the solution does not lie with one level of government but that because the federal government is the senior government, it is from there that the major direction and the major aid will have to come.

The other members from the city of Vancouver in this house can tell you, Mr. Speaker, as I do, that the city of Vancouver said this: If you give us a little bit more progressive aid, not just half the cost of labour on the particular works but half the cost, then within four weeks we will have project after project under way. I am convinced that if this government, instead of trying to allocate blame and say "It is not our fault", would recognize the problem and come forward with some emergency measures in the way of municipal assistance, special welfare assistance and change in the Unemployment Insurance Act so as to make the unemployed eligible for something as of right and not charity, they would get a spontaneous acceptance from the people and from the various levels of government. I can say that at least for the province I know best, namely the province of British Columbia.

When we speak of unemployment solutions, naturally we must think of production and trade. It has been somewhat of a disappointment to us in this group that so little has been said on the cabinet level as to Canada's position in world trade, the problems which we face in that area and just how we are going to meet the situation.

I was most pleased to read in the Globe and Mail of this morning a report under dateline of Washington, January 26, as follows:

> Canadian Justice Minister Fulton is visiting his opposite number here this week for discussions on how to avoid in the future what Canadians consider attempts by Washington to make U.S. laws rather than Canadian laws applicable to Canada.

I know we certainly want to wish the minister well on that trip but I think that now is the time to emphasize how emphatic he must be when he visits Washington. There is not only a growing fear but a growing understanding that irrespective of what must have been a beautiful talk between the Prime Minister and President Eisenhower last year and the indications given to us that this problem of United States domination of Canadian companies was going to cease, that was just a lot of tommyrot because the situation has definitely not improved. As a matter of fact, it has worsened.

Not only do I take the position—and I do it personally, of course, from my reading—that nothing has been done whatsoever about the matter but evidence is now forthcoming to demonstrate that we are even more than ever dominated by the United States with respect to our goods produced in Canada, and to companies which are subsidiaries to those in the United States. There is no need to repeat what we all know of the motor car incident of last year with regard to sales to the peoples' republic of China. That was the first indication. Perhaps not too much emphasis should be placed on it but it is worthy of note. We receive information that Alcan, from the headquarters in Montreal, honestly admit that they turned down a sale to China at the same time they were laying off 620 men because of their fear of repercussions in their major markets in the United States. But the matter goes even beyond that.

I have a friend who is well known as a member of the bar association in Ontario and who last fall made a visit to Chungking. Whilst he was in Chungking he was entertained by the president of the chamber of commerce there and he watched freight being unloaded by hand from hundreds of junks on the waterfront. The president of the chamber of commerce told him that they were going to initiate plans to utilize conveyor belts for this unloading. Our esteemed friend from Canada informed the president of the chamber of commerce in Chungking that Canada produced conveyor belting of the highest quality, something which all hon. members know is true. When my friend returned to Canada or shortly thereafter he happened to visit the B. F. Goodrich plant. They made inquiries about his trip to China, being interested, and he told them about this opportunity of selling belting to Chungking. They were interested. But do you know what happened? Did that Canadian company get in touch with our legal friend in Ontario, with a catalogue and prices? Did they get in touch with the president of the chamber of commerce in Chungking? No. The next word my friend heard about the matter was when he received a letter dated January 13, 1959, a copy of which I have in my hand.

Akron 18, Ohio, U.S.A.
January 13, 1959

Mr. E. B. Jolliffe, Q.C.
111 Richmond Street, West,
Toronto, Ontario, Canada

Dear Sir:

Our Canadian company has forwarded your request for information on conveyor belting which in turn is to be furnished to the president of the chamber of commerce of Chungking, China. Under the present regulations of our government, we are prohibited from dealing with China, even to the extent of communicating with nationals of red China in any manner. While there are definite indications at the present time that this policy may be relaxed in the future, we are required to conform with the instructions of our government to the letter until such time as the regulations are changed.

We are indeed sorry that we are not able to supply you with the information desired. We will be most happy to work with you in providing information for other marketing areas not affected by such restrictions.

Yours very truly,
G. W. Hill
Industrial Products Sales Manager

The letter is written on the letterhead of the International B. F. Goodrich Corporation. Because of a law in the United States the B. F. Goodrich Company in Canada was not able to supply catalogues or quotations on non-strategic goods, for which an export permit is available in Canada, to a foreign market. Without fear or hesitation this government should now make it clear to the United States that we in this country are not going to brook any continuation of this kind of interference. The government should speak in the interests of employment, Canadian trade and prosperity. If this type of thing does continue it is up to this government to introduce legislation that will enable us to control the exports of our own companies.

When we speak of trade we think of the remarks made three times this session by the Prime Minister about the horrible threat of an economic trade war on the part of the U.S.S.R. Of course there is a threat of this kind and no one with a modicum of common sense would deny it. Indeed, it was bound to come. On May 19 last I spoke in this house on that very question and asked the government what consideration it was giving to the matter at that time. Moreover, we know this is going to be a serious threat. We realize that whether we like it or not the U.S.S.R. can compete because it does not have the profit motive adding to the cost of the goods produced there. We all recognize this and are concerned about it and we certainly want to hear more from the government on this question.

I never have and never will profess to be an economist or a trade expert but as an hon. member of this house who takes seriously the responsibilities vested in him I want to make sure that the government gives proper attention to the question of trade and the implications of this threat to the development of trade throughout the world. Little has been said by the government as to what are the implications or what will be the position of Canada as an exporting nation because of the establishment of the European common market and the possible establishment of a wider free trade area. The countries of Europe for their own protection and development and with a view to raising their standards of living have, according to their own public statements, found it wise and necessary to enter into the European common market.

In addition to what I have been able to read on this subject I had the welcome opportunity of speaking with research men, economists and businessmen who have recently returned from Europe. They say that the results of this new plan are indeed staggering and only a few days ago the results were described to me by one man as being almost fantastic. He could foresee in Europe within a period of two or three years in the nine countries that are in the common market a condition that would almost rival the condition that obtains in the United States both in terms of production and standard of living.

Almost every publication that has come to my attention on this matter points out the probable dangers that exist for Canada unless we in this country are extremely careful. They indicate that Canada could be relegated to a position of being merely a supplier of raw materials and we would have to face greater competition than we face today in the export of manufactured goods. I wish to emphasize the importance of this because I intend to ask the government what attention is being paid to this development. What are the plans of this government in this respect? What plans does it have for the maintenance of Canadian production which is dependent upon exports?

As a matter of fact, in thinking about it this morning I arrived at a number of questions which I think we as hon. members of this house and in particular the members of the cabinet as representing the government of this country have to understand and answer. I listed them in this way.

Is the commonwealth disintegrating as a trading entity or is it likely so to do? Can Canada hold its United Kingdom markets and, if so, how? That question arises because irrespective of statistics we are losing out in many fields at the present time. If Canada cannot hold its United Kingdom markets, does this country have to face almost complete economic integration with the United States? What will be Canada's position in a few years as a result of the establishment of the European common market and the possible establishment of a wider free trade area? Another question of immediate importance is this. What will be the effect on Canada of the stiffer competition for investment capital as a result of corporations in Britain, the United States and other countries setting up subsidiary firms within the tariff wall of the European common market? It is obvious that other countries are moving in. Is Canada thinking about this? Is Canada prepared to take action in this respect?

Without stressing the importance of these questions at greater length may I say that we in this group believe these questions are of such vital concern that there should be an early indication at the cabinet level as to the thinking, planning and policies of the government. I know I am not stretching it too far when I say the future of Canada is at stake. We as elected members are in large part responsible by what we do here for what the future of our country is going to be in this respect.

I shall say just a few more words, Mr. Speaker, because we shall have other opportunities under motions, bills, on the budget, in committee and when discussing the estimates to refer to other matters. But in view of the situation with regard to the C.B.C. I should like to say a few words on that question. I find it most difficult to understand the viewpoint of the government.

The C.B.C. is a public service. This is a crown corporation and parliament is ultimately responsible for its operations. We understand that the Prime Minister is thinking of reintroducing the bill of rights. Surely one of the basic rights which will be emphasized in that bill is the right of association and the right of collective bargaining, and surely we are not going to differentiate between different classes of citizens, saying that one group of people who have to work for their bread and butter should have the right to organize and the right to collective bargaining while another group of people in a different sphere, but also dependent on work for their bread and butter, should not have this right. It would not make sense. Producers have the right of association as well as anybody else. It may be that they are not mentioned in any specific act of this parliament, but what about it? That does not remove their rights; there is no law which says they cannot form an association. They have done so. Why should they not be recognized? I think it is deplorable that the government should not have shown some initiative in an attempt to reach a solution of this difficulty.

I know arguments can be raised about legality and illegality, jurisdiction and jurisprudence. But what about getting the job done instead of worrying so much about the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t"? Do you, Mr. Speaker, know of anything in the law or constitution of Canada which says that the Prime Minister or members of the government cannot interest themselves in any problem which needs to be solved? Do you know of any law which says that no attempt must be made to bring people together? Because of the way in which this situation is developing, and because if something is not done in the near future this situation may lead almost to the wrecking of a great organization, I wish to add my appeal to those made by members who have already spoken urging the Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour to do all they can to bring the present situation to a successful conclusion. In addition, I urge all hon. members here to do everything possible on their own initiative to achieve the same result in the spirit of co-operation about which one hears so much in this chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope I have not been too condemnatory in the course of my remarks, because I did not mean to be. It is just because when this government faced the electorate it told the people that it knew the problem and had a solution to the problem. We commend the government for everything it has done, but we say that there are many thousands who still need employment, and countless people who are on the fringe of semi-starvation. We urge hon. gentlemen on the front benches opposite to use their power as a government and as a cabinet in order to introduce without delay constructive policies and measures which will lead to a better standard of living for those who need it today.

