Dividing the large firms into domestic majority owned and foreign majority owned groups, it was found that the former plan real increases of about 6 per cent in their capital spending for 1980 compared with about 17 per cent for foreign-owned firms. This is similar to the expectations for 1979 one year ago when foreign-owned firms provided the major impetus to over-all capital investment activity with an increase of about 10 per cent compared with about 7 per cent for domestic-owned firms.

The point I am trying to make here, and the reason I am happy to see this special committee set up, is that we find that the Foreign Investment Review Act does provide for review of investment undertaken by foreign-owned firms within Canada. It does not look at reinvestment of retained earnings by foreign-owned firms in this country. This report from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicates quite clearly that this is one of the major areas of foreign intervention into the Canadian economy, or additional foreign intrusions into the Canadian economy, especially in those areas that have the greatest potential growth for the future, certainly in energy areas. The minister has indicated that the energy area is one where we will need a great deal of investment. That is true; we are going to need a great deal of investment. I would hate to think we are going to allow that investment to come from external sources that our entire energy needs and resources are being controlled by other than Canadians.

There are many of us who believe the Foreign Investment Review Agency should be strengthened rather than weakened. We are disheartened by some of the statements that have come forward from the government with regard to this particular aspect. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) on March 3, 1978, singled out the Foreign Investment Review Agency as an example of an agency that would be subject to his sunset law, dissolving agencies which are no longer needed.

This continues on from there into September, October and November of this year, when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. de Cotret) who sits in the other place, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), made statements in public to the effect that the review now going on by the department of the Foreign Investment Review Agency has as one of its purposes to establish whether there is any need for this agency. In fact, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. de Cotret) has indicated that he supports the view that the agency probably should be wound down and eliminated.

It seems to me that when a country is as heavily dependent on foreign investment as we are, and when that foreign investment can have such a pervasive effect on our economic, social and political future, certainly the government which is responsible at the time should not be eliminating the only source of scrutiny and evaluation as to how, where and to what cause this foreign investment is being made.

I suggest that this is not just the reaction of myself and others who feel the same way in economic circles, or of others who feel the same way in the House. Certainly, this is a matter of great concern to the public. Opinion polls have shown year after year with increasing regularity that the public is very concerned about the role of foreign investment and foreign corporations in our economy and the control which they exert on our economic, social and political lives.

For example, in 1978 a Gallup poll indicated that 69 per cent of the Canadians who were surveyed were of the opinion that we had enough foreign investment in Canada and that it should be stopped. Only 23 per cent felt that we required more foreign investment. From that same poll 52 per cent of the Canadians surveyed responded in the affirmative when asked if they would be in favour of buying back Canadian industry from foreign control even if it means a reduction in the standard of living, and 34 per cent were against it.

There is this attitude among Canadians that they want more control over their economy and where it is going, that they would like to reap the benefits of industrialization in Canada for themselves and future generations. They do not want to see those benefits going back across foreign borders, whether it be the Canada-U.S. border, to Europe or to Japan.

I would like to wrap up my remarks by saying that we are very concerned about the whole question of foreign investment, about FIRA and how effective that agency has been in attracting capital, reviewing the uses to which that capital will be put and in reviewing whether foreign investment is the best way to develop certain economic areas of our life. We in the official opposition party support this committee and look forward to its establishment and the review which it will undertake. I would warn the government that if it has any intention of setting up this committee in order to find a way to eliminate any future scrutiny of foreign investment in Canada, they will run into substantial difficulty, not only from members of this House but from Canadians throughout the country.

We must look forward to developing Canada's future, particularly in the small business sector. One of the things which the minister indicated, I might add, was that there were some thoughts about removing the scrutiny or review of the takeovers of firms which have less than 100 employees, or, in other words, our small business sector. That is of great concern to me because it is the small business sector in this country which develops the innovations of the future and which is the most productive in terms of job creation within our society. I would hope that the government would not allow foreign corporations to come in and take over this most productive sector of our economy before it has a chance to prove its worth in Canada and to prove all the benefits which it could bring to our economy. What we will be losing is a screening power in our country which comes in at the most productive point in a firm's life.

I am in favour of the establishment of the committee, but I hope that we will be able to have a full and objective evaluation of this particular question and that, if the evidence is clearly there, the government will strongly support an increase in the powers of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, or an organization similar to that which will look out for the interests of Canada on the question of foreign investment.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we have been treated to rather extraordinary performances both before lunch and after lunch. First we had the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson), and then we had the spokesman for the Liberal party, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans).

The minister started his remarks with the comment that the main reason we need a review of the Foreign Investment Review Act and the Foreign Investment Review Agency is that no other country has such an agency. Apparently we are unique in the industrialized world in this regard. I might suggest to the minister that the reason that we are so unique is that no other country in the industrialized west has such a problem. There is no other country in the industrialized west that has an economy which is so dominated by foreign investment and multinational corporations as Canada. In a sense we are, at one and the same time, an industrialized country, but our economy has many of the features of the developing countries. We have the same patterns of dependence on very few resources, the exploitation of which is controlled by forces outside the country and the prices of which are controlled and set by international corporations over which we have precious little control.

To that extent, our economy is similar, not to the economies of other industrialized countries such as The Netherlands, United Kingdom, Germany, France or Japan, but of Third World countries. I would say to the Minister of State for International Trade that it may be true that no other country has a FIRA, but no other country needs a FIRA or a strengthened FIRA as much as our country.

The second point which came out of the minister's speech was that he wanted this committee to have a chance to look at the question of the workings of the Foreign Investment Review Act because there were two points of view that were being expressed. There was the point of view that there was not sufficient control of foreign investment, and there was the point of view that there was too much control of foreign investment. At no point in his speech other than obliquely did the minister indicate to this House which side of the fence he was on. At no time did the minister state the reason Canadians were so concerned—not just in 1973, but going back for years and generations—over the loss of power of our country to control its economic future and economic developments.

Not once did the Minister of State for International Trade indicate the harsh realities of having an economy that is controlled by other countries and by the multinational companies. In fact, the only messages we have had from this government have been that we should scrap the Foreign Investment Review Agency because it was preventing necessary foreign investment in Canada. For example, we had the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) while he was in England this summer saying, according to a report in the Toronto Star of September 21, 1979:

> I think to some extent FIRA has hampered much-needed foreign investment in Canada—it's caused many people to think twice before putting their money in Canada—

He told this to reporters in London after he had been talking to exporters while in that country. The story goes on to say that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the invisible parliamentarian, emerged to say that the West Germans had good cause to be concerned about FIRA and that he was concerned about it as well. Just to give hon. members an indication of how confused the senator is, there is a story which was reported in the Ottawa Citizen on Thursday, October 18, 1979, in which he indicated how concerned he was over the fact that $1.6 billion worth of high technology manufacturing businesses had been sold to foreign companies last year. He says he is concerned about that. The article goes on to say:

> The senator said the increase in takeovers makes the Conservative government's plan to investigate the operations of FIRA more urgent.
> 'We want to see where the weaknesses are and see what changes can be made.'
> The minister said it is not beyond the realm of possibility that FIRA, set up in April, 1978, by the Liberals, will be scrapped altogether.

That is consistency for you! That is the consistent view of the Tory party, each paragraph contradicting the last. There was no indication by either the Minister of Finance or that invisible parliamentarian, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret), that they had any over-all concept of the impact of foreign investment on the economy or any idea of the effect of foreign investment and the consequences of the foreign domination and ownership of resources in this country.

If we were looking for an indication that the Minister of State for International Trade appreciates the threat that patterns of investment which have been established and have existed for many years pose to our economic sovereignty, we got absolutely none. The only thing he indicated was that because of the new energy resources that are going to be exploited in the future to advance self-sufficiency, it is going to be even more necessary to rely more heavily than we have up to now on multinational companies and foreign investment of all kinds.

This is a remarkable performance by this government. It is clear that they are setting up a committee because they do not know what they are doing. Things might be different if there was an indication of policy, an indication of concern, if there was a traditional feeling about economic sovereignty or a strategy for self-sufficiency, not just in the field of energy but industrial self-sufficiency as well. Instead, the government approach is to refer a problem about which they apparently have no point of view to a parliamentary committee. If they do have a point of view, it is self-evidently the wrong one.

I should like to turn now to the Liberal party, Mr. Speaker. The performance of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre was quite remarkable. Suddenly the Liberal party has discovered, or rediscovered, or re-rediscovered or discovered for the fourth time, that the Canadian people are concerned about the economic future of their country and its domination by foreign interests. It is amazing how the Liberal party at moments of convenience, and when they are looking for a policy and looking for a leader, suddenly latch on to an issue about which they have no coherent point of view at all.

I should like to put some facts on the record. In 1973 when the Foreign Investment Review Agency was established our deficit on the services account, which is dividends and interest payments leaving the country as a result of both direct investment and portfolio investment, was $3 billion; in 1974 it was $3.74 billion; in 1975, it was $4.7 billion; in 1976, it was $5.8 billion; in 1977, it was $7.4 billion; last year it was $8.7 billion; this year, it is more than $10 billion. That was a time when we were under the Liberal government. Where were the voices of dissent in that party? Where was the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) when that was going on? He was in the government, then out of the government. I think the Canadian people are entitled to know which party was in power during the century, and certainly during the last ten years, when foreign investments reached the point of practically no return.

It is an amazing thing for the hon. member for Ottawa Centre to pretend that history started on May 22 with his election to the House of Commons and that the Liberal party rediscovered this. Remember that they discovered in 1957 Mr. Gordon's report on Canada's economic prospects. They rediscovered it in 1967 when Professor Watkins presented his report on foreign ownership; in 1970 they rediscovered it with Mr. Wahn who was then the member for St. Paul's, and in 1971 with the report known as the Gray report.

It is important to remember the harsh fact that the final version of the Foreign Investment Review Act had a fatal flaw—the fact that it relied on the word from the Gray report. The litmus test for the Foreign Investment Review Agency and the litmus test for the Foreign Investment Review Act was a very simple one—that any investment requires "significant benefit to Canada". Those are the words, Mr. Speaker—"significant benefit to Canada". It has been said before, Mr. Speaker—I have not coined the phrase—that the only industry which would not give significant benefit to Canada would be "Murder Incorporated." There is not one investment that could not be deemed to give some kind of significant benefit to Canada in terms of jobs or some short-term employment benefits.

That is not the issue, however. If the test is as woolly, as broad, as confused, as that test of "significant benefit to Canada", it is little wonder that foreign investment increased by $5.5 billion last year alone, more than double the previous year's increase of $2.1 billion. In British Columbia alone, FIRA approved nine foreign takeovers in 1976, 26 in 1977, and 39 in 1978. That is a 433 per cent increase in two years. That is the kind of sell-out of our resources, our jobs and our industries that has taken place under the Liberal party and the Liberal government of Canada.

We have some very real concerns about this motion, Mr. Speaker. The wording of the motion is so confined and restricted that we have reason to wonder just what the committee will accomplish. The committee is not inquiring into foreign investment. We have had those committees before. Since 1957 we have had enough studies to know exactly that 50 per cent of our trade with the United States takes place between parent companies and subsidiaries and that there are dozens of firms in Canada that are not allowed to compete with their parents for the export market. These facts have been documented; we do not need another study.

The approach taken by the government is very confining. The motion asks that the committee be appointed to:

—inquire into and report upon the extent to which the Foreign Investment Review Act has achieved and is achieving its purpose as described by Parliament in section 2 of the act—

I suggest that the purposes as described in section 2 of the act are inadequate. If it is confined to what in 1973 was already a very, very limited purpose, then the whole point of this review is restricted and confined.

● (1450)

I am sorry there is no minister in the House now who is in a position to answer these questions. I am sorry the minister of state could not stay to listen to my remarks or to the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, because I have specific questions on the motion. I would like some member of the government to answer these questions.

First, is the committee going to be free to deal not simply with the purposes of the act as set out in section 2, but be free to look at foreign investment and to see whether the purposes that are set out in section 2 should not be broadened and made more specific? I think we are entitled to have an answer to that question.

If it is the intention of the government to limit the review to the wording of section 2 as it is specifically set out in the act—and that is the only conclusion I can draw from this motion—then we are going to be engaged in a very confining and unsatisfying set of activities in the foreign investment review committee. I think we are entitled to an answer to that question. I do not think it is beyond the genius of this government to give us an answer this afternoon.

An hon. Member: The government is not known for its genius.

Mr. Rae: I want to point out a few other facts to indicate how serious the situation is with respect to foreign investment. I want to look at the so-called industry of the future. Let us take, for example, the electronics and computer communications industries. Last year FIRA approved the foreign takeover of over 30 companies in the computer communications service sector. With each takeover, Canadian strength in these areas is eroded because these companies traditionally are told by their U.S. parent companies to restrict their selling to the Canadian market only—it is a familiar story; it has been documented well—and to buy their equipment and other supplies plus services from head offices in the United States.

The erosion that this causes in Canadian industry shows up in two places, first of all in the unemployment figures which are dramatic in the electronics industry, and secondly in the trade deficit figures which are equally dramatic. Since 1974, 23,000 jobs in the Ontario electronics industry alone have been lost. A federal government report released last year said that Canada is running a trade deficit in the electronics trade manufacturing sector of between $1.5 billion and $2 billion a year. The writers of this report went on the warn that they believe that the telecommunications and information industries in Canada will be dominated by foreign interest or crippled by imports if nothing is done.

In the computer communications sector, the federal Department of Communications estimates that Canada will buy $300 million worth of data-processing services from the United States this year. This is equivalent to exporting 7,000 jobs. These are jobs that could be carried out in Canada if that industry were allowed to grow in Canada. Furthermore, at the rate that Canada is losing control and strength in this sector, Canada's trade deficit should rise to $1.5 billion by 1984 and 23,500 jobs will have been lost to Canadians.

It is important to note that FIRA, as it is presently constituted, is powerless to do anything about these deteriorating situations. Consider the following examples. Last summer the Bank of Montreal signed a joint venture agreement with a local subsidiary of Automatic Data Processing Ltd. of the United States, a company that rightly boasts of being the largest payroll company in North America and has 74,000 corporate customers not only through North and South America but in Europe as well.

Some people involved in Canada's data processing business, a business that happens to be roughly 80 per cent Canadian-controlled at the moment, protested this move. They wanted to know why FIRA had not reviewed this case. They were told that the work of this new joint venture was sufficiently related to the terms of reference that the subsidiary of ADP had established for itself when it first moved into Canada that there was no need to review it now.

The Canadian data processors, including one which specializes in payroll processing, argued that the Canadian data processing industry needed some protection and help for about five to ten years before it would be strong enough to compete with the likes of ADP, the American company. So they asked FIRA a very simple question. Why had not FIRA joined in the intervention case on the grounds of the negative impact it might have on Canadian companies wanting to expand in the Canadian market? But alas, they were told, "No, no, FIRA does not look at the whole Canadian market, FIRA does not look at the future of the Canadian industry, FIRA does not look at a sector, FIRA does not look at computer processing or these kinds of data services, or energy or future supplies in natural resources". They were told that FIRA looks at each individual application. This is a typical example of the perversity of the liberal mind—and I am using the word with a small "l"—that you look at the individual case and fail to look at the whole forest. That is the problem.

I think it has to be said that FIRA itself was a substitute for a policy. FIRA was not a policy. FIRA was the combination of a series of reports and studies on the problem of foreign investment, and FIRA was the Liberal party's substitute for a policy to deal with foreign investment. It has not caused foreign investment to decline. In fact, quite the reverse. We have seen that the takeover of Canadian industries has accelerated since FIRA was established. The reason is that FIRA alone is merely a negative screen on certain individual applications. This has nothing to do with the kind of industrial planning that is necessary to guarantee that we have a plan in Canada for the takeover of our own industries and resources and that we have a government that is prepared to protect critical, highly technological and high employment industries, faced as they are with competition from overseas.

We ask the government and the Liberal party, where have they been while this takeover has been taking place? The horse has gone and the government is still looking for a lock and cannot decide whether to open or close the door. The Liberal party is suddenly rediscovering the need for a new key. Suddenly, after all these years when they presided over the systematic takeover of our economy by foreign interest, the Liberal party wakes up in the person of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre and says, "Hey, something is going on here; I think it is time we did something". It may be a little late. FIRA is not enough.

I think it is apparent that just as FIRA was a substitute for a policy, so too the establishment of this committee is a substitute for a policy from a government which does not deal with the real problems of foreign investment and the dramatic effect that this is having on our economy. As I said at the beginning of my speech, we are a unique economy caught between the reality of an industrialized world which is highly competitive and another reality, namely that our economic destiny now lies beyond these frontiers.

I am frequently asked by people living in my constituency why can I not do something about interest rates, jobs, the future of our country and the training of our young people. More and more we are made aware of the fact that the reason this government cannot act is that it is paralysed not only by its adherence to its set of ideas, which were out of date even in the nineteenth century as they were being created, but by its economic impotence in relation to those powerful outside interests. I think we have to confess as members of Parliament that we do not have control over these critical decisions either. Neither do Canadians working in the so-called free market place.

If there is someone over on the other side who is taking responsibility for this motion as it is carried through the House, I would appreciate an answer to these very specific questions. If there is not, I think we are entitled to know on a Friday afternoon that there is no one in the House in a position to speak for the government who is sufficiently interested enough to stay behind.

• (1500)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be very brief, very brief indeed. This will probably be the shortest speech I shall ever give in the House of Commons. The reason why it will be short is that I believe we should approach this review with the greatest possible objectivity, as the minister suggested.

My colleague from Ottawa Centre should not take this remark as a difference between his point of view and mine. The difference between the two of us at this moment is that my hon. friend from Ottawa Centre was not there yesterday in the committee, and he had no particular reason to be, when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret) made in my view, a very important statement on the subject of FIRA. As the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) and the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) have suggested and demonstrated, the government party has, on a number of occasions in the past, recent and remote, said, or appeared to be saying—nobody can ever be too sure—that they intended to eliminate, downgrade, reduce or whatever, the importance of FIRA or its very existence. I was worried about that as well. I was the minister who introduced the first FIRA bill back in 1972 following the Gray report. Consequently I believe in the principle of screening very, very strongly.

As I was saying, some of us were worried. I cannot quote the minister because what I have in hand is not the official record, but he specifically said to the committee yesterday that he had no intention of eliminating or downgrading the importance of FIRA. That having been said, I suggest that we are now in a position to be more relaxed, to begin a de novo exercise. The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood does not appear to agree with me. I will not disagree totally with him. I think we should be cautious, even suspicious, but the exercise should be marked by a visible and real effort at objectivity. Personally, I will be very keen to study the agency, its strong and weak points, its record of accomplishments, and the ways and means to improve it.

I intended to say and I can demonstrate it by the first draft of the notes I was going to use, that I was concerned also with the point raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. Why? Simply because, as he said, a screening of foreign investments is but one of the many instruments a government has in hand to channel, limit, orient, influence, restrain foreign investments in a country. It is only one of many instruments. There are many others, some pretty dramatic, some less dramatic.

The key sector for example, where foreign investment is either not allowed or is restricted to a percentage of ownership, is one approach which has been used in the past in Canada on a good number of occasions. There are others, for example, where the government uses incentives in order to channel foreign investments toward a certain sector of industry or services, a method particularly useful in the development of an industrial strategy. One aspect of it is known as "the world mandate system". Here a government says it will allow a foreign investor in, might even support him with incentives, but he will have to produce in Canada a product that he will not produce elsewhere, and he will produce it in Canada for world markets. It says to the foreign investor: You will use your multinational position in order to enhance Canadian exports. That has been done a number of times in the past in Canada.

In the electronics industry, for example, the grants the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce gave to IBM and Control Data in the early seventies, and the sort of thing the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce talked about yesterday in the committee on finance and trade when dealing with a question on the kind of support being discussed with Chrysler Corporation of Canada, are that sort of approach. There are many others. The creation of Crown corporations is another approach to make foreign investment not necessary in a number of instances. Our friends on the other side tend to forget that in the rather theological approach they have to privatization. I am also concerned about that.

A question I share with the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood is: to what extent will the committee be given the capacity, the right and the possibility of looking at foreign investment from a slightly wider point of view than the operations or workings of FIRA. That is a question for the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson)—and we must assume he has good reason for not being here this afternoon—to answer before the committee is struck in the House of Commons or when it holds its first meeting.

That is all I have to say today, Mr. Speaker. I expect the committee will come out in the usual balanced way in which parliamentarians come out of these exercises, that is, by seeing the good points and the weak points, by recognizing that there are advantages and disadvantages to foreign ownership in Canada, realizing that divisions are more on degrees and ways and means than on fundamental philosophical differences. Personally, I hope that to the largest possible extent the work of the committee on FIRA will be a constructive one, that it will be a uniting exercise and not a dividing one.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin), I wish to make only a few short comments. I feel it is very important that some minister of the Crown respond to the questions put by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae). He asked some very important questions about the scope of the committee that will be looking at the question of FIRA and also some of the other questions to be dealt with regarding the purpose of the Foreign Investment Review Act.

The point I want to make is that we, as a Parliament and a government, should not be looking at the Foreign Investment Review Act in isolation. In a debate like this, we should spend a couple of minutes looking at other aspects of Canadian independence and the importance of Canada having control over its destiny, having some leadership and developing its destiny as a country on its own. I want to give one example of that, the whole area of self-sufficiency in agriculture.

Hon. members have heard me speak on this before, but I cannot help repeating some of my concerns as they pertain to the increasing lack of Canadian independence in that area and the lack of self-sufficiency in the production of food. One can mention a number of things, but aside from grain, for almost every other foodstuff in this country we are dependent to a certain extent, sometimes greater and sometimes lesser, on foreign farmers. It is that way because we have not had a government recently that has been determined to ensure that we are independent, that we grow our own food, and that we process it in this country for our people. I maintain if we do not do something about this soon, there will be a real crisis in this country. For example, the Science Council recently stated that even with grain before the year 2000 we will not be able to feed ourselves. That will be the case if the government does not change its policies. I believe that is very important.

A country that is so large, with so many acres of land, so few people and so many resources not being able to feed itself is a real crime. It is a commentary on the lack of foresight, vision and leadership by governments of this country over the past three or four decades.

When we discuss FIRA and the Foreign Investment Review Act, we must remember that through FIRA we will not make this country independent economically. We need many other policies to complement the Foreign Investment Review Act. One has to make sure that in every important sector we start becoming self-sufficient, that we start doing our own thing and processing our own goods and materials.

The other day in the House I referred to a recent study by the Department of Agriculture for the United Nations. It shows that starting about 1974 Canada's potential to produce more food began to diminish in very real terms. It showed that in the 1960s, for example, over a million hectares of land in the province of Ontario went out of production of food, most of it plowed under or paved over for urban sprawl, housing development, industrial development, freeways—I think of the Niagara Peninsula as one example where you have highways and hydro grid lines going through, taking out of production a good chunk of prime farmland which should have been saved for the use of agriculture. It is not just the highway.

When one puts a highway through a productive area there are service stations and restaurants built around it, there will be suburbs going up around that highway, industrial concerns and, before one knows it, in the province of Ontario in the sixties over one million hectares of land went out of production and went out of production for good. Once it is paved over, it cannot be rehabilitated, of course. That is a tremendously sad commentary on the lack of leadership in this country. And I know that land use is primarily under the authority of the provinces. But we have seen many, many federal government projects which have been located on prime farm land. I remember the argument over Mirabel a few years ago. I am sure hon. members will recall the farmers who came to this House from around Mirabel, and they demonstrated in front of the Parliament Buildings. They were asking that the Mirabel airport be located a few miles over where the land was not prime agricultural land. Instead of that, we saw the airport located on land which could be used to produce food.

That is but just one example. I think of another near Toronto, at Pickering. We saw the possibility—almost a decision—of locating an airport on good farmland. Thank goodness there was enough protest to prevent that airport going ahead at Pickering, on good agricultural land.

I notice from the same study that in 1976 some 3.6 per cent of the prime agricultural land in Ontario went out of production. I ask: how long can we afford to let that happen in our country? I think we are rapidly approaching the stage, not only in this country but around the world, at which we will have to face the fact that we will be called upon to feed the population of the world. It is the question of the availability of food. If we have to import food into a country as wealthy and abundant as ours, then we are making an immense mistake and we are doing irreparable harm to countries which are much poorer than we are and which have many fewer acres of land and much larger populations. These are countries we should be helping to feed, as well as assisting them to become self-sufficient in the production of food.

I could not let the opportunity of this debate go by without saying these few words, Mr. Speaker. There are other aspects of Canadian economic independence which I think are very important. It is not just a question of food, it is the fact that when we are importing so much we are harming the balance of payments. We are also creating a negative impact on the value of the Canadian dollar as well as taking jobs from Canadians—not just farm jobs but thousands of jobs in Ontario, British Columbia and the other provinces because of our less productive capacity in the field of agriculture. There are the jobs on the farms, the processing of the food, the manufacturing and packaging of the food, and so on. It is therefore an over-all net loss to this country which we cannot afford.

Just the other day in committee the person who wanted to be the member for Ottawa Centre and who now sits in the Senate, Senator Robert de Cotret, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, was talking about chicken imports into Canada. Again, that difficulty arises because of the uncoordinated policies followed in this country. In brief, Mr. Speaker, historically only 1 per cent of our chicken consumption came in from abroad. Because of the negotiations carried on by the government across the way, after 1981, 6.3 per cent of our chickens will come in from abroad. Some studies have shown that the gross economic loss to Canada under this program will amount to more than $100 million. I think that is pathetic. If you look at the figures for the Department of Agriculture you will find that over 100 million pounds of turkey and chicken have been sitting in storage. Despite that quantity, which represents five pounds for each man, woman and child in Canada, the government across the way just last week issued supplementary import permits to import more chicken, and two weeks ago it issued supplementary import permits to import over a million pounds of turkey into this country from the United States.

Mr. Ouellet: Unbelievable!

Mr. Nystrom: The hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) says it is unbelievable. When we discuss the Foreign Investment Review Act—an act which I believe has not been tough enough or strong enough—we must remember that we cannot patriate the economy and develop a Canada which is strong and economically viable from coast to coast unless we do many other things besides just making FIRA stronger than it is today.

One of the areas in which we need to act is the area of food self-sufficiency, whether you go on land use policy, whether you go sector by sector, whether it is chickens or turkey, or whether you take beef. Roughly 10 per cent of the beef we consume in Canada is imported from the United States, from Argentina, or Australia, though we have the acreages in western Canada where we could produce a lot more beef than we could possibly consume in this country.

The price of vegetables went up this month by 5½ per cent. Why did this happen? It is because we are now relying more and more on foreign imports. When the price of vegetables goes up in the United States, that increase is reflected here in Canada. There are many vegetables we could be producing here. Many of them we used to produce here in Canada. A former Liberal government got rid of a program which was established to subsidize the storage of vegetables. We used to produce vegetables, store them, and use them in the winter months. But they got rid of that program and thus we are again placed in the position of having to import more foodstuffs from abroad.

So, it is not just a question of land use, of turkeys or chickens, or beef or vegetables. We import 45 million pounds of cheese every year, mostly from Europe. Nor is it just a question that we do not have appropriate agricultural policies that look after the farmland. The quality of the soil is deteriorating all the time, acording to the Rennie report in Saskatchewan. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) agrees. I think any member who comes from a rural area knows these facts.

These are just some of the questions which will face this country in the 1980s and that are going to face the world in the 1980s. The availability of food will be the question, and I do not think there is any question more important than the capacity of mankind to produce food and distribute it to all parts of this country and to all parts of the world. I take my seat with the plea that when we consider FIRA in the committee we go beyond that as a solution for Canadian economic independence, and that in every sector of this country we devise policies that will make Canada much more self-sufficient and make sure that we can do our own thing, with our own people, and make a contribution to the world community at large.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, after hearing the speeches of my two hon. friends, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), I realize no one has anything to fear from FIRA, especially foreign groups trying to come in to buy into the Canadian economy. To my mind that is a disaster.

I rise to speak—I had not intended to do so, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Then sit down!

Mr. Waddell: No, I won't do that. I am telling hon. members that I am speaking on it because it is an important matter. As a matter of fact, I think it is going to be one of the big issues of the 1980s. It will be an issue that our party especially will emphasize again and again. I think it will be an issue to which Canadians will respond. So my friends across the way need not scream that I should sit down. I have every right to speak on it.

• (1520)

As I was saying, what causes me to rise and speak is something contained in the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, that is, that there is no one in the government across the House this afternoon who is prepared to answer his questions, and they are good questions about FIRA. As a matter of fact the minister responsible for FIRA is Senator de Cotret, I believe, someone whom we cannot even question in the regular way in the House. We cannot even approach him and put these questions to him. I have said this before in the House and I will say it again. It is an obscenity to have the Senate to begin with, and it is unfair and unworkable to have a minister in the Senate whom we cannot question, who is responsible for one of the most important areas of government, namely, FIRA, and who apparently calls the economic tune to the melody of this government. Frankly, if I were sitting on the opposite side of the House, I would be a little concerned about that too.

The other matter that I wish to emphasize—I think this was mentioned in the remarks of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville when he spoke about the kind of industry that will exist in the 1980s and when he spoke about the food industry—is that, to me, one of the very important industries—and this again was mentioned by my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood—is the communications industry and the high technology industry. It causes this party a great deal of concern regarding what will happen in the technological revolution. We are concerned about the high unemployment which will result from the development of some of these industries. So we say now that these industries have to be controlled by Canadians and we must get moving in that area. This again is an area where FIRA must be active. This is where we need more information and where we need the government to respond. We should not just have a House with no one in it who can respond to the legitimate questions that my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, posed today. Instead, we have other ministers who are busy with other things. But we want answers about FIRA.

Earlier on in the year I wrote a letter to Senator de Cotret. As many hon. members know, we get a pile of papers across our desks every day and usually most of that paper, while very interesting, such as addresses by the ministers opposite as they go around the country making those deep and personally written addresses, is not as important as some of the FIRA reports which have come across my desk.

I noted one where a foreign oil company was taking over a small outfit in Orillia, I believe. I wrote to Senator de Cotret about this and I asked him whether he could tell me what are the reasons behind FIRA's decision, what is the information he has on it, because I wanted to know why FIRA took that decision. I received a letter from him yesterday saying he was sorry but he could not answer those questions; he is not allowed to give me that information. I thought that was rather ironic. We just debated, in a really excellent debate last night in the House, the first freedom of information act in the British parliamentary system. I see the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) looking this way. We are all proud of that debate and proud of that act. We are going to improve it in committee, but we are glad there is an act introduced. I notice the President of the Privy Council does not have his rose and his dump truck this afternoon.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They are in my office.

Mr. Waddell: No doubt they are being recirculated as Christmas presents. The Christmas present we want today is information about FIRA. We want the government to respond to the legitimate questions raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. My point in touching on freedom of information is that here we have an act which does not allow the minister to respond. As a matter of fact the minister said to me in his letter that he cannot respond to my questions, he cannot give me the information behind this takeover, he cannot tell me why FIRA agreed to this takeover of a Canadian company by an American company. But I will tell you what he has done. He wrote to the American oil company and asked them if they would allow the information to go out. The American oil company said, "No, do not give that information to the member of Parliament." So there is an example of what we were talking about last night on freedom of information. There is an example of something that our new act will not cover, that within the FIRA act is still not allowed. We still cannot get that information. So not only do we have a body that is not restricting these takeovers, not only do we not have a general policy, as the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood pointed out, we cannot even get information about one case.

I see the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) in the House. I once called him in a speech, and now I would retract it, an obscure law professor from Ontario who has risen to greater things. He is a member who respects freedom of information, and I give him his dues in that department.

Mrs. Mitchell: He does not give out all the documents.

Mr. Waddell: That is right, as the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) says, he does not give out all the documents, but once when he made a couple of manuals public he was moving in the right direction of freedom of information. I am sure he would agree with me that it is wrong to have in the FIRA act the refusal to provide any information behind the decisions, because how can you question those decisions?

The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood was very specific in dealing with that, and I was even more specific with regard to the one case I mentioned. But the hon. member was also general in his criticism of the whole area. I like what he said with reference to the origins, what he speculated were the origins of FIRA. Frankly, I think it goes back to the fight in the Liberal party between one Walter Gordon and one Mitchell Sharp, and Mitchell Sharp won the fight. He won it for ten or 15 years. That goes back to the early 1960s. Finally, our economy was becoming so controlled by foreign interests and the pressure became so strong that the previous Liberal government had to compromise and bring in a token act. That is when they brought in FIRA, but not very seriously.

I think my friend, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, was correct when he said FIRA was a poor substitute for a general policy dealing with the foreign control of the economy. I thought he was right, when he was asking about unemployment, about high interest rates, about housing problems, about our problems with the dollar, and so on, and he came back to the fact that we have fundamental problems with our economy because we are a colony. Basically we are an American economic colony. That is going to be the issue of the 1980s, the issue we will fight.

But what I am concerned about today more specifically is that we have a government that is not prepared to answer our questions, that does not have anyone in the House prepared to answer our questions. I notice my friend on the Liberal front bench, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin). He is the only one there; the rest are out running for leadership. Perhaps he has given up the ship so soon.

An hon. Member: He's waiting to be asked.

Mr. Knowles: He is doing his duty by being in the House.

Mr. Waddell: I will conclude by saying that unfortunately we have nothing to fear from FIRA. We should have a lot to fear from FIRA, that is, the people who seek to take greater control of the Canadian economy should have something to fear from FIRA and it should be out in the open. We should know why FIRA is making these decisions and the facts behind them, and we should have a minister responsible for FIRA who is not a senator but a real minister who can sit in the House of Commons. The government should have someone here today who can answer the legitimate questions put by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood.

● (1530)

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in particular I should like to engage the attention of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) in his capacity as government House leader. As he knows, we have been more co-operative than he might have anticipated with respect to some of the motions which he has put before us. We are making pretty good progress, and we would like to continue in that vein. But my colleagues and I are quite upset about the situation this afternoon. My friend, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), pressed pretty strongly for an answer about the terms of reference of this motion. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) is not here to reply, neither does anyone else seem to be here to give that answer.

We do not want to vote against the motion, and I must admit that I am reluctant to move a motion to adjourn the debate. It is Friday afternoon, and the House does not like recorded votes on Friday afternoon. I wonder if the government House leader, with the co-operation he shows so often, would agree to let this debate be adjourned at this point so that we can get an answer to that question on Monday. We could move to one of the other motions.

To us it is a very important question: is this committee to be empowered to look only at the act, or is it to be empowered to look at foreign investment itself? I do not know how much attention was paid by members to the speech made by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, but I thought he made the point extremely well. If I may say so in a very low key, we feel a bit offended, almost insulted, that no one has paid attention to it. The hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin) agreed with the proposition, but we have had no response. At one point this afternoon there was not a single minister in the House. There are four or five of them here now, but none of them with responsibility for FIRA.

I put it to the President of the Privy Council: I am prepared to move the motion that the debate be adjourned now so that we can go on to voluntarism. I think that might be more satisfactory than having someone try to give us a reply who is not familiar with the field.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) had to leave the House after he spoke. He had a minister sitting in for him. He expected to be back here by about 3.15 o'clock. Obviously something has happened that he has not been able to return. But it was his intention to return, and of course it was our intention to bring the question put by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) to his attention for reply. I apologize that he is not here to answer it. It was not the minister's intention to stay away because he had spoken. He fully intended to come back, but obviously he has been held up somewhere along the line.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I thank the chief government whip for that statement. I am not making an issue out of the fact that the Minister of State for International Trade had to leave, but I am making an issue out of the fact that there is no answer forthcoming this afternoon to this important question.

We can put up other speakers and use the time until four o'clock, but I think it would make more sense if we simply adjourned this debate and dealt with it on Monday, as I am sure it could be dealt with very quickly.

We had even considered trying to move an amendment to the terms of reference. I was in on the consultations, and I suggested that maybe an interpretation from the government would give us assurance that the committee's discussions could be very wide. But without that assurance, we are reluctant to let this motion be passed this afternoon.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), he is saying that the committee should be allowed to investigate broadly with respect to the whole point of foreign investment in Canada. That is the intention of the government with respect to the matter. It is not to be limited to the Foreign Investment Review Act. I give the hon. member that assurance with respect to the matter.

As my friend was speaking, I reread some of the words in the motion which are very interesting. Paragraph (1) reads as follows:

—to inquire into and report upon the extent to which the Foreign Investment Review Act has achieved and is achieving its purpose as described by Parliament in section 2 of the act—

I have always looked upon that as rather broad, and I sincerely hope they will accept my assurances with respect to that matter.

Mr. Rae: Since this was in reply to my question, I hope Mr. Speaker will permit me to respond. There is a circularity in the wording of the motion which for me was a problem. The circularity is that the purpose of the committee is to review the purposes of the Foreign Investment Review Act. I am not sure if the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) was here when I was making my point. I indicated that it is possible the committee may find the purposes set out in the Foreign Investment Review Act are an inadequate statement of the problem. We wanted to be sure that the committee would not be restricted to doing simply a plumbing job on the Foreign Investment Review Act, but it would be looking at the problem of foreign investment.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, just to further that, I should like to look at paragraph (2) which deals with the recommendations for the committee. It reads as follows:

—to make recommendations for changes in the act or its implementation with a view,

(a) to increase the effectiveness of the act in the achievement of its purpose.

Mr. Rae: "Of its purpose".

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes. I think that would encompass a review of the field and a review of the problem; I could not imagine anything else. I just want the hon. member to know that we do not intend to fetter the committee. I hope that is the assurance the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was requesting on behalf of his party.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, with that firm assurance from the President of the Privy Council, we are prepared to let the resolution pass this afternoon.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind being associated with the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae). He has a very nice family. But the thought that this committee should study the whole phenomenon of foreign investment, in all its details and intricacies, is something rather frightening. I would have hoped that the committee would concentrate rather early on ways and means and instrumentalities more than the phenomenon as a whole.

I should just like us to be cautious. The danger in what is being said here now is that, in the hope of being accommodating, we might make the mandate of the committee an impossible one.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is a good point. I am not arguing that point, but I think the question put to me was whether there would be any fetter by the government with respect to the review, and the answer is no. The committee itself may decide to deal with the matter, which is quite within the purview of the committee. It may choose to deal with it in the manner raised or suggested by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin). I think I was asked for a specific assurance, and I hope I have given it to the satisfaction of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to let the committee make the decisions as to what it will do. We just wanted to be sure that the committee would not be fettered by a government direction. We welcome the assurance given this afternoon by the President of the Privy Council.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

STRENGTHENING OF ROLE—APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter Baker (for the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications) moved:

That a special committee of the House of Commons be appointed to inquire into and report upon means to strengthen the role of the voluntary sector in Canadian society;

That the committee, taking into account the scope of activities now being carried out by the voluntary sector, the problems being faced by voluntary groups and the extent, nature and impact of current government support, report its conclusions and recommendations with respect to the measures that could be taken by the federal government to strengthen the role of the voluntary sector

(1) as an objective that is desirable in its own right,

(2) as an alternative to public dependence on government services, and

(3) in ways that would enhance the ability of such groups to operate independently of government together with such other matters as the committee considers relevant;

That the committee submit reports from time to time, as appropriate, and in any case a final report not later than May 31, 1980;

That the special committee be composed of seven members of the House of Commons to be designated at a later date;

That the committee have the power to appoint from among its members such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable and necessary and to delegate to such subcommittees all or any of its powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

That the committee have the power to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That the committee be empowered to retain the services of expert advisers and to commission studies or research to assist in its work and that it also be empowered to retain such professional, technical, clerical and stenographic help as may be required.

● (1540)

Mrs. Diane Stratas (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this motion to establish a special committee which would investigate and report on the appropriate means by which the role of the voluntary sector in Canadian society can be strengthened. I support this motion because it manifests the long-standing concern and willingness of my party to set the federal government's relationship to and conception of the voluntary sector off on a new course.

In spite of the fact that over three million Canadians are involved in voluntary organizations, and in spite of the fact that these organizations provide such a wide-ranging list of vital services to our communities, the voluntary sector has traditionally been taken for granted, very much so, by Canadians. It is my view and the view of my party that the activities of the voluntary sector must not be taken for granted or considered peripheral, but rather that they are essential to the development and maintenance of a strong and vibrant Canadian social fabric.

Community based voluntary activities are crucial to Canadian society because it is through such interpersonal interaction, together with traditional institutions, that every Canadian develops and sustains his sense of personal and collective identity, his personal and social values, and his sense of personal responsibility towards others. Voluntary activities generate community; they forge the interpersonal bonds of identity and caring; they foster social responsibility, self-reliance and initiative in both the individual and the society. Voluntary activities promote those desirable qualities which we call citizenship.

In spite of the crucial role voluntary associations play in integrating individuals into communities and binding communities together into Canadian society, the continued existence of the voluntary sector in Canada has for some time been in jeopardy.

Inherent in any advanced industrial society are a multitude of pressures that work on the individual. A growing inclination towards professionalism and towards a more standardized, bureaucratic structure for the provision of increasingly specialized community and social services, and pressures from a growing attitude of passive materialism whereby personal worth is defined in terms of possessions and where government is expected to do everything: all these pressures militate against voluntary activity. They segment and obstruct interpersonal relationships; they destroy the social fabric, where people are increasingly alienated from each other, where people pursue only their individual self-interests, where people are passive, waiting for others or government to meet their needs, and when people just stop caring, then community and society fall apart.

Past governments have increasingly come to recognize some of the difficulties encountered by the voluntary sector. Traditionally, however, they have not only lacked a comprehensive policy to focus government programs, but as well the response of the federal government has usually obstructed or misdirected the efforts of the voluntary sector. Being unable to recognize the legitimacy and the proper functions of voluntary organization, except in terms of large, formal organizations which can fulfil the needs and objectives of the state, government therefore has increasingly tried to regulate and channel voluntary activities to suit its own needs and not those of individuals or communities.

Through financial support and other incentives, government has gradually enticed the voluntary sector to alter its view of its own legitimate functions to suit government needs. This has created a very dangerous dependence of the voluntary sector on government. Government's view of the voluntary sector is thus paternalistic; it is ignorant of the inherent importance of voluntary activities to developing identity and self-worth in the individual; it is insensitive to voluntary activity as a medium of individual and collective expression and initiative. This dependency has become so ingrained that when economic conditions force government to tighten its belt, the voluntary sector feels immediately, and justifiably, threatened.

My party recognizes that voluntary activity, especially at the grassroots community level, responds to community and social needs and to issues for which a government response would be inappropriate or even detrimental. My party recognizes that a coherent and comprehensive policy for the voluntary sector must encompass those critical functions which fulfil individual and collective needs beyond the scope of government.

The primary purpose of the special committee on the voluntary sector is thus not to study whether the federal government should provide financial support of voluntary organizations. Rather, its purpose is to draw from previous research and from the grassroots a clear, coherent, and comprehensive policy and action strategy by which the government can establish in Canada those conditions through which the binding force of voluntary, community based activity will be encouraged. Our predisposition is thus to establish the necessary conditions through which the voluntary sector will prosper. The function of the special committee is to advise the government on how this goal can be achieved.

Given that an effective policy on the voluntary sector must be rooted in the needs and goals of communities, the process of putting together such a policy requires input from the grassroots and participation from persons who have ready access to the myriad voluntary associations across Canada. Clearly, members of Parliament are far more qualified to perform this task than are those public servants living in the rarefied atmosphere of Ottawa. The rationale for setting up a special committee is not only to focus the work of members of Parliament on this issue, but also to provide a forum for input by non-governmental bodies, not to mention fulfilling our pledge to increase the meaningful role of Parliament.

In addition to looking into those specific areas mentioned in the terms of reference, I expect the special committee will want to investigate the ways in which the growth of social consciousness and the concept of participatory society can be tapped to foster voluntary activity. I assume the government will want to define the limitations of government's role in meeting voluntary sector needs. Committee members will no doubt try to delimit the present impediments to the growth of voluntary activity and suggest how they can be removed. They probably will want to look at what permanent structures could be established to provide ongoing communication between government and the voluntary sector. They will, no doubt, investigate ways of ensuring the accountability of voluntary organizations. They will be expected to recommend the specific policy tools by which the federal government can directly and indirectly encourage voluntary activity, including tax deductibility and tax incentives.

The government has great faith, Mr. Speaker, in the ability of members of Parliament from all parties to perform this policy formulation and this task effectively. We await their advice and recommendation with great expectation.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to this motion on behalf of the official opposition and to assure the House and the Canadian public that we are very much interested in the voluntary sector. Hon. members can appreciate better than anyone else the important role of that sector of our Canadian society since we owe a large number of our seats to the hundreds of volunteers who work for us every election time.

The government initiative aimed at creating a special committee to inquire into means to strengthen the role of the voluntary sector in Canadian society may, at first glance, seem worthy and inspired by the highest and noblest motives. Still, some doubts persist in my mind as to what really motivated this initiative. Several observers claim that the proliferation of committees is a Conservative strategy aimed at appeasing the frustrations of the backbenchers who were appointed neither members of the cabinet nor parliamentary secretaries.

Others suggest that the government wants to keep the opposition busy to prevent hon. members from dealing with political organization. Finally, old hands are convinced that this is a neat way for the Progressive Conservative government to defer important decisions. As long as the committee is considering the issue, the government will not have to make a decision.

Be that as it may, I do not think that the government would stoop that low and use the voluntary sector of this country as a tool of political strategy. I cannot believe that this government would compel members of this House to devote their time and energy to a vile and futile exercise. I do not think either that public funds would be earmarked merely to restore peace within the Progressive Conservative caucus.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of the voluntary sector in Canada, we are giving the benefit of the doubt to the government and are willing to take part in that special committee. We deeply regret that by appointing this committee the Secretary of State is delaying the implementation of 81 recommendations drawn to his attention in the report of the Advisory Board of People of Action, which is also called the Andreychuck report. I think the Secretary of State now has it and, through that exercise, he will unduly defer the implementation of those recommendations.

The 15 members of that board spent over two years studying all aspects of voluntary work in Canada, and seven parliamentarians are now asked to do the same work in six months. We must admit that it is a huge task and that some doubts remain in our minds. However, as I said, we will take an active part in the proceedings of the committee hoping that it will be a pause for reflection before taking strong and positive measures.

The Canadian people have doubts when they are told about new study groups, they are fed up because we are forever studying. They want action and, as strange as it may seem, after having elected a party which promised them some action, once in power we have never seen such a number of study groups, special committees, missions and consultants, and recently we have heard a lot about them. It is almost as if they have actually elected a government of students.

Coming back to the essence of the motion for debate today, it is imperative that everyone should acknowledge the fundamental value of voluntary work within Canadian society. Respect for this type of action must presuppose respect for the freedom, the integrity and the independence of members of the voluntary sector, no matter what they stand for, what they believe in or what they are doing. Parliamentarians who will deal with this issue will have to display this type of open mindedness and I would even dare say liberal spirit which alone can ensure the success of such a study.

In order to get a better perspective of voluntary work, we must look beyond the limits of federal involvement and study the treatment it gets from provincial and municipal governments as well as from school boards. Voluntary workers, for the most part, are not specialists in constitutional law and do not want to become bones of contention between levels of jurisdiction. The people who want to get involved in voluntary work should not find their activities curtailed by political bickerings. It is up to us to create a sound and open climate for everyone. The advisory board warned us not to take voluntary work for granted and I am personally convinced that these political conflicts can undermine this whole sector.

This whole situation will have to be studied and recommendations made to overcome these problems which may be insurmountable for the layman. The private sector and the media also have a role to play in strengthening the role of the voluntary sector in our society. The committee will have to find the present flaws and propose realistic ways for the voluntary sector to have access to the media and especially the private sector which, because of its capacities, can do much to help us achieve our common objectives.

We must not be afraid of going to existing organizations and sharing their experiences concerning the demobilization of their workers and their causes. We must also get the general public's perception of the role of these organizations, since the public is more and more leery of frauds as far as their donations to such organizations are concerned. Why? That is a question we must answer. Should there be better control over the funds or the accounting of these organizations? Should we review their operation, either through a government agency or otherwise? These are all questions which should be answered.

We will also have to consider carefully the various categories of organizations. There are, of course, the national and the provincial organizations, but it will be important to evaluate the role and credibility of local and community organizations which certainly have the best public penetration. We will have to visit the small communities since they often find it impossible to be heard in Ottawa as they cannot afford to come here to make presentations. In this same area, we shall have to show creativity in recommending means to enable all voluntary associations, whatever they are and whatever the number of their members and their budget, to have equal access to grants and other means of support offered by the Canadian government.

The complexity of regulations concerning the various government programs is a major obstacle to the development of the voluntary sector. For instance, several groups in my constituency have met with an unbending attitude on the part of some public servants, which has discouraged them and killed their initiative. However, I am not blaming these public servants because they often have no choice but to apply the regulations dreamed up in Ottawa by legal officers who have no knowledge of what goes on in the field. I am firmly convinced that if we want to help improve relations between the state and the voluntary sector, we shall have to emphasize the need to leave more freedom of action to local public servants. We shall also have to develop mechanisms which will prevent ministers from being tempted to interfere politically in the distribution of grants. I hope that one of the colleagues of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey), who has just left the House, will give him this message—

An hon. Member: And especially to him!

Mr. Lapierre: Especially to him, as my colleague has said. I believe that the Minister of Employment and Immigration would need very strict regulations—

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Lapierre: —to avoid the temptation of patronage. Indeed I think that in the next few days we will be in a position to say that the temptation was too strong for him to refrain from indulging in—

An hon. Member: —patronage!

Mr. Lapierre: My colleague calls this "patronage", but I would rather call it "political intervention"—

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Lapierre: —in the Canada Works program.

We should also assess the dependency of the voluntary sector on government. I have seen too many groups established to meet specific needs, with voluntary personnel motivated by an urge to help their fellow man, which federal funds reduced to a state of complete subservience and which had to close shop when finally federal funds dried up. I have also seen profiteers who under the guise of noble intentions found this a way to make a living and appropriated funds for their own personal use.

There can be no complete study of the voluntary sector unless major legal and fiscal reforms are proposed. Well organized lobbies are already making fiscal reform representations to every member in this House. We cannot ignore that proposal, and should assess on its merits the campaign on the theme "tit for tat".

In these few minutes, Mr. Speaker, I have briefly listed the challenges facing the special committee. We in the official opposition want to meet these challenges, providing our recommendations are acted upon. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) suggested yesterday that historically, between the time an issue comes up in Parliament and the moment where significant changes are made, there is a 37-year lag. On behalf of the majority of my colleagues who cannot live that long before they see major changes in the voluntary sector, I express the hope that as soon as our report is tabled on May 31, 1980, the government will act promptly and diligently.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles: May we call it four o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has called it four o'clock. Before we look at the clock, would it be possible to ignore it for a few moments and to ignore it at the end of private members' hour for the appropriate time to allow the House to deal with Bill S-10, an act to confirm the authority of the Federal District Commission to have acquired certain lands.

There have been discussions among the house leaders that would permit us to proceed through all stages in the House today, including Committee of the Whole and third reading, so that the House could dispose of that.

If you could get confirmation of that, Mr. Speaker, I would be grateful. And, as well, if you could ignore the clock, both at the beginning and at the end of private members' hour, for the purpose of allowing us to do that, then perhaps we could add the time used to the end of private members' hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): It is my understanding of the agreement of the House that we are to go through second reading, Committee of the Whole and all of the stages of the bill forthwith and extend private members' hour for the appropriate time so that there will be no deprival of time for private members' hour. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN LANDS

Hon. Walter Baker (for the Minister of Public Works) moved that Bill S-10, to confirm the authority of the Federal District Commission to have acquired certain lands, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCain in the chair.

On clause 1—Acquisition confirmed

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like a minute to indicate what we are doing. It might look somewhat strange on the record to put a bill through without any reference to it at all. We have been thoroughly briefed as to what it is all about. It has to do with a piece of land that the government sold and the purchaser sold it to somebody else, but there was a technicality that was overlooked. We are correcting that technicality so that the sales are legal down the way. We see no reason to take time on this bill. We are prepared to put it through all stages right now.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member. I just want to make it clear that it was in the days of the old Federal District Commission in 1954 that this occurred.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, and private bills.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all bills preceding Bill C-206 be stood by unanimous consent in order that we might proceed with Bill C-206 in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Is it the pleasure of the House that all other bills stand by unanimous consent so that we might proceed with Bill C-206?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT REGARDING ABORTION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved that Bill C-206, to amend the Criminal Code (abortion), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: This afternoon I will not be following the usual procedure in that it is not my intention to debate the merits of the bill. I will explain why.

In my province of Quebec we have a situation which is undesirable, and I doubt that any member here this afternoon will dispute that statement. In parts of my province a woman can obtain an abortion by little more action than the making of an appointment. In other parts of Quebec, the other extreme exists, and a woman can find herself in the obviously undesirable position of not having access to a therapeutic abortion committee. In such situations it is almost always the less fortunate who are penalized the most.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill with the express intention of giving all parties of all points of view the opportunity to present their opinions to the legislators of this country. Only in committee study, without the time pressure that exists this afternoon, can there be free discussion of the legislation as it exists, its application, and the desirability or not of making changes.

Bill C-206 is my personal opinion of the way that the Criminal Code could be amended in order to fulfil the intent, as I see it, of the then minister of justice when the present provisions were introduced in 1969. This objective is explained in the explanatory note printed in the bill.

Approval of second reading is now, by our present rules, approval in principle, however, even now there is the opportunity to express disapproval by calling "on division".

May I reiterate my point that my objective is not to use this bill as the tool to change legislation but as the means to afford all members of Parliament, and particularly the public, the opportunity to present their points of view in committee. Many persons from all parts of the country have written to me or called me. A very large number of members of Parliament have spoken or written to me. They cannot all speak in less than one hour this afternoon.

May I also remind the members who are here that, should this bill come back into this House on third reading, it would then be allotted only one hour of time before disappearing to the bottom of the list if that was the will of three or four members. This particular procedure was argued by me at great length in the last session. Thus those who are adamant that the bill should not be passed will have no difficulty killing the bill at a later stage. However, they will, in the meantime, have given to all citizens and all members an opportunity to debate the apparent inequities that seem to exist in the present legislation.

In the belief that no member of this House is opposed to open discussion, I am confident that Bill C-206, an act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion), will be given the approval, if necessary, "on division", to go to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs where everyone will have the opportunity to express his point of view.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the approach used by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) is very interesting, and one that I partly support. I believe, with the hon. member, the time has come for a serious study to be made on the abortion question. In order for a committee to function it needs either a reference from the House or a second reading of a bill. In order for a bill to get second reading, there ought to be some defence by the member introducing the bill as to what he is intending to accomplish through it.

I will not be long, Mr. Speaker, because there are others who welcome this opportunity to make a contribution on a subject of deep concern to increasing numbers of Canadians, and I dare say to many members of Parliament who have not had a sufficient opportunity to express themselves and the views of their constituents on this extremely difficult question facing society today.

What is the basic situation we are facing? We are facing the results of the omnibus Criminal Code bill of 1969 that, through application of the whip, brought about a situation in which section 251 of the Criminal Code was changed to allow abortion when the life or health of the mother is in danger. Because of the failure of the Parliament at that time to spell out and define precisely what is meant by health, we left ourselves open to a growing abuse of this bill which came law in 1969, a greater abuse of the new law in terms of health which has brought us into a ludicrous situation today.

The latest statistics on abortion were released by Statistics Canada only a few days ago for the year 1978. We find that abortions rose in that year alone by 8.2 per cent. The total number of abortions in Canada in 1978 was 62,290. For every 100 live births, 17.4 abortions took place. The year after the 1969 law came into effect, there were approximately 11,000 abortions that took place in Canada. We see this rapid escalation all through the seventies to the point where we now have over 62,000 abortions per year. Even worse than that figure is the fact that 30.5 per cent of the women who had abortions were under the age of 20. That is from the statistics I just gave for the previous year.

I could go on with that type of statistic to show that the abortion law brought into this House in 1969 for the purpose of allowing a woman an abortion when there is a serious threat to her life and health is being abused. It is ludicrous to suggest that there were 62,000 cases in Canada, most of them in British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario, the chief have provinces, resulting from serious difficulties with pregnancy. That is scandalous.

According to many experts who have studied this question in great detail, abortions are now being performed for social and economic reasons. There are many women in this country who are pregnant and who have serious economic and social problems. It is the duty of government at various levels to respond to the legitimate problem of women carrying babies. A way to respond positively to help women is not ipso facto to turn a law that was intended for a good purpose into runaway abortion, virtually abortion on demand. There are hospitals in this country that have a higher number of abortions than live births.

All of this is not news to members who have been following the tragic train of events regarding the abortion question through the decade of the seventies. There is a dispute about the effect of the present law. Some hold, as I do, that the weakness is fundamentally in the wording of the law and the reluctance of the previous government in 1969 to define what they meant by health. Some claim the weakness is there, as I do, and if we are going to be serious in trying to stop this escalation of needless abortion, we must repair the law.

Others hold that the law is okay, that it is the administration of the law, and therefore we have to go to the provinces for a total application of the law. There you get into two divisions. Some say there is too much strictness, that therapeutic abortions are not available, that there are therapeutic abortion committees in about 250 hospitals out of some 600 hospitals in Canada. Others say the application is far too weak, and that therapeutic abortion committees are nothing but a rubber stamp, largely because many doctors will no longer serve on therapeutic abortion committees. They know the character of those committees has been impugned by the willingness of doctors who have served on them to put through abortions at the request of the mother who claimed that she had a problem, but without any certifiable evidence that the problem was a serious threat to her life or health.

We had in 1976 a petition brought before this House presented by ten members of Parliament on behalf of the ten provinces. It contained the names of more than one million Canadians who had signed the petition brought about by the umbrella group, the Alliance for Life. There are several other groups promoting a tighter application of the law throughout Canada. I will not mention them all. The general umbrella group, the Alliance for Life, was able to produce a petition which was the largest petition ever brought into this Parliament.

What happened to that petition? If someone went into the lower bowels of this establishment, the petition would probably be found on some dusty shelf. Nothing happened to it. The idea that one million Canadians can express their views on a matter of this importance and not have any debate in Parliament, or any legislative action taken, compounds the difficulties.

This brings us to a situation in which many private members of Parliament find themselves, particularly the hon. member for Vaudreuil. There are others, such as the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Richardson), and the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), who have bills before this House. I am sorry if I do not remember every member who has a private bill in this House which is designed to correct this anomaly we are facing. Private members have to try to repair this injustice in the application of a badly worded law, the results of which are becoming worse by the year. What happens to these private bills? They come up for debate for an hour. There is not sufficient time for real analysis of their contents. Few of them ever get to committee.

The government has brought in a paper on reform of Parliament, the position paper introduced by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) a few days ago, and the changes in this document, among other things, would specify a certain number of private members' bills being brought to a vote. I myself believe that if we are serious in defending the rights of private members to bring their concerns before Parliament in the expectation of a vote in a reasonable number of cases, we ought to expedite the process of that position paper through Parliament by a quick acceptance of a motion on the order paper so there will not be a protracted debate on the motion itself, and then by getting that motion into committee so that serious work can begin on the reform of Parliament among which would then be the assurance that a certain number of private members' bills would be brought to a vote.

I believe the hon. member for Vaudreuil has done a service to Parliament this afternoon by emphasizing the need for an examination in committee of the whole question of abortion. Such an examination has not been undertaken for 11 years. Some of us have been in Parliament, now, for going on eight years and we have never had an opportunity to deal with the subject. Yet we have had two full-scale debates on capital punishment during that period. It is an important question, obviously, but if there can be two full-scale debates and votes on the issue of capital punishment since 1973—and one hears, now, suggestions of a third—I believe the time has come to state clearly that there are many members, and I am one of them, who believe that the abortion question which affects the lives of 62,000 individuals annually should certainly be discussed and a position taken with regard to it.

I shall not even attempt to go into the whole question here that the fetus is a premature human being; I think the scientific evidence is fairly clear on that question; we are not talking about some abstract matter, what we are talking about is incipient life in the womb of the mother.

The bill brought forward by the hon. member for Vaudreuil contains some weaknesses. My bill has some weaknesses in it.

[Mr. Roche.]

Perhaps other private members' bills have some weaknesses in them, too. The point is, it is not weaknesses in these bills which are important. It is important that progress be made toward the construction of a bill which will meet the needs of the situation and will meet with some consensus in this House. I believe there is a consensus. I cannot prove it because I have never had a chance for a vote. But I do believe there is an emerging consensus from within the country—some of the statistics the committee will be able to study will bear this out—that what a growing number of people want is a law which would allow a mother to have an abortion when her life and health are seriously threatened, where the continuance of a pregnancy would be a very serious threat to her well-being.

I will not go beyond that now. It is the job of the doctors and of the professionals to make that determination and to find the language to put it into law. I believe mothers have a right to such protection. But society has an obligation to protect all lives, including incipient human life, and increasing numbers of people recognize the validity of what I said in the earlier part of my comments, namely, that the law, whatever its intentions, has produced a situation in which it has been abused, and it is the abuse of the present law which we see in the figures of 62,000, it is the abuse to which an increasing number of members of Parliament wish to address themselves.

