

Technical and Bibliographic Notes / Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

Coloured covers/
Couverture de couleur

Covers damaged/
Couverture endommagée

Covers restored and/or laminated/Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée

Cover title missing/
Le titre de couverture manque

Coloured maps/
Cartes géographiques en couleur

Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/
Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)

Coloured plates and/or illustrations/
Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur

Bound with other material/
Relié avec d'autres documents

Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/
La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distortion le long de la marge intérieure

Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/
Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.

Additional comments:/
Commentaires supplémentaires:

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/
Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

10X 14X 18X 22X 26X 30X

12X	14X	16X	18X	20X	22X	24X	26X	28X	30X	32X
-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

Coloured pages/
Pages de couleur

Pages damaged/
Pages endommagées

Pages restored and/or laminated/
Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées

Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/
Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées

Pages detached/Pages détachées

Showthrough/Transparence

Quality of print varies/
Qualité inégale de l'impression

Continuous pagination/Pagination continue

Includes index(es)/
Comprend un (des) index

Title on header taken from:/ Le titre de l'en-tête provient:

Title page of issue/
Page de titre de la livraison

Caption of issue/
Titre de départ de la livraison

Masthead/
Générique (périodiques) de la livraison

PLEASANT HOURS!

A PAPER FOR OUR YOUNG FOLK

ROCK SMITH

ENLARGED SERIES.—VOL. VII.]

TORONTO, JANUARY 22, 1887.

[No. 2.

JAPANESE SCHOOL IN THE OLDEN TIMES.

This amusing picture represents one of the old-fashioned Japanese schools—now becoming out of date. There are now throughout the empire many thousands of schools taught in a much better manner than this. There is a cat by the tail. The poor old master seems to have his hands full with his rather turbulent crowd of pupils.

MAKING HER THINGS LAST.

EVERY housekeeper knows how careful treatment keeps table linen and household furniture. Girls do not last without looking shabby, but I that impressed me most was the care creased to do so after I had visited her she stowed upon her ribbons. When in her own home. The reason why her clothes wore so long was that she took such good care of them. Her dresses were brushed and folded away carefully, and the slightest spot on them was removed as soon as it was that impressed me most was the care she stowed upon her ribbons. When making up bows she used to line the upper part of the ribbon with white paper, and this not only prevented the ribbon from becoming limp and creased but kept it clean, so that when the bow was soiled on one side she could large model of one in the Normal School Museum at Toronto, which is very interesting. In many higher class schools Western teachers are employed—among them some Canadian teachers of our own Church whose services are highly appreciated. The young Japs in the picture seem as full of mischief as any in Canada, especially the youngster who has tho-always know or remember that great care of their own little possessions will often enable them to dress nicely on very little money. A lady says: "When I was a girl there was one of my young friends who was distinguished for 'making her things last.' Her dress, hats, gloves, and ribbons were a marvel of durability. I used discovered. Her hat was put away in a box as soon as done with, the string and lace being straightened and rolled out most symmetrically each time. Her gloves were never folded together, but were pulled out straight and laid flat in a box, one upon the other, each time they were used, the tiniest hole being mended almost before it had time to show itself. But the thing turn the ribbon, and the part that had been covered came out looking new and fresh. That girl married and brought up a large family. Her husband had to fight his way, and did so bravely, and was usually successful, for he became wealthy. But his prosperity was due quite as much to his wife's care and economy in saving money as it was to his making it.

JAPANESE SCHOOL IN THE OLDEN TIMES.

Thirteen at Last.

NORA PERRY.

This is my birthday to-day, you know :
The days are so long, and the time goes so slow,
When one is waiting as I have been
A whole long year to bring thirteen.

But here I am in my teens at last ;
I feel quite old as I think of the past.
As I look way down the years and see
The little girl that once was me !

But thirteen is quite old, I'm sure,
What some people might call "mature;"
Why, all my skirts have been let down,
And I'm to have with my next new gown

A jacket-waist just like mamma's,
"rimmed with buttons and braided bars,
And I've got some splendid grown-up gloves,
With long slim wrists, that fit like loves.

Yes, thirteen is quite old--and so--
I suppose I must let my dollies go.
There's Maud and Alice, and that sweet
dear

With flaxen curls, I had last year.

It seems a shame to put them away,
But one must give up childish play
When one is almost a woman grown;
And yet and yet--my heart's like a stone,

And I feel like having a real good cry,
When I think of bidding my dolls good-bye.
Oh dear, oh dear, I've always been told Life grew so hard as one grew old !

Well, nothing, I'm sure, can be harder than this--
To give my children a farewell kiss.
Yes! they are my children, and Jack may laugh,

And all the rest may tease and chaff,

I can't, I can't, and I won't turn away
My Maud and Alice and flaxen May!
I'd rather go back and be once more
The romping girl I was before?

I'd rather have all the tucks put back
In my lengthened gowns, and the childish sacque
In place of the waist, just like mamma's
With pretty buttons and braided bars :

I'd rather--yes, even my grown-up gloves,
With the long slim wrists, that fit like loves,
I'd rather give up than turn away
From my dear old dolls... this late day.

For love is better than all the rest,
And one must be true to have the best;
So Jack may tease, and the other chaff,
I'll take my way in spite of their laugh.

But oh! it isn't so nice, I see,
To grow up big, as I thought 'twould be,
And it's very true, what I've been told,
That life grows hard as one grows old.

—Xmas Wide Awake.

AUNT DINAH'S SEARCH.

An Incident of the Charleston Earthquake.

BY SARAH LEE.

"Oh, oh, oh!" gasped little Mabel Emory, as she opened her eyes, and found her rosewood half-canopy bed bounding across the room. "What's the matter?" And she began to cry.

"It's the end of th' worl', honey. The good Lord's done come for th' judgment day," said Aunt Dinah, the old black mammy; and hastily catching the child up, she wrapped her in a shawl, and rushed out into the hall.

There they found the family gathered in terror, Mr. Emory supporting his invalid wife, while the solid walls of the house rocked from side to side.

"Papa take Mabel—Mabel's so afraid," said the child, holding out her arms to her father.

"Papa has mamma, darling. Won't you let mammy take care of you?"

"Yes, I will," said she, clasping her arms around the black neck; "but kiss Mabel once."

"God grant we may come safely out of this!" said the father, as he kissed the dear little upturned face.

"Dad'll take care of us, papa; you told me so your own self."

"Bress de chile!" said Aunt Dinah, holding her close as they groped their way through the darkness.

It was the never-to-be-forgotten night of August 31, in Charleston, the beautiful city by the sea. The confusion in the street was terrible; the shrieks of the horror-stricken people, the rumble of the upheaving earth, the thud of falling buildings, made a din that cannot be described.

"To the park, to the park!" cried a loud voice; and thither the terrified people fled.

"Aunt Dinah, come and help me a moment," said Mr. Emory, as his fainting wife slipped from his grasp.

Aunt Dinah hastily set Mabel on the ground, while she sprinkled her mistress's face from a bottle of cologne which she had in her pocket.

"Now," said Mr. Emory, "follow me, as closely as you can, to the park." And with a hasty glance behind he hurried on.

Aunt Dinah turned for her charge, but, to her dismay, no Mabel was to be seen. She rushed from one side to the other, calling, "Mabel, my lam'! honey, chile! whar is yer? Come back to you ole black mammy."

But the dull crash of the falling buildings was her only answer; and the people around, thinking she was affrighted at the scene, and not understanding her words, bade her be quiet.

Suddenly a thought struck her. Might not the child have become confused, and wandered back into the house they had just left? She hurried to the entrance, and was about darting in when a man caught her arm. "Don't you see, aunty, the house is just going to fall!"

"My chile, my chile! I se' feared she's in thar, marster," she said, wringing her hands, and trying to break away from him.

"No," he said, kindly, "there's no one in there; I've just been through."

"Move back, move back!" cried the crowd.

And with a roar and a groan the wall fell outward. A great piece of plaster came down on Aunt Dinah's head. Her bandanna turban kept it from doing fatal harm, but it stunned the old woman, and turned her sick and giddy, and that, with the fright, dazed her completely. She lost her wits, and wandered aimlessly about the streets calling:

"My lam', my little white dove! whar is yer? Come back to yer ole black mammy."

Hundreds of people heard the plaintive cry and shuddered, clasping their own darlings closer as the mournful wail sounded near and then receded in the distance.