Mr. B. C. Thompson (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being repetitious I should like formally to add a word of commendation to you for the admirable manner in which you have presided over the deliberations of this house to date and to wish you continued success in the carrying out of the duties of your office.

My congratulations also to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) who so ably presented to the house the motion which is now under debate.

I personally was most pleased and encouraged at the spontaneous response which the remarks of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet on national unity evoked from hon. members in this chamber. However, I have since been disappointed to hear the remarks which have come from some of the members of the official opposition on the same subject. I cannot think that such remarks will promote national unity in Canada and I would hope that their attitude might change in the near future.

May I also extend a word of welcome to those members who have joined us in the house since the beginning of this session. I hope their stay in parliament will be a long and successful one.

I should like to turn now to the speech from the throne which contains a list of policies and actions to be approved by the House of Commons which I think are going to be of great benefit to Canada in the days to come. Much has been said in this debate so far on the subject of unemployment. Much has been said by the opposition which would lead us to believe that the country is on the verge of collapse economically. I wish the people of Canada could observe the faces of the opposition; how great a look of disappointment is registered thereon when the steady improvement in our economy is noted, and how great a look of delight, almost to the point of rapture, overcomes them when unemployment figures are quoted.

I do not propose to go into the figures again. They are all on record. No one denies that we have unemployment in Canada. No one denies that last winter the figures were higher than usual. No one can deny that the figures this winter are improving all the time as the result of government action, but we do and should deny that the picture in Canada is as bad as it is painted by the opposition. The picture which the opposition paints is not designed to suggest ways and means of improving the situation but is designed to spread fear and panic in the hearts and minds of the people of Canada.

What have the members of the opposition to offer by way of suggestion? Nothing. They criticize but do not come up with any ideas of their own. The fact of the matter is that they have no ideas, because everything has been done by this government which can be done within the realm of practicality and common sense. The actions which this government took in national housing, in tax reductions, in increased social security benefits, in increased unemployment insurance benefits, in a program of public works and in easing credit prevented the situation from being a great deal worse than it was and have contributed in large part to the recovery which we are experiencing today.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) goes back to 1957 and tries to explain what he would have done had he still been in power. The measures which he suggests would have been too late. The former government had its opportunity in early 1957 to forestall a recession and to alleviate its effects. They had the information and the advice of the economic experts upon which to make a decision. They had two courses to follow and they chose the wrong one. They chose to fight inflation and ignored the warning signs of recession and unemployment. When the Leader of the Opposition says what he would have done had he remained in power I can only say that his hindsight and that of his colleagues is obviously a great deal better than their foresight.

The truth of the matter is that when the present government assumed office in 1957 they inherited a multitude of problems created by the Liberal administration. Had these problems not been created the Liberals would not have been turned out of office. The people of Canada lost confidence in them and expressed themselves at the polls by turning them out. For the Leader of the Opposition to expect this government to have dealt with the accumulation of decisions and have solved the multitude of problems which were left to it at that time in the short space of 19 months is the same as to expect someone to unravel a tangled skein of yarn in a matter of seconds. He could not do it and neither could anyone else.

Many references have been made to the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that as long as he is Prime Minister no one will suffer from unemployment. As usual, this statement has been misinterpreted by the opposition to have a meaning different from that which the Prime Minister intended. It is interpreted as a guarantee of 100 per cent employment, but any sensible person knows that that is not possible. What the Prime Minister obviously meant to any reasonable person is that he would emphasize and give priority to the fight against unemployment and do everything reasonable and practical to reduce unemployment and to alleviate the hardships of those who might be affected. This he has done and is doing.

In closing my remarks on this subject, Mr. Speaker, I, like the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith), would like to say with what interest I listened to the answers given to questions by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) at the press conference last week. I have never seen anyone work so hard to evade questions or perhaps I should say I have never seen anyone work so hard to answer questions. In spite of repeated questions he was unable to say what suggestions the opposition had or he himself had to improve the employment situation. His only answer was that the duty of the opposition is to criticize the policies and actions of the government. I must say that I was at a loss to know whether he had some ideas up his sleeve which he was just keeping to himself or whether he had no ideas at all and was just trying to cover up. As the time passed by I became inclined to the latter view.

Certainly, if the hon. member for Essex East has any ideas at all it is his duty to bring them before this house for consideration. The government has the responsibility to initiate whatever measures are deemed necessary, but every member has the duty to disclose any ideas which he might have to further the best interests of his country. If the opposition proposes to do nothing from now on except to criticize and not offer any alternative ideas, then I wish them good luck because I think they are going to be in opposition for a long time. I do not think that the people of Canada will allow any group to form a government which does not offer a reasonable and better alternative to the government of the day.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to turn for a moment to external affairs. I note with satisfaction in the speech from the throne that the government is going to support the policy of assuring the freedom of West Berlin; that the North Atlantic treaty alliance is reaffirmed; that increases in contributions to the international bank and the international monetary fund are to be approved and that the policy of economic assistance to underveloped nations is to be continued. In giving this assurance I think we should bear in mind that although the principle is a sound one, yet if it is to bear fruit we must take into account the different outlook which those people have as compared with ours. We must bear in mind that the expression "freedom" and "democracy" do not have precisely the same meaning to them as they do to us; that their spiritual and moral values differ from ours or, perhaps I should say, that our spiritual and moral values differ from theirs. At any rate, we cannot expect them to react to a given situation in the same way as we do.

I think the Prime Minister made an excellent suggestion when he said that we should arrive at some common definition as to the meaning of certain key words which seem to be used most when stating our common objectives. There is, of course, another important factor which must be considered when we endeavour to win the hearts of men, namely our own attitudes. We cannot expect other people to give us credit for 100 per cent good faith when we ourselves fail to practise the things we preach and practise the things against which we preach.

In our fight against communism, which is the most important single issue we face today, I think we should be wary of their actions and not allow ourselves to be swayed into different lines of thought and to change from one line of thought to another too readily. This seems to be rather obvious, Mr. Speaker, but I make the remark because there has been a tendency on our part to be led around by the nose and to jump from one thing to another, depending on the line which seems to be taken in Moscow.

Since the communists seized the initiative in the cold war they have been in a position to lead us around by employing subtle techniques. They can let us read into their actions or their emphasis on certain activities certain objectives. We must not lose sight of the fact that the avowed object of communism is to overthrow our way of life by any and all means and therefore we must be prepared to meet them on all fronts at all times. The communists have varied their attack; they have emphasized at different times the military aspects, the political aspects, the economic aspects and the scientific aspects of the cold war. Every time they change great concern is expressed and a great outcry is made that we should change also. As soon as the first sputnik was launched we began to hear that we needed more teachers, more scientists, more schools, more universities, more scholarships and our entire educational system came under fire.

We concern ourselves about the communists having the first IRBM and the first ICBM, and on being the first successfully to launch a man-made planet. In spite of these things, Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who is prepared to believe that we in the western world still have some of the finest scientists in the world and that our educational system in Ontario—and I say "Ontario" because I reside in Ontario—compares favourably with, if it is not better than, the educational system of the U.S.S.R.

I am not denying that there may be room for improvement, but I do not think that we should allow ourselves to be carried away by some of the more extreme expressions of concern. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, scientific achievement is relative. Where there is competition, by concentrated effort, one group can assume the lead one day and another group the next. A good illustration of this is what is taking place in the automobile industry. As far as education is concerned, it depends upon what you expect education to accomplish, what aspects of it you emphasize. The communists want more scientists but we want well-rounded, resourceful and capable citizens. Some of these will turn to science; others will turn to other lines of endeavour. A nation's strength lies not in what it actually has but in its potentials, not in its wealth but in its moral fibre. We can lose to ourselves as well as to the soviets. We will be successful in combatting communism in direct proportion to the effort and sacrifice we are prepared to put into it. In this respect we must keep in mind military weapons, economic assistance, education, trade and other fields of competition and give them our unceasing attention and support. The important thing is that each one of us should be aware of his or her own responsibility in this connection and live up to it.

Among other things in the speech from the throne, I am pleased to note that measures are going to be introduced to assist agriculture further. The revision of farm credit legislation and the introduction of crop insurance are two more steps in the accomplishment of the broad agricultural policy of the government. I should like to urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) however, to consider the payment of compensation for cattle slaughtered due to rabies. The current epidemic has swept into my riding of Northumberland and has resulted in the death of many cattle which is a severe blow to those who suffer the loss and who are not responsible for what has happened. I think that some method should be devised to compensate farmers for a loss of this kind and I add my voice to those of the other hon. members who have made the same request. The brevity of my remarks on this subject is not an indication of how strong my interest is in it, but that is all I wish to say at the present time.

Turning to the bill of rights which will be before us this session, I think it is a measure which should be supported. Since it was first introduced by the Prime Minister last session it has been the subject of much discussion and that, of course, is what the Prime Minister desired. I cannot agree with those who argue that it is not necessary to set down in writing our fundamental rights and freedoms. In Canada the question of whether or not a certain right or freedom exists must eventually be resolved in the courts and under our system of jurisprudence where we are guided by precedent it is much better to have something to hang your hat on than nothing at all. I would venture to say that some of those who have criticized the bill the most could be among the first to rely on it. This bill is a step in the right direction and we hope it will lead to something better.

The other day, Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) was criticized by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) for having a postmaster dismissed for political activities. In doing so he also stated that he thought that civil servants should be free to engage in political activities, or at least I so understood. Surely the hon. member must realize that that is the very reason why civil servants were given security in their jobs, so that they could not be forced to engage in political activities and therefore could perform their jobs with impartiality and free from political pressure.

When the hon. member deplores the fact that one civil servant is dismissed for political activities he should come to my riding and talk to people who were summarily dismissed by the Liberal administration when they were in power. I should also like him to explain how people in my riding were offered positions in the civil service before competitions were held. These are some things which the hon. member might look into before he criticizes the Postmaster General.

