A Foregone Conclusion.

It has caused no little surprise here that there should be some doubt existing outside of the State with regard to the "But he's my own brother."

Is that any reason why you should take his courtesies for granted, and never say "thank you?"

Is that any reason why you should not try and make an evening at home pleasant for him, instead of forcing him by your selfishness to seek his happiness somewhere else?

That afternoon her aunt Margarine, Mrs. Hoyle, came to call. She was the aunt whom we have already mentioned as being given to insincerity; she was not well off, and had a tendency to flatter people, but Priscilla was fond of her, notwithstanding, and she had never detected her in any insincerity towards herself. She was sent into the drawing-room to entertain her aunt until her mother was ready to come down, and her aunt, as usual, overwhelmed her with affectionate admiration How pretty and well you are looking, my pet,' she began; 'and, oh! what a beautiful frock you have on!'

'The little silk worms wore it before I did, aunt,' said Priscilla modestly. 'How sweet of you to say so! but they never looked so well in. it I'll be - Why, my child, you've dropped a stone out of a brooch or something -look-on the carpet there!'

'Oh!' said Priscilla carelessly, 'it was out of my mouth, not out of a brooch. I never wear jewellery. I think jewellery makes people grow so conceited, don't you, Aunt Margarine?'

'Yes, indeed, dearest; indeed, you are so right, said her aunt (who wore a cameo brooch as large as a tart upon her cloak); 'and—and surely that can't be a diamond in your lap?

'Oh, yes, it is. I met a fairy this morning in the lane, and so-' and here Priscilla proceeded to narrate her wonderful experience. 'I thought it might perhaps make papa and mamma value me a little more then they do,' she said wistfully, as she finished her story; 'but they don't take the least notice; they made me put the jewels in the fire they did, really."

'What blindness!' cried her aunt; how can people shut their eyes to such a treasure! And-and may I just have one look? What! you really don't want them? I may keep them for my very own? You precious love! Ah, I know a humble home where you would be appreciated at your proper worth. What would I not give for my poor naughty Belle and Cathie to have the advantage of seeing more of such a

> So the end of it was that Priscilla went greatest composure.

'I can't give you nice food or a pretty bedroom to sleep in, such as you have at home,' said her kind aunt. 'We are very plain people, my pet, but at least we can promise you a warm welcome!

'Oh, austie!' protested Priscilla, 'you nustn't think I mind a little hardship Why, if beds weren't hard and food not quite nicely cooked now and then, we duty, and that would be so very bad for

'Oh, what beauties!' cried her aunt in voluntarily, as she stopped to recover 'Hullo!' exclaimed Alick, pausing several sparkling geme from the floor of the cab. 'I mean, it's better to pick them up, dear, don't you think? they might get in people's way, you know. What a blessing you will be in our simple home! I want you to do all you can to instruct your cousins; don't be afraid of telling them of any faults you may happen to see.