At last her wandering steps brought her to the park, where Mr. Emory was devoured with anxiety for his child; yet he dared not leave his wife alone. But at the first sound of the familiar voice he started up from the iron settee and rushed towards her crying, "Where is Mabel, Aunt Dinah?" Then as he caught sight of the distraught face, and saw that her arms, although pressed close to her breast, were empty, he seized her by the shoulder, and cried, "What's the matter? Where's my baby? What have you done with her?"

"O marster! she's gone," sobbed the poor creature. "My chile, my little lam'! whar is yer? Come to yer ole mammy."

That was all he could gather from her. "She has lost her mind, and no wonder," he groaned. "But where is my baby, lost in this terrible city?"

"Henry," said his wife, in an agony of tears, "leave me, and go and look for her."

"Will you stay, Aunt Dinah, and take care of Miss Emily while I go and search for Mabel?" said he.

"I los' her, marster, I'll fine her;" and she broke away and wandered on.

"Shall we ever find her?" cried the poor mother.

"God grant it!" was the answer; "but we must wait for the morning."

And Mabel! where was she!

When the old woman sat the child on the ground to attend to her fainting mistress, a second tremble of the ground, faint compared to the first but plainly to be felt, swept over the earth, causing an accession of terror and a fresh rush of the multitude out to the parks and down to the Battery.

The frightened little one, left alone for the first time in life, shrank back with terror at the confusion, and in a second the crowd surged around her, and she was carried off in their midst; and when Aunt Dinah looked for her charge she was half-way down the block, a helpless atom in that cruel, crushing crowd.

But if her cries fell unheeded upon the ears about her, there was One who heard and noted the pitiful wail from those baby lips.

"Mabel's so tired! Mabel wants papa. Where's my mammy?"

It almost seemed as if an invisible shield surrounded the little one, for, except for her terror, she was untouched by harm, and when, at the crossing of the Boulevard, the crowd parted to the right and left, she was left alone on the curb. Tired though the little feet were, there seemed no place for them to rest: the shrieks, the crashes, the glare terrified her more, and she wandered on. But the One who had kept her unhurt in the terrible crush of the crowd, guided her footsteps now, and on down to the Battery, where the cool breezes of the sea blew in to moderate the heat of the city, she went.

The silken shawl had long fallen off, and the tiny figure, clad in her little white embroidered night-gown, with yellow curls streaming down her shoulders and patterning bare feet, seemed strangely unsuited to that gloomy midnight hour in the terror-stricken city.

"Oh, look! Dick, hero's an angel coming," said a rough stevedore standing on the wharf, as the blue-eyed baby came on towards him. She looked into the kindly face, and, holding out her arms, said:

"Take Mabel. Mabel's so tired."

Tenderly, as her own father could have done, he lifted her in his arms; and, with a little sigh she nestled her head on his shoulder, and closed her eyes.

"Hero, Bill," said the other, his voice choked and his eyes shining, "we can make her bed on this lumber."

With their flannel shirts they made a couch, and there the little one slept. Who can doubt that he had given his angels charge over her?

As the first beam of the morning sun shone on the water, Aunt Dinah wandered down to the Battery, still crying: "My lammie, my little lammie! whar is yer?"

That dear voice, which was the first sound that Mabel had ever learned to know, penetrated the child's sleep, and, opening her eyes wide, she called: "Here's Mabel, mammy; here's Mabel."

Quick as a flash the old woman swooped down upon her nursing, clasping her in her arms as if to make amends for having ever let her go, and sobbing and crying, "Bress de Lord, bress de Lord."

"Good-by, men," said Mabel, putting up her little mouth to kiss them as she was borne away in Aunt Dinah's arms. "I tanks 'oo fur takin' care o' Mabel!"

"Here she is, marster. Didn't I tell yer ole Dinah los' her, ole Dinah'd fine her?" said the delighted nurse as she put the child into the father's arms.

Mr. Emory held his darling closely, and covered her with kisses, while she whispered, "God did take care o' me, didn't he, papa?"

"I thank him, I thank him!" was all the father could say. What to him were the losses of houses and money when his dearest treasures were safe?

COLLECTING DIAMONDS.

IN one province of China, having great mineral wealth, the natives are said to have the following method of collecting small diamonds: The jeweler puts on his feet a pair of thick straw shoes, and walks about in the sand and shallow streams. The diamonds, for the most part, are no larger than a pin's head, but rugged in outline, pierce the straw, and there remain. The shoes are collected at the day's end, and burned; after which search is made amongst the ashes for diamonds.

Now Every Morning.

Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every morn is the world made new.
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you;
A hope for me and a hope for you.

All the past things are past and over,
The tasks are done and the tears are shed.
Yesterday's error, let yesterday cover;
Yesterday's wounds, which smarted and bled,
Are healed with the healing which night has shed.

Yesterday now is a part of forever;
Bound up in a sheaf, which God holds tight,
With glad days, and sad days, and bad days, which never Shall visit us more with their bloom and their blight,
Their fulness of sunshine or sorrowful night.

Let them go, since we cannot re-live them,
Cannot undo and cannot atone;
God in his mercy receive, forgive them!
Only the now days are our own.
To-day is ours, and to-day alone.

Here are the skies all burnished brightly,
Here is the spent earth all re-born,
Here are the tired limbs, springing lightly
To face the sun and to share with the morn
In the chasm of dew and the cool of dawn.

Every day is a fresh beginning;
Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain!
And, in spite of all sorrow, and older sinning,
And puzzles forecasted, and possible pain,
Take heart with the day, and begin again.—Susan Coolidge.

POOR MEG.

BY L. L. B.

Meg was the child of a rag-picker, who lived in a miserable hut in a dark alley of the great city.

She had never known what it was to be loved, for her poor, heart-broken mother died when she was a wee baby, and her drunken father was very unkind to her. Meg was very lonely, and she often wished she had a brother or a sister. Her father was gone all day, and often all night. She would sit and listen in her dark, cold room until she heard him staggering over the rickety stairs, and then she would crawl away to her bed of straw upon the floor. She tried to keep the house as well as she could, but there seemed to be nothing to keep. She would brush the rough board floor, and dust the two broken chairs, and spread up her poor hard bed, and wash the few broken dishes, and her work was done.

The poor child was often very hungry, but she was too proud to beg, and her face grew thin and paler as the days went by.

When the warm spring days came our Meg's heart grew lighter. She watched the little rays of sunshine that crept through the cracks to peep at her, and she often wondered what it could be to see a whole world of sunshine. She had been told that her mother had gone to a beautiful world where she was at rest, and Meg often longed to go to her, and wondered if she ever should.

One bright summer day Meg went to the world of sunshine. She had been sick for several days, and a kind lady found her lying alone upon her miserable bed with a scorching fever. Every day she brought her lovely flowers, and bathed her aching head, and told her about Jesus who loved and cared for her, and about the beautiful home where she would never be sick any more. She listened eagerly, and a smile came over her face as she clasped her flowers tightly in her thin, white hands, and said, "Oh I see sunshine—a lovely world of sunshine!"

Meg had no kind friends to mourn for her as she was laid away in her quiet resting-place, but her little spirit had gone to Jesus, and we may be sure he had a beautiful home prepared for her.

THE OLIVE.

THE olive tree is a native of Syria and other Asiatic countries; and, perhaps, also of the South of Europe. It is, in its wild state, only a thorny shrub; but becomes by cultivation a tree, reaching a height of from twenty to forty feet, and entirely without thorns. It lives a number of years, attaining a great age; and, on account of the quantity of fruit which it produces, an olive tree is considered a very valuable piece of property.

Its leaves are of a dull, dark green upon the upper side, but scaly and whitish-gray upon the lower one. The flowers are small and white; the fruit is sometimes round, sometimes oval, and not often larger than a pigeon's egg. It is valued principally for the oil expressed from it, which is highly prized as a dressing for various kinds of salad, and is used, though to a smaller extent, in medicine.

Olives, gathered before they are quite ripe, are well known among epicures, as a restorer of the appetite; though their taste is disagreeable at first to most persons, many become fond of them after a time, and eat them with great relish.

The wood of the olive tree is used for the finest purposes by cabinet-makers and turners; its colour is a greenish-yellow, marked with black, cloudy spots and veins. The wood of the root is especially beautiful; paper-weights and a variety of small ornamental articles are made from it.

The olive was a sacred tree among the ancient Greeks, and it is often spoken of in the Bible. It was an olive leaf that the returning dove brought to Noah as a token that the waters of the flood no more covered the earth. It was upon the Mount of Olives that our Saviour wept over Jerusalem; and there, in the Garden of Gethsemane, under the grand old olive trees, that he knelt to pray upon that dreadful night preceding his crucifixion and death for us.