Finally, I want to say that I am pleased to support the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne and in so doing I express complete confidence in the ministers who are responsible for carrying out these measures.

(Translation):

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, last evening, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) suggested that the government close the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne to try to solve, and as soon as possible, this important problem of unemployment. The reaction to his suggestion was complete silence. The government, as usual, is being indecisive and careless. Do the hon. Conservative members feel that the matter of unemployment is not urgent? Have they not yet found a way to settle this problem? We do not know. Dead silence is the keynote. Could it be that, in view of the importance of this problem, the legislation which is to be submitted to the house is not ready? We do not know. As I said earlier, the situation is always the same; we have a government of carelessness, indecision and confusion.

The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) has claimed that we made this proposal because we were short of arguments or suggestions. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that to study the matter of unemployment and try to solve as soon as possible this problem, which is certainly the most important problem facing us at the present time, was in itself an excellent suggestion. We put forward other excellent suggestions in the past, but, like the previous ones, the suggestion to close the debate on the address had no more effect than water on the back of a duck.

Mr. Speaker, there are none so deaf as those who will not hear, as the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) so aptly put it this afternoon.

An hon. Member: That is the third time he said this.

Mr. Denis: I shall repeat it for a fourth time, and as in the case of Coca-Cola ads, perhaps you will end up by drinking it.

If the hon. Minister of Public Works is really deaf, he must still at least be endowed with eyesight. So if he is looking for excellent suggestions, and wants the country to continue prospering as it did under the Liberal government, all he needs to do is to read, reread, and indeed learn by heart, the masterful speech given by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, following the hon. members who spoke before me, I should like to pay tribute to the mover and supporter of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Messrs. Jorgenson and Fortin). They acquitted themselves of their task in a wonderful way, in spite of the lack of interest of the subject they were talking about, I mean the speech from the throne, and the present government's achievements.

Most particularly, I should like to congratulate the one who supported the motion and who resides in my province. He did so in an agreeable and dignified way, a thing to which we had not been accustomed by our friends opposite. He is no doubt aware that, since the coming into power of the present government, French Canadians are not adequately represented in the cabinet. Undoubtedly, he also knows that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) stated in the province of Quebec: "Give me members and I shall give you ministers". Another promise which the present government did not fulfil.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the right hon. Prime Minister was waiting for the member for Montmagny-L'Islet who made so auspicious a debut in the house and who, so soon after his arrival rises way above his colleagues who, since the coming into power of the Conservatives, are feverishly emulating one another in the hope of being promoted ministers or parliamentary secretaries.

Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the magnificent speech made by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay). Since I was to speak just after him, I cannot comment on his speech, a speech which, incidentally, I shall sum up in few words. In fact, I shall sum it up in the few words of an hymn which we used to sing at college, an hymn which the hon. member for Roberval must know, since he attended college and university. Mr. Speaker, I should like to sing that hymn, but to avoid breaking the rules of the house, I shall simply quote the first words which very well represent the hon. member for Roberval: "All is vanity, falsehood and fragility".

I have also listened to one of the newcomers here, the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Slogan). He gave us a fine picture of his constituency, its beauties, its wealth, etc., for which we thank him.

However, towards the end of his speech, I think he missed a good opportunity to keep his mouth shut. In fact, he allowed himself to graze in the neighbour's field, whereas he could have grazed in his own. For instance he took the liberty of saying that when the Liberals were in office, contractors had bought stone from the United States. I shall quote his own words so as to preclude any rebuttal:

(Text):

The Liberals wasted a lot of money on importing stone all the way from Virginia when they could have used the finest building stone on the continent. They had so little pride in the products of Canada.

(Translation):

Well, his party has been in power since 1957 and it has announced loans; this is not surprising because since they have been in power they have done nothing but borrow money, and, later on, our descendants or our descendants' descendants will have to pay the shot.

Mr. Martel: It is to meet your obligations.

Mr. Denis: In 1957, in a period of full unemployment, the present government announced the issue of savings bonds. I have here copies of the posters that were profusely distributed all over Canada.

The Conservative government too has been letting contracts, and giving work to foreigners, because at the bottom of this poster, I read this: "Printed in Great Britain". Here is the answer to the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Slogan). And to my hon. friends opposite, who are always fond of giving advice and suggestions, allow me to give this piece of advice: "People who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

Mr. Valade: You gave away a billion dollars to England during the war.

Mr. Denis: Well, ladies . . . It is the first time I refer to hon. ladies sitting in this house. I hope you will not be offended by this attitude; but the Conservatives are a bit jealous when they hear praise directed to others, even of the other sex.

Mr. Asselin: You are jealous of our wives.

(Text):

An hon. Member: It's a good thing they're not on your side.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: At the beginning of my speech, I referred to the carelessness, unconcern and instability of the Conservative government. I forgot to tell you also that they are past masters in inconsistency and contradiction.

I have here a statement made recently by the Prime Minister. He was blaming the Leader of the Opposition for describing Canada as a country with a dark future. He added that this picture was contrary to the facts and with his customary self-complacency, stated that the Leader of the Opposition was not equal to his responsibilities as a leader. Well, the next minute that same leader of the Conservative government contradicts himself and admits that the Leader of the Opposition is right. In fact the Prime Minister said, about the Leader of the Opposition:

"He is not living up to his responsibilities at this time when the world situation is difficult and distressing".

And later on:

"When we think of the difficulties that face the free world in the form of an economic onslaught."

In the same breath he says that the Leader of the Opposition is wrong in blackening Canada's reputation and right afterwards he tells the Leader of the Opposition: "You were perfectly right."

Well, what did he use to do when he was in the opposition? I have here a report published by the dominion bureau of statistics. The figures I have go back to the time when the Liberal party came to power, up to the arrival of the Conservative party. Let me quote some figures relating to unemployment. There were 133,000 unemployed in December 1952, 193,000 in 1953, 252,000 in 1954, 200,000 in 1955, 188,000 in 1956, while in 1957, when our good friends came to power, there were 392,000. In 1958, they numbered 440,000.

Mr. Speaker, what did they do at the time we were administering the country, when there were two or three times fewer unemployed than we have today? They used to wail and lament, Mr. Speaker, and they acted like calamity howlers. Were they being truthful at that time? No, and yet now they criticize us for telling people the truth. Well is it not our right, and even our duty to tell the truth to the people of this country? It looks as if the Liberals do not have the same policy as the Conservatives.

I recall that, when they used to sit on the opposition side, these people used to paint gloomy pictures of the situation in Canada while the country was in full prosperity. They were making suggestions that they are not even considering today. On March 15, 1955, for instance, the hon. Mr. Drew and the present Prime Minister, asked the government to call a federal-provincial conference to settle this problem of unemployment. But what are they doing now that we have twice the number of unemployed we had then? They would stop us from criticizing the government. One would say, Mr. Speaker, that they are trying to impose closure which they had promised to abolish and which is still on the statute books; another forgotten promise!

When the minister made this statement, in March 1955, there were 403,000 jobless, and in March 1958, there were almost 600,000 unemployed, actually 597,000 jobless. If they were right in painting a dark picture of the situation in Canada at the time, all the more are we justified in describing it as it is to-day.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), among others, also asked for a federal-provincial conference in March 1955.

It is a shame, he said, that the present government should have let the problem get worse and become urgent, even critical, without any agreement being reached between the federal and provincial governments on the steps needed to solve the problem. The solution must be based on an agreement between the federal and the provincial governments.

And yet there were 403,000 unemployed at the time, while there were 597,000 in March 1958 and there is no question of calling a federal-provincial conference.

Another one who with a tearful voice pitied our fellow-citizens while we were living in a period of prosperity and who now denies us the right to tell the truth and criticize the present government is the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough).

(Text):

—it is a matter of frightened men and women with cold bodies and hungry stomachs. It is a matter of fear which grips the hearts of working people who are probably employed themselves but see their neighbours idle and who ask themselves: when is it going to happen to me? Certainly, they say, we expect Canada to go ahead.

Of course there was a Liberal regime at that time.

Certain it is that Canada will thrive, but in the meantime what do we eat?

(Translation):

Those are the people, Mr. Speaker, who in good times were knell-tollers, prophets of doom and who would now prevent us from describing the situation as it is to-day. And they go even farther, Mr. Speaker. Not only do they want us to stop criticizing them now, but they anticipate on the future and they are preparing themselves to prevent us from criticizing things about which nothing has been said yet. In their "vision"—and you know, Mr. Speaker, they are somewhat visionary—they invented that we had chided them about their travels. I recall that the Prime Minister indicated in a speech that "some of my hon. friends had allegedly expressed doubts about the usefulness of my world tour." Yet, nobody had spoken about it before, for the simple reason that nobody knew anything about it. The only ones who knew anything about it were himself, his own friends and probably the Minister of Public Works, who had to act in his place. I hope he is recompensed by the Prime Minister, for taking on those duties.

And speaking of the Prime Minister, has he reported on his trip? No. He discussed the trips made by his predecessors three or four years ago, but he made no mention of the trips made by most of his ministers who, at one point, were outside the country for a certain period of time and merely administered their affairs from abroad. This is so true that at one point a friend of mine remarked: "We have in Canada at this time a cabinet of Sputniks which revolves around the earth and is in the process of disintegrating. If the Prime Minister wishes to compare his trip with that of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, we have no objection to that. We have nothing against the Prime Minister and other ministers making trips at proper times. We do not object to this, provided that things are done according to law and to the prerogatives of parliament, which the Prime Minister treasures so highly. When the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent decided to go on a trip around the world, he asked for and received the assent of all parties in the house after he told them the reasons for the trip. He did as should be done in a democratic country. By contrast, the present Prime Minister left by the rear door, like a child who is afraid to be refused the permission to go.

