I met him by accident in a railway station. The train was late and he and I were the only occupants of the dingy little waiting room. Under these circumstances folks are drawn toward each other by the magnetism of mutual discomfort, and we fell to talking. He was a fine-looking fellow, tall, well built and vigorous, but an air of indescribable melancholy permeated his appearance and tinged even his talk to Jan. 8th 1886 such an extent that our conversation

He was very young, but dissipation or care had drawn lines upon pation or care had drawn lines upon his boyish face, and his dark eyes burned with a feverish light. As he approached the table I marked how approached the table I marked how ghastly pale he was and that his hand trembled as though with a chill. He took a seat and drawing a thousand dollar bill from his pocket, tossed it across the table. 'Give me that much in chips,' he said in a tremulous voice. "I think he must have played for an hour. Luck went back and forth for a while, but finally it set in against him and I raked in the last of his ivories. For a moment he sat motionless, staring, dazed-like, at the floor, then he lifted up his haggard face to mine. 'Sir,' he said, 'you have, without knowing it, done me a favor. Had I won, I would have kept on in the old way; now that I have lost, I will never gamble again.' I smiled cynically Yes, I said, 'I have heard people talk that way before.' 'You mistake me,' he went on in a voice that thrilled my very heart. 'I will not gamble again because the last card you turned was my death warrant. Listen to me. That thousand dollars I have lost was the last of fortune, home and honor. It is gone, all gone to enrich your clan. I am not blaming you: I am not complaining: I am simply stating a fact. I am to-night the worst of paupers-one The without trade, without a profession, without the ability to support the wife who is this moment confidently and trustingly awaiting my return. She knows nothing of my gradual downfall. I have dissimulated, God knows how, before her. I have not now one dollar upon the face of the earth, and I determined when I entered your door that if it came to this, if my last stake lost, I would this night terminate the failures and follies of my life. I am in earnest. Something impelled me to tell you this.

"II arose, deeply moved, and pulling open the drawer took out the thousand dollar bill. 'Here my friend,' I said,
'Take back this money and begin life