An olive branch is, among all Oriental nations, the emblem of peace; and a crown of olive leaves was the highest prize of the victor in the Olympic Games. The olive tree has been cultivated in Syria, and most other Eastern lands, from very early times.

'I WANT PAPA.'

BY MATTIE DYER BRITTS.

It was late in the day, just verging into night, and in the city streets brilliant lights were already flashing out. Especially from certain glittering dens, where the light stole through coloured glass doors and windows, and inside chandeliers twinkled, silver shone, pictures hung in gilded frames, and there was light and dazzle everywhere. Except among the motley throngs who came crowding and jostling up to the bar, eager for the fiery draught which would destroy alike body and soul, it seemed a strange thing for a child to come in among that drinking, swearing crew. Yet the door opened, and a small, shrinking figure crept in, and looked about with a frightened air, as if in search of some one.

"What do you want, young 'un?" demanded the burly bar-keeper.

"I want my pa, please!" answered the child. "Ma's sick, and she wants him to come home."

"Here, Bryant, here's your kid after you!" said the bar-keeper, turning to a man who had already drank too much. "Better go with her."

"When I git ready—not afore," said the man, in a surly way.

But the child put up her hands, and pleaded pitifully: "Oh, pa, please come! Ma's sick, and there's no bread in the cupboard. Don't drink any more to-night, pa; but please come home."

"Bryant, go along, and be a man for once," said a man next him, who had not yet lost all sense of shame. And Bryant, with a muttered oath, followed the child out of the saloon to the home which had once been a happy one.

Drunken father, sick wife, and half-clad child! When will the temperance army fight so bravely that there shall be no saloons where shrinking, shivering children ask, in tones of terror: "Where is my pa?" But thousands of homes shall be blest in fathers and husbands restored to new life.

WESLEY'S TACT.

The following anecdote of the founder of Methodism has, we believe, never been published. It reaches us from a trustworthy source, and it illustrates in a remarkable manner the mingled tact and piety of that eminent man.

Although Wesley, like the Apostles, found that his preaching did not greatly affect the mighty or the noble, still he numbered some families of good position among his followers. It was at the house of one of these that the incident here recorded took place.

Wesley had been preaching, and a daughter of a neighbouring gentleman, a girl remarkable for her beauty, had been profoundly impressed by his exhortations. After the sermon Wesley was invited to this gentleman's house to luncheon, and with himself one of his preachers was entertained. This preacher, like many of the class at that time, was a man of plain manners, and not conscious of the restraints of good society. The fair young Methodist sat beside him at the table, and he noticed that she wore a number of rings. During a pause in the meal the preacher took hold of the young lady's hand, and raising it in the air, called Wesley's attention to the sparkling jewel. "What do you think of this, sir," he said, "for a Methodist's hand?"

The girl turned crimson. For Wesley, with his known and expressed aversion of finery, the question was a peculiarly awkward one. But the aged evangelist showed a tact which Chesterfield might have envied. He looked up with a quiet, benevolent smile, and simply said: "The hand is very beautiful."

The blushing beauty had expected something far different from a reproof wrapped up with such felicity in a compliment. She had the good sense to say nothing; but when, a few hours later, she again appeared in Wesley's presence, the beautiful hand was stripped of every ornament except those which nature had given.—London Society.

HOW SNAKES MAKE THEIR TOILET.

It seems rather funny to speak of snakes as dressing and undressing; yet this they certainly do quite as fully as human beings, although it is true that their wardrobe requires fewer and less variety of articles than ours. After a long voyage, after a season's retirement or hibernation, and on various other occasions, they find themselves in need of a new dress to replace their old and soiled garment, and immediately proceed to evolve one. They are very modest creatures, never shedding their old clothes until they are fully clad in their new ones.

Prior to shining forth resplendent in fresh attire, a serpent seeks retirement, if possible. He becomes blind for a few days, refuses food, and appears to be in a melancholy state generally. Perhaps, like some human beings, he has worked too hard on his new suit.

When all is completed and ready for exhibition, he begins at the lips to extricate himself from the old dress, rubbing against whatever may be in his way to expedite the matter. The first part of the process is apt to be rather tedious; but as he progresses he works more rapidly. When he reaches the ribs they assist the operation, until finally the old skin is shed entire, turned inside out, and Mr. Snake revels in his new suit.

His eyes, covered by a perfectly transparent layer of cuticle, are bright and beautiful. It is only while this cuticle is forming over the eye that the serpent is blind.—Good Cheer.

Charity.

BY JAMES CLARENCE HARVEY.

LITTLE children, bright and cheery,
Wrapped in furs and wreathed in smiles,
Winter is not cold and dreary,
Pleasure all your time beguiles.
To the sound of bells, entrancing,
Back of horses, gayly prancing,
You can ride for miles and miles.

But, to some, the winds are calling
In a melancholy wail;
With a chill, the snow is falling
On their faces pinched and pale.
Happy hopes are dead and dying,
Frost and hunger, tears and sighing,
Come with winter's sleet and hail.

Little children, who are living
In your homes so warm and bright,
You, with others, should be giving Aid for homeless ones to night.
Give with open hands and gladness,
Cheering hearts bowed down in sadness
With a ray of heaven's light.

OUR PERIODICALS.

PER YARD—POSTAGE FREE.

The best, the cheapest, the most entertaining, the most popular.

Christian Guardian, weekly.....	$2 00
Methodist Magazine, 90pp., monthly, illustrated.....	2 00
Methodist Magazine and Guardian together.....	3 50
The Wesleyan, Halifax, weekly.....	2 00
Sunday-School Banner, 82 pp., 8vo, monthly.....	0 60
Berean Leaf Quarterly, 16 pp., 8vo.....	0 00
Quarterly Review Service. By the year, 24c. a dozen; $3 per 100; per quarter, 8c. a doz; 50c per 100.
Home and School, 8 pp., 4to, fortnightly, single copies.....	0 30
Less than 20 copies.....	0 25
Over 20 copies.....	0 22
Pleasant Hours, 8 pp., 4to, fortnightly, single copies.....	0 30
Less than 20 copies.....	0 25
Over 20 copies.....	0 22
Sunbeam, fortnightly, less than 20 copies.....	0 15
20 copies and upwards.....	0 12
Happy Days, fortnightly, less than 20 copies.....	0 15
20 copies and upwards.....	0 12
Berean Leaf, monthly, 100 copies per month.....	6 60

Address: WILLIAM BRIGGS, Methodist Book & Publishing House,
78 & 80 King St. East, Toronto.

C. W. COOPER,
3 Bleury Street,
Montreal.

S. F. HICKS,
Wesleyan Book Room,
Halifax, N. S.

home" feeling—the mother-love, the tender care, the thoughtful, every-day ministry that makes your home, dear girl, your home, dear boy, the dearest place in all the world to you!

Do you sometimes think of the love and labour that some dear ones are putting into this home life to make it what it is? Do you sometimes remember to whisper a little word of love and thankfulness and praise to the dear Father above, who gives you the blessing of a good home? And do you let mother and father know that you love and prize it?

Some day that precious home will be only a memory to you, perhaps. To-day it is a real possession, and to-day is the time for you to do all you can to make it the brightest, sweetest home in all the land.

A STRIKING SKETCH.

BY MATTIE DYER BRITTON.

STRIKES seem to be the order of the day. We scarcely take up a paper, but we read of a new strike among some band of workmen. And, alas! sometimes we know that if less of their wages went to buy beer and whiskey, there would be less need of their striking for higher ones. This is not always true—but too often it is. Striking is not a bad thing, if we take care to strike the right thing, at the right time. "Strike while the iron is hot," is a piece of advice often quoted to the young. And just now the iron is hot for the striking of the Temperance Band; and we mean to give good, ringing blows.

First, we strike against the service of old King Rum-bottle. We will serve him no longer, unless he pays us wages of health, wealth, and happiness. This he will never do—therefore we have struck for good.