We could have told him that, in our opinion, it was not to be a profitable trip for the country, that there was enough work to be done here and that it would be preferable to wait for a while, since a captain should not leave his ship when the sea is rough. And heaven knows we had problems to solve here: unemployment, inflation, the matter of freight rates, the increase of telephone rates, the matter of civil servant salaries, beside the embargo on our exports to the U.S.A., on oil, zinc and lead and so on. No, without saying a word to anybody about it, there goes the Prime Minister on a world trip. I say he could have waited.

When a farmer wants to travel, he does not leave his farm when it is time to plough or to harvest, he does not leave when grasshoppers are ruining his fields. This is what I am against.

I congratulate the right hon. Prime Minister on having fraternized with other nations of the world, to get to know them better and to open new markets for us, even if we have ambassadors in those countries. In my opinion, he did not bring us luck by his conduct.

We learned through radio and television that he had moments of leisure. He is entitled to them. But in his leisure hours, he did not have much luck. Indeed, we learned that he went on a tiger hunt. He was no credit to us unfortunately, because on his tiger hunt, he was not a good shot and failed to hit the target. And to think that Canadians have the reputation of being good shots and marksmen. You all remember the Royal 22nd Regiment, don't you?

We saw the picture of the Prime Minister decorated with flowers. That is nothing new for him. We had some here in Canada. If he wanted to be covered with flowers, all he had to do was wait for the budget speech, an occasion when all Conservative members wear blue flowers, free from government tax. We saw the Prime Minister pictured riding an elephant. We were glad to see that he was taking a rest after a tiring day. I am convinced however that he did not go there only to ride on an elephant or to see one. Indeed, he did not have to go that far to see one because we have right here in Canada the nicest white elephant in the world: the present government.

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned this government's unconcern and vanity, but I did not speak of their inconsistencies or of the way they shirk responsibility. Just recently the producers' strike on the French network of the C.B.C. raised a problem. The government's reaction was a most striking example of the indecision and contradiction that characterizes a government that is marking time and does not know where to go, but is satisfied with its own vanity and its own complacency. The hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) declared: We have nothing to do with the strike; the C.B.C. is an independent, autonomous body, we have nothing to do with that, I am not getting involved. A moment later, he stated that the strike was illegal. Now here is a flagrant case of contradiction, of which the Conservatives are so fond. A day or two later, the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), who is a member of the same government, declared that the strike was legal and added: "We are watching the situation closely".

Since when, Mr. Speaker, has the cabinet stopped speaking with one voice in Canada? How can you govern when the government is half yes and half no, when one minister holds a certain view on a particular matter while the others hold a different view? I think it would be well for the Prime Minister to decide whether a Conservative government must be made up of independent ministers who are for or against a thing according to their whims.

The hon. Prime Minister is raising the bill of rights in one hand and the C.B.C. ultimatum in the other.

He asks for suggestions. Why didn't the government follow the example set up by the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, when the railroad employees threatened to go on strike in 1950? And yet, the Canadian National is a corporation independent of the crown as well as the C.B.C.; they are a national service as well as the C.B.C. What did Mr. St. Laurent do at that time? He wrote to both parties asking them to try to settle the dispute. He appointed a representative to attend their discussions and when it became evident that it was impossible to prevent the strike, he called parliament into session because he respected the rights and privileges of parliament and he proposed a measure in order to prevent the threatening railroad strike. The hon. Prime Minister wants suggestions, but the example was there. All he had to do was to follow in the footsteps of the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent. These are practical suggestions, but they are not easily accepted indeed because they come from the Liberal party and because the Conservatives are afraid that their opponents might get the whole credit for it.

Here is another contradiction, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes, the Conservatives say that unemployment does not exist, "recession is on the way out," and at other times, they proclaim: "Unemployment exists, but we inherited that from the Liberals, from the United States, from the Russians." The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) recently said in Toronto that if conditions were bad, if the country was faced with inflation, that was the public's own fault. That is one way of evading one's responsibilities. Now here is another contradiction on the part of the government. During the last election campaign, there was talk about a 15 per cent cut on our imports from the United States. Some time later, this was claimed to be no longer important and newspapers were accused of having made a mistake.

Was it not the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) who stated that the Bomarc installations were a secret thing, and soon afterwards he said that surveys were being made with a view to building them near North Bay or Macaza River, a locality situated in the constituency of my hon. friend, the Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche)? There, Mr. Speaker, you have irresponsibility, lack of logic and contradiction.

The CF-105 if necessary, but not necessarily the CF-105.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) whom I am very pleased to see now in his place and to whom I am thankful for listening to me with attention, asked for, while he was a member of the opposition, twice a day mail delivery. Since unemployment exists in the country, restoration of this service would give employment to many people. So what did the Postmaster General answer last Friday when he was asked if he was thinking of coming back to the two-a-day delivery? "Not for the time being".

Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign, our friends from Quebec blamed the Liberal party for voting $20 million for the Colombo plan. They claimed this was giving away our belongings to foreigners. Today, these same gentlemen are sitting in the House of Commons and none of them stood up to criticize what we had done. On the contrary, they raised the contribution to $50 million.

Still in the course of last election campaign, Union Nationale supporters all said that the $1 grant per capita to the universities was an encroachment upon autonomy. Now, the Conservative government raises that grant to $1.50 per capita and we say: "Long live autonomy!"

Some members of the cabinet said that O Canada is our national anthem; other ministers said that God Save the Queen is our national anthem. The rest say neither yes or no.

Some of our friends opposite would like to have a distinctive national flag.

An hon. Member: In Montreal.

Mr. Denis: The present Prime Minister himself said: "I do not want any flag without the Union Jack."

Mr. Speaker, when a member delivers a speech, and especially in the House of Commons, he must remember that anyone may very well remember what he says. Here is what the Prime Minister said on November 13, 1945, as recorded on page 2089 of the official record:

> On the other hand, I cannot see eye-to-eye—and my sentiments so carry me that I must be restrained when I say this—those who would deny the union jack a permanent and prominent place on the flag of this country; and the place of honour on any flag is the upper quarter.

You see, he even goes into details.

I stand to-day where Mr. Bennett stood in 1938.

That is true. This is the same attitude as that of Mr. Bennett, in regard to the unemployment crisis, the national flag and our national anthem.

"Last year", says he, "there were 400,000 unemployed". To-day, there are 440,000 unemployed. Recession is on the way out. Let's all rejoice, Canadians; we are heading towards disaster, but much more slowly than last year.

An hon. Member: Alleluia!

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, such statements remind me of a doctor who would say to his patient: "But, my dear boy, you are not ill, you have only 105 degrees of temperature!" But, the next day, when going back to take his patient's temperature, he says: "But, my dear boy, you are cured, you have only 105½ degrees".

An hon. Member: What a joke!

Mr. Denis: Here then, Mr. Speaker, are some contradictions and inconsistencies which I have selected among thousands. I cannot but condemn the present government, ever since it came into power.

Consequently, I shall gladly support the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition.

(Text):

May I conclude by describing in three short statements the condition of affairs for which the government is responsible. The recession is going out—out of control. Inflation is going up—up into the sky. Our state of affairs is going down—down to hell.

Mr. Speaker, for the good of our beloved country and citizens I sincerely hope that in spite of the present government I turn out to be wrong. May I conclude, as a previous speaker a colleague on the Liberal side, has done, by repeating my leader's plea to the government to conclude this debate immediately and proceed at once with legislation to deal with the unemployment problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Denis: Why not listen? After it has been repeated a hundred times maybe you will understand a good suggestion. So long as this government persists in delaying action the opposition will play its part in this debate, but we are ready to have the vote now and get on with the nation's business.

[Mr. Denis.]

(Translation):

Mr. C. E. Campeau (St. James): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in the congratulations previously offered to the hon. members who respectively moved and seconded the motion in reply to the speech from the throne (Messrs. Jorgenson and Fortin).

I have been listening to my hon. friend and colleague from St. Denis (Mr. Denis), and this brought back to my mind—to use up the few minutes remaining before six o'clock—a joke I heard recently. It is about two friends who meet, and one says to the other: "Did you have the radio on last night? There was a speaker who talked and talked and talked on". When the friend inquired what had been the subject, he replied: "Well, he didn't say".

I am happy, Mr. Speaker, that the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne affords me the opportunity to express before this house the views of the constituents of St. James, whom I have the honour to represent in the Canadian parliament.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to stress the uniqueness of the constituency of St. James, located as it is in the very heart of the largest Canadian city. Without a doubt, there is no constituency more representative of urban development in Canada. Its dense population of workers and business people is deeply integrated into the economic, industrial and social life of the whole country.

We in St. James, Mr. Speaker, are sick and tired of these longwinded discussions on economic theories that would consider Canadian citizens as so many guinea pigs, theories that are constantly being negated by the facts. We hear talk of recession, inflation, deflation, and of countless other big words ending in "ion", words that are all too often used, Mr. Speaker, to conceal the user's ignorance of the hard facts.

There is one thing, however, that we in St. James, can readily understand, and it is the mechanical sounds of steam shovels and the rap of hammers, sounds that the Conservative government brought to life by authorizing, in the very heart of the constituency of St. James, the construction of the Jeanne Mance homes, which is the first project involving slum clearance and the construction of healthy low rent family dwellings ever to be undertaken in the province of Quebec, following an agreement between both governments, federal and provincial. Works representing more than $10 million are being carried out in St. James constituency where slums will be replaced by 800 salubrious houses, and the federal government pays 75 per cent of the cost.

Mr. Speaker, what we understand also is the modernization which is going on in Montreal harbour, at a cost of $57 million, and for a large part, in St. James constituency. What we understand, Mr. Speaker, is the work initiated by the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), to give to the Jacques Cartier bridge an additional lane and to speed up, as he said this morning, the construction of the Champlain bridge, which had been delayed until the Conservative government, these last few months, took decisive steps.

These things are real, Mr. Speaker; we understand them and we can see them with our own eyes. That is why we in St. James were so glad to hear of the measures outlined in the speech from the throne, particularly those relating to housing, the national development program to be carried out in co-operation with the provinces, emergency projects designed to alleviate unemployment, and particularly projects for the development and the proper use of our national resources and the growth of efficient industry based upon them.