If other members have a better suggestion, by all means let us hear from them in this debate, but I am advancing the specific thought that maybe a way out of this dilemma would be to establish an all-party committee to work out the terms of a bill—if it has to work on an ad hoc basis, then let it—which would find some general acceptance in this House and which would have a chance for passage, a bill that would appeal to many members of Parliament, if not all, who want to see justice done toward human life in this country, who want to see justice done to pregnant women who have very serious difficulties in the continuation of their pregnancies, and who want to see justice done to the lives of the unborn.

This is not just a religious question. It is not just a philosophical or humanitarian question. It is a question of civil rights. We have to address ourselves to the civil rights of unborn children, and that is very much within the domain and, indeed, the obligation of members of Parliament. I suggest that serious thought be given in the House to the construction of such a committee to work out a pattern of legislation which would stand a reasonable chance of passage in the House and that, in any event, expedition be given to the motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council to bring forward the paper on the reform of Parliament so that the rights of private members would be enhanced, especially in matters like this.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recommend the adoption of the bill sponsored by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). I so agree with the comments of my hon. friend from Edmonton South. When we come to the discussion of a bill such as the one before us it is with humility and hesitancy that I rise to make my contribution.

There are some people who do not understand why a person would speak to an issue such as abortion. In the few moments available to me I would like to explain why I am speaking in favour of this bill and why I believe the measure should go to committee. I support the bill because I am acutely aware of my heavy responsibility both as an individual and as a member of Parliament to speak as forcefully as I can against the tendency to dehumanize modern life.

I rise to speak today not because I am necessarily confident that if I do so we can definitely reverse the course of our society, but because I am fearful that if people who share a reverence for human life do not speak, our cause is certainly lost.

The present abortion legislation is a classic case of an unenforceable and morally indefensible law. It satisfied neither the proponents of unlimited abortion nor those who opt for life. What it does is to put an impediment which is far from insurmountable between some pregnant women and the abortion they want. It is discriminatory in that the application of the law varies widely throughout Canada and it is almost impossible to enforce as the key element—the health of the mother—is subject to so many different interpretations. Of course it also fails totally to come to grips with the question of the humanity of the fetus.

When I look at the bill before us I see the hon. member proposes to remove the phrase "danger to health". I totally agree with him that that phrase must be removed from the present legislation. If we look at the definition given by the World Health Organization of the word "health" we find that the World Health Organization defines health as a state of complete physical, mental, and social well-being, and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity. I think we are all aware of the fact that the word "health" is a word that is tremendously abused. The definition of the World Health Organization, which is applied in many of our hospitals, is simply too wide, and in practice leads to the evergrowing abortion on demand. So, on the basis of the mental and social well-being in this definition, I think that if I were a doctor I could convince any abortion committee to give my patient an abortion within the definition of the WHO.

I was a member of the Kitchener-Waterloo hospital board for four years and during that time we looked at the whole question of abortion. We tried to grapple with it in that hospital and we found that it was the law that was at fault, not necessarily the practice in the hospital. The hospital had great difficulty in knowing just what guidelines it should set for its doctors. In that sense I think it is unfair to accuse the doctors of being the ones who are the problem in this case and of being too liberal in the way in which they interpret this law. I think the responsibility for ambiguity in this law rests right here in the House, and in that sense we must correct the law and remove the phrase "danger to health".

In the explanatory notes to the hon. member's bill we find a quotation of the then minister of justice. In 1969 he said:

The bill has rejected the eugenic, sociological or criminal offence reasons.

He went on to say:

—only where the health or the life of the mother is in danger—

will abortion be permitted. I think I have to say, if I may be a little partisan about this, that the minister of justice at that time was trying to suck and blow at the same time. What he was trying to do was to appear to be truly against abortions on the one hand, while on the other hand he knew that the word "health" was going to be wide open and therefore abortions would take place. In that sense he was either totally naive, which I do not think he is, or he deliberately made a law which was open to abuse in that sense.

My reasons for supporting this bill and wanting it to go to committee are as follows. First, the committee can then call in witnesses who, being the best from the medical and scientific community in Canada, could tell us whether or not we are dealing with a human being. That is the key question behind this. We should send this bill to committee so we can have those witnesses and we can decide whether or not we are dealing with a human being. If we are, then obviously the law must be changed. If we are not, then the law should be removed from the Criminal Code. That is the key issue.

As I see the facts in this case—and I will only mention a few—I think we are dealing with a human being. A couple of weeks ago in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the commissioner of the Law Reform Commission indicated to committee members that what we need in Canada is a law which spells out when a human being is legally dead. In the questioning that took place, the commissioner told us that there is a considerable consensus that when a person's brainwave activity ceases, the person is dead. I would accept that definition, but I think we should apply it at both ends. If we say that a person is dead when his brainwaves cease, then we can say that person is alive when his brainwaves begin, and that is on the forty-second day in the development of the fetus. Clearly the vast majority of our abortions take place after that day. In that sense a human being is being done away with. I think that is really one of the key points to which we should address ourselves.

Another point is that we have had about 140 abortions a year since 1972, that were as late as six months after conception, and later. We all know that a premature baby can be taken care of from about that stage in its development, and we know that in some hospitals we can have the dramatic situation of a premature birth where all the staff and the equipment go to help the child, while in another part of the same hospital an abortion is being carried out on a child exactly the same age. In spite of the fact that the heart is beating, that you can measure the pulse, we throw that fetus in the garbage. Surely we must call in witnesses to tell us whether or not we are really dealing with a human being. That is another key point we must consider.

The third point I would like to make is taken from the studies done by the West German supreme court in 1975. In a calm, very rational and objective manner, that supreme court called in the best witnesses they had at the time to tell them whether or not the fetus is a human being, and should we therefore protect that human being and give it full and equal protection of the law. In that discussion the German supreme court was deadly serious because they knew that from 1933 to 1945 Germany had called a group of people subhumans. The German word for that is "untermenschen". They simply said that they can be killed any time. That is why they had to be so careful. In carrying out their investigation, they found the following, in answer to the question: "When does the fetus gain the civil right to life?"

Life, in the sense of historical existence of a human individual, exists according to definite biological-physiological knowledge, in any case, from the fourteenth day after conception.

That is even before a woman knows she is pregnant. They said that from then on the physiological evidence was quite clear.

It is my contention that if that is the evidence, then our actions have to follow or we would be simply dishonest. I think we should take the best evidence that is available in Canada, let the experts come to the committee and explain whether or not we are dealing with a human being. We must be very coldly objective and we must look at what we are really talking about. But at the same time we have to be compassionate. I think we have to do two things at once. This is not easy, but we must try.

I think we must be very much like the statue that stands outside the Supreme Court, the statue of the person dispensing justice, wearing a blindfold. The blindfold is there so that she will listen to the evidence and rule accordingly without being swayed by emotion, and so on. In that sense we must be coldly objective. However, as I said, we must also be compassionate. If we are really serious in our desire to reduce the rate of abortions and if we have compassion for women caught in the tragic situation of carrying an unwanted child, we must be willing as a society to put our money, our legislation and our moral suasion on the side of life. These are the other components of a policy that could reverse the direction in which we are going now. I should like to list a few.

First, I think all levels of government must co-operate in improving birth control education throughout Canada. Improved educational programs could result in an attack on ignorance and would be powerful means of reducing the number of these human tragedies. Second, I think improved assistance should be provided to children's aids societies for their important work. Third, society should provide every assistance possible to unwed mothers to help them over this crisis, instead of the harassment and discrimination against them. I think we must support them instead of making their lives more difficult. Last, I think our social assistance program should provide a decent level of assistance to needy families with children because much of the trauma for many families involves having another child when the money is scarce.

[Mr. Reimer.]

I should like to see this bill go to committee. I realize we must watch our time in the private members' hour. I want to put some of my thoughts on the record. I am clearly in support of reducing the number of abortions in Canada and trying to correct the abuses that are there.

I would like to conclude by expressing one thought, and that is that when some people listen to this debate they will say, "Please do not force your morality on others because we have a different moral code." I would like to answer that objection by referring to history. When the German war criminals at the end of the war were on trial at Nuremberg, they sought to defend themselves on the grounds that they were loyal to a different set of values, different orders, and a different legal system. Therefore they could not be judged by someone else. Robert H. Jackson, Chief Counsel for the United States, had to think about that. He came back with the following answer, to which I should like to refer:

It is common to think of our own time as standing at the apex of civilization, from which the deficiencies of preceding ages may patronizingly be viewed in the light of what is assumed to be "progress". The reality is that in the long perspective of history the present century will not hold an admirable position . . . These two-score years in this twentieth century will be recorded in the book of years as one of the most bloody in all annals. Two world wars have left a legacy of dead which number more than all the armies engaged in any war that made ancient or medieval history. No half-century ever witnessed slaughter on such a scale, such cruelties and inhumanities, such wholesale deportations of peoples into slavery, such annihilations of minorities.

He went on to say the following:

Goaded by these facts, we have moved to redress the blight on the record of our era . . . At this stage of the proceedings, I shall rest upon the law of these crimes as laid down in the charter.

He was referring to the Atlantic Charter. He continued:

In interpreting the charter, however, we should not overlook the unique and emergent character of this body as an International Military Tribunal . . . As an International Military Tribunal, it rises above the provincial and transient and seeks guidance not only from International Law but also from the basic principles of jurisprudence which are assumptions of civilization.

In other words, he appealed to a much higher law which respects all individuals, no matter what their colour, creed, or national background. On that basis he could try these criminals at Nuremberg.

I am not trying to force a moral code on someone else. I am trying to be as objective as I possibly can by saying: let us look at the evidence in committee. In that sense I think we could come to the bottom of this issue.

Also we must realize that the basic principles of jurisprudence and the basic assumptions of our civilization are founded upon the Ten Commandments and the Judaeo-Christian ethical code. When we remove these, and when we ignore all the facts which point in one direction, then the very existence of our freedom is at stake. Relativism ultimately will lead to anarchy and then tyranny.

On his recent visit to the United States the Pope told his audiences in very simple terms that if we want to enjoy real freedom, then we must do so in harmony and in obedience to laws of the Ten Commandments and the directions within the Judaeo-Christian ethical code. He said that if we do not do that we will lose our very freedom. I think he is right on.

As legislators we must always be sure that our laws are based on the best available evidence. That is the purpose of sending this bill to committee. Also we must be sure that they are in harmony with the directions of the Judaeo-Christian ethical code.

Again I should like to quote from Robert H. Jackson who said that we should move to redress the blight of the record on our era and return in law-making to nothing less than a recovery of those basic principles of jurisprudence which are the assumptions of our civilization. I hope the bill will go to committee.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill C-206 is a retrogressive step, contrary to the official policy of all political parties in this House, contrary to the opinions of most Canadians, contrary to the realistic real-life situations in the real world which face many women, and indeed, many men today in Canada.

If it is passed, it will deny human rights. My friends spoke about human rights, but what about the rights of women to decide what is best for them in their particular situation? It will not prevent abortions or unwanted pregnancies. Indeed, it will force an increase in illegal, dangerous backstreet abortions. If passed, it will bring heartbreak to many people, particularly families who may have teenage daughters who are in a situation of unwanted pregnancy and who are faced with requiring some choice in planning their future.

The bill distorts the concepts of health, as was pointed out by the last speaker. It contravenes the opinions of most experienced medical practitioners. It ignores the very strong, well-informed and well-documented persistent positions of women's groups across the country. After all, it is a question facing women primarily. Certainly it would be opposed by most professional counsellors who have worked with young people, women, families, husbands and male partners who are involved in situations where there are unwanted pregnancies. In my opinion it is in conflict with basic human rights.

As I read the aims of this bill, it is to restrict the option of legal abortions to only very limited, narrowly-defined situations involving actual physical or acute mental danger. This seems to go completely in the reverse trend to what happened in Canada in the last ten or 15 years. Before 1967 all abortions were a criminal offence, but this did not stop abortions. There were abortions, deaths, and very inhumane practices. Abortions have been with us always.

Since 1967 the New Democratic Party approved limited legal abortions. In 1969 the Liberals introduced legislation in the House, and abortions were approved within certain stipulations. The abortion had to be performed by a qualified physician in an accredited hospital. The operation had to be approved by a three-person therapeutic abortion committee which would decide whether the pregnancy would or would not be likely to endanger the woman's life and health. Incidentally, the practitioner who performs the operation could not be a member of the committee. In 1970 the Liberal party endorsed the removal of abortion from the Criminal Code and recommended that it be the personal and private decision of the woman and her doctor. In 1974 the Conservative party voted to remove abortion from the Criminal Code.

Now we have abortions which are available under very limited situations. Certainly I do not see why people who do not want the availability of abortions extended should have very much concern. They are very, very limited under the present situation. They are done with medical approval. They are available with medical approval. Incidentally, there is no abortion on demand, for those who are concerned about liberalizing it to that degree. Individual cases are reviewed. It gives a woman, her partner, doctor, and perhaps her family, a chance to look at all alternatives. Counselling is available because it is acceptable to talk to people about a possible abortion. Also the other options of family planning, adoption and so on, are available to people. However, it is limited to few hospitals and to the situations under which abortions are approved.

I know this is a very emotional topic. Personally I do not advocate abortion as a desirable situation. I think we should be very clear about this. Abortion, certainly under this bill, is not being advocated as a method of birth control. If I were in the situation, I am not even sure I would have an abortion. However, if I found myself in the situation that many women are in, a real life situation, perhaps I would look at this quite differently.

I also respect the different views of people in this House, throughout this country and, indeed, those in my own party, because there is a different point of view on this question. Some people oppose abortion on religious grounds as a matter of conscience. They have a right to their personal views and, of course, a right to their religious views.

However, not one of us in a democracy has the right to impose our views on others. We have no right to tell a woman who is pressured by many problems because of an impossible life situation, a woman who cannot care for her child perhaps because of health problems, and I use that term in its broadest sense, and maybe in a situation in which she would damage an unwanted child, or the child would be neglected and perhaps abused, that she cannot consider an abortion, or that it is not her right to make the decision.

There are many misconceptions about the kind of jargon we use. For instance, freedom of choice does not mean that we are necessarily in favour of abortion, or that a woman will decide in favour of an abortion in her own situation. Many people are very much opposed to abortion, and certainly would be opposed to it as a method of birth control in Canada. Freedom of choice means in this case that a woman should not be pressured against her will to bear a child, nor indeed should she be pressured against her will to have an abortion. It is the individual human right of a woman to have the freedom to decide whether to continue with an unplanned and undesirable pregnancy. Surely we in Canada believe in this form of justice as well as in the advice and expertise of the doctors who will be working with these women.

Abortions take place every day. Involuntary abortions are a part of nature in every species. Illegal backstreet abortions by quacks will continue regardless of whether we have legislation or change the legislation, but there is no doubt that they will increase in frequency and in danger if there is no legal alternative. They will increase for the poor people. Young teenagers and poor women are the ones who will go to the backstreets. The rich people can afford to go across the border, or have this done by private means.

I would like to discuss some of the facts that were referred to by a previous speaker, and also contradict some of his interpretations of the statistics. For instance, abortions are not readily available now in Canada. Only 58 per cent of hospitals are eligible to establish abortion committees. That is not very many and they are not available to people in all communities. Only 52 per cent of eligible hospitals are actually performing abortions, and 45 per cent of Canadians live in communities where legal abortions cannot be performed.

As to the opinion of Canadians, I should like to refer to a Gallup poll in April, 1978, which shows that 69 per cent of persons interviewed were in favour of abortions under some circumstances. Therefore, they would indeed support the present legislation with no change. There was a reduction from 16 per cent to 14 per cent in that period from 1975 to 1978 in the number of people who were not in favour of the present legislation and felt that abortions should be made illegal. Some 76 per cent of the people believed that abortion should be available if a woman's health was seriously endangered. Most important, one third of all legal abortions in Canada are performed on young women under the age of 20, and that represents only the registered abortions, not taking into account the many illegal abortions that are certainly performed.

In 1977 there were 54,000 legal abortions in Canada, and 3,000 Canadian women, presumably women in the upper income group, who went across the border to have their abortions. In 1977 some 57,000 legal abortions were performed in Canada and 2,000 women crossed the line into the United States. There was some decrease in that regard probably due to the fact that the opportunity was available in Canada.

The rate of abortions in Canada is very low compared to that in other countries. Our abortion rate is about half of that in the United States per 1,000 females, it is about equal to that in the United Kingdom, and it is half the rate in Sweden. In many developing countries, of course, abortion has been liberalized far beyond this responsibility, particularly to economic and population factors.

I would like to mention quickly just two or three other points. I wish it were possible for men to get really emotionally involved in this question. It is really impossible for a man, for whom it is impossible to be in the situation, to really see it from the woman's point of view. That is why I am concerned that there are not more women in this House available to speak about this from the woman's point of view. The only thing I can think of which would bring this closer to those gentlemen in the House, is to refer to the situation of a teenage daughter. How would you really feel if your young daughter was pregnant and was told she could not have an abortion?

Many young people are living together in temporary kinds of arrangements. They are living away from home without a regular source of income. The relationship is probably not stable, and certainly most young people are not mature enough to think of having families and providing the nourishment and care that children require. What would you do if your daughter was in this situation? Would you say she had no right to go to the hospital for a legal abortion? Would you force her and her boyfriend to go to the back streets of Toronto or Vancouver to some quack? That is what you are saying if you support this bill.

Let me refer for a moment to other forms of birth control. We know that women are increasingly concerned about present forms of contraceptives, many of which have side effects and, indeed, are not nearly as infallible as we once thought. More and more men are thinking in terms of having vasectomies. If we apply the same principle, what is the situation then? I know this is not analogous, but perhaps the principle is the same. How would you feel about a bill in this House forbidding you to have a vasectomy if you felt that was the best way for you and your wife to prevent unwanted pregnancy? Women have the right to make their own decisions, hopefully without torture, without feelings of guilt and without being blackmailed. If they have access to proper counselling, education, family planning, contraceptives and good medical advice, maybe they would choose some alternative to abortion.

Certainly with my background I am familiar with children who have been taken in for care, and I can certainly tell members of this House that the rights of those children who go into one foster home after another are not being observed. Their health, welfare, and ability to mature as human beings are in serious jeopardy.

The question of health was referred to, and we all know that health involves the total human being and not just the narrow area of physical or mental damage as mentioned in this bill.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would really like to address myself to the rights of children. Those who have spoken today have mentioned this. It seems to me that the rights of children are the right to be loved, to have care, to be nourished emotionally as well as physically, to have security, hopefully to have two parents, hopefully to have decent housing, decent income, and food on the table. There are millions and millions of families across this country who cannot provide that for their children. Children have the right not to be abused or neglected.

It is demonstrated every day that child abuse and neglect are on the increase. Men and women who have not had their own needs met and are seriously deprived themselves, who have no hope for the future and no jobs, are taking it out on their children. There is compulsive abuse. Do we want these families to continue to have children if they should, in a moment of enlightenment, choose to have some control over their family and, if necessary, have an abortion? I think not, Mr. Speaker. Anyone who really knows the situation respects the future for children.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Wightman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, having heard the words with which the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) introduced Bill C-206, and the eloquence with which it was supported by my colleague, the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), I would not have addressed the House but would have been content to support the bill from my place. I am moved to say a few words, however, in light of the intervention we have just heard from the member of the NDP.

It strikes me that to argue that we do not have effective abortion on demand in this country is to ignore all the empirical evidence, and certainly the evidence offered by the hon. member for Kitchener. To equate vasectomy with abortion strikes me as convoluted reasoning, to say the least.

I shall not take the time of the House to make a point by point rebuttal of the statements we have just heard, but I will respond to the perception of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) that somehow the male members of this House are not emotionally concerned or involved about the issue. I would assure her, and all hon. members, that we are deeply involved and concerned. I would say, too, that the vast majority of people who speak with me on this subject and who have brought me to my present opinion, have been women. They have certainly been deeply and profoundly and emotionally concerned and involved.

I can guarantee, finally, that on this motion or any like motion, I will stand and support it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express some serious concern about the bill before the House today. There are a number of questions in this whole area of abortion which certainly I think all members of this House would want to consider very carefully.

In 1977, in January, Dr. Robin Badgley reported on this question of abortion and talked about some very serious concerns in this whole area. The Badgley report, which involved extensive consultations within the medical community, with women all across this country, and looked at practices in other countries, came to the conclusion that one of the most important factors in reducing the number of abortions was the existence of adequate family planning funding. Despite that conclusion, despite the clear message, which was found in the Badgley report, the response of the government was to slash the family planning program which is administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare, from $2.1 million in 1978-79 to $1.1 million in the current fiscal year and, in addition, to slash the sustaining grant to the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada from $600,000 to $440,000.

No one in this House, I am sure, is "pro-abortion". Members on all sides of this House have a deep respect and reverence for life. Our concern, however, is that where strong and restrictive abortion laws exist, the simple reality is that they do not reduce the number of abortions. What they do, as the hon. member for Vancouver East said, is to drive poor women, women who cannot afford to go to other countries where abortions may be more readily available, to drive those women to the back street butchers.

It is the position of this party, and it has been our position for some time, as it is the position of the Canadian Medical Association, that this very serious decision by a woman to have an abortion is one which should be taken out of the framework of the Criminal Code. It is a decision which should be made by a woman in consultation with her doctor.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that I, myself, have tabled a private member's bill on this subject. I am concerned, as well, with the application of the law, but from a somewhat different direction than speakers on both sides of this House who have spoken so far, other than my colleague from Vancouver East. I think the point which my colleague from Vancouver East made with respect to men legislating for women is an important point. There was one woman who spoke on this question and her views were quite clear and were very eloquently put. One of the concerns which was expressed by the Badgley report was that the law in Canada is not equitably being applied, that only in some 250 hospitals across this land are there therapeutic abortion committees, that particularly in the province of Quebec there are very serious problems in terms of accessibility to these therapeutic abortion facilities.

I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that I am somewhat surprised to hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Roche) speak about 250 committees in a total of, I believe he said, 500 or 600 hospitals. One is somewhat disturbed to know that the parliamentary secretary—

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO FINANCIAL ACTIVITIES OF OIL MULTINATIONALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Canadians, facing tight oil supplies this winter and concerned with the total inability of their government to take any decision in energy matters, except the dismantling of Petro-Canada, have been shocked to learn that at least two of the major oil multinationals have been siphoning millions of Canadian dollars to their United States parents, while others have diverted large amounts into enterprises unrelated to the oil and gas industries.

Since the amounts of Canadian dollars passing through the hands of multinationals annually may exceed $25 billion, or 10 per cent of the gross national product of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans):

That this House urges the government to charge the Auditor General to inquire, pursuant to section 11 of the Auditor General Act and section 9 of the Petroleum Corporations Monitoring Act, into the financial activities of the oil multinationals operating in Canada, including the transfer of funds into parent companies as well as the diversion of funds into investments unrelated to the oil and gas industry in Canada or abroad.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT MODIFY POLICY CONCERNING PETRO-CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that the latest Gallup poll confirms the retreat of this government, and that the Prime Minister and the officials of the Progressive Conservative Party did not even succeed in having their own candidate elected as president of the Quebec section of that party at their convention last weekend; considering that not only public opinion but even the members of the Progressive Conservative Party have lost confidence in this government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle):

That the House request the government to modify completely its policies and, especially, to relinquish its plans to dismantle Petro-Canada and to raise taxes substantially on the pretext of energy conservation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. This motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

MISSISSAUGA DISASTER—RELEASE FORMS SIGNED BY AFFECTED RESIDENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway has been exacting liability release forms from the residents of Mississauga before making any payment for out of pocket expenses, and whereas this amounts to a form of economic duress and proves once again that some rob you with a six-gun and some with a fountain pen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That this House condemns the CPR for exacting releases from future liability from the residents of Mississauga as a precondition for payment of out of pocket expenses, calls upon the government of Ontario to render such releases null and void, and calls upon the Government of Canada to use all the resources at its disposal to dissuade the CPR from this course of action.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING ENERGY BANK BEFORE BRINGING DOWN BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the announcement made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) during the conference which was held among the premiers of the provinces and himself last November 12, regarding the creation of a Canadian energy bank; and considering the commitment he made last weekend in Quebec City during the convention of the Quebec wing of the Progressive Conservative Party, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy):

That the House request that the government introduce in the House its legislation on the Canadian energy bank before bringing down the budget scheduled for next week.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF NORTHERN DEFENCE FORCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Alex Jupp (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the claims by Major General Herbert Pitts, formerly the head of the Canadian Airborne Brigade, in last evening's CTV program "W5" that because of the neglect of our defence requirements over the past decade, our northern defence forces are so inadequate and antiquated that as few as 1,000 Soviet troops could take over our northern installations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the government undertake a special inquiry into the serious nature of General Pitts' allegations, with a mandate to recommend specific steps to restore our northern defence capacity.

REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION OF CONVERSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on an urgent and important matter.

Considering that the metric system has been adopted by almost every country, except the United States, considering that it was introduced in Canada almost ten years ago and that Canadians from coast to coast are gradually yet quickly getting used to it, considering that governments, small and medium businesses and institutions have, since 1970, spent large amounts of money to acquire the new weights and measures equipment; and considering that it will cost us millions of dollars more if the handful of Progressive Conservative members who have been attacking the system for highly questionable reasons continue to do so, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery):

That the Prime Minister, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicate to the House, unequivocally and as soon as possible, whether it is their intention to continue to obstruct for a long time, and without reason, the total and complete conversion in Canada to the metric system.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN CRISIS—COLLECTIVE STATEMENT DENOUNCING HOSTAGE-TAKING

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, as we enter the fifth week of the hostage-taking incident in Iran. As, over the last few days, the heads of the European Economic Community have decided to make a collective statement denouncing that incident—I hope they do not have to apologize to the members of the European Parliament, as our foreign minister did when I asked that the statement be made at the heads of government level—I would like to know, and the House would like to be informed by the Prime Minister whether he has taken steps toward getting that type of statement from the seven participants at the Tokyo Summit, which would constitute a reinforcing of our solidarity with the United States.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I naturally welcome the decision taken by the leaders of the European Economic Community at Dublin. I think their statement was strong and unequivocal and indicates that they stand, as Canada does, very strongly in support of the efforts of the United States to have Iran respect international law.

Pursuant to suggestions made by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and others, I have been in touch with some of the other countries represented at the Tokyo Summit. It is my view that it would not be particularly productive to have the wealthy nations of the world, represented at the Tokyo Summit, gathered together at that forum or as emanations of that forum to add to statements which each of those nations has already made individually, or in other forums.

Mr. Trudeau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to upholding international law, I am not quite certain how the Prime Minister thinks the size of one's pocketbook can affect the declaration. Surely the members of the EEC did not look to their pocketbooks before making that statement. The Prime Minister fails to see the point, once again, that it is collective action and collective decisions which are noted and needed at this point, not individual statements by Canada or someone else. The Europeans have understood that.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister, once again, if he could tell us if he is working toward some international statement of co-operation of the leaders of the seven nations. Could he tell us what kind of statement he is looking at? Is it merely a statement of protest at the breach of international law, or is he seeking to get a commitment from various friends and allies of the United States that they would be prepared to impose international sanctions on Iran or any other country which acted in breach of international law?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that, of all people in this House, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition would have understood that in a situation as delicate and as complex as this, the purpose of Canada and other countries in seeking to uphold international law should not be simply to be heard, but should be, rather, to be effective in trying to bring influence to bear on the Iranian authorities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I am not interested, and I think most Canadians are not interested, in finding a forum for Canada to speak. We have plenty of those forums, and we have been effective there. What I am interested in, and what I think other countries in the world are interested in, is finding a variety of means by which the authorities in Iran can be persuaded to respect international law.

Consequently, we as the Government of Canada have taken a role of leadership, through a variety of the forums open to us, that we believe will have influence on the Iranians. We have done that at the United Nations; we have done that through the Commonwealth; we are doing it through Francophonie. We are doing that individually and bilaterally with other countries. That will continue to be our approach, to try to amass as much as possible a range of influence upon the Iranian authorities to encourage them to respect international law. Our interests will be in the response of Iranian, not the response of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister is on solid ground when he asks for effective action and not merely expressions of indignation. But it seems to me that that is what the world has been having a lot of in the past month, expressions of indignation, of solidarity for the United States, and the whole point of my question, Mr. Speaker, is that it has not been effective. A month will have elapsed tomorrow since the taking of the hostages. We have not been effective. When we met in Bonn a couple of summers ago, we took effective action against hijacking by deciding that we would all act collectively against those who perpetrated any hijacking.

What I want to know now from the government is whether it is contemplating such a form of action or declaration, a declaration of solidarity with the United States indicating that if we do not act collectively against this international terrorism, at least we would support the United States in imposing sanctions on its own against any country like Iran which is perpetrating indignities against the United States.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we are, naturally, considering whether sanctions by Canada, by the United States or by anyone else would be effective. At this stage, we think what will be effective is not a show of force in relation to Iran, except the force of international opinion, and we are trying through a variety of initiatives, public and private, to bring to bear upon authorities in Iran the view of Canada and the view of other countries which respect international law that the situation now existing in Iran is not acceptable.

I repeat to the House, and I repeat to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition who, of all members in this House, should understand the delicacy of the situation, that this is not a matter where a desire for domestic publicity should be allowed to interfere with the effectiveness of international action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNITED STATES DECISION NOT TO PURCHASE OIL FROM IRAN—POSSIBLE ASSISTANCE FROM CANADA

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to avoid seeking publicity in putting this question, and follow the modesty of the Prime Minister who has never been known to seek publicity on any subject.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: But more seriously, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has talked about effective action and a range of influences, especially the necessity of supporting the United States. In view of the fact that a high official in the Carter administration had a statement attributed to him over the weekend, that allies of the United States were prepared to do everything they could to help the hostages, except to hurt themselves—it seems to me that that reflects the feeling of isolation that is growing in the United States—has the Prime Minister explored within his government or with other governments the possibility of assisting the United States this winter because of its decision not to purchase any more oil from Iran by making available, in concert with other nations, some additional supplies?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we would certainly be prepared to consider that.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on another point related to that, may I ask the Prime Minister, has he explored or is he prepared to explore, in concert with other nations, taking the step which the United States has already taken, namely, to declare that it will no longer rely upon sources in Iran for oil supplies? Would he explore that possibility and consider it possibly with other nations as a way of giving some teeth to his readiness to apply sanctions in this situation?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, certainly, again, we would be prepared to consider that to see whether it would be effective. I repeat to the hon. member and to the House that what we are interested in here is not simply showing the extent of our support for the United States, for North American reasons, but what we are interested in here is to try to mobilize international opinion in a way that will have an effect upon the authorities in Iran.

It may be that indications of support for the United States, of the kind to which the hon. member refers, would be useful. If so, we will certainly consider them seriously. But I think it is important for me to underline to the House how essential it is, in circumstances like this, for us to act with some calm, to act in a way that is designed to have influence upon authorities in Iran as our primary purpose, and not to let that primary purpose fall prey to any subsidiary domestic purpose.

NATURAL RESOURCES

CLOSING OF IRON ORE MINES—CALL FOR INVESTIGATION AND ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that a particularly serious situation exists in the iron ore mining industry in Ontario, with four out of nine iron ore mines closing in the last 18 months, with a loss of over 1,200 jobs, the fact that the Ontario steel industry now imports 58 per cent of its iron ore, most of it from the United States, and the fact that mines in Atikokan and Capreol can still provide this iron ore, will the minister tell the House what steps he plans to take to investigate the situation and to get these mines and men working again?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, there has been a downturn in the demand for steel from Canadian producers, as well as with respect to iron ore from mines in Canada. Part of this is attributable to increased production in the United States. We in the department are very much involved in monitoring this situation. In conjunction with my colleagues in cabinet, we will continue to watch the situation in order to see what can be done to improve the circumstances in Canadian mines and with regard to steel producers.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister, because trying to get an answer from the minister is like trying to find eggs in a cuckoo clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You're the expert on cuckoos.

Mr. Rodriguez: Keeping in mind that steel mills in Canada are operating at or near 100 per cent capacity, and that it is the density of foreign ownership of our resources and the vertical integration of monopolies in the iron mining and steel industries in Canada that are resulting in the replacement of Canadian iron ore production by foreign imports, can the Prime Minister tell us whether his government is prepared to take steps to rationalize the iron and steel industry so that Canadians can get the maximum benefits from their resources?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the claim of the hon. member to absolute authority in relation to anything touching on cuckoos is uncontested in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: In relation to his question, we as a government are certainly interested in developing means by which we can encourage more Canadians to become more active in the ownership of Canadian resource industries. That is one of the reasons we are proposing the steps we are in relation to energy policy. If the hon. member and his party are seriously interested in practical steps that will encourage Canadian ownership of Canadian resources, I hope they will support the measures we put forward in relation to energy development.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Gallup poll has determined who the real cuckoo is in this House at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I will direct my final supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the friend of the mining companies. Maybe he will have some answers. Was the minister informed, in advance, of the lay-offs in all of these iron ore mines? What steps is he taking to overcome the disastrous effects of such shutdowns, because all of them have occurred in one-industry communities? What is he going to do? We want no pussy-footing around.

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. My officials were informed of, I believe, all the cases to which the hon. member has made reference.

Mr. Rodriguez: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Atkey: My officials in the Manpower consultative services have been meeting with mining company officials and union officials to see if there are certain alternatives that can be taken to soften the blow of the lay-offs for the men concerned. One, of course, is unemployment insurance. Another is work-sharing. A variety of options are available within the Manpower consultative service program, and these will be fully explored.

ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL ENERGY BANK

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, at the first ministers' conference which met here in Ottawa on November 12 last, the Prime Minister proposed the establishment of a national energy bank. Over the weekend, in Quebec City, the Prime Minister said he would keep his promise. Today, I should like to ask him, for the benefit of the House and the Canadian people, first, when that project will be put before the House; second, who will finance that bank and, third, whether the oil companies will have to participate in it?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a serious question and I appreciate it very much. I intend to discuss the establishment of a Canadian energy bank with the provincial premiers here on December 17 and 18. We have already had general discussions with them in this regard but, as the hon. member knows, the government hopes that Canada can have such an institution in which not only the federal government would participate but also some of the provinces; if the provinces participate, it would be appropriate for them to take part in drafting the terms of reference of that bank.

With regard to the funds, they would be collected through federal taxes. We intend to channel all the funds provided by new taxes to oil companies; we want to channel them to the Canadian energy bank and other energy projects. We hope it will be possible for some of the provinces to contribute to it financially.

As for the third part of the question dealing with the participation of the companies, we intend to have the Canadian energy bank give special assistance to those Canadian companies that want to participate in the development of Canadian natural resources.

INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT IN PRINCIPLE CONCLUDED WITH CERTAIN PROVINCES

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister has had talks with the provincial governments. I would like to know whether his proposal or at least its basic principle has been accepted by some of them. Further, I would like to ask him whether the oil companies will be obliged to deposit in the Canadian energy bank the profits accruing from the price increases or if the government only intends to get that money through the tax system. In other words, I would like to know whether the increases—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, most provinces have made a statement of intent about the establishment of a Canadian energy bank. If that is necessary, I hope we can introduce a bill in the House in January or February. I hope we can do it in January. As for the issue of profits, we intend to develop a taxation scheme through which we can recoup most of the new profits the oil companies will make following the increase in the price. We will direct a large part of this money towards the Canadian energy bank while other revenues from that source will be directed towards Canada's other energy goals.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POSSIBLE FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR CHRYSLER CANADA

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry. He is no doubt aware that a few days ago Mr. Greenwald, a vice-president of Chrysler (America), appeared before a congressional committee and stated that negotiations were under way with the Canadian government for financial help for Chrysler Canada to the extent of $150 million to $300 million. As I say, he indicated—and this was confirmed to the standing committee last week—that negotiations were going on with Canada.

Could the minister advise the House whether, in the process of these negotiations, we are insisting on Canadian equity participation in the ownership of Chrysler here, as a means of ensuring that our money stays in Canada and that Canadian jobs stay in Canada to give our people opportunity for employment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): One of our principal concerns in the negotiations we are carrying on right now with the Chrysler Canada people is the employment of the people involved in Windsor. This will be studied from a number of different angles. Indeed, the question has been under study for about two months as a result of a series of meetings we have had with Chrysler Canada officials. I cannot say at this stage just what form of government support they would receive, if any.

As to the proposals we are considering, we are looking at a wide range of possibilities and as soon as decisions have been reached I will be very happy to advise the House.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. He can no doubt give a specific answer to my question. About three months ago the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association of Canada suggested to the Canadian government that in return for financial help to Chrysler, we should ask for the sale of Chrysler parts manufacturing subsidiaries to Canadians, and that in addition we should ask for increased Canadian participation and ownership in Chrysler Canada. That would be one of the conditions for advancing any money to save Chrysler Corporation. If the Prime Minister is not aware whether this is a condition or not, would he be prepared to consider it as one of the conditions for any help?

Mr. Wilson: As I said to the hon. member earlier, that is one of the options which is open to us. We are looking at a variety of options. Our principal concern is to protect the jobs of the people in the Windsor community who are affected. As soon as we are able to put forward a specific package on completion of our negotiations with Chrysler Canada, we shall do so.

STUDY OF CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the great concern over Canada's international deficit situation and the fact that the auto pact is about to add some $3.1 billion to that deficit, and bearing in mind that the Ontario minister of industry and tourism has announced that the province is preparing a study of the auto pact—which is a federal government agreement with the United States—is the right hon. gentleman prepared to enter into joint co-operative effort with Ontario to examine the auto pact which could have such a great bearing on the future of our economy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): As the hon. member may know, the Government of Canada completed a study last year and so, I understand, did the government of Ontario. I would certainly be prepared to discuss the matter with officials of the Ontario government to determine whether they think there is any need for a new study, and whether they believe it would be useful for the federal government to participate in such a study. We would make our decision on the basis of the response.

ENERGY

OUTFLOW OF FUNDS FROM OIL MULTINATIONALS—SITUATION WITH OTHER MULTINATIONALS

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a further question to the Prime Minister, again dealing with the question of the deficit. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated he intends to bring in the multinational oil companies to look into the outflow of funds which was announced on Friday in a report from his department.

Would the Prime Minister agree to involve himself in these discussions, and would he be prepared to pursue the matter further by inquiring whether other multinational corporations might be behaving in a similar way by allowing money to flow out of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): I do not think there will be any need to involve myself at this stage. The matter is within the active responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. His officials are meeting this week with those of the companies concerned, I believe. The minister himself will be meeting with other representatives of those companies, more senior representatives, if that turns out to be necessary. I think there is no need for me to become involved at this stage.

In relation to the broader question, I will check with our officials to see if we have any record of significant movement in fields other than energy. As the hon. member and the House will know, the danger has been most acute and most evident in relation to energy companies.

INTEREST RATE INCREASES—IMPACT ON AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the statement last week by Ken Graydon, executive vice-president of the 2,800 member Federation of Automobile Dealer Associations, predicting that the delayed impact of recent interest rate increases could mean that the Canadian auto industry is only "a month or two away from real hurt", does the government not feel that there is an urgency involved in making a decision about Chrysler Canada before the situation deteriorates any further?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have been very conscious of the state of the industry in the discussions we have had with Chrysler Canada officials. I think a great deal of good discussion has been going on today to try to get to the heart of this problem so that we will be able to come forward with a proposal which will receive acceptance by this House.

I should point out that the proposal which has been put forward by Chrysler does not call for a bail-out situation the same as in the United States. It is a proposal which relates to the long-term development of the company and the industry in this country.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister. Given that employment at the Chrysler Canada engine plant in Windsor has dropped from 2,800 workers in 1978 to around 500 workers now, because of the plant's continued reliance on production of V-8 engines, and given that this plant could be the location of production of a new Chrysler V-6 engine, will this House be assured that any aid given to Chrysler will be contingent on the V-6 engines being produced at Windsor rather than the rival site considered at Trenton, Michigan?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, the future of the engine plant is very much a part of the proposals which have been put forward by the people of Chrysler. I do not think anything more can be said now in a meaningful way without jeopardizing the industrial confidence and the competitive position of Chrysler in the automotive industry.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NUCLEAR EXPORT PROGRAM

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on the same subject of jobs, but changing the industry to the nuclear industry, my question is to the Prime Minister. About 35,000 jobs directly, and the fate of more than 100 manufacturers, wholly or in part, are dependent on the success of the nuclear export program. Yet there are uncertainties and difficulties in marketing in Argentina and Japan.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has made a statement demanding "the most stringent conditions", which is unclear. A parliamentary committee might be created soon on the whole problem of nuclear energy. Could the Prime Minister commit himself to a calm, but strong and relatively detailed statement on the nuclear export program, in the coming weeks?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think I can state again the position of the Government of Canada in relation to the nuclear export program. It might be helpful for that to be done as a prelude to the consideration of related questions by a committee of this House. I will take the opportunity to review the guidelines and the conditions set down, not only by this government but also by the preceding government, and also to review the very active work which has been undertaken by the Minister of State for International Trade and others in pursuing contracts for the Canadian nuclear industry.

FISHERIES

POLICY RESPECTING BRITISH COLUMBIA HERRING FISHERY

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The minister was quite busy at the end of last week announcing three policies, one on Atlantic salmon and another on the roe herring industry in British Columbia, and on Friday he announced a new policy for factory trawlers on the east coast.

In view of the fact that the policy of the minister on the roe herring industry in British Columbia will result in the loss of 800 to 1,000 jobs in that industry, and in view of the fact that the minister has guaranteed that in the Atlantic industry bona fide salmon industry fishermen will maintain their jobs, will the minister guarantee the same rights to bona fide fishermen in the British Columbia herring industry, and will he assure us that those moonlighters who have been in the industry will be curtailed just as they will be on the Atlantic coast?

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that this will result in a short disruption for the fishermen who are to be affected. However, I will certainly take the hon. member's question as a representation and I will be prepared to discuss it with him.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF NORTHERN DEFENCE FORCES

Mr. Alex Jupp (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Defence. It is a follow-up of my motion under Standing Order 43 which, unfortunately, was turned down because of the negative votes of some hon. members in the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question, would he put it forthwith.

Mr. Jupp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question pertains to the very serious allegations which were made in last evening's "W5" program in which it was said that because of a decade of neglect, Canada's situation in terms of being able to defend our country is in very serious jeopardy and that, indeed, 1,000 Soviet troops could take over our northern installations.

Would the Minister of National Defence be prepared to consider setting up a special inquiry which would have as its mandate the making of recommendations to Canada on the necessary steps which must be taken in order to restore our defence capacity in northern Canada?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious question and I can say that I, of all people in the House, am well aware of the deficiencies in the equipment of the Canadian Armed Forces. Unfortunately, we cannot turn a situation like that around in six months. A more modest appraisal would be that in about six years we can turn it around. We intend to do the best we can, with the funds which are available to us, to provide equipment and armed forces to ensure the sovereignty of this nation.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY WHETHER BASIC AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON CREATION OF JOBS WILL BE RESPECTED

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. On March 14, 1974, one of his predecessors, the Hon. Don Jamieson, signed a basic agreement with Quebec for a period of ten years in order to stimulate the creation of permanent jobs and a more balanced development among Quebec and the other provinces of Canada. This basic agreement and this development agreement was translated into subsidiary agreements.

Can the minister say whether that agreement will be honoured up to its term of expiry and, if so, in order that it does not become inoperative, did the minister ensure that the Minister of Finance will grant the necessary funds and, more particularly, does the minister intend to stand by the letter of the subsidiary agreements being implemented and to respect the timetables agreed upon, so that the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area may benefit from the $16 million set aside for this year and the $55 million earmarked for the period 1980 to 1983?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that our department will continue to perform its mandate under the tems of the general development agreement, not just in Quebec but in all the provinces, and that my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has a very genuine commitment to regional development. We will be following through and honouring our commitments.

AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR MODIFICATION TO ASSIST SAGUENAY-LAKE SAINT JEAN REGION

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. While he is favourably disposed, could the minister indicate whether new and additional agreements, as well as amendments to existing agreements could be negotiated and signed between the Government of Canada and the government of Quebec in order to assist the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area which requires major and immediate assistance to alleviate its economic situation?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I trust that this will be possible: certainly, it is my desire that it be so. This will be a matter for continuing discussion between ourselves and the government of Quebec.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OIL SUPPLIES WILL BE SUFFICIENT THIS WINTER

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It relates to the extremely serious, extremely fragile situation, to use the minister's own terms, of Canada's oil supply this winter, particularly in eastern Canada. A few weeks ago, in answer to a question, the minister indicated that an oil shipment leaving Iran today would reach Canada on December 14, and that another shipment would leave Iran on January 4 and arrive on February 5. Can the minister tell us, first, whether the loading of the December 3 shipment is proceeding normally and whether we can count on this oil being delivered? Also, can he tell us whether Canada expects a fifth shipment which is not scheduled yet in addition to the January 4 one, which would reach Canada later during 1980, so as to ensure that we will not experience any oil shortage this winter?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that this morning I communicated with the president of Gulf with respect to the present circumstances on shipment of crude to Canada from Iran. He confirmed that the second shipment is, in fact, very close to delivery in eastern Canada and we should expect it.

Also, he indicated to me that he expects arrangements will be made relating to additional shipments at the beginning of the New Year. Due to the uncertainty in terms of the Iranian situation, it is impossible to say whether or not that will be the source of supply. But the company is working very hard to obtain alternate sources of supply with respect to crude. They are very optimistic that that, in fact, will be received by us in February.

INQUIRY WHETHER FIFTH OIL SHIPMENT WILL ARRIVE FROM IRAN

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. My question may have confused the minister a little. I wanted to know if another shipment is scheduled after the January 4 shipment. Could the minister confirm that this fourth shipment is indeed scheduled for early in 1980, or is there some connection between this shipment and the lack of vigour with which the government is dealing with the matter of the hostages' release in Iran?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange that the hon. member would raise this point with respect to further deliveries from Iran when his leader, not five minutes ago, indicated that we should impose a sanction with respect to deliveries from Iran.

The fact is that the corporation indicated to me today, in the discussions, that they are not only bringing in supplies in terms of light crude which will be brought to the refineries here, but also are investigating in a very serious way the importation of product to supply Canadian needs over the course of this winter.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE WHICH WILL DUPLICATE WORK OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. As the House is aware, the government has announced its intention to appoint a special committee to look into cost overruns on major government projects, which would appear to be part of the mandate of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Therefore, my question to the President of the Treasury Board is: during this period of concern with government expenditure, how can he justify the establishment of a committee which effectively would duplicate the mandate of a standing committee of this House?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. member has asked me that question, because it gives me an opportunity to draw the significant distinction between the work the special committee will be doing and the very good work which the Standing Committee on Public Accounts does with regard to such things as major capital expenditures.

The special committee will deal with the present: it will deal with jobs that are ongoing, where we have been told that there could be overruns as much as 400 per cent from the original estimate. We would like that committee today to tell us what we can do to arrest this dreadful situation with such overruns. I hope the Standing Committee on Public Accounts will carry on its good work of looking at the deals which were reported on, say, two years ago by the Auditor General, and of drawing up more general guidelines as to what might be done of a more general nature in order to have a more satisfactory management system in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board does not appear to be aware of the current work of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and the Study of Procedures in Cost Effectiveness on an ongoing basis which the Auditor General is carrying out.

My question is: since the work, essentially, has had this same objective, non-partisan approach, surely it would be appropriate to appoint a member of the opposition as chairman of such a committee, in the same spirit as the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker established in 1957, that a member of the opposition should be chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if I may reply to the hon. member, in no way do we wish to see the Standing Committee on Public Accounts cease doing its good work. But what we are saying is that there are specific projects before us. At the present time, Treasury Board is considering an overrun in the Prince Rupert grain drying facility, in the MAPP facility in Montreal, in an environmental centre in Newfoundland, and we would like the advice of a parliamentary committee as to how it thinks we can arrest, somehow or other, these dreadful overruns which we are now experiencing. We would like the committee to tell us, have we done enough to arrest the deterioration as far as the expenditures are concerned? Do they have any suggestions?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FEASIBILITY OF STATIONING NUCLEAR SUBMARINES IN GREAT LAKES

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs. It concerns the rather startling reports that the United States department of defence presently is seriously investigating the feasibility of stationing Trident nuclear submarines in the Great Lakes as an alternative to the MX program.

Has the minister informed his American counterpart that such a plan would place the United States in violation of the Rush-Bagot agreement, and has he taken steps to inform the United States that Canadians are not prepared to accept, under any circumstances, Trident nuclear submarines in the Great Lakes?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Frankly, Mr. Speaker, it has always seemed to me that the idea was too preposterous to take seriously.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CALL FOR TENDERS ON CONTRACTS—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT HAS CHANGED POLICY

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Supply and Services why he changed the policy relating to Media Buying Services Ltd. When he testified before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, he repeated three times that the government would use the tender system for contracts to advertising agencies. Now, the House knows about two contracts which were awarded to Allan Gregg and a third one about the tourism bureau without any call for tenders. Why did the minister change his policy?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the answer is quite simple. When the committee asked those questions, I referred to an eventual contract which was to be signed in the short term. That contract should be signed very soon now. I clearly stated to the committee that I could not say anything about that contract because it had not been signed yet. Given the old practice of calling for tenders, we hired a company specializing in that field for the reasons we have already told the House. That mechanism allows us to achieve the goals that we had already set—reduction of expenses and quality of programs—and we trust that MBS will give us the best possible information because of its experience and qualifications in the field.

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENTS MADE TO MEDIA BUYING SERVICES

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, since there is no contract at present between the federal government and that firm, and since the latter has nevertheless started to award contracts, and so on, has the government already made payments to that firm? If so, how much, and how does it figure out how much a firm that is doing so much for the taxpayers will be paid without a contract?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, given the responsibilities of MBS, I am talking about an over-all contract, but my department has already signed three contracts for July, September and October in the amounts of $39,000, $20,000 and $21,000. Contracts have been awarded by my department and we hope to sign at least a medium-term, over-all contract for the responsibilities entrusted to that firm.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DATE OF PROGRAM TO PROVIDE NEW IMPETUS IN UNDERDEVELOPED REGIONS

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Supply and Services. Last week, he said that we have made a lot of speeches and now the time has come to act. Now that the government is about to unveil the details of a broad strategy for economic recovery by all underdeveloped regions, including Chicoutimi, may I ask the minister when that announcement will be made and what economic sectors it will deal with?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I think I do not have any particular news to give the hon. member for Chicoutimi today. I simply said we had made a lot of assessments and we are about to announce certain projects that will please Quebec as a whole and Canadians as a whole. The budget of the Minister of Finance is forthcoming, and there will also be statements by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion which will surely please, I hope not only Canadians as a whole but also the people of Chicoutimi.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STUDY OF PROPOSED BRINEX URANIUM MINE

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment. Public hearings on the Brinex uranium mine proposal are commencing today and are to continue until December 8, 1979. Residents of coastal communities in Labrador have informed me that they have neither the time nor the funds with which to study and assess the available data and information in order to prepare their position.

Can the minister assure the House that he will send representatives from his department to cover and monitor the hearings on the proposed Brinex uranium mine and to ensure that residents are satisfied with the review process?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. As a result of representations made by the hon. member last week, I have made arrangements to have an official of my department at the hearing today. A senior official was dispatched this morning and will be there for the remainder of the hearings. I thank the hon. member for his concern.

PENSIONS

STATUS OF LAZAR REPORT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to clear up a matter that has been arousing some controversy in the House while I have been away, and Your Honour commented on it on Friday. It has to do with the status of the Lazar report on the Canadian pension system, a study done over a period of two or three years by officials of the government.

These are the facts, Mr. Speaker. The report is in three sections; a report, summary and appendices. It was originally drafted in English. With regard to the English version, the report and the summary are ready for printing. These have been delayed awaiting the French version. At the present time the budget has priority with the printing presses. The report and summary in English are scheduled for printing beginning the weekend of December 15. They can only be printed on weekends and can be completed on the weekend of December 21 and 22. The appendices in English will be ready in mid-January. We are dealing with hundreds of pages of material, some 400 to 450 pages.

Having regard to the French version, the translation should be returned around mid-December. This has been farmed out to translators around the country in order to expedite it. It is being done by those translators in addition to our own. The edited French version of the report should be completed in mid-January, and the summary should be ready by mid-December. The French version of the appendices should be ready by mid-January.

I believe that we can undertake to have the complete English and French versions ready for tabling in the House by the end of January. If there are members in the opposition, pension critics or whoever the opposition parties nominate, who are anxious to get a copy now, we can supply the English version. We cannot table it in the House until we have both the English and French versions. If there is great anxiety in this regard, and certainly there is no one more anxious than we are as we want to refer this report and others to the committee for consideration of the whole pension area, we have several English copies we can provide for this purpose.

REGULATORY AGENCIES

Question No. 151—Mr. Herbert:

1. How many federal regulatory agencies, having regulatory or semi-judicial powers, exist?

2. What is the number of such regulatory agencies reporting to Parliament through members of the ministry and what is the number the Prime Minister and each cabinet minister is primarily responsible for?

3. What is the number reporting only to the Prime Minister and to members of the ministry and what is the number from whom each receives a report?

4. How many do not report to Parliament or for whom no cabinet minister is responsible?

Mr. John Bosley (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister):

1. There is no formal official definition of what constitutes a regulatory agency.

One possible definition was provided by the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, as "agencies whose primary functions are licensing, making rules and orders, and supervising activities in a particular industry or sector of the economy" (Final Report, page 309). On this basis the royal commission listed the following bodies:

Anti-Dumping Tribunal

*Anti-Inflation Board

Atomic Energy Control Board

Canada Labour Relations Board

Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission

Canadian Transport Commission

International Boundary Commission

*Since ceased to exist.

International Joint Commission

National Energy Board

Office of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act

Petroleum Compensation Board

Public Service Staff Relations Board

Restrictive Trade Practices Commission

Tariff Board

It might be noted that other writings on the subject have usually suggested less broad definitions of the term regulatory.

2 and 3. Eight of the bodies mentioned above have reported annually to Parliament through members of the ministry. These are:

Minister of Communications

Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission

Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources

Atomic Energy Control Board

National Energy Board

Minister of Finance

Anti-Inflation Board

Anti-Dumping Tribunal

Minister of Labour

Canada Labour Relations Board

President of the Privy Council

Public Service Staff Relations Board

Minister of Transport

Canadian Transport Commission

The situation with the remaining six bodies, classified according to minister responsible, is:

Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs

The activities of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission are encompassed in the annual report of the director of investigation and research, both being bodies established under the Combines Investigation Act.

Secretary of State for External Affairs

Annual and other reports of the International Joint Commission and the International Boundary Commission are made public.

Minister for Energy, Mines and Resources

The Petroleum Compensation Board is established under the Petroleum Administration Act. Section 94 of that act requires the minister to prepare a report to be presented to Parliament on the administration of the act.

Minister of Finance

The Tariff Board is not required to report annually, but all reports, evidence and information (other than confidential material) on specific matters examined by the board must be laid before the Parliament.

Minister of National Revenue

Reports of the administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act are tabled.

Further information on reports and documents to be laid before the Parliament is obtainable from relevant statutes, and from the "List of Reports and Returns to be made to the House of Commons by Public Officers and Private Corporations" prepared for members by the Law Clerk and Parliamentary counsel.

4. None.

REDUCTION OF PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 230—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Was a study undertaken to ascertain the profitability of the possible 60,000 jobs cut in the Public Service and, if so (a) which sectors will be affected (b) how many lay-offs will there be in each sector (c) what will be the saving for each sector?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board): There has been no single study undertaken to determine the profitability of the 60,000 job cut. However, a board strategy to achieve this reduction has been developed and announced. The strategy is based on a reduction of 20,000 to be realized from the privatization of Crown corporations, a decrease of 5,000 in the agencies and Crown corporations that receive parliamentary appropriations but whose personnel resources are not subject to Treasury Board control, and a reduction of 35,000 in the controlled public service. The government also announced that one of its guiding principles in achieving these reductions would be reliance on attrition. As each phase of this strategy is implemented, studies will be undertaken to ensure that the cuts are designed to achieve the greatest possible savings for Canadian taxpayers.

RE-EVALUATION OF GOVERNMENT'S ELECTORAL POSITION

Question No. 243—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Between May 22 and October 9, 1979, did the government conduct any studies re-evaluating the electoral position of the party in power and, if so (a) how many (b) what was the total cost?

Mr. John Bosley (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

SUPERANNUATION

Question No. 378—Mr. Pepin:

1. For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979, what amount of interest was credited to the (a) Public Service Superannuation Account (b) Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (c) Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account?

2. What amount did each account receive by way of contributions in the same period?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): I am informed by the Department of National Defence and the President of Treasury Board as follows:

1. (a) The amount of interest credited to the public service superannuation account during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979 was $374,687,241. This represents interest earnings at a rate of 4 per cent per annum. Interest earnings over that amount (currently earnings from the difference between interest rates of 8 per cent and 4 per cent) are used to offset the cost to the government of amortizing over a period of five years, the liability created by salary increases.

   (b) $310,700,953.91

   (c) The amount of interest credited to the supplementary retirement benefits account was $36,680,602.

2. The total amount of contributions paid into the public service superannuation account including government contributions, employee contributions and salary increase deficiency credits was $1,016,141,519.

The total amount of employee and government contributions paid into the supplementary retirement benefits account was $134,377,334.

Canadian Forces superannuation account:

Current contributions	$69,318,651.85
Arrears of contributions	$1,383,899.58
Transfers from other funds	$45,644.40

CBC ART COLLECTION—CALGARY

Question No. 548—Mr. Friesen:

1. How many works of art are in the collection at CBC headquarters, Calgary, Alberta and, what is (a) a description of each item, its purchase price and the name of the artist (b) the purpose of the collection?

2. Does the corporation have other collections or does it plan any other collections?

3. Is the collection added to on a regular basis and, if so, how are the works chosen?

4. How were the original works chosen and what was the budget for each year since it was initiated?

5. Who owns the collection, i.e. CBC Calgary or the corporation as a whole?

6. For how long has it been CBC's practice to purchase art works for a collection?

7. How many original works have been purchased by the corporation in the past ten years and, in each case, what was the (a) name of the artist (b) name of the work (c) purchase price?

8. (a) How many collections does CBC have (b) where are they located (c) how many works are there in each collection (d) what is the estimated value of each collection (e) is any item ever loaned to a private gallery etc.?

9. Does the corporation ever sell any of its acquisitions and, if so (a) what is the policy in this regard (b) how many have been sold to date (c) what policy does the corporation follow in the expenditure of this income i.e. is it used to purchase art?

10. How does the corporation refer to such collections for the purpose of documentation, i.e. as an art collection or furnishings?

11. (a) How are the art works displayed in each collection (b) what number are in public areas, private offices or are located in a gallery situation?

Voluntary Sector

12. How many persons are involved in (a) choosing the works (b) maintaining the collection?

Return tabled.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

STRENGTHENING OF ROLE—APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The House resumed from Friday, November 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (for Mr. MacDonald, Egmont):

That a special committee of the House of Commons be appointed to inquire into and report upon means to strengthen the role of the voluntary sector in Canadian society;

That the committee, taking into account the scope of activities now being carried out by the voluntary sector, the problems being faced by voluntary groups and the extent, nature and impact of current government support, report its conclusions and recommendations with respect to the measures that could be taken by the federal government to strengthen the role of the voluntary sector

(1) as an objective that is desirable in its own right,

(2) as an alternative to public dependence on government services, and

(3) in ways that would enhance the ability of such groups to operate independently of government together with such other matters as the committee considers relevant;

That the committee submit reports from time to time, as appropriate, and in any case a final report not later than May 31, 1980;

That the special committee be composed of seven members of the House of Commons to be designated at a later date;

That the committee have the power to appoint from among its members such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable and necessary and to delegate to such subcommittees all or any of its powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

That the committee have the power to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That the committee be empowered to retain the services of expert advisers and to commission studies or research to assist in its work and that it also be empowered to retain such professional, technical, clerical and stenographic help as may be required.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on behalf of my party today in relation to the proposed special committee on voluntarism. I should like first of all to review the purpose of this special committee, which is to "inquire into and report upon means to strengthen the role of the voluntary sector in Canadian society". Several questions need clarification, however.

First, what is meant by "voluntary sector"? I assume the government refers to non-profit activities in the fields of health, welfare, environment, recreation, education and many other community or national endeavours which are sponsored by private organizations rather than by governments, and which involve the use of volunteers or the participation of ordinary citizens.

We hear so much these days about government privatization, or "privateering" as we call it on this side of the House, or at least those of us in this corner, that we should perhaps clarify that this, indeed, is not what will be the concern of this committee. I assume this committee will not concern itself with the great debates on free enterprise versus public ownership, but will concentrate instead on human services that are primarily for the benefit of humanity, and are not concerned with profits in the material sense.

My next question then is, why do we need another committee to study the many aspects of voluntarism? I hope most members are aware that there was a lengthy report put out by the national advisory council on voluntary action called "People in Action", commissioned by the past Liberal government. It was published in September, 1977, after a three-year period of study that involved many groups across Canada.

This extensive analysis posed many valuable recommendations for government action. Why do we need another study committee? There are a few things the report left unanswered, including a clear definition and a listing of voluntary organizations that were involved. However, surely we do not need a repeat performance. We do not need another study on the need for action which would only serve to delay further action.

I can only assume that the present government is suspicious of studies done by the previous government, and perhaps we should share their suspicion, even though the "People in Action" report appears to be fairly objective and even critical of the role of government in relation to voluntary activities. I appreciate, hopefully as a means of promoting action, that there has been a short time span designated for this special committee. I sincerely hope this means that action is intended in the very near future.