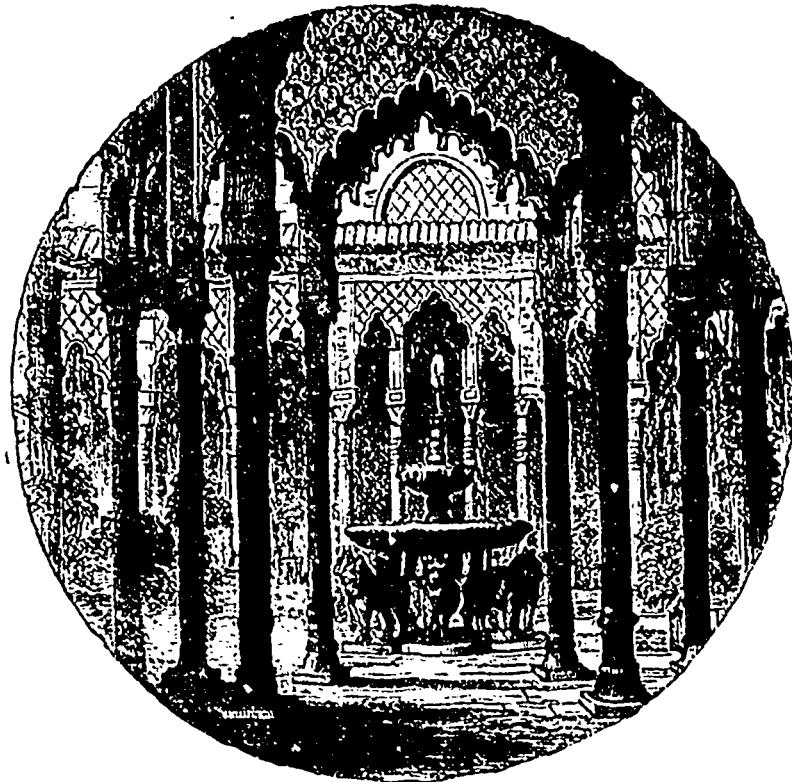

We strike for a strong No-license Law, to protect us and our homes from the saloon-keepers who rob and disturb us.

We strike for the extermination of all liquors, of any name whatever, including wine, beer, ale, and cider, believing that everybody will be better off without them.

We are on a strike against cigars and tobacco; against candies flavored with liquor; against cards and dice; against profane language; against bad books and bad company; against anything and everything which hinders the onward march of the temperance cause. And we have firmly resolved never to give up; but to—

"Strike while the iron's hot."
Put the matter through.
Stick to the temperance work,
Strong, firm, and true!

WHAT more foul common sin among us than drunkenness? Who can be ignorant, that if the importation of wine were forbid, it would both clean rid the possibility of committing that odious vice, and men might afterwards live happily and healthfully without the intoxicating liquors.—John Milton.

THE COURT OF LIONS, ALHAMBRA.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

LETTER FROM MR. CROSBY.

PORT SIMPSON, B.C.,

December 1st, 1886.

DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS:—I have sometimes thought I ought to write a word about our "Girls' Home." We have eighteen girls in the Orphanage or Home. They come from different tribes, some as far as five hundred miles distant. We have several from Tongas, in Alaska, and some from Nanaimo, and one from Queen Charlotte Island. Several belong to the village here, but most of our people prefer now to care for their own, and if the parents die, there is always some one to care for the children. A good school for boys would be a good thing, where a number could be kept and trained, and numbers could be found in the different tribes who are really needing care. But the most needy class we have are the half-caste children, who in many cases have lived with a white father for a time, and then he dies or leaves them, and they come with the mother to live like Indians; and they are the worst cared for of any. On this account we think the Home should be called an Orphanage, or Orphans' Home. About half the children have neither father nor mother left, others have mothers who could not care for them. In one or two cases they might be partly cared for by their friends if they would. We have one little boy, doing well, whose father (a white man) promised to support him, and the poor fellow has since gone to the lunatic asylum through drink.

In all, the children are doing well, and we rejoice to think that some of them are loving and serving God, and under the kind but vigilant care of Miss Knight we have great hope for their future. She is a real mother to them, and they are all kind to her, and I hope some of them may yet be teachers to others.

Some have asked, How are they supported? The Woman's Missionary Society engage to support eight girls and pay their expenses, and the rest are supported by friends whose hearts the Lord opens to do good in this way. We hope to have some help soon to improve the buildings and enlarge some. We use the old mission house and it needs roofing much. But, as in all our work, we shall go on and trust our heavenly Father to send us help. There are other things I could write about, but enough at present. We have very mild weather.

HE WOULD NOT BE TEMPTED.

A CERTAIN boy, who had been taught the nature of strong drink, and who had promised ever to shun it, was sent to a school the master of which was not a teetotaler. One day, the master, being in a friendly mood, offered the boy a glass of wine, which he declined. Wishing to see how far he could be tempted, he urged the boy to drink the wine, and finally promised him the gift of a watch if he would only drink. The boy declined, saying, "Please don't tempt me; if I keep a teetotaler I can some day buy a watch of my own; but if I drink and take your watch I may later on have to pawn it to get bread." That answer taught the schoolmaster a lesson which he never forgot.—Temperance News.

As the temperance movement presses on towards its final triumph new obstacles will be continually thrown in its way. The contest is to be one of the most earnest and determined the world has ever witnessed. All that selfishness, money, official position, talents and learning can do, will be done to save the liquor traffic from destruction.

Pleasant Hours:

A PAPER FOR OUR YOUNG FOLK.

Rev. W. H. WITHROW, D.D., Editor.

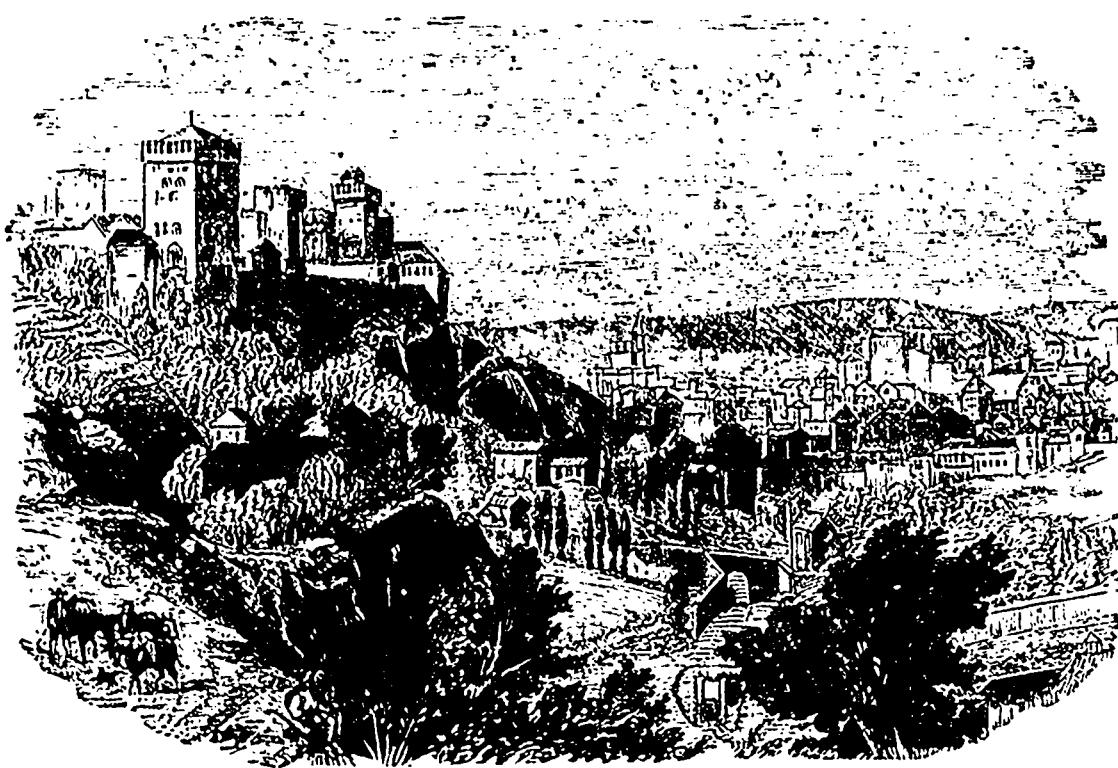

TORONTO, JANUARY 22, 1887.

$250,000
FOR MISSIONS
FOR THE YEAR 1887.

SWEET HOME.

A LARGE and beautiful home for young girls is situated in one of the loveliest spots in our country. The home is the gift of a rich man, who spared no money or pains to make the place as pleasant and home-like as possible. There are books, and flowers, and pictures, and music in the house. There is a great abundance of good food, and neat, even pretty clothing, provided for the girls. There are fine play-rooms and play-rooms, and a sweet, motherly woman at the head of all.

But, do you know, all the millions that rich man had could not buy, and never can, the one thing that is needed to make the girls love and cling to the place—that is, the "sweet

GRANADA AND THE ALHAMBRA.

What Lies Between the Stars.

BY K. J. MUNSON.

"WHAT lies between the stars, mamma?
I see a great, dark space;
If I had sprinkled them, mamma,
I wouldn't leave that place!"