We are proud of that program of national development, because it stresses a desire of growth which makes use of the natural resources with which Providence has so generously endowed our country. We have confidence in this vision of the future that the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker has held up to the people of Canada and which is worthy of the faith of the fathers of confederation, of those who thought, nearly a century ago, of a Canada "a mari usque ad mare".

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Campeau: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak tonight, I would like to welcome the hon. members for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman), for Springfield (Mr. Slogan) who sit with us for the first time and for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer).

I also take this opportunity to express my satisfaction in seeing you again preside over the debates of the house with this sense of justice and logic and with this serene calm, this pleasant wit so typical of you.

Before recess this afternoon, I had pointed out that we were proud of the national development program mentioned in the speech from the throne, because it expresses a will to expand similar to the one shown by the fathers of confederation when they wanted, almost a century ago, to make a Canada "a mari usque ad mare". In our opinion, it is in this respect that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has shown his profound understanding of Canada's basic mission as a nation, within the framework of confederation, by offering to all Canadians an opportunity to build by practical stages a Canada by and for all Canadians closely united in a development of which they are willing to pay the price in order that its immense benefits may be secured both for themselves and for their children. We are grateful to the right hon. Prime Minister for devoting all his energy to the realization of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's vision: "The twentieth century belongs to Canada".

Mr. Speaker, in connection with this national development policy based on the functional development of natural resources, I would like to stress the importance of physical and human capital as represented by urban development the most typical expression of which is the constituency of St. James.

The development of cities in Canada has been so rapid that it is now the source of a problem facing the whole Canadian people. More than 65 per cent of the Canadian population now live in the cities, towns or villages, and more than 36 per cent in major metropolitan areas. The Gordon commission foresees that during the next 25 years the urban population will reach 80 per cent of the total Canadian population. This urban expansion will affect more than 2,000 square miles of land and require an extra capital outlay of $4,100 billion for housing, educational and other institutions as well as municipal works.

Obviously this urban expansion requires a concentrated effort to achieve at all levels of government an effective co-ordination of the activities aiming at solving those urban problems which are more and more numerous, important and urgent.

More and more, public works undertaken by the federal government play a necessarily paramount role in the urban development throughout this country.

A realistic approach shows that it is expedient, indeed necessary, that federal activities be organized so as to tie in with local and regional town planning. In the matter of housing, slum clearance, government buildings and other similar projects, individual projects can and should be mapped out so as to fit in the master plans worked out by the municipalities. Many public works, thus thought out and implemented, could meet federal needs while replacing or at least fitting in the local projects. This procedure could bring to the municipalities in most cases a much more substantial help than grants without giving rise to any constitutional issues. Thus local and regional town planning would be furthered as it has never been in the past.

It can be said without exaggeration that it would be proper to initiate research at the federal government level, in order to establish the relationship that could exist between federal projects on the one hand and municipal projects on the other, as foreseen in the planning schemes of the municipalities. These projects could replace or complete one another in the best interests of the municipalities.

It therefore appears essential and urgent that the national development program be drawn up in such a way as to provide positive help for urban development throughout the country, in fields where federal activity is already intense, such for example as those of natural resources, public works, transportation and communications, and of low cost and low rental housing. Such co-ordination must be achieved at the federal level in order to give practical aid to municipalities that are experiencing growing pains.

As an illustration, Mr. Speaker, may I refer to the constituency of St. James, in the context of the Montreal area.

The National Housing Act, and the generous amounts placed at the disposal of builders in the last few months, thanks to the Conservative government, give hopes for a substantial improvement of housing conditions in the very heart of Montreal.

The example set by the Jeanne Mance home building project will certainly be followed by other similar schemes for slum clearance and low rental family dwellings. I wish to assure my constituents of St. James that we will spare no efforts to ensure that the renovation initiated in our constituency will be pursued actively in the future. At this point, I wish to thank my colleague, the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) who shared my efforts to secure for the eastern portion of the centre of the city, the benefits of the National Housing Act, and thus to bring forth in the eastern part of the city a development of real estate comparable to that enjoyed by the western portion of centre town.

The harbour is constantly improving and already the wharves are spreading towards the east of the island of Montreal, on the north shore while on the south shore, expansion projects are getting under way in the area of Varennes, Vercheres and Contrecœur. We have reason to believe that, in the near future, there will be a bridge or a tunnel across Ste. Therese island to connect the harbour developments of the north shore with those of the south shore and to facilitate trading between both shores, while providing an easy access for the working population of the eastern part of the island of Montreal, to this colossal industry which is growing on the south shore and which needs this supply of labour to develop adequately.

The harbour development will require traffic and parking facilities that will have to be integrated with those of the city of Montreal. The harbour's commercial traffic already requires a speedway that could be connected with the multi-lane highway project recommended by the city of Montreal along the harbour, from Place Royale to Bonsecours church, and even further towards the extreme east.

Parking facilities urgently needed at the harbour, both for its employees and visitors who go there on business, could be developed in such a way as to meet on occasion the needs of neighbouring industries.

In the very near future, the development of jet planes will require a decentralization of airport services in Dorval. Consideration should be given right away to providing a functional area to this end, in view of the fact that the urban development of Montreal is rapidly reducing to nothing the great vacant spaces. In view of the intensive industrial development which is taking place in the Vercheres, Varennes and Contrecœur area, the territory where Ste. Therese island is located should be seriously examined with a view to maintaining and intensifying the residential industrial and harbour development of that expanding area.

The utilization of railway rights of way for public transportation purposes would help to solve rapidly a major problem facing the economic life of Montreal, and at the same time it would lighten the heavy burden of commuters' services provided by railway companies. The advantage of such a solution would be to fully utilize a capital already invested and to provide the public transportation problem with a solution which would certainly be the most economical and especially the most rapid.

Finally, the construction of public buildings, if their location is integrated in the overall city plan, is a substantial renovating factor, and a creator of real estate increment value which is of benefit to the whole area concerned. We believe that due to the intensive development of the Montreal area, a new concentration of federal services will become advisable in the near future. It would be logical to consider, to this end, the eastern part of central Montreal which would be very convenient for the setting up of an administrative centre. Such a measure, developed in accordance with a functional town-planning concept, would help eradicate slum areas, would provide a radical element of renovation and would encourage, on the part of private enterprise, large scale programs to the advantage of the whole eastern part of the island of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, in closing my remarks, I speak on behalf of the citizens of St. James constituency in expressing our confidence in the future of Montreal, of the province of Quebec and of Canada.

We are not afraid of recessions, regressions and inflation. We do not allow ourselves to be frightened more than necessary by the prophets of doom who unconsciously interfere with the good name of their own national institutions. We are not happy with unemployment, but we don't enjoy either the abstract calculations of so-called experts who are ready to offer solutions to any problem, remedies unable to withstand the dire laws of reality.

Once again, we prefer the measures initiated by the present government, the ones tending to increase the credits for housing, to eliminate railway crossings and other such measures, without mentioning again the ones I outlined a moment ago. We don't want to be stopped by a short sighted pessimism, generating fear, inaction and procrastination.

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, our arms, our intelligences, our hearts, will be put actively to the service of our country, so that the difficult moments could give way to a continued growth and that our children could be proud of our achievements.

We believe in the greatness of Canada, and to follow in the footsteps of Macdonald and Cartier, we want to set in the stone, brick and concrete, for the benefit of the following generations, an unlimited vision of the future of Canada.

(Text):

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to add my sincere congratulations to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Their presentations reflected credit on themselves, their constituencies and this house. At this time I should also like to say that you, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Speaker and the chairman of the committee of the whole have certainly carried out the duties of your respective offices in a dignified manner and in a way very acceptable to all parties in the house.

I have the honour, Mr. Speaker, to be the Liberal representative for the riding of Trinity-Conception, Newfoundland, which riding takes in many settlements in Conception and Trinity bays. My riding has a population of approximately 58,000 and I intend to work in the interests of these people as long as I have the honour to represent them. The riding begins at Brigus, approximately 50 miles from St. John's, and goes north to cape Bonavista where John Cabot is said to have first sighted land when he discovered Newfoundland in 1497.

I regret to have to inform the house that there is much unemployment in my riding, as there is all over Newfoundland, and many Newfoundlanders have already stated that we are being treated as second-class Canadians. But I say now without fear of contradiction that we are just as good a type of Canadian as you will find in any other part of Canada.

We have been waiting for months for the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to make a statement on the McNair report respecting term 29 and Tories and Liberals alike in Newfoundland are expecting an upward revision based on this report. In term 29 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada there is written the consummation of the union of Newfoundland with Canada, the grand finale of the linking of two British dominions, the dominion of Newfoundland with the dominion of Canada, and as in the marriage ceremony one and one when joined together make one. So we now have one great dominion, the great dominion of Canada which stretches from the Pacific to the Atlantic. As it is said that the twentieth century belongs to Canada, Canada is now called upon to act generously to her newly adopted child at a time when the ruling government of Canada has the greatest number of elected representatives since the Dominion of Canada came into existence.

Newfoundland has been a province of Canada for the past ten years. Let us compare it with some of our other provinces, for example the maritime provinces. We will see how far behind any of these provinces Newfoundland stands today through no fault of her own but because we have so much time and progress to make up. Newfoundland will be far behind even the maritimes until the federal government of Canada meets its obligations to the latest adopted member of the Canadian family. In a province where road communications, schools, public buildings and other public services were so far behind the other provinces the Newfoundland government has done a tremendous job during the past ten years with the finances at its disposal. But the people have had to be taxed to help to get these public services and the government has gone into debt even to the extent of floating large loans which must eventually be repaid with interest.