Whether or not this special committee can adequately study the scope of activities carried out by the private sector, the problems faced by voluntary groups, the extent, nature and impact of current government support, and report its conclusions, as has been suggested within this proposal, within six months remains to be seen. I know that there are certain organizations of poor people, such as the federation of anti-poverty groups in British Columbia, which cannot wait this long to receive funds for such things as stamps, telephones, an office and a newsletter. I would ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to see that such priority requests are dealt with immediately.

The proposed motion states three objectives relative to strengthening the role of the voluntary sector: first, as an objective that is invaluable in its own right, and there is no real elaboration on that point; second, as an alternative to public dependence on government services; and third, in ways that would enhance the ability of such groups to operate independent of government.

If one were cynical, one might wonder if there is a hidden motive here. Is the hand of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens)—the hand of the "slavish slasher"—looming over us to curtail, cut back and starve voluntary services? Is he also planning to rid the government of responsibility for essential public services? We on this side of the House will certainly be watchdogs to ensure that this is not the main interest of this government in reviewing the voluntary sector. In all seriousness, I hope that that is not the government's intention.

During times of high unemployment which create many economic and social stresses for families and individuals, the need for public and private services increases. The government must not pay for the national debt by cutting essential human services. We recognize the value of volunteer participation in both private and community services. Effective volunteer effort benefits the community, but it must also be satisfying to the volunteer. Training and support are very essential. The days of volunteering as a charity service are long gone. Now volunteer activity is a means of mutual help and learning.

In recent years there has been a major change in the nature of volunteer help. With the growth of welfare rights groups, citizen's action movements and self-help community services, the role of the middle class volunteer has changed. No longer do low income people who take pride in their own efforts and who want to be in control of decision-making in their own communites welcome the lady bountiful or the patronizing patrols who used to come down from the other side of town to do good. Indigenous members of low income communities want and have the right to funds, opportunities and training to develop their own leaders, their own programs and their own actions to solve community problems.

There are many new types of volunteer actions which are evolving, some of which were reported in the recent study I mentioned but many of which were not, and I hope that this committee will look at them. I am thinking particularly of new innovations such as were developed by low income people on welfare in Vancouver under a program called the Vancouver opportunities program. Under this program people on social assistance received an incentive allowance to work in the community to develop many self-help programs of their own and to grow and develop confidence which eventually led to their own employment. I understand that there is also potential for looking at this program in relation to unemployment insurance, where claimants in a voluntary way might give of their efforts and develop their own potential through community activities while unemployed.

As a result of these new developments and their self-help nature, many middle-class volunteers have had to find new ways to participate in their communities. They have become involved in their own community issues. So we see the growth of environmental people's movements, and we see new alliances and mutual partnerships being formed where people with a greater degree of education, skill and perhaps leisure time are sharing their skills as resource people with groups that need such expertise.

We recognize the value of volunteer participation, but voluntarism cannot replace the need for quality programs and services that are essential to meet the basic needs of Canadians. Essential services are a public responsibility available without stigma for those in need, and should be paid for by all of us through an equitable sharing of our tax dollars.

It is important that the proposed special committee confirm that approach as a basic first assumption and confirm the areas of community service that are a legitimate, essential public responsibility so that we not lose the programs which we have struggled so hard to establish over the past years. Public responsibility includes the provision of public health, medical care, adequate income supplements, pensions, employment services, social services—both preventive and remedial—child welfare and many broad educational and recreationals and para-professionals are needed. Most of them are government employees, but there is also a great potential for the use of volunteers as long as they are used in appropriate roles in public services as well as in private organizations.

I hope that these roles will be clarified in this committee with the agreement of organized labour so that people who wish to help as volunteers—perhaps in schools, in public health services and so on—may perform these satisfying and important tasks without replacing potential paid employees. Of course, there are many programs which are co-sponsored by public and private organizations in which volunteers are also active. I hope that these programs will also be considered.

We in this party agree that volunteer participation by citizens in social action and community programs is essential to democracy. We believe that government should encourage and actively facilitate such development. This is not to say that we necessarily agree that long established, highly institutionalized, self-perpetuating private agencies are all necessarily relevant to the needs of today. Many of them I think are not and should be reviewed.

Nor should such programs necessarily be funded at the expense of more dynamic, indigenous groups that have grown out of people's own needs and a desire to solve their own problems in communities. I hope that this committee will look at new self-help community services and people's movements which have emerged in recent years and which are not now a part of the welfare establishment. In fact, many of them have difficulty getting meagre funds allocated through community united appeals.

The role of advocacy groups in helping individuals who are beaten down by the red tape of bureaucracies and of groups which are pressing for institutional legislative reform is also very important. It is a very worth-while voluntary activity that is important to government if it is to function effectively because it provides the kind of criticism that is essential to review programs to make them more relevant to human needs. Studies of self-help volunteer action should also include the full range of citizen action groups which have emerged in recent years and have a voice in planning and improving communities. For example, neighbourhood improvement committees, local area councils and some other groups are all very important, as are tenant action groups and environmental groups.

There is now a great impetus in the anti-nuclear movement which promises to be active in the future as well. These groups are all important, as are the anti-poverty groups that I have mentioned. They are important not only in local communities but also as national movements which can have considerable impact on society and governments. Non-profit co-operatives in the areas of housing, food and day care, as well as many other kinds of community enterprises, are all forms of self-help volunteer activity. I expect and hope that the Conservative government will see this in line with their philosophy of trying to develop self-reliance and individual human rights. I am pleased to hear that the government has recognized co-operatives. I have heard that term used several times and it was included in the Speech from the Throne. I am anxious to see how this will be encouraged with the needed start-up funds and technical resources.

This committee should examine a new form of development, one which is not too prevalent in Canada but which could have great meaning. I refer to community development corporations. These can be organized with help in the beginning to train and employ local people to deliver the services needed in local communities. They can also develop expertise and business skills which may result in one very essential kind of job creation, as well as important services in the local communities.

These important aspects of volunteer activities in Canada often lead to needed reforms and contribute to the healthy development of self-reliant communities. People who participate in them develop confidence and skills that help them become more employable. Some go on to work in public life and some become politicians. Not only is it a service to communities and not only is it important as a form of active citizen participation, but it also gives great opportunities for individual growth in many ways.

I hope there will be greater recognition and support for the self-help movement as a very vital part of the volunteer sector in Canada which should be actively encouraged by this government.

I should like to note also that the "People in Action" report that I referred to earlier points out that some form of honorarium to cover the cost, at least, of child care, transportation, or the other expenses incurred by people who volunteer, particularly those in low income communities, is another element that should be considered carefully.

[Mrs. Mitchell.]

I am pleased that there seems to be a very positive response from members to my proposal that a subcommittee on self-help voluntary action should receive particular attention from this committee.

I fully support the views of others who have spoken who say that priority must be given to grass roots community organizations, to volunteers working in local communities and citizen action groups, as well as local community service agencies.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote a passage from the "People in Action" report. I believe this statement might well form the basic assumption for the special committee which has been proposed. On page 134 of the report there appears the following statement:

> The federal government has a responsibility to ensure that there is a general social, economic and political climate in which the basic needs of the people can be met, their basic freedoms can be exercised, and opportunities for growth and a better life can be accessible to all. Where equality of opportunity is not present, the government has an obligation to correct the imbalance. In particular, the government has an overriding responsibility to remove any and all barriers to equal participation in the democratic process and equal access to government. No person or institution should be in a privileged position.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, if I rise today, it is to express my opposition to the arguments in favour of setting up this committee. I believe that the government, even though it is new at its job and is still a student government, cannot truly justify setting up this committee in view of the major cost in time, travel and money to those who will be on it.

Our major role should be to sit in Parliament when Parliament is in session, and to take part as much as possible in its work and committee work here in Ottawa. I have never been in favour of proposals aimed at making committees travel. I have had to sit on such committees in the past. I therefore speak from personal experience when I say that during their travels, these committes accomplish nothing which could not be done here in Ottawa.

Therefore, instead of setting up another committee, which, in my opinion, is a simple diversionary tactic to keep its backbenchers and perhaps opposition members busy, immediately after receiving the report of the Canadian advisory committee entitled People in Action, the government should have put a group of experts to work, because there are such experts in the government, very well paid and very able experts, I am happy to say. They should have agreed immediately to analyse the 80 or so most concrete proposals made by the Canadian Advisory Council and come back to Parliament with some sort of legislative statement of the type usually tabled as a white, red or green paper, I am not sure which, but with concrete legislative proposals which come immediately before the legislative process as such, and referred that document to a committee. I believe that the action taken by this government simply aims at delaying even more the implementation of the many excellent recommendations contained in this report.

Of course, the council did not exhaust all the arguments or all possible situations in its report, but the subject matter is sufficient for the government to take action as soon as possible and instead of looking for excuses by setting up another committee. I even believe that the motion to set up such committee could be interpreted as a slap in the face for those who have spent weeks and months to prepare their report, make their study and submit specific proposals.

In any event, had I been a member of that council, that is how I would react to the government's motion to set up yet another parliamentary committee. It certainly shows a lack of determination and of fortitude on the part of the government to take action when it already has the data required to legislate or at least—since legislation may not be necessary—to issue statements of policy which would be guiding lights for all voluntary groups throughout the country.

Should the House authorize, today or at some later date, the setting up of this committee, I hope that its members, the seven or so members chosen from either side, will have the basic common sense not to crisscross the country and consult, as is usually the case, only the experts in the various types of voluntary action or the various voluntary sectors in Canada, but that they will consider also the situation in which the beneficiaries of voluntary action find themselves. They are very often the first to be forgotten when a committee is established. I say that from experience. For example, Mr. Speaker, I can quote a press release issued by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) on June 8 when he decided to order the proclamation to enact on July 1 the last provisions of Bill C-14, the legislation amending the Unemployment Insurance Act. The minister said that he was not satisfied with current conditions but, and I quote from page 3 of his statement:

> During that study the government will thoroughly consult the provinces and the private sector—

We have a fair idea of what "private sector" means. They are those who pay part of the contributions to the unemployment insurance scheme. They are generally the companies which more often than otherwise object to that contribution. The press release goes on:

> —to make sure that their concepts and views will be taken into consideration.

Nowhere in that press release is there any mention of the claimants, those who receive unemployment insurance benefits or the poor workers.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure that, should it be decided to set up that special travelling committee, someone will go out into the field. The only justification for authorizing the committee to travel is to go and see the people who benefit from voluntary services throughout the country because, to my mind, those who are really interested in the work of the committee could easily come to Ottawa themselves. As in the past, the committee would approve their expenses, which is something all committees do, since we would stay here to enable a great number of hon. members to participate in the work of the committee. I am also against the idea that the committee should be composed of only seven hon. members. The work should go on here. This committee should give a large number of hon. members a chance to participate in its efforts.

Mr. Speaker, as the former speaker said, and as I have already mentioned, we received the report of the adivsory committee; no mention is made, which I sincerely regret, in the motion of the House leader or in the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mrs. Stratas), to the fact that the report was requested by and presented to the immediate predecessor of the present Secretary of State, the hon. John Roberts. Mention could at least have been made to the fact that it was an excellent initiative of the former secretary of state but, for some reason that escapes me, nothing was said about that; I have a feeling someone wants to give the public the impression that nothing was done before in that very interesting and certainly very worthy field of endeavour, that of voluntary organizations in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if at least the government spokesmen had recognized the essential role of the Canadian family in a strong national structure, I would have been half satisfied. But here again no mention has been made of the basic role of the Canadian family in the welfare of the whole Canadian society, as if the very important role of the Canadian family in the stability of the nation has been deliberately downgraded. And voluntary groups will never be able to replace the family, the obligations, the responsibilities of the father and mother. I deeply regret this omission by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State who, two weeks ago, talked out my private motion in which I proposed to establish a national family week in Canada. And I find that the reasons given by the government to kill my bill are the same as those given today to justify the establishment of that special parliamentary committee.

I simply cannot understand that attitude, but I have reasons to worry about the general direction taken by the new government in the area of social policy, of policies affecting the basic unit of Canadian society, the family cell.

I wish to conclude my remarks because I said to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) that I would not take too much time, and I know he has an important duty to fulfil. Mr. Speaker, we cannot be against voluntary groups any more than we can be against motherhood or fatherhood or family or all the decent institutions in our society. So I shall accept the verdict of my colleagues who are favourable to the establishment of that committee, even though the government did not convince me of its necessity. I seriously question the reasons of the government, as did our party's spokesman Friday afternoon, and I intend to keep a very critical eye on the work and travels of the members of that committee and I shall certainly scrutinize the report that they should submit to us within six months.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

PREVENTION OF RECURRING COST OVERRUNS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board) moved:

That a special committee of the House of Commons be appointed to enquire fully into the measures necessary to prevent recurring cost overruns on major government projects (defined as those involving expenditures in excess of $1 million) and in particular

(1) to carry out a review and an analysis of the measures already taken by the Treasury Board to prevent cost overruns on major government projects, and assess their impact;

(2) to examine measures in place or planned in departments in respect to present or future major government projects, with a view to assessing their compliance with Treasury Board guidelines and directives; and

(3) to examine major government projects that will be referred to the committee by the President of the Treasury Board, where the Treasury Board has identified a cost overrun;

That the special committee be composed to seven members of the House of Commons to be designated at a later date;

That the committee have power to appoint from among its members such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable and necessary and to delegate to such subcommittees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

That the committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That the committee be empowered to retain the services of advisers to assist in its work and that it also be empowered to retain the professional, clerical and stenographic help as may be required.

He said: Mr. Speaker, if the House were going to pass this motion automatically, maybe I would have nothing further to say. On the assumption that hon. members would like a brief explanation of what we have in mind respecting this special parliamentary committee, perhaps I should take a few minutes to explain why the government is asking for the establishment of this committee.

I would like to say that I find the debate on the establishment of a special parliamentary committee on project cost overruns is, if you like, an opportunity welcomed by myself so that I may share with this House the government's concerns regarding the provision of ever costlier services to the public.

I have stated on numerous occasions that reducing both the presence and the cost of the federal government in the economy of our nation is our first priority. One important step in reducing government expenditures is through more frugal and efficient utilization of resources. The purpose of my comments now is to present to this House the reasons why this government has felt it necessary to ask a parliamentary committee to examine major projects undertaken by the government, and their associated costs to the taxpayer.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton).]

It is not unusual that governments undertake projects which for a variety of reasons eventually cost much more than anticipated. Canada has had its share: the hydrofoil and the Bonaventure and I could name more. What concerns me, however, is that notwithstanding our earnest efforts to minimize the increase in expenditures of projects, the federal government, now and in the past, appears to be plagued with projects which are not, and cannot, be completed within budget.

In saying this, it is not my intention to allocate blame but rather to focus attention on the situation, to bring it into the open, and to discuss it in a public forum in order to arrive at a course of action which will correct this drain on public funds.

Let me also hasten to add at this time, Mr. Speaker, that many, indeed, the majority of government projects are managed efficiently with due regard to prudence and economy. Nevertheless "most" is not good enough; we must continuously strive to improve until the federal government is achieving high standards of efficiency and effectiveness in the management of all of its projects.

What then appears to be the main problem with government projects experiencing cost difficulties? The essence of the problem which distresses this government is the large discrepancies between the funds initially approved for projects and the final costs to completion, together with an attitude that once a project is approved all necessary funds will somehow be forthcoming to ensure its completion.

The Auditor General of Canada states in his one hundredth annual report:

Capital cost estimates at all stages of the planning process should be realistic and complete, covering all aspects of the project. A revised estimate based on the actual design, schedule and site conditions should be prepared before seeking final approval. The effects of possible future inflation should be considered separately from other cost-increase factors. Estimates should be expressed in both current and anticipated future dollar values.

The Auditor General goes on to cite examples of capital projects which experienced inordinate cost escalations. Indeed, the 12 projects identified by the Auditor General had initial cost estimates of $281.6 million but resulted in expenditures of $699.7 million, an increase of almost 150 per cent. Our Standing Committee on Public Accounts is currently reviewing these projects, but they are by and large completed. I am confident that every member of the House will look forward to their findings, but what I am concerned about, Mr. Speaker, is the present, the ongoing projects which are currently off the rails.

Recently, this government directed the Treasury Board secretariat to conduct a study which will identify the scope of the cost overrun problem as well as the difficulties in the various stages of decision-making, funding, contracting and implementation where departments need assistance in coming to grips with trade-offs, such as site reconnaissance to identify alternatives; feasibility studies to determine the best approach using common costing techniques; detailed design and costing by phases; inflation contingencies in materials and labour; international monetary fluctuations; project management and funding operations; and project deferment or schedule extensions due to restraint needs or priority adjustments.

Initial results of this study verify, as I have already mentioned, that everything is not bad. Approximately 75 per cent of our projects are completed at or below budgeted forecasts. Some of the remaining 25 per cent, however, are projects which we feel should be examined to determine the major causes of, and identify the measures needed to prevent cost overruns.

I am not suggesting that we have been sitting on our hands in providing guidance to departments on project management while determining the magnitude of this problem. Major initiatives have been taken in the development of directives, guidelines and suggested practices which will ensure the establishment of improved systems and procedures. I would like briefly to review a number of these.

In June, 1978, the Treasury Board issued policy and guidelines on the management of major Crown projects. A revised version of this circular was incorporated in the administrative policy manual under the heading "Management of Major Projects" in September of this year. This document addresses in detail the over-all planning, budgeting, execution and control of major Crown projects. The policy deals with such questions as: single point leadership and the interdepartmental organization of these projects; the consideration of socio-economic objectives; the approval process; the resolution of disputes; and the control and evaluation of projects. A major Crown project is a project of a value in excess of $100 million, or a lesser value but deemed to have a major social, environmental and economic impact and a significant level of political sensitivity and public visibility. Projects falling under this policy include the new fighter aircraft, the Canadian patrol frigate, the search and rescue satellite, the Leopard tank and the nuclear icebreaker.

Following the Treasury Board's issuance of the policy relating to major Crown projects, two follow-up activities were undertaken. These were a simplified version of the policy and guidelines, as a working guide for departments to be used generally for smaller projects referred to as "Management of Projects—Aide Memoire" issued in September, 1979; and a policy statement on the process for the identification, provision and remuneration of qualified project leaders for major Crown projects, also issued in September, 1979. Additionally, as a direct result of this government's concerns with respect to project management, accountability concepts, cost overruns and requests for retroactive approvals, Treasury Board issued "Directives on Cost Control" in July of this year.

In this circular letter 1979-20, deputy heads were informed of the requirement of the ministers of the Treasury Board for increased control over the expenditure of public funds in the implementation of all government projects, be they capital or operational in nature. This directive requires departments and agencies to submit to the secretary of the Treasury Board a complete list of all approved capital and operational projects where the total estimated cost to completion exceeds $500,000.

Another requirement of this directive is that a project manager be appointed for each project which may require contract or project approval by the Treasury Board, and that the project manager be answerable to his deputy head for achieving the planned results within budget. The circular letter goes on to state that the Treasury Board will not entertain submissions requesting funds for cost overruns, nor requests for retroactive approvals. In order to provide the needed incentive for complying with this directive a sanction has been included as follows:

> When a project exceeds the approved budget, including allowances for contingencies, and the cause of the overrun is considered by the ministers to be the result of inadequate management, a penalty may be levied against the responsible department in an amount up to twice the total overrun. Whether this penalty will be levied against current or future departmental programs will be at the discretion of the ministers.

In order to deal with this difficult problem of cost overruns, the government announced in the Speech from the Throne on October 9 its intention to create a select parliamentary committee on major government projects. This intention was formalized in the draft motion tabled on November 5.

It is proposed that this committee be given a mandate to inquire fully into reasons for which overruns have occurred and consider the measures necessary to prevent recurring cost overruns in connection with major government projects. More specifically, it will be asked to carry out a review and analysis of the measures already taken by Treasury Board to prevent cost overruns on major government projects and to assess their impact, as well as to examine measures in place or planned in departments with respect to present or future major government projects with a view to assessing their compliance with Treasury Board guidelines and directives. In addition, the committee would be asked to examine major government projects which would be referred to it by the President of the Treasury Board where Treasury Board had identified a cost overrun. It is the intention of this government to see the problems of project management and cost overruns discussed in public in order to arrive at a proper understanding of the underlying causes and to further improve the efficiency and effectiveness of government operations while, at the same time, emphasizing that the majority of government projects are properly managed.

The government feels that a select parliamentary committee is the ideal vehicle to accomplish this purpose. It can work closely with the public accounts committee which reviews the past expenditure of funds and discusses observations contained in the Auditor General's reports. The select committee will focus on current projects with a view to recommending corrective action for the future.

To deal specifically with the question of why we believe a committee is needed to deal with current projects, first, a select committee would be focusing sharply on one specific aspect of government activity while the public accounts committee involves itself with total government activity, not with respect to project management alone but with respect to government expenditure generally.

Second, I would point out that the select committee we are contemplating would, under its mandate, focus its attention on current activity in connection with major projects. As well, the public accounts committee has normally restricted itself to examining departmental response to observations made public by the Auditor General. This frequently involves a time lag of one to two years between the observation being made and corrective action being taken. In short, a select committee could concentrate on procedures for prevention rather than simply on examination after the event.

Earlier today the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) asked me why I thought a special committee should be set up. It might be helpful if I could give hon. members an insight into a few of the projects before us which might well be referred to such a committee for study and recommendation as to what we at the Treasury Board can do to arrest the dreadful outflow of money that is occurring.

I referred earlier to a project known as Montreal MAPP involving the construction of a postal plant. Mr. Speaker, I am glad you are sitting in your chair because this is going to startle you. Approval was originally given in 1974 for the expenditure of $161.2 million on that project. At the present time it is estimated the final cost will be $273.6 million, which means an overrun of $112.4 million or, in percentage terms, 69.7 per cent. Surely, every member of this House is bound to ask himself whether he ought to resist the setting up of a select committee to look into that kind of thing.

It is not just the cost overruns that concern us. This program, if completed, is going to be completed 37 months later, it is estimated, than the date originally established. This may well be one of the projects I would refer to the select committee should Parliament see fit to set it up.

Earlier I referred to the Prince Rupert grain dryer. Approval was originally given to the allocation of $705,000 for the construction of this project. The final cost is now estimated to be $3,812,000, or an overrun of $3,107,000—in percentage terms, 439 per cent. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, that project will be eight months late if it is finished by the new due date.

I could read into the record comments made in my briefing document explaining how we got into this position. In this case, the case of the 439 per cent overrun, I asked certain officials: can we assume, if this last amount of money they have requested is forthcoming, that that will be the end of it and we will finally have a finished grain drying facility in Prince Rupert? All they can say is: "We hope so, Mr. Stevens." I hope the new committee will look into this situation and tell us whether there are any new steps we should be taking to ensure that these cost overruns are arrested and that if we do agree to further funding, no additional funding will be requested.

In case you may think such things happen only in Canada, Mr. Speaker, let me take you to Paris, to the chancery they are building there. The cost originally estimated for that complex was $4.5 million. It is now estimated that the final cost will be $8.98 million, that is, an overrun of $4.4 million or in percentage figures 96.6 per cent.

An hon. Member: Do they have a Liberal government?

Mr. Stevens: Surely, every member of this House, if he were talking to a constituent back in his own riding, would have to agree that we owe it to the Canadian public to look into overruns of this kind, not in the abstract, not after they have become history, but today while the projects are still under way. The French authorities now estimate the chancery will not be completed until June of 1981.

Let me give you another example, Mr. Speaker. You have heard of Mirabel airport. The original completion date was to be late in 1974. The actual completion date was 12 months later and there are still things that need to be done with regard to land acquisition. The original cost of constructing the airport and acquiring the land was estimated to be $243,495,000. That is what, initially, the government of the day said would be the total cost. Well, the final cost was $360,667,000 for an overrun of $117,172,000, or 48 per cent. That is only part of the story, Mr. Speaker. The adjacent land which was orginally said to be needed for Mirabel was supposed to cost $86 million to acquire. The final cost is likely to be $142,136,000, an overrun of $56,136,000 or 65 per cent.

Surely, these four examples I have given should be sufficient, though I could talk literally for the rest of the afternoon about other projects which are coming down the pike toward us, projects where massive cost overruns are anticipated. Within the context of what I am saying it surely behooves every member of the House to support this resolution, which would ensure that a special committee is set up to look into specific ongoing projects which are subject to cost overruns for which somebody should be answering to the Canadian public.

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in hearing the remarks of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) both during the question period this afternoon and in explaining the purpose of this motion to our fellow parliamentarians here in the House.

One might say that I have an axe to grind with regard to this particular motion inasmuch as I am chairman of the public accounts committee. I would like to assure the President of the Treasury Board that everyone on this side of the House, I am sure everyone on his side of the House and even all the members to my left can agree on one thing, and that is that government mismanagement of public funds must be arrested and efficient procedures introduced to prevent some of the so-called "horror stories" as that term has been used frequently in the past with regard to several, or many, projects which have taken place over many years. The reasons for that are manyfold. It has been an experience which many countries have suffered due to the extraordinary expansion of expenditures in the government sector and the lack of controls one might find in the private sector where there is a bottom line at which to look. That is not the case, as we all know, in government.

So I can say to the President of the Treasury Board that I am terribly concerned about the management of government funds. In fact, I think I can say that that is one of the principal reasons I got into politics. I think that is true of many people of the young generation of politicians coming on stream, if I may use that term, at the municipal level, the provincial level and federal level.

Waste of public funds has been reflected in our whole fiscal apparatus. I have been told that we have seen an increase, for example, in tax evasion in this country. I believe that is partly because the public perceives that its funds are being squandered, mismanaged by bureaucrats, that there is fat in government and so forth. Accordingly, they have decided that they are just not going to pay the government funds to be squandered in that fashion. I think that is a general perception on the part of the public which we have to remove.

To that extent I basically agree with everything the President of the Treasury Board has said except with the necessity of appointing a special committee of this House to take on what is clearly the mandate of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts of this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: The minister has said that the public accounts committee has been concerned with matters which have arisen in the past. Historically that is the case, and I believe that when the President of the Treasury Board was first elected to this House, that indeed was the case. The public accounts committee normally looked into so-called horror stories and summoned people before it to find out what happened and why. There was much publicity and much media coverage. There were examinations into cost overruns, as in the case, hon. members may recall, of the aircraft carrier HMCS Bonaventure, which was one of the celebrated studies of the public accounts committee.

However, in the mid-1970s and beginning after the appointment of the current Auditor General, Mr. Jim Macdonell, the entire role and perception of the public accounts committee have changed. As we know, the office of the Auditor General was given extended powers in the amendments to the Auditor General Act in 1976, which basically introduced the concept of comprehensive auditing: "Is the Canadian public getting value for money?" The Auditor General has a mandate to look into the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of government programs; and in keeping with that mandate, the role of the public accounts committee has also changed because, as hon. members are aware, the committee receives an automatic reference of the annual report of the Auditor General of Canada.

That automatic reference, in 1978, included a large portion of that work devoted to comprehensive auditing and special studies which the Auditor General and his staff had taken upon themselves in pursuing their mandate to introduce into various government departments. I refer specifically, for example, to the study of procedures in cost effectiveness. If one looks to the report of the Auditor General of 1978, one will find in chapter 3 an analysis of basically the very matters which the President of the Treasury Board tells us we now need a special committee to look into, namely, planning capital acquisition projects.

I am not going to take hon. members of this House through the report of the Auditor General, but if they look at that report they will find that the Auditor General has established audit criteria which are to be followed in planning major capital acquisitions for the very reason that the President of the Treasury Board has suggested. We have to stop this haemorrhaging.

Let me just give a summary of the audit criteria which have been suggested by the Auditor General and were applied by the Auditor General's staff in analysing a series of capital acquisition projects, a number of which I might say have already been considered this very year by the public accounts committee. I refer, for example, to the celebrated cost overrun of the Calgary airport, and whereas the President of the Treasury Board says that he is interested in ongoing projects and not what happened in the past, I am completely satisfied that the public accounts committee is also concerned more with ongoing projects than with what happened in the past. What happened in the past is sad and unfortunate, but it is water under the dam, spilled milk or whatever term one might apply.

The fact is that we are primarily concerned not even with what is going on today but with what is going to go on for generations, the future structures we wish to establish to control and examine the efficiency, the economy and the effectiveness of government spending in this country, so that the public will regain confidence that its funds are being properly managed. I hope that the initiatives which have been taken by the Auditor General and which, by and large, will be supported, I hope, by the public accounts committee and by its reports to this House will in turn serve as an example to provincial levels of government, municipal levels of government and, in fact, any organization of any kind which is concerned about the mangement of public funds, be they universities, hospitals, charitable organizations and so forth.

The audit criteria which are set forth in chapter 3 for planning capital acquisitions are as follows: "Responsibility and accountability should be clearly defined and communicated". That criterion was tested against a variety of projects to determine whether it was followed. Second, "Requests for funds should be supported by accurate and complete documentation". Again, that audit criterion was tested against various projects to determine whether it had been followed. "Final approval should be based on full information". Again, that was tested against the Calgary airport, the schools in the north on Indian reserves and the acquisition of class R icebreakers by the Department of Transport. We have already looked at these areas to determine these criteria and the others to which I am about to come were followed. "Project implementation should be properly controlled". Finally, "Completed projects should be reviewed". I am only touching upon the headings, not what follows from those basic criteria.

In the public accounts committee we in turn are endeavouring to determine, by working with and by questioning the Comptroller General, the staff of the Treasury Board, the Auditor General and the various departments, whether these criteria are acceptable and effective. And, complementary with that, the Comptroller General, as many members of this House know, has been conducting, basically, studies on improving the practices and controls within the various departments. With this study called "IMPAC", the Comptroller General in turn has a mandate to determine that each one of these departments is going to meet the criteria with respect to planning capital acquisitions which are set forth in the report of the Auditor General.

What we are hearing from the President of the Treasury Board is all very well, but it is a complete duplication of effort. I cannot see how any special committee charged with the mandate which the minister hopes to give it can avoid dealing specifically with the same audit criteria we are dealing with in the public accounts committee. In turn, what kind of image is it to portray to the Canadian public to get committee upon committee to examine what the Auditor General has proposed to us and what we have already undertaken to test?

I would not want to estimate the cost of that exercise and, in addition to that, I am particularly concerned because this will clearly draw upon the expertise of the office of the Auditor General which we need in the public accounts committee. It will probably draw upon the time of members of the committee who should be concerned about what is being done in public accounts. Also it should do no more than confirm the very report which we in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts will make to Parliament on the planning of capital acquisitions. So the whole thing to me is senseless in that context. It suggests to me that the President of the Treasury Board does not really know what the report of the Auditor General contained or what is going on in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, because he insists on referring to this committee as a committee which is dealing with skeletons of the past, instead of one which is looking forward to the future and trying to establish proper management controls in every department of government.

An hon. Member: It is a Tory witch hunt.

Mr. Johnston: I am afraid there is a complete misconception in the mind of the President of the Treasury Board on this particular point.

Great accent was placed by the President of the Treasury Board on the fact that he was not dealing with the past. Yet in one of the very examples he cited, Mirabel airport, we are committee? When I look at the terms of the motion contained in today's order paper, I see nothing which suggests that this talking about a completed project. What is the mandate of this committee is to look at ongoing projects only, as was suggested by the President of the Treasury Board, both in his remarks and also in response to questions which I put to him this afternoon. The only departure from the consistent position he took was with regard to Mirabel. As I pointed out, it is a project in the past which, it would seem to me, would fall clearly outside the mandate that he indicated he intends to confer upon this particular committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat nonplussed. This may be because I chair the committee, but it seems to me that if we are going to be efficient in the management of government business, responsibility should lie squarely with the standing committee of the House that has the mandate. There is another aspect to this problem. It was decided in 1957 by a Progressive Conservative government to have an opposition member chair the committee. That Progressive Conservative tradition has always been followed since. It is a very important tradition because it gives the committee an objective perception, with the chairman coming from the opposition. The same tradition now exists in England. And it seems to me that the proposal to have a government member as committee chairman reduces that committee's objectivity.

I submit that if we accept the principle that there should be an opposition member to chair the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, it follows that the chairman of the proposed committee should also be chosen from this side of the House. Otherwise, there is the risk of creating a political forum rather than a committee with a genuine concern for the responsibility of managing public funds.

[English]

As Mr. Speaker might gather from my remarks, I for one am not happy with the possibility of the creation of another committee to duplicate the work of a respected committee of the House. I am very proud of the work of that committee, as I think other members will be, particularly when the session finishes. It distresses me to think that perhaps we may be drawn into some kind of political witch hunt in a special committee which the President of the Treasury Board wishes to initiate.

An hon. Member: That is the purpose.

Mr. Johnston: That being said, if members of this House—

[Translation]

They are laughing Mr. Speaker, I wonder why. Let them laugh, I shall be laughing in turn. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, if the House insists on the establishment of this committee, I would propose an amendment, an amendment to the terms of the motion.

[English]

Specifically, I would suggest that this motion be amended to reflect the mandate which the President of the Treasury Board tells us will be the terms of reference of the committee, namely, the examination of major ongoing government projects. He said that in his view the Standing Committee on Public Accounts looks at history. I do not agree with that, but accepting that interpretation for the moment, and assuming that it is the wish of members of this House—to give that interpretation to the terms of reference of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, I would insist that this motion be clarified so as to make it absolutely clear that it is concerned with ongoing major government projects.

Therefore, looking at the English version, I propose, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), that the word "ongoing" be added after the word "major" in the third line of the motion. Thus the opening paragraph of the motion would read as follows:

That a special committee of the House of Commons be appointed to inquire fully into the measures necessary to prevent recurring cost overruns on major ongoing government projects (defined as those involving expenditures in excess of $1 million) and in particular—

The rest of the motion would remain the same. I formally propose that amendment.

Before concluding my brief remarks, I might add that the motion, as amended, is entirely in conformity with the raison d'être of this special committee as expressed to the House in the comments of the President of the Treasury Board during his presentation in support of the motion this afternoon, and also in response to the questions I put to him earlier during oral questions today.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that there is no written draft of the amendment available yet, but that one is being prepared now.

Mr. Johnston: Right.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): While we are waiting for it to be prepared, did I hear the hon. member correctly to say that the word "ongoing" was after the word "recurring", in the third line, and before the word "cost"?

Mr. Johnston: No. The word "ongoing" is after the word "major". It will read, "major ongoing government projects".

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I understand we will wait for the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) to present his amendment in writing.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Is the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount ready?

● (1620)

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, could I present the amendment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): It is moved by the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), that motion No. 5 on the order paper be amended in the first paragraph by adding the word "ongoing" after the word "major" so that the paragraph would read as follows:

That a special committee of the House of Commons be appointed to inquire fully into the measures necessary to prevent recurring cost overruns on major ongoing government projects (defined as those involving expenditures in excess of $1 million)—

I would now invite views from both sides of the House on this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would simply point out that it is impossible to be against the amendment because it is stated in paragraph 2, and I quote:

—present or future major government projects—

We are inserting "ongoing projects". The term is repeated, and nothing more.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles: On the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): On the amendment. Does the House adopt the said amendment?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable care to the speech by the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston). He was arguing very effectively and very eloquently for the work of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, but when I compared what he had to say with what was said by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) in moving the motion, I was struck with the positioning of the word "ongoing". It is quite difficult for us to define what is an ongoing project in terms of the kinds of things that are envisaged by this amendment.

For instance, the President of the Treasury Board mentioned the Mirabel airport. Because aircraft are using that airport, and in terms of the cost overruns that are involved, is it to be said that it ceases to be a case where cost overruns in the present sense could not continue? I have in mind particularly what the President of the Treasury Board had to say about land acquisitions around the airport and the tremendous costs that are being imposed upon the people and the Government of Canada in respect of the operation of the airport.

What I am saying to the House is that I think it is important that this be considered not only in terms of the work of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, but also in terms of what the opposition is attempting to do by placing the word "ongoing" where it is proposed. I hope the President of the Treasury Board will come into the House so that I can discuss the matter with him in detail, because what really concerns me in regard to the work of this committee, given the terms of reference with which the President of the Treasury Board dealt, is that members of the opposition in this House who were members of the former government are very skilfully and artfully attempting to draw a curtain over several major government projects and contracts which can be defined as those involving expenditures in excess of $1 million. This would put them beyond the purview of the committee for consideration as undertakings or expenses of the government in relation to ongoing overruns. This is a very artful attempt, in my judgment, subject to the judgment of the President of the Treasury Board, to draw down a curtain. If that is in fact what is happening, under the guise of suggesting that this would contravene or interfere with the work of the committee on public accounts, I am really quite surprised.

In terms of these contracts or arrangements, I do not think we can say with precision what is the sense of the word "ongoing". When the President of the Treasury Board comes into the House he may be able to satisfy me regarding that matter, but I am concerned that the inclusion of the word "ongoing" will limit the ability of the committee of this House to inquire into a whole host of rather large projects which are now generally regarded as a problem for the Government of Canada. These projects may have been regarded as a problem for the former government. If they were not so regarded, they should have been.

I listened to what the hon. member had to say, and I certainly would not want to put a bad face on it, but I am not certain what the significance is of that word "ongoing" and its positioning, unless it is an attempt to draw a curtain over certain classes of contracts in respect of which this committee will not be allowed to deal.

Quite frankly, I had hoped there would not be an attempt by this House to limit the work of parliamentary committees. We are concerned with what is generally recognized as a very important consideration to the operation of government, namely, why millions and millions of dollars seem to be underestimated in relation to a host of government contracts. Was there something wrong with the estimating procedures? There is a whole host of similar questions that were supposed to be dealt with by this committee.

I am surprised at what the official opposition is really attempting by this amendment. The only purpose I can see is to limit the right of a committee of the House to examine these matters, and to limit the mandate of that committee as granted to it by the government's motion No. 5. Government motion No. 5 asks the House of Commons to appoint a special committee:

—to inquire fully into the measures necessary to prevent recurring cost overruns on major government projects—

[Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton).]

How can there be any serious objection to such a motion? Quite frankly, it was not clear in the speech made by the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount why the amendment was proposed. It is the first time in my experience in this House that I have heard of the opposition attempting to limit the work of a parliamentary committee investigating the matter of government expenditures, cost overruns, and what have you. I am quite startled by such a move. I can only conclude that this amendment came off the top of the hon. member's head, because he did not have it prepared in writing. I hope that someone in that party will answer that question.

Is there something which the former government is attempting to cover up? I do not know. If there is nothing they want to hide, I think that the amendment should be withdrawn so that the fullest of consideration can be given to the motion by the government. The motion was proposed because there is a problem. If one has followed the awarding of tenders on government contracts for certain fixed amounts of money, or if hon. members have followed the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts or other committees of the House, they will know that there are always applications for more money for extras on all contracts. The question is, why does that happen? What is wrong with the practice and where should it be changed to ensure that the tender system and the estimating system are appropriate? Are there new methods of arrangements for the letting of contracts that ought to be employed, both to expedite contracts and to ensure that the contractors get their fair amount? Why is it that these things occur? Is there some experience from the past that we can draw on that will help us chart a course for the future?

Is it the intention of the official opposition, for the first time in my history here, to limit an inquiry that, if they are on their toes, will be carried by the opposition anyway? That is the position in which we find ourselves, and I hope that debate will continue with respect to that one question. I am prepared to give the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount an opportunity to explain why he would like to limit that inquiry, because I would certainly like to know. It is not our wish to precipitate or lengthen debate with respect to the matter.

I would like to know the opposition's position. Certainly the explanation given by the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount does not satisfy me and, as he knows, I tried to follow his speech very closely. I thought that the President of the Treasury Board, both in answer to his question and in the House earlier today, explained well why he felt that the motion should be framed in the way it is. The minister referred to many projects which would now be considered old projects. The hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount ought not to muzzle the work of the committee. When the committee gets into the discussion of how it will interpret its terms of reference, it may very well decide that it will look at certain projects in certain ways. I do not think we should fetter the work of the committee in advance.

With respect to the foreign investment review committee, hon. members will recall that on Friday there was an explanation asked of the government by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I indicated the government's view. The government would like this select committee to have as broad a reference as possible so that it can decide the areas in which it will undertake its work.

I hope that the hon. member will answer the question with regard to his amendment. As to why he did not answer in his speech, I do not know, but I invite him to answer and to indicate why, for the first time in history that I can recall, there is an attempt by the official opposition to limit an issue which is being sent to a committee of the House of Commons. Is there something which I do not know? Is there something which the opposition is trying to hide?

Mr. MacEachen: You obviously don't know.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The opposition House leader says that I do not know. He is quite right. I have been in government for only six months and have not had a chance to delve into many things. I must say that I am a little alarmed not only at the proposal to limit the work of the committee, but also that it would be supported by my good friend, the opposition House leader, because I would think that he, in his position, would want the fullest possible scope given to the committees.

That is the reason for my intervention. I am very concerned about this attitude which would somehow propose to limit a government proposal to Parliament. I hope that this approach of limitation is not supported in this House. I would hope that the wish of all members of the House would be to have the fullest possible scope in the terms of reference of committees so that the committees may decide for themselves whether they wish to limit the reference. There has been too much limitation put on committees of this House. This is one committee to which the government has given broad terms of reference, and I hope that the House will support those terms of reference.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, could I have some clarification on my position. I have been asked a question by the government House leader, and I would like to know at this point if I have the opportunity of responding to that question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): To answer the question, I would think yes.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had thought that during my speech the government House leader was in the House, but it is apparent from his remarks that he was not, or that if he was here physically, he was not here in spirit. I made it very clear at the outset that cost overruns were the purpose, the raison d'être, of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I was not suggesting that we should in any way fetter parliamentary inquiries into the activities or projects in question. I simply make the point that the public accounts committee is a standing committee of this House and has a permanent order of reference from the Auditor General's report to look into those very projects. The government simply wants to add another committee that will duplicate the work of the public accounts committee at the expense of the Canadian public.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order. I suggest the hon. member is now approaching debate and that his point of order has been made.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, some minutes ago I thought that the Chair had declared the amendment carried, but then the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) got up and spoke as though he thought he was speaking to the amendment. I gather that the House is acting as though the amendment is still before the Chamber. Does Your Honour want to straighten that out?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The matter is still before the chamber. The amendment was not carried.

Mr. Knowles: I am prepared to accept that. I think there has been a fair amount of misunderstanding. At any rate, we are still debating it and it seems to be the hope that if members can speak as freely and lengthily as did the President of the Privy Council, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) may eventually get here. I am surprised that he ever left the chamber when this important motion was before us.

I must say to my friend the President of the Privy Council that I am startled at his being startled at this motion, as though it has a restrictive effect. As I heard the speech of the President of the Treasury Board, his main justification for this committee alongside the public accounts committee, was that the public accounts committee deals with history and this one will deal with the present and the future.

I gather that all that the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) wants to do is to make sure that the new committee will not go back into questions of ancient history. He wants the committee to have the power to investigate ongoing major government projects. I suspect that Mirabel is past, present and future, so it is ongoing. The amendment will not cut that out. I suspect, however, the amendment would cut out an investigation into the activities of Colonel By when he built the Rideau Canal!

Mr. Nystrom: And Stanley was here.

Mr. Knowles: Is that not what the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount wants, namely, to ensure that this new committee will not conflict with the public accounts committee in being able to go back and dig up old projects that are completed? In other words, the new committee, in the terms of my hon. friend's amendment, would be able to deal with projects starting now or projects already in place which are continuing.

If that is the basis, I believe the President of the Privy Council ought either to accept the amendment or give us the same kind of undertaking that he gave us on Friday with respect to the committee on FIRA. We were concerned then that the motion did not cover something we felt should be covered. The President of the Privy Council gave us an assurance that it did, and we were satisfied. Perhaps he could now give us an assurance that there is to be no investigation into the building of the Rideau Canal, that there is to be no overlapping of the public accounts committee in the sense that this committee will investigate things on which the books are closed. The public accounts committee is there to do that and we hope that its activities in that direction will continue.

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, that is my purpose in intervening at this point. I do not want to repeat myself a dozen times just so the President of the Treasury Board can get here. Perhaps others can do that. I believe that there is reasonable sense to the amendment that has been proposed and that the President of the Privy Council should have no difficulty in accepting it. We do not need to divide the House on this. Why does the government House leader, on behalf of the government, not say that this is acceptable, or at least give an interpretation of the motion that covers it?

I see that though the President of the Treasury Board has not come back, we have gone higher and got the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) back. Maybe this matter can be resolved without its becoming a major issue on which we have to divide the House on a Monday afternoon.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) is in the House. I did not expect this bonus five or ten minutes ago when I planned to speak.

I want to begin with the point I would have begun with in his absence, namely, to ask where the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) is. If this were an isolated absence on the part of ministers, then I would not complain. We had a similar experience when the House was asked by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie) to establish a committee to look into the problems of the handicapped: neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary found it possible to come into the House either to participate in the debate or to listen to the presentation made, presumably on their behalf, by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). That was the first incident when neither a minister nor a parliamentary secretary came into the House to defend the motion being put forward by the government.

I was prepared to overlook that, Mr. Speaker, but on Friday afternoon the House had to deal with a second important committee—important in the view of the government—to establish a review of the Foreign Investment Review Act. For a good portion of Friday afternoon the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) was not in the House. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) complained about that. This afternoon the President of the Treasury Board has missed a certain portion of the debate.

I do not want to say anything further, except that if the Prime Minister is serious about his respect for Parliament, then he must ensure that ministers are present in the House when important motions standing in their name are moved and defended. This is one of the fundamentals of ministerial government.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Clark: Such hypocrisy.

Mr. MacEachen: If the hon. member is suggesting to me that I look after my business and let the Prime Minister look after his business, then I want to tell him that what I am talking about is the business of the House of Commons. If the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) seeks co-operation to get his measures through the House, co-operation which we wish to give, then the most elementary thing he has to do in order to secure that co-operation is have ministers present to explain and defend their motions in this House.

That is the first point, Mr. Speaker. I appeal to the Prime Minister, who has made a fetish—almost an obsession—of declaring his respect for Parliament. Since this session began we have had incident after incident where that fundamental interest has been lacking. I want to express my complaint in that respect.

The President of the Privy Council has suggested that we have some sinister motive in moving an amendment to this particular motion. I want to assure him and members of the House that the proposed amendment was an effort to put into practice the principle which the President of the Treasury Board enunciated today in question period and, I understand, later in his speech.

We examined this motion and wondered why the government proposed to establish a further special committee on cost overruns when the public accounts committee is equipped to deal with that very subject. We know that we have many committees in the House of Commons. We are adding to them with a profligacy I have never seen in this House before. We therefore wonder why we should have a further special committee when we have an existing committee which can do the very task that is to be assigned to the special committee.

That is why the question was addressed, before the debate began, to the President of the Treasury Board. I do not have to go into the argument that was advanced by the youngest member of the Privy Council in saying that the President of the Treasury Board told us this afternoon that he wanted the public accounts committee to deal mainly with history and the special committee to deal mainly with what I understood to be ongoing projects. We are not happy with that but we think it is a better situation than a total duplication.

In order to improve the situation, we proposed the amendment, not to limit the inquiry because inquiries can move apace in the public accounts committee, but at least to reduce what appears to us to be duplication. That is the sole purpose of the amendment.

● (1650)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate very much what the opposition House leader has said. I wish to indicate to him that the inclusion of the word "ongoing" within the motion in the place indicated in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Saint-Henri-Westmount is quite acceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I understand the thrust of it now as it was explained to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and it is quite acceptable.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand I have the floor. I yielded the floor on a point of order. It was not a point of order, but clearly a statement by the President of the Privy Council. Do I have to sit down and listen to another speech?

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to correct the opposition House leader—

Mr. MacEachen: Your Chinese friend.

Mr. Kempling: —my Chinese friend, Gambay. In his remarks, he commented that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schellenberger) was not in the House on Friday. I can assure him that he was here all through that debate. In fact, he was trying to rise to speak in the debate.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the chief government whip for clarifying that point. I regret that the parliamentary secretary did not, in the normal way, lead the debate; I understand the purposes. But I do want to thank the Prime Minister for coming into the House, accepting the amendment and putting the President of the Privy Council straight once again. I wish he would come in more often.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Johnston) agreed to.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I think the events of the last three quarters of an hour could have been put into five minutes had the government been on top of things and had the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) been here to see his motion through the House. It is an important motion and there are a fair number of implications in it.

The present chairman of the public accounts committee has made a very good case to rely upon that committee, although I can understand the motivation behind the government's wanting a special investigation into government cost overruns. There is no doubt but that there have been some very serious and major cost overruns amounting to billions of dollars. I understand the desire of the government to get a handle on this and to investigate why these overruns occur and be able to put a stop to them. As a member of the public accounts committee, reviewing the report of the Auditor General and listening to some of the testimony I have been amazed by the lacklustre administrations in the past. I was amazed when I discovered that in public services over 50 per cent of the contracts were entered into without tender, and that 10 per cent of the contracts were done totally on an oral basis, without any written document. I stated in committee that this was a Mickey Mouse operation. It just blew my mind, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt the Auditor General has zeroed in on this insanity in his report and that he has made some worth-while recommendations to stop it in the future.

On the one hand, we recognize the importance of the public accounts committee, but on the other hand we recognize the desire of the government to give particular attention to cost overruns. I am glad that the government has accepted the amendment. I think the motion as it stands is strengthened and we will be supporting it.

It has often been suggested that members in this particular corner of the House are crazy spenders and that we are really not concerned with a properly managed government enterprise. This is far from the truth. If one looks at the record of the provincial government of Saskatchewan, one will find that the public debt is very low. In fact, in 1976 it was the lowest in the country. Perhaps for the record I might just include figures concerning the public debt in the various provinces. For example, the public debt in British Columbia was $1,840 per person; in Alberta—such a rich province—the figure was $1,880 per person; in Saskatchewan the figure was only $960; in Manitoba the figure was $2,589; in Ontario, another Conservative province, the figure was $2,059; in Quebec the figure was $1,803; in New Brunswick the figure was $1,978; in Nova Scotia the figure was $1,886; in Prince Edward Island it was $1,042; and in Newfoundland, $3,274. It was the socialist province of Saskatchewan that had the lowest debt per capita.

We have one of the best managed government operations in Saskatchewan. We do not allow the type of cost overruns that the previous Liberal government and the various Conservative governments throughout this country have allowed. If there is a cost overrun, it is not added to the general budget. What happens in Saskatchewan is that another department or another project is cut. Throughout the seventies Saskatchewan has had balanced budgets. If a deficit does occur in one year, it is then made up in the other year. The province of Saskatchewan has had sound business practices.

The federal government meanwhile has experienced major deficits not only in government spending and overruning of costs, but also on the revenue side. Such giveaways as MURBs and drilling incentives have made the revenue side a very uncertain factor. There have been major giveaways resulting in some major deficits.

We have also experienced ongoing deficits in the country because of the general economic picture. For example, slowdowns in the economy and an improperly planned economy result in declines in government revenues.

Before we can really tackle the problem of government deficits, we must have a much more stable economy. We must have a planned economy where one is able to predict economic trends and put in proper government expenditures with the knowledge of how the whole economy will operate in the years ahead. As long as we have economic anarchy we will never be able to properly control all the expenditures.

I hope as well when the government sets up the committee that we will also look into the possible cost overruns on the mortgage insurance tax credit scheme. I think this is Pandora's box. Again, it is one of those projects that the present government has every right to condemn the former government for doing. I am afraid the present government is making the same mistake in carrying on in the same tradition. There are no decent controls on the scheme and there is no proper way of forecasting how much it will cost. I think we will end up with many of the problems that we have experienced in the past.

So we will support the motion, Mr. Speaker. We hope something decent and good will come out of it, although I am afraid, given the reality as a whole, I do not believe this committee will have the power to properly control government spending.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jupp)—National Defence—Contract for Cruise missiles; the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—Treasury Board—Sale of Crown corporation to private enterprise; the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—Energy—Government control over oil prices.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Is it the pleasure of the House to give unanimous consent to stand motion No. 9?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. de Jong.]

LAW OF THE SEA

PROPOSED COMMON HERITAGE FUND TO ASSIST DEVELOPING NATIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should continue to work to achieve agreement on a comprehensive and broadly supported law of the sea treaty through the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea and that such a treaty should provide for an international seabed or ocean authority to regulate the exploitation of deep ocean minerals in an equitable manner, with appropriate roles for private, national and international entities and that a significant portion of ocean mineral revenues, both offshore and in the deep ocean, should be regarded as "the common heritage of mankind" and used in a "Common Heritage Fund" to assist developing nations, to fight pollution, and to assist the work of the United Nations, especially in the area of peacekeeping, along the lines of the 1978 proposal of the government of Nepal.

He said: Mr. Speaker, last week some hon. members of this House were treated to an inspiring and most thoughtful address by Dr. J. F. Leddy, president of the World Federalists of Canada, when he spoke to the annual meeting of the Canadian World Federalist Parliamentary Association. I would very quickly report to the House that the Canadian World Federalist Parliamentary Association now has 130 paid up members, members of Parliament and senators. At our meeting last week we elected a new president, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean). We look forward to the high quality of leadership which we know this new member of Parliament will provide for our association.

I should also say a word in the way of tribute to the past president, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), who served our association extremely well for a long period of time.

In introducing my motion today, I would like to begin by quoting very briefly from Dr. Leddy's speech which I believe sets the tone for the motion I would seek support for from hon. members. Dr. Leddy said:

What will future historians think of our times? What will be their view of our stewardship of civilization . . . Ask young people in North America today what label will probably be applied to the twentieth century, and they will usually emphasize the marvels of science and technology, of air travel and space exploration, of communication through radio and television. Some will speak of a greater degree of social and political democracy.

If one interrupts this glowing litany to point out that many millions in the world have enjoyed little if any of these benefits of our century, these students are genuinely surprised and uneasy to be reminded, as well, that there have been two world wars, destroying many millions of lives, that two atom bombs were dropped, wiping out 250,000 lives in a flash, that six million Jews were killed in cold calculation in the Holocaust, and that even after the war there has been, year after year, the never-ending plight of hordes of refugees, fleeing in misery as the result of some new commotion in Europe or Asia or Africa or South America. One should add to this grim list the collapse of democratic regimes in many parts of the world, and the recurring misery of famines, remedied too little and too late.

My motion, which has the support of the Canadian World Federalist Parliamentary Association, proposes that a significant portion of ocean mineral revenues, both offshore and deep ocean, be regarded as the common heritage of mankind and used in a common heritage fund. To do what? As the motion says, it is to assist developing nations, to fight pollution, particularly ocean pollution, to transfer marine technology to developing countries and, finally, to assist the work of the United Nations Organization, especially in its responsibilities for international peacekeeping. This common heritage fund, very simply stated, is a major instrument for promoting economic and social justice, environmental sanity and peace.

Some members may ask, does not such a proposal as contained in this motion run counter to the establishment of the 200-mile economic zones in the process of being implemented by many of the coastal nations? The answer is no. The proposal which was put forward by the leader of the delegation of Nepal to the Conference on the Law of the Sea in May, 1978, would accept the establishment by treaty of a 200-mile economic zone in which coastal countries would be sovereign and would have ownership of all the resources. According to the proposal, however, mineral resources, including gas and oil, would be subject by treaty to a sliding scale tax to a maximum of 20 per cent. This tax would be contributed to a common heritage fund.

The minerals within the exclusive economic zone, the EEZ, would continue to be the exclusive property of the coastal state in exactly the same way as a home owner's home in his or her exclusive property. In the same way that a home owner is required to pay a tax on his exclusively owned property, the coastal state would be taxed on the revenues from mineral exploration and development in its exclusively owned economic zone.

We know that some coastal states are rich and some are poor. Therefore, there would have to be a scale of contributions which any coastal nations would make. This would vary inversely with the per capita gross national product. The richer coastal nations, Canada included, would contribute much more to the common heritage fund while the poorer nations would contribute less or perhaps in some cases nothing at all.

About 70 per cent of this fund would be directed to development in the Third World while the remaining 30 per cent would be administered by an international seabed authority for agreed upon purposes. Those purposes would have to be negotiated. In 1970 the United Nations general assembly endorsed the common heritage principle. Members will realize immediately that this is not a new idea or some harebrained scheme. Referring to the principle, they said the seabed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction are the common heritage of mankind. It is very interesting to note there was little dissent at the time, perhaps because the resolution of the general assembly did not define the limits of national jurisdiction.

Then as the United States, in particular, and Canada as well, increased the limits of their territories along with other coastal nations of the developed world to 200 miles from the traditional three-mile and 12-mile limits, it became increasingly clear that the common heritage on which everyone was agreed at one point in time was shrinking and shrinking fast. It was shrinking not because the 200-mile limit makes huge inroads on the world's seabed acreage, but rather because it came slowly to be understood that the real ocean wealth lay within 200 miles of shore. This is because as much as 93 per cent of recoverable hydrocarbon reserves of oil and gas lie within that margin of the coastal shelves of the world. On the other hand, what mineral wealth lies on the bottom of the sea beyond the coastal shelf is difficult or impossible to extract and will yield next to nothing in revenue by comparison to the estimated two billion barrels of proven oil reserves closer to shore. The effect, therefore, of excluding the developing world from any significant share of oil and gas revenues within 200 miles of shore would be to make the rich even richer, as, indeed, would 80 per cent or more of those revenues in any case, and at the same time to make the poor very much poorer by comparison.

If we survey the coastal regions within 200 miles of the coastal nations of the world we find that there would be 25 million nautical square miles of exclusive economic zones, or EEZs, as they are called. Should all the profits accrue to the coastal nations by a law of the sea treaty, more than 50 per cent would accrue to only ten nations and more than 75 per cent to the first 22 nations on the list. To put it in another way, more revenues would accrue to 13 developed nations than to all 120 countries of the Third World combined.

Let us look at the growth situation and the capital requirements of the Third World in the second United Nations development decade and try to reach some conclusions. In order to achieve a 6 per cent growth rate annually in the Third World it is estimated that the yearly flow of capital to the Third World would be in the order of about $50 billion. Current forecasts, however, show that based upon the average aid target of less than 1 per cent of gross national product per year which the developed world has committed to these countries, there will be an anticipated shortfall, or deficit, in the order of about $18 billion a year.

What would the Nepal proposal do with respect to such a shortfall? For those of us who think that the immediate potential of the seabed is unlimited, it may be surprising to learn that the Nepal proposal would yield only about $5 billion, or less, to the common heritage fund in the early years, though perhaps more later on. So the shortfall for the needs of the Third World even with the common heritage fund remains very significant indeed. However, at least some portion of the deficit would be covered in this way.

By comparison with these figures, we have available to us the payout figures under the present draft treaty. This draft treaty, by the way, will be coming before the Law of the Sea Conference when it next meets. If this document were to be enshrined in a treaty consequent action would generate about a quarter of a billion dollars in revenues; that is, $250 million compared to the Nepal proposal yielding $5 billion. And we are talking about a deficit in the Third World of $18 billion. This quarter of a billion dollars would come principally from the nodules of nickel and other minerals on the sea floor. Very little of it would come from the profits of oil and gas. In other words, in 1985 the proposal put forward by Nepal would net 16 times more for the common heritage fund than the proposal now favoured by Canada.

Hon. members should be reassured, in the interests of Canada, that the proposal which was put forward by Nepal and which is gaining support every day in the developing world poses no problem at all with respect to the legal status of the EEZ—the 200-mile limit. It does not bring into question sovereign jurisdiction over that zone, although I might say in passing that recent actions of the Government of Canada in giving up a significant part of that jurisdiction to the provinces may seriously tie our hands when it comes to future international co-operation for Third World development.

In short, therefore, the issue here is not in any way a legal one, but it is certainly a moral one. It is a question whether developed nations with a sea coast will limit their greed and be willing to invest a fair portion of the return from the earth's coastal resources in a common heritage fund for mankind. As someone closely involved in the debate for the establishment of a common heritage fund so aptly put it: "It is one of the greatest and most painless opportunities for international justice that has ever existed or is ever likely to exist."

What works against the success of such a proposal to share this wealth is, of course, greed and avarice. This is greed and avarice at the expense of the developing world. This leads us to the kind of situation which Dr. Leddy described to us in his speech last week. It is what the 1970 U.S. resolution had in mind. It is also the consideration which gave focus to early sessions of the Law of the Sea Conference. But Nepal's representative at the Law of the Sea Conference put it much better than I can. With this quote, I conclude:

> If the Law of the Sea Conference fails, it will be because we, the participants in it, did not hold high the idea of the common heritage fund. We did not do that because in spite of our awareness of new challenges facing the earth and its inhabitants we are still victims of narrow, self interest. Look at the results. Most of mankind's share of ocean resources has been thrown into the coffers of a few rich countries.

Mr. Joe Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this government most assuredly joins with the concerns of the hon. member opposite when he speaks about the abuse of our environment all across the world. In addition, we join with him in his expression of concern for the favourable and progressive development of those nations now emerging—what is called the Third World. More particularly, I would like this evening to assure the hon. member that the government would like to express its complete agreement with the hon. member's motion when he calls on the government to "continue to work to achieve agreement on a comprehensive and broadly supported law of the sea treaty through the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea and that such a treaty should provide for an international seabed or ocean authority to regulate the exploitation of deep ocean minerals in an equitable manner, with appropriate roles for private, national and international entities".