"What lies between the stars, Tiny?
Why, darling, they are suns,
And round them circle worlds, Tiny,
Like ours, with following moons.

"God holds them by his power, Tiny.
Their course he understands;
And tie and space and worlds, Tiny,
He holds within his hands."

Lifting her radiant eyes, Tiny Looked sweetly in my face,
And said, "Now I know, dear mamma,
It's God who fills the space!"

GRANADA AND ITS ROYAL TOMBS.

THERE seems to be an implacable feud between hotels and railway stations all over Spain. They keep as far away from each other as possible.

The station is usually quite out of town, and the hotel very much in. But at Granada the station is far out from the city's heart in one direction, and the hotel where we were to stop still farther away in another, and it was a real journey from one to the other. It was between eleven and twelve at night when we drove thus the whole length of the unsleeping town.

On through the town we went, glancing in at open doors as we passed, until suddenly stillness broken only by the flow of murmuring waters was about us, and a soft gloom through which the high moon could hardly pierce.

We had entered the enclosure of the Alhambra, and the elms the Duke of Wellington planted were arching thickly over our heads. And our hearts beat fast, and we whispered to each other, "We are here at last!"

"Is it the Alhambra?" the one-eyed landlord answered, in good English,—

"Yes, ladies, and your rooms are ready."

If only it had been May, instead of the late November, then would all the Duke's elms have been full of the nightingales. But when we woke next morning, we were sure that no time of year could have been lovelier. The air was soft as June—a young, unexhausted air, which it was a delight to breathe.

The town of Granada reposes in the Vega, a lovely valley thirty miles in length, which the system of irrigation so skilfully arranged by the Moors has turned into a veritable Garden of Eden. Round this happy valley circle frowning mountains, whose snow-crowned tops are ten thousand feet above the sea-level—the Sierra Nevada.

You can form no idea of the Alhambra itself, until you have fairly entered it. And then you wander on and on, from court to court, from loveliness to loveliness, and from the windows of one court you look forth to the haughty mountains, and from another at busy Granada down in the valley, and from others at the hills, mingled with the caves where the gypsies burrow; and, whether you look out or in, you are so held in thrall by the unutterable charm of the place that you can scarcely breathe.

And when the night does come, indeed, and you go back, as we did, the night after our first day there, to see it all by moonlight, ah, with what words dare one attempt to paint the transcendent, ethereal vision! Delicate columns, cobweb tracerries of carving, perfect arches, and over all the high moon's enchantment!

"Do you believe in ghosts?" some one asks at my elbow.

"I see them," I whisper back, and there they are. The dark Moors group themselves under the slender pillars of the Court of the Lions—the murdered, unpeased Abencerrages moan in the hall where they were slain, and the revealing moon points out the spots where their blood stained the white marble.

It was Boabdil who shed their blood; and he was cruel enough to kill, but not brave enough to conquer, and his turn came to go mournfully out of the Alhambra, with his mother's scornful words in his ears,—"It is well that you should weep as a woman for what you could not defend as a man."

When one reads of the charm of the Alhambra by moonlight, one believes that it must be exaggerated; but when you stand there in the pale moonlight, amid ghosts and glories, you know it would be as impossible to exaggerate as to describe it.

You go back again, the second day, prepared to look more coolly; and then you perceive the exquisiteness of all the details—the delicate, infinitely varied tracerries of the walls, with their ceilings, as if a sudden, large-flaked snow-shower had been turned to stone; the slender pillars that seem fit only to serve for temples in fairyland, the wonderful, inexhaustible beauty that surrounds you everywhere. And every spot has its own legend. From the tower of La Captiva a Christian captive flung herself down to death, rather than live to be the bride of the Moorish king. And in 1492—the very year in which Columbus discovered America—conquered Boabdil surrendered his sacred sword, and departed forever from the gate of the Siete Suelos.

I must not forget the Torre de la Vela, or watch-tower, from which we used to watch the sunset, as it kindled the West with crimson glory, and warmed the snow-clad summits of the Sierra Nevada with its reflected splendour. The Court of the Lions seems to me the very loveliest spot in the whole Alhambra. The lions themselves are not much larger or more important than an ordinary saw-horse. A group of them serves to uphold the central fountain, and to give name to the court—but that court, with its groups of delicate pillars, its exquisite arches, its lacy-like carvings, and the vistas of vision it gives you, on and on into stately, waiting chambers, surpasses anything else I know for beauty.

The Alhambra is Granada, and yet if the Alhambra were not there, how much else there would be!

There is the Generalife, with its lovely tropical garden, its old pictures, its superb view, and down in the town there are churches and convents, and the grand Cathedral where Isabella, the Catholic,—the great Isabella, who sent Columbus forth to find our new world,—lies buried, with her husband, King Ferdinand, beside her. Sumptuous indeed is their tomb, with their effigies resting side by side upon the lofty marble sarcophagus. Near by is the tomb of their daughter, Queen Juana, with her handsome, worthless husband, Philip of Burgundy, and in the vault beneath, the four royal coffins may be seen.

The coffin of Philip is that very one which his crazed, fond wife kept with her everywhere during the forty-seven years of her long widowhood.

The Cathedral is the haunt of beggars who call themselves guides, and who get in your way till you are glad to give them your last penny to get rid of them. It was in this way I met a ragged son of Spain, about twelve years old, and so beautiful that I could no more forget him than I could forget the Alhambra. He was the very raggedest of the whole crew, but, oh, how fascinating he was, with the smooth oval of his dark cheeks, and with his eyes so dark, so melting, so pathetic, that they almost brought the tears to mine. He thought that he spoke English, and this was the manner of his speaking: "Antigua house, see, missia." With pennies I bribed him to learn to say, "I am a very bad little boy." He said the words slowly and solemnly, as if they were an incantation, without the most distant idea of their meaning; and I heard of him, weeks afterward, startling subsequent visitors to the Cathedral with this formula.

Granada is a thoroughly living city, and not a dead one, like Toledo or Cordova, though in place of its former population of four hundred thousand, it has only seventy-five thousand now, exclusive of the gypsies, who herd like outlaws in their holes in the hill-sides. These live in the dirt and wear rags, and lie and steal, and tell fortunes; but some of them are handsome, and if you bribe them sufficiently, they will put on clean finery and come into town and promise you luck, while they look as if they would take pleasure in cutting your throat.

Louie CHANDLER MOULTON.

The Deacon's Little Maid.

ADELINA D. T. WHITNEY.

In this new world that was waiting when
The star in the east shone down
And lighted the steps of the Magian men
To the inn in Bethlehem town,

Many a hillside sloped to the sun,
Or dipped to a shining sea,
Fair for God's presence as ever one In Judah or Galilee.

Many a soul that was tarrying there,
Till centuries should go by,
To take its place in the line of men,
To the Lord was just as nigh

As John, or Mary, or Lazarus,
Who walked with him by the way
For the blessed sign it should be to us
That he walks at our side to-day.

So lovely with love that hath no compare,
The very names grew dear;
And Marys and Johns were everywhere,
And Bethels were builded here.

Deep in the green New England hills,
In a dimple fair to see,
With orchards whose fruitage the summer fills,
Lies a little Bethany.

And looking eastward between the farms,
As over the river you go,
Stately with elms as the old with palms,
You may see sweet Jericho.

What wonder that Mary, the little maid,
Pondering Bible-lore,
Pictured, wherever her steps had strayed,
Those marvellous things of yore!—

That the darksome hollow beyond the bridge
Where the pollard willows stood,
And the steep, rough roadway up the ridge
In the gloom of the hemlock wood,

Should seem like the wayside where the thieves
Beset the traveller-man,
And left him, all wounded, upon the leaves,
For the Good Samaritan!

Or the scathed old pear tree by the brook,
That the lightning in the night,
When the farmhouse with the thunder shook,
Left ghastly and dead and white,

Should be to her fancy the fig-tree, bare,
Or yielding but bitter and worst,
That the Lord, when he found it fruitless
there,
With an awful withering cursed?

That, scanning the houses far away
On the hillsides in the sun,
She questioned, many an innocent day,
Which was the very one

Where the brother and sisters sat at meat
With their friend, when the day was low,
And Mary lovingly washed the feet
That had journeyed in mercy so?

She was Deacon Sternbold's little maid,
And her mother was kindly true;
Her primer and hymns to her sire she said,
But her heart the mother knew.

Helping the dame on Saturday morn
At the churn all suddenly she Cried, "Mother, oh, I wish I'd been born
Real Mary of Bethany!"