Never before in the history of any nation or the government of any country was such an opportunity presented as is now facing the government of Canada to show its righteousness, its sense of justice and sense of welfare for its own family as in the case of Newfoundland. This is not a party measure, Mr. Speaker, where Conservatives, Liberals and C.C.F. can be divided on the issue. This is a case where all parties must combine to achieve a just and reasonable solution to the problem so that in the years that lie ahead Canadians yet unborn can refer to the legislation passed on this occasion with pride and respect because they will be able to say that when Canada and the government of Canada were weighed in the balance on this occasion in 1959 they met the issue fairly and squarely and were considerate and generous in their decision to award sufficient financial assistance to Newfoundland to carry on and to reach the standard attained by the maritime provinces in their public services.

This standard reached or hoped to be reached in the public service of Newfoundland must be accomplished without resorting to taxation more burdensome than that existing in the maritime provinces. This was only inserted to make up a number of minds because it is a recognized fact that the cost of living in Newfoundland is the highest in Canada. Taxes are tremendously high, even more burdensome than anywhere else in Canada.

I would suggest to the Prime Minister and to all parties in this parliament that they be generous toward Newfoundland in reaching their decision. I should like to say that here and now there should be a clause inserted in the legislation to the effect that our decision and financial award should be reviewed again within a certain period of time so that the spirit as well as the letter of term 29 will be observed. Do not let it be said of us, as representatives of the people of Canada, that the province and people of Newfoundland came unto their own, and their own received them not, as is recorded in history in respect of Him who was born in a stable at Bethlehem. Let us not fail Newfoundland, and let us not discredit the great Dominion of Canada in this, the twentieth century, the century that the great Laurier said belonged to Canada.

Because of the failure of the fishery, a large majority of the fishermen in Newfoundland, through no fault of their own, did not get enough stamps to get unemployment insurance. We had in the Newfoundland cod fishery the worst crop failure in Canada. All Liberal members from Newfoundland join in strong representations to the Prime Minister that something should be done for these fishermen, something comparable with what the government did for the farmers in the west. All Newfoundland fishermen were disappointed when on Tuesday, January 20, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) told us that nothing could be done for our fishermen. On page 78 of Hansard for that date there was a supplementary question asked of the minister by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) as follows:

> Did I understand the minister to say consideration is no longer being given to a reduction in the number of stamps required by fishermen for unemployment insurance?

The minister answered as follows:

> I said, sir, no consideration is being given to reducing the 15 stamps that are required for seasonal benefits at the moment, and that includes everyone.

Newfoundland fishermen, work hard and long, from daylight to sunset. They worked a sufficient number of hours but they did not get enough fish to enable them to obtain sufficient stamps to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. This regulation is just not fair to our Newfoundland fishermen. I again appeal to the Prime Minister to reconsider the matter and to give these fishermen who are in great need the same consideration as was given to the farmers last September. Last year there were more men prosecuting the fishery than for a number of years, but still there were less fish caught than in previous years. There was less salt fish produced than in any year on record. As a matter of fact, we had a decrease of 40 per cent in lightly salted fish and 35 per cent in heavily salted fish.

In addition to our salt fish industry we annually export to the United States of America approximately 60 million pounds of fresh frozen fish. In 1958 there were approximately 450 million pounds of fish caught, 100 million pounds less than in the previous year. A shortage of bait, the failure of the trawl and trap fisheries and stormy weather were amongst the chief factors for the failure of the shore fisheries. The federal department has taken steps to have mobile bait units placed in a few fishing settlements. I urge the government to send more to Newfoundland because I am convinced that while these depots will not solve the main difficulties they will go a long way toward helping the fishermen.

At the present time it looks as if there will be more men prosecuting the fishery in 1959 than there have been for a number of years. I sincerely hope that their efforts will be amply repaid. For more than 100 years the cod trap, hook and line and trawls have been the methods of shore fishing in Newfoundland. We have now approximately 70,500 fishermen in 1,300 settlements along our 6,000 miles of rugged but picturesque coastline. It can be seen, therefore, that the fisheries still are, as they have been, one of our main industries and every effort should be made by this government to see that all measures are taken to protect and assist this most important industry which can and should be further developed. When we consider the nature of the inshore fishing, and the present system followed by our shore fishermen, we can see that salt fish will be produced mainly for many years to come.

I understand that for a number of years the building of fish stages has been under consideration, and recently the federal government approved of the construction of some 20 community fish stages in Newfoundland. It is estimated, I believe, the cost will be $500,000, and the sites selected are supposed to be in the areas most affected by the failure of the fishery in 1958. At the present time the fishermen have their own fish stages for landing their fish, their own storerooms for salting their fish and their own flakes for drying their fish. These community stages should be a great help in producing a more uniform quality of fish, and should enable our fishermen to operate more efficiently. I understand that two of these stages are to be built in the riding of Trinity-Conception in the near future. I hope that more will be built next year.

I would strongly recommend that these community stages be erected in the late fall and early spring rather than during the winter because high seas and stormy weather make it practically impossible for the men to work and produce anything worth while for their efforts. Last year most of the bait that we had in our cold storage was sold to competitors, and we had to bring in bait.

Some 400,000 pounds of European squid were brought to Newfoundland. Steps should be taken to see that this does not happen again. Instead steps should be taken to see that all the cold storages are filled to capacity if and when bait of the species of caplin, squid, herring and mackerel are available. Reports of stocks should be presented weekly to the department concerned. The question of distribution of bait to our fishermen, in addition to the mobile units, should be given serious consideration and a trial period for bait distribution should be initiated. Further research should be continued with regard to the non-appearance of squid last year and a new method of catching bait should be studied.

In Newfoundland today we have another problem, namely that of our coastal fleet which is practically a thing of the past. Newfoundland is an island and coastal boats or freighters are and will be required to take provisions and supplies to many of our settlements. I think the time is now opportune for giving assistance in the matter of the building of schooners of from 100 gross tons to 200 gross tons for this important purpose, especially when we consider the fact that most of our coastal boats are nigh ready for the scrap heap and are not being replaced and supplemented at a sufficient pace to keep up the poor service now in existence, let alone improve it.

It is estimated that approximately $400,000 is spent annually by Newfoundland boat operators outside of Newfoundland. The lack of docking facilities and its effect upon efficiency and the cost of boat operations in Newfoundland requires immediate action. Dockyard facilities are badly needed to service ships, schooners, boats and longliners registered in Newfoundland. Last year I suggested—and I do so again—that docking facilities be established in Harbour Grace, Clarenville, St. Anthony, Corner Brook, Burin and Bay Bulls. The C.N.R. dock at St. John's is not able to handle the number of boats requiring its facilities, one reason being that it must, or at least it should, look after its own boats first.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) is said to have stated that reports from across the country revealed that the national winter employment program was providing jobs for many unemployed and that the winter works incentive program introduced by the federal government was meeting with co-operation from provincial and municipal authorities. That may be correct, Mr. Speaker, as to provinces on the mainland but it has not helped to solve the problem of unemployment in any way in Newfoundland. All provinces of Canada may differ from one another but Newfoundland differs more greatly than any other and her problems should receive special consideration.

Outside St. John's and Corner Brook there are in Newfoundland no municipalities in the sense that they exist on the mainland; and for most of Newfoundland there is no municipal organization in the province with the power or resources to carry out such works. In eastern Newfoundland some 17,500 persons were registered as unemployed with the unemployment insurance commission in St. John's on January 17, and I would say that almost as many more were unemployed and not registered, many of whom are excluded for many reasons. Of course, this figure does not include the lumbermen who are out of work because of labour disputes. I sincerely hope that the present strike will soon come to an end in order that the economy of Newfoundland may not be affected.

Mr. Speaker, freight rate increases are playing havoc in Newfoundland. Twelve increases have been granted in the past ten years, the same number of years that Newfoundland has been a province of Canada. These increases have helped to drive the cost of living for all Canadians to a high level; but for the Atlantic province they have driven it to a height that makes living for the residents of these provinces both burdensome and back breaking. For Newfoundland, still with its antiquated non-Canadian type railway, the last increase in freight rates has been the straw that broke the camel's back.

Is this the position the government took with regard to this last request from the railways for an increase and which the board of transport commissioners granted, because they chose to accept the lesser of two evils, refuse the increase and have a railway strike on their hands and face what they consider to be a national disaster by the tie-up of the railways? But what consideration did they give to the major part of Canadian citizens when they well knew that the granting of this latest raise in freight rates would affect every single Canadian from the Pacific to the Atlantic and drive up to an unprecedented high the already burdensome cost of living?

The provinces, especially the maritimes, have long since requested the government to renew and revise the freight rate structure, but to date little has been done; and as I have already stated the continuation of increases in freight rates tends to make the mode of living that much harder in Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker, this granting of freight rate increases is not the solution to the railway difficulties. This granting of freight rate increases is slowly but surely destroying the faith of the Canadian people in this government of ours. It is increasing beyond the point of endurance and acceptability the cost of living for our people. It is creating unemployment. It is forcing the federal government and the governments of the provinces to dispense social assistance beyond the expectations of even the wisest statesmen's dreams, for that would be the score in Canada in 1959.

Our hopes, our aspirations and our determination to make Canada a great nation cannot be achieved by transactions such as those we have witnessed. We must here and now find a better solution to the problems of our railway than by shifting the burden of its deficiency on to the shoulders of our already overtaxed people.

The provincial minister of the department of highways of Newfoundland recently stated that the total length of the highway from Port aux Basques to St. John's will be approximately 568 miles. Twenty-five miles of this is through the national park which is a federal responsibility. This leaves a distance of 542 miles to be built by the province of Newfoundland. Of this, 256 miles have already been built and are ready for paving. Thirty-five miles have been paved, leaving 286 miles to be built and a total of 508 miles to be paved.