Canada is on record. Since 1967, when Ambassador Pardo of Malta introduced before the United Nations general assembly a proposal calling for the UN to undertake the "examination of the question of the reservation exclusively for peaceful purposes of the seabed and ocean floor and the subsoil thereof, underlying the high seas beyond the limits of present national jurisdiction and the use of their resources in the interests of mankind", Canada has energetically supported and pursued, in the context of those negotiations attempting to promote an over-all agreement on the use of the oceans, the principle of reserving the deep seabed beyond those limits, in the interests of mankind generally and under the term "the common heritage of mankind".

Canada was among the 35 countries on the original ad hoc committee set up by the general assembly in 1967 to conduct an examination of this issue and was also represented on the new 42-member permanent committee on the seabed formed in late 1968 to continue the work of that ad hoc group. At the 25th session of the general assembly in 1970, this committee was further expanded to comprise 86 members, exactly the same number of states which participated in the 1958 and 1960 Geneva Conferences on the Law of the Sea. At the same time the general assembly decided that a third Conference on the Law of the Sea should be held in 1973 and assigned to the expanded seabed committee the mandate of preparing for that conference. The general assembly resolution underlined that a single comprehensive convention was necessary because of the interrelationships among all ocean uses and activities. At the same time it gave the seabed committee some special tasks in preparing for the conference, in particular the completion of a comprehensive list of subjects and issues for the future convention to cover.

The decision to convene a new Conference on the Law of the Sea required lengthy and difficult negotiations in light of the wide divergence of views regarding the scope of the Conference and the priority attaching to the various issues it would have to consider. Canada was among those countries—mainly the developing states—favouring a conference broad in scope and according priority to the seabed regime as against the more restricted conference favoured by a number of other states which wanted only matters of direct interest to be included in considerations. It was and remains the Canadian view that no accommodation on the Law of the Sea issues could be successful unless it was a comprehensive accommodation on all major issues. A partial solution would be no solution at all in the long run.

In the end it fell to the Canadian delegation to chair the negotiating group seeking an accommodation among these conflicting views and to bring about agreement on the compromise resolution which was finally adopted. That resolution, introduced by the Canadian delegation on behalf of its many sponsors, called for a conference to deal with a broad range of issues, including the establishment of an equitable international regime—including international machinery—for the seabed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and a precise definition of this area to be included in the term "seabed".

At the same time, the general assembly passed resolution 2749 declaring principles which would form the basis for a new regime governing the uses of the seabed, ocean floor and the subsoil thereof beyond the limits, again, of national jurisdiction.

That resolution represented a major landfall in that it constituted the first and only consensus of the international community in this field and laid the foundation and framework for the international seabed regime. In essence, the resolution affirmed the following principles:

First, there is an area of the seabed and ocean floor which is beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and which constitutes the "common heritage of mankind".

Second, this area is not subject to national appropriation or claims of sovereignty.

Third, the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the area shall be governed by an international regime and international machinery, still to be established, and shall be carried out for the benefit of mankind as a whole, taking into particular consideration the interests and needs of the developing countries.

Fourth, the area shall be reserved for exclusively peaceful purposes.

Fifth, every state shall be responsible for ensuring that activities in the area conducted by its agencies or entities or persons under its jurisdiction shall be carried out in conformity with the international regime.

The acceptance of these far-reaching principles ranked in importance with the agreement on the applicability of a similar principle to outer space and celestial bodies. It represented a bold new approach towards a developing world order and a turning away from traditional land-oriented concepts of jurisdiction and sovereignty. Most significantly it put the general interest of the world community ahead of the special interests of any state or group of states. It is a concept holding great promise for the world of tomorrow.

Many years of work have followed these early attempts by the UN General Assembly to define principles to govern the regime of the deep ocean seabed. The third Conference on the Law of the Sea was convened in 1973 to elaborate a multilateral convention to bring into effect the principle of "the common heritage of mankind".

This country is dedicated to the establishment of such a deep ocean seabed and dedicated to that common heritage of mankind.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner) for bringing this matter to the attention of the House. I think it is an extremely important issue which we have to continue to pursue for the developing countries. If we look at it from a selfish point of view, I think we also have to support this motion from Canada's point of view.

As the last speaker mentioned, the Law of the Sea Conference has been going on in the third session since 1973. I had the pleasure of going to the Law of the Sea Conference in New York this past summer and, if anything, the surprise I experienced there was the difficulty of the developing nations to make any inroads in gaining access to what we all accept as the common heritage of mankind. At that conference there are many pressures to gain the resources and the wealth that those resources promise to the world community. Developing nations, many of which are landlocked, have very little economic or political clout at the United Nations except in the formation of groups of other landlocked developing states.

From Canada's point of view, we have gained considerably from the progress which has been made at the Law of the Sea Conference since 1973, and we should be aware that that convention has not been signed. There are many outstanding issues still to be resolved, and until those issues are resolved we do not have any long-term guarantee that every nation in the world will recognize a 200-mile economic zone. We do not have any long-term guarantee that those same nations will continue to respect Canada's 200-mile jurisdiction over our very profitable and growing fish resources. We have taken on an obligation, through agreement and consensus at the Law of the Sea Conference, which sees Canada's management of those resources off our shores. There is an understanding that those minerals found within 200 miles are also the property of the sovereign state on whose continental shelf those resources lie. My concern—and I am sure the concern expressed by the hon. member for Cochrane—is that the developing nations are going to be squeezed out of the profits which may come from those resources.

If I may just reflect on some of the attitudes which I saw dealing with seabed mining, the attitude of Canada and other nickel and copper producing states was that they were demanding a certain ceiling and a certain timetable for the export of those ferro-manganese nodules. We were demanding a timetable and a ceiling in the recognition that if those resources were exploited rapidly by those nations which are capable of developing them—mainly the United States, West German and Japanese interests—Canadian jobs and the Canadian nickel industry would be particularly harmed. We understand why the United States, West Germany and Japan were and are anxious to mine the seabed. They are importers of nickel for industrial steel. They need those resources to become self-sufficient in their industries. Canada, Indonesia, and Guatemala were not very anxious for those resources to be developed in a hurry.

But what about the developing nations, the nations which do not have the technology or financial resources to exploit those reserves? Where do they stand? This is an attempt to assure the developing nations that they can gain some of those resources. Canada and other developing nations have a vested interest in saying that. We share wealth in oil, natural gas, and nodules which are expected to provide billions and billions of dollars of wealth to the world. We must look at that wealth in terms of how much it will cost to draw those off the seabed, to process them and ship them to areas where they can be utilized. We must consider how many developing nations there are. There are probably 119 or 120 nations which do not have capabilities at this moment to utilize those resources. We expect they will share in our deep sea deepbed mines. This is why I say we do not have any choice in the matter, except to pursue an adequate and equitable sharing of those resources.

Other issues in which Canada is interested at the moment include the delimitation of the continental shelf. Not all nations in this world accept that the continental shelf should extend only to 200 miles. There are other proposals which suggest any distance off the coast of a nation where it can be shown that that shelf is actually a prolongation of that nation. There are some nations which demand the entire shelf. I hope Canada would not be in that position. There are other nations which indicate that 200 miles is the limit, regardless of the continental shelf and regardless of the terrain in the area. Nepal suggested that within 200 miles there should be a sharing of the resources in that area.

Also we are informed by some nations, including the United States, that there is a reluctance when the world authority and the Law of the Sea Conference discuss the matter of having a world authority to govern seabed mining activities, by which the authority would set up an enterprise to develop the capability of seabed mining and sharing with the developing nations. There is a reluctance on the part of the United States to share the technology which it is developing now and which it will have to develop to mine those seabeds. There is a reluctance on the part of the nations and the companies capable of doing that, a reluctance to share the technical resources needed by developing countries.

Within the Law of the Sea Conference there is a mechanism by which we would settle international disputes. We must continue our presence at the Law of the Sea Conference in order to see the proposed mechanisms or the alternatives to them. The Law of the Sea Conference must continue with Canada's presence and leadership. Canada has played a leadership role at the Law of the Sea Conference. We have done well in fisheries. We have done well in providing ourselves with the opportunity to manage fish stocks off our coasts. We have done well in accepting the responsibility to control pollution within that area. We could have developed a greater leadership role, and I hope we will in the future.

The matter of continuing to work toward an international agreement through the Law of the Sea, respecting the sharing of a seabed authority and the resources of the seabed, will not be argued by this party. Again we encourage the present government to assemble the kind of staff which was sent to Law of the Sea Conferences in the last six years to continue that type of leadership role. I hope the new government will see to it that Canada is prepared to fight for an adequate and equitable share of the resources to go to developing nations, more so than was done at the last Law of the Sea Conference in New York. If some of the developed, wealthy nations do not begin to compromise on sharing the riches of the seabed, it is my fear that those other nations will not ratify the Law of the Sea Conference and therefore will not ratify the EEZ, our control over fisheries, our control over pollution and the control which nations have over navigation and management of resources.

In closing I should like to indicate that again the hon. member has done a service to this House. I encourage the government and all parties in the House to support this resolution so that developing nations will realize that by compromising and giving Canada and other coastal nations access to those resources, in turn we are prepared to share some of the income we gain from those resources with the world community.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) in paying tribute to the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner) for bringing this significant motion to the attention of the House. Also I should like to say a word of appreciation, echoing the sentiments of the hon. member for Cochrane, for the comments and the address at the annual meeting of the Canadian World Federalist Parliamentary Association of Dr. J. F. Leddy, as he set in context our world community and reminded parliamentarians of our responsibility to be part of the peacemaking process.

I should like to say a word of appreciation to the hon. member for the ingredients which are part of his motion, as expressed and brought to the attention of the House. It is apparent to all of us today, as we look at our world, the hourly reports from Iran, the reports from the Middle East, and as we receive into the Canadian community more refugees, that we increasingly need mechanisms for world order. In terms of the future, one point of hope for the great multitude of our human family is the manner in which we manage and order the life of the seas.

When we consider that in so many areas now the resources of our land are increasingly being depleted, one area of hope for the future surely is in the harvesting of the resources of the sea and the seabed. I want to suggest that in linking together this resource with our Canadian commitment to working together through the forum of the United Nations, the hon. member is pointing to the direction in which we, as a nation, have been and will wish to continue. I think that this discussion in this House at this time is timely, as I understand there is shortly to be named the make-up of the review members for foreign policy and for development assistance for the 1980s and 1990s, and in the review of that parliamentary process surely the experience and the work which has been done through the years by this conference must be weighed and considered very seriously.

I want to suggest that we, as Canadians, have a great deal to offer to the continuance of this conference with our long history in fisheries, being a trading nation and dependent upon world order and world markets. We are also a people of humanitarian spirit, and we can see in the motion that we wish to be a part of those who bring some hope to the needy in our world.

This motion is also important as it challenges us to look at our own national negotiations between provinces and the federal government, and in understanding some of the complexity and the time span of the Conference on the Law of the Sea we know just how painstaking and how carefully our negotiations have to be undertaken across this nation.

At the moment, as we are seeking to find ways of sharing the resources of oil and energy across our nation, we can understand how fearful certain parts of our nation are lest they not have the resources to meet their basic energy needs.

Similarly, this motion points us to the broader family concern in our world beyond our Canadian family, and to the same types of concerns which are being felt around our world. Surely something which Canadians and this Parliament can be sensitive to is both the time-frame and the sensitivity of these negotiations.

Many of us have had the opportunity to visit nations which are landlocked, and the motion gives expression to the sense of hopelessness of many of these nations, in Africa particularly, and other parts of the world. We have been, through CIDA, through other mechanisms and through the voluntary sector, seeking to relate, but what many of us have come to realize, and what many of the international organisms have come to realize, is that our efforts only touch the edge of the plight of these people. If we are to find some means of bringing hope, it will be in terms of the principles which are outlined through the conference on the sea.

I want to say a word about the common heritage principle, which surely must continue to be a mainstay in the negotiations as they proceed through the 1980s. It would seem that before this House could adopt fully the intention of this motion there will be need for further discussion, and this will surely come as the conference continues through 1980 on the make-up of the assembly, on the form of a secretariat which will be charged with the opportunity of carrying out the principles and the financial arrangements as they are developed.

More work will be done at the ninth session of the Law of the Sea Conference in the 1980s, and Canada will continue to play a significant and energetic part in that. Discussions through the 1980s will be on the development of the resources in the areas under discussion, on the composition and the voting of the council, and on surrounding financial arrangements.

This House is indebted to the hon. member for Cochrane for bringing to its attention this significant ongoing Conference on the Law of the Sea, and as the months pass and the new year comes this House will be receiving reports of developments, and surely will be in a position to ratify the negotiations which have been going on through this extensive process and period of time.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to change the tune that has been played in this House this last few minutes. I have heard a lot of complaints about the House of Commons at times for its lack of credibility, but never have we aimed such a low blow as in the present debate.

This motion ignores the facts of life on how the world works. It does not begin to tell what this really is; this whole motion of turning the ownership of the bottom of the seas of the world over to an international authority. In reality what it is is a ramp by international mining companies to put the authority of ownership into the hands of an unsophisticated authority run by the United Nations civil servants so they can exploit the bottom of the sea like they have exploited the land surface of the earth. To pretend that we are doing all this in the name of doing good to people who are less fortunate than ourselves does not bring us too much credit in this House.

I wonder if I might go back and just remind you of a few things that have happened in this regard. Every one of us here is the son or the descendant of people who left the old world to come here to get access to land and resources. Some of our folks fought damned hard to get them. We have seen this fight of ours hurt, over and over again, as stronger powers took from us what we have fought so hard to win.

I saw the British, Spaniards, and French, in the history of our nation, come out to the western world. I saw the British win dominance here. One family of the British won more dominance than the other and fought with the United States. Our history is a history of fighting back the encroachments by Americans taking over our soil.

I come from that type of background, Mr. Speaker, and I think you do too. We understand what it means when we hear people stand up and say we should give away what our ancestors fought so hard to win, and hand it out for a purpose that is not what they pretend, but is nothing else in the final analysis but a ramp of the giant international mining companies to get control of something they want at the bottom of the sea.

When this proposal was first put forward I had the honour to make a proposal to the Law of the Sea Conference in 1958. The proposal Canada made at that time was that the land off our coasts at the bottom of the sea for a certain distance out would come under the national jurisdiction of the littoral state, the state beside the ocean. That was one of the two proposals made by Canada. There were five proposals made altogether.

I reported to the House on this matter in July, 1958. Canada's motion was supported by all the other nations present, and they unanimously agreed that the rule of law should prevail over the bottom of the sea. The decision was to divide up the bottom of the sea on the basis of extending our boundaries out into that sea to the point where they would meet the boundaries of the other nation coming from the other side. That convention was ratified after 22 nations had signed it, and that is the basis of international law today, that the ownership of the bottom of the sea belongs to the littoral state at the present time.

There have been a number of such conventions on the law of the sea based on the Maltese proposals of 1967, which were later modified into the stages of the Nepal proposal of recent years. It all comes down to the fact that these proposals were to change what the nations of the world had unanimously agreed to in 1958, that to bring the rule of law and order to the bottom of the sea and its unknown wealth of the future, we give control to the littoral states, the nations beside the oceans.

It was on the basis of that international law that the Conservative party, which now forms the government of this country, plans to give to the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and New Brunswick, areas of this earth equal in extent to the size of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia. If we look at the history of our country, at one time Manitoba was a tiny little province, and there was not enough economic base to support the way Manitobans wanted to build. So the government of this nation extended the boundaries of Manitoba, and also the boundaries of the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia. We were once small little areas unable to support ourselves on the resource base that we had.

My party would like to give the same feeling of equality that comes from having a resource base, to the eastern provinces. We cannot do this if we hand away what we have offshore. How can we give equality of size and resource base to Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and New Brunswick by giving away the land that is ours by international law, in the name of setting up a common heritage fund? I am not opposed to a common heritage fund. I think that every province should set up such a fund.

What I am saying is: look at the realities of what we are considering in this motion. This proposal came in with the Maltese proposal to the United Nations in 1967, I believe. Canadian civil servants jumped on it and began to write speeches for our MPs to deliver at the United Nations. I protested in writing about the proposal, but support for it still continued. It is embarrassing for me to hear the same thing coming from hon. members on our side who apparently do not know the story of how hard our party fought to bring justice to all parts of this country.

When it became known that there was an attempt to put up an authority under the United Nations to take over the resources at the bottom of the sea, all the big mining companies formed consortiums. They knew the expense of extracting minerals such as manganese and so on from the bottom of the sea would be so great that the mines on shore would have to cut back their production and that the world's consumers would pay a much higher price for this new supply. The whole world realized that situation. These companies moved quickly to take advantage of the situation, and from that one should realize that it was a ramp supported by the international mining companies to put two-thirds of the world, which is under the ocean, into the hands of unsophisticated people—call it an authority or what you will—so that these companies could get in and develop it under their type of regulations.

Canada has suffered terribly through its mining regulations in the provinces and in the federal territories. In 1957 I proposed to this House that these regulations were unjust and that they were turning the wealth of our nation over to these companies. Those regulations were changed, and today when a company goes into our northern territories, it must agree according to the laws and regulations on the share it will take out. In the unsophisticated provinces, however, these companies merely have to pay a royalty and they can take all they want. That is the basis of the big fight between the federal government and the province of Alberta over oil.

I am simply pointing out to the House that we should be careful. God bless all hon. members; I know they have sympathies for these developing nations, but they are not helping them one bit. Canada takes second place to no nation in its efforts to help other nations of the world. But at the same time, no matter what we do, it is not enough. I am simply saying that such a move would confuse the issue. I know that there will not be a vote on this motion, but before hon. members bring up such a proposal again I suggest that they think of all its ramifications and what it will do to the policy and the hope of the Canadian government of bringing justice to the Atlantic provinces and, at the same time, ensuring that these resources off our shores are developed under rules and regulations made by Canadians, not by some international authority which has no knowledge on this subject.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to follow the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and to deal with the motion before the House. I would draw to the attention of the House a couple of significant matters in this motion which give me substantial reason for concern.

I am concerned in particular about the suggestion:

> —that a significant portion of ocean mineral revenues, both offshore and in the deep ocean, should be regarded as "the common heritage of mankind" and used in a "Common Heritage Fund"—

My question with respect to that proposal is: who would administer it?

Another point of concern to me can be found in the concluding words of the motion. After detailing the nature of the fund and what it will be used for, these words appear:

> —along the lines of the 1978 proposal of the government of Nepal.

I come to this House fresh from a non-political background. I am not familiar with the 1978 proposal of the government of Nepal and I would be reluctant to vote upon a matter of this nature without knowing exactly what it is that proposal in fact details.

From my observations in the House since being elected I feel that far too often we are confronted with complicated, difficult proposals for our consideration in determining the laws of Canada without all the facts before us, or without them duly explained. We are confronted with a proposal by an hon. member without an explanation or, indeed, any attempt to detail exactly what the proposals are.

Let me get back to my fundamental concern. It was raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), when he said that the implementation of a program of this nature would assist in the preservation of peace. My comment is that if the peace process involves a constant handout, whether it be through CIDA or through a program of this nature, then indeed peace is in a fragile position.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MUNICIPAL GRANTS ACT, 1979

MEASURE RESPECTING GRANTS TO CERTAIN MUNICIPALITIES, PROVINCES AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT BODIES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-3, respecting grants to municipalities, provinces and other bodies exercising functions of local government that levy real property taxes, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and privilege to move that we proceed with second reading of this municipal grants act, Bill C-3. The bill is intended to expand and update the federal program of grants to municipalities in lieu of property taxes. The program began in 1950. It is now in its thirtieth year, which makes it one of the more durable of the intergovernmental programs in our federation. The Municipal Grants Act has not been amended since 1957, which is 22 years, by a quick calculation. It therefore contains anomalies and fails to take account of various changes within the provinces and property tax institutions, over these last 22 years. The bill is intended to remove anomalies in the law, to update the statute and expand the program, mainly by removing existing restrictions on grants. Most of these changes will take effect in the 1980 tax year of municipalities, but in some instances they will be pased in over a four-year period ending in 1983.

Tonight, Mr. Speaker, I am going to attend strictly to the tedious details of this bill without any attempt to enliven the debate. I think three is going to be a large measure of agreement in the House, and we are anxious to give a complete explanation of the bill at second reading. I am hoping for unanimous support—unanimity, before we finish.

Mr. Knowles: We like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) better when he is funny.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the comments of our new entrant to the Privy Council. Anybody who spends 37 years in this institution deserves to become a PC. He deserves that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: This is a very important program under which an estimated $148 million will be paid in this financial year in connection with the properties of various government departments. In addition, about $110 million will be paid by Crown corporations for their property. As well, the Department of External Affairs makes grants for diplomatic and consular properties, foreign governments and international organizations in Canada. This means that the total payments in respect of property taxes this year will be approximately $258 million from the Government of Canada, through Crown corporations and the Department of External Affairs. These grants are paid free of any condition.

I am sure many members of this House have had some experience in local government, as members of municipal councils or on school boards. I was a member of the St. John's city council in 1965 and became deputy mayor. I would be surprised if there were not possibly 50 or 100 members of this House who had some experience of that nature. Members will generally be aware of the vital role that municipal governments play in this country and the great value of the services they provide, very many of them without remuneration.

Local government services are primarily for the benefit of real property, to help enhance its value as well as benefit people who live or work in those real properties. The federal government owns real property in approximately 2,500 municipalities, or well over half of the municipalities in Canada have real property contained in their boundaries owned by the Government of Canada. We are the largest property owner and employer in the country. We are a major beneficiary of the services that are provided by municipal governments, particularly to real property. I want to acknowledge those services now and thank the municipalities, school boards, the elected councillors, police officers, fire fighters, engineers, teachers, garbage collectors, maintenance workers and the others who provide the services that assist our property, as well as that of the other citizens of this country.

All of these services have to be financed. As hon. members know, the main instrument of municipal finance is the local property tax. Owners of private property have to pay this tax and naturally local councils feel that the Government of Canada should pay its way too for the services we receive. There are now various categories of federal property which receive local services but they are excluded from the grant program, that is, they are excluded until the House passes this legislation, if the House chooses to do so. The principal aim of this bill is to remove and reduce these exclusions so that this program will cover as many federal properties as possible.

I should point that section 125 of the British North America Act states the following:

No Lands or Property belonging to Canada or any Province shall be liable to Taxation.

This provision explains why we make payments in the form of grants rather than taxes because, under the British North America Act, we are not exposed to local taxation. It also explains why the established system of appeals through the courts for settling differences between municipalities and private taxpayers is not used in our grants program.

The present system for settling any differences between the Government of Canada and a municipality will continue. Under that system differences are discussed between ourselves and the municipalities. The municipality is given every opportunity to state its case and then we have to make a decision whether it is a case that we should accept. This system has worked well so far. It avoids great legal costs; extra staffing and delays that would be involved with any appeal system involving the federal government. This bill makes it clear that where a grant is to be made its amount is intended to be equal to the amount of tax that would be paid if the property of the Government of Canada were taxable property to the municipalities. If we cannot reach agreement, however, the Government of Canada eventually has to decide the matter itself. Afer all, under the British North America Act we are not subject to any local taxation at all. We are making grants in lieu of taxes and we have to make the final decision.

I am advised—I am no expert in the area—by my department that cases where the Government of Canada and the municipality have been unable to reach agreement in the past have been quite infrequent, that is, in disputes about valuation and the like. We believe that in the future unresolved differences should occur less often because this bill contains changes that meet many of the complaints that municipalities have been making up to this date.

The equality between grants and taxes is achieved by two steps. First, our property is to be valued as if it were taxable property. Second, the rate of tax used in calculating the grants is to be the rate of tax that would be applicable to property of the federal government if it were taxable property. The principle of equality between grants and taxes is generally followed in this program.

There are two exceptions which have been a source of irritation to local municipal governments and provinces, and it is intended in this bill to remove those two exceptions. The first exception is deductions for local services which the federal property does not receive or does not use. The second refers to the use of preferred tax rates for calculating grants on certain kinds of federal property. At the present time deductions are made from grants in respect of local services that are not accepted by the Government of Canada. The deductions for those kinds of services consist of elementary and secondary schooling, police protection, fire protection, garbage collection and sewage disposal. The exceptions relate almost entirely to national defence property.

Complaints have been received about these deductions because they cannot be claimed by owners of private property. In addition, deductions create problems in cases where one local authority collects taxes on behalf of another. In these circumstances provincial legislation may specify how grants in lieu of taxes are to be allocated between the different bodies. In this event the existence of service deductions complicates that allocation and is a great source of irritation to the province and municipality concerned. It is our intention to eliminate almost all deductions from our grants. However, deductions for schooling are a special case because of the tremendous financial magnitudes involved. These deductions will continue where the Government of Canada operates its own schools or where it has worked out some alternative means of financing school services with a province or local school board. If the deductions are not made in those circumstances we would be making two sets of expenditures for the same purposes, and that would not be reasonable.

In future, deductions may arise in respect of services other than education only in very special circumstances. But in no case will we make deductions from real property tax grants for any service that a municipality is willing and able to provide. This means that deductions related to police protection, fire protection, garbage collection, and sewage disposal should be eliminated. I hope that the municipalities that benefit from the removal of a service deduction will be prepared to provide the same level of service for our property as they are for taxable property if they are not now doing so.

Second, I indicated that the Government of Canada presently uses preferred rates of tax in calculating grants on some properties. These preferred rates arise because most local governments are required by their provinces to levy real property taxes at two or more rates. These rates usually consist of a low or a preferred rate for residential and farm property, and a high or non-preferred rate for commercial and industrial property. While the Government of Canada now uses the non-preferred higher rates in calculating grants on most of its properties, it uses the preferred lower rate for certain categories. These include employee housing, experimental farms, hospitals, educational properties, and penitentiaries. This is a bit complicated and tedious, but I hope members in the House will permit me to put all of this on the record.

The use of a preferred rate has worked well in the case of employee housing. It has not always worked well in other cases because it has not always been clear that these other federal properties could be properly compared with taxable properties that qualify for the low rate. In future, we propose to take advantage of preferred rates only where property of the Government of Canada is directly comparable with the taxable property to which the low rates apply. This is another improvement for the assistance of the municipality.

As a result of these changes, Mr. Speaker, in respect of service reductions and preferred tax rates, it should be evident that in almost all cases where grants are paid under the new municipal grants act we are now considering, these grants should constitute the full equivalent of the taxes that would be paid if the property of the Government of Canada were taxable property.

This is really legislation that has been sponsored by the government House leader. I have to say that the pressure has been intense from the government House leader for this legislation to be brought forward. He is, of course, the great champion of the Ottawa area and a man who has waged a constant campaign of harassment against me to bring it on. Any generous provisions in this bill are due entirely to him and other members on this side who represent municipal areas that are involved.

Mr. Whelan: It was Jean Chrétien who announced that first.

Mr. Crosbie: Why did he not carry it through?

Mr. Whelan: Certain things happened to him.

Mr. Crosbie: Why did he desert it along the way? This brings me to what is undoubtedly the most important part of this bill.

I am delighted to have an interjection from one of our leadership candidates on the other side. Many on this side are hoping the hon. gentleman will truly lead his party, that we will not have the Bay Street boys taking over but instead will have the farmers truly represented for the first time in the leadership of the Liberal Party of Canada.

● (2020)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Whelan will whale them.

Mr. Crosbie: Many of us here are almost prepared to walk across the floor to help that hon. gentleman.

Mr. Whelan: I know you are in need of leadership. That's for sure. After you saw that Gallup poll you have to go somewhere.

Mr. Crosbie: Notice I said "almost". This brings me to what is the most important part of this bill, that is, the definition of property that will be subject to grant. If hon. gentlemen referred to the bill, and I know they have all read the provisions intently, and if they looked at subsection 2(2), while that subclause is rather complex, the basic intention is simple. The basic intentions of the hon. gentleman I have just been talking to are simple, but to achieve his ambitions will be complex.

The provision of that subclause is that grants shall be paid in respect of all real property owned by the Crown that is occupied by a federal department, subject to exception for structures, urban parklands and Indian reserves. This new definition of the property that is subject to federal grants is much broader than the one that is now in effect. The properties that will be eligible for the new and enlarged grants will include defence bases in rural or semi-rural areas. The hon. gentleman who represents a rural area is apparently unconcerned about this.

Mr. Whelan: I am talking to another member from a rural area.

Mr. Crosbie: It will include defence bases in rural or semi-rural areas. I do not even hear the hon. member knocking on his desk applauding. He is certainly not looking for support as far as I can see. It must be a false rumour.

Mr. Whelan: If there is anything false, it is on the other side.

Mr. Crosbie: These are presently classified as self-contained defence establishments. Other properties that are going to be eligible are national parks, wildlife reserves, which, of course, are more suitable for some of those gentlemen—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —national parks, historic sites, and that accounts for the first bench over there, these historic sites will be subject to grants. Parliament Hill will become subject to grants. Museums—we are back to the front bench of the opposition again.

Mr. Pepin: Are circuses included?

Mr. Crosbie: Libraries, art galleries, concert halls, water conservation projects and community pastures—we are back to the hon. gentleman again.

Mr. Whelan: That is where you are going to go, so you want to fix them up good.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman will be put out to pasture.

Mr. Whelan: The Gallup poll said who will be put out to pasture.

Mr. Crosbie: The only gallop we are worried about is the gallop to the polls.

Mr. Whelan: You ought to be!

Mr. Crosbie: We are including now self-contained defence establishments, national parks, historic sites, Parliament Hill, museums—strange conjunction—libraries, art galleries, concert halls, water conservation projects, and community pastures. In addition, three other rather specialized categories will be newly eligible. First, portions of Indian reserves that are occupied by federal departments to provide services to persons who are not resident in such reserves and, second, real property occupied by a department under a long-term lease known as an emphyteutic lease—do you know how to pronounce that?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You did very well.

Mr. Crosbie: —third, real property owned by a province but occupied and used by a federal department pending transfer of administration and control. In the case of some 58 defence bases presently classified as self-contained, grants are now determined with reference to the value of the land plus any buildings used as married quarters. We do not now make any payments for administrative or operational buildings. This is incredibly complicated.

Mr. Pepin: Then table it.

Mr. Crosbie: Imagine, for 22 years payments have been made on self-contained defence establishments for the land plus buildings used as married quarters, but they were not used as married quarters, they were administrative operation, and no grants were paid. This bill removes that restriction.

The result of this enlarged definition, if hon. gentlemen and ladies of the House pass this bill, will be to increase payments in all parts of Canada. Along with the other changes that are set out in the legislation, this will benefit many municipalities. It will increase the grants paid on the property of government departments by an estimated $25 million as of 1983. In addition, there will be other benefits that relate to Crown corporations. I will come to that a bit later.

Some of these changes will be phased in over four years. The phase-in provision is set out in clause 15 of the bill. This clause is limited to increases in grants on self-contained defence bases, national parks, museums, art galleries and concert halls. All other changes will be fully effective with the 1980 taxation year.

The definition of property subject to grant has some remaining exceptions. There are only three of significance—structures, urban parklands, and Indian reserves. Members might ask, what do you mean by structures? I was struck by that question myself when I examined this. Structures are the most important. These include jetties, canal locks, and aircraft runways. These are some of the examples. The cost of those kinds of structures and the potential grant are very large.

At the same time, because of the nature of these items, the local cost of providing services is minimal. In all justice, can we say that municipalities provide services to jetties, canal locks, or aircraft runways? Of course they don't. If grants were paid, they would in most cases greatly exceed any costs to local government for providing services to those kinds of structures, so they are not included.

In addition, whereas all jurisdictions apply their property taxes to land and buildings, there is a great deal of difference with respect to structures. Many types of structures are taxed only in some parts of Canada and not in others. In addition, many structures are by nature owned only by governments. Therefore, we have no comparison to the private sector. The decision to exclude structures from this bill was taken in view of those kinds of considerations. Schedule II of the bill sets out a list of structures of which I have given some examples. That list is not exhaustive but it shows the kinds of properties that are included.

Second, urban parklands were excluded on the grounds that that property, urban parkland, provides a service that normally is provided by an urban municipality. In other words, if the Government of Canada has urban parkland, that is ordinarily the kind of service that the municipality should provide. Where it is provided by a municipality, the municipality does not get any direct revenue from the urban parkland because it cannot tax itself. If we are providing the same kind of service, why should we pay a grant on this kind of property where we are providing the service to the municipality? That is the reason for this second exemption.

Indian reserves are a special case. I must say I have no direct experience in this because we have no Indian reserves in my home province of Newfoundland. In some parts of Canada, municipal boundaries are drawn in such a way as to exclude reserves. In other parts of Canada, Indian reserves are within municipal boundaries. However, the payment of grants to the municipalities concerned would imply some degree of integration between the reserve and the municipality in the provision of services which seldom exists.

There are some very special cases in defining federal property. I will just refer to one category because of its importance. That is Crown property administered by a federal department but leased to or occupied by a third party. In most cases, the third party is taxable by the municipality with respect to its occupancy of the property. The amount of the tax payable is exactly the same as it would be if he were the owner of the property. In most of those cases, the occupant pays the tax for which he is liable and there is no problem. However, if for any reason the occupant does not pay his tax, the municipality then has a problem as to how it enforces the collection of their tax. Normally they can seize a property and sell it, but they cannot seize Crown land and sell it. The existing act tries to deal with that problem by excluding leased property from grant if the occupant is taxable, but permitting the minister to include the property by prescription.

There have been many controversies over the years as to whether this particular property or that should be prescribed. Well, this problem has been examined at length by the government as well as by its predecessor. The most basic conclusions which emerged were the following: first, in general the government ought not to pay grants with respect to property which it does not occupy. In particular, we should continue our policy of not paying grants on behalf of applicants who are themselves tax exempt. This occurs where a departmental property is occupied by a province, municipality or school board. I mean, if our property is occupied by a province, municipality or school board, and they are tax exempt, surely there is no reason we should pay the tax although the organization concerned does not. If a municipality is unable to derive revenues from a body where it owns property, thee is no strong reason why it should derive taxes from the federal government when that body occupies federal property.

Second, where the lessee or occupant of departmental property is taxable in respect of his occupancy the government ought not, in most cases, to include the property in its grants. The occupant should continue to pay the taxes for which he is liable. This works well in most cases, but there would be great difficulties if we were to attempt to pay on behalf of the occupant, particularly where occupancy is for commercial or industrial use.

There are some instances where the occupant of departmental property is taxable and where the system does not work well if the municipality seeks to tax him. This occurs most often in the case of residential and farm property. If there are a large number of problems of this kind in a particular municipality it might face the possibility of a significant revenue loss because of the difficulty of enforcing collection of its taxes. There are other instances when the federal government expropriates or purchases property with outstanding leases, including commercial or industrial leases, and when payment of tax by the lessee would mean he is paying twice—once directly and a second time indirectly through his rent. The government should continue its present policy of including these categories of leased property in its grants and should, in almost all cases, take the necessary steps to recover its costs through rental charges. The municipality then forgoes its right to tax the occupant.

The problem of leased property calls for maximum flexibility, and the act should give the minister power through regulations to determine how property which is leased or occupied by a third party should be treated in an effort to meet special cases. Then, of course, we shall have to keep the case of leased properties under periodic review.

Well, Mr. Speaker, those conclusions are reflected in the bill before us. In particular, clause 8(1)(e) gives the governor in council authority to make regulations prescribing particular categories of leased or occupied property as being eligible for grant. We intend to have the necessary regulations prepared to enable us to pay grants on those categories of lease or occupancy which are included in grants under the existing act. This bill will require that the regulation be published in the Canada Gazette. I might say that that has not been the case in the legislation up to now.

I would point out that clause 8(3) requires that all regulations proposed by the governor in council under 8(1) are to be published in the Canada Gazette and shall not become effective until a reasonable opportunity is given to interested parties to make representations about them to the minister. That is another new departure.

I would also call the attention of hon. members to clause 10. This authorizes the minister to enter into bilateral agreements with the provinces respecting leased property. We do not intend at the present time to seek such agreements. However, this provision might be useful in the future if it were ever considered desirable to pay grants on a broader range of leased properties.

Most of my comments up to now have related to grants in lieu of real property tax. As we all know, this is the tax which municipalities levy each year upon owners of real property, based upon the value of the property occupied and the tax rate applied to that value. There are other taxes levied upon owners' real property and these, too, will be covered by the bill. Such taxes are based upon some characteristic of property other than its value. Usually such taxes are tied to the frontage or area of land concerned, or to a building on the land. Local improvements are the best known example. The bill defines these other taxes as frontage or area taxes and provides for payments in respect of them.

Grants in respect of most of these have been paid in recent years, but apart from local improvements this has been done pursuant to special wording added to the municipal grants vote of Parliament and not through the act itself. However, it has not been possible in the past to pay grants where such taxes were levied to finance non-capital services such as street oiling. The present bill removes that restriction. Now street oiling is not of much importance in areas where all the streets are paved, but for people living in areas such as certain places in Newfoundland where street oiling is important, this can be important. I am sure the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) would agree.

Mr. Rompkey: We don't even have streets.

Mr. Crosbie: He says some of his communities don't even have streets. As I say, the bill removes that restriction and it gives the minister an option for the first time of paying a local improvement grant in a lump sum exclusive of interest, or in annual instalments of blended interest and principal. I hope hon. members are grasping the minutiae I am trying to detail here, Mr. Speaker, because the municipal councils will be interested in all this.

Mr. Whelan: It was more interesting when the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley) presented it to cabinet committee a few months ago.

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Crosbie: It is shocking to be interrupted by an old veteran of the House like that.

The bill also removes a long-standing restriction in respect of water taxes. Most municipalities finance water as a service charge but there are some, mainly in the province of Quebec, which finance it in part by a property tax.

The bill does not provide for the payment of grants in lieu of business occupancy taxes on departmental property. I know this is an issue with many municipalities; they claim we should pay grants in lieu of business occupancy taxes, but we just cannot see that proposition. The payment of business tax grants has been considered—there is some validity to the argument. However, we take the position that government departments are not engaged in business. That, surely, is evident from the record of the last 16 years. In fact, the government was not engaged in business either. It was engaged in harassing business.

There are some parts of the government which are engaged in business but they are a relatively small number of Crown corporations, the Crown corporations which are trying to make a profit or a reasonable return on investment capital. So the argument used by the municipalities would apply to them, and does make some sense. The bill does address this matter and it identifies the bodies which will be expected to make payments in respect of business occupancy tax. We feel that certain Crown corporations which are comparable to business in the private sector should pay business tax grants, but not the ordinary departments—they are not engaged in business, they are engaged in providing a service to the public. It is to be hoped they are.

Another argument against paying business occupancy tax grants on departmental property is that the money which would be required is simply not available. If we were back in those halcyon years when revenues were burgeoning, when hon. gentlemen opposite were spending like mad, when they were looking around to see where next they could throw some public money, if we were in a situation of that kind and we did not know what to do with it all or where to spend it all, we could spire some out in business occupancy tax credits. That is not the case today. We have had that for the last ten or 15 years. The cupboard is getting pretty bare, and we simply have not got the money that would be needed if we agreed to pay business occupancy grants in lieu of taxes.

We also feel that it would be preferable to bring into the grants system some properties now totally excluded rather than leave those out while increasing the grants on properties that are already qualifying. I want to point out, by the way, that none of the provinces now pay a grant in lieu of business occupancy taxes in respect of the departmental property of those provinces, so it ill behooves them to look at us and say that we should do the same. There is one province, la belle Province de Québec, that has recently introduced legislation which is going to result in that step being taken in the province of Quebec. I am not sure whether that legislation is now passed, but there is a considerable change taking place in Quebec with respect to real property municipal taxation, and the province of Quebec intends to do this, but it is the only province.

So, I come now to the subject of grants by Crown corporations and agencies. They are excluded from direct coverage under this particular municipal grants act, but it has been government policy since 1950 that they should pay their own grants. And, since 1967, they have been directed to pay on a basis at least as generous as that set out in the Municipal Grants Act for departmental property. So, it has been a matter of policy that they pay grants in lieu of taxes.

In general that system has worked well. However, there have been cases where it has not, and there have been no effective means of co-ordinating the practices of the bodies concerned. There has been confusion on the part of municipalities and provinces as to our general policy, and in some few instances there have been bitter complaints. So, to try to remedy this situation the bill contains three provisions. First, it provides for the governor in council to make regulations which will constitute guidelines to be followed by Crown corporations making grants in lieu of taxes.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Second, it specifies that such guidelines are to provide that grants be determined on a basis that is at least equivalent to that which is applicable to departmental property.

Third, it lists schedules III and IV, if hon. members will check those schedules, the specific bodies which are affected by these guidelines. The bodies listed in schedules III and IV are required to pay grants in respect of real property taxes and frontage or area taxes. The bodies listed in schedule IV, in addition, are required to make payments in respect of business occupancy taxes as well. Bodies are listed in schedule IV if they are generally independent of our own treasury, the federal treasury.

I think it might help members of the House who are interested if I just outlined what the government's guidelines will be if the House passes this bill. The first principle will be this: Crown corporations are not to enter into special arrangements with local governments or provinces in respect of real property taxes, frontage or area taxes or business occupancy taxes.

Second, the grants that they make are to be paid to taxing authorities responsible for collecting taxes in the areas where their property is situated, and they are not to by-pass these authorities.

Third, the grants are to be paid in respect of any property of a kind that would be subject to grant if it were property of a federal department. However, this will not apply in respect of Crown corporation property leased to a third party.

Fourth, the rate of tax to be used in calculating a grant on Crown corporation property is to be the rate that would be applicable to such property if it were taxable property. Deductions from the resulting grants are not to be made except in very limited cases where they could be made in respect of departmental property as set out in clauses 6 and 7 of the bill.

The fifth principle is this: Grants are to be settled and paid with reasonable promptness in respect of each taxation year for each taxing authority, having regard to when the taxes are due for the owners of private property. Where final settlements cannot be made within such a time frame, interim payments are to be made which will be substantial in relation to the total grant that the body estimates will be made for the taxation year.

Sixth, grants are to be paid free of any conditions.

Seventh, where a dispute arises between two Crown corporations as to which of them is responsible for the payment of a grant in lieu of taxes for a given property, the matter will be referred promptly to the Department of Justice for a ruling, and the opinion of that body shall be accepted.

These are the principles that will be contained in these regulations if the bill is passed.

These guidelines should help to clarify the present situation with reference to grants by Crown corporations and agencies. They will be set out with precise wording in regulations, but they will not become binding until the bodies concerned or any other intereted parties, including municipalities, have had an opportunity to comment on them. For this reason we do not intend to have these guidelines become applicable until the first day of taxation years commencing on or after January 1, 1981, not 1980.

Provision will be made for adding corporations to or deleting them from schedules III and IV. This will be done at a later stage, likely in connection with a separate bill, Bill C-27, dealing with the Crown Corporations Act. I believe that has now had first reading in the House. Bill C-27 concerns the control, direction, and accountability of all Crown corporations.

I should also refer before closing to the role of the provinces in this federal program. Municipal governments are the creations of the provinces. I notice that my script says "the creatures of the provinces". I remember when I was elected to St. John's city council that this term was used by somebody in the Newfoundland government. We were the "creature" of the provincial government. I took strong objection. So, harking back to that, over the years, back, in 1965—14 years ago; it is gone in a flash. As you get older, you realize we are only transient here.

Mr. Pepin: Some more than others.

Mr. Crosbie: The poll has had very deleterious effects on me.

However, local governments are creations of the provinces. The taxes which they can levy, as well as the form of those taxes and the body that is responsible to administer and collect them, are all determined by the provincs. With a few exceptions, notably those that apply to appeal procedures and the definition of property subject to grant, we try to follow the property tax institutions of each province.

For that reason grants have always been paid to those bodies which had been designated by the provinces as tax collecting bodies. As a consequence we pay grants to school boards. We pay them to upper tier and regional municipalities only where they are the tax collecting authorities as designated and appointed and decided by the provinces. In my view it would be inappropriate for us to depart from that practice, or for us to designate on our own the bodies to which our grants should be paid. That is a matter to be decided by the provinces which create the municipal and local government structures in this country.

I have to point out in that respect that in some cases the provinces themselves, or the territories, collect the property taxes. This is happening in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, the Yukon, and the Northwest Territories. In those cases we pay federal grants to the provinces and the territories in the same way as we do to the municipal governments since 1967. That has been authorized by a special wording added to the municipal grants vote of Parliament and not through the act itself. If we pass this bill, then such payments will be brought within the act for the first time.

Finally, in ending I want to note a number of minor new things which the act does. It permits the payment of grants for the first time to Indian band councils where they levy a property tax. It provides exclusions for lands for which a Crown grant was never issued and for which there is no designated use, and also for general purpose public highways owned by the federal government. It gives the minister power to reduce a grant by the amount of any cancellation, reduction or refund of taxes that would be applicable to federal property if it were taxable property. There is no concern why we should not get the same kind of reduction.

While the bill authorizes grants on community pastures for the first time, it has an exclusion in clause 11 for such time as a special existing program of payments in lieu of taxes on community pastures continues in effect.

The fifth point is that the bill makes it clear that no grant is to be paid in respect of taxable property acquired by the Government of Canada for any part of the taxation year during which it is acquired. The latter is because in fact the former owner of such property is taxable for the whole of the taxation year during which the acquisition takes place, and there is no reason why the tax should be paid twice.

This brings me to the end of my comments about the purpose and intent of Bill C-3. We can all see from my remarks—and I know they are hard to follow if one does not have the text before him—that this is a complex and important measure. It will tidy up and modernize a statute where changes are long overdue; it is now 22 years since it was changed. It will bring substantial benefits to local governments in all parts of Canada and will strengthen the principle that the Government of Canada is paying its way for the services it receives from municipal government.

Before anyone in the official opposition jumps up to point it out, I am quite happy to say that the terms of the bill are pretty well the same as the bill which was introduced in the House of Commons approximately nine or ten months ago by the then minister of finance, who has since passed on to happier things in the opposition. Therefore I would anticipate tremendous support from the official opposition for this piece of legislation. I would not be surprised if even the New Democratic Party supports this legislation. Normally they do not like to see money spent or any increased amounts of money spent when it comes to the average home owner across Canada who hopes to get a break in the new year through another piece of legislation that I would not mention because I do not want to get on a controversial tack here. But I hope even members of the New Democratic Party will support this legislation and we get it through the House tonight. As a matter of fact, we have one hour and ten minutes. What a tremendous demonstration this would be to the municipalities of Canada of how members opposite were concerned about them, if this whistled through all stages tonight with no hesitation, on to third reading, and became law tomorrow. I move second reading of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the first time I had the opportunity to speak in this most impressive chamber was in 1963. I had chosen, as the topic of my maiden speech, the price of manufacturing milk. In so doing, I was of course proving the great interest I had in local matters dear to my electors of Drummond-Arthabaska, my riding at the time, and today the riding of Drummond. I must admit that I am seeking to express somewhat the same feeling today in speaking of grants in lieu of taxes paid to municipalities in which there are federal buildings, a topic of prime interest, naturally, to the electors of Ottawa-Carleton, my new riding.

Mr. Speaker, I do not profess to be an expert in the matter like my colleague from Langelier, former mayor of Quebec City, who unfortunately is unable to be here tonight and who would very much like to participate in the debate. This may be reason enough to extend it till tomorrow because the hon. member for Langelier (Mr. Lamontagne) has important things to say about the principles involved in this debate. As for me, I certainly intend to become more versed in the matter than I was, or at least sufficiently to meet the needs of my present duties.

[English]

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) has already given the basic elements of this bill. They are pretty clear, notwithstanding the fancy job he did on his speech, with additions which were more of a confusing nature than of an enlightening one. But we thank him for that nevertheless, because it made the last hour easier to go through. The words, thoughts and ideas, as he said himself, are those found in the proposal made by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) in Bill C-46 in January of 1979. So, we can easily call it a bipartisan, and, I hope, a tripartisan bill.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Quadripartisan.

Mr. Pepin: As has been clearly indicated, obviously I have a special interest, as others have, because of what is involved in this bill for Ottawa and surrounding municipalities. I am informed on what the city of Ottawa will be getting out of this new law. Presently the grants in lieu of taxes for the city of Ottawa are in the area of $30 million. This figure will go up by $3.3 million in 1980, by $4.4 million in 1981, by $5.5 million in 1982, and $6.6 million in 1983.

The township of Gloucester is interested in it too. At the moment it receives $1.165 million, and $475,000 for the Crown corporations. I assume that that figure will be adjusted as the others will be.

I am very keen to know what the village of Rockcliffe will be getting out of the new formula by way of compensation for embassies located on its territory. As the minister said, in the case of Ottawa, the Parliament Buildings, the National Archives, the National Library, the National Arts Centre and the National Museum will be included for the first time in the formula. As he said, also the bill covers Crown corporations, at least those found in schedules I, III and IV. This includes only 56 of them. I am quite keen to know what will happen to the others. Presumably we will have detailed statistics on what will happen to the Crown corporations not listed at the end of this bill.

[Translation]

The following question is immediately raised: does Bill C-3 solve all problems and satisfy the aspirations of the municipalities involved? The views of the municipalities have been stated by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities in a letter to Mr. Chrétien and a brief to the Canadian government, both delivered on June 20, 1977. It would be useful to make a comparison between supply and demand, between the demands of the municipalities and what is offered by the government, to record in Hansard and comment very quickly a few excerpts from the second document. It is a paper which I read carefully and, as I said, I would simply wish to put on record in Hansard a few quotations so that those who read the interesting debates of this House can compare the demands of the municipalities with what they get under Bill C-3.

I therefore quote from the brief dated June 20, 1977 and entitled "Urgent Amendments to be made to the Municipal Grants Act". The quotation reads as follows:

> Through the federal program of grants in lieu of taxes, considerable revenues accrued to the municipalities of Canada. However, the program had several basic flaws. In our opinion, the federal government should pay taxes the same way as any other ratepayer of a municipality or provide corresponding grants.

That is the principle the former mayor of Quebec City, now the hon. member for Langelier would like to comment upon tomorrow. In that paper, the municipalities indicated five issues still outstanding in June, 1977, at the time they were expressing their opinions. The first issue was the difference between the assessed value and the agreed value. I quote from the brief:

> In a number of cases, the assessed value of a given property (determined by the municipality) does not coincide with the agreed value (determined by the federal government). We strongly recommend—> —to correct the situation by accepting the assessed value that the municipality concerned will have determined.

It is still the Federation of Municipalities that is speaking.

Bill C-3, as the Minister of Finance indicated very clearly tonight, does not recognize that principle. Clause 2 of the bill defines the—effective rate

—as that which "in the opinion of the minister, would be applicable to any federal property if that property were taxable property". The minister said that this difference between the assessed value and the agreed value does not create too many problems. My information is slightly different.

As a matter of fact, I have been told that in 10 per cent of the cases the agreed value is higher than the assessed value, that it is lower in 50 per cent and that it is the same in 40 per cent of the cases, which still means that there is a difference between both values in 50 per cent of the cases. The government's refusal to accept the point of view of the federation is probably based on the lack of consistency in the assessment process from one town to another. But we should like to know, and we shall see in committee, whether the problem is serious and whether there is a way of reducing—we should always try to improve the law—the total liberty now left to federal authorities which are responsible for the negotiation of the evaluation base. Perhaps the mechanism itself through which the evaluation is determined should be improved.

We should also wonder, and the minister did so, how the provinces act in such circumstances. I read that some provinces accept the municipal evaluation. So we should try to determine why they do so. If some accept the municipal evaluation, there is perhaps some reason for this. I also read while preparing my speech that some commentators suggested there should be some common effort between the federal government and the provinces to have precisely a common federal-provincial approach in that area. This is perhaps a subject to be put on the agenda of a federal-provincial conference.

The second area of conflict which the Federation of Municipalities mentioned is the number of tax exempt properties at the present time. There is no possible ground for discussion on this subject. There has been a great deal of improvement in the number of federal buildings which are now, which henceforth will come under this system of grants in lieu of taxes. But are they cases of unacceptable tax exemptions? The Ottawa municipal authorities seem satisfied but other municipalities may not be so and they should be encouraged to write to us if that is the case.

The third issue of conflict is the business occupancy tax and again I quote the text from the Canadian Federation of Municipalities.

> The federal government has not taken into account the business occupancy tax in the calculation of the grants. The Canadian Federation of Municipalities suggests that the business occupancy tax is an integral part of the property tax system.

The commission paper then lists the reasons which in the past had justified or seemed to justify the refusal on the part of the central government to compensate for the non payment of the business tax. These two reasons are, first "the lack of uniformity in Canada concerning this tax system", and second the fact that "federal government activities do not generate taxable income".

And on that point the federation was almost violent, not accepting, and again I quote:

> —the technical arguments used by the government—

—which, they said—

> —to a large extent do not apply to the calculation of the grant and do not hold before the significance of that tax as a source of revenue for municipalities.

I have a bit of difficulty here because the text of the Federation of Municipalities uses the expression commercial tax. It may just be a matter of semantics but I have been told that for the past three years the commercial property tax has been accepted with the residual property tax as the basis of evaluation in the current legislation on grants to municipalities. In other words, and the minister said so earlier, any property tax, residual or commercial, is considered to determine the basis for federal grants.

What is not accepted—the Minister of Finance has also mentioned this, maintaining the central government's position in this regard—what is not accepted is the business tax, the business occupancy tax which is defined in clause 8(2) of Bill C-3 as a tax for business activities and not as a property tax as such. This business tax is still excluded in the bill, except, as the minister indicated, for Crown corporations listed in schedule IV, corporations which are openly and truly commercial.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most important points on which the Federation of Municipalities, speaking on behalf of municipalities which are recipients of these grants, disagree with the government. Incidentally, it is important to note that if the business tax or the business occupancy tax were retained as a basis for federal grants it would add, I do not have any precise figures since estimates vary, but it would add $30 million, $40 million, some even say $100 million to the amount the municipalities now claim from Ottawa. I wanted to stress this point, Mr. Speaker, so that it would be well understood, including by myself, that there is a very large gap on this point between the Federation of Municipalities and the central government.

The fourth contentious issue is that of deduction for services. The minister stated tonight that almost all deductions were now set aside. As he himself said, this includes schools, police, and garbage collection where the government uses its own services or does not use those of the municipality. Those deductions are covered in clauses 6 and 7 of the bill. I have consulted those concerned and was told that this did not represent a major problem here in Ottawa. Again, if our information is not correct I hope that the people concerned will write to us or will phone us. There may be instances where this creates real problems.

Finally, the fifth contentious issue that the federation brought up in June, 1977, concerns Crown corporations; it deplored the fact that there was no "consistency in the way Crown corporations pay their municipal taxes". According to what the minister said tonight, and to the bill before us, Crown corporations listed in schedules I, III and IV are now subject to this legislation. Therefore, in this instance, as in two or three others, the federation won its case. But there are other Crown corporations, not enumerated in schedules I, III and IV, and about which we would like more information.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude the second part of my comments by saying that Bill C-3 solves a lot of problems but does not solve them all. The most pressing problem that remains is that of the status of the business tax, the business occupancy tax, the formula for evaluating the effective rate which is the basis of the grant. The minister has said again tonight that the federal government will act as it has in the past.

● (2100)

[English]

The federal government in these matters continues not to recognize business occupancy taxes in its new granting formula with some exceptions; for commercial Crown corporations. Why is that? One reason is that municipal business occupancy taxes vary from one province to another, ranging from Prince Edward Island, which not long ago abolished them completely, to Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Nova Scotia, which I understand have made them mandatory. I understand Manitoba permits municipalities, but does not require them to levy an extra business tax. In addition, as a general rule throughout Canada, distilleries and breweries pay much higher rates of taxes. Pipelines, telephone companies and mines usually have their business tax rates prescribed by statute.

To repeat, there is very little consistency in business taxes from one municipality to another or from one industry to another, and that is the real problem. The Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities have spoken, as I have said before, for the inclusion of these business taxes in the grants formula, for many years. Should they be accepted, they would add about 25 per cent to the cost on a national basis. Municipalities have argued that by making grants purely at residential and commercial real property rates, the federal government is paying less than its fair share. This is an argument of which the public at large and members of Parliament must be very much aware.

Prince Edward Island has found an interesting way around this difficulty. It abolished business taxes and created a single rate for all property, the effect of which was to increase federal grants in lieu of taxes in that province. Theoretically, all provinces could follow the example of Prince Edward Island and create one uniform tax rate which would be higher than the current residential and commercial rates combined. In practice, however, it would be very difficult for them to do so, as they would be accused of giving money to businesses, especially breweries and distilleries. So, politically, they have not been able to do this, in spite of the fact that such a move would increase grants in lieu of taxes.

I would like to emphasize that there is created here an anomaly which in principle should be corrected if at all possible. The problem has potential constitutional dimensions. I would put the questions to the Minister of Finance in this way: the first possibility is, should the federal government respect provincial autonomy and jurisdiction in municipal affairs and accept the distinction most provinces make between commercial and business occupancy tax and let them penalize themselves or their municipalities if they so wish? The second question is, should Ottawa respect provincial autonomy and jurisdiction and accept the province's right to distinguish commercial and business occupancy taxes and not penalize those provinces which do so? In my view these are the alternatives. I am quite sure that the problem will not be solved tomorrow. It should be the objective of the government however, to solve the problem by means of the second suggestion which is more accommodating to provincial autonomy and to the federal system as a whole.

The Minister of Finance has indicated that this is not only a theoretical or constitutional problem, but one of cost to the federal purse. Consequently, I suggest that the federal government consider the possibility in the future of paying a certain percentage of the business occupancy tax to those municipalities which levied that tax separately from the commercial property tax or, in other words, to those provinces which do not roll the taxes together. I am interested in questioning the minister on this topic when this bill gets into committee. I think that the principle I proposed is better than the present law. We should always strive for improvement, and my proposal would meet the needs of the future if not the possibilities of the moment.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate my support for this bill. It is a marvellous bill and I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) for bringing it before the House. I am sure that members on all sides will support the bill. So far, the government has not proposed many such bills, and it has been rather difficult for us. I know that the minister has been threatening the members opposite with an election if we do not rush in and support his proposed bills and suggestions, but indeed tonight we have something before us which we all can applaud. It has definitely been a long time coming.

Many municipalities, and particularly the ones around Ottawa, have definitely experienced numerous injustices in the past. I was not here for the occasion, but I understand that at one time the city of Ottawa threatened to cut off the water supply to the Parliament Buildings because of the injustices perpetrated by the previous government. Indeed, the previous government introduced this bill in 1976. They took a great deal of time before they actually introduced the bill, and then they eventually went through the motions of getting it through the House. I think, though, that we came to expect that from the previous administration. They moved slowly on a number of matters. That is why the people of Canada decided in May to see what a bunch of new fellows could do.

On this particular measure I congratulate the government not only for introducing the bill, but for giving it priority. I am sure that we will be able to pass the bill tonight. It is not a controversial measure and I think that all hon. members will support it. I see no reason why we cannot pass this legislation tonight.

The Minister of Finance will be happy, and he will be able to sleep tonight with a smile rather than a frown on his face. If the Minister of Finance is happy for an evening, the country will benefit, I am sure. I urge the House to send the Minister of Finance home tonight with a smile so that he will have pleasant dreams and not nightmares.

The one thing that I wonder about is why some of the measures will be phased in. I recognize that in most cases the municipalities will be able to collect grants in lieu of taxes next year, but on some occasions it will be over a four year period.

Having accepted the fact that grants should be given in lieu of taxes, why should it take four years to actualize that truth? That is one of the major defects in the bill. Perhaps the minister could reconsider the matter and perhaps next year, if he is still here, he could speed up the process, so that this four year phase-in period could be reduced.

I do not wish to say any more on the bill. The previous speaker in a non-partisan way has raised some valid points. I am sure that the Minister of Finance will accept those points and will consider all suggestions wich have been made. There are problems which defy easy solution and which require a sense of good will and determination before they can be worked through and solved. Other than that, I have nothing more to say. We will support the bill.

Mr. Armand Caouette (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member who spoke before me, we also do not intend to keep this bill on second reading too long in this House but we want to give the government the possibility of doing something as it has once again taken a step favourable to municipalities which have been indeed complaining for years about the lack of revenue because of Parliament or government buildings.

We know that the city of Ottawa in particular had serious problems and nearly every year groups were formed to urge the government to give their fair share to the municipalities or cities which were asking the federal government to be a good citizen like all others and pay its property contribution. We also know, Mr. Speaker, that under the British North America Act and other regulations, a municipal or provincial government cannot force the federal government to pay property taxes.

Clause 13 of Bill C-3 says, and I quote:

13. No right to a grant is conferred by this act.

Such a conception, Mr. Speaker, could be justified in 1867 when the federal government and its administration amounted to a very small number of buildings, including the Parliament Building, the residences of the Governor General, the Lieutenant Governor, the Prime Minister and a few others. Today, the situation has changed and the federal government is the biggest administration in this country. Its buildings cover thousands of square feet and when one looks at the number of buildings the federal government has in our Canadian cities, those grants that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is proposing tonight, in Bill C-3, are indeed welcome.

I would not want, as the hon. member who spoke before me suggested, to take too much of the time of the House to move amendments to Bill C-3 if necessary. I would like to conclude by urging the minister to introduce other bills which could help our municipalities which for the past years have had to go heavily into debt.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues, I hope this bill will go through third reading quite rapidly so those municipalities can have the grants the minister described so well tonight.