"Or I wish that Jesus would walk in here,
And would call me to him, and say,
With his eyes' great glory upon me, 'Dear,
Come sit at my feet all day!'"

"And doesn't he?" answered the mother sweet;
"Can you think it except he say?
To love him well is to sit at his feet—
To serve him, to bide alway."

"Now bring me the tray; and the spats, and prints,
Cool in the ice-bowl there;
Then finish the seams in your gown of chints
That to-morrow you may wear.

"And if baby wakes from his long, nice nap,
Just sing him your little song
While mother's busy; the work, mayhap, Won't need to hinder her long."

Maid Mary went at the gentle word;
Some beautiful inward smile
Dawning up to her face as if she heard
More than was spoken the while.

For the child's deep heart was beating still
With the joy of that saying sweet:
"To bide with him is to do his will,
To love him, to sit at his feet."

So while she fetched the spats and prints,
And hastened away to sow
With ready fingers the gown of chints,
She went as the angels go.

And sitting there by the cradle-side,
When a comrade lifted the latch
And eagerly signed to the pasture wide,
And whispered, "Blackberry Patch!"

Softly she shook her delicate head,
But smiled as she did it, too;
Till the other guessed she must know,
Instead,
Of some pleasanter thing to do.

And when the baby awoke at last,
Fretting with sleepy whim,
Though the seam was done, and the hour
was past,
Still she smiled: "I can wait, with him!"

When the older brothers came whooping in—

Roger, and roguish Dan—
Routing her quiet with rollicking din,
And teasing, as brothers can;

And father, vexed for a mischief played,
Full hastily called and chid—
Never a cloud on the face of the maid
The beautiful brightness hid.

For what could take her with ill surprise,
Or what could provoke a frown,
When she knew the glory of Jesus' eyes
Was over her, looking down?

So Saturday's nightfall folded the hill
And the Day of the Lord broke bright:
And the good folk gathered sedate and still,
In the meeting-house on the height.

With her tender secret in her face,
Maid Mary sat in the pew;
The Lord who was in his holy place
Had been at home with her, too.

And when the people stood up to pray,
As the custom used to be,
She whispered, "Dear Christ, like yesterday Make all the to-days for me!"

Ah, many a Mary, merry or staid,
On the hillsides there might be;
But was not the deacon's dear little maid
Real Mary of Bethany?

I CAN AND I WILL.

How many boys there are who can,
but never do, because they have no will-power, or if they have do not use it! Before undertaking to perform any task, you must carefully consider whether you can do it, and once convinced that you are able to accomplish it, then say, "I will do it," with a determination that you will never give up till it is done, and you will be successful. The difference between "Give up," and I "can't" and "can and will," is just the difference between victory and defeat in all the great conflicts of life.

Boys, adopt for your motto, "If I can I will," and victory will be yours in all life's battles. "I can and I will," nerves the arm of the world's heroes to-day, to whatever department of labour they are engaged. "I can and I will," has won all the great battles of life and of the world.

I know of a boy who was preparing to enter the junior class of the New York University. He was studying trigonometry, and I gave him three examples for his next lesson. The following day he came into my room to demonstrate his problems. Two of them he understood, but the third—a very difficult one—he had not performed. I said to him!

"Shall I help you?"

"No, sir! I can and will do it if you give me time."

I said, "I will give you all the time you wish."

The next day he came into my room to recite another lesson in the same study.

"Well, Simon, have you worked that example?"

"No, sir," he answered, "but I can and I will do it, if you will give me a little more time."

"Certainly, you shall have all the time you desire."

I always like these boys who are determined to do their own work, for they make our best scholars, and men too. The third morning you should have seen Simon enter my room. I knew he had it, for his whole face told the story of his success. Yes, he had it, notwithstanding it had cost him many hours of the severest mental labour. Not only had he solved the problem, but what was of infinitely greater importance to him, he had begun to develop mathematical powers which, under the inspiration of "I can and I will," he has continued to cultivate, until to-day he is professor of mathematics in one of our largest colleges, and one of the ablest mathematicians of his years in our country.

My young friends, let your motto ever be, "If I can I will"—N. Y.
Evangelist.

THE MINISTER AND THE INFIDEL.

SOME years ago a well-known American minister delivered a series of discourses against atheism in a town, some of the inhabitants of which were known to be infidels. A few days afterwards he took passage in a steamer ascending the Mississippi, and found on board several of the people of the town, among whom was a noted infidel.
So soon as this man discovered the minister, he commenced his blas-phemies, and when he perceived him reading at one of the tables, he proposed to his companions to go with him to the other side of the table, and listen to some stories he had to tell about religion and religious men, which he said would annoy the old preacher.

Quite a number, prompted by curiosity, gathered around him to hear his vulgar stories and anecdotes, all of which pointed against the B. I. O. and its ministers. The preacher did not raise his eyes from the book which he was reading, nor appear to be in the least troubled by the presence of the rabble. At length the infidel walked up to him, and, rudely slapping him on the shoulder, said:

"Old fellow, what do you think of these things?"

The minister calmly pointed to the land, and said:

"Do you see that beautiful landscape spread out before you?"

"Yes."

"Well, if you were to send out a dove, it would pass over that scene, and see in it all that was beautiful and lovely; but if you were to send out a buzzard over precisely the same scene, it would see in it nothing to fix its attention, unless it could find some rotten carcass that would be loath-some to all other animals. It would alight and gloat upon that with exquisite pleasure."

The infidel walked off in confusion, and went by the name of "the buzzard," during the remainder of the passage.

KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE.

This order was organized by King Arthur. He was the eleventh king of England after the departure of the Romans, and was crowned in Paris about the year 516. After he had expelled the Saxons from England, conquered Norway, Scotland, and the greater part of France, he returned home, and lived in such splendour that princes and knights from all parts visited his court. He organized a brotherhood of knights, numbering 24, of whom he was chief. To avoid any disputes about the most honourable place he had a round table made.
Encircling that table the knights sat,
and from this the order was named Knights of the Round Table. Their place of meeting was in the castle of Winchester.

To become members of this order persons were required to give proof of their valour and their skill in the use of arms. Whether on horse or on foot, they were always to be well armed.

Some of their principles, at least,
given in an old account of them, were good, and worthy of study and observance. "They were to protect and defend widows, maidens and children; relieve the distressed; maintain the Christian faith; contribute to the Church; to protect pilgrims; advance honour and suppress vice. To bury soldiers that wanted sepulchres, and administer to the cure of wounded soldiers hurt in the service of their country; to record all noble enterprises that the fame thereof may ever live to their honour and the renown of the noble order."

Another Year.

You are larger now than a year ago,
And the stories and lessons they too must grow,
And come to your minds with a fresh, new look
On the unlearned page of this old, old book.

But have you, my dears, learned every thing
The brave old year in its arms could bring?
O all the lessons the school-books brought,
Perhaps—but the other ones? Have you thought.

That never a blossom looks up but tells
Some story of how its sweet heart swells
With a grateful love to him who made
Its beauty of sunshine and rain and shade;

That never a butterfly sips, or a bee
The nectar too little for us to see,
But out of the picture a lesson goes
Of him who made clover and bee and rose;

That never a ripened apple falls,
Nor a grape-vine purples on dull old walls,
Not a nut comes rustling through the leaves,
Nor a wain goes laden with harvest sheaves—

But in each and all bright eyes may find
How wise and changeless and heavenly kind
Is he who fashions the endless store Which blesses the new year more and more?

And not alone while the warm skies glow
Are written the lessons for us to know,
But the snow and the ice have a truthful word

Of him whom we worship and call the Lord.

They hide in the roots of the honey flowers
And the trees whose fruits fall thick as flowers,
And in all the earth and air and sea
There are stories and lessons for you and me.

—Christian Leader.

BARTON'S HYMN.

"Come, Barton, up with you! We must start the sheep early for the lower farm this morning. There isn't hay enough on that scaffold to half fodder them again."

The loud tones of Farmer Prescott's voice rang through the long, narrow passage of the stair-way as through a trumpet. They woke his chore-boy, Barton Viles, from a sound sleep, and though it cost an effort to leave his warm quarters, Barton did not wait for a second summons, but hastily commenced to dress.

A frosty morning it was, yet so early in the day a lighted tallow-dip was necessary to discern objects in his bare little chamber, sparkling with frost.

On the stand, in the yellow rays of light that fell across it, there lay open a little "daily food." Barton glanced for the day's verse as he fastened buttons and buckles with chilled fingers.
"The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

"And that peace is mine," thought Barton, with a glad thrill. "How I wish Mr. Prescott and everybody in all the world would know how precious Christ is as a Saviour, and love him as I do!"