The minister estimated the cost of building the highway would be $31,500,000 for the construction of 286 miles and $22,600,000 for the paving of 508 miles and $4,223,000 for the building or construction of 34 bridges making a grand total of $58,225,000 to be spent on roads. With the present agreement between the province and the federal government Newfoundland will have to spend $28,112,000. The minister further stated that Newfoundland has to build more miles of the trans-Canada highway per capita than any other province in Canada. He also said that when the present agreement expires in 1960 he feels a more realistic division of cost should be agreed upon; otherwise the trans-Canada highway from St. John's to Vancouver will not be completed for at least another ten years.

I hope that the speech which I have just delivered will not have fallen on deaf ears but that the present government will give serious consideration to many of the problems of Newfoundland which because of many factors are unique. I should like to tell the government that we are not seeking something to which we are not entitled.

At this time I wish to repeat my leader's appeal to the government to conclude this debate immediately and proceed at once with legislation to deal with the unemployment problem. As long as the government persists in prolonging the debate and delaying action the Liberal party will take its part in the debate but we are ready to have the vote now and get on with the nation's business.

Mr. J. C. MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my first words must be of congratulation to the mover (Mr. Jorgenson) and the seconder (Mr. Fortin) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. The hon. member for Provencher brought to the attention of this house in his masterful way the viewpoint, the problems and the aspirations of the western farmer. The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet in that beautiful French language expressed very clearly not only the wish but the need for complete national unity of all those ethnic groups that make up our nation. I should like to express the thought that on March 31, 1958 in the general election held on that day one of the most forward steps in national unity since confederation was taken by the good people of Quebec when they sent to this house 50 Conservative members of the 75 who were elected from "la belle" province.

I could not let this opportunity pass, Mr. Speaker, without saying a few words about your person. I have had the privilege of sitting in this house in the 23rd parliament and, of course, in the first session of the 24th parliament under your chairmanship. I have been deeply impressed as I know all hon. members have been by your fairness, your great knowledge of procedure and especially by your keen sense of humour. In this debate it is permissible for an hon. member to discuss his constituency. I should like to follow that precedent and for a part of the time at my disposal this evening discuss the constituency of York-Sunbury, New Brunswick, a beautiful part of a beautiful province. For the past 36 years York-Sunbury has had only four members in this house and I should like to pay my tribute to their service.

For 19 years our representative was the Hon. R. B. Hanson, minister of trade and commerce in the government of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett and later leader of the official opposition. For a period of five years it was represented by the Hon. W. G. Clark, later lieutenant-governor of our province. From 1945 to 1947, following his return from war service, our representative was the Hon. H. F. G. Bridges as minister of fisheries. It was a great loss not only to his party and to the government of the day but to the country as a whole when the life of this able young man was cut short in 1947. From 1947 to 1957 York-Sunbury was represented by the Hon. Milton F. Gregg, V.C., whose portfolio for much of that time was that of labour. These hon. gentlemen represented York-Sunbury well and I am happy to be able to have this opportunity to pay this tribute to them.

The city of Fredericton is the largest centre in my constituency. Founded by the United Empire Loyalists in 1884 it is the seat of government for the province of New Brunswick. It has grown rapidly in the past dozen years, a condition which we hope to see continue. Nearby is the cotton milling town of Marysville. I would like to pause for just a moment at this point to express the thanks of the people of Marysville to the government for legislation passed in the previous session, the so-called anti-dumping legislation, which has made it possible for the major industry in this town to continue and to prosper. The textile industry as everyone knows is highly competitive. The legislation to which I have referred provides some degree of protection against the dumping of foreign textiles on the Canadian market which have been forcing our textile mills out of production. One year ago in this small mill there were 110 men and women employed. Today 200 are employed.

Fredericton is on the trans-Canada highway. A beautiful new bridge known as the Princess Margaret bridge will be officially opened this summer. Nearby, too, is the dominion experimental farm which is a credit to the Department of Agriculture and the government service as a whole. Within a few weeks construction of a new administration and science laboratory is to be commenced there costing in the neighbourhood of $1,750,000. Fredericton has its own municipal airport. However, the great expansion of the area has made the present facilities inadequate. Representations have been made to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) about this and I would ask his full co-operation which I am sure will be forthcoming in giving consideration to the legitimate requests which have been made by the city administration.

York-Sunbury also has other communities of some importance, the railway centre of MacAdam and the Minto coal mining area. I share with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) the honour of representing the fine people in this area. I was deeply distressed as I am sure all hon. members of the house were to hear that there are to be temporary lay-offs in the Nova Scotian coal fields.

The employment picture in Minto has been brighter this winter than for several years past. And while I am discussing unemployment I might mention that I took the opportunity this afternoon to check the employment figures in my constituency and I found that there are 300 fewer people unemployed today than there were a year ago.

Now I should like to tell the house for a few moments about Camp Gagetown. Here in York-Sunbury and Royal is located what is considered to be one of the finest and most modern military installations in the world. The camp area contains over 500 square miles of the finest military training country in Canada, comprising training ranges, general manoeuver areas and localities for exercises for almost all types of warfare from jungle to mountain fighting. Secondly, there is the administration of the camp, with its more than 100 beautiful and functional buildings. Thirdly, and adjacent, is the married quarters where 2,000 homes provide service men and their families with excellent accommodation. Construction of this camp was begun in 1953 and it was officially opened on July 1, 1958 by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes).

Beside the camp, where there was formerly only a small village known as Oromocto, there is growing a new city under a federal-provincial planning committee. Presently stationed at Camp Gagetown is the third Canadian infantry brigade group, a formation well-officered, well-manned and well-trained, and containing over 3,000 of Canada's finest soldiers. Camp Gagetown has had a marked effect on the economy of our province. It cost in the neighbourhood of $100 million to build. The annual payroll of servicemen and civilians is around $15 million. One example of its effect on our economy is the fact that in its central heating plant alone up to 300 tons of New Brunswick coal is burned every day in the winter time.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the economic needs and aspirations of my province as a whole. During the past two years especially great strides have been made. The program of power development in the Atlantic provinces, which is part of the policy of this present government, is of vital importance. Without electric power readily available at reasonable cost industry cannot function. The bill passed in the twenty-third parliament to lend $30 million to New Brunswick for the Beechwood hydro development was hailed in all parts of the province. The assistance which was promised, and which will be given in due course, to promote thermal power development will be of inestimable value. I need hardly say that the equalization grants paid to New Brunswick and to the other Atlantic provinces have had a most beneficial effect on our economy.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the government to give further consideration to the following measures to develop not only New Brunswick but the whole Atlantic area. First, federal capital assistance to develop our resources. Our region is rich in minerals and forests but without federal aid we cannot develop them to the advantage of our area and the rest of Canada. I was deeply interested, as I am sure all members from the maritimes were interested, in the particular clause from the speech from the throne which read as follows:

> My government will continue in its economic policies to lay emphasis upon national development. My ministers believe that by the wise use of the resources with which nature has endowed this country, Canadians can achieve a continually rising standard of living. My government will therefore foster and encourage the proper development and use of these resources and the growth of efficient industry based upon them. Many projects for national development have already been put in hand; you will be asked to vote the supply necessary to continue these projects and to initiate others.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot have national development on its full scale unless every part of our nation is developed. There can be no second-class Canadians and there can be no second-class areas of Canada. I would urge our government to look towards the east. We in the maritimes, now as never before, require assistance on a grand scale to bring ourselves out of the financial doldrums in which we have found ourselves for nearly a century.

Our second request of the government is for a capital projects program which would provide federal assistance for provincial projects to enlarge the basic economy of our area. The Chignecto canal and the Prince Edward Island causeway are examples. We are proud, as all Canadians should be, of the magnificent St. Lawrence seaway, but one of the effects of the seaway could be to injure the great Atlantic all-year ports of Halifax and Saint John. We in the maritimes also contributed to the building of the seaway. I would ask the government, through its appropriate minister, to press with vigour the investigation which is being conducted with regard to the Chignecto canal. We in the Atlantic provinces may again have to look to the sea for the shipment of the products of our region. The Chignecto canal should be of inestimable value from a transportation point of view.

Hon. members may remenber the former member for Westmorland making a very humorous suggestion—I think it was during the course of the twenty-third parliament—to the effect that both the canal project and the causeway project should be carried out at the same time by digging out the Chignecto canal and dumping the material into the strait to form the causeway. Unfortunately, the idea would not work.

Third, we would ask for a program of industrial decentralization. We note that as time goes on more and more industries are being concentrated in the central part of Canada, especially defence industries and crown corporations. We can well remember that during world war II very few defence industries were established in the maritime provinces. The minister of the Liberal government at that time made a statement in defence of this policy when he said: "After all, what would we do with them when the war is over?" In this day of nuclear warfare, dispersion is one of the basic principles of defence. We have the electric power and we can obtain more to turn the wheels of industry. We have the manpower—and it is good manpower—to staff the factories. All we need is a policy of decentralization which will locate those industries in the Atlantic region. I would ask our government to keep that in mind at all times.

Fourth, I would urge the government to implement a transportation policy which will provide the opportunity for our products to be carried to and sold in the markets of Canada at competitive prices. The recent increase in the freight rates of from 17 to 21 per cent was a crippling blow to us. There is an application pending for further increases which, if granted, could be the straw that could break the proverbial camel's back in our area. It is the long haul shippers of the Atlantic provinces who are hardest hit by the freight rate increase. With each increase it becomes harder for the Atlantic provinces to compete successfully in central Canadian markets. Each increase raises the price to both Atlantic region manufacturers and consumers of the goods and raw materials they import. A special committee of government is now studying this problem and legislation is to be brought down at this session. I hope that the deliberations and the legislation will provide a solution, but no half way measures will serve here. Legislation will not be of help unless there is a formula to protect us from the ravages of future freight rate increases.

One of the most forward steps taken in the Atlantic area in the last few years to raise the standard of living in our region has been the creation of the Atlantic provinces economic council, usually referred to as APEC.