[English]

Mr. Ken Binks (Ottawa West): In speaking to Bill C-3, Mr. Speaker, the municipal grants act, 1979, I want to commend the minister for making the changes contained in this bill and making it one of the first pieces of legislation to be offered in the new Parliament.

I was interested to hear the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin) ask how it will meet all the problems. Mr. Speaker, there is no bill that meets all the problems, but in my opinion Bill C-3 should be considered in the same sense as Bill C-20. Bill C-3 is as important in its own way as is Bill C-20, because it gives relief to municipalities while Bill C-20 gives relief to individuals in this country.

This bill is long overdue. The first municipal act was passed in this country in the Baldwin-Lafontaine ministry in 1837, and the last time municipal grants in lieu of taxes was discussed in this House was in 1957, when the question of taxation of the Crown by municipalities was fully discussed by ministers, and laid to rest.

This bill recognizes the urgent needs of more than 2,000 municipalities across Canada. The previous government diddled with this problem and the bill was reluctantly offered to the previous Parliament but did not pass second reading.

The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) has asked why the legislation is to be phased in, and why it will not become effective within one year. It is for the same reason that Bill C-20 has to be phased in, that is, because of the present economic situation in Canada.

Municipalities across Canada, and the 2,000 municipalities that will benefit from this bill, the bedrock of democracy in Canada, suffered grievously because of the previous government's lack of initiative. By providing an additional $25,500,000 in annual federal grants in lieu of municipal taxes, this legislation will expand grant coverage to include almost all categories of real property owned by the government. It will provide, for the first time, full grants in lieu of real property taxes on defence bases in rural areas, national parks, historic sites, museums, libraries, art galleries, concert halls, reclaimed lands, and water conservation projects.

Most of the existing deductions from grants for municipal services provided by the government will be removed. Grants will be calculated using higher mill rates in some cases, such as for penitentiaries in provinces where real property taxes are levied at multiple rates. Grants will also be paid in respect of certain types of property tax which are presently excluded from the grant system.

The municipal grants act will, for the first time, give some direction to Crown corporations regarding the grants they pay. This, Mr. Speaker, will alleviate the tax burden of potential private sector shoppers to an area such as Ottawa. Because the increased federal grants will be executed on a four-year phase-in period, this will allow municipalities to plan, in a responsible way, the yield they will receive to improve their service to residents and employees.

As the member for Ottawa West I particularly welcome the positive effects this legislation will have on the city of Ottawa. There has been much criticism expressed towards the former mayor and councillors for threatening to cut off the water supply and local services to Parliament and other government buildings, but I can see how they were frustrated. I want to pay tribute to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) for his influence in seeing that this legislation was offered early in this session.

I can appreciate the frustration of civic politicians in attempting to govern and plan for even minimum requirements in Ottawa. Ottawa will receive more than $6.5 million when this bill is completely phased in. More important, the uncertainty of not knowing in what directions the civic government should plan, will be removed.

Ottawa, the nation's capital, has found itself in distressing circumstances by reason of what the previous government did since 1968 to downgrade the importance of Ottawa as the capital of this country. The decentralization program—the most ill-conceived plan in this decade—in moving thousands of public servants from the Ottawa area, has left scars that will long remain. While it is proper to think of the national capital area as one geographic entity, it was scandalous to move thousands upon thousands of public servants across the river to Hull without even making provision to educate their children, without making adequate provisions for proper sewerage. There is no excuse in the world to send public servants to the four corners of Canada without proper planning in advance.

We need a strong federal presence right here in Ottawa, right here in the national capital, and this legislation will help to achieve that goal.

Canada is one of the most decentralized countries in the world. I am happy that this new government has stopped the madness of evacuation of the national capital. In my view, Mr. Speaker, this bill will help the national capital region. It is long overdue. But it is not all. I want to commend the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) for his assistance in setting up a task force to consider future economic goals for the national capital area. One of the greatest unexploited resources in the national capital area has been the tourist industry. Construction of the Rideau Centre should go forward at once. Her Majesty, or an immediate member of her family should be in residence in Rideau Hall for at least one month every year. The recent heresy of making Ottawa and Hull together in name by hyphen should be stopped. The capital of Canada is Ottawa; it is not Ottawa hyphen Hull. There is no excuse for attempting to change the name of the capital, chosen in 1857 by Queen Victoria, from Ottawa to Ottawa hyphen Hull.

[Mr. Binks.]

In introducing this important legislation, sir, the government has taken the first step in what I hope will be a number of provisions to restore vitality in the national capital. Ottawa needs a truly international airport and not the Mickey Mouse excuse we are required to put up with here in this city. I am speaking of the future of Ottawa and the hope that it will become an entity with a diversified economy not subservient to the federal government.

This legislation, Bill C-3, will help to create a new climate in Ottawa, and the number of groups at work today in this city can help remould the future of Ottawa. In addition to reaping the benefits of additional grants proposed by this legislation, Ottawa wants to attract candidates in the private sector area who can share in the tax burden of the community.

Bill C-3 is the avenue for growth potential, the underpinning of economic health of our capital and across the country. This government, Mr. Speaker, realizes we are big government, but this government states we will act as a private citizen for private citizens.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to express my views on Bill C-3, a very significant piece of legislation for the municipality of Ottawa in particular, and I am most happy for that municipality that has been trying for a number of years to obtain an increase of grants in lieu of taxes in order to cover its yearly costs. However, this bill has been put forward at this point, because the previous government had already introduced remedial legislation on the subject of grants in lieu of taxes.

There is no reason for overcommendation. Although the bill is excellent, it should go much further. But I shall make no attempt at pulling it down or disparaging it. I feel it is overdue because the Canadian Federation of Municipalities and all neighbouring municipalities within the national capital area were requesting it. Maybe more should be done, because this is the first time that grants in lieu of taxes will be paid for military bases, museums and so forth. But let that be as it may.

It must also be realized that we have come a very long way in Canada in every area. Provinces have created new entities in addition to municipalities, such as regions, regional communities. We have one in Ottawa. There is one in the Quebec area of the national capital. I would not like to start an argument, but the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Binks) suggested Ottawa was the capital of Canada. I think that no one will deny this fact except that, if you know the history of the area, you will realize that since 1893 all governments have always attempted to include Hull, Ottawa and the area in some kind of region called the national capital area.

If I remember our history, in 1906, the then minister of finance, Mr. Fielding, held some kind of a referendum but only on Ottawa side, to ask if the people of the national capital would like a federal district like that of Washington. This proposal was rejected by only 600 or 800 votes. Had the Hull area been included according to the wishes of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, we would probably have a federal district like that of Washington. The situation might have changed tremendously, but when we say in this House that Ottawa is the capital of Canada I think that we are guilty of chauvinism. I believe that we live beyond that chauvinism, in what we call the national capital area. So, let us have the honesty to recognize the existence of the national capital area. The description of the municipalities included in that area is given in a measure passed by the government of the right hon. John G. Diefenbaker in 1958, I think. So we should pull down those psychological barriers and attempt to find the answer for our municipalities. It must be recognized that the national capital area is a very special region more than any other in Canada, Mr. Speaker. This is the seat of the central government. It expanded on the other side of the river, in Hull. It even extends beyond the municipality of Ottawa.

I think that instead of discussing small, insignificant, useless and silly arguments, the members of the national capital area might join their efforts to promote the improvement and the economic and social development of the national capital area. The city of Hull, Mr. Speaker, is unique. For years, when Mackenzie King had recognized that Hull was part of the national capital area, the federal government did not do much for the city. It is only since 1968 that the federal government has decided to make a big move which displeased some but which was a way of catching up.

I believe that the people in the national capital area must be happy to see that the Canadian capital has an adjunct in the city of Hull. The sums which have normally been given to us parsimoniously by governments since the beginning of this century have been minimal amounts used for beautifying the area, but that did not stop everyone from coming to the Gatineau region for recreation. Gatineau park, one of the most beautiful in Canada, was developed, as well as the fantastic Fairy Lake Parkway, and quite recently magnificent buildings have gone up in Hull, which give a face lift to the whole panorama of the national capital area. On the other hand, this has caused problems to such a point that a brief submitted in 1971 by Hull municipal authorities to the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Canadian Constitution says the following:

It plainly shows that for many years, always for beautification purposes of unquestionable value, the city of Hull has been progressively deprived . . . of part of its territory . . . of hundreds of taxable buildings and properties . . . of part of its industries, in summary of an important part of its main source of revenue, with no compensation formula in the least proportionate to the magnitude of this deprivation.

We do not mean that as a criticism, because 99 per cent of Hull area residents are very happy about the presence of the federal government and my predecessors and elected officials at every governmental level have supported projects to allow the federal government to expand around the Parliament Buildings.

In summary—

—I am still quoting from the brief—

—while the functions of the city of Hull have multiplied at the same rate as those of all other major municipalities, its commitments, which for a large part can be attributed directly to its proximity to the national capital, have increased substantially at the same time as a major part of its tax base has disappeared gradually under the steamroller of beautification which has transformed taxable property into non-taxable green spaces.

Mr. Speaker, again last year, the mayor of Hull met with the then minister of finance, Mr. Chrétien, to ask him simply why property value could not be calculated according to the method used by the Outaouais Regional Community which can make a real property assessment of all municipalities of the national capital region on the Quebec side of the river.

I think that method would have meant $850,000 more for Hull, which would have been a great help because it had to incur more expenses than any other municipality to provide services for the new buildings that were erected on its territory. On numerous occasions it was asked that the assessment be based on the regional community method or, as preceding speakers mentioned, that the business tax be used to a certain extent. But for reasons that would be too long to discuss, I think that for all practical purposes the federal government should find means to help municipalities on both the Ontario and the Quebec side, particularly those located in the national capital region since it differs from all others. I repeat that we are in the national capital region. To take exception to adding the name of Hull to that of Ottawa to form the name Ottawa-Hull is to show a partisan mind and is unworthy of all great statemen and any ordinary politician who has any common sense. So I think that those who think we are lost somewhere in the Quebec territory are wrong; we are on the border of Quebec, we live in the shadow of Parliament and we hold full Canadian citizenship, besides being residents of the national capital region of which I am immensely proud, Mr. Speaker.

Since we are talking about the national capital region, I would say that governments have a tendency to turn more and more towards regionalism, that is, that they realize regions are not all alike and that each one can succeed in every possible way in developing economically, in achieving a higher standard of living than another provided it is given adequate means to do so. Therefore, I think we must respect regionalism and that we must see to it that the national capital region is respected like all others. Let us give it the means to develop fully.

I am very glad that this bill has been introduced in the House. I have nothing to say against it. On the contrary, I wish to congratulate the government for bringing it forward and I hope it will continue to introduce bills as positive as this one, Bill C-3, but I insist that we should find methods whereby we can make a positive contribution to the Ottawa-Hull region. When I say Hull, I refer as much to Ottawa; being from Hull and having lived in Ottawa for a long time I think that I am no more a resident of Hull than one of Ottawa; I am a resident of the national capital region.

So I hope that the government continues to bring those changes that have been required for a long time by the city of Ottawa, by the city of Hull and by the Ottawa-Carleton regional community, by the Communauté régionale de l'Outaouais, by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities, by all the other bodies, the chambers of commerce and so on which have attempted by submitting briefs to urge the government to assist municipalities.

Before finishing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am happy to live in the national capital region, that I am pround of the city I represent, that I am happy to associate with my Ottawa colleagues and I hope they are glad to have me as their colleague representing Hull.

[English]

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to add to the comments of my colleagues on this bill which affects municipalities across Canada, particularly Ottawa. I am also happy to see this government follow the lead of the former government in recognizing the need for additional moneys to the municipalities. However, I do not believe that the present bill goes nearly far enough in overcoming certain inequities in the current grants structure, as I will indicate shortly.

In my maiden speech to this House, I urged the government to move quickly on this matter of grants in lieu of taxes. I stressed the importance of it to the municipalities in the national capital region as well as to municipalities across Canada where there is a federal presence. The city of Ottawa has by far the lion's share of federal properties. As a result it has lost the most in the past and stands to gain the most with this legislation before us.

Bill C-3 will serve to eliminate some of this burden and should help prevent additional tax hikes to the people of Ottawa by the municipal authorities, but it will not eradicate all of the inequities. Allow me to explain, Mr. Speaker. While Bill C-3 provides for the inclusion in the grants formula of most federal property previously excluded, it fails to deal with the loss of revenue to cities which results from the federal government's inability or unwillingness to pay business occupancy taxes. Therefore, while the new grants formula will overcome the inequality of the past resulting from underpayment of property taxes, it fails to address the inequities associated with non-payment of these business taxes.

Although I certainly agree that the federal government should not be as a business, I do believe that the federal government should provide compensation to municipalities which reflects their loss resulting from the fact that the government, and not a private business, occupies land within the municipality. Bill C-3 will not achieve this result, and it is a major omission. I estimate that the revenue loss to the city of Ottawa resulting from this omission is approximately $15 million per year. Now I should not lay the full blame at the door of the federal government. While it is true that the federal government is precluded from paying business taxes, this has been overcome in other parts of the country where the province simply allows the municipalities to incorporate the business tax within the commercial property tax category. Prince Edward Island has done this. Unfortunately, Ontario has not, and since Ontario shows no signs of moving, there is but one alternative. That alternative is for the federal government to provide a special grant in lieu of business taxes. I hope that the government will seriously consider this option and I intend to push for its adoption in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to touch on another issue if I may. While I welcome this bill, there is a bit of irony to be seen in its reintroduction at this time. The government has stated time and time again its intent to cut the public service by at least 60,000 jobs over the next three years. This will cause irreparable damage to my constituents, to the city of Ottawa, and to the business community. This will happen irrespective of the passage of Bill C-3. The effects of this cut-back policy will greatly weaken the city's financial base. The present high taxes in Ottawa will have to be increased in all likelihood as a result of this government's commitment with regard to the public service. Therefore, while the government promises relief with one hand, it takes it away with the other.

It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that this government is playing a very dangerous game and the city of Ottawa is caught in the middle. It's a first class juggling act. First they promise cuts to the public service and then they try to make amends by giving the city money. This will not make amends to those public servants affected by the cuts. It will not make amends to those businessmen who depend on the buying power of public servants who will soon join the ranks of the unemployed. It will not improve the morale of a city which is coming to realize that it is facing a grim future. While I repeat I welcome the increased grants to Ottawa, it should be well understood that this in no way compensates for the other drastic measures being inflicted upon this city and upon my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, there is an additional case against this government which once again demonstrates its insensitivity to the problems of Ottawa. Within two weeks, the Eastern Ontario Rural and Economic Development Subsidiary Agreement will be signed between the federal government and the province of Ontario. This program has a budget of $50 million over the next five years out of which $10 million is designated for small business assistance. However, this government, contrary to the expressed wishes of the province of Ontario, has decided that small businesses in Ottawa-Carleton will be ineligible to participate. Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the federal government feels that small business in Ottawa-Carleton is thriving and is not in need of the extra help. Yet small businesses in other areas of eastern Ontario will be eligible for grants up to $100,000. This is strange talk for a government which has publicly acknowledged that Ottawa will require special assistance to help cushion the impact of its public service policies on the business community. By eliminating the opportunity for small businesses in Ottawa-Carleton to share in this program, it is eliminating an opportunity to promote the diversification which the government admits will be required over the next decade. Mr. Speaker, this is but one more example of the inconsistent approach to policy development which is becoming the hallmark of this government.

I call on this government to remove the prohibition on Ottawa-Carleton firms now found in the proposed Eastern Ontario Rural and Economic Development Subsidiary Agreement. I am not calling for special status for Ottawa, only that Ottawa firms be allowed to compete on the basis of merit for assistance funds which will be made available. Certainly, a government which purports to value efficiency and free enterprise cannot argue with the granting of assistance to the firms shown to be most worthy on the basis of merit.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this government is refusing to recognize the legitimate claim of the municipalities with regard to grants in lieu of business taxes in Bill C-3. Further, they are casting a blind eye on small business in Ottawa by denying such businesses access to assistance which is available to small business elsewhere in Eastern Ontario. This is indeed a sorry state of affairs for Ottawa, and while I wish to state once again that I will support the passage of Bill C-3, I strongly and sincerely urge the government to move to overcome the inequities I have described with regard to grants in lieu of business taxes, to remove the prohibition on the participation of Ottawa firms in the Eastern Ontario Rural and Economic Subsidiary Agreement in order to help this city in its attempts at economic diversification, and finally, Mr. Speaker, to reconsider its arbitrary and ill-conceived plan to decimate this country's public service.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) very kindly for having given me a few minutes to take part in this debate which is indeed very stimulating. I merely want to stress one of the aspects of this bill which has not been touched upon. I would not want it to be overlooked since, to my mind, it deserves to hold public attention. I am thinking here of the transformation of our military bases system. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of representing the riding of Nipissing which has, within its boundaries, one of the most important military bases in Canada, importance which will grow as we have just heard that capital investments in the base will be doubled in order to transform it into the communications centre for the whole air control system in Canada.

Now, if I understand correctly, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) indicated very clearly that there will be changes of great benefit to those municipalities that apply for them. All I want to do is to stress that it is imperative for the municipalities to apply for those benefits because, as clause 3 of the bill indicates clearly, those funds will be available to the municipalities that recognize their advantages and consequently apply for them.

[English]

So, for the people of North Bay in my riding it is essential that this bill which is, of course, imbued with Liberal principles—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: —be passed through this House with all due dispatch in view of the major advantages it provides for communities which are involved with small business.

I am very pleased this legislation has been introduced because there needs to be greater integration between municipalities which serve military bases and the bases themselves. North Bay has always enjoyed the tremendous advantage of having the warmest relationship with its military base, CFB North Bay. The whole process whereby negotiations are now to be undertaken between the city and the Department of National Defence in order to identify the increases to which North Bay will be entitled is going to enhance that very warm and remunerative relationship between the two areas.

I look forward to the passage of this legislation and to assisting the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKinnon), along with any members on that side of the House who may think they do not have sufficient experience, to reach the best possible arrangement between the military and the municipal authorities. I would hasten to advise the municipalities of North Bay of the worth-while advantages of the legislation which is coming forward.

An hon. Member: Let us have the bill, then!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Send them a copy of your speech!

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I cannot forgo the opportunity to speak on this important bill.

Mr. Darling: Filibuster!

Mr. Harquail: I want to associate myself with the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin) as well as with the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais). It is important to consider assisting municipalities, especially in the area of municipal services such as water, sewage, and that type of development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CONTRACT FOR CRUISE-MISSILES

Mr. Alex Jupp (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, on November 15 I asked a question of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKinnon) regarding the cruise-missile guidance system contract. The minister's response was reassuring in that he confirmed there was no substance to the suggestion of a Liberal defence critic, the hon. member for London West (Mr. Buchanan), that the contract was in jeopardy.

I would like to comment on questions which have been raised in recent weeks by the defence critics of both opposition parties regarding the new fighter aircraft program.

The positions of the two parties are different, but both are ill founded for different reasons. The Liberal party now seems to take the position that the process set in place by its government should now be set aside to include Northrop's F18L on the "short list" which currently includes the McDonnell Douglas F18A and General Dynamics' F-16. I am at a loss to understand the Liberal position.

Mr. Danson, as the minister of national defence, reported to this House on November 23 last year why the F18L would not be included for final consideration, and I quote:

—we have assessed as very considerable the risk of committing Canada to buying a sophisticated aircraft that is not in service with any other country. At this time, I consider all the various types of risks which could be involved in the development and initial introduction into operational service of this aircraft are greater than we either need or are prepared to accept.

This conclusion is shared by the present minister and has more recently been echoed by the minister of defence for Australia. The Hon. D. J. Killen reported to the Australian parliament on November 21 of this year the following:

Northrop 18L has been excluded because there is no firm program and there could be no assurance that the aircraft would be available to meet the time scales sought from our new tactical fighter. We do not believe that this aircraft, which is comparatively expensive, has advantages sufficient to continue detailed evaluations.

The Liberal party has either flip-flopped on this issue, as on so many others, or it is undertaking a stance of political opportunism at the expense of Canada's military defence. Neither does credit to the official opposition of this Parliament.

The position of the New Democratic Party is at least consistent. Its position, as expressed through questions by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant), is that consideration of the new fighter aircraft program as an instrument of defence should be put over until Parliament has had an opportunity to undertake a review of our defence position and future requirements. The problem with this position is that it fails to appreciate two significant factors. First, over the past decade the Soviet Union has engaged in a massive military balance. Whatever the motives of the Soviets in engaging in such a land, sea and air force build-up, the consequences are serious for the principle of balance which has tenuously preserved world peace since 1945.

Second, the previous government, through neglect or intent, allowed Canada's armed forces to degenerate so that the equipment for all three forces is antiquated to the point where Canada can contribute very little to the defence of Europe through NATO or, indeed, to the defence to North America.

These two factors, the increase in Soviet military strength and the degeneration of Canada's defence capability, were vividly revealed in the CTV interview last evening with Major-General Herbert Pitts on the W5 program. General Pitts, who formerly headed the Canadian Airborne Regiment, stated that Canada's northern defence forces are so inadequate and antiquated that as few as 1,000 Soviet troops could take over our northern installations. The NDP position simply fails to recognize these two factors. If the government were to heed its wish for a delay, the consequences could be serious for Canada.

Members of the NDP might counter my argument by saying that if Canada is so defenceless, why do we not simply concede our weakness to the United States and ask the U.S. to assume our military responsibilities both in Europe and North America? However, such a request would constitute an international declaration that Canada is no longer a sovereign nation, that we are incapable of assuming our share of responsibility for defending the free world. That is not the position which will be taken by this government.

On the contrary, this government is committed to a systematic re-equipment program which will restore gradually our once-proud armed forces to the point where Canada can assume its share of responsibility for the defence of our allies in Europe and for the territorial integrity of the northern part of this continent. Having regard for the dreadful state of our national finances which we inherited from the former government, this will not be an easy task. Nonetheless, it is one we assume as a new government, recognizing that to do otherwise would constitute a betrayal both to the members of our armed forces and to the sovereignty of this great country.

Let me conclude with a brief comment on the new fighter aircraft program itself. The program is of considerable importance to my constituency of Mississauga North because of the presence of defence production facilities. It is largely because of this constituency interest that I spent part of the past summer, along with a number of my colleagues, on a defence caucus committee. We were able to review the submissions of aircraft manufacturing companies and to weigh the consequences from both a military and industrial benefits point of view. As well I had the opportunity, while in Germany, to talk to several of our Canadian fighter pilots. This experience left no doubt in my mind that the choice for Canada is clear.

The F-18A is a generation ahead of its competitor, will be a much safer aircraft, more strategically viable for its dual role in North America and Europe, and offers the best industrial benefits program in terms of firm commitment, life cycle support, and long-term job creation. I trust that in the next week or so that judgment will be confirmed by the announcement of the Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question raised by the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jupp) that somehow Canada might lose the $545 million cruise missile guidance business which had been committed by McDonnell Douglas in their draft contract for the new fighter aircraft, I should like to repeat the assurance given by the Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKinnon) in the House on November 15, 1979, that the correspondence in question made no reference to actual cancellation of a contract.

The McDonnell Douglas Corporation in their NFA draft contract listed $545 million worth of work on the cruise missile navigation system as part of the package of their industrial benefits and offsets. The contract was then awarded to Litton Systems (Canada) Ltd. as a second source.

In late October, Mr. Dale Church, United States deputy under secretary of defence, acquisition policy, in a letter to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, questioned the right of McDonnell Douglas to use this item as an offset and asked that the Canadian government remove it. I wish to advise the hon. member that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in consultation with the new fighter aircraft program office of the Department of National Defence, in fact prepared a reply to Mr. Church explaining the Canadian position. We are still awaiting a reply from the United States government, but it is expected that this reply will resolve any misunderstanding which might have led to Mr. Church's letter.

In general, because the industrial benefit commitments of McDonnell Douglas to Canada is expressed in terms of total dollar values and is not tied to specific work packages, Mr. Church's letter in any case would not have affected the substance of their offer. In particular, I am pleased to advise the hon. member for Mississauga North that the same Mr. Church has been quoted in Aviation Week & Space Technology of November 12, 1979. He is reported as saying that Litton Systems (Canada) Ltd., as an affiliate of its parent company, "has come up to speed", on the cruise missile guidance program, "is doing excellent work and we expect it to be a very effective competition to its sister division in the United States."

I think the hon. member for Mississauga North has stated very well the policy or non-policy of the opposition parties, in particular the fact that the Liberal party now is taking the official position that the final decision on the new fighter aircraft should be delayed. They in fact were the government which made the initial decision that this aircraft be acquired, and set its initial timetable for development.

As for the position of the New Democratic Party, although their position certainly has been more consistent, it is nevertheless wrong in that it does not recognize the need for development and deployment of the new fighter aircraft, and they are opposed to Canada being members of the NATO and NORAD agreements. In addition, New Democratic members are against the defence of Canada and never make mention of the communist build-up of arms.

As to the choice of a fighter aircraft, I am sure the hon. member can appreciate that it is most important that the government maintain this as an open and fair competition between the two finalists.

TREASURY BOARD—SALE OF CROWN CORPORATION TO PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, in September the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) announced the first phase of privatization. He was to be assisted by a Treasury Board secretariat and an advisory committee. In answer to a question on November 19 the President of the Treasury Board said that "the terms of reference have been substantially identified and agreed to". He said:

> The advisorsy group . . . will likely be formed later this month—

The group was to be composed of a representative group of Canadians from coast to coast, both from the business community and from other sections of our economy. He said, "they will be called together to make decisions".

Today the President of the Treasury Board announced that the special advisory board, 14 in number, will offer both advice and suggestions to him and to the Treasury Board privatization unit. He said that the privatization unit's work is well advanced and it is now ready to brief the new advisory board.

The minister then went on to say that the chairman of the board is Derek Hannaford, who has been active in the Montreal and Canadian investment communities for many years. Looking for more information on this I noted that in the biographical notes the list shows Mr. Hannaford as president of Derhan Limited and director of Mastorak Limited. I asked our friendly computer for information on Derhan Limited and I struck out. I tried Mastorak Limited and received a response as follows:

> The Quebec Securities Commission has issued a cease-trading order in shares of Mastorak Ltd. for failure to comply with disclosure requirements.

This apparently was reported in The Globe and Mail on November 2 of this year.

However, not to be discouraged, and because the President of the Treasury Board is a former bank president, I thought I should have a look at the rest of the board. Sure enough, I was not disappointed. Just looking at banks, for example, we have directors from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, from Continental Bank, from the Bank of Nova Scotia, from the Montreal City and District Savings Bank, from the Toronto-Dominion Bank, and from the Bank of Montreal. All I can say to the President of the Treasury Board is, shame on him; he left out the Royal Bank.

There are also other members of this advisory board, for example, the chairman of the board of Empire Life Insurance Company and also a director of the Argus Corporation. Five members of the board are presidents of various companies, one is a past president of a corporation, and one is a consultant to a corporation. This, of course, is in no way a full summary of the activity of this group in the business world. One gentleman is on the boards of some 20 companies and groups, and the average is six companies and groups per board member.

Undoubtedly we will not be short of business expertise and, as the minister said in reply to my question in the House, since they will be called together to make decisions they will undoubtedly be qualified to judge if the price is right from the point of view of a banker and from the point of view of a president of a large corporation. This, however, will not answer the critical and, in the opinion of those of us in the opposition, the far more essential questions as to (1) why, (2) when, and (3) how?

Privatization as such, or the sale of Crown corporations, is not something that the official opposition opposes in principle. Why should it? Canadair and de Havilland were both up for resale at an appropriate time and under predetermined conditions. Nordair was bought for resale. The inclusion of the Canadian Development Corporation in the so-called privatization list does not hold water. The CDC was formed as an instrument of government policy. The increase in public shareholding is fully consistent with the original intention when CDC was formed. Thus, to include CDC on this list is a phony attempt to boost the so-called privatization list.

That leaves Petro-Canada, which has already been well covered in debate. Eldorado Nuclear and Northern Transportation are companies of such a nature that offers to purchase are feasible propositions. One wonders a little bit about the loss record of Northern Transportation. However, each of these companies on the list is presently serving as an instrument of government policy. Thus, any sale entails a change in government policy, and it is this change that needs to be explained.

I do not think that we will get an explanation on this matter from the advisory board because, according to the news release, it has as its terms of reference the purchase by Crown corporation officers, continuing employment for employees, the prevention of foreign ownership, the facilitation of share purchase by employees, purchase by other levels of government, acquisition by a competitor and lessening of competition, and the extent of share purchase by employees.

That still leaves us with the question of what is the change in government policy. These companies were bought to be an instrument of government policy. Many of them were purchased for resale and, therefore, there is nothing new in that respect except that they were to be resold under certain predetermined conditions. I would like the President of the Treasury Board to tell us the present government policy on this matter. In other words, what are the conditions under which the government intends to dispose of the companies which have been listed so far for privatization?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), to whom I have been very pleased to respond in answer to his questions on various occasions, has changed his remarks dramatically from the initial questions he put to me in the House. I was fully expecting the hon. member to be very complimentary tonight and to say that he was pleased with our press release today in which we indicated the 14 members who would comprise the advisory board on privatization and its general terms of reference. It was very kind of the hon. member to read some of that press release into the record.

I found rather startling the hon. member's omissions when describing some of the members sitting on the board. Of the 14 members on the board, the hon. member failed to indicate that six of them are from his province. I would have thought that the hon. member would have said that such a move shows great wisdom on the part of the government, that we would find six people of such financial know-how with whom we would like to consult from "la belle province".

The hon. member also neglected to comment on the fact that 20 per cent of the board members are women. I was very pleased that we were able to find such suitable women to serve on the board. In short, I think that we have taken a very significant step ahead by ensuring that we have a well regarded, responsible, business-like board to consult with respect to our privatization plans.

The hon. member seems to have shifted from the tone of his question of November 19 when he was mainly curious about this advisory board and its terms of reference, to now enquiring about how our approach will differ from that of the former government's approach with respect to privatization. The key difference is that we are simply not going to talk about the matter like the former government.

The hon. member has also dwelt on the fact that we have included in the privatization list the Canada Development Corporation. For reasons I could not follow too well, he indicated on the one hand that this was always intended by the former government, but somehow or other that it is not fair for us to include this in any privatization program.

I would point out to the hon. member that of the over 400 Crown corporations that the Comptroller General stated are owned, associated or controlled in some way by the Government of Canada, 137 happen to be within the Canada Development Corporation. Surely if we are going to be serious—and we are—about privatizing various government-owned enterprises, it would be a terrible oversight not to include the CDC.

I am very pleased to have at least this one member of the official opposition so supportive of our privatization moves, Mr. Speaker. If he can radiate his opinion to all other members of the opposition on that side of the House, we may have a unanimous vote at some stage in favour of privatization.

ENERGY—GOVERNMENT CONTROL OVER OIL PRICES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow up a question which I put to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) on October 30 and raise an issue which has been before this House many times in the past six or seven years. I refer to the question of the investigation by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs into the petroleum industry.

I want to quote tonight from a question raised in this House on October 24, 1973, more than six years ago. The question is of particular interest because the gentleman who raised it is now the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Lawrence), and is responsible for the investigation presently under way. This was some six years ago and the member, who is now the minister, defined the issue as "urgent". He also demanded, and again I quote "—that the House be informed of the contents of the report when it is made."

Six years ago, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs thought that this issue was urgent. He was so concerned that he raised the issue again on January 4, 1974, not quite six years ago. I want to quote the whole question this time because I think it is relevant. He asked:

> In view of the fact that in the United States an investigation into exactly the same matter and involving exactly the same companies started after the investigation began in Canada and the United States government has now started prosecution in the courts against these same companies, can the minister possibly explain to us why there has been delay in regard to this matter in reporting to him and to the government of this country?

The man who answered these questions, Mr. Speaker, was the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), who at that time was minister of consumer and corporate affairs. This was before he was unceremoniously dumped from the cabinet for allegedly being too progressive and before he was revived from obscurity when the Liberal party needed to prove that they were not the heartless tycoons the public perceived them to be. In 1973 and 1974 he was still the minister of consumer and corporate affairs and he was still doing a fairly good job. He must be commended for having the courage to undertake the investigation in the first place. After all, we all know that the oil companies he tried to investigate have been bankrolling his party for years. In any event, Mr. Speaker, the progressive cabinet minister from Windsor West was subsequently dumped, possibly because of this very investigation, and was sent off to the ignominy of the back benches.

After six years of investigating, however, he lost his temper. He took a very courageous stand, and one for which he should be congratulated. He became frustrated by the foot-dragging on the part of the government, headed by his colleague, and in fact issued a public statement calling for quick action on the petroleum investigation. What he asked for was as follows:

> Continuing delays cannot help but raise questions in the minds of the public as to the degree of attention and priority that is being given by the government to the Combines Branch of the Consumer and Corporate Affairs department, to the important matters which the 1973 application called on the director to inquire into. These were important in 1973, they are no less so today.

That was in January, 1974, so naturally we would expect the new minister, who was so concerned six years ago that the matter would be dealt with expeditiously, would do everything in his power to ensure that the investigation was concluded post haste. What happened, however, was as follows. There has been no date yet set for completion of this particular investigation. Even the last Liberal government promised the matter would be concluded by the end of this year. On the other hand, we have the minister and his representatives who were so concerned that the inquiry be completed some six years ago, now saying, "Well, we are going to delay it and it may not be until March," and only a couple of weeks ago they finally got around to appointing counsel for the inquiry.

Of course we should not be particularly surprised that the government has cold feet on this issue. This particular government receives as much money as the Liberals do from companies that are being investigated.

However, one of our major concerns is that in the background we have the scenario for the dismantling of PetroCan which is partly as a result of this government's very close connections with Imperial Oil. So the delay in the prosecutions is coming about partly as a result of these rather cynical attempts to dismantle PetroCan. Our concern is that one of the reasons PetroCan is being dismantled is because it gives Canadians a real picture of what is going on in the petroleum industry. In fact these are the kinds of figures and facts and the window on the industry which the present government does not want to see existing.

There is one other area which is of some concern in this whole energy field, again talking about the cynicism of the Conservative government, and that is the whole question of aid to rapid transit. Certainly the Liberal party has nothing to brag about in this area after cynically breaking its particular promise in 1974. However, the tories had indicated that they were concerned. They promised the people of Canada that there would be action in terms of financial assistance for rapid transit. But what did they do, despite the concern expressed before the election even by such persons as our friend the slasher, from York Peel? They cried. They moaned. They insisted that rapid transit financing was essential. They said they would do something about it when they got into power.

To date there has not been a single mention in the throne speech nor a penny whatsoever for rapid transit. I think that the concern that has been expressed, not only in my own constituency in Burnaby but throughout the lower mainland, and in other areas of Canada, with respect to this essential question of rapid transit funding, relates to a larger concern about the integrity of this government and the promises that they are keeping and the promises that they are not keeping. One of the results of that is that we have seen today the most startling Gallup poll results in some time, showing that the government is even less popular than its predecessor, and even less popular than the R. B. Bennett government.

To conclude, I would say that we are concerned about the question of energy pricing. We are concerned about the dismantling of PetroCan. We insist that there be federal government aid to rapid transit. We want the people of Canada finally to have some answers about a sensible energy policy for Canada instead of the kind of dithering flip-flops which have taken place so far.

Mr. Bob Jarvis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), now that the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) has assumed the portfolio of Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that there will be a resolution to the problem that he referred to in his dissertation this evening.

Resolution of the petroleum inquiry has been given a very high priority by the director of investigation and research and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The director of the Combines Investigation Act, Mr. Robert J. Bertrand, has indicated that the public, as well as the parties directly concerned, deserve to have the results of the inquiry confirmed as quickly as possible. As the director has indicated publicly, the inquiry has been progressing, and the evidence obtained during the course of the inquiry will be considered in terms of the relevant provisions of the Combines Investigation Act.

Inquiries are conducted in private pursuant to section 27(1) of the act. To proceed otherwise is to prejudice the rights of those whose affairs are being examined. Under section 15 of the act, the director may refer the evidence arising from an inquiry to the Attorney General for Canada for consideration of whether the evidence warrants prosecution or any other proceeding under the act. In this case, if the Attorney General decides a prosecution is warranted, the matter would become public knowledge when proceedings commenced before the courts.

In addition, under section 18, the director may, at any stage of the inquiry, submit a statement of evidence to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, and the commission would produce a report reviewing the evidence in the matter and make recommendations as to remedies. Such a report would become public under the conditions set down under section 19. Given the provisions of the act, to say more would constitute interference in this due process of law which is now going forward promptly.

I would advise the hon. member with respect to the government's position and policy with respect to PetroCan that he will be among the first to know when that policy is announced in the House, in due course.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to be adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST ALLEGED INJUSTICE TO MADAWASKA REGION WORKERS BE CORRECTED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an urgent matter of pressing necessity.

Considering that the Progressive Conservative government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) decided, according to his press release dated June 8, to order the promulgation of the last clauses of Bill C-14 on unemployment insurance so that they would be implemented on July 1, 1979, clauses which have an especially adverse effect on seasonal workers in northwest New Brunswick, contrary to what had been expected, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration refrain from politicking at the expense of poor workers especially in the economic region of Madawaska, that he immediately take the required steps of which he is well aware to correct that serious social unfairness and grant to those workers the same advantages as those of the neighbouring constituency of Restigouche or Kent, for example, and in future when answering in the House that he state the whole truth in its real context, in accordance with his oath of office and with a view to living up to the principle of ministerial responsibility towards Parliament and the Canadian workers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROMISED LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION THIS WEEK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a motion under Standing Order 43 to which I feel the government simply cannot say no. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House urges the Minister of Veterans Affairs to introduce this week, without fail, his promised legislation to amend the statutes relating to veterans, their families and their survivors, in the knowledge that this House is prepared to deal with such legislation without delay.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

TENDERING PROCEDURES FOR CAR RENTAL CONTRACTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House on a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that Canadian-owned car rental companies are already discriminated against by the tendering policies of Transport Canada in favour of international franchises, and in view of the fact that the department has just awarded a contract to one of these foreign-based franchises, even though their bid was opened a full two hours after the official closing date and after all the other tenders were made public, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Phillips):

That the Minister of Transport reject this mockery of government tendering procedures and proceed to award the car rental contract at the Winnipeg airport to a Canadian-owned franchise, Holiday Rent-A-Car Ltd., which made the best offer under the terms of the tender procedure.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FORMULA FOR SETTLING LAND CLAIMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Whereas the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians, the Saskatchewan government and the federal government all agreed in 1977 to a formula for settling outstanding land entitlement claims under treaty, and whereas on November 27 the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Epp) unilaterally declared that he no longer recognized the said formula—which has shocked and dismayed the Saskatchewan Indians—I move:

That this House condemn the minister for his statement in question period on November 27 and ask him to reconsider the answer that he gave on that occasion.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STATUS OF WOMEN

CONSIDERATION OF EMPLOYMENT ISSUES AFFECTING WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That this House expresses its stunned disbelief that the provincial premiers have insisted on having the subject "Employment Problems of Women" dropped from the agenda of the December 17-18 first ministers' conference and, in the spirit of its own tireless dedication to women's issues, calls upon the provincial premiers to reverse their decision and join the federal government in devoting at least a small portion of time to employment issues affecting women at the forthcoming first ministers' meeting.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House before such a motion can be presented for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

IRAN CRISIS—SUPPORT FOR UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robin Richardson (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to seek the unanimous consent of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

[Mr. Speaker.]

In view of the serious situation in Iran and the plight of the U.S. hostages and the concern which I am sure we all feel about the momentous decisions facing President Carter, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That this House call upon the people of Canada to pray for Divine Guidance for President Carter and the people of the United States in this hour of their need, and that as a symbol of our support of the American people in their determination not to yield to blackmail and in their demands for the safe return of the hostages, that this House authorize the ringing of the bells in the Peace Tower at twelve noon each and every day until the U.S. hostages in Iran are released.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House, I know, will recognize an ingredient here involving spiritual guidance for Canadians. I would express very grave reservations about the use of this particular Standing Order to enter this area, and I am not prepared to put the motion at this time.

If the House wishes to seek an occasion to argue the case that I ought to extend the limits of Standing Order 43 for this purpose, I am prepared to entertain it. At the moment, however, I cannot say that a motion to enter into a spiritual area of this sort is in keeping with our previous practice.

SOCIAL SECURITY

LEVEL OF ASSISTANCE FOR CANADIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the terms of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Considering the quotation in this morning's The Globe and Mail attributed to the Secretary of State, cum Minister of Communications, cum inner cabinet social policy czar, that he is not only the minister of two departments but also the leader of a revolution, I move seconded by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc):

That this House lend support to the revolution, whatever and whenever, if it will at least return to Canadians the principles and levels of social security that have steadily eroded since this prematurely grey government took office.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRACTICE OF CHARTERED BANKS RESPECTING CASHING FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CHEQUES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the difficulty caused low income people by the chartered banks' policy of not cashing federal government cheques, including prisoner of war pension cheques, if the individual does not have a bank account, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier):

That the government order the Inspector General of Banks to request the Canadian chartered banks to honour Government of Canada cheques without the condition that the person has a bank account, so long as reasonable identification is provided.

REQUEST DAVIE SHIPBUILDING YARD IN LAUZON BE AWARDED ITS SHARE OF CONTRACTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on an urgent and important matter.

Considering the many lay-offs made by Davie Shipbuilding in Lauzon over the past few months, and considering that the federal government's total indifference toward this shipyard may lead to many more lay-offs among the 800 workers still employed by Davie Shipbuilding, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier):

That the House condemn the government for its lack of responsiveness to the fate of these workers and order it to take the necessary action so that Davie Shipbuilding receive a fair share of contracts given by the federal government to the various shipyards in Canada.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

THE BUDGET—TAX PROVISIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, today—which, by the way, is the anniversary of six months of non-government in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: —I have a question for the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: And two weeks of no leader.

Mr. MacEachen: In view of the very clear message of dissatisfaction which was conveyed to him by the Gallup poll, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will now reconsider the decision, or position expressed by the Minister of Finance on tax cuts; and will the Prime Minister undertake to implement in the next budget the promise which he made to the people of Canada in Toronto, that the Progressive Conservatives would cut personal income taxes by at least $2 billion a year?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would indicate to the hon. member that he will have to await our budget to know its contents. But I should indicate to him, also—as he knows—that after inheriting the legacy of 11 years of government by hon. members opposite, the fiscal flexibility of this new government is severely limited.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON APPROPRIATE VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister obviously has not got the message, because the people of Canada are not buying the proposition that his inaction is due to the legacy inherited from the former government.

May I try him out on another aspect of economic policy? This is a policy opinion which he expressed on March 27 of this year, just as he was gearing up to get into the election and when he was fresh with firm ideas. When asked what he thought the appropriate value of the Canadian dollar ought to be, he said it should be somewhere between 88 cents to 92 cents, U.S.

An hon. Member: It is getting there.

Mr. MacEachen: That was on March 27, 1979. I ask the Prime Minister, has he abandoned this policy opinion? If not, what steps is he now taking to achieve the 88-cent to 92-cent dollar?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we believe that to be an appropriate range for the value of the Canadian dollar. The steps we are taking to achieve that are to avoid accepting the advice which comes from members of the Liberal party to take actions which would earn a reputation of fiscal irresponsibility for this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POLICY ON LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to join in marking the anniversary of non-government which the opposition House leader mentioned today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: I ask the Prime Minister whether he recalls that when he was Leader of the Opposition, he spoke in Montreal on March 2 and promised that it would be the policy of a Progressive Conservative government to gradually bring interest rates down—not from current high levels, either, but from what they were at that time. What happened to that promise? Why has he abandoned it and why did he, instead, agree to have Canadian interest rates rise to record high levels?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our policy is to gradually bring interest rates down. Our problem is that we inherited government in this country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —and after 11 years of government by the other side, of which, if I recall, the hon. member was a minister, although I am not absolutely sure about that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —we inherited a record which created such concern—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has frequently been heard to say that it has the right to receive answers. I think it is also the obligation of the House to listen to answers.

● (1420)

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We inherited a situation where it was the view of the governor of the Bank of Canada, concurred in by this government, that the only responsible action open to Canada at this time was to accept, in the immediate term, an increase in interest rates that would put Canada in a position where we could move the nation toward lower interest rates. That is our position. It remains our policy.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people have recognized there are a lot of things the Prime Minister is not sure of. I want to ask the Prime Minister if he has forgotten that before the election, as leader of the opposition, he suggested a number of alternate courses of action to the "blind, follow the leader" interest rate policy that he is agreeing to and accepting. Five weeks ago he said that he would take out these alternatives and look at them again. Has he discussed them with his advisers? Why has he not brought them forward? Is he, in effect, admitting that they were just more pre-election "bafflegab"?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member, as well as reading my old speeches, will be reading some of his, which would be rather interesting. In light of what he, the former minister of finance and others are saying now, what I said explicitly at the time quoted by the hon. member was that there was a range of matters which should be considered. I am sure he will agree that was the nature of my remarks at that time. We believed then that they should have been considered. We have now considered them. As a result of that consideration, we believe the policy proposed by the governor of the Bank of Canada, and concurred in by this government, is the appropriate policy.

APPLICATION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Prime Minister. Earlier this year, the Prime Minister said in Vancouver:

> —we have decided that publicly-traded shares of Canadian-controlled companies will be exempt from the capital gains tax. That is a commitment that I make this evening on behalf of my party.

When does the Prime Minister plan to fulfil that commitment to take money out of Canadian socks and put it into Canadian stocks?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Let me, first of all, commend the hon. member on his alliteration, Mr. Speaker. Let me, secondly, tell him to await the budget.

ALLEGED PRICE-GOUGING BY OIL MULTINATIONALS—ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Out of the blue this morning, Imperial Oil Company of Canada announced a 2.4 cents a gallon increase which went into effect yesterday for non-leaded gasoline across Canada, and a substantial increase in the price of home heating fuel.

Since these increases would simply add additional profits to Imperial Oil, whose profits have already gone up some 48 per cent this year, and since they will force up the cost of living right across Canada, will the Prime Minister consider contacting the president of Imperial Oil immediately and make it clear to him that price-gouging of this kind is unacceptable to the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, either the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or myself will get in touch with the president of Imperial Oil, although we will not use language as inflammatory as that of the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are not interested simply in discussions on this matter: at long last they want some action from the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the other oil companies, Shell, Texaco and others, almost as night follows day increase their prices following the so-called price leadership of Imperial Oil, with the net effect of costing Canadian consumers in 1980, in additional costs from these increases alone, some $200 million, will the Prime Minister undertake, not simply to have a meeting with the president of Imperial Oil but to take steps to order rollbacks in these price increases?

• (1425)

Mr. Clark: The Leader of the New Democratic Party, in his first question, was not proposing action; he was proposing an insult to the president of Imperial Oil, and I do not propose to engage in that kind of action as leader of the government.

We are certainly not at this moment contemplating rollbacks, nor do I think we will be. I might say to the Leader of the NDP that if he wants action which will lead to energy security and controllable costs in this country, what he should do is support the proposals put forward by this government to move Canada toward energy self-sufficiency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister is saying, if I understand him correctly, that the oil companies in this country, unlike even those in the United States now, can go on charging consumers whatever the market will bear. When is he going to start acting as a prime minister and stand up for Canadian consumers, instead of acting as a house-boy for the oil companies?

Mr. Clark: The Leader of the NDP is always at his best as a rational man.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: His party applauds that recollection of a dim past.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I have given the House and the Leader of the NDP the undertaking that we shall meet with officials of Imperial Oil to discuss the conditions that led to that increase and, if it is appropriate after that discussion, indicate to the representatives of Imperial Oil that that was not an appropriate action. We shall do that if the discussions indicate that it is appropriate. However, we shall not, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party appears to be proposing, go into the discussion determined to insult the officials of that company.

As regards the interest of Canadian consumers, which appears to be of concern to the hon. member, I say to him that the best way to serve the consumers of this country is to guarantee that they have access, on a secure basis, to supplies produced in Canada and to end, now, a policy initiated by the former government—and supported, apparently, by the New Democratic Party—of increasing dependence of Canadian consumers upon unstable sources of foreign oil.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL UNITY

FEDERAL WEAPONS TO DEAL WITH QUEBEC REFERENDUM

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister based on a promise he made on March 27 of this year, and I quote him:

There will be a new bill, a referendum bill, which would incorporate the amendments now standing in my name on the order paper of the House of Commons. It would be in our intention to have a weapon or a tool—

An hon. Member: Read the whole thing.

Mr. Trudeau: I think you are pretty silly in asking me to read the whole speech of that day. I am quoting the Prime Minister:

It would be in our intention to have a weapon or a tool that the federal government could have to deal with the PQ referendum if necessary.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister why he has changed his policy on that. He wants to blame a situation inherited from the previous government for his flip-flops. Can he explain why this particular flip-flop took place? Has he cause to know of something in Quebec or elsewhere which brought him to change his mind?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): The Leader of the Opposition will recall that the amendments standing in my name would have dramatically changed the bill he introduced, a bill which could be seen widely in the province of Quebec as a menace, as a threat.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Clark: It is difficult to speak into this wave of shouting from the Liberal benches. It was seen in Quebec as being such a threat that, in our judgment, its result would have been to help the cause of separatism. Therefore, we indicated at that time that we were going to take away the offensive portions of the bill and, if we kept anything at all, maintain the capacity of the Government of Canada to deal simply with a referendum bill. That is something which can be done very quickly if the need arises.

● (1430)

It is our judgment that with a new national government which has succeeded in bringing some calm and some reason to the relations between Ottawa and Quebec, there will not be the need for the Government of Canada to fall back into defensive ball and to have in our armament a referendum bill.

PETRO-CANADA

POLICY RESPECTING STATUS OF CORPORATION

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the right hon. Prime Minister that the threat was seen as so great that the people of Quebec voted 62 per cent for the Liberals and elected 67 Liberal members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The policy of the present government was so little supported that it had its lowest vote in history in the province of Quebec. My question is addressed to the Prime Minister, who for the past four years had pledged to destroy or undermine Petro-Canada. Last April 6, in Winnipeg, he went so far as to call the national oil company a turkey.

On this great anniversary of non-government providing non-answers, would the Prime Minister make a pledge to this House to leave Petro-Canada alone and to meet the desires of 75 per cent of the Canadian people, who like Petro-Canada just the way it is, that is, owned by all Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are few members in this House who are more eloquent defenders of things just as they were than the hon. member for Outremont. He had been the architect of a constitutional policy which saw the separatist movement in Quebec move from a splinter to a majority government in that province.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Clark: In relation to the particular question, the hon. member is asking that we retain a situation where the state had control of a Canadian oil company, and his interest in that is because it is part of the past. Our view is that we want, instead, a situation where the citizens of Canada have control of a Canadian oil company because that is in the interests of the Canadian future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF EXPORTING SURPLUS OIL TO JAPAN

Mr. Arthur Phillips (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. Last January, on his world tour and while he was in Japan, the Prime Minister indicated that the government might be interested in exporting surplus oil to Japan in return for Japanese investments in Canada. Can the Prime Minister say whether he has followed through on this idea and, indeed, whether he has found that there is a surplus of oil in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I assume that is a serious question and I will certainly deal with it seriously. First of all, we believe that once we bring into place in this country a policy of energy self-sufficiency, such as was ignored by the former government but which we are moving toward actively, we will in fact move into a significant energy surplus position as a nation concerning a variety of forms of energy. Indeed, one of the great opportunities for this nation in an energy-poor world is that we are unique among nations in being an energy-rich nation, if we have the courage to follow the policies this government is proposing.

Second, the hon. member is interested in trading relations with Japan. After a decade of neglect by the former government, this government is turning priority attention to the trade and commercial possibilities which exist in Canada for Japan. A conference is being organized in the home city of the hon. member, by a distinguished Canadian, Pat Carney, having to do with the exploration of trading and commercial opportunities for Canada in the Pacific Rim.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO HOMEMAKERS

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Equal time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I thank hon. members opposite for their endorsements.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You need them.

Mr. Axworthy: In furthering this commemoration of the varied promises of the past, I would like to ask the Prime Minister about a statement he made in Napanee on May 5, 1979, in which he indicated that 4.5 million homemakers would be invited to join the Canada Pension Plan and enjoy the benefits and pay-outs of that pension plan. On this anniversary date, can the Prime Minister now give us a clear indication as to when he intends to provide that opportunity for 4.5 million homemakers to join the plan and receive those kinds of benefits?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gather we are following some kind of informal equal time provision in the distribution of questions among the Liberal challengers. As his most successful step on the road toward leadership, I want to congratulate the hon. member on his discovery of Napanee.

An hon. Member: Very funny for 28 per cent, Joe.

Mr. Clark: We have recognized that action such as that mentioned by the hon. member is particularly essential, since the plight of those Canadians was ignored for 11 years by the government which the hon. member supported, and the party of which he is now a part. We intend to move on giving effect to that policy just as soon as economic conditions in the country allow.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FORMULA FOR SETTLING LAND CLAIMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister received and read the letter sent to him on November 28 by the president of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians, in which the president says he was shocked and dismayed to hear the minister's comments in the House of Commons on November 27 rejecting the Saskatchewan formula for treaty land entitlements, when this formula had been negotiated and agreed to approximately two years ago by the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians, the Saskatchewan government and the federal government?

Would the minister make clear whether he was misunderstood and whether he has truly rejected that formula even for Saskatchewan land entitlement, when this formula has already been used by him and by the previous government for setting aside land?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will indicate to the hon. member that I have not rejected the formula, nor did I do it in the answer which I gave on November 27. I indicated at that time that I had asked whether that formula, known as the Saskatchewan formula, was acceptable to ministers of the other two prairie provinces in terms of fulfilling treaty entitlements. That was the point which was made. I have not rejected the Saskatchewan formula. In fact, with respect to the letter from the president of the FSI of November 28, I replied to him by telex reaffirming just what I have indicated to the hon. member.

Mr. Allmand: Does the minister intend, therefore, to continue land selection under the Saskatchewan formula for Indians in Saskatchewan while he is negotiating with Alberta and Manitoba, or is this another example of the hypocrisy of the government in saying one thing and doing another?

An hon. Member: You are the expert on that.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can use whatever words he wants. If he wants to identify with those, that is his choice; but I indicate to him that, obviously, in the actions we have taken with the FSI and along with the interest of the government of Saskatchewan to fulfil treaty entitlement, we intend to move forward on the commitments which have been made, namely, the Saskatchewan formula.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

PROTECTION OF CANADIAN INTERESTS IN FUTURE OF CHRYSLER CORPORATION—AUTO PACT

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the permanent absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade. It concerns the Chrysler Corporation.

In view of the admission by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in committee the other day that Canada was not lobbying in any way the American Congress to protect Canadian interests in this important measure concerning the future of Chrysler Corporation, I would like to ask the Minister of State for International Trade what steps this government is taking to ensure that Canadian jobs are protected in the long run and that Canadian government aid is not simply being used by Chrysler Corporation as leverage in its negotiations with the American Congress.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the situation with Chrysler Canada is a situation which has to be looked at very carefully. This morning we met with Mr. Iacocca, the head of Chrysler Corporation in the United States, and discussed the situation as it relates to the negotiations they are having with the United States government, as well as the impact that that might have on the situation of Chrysler Canada.

The hon. member is quite correct in saying that we are very concerned with the long-term viability of Chrysler Canada Limited. We do not want to make a decision relating to any degree of support we might provide for Chrysler Canada until the decision in the United States is made, but we are assured by Mr. Iacocca that the decision will be made shortly. He is confident that the decision will be a favourable one. We did discuss with him the nature of the proposal that would be made in Canada, and I would be very happy to comment further on that if the House wishes.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the admission, at the same appearance—one of his rare appearances before a House committee—of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that Canada has no plan, and that his government had no plan, with respect to either changing the auto pact or putting forward specific proposals either to the auto companies or to the U.S. government, would the Prime Minister care to comment on the fact that our auto parts deficit is now running at $3.1 billion a year, and the fact that unless something is done by the government and unless specific proposals are made by the government, this very serious imbalance in our trade will continue? Would he care to comment on that?

Mr. Wilson: I think the hon. member will recognize that the situation with the auto trade deficit this year is a problem related to the difference in the structure of the Canadian and U.S. markets. We have seen the impact of the energy crisis on the U.S. market, where they are not buying the cars which are currently being produced in Canada. This, together with the higher number of sales in the Canadian market, has caused that imbalance to widen considerably this year. We do not believe that that is a long-term problem; it is a problem that should be settled over the very near-term.

PLANS TO SERVE MIDDLE EAST MARKETS

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister and it concerns the commitment he made in the House on April 13, 1978, designed to help Canadian companies serve Middle Eastern markets. At that time the Prime Minister said:

> We would recognize in our national development policy the fact that in the Middle East alone countries are planning to invest more than $200 billion over the next decade in infrastructure—in schools, in communications, in transportation and in housing . . . We would get behind more Canadian companies that have the experience and expertise to serve these markets.

In view of the fact that the government has announced one initiative in this field, that of moving the embassy to Jerusalem, what other initiatives does he intend to take in this field?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me congratulate the hon. member and his colleagues for finally getting their research office working this far into this Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We can bring you down without research.

Mr. Clark: We believe that there are some significant and economic opportunities in the Middle East. We have some expectation that light will be cast upon the possibilities that exist for Canada in that region after the receipt of the final report of Mr. Stanfield, who is now again in that region discussing the state of relations between Canada and the Middle Eastern countries.

RAILWAYS

REPORTED EMBARGO ON PULP AND PAPER PRODUCTS DESTINED FOR MEXICO

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It has been reported to me that the Canadian railways have placed an embargo on shipments of products produced by the pulp and paper industry, an embargo on shipments to Mexico, placing in jeopardy a very important market there and putting certain Canadian companies in serious difficulty. Can the Minister of Transport tell the House if he is aware of this embargo and what the possible reasons could be for such a move by the Canadian railways?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the placing of such an embargo. However, I undertake to the hon. member that I will look into it and report back to him and to members of the House.

AGRICULTURE

NEW NATIONAL FOOD POLICY

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Away back in July, 1976, he discovered a part of south western Ontario when he said:

> My party will be undertaking, in the fall, the development of a new national food policy for Canada.

Let me point out that 1977 has gone by, 1978 has gone by, and now we are in 1979. Has he found that he cannot improve upon the national food policy, and is that why he has not brought any improvement to the one that we had—because he recognized that we did have one—and can he tell the House what happened to his intention behind that startling statement that he made away back in 1976, that he was going to do these things—and that is a long time ago?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): There is no better epitaph for my colleagues opposite than that that was a long time ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Our problem with the national food policy referred to by the former minister was that when we became the government and began to look for that national food policy that he had been talking about so much, we could not find it. We looked in his files, we looked in the files of the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs. Having no guidance from that front, we moved ahead with the preparation, as the former minister will know, of the meat import law, we moved ahead with the planning of the first trip in Canadian history in terms of looking for new trade in the Pacific, headed by the Canadian Minister of Agriculture—which will be undertaken in January—and we moved forward on a number of other fronts to give to Canadian agriculture the high priority that it never enjoyed in the years when lonely Gene spoke alone in the cabinet of the Liberal government.

FISHERIES

PROVISION OF SEARCH AND RESCUE FLEET

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns a statement he made in Courtenay, British Columbia, before the last election when he said this government would beef up search and rescue facilities on both coasts and provide a fleet of small patrol boats to operate within the present 200-mile fishing limit.

In view of the fact that the track record so far includes the deferral of a $14 million LORAN station on the Atlantic coast, and in view of the fact that we have not seen the smallest dory or even a rowboat commissioned for this purpose other than what was commissioned by the previous administration, can the Prime Minister tell us what date he has set for breaking the first bottle of champagne on the first search and rescue vessel?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the fundamental differences between this government and our predecessors is that we will not be using champagne: we will be using Ontario wine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What's wrong with Ontario champagne?

Mr. Clark: In the interests of transnational co-operation such as was shown by a Newfoundland member asking a B.C. question, when we christen vessels on that coast we will use British Columbia wine.

The engagement that I gave in British Columbia is one that we intend to honour. We are considering now the timetable that we will follow. I can assure the hon. member that we will move quickly on that question.

NATIONAL SECURITY

LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR EXTRAORDINARY ACTION BY SECURITY SERVICES

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister on this not so happy anniversary of half a year of inactivity. On May 4 of this year, in Regina, the leader of the Conservative party said:

> We will establish a legal framework so that any such extraordinary action by the security services of Canada must be approved in advance by a responsible minister of the Government of Canada.

May I ask the Prime Minsiter what implementation has occurred of this extraordinary commitment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me welcome the new-found interest of the hon. member in this question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: And let me tell him, as I have on seven or eight occasions in this House, that that legislation will be brought forward in the New Year, probably toward May or June.

An hon. Member: Which year?

Mr. Clark: The New Year will be 1980. I know that senility is a function of old age, and you fellows are growing long in the tooth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: As I have indicated frequently in the House to the hon. member and to others, we have not yet decided whether we will introduce that legislation before or after we have seen the report of the McDonald commission. But we do remain determined to have a situation which ends the state of affairs that existed under the former government, where there was no rule of law apparent in the activities of the security officers of the Canadian government. We intend to have a situation where the actions of the police in this country are covered by the rule of law.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CALGARY—WAGE AND RENT STRUCTURES FOR ARMED FORCES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs. It deals with a situation in the city of Calgary in which there is a large number of armed forces personnel, particularly non-commissioned officers and privates, and relates to wage and rent structures.