"God is able to bless the weakest effort of his weakest disciple, and cause it to win souls to himself." A puff of wind through the unplastered laths set the leaves of the little book stirring, till they rustled wide open at these words. Barton read them thoughtfully, and then hurried down the dark stairway, silently praying that God would be his guide through the day and bless his efforts to honour him.

Abel Prescott was rich in worldly possessions, but poor, O so poor in all that concerned his soul! He was careful to keep his barns and houses and crops fully insured, but for his poor soul, that must spend eternity somewhere, he bitterly resented any advice or warning offered that he insure it for eternal life.

Barton had lately learned to love his Saviour, and he longed and was earnestly praying that his master, Abel Prescott, might also love Christ, and know of the peaceful happiness that made his own heart so light that he sung over his work from dawn till night.

The lower farm lay two miles farther down the river. When Farmer Prescott's flocks of sheep had eaten the hay stored for them in the barns on the home farm, it was his custom to drive them to this other farm, where they were fed till turned to pasture in the spring.

A narrow, snowy path it was that led that day from the hills down to the lower barns. Barton led the flocks, while Mr. Prescott plodded behind, keeping laggards from straying from the path. A long distance it was between the leader and driver over the slow-moving, winding file of bleating sheep: so long that Barton little thought the hymn he sung as he led the flocks down the steep hill-sides went ringing and echoing back through the crisp air, and was sharply distinct to the listener behind:

"There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold,
But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold;
Away on the mountains wild and bare,
Away from a tender Shepherd's care.

"Lord, thou hast here thy ninety and nine;
Are they not enough for thee?
The Shepherd made answer: 'Tis of mine
Has wandered away from me;
And although the road be rough and steep,
I go to the desert to find my sheep.'

Over and again Barton sang the sweet, pleading words, thinking of the dear Saviour who had suffered so much to bring him into the fold, and wishing that all might listen to the tender Shepherd's voice.

Far behind, Mr. Prescott, with cap drawn snugly over his ears, tried to shut out the ringing words and unwelcome thoughts they had wakened, but all in vain.

He shouted hoarsely to the young boy, "Stop that bawling! whist your noise!" But sound, that frosty morning, had a choice which way to float—and float it would, backward, not ahead; and so, all unconscious that he had any listener besides the steep hillsides and snow-capped pines along the path, Barton sung on:

"But none of the ransomed ever know
How deep were the waters crossed, Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through Ere he found his sheep that was lost.
Away in the desert he heard its cry,
Helpless and sick and ready to die."

Plaintively sweet and tender the words rang back. The bleating flock ahead being led to a new fold, the rugged, winding path, the snow-covered hills about him, made the words of the song most impressive, and, through the Holy Spirit, brought the truth home to Farmer Prescott's heart.

Argument he could meet, fear he knew not, advice and warnings he resented; but the tender, pleading love of his Saviour, made plain to him through Barton's hymn, he could no longer resist, and it was not long before

All through the mountains, thunder-riven,
And up from the rocky steep,
There rose a cry to the gate of heaven,
"Rejoice! I have found my sheep."
And the angels echoed around the throne,
"Rejoice, for the Lord brings back his own."

And "his own" this time was Abel Prescott.—Truth Seekers.

speaking the truth, and each temptation of the kind resisted will help to strengthen you in truthfulness.

WHAT A VERSE CAN DO.

A LITTLE boy came to one of our city missionaries, and holding out a dirty and well-worn bit of printed paper, said, "Please, sir, father sent me to get a clean paper like that."

Taking it from his hand, the missionary unfolded it, and found it was a page containing that beautiful hymn, of which the first stanza is as follows:

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bidd'at me come to thee,
O Lamb of God, I come! I come!"

The missionary looked down with interest into the face earnestly upturned to him, and asked the little boy where he got it and why he wanted a clean one.

"We found it, sir," said he, "in sister's pocket after she died; and she used to sing it all the time when she was sick, and loved it so much that father wanted to get a clean one to put in a frame to hang it up. Won't you give us a clean one, sir?"

This little page, with a single hymn on it, had been cast upon the air like a fallen leaf, by Christian hands, humbly hoping to do some possible good. In some little mission Sunday-school, probably, this poor girl had thoughtlessly received it, afterward to find it, we hope, the gospel of her salvation. Could she, in any probability, have gone down into death sweetly singing that hymn of penitence and faith in Jesus to her latest breath, without the saving knowledge of him which the Holy Spirit alone imparts?—Selected.

JOHN AND THE FISHING EAGLE.

BY R. M. WILBUR.

It was a tall old tulip tree, that had been a hundred years or more in getting to its present height. Away in the top of it was the home of a fishing eagle, in which for years, each summer, she had reared a nest full of young egrets.

At a certain hour each day, all through the season, she spread her strong wings, and flew swiftly away to the sea, ten miles distant, to fish for her brood.

One day she set off as usual. But when she came back with a fine large fish in her talons, some men near by so frightened the bird by screams and throwing stones, that she dropped her fish, which they at once picked up and carried off.

But Master John, who was at work with the men, had a heart full of pity for the poor bird, and waited to see what she would do. For awhile she seemed discouraged. But soon, excited by the hungry cries of her babies, she spread her wings again, and was off for another trip of ten miles to the sea and back again. It took her nearly twice as long as before, and she was weary almost to exhaustion when she again reached the tree and fed her young, when weariness and fright were alike forgotten.

Timidity—A Hindoo Fable.

A SILLY mouse, thinking each thing a cat,
Fell into a helpless worriment thereof;

But, noticed by a wizard living near,
Was turned into a cat to end its fear.

No sooner was the transformation done,
Than dreadful terror of a dog began.

Now, when the wizard saw this latest thro'e,
"Here, be a dog," said he, "and end your woe."

But, though a dog, its soul had no release,
For fear some tiger might disturb its peace.

Into a tiger next the beast was made,
And still 'twas pitiful and sore afraid.

Because the huntsman might, some ill starred day,
Happen along and take its life away.

"Thou," said the wizard, turning towards his house,
"You have a mouse's heart—now be a mouse."

Tis so with men; no earthly help or dower
Can add one atom to their earthly power;

Them from their smallness nothing can arouse—
No art can make a lion from a mouse.

—New York Mercury.

LESSON NOTES.FIRST QUARTER.*STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

B.C. 1921.] LESSON V. [Jan. 30.
THE CALL OF ABRAM.

Gen. 12. 1-9. Commit to mem. vs. 1-3.
GOLDEN TEXT.

I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing.
Gen. 12. 2.

OUTLINE.

1. Abram.
2. The call.

TIME.—1921 B.C. Population widely spread. Chedorlaomer king of Chaldean Empire. No authentic history of European Commerce begun by Phenicians.
Greece in shadows. Egypt well advanced in civilization under her Pharaohs.

PLACES.—Haran. Land of Canaan. Sichem.
Plain of Moreh. Bethel. Hira.

EXPLANATIONS.—The Lord had said—How, we cannot tell, but Abram knew and obeyed. 'I'm about to a blessing'—That is, a cause of blessing to others besides thyself. All families of the earth—We know that this refers to Jesus, the world's greatest blessing, who is descended from Abram. All their substance—Their property in flocks and herds and camels. The souls that they had gotten—Rather, the slaves and dependants who belonged to them. The Lord appeared—The first recorded appearance of God to man; doubtless by the angel of his presence, the Eternal Word. This land—Canaan. He removed—Literally, he pulled up his tent-pins. That shows the kind of life they were leading.

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where, in this lesson, are we taught—

1. That God's calls to duty means blessedness?
2. That God's plan is to bless man by man?
3. That God's promises never fail?

THE LESSON CATECHISM.

1. For what purpose was Abram called?
To serve God in a strange land.
2. What was God's promise to Abram in the GOLDEN TEXT? "I will," etc.
3. From what place did God call him? From Ur of the Chaldees.
4. To what place did Abram and his family first journey at God's call? To Haran in Mesopotamia.
5. To what place did he go after his father died? To the land of Canaan.
6. In what should we try to be like Abram? In trusting God's care.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTION.—The divine call.CATECHISM QUESTION.

5. In what part of man is the image of God? In his spirit or soul, which was breathed into him by the Creator.

Genesis ii. 7. And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.

B.C. 1918.] LESSON VI. [Feb. 6.

LOT'S CHOICE.

Gen. 13. 1-13. Commit to mem. vs. 8-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness. Matt. 6. 33.

OUTLINE.