APEC was formed in September of 1954. Its whole purpose was the improvement of the economic status of the area. It cuts across all lines. It embodies all people in all walks of life. The only requirement of those who wish to belong to this organization is that they must want to really contribute to the growth of the Atlantic region. Some of the projects which they have successfully sponsored have been exhibitions of maritime products, area trade fairs and the opening of the Atlantic provinces office in London, England.

APEC is attempting to attract the interest of industry and trade bodies to the possibility of establishing in the Atlantic area branches, outlets and purchasing centres. Its main function at the moment is as a fact-finding organization and then to stimulate the people of the area into economic action on the basis of the facts that it makes available. A former president of APEC expresses it this way:

> APEC's basic interest lies in a man with an idea, a government with a policy and an organization with a plan, all designed to produce economic betterment for the Atlantic region and for Canada as a nation.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, finally to discuss for a few moments an item in connection with our basic resource, namely our forests. New Brunswick, or most of its area, is covered with spruce and fir. I believe as an individual that we are not utilizing to its fullest extent the potential that is there. We know from experience what can happen when a resource is depleted through unwise use and exploitation. I had the opportunity recently of reading the brief presented by the Canadian lumbermen's association to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton). This body presented a number of extremely valuable recommendations, especially concerning research and I would urge the minister to have his officials thoroughly consider the recommendations of this association. While their proposals must of necessity be viewed from a national basis yet, as I said, because the forests of our province are its greatest asset, those proposals vitally affect us in New Brunswick.

I have covered those points in connection with my constituency and my province which I wished to bring before the house at this time and in so doing have tried to emphasize the needs of the people whom I represent. May I sum up by saying that we believe—those of us who live in the Atlantic community—that we are entitled to the benefits of opportunity and security, which shall be no more, but shall certainly be no less, than all Canadians have the right to enjoy. I believe that this government, which has proven in fewer than two years to be one of the ablest administrations since confederation, will do everything in its power to see that this objective is attained.

Mr. Rodolphe Leduc (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I followed closely and with great interest the speeches of the different members who spoke on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and I noticed that all of them have commended you for the impartial manner in which you preside over the debates of the house.

Mr. Speaker, not only do I offer you my most sincere congratulations, but I wish that the government, and particularly the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), would implement the election promise that was made to the people of Canada, that of appointing a permanent Speaker. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a speech that the present Prime Minister made in Carman, Manitoba, on May 15, 1957, as reported in a Canadian press report in the Ottawa Journal:

(Text):

> Mr. Diefenbaker's proposal on parliamentary change contained two points not previously stated in his campaign to date:
>
> First, appointment of a permanent Speaker of the House of Commons in the British tradition, to remove him from "partisan politics".
>
> His proposals on parliamentary changes were made here as he renewed his criticism of government actions during last year's bitter commons pipe line debate.
> He said the government had made the Speaker a "party pawn" during the debate.
>
> In the past the speakership had alternated in each parliament between English and French-speaking members.
> "I believe that to preserve parliament both races would agree to putting the Speaker above party politics."

I fully agree with this statement, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that during this session, after the legislation is introduced to deal first of all with the unemployment situation, the government will bring in legislation to appoint Your Honour as permanent speaker.

I wish also to extend my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker and the chairman of the committee of the whole house. In the past they have performed their duties admirably.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to offer my congratulations to the movers of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Mr. Jorgenson and Mr. Fortin). They have both performed admirably the task they had been entrusted with. I also wish to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) for his wonderful speech.

Mr. Speaker, I said a while ago that, in my opinion, the two most important problems which are confronting the country at present are unemployment and inflation.

I listened very carefully to the speech of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) and I noticed that he had been rather unfair in his remarks. He charged the opposition with offering mere criticisms without submitting any constructive suggestion to alleviate this serious problem. I take exception to the words of the minister, and I would like to quote to this house what he said on January 22, 1959, as recorded on page 188 of Hansard. Here is what he said:

> If we had from the members of the opposition the same co-operation and constructive and reasonable suggestions as we get from the provinces and the municipalities and organizations and individuals across this country who are endeavouring to co-operate with us to overcome and alleviate the situation, we would put thousands of people to work. But we are not getting that co-operation from the opposition. All we are getting is destructive criticism.

Well, Mr. Speaker, last year I made in this house some constructive and practical suggestions to solve the unemployment problem in my constituency. For the information of the minister and of other members let me read what I said in my speech of May 22, and I quote page 387 of Hansard:

> The speech from the throne announces a vast program of public works throughout the country to help the unemployed. In studying it carefully, I find that few of them will be carried out in my riding. The problem will not be solved until there is an agreement between the federal, provincial and municipal governments for the undertaking of realistic and useful works to create employment.

I would point out to the minister and to this house that I did not mention only winter works. I mentioned works that could be carried out any time in co-operation with the municipal and provincial governments. I said:

> Well, I am going to suggest works of federal responsibility which could be carried out in the riding of Gatineau. Public wharves could be built on some lakes and rivers. In the Gatineau district the tourist industry ranks second in importance in the constituency. Thousands of tourists come there each year to spend their vacation, either to rest and admire the natural beauty of our lakes, forests and mountains, or for fishing and hunting. Vacationing attracts thousands of tourists, especially American tourists because part of the constituency is located in the area of the national capital, about 60 miles from the border of the most populous state of the United States, the state of New York. Those tourists complain that there are no public wharves on many lakes, which causes considerable difficulties. The government should start the construction of four wharves for which plans and estimates have been prepared by the Department of Public Works, that is: one on lake St. Marie, one at Maniwaki, one at Val des Bois, and one at Notre Dame de la Salette.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that since then I received an answer from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) and that those four wharves have been refused.

The development of Gatineau park, the only national park in the province of Quebec, might be immediately carried out, which would give employment to hundreds of workless people. Incidentally, I would ask my colleagues in this house, and particularly hon. members from the province of Quebec, to visit Gatineau national park which is unique in the province.

As a matter of fact, it is the only national park in the province of Quebec.

The public park and beach which last year were given to the Federal District Commission by the town of Aylmer might also be developed right away and jobs be created for a great number of unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, I was told by the Federal District Commission that they had not enough money to develop that park. I hope that the government will make available to the new National Capital Commission the money required to develop that park in the beautiful city of Aylmer. I also said:

A vast program of public works to be pursued jointly with the provincial and municipal governments might also be launched.

As I said, the winter work program is not enough, and I submit the government does not make a sufficient contribution to the cost of these municipal projects.

There are roads to build and to improve, bridges to span and protecting walls to erect in order to prevent erosion . . . bridges—

Talking about bridges, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the bridge connecting Hull and Ottawa. It is the first time I have dealt with that subject on the floor of the house. It is an interprovincial bridge. The construction of that bridge does not concern only the federal government but also the provinces of Ontario and Quebec as well as the cities of Ottawa and Hull. I have read in the press that the premier of the province of Quebec had stated that if the federal government wanted a new bridge between Hull and Ottawa it had but to build it at its own expense.

Mr. Speaker, here is my personal view on that matter, and I leave it with the government. In my opinion, the Quebec government is responsible for part of cost of building that bridge and it should pay its share. If it refuses, this government does not have to pay the share of that province, since the bridge connecting Hull and Ottawa serves not only the city of Hull but also the Pontiac, Gatineau and Labelle ridings, as well as the south shore of the Ottawa river, while the people from Abitibi and north-western Quebec have to use it to get to the federal capital.

The province of Quebec has a responsibility and it should pay its own share, the same as it did for the Calumet island bridge. If the federal government backs up on that point, what will happen of the responsibility of the province of Quebec as far as the water pollution of the Ottawa river is concerned? The province of Ontario and the city of Ottawa are ridding the Ottawa river of the sewers discharging into it. On the other hand, on the Quebec side, the sewage of Aylmer, Deschenes, Hull, Gatineau Point and Gatineau Mills flows into the Ottawa river. How is it possible to solve the problem of water pollution in the Ottawa river if the city of Ottawa is the only one to take steps along these lines? The province of Quebec is responsible for the purifying on the Quebec side of the river. There are other bridges to be built. As my hon. friend the member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) mentioned, a bridge between Deschenes and Britannia is essential. The province of Quebec must face its responsibilities and the federal government, in my opinion, unless it intends to make a gift to the province of Quebec, should limit itself to paying its own share only.

Mr. Speaker, I read in the papers over the week-end that the members of the new national capital commission had been appointed. Unfortunately, I do not know personally all those who have been appointed on that commission. However, I would like to congratulate the government for having appointed General Kennedy as chairman of that commission. General Kennedy has done a tremendous job with that commission. I have no doubt that the new members of the commission will do a wonderful job of giving to the region a development plan worthy of our national capital. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Mr. Morin, of the city of Aylmer in my constituency, for having been appointed as a representative of all the municipalities of the province of Quebec on the national capital commission.

I have a few suggestions to make, Mr. Speaker, on the development of the Gatineau park, and I would like at the same time to tell you how happy I was last summer to read in the papers that the right hon. Prime Minister had accepted the house made available to him by the federal district commission on lake Harrington. I am sure the right hon. Prime Minister has been able to rest in that lovely site in my constituency. I know also that the constituents of Gatineau have been pleased to learn through the newspapers that Princess Margaret had spent a few days rest there. Incidentally, I am privileged for not only does the right hon. Prime Minister spend his summer vacation in my constituency, but the Leader of the Opposition also has his summer residence a few miles from Chelsea. As for you, Mr. Speaker, I know you have spent happy hours in Mr. Mackenzie King's former residence.

I said that I had a few suggestions to make with regard to the development of Gatineau park. You all know that the federal district commission is now building a driveway and preparing plans for the full development of that park. It seems to me that the commission should undertake at once the biological study of all lakes in the park and destroy any harmful fish. It would be important also to set up in Gatineau park a fish-breeding station and to stock all these lakes with fish, so that the development program should be complete and that the public might enjoy all the benefits it offers.