Has the minister now had a discussion with those organized groups in Calgary, and is he reaching some compromise between the wage structure and the rent structure as was agreed to even before our government came to office?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a discussion other than with the officers in the garrison and with two of the MPs from Calgary who have been meeting on a regular basis with the unhappy kin of some of the servicemen. I believe the case involving the cost of married quarters has been well explained in the press and in the media, and to a lesser degree in this House.

We are having difficulty because Calgary is a very high-cost living or rental area. At present, rents are dictated by rules of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation which tries to make them the equivalent of those in local communities. I have asked that junior ranks have their rental increases capped at appropriate levels, and this is now in effect. I am trying to work up a system that will make equivalent rents chargeable for accommodation for equivalent ranks across the nation.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

COUNSELLING AND SUPPORT TO VICTIMS OF SEXUAL ASSAULT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, rape crisis centres have provided a valuable service to Canadians in the past few years by giving counselling and support to victims of rape and sexual assault. My question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is, therefore, does the minister plan on reinstating federal funds in support of rape crisis centres, cut off by the previous government, and will he indicate to his provincial counterparts that the federal government is willing, under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan, to support initiatives on their part to strengthen and expand rape crisis centres in their respective provinces?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the hon. member that at the present meeting in Toronto of provincial ministers of welfare and myself we discussed this matter, along with a number of others, in relation not only to the renegotiation of CAP, but in relation to demonstration funding. The matter will be brought to the agenda in January, in St. John's, when we begin renegotiation of the Canada Assistance Plan.

NARCOTICS

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL INTRODUCE LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH PROBLEM OF MARIJUANA

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, although my question has to do with the election promises made by the Prime Minister on the question of marijuana, I would like to direct it to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last September the minister announced that a bill dealing with marijuana would be introduced and debated in the House as early as November. Is the minister now ready to introduce this bill? Further, I should point out that we are already into December and that November is past and gone.

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may recall that my statement both in the House and outside was that I would present a discussion paper in November with respect to the question of marijuana. That paper was to include, really, two things: the question of the impact of the use of marijuana, particularly the cumulative effects over time on individual health and, secondly, the question of the relationship of marijuana to matters involving the Criminal Code. Those two aspects are included in the discussion paper. I had hoped to be able to have the discussion paper by the end of November, which was my commitment.

I might say there was a further commitment, and that was that before the paper was produced, I would have adequate consultation with some agencies which were involved in the problem of drug abuse, particularly in two major metropolitan areas of this country. The paper is out for consultation, and when it comes back I will be able to produce it. I know it is of great concern to the hon. member and, indeed, to all Canadians.

SURCHARGES ON IMPORTED AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Agricultural to recall that on March 15 of this year he indicated it would be his intention, and the intention of a Conservative government, to immediately implement surcharges on imported agricultural products. He further indicated that a Tory government would "bargain vigorously and successfully to restore equity in our tariff rates".

Can the hon. minister indicate to this House, now, what steps he is taking to implement that policy direction? I would remind him that in fact the implementation of GATT was the implementation of a policy put into place by the previous government, so he really cannot provide that as an answer.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question, he should realize that subsequent to the May 22 election the result of the multilateral trade negotiations were known. With reference to his first question, it has already been done.

PROMISED REDUCTION IN CHEESE IMPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In his answer to a previous question, he mentioned that he would rather celebrate something with Ontario wine than with champagne. I would say that the district I represent would rather celebrate with milk than anything else.

In view of the promises he made during the May 22 election campaign, that he would in fact reduce cheese imports by 10 million to 15 million pounds, would the Prime Minister tell this House very clearly that in fact he did mislead the Canadian public during the last election campaign?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to that question because it rests squarely within my jurisdiction. The hon. member should be aware of the fact that one of the terms of the MTN was, in fact, that the cheese import level at 45 million pounds would, indeed, remain in place. The MTN agreement indicated that the present level of 45 million pounds would have to remain in place. We recognize the importance of the MTN agreement, and we recognize as well that we have to abide by it. But there is an up side—

An hon. Member: That's not what Joe said.

Mr. Wise: That is what I have said, and I am sure the Prime Minister has said the same thing. There is an up side in that, and that is that we will have available to us in the EEC, primarily in the U.K., a market opportunity to the extent of 6.1 million pounds.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ADMINISTER PFRA

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, it seems we are celebrating a special event today. Therefore I should like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether, when reviewing the policy of his department he intends to hand over to the agriculture department the administration of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, better known as PFRA.

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell my colleague that we hope to have a subcommittee of the Committee on Regional Development look into various aspects of the PFRA with a view to strengthening it and seeing how it can be improved. Implicit in the terms of reference may be a consideration of the particular proposition the hon. member puts forward. I can honestly say at this point that this has not been decided, and it has not really been seriously considered as yet.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY WHEN PRIME MINISTER INTENDS TO CALL CONFERENCE OF PROVINCES AND DOCTORS ON MEDICARE

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, now that we are celebrating the sixth month in office of the new government, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister who is responsible for medicare. Naturally, in that regard, his election promises were really very meagre, and he gave us a foretaste of his manner of governing by intermediaries, committees, studies, subcommittees, and so on, by promising, on April 30, a national health conference on medicare to which representatives of the provincial and federal governments and the medical profession would be invited. When does the Prime Minister intend to hold that conference?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the question of the former minister. As the hon. member already knows, the provincial health ministers have already had a meeting with the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare to discuss medicare. That is what I was speaking about in the words the hon. member quoted. I believe a conference will be held later to deal with health insurance matters.

HALL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO BUDGET AND COMPOSITION OF STAFF

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, to spare the right hon. Prime Minister further embarrassment, my supplementary will be addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The right hon. Prime Minister mentioned the mini-meeting, somewhat akin to an afternoon cocktail party that was held in September with the provincial health minister and which gave birth to the so-called Hall Commission on Health. Can the minister tell us the budget of the commission, and how many staff it has?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can provide for the hon. member the actual figures of the budget which has been laid out for the review. The staffing is being done by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, in consultation with our department. We have provided Mr. Justice Hall with some staff under secondment from our own complement and he is providing some of his own staff. I can provide the hon. member with the actual figures and numbers.

FISHERIES

FUTURE OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Today, the minister and some of his provincial counterparts met on the question of the future of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Recently, the government of Manitoba proposed that agencies other than the FFMC be permitted to participate in the export market for freshwater fish. Is the federal government in agreement with this proposition which would have serious economic and social consequences for the communities serviced by the corporation?

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I had a very useful meeting this morning with the provincial ministers responsible for fisheries, from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario and a representative of the territorial government of the Northwest Territories. We agreed that there is a continuing role for the FFMC to play and that there is a central marketing role for the corporation. However, there are details with respect to a consensus which have to be worked out. To this end, we have set up a committee to tie together the loose ends coming from the meeting, and agreed that we will meet again in Winnipeg before April, at which time a policy decision will be announced.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, on the intended structure to which the minister has referred, could he indicate whether the federal government unilaterally will initiate these changes, or will the participating provinces each change the structure in accordance with their own perceived needs or goals; or will these changes be initiated only with the consensus of all the participating provinces and territories?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. member, we are well on our way toward consensus. No decision has yet been taken. The decision will not be taken unilaterally. As I said before, we have agreed that it would be useful for us to meet again, and that meeting will take place in Winnipeg some time in April. At that time, a final decision will be announced.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—REMARKS OF PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which arises from answers given to me by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) in response to my questions earlier today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: If hon. members on the other side would listen for a minute, they will have a chance to reply. In my first question to the Prime Minister I made reference to a pricing practice of Imperial Oil Corporation. I used the term "price-gouging". It seems to me that that is the only term which the Prime Minister could have had in mind when he misrepresented what I raised in my question. In reply the Prime Minister stated that I was using abusive or insulting language.

When raising a question of privilege, I think that the facts and figures are certainly relevant. In my view I was not using such language. In fact, it could be described as descriptive language. It was shown four years ago in civil proceedings that Imperial Oil had set up a dummy company in Bermuda to avoid paying Canadian taxes, that it overcharged Nova Scotia consumers by not passing on price reductions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) gave notice of his intention to raise this matter by way of a question of privilege. I have a dual difficulty here. It seems to me that not only was the hon. member for Oshawa entitled to say what he said, but so was the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) during the course of the question period. The right hon. Prime Minister may have described the language used by the hon. member for Oshawa as insulting, but that is his right during the question period or at any other time during the proceedings. There is nothing unparliamentary there.

Similarly, the hon. member for Oshawa said that the particular company to which he made reference during the course of the question period was price-gouging. The hon. member is entitled to justify those remarks with an argument, I am sure, but the fact is he does not have to justify his remarks because neither do they constitute unparliamentary language.

For me to permit the hon. member for Oshawa to defend himself now would be to invite the Prime minister to defend himself, neither of whom need a defence because they both used, it seems to me, language to which I cannot take any objection on behalf of the House. I do not think that it would be appropriate to enter into a discussion now in defence of either one of the interventions of the two hon. members here this afternoon. I will check the record, and if I am wrong in my estimation of the situation, the hon. member shall have leave to raise a question on the matter tomorrow.

Mr. Clark: Nice try, Ed.

MR. BALDWIN—OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT—IMPLEMENTATION OF STANDING ORDER 43 MOTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of privilege, of which I gave you notice last Thursday. I am glad to do so on this day because it is the sixth anniversary in terms of months that this government has held office. My question of privilege deals with the question of openness and the Official Secrets Act. This government has moved further and faster toward openness and honesty than any other government in the last 50 years. But I want to go even further and even faster, and it is for this reason that I raise this particular issue.

On October 18 I moved in the House a motion under Standing Order 43 which the House was good enough to accept. It reads:

> That this House recommends that a parliamentary standing or select committee be forthwith given an order of reference to review the terms of the present act, including a study of such recent cases as that of Dr. Peter Treu and The Toronto Sun and to report proposals for suitable changes to the Official Secrets Act, and that no claim of Crown privilege be allowed to limit the extent of inquiry by the committee.

Of course, I refer to the Official Secrets Act. When I raised the point of order last Thursday, it appeared that there was some difficulty between myself and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) as to the terms of the motion which would be brought into this House to implement this particular motion under Standing Order 43.

As I understand it, and I think that my hon. friend will accept this, there is some question in the mind of the government as to whether or not this House is competent to pass a motion purporting to authorize one of its committees to make inquiries under any subject matter without regard to the limitations of Crown privilege. Having said that, I make it quite plain that this House and all the members in this House and in the other place are bound by statute law.

It has been suggested in the form advice given to my honourable friend, I believe, that there still exists an indefinable and vague, but possibly still a very strong, practice coming from the days of the royal prerogative that, apart from statutes, members of the government under the bureaucracy may raise on their own initiative without any foundation in statute a question of Crown privilege and can say, "We will not have to give evidence on this issue; we will not have to produce these particular documents". That is the issue. It is a narrow issue but I suggest a very fundamental and important one.

I think it does well to have this House deal with the issue because this government—and I give the government credit for this—is moving toward a situation where the work of this House will be developed to a greater extent through the agency of committees. I think we should know what power those committees will have.

Crown privilege has been defined as the original right in the Crown in ancient days when the king could not be sued to refuse production of documents or discovery of witnesses. It was later extended to members of the Privy Council in the 17th century in order to protect them from charges by giving immunity through non-disclosure of information about their activities. That right has lingered to the present day.

My quarrel with the proposition is that there still exists a non-statutory, superior and royal power in the ranks of the bureaucracy, acting through the ministry, to inhibit a committee of this House from pursuing its inquiries, and that even a unanimous motion of this House is not enough to override this particular principle.

A very good illustration of this is the fact that the House has been debating a motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council which deals with cost overruns. During the course of the investigations by that committee it will probably be essential for members of the committee to ask questions of members of the public service about the ways and means by which these cost overruns were developed. If the proposition of the principle of Crown privilege is to be sustained and put into effect, then I can see that in many instances many members of the public service will say, "We don't intend to answer this question; it may deal with a question of policy or it may deal with a question where the public interest is involved and we don't intend to answer it."

There have been some pretty clear illustrations of this. When the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) was prime minister, he made it perfectly clear that he would not allow the Clerk of the Privy Council to be questioned before a committee. That is an illustration of the use of Crown privilege.

In another situation, Mr. Speaker, several years ago the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works was examining Mr. Donald Macdonald who was then minister of energy, mines and resources and whose name is not unknown at the present time. The question arose as to whether certain witnesses who had appeared with Mr. Macdonald could be examined and, if so, the extent of the examination. Mr. Macdonald said, as reported at page 24:32 of the committee proceedings for December 18, 1973, as follows:

This has been a longstanding procedure in the Canadian public service and in the House of Commons that it is a minister who ultimately assumes his responsibility and not individual advisers; I think my position is well founded constitutionally.

On page 24:33 of the proceedings there appears the following exchange between myself and the minister:

MR. BALDWIN: . . . I had the honour to serve as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts for several years, and deputy ministers appeared there by themselves—not under the skirts of the minister. They answered a lot of questions, as did their advisers. When you come to a question of policy, absolutely, a deputy minister or an adviser must defer to the minister; but on questions of fact, deputy ministers and advisers are compellable witnesses to appear here . . .

MR. MACDONALD (ROSEDALE): I am sorry, that is too much. The minister is responsible; if he chooses to have his deputy minister appear without his being present, that is the minister's choice. But ultimately, it is the minister's responsibility as to who shall appear.

MR. BALDWIN: You do not want us to . . .

MR. MACDONALD (ROSEDALE): This has been a long-standing parliamentary principle . . .

MR. BALDWIN: The minister is wrong. The minister is challenging responsible government, the responsible right of the House of Commons . . .

MR. MACDONALD (ROSEDALE): I must say that responsible government means that a minister is responsible for his portfolio to the House of Commons, not individual public servants.

MR. BALDWIN: The minister would not recognize responsible government if it got into bed with him, that is all I can say.

I suppose that last comment was somewhat improper, Mr. Speaker. These assertions have been made, however. I am glad that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has indicated that he would have no objection to allowing the Clerk of the Privy Council to appear before a committee. I suggest, however, that it should be as a matter of right, and not a matter of grace. That is the right of this House and this committee, if it sees fit by appropriate action in the House or by direction to its committees.

There has been a lot of discussion on this issue and challenges have been raised in the House and in committee about the subject of judicial decisions. I am not going to take too much of the time of the House because this is a highly academic subject and, more than that, it is a tremendously important one to us. I will, however, touch on the highlights.

The issue was brought up for consideration in the parliament of Australia. In 1975, what was called—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but while I think I understand the nature of his argument, I do not understand the nature of the problem. The House passed the resolution to which he has made reference and which reads as follows:

That this House recommends that a parliamentary standing or select committee be forthwith given an order of reference to review the terms of the present act, including a study of such recent cases as that of Dr. Peter Treu and The Toronto Sun and to report proposals for suitable changes to the Official Secrets Act, and that no claim of Crown privilege be allowed to limit the extent of inquiry by the committee.

The only basis upon which the hon. member could have a question of privilege, which he is now arguing, is that the House has perhaps disregarded that motion. The motion is not an order. The result of that motion is a resolution recommending "that a parliamentary standing or select committee be forthwith given an order of reference". If the hon. member's complaint is that the House has not moved to give that order of reference, that is an argument that I might want to entertain. He is now saying, however, that there is a difficulty which goes beyond that, but I have not heard it yet from the government.

Perhaps the hon. member could direct his attention to the problem of whether it has been a reasonable time, whether there should be an order and what the terms of the order ought to be. I have not yet heard him say that the House is in default of that order. I would guess that the drafting of the order might be somewhat complex. Perhaps the hon. member could turn his attention to that aspect of the matter.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, when you said the "House," I think you meant the government has not complied with that. I think that is where the difficulty lies. As I understand it, the government feels that the terms of the order of reference to be given must omit any claim Crown privilege. That is what I take exception to and it is what I think is a question of privilege. I may be wrong in that and if I am I will gladly stop now. Maybe my friend the President of the Privy Council has something to say.

Mr. Speaker: I would want to reserve the right of the hon. member to meet this point. I am not trying to interrupt him to prejudice his argument in any way. He was about to move to establish that part of his argument. It may be appropriate to hear from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) and see whether this argument can be met.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully at the time the hon. member made his motion. Within a day or so after that, I sent him a draft of a proposed term of reference with respect to this matter, indicating my own wishes becuse of the emphasis we were placing at that time on freedom of information.

After a reasonable period of time I heard from the hon. member that the form of the order was not satisfactory. He also raised the question of Crown privilege. In the meantime, I had received an opinion from the legal officer of the House of Commons that there was some question about the propriety of the matter of Crown privilege.

I then took the unusual step, not just of informing my friend of that, but of sending him a copy of the opinion and asking for his comments on it. I received a letter from him, I believe it was yesterday, indicating that that was not acceptable to him. I have not had a chance to reply yet but I can reply now, Mr. Speaker. I am considering the argument he put to me and I think we should comply to the extent that we can within the law.

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is not with respect to the hon. member putting a non-statutory prerogative in the bureaucracy; my problem is with respect to the matter raised by the legal officer of the House of Commons with respect to non-statutory prerogatives in the law.

I think our exchange has been a good one. It was quite a healthy exchange and reasonably expeditious when the exchange finally started. I can undertake to you, sir, to the House and certainly to the hon. member that there is no question of delaying it. I would have no objection whatsoever, having raised the question of privilege today, even though a motion has not been put down and these discussions are continuing, if the matter could be reserved until my law officers look at the material submitted by the hon. member. I undertake to do that quickly. I think the hon. member and the House know that. I will do it quickly and put the reference down. When the reference is down there may be a question of privilege at that point with respect to the terms of the reference.

Mr. Speaker: That appears to be satisfactory to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Something occurs to me as well that both hon. members may want to think about, and that is that the resolution that has been adopted by the House recommends that a parliamentary committee be given an order of reference. The concluding sentence is that "no claim of Crown privilege be allowed to limit the extent of inquiry by the committee".

It may be, and I would want the hon. members to reflect on this, that the only time a question of privilege can arise then is if during the committee's deliberations that matter of Crown privilege is permitted to limit the extent of the inquiry. I know that the hon. member may want a House order to obviate that possibility, but it may be that an order of reference will in fact comply with all that has been resolved by the House on October 18 and that no offence against that resolution can be considered to have taken place except when the claim of crown privilege is used in the inquiry to limit it. I do not attempt to resolve that point at this time, simply to leave it to the hon. members to consider. Perhaps we can await with dispatch the undertaking of the President of the Privy Council to produce a motion and then see whether or not there is a question of privilege to be taken at that time or at a later time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, it may be resolved even more rapidly than that; Your Honour makes quite good sense with that comment. It may well be that your order of reference might go as the President of the Privy Council had originally contemplated, but he might at this time consider giving contemporaneously an undertaking that the government will not raise at the time of the committee hearings any non-statutory, government questions of Crown privilege, and we might well then proceed quite expeditiously with the issue.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the matter can be reserved until the President of the Privy Council is prepared to present a motion, and the subject may be argued again at that time.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the discussion with considerable interest because it is a matter of great concern. However, I am somewhat disabled in following the discussion because I have not had the opportunity to study the correspondence which has been exchanged between the hon. members opposite.

May I suggest to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) that he would be doing the House a service if he made available to us the correspondence and that of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) so that we may be able to conciliate between these two warring giants on the other side of the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to my own correspondence being made available and the hon. member for Peace River is indicating that he has no objection with respect to his.

May I just say in order to bring the matter to a head one way or the other that I will be considering the last suggestion which the hon. member for Peace River made in respect of putting a motion down. It is an interesting point.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to have my letter produced, along with a simple explanation.

MR. ETHIER—RECEIVABILITY OF QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, last November 5 I rose on a question of privilege to advise the House of a problem I have been faced with following a decision by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). You indicated on that occasion that you would seek the advice of a number of hon. members before deciding whether mine is indeed a question of privilege. Mr. Speaker, this occurred on November 5. I thought that mine was a legitimate question of privilege. If it is not legitimate, I should like to withdraw it, following your decision, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Following the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) there was some indication that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) wanted to make an intervention at a time that might be convenient for both members. I do not know if this is that moment, but if not, perhaps the minister could give the House notice. Then when both members are present we could hear the final aspect of both interventions and then I would be able to decide.

Order Paper Questions

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I noticed only as I was leaving the House that the hon. member was making an intervention involving myself. I would ask permission of the House to reserve my right to make a final decision until I have an opportunity tomorrow to read the hon. member's intervention in Hansard and then give an indication at that time.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, this occurred on November 5. I think the minister has had ample time to give an answer. I would like him to tell us when he will make that representation so I will be in the House, because I reserved time in the hospital three weeks ago for my annual check up. I am not sure how much longer I can delay it. I would like to know what the minister has to say on this.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I will decide tomorrow.

Mr. Ethier: Thank you.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

TABLING OF PAPER "THE NEW EXPENDITURE MANAGEMENT SYSTEM"

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I now table in both official languages the budget-related paper entitled "The New Expenditure Management System" which outlines the system for allocating and controlling expenditures of the Government of Canada. I hope this will be educational for hon. gentlemen opposite who did not have such a system. This is normally a budget document, but we want to give hon. members opposite the information now so that they will have it before the budget is brought down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, in the last session of the last Parliament the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) put a whole series of questions on the order paper dealing with the revenue and earnings of many Crown corporations. Among this list of Crown corporations are three presently listed for sale. Yesterday the President of the Treasury Board announced the formation of a special advisory board. He said in his release that the privatization unit's work of his own department is well advanced and it is now ready to brief a new advisory board.

In view of the fact that I now assume the information on these Crown corporations is available to the government, and bearing in mind that, because I thought these questions were worth while being answered in public, I placed this series of 25 questions on the order paper on October 9, about eight weeks ago, questions Nos. 115 to 139, these queries have now been in the hands of the department for some seven or eight months. I would ask the parliamentary secretary whether he could give to us the information which must be in the hands of the President of the Treasury Board at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE TAX CREDIT IN RESPECT OF MORTGAGE INTEREST AND PROPERTY TAX

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 28, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) that Bill C-20, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favor of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

● (1610)

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I agreed to pair with the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) who is away at the United Nations.

Mr. Beattie: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in view of the numerous remarks which have been made by hon. members in the opposition today commemorating the milestone of six months in office of this government—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On Clause 1—

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, while looking at this bill in committee, there are still some comments that should be made on the way in which the government has approached the introduction of this bill on second reading. We hope to get clarification from the government on whether it intends to change its unacceptable and unpleasant behaviour in committee. During the course of debate on this bill so far, we have been treated to some very highly contradictory and confusing statements to the point where it has prevented and almost obliterated the willingness of the parties in opposition to co-operate with the government. The government has increasingly created provocation through their unwillingness to abide by the normal rules and procedures of this House and to take any initiative to provide for the inclusion of any proper recommendations or amendments.

It is well known that many members of this House have some very serious reservations about this bill. I will not take the time to go over them, but it was indicated very clearly during the course of the debate that one of the major failings with the bill was the fact that it precludes the economic activity of the government in future years through the four-year commitment of the bill.

It was also very clear from the debate we have had so far that there is sound reason and good cause for providing benefits to all kinds of residents in this country no matter what their accommodation is, not simply for those home owners with mortgages. While the government tried to insist that it was being the Christmas fairy by handing out goodies to the Canadian people, it became very clear that it was handing out goodies to its own people. A serious omission is that there is no attempt to assist home owners and renters who face the same kind of pressures with regard to housing budgets as do home owners who have mortgages.

We attempted to get clarification from the government on several occasions as to whether it intended to provide support through some kind of a subsidy or other means for those who have really serious housing needs. Frankly, what we received were total contradictions. The Minister of Finance said that he was not concerned about renters but, on the other hand, the Prime Minister said that they were prepared to consider a shelter allowance. Who is right? Is the Prime Minister right or is the Minister of Finance right? It is very necessary that we quickly clear up the confusion on this issue.

Is the government prepared either in its budget or in the very near future to provide some form of assistance to renters in the form of a shelter allowance? It is a very important condition which was raised by my party, and it involves our eventual support for this bill. There was nothing forthcoming, however, other than this total contradiction in statements made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. That confusion was exaggerated further in the contributions by other members of the Conservative party in debating this bill. Many of them said that they were not concerned about the renters, that they had already received far too much assistance and that it was the home owners who needed help. I believe it was the hon. member for Edmonton West who said that there is in fact a problem with regard to renters and that they do need assistance. We would like the government to decide whether they intend to follow a consistent and coherent policy on this matter. Is the government prepared to provide support for a broader range of Canadians who are feeling the same kind of housing pressures as Canadians who have mortgages?

We listened in debate to the argument that it was the middle class home owner who is the fall guy in the Canadian economy. I believe that the Minister of National Revenue and the hon. member for Dauphin said the same thing. We have produced evidence to show that while the middle class home owners are undeniably facing housing pressures, they are certainly not the only ones, nor are they the ones receiving the most severe pressure.

I would repeat for the information of the Minister of Finance, because he may have been out of the House at the time or may not have had an opportunity to read the debates, that if he looks at the criterion of need and measures it according to the percentage of budget going toward housing, in every major city across Canada renters face far more severe pressures in their housing budgets than do home owners. For example, in the city of Edmonton 40 per cent of the renters pay over 30 per cent of their budget on rental accommodation as compared to only 17 per cent of home owners. That same ratio is true throughout the country.

We would like the government to clarify its position. We would like to know whether it is the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister who is right, or are they simply intending to exist within the confines of that confusion and not trying to resolve it? Commitments have been made. I believe it was last Thursday that the Prime Minister said in the House that they were looking at shelter allowances and might be prepared to introduce that feature. The Minister of Finance said they would have nothing to do with shelter allowances. It is time for either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance to indicate which leg they intend to stand on.

Is the government prepared to accept amendments? The Minister of National Revenue on Wednesday said that it is not prepared to accept any amendments, that the government had already printed the forms and undertaken the initiative and that it did not really care what the opposition or Parliament thought. The government had printed the forms, they were going into the mail and the devil could take the hindmost. On Thursday the Prime Minister again contradicted the Minister of National Revenue and said the government was prepared to accept reasonable amendments.

Who is speaking for the government on this matter, and which position is right? What does it intend to do? It would certainly speed up the time we spend in this session if we knew whether we were simply going through a sham exercise, as the Minister of National Revenue suggests, or whether this government will behave like a government should and show proper respect and courtesy to Parliament. Is the Minister of National Revenue's get tough authoritarian position the one which will prevail, or is the Prime Minister suggesting that they are prepared to accept the recommendations? Is that the guideline within which they will operate? I think that the Minister of Finance owes it to this committee to explain what he intends to do. Is he prepared honestly and objectively to accept amendments which, after all, are designed to improve this legislation, or is he simply intending to stand in total and complete indifference to any attempt by members of Parliament to improve this piece of legislation? In terms of opposition members in this committee, that is a very important issue.

Our objection to this bill rests both on the substance of it and on the attitude of the government. They have not shown during the debate on this bill any co-operation and openness, which opposes the promise that they made while in opposition that they would make Parliament a place of respect and proper courtesy. They have obviously forgotten all those fine promises, just as we discovered in the question period that they had quickly forgotten all the promises they made prior to becoming the government.

We believe that there are some very specific ways in which this legislation could be improved. It is only proper that the recommendations made by the Minister of State (Treasury Board) with regard to putting a sunset law on this legislation be considered. Surely, if a minister within the cabinet—he is not in the cabinet, but on the outer fringe—suggests that he is bringing in legislation which would require that a sunset law be applicable to the mortgage tax bill, then why can it not be included in this legislation?

His statement that it would be proper for the opposition to do the same is on the record. It would be only good economic sense for the government to recognize that it should not commit itself to a $3 billion expenditure for the next four years without bringing the matter back to Parliament for review on an annual basis to determine if the money is available and if economic conditions require the stimulus that this kind of bill aims to bring about. The Minister of State (Treasury Board) has said that he thinks it is a good idea and that he intends to introduce such legislation. We, on the other hand, think it should be an integral part of the legislation before us that we be given the opportunity to review the situation on an annual basis. In that way Parliament could exercise some degree of fiscal control over government expenditures.

I find it hard to believe that hon. members opposite would reject such a proposal. They have been great advocates of fiscal management, claiming that government spending is out of whack and that there has been a great deal of waste. On their own arguments they should accept the suggestion that the legislation be reviewed on an annual basis to see whether it is fiscally responsible to proceed to the next phase. In this way we could exercise the kind of control that hon. members opposite have proposed so vehemently time and time again.

Parts of the bill should be examined to determine their practicality, Mr. Chairman. For instance, the limit of $5,000 on renovations is really a subterfuge. It would mean that most of the renovations carried out in this country would not qualify for credit under this legislation. We will put forward an amendment to reduce that limit from $5,000 to $2,000 so that people contemplating normal renovations are given some incentive.

An hon. Member: Give an example.

Mr. Axworthy: I will give the hon. member an example. The average cost of renovations under the CMHC RRAP program and CHIP program is substantially under $5,000. They usually average between $2,000 and $3,000, so this seems to me a legitimate reason to consider lowering the ceiling on renovation expenditures. We are trying to do what other members have urged in their speeches. The hon. member for Edmonton East made a very strong case about the demand on the housing market in future, pointing out that it will increasingly mean recycling older homes. It seems to me that we should give taxpayers an incentive to do this instead of discriminating against them, as is the case in this legislation.

Older people often find that they cannot take advantage of the RRAP program, simply because they cannot afford the $5,000 loan portion of it but can only use up to the $2,000 grant portion. Older homes, which are largely occupied by the elderly or people whose incomes are not growing as fast as the younger income-producing generation, would be more likely to be renovated if the $5,000 provision were reduced to $2,000.

I do not think such an amendment would go against the intent of the bill. It is not against Tory principles either. The objective is clearly set out. What we hope to suggest is that we discuss whether the limits set in the bill are the most practical and realistic. This comes back to the question of whether the minister intends to stand on ceremony regarding his previous statements or whether he is prepared to accept such amendments.

Within the confines of this bill we should explore other ways of providing tax credits to a broader range of the population. The disappointing aspect of the minister's presentation was that he did not outline the other options. If the basic objective of this legislation is to provide some relief, then the form the government chose is not the only one available.

A very creative and ingenious proposal was made during the debate by the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas about making the $1,000 tax deduction now available for investment income also available for interest payments, or to renters for that matter. This is a reasonable proposal which would relieve some of the pressure being felt by many people.

A number of amendments like this could and should be introduced to improve the bill. Unfortunately, even with these amendments the bill is still a bad piece of legislation. If anything became clear during the debate in the last ten days, it was that the Minister of Finance has introduced a very bad fiscal instrument, one that he will be sorry about—providing he remains in that portfolio. He is committing the government to an expenditure of $3 billion, whether the money is available or not. He is doing that in spite of all the evidence to show that the economic impact in terms of stimulating the economy and providing for additional housing units will not, in fact, be achieved because of the present high interest rates. He is spending money without creating any impact. He is creating a big buck and not getting much of a bang for it. That is not good economics by any criteria.

This is a very inequitable bill, Mr. Speaker. It leaves out 5.5 million Canadians.

Mr. Thacker: A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I stand before you as a new member of this House seeking a ruling. The hon. member opposite has referred to points of policy, to comments made earlier, and to the debate on second reading, which is the matter of principle. I would refer the Chair to Standing Order 55(2), which states as follows:

Speeches in Committees of the Whole House must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Not just relevant, Mr. Chairman, but strictly relevant. We are dealing with clause 1 of Bill C-20, which refers to section 120(4) of the Income Tax Act. I have not heard one comment from the hon. member opposite with respect to section 120(4) and I seek your ruling on whether he is in breach of the requirement of Standing Order 55(2) to be "strictly relevant".

The Chairman: Order, please. Maybe the hon. member is correct about the procedure in Committee of the Whole in general, but I must remind him that the citation he used refers to all clauses in Committee of the Whole except clause 1. It has been the practice in Committee of the Whole to have an open debate on the subject matter of a bill under clause 1, and debate has never been limited to the consideration of that clause in particular, whatever it contains. The practice is very clear on this.

Mr. Axworthy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am glad you were able to clarify for the hon. member the rights and privileges that the opposition are allowed. This government has obviously forgotten them over the last two weeks in this debate.

Mr. Forrestall: You mean the rights and privileges of members of Parliament.

Mr. Axworthy: I will be glad to amend my remarks to say the rights and privileges of members of Parliament because the government has forgotten them over the past two weeks, and that includes members of their own back benches who have been denied the opportunity to present amendments.

• (1640)

The Chairman: Order, please. I must say on that last point in particular raised by the hon. member that he is out of order. This comment does not relate to the bill.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I was simply responding to the fact that as we are in committee trying to set the terms of reference by which we are going to discuss this bill the government in debate in this House raised very odious sets of conditions determining the opportunities of opposition. In this debate on clause 1 we have put very straightforward questions to the Minister of Finance to clear up what were obviously contradictions in statements between himself and the first minister and between the Minister of National Revenue and the first minister. They took diametrically opposed positions as to how they would proceed with this bill. It was only proper, before we got into looking at the specifics, that those contradictions be resolved and we simply do not go through a sham exercise. I do not think there is anything improper about establishing those guidelines. It is the government and its ministers who have been speaking out of both sides of their mouths on this bill, not other members, and we are simply trying to clarify exactly where they stand.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. gentleman finished? Does he want some clarification?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Minister of Finance will have plenty of opportunity in committee to give all the clarification he needs.

The Chairman: Order, please. Maybe it is time for me to inform the hon. member that his allotted 20 minutes has expired. I am allowing him an additional two minutes. One of those two minutes has already gone, so I will allow an extra minute for the hon. member to conclude and then I will recognize another speaker.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, we are very sure what bill it is. I just hope that the government knows what bill it is. We would simply repeat the kinds of questions we put, both on procedure and on statements made by ministers opposite concerning what is obviously an attempt by them to limit the debate and limit the normal processes in this House. Are they prepared or not to accept reasonable amendments from members of Parliament so that this bill can be improved?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I intend to approach my task in the spirit of sweet reasonableness, as hon. gentlemen will have noticed I always do.

There is no contradiction between the Prime Minister and myself. If there were, the Prime Minister would be right, naturally. That is the system. But there is no contradiction. The hon. gentleman is strained to find a contradiction where none exists. He is really straining to swallow an ant or a newt when there is not an ant or newt to strain against. There is no difference. We are ready to accept reasonable amendments that can be accepted within the framework of the conditions that we had to bring this bill before the House.

In order to bring some relief in 1980 to the Canadian home owner, and make it possible for that to be the case, we had to go to the printers at the end of September with the tax forms. That was not because we wanted to do it or because we asked to do it that way; it was because the Department of National Revenue told us that this is what we had to do. In order to have the tax credit provided for in the federal income tax returns for 1980, we had to go to the printers. That is why the provision was not held to be included in the budget. Why the provisions had to be made public last September—I think it was September 18—was because we could not take the risk of sending the forms to the printers and having a possible leak that we were going to be bringing forth this credit. That part of it, Mr. Chairman, was out of our hands.

If hon. gentlemen propose some amendments—hon. members, I am sorry. I apologize to the most attractive ladies that we have present in this chamber. More and more of them are getting elected and I welcome that; I do not want to be sexist. We welcome members of both sexes in this House.

If there are amendments that we cannot accept now because of the simple fact that these forms had to be prepared, but yet they seem to be good amendments, I am quite prepared to recommend that we have a look at them for next year and bring them in for the next phase. As the hon. gentleman mentioned, this scheme is coming in in four phases. The first phase starts in 1979. That will restrict what amendments we can find reasonable at this time because we cannot accept amendments that will make the income tax forms which have to be sent out by the end of the year invalid. But if there is a reasonable amendment, we are certainly prepared to consider it now or recommend it be considered for next year.

The hon. member said that we are not concerned about renters. Of course, that is completely untrue. This legislation does not deal with the problems of renters. Yes, renters do have problems. Yes, lower income people—

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I would like to refer—

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Axworthy: Yes.

An hon. Member: That is debate.

Mr. Axworthy: I refer to the point raised by the Minister of National Revenue that the government is not prepared to accept any amendments whatsoever, and the Minister of Finance has said he will accept amendments.

An hon. Member: Listen.

Mr. Axworthy: We are listening to him. We want the point cleared up. He said they would not accept any amendments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I am going to continue to be sweetly reasonable. I have just explained to the hon. gentleman what amendments we can find reasonable and why we can only find certain amendments reasonable. If there are some other amendments put forward that we consider to be reasonable but which we cannot accept because of the dictates of the tax form and so on, we would consider them next year when the next phase comes in. That is always possible. What could be more of an explanation than that, Mr. Chairman?

It was stated that we are not concerned about renters. We are concerned about renters, but not in this legislation. We are concerned about everybody who lives in Canada, but this legislation is to assist home owners or people who want to become home owners if they are federal taxpayers. It is to assist renters who would prefer to be home owners. Doubtless there are renters who are low income people. Doubtless there are renters who could do with a greater income. Doubtless there are renters who could do with shelter allowances. But we are not in the financial position at the present time to deal with them. We did not make them any campaign promises that we would deal with their concerns immediately. We made the home owners of Canada, a very substantial number of people, aware that we are concerned about their problems and about the problems of those who want to become home owners and we have brought forth the legislation that we promised.

We are concerned about renters. We are concerned and care about all of the people in Canada. Whether or not we can bring forward a shelter allowance program in the future will depend upon our finances. We had to operate with a financial situation left to us by others—the crowd that left us the $11 billion deficit and the like. That is the crowd that left us in the position of scraping the bottom of the barrel. That is the situation we are dealing with now. We are giving a stimulus to the housing industry and to home owners through the legislation now before the House.

The hon. gentleman suggested that renters are under more pressure than home owners. What kind of a silly statement is that? There are home owners, people who live in their own homes and have high mortgages, who are in just as bad straits as, if not worse than, renters. There are no two separate categories of people, namely, that home owners are automatically having no problems and renters are. There are hundreds of thousands of home owners and taxpayers in this country having a very difficult time making ends meet. That is why we are proposing this relief for them. That is why this legislation is before the House. There are hundreds of thousands of them with very high mortgages.

We have heard the welcome ring in this House with talk of high interest rates. One would have thought if hon. members were generally concerned about the effects of high interest rates that we would have had this legislation through the House weeks ago. We could have had a two or three-day debate on second reading and a couple of days in Committee of the Whole and the bill would have been through the House. But we had nothing but obstruction because members are not generally concerned about interest rates and the effect of these interest rates on people. Instead they are concerned about scoring political points, not helping the people who are suffering the high interest rates now.

An hon. Member: You have 28 per cent popularity.

Mr. Crosbie: We will see about popularity. I noticed today that we survived a certain test in this House. If hon. gentlemen are so cocksure about themselves as they want to pretend, we would be out on the hustings tomorrow, but they are not. I am ready to test the Gallup poll at any time with the hon. gentlemen opposite. As long as we are the government and responsible for what the government does, the government is going to carry out our policy, not the policy of the group opposite who were defeated but will not accept it, who think they are automatically going to roll back into power and have to do nothing more.

● (1650)

Mr. Pepin: What about your sweet course?

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, I must get back to my sweet course. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry made the threat that if we do not do what he wants us to do or what his side of the House wants us to do, there is an implied threat about the operations of the committee. We are simply not accepting threats. We are prepared to be reasonable. I am not quaking in my shoes because the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry threatens that he is going to make it hard in the committee. The committee should do its business in whatever way that takes us.

What else did the hon. gentleman say? He really did not say very much. Let me give some figures here to point out why some of the amendments suggested will not be reasonable. One of the complaints about this bill is that the credit is not refundable. In other words, if you are a home owner who is not a taxpayer, you do not get any benefit from the bill. The only people who benefit from this bill are home owners in Canada who pay federal taxes, and this bill will save them on their federal taxes.

To make the present legislation refundable would have a first year cost of $100 million and in the fourth year of the program $450 million. At the present time we cannot see our way clear to be in the position to afford those additional costs. Perhaps in a year or two down the road, or three or four as our economic regime takes effect and this country starts on the road back again, we will be able to afford those increased amounts.

Hon. gentlemen opposite who did not do so themselves when they were in power for the past 16 years have suggested that we should extend this provision to renters. There are all kinds of options for extending benefits to renters. I will just look at two. We could extend the $250 tax credit to renters. In other words, every renter in Canada would be allowed a $250 tax credit, every renter household the same as every home owner household. The cost of that non-refundable, just that simple proposition, would be $175 million for the first year, going up to $675 million in the fourth year. If it was made refundable it would be $275 million for the first year and $1,100 million in the fourth year. If we just extend the property tax credit to every renting household, we have those kinds of additional costs. If it is made refundable, there is a major increase in cost.

Another option would be to allow renters a 25 per cent credit for half of their rent subject to a maximum credit of $1,250. There are all kinds of options. These examples are just to give some idea of costs. If that were done on a non-refundable basis, for the first year it would cost $200 million and in the fourth year $750 million. If it was made refundable, it would be $250 million in the first year and $1 billion in the fourth year. On and on it goes. You have these vastly increased costs.

These are reasons why we cannot accept amendments, and amendments will not be reasonable that suggest we extend this scheme, which is for home owners, to renters. My learned colleague the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is hoping to develop and is working on developing some shelter allowance scheme that might apply to renters, or renters in certain years, and so on. These options are all being looked at. We are just as anxious to help the elderly, the renter or anyone else as hon. gentlemen opposite. In fact, because we are in a minority situation, if we were to proceed in the usual way that hon. gentlemen opposite have always proceeded, if power was our only aim and nothing else, we would be bringing in this kind of thing. We would not care about the economic situation. We would not care about the deficit. We would ignore all that. We would bring in all kinds of goodies knowing that we are a minority and that in the next six months or year we might be going to the polls. We are not doing that. Our be all and end all and whole aim in life is not just to get into power and to get our nose into the trough here in Ottawa; there are other things in life.

When we get in to power in Ottawa, we are trying to help the country recover from the 16 years of prodigality and profligacy of hon. gentlemen opposite.

An hon. Member: There is nothing in the trough.

Mr. Crosbie: As one hon. member just said, there is nothing in the trough even to get a sniff at after 16 years.

An hon. Member: Tory times are hard times.

Mr. Crosbie: If Tory times are hard times it is because they follow Liberal times and the Liberals have left nothing. That is why Tory times are hard times. After a year or two, Tory times are great times. They are beneficial times, wait and see.

This legislation is designed to encourage people to become home owners. Therefore, to include any provision in it to assist renters would be directly contrary to the object of the legislation, which is to assist people who are now home owners to continue to be home owners and to assist people who want to become home owners become home owners. The bill is not designed to help renters and discourage them from becoming home owners. Therefore, amendments that are contrary to these positions are, of course, not reasonable in consideration of this particular piece of legislation.

There are 9.4 million households in total in Canada. Some 3.8 million of those households that are owner-occupied pay tax to the federal government and have mortgages or are subject to property tax, so they are going to be beneficiaries under this legislation. There are 1.1 million non-taxable home owners. They do not pay federal tax so they would not get a benefit unless it was made refundable. There are 4.5 million renters, students or households of that nature. There are 166,885 mobile homes, all of which will be assisted by this legislation.

The position, then, is that the only way we could give the home owners of Canada a benefit for the 1979 tax year is to take the action we have taken. We can only consider amendments that make it possible to meet that objective. The benefit for 1979 is $575 million. Next year, 1980, it will be $1.2 billion. That will be the stimulant. We have heard the welcome ring across the aisle to the cry of "stimulus, what about the stimulus?" This is the stimulus. You would think this bill would have passed the House long ago. This is the stimulus they keep crying about.

There was some silly question to the Prime Minister today asking about the $2 billion tax cut. This is a $2 billion tax cut. It is far more than that. It is $575 million this year, $1.2 billion next year, up to $2.9 billion in 1982. How inconsistent can the hon. gentlemen be? They have no consistency whatsoever.

Mr. Murphy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister keeps referring to the "hon. gentlemen opposite". I would remind him that this House is a bit more modern than his bill.

Mr. Kempling: What a great contribution that was!

Mr. Crosbie: I know why the hon. gentleman is so conscious of the fact that we have hon. women and hon. gentlemen here. It is because they dominate the NDP in the caucus and in the House, and I congratulate them for that.

The reason the official opposition is never consistent is that their leader stated that it is more important to be right than it is to be consistent. If that is sauce for the goose, it is also sauce for the gander. It is more important to be right than to be consistent. In that statement the former prime minister was right. Of course, they are adopting his policy every day because the inconsistencies we have heard from them have been really remarkable.

If we want to discuss this clause, Mr. Chairman, it is strictly a technical amendment. All we are doing in this clause is this. The effect of this amendment and this clause is to ensure that the new credits do not in any way affect the calculation of the general federal tax deduction, the federal surtax on income not attributable to any province and a special Quebec abatement. That is really all that this amendment does.

If hon. gentlemen want to have the debate on second reading all over again, that is their privilege. We know that they can hamstring the House. We know they can still stop this bill going through by Christmas. We know they can stop it despite the fact the bill has been approved in principle by the House. But I hope they will take a more reasonable attitude. Any amendments that are good ones, that we can accept within the framework that I have mentioned, we are certainly prepared to consider.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent)—Employment—Proposed cessation of job-creation program; the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy)—Northern Affairs—Settlement of native land claims; the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette)—Research and Development—Inquiry whether grants will be increased.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, could we discuss Bill C-225 and could other bills be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. parliamentary secretary said C-225; I am sure he meant C-226. Might I be permitted, though, to advise the House that I am a little concerned about the way in which we are proceeding with the establishment of the order of work for private members' business.

I notice that in moving to Bill C-226 the House will be standing seven bills which are already printed and ready to proceed, and will also be standing 11 other bills which are not printed. I am informed that even members whose bills have not been printed have been requested to supply information on their bills to the legal counsel of the House. After a brief inquiry I find that some of these members still had the bills in their offices and did not know they had to submit them—they were waiting for someone to counsel them. I wonder whether the Privy Council office could not go to the trouble of appointing someone to telephone all members concerned and press them to supply information, even though the bill might not be ready to be printed. What is the use of having a draw at the beginning of a session to establish a priority list if we are going to proceed as we are at present?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I am led to believe that with respect to every one of the bills published prior to this one an inquiry has been made and the member involved is not able, willing or whatever, to proceed today. You mentioned the ones that have not been printed. I will certainly take your advice and try to speed up the process, but it should be clear to all members that we have made every attempt to get each bill seriatim that is available for debate, and if there is any fault I do not think it can be attributed to any partisanship on the government side. But if you wish, Mr. Speaker, I will take what you say under advisement.

Mr. Herbert: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, the problem for many of us is that the bills not being printed, we do not have any record in our office of what the content is to be. Also, when we look at the order of business we can only assume at the moment, because we have no other information to go on, that, as you have said, some 20 items are being passed over. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary when he reports back to the House on this matter could let us know which bills have not been printed. Maybe we could tidy up the order paper by getting rid of some items that members might not wish to proceed with at this time. We could then have at least some idea amongst ourselves as to what is likely to come up for debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I want to assure the hon. member that I did not intend to reflect on him or on the people helping him in his job, but I wonder whether we do not need to put pressure on some members who do not go to the trouble of having their bills prepared. Perhaps we do not insist enough. I spoke to one member—he is in the House now—who had his bill ready on this desk; he said he was waiting for someone to call him. So I think we should pursue the matter. In any case, I am ready now to ask whether there is consent to stand all the bills that precede Bill C-226 and proceed with Bill C-226 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SAFETY OF EMPLOYEES IN FEDERAL UNDERTAKINGS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved that Bill C-226, to amend the Canada Labour Code (Safety of Employees), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the private member's bill I am presenting today speaks to one of the most important issues presently facing Canadians and Canadian governments. We have often been led to believe that the most serious question facing labour today is that of collective bargaining and industrial disputes. With all due respect, that is not the most serious question. The most serious issue facing Canadian labour today and, in effect, facing governments at all levels, is the whole question of occupational health and safety in the work place. That is the most burning issue for Canadian labour today.

I am sure members opposite me and those beside me will admit there is a crisis in occupational health and safety. It seems to me that whenever we talk about labour in this country we hear a lot of scapegoating—the Tories are great at that, like the Liberals before them. They start trotting out figures about the number of days lost in strikes, they compare them with figures from Italy, West Germany, Britain, Uganda and every other country in the world. But we never hear much talk about the number of days lost due to accidents on the job or diseases incurred as a result of conditions in the work place, or indeed the whole question of a comparison between days lost and the economic impact on Canada when we consider that the number of days lost due to occupational health problems or accidents on the job was seven times more than days lost through industrial disputes. One can compute the loss in terms of dollars to the Canadian economy.

There is no doubt whatsoever that the previous Liberal government attempted to come to grips with giving the federal government some leadership on the whole question of occupational health and safety when it brought in an amendment to the Canada Labour Code, Bill C-8, which amended part IV of the Canada Labour Code. In spite of the fact that that was the first amendment to the Canada Labour Code in ten years, it is to the credit of the previous Liberal government that it gave workers the right to refuse work which is unsafe—but only if the danger is imminent, which is hardly adequate since we know that some cancers develop over as long a period as 20 years. That is hardly encouraging when, according to a recent American study, at least 20 per cent of all cancers in the United States are job-related.

The previous Liberal government gave workers the right to health and safety committees, but they were not made mandatory and, in particular, in those areas where there is no collective in the work place there are no health and safety committees. Indeed, the minister has not exercised his right to establish those health and safety committees in those particular situations. He has not exercised his authority to date.

I have here some facts which ought to be put on the record. The federal Department of Labour estimates that 1,071,484 Canadians were injured on the job in 1978. In Ontario alone nearly 1,500 workers died from job-related accidents and illnesses over the last five years. According to a study related to work accidents by Dr. Paul Rohan, a Montreal occupational health and safety specialist, a Canadian worker was disabled on the job every 16 seconds of every day over the past ten years. Another fact I think we should keep in mind is that the frequency of injuries is rising. Over the past ten years the number of employees disabled each year has increased by one-third, and 46 per cent of those who had accidents in 1978 were either temporarily or permanently disabled. Those are the human costs.

There are, of course, monetary costs. Compensation payments for work injuries in 1978 reached $967 million. Those were just compensation payments alone. Counting indirect costs such as production losses, hiring and training of new employees, higher employer insurance costs, overtime and hospital care, the total combined costs arising from work injuries, illnesses and fatalities could be as high as $4 billion a year. Last year, for example, in Ontario alone the workmen's compensation board paid $382,207,000 in compensation awards.

Aside from the fact that the improvements which were made through Bill C-8 to the Canada Labour Code were long overdue, there were some obvious ones which were not made to the Canada Labour Code. We tried to amend Bill C-8. The Liberals would not accept any amendments. Indeed, their concern about this problem is evidenced by the fact that there are only three of them sitting in the House this afternoon. Not one of the previous ministers of labour was prepared to accept changes to the Canada Labour Code which would have corrected the glaring inadequacy of part IV of the Canada Labour Code with which Bill C-226 comes to grips.

The change we wanted and which is in Bill C-226 which we are debating this afternoon is that the provisions of part IV of the Canada Labour Code be extended to those workers under federal jurisdiction who are not already covered under part IV.

Part IV makes a neat little exception in eliminating from coverage those who work on trains, boats and planes. When they are on the ground, they are covered by part IV of the code; but once they are on the job in the air, on the running boards of trains or on ships, God help them because there is no coverage whatsoever under part IV of the Canada Labour Code.

An hon. Member: How many people are we talking about?

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a good question from the Liberal benches. How many are we talking about? There are approximately 500,000 employees who are presently under federal jurisdiction and covered by the Canada Labour Code. Two hundred thousand of them are excluded from coverage under part IV of the code which deals with occupational health and safety.

An hon. Member: Louder.

Mr. Rodriguez: If the hon. member wants to make a speech, he can get up and make it, but he does not care. He is probably one of those who does not have a collective in his business. There are 200,000 people not covered under part IV of the code.

I want to give some specifics. Some railway workers are covered by this part of the Canada Labour Code but, as I said, once they step on to the running boards of trains they are not covered. They are covered under the Railway Act, and the Railway Act provides no occupational health and safety section. So, for example, those workers who were running that CPR train in Mississauga had no coverage whatsoever with respect to the rights which are in part IV of the Canada Labour Code regarding health and safety. They were not covered at all.

With regard to those people who work on our aeroplanes, once a plane is in the air, stewardesses, pilots, stewards and all the other airline attendants on the plane are not covered. The passengers on the plane are covered under the Aeronautics Act, but the Aeronautics Act refers only to the safety of the passengers. It does not relate to the safety of the workers on the plane. The next time hon. members get on a DC-9, they should take a look at the fold down seat which is located at the back of the plane and in the middle aisle. If a tail cone was to fly off, the workers occupying those places would be sucked right out the back. There is no coverage under the Aeronautics Act with respect to health and safety. The same thing goes for those who work on ships.

The unions representing workers in these areas have been after governments for over ten years, and they have always listened. There have been labour ministers galore. They have listened. No one can accuse them of not listening, but they do not act. The present minister is not listening. He is busy carrying on his own private little conversation. He is Mr. Nice Guy. He wants to be somebody. Well, he can be somebody if he will start acting to bring these workers under the aegis—

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was paying attention to the hon. member with all I had, but all of a sudden I found that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) was sitting here, and there are certain priorities, so I was momentarily distracted, so to speak. Then I heard something about a nice guy, and I think the hon. member was referring to me. I do not want to take up his time. I know this is important and he has only 20 minutes, but if he would just repeat the part in which he was referring to me, I would be extremely grateful. I want him to know that I was paying strict attention. Would he just repeat that so I can get back on track?

Mr. Rodriguez: I am glad that the minister said he was talking. I was referring to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander), and I am glad he was talking to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). At one point I thought the minister was in the outer cabinet and therefore had no influence at all. I am glad he has the ear of the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro), a former minister of labour, said when he was minister of labour that this was a good idea, but he did not do anything about it.

Then the former member for Scarborough East took over from the hon. member for Hamilton East. He did not do anything either, even though he said it was a good idea. I am not surprised at that because there is a great bureaucratic battle within government. Now the Minister of Labour says he wants to be a somebody. He tells Mary Trueman of The Globe and Mail that he thinks his department should do more. This is an opportunity for him to do more. He can act, and I hope hon. members on the government side will not attempt to talk out this bill. The Prime Minister has said the government wants to give members of Parliament an opportunity to accomplish more than just sitting on back benches and thumping desks. If this bill was allowed to go through, it would go to committee.

Surely the Minister of Labour recognizes the seriousness of this problem. This is no time to be having little arguments with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) as to whether workers should come under the Aeronautics Act or the Canada Labour Code. There is only one overriding matter of importance, and that is the health and safety of those who work in this country. The new Minister of Labour can give some leadership. He can, in effect, be somebody without having to go to Speedy Muffler. He can be somebody if he would allow the bill to go to committee. All he has to do is to call off his seals over there, tell them not to talk the bill out, and let the bill go through this afternoon so that we can deal with it in committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Some hon. members over there are performing like seals. They probably do not recognize the importance of this bill. Perhaps I should not insult the seals. Instead of the Minister of Labour talking about a public interest disputes commission, here is a wonderful opportunity for him to put himself four square in terms of leadership with respect to labour matters in this country.

When I asked him in committee the other day what is happening to the establishment of such a coverage for these workers under the Canada Labour Code, he said he was studying the problem. The matter has been studied to death, Mr. Speaker. There is no more time for study. Now is the time for clear-cut action on the part of the government. We are talking about 200,000 workers who must be covered under the federal labour code, part IV. I think this bill will do the trick since it is designed to extend the coverage in part IV of the labour code to those who are not at present covered but are accepted under the labour code.

Since I do not want to filibuster my own bill, I will conclude with an appeal to the government members. I say to them that instead of rising here to say that they agree with the bill and that it is a wonderful idea, which is a technique of talking it out, I urge them to let the bill go to committee. Let what the Prime Minister talked about with regard to the reform of Parliament be put into practice and let Parliament decide if the bureaucrats are going to be the ones to call the shots in Canada on this very important issue or members of Parliament.

Mr. Bill Wightman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the bill put forward by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is of particular interest to me and he is to be commended for it because, inadvertently or not, it raises, among other things, an issue which is very close to the heart of this government. The issue I refer to is regulatory reform.

One effect of this bill would be to simplify and rationalize many of the regulations pursuant to occupational safety which are now to be found in a variety of pieces of legislation covering public employees, employees in both the public and private sectors in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, as well as all the people who are now covered by part IV of the Canada Labour Code. Bill C-226, as I said, would be a device whereby that legislation could be simplified, and to that extent it is consistent with the preoccupation of this government to clear away a good deal of the underbrush and to look very hard at the proliferation of regulations which are now in place.

During the course of this summer I had cause to have delivered to my office copies of the consolidated code of Canada, all 18 volumes. A law student ten or 12 years ago would not even be concerned about the consolidated regulations; they would have been encompassed in one small volume. But today they amount to some 18 volumes, and that is only regulations which have been codified; it does not speak to the plethora of regulations that come about as the result of quasi-judicial bodies of all sorts. So we should all be grateful that the hon. member for Nickel Belt has raised the issue in this fashion.

What is relevant on this matter of over-regulation is the cost to society of keeping these regulations in place. Bill C-226 could be one of the ways of moving toward less regulation, both as the regulations exist now or as they might come into place in the future.

Another approach to regulatory reform can be seen in the work that has been going on between the provincial and federal governments in terms of attempting to reduce the overlap of administration. Our government, and in particular, our Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), has been profoundly interested in this exercise and in support of it. We acknowledge the efforts of the previous administration to develop a socioeconomic impact analysis as a means of testing the efficacy of the particular new major health, safety and fairness regulations. We have supported that and we have added to the administrative guidelines to ensure that that type of program will become operative. I suggest that it is a pioneering step in the regulatory process, the importance of which we as a government hope will be fully recognized by Canadians.

As you know, sir, the notion is that each proposal for new social legislation, if its estimated cost is in the order of $10 million or more, must now be subjected to a formal cost-benefit analysis. The result of that is to be published in the Canada Gazette for the purpose of receiving comments 60 days before the regulation is to take effect. Anyone who could be potentially affected by those regulations is invited to comment to the sponsoring department. As I said, we feel that that is a pioneering step and I am grateful that the hon. member for Nickel Belt has today brought this to the attention of the House.

The hon. member has given an indication as to who would be affected by this proposal, and I think that perhaps for purposes of completeness of the debate we should take a look at precisely who would be affected. In the federal jurisdiction there are nine principal federal departments or agencies administering 16 separate acts which are concerned in varying degrees with occupational safety and health. They include the Department of Labour, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As I have said earlier, were we to proceed with the bill at hand, a good deal of these numbers would be reduced.

However, I am sure the hon. member did not intend to lead people to believe that people working on trains, ships and aircraft are totally unprotected, which of course is not the case. His words, I believe, were, "God help them when they step on the running boards of the trains".

Mr. Rodriguez: Where is the health and safety part?

Mr. Wightman: I am sure the hon. member would not want anyone to be misled into thinking that there are no safety regulations, as well as the protection of a complete body of case law and arbitration cases to protect these people.

● (1730)

Mr. Rodriguez: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Wightman) does not want to leave the wrong impression with the House as to what I said. I said, God help them when they step on the running board of the trains because they are not covered under any health and safety section of the particular acts under which they are covered. I think that point is very clear. They have no right to refuse work, they have no right to information, and they have no right to have health and safety committees on the job under those particular acts. I hope he does not leave the wrong impression with the House in that regard.

Mr. Wightman: Mr. Speaker, as I was pointing out, we have a whole body of arbitration case law, and at no time am I aware of a decision going against an employee who had a genuine apprehension of bodily harm or of injury and having refused to perform or carry out an assignment. Indeed, it goes beyond that, beyond an apprehension of injury to himself or to other workers or, indeed, if he was requested to do something that would be self-denigrating in any way. I know of no decision that has not gone with the employee.

Even in the absence of the protection that is offered by the various pieces of legislation covering these other employees who are not now embraced by part IV of the Canada Labour Code, I know of no such decision.

It might be useful for the purposes of this discussion to adumbrate the departments or agencies and the legislation which obtains in respect of employees of those departments and agencies. The Ministry of Transport employees come under the Aeronautics Act as well as the Canada Shipping Act. The Canadian Transport Commission comes under the Railway Act. The Atomic Energy Control Board comes under the Atomic Energy Control Act. Energy, Mines and Resources and Indian and Northern Affairs come under the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, and the National Energy Board comes under the National Energy Board Act. The Department of Labour, of course, comes under the Canada Labour Code.

There are a few points in respect of Bill C-226 that I would suggest should be considered here before any consideration be given to moving the bill onward to the committee. We should consider, for instance, the question of territorial exclusion. Since the bill would remove territorial exclusion, it seems to me we have to look at that rather seriously, because that exclusion which is provided for in subsection 81 of the Canada Labour Code would need to be retained if the member's bill were to go forward. To take that right to regulate works and undertakings or businesses of a local or private nature away from the governments of the Yukon Territory and of the Northwest Territories, would certainly be an unwarranted and regressive action in the development of territorial government. Perhaps Bill C-226 could be refined to that extent.