1. Abram's Offer.
2. Lot's Choice.

TIME.—1918 B.C. Doubtless an assumed date to represent the fact that it was long enough after the settlement in Canaan for the increase of possessions to make the difference described in our lesson.

PLACES.—Egypt. Bethel. Hira. Plain
of Jordan. Sodom. Gomorrah. Zoar.

EXPLANATIONS.—Into the south—The southern extremity of Canaan, called now a-days "The Negeb," is very oft mentioned in Scripture narrative. Went on his journeys—Went by marches from station to station, perhaps in the places where he had stopped as he went down. Land was not able to bear—Their flocks had greatly increased since they were first at Bethel;
the land was just recovering from drought;
besides, it was already occupied by other peoples: it could not support them. Lifted up his eyes—Simply looked from the high mountain side where they were encamped.

The garden of the Lord—Figurative language to show how rich and fertile and beautiful it looked as compared with the rough mountain of their habitation. Pitched his tent toward Sodom—Day by day drew near as his flock fed and he followed.

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

What teaching do we here find concerning—

1. The duty of devotion?
2. The wise way to settle quarrels?
3. The danger of great riches?

THE LESSON CATECHISM.

1. To what land was Abram driven by a famine? To the land of Egypt. 2. Where did he return from Egypt? To the land of Canaan. 3. What did Abram give to his sheep Lot? The choice of the land. 4.
What did this show? A noble, generous nature. 5. What choice are we bidden in the GOLDEN TEXT to make? "Seek ye," etc.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTION.—Brotherly love.CATECHISM QUESTION.

6. Is then the soul of man created to live forever? It is immortal, and will not die as the body dies.

Ecclesiastes xii. 7. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

CANADIAN METHODIST MAGAZINE
FOR 1887.

Volumes XXV. and XXVI.; 1,200 Pages;
250 Fine Engravings.

$2.00 a Year: $1.00 for Six Months.
MAGAZINE AND GUARDIAN OR WESLEYAN
together, $3.50.

W. H. WITHROW, D.D., F.R.S.C., - EDITOR.

ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES.OUR ILLUSTRATED SERIAL WILL BE*"In the Trades, The Tropics, and the Roaring Forties,"

By Lady Brassey, with 90 Exquisite Engravings. This series, which will run through most of the year, describes a recent journey of 14,000 miles in the Yacht Sunbeam.

Another important Series of Articles will be

"OUR OWN COUNTRY,"

most of which will be handsomely illustrated. It will embrace

ACROSS THE CONTINENT, by the Editor.
Being Notes of Travel from Toronto to Victoria, B.C.; Trips among the Rocky Mountains, etc.—Several Papers, with copious Illustrations.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, by the Marquis of Lorne.

Also CANADIAN LIFE AND SCENERY, by the Marquis of Lorne.

THE NORTH PACIFIC COAST AND ALASKA, by John T. Moore, Esq.

THE RIVER SAIGEANAY: ITS GRANDEUR AND ITS GLOOM, by Rev. Hugh Johnston, B.D.

INDIAN MISSION WORK ON THE PACIFIC COAST, by the Rev. W. W. Percival, Victoria, B.C.

THE DOMINION OF CANADA: ITS RESOURCES AND ITS DESTINY, by D. E. Cameron, Esq.

MISSION WORK IN THE NORTH-WEST.

THE DUTY AND DIFFICULTY OF THE FRENCH WORK.

MISSION WORK IN THE MARITIME PROVINCES, and

LIVE AND LABOUR IN THE BERMUDAS.

ANOTHER ILLUSTRATED SERIES WILL BE

AT THE ANTIPODES, by the Rev. T. Bowman Stephenson, LL.D.

THE BRITISH PRINCES IN THE SOUTHERN SEAS, by the Sons of the Prince of Wales.

SOUVENIRS OF JOHN WESLEY. With Engravings of many of the places and things with which he was intimately related.

THE LAND OF THE SKY. Sketches of Travel in the High Alps. By the Editor.

AMONG THE SPICE ISLANDS. Sketches of Life and Adventure in Java, Sumatra, etc.

LANDS OF THE BIBLE. III.MISSION LIFE AND WORK IN CHINA.*ON THE COLORADO. II.*HER MAJESTY'S TOWER.*EDINBURGH, OLD AND NEW.*DAVID LIVINGSTONE.

And numerous other articles, copiously and handsomely illustrated.

OTHER ARTICLES.

THE LESS KNOWN POETS OF METHODISM,
by the Rev. Dr. Williams.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL AS A CENTRE, by the Rev. Dr. Cartman.

SIR JOHN LAWRENCE, by the Rev. Alex. Langford, of Winnipeg.

METHODISM AND SUNDAY-SCHOOLS, by the Rev. John Philp, M.A., Montreal.

MADHOUSE LITERATURE, by Dr. Daniel Clark, Supt. of the Lunatic Asylum.

WHY AM I A METHODIST? by the Rev. Geo. R. Crooks, LL.D.

FATHER MATTHEW AND HIS WORK, by the Rev. W. McDonagh.

THE SCOTT ACT AND PROHIBITION, by the Rev. B. B. Keefer.

ST. PATRICK, THE APOSTLE OF IRELAND, by the late Thomas Guard, D.D.

DEMANDS AND DIFFICULTIES OF MODERN UNBELIEF, by Rev. W. Harrison.

MINISTERS ON WHEELS. A Bicycle Tour of Twenty Ministers through Canada. By the Rev. G. S. Barnes, Ph.D.

FAMOUS MEN AND WOMEN. Second Series.

HER MAJESTY'S MAIL.

CITY MISSION SKETCHES.

NATURAL SCIENCE PAPERS.

LIFE AMONG THE LOWLY, ETC.

THE HIGHER LIFE.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

BOOK REVIEWS.

Many other Papers of special interest and importance will be given.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER," by Mrs. F. A. Barr, author of "Jan Vedder's Wife," is a tale of great power and pathos. We will also publish another story to be hereafter announced.

Our Premium for 1887

Is the best yet offered. SIMON HOLMES, THE CARPENTER, by the Rev. Jackson Wray, author of "Neatleton Magna" and "Matthew Mellowdew." The book is of fascinating interest, and will be read with avidity by both old and young. It is a volume of 356 pages, illustrated and handsomely bound, only 35 cents, only one-fourth the regular price.

Some schools have taken ten copies to circulate instead of libraries, as being fresher and more attractive. Send for special rates.

Address—WILLIAM BRIGGS, 78 & 80 King Street East, Toronto; or, C. W. COATES, 3 Blouy Street, Montreal; Rev. S. F. Huestis, Halifax, N.S.

1887.

S.S. LESSON HELPSPeloubet's Select Notes.

Cloth, $1.25.

Peloubet's Question Books.

Three grades. Single copy 20c., or 17c.
each by the dozen.

Vincent's Lesson Commentary

Cloth, $1.25.

Vincent's Question Book.

Three grades. Single copy 20c., or 17c.
each by the dozen.

Monday Club Sermons.

Cloth, $1.25.

Book Mark Lesson Lists.

Price 50c. per hundred. If wanted with "Hour of service," etc., printed off, send for price list.

ANNUALS FOR 1886.

Adviser, Boards	$0.35
" " Cloth.....	0.70
Band of Hope	0.35
British Workman	0.50
Boys' Own Annual, Cloth.....	2.00
British Workwoman	0.50
Babyland	0.75
Children's Treasury, Boards.....	0.33
Child's Own Magazine, Boards.....	0.35
" " " Gilt edges	2.50
Chatterbox, Boards.....	1.00
" " Cloth	1.75
Children's Friend, Boards.....	0.50
" " " Cloth	0.70
" " " Gilt edges	0.90
Friendly Visitor, Boards	0.50
" " " Cloth	0.70
" " " Gilt edges	0.90
Girls' Own Annual, Cloth	2.00
" " " Gilt edges	2.50
Infants' Magazine, "	0.50
" " " Cloth	0.70
" " " Gilt edges	0.91
Little Wide Awake, Boards.....	1.25
" " " Cloth	1.75
Little Men and Women	1.50
Leisure Hour, Cloth	2.00
" " " Gilt edges	2.50
Quiver	2.25
Sunday, Boards	1.00
Sunday at Home, Cloth	2.00
" " " Gilt edges	2.50
The Prize, Boards	0.50
" " Cloth	0.70
Worthington's Annual	1.50
Wide Awake.....	1.50
Young England, Cloth	2.00

WILLIAM BRIGGS,

PUBLISHER,

78 & 80 KING ST. EAST, TORONTO.

C. W. COATES, Montreal, Que.

S. F. HUESTIS, Halifax, N.S.