In respect of public service employees, it seems to me, with the Treasury Board acting as employer, the government in an August, 1968, directive affirmed a policy of applying the principles of the Canada Labour Safety Code and the regulations and standards adopted thereunder to the public service. The portion of the proposal that would make departmental corporations subject to the Canada Labour Code has merit, but a case has not been fully developed at this time to suggest that employees in the federal public service do not have protection equivalent to that of workers covered by the Canada Labour Code, part IV.

Finally, sir, let me say a word regarding international treaties and obligations. Canada is respectful of its international treaties and obligations, if some countries are not, and we do have international laws and agreements relating to the operation of ships and aircraft. They, as well as the overriding concern for passenger safety, can take precedence over the safety of employee provisions in part IV of the Canada Labour Code. Bill C-226 would remove the order in council provision of section 80(2) which is required to prevent any conflict between our international treaty obligations and our own laws. I would not think the bill should go forward without that imperfection having been cured.

Mr. Rodriguez: Do it in committee.

Mr. Wightman: The hon. member suggests we do it in committee. I do not know why it could not come into the House in a rather more perfected fashion before going on to the committee.

Mr. Rodriguez: This is a debate on the principle.

Mr. Wightman: I think we must, on all sides of this House, and the hon. member has suggested this, agree on the importance of the issue he has attempted to address, that of lost time due to occupational health problems and accidents. We are conscious of this, not simply as to the economic implications but, most particularly, as to the human implications and the human suffering that are implied.

At the same time I think it is the hon. member who attempts to relate occupational safety and health problems with industrial disputes. The two are almost mutually exclusive; at least they are not comparable in terms of an indication as to the state of labour-management relations in Canada or the health of labour-management relations.

There are real distinctions between a work stoppage where everybody goes out on the same day or at the same time, and the type of lost time that is implied in accident or health problems. They do not normally all occur on the same day. In that sense those two reasons for lost time really do not bear comparison.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think we should be mindful of this reality. There are jobs performed by people which implicitly are dangerous. A policeman's job is dangerous, and a fireman's job is dangerous. The nature of that work is such that the public interest must and does come first. Of course those good people would have it no other way.

We have before us a proposal which I think draws this fact very much to our attention. Consider, sir, the responsibilities of flight crews and flight attendants vis-à-vis the passengers. Whether because of a malfunction of the aircraft, or because of some terrorist taking over the aircraft, the responsibility of those attendants and pilots, and their first concern, must be for passenger safety, even though it is at the expense of those workers themselves.

I think of the recent disaster at Mississauga. Although the precise causes of the mishap are not known as yet, envisage a situation where a locomotive engineer sees an imminent problem and is capable of doing something about it, but in staying with the train he places himself in some jeopardy. I do not think we can have legislation which would suggest that, if it comes to a choice between his own safety and the safety of perhaps thousands of other passengers on that train, his responsibility is unclear.

One could easily conjure up any number of situations and occupations wherein the public interest and safety are of paramount concern. We should be grateful to the hon. member for introducing this bill in this way because, as I said, it does raise this important issue and exemplifies the problems there are in trying to solve all problems through legislation.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the first time in my parliamentary career.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: As is the tradition of the House, I would like to pay tribute to the people of my riding who have shown their confidence in me by sending me here. I welcome many of them to what is in fact a growing city. It has many occupational health problems which are in part related to finding accommodation, simply because it is growing so quickly. I would hope that in celebration of our six-month anniversary, which was mentioned in question period today, that we will remain the government long enough to help other parts of this country to establish their economic health and security so that we do not have quite so many people moving so quickly into our part of the nation. I would like to see more jobs come available in other parts of the country so that people could remain close to their families and their traditions.

I rise on this bill because I am bothered by the way in which it is written. It exemplifies a conversation I had some weeks ago with the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). It has to do with the kinds of principles which the hon. member invites other members to address themselves to in dealing with the bill. I would suggest that if the hon. member finds my arguments persuasive, he might consider withdrawing the bill and redrafting it in a form that might include things about which we are motivated.

Mr. Rodriguez: You can do that in committee.

Mr. Hawkes: I am not so sure that in committee there is always good discussion or that they include the kinds of facts which will provide us with decent legislation. I think that in some instances in committee we are exposed to nothing but rhetoric. It is a waste of time for the members of the House, and a detriment to the people of Canada.

I do not agree with the bill presented by the hon. member for Nickel Belt in part because of the first word, "notwithstanding". It goes on to read, "notwithstanding any other act or regulation, this part applies—". In other words, the hon. member for Nickel Belt, in the area of occupational safety for employees, would like us to throw out all those years in terms of tradition and development and in terms of other bills and regulations. Without examination we are being invited to buy a piece of legislation which supersedes any other acts passed by this House. For instance, I wonder whether there are provisions suggested in the amendment by the hon. member which might affect us in the House of Commons. Is there a House of Commons Act and does it take precedence over statements in this bill?

I wonder whether we have a shelter and safety committee in the House of Commons which might protect us from some of the gases that arise from the opposite side from time to time? It might be in the best interest of our mental health. As I read over this bill, I was reminded of the fact that I come from a faculty position in the school of social welfare and a career which is devoted to the care of other people.

Mrs. Mitchell: You're kidding?

Mr. Hawkes: I am not kidding. I teach, in a faculty of social welfare, social workers who are concerned with the mental health of others such as senior citizens.

Mrs. Mitchell: Some social worker!

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, some social worker. I hope that I represent what will become somewhat of a more modern tradition in social work, that we start with motivation and a desire to be helpful to others, move to an information base which gives the facts on the situation, and then to public policy which may in fact correct the situation. I have been sitting here for some weeks becoming increasingly bothered by the absence of information which flows from the other side of the House, under the guise of sincere motivation. I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that members opposite have goals which are not dissimilar from my own.

The members opposite have brought up the issue of Petro-Can on more than one occasion. I support what I think I see as the goals of the opposite side, that we have a Canadian oil company that is a leader in increasing our security of supply and that we in fact use the profits from products which are sold to pay for that company. The translation of those goals by those opposite is in the form of a corporation called Petro-Canada. It should be put on the record that Petro-Canada has not contributed to the supply of oil in this country. In fact the annual report of 1978 suggests that PetroCan had less oil at the end of that year than it had at the beginning of the year.

The task force report tells us that this corporation, in the face of profits from other oil companies, lost $7.6 million in profits. I think that in the interest of public debate on policy issues we would be better served if we begin from a basis of fact and move together in the face of those situations which concern all Canadians toward resolutions that will make Canada a better nation.

Mr. Rodriguez: Workers get hurt.

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, workers get hurt. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Wightman) dealt with some of the exclusions which the hon. member for Nickel Belt wishes to include in this bill. He talked specifically about ships, trains and airplanes. If we were to adopt the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Nickel Belt, employees in those three industries would be subjected to the provisions of the Canada Labour Code, part IV. I wonder if the hon. member would like to be present in an airplane in an emergency situation when an employee rejected an order given to him or her by the captain. Would the hon. member for Nickel Belt like to be on a ship where an employee in a moment of crisis could reject an order given to him or her by the captain of the ship?

Mr. Rodriguez: Are you asking me the question?

Mr. Hawkes: I would not mind giving the hon. member a chance to answer that question.

Mr. Knowles: Watch out; you will lose your place.

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, I will lose my place. I believe that that is the issue which the hon. member for Scarborough West wanted to bring to our attention. If there are situations in this world where the health and safety of the public or of other employees are dependent upon a set of circumstances, then the guidelines should be specific and detailed to that situation. I believe that the three industries which are excluded from the present Canada Labour Code are important examples. We cannot have confusion on a ship, an airplane, or a train, in a time of emergency. It is important that employees—

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. The hon. member should not leave the impression with this House that I have suggested that those who work on airplanes should not, in the course of their duty and in the event of a plane crash, be obligated to assist passengers. What we are talking about are those problems which are structural with respect to the job, which are correctible, and not part and parcel of what is expected of them in their duties as flight attendants, pilots, or sailors on a ship. I think there is a complete distinction here, and I think the hon. member is deliberately trying to give the wrong impression to this House.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that at some appropriate time the hon. member opposite would withdraw the word "deliberate". I am not sure that it fits into the traditions of this House.

I think the hon. member confirms the major thesis that I was attempting to develop. He has an objective; he wants to protect the health of all employees on airplanes, on ships, and on railroads. He has to ask himself, however, whether the amendment he proposes in this bill accomplishes that end. That is the relationship between motivation and fact.

I would ask the hon. member if there is not a way of addressing this problem that would be more specific to the problem and more appropriate to the problem, without confusing the universe. I suggest that the exclusions presently contained in the Canada Labour Code are there for specific reasons. The specific reasons in these three areas of human endeavour are the peculiarities of them. If hon. members on that side of the House really care about the health and safety of employees in those three industries, why do they not come forward with a private member's bill or an amendment in committee that would protect the health and safety of both members of the general public and employees at the same time? Instead, they try to bicycle through the kind of provision which does not allow for the attention to detail which should be relevant to a specific industry.

I do not want to go on at length, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to make one last point. I believe it was the deliberate intent of previous legislators to exclude people in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. What the hon. member proposes is another example of what we have seen too often in this country—the continuation of a kind of paternalism.

I believe that people who work in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon have the right and the obligation to set forth labour codes and labour standards that cover their experience in the north which, too frequently, is not the same as that in the south. The north has 24-hour days and 24-hour nights. The legislation should be specific to their circumstances. Any attempt to bicycle this through on top of existing legislation should be defeated by the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I could not let this go by without offering a few words. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander) asked me to say some nice things about the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) because he is a little upset today. I am going to say some nice things about him. It is a pleasant task to participate in a debate initiated by the hon. member. The pleasure manifestly increases when the debate takes on the serious aspect that this one has. Over the years there has not been much dispute concerning the hon. member's character, the nature and quality of his contribution in this House, and his place in the world of socialism. His contribution to Parliament is very well known, of course. I think it is indisputable, however, that the hon. member is the self-proclaimed mouthpiece of the working man, and rightly so. He has done tremendous work in this House and in committee for the little man.

I do not have a lot of time, Mr. Speaker, but I have a poem which personifies the hon. member. It is as follows:

It matters not what work we do
What post in life we are asked to fill,
We can be honest men and true
Though lacking genius or skill.
The worker digging in the street

Scarce noticed by the passer-by
May be too great to play the cheat
Too big of soul to tell a lie.

Mr. Rodriguez: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is an extremely serious bill being debated by the House. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander) has moved around the government benches, coaxing unwilling members to filibuster the bill. Now we have the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Beattie) going on at great length to talk the bill out. This bill would have an effect on thousands and thousands of workers in this country, so I think this is despicable behaviour.

Mr. Beattie: Mr. Speaker, I really do not want to speak on the point of order raised by the hon. member, because it would take up the three or four minutes that are left, and I know that would upset him.

Certainly, as legislators we must always be concerned with how changes in legislation or, indeed, new legislation will affect the safety of those who have to carry out the policy. Therefore, there is much merit in a proposal like Bill C-226. The concern for the safety of employees is important and should never be neglected. The hon. member is well aware of that, and points it out at every opportunity. However, I feel that this amendment to the Canada Labour Code will create some legal problems or situations and, while it tries to solve others, on balance it will do little to clear up the whole situation.

As I said, the safety of employees working in the federal government, or indeed in the private sector, should not be taken lightly. I am surprised that the hon. member for Nickel Belt did not mention that the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety is to be located in the great thriving metropolis of Hamilton. This centre can, and will, do much to look into problems of occupational safety and, in the long run, I am sure will do much to make the work place safer.

It is through activities co-ordinated at the national level that solutions will be found to problems which the hon. member for Nickel Belt obviously knows exist, and which are a potential danger to those workers not included in the provisions of the Canada Labour Code.

The workers excluded from part IV of the Canada Labour Code are protected by other federal statutes, as the hon. member knows. The question is not whether workers should be protected by federal statutes but, rather, by which statutes. I take this opportunity to speak on the matter with a real sense of commitment and concern, Mr. Speaker, the same commitment and concern with which I judge the hon. member and Bill C-226. The present situation is that these workers are protected by the Treasury Board. This protection is similar to the provisions of part IV of the Canada Labour Code and its regulations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2000)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE TAX CREDIT IN RESPECT OF MORTGAGE INTEREST AND PROPERTY TAX

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-20—Mr. Crosbie—Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton) in the chair.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I could not let the minister's remark before five o'clock go without passing. He gave another one of his remarkable performances in which he said that while the government could afford the mortgage interest and property tax credit, it could not afford to make the credit universal to make it apply to tenants. Also it could not be made refundable and it could not be applied to people who did not have a taxable income.

The Minister of Finance is somewhat like a Santa Claus who sits in a department store and has four chocolates in his hand. The first kid who jumps up in his lap is a well dressed middle-class kid, and being well dressed and middle-class he is the first one in line and the first one to jump on Santa's lap. Santa asks him, "What do you want for Christmas?" The kid answers that he wants four pieces of chocolate. Santa replies "There you go, there are the four pieces of chocolate. I have given you what you wanted". But if it is a pensioner who comes limping up to Santa, and who is asked what he wants for Christmas, and the pensioner replies that he would like some chocolate too, Santa says, "I am sorry I cannot give you any chocolate, I have given it all away." That is exactly what this phony argument from the Minister of Finance amounts to. The Minister of Finance knows perfectly well—

An hon. Member: You should have read the Journal today.

Mr. Rae: —that if it were a question of affordability it would be perfectly possible to reduce the amount of mortgage tax credit and thereby make it universal, and it would be perfectly possible to make it refundable and at the same time make it affordable for the government if that were the only criterion, and the Minister of Finance knows that it is not. What we have been presented with is not a measure, it is a striptease.

Mr. Kempling: A striptease? From Santa Claus to a striptease?

Mr. Rae: The government's chief whip cannot understand how one can move from a Santa Claus to a striptease in two paragraphs.

An hon. Member: Only you can do it.

Mr. Rae: He is only demonstrating his lack of imagination, and demonstrating why he is on that side of the House and why he is not on this side of the House.

What the Minister of Finance has given us is a striptease whereby we are given one part of the government's program and told nothing of what is coming next week. How do we know what it can afford and what it cannot afford? It has not told us what it is cutting out and what else it is bringing in. We have not been told about tax expenditures. We do not know anything about the revenue side. We do not know anything about the expenditure side.

All we know about is the unbelievable hypocrisy of the Minister of Finance who comes here to say that he can afford to give something to the middle-class home owner but cannot afford to give anything to the pensioners of this country who would benefit from the refundable tax credit. That is the kind of selective morality of this government, the kind of selective affordability which applies to those people who can push the hardest and elbow their way to the front of the line. It does not apply to those people who cannot elbow their way forward, who are stuck at the back of the line and who are waiting for largesse from Santa Claus with his four chocolates who gave them to the first person who asked for them. It is an amazing performance on the part of the government.

Mr. Lefebvre: Same old game.

Mr. Rae: It is an extremely good example of this government's social philosophy that when it has something to give away, and it is only a limited amount, it makes very sure it goes to those people who need it the least and not to those people who need it the most.

An hon. Member: Fat cats.

Mr. Rae: There have been many statements made today by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry about the number of proposals that might or might not be made by the Liberal party. The minister knows perfectly well what amendments we are putting forward on this side of the House—

An hon. Member: Twenty-five per cent on the nose.

Mr. Rae: —because we have presented him with the amendments that we are putting forward.

• (2010)

For the benefit of those Liberals who are not so tied up with discussing their next leader that they might want to listen to the debate going on here this evening, I will let them know that our proposals include a property tax credit which would be extended to include tenants. In other words, it would be made universal. There is a principle whereby we would have a refundable tax credit. There is a proposition that the tax credit which is given should be made progressive rather than static. In other words, it would get larger with the smaller incomes so that those most in need would get the most. Finally, we have certain positions with regard to the need of a sunset clause for this tax expenditure as with others.

We have had an amazing performance over the past week. It started with an extraordinary effort by the President of the Privy Council who was at his most lugubrious. We on this side call him Wizard of Ooze. He was attempting to establish at one and the same time that his government was the most reasonable and the most prepared to go along with whatever proposals came from this side of the House. At the same time he said that this did not mean they were going to accept any amendments that come from the NDP or Liberal party. No doubt there are some other fictitious amendments which he is prepared to accept. However, when confronted with the reality of substantive amendments which would make these proposals fair, he is not prepared to play ball.

Then we had the extraordinary admission on the part of the President of the Privy Council that it really did not matter what the opposition did because the forms had already been mailed out. Was it not in the genius of the government to call that measure in June if this measure was so important to them, and if they were aware of the need for printing forms? They could have called Parliament in June and let it meet during that month to discuss certain economic measures which they wanted in the budget, and which needed to have serious discussion. Parliament could have been allowed to adjourn later in June in order that the forms be printed as amended. Instead, we have a government which at one and the same time pretends to be interested in the reform of parliament.

However, there is a hidden agenda of this government. It is not the agenda of Parliament but the agenda of the government printers. This is the party that is fighting the bureaucracy. This is the party of the little man which went throughout Canada and said the Liberal party would be wiped out, that suddenly there would be a renaissance of free enterprise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: I know the members cannot stand to hear the truth. That is the party that went to the Canadian people and said there would suddenly be a renaissance of the little man and a reflowering of Parliament. What are we left with? The weed presented to us by the President of the Privy Council! What was supposed to be the flower has turned out to be nothing but a weed. We have been reduced to the status of a rubber stamp because of the agenda of the government print shop.

An hon. Member: Are you capable of much better?

Mr. Rae: If you give me long enough I will come up with something much better. It is important that the government realize that they have revealed themselves to be what they have always been, a government as bureaucratic, authoritarian, and as arrogant as the party which preceded it in power.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: There is no change. We did not need an election on May 22 to get the kind of lugubrious performance we had from the President of the Privy Council last week. We did not need an election to have that kind of intellectual thuggery presented to us by the Minister of Finance before five o'clock this afternoon, a statement reminiscent of the worst kind of authoritarianism.

The minister said they would decide what is and what is not reasonable. That is the position of the government. They will make it up. They will decide the agenda, together with the government printers. They will decide what Parliament will decide and when they will decide it.

The public should know that we as a party came here prepared to discuss amendments. We came here rejecting the philosophy of the government, the selective morality of the government, the selective generosity of the government which says to the whole of the Canadian public, "I'm sorry, the cupboard is empty." However, when they went home, they said to the middle-class owners, "Stay behind, there is really something here for you." They showed them a secret cupboard and said, "This is for you. We do not have anything for anybody else, but we have something for our special friends."

Mr. Blenkarn: The home owner is a special friend.

Mr. Rae: The hon. member for Mississauga South says the home owner is a special friend. I would like him to tell that to tenants and those who have paid off their mortgages. Now we know why it is 28 per cent, and why it will be 20 per cent next month. We have the explanation. Those people are so wrapped up in their private ideologies that they are unable to recognize the viscerally unfair way in which this scheme is proceeding. It is viscerally unfair to the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Fulton: It is the Tories in pursuit of the zero vote.

Mr. Rae: We used to say the Tories had a capacity for self-destruction. If you look at the history of Canada throughout the past 15 years, you will see that is true. We thought there was a possibility with someone who was supposed to be as politically shrewd as the Prime Minister and as politically shrewd as the Minister of Finance that this self-destructive urge would be overcome. However, we have seen it resurrected again in the priorities they have chosen in this Parliament and the selective generosity they have chosen for this Parliament, as well as the people they have chosen to single out for tax benefits. We see a party which is once again determined to go down to defeat, a government pursuing a private ideology at the expense of the real health of the Canadian economy and a real fairness to Canadian taxpayers.

I want to say to the government that I am amazed at the hypocrisy the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of Finance have demonstrated over the past week. I am amazed at the contradictions and the shallow weakness of the Prime Minister when he said to this House that they are considering a shelter allowance. When we asked if they were considering one now, the answer was no. The Minister of Finance says this is a housing measure. It is not a housing measure, but a tax measure. This is an amendment to the Income Tax Act.

The first example of the government's generosity is to give a benefit to one group of taxpayers while telling the rest of the taxpayers, "There is no room in the inn for you." There is room in the inn for home owners but none for pensioners or for single parent families living in apartments and paying more than 30 per cent of their income on rent. That is the Christmas message which is coming from the Minister of Finance and I think it spells the doom of this government because, while riding what they thought was a wave of possessive individualism which would take them to power, they are flying in the face of all that is most decent and generous in all Canadian taxpayers, that is, they do not want something for themselves which does not apply to somebody else. That has long been a principle of our party and of social democracy and I was delighted to be able to vote to express it—that which we wish for ourselves we also wish for others. It is in that sentiment we present amendments which are concrete, which are specific, which are positive, which are affordable, and which are perfectly reasonable, to the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

Mr.Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up too much of the time of the House and I will say only a few words to give my views, especially after having heard the decision of the minister this afternoon. I was wondering what the minister found so urgent, as if he was afraid not to be ready for Christmas. Mr. Chairman, the consideration of the bill this evening has taken me quite by surprise on two counts. First, I am surprised to see that after second reading the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole when we were ready and even pleased, to draft some amendments and refer the bill to the standing committee for a thorough discussion to see what is really the substance of that bill, because we do not know much about it. It has only two clauses.

An hon. Member: You voted for the bill.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): We voted to refer it to the standing committee of the House for consideration. However, I was greatly surprised when I learned we were going to deal with it this evening in Committee of the Whole. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Liberals seem to be in a hurry yet I think they would have never introduced such a bill.

Some hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): They would have been afraid to lose 50 per cent of the vote in Quebec.

An hon. Member: We are too intelligent to do that.

An hon. Member: We are too fair.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Besides referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole, the minister explained this afternoon why he was compelled to proceed so quickly. He told us that the bill had to be passed because the forms were being printed. He explained it this afternoon. He told us frankly in fine language that it was useless to introduce amendments because they would be delayed till next month or next year. In other words, Mr. Chairman, any amendment will be postponed—

An hon. Member: For a year.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): —possibly for a few months, but more probably for a year, in order to deal with the problem of construction of single family houses. That may be a good remedy for the future. However, for 1979 it will merely be a band-aid pending the final surgery, and for us this final surgery is the necessary reform for which we have been asking for years under various governments.

An hon. Member: Why did you vote for it?

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): We have been asking this for years from various governments and especially from the Liberals in the 17 years they have been in power. We have asked for the measure that was partially introduced today, that is, to give the same benefits to single family home owners as to owners of multiple rental units. The Liberals have always benefited big housebuilders by giving them every possible exemption, but never did they do anything for the small home owner. In the 17 years I have been in this House, this is the first time anyone has dared—I repeat, they dare—because as I said a moment ago this bill is far from satisfying, it is only an open door, but it is the first time in 20 years that anyone has dared open this door. If the minister really wants to encourage the construction of single family dwellings, he must allow small owners to deduct from their income tax 66 per cent not only of their mortgage interest but also of the interest on bank loans. Some will say that they have no mortgages. I am speaking of bank and private loans for the construction, renovation and maintenance of family dwellings. Today the minister has proposed—

An hon. Member: Why did you vote for it?

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): There is a big bearded guy on the other side who says: "Why did you vote for it." Precisely to give you the opportunity to study it tonight, at least to speak on it again. Your government never gave you the opportunity to speak on this topic because it never introduced such a measure.

An hon. Member: Right on, Lévesque!

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Today the minister proposes Bill C-20—

An hon. Member: Go, René, go!

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): —relating to tax on mortgage interest and property tax. It applies only to 1979 since this was one of the present government's electoral promises. It is a start, a small start, as I said during debate on second reading. Of course, it is better than nothing. We have never had anything. It is better than nothing since we have been asking for such a reform for the past 20 years, and never has a previous government dared to do anything. All previous governments preferred to favour big business, those who helped them get elected—

An hon. Member: René Lévesque makes you say that.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): I can speak for myself. I have been speaking for myself for 17 years in the House and I can continue to do so. I am not a newcomer. Those who had—

• (2030)

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Chairman, I must regretfully interrupt the hon. member to suggest that he should normally, justly and reasonably address the Chair and avoid trying to impute motives to hon. members on this side. I am aware that the hon. member can hardly make himself heard, but he would perhaps be well advised to turn to the government side to ask hon. members there not to make so much noise.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Chairman, never have I heard such a ridiculous intervention. When the hon. member says that I am trying to influence the others, it is the others, his chums who are shouting at me. It is because they are being hurt. During an operation, a cut with a knife always hurts. I sympathize with them, but this is a necessary operation. Have patience, the operation will not last very long, but you must submit to it once and for all. We had to take it when you were in power, so now taste some of your own medicine.

An hon. Member: We will do better next time.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): You cannot say anything about that tonight any more than we can; it is up to the people. You need not worry, the people will take care of it. Just wait. As for me, I am not worried about my people. In my riding, I have campaigned so often that I do not even make speeches any more. They just send me here; I tell them to go and vote, and they do. The Liberals spend anywhere from $40,000 to $50,000 in my riding and the next day they get trounced again.

The Liberals! Did they ever do anything for family heads, to allow them deductions for their property? Never, Mr. Chairman. May I repeat a bit of what I said the other day speaking of single unit dwellings. Some fathers have had to build their homes with borrowed money, money borrowed from large financial institutions, and had to pay four times their value to own their own homes after 30 years. That was what happened under the Liberals. That was the help, the protection the Liberals gave us. Tonight, I feel they should be ashamed of themselves; they should not speak at all and leave us alone. At least, we have our chance now.

This afternoon, when I saw myself in Committee of the Whole, I was quite anxious to hear the minister explain himself. I heard his statement. I had expected him at least to hear our deliberations. At least I would like to have the right to move amendments. But now we will probably vote on those two clauses tonight and the rest will be postponed. So after hearing the minister I realized that we would get nothing more in 1979. This bill is a promise for the future; that is why I ask the minister, when he has given justice to the small borrowing owners, to think immediately, in future studies and before drafting another bill, to think of those who do not have mortgages, who build their homes with borrowed money, and grant them tax deductions for the interest they pay, or on the money they borrow to keep up their homes and to pay their taxes; to grant them full deduction of their school taxes, and that not only to home owners but also to tenants. That is the way, Mr. Chairman, the minister will really help tenants, and the old, by granting them a tax credit on their property taxes.

I want to say to the minister that in 1980 we would be happy if he would move—

An hon. Member: That does not mean anything.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): You are always saying nothing, that does not mean anything. And you are right for once there.

We would be happy if he would move in the direction that we of the Social Credit Party of Canada have been pursuing for so many years.

Before the adjournment at six o'clock he gave us a lot of hope for the months and years to come, God willing, and provided the Liberals do not bring him down as early as next week. But he should remember that people do not feed only on promises, people want action. They have not seen any action for 17 years in housing and this year and next they are going to be following closely and they are going to be demanding. That is why we are encouraging the minister to go ahead.

An hon. Member: You are looking for a job.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Somebody says again that I am looking for a job. I have had jobs for a long time and rest assured that I am not here because I need them to live. Simmer down. I do not need that. I am here for my pleasure, to make the Liberals suffer because they have been wanting the riding of Roberval for 17 years, and I have taken it away from them for 17 years.

Mr. Chairman, once again I urge the minister to come back before the House with another bill to really help the small owner who needs that help but never got it before this year.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I have a few comments I would like to make on Bill C-20, and then a couple of brief questions for the minister.

There have been repeated references made all through the debate by the Liberal party and the New Democratic Party to try to give the distinct impression that there are absolutely no plans at all to assist renters federally or provincially, and absolutely no other pieces of legislation to assist home owners in any way at all. Of course, this is just absolute nonsense.

There has also been reference to the fact that tax forms are printed. I think there has hardly been a year go by in the seven years I have been here that there have not been tax forms printed in advance of the passing of a piece of legislation, so I do not know what all the hullabaloo about that is for. There is nothing new about that at all.

I have just done some research on the number of housing assistance programs there are in Canada. I have done it for a couple of provinces and federally, and the number of programs there are to assist renters now is amazing. We have the federal government program, non-profit co-operatives, and in that particular piece of assistance there is a section dealing with renters which says:

> Additionally, for income assisted units, assistance will be provided to reduce occupancy charges to levels as determined by the rent to income scale.

It goes into detail on how it assists renters.

Here is another one: provincial and municipal housing. In this particular assistance program there is a section on renting. It says:

> —encourage the application of provincial assistance in order to penetrate further down the income range and provide rental assistance to those individuals and families who need it most—

This particular program goes on. It has another section on rents and the assistance that groups are getting with regard to rent assistance now.

Then there is another one, the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. It is to assist landlords in selected municipalities who agree to rent controls and non-profit corporations and co-operatives.

Then there is another one: insured loans for rental housing. It goes into a lot of detail on how it gives assistance to renters.

I find it very strange that this knowledgeable opposition has not read any of this into the record. Instead, we have their usual tricks of misleading the Canadian people that there are not any other programs at all to assist renters or home owners, federally or provincially.

Then we have the public assistance housing program which is in effect. It has a section on renters, rent supplements.

> The provinces enter into agreements with non-profit housing corporations, housing co-operatives and private owners of rental properties to subsidize the rents of low-income tenants—

It goes on to explain. Then there is another one, private non-profit housing corporations, rental policy:

> Tenants will pay a reasonable portion of their income in rent up to the market rent.

Then it goes into detail on how another group is being assisted with rent assistance.

Then there is another one, graduated payment mortgages for new rental properties. It goes into detail to explain how that is helping renters. The legislation is all there. Why have the Liberals not told people about it, instead of trying to mislead them that there are no programs at all to assist anybody at all? Do hon. members think this is the first piece of housing legislation to assist home owners which has ever been brought into this country?

There are others. There is a summary of National Housing Act programs. It goes on and on into great detail about assistance to home owners, renters, and everybody else. Actually the renters have assistance now in one way, along with many others. It is because mortgage interest and property taxes are a deductible business expense for landlords, and renters are already receiving similar benefits. Also, Bill C-20 has some spinoff benefits for renters. As more Canadians, encouraged by our tax credits, move into their own homes, more rental accommodation will become available, thus taking pressure off those who choose to continue to rent.

It is impossible to meet the needs of all Canadians with one government program. I should like anybody in this House to get up and tell me of one piece of legislation that has been brought in that is going to assist the whole country, or every home owner or every renter. No such piece of legislation has ever been introduced in any country since day one.

I do not have the statistics for all the ten provinces and two territories, but I have quite a bit for Manitoba and Ontario on the way they are assisting the renters. In Manitoba, recognizing that rising rents, coupled with fixed incomes, put terror into the hearts of Manitoba senior citizens, the provincial Conservative government has wisely designed a new rent subsidy program which will help 9,000 elderly for the relatively low price of $3.5 million.

There is another program. In Manitoba we have rent controls, and here are all the details on how they are protecting renters. There are about 12 different steps in the legislation that protects renters in Manitoba, and here is a list of just a few of the programs that are in place in Ontario designed for renters. There is the private assistance rental program, the general public housing assistance program, the public housing municipal sponsors, the public housing provincial sponsors, the federal-provincial senior citizens rural housing program, the federal and municipal non-profit housing program, and the rent supplement program. On and on it goes with programs to help people, and Bill C-20 is just another step to give more assistance. I do not know why there is so much objection to assisting another group.

Recently the Ontario government announced a $2 million project. Community agencies will propose projects which will be funded 50-50 by themselves and the provincial government. The agencies can raise money by fees, fund raising, or municipal support. Projects will be aimed at providing services which will allow senior citizens to remain in their own homes. There is also a program in Manitoba to assist senior citizens to stay in their own homes.

The total spending in Ontario for 1979 is $60 million, and in Toronto it is estimated that $1,055,000 will be spent on four major projects. The federal government shares in about $2,110,000 which is a joint program to assist home owners, renters and all the rest. Toronto has a neighbourhood development program costing $650,000, and the federal funding reaches $1,300,000. So we are certainly spending millions and millions from the federal budget, along with Bill C-20. Also, Toronto has a downtown revitalization program totalling $12,300,000, and so does Winnipeg, and so does Montreal have a program to revitalize their older areas.

Here is further Manitoba support in housing, Mr. Chairman. The government provides more than 75 per cent of all senior citizens with relief from 100 per cent of school taxes on their homes, and 75 per cent of all pensioners or tenants receive property tax credits sufficient to offset a portion of their taxes contributable to school taxes under the new pensioner school taxes assistance program. There have been major improvements in the critical home repair program. Also, the Manitoba government has introduced the shelter allowance for elderly residents which provides subsidies directly for people in need. This year the Manitoba government will spend $120 million on financial assistance to senior citizens. I suppose that if the Liberals had not banged up the country, there would be more money to hand out. But we have to pay off the Liberals' debts first before we can introduce any more programs or expand on them.

I have two brief questions for the minister, Mr. Chairman. I should like to ask him if the community services program has gone into effect. This is an additional program which, I understand, started in 1979 with a funding level of $150 million. As of January 1, 1980, it is supposed to increase to $250 million. I should like to ask the minister if contracts for that program have been signed and whether it is going into effect in 1980.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, may I say in answer to that question that an agreement was signed governing the operations of the neighbourhood improvement program and the municipal infrastructure program and the municipal incentive grant program which are now all consolidated in the community services program in 1979 and 1980. It has a funding level of $150.3 million for this year, and on January 1, 1980, it will increase to $250 million.

As the hon. member has pointed out, there are many other programs of assistance in housing, public housing, rural and native housing, home improvement loans, insured loans for rental housing, non-profit housing, non-profit co-operatives—the list goes on and on. This measure does not stand by itself. There are dozens of other measures to help tenants and home owners in Canada.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the minister for that answer. Here is another example of a program that is going into effect, another $150 million which will be spent in 1980.

There is another area that concerns me, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry in his parliamentary report for December has one page on the interest rates and mortgage credit plan. In his "householder" he states that 65 per cent of the elderly own their own homes but only 6 per cent hold a mortgage on these homes and the remaining 59 per cent are therefore ineligible for a tax credit. As I understand Bill C-20, if a senior citizen is paying income tax and he owns a home and his home is paid off, will he not still be eligible for part of the tax credit? That is the way I understand it. If that is the case, then this information that is going out to the residents of Winnipeg-Fort Garry is misleading. Would the minister be kind enough to clear that point up for me and the House?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry actually said that—and I doubt that he did, I doubt he would have that kind of inaccuracy in his "householder", I am sure the "honourable taxworthy" would not have that kind of inaccuracy in his householder—but if he did happen to say that, then he is certainly very mistaken because if 65 per cent of the elderly own their own homes, and if we assume that only 6 per cent have a mortgage on those homes, the remaining 59 per cent are eligible for a tax credit of $250 each in the fourth year with reference to their property taxes, and of $67.50 in the first year. So every one of those 65 per cent who own their own homes is eligible for that relief in connection with property taxes if they pay federal taxes.

I do not think we can assume that all the elderly are penniless, that they do not have a bean, that they have nothing at all. Many of them pay federal taxes, so it is shocking news to hear the housing critic for the official opposition would be sending out to his constituents misleading information like that to scare the elderly, to suggest to the elderly they are not being treated like everyone else. I am sure he would not want to disturb the senior citizens in his riding, so I hope he will amend his bulletin and put in it accurate information stating that they will get relief from the property tax, and I hope he will not knowingly mislead the people. I am glad the hon. member is watching these things to make sure that hon. gentlemen opposite are accurate in what they send out to the public.

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a few words to the remarks I made Wednesday afternoon when I said the bill was extravagant, irresponsible and unfair, and I still say so.

[English]

And I repeat it.

[Translation]

And again this afternoon, during the vote on second reading, I noticed on the faces of government members a mocking smile because they probably believed because this side of the House voted against the bill, they could perhaps score some election points with that promise they have made. That is why tonight I would like to say why in the end we voted against Bill C-20.

[English]

I will speak slowly so everybody will understand what I say in French, and so it will give a chance to the translator and the Minister of Finance.

This is why I myself and most of the opposition members voted against this bill, against two basic principles included in this bill and with which we cannot agree. This bill promotes a certain segregation of a privileged class of Canadians. Basically, this bill aims at helping a minority of home owners who do not necessarily need this assistance, and I repeat that they do not necessarily need it. Some may need it, of course, but they are a minority. The bill does not concern those who have no mortgage, tenants, those who pay no income tax, and it certainly does not encourage home buying in view of the present situation. Mr. Chairman, I doubt that a grant of $62.50 for property taxes paid this year will really help those who need assistance from the government. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, when we voted against this bill this afternoon, I believe that we were not alone in our way of thinking. If we examine the editorials of the various media, as I said last Wednesday, including the Financial Times of Canada, the Ottawa Citizen, Le Devoir as well as the comments of highly regarded agencies whose credibility cannot be questioned, such as the C. D. Howe Institute, the Fraser Institute, the Canadian Institute for Economic Policy, the University of Toronto Economist and several others, we can see that all of them have opposed the basic principle of this bill just as we did this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand how a government can hang on so obstinately to a bill which involves an amount of $575 million this year and of nearly $3 billion in four years when these funds could be used much more appropriately to help the citizens who really need them.

Mr. Chairman, the second reason why we voted against this bill is precisely the reason that the Minister of Finance himself mentioned this afternoon when he said:

[English]

We are not in a financial situation to help renters or to bring in the shelter allowances.

[Translation]

I ask the Minister of Finance whether economic conditions warrant this kind of measure helping a very privileged group of home owners, and I wonder at times if he is not somewhat cynical in his submissions.

An hon. Member: Both cynical and comical.

Mr. Lamontagne: He stated recently:

These are times for austerity, sacrifice, self-discipline.

I wonder if in the circumstances the Minister of Finance ought not to "self-discipline" his budget, and instead of spending such huge amounts on this kind of project, to correct some current shortcomings in this country's economy. And I could name a few. Inflation is running at 9.3 per cent, and surely other means will be called for to abate it. Concerning the cost of energy, especially since this winter a great many citizens will have to pay an exorbitant price they can ill afford for heating fuel, I wonder if the Minister of Finance and the government should not have taken steps to cushion such an exorbitant cost increase. The Minister of National Health and Welfare talks of reviewing social programs, family allowances, old age security, help to the handicapped. He has been refusing since this session started to put forward the kind of bill that has been urged by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on the special allowance to increase the pensions paid to our veterans' widows.

In the province of Quebec the unemployment rate is 9.5 per cent, which is more than in other provinces. The national average is 7.1 per cent to 7.4 per cent. The Minister of Finance talks of a deficit reduction, cost reductions in many departments, a 60,000 reduction in the size of the public service, and even elimination or curtailment of certain departmental services.

I wonder if, in order to act wisely and consistently, the government and the Minister of Finance should not have looked for fairer alternatives to help a much greater number of Canadians who are suffering under present economic conditions.

There is also a matter of principle I must raise for myself and some of my colleagues. I dealt with this last Wednesday, on pages 1812-1813 of Hansard, and I have no intention of repeating my remarks. However, this concerned regional disparities, and I would like to quote from that speech. Even if there is repetition I think this could help the minister:

[English]

Because the credit does not apply to those who have paid off their mortgages on the homes they own, as well as to renters, the benefits of the program are even more unevenly distributed. In Newfoundland, for example, 82 per cent of home owners do not have mortgages. In British Columbia the figure is 43 per cent. In Ontario it is 43 per cent, and in Quebec it is 41 per cent. We can therefore see that Newfoundlanders will be benefiting little while still sharing the cost.

The results are that the Atlantic region loses out because of the high percentage of people who own homes without mortgages, 70 per cent, and Quebec loses out because of the high percentage of renters, which is 49 per cent. Yet these are two of the areas which are in most need of housing assistance.

The mortgage interest tax credit program is so unevenly distibuted that of the four provinces we have examined, Ontario, which has 36 per cent of Canada's population and 37 per cent of the nation's home owners, will receive 45 per cent of the benefits of the program. British Columbia with 11 per cent of Canada's population and 12 per cent of the nation's home owners will receive 16 per cent of the benefits. Newfoundland with 2.4 per cent of Canada's population and 2.4 per cent of the country's home owners will receive only 1.2 per cent of the benefits. Quebec with fully 27 per cent of Canada's population and 22 per cent of Canada's home owners will receive only 19 per cent of the benefits.

We believe in the redistribution of wealth, but redistribution to alleviate disparity, not to add to it. The unfair redistribution of this tax credit will create more regional disparity.

[Translation]

The purpose and the object of the Canadian constitution are the elimination of regional disparities but, instead of eliminating them, this program increases them.

[Mr. Lamontagne.]

An hon. Member: Patronage!

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, there is another question I wish to raise concerning this bill, that of alterations. As I said earlier, in normal circumstances, in an economy where we might afford a certain luxury, a bill like this one might be acceptable, but as the Minister of Finance said himself, our present financial situation does not allow us to help everybody. But I wish to say that the allocation of a tax credit in respect of a mortgage secured to finance alterations is perfectly unrealistic. You must make repairs costing not less than $5,000 to be eligible. The large majority of home owners undertake repairs that cost much less. I would ask the Minister of Finance, why not reduce that minimum to $1,000 or $2,000? Why not improve home rehabilitation programs and allocate them more funds? That money would be used for much more useful purposes.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, will not encourage a general rehabilitation of homes and will not allow most people to improve their present home instead of being forced to buy another one. If the minister agreed to reduce the minimum from $5,000 to $1,000, maybe he could at least take credit for a bill which would stimulate urban renovation in some areas and that would obviously help people who really need it rather than those who have to make repairs costing at least $5,000.

[English]

Throughout the seventies, Mr. Chairman, the Liberal government promoted the supply aspect of housing. In many areas there is now even an oversupply of housing. As well as affordability, quality is one of the important concerns for the 1980s. Renovation and rehabilitation are needed in many homes, not only to improve the quality of housing but to increase the energy efficiency of our accommodation across the land. This means an emphasis on social housing programs and an improvement of substandard units.

I would have much preferred a bill which included and covered the quality of the neighbourhood communities, provided more resources to improve our existing programs, residential rehabilitation assistance, neighbourhood improvement, older home insulation assistance and assistance for the development of co-operative, non-profit and public housing. We must improve housing codes and standards across Canada. We must help Canadians who have acute housing problems—the elderly, the single parent families, the underprivileged, and our native people.

To realize these objectives this tax credit proposal is not an appropriate tool. Anyone who believes that it will do anything concrete to help people to buy homes, when the government creates an economic atmosphere in which purchasing a house is a bad investment, is dreaming. I have given the reasons why I voted against this bill, and I think that they are pretty damned good ones.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I should also like to recall that the Minister of Finance might have accused us at one point or another of filibustering the bill. After the reasons we gave last Wednesday, after the speeches we made, I should like to remind the Minister of Finance that we asked for a vote on Wednesday and that was denied. To anybody who would accuse us of filibustering the bill, I would reply by asking why the bill was not introduced in the House one or two months after the election. Why wait five months before recalling Parliament? Why was the bill not introduced if it was such an important electoral promise? Why was it not put before the House at the beginning of the session? Mr. Chairman, we voted against the bill for basic and serious reasons and not strictly to delay the bill. I shall have other opportunities of commenting upon particular aspects of the bill and in the meantime I should like to hear the Minister of Finance say what he thinks of some of the proposals I made.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I listened attentively to my colleague from Langelier and I think he is wrong. I went to Quebec City last weekend with 30 other members of Parliament and we listened to the people of Quebec.

An hon. Member: Oh yes!

Mr. Clarke: I know very well—and if the hon. member for Langelier lends an ear to his constituents—

An hon. Member: That is how he got re-elected.

Mr. Clarke: —I know also that the people of Quebec realize how advantageous the program is for all Canadians.

[English]

I was a member of the all-party task force of this House which went to Washington to study the effects of a similar program which has been in effect in the United States of America since 1913. I think I can say that this program will be of benefit to all Canadians in spite of what we hear from the opposition. It will be of help to the young, the elderly, and the owners without mortgages, to which my friend from Broadview-Greenwood always refers. It will be of benefit to the renters, the poor and the unemployed.

An hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Clarke: The opposition says, "Come on!" Let us have a look at all the people who will benefit from this program. It has long been established that the young of this country want to own homes. This is going to help them buy their homes. It will reduce the income level required for young Canadians who want to buy a home, and it will ease the burden once they have reached that goal.

I am sure hon. members opposite have elderly people as well as young people in their ridings and I would ask them to remember that. This is going to help the elderly remain in their homes. Unfortunately, sometimes the elderly are forced to leave their homes because of high property taxes, but this will help ease that burden.

The benefit to middle-class Canadians will be relief from the ever-rising costs, whether or not they have mortgages. Renters will benefit because the program will make it easier for them to buy homes, and this in turn will ease pressure on the rental market. In the area of Vancouver which I represent, the vacancy rate for rental property is less than one per cent. This has come about largely as a result of the policies of the former government which discouraged investment in rental housing. While I do not think this program will lower rents, it will help stabilize them for people who wish to continue as tenants.

The program will also have benefits for the poor, Mr. Speaker. Any clever tax adviser in this country could counsel people with any means at all, so that all of the interest paid on a mortgage is tax deductible. This program will allow the so-called poor in the country the same benefit of deducting mortgage interest that has been enjoyed for so many years by those who are well off. Members of the NDP want to know how that can come about. I do not know whether, in their ridings, there are not any young people who are having trouble with mortgages, or any poor people having trouble hanging on to their homes. The program will help the people the NDP claims to champion, by putting them on the same basis as that enjoyed for many years by people with means.

The program will also help the unemployed as it will create a lot of jobs in the housing sector. The minister covered that area quite extensively when he spoke.

The opposition has objected that there is no assistance to renters in the program. Mr. Chairman, all Canadians are renters or home owners, so the obvious, implied, suggestion of the opposition is that taxpayers should be given an over-all tax cut. It is equally obvious that the government is in no position to make an over-all tax cut to all Canadians. Earlier the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood said that this was not a housing measure, but a taxation measure. Mr. Chairman, the government has never claimed that it is anything but an economic measure. If it were a social measure we would bring in a general tax cut or help the poor in some other way. This, Mr. Chairman, is a stimulative measure. It will allow those who can afford to stimulate the economy to do so, with a little help from the government. It was never intended as a social measure. It is an economic measure designed to stimulate the housing industry. It will solve the problem of something like 17 per cent unemployment in the housing industry. It is also a very effective way to assist the housing industry.

I would ask hon. members to compare the experience in this country with that of the United States. I had occasion to visit the United States, in company with the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood and the hon. member for Westmount, to examine the myriad of programs for aid to housing that exist there. We found that housing administrators were the greatest fans of their own programs. Officials in Washington readily admitted that the so-called middle class was unable to afford the very type of housing that they were being taxed to provide, a kind of first-class housing for the so-called poor. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the cost of those housing programs was so high, taxation was so high, and the result was such that those paying the bulk of the taxes to provide this type of housing in the United States could not afford that very housing themselves.

It is true, as I am sure hon. members opposite will remind the House, that the officials we met in Washington advised, "Don't do it." They gave all kinds of reasons why Canada should not adopt such a program, but essentially it was that once you get into it, you cannot get out of it. Every official who criticized this kind of program, however, admitted that he himself had benefited very nicely from such a program, and all of them said that it helped not only themselves with their particular housing problems but that it helped the housing industry in that country. Of course, in advising Canada not to get into this kind of taxation scheme, the officials who run the programs in the United States were defending their own self-interest. It became very evident that they really liked running their programs, extensive as they were, and that the more expensive and elaborate the programs were, the more of them they had, the better the bureaucrats liked it.

I ask the committee to compare that kind of scheme with the one being offered by the Minister of Finance. This program could be very easily administered through the income tax department. There would be few, if any, additional costs, and the revenues would be directed into the industry, with all of the attendant benefits.

It is interesting to note that in the United States all interest, not only mortgage interest but interest on consumer purchases and even state taxes, has been deductible since 1913. We were told that some 50 per cent of home owners do not have a mortgage and that home owners are given a $3,200 global tax exemption. Of the 50 per cent of all Americans who own homes and have mortgages, only 25 per cent, in other words, half of those who have mortgages, claimed more than the $3,200 global tax exemption. The resultant loss to the treasury is much less than is even contemplated by this government. With only 25 per cent of taxpayers making the claim in the United States, I think we can expect the same kind of progression in this country and so the loss will be much less than has been anticipated. The program will not be a great tax drain but, instead, will be a boon to all Canadians.

I hope hon. members opposite will take the trouble to talk to their constituents about this. They would then realize that members of whatever age and whatever style of living, of whatever party, of whatever wealth, are interested in this kind of measure because it is a simply administered, beneficial to the econony, kind of measure.

In particular, to my friends in the official opposition I suggest that they compare notes with the new member from Vancouver Centre who, I might observe, is the only member of their party west of Winnipeg. Ask that member from Vancouver Centre about the questionnaire he sent out to his electors. It will be worth observing that Vancouver Centre contains what is known as the west end of Vancouver. It has a density of about 50,000 people per square mile. I believe that area has the highest population density in Canada and the second highest population density in North America. The member for Vancouver Centre asked his electors if they favoured mortgage interest deductibility, the program being offered by our Progressive Conservative government. His electors voted 60 per cent in favour of that program. I appeal to members opposite to recall that their electors are no different from those electors in Vancouver Centre who may be tenants but who want to become home owners, and who see this program as a great boon to their future.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, this evening I want to speak in relation to clause 1 of Bill C-20. A look at the clause helps confirm how far Bill C-20 is from the original Conservative promise of mortgage interest and property tax deductibility. The one promise the Conservatives had been saying they were going to keep was allowing the deductibility of mortgage interest and property taxes from income for tax purposes. In spite of strong arguments against the soundness of any such scheme that were made over the past year or so, there were those among the public who continued to believe it responded to a need which they wanted government to deal with through the tax system. It has been my belief that there could be an approach to the cost of housing, to the cost of shelter for Canadians, which would be different from that of the Conservatives in being fairer and less costly to them as taxpayers than the Conservative proposal.

Last September the Minister of Finance in effect admitted that the Liberals were right when they criticized the original Conservative mortgage interest deductibility scheme on the grounds of complexity and on the grounds that it was unfair to lower and middle-income Canadians. The minister then said he was abandoning his original scheme for one permitting a credit of a certain proportion of mortgage interest and property taxes against the personal income tax payable by home owners. To use the minister's own words spoken at his press conference last September, he said:

> A tax credit is used because it is both simpler and fairer than a deduction . . . it gives greater benefits to lower income and middle-income Canadians.

This is exactly what the Liberals said in criticizing the original proposal.

Before and during the election the Conservatives argued that they knew what they were doing when they proposed their scheme of allowing deductions of a certain amount of mortgage interest and property tax from incomes for tax purposes. But last September 18, and later in presenting bill C-18 to the House, the Minister of Finance in effect confirms that he and his party did not really know what they were doing when they made their original promise. This change, this flip-flop, should undermine most of what little credibility the Conservatives may still have had left with those Canadian voters who were impressed with the scheme in its initial form as presented during the election.

While the Conservative scheme as set out in Bill C-20 is an improvement on the original one, it still has a number of serious flaws, a number of serious gaps, as has been pointed out by many on this side of the House. Bill C-20 does nothing for the large number of Canadians who rent. It does nothing, except for a limited credit for property tax, for the large numbers of home owners who have no mortgages on their homes. It does nothing for home owners whose incomes are too low for them to be required to pay income tax. These people get nothing from Bill C-20.

There is another great flaw in the Conservative approach, that is, the failure of the Minister of Finance to say where the money for the proposal in Bill C-20 will come from. Today the minister went on at great length in trying to explain that options, variations, on the proposal in Bill C-20 that would help groups not covered by it, could not be brought in by his government at this time. He argued all of these options would be too expensive, and therefore he and the Conservative government could not implement them. He said his government was not out for popularity though they were a minority. They had to be responsible, he said, and concerned about the size of the deficit, $11 billion, but a deficit he has admitted was less than the Liberals had forecast when they presented their budget in November, 1978.

The minister was so busy wiping away his crocodile tears about all this that he never bothered to tell us why he was not worried about the almost $3 billion cost of Bill C-20 in its fourth year of operation, and the more than $500 million cost this year, and about how all this would expand the deficit he apparently is also claiming to be so worried about. He claimed speed in passing the bill is necessary so people eligible for it can fill in the tax forms his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, so conveniently sent out even before the bill was passed.

It seems to me that the real reason for the minister's desire for speedy passage of this bill by the House is so that he would not have to explain where the money to pay for it is coming from. This is something he would have to do if this bill were part of a budget, or if final decisions on it were not taken until after his budget was presented.

One initiative pledged by the Conservatives as a way of improving the federal government's fiscal management was to present a budget which brought together and described not only all government expenditures through payments to individuals and companies and in transfers to provinces, but also its tax expenditures. These are the revenues it forgoes when it provides a vast range of allowances, deductions, credits, exemptions and so on to both individuals and business. I want to say this would be a desirable initiative. It has been the manner of presenting budgets in the United States, Britain and West Germany for some years. It reflects a valid idea that a government should present a complete and accurate picture of all forms of its expenditure and how these are being paid for, and by whom.

The President of the Treasury Board spoke of the government's intentions in this regard when he took part in the throne speech debate. In my view this concept already has been undermined, if not totally destroyed, to say the least by the way the government has gone about trying to implement this mortgage interest and property tax credit proposal. Bill C-20 involves a major new program requiring substantial amendment to the income tax law, starting with this clause 1 which we are debating right now, and affecting substantially the balance of government revenue and expenditures. But the Minister of Finance has not presented it as part of a budget. It has been brought in as a separate bill in advance of and separate from his budget. As I have said, the Conservatives are justifying this method on the grounds that speed is necessary if the bill is to become law so that the credit can be claimed by those eligible as part of the completion of their 1979 tax forms. It also means that by presenting it before the budget, the Minister of Finance is obviously hoping to get it passed without having to say how the plan will be paid for.

In fact, in his speech opening debate on second reading of the bill, he was reluctant to admit that the program involved a substantial tax expenditure for which the government would have to find the money. He admitted that the plan would cost $579 million in its first year of operation, and over $2 billion, close to $3 billion, in its fourth year. But all he said about how it would be paid for was that the money would be found in people's pockets; those who would get this new credit.

But this is $2 billion, almost $3 billion, the government would otherwise have collected in tax revenues, revenues it was spending on government programs, including payments to individuals and companies, and in transfers to provinces. The government will have to find that money, either through borrowing to increase its deficit, cutting down substantially on its existing programs, raising taxes, or some combination of all three. But this Conservative government is now pledging not only that it will not increase the deficit but, instead, that it will actually reduce it.

The government has not said what programs now providing useful service to the public it would cut out or reduce. However, the only way it could pay for a program the size and cost of the tax credit plan would be through some pretty massive cuts in existing programs, including programs that those who would be receiving the tax credit plan would likely consider necessary and desirable. Such cuts could well cancel out, eliminate, benefits from the tax credit plan for these people, assuming any benefits are left after the impact of the Conservative high interest rates. The burden of the elimination of programs would also fall on the many Canadians who will not benefit from this plan—the renters, those who do not have mortgages on their homes, and those whose incomes are too low to pay enough tax to qualify for the tax credit.

One hint as to how the Conservatives intend to pay for the plan may be found in the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has pledged that the existing family allowance program and income tax deductions for children would remain in their present form only during 1979 and 1980. But one should ask why the money for the tax expenditure involved in the mortgage tax program should come only from cuts in social welfare programs for families, or in federal programs providing direct services like health and safety inspections to the public, rather than from cuts in other tax expenditure programs, for example, some of those available to the large multinational oil companies.

If the cost of this mortgage tax plan is to come from higher taxes, which ones will be increased, and by how much? The minister has not been willing to say. There is a hint in the Prime Minister's statement to the first ministers' conference on oil pricing two weeks ago. In it he spoke of his government's desire to impose an energy self-sufficiency tax on higher revenues going to oil companies as a result of the rapid increase to world prices he was promoting.

He also spoke of wanting a sizeable increase in the excise tax on gasoline. But while he talked of using the proceeds for the purpose of moving to energy self-sufficiency, a closer reading of his speech shows he was not saying all the yield from these new taxes would be used in this way. For example, he spoke of the yield of the energy self-sufficiency tax being used for energy related projects. This means it could be used to pay for the oil import compensation fund making up the difference between the high price of imported oil and the Canadian price. In turn this means that $700 million now being spent by the government for this could be used for other purposes, including the first year's cost of the tax credit plan. Also, as I have pointed out, the Prime Minister has said that this tax would yield in excess of $5 billion in additional revenue.

A lot more money would be there as well for that kind of objective from the higher excise tax on gasoline for which he is pushing. The Prime Minister was careful to say all of this would not go into his proposed energy project investment fund. So these high taxes, proposed as part of his new energy package, could in large part be a disguised way of getting all Canadians to pay for the mortgage tax credit plan, including those not benefiting from it at all, and helping offset any benefit even for those eligible for it.

Originally the Conservatives, before they were elected, suggested a substantial portion of the plan would be paid for by higher tax revenue coming from government activity in the building industry, as a result of a stimulus provided by the mortgage interest proposal. This is now most unlikely because of the increases in interest rates since June of this year. At best the mortgage interest plan will help maintain activity at some point near current levels, counteracting the damaging effect of the record high interest rates on the home building and construction industry. The reductions in mortgage rates announced recently by some financial institutions, but to what are still record high levels, demonstrate the damage the Conservative high interest rate policy has been doing to the construction industry. Some mortgage rates have dropped slightly because people are simply not applying for mortgages to be used for home building and construction.

The Conservatives promised home owners with mortgages, and prospective home owners, they would be better off because of the Conservative mortgage interest proposal than they were before it was promised. This will now not be true because of the Conservative high interest rates policy. It is actually cancelling out benefits for those who had hoped to gain from it. At best, they will be the same as they were before the plan and before the mortgage increases last June. Some will be worse off even with the tax credits.

Any benefits from this plan will also be offset by the higher costs of home heating from the Conservative proposal for increases in energy prices.

The minister said if members were genuinely concerned with high interest rates that the bill would be passed quickly. If this is his argument, he should want to limit the bill's application initially to one year. If he does not agree to this he is saying, in effect, these Conservative high interest rates will be going on forever, or at least while the Conservatives remain in office.

The minister also had the nerve to say the $2 billion cost of this plan means the Conservatives are carrying out their promise of a $2 billion tax cut. Let us get back to what they actually said. There were promises both of a mortgage interest plan and a separate $2 billion cut in personal income tax, a promise the Prime Minister has already confirmed has been abandoned.

The manner in which the government is presenting its mortgage interest plan to Parliament means members are being asked to vote on it by the Conservatives without either they, or the Canadian people, knowing where the cost will come from, who will bear the burden, and whether as a result the plan is justified in light of that burden.

This House needs some answers and the Canadian people need some answers before any final decision can be taken by the House on this bill. I, and members of the official opposition, recognize that there is a problem to be dealt with. The cost of shelter has been rising faster than disposable income, and faster than the cost of living. What is needed is a fair and effective program to deal with this general and basic problem, one which affects renters and people who own homes without mortgages, as well as those who do not have enough income to be liable for income tax against which a credit can be claimed.

The Liberal amendments set forth by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry in his speech on second reading contain the elements of such a program, one that would be fairer and more effective and have a lesser cost for taxpayers than the cost of this Bill C-20. If the Conservatives were truly concerned about the housing needs of Canadians they would accept and act on the Liberal amendments. If they do not, it will further confirm to Canadians that the Conservatives should not have a mandate to govern, a conclusion Canadians have already reached according to the Gallup poll after putting up with this non-government for only six months.

Mr. Orlikow: Members of the New Democratic Party are going to vote against this bill because we feel it will give assistance to those who need it the least while ignoring completely the problems of those really in need.

This is a government which railed against the deficits of the former government and said it would reduce those deficits. Yet it proposes to give tax concessions amounting to over $500 million in the first year, and over $2 billion in the fourth year, to people who are essentially in the middle and upper income brackets. They give us no information as to how they propose to replace the money which would be lost in this way. Indeed, they give us every indication that the money will be replaced by the reduction of programs of assistance to people who are in the poorest income groups.

As I listened to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine tonight, I could understand very well how the government could lose the support it had so quickly, and how it could slip in six months to a position where it only has 28 per cent of the votes. Their speeches showed they had no understanding of the needs of ordinary people.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra talked about the trip he and 30 other members of Parliament took to the United States to study the workings of similar programs in that country. I am not surprised that if they spent their time visiting in the middle and upper income suburbs of American cities they found support for this program. Why not? Those are the people who benefit from the program. But I wonder whether those members of Parliament, or the hon. member himself, took the time to visit the Haight-Ashbury area in San Francisco or took the time to go down to Chicago or New York, or Cincinnati or Cleveland, or any of the other American cities in which you find mile upon mile in the core areas where people are afraid to go out on the streets not only in the evening but to a large extent in the daytime, where there are hundreds, thousands, of apartment buildings which are completely empty because they have been allowed to deteriorate.

I think the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra should ask himself whether that situation in the United States is not due to the fact that they have been so busy there giving benefits to those who have that they have forgotten completely those who have not.

I want to say to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra—I have not spent as much time in Vancouver as he has—and to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, that they do not have to travel very far around those two cities, or around Regina, Saskatoon or affluent Calgary, to see that the same kind of situation which is now a total disaster in the United States is beginning to show itself in our cities in Canada.

An hon. Member: Not in their ridings.

Mr. Orlikow: Not in their ridings; of course not, Mr. Chairman. And, I can say, not very much in my riding. But the fact is that in the inner cores of most Canadian cities the housing is rotten. It is no longer fit for people to live in. I could not believe my ears when I listened to the member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine telling us about all the legislation which is on the books to help the poor and to help the native people, and to help those who want to live in co-operative housing.

I happen to have in my hand a report on housing conditions in Winnipeg, prepared in March of this year by the Social Planning Council of Winnipeg. This is a council which includes in it all the public and private agencies which deal with the problems of people in the city of Winnipeg, including the provincial government agencies which work under the supervision and direction of the Conservative government of Manitoba. I want to put on record a few facts and figures about Winnipeg which appear in this report.

Dealing with housing adequacy, they say 14 per cent are in fair condition and 11 per cent in poor or very poor condition. Dealing with housing suitability, they say that 10 per cent experienced moderate crowding and 5 per cent severe crowding. Dealing with housing affordability, they say 70 per cent of all households experienced contribution rates above the poverty line contribution rate. In other words, they are having to pay part of their rent with money which they should be spending to buy the food and other basic necessities they need. They say that 13 per cent cannot afford adequate or suitable housing.

Then they go on to deal with the age of household heads and they say that of the household heads under 25 years of age, 20 per cent live in poor houses and 24 per cent pay above the maximum contribution rate which they can afford to pay. That is the situation in the city of Winnipeg which I, and the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, represent. I wish he would take a look at the part of the city of Winnipeg which he represented before redistribution. I have in mind the part of the city which he won with more than 50 per cent of the vote in 1975 and where the Conservative member who was elected only had a plurality of 450 in 1979. The reason for that drop is the kind of blindness which the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine shows.

Look at the situation in my city which can be duplicated in most cities in Canada. We find an increasing number of native people living in the core area. The statistics are not very accurate, but we know there are between 30,000 and 50,000 people of native origin living in the city. These are the poorest people in the city and they have the greatest problems of any group with regard to getting employment, with regard to alcoholism, and with regard to housing. There is nothing in this program which will help the people who cannot afford to buy their own homes and have to rent.

The hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine tried to suggest there are programs under whose provisions these people could help themselves. Well, we have in the city of Winnipeg a very good agency which was set up to do one job, that is, to provide adequate rental housing at rents the native people could afford. I spoke a few days ago to the director of that organization. He told me they had not been able to buy a single home last year, and not because the prices are too high. They buy houses in the core areas of Winnipeg and rehabilitate them, houses which if they are not rehabilitated will be completely uninhabitable within the next few years. He told me that interest rates being what they are, and with the insistence of CMHC under present regulations that the people renting the houses be able to pay a minimum of $194 a month, plus the cost of utilities and heating the home, they simply have not been able to buy the homes, or to find people who could afford to rent those homes if they could buy them.

That is because the people they try to help are very often on welfare. If they are not on welfare, they are, for the most part, unskilled people who have short or long periods of unemployment during which time they may well be on welfare or getting unemployment insurance. Those people cannot afford to pay about $250 a month in rent. We are not providing for the needs of those people, and I suggest that those are the people who need assistance most.

The hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine talked about co-operative housing. It is true that we have legislation which permits co-operative housing. Indeed, the legislation encourages co-operative housing. Unfortunately, under the Liberal government last year, and under the Conservative government this year, the people who are involved in organizing co-operative housing development do not know that they can do in the next year. In 1977 they built about 1,900 units under co-operative housing provisions. In 1979 that number dropped to 1,700 units because the former government was so busy trying to get a program something like the one we are dealing with tonight, which would help those who are best able to help themselves, that it was not very interested in co-operative housing.

I am told that this year co-operative housing associations have not been able to make any plans for the coming year because they have not been told yet by this government how much money will be available for co-operative housing in the next year.

I am concerned about the community services program. I have seen the tremendously important improvements which have been made as a result of past Neighbourhood Improvement Program developments. There is one proceeding in my constituency. I understand that there are three more on the drawing board for Winnipeg. I am concerned that in its zeal to cut costs this government will not allocate the funds necessary for the very important and very socially useful work which has been done, should be done, and would be done if funds are provided for neighbourhood improvements as proposed in earlier years.

I want to deal for a few moments with the claims of this government, as exemplified most recently by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, that this proposal will somehow lead to a housing boom. It is not only the members of the opposition who have ridiculed that suggestion. I have in front of me an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on June 4, 1979. The writer of the article interviewed the president of the Winnipeg Real Estate Board. I do not think Mr. Bill Burns, the president of the Winnipeg Real Estate Board, is a particularly radical person or that he is particularly antagonistic to this government, but Mr. Burns is quoted in this article as saying that house sales—and we are talking about last June—and I quote:

—are off by as much as 25 per cent from a year ago. The most recent figures show approximately 5,100 houses for sale in the multiple listings, up 4.2 per cent over this time last year.

It is not suprising that housing is off when one looks at the cost of housing and if one looks at what has happened to interest rates since this government was elected.

I must admit that I have a personal stake in what is happening because I am into the fifth year of a mortgage, and next October I am going to have to refinance my mortgage. When this government took office in May of this year the mortgage interest rate was 11 per cent. A week ago it was 14¾ per cent.

An hon. Member: Thirteen and three-quarters.

Mr. Blenkarn: Thirteen and a quarter now.

Mr. Orlikow: Now it is down 1 per cent. Let us look at the figures.

Mr. Cameron: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening to all this debate about housing and mortgage deductibility. The hon. member is condemning it, so would he tell us if he is going to claim his deduction for mortgage interest?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I am a law-abiding citizen—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: If hon. members opposite will listen for two minutes, I do not think they will chortle so much. I am a law-abiding citizen, and I will file an income tax return precisely as the income tax law asks me to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: If hon. members will just keep quiet for a minute and let me point out what is going to happen, the difference between what my $35,000 mortgage cost me in principal and interest when this government took over and what it costs now, the principal and interest for the year has increased, because of the increase in the mortgage interest rate, by $696.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Orlikow: That is precisely what I would have to pay in the next year if I had to refinance my mortgage right now. Hon. members ask what I will do if this bill goes through. Let me put on the record what benefits I would get, or what anyone else who has a $35,000 mortgage would get.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I do not mind answering—

The Chairman: Order, please. I have to hear the point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I think the figures which are being used by the hon. member are completely inaccurate. Five years ago at this particular time the interest rate for a mortgage when I refinanced my home was 12½ per cent. The hon. member is standing here telling us it was 10 per cent and 11 per cent, and the figures he is giving are on mortgage rates which are not in existence today.

The Chairman: The hon. member will agree with me that he can challenge these figures in his own speech in due time, but he has to recognize that his point is only a question of debate.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member can check the figures very easily. When this government took office in May of this year, the mortgage interest rate was 11 per cent. The mortgage interest rate about ten days ago was 14¾ per cent. On a $30,000 mortgage the difference in payments for the year as between a rate of 14¾ per cent and a rate of 11 per cent when the government took over is $956. If you reduce the 14¾ per cent by 1 per cent—if it is now 13¾ per cent—the increase over the 11 per cent rate in May is $696. What does a person get in the next year as a result of the government's mortgage interest deduction? A maximum of $312! And the reduction because of property tax is $62.50, so the total which any person can claim is $375. I suggest—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Hogan: Rotten deal, Crosbie.

• (2200)

The Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill at the next sitting of the House. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have had some discussions with the chief opposition whip and the House leader of the NDP, and I wonder if we could revert to motions for just a few moments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the request of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker). Is there agreement to reverting to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

DESIGNATION OF ALLOTTED DAY

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the agreement that was made among House leaders, the usual fifth day in this supply period is to be added to those for considering the main estimates of 1979-1980. Therefore, I would like to move, with the unanimous consent of the House, that Thursday, December 6, 1979, be the final allotted day in the supply period ending December 10, 1979.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is in accord with the discussions we have had.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to conclude that this is to be made an order of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EMPLOYMENT—PROPOSED CESSATION OF JOB CREATION PROGRAM—ALTERNATE PROGRAM TO ASSIST YOUTH

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, during the last campaign candidates in the Niagara Peninsula said time and time again that the unemployment rate in that area was 14.5 per cent. Yet, virtually, the day after the election, the figures which were bandied about varied. I called the Department of Employment and Immigration to ask them what truly was the unemployment rate in the Welland riding, and I was told it was 6.9 per cent. I queried the statistics, so then they said that was not quite right, that the figure they had for unemployment in the Niagara Peninsula was 5.9 per cent.

You wonder, Mr. Speaker, why I bring this up. It is very simple. It is because under the previous government we had the Canada Works program under which we had a distribution of the wealth of Canada among those people who did not have jobs. It was truly a redistribution of the wealth. Now the new government has come in and has virtually abolished the Canada Works programs in almost all the provinces of Canada. Surely Ontario, and the Niagara Peninsula in particular, which was supposed to have had such a high rate of unemployment, should have been able to benefit from that program. But it was cut off entirely, and I think that was unjust.

I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), as reported at page 1240 of Hansard of November 13, 1979, how long it would take for a program to work its way through the economy. He had mentioned in a previous speech that it would take about six months. I asked the Prime Minister whether it was six months and, if so, when were we going to get some action, when were we going to see this government stop flip-flopping and get on with the business of governing this country.

What have we now, Mr. Speaker? We had a speech by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) given to the Canadian Club on November 26, 1979, in which the minister brought out these new great programs through which they say are going to create jobs for the youth of Canada, specifically for the youth of Ontario in the Niagara Peninsula. Under the job experience training program of some years ago my daughter was able to get a job and earn enough money to go back to school. This is the kind of help we must have for our young people. This was a Liberal program we brought in; we benefited from it as did all the people across Canada.

What do we have now? We have a new minister coming in saying he is going to have new programs. Outside of doing political somersaults, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this government does not have any new ideas and it is bankrupt. We have seen the suggestion in the Speech from the Throne, for example, that we have a youth employment secretariat. We have had a youth employment branch in the CEIC for the last ten years. This program has created tens of thousands of jobs.

The minister suggests that we have a wage subsidy program with the magnificent amount of $1.25 per hour, and that is supposed to benefit 105,000 youths across Canada. What will happen is that they will abolish the employment tax credit program, a program which gives geographically various tax credits from $1.50 to $2 across the country. For example, under this program that we have set up, people in urban areas such as Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, the big areas, could get up to $1.50 in subsidy if they wanted to train these young people for the kinds of jobs that are available in Canada. In other areas outside the urban areas the subsidy was $1.75, and in the Atlantic provinces where my colleague, the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) lives, and where this meant thousands of jobs in his and surrounding ridings, there was great benefit because the Liberal government of the time was willing to pay up to $2 per hour in subsidy. Now what do we have? We have a new subsidy. This government is going to bring in $1.25 in subsidy, which shows us that ministers are not really interested in creating new jobs for youth. They are not really interested in putting the young people of Canada to work.

What we are getting are rehashes of the ideas brought forth by the Liberal government which created jobs to the tune of 7,200 per month for the last 18 months. What do we have now from this great new government? We have nothing except an adoption of our ideas that they said would not work, but they are now claiming them as the great remedies for all the problems we have across Canada. I suggest that the ideas they have been putting forward are not worth the powder to blow them to kingdom come. I suggest that the Prime Minister and his cabinet ministers get together and get this country rolling again with the jobs for the young people that they need if we are to grow economically as a country.

Mr. Paul McCrossan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the diatribe over there by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent). I found it sort of interesting because it seems he does more talking than listening. If he had been listening in the House he would have recognized and realized that in the budget next week we will be bringing forth a number of major measures, and will be bringing forth measures next spring as well.

Perhaps I could just outline the government's job employment strategy for youth. As the member indicated, we are trying to consolidate the various functions toward a new youth secretariat to provide a focus particularly upon improving employment prospects for youth. The various functions of forming a new youth secretariat have provided a focus particularly upon providing prospects for youth. I mentioned that in all likelihood there will be something in the budget next week. I think that what we will see is a form of tax credit, as the hon. member has suggested. I suggest that he wait and see what will happen.

The government is placing an increased emphasis on programs for developing job skills for youth because we see tremendous shortages of skills in this country and yet high unemployment at the same time. The previous government allowed the situation to develop where good jobs are available in our economy but we have not been able to get the people to these jobs. Solving this problem is particularly important to our young adults, and the government has recently introduced legislation to increase the flexibility of our programs so that we may respond to the needs of our youth and to the skill requirements of industry.

A third option which we are looking at is the establishment of a national service corps which will enable young people to participate in community and environmental projects of lasting value to society. I have mentioned that there will be more proposals of this kind later on in the session. As hon. members are aware, we are currently involved in a study on the reform of unemployment insurance policies. One of the commitments of my party is, and has been, taking money we can save by reforming a plan which is full of abuses and using it to create the jobs that our youth need today.

I am sure it is obvious to all hon. members that in order to create jobs for our youth we will require the closest consultation with the provinces and, to that end, officials of the ministry and myself will be meeting next week with officials of the various provincial departments to discuss job strategy, and revision of the unemployment insurance fund, and the redirection of those moneys.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—SETTLEMENT OF NATIVE LAND CLAIMS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Epp) for attending this evening. I would much rather have the minister deal with this issue than his parliamentary secretary. The issue I wish to raise deals with land claims across Canada but specifically those within the province of Saskatchewan.

Last week I asked the minister a question with regard to the government's policy on land claims dealing particularly with the province of Saskatchewan. In the last two years the Government of Canada has not completed one land claim settlement or land entitlement settlement. There is one exception, and that is the COPE agreement, but the government has refused to ratify it.

The minister has admitted that his government, even after six months in office and after having showed us the thick binders which were supposedly to indicate that they were ready to govern, still does not have a land claims policy. As a result, native groups throughout this country are waiting to see what the government intends to do. The problem which the minister has is that he must go to his cabinet committee, make presentations to them, and from there he must go to the full cabinet to get agreement. We understand the minister has a problem. He is not in the inner cabinet and he does not have a direct say in the direction of this country or control over what is happening in his own department.

The question which we, as parliamentarians, must ask is, how can the government act or negotiate with native people if it does not have a policy?

Even more curiously, how can the government allow mining developers to go ahead with their developments if it does not have a policy? It cannot negotiate and settle negotiations with native people because it does not have a policy, but at the same time it allows mining developments to go ahead. I would suggest there is a contradiction there, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to mention the specific problems of the native people in Saskatchewan and I refer, of course, to the Saskatchewan formula. In 1975 the then minister of Indian affairs and northern development stressed to the premier of Saskatchewan that certain land claims and land entitlements were outstanding. As a result of the meeting that took place then, an agreement was signed in 1976 which resulted in the Saskatchewan formula. The agreement set the figure of 128 acres per person for the population registered in December, 1976.

Three years later, on October 19, the minister wrote to the government of Saskatchewan saying that the federal government was reviewing the availability of Crown land for native people. In effect, he was also saying that he was reviewing the obligations of the federal government. Last week in the House I put a question about this to the minister and he replied that he wanted a settlement which was agreeable to the other provinces. Unfortunately, the province of Manitoba with its Conservative government, and the province of Alberta with its Conservative government, will not accept the Saskatchewan formula. The impression that the minister left with the House and with the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians was that he would not live up to the agreement referred to as the Saskatchewan formula. He had apparently said at a meeting with his provincial counterparts, the previous night, that the formula was too costly or too rich.

Mr. Epp: I never said that.

Mr. Murphy: That is what was said, according to the news report, Mr. Speaker, and that is the impression he left with this House last week.

The Federation of Saskatchewan Indians wrote to the minister about this answer, not at some private meeting, but which were given to questions in this House. I know that the minister has received that letter and responded to it. The problem is, however, that the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians and other native people in the country are not sure of the direction the government is taking. They are not sure whether the government will live up to the Saskatchewan formula which was signed three years ago, and they are not sure what type of recommendation the minister is making to the government.

I would ask the minister to answer these charges and make it perfectly clear where the government stands, not only in the Saskatchewan case but in the case of all native Canadians.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) that the government's land claims policy is very clear. I will not repeat that because of lack of time now, but I went into it today in committee when the hon. member was present.

The hon. member is correct that no new land claims have been settled in the last two years. For that reason my parliamentary secretary is attending at the negotiations now proceeding with the Council of Yukon Indians, so that we may reach an early agreement. It has been agreed to seek an agreement in principle by the end of April, 1980. I would suggest to the hon. member that this shows we are moving with great speed, in view of the complexity of the issues faced in the comprehensive land claims.

The hon. member has said that I have refused to ratify the COPE agreement. I would indicate to him, Mr. Speaker, that at this stage there is no agreement to be ratified. There is an agreement in principle which was approved by the former administration. What is needed now is a final agreement, and this will have to be negotiated between the Committee for Original Peoples Entitlement and the Government of Canada. In order to get that process under way, I will meet with them at 3.30 tomorrow. I hope that we can eradicate some of the differences that presently exist before we get down to negotiating the final agreement.

With regard to the Saskatchewan formula, I would suggest to the hon. member that he not reply on news reports that I said this was too rich. What I asked the ministers at that meeting was whether the Saskatchewan formula was acceptable to them. I would suggest to the hon. member that he rely on what is said in this House rather than on news reports.

In order to clarify quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, beyond the answers that I gave today to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) regarding the Saskatchewan formula, I want to tell the member that I have responded in telex form to the president of the FSI. I just want to read one section of that into the record and possibly this will clarify the situation. In part it reads:

The discussion which I had with provincial ministers on Monday, November 26, was a general and broad ranging one, related to various matters concerning Indian people in the provinces which were represented. As part of our discussion, I wanted to hear the views of each provincial minister. In this context, I asked the provincial ministers affected (those of Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan) about their approach to the fulfilment of outstanding treaty land entitlement claims. Since each of these governments has placed different interpretations on their obligation to provide land for treaty entitlement purposes under the natural resources transfer agreements, I noted that the outcome of such different approaches would be widely differing settlements among the three provinces. Since it is my responsibility to ensure that the interests of the Indian people across Canada are taken into account fairly and equitably, I was bringing to the attention of those present the concern that I have that the Saskatchewan formula, if it is not applied in Manitoba and Alberta, would create disparities which would affect the Indian people in the latter two provinces.

I want to tell the member, and as I have indicated in the House earlier today as well, that the Saskatchewan formula is in place. I know that the agreements are in place and I want to see early movement on the land entitlements.

The Saskatchewan government, obviously in view of the 1930 transfer agreement, has to provide the majority of the land.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—INQUIRY WHETHER GRANTS WILL BE INCREASED

Mr. Armand Caouette (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, as I said on November 19 last to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Grafftey), statistics show that from 1976 to 1978 the federal government earmarked $392.8 million for university scientific research in Ontario as against $190 million for the same period in Quebec.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the minister that Quebec has been at a great disadvantage when it comes to the distribution of the federal research centres. I feel therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the government should review its whole scientific research policy to restore more equity among the provinces and increase substantially the budgets with a view to making scientific research play an effective role. Mr. Speaker, Quebec received $94 million from 1976 to 1977. For the same year Ontario was given $203.7 million, but fortunately that situation was reviewed in 1978 and Quebec got $96.4 million which represents a small increase in comparison with the $189.1 million granted to Ontario.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, never has the government in the past made scientific research one of its priorities. Significant budget cuts have been imposed in this area in the past, and what is more serious is the lack of long-term planning in awarding grants. The lack of long-term funding is creating an impossible situation for researchers and causing the brain drain which benefits other countries at the expense of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote Dr. Herzberg, the 1971 winner of the Nobel prize for chemistry and a member of the National Research Council of Canada, who blamed the federal government for depriving the National Research Council of all authority over last year's grants:

The time and money which the government is wasting on commissions appointed to look into the problems in scientific research could be better employed encouraging research.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of resentment in the world of medical research. Moved by a feeling of frustration because of the government's indifference, researchers could change professions or leave Canada unless federal authorities remedy the situation, remarked Dr. Hudson, a representative of the University of Ottawa Medical Research Committee.

The same doctor stated, and I quote:

—while the costs of research are increasing by 15 per cent every year, the budget of the MRC is in real value 10 per cent lower than last year.

● (2230)

Then, Mr. Speaker, we realize that only one per cent of the federal budget is spent on research, although that sector is a vital necessity to ensure the economic viability of our society. I know, Mr. Speaker, that the minister said that the government intended to increase the funds allocated to research. But when will they be increased? Will that indexing be based on the gross national product in order to provide a serious basis for research? What does the government intend to do specifically to cope with Quebec's inferiority in that area?

The announcement of the establishment of an engineering institute in Boucherville is a beginning. However, I would like to point out to the minister that a much greater effort than the establishment of an $18 million research centre will be needed to correct the situation. Can the minister also tell us whether he intends to establish a long-term scientific policy, extending over a three to nine year period, supported by funding commitments for three years and reviewed annually? Furthermore, is he prepared to admit as full members in the federal organizations which have their own budgets representatives selected by the Canadian scientific community?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that the time has come for this new government to tell us what kind of policy it intends to follow to provide Canada with researchers capable of helping the Canadian people as a whole in view of the fact that according to recent newspaper reports, researchers are saying that the priorities of the NSERC lie in agriculture, food, oil and many other areas.

Mr. Richard Janelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure, on behalf of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Grafftey), in replying to the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette). First of all, I want to thank the hon. member for his question of November 19 regarding aid to research in Canada. The present government considers research and development as a priority concern and it is determined to make regular and continued progress in this area in order to increase the country's gross expenditures from 0.9 per cent to 2.5 per cent of the gross national product.

Our greatest weakness in the field of research and development lies in the industrial sector and the government is working on ways to stimulate increased research at that level. It must respond to market forces. The government's objective therefore is to create a proper climate for research and development and adopt means for improving or supporting and not replacing market operations.

The universities also have an important role to play in our national research and development efforts. The recent press release of the minister concerning the 32 per cent increase in the budget for 1980-81 of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council proves undeniably that the government recognizes the importance of research in the university environment. That increase will enable the council, in co-operation with the universities and the provinces, to improve the research potential in the universities, to add training programs for new researchers and to foster joint research programs in fields of national interest such as energy, toxicology of the environment, oceans and communications and, as the hon. member mentioned in his question, food and agriculture, with a view to stimulating closer interaction between the universities and industries in free research, and also to renew obsolete material. In a word, it represents an impulse that will enable the council to perform the task for which it was created.

To sum up, in the past Quebec has not always received all it was entitled to expect. To a large extent that difference can be explained by reasons of structural factors, namely, the composition of its industry, the number and importance of science and engineering programs in its universities and the extent of the participation of Quebec university researchers in federal grant programs. Our government will do its best to overcome those difficulties. I trust this answers the question of the hon. member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R. EXIT VISA FOR ALEXANDER MARYASIN AND FAMILY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that Alexander Maryasin, a Soviet Jewish refusenik, has been trying to emigrate from the Soviet Union since 1972, that his relatives in Canada have been trying to obtain an exit visa for eight years for him and his family, and that his detention violates the Soviet constitution and international law, specifically human rights decisions and the Helsinki Agreements, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming):

That this House urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to petition the government of the Soviet Union to speedily approve an exit visa and secure the movement of Mr. Maryasin and his wife and daughter to Canada, consistent with both Canada's commitment to human rights and fundamental freedoms and family reunification.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only upon the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TREASURY BOARD

CALL FOR SUSPENSION OF PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House will also agree with this motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: I move, seconded by the hon. Privy Councillor from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the estimates of the Treasury Board for the fiscal year 1979-80 having been defeated by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, leaving the Treasury Board with no funds with which to operate, this House resolves that the President of the Treasury Board be suspended.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM FOR RURAL AREAS OF ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the recently announced increase in unemployment statistics for October, the representations by Indian bands and municipalities and a resolution unanimously passed by the six district welfare boards of northern Ontario asking the federal government to reconsider the termination of the Canada Works program, which has been providing needed employment in northern and rural areas of Ontario, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner):

That this House urges the Minister of Employment and Immigration to establish, on an urgent basis, a program to provide direct employment in northern and rural areas of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

METRICATION

BILINGUAL LABELLING OF PREPACKAGED CHEESE PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity to my constituency of Leeds-Grenville concerning threats made by certain government officials against at least two of the three remaining cheddar cheese producers in that part of Ontario within the last week. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That whereas the Plum Hollow and Forfar cheese factories, two producers of cheddar cheese in Leeds-Grenville, have been ordered to immediately undergo the high cost of conversion to the metric system and to commence immediately bilingual labelling of prepackaged products or face removal of their products from store shelves, the government immediately order a stoppage in such actions in view of the reportedly announced decision that such things have already been set back to January 1, 1981, by the government; and, further and finally, that nothing be done until completion of the examination of the metric system by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

REQUEST GOVERNMENT ABANDON PLANS FOR ALTERING NATURE OF CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I would like to move the following motion. In view of representations made by the independent petroleum marketers of Ontario, that without Petro-Canada their future is threatened by the predatory practices of the multinational oil companies operating in Canada, and given the independents' desire to maintain Petro-Canada as it now is, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House of Commons instruct the government to abandon any plans to alter the present nature of Petro-Canada as a viable Crown corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only upon unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

NATIONAL UNITY

QUEBEC REFERENDUM—REQUEST GOVERNMENT STUDY ALTERNATIVE TO BILL C-9—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering the negative reply given yesterday to the Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. Pierre Trudeau, on the referendum, considering that we are living in a kind of euphoria following the victories of the federalist forces in the last seven byelections in Quebec, considering that we Quebec members are in a position to say to the House that we should not conclude, as a result of those victories, that federalism is no longer jeopardized, considering that Mr. René Lévesque will have interpreted—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should put the motion.

Mrs. Killens: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Leduc):

That the Prime Minister include immediately that item on the agenda of his cabinet and suggest to the House another alternative to Bill C-9 on the referendum.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ENERGY

OIL SUPPLY IF IMPORTS FROM IRAN ARE CUT OFF—SUPPLY TO EASTERN CANADA

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on a day when he certainly should be in the House, with the developments we have seen in the last 24 hours, I will address my question to the Prime Minister. On Friday last, the Prime Minister at his press conference was asked how much consideration had been given to taking steps in case our energy supply from Iran might be cut off. The Prime Minister answered:

I suppose I have to say frankly, none.

Yesterday, we heard the very distressing news that Gulf Oil had been cut off from its supplies from Iran, this meaning that about 75 per cent of the oil imported into Canada from Iran will not be imported and we will be losing two critical shipments of oil into Canada this winter.

My question to the Prime Minister is, in view of the government's unconscionable neglect of the immediate needs of eastern Canadians for home heating fuel and gasoline this winter, can the Prime Minister assure the House that the location of alternative oil supplies will become an immediate priority of this government? In particular, will he immediately request Petro-Canada to negotiate for emergency supplies from Venezuela, from Mexico and from any other sources possible in the world, and use our national oil company to replace the loss that we have known because of the inaction of the government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let me, first of all, indicate that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in Nova Scotia today announcing the—

An hon. Member: Bad news.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —determination of this government to move forward in developing alternate energy sources with the government of Nova Scotia so as to end an era of unconscionable neglect of the needs of maritime Canadians by the former government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I should also draw the attention of the House to the fact that the hon. member for Outremont is calling for extra action to get oil from a country with regard to which his leader yesterday said Canada should entertain boycotts.

Mr. Trudeau: I did not.

Mr. Clark: With regard to the substance of the problem, I can say two things: first of all, that the shortages that might exist in Canada this year underline dramatically the failure of the former government to plan ahead and to bring forward the kind of energy self-sufficiency policies that would allow Canada to rely upon Canadian sources of supply. Second, I can indicate to one of the several spokesmen of the Liberal party on petroleum matters that the government is involved, and has been for some time, in discussions with other countries regarding the possibility of supplies. The government is in consultation now with Gulf and with other companies, and there is some expectation that Gulf will be able to obtain an alternate cargo to replace the cargo that was to arrive from Iran in February of 1980.

Mr. Lalonde: I have no doubt people in eastern Canada will be impressed by the announcement of "pie in the sky" promised for 1985, but they are more concerned about getting oil this winter. I would remind the Prime Minister that at no time when we were the government was eastern Canada or any other part of Canada short of gas and oil.

The minister of energy said the other day that he had written to the multinational oil companies concerning the possibility of diversion, this winter in particular, and the present situation of short supply is obviously an invitation to those companies to raise prices and divert supplies. What answer has the government received from the oil companies concerning the possibility of diversion to more profitable markets? If answers have been received, will they be tabled in the House immediately?

Mr. Clark: Answers have been received. They indicate there is no danger of diversion. I will consult with the minister to determine whether or not the full length of the answers can be diverted—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —can be placed before the House. If it is not possible, for reasons of industrial confidence, to table those documents, I am quite sure it would be agreeable to the minister, if it would be agreeable to the companies, that we could make them available on a confidential basis to the opposition spokesman on energy matters who is a Privy Councillor. I would point out that any shortage of energy supplies in Canada this year is the result of a shortage of decisions by the former government when they were in a position to do something about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The latest Gallup poll shows that Canadians ceased to believe those stories a long while ago. They know who is responsible for the present situation—the present government. The present supply position is an invitation to companies to raise prices. Yesterday, the Prime Minister said he would be in touch with the president of Imperial Oil, a good old friend—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Some hon. Members: Cheap.

Mr. Lalonde: I see the spokesmen for Imperial Oil are at work again on the other side. My question to the Prime Minister is simple: What reason did Imperial Oil give for increasing prices as they did in the past two days, and was he able to convince that company to reduce those prices to their former level—which was quite high enough, thank you very much.

Mr. Clark: The minister of energy will be meeting on Friday with the president of Imperial Oil. We shall be requesting Imperial Oil to present us with full details to justify their price increases, if they can justify them. If the details of their presentation do not justify those price increases, we will suggest to Imperial Oil that the increases be reconsidered.

I should again make it clear to the House and to the country that there is no immediate answer today to a possible oil supply shortage problem which was caused by the failure of the former government over ten years to put plans in place which would provide energy self-sufficiency for the country. This is not a problem which was created six months ago. This is a problem which was created in the last ten years, and it will be resolved only if there is support in the House for the kind of measures we are introducing which will allow Canada to be in a position to supply our needs from our own resources, rather than following the Liberal position of leaving Atlantic Canada, Quebec and Ontario dependent on unstable, unreliable foreign sources.

PLANS TO DEAL WITH POSSIBLE OIL SHORTAGES THIS WINTER

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: I, too, would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I say to him that whatever the origin, or how old the problem is, what the people of eastern Canada would like to know is what will be done this winter. It will be cold comfort otherwise. My questions are directed toward that end.

In light of the announcement of the Iranian cutoff to Gulf Oil, and in light of the numerous reports that the domestic oil supply situation, especially in eastern Canada, has been steadily worsening, is the Prime Minister still persisting in saying that domestic oil supplies for this winter are, in the words of his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—and I quote—"tight but manageable"; or is the Prime Minister now finally prepared to admit to the very real prospect of shortages this winter? Is the Prime Minister prepared to admit, now, to the very real prospect of shortages this winter and to the need to have a plan in place to deal with these shortages?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let me, first of all, welcome the new member to his place in the House. I do that on behalf of members of all parties. Second, let me say that I am sure that he, as an Atlantic Canadian, will not share the view of the hon. member for Outremont—

An hon. Member: He does.

Mr. Clark: —that a policy being announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to look at the possibility of contributing to the energy security of Atlantic Canada through the use of tidal power is, to quote the hon. member for Outremont, "pie in the sky". That might be a central Canadian attitude; it is certainly not an Atlantic Canadian attitude.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I can indicate to the hon. member that, as I have said, Gulf is reasonably confident that it can make up its supplies from other than Iranian sources. We have received an indication that no diversions are expected from other companies supplying Canada. We are looking now for other supplies which might be available on an emergency basis.

To come to the last question, the National Energy Board has now, as a result of increased consumption in Canada and some other activities, come to the conclusion that there may be limited shortages this winter in Canada. As a consequence of that, it is our intention to appoint members to the Energy Supplies Allocation Board by the end of next week. We very much regret that the failure to plan ahead on the part of the former government has left Canada exposed, particularly, Atlantic Canadians.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary to the Prime Minister, I am not sure he got the message as to the point of the question. It is to find out if he realizes that there is a problem, a concern in eastern Canada about oil supplies. I will try it one more way for him.

In view of the unthinkable hardship that the unplanned-for oil shortages will mean for Canadians—and, again, particularly eastern Canadians and those in the Atlantic provinces—is the Prime Minister prepared to stick by his latest commitment made just moments ago? I understand he made one in the House on November 6, albeit somewhat under duress at the time; but he made another one in the last few moments, that the Energy Supplies Allocation Board will be appointed in the next week. Do we have the firm undertaking of the Prime Minister now that that will indeed be the case, or will he renege as he did on his earlier promises?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I realize precisely the problem which exists in Atlantic Canada. The problem in Atlantic Canada is that the people of that region have been left by the Liberals to rely upon Iran rather than being put into a position where Canadian consumers can be relying upon Canadian supplies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Clark: If there are shortages anywhere in Canada this winter, those shortages will be a direct result of the failure of the former government to plan ahead and to put in place an energy self-sufficiency policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: We are determined to stop Canada's reliance upon the Irans of the world, and to build a policy of Canadian self-sufficiency. That is the policy we are following. With regard to the problems caused by the former government, they have to be addressed by this government now. I repeat that it is the determination of the government to put the board into place by at least the end of next week, as I indicated a moment ago.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot help but point out to the House at this point that, as a result of a combination of long questions and long answers, we have used 15 minutes to ask two questions, which I think is a modern record for longevity.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

FUTURE OF CHRYSLER CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question will be short and to the point. Yesterday, the president of Chrysler International met with members of the cabinet to discuss the future of the Chrysler Corporation in Canada. Could the Prime Minister tell the House the government's point of view and the basic principles that are involved in these negotiations? More specifically, will he tell the House to what degree, if any, an agreement between Chrysler of Canada and the Government of Canada is dependent upon an agreement between Chrysler and the government of the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let me answer very briefly. We do not intend to make any agreement or any announcement as to an agreement until we know the nature of the agreement made between the U.S. government and Chrysler in the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: Precisely along that line, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister the following question: Given the need, not only to maintain existing jobs in the Chrysler facilities here in Canada but also to obtain future jobs for Chrysler, would the Prime Minister tell the House why the Government of Canada could not, now, enter into an agreement with the Chrysler Corporation under certain conditions, one of them being the continuing economic viability of the corporation internationally, instead of waiting until this important Canadian matter is settled in the U.S.A.?

Mr. Clark: The question at issue in the United States is sufficiently central to any decision that might be made with regard to the engagements entered into by the Government of Canada that we need to know the details and the implications of those decisions before we can make policies respecting an agreement between the Government of Canada and Chrysler of Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question which concerns the over-all nature of the package that the government is negotiating with the Chrysler Corporation. Would the Prime Minister assure the House that when an agreement is reached—if it is reached, and one hopes it will be—between the Government of Canada and Chrysler Corporation, it will pertain to all aspects of the industry, parts production, research and development, and assembly operations in Canada?

Second, will he assure the House that if other than financial guarantees are to be offered by the Government of Canada—and I am thinking of cash—in return for that cash, the people of Canada will get equity participation in Chrysler?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for International Trade has reported frequently to the House that we are looking at a wide range of matters, including the impact on parts manufacturers and other questions in relation to this matter. I think it would be premature, at the least, for me to try to signal to the leader of the NDP the contents of an agreement which is not yet in the final stages of negotiation. I simply am not in a position to do that at this stage.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY WHETHER CERTAIN CHANGES WILL BE MADE TO AGREEMENTS CONCERNING MONTREAL AND OUTAOUAIS REGIONS

Mr. Armand Caouette (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, I should like to put my question to the Prime Minister. With regard to the policy of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, could the Prime Minister confirm whether the department intends to make certain changes to the special region of Montreal and if so what are those changes and when will they be implemented?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of State for Economic Development intend to announce today in Montreal a policy aimed at altering the implementation of the DREE arrangements for the Montreal and Outaouais regions.

CHANGES BROUGHT ABOUT BY MODIFICATION OF AGREEMENTS

Mr. Armand Caouette (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that his minister is away, could he make this announcement and also advise the House whether these changes will affect the Outaouais and northwestern Quebec regions?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): I shall reply concerning the Outaouais and Montreal regions, Mr. Speaker. Over the four-year period of the program, DREE intend to support at least 500 projects in the region. We hope that these projects will generate nearly $500 million in investments and create some 29,000 permanent new jobs.

Oral Questions

REQUEST STATEMENTS BE MADE IN HOUSE BEFORE BEING MADE OUTSIDE

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Matapédia-Matane): In the opinion of the right hon. Prime Minister who would like to restore the importance of Parliament, is it not improper to have three senior cabinet ministers in Montreal this afternoon to announce that new designation for both the Ottawa and the Montreal regions without giving the House of Commons details of the new changes which will be announced directly in Montreal?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is always difficult to take the time of the House of Commons to make such announcements, as the hon. member will certainly understand. We have always tried to give Parliament priority for announcements, and I think that a positive change in attitude toward Parliament has been expressed by the government. But to deal specifically with the question raised by the hon. member, the announcement will be made later today in Montreal, at three o'clock, I think.

On the questions asked by the hon. member for Abitibi, I had the opportunity, two or three minutes ago, to announce the details here in the House of Commons before an announcement is made outside the House.

ASSISTANCE TO CHRYSLER CANADA

Hon. John C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and preface it by saying that I am really amazed, and in wonderment, at his inadequate answer to the Leader of the NDP, coming from someone who has proposed openness of government over many years.

We on this side—and, no doubt, the NDP—have had to learn about Chrysler through evidence put before the U.S. Congress. May I put this proposition to the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of the Chrysler negotiations, in terms of the maintenance of 3,000 jobs in Canada and the conversion in Canada from V-8 to V-6 engines, and the fact that we might have light-bodied, fuel-efficient trucks in Canada, would the Prime Minister indicate whether he would be in favour of indicating, at least in principle, that the Canadian government looks favourably upon giving assistance to Chrysler in order to help the matter go to the United States Congress?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as we have demonstrated by the introduction, for example, of the freedom of information bill—which the former government would never have introduced—and by a number of other actions, we are certainly prepared to be open with the House of Commons. The question posed by the Leader of the NDP, and repeated by the hon. member for Hamilton East, had to do with whether or not we would declare the details of an agreement that has not been made. Of course we would not. We cannot, because the agreement has not been made.

As I indicated, in what I think were clear terms, to the Leader of the NDP, the decisions that are at issue in the United States are sufficiently central to Canadian decisions that we will not be able to make that kind of announcement in Canada until there has been some indication of the agreement in the United States. The hon. member has asked me a question regarding our attitude in principle. I can indicate, in principle, that if there is an arrangement that would be beneficial to Canada and to Chrysler, we would be prepared to contemplate it.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was in the House, I believe, yesterday when the Minister of State for International Trade indicated that the government was prepared, in negotiation with Chrysler, to consider any one of several options. One was grants, one was subsidies, and one was Canadian equity participation in Chrysler Canada. His minister in the other place, Senator de Cotret, indicated in a press conference yesterday that he was prepared to consider, and saw likely, subsidies or grants but unlikely Canadian equity participation. I feel this is a very important subject for Canadian guarantees.

I am asking the Prime Minister if a study came out of his government where privatization is precluding the government from considering Canadian equity participation in any arrangement entered into with Chrysler Canada. Further, would the Prime Minister be prepared to consider some other innovative policies with respect to Chrysler and, I put to him, Canadian employee participation in the ownership of Chrysler as well as Canadian employees on the board of directors?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of State for International Trade indicated in the House the other day, the question of equity participation is among the options being considered. When we indicate the options being considered, we will not, until we are further along in the negotiations, be able to indicate how seriously they will be considered in a particular case.

The hon. member has asked whether the policy of this government to return to the private sector those Crown operations which can be more effectively carried out in the private sector would preclude us from considering equity participation. Of course, the answer is no, that it would not. Concerning the question of other innovative ideas, I will discuss with the Minister of State for International Trade and his colleagues whether it would be viable for us to consider the possibility of employer participation.

Some hon. Members: "Employee."

Mr. Clark: Indeed, if the hon. member for Hamilton East discovers any other innovative ideas, we would be prepared to consider them also.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED SALE OF NORDAIR—CONSIDERATION OF BID OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In an article in Canadian Aviation magazine, the minister indicated that he was ready to make a decision on the sale of Nordair to one of the bidders, which includes Eastern Provincial Airways. Would the minister indicate whether the EPA proposal is being given active consideration, and would he also indicate what other bids are under consideration and when a final decision will be made?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the disposal of Nordair is currently a matter which is being considered by cabinet. I expect a decision very soon.

ENERGY

INFRASTRUCTURE TO ALLOCATE OIL SUPPLIES IN EVENT OF SHORTAGE THIS WINTER

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It relates to the fragile situation with home heating oil this winter.

The Prime Minister announced that he will set up the emergency board, but that is only the first step. In light of the admission by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in committee the other day, that the National Energy Board figures on supply are at least one month behind, the reports by National Energy Board officials yesterday indicating that they are very concerned about the world supply, and the fact that Ontario refineries have been underestimating the oil demand for the province, can the Prime Minister assure us that the necessary infrastructure is now in place so that the government can react quickly to allocating oil supplies in case there is a shortage and will be able to guarantee that Canadian homes and industry will not be without heat this winter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has been consulting very actively over the last couple of weeks, and longer than that, regarding nominations for the Energy Supplies Allocation Board from the provinces, from consumer groups and from others. We expect to have all of those in and to be in a position to act by the end of next week.

Also, we would expect to have in place such infrastructure as would be necessary, should it be decided that there is an emergency of the kind that is necessary to activate the powers associated with the board. On the basis of evidence now before us, we do not anticipate having to declare that emergency in the immediately foreseeable future.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, the one part which is still very worrisome is that, according to the timetable, it takes 60 days to implement an allocations system. Given the time lag with any of these figures, I am afraid we may not have that guarantee which the Prime Minister thinks is there. By way of a final question, can the Prime Minister update us on the status of the negotiations with Venezuela and Mexico about securing additional oil supplies, given the fact that the chairman of Petro-Canada said in committee last week that his company has been inactive in pursuing these negotiations?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the 60-day provision is also a matter of concern to the government. It is precisely for that reason that we are moving early to put the board into place and to establish such infrastructure as may be possible to put in place, prior to any action having to be taken. We expect that those acts of foresight will allow us to reduce the lead time to which the hon. member referred.

If I may come to the second part of his question, there are active negotiations and active discussions now with Venezuelan and Mexican officials. The minister himself has been directly involved. It has been our view that it would be more effective to use intermediaries other than Petro-Canada.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH MEXICO FOR OIL SUPPLY

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on that same matter with regard to the negotiations with Mexico. In view of the fact that as of May there was an initialed agreement with Mexico providing for the sale of 50,000 barrels a day in 1980, and 100,000 barrels a day in 1981, to Canada, that that agreement simply awaited the planned arrival in Canada of the President of Mexico, for final ratification and announcement, that the price between Canada and Mexico was at world prices and not spot prices, that I am informed—of which I would like to have confirmation and explanation—that the only contact with Mexico on that agreement since the election is a message to scratch the word "Petro-Canada" from the agreement, and that there have been no further serious negotiations of any substance whatsoever, can the Prime Minister confirm and explain the neglect, in the face of a potential shortage of oil with which we are all dealing right now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the information of the hon. member regarding the contact with Mexico is false. There have been a number of contacts in relation to a Canada-Mexico oil agreement, including conversations involving the Secretary of State for External Affairs for Canada and the foreign minister of Mexico regarding that arrangement. It is our expectation and our hope that it will be possible for that negotiation to be concluded at or before the visit to Canada of the President of Mexico, which we expect will occur some time in the spring.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I have a question relating to the Prime Minister's final comment. Would the Prime Minister explain to the House, again based on information which I have been given, that there has been little or no contact with the President of Mexico to re-invite or reconfirm his invitation to Canada which was postponed, understandably, during the election period? Also, the Prime Minister might explain or confirm that there is a serious deterioration, as a result of this inept performance by this government vis-à-vis Mexico, regarding relations between those two countries which are so important to both countries?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I can only suggest to the hon. member that he find a new source of information, because the two pieces of information he has put forward in the House this afternoon are categorically false. There have been extensive conversations involving Canada and Mexico in relation to the visit of the president. It is our expectation that the very good relations between the two countries will continue and, indeed, be improved by the president's visit here. I would suggest to the hon. member very seriously, because I know his respect for the House and for the truth, that he find a new source of information.

SHIPBUILDING

INQUIRY AS TO CONTRACTS TO BE AWARDED QUEBEC

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the minister of patronage, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. On behalf of the workers, and especially of the unemployed from the Lauzon Shipyards and from Marine Industries, and on behalf of the unemployed in general in Canada, I want to say to him that these people are fed up with promises and meetings. I need only remind the Prime Minister of the promises he himself made in Lévis where about 30 people came to see him. He met the president of the Lauzon shipyard workers and made a great many promises at that time.

I would, therefore, like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in light of the new federalism he was promoting during last weekend's convention in Quebec City, the province of Quebec will be getting some of the $150 million in contracts announced by the previous government. More than three-quarters of those contracts have already been awarded in other provinces. Are there any left for Quebec? In particular, are there any—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Guay: For the contract, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Terrebonne.

AGRICULTURE

FEDERAL INSPECTION OF MEAT IN QUEBEC—PROVISION FOR SUFFICIENT STAFF

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Could he tell the House whether decisions have been made to remedy the difficult and even critical situation with regard to federal meat inspection in Quebec, a situation resulting from a shortage of qualified staff and an increasing demand for services from Quebec businesses?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to respond to the hon. member's question and I appreciate his representations on this very important matter over the last couple of weeks. I am in a position today to indicate to the hon. member and to the House that a meeting has been scheduled, and will be held within the next two weeks, between the assistant deputy minister in charge of meat inspection in my department and his Quebec counterpart.

We are very confident that we will be able to fulfil the need for federal inspectors at Quebec plants from now until January 1. As of January 1, we will be in a better situation to have additional people available to carry out meat inspection in the plants of Quebec. On April 1, 1980, with the co-operation of my cabinet colleagues and, particularly, with the co-operation of the President of the Treasury Board, there will be 31 new inspectors brought on staff. That should solve our difficulties.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL SOON ANNOUNCE SUBSIDY FOR EASTERN CANADA POTATO GROWERS

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish to revert to a question I asked the Minister of Agriculture 17 days ago exactly. I should like to know whether he has had the opportunity to look into a request for subsidies on behalf of eastern Canada potato growers, whether he has made a personal decision in this regard and whether the Treasury Board has come to a decision. If so, when does the minister intend to make a public announcement?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when I responded to this same question some 17 days ago, it appeared that we would be in a position to proceed with the application of the Treasury Board. However, in the interim new information has come to light and we have had to recalculate that proposal. The recalculation should be completed within a matter of days, whereupon I will be moving forward to Treasury Board.

FISHERIES

FREEZER-TRAWLERS OPERATING OFF COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Premier of Newfoundland yesterday issued a statement expressing his very strong concern that the minister has opened up the northern fishery to factory freezer-trawlers to operate off Newfoundland.

Has the minister examined the statement of Mr. Peckford and, if so, what is his response to his very real concern that these developments, if not stopped, will seriously prevent the inshore and nearshore cod fishery from recovering to its full potential, as well as depriving many seasonal fish plants of much needed employment opportunities?

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say to the hon. member, and through him to the premier, that there is no intention of opening up the northern cod stocks or any cod stocks to factory freezer-trawlers. We will not permit processing at sea for any traditional groundfish species. However, we are permitting the replacement of existing trawlers by freezer-trawlers. It is a policy which is permitted under the existing regulations. In effect, what we are doing is ending the uncertainty which was created by the two years of indecision of my hon. friends sitting opposite.

In so far as the future of that stock is concerned, the fears of the premier are quite groundless. For example, for this year, 92 per cent of that particular cod stock will be landed at Newfoundland plants. We are planning to increase the inshore TAC for Newfoundland for next year.

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY—ALLEGED DIFFERENCE BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL POSITIONS

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Because of the negative response to the announcement by the minister with respect to inshore fisheries and, more particularly, with respect to his recent statement on Atlantic salmon, could the minister explain to the House the difference between his position and the position of the minister of natural resources for the province of New Brunswick? Mr. Bird indicated over the weekend that he completely disagreed with the position taken by the federal Minister of Fisheries on the Atlantic salmon fishery of New Brunswick.

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding, and indeed I have been told, that the salmon policy which I announced last week has the support of the government of New Brunswick. That is a situation to which my hon. friend is not accustomed and, hence, he cannot understand it. That position is supported by the government of New Brunswick. I have no problem whatsoever stating to the House that the steps we took had the full co-operation, after consultation, of the government. Both parties were aware that the steps taken had the conservation of that threatened and endangered species in mind, as well as a meaningful enhancement program to allow the stock to grow.

FREEZER-TRAWLER POLICY

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question relates to the question of the hon. member for Humbert-Port au Port-St. Barbe. It involves quoting from yesterday's press release of the Premier of Newfoundland, the like of which we have not seen since the debate on Term 29. I direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Premier of Newfoundland said:

> Implementation of Ottawa's freezer-trawler policy would be an outright betrayal by the federal government of this province to mainland corporate interests—

He went on to say that the present government—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question, he should put it forthwith.

Mr. Rompkey: Does this gap that is widening between the federal government and the province of Newfoundland not call into jeopardy all future discussions between the two governments, and does the Prime Minister not agree that this is not simply a minor irritation but, indeed, an open sore on the fresh face of federalism?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly hope that it does not call into question all future discussions on other questions with the government of Newfoundland. The Canadian Minister of Fisheries and Oceans indicated the position of the Government of Canada in a telex to the premier that has been made public. It indicates the determination of the Government of Canada to exercise its federal jurisdiction in a way that will recognize the historic interest of Newfoundland cod fishermen in the northern cod stock.

It also recognizes that both federal jurisdiction and the participation in fishing and harvesting that stock by fishermen from other parts of Canada is an essential element of any national policy. That is the position indicated by the Canadian minister, and that is the position of the Canadian government.

Oral Questions

COMMUNICATIONS

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN AND ADDITIONAL STAFF OF CRTC

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Recently we heard the acting chairman of the CRTC, and those of us who were present got the impression that his workload is very heavy. Can the minister tell us when he will appoint a chairman to the CRTC? This gentleman does have a tremendous workload, particularly due to the fact that the minister is more or less saddling him with new hearings on pay television which are not necessary because such hearings have already been held. When does the minister intend to give this man the staff which he needs in order to fulfil his functions?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the question is an important one. We have engaged in a rather wide-ranging process of consultation in order to ensure that, not only in the case of the new chairman to be appointed but in the case of the other two members to be appointed, we will have outstanding people to provide service to a rather important institution in regard to telecommunications policy for this country.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES BEFORE EMBARKING UPON POSSIBLE HARMFUL PROJECTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the congenial Minister of the Environment. It concerns two extremely important projects at either end of the country, namely, the proposed flooding of 12,000 acres of farmland by B.C. Hydro, and the proposal for putting a highway through the heart of the Annapolis Valley in Nova Scotia which will destroy some of the best farmland in that province.

Will the minister promise full-scale environmental impact studies before either of these projects goes ahead, and will he recommend to cabinet the possibility of cutting off fundings for Highway 101 in Nova Scotia unless an alternative route is found which will not destroy good farmland?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question of the flooding of land in the event that a dam is built in British Columbia, that is a matter which is, of course, fundamentally the responsibility of the province of British Columbia. I will be discussing the entire situation shortly with the new minister of the environment in the province of British Columbia. I was to meet with him on Friday of this week. Unfortunately, I will not be able to attend, so that meeting will be rescheduled.

On the question of farmland and the highway, I will be discussing that matter with my officials and my colleagues and will be able to give the hon. member a more satisfactory answer at a later time.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In May of last year, the former minister of the environment said that a federal land use policy would be announced shortly thereafter. I should like to ask the minister when we can expect that announcement, in view of the fact that we are losing thousands of acres of prime farmland every year. According to the government, we are not now capable of feeding our people in almost every foodstuff area except grain. When can we expect that important study?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the studies have been completed and the cabinet document on federal land use policy is being prepared and will be delivered to cabinet shortly. I must point out to the hon. member and other hon. members that the federal government does not have jurisdiction over any land in the country that comes within provincial jurisdiction or which is alienated into private ownership. As a consequence, the actual power of the federal government to control land use in the country is understandably limited.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ETHIER—RECEIVABILITY OF QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: On the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has just indicated to me that he would like to make his intervention on the matter on Monday. If that is convenient, then I will hear that matter on Monday, when I think I should be in a position to decide the matter finally. I have given it some consideration already and I would not anticipate that I would have to reserve it any longer than that.

I have a notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan).

MR. WHELAN—NEW NATIONAL FOOD POLICY—REMARKS OF PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, because yesterday in this House the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), in answer to one of my questions, indicated to the people of Canada and the members of this House that there were documents missing from the files of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, these documents are readily available. They are in pretty nearly every member's office in Ottawa. They are also in the Library of Parliament. One document that I would like to table is in the Library of Parliament. It is entitled "Canada, Department of Agriculture: A food strategy for Canada." The other document, "Canada, Food Strategy", was issued publicly.

A ministerial meeting took place in January, 1978, which outlined the food policy that we had. I feel very strongly that yesterday the Prime Minister misinformed this House and probably hurt the philosophy of Parliament and the rights of members. I do not know whether he intended his remarks in a jocular fashion, but many people called me about them afterwards. Some have read the documents and wanted to know what the Prime Minister meant. I replied that I did not know what he meant. His reply to my question is reported in Hansard at page 1984 in part as follows:

We looked in his files, we looked in the files of the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs. Having no guidance from that front—

The documents are there for anyone who wants to see them, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a very serious question of privilege and a confrontation with this House.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): On that question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, ever since the former minister began to talk about a national food strategy, we have been interested to find some evidence of agreement between the former minister of agriculture and the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs. We were also trying to find some evidence that progress had been made toward putting into effect the national food strategy of which the two former ministers had spoken often, though usually in differing terms.

We looked for some evidence of real progress having been made toward a national food strategy. As we could not find any in the Department of Agriculture, we assumed that probably, having regard to relative influence in the former cabinet, we would find it in the office of the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs. We did not find that kind of evidence anywhere. I know the former minister has published a great number of documents.

The difference between that old government and this new government is that we are acting to put in place a national food strategy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES DECISION NOT TO PURCHASE OIL FROM IRAN

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, let me say I owe an apology to the House leader of the opposition party. I attributed a statement of his to the former prime minister. It was with the House leader of the opposition, not with the former prime minister, that the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde) was in disagreement when he suggested that we should be looking for trade with a country regarding which the House leader of the opposition said on Monday we should be imposing sanctions.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I noted at the time that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) had made a mistake. I understand also that his mind is not subtle enough to understand that there is no contradiction between my position and the view taken by the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde).

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROSE—ALLEGED PATRONAGE CONTRACTS—CORRECTION OF QUESTION TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in order to set the record straight. At page 1823 of Hansard for November 29, in a discussion with the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) about untendered government contracts, I put the following question:

—whether he would now investigate, as well, the awarding last summer of a $30 million contract to Media Buying Services Limited, headed by one Peter Swain who directed the Progressive Conservative advertising campaign during the recent federal election.

Those are the words I used, Mr. Speaker. What I should have said is as follows:

—whether the Prime Minister would now investigate, as well, the $1.8 million untendered contract last summer to Media Buying Services Limited as placement agents for potentially $30 million in government advertising. Media Buying Services, incidentally, being headed by one Peter Swain, media adviser to the Progressive Conservative campaign during the recent federal election.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the correction of the record. I think it might be useful, knowing his interest in this matter, to indicate to the hon. member and the House that we acquired the very good idea of going to an agency of management for advertising from the successful practice of the Schreyer government in Manitoba.

MR. WADDELL—ENTRY TO THE SENATE BARRED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which mainly concerns the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and myself, but which also affects other members of Parliament and all Canadians who believe in democracy.

During the question period, the hon. member for Skeena and I wished to put some questions to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since we could not do that in this House, we went to the Senate to try to put the questions. We were barred at the door, assaulted and thrown out on our ears.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: I understand that this is the job of the guards and I sympathize with them, but for us it is an unbearable situation. We cannot put questions in this House to this minister who is dealing with very important matters and that is very unfair. The hon. member for Skeena and I would ask you to use your good offices to persuade the Sergeant-at-Arms to permit us to go into the Senate and ask these questions, or in the alternative—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): On that question of privilege raised by my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, I want him to know that if he would consent, we would be very pleased to appoint the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to the Senate so that he would have a voice there.

Mr. Knowles: Never!

MR. GUAY—PRIME MINISTER'S ATTITUDE REGARDING ORAL QUESTION ASKED IN HOUSE

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A while ago, during the oral question period, my personal rights were encroached upon. I rose on behalf of several thousand unemployed, shipyard workers, not only from the province of Quebec but from the whole of Canada. I thought I had put a very important question to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and I see that, even now, he does not deign to listen to me because he is talking with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald). That is indicative of the importance he attaches to the unemployed. There are more than 5,000 unemployed in our Canadian shipbuilding industry. I merely want to say, Mr. Speaker, that since the right hon. Prime Minister did not deign to give me a reply, I shall see to it that the shipyard workers unions and the workers throughout Canada are advised of the scorn he showed for the importance of the question I put to him just a few minutes ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House understands full well, I am sure, that it was the Speaker, and not the Prime Minister, who decided to turn down the question put this afternoon by the hon. member for Lévis. Despite the importance and urgency of the matters being brought up, it is absolutely imperative that the questions always be put according to our practice and precedents.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. PETERS—OPPORTUNITY FOR MEMBERS TO ASK QUESTIONS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order partly in relation to the question period today and partly following some comments Your Honour made during the question period. Many members of this House are denied the opportunity of asking questions. I was one of those who was here when question period went on as long as members wanted to ask questions. I have seen question period go on until eight or nine o'clock at night under previous governments. We reformed the rules to eliminate that so as to make question period more meaningful and allow most members to ask whatever questions they wished.

The question period is structured and it is being structured by the parties, but there does not seem to be any control, advice or instructions being given to individual members or ministers as to how question period would be most advantageous for members of Parliament as well as for the viewers who now watch question period. I can raise this without much difficulty because I am not one who has participated unduly in question period over the last few years.

I have spoken to many members who I find are totally dissatisfied that they cannot ask questions. I agree that many of the questions are not properly asked. Some questions have too long a preamble and in some cases Your Honour has to ask if the member has a question. After two or three minutes it is not always obvious whether a question has been asked.

I would like to see you, Mr. Speaker, enforce a set of rules that would be designed in such a way as to allow the elicitation of the largest number of questions possible. I would like to see you charged with making the decision autocratically as to when there is too much preamble and not enough question. This would allow as many members of Parliament who wished to ask questions.

It would seem to me that if a member on behalf of his constituents wished to ask a question, he should be able to do that at least within a week, but if he cannot do that within a week, then obviously the question is out of date and there is really no point in asking that question. It seems to me that we have given you that responsibility by shortening the question period, making it only three-quarters of an hour rather than an unlimited question period, and if members are to be satisfied we better extend the length of question period or, as members of Parliament collectively, we should make a decision that there will be less preamble and more question.

If a snappy question is asked of a minister, he is going to be in difficulty if he does not give a snappy answer. Sometimes a member goes all over the waterfront in asking a question. Certainly the first two questions that were asked today were fairly good speeches and probably would do the members credit in having asked them in the way they did if they were making a speech, but questions they were not.

I know Your Honour has a great deal of other responsibilities and the job is not a cinch anyway, but the House has really given you the responsibility for meeting the requirements of allowing as many questions as possible in that very limited three-quarters of an hour that we have allocated for this purpose.

Question period is really now the window of Parliament as far as the public is concerned. I think they must be as disgusted as I am sitting here listening to many questions and answers knowing full well that there are many other members who would be able to ask questions on behalf of their constituents if they were given the opportunity. I have no objection to the maiden speech that was made by the new member today. That was his first opportunity to rise in this House, and I appreciate your not having done anything about it.

However, I would ask you if you could discuss this matter with the House leaders or any other interested group, whether a committee or not, to ascertain whether there is some way of being able to put more questions in the question period. As well, perhaps you could have more control over the type of questions that you allow so that the end result will be that all members of Parliament will be in a better position to ask questions given the limited time in which that can be accomplished.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises a point which is of concern to all members of the House. I think he has seen the efforts that I have made from here to try to admonish members, particularly at the beginning of question period, as I did again today. The primary difficulty in this seems to be those who lead off the question period. The putting of a long question, as was the case today and has been the case in many days, at the beginning of question period invites a long answer. In fairness, it is very difficult for the Chair to move in immediately with the first question of the day and try to be very severe and cut short that question. When that question is allowed by the Chair to be a moment or two long, it invites at least an equal answer. Today, for example, the first question and answer of equal length absorbed five full minutes. At that rate, by the time the leader of the New Democratic Party had finished his questions, the question period would have been over if we had continued at that pace.

It is a very difficult chore. I try to admonish members, and here we are dealing with experienced members of the House. The hon. member raises the point that we are dealing with members who are inexperienced and are new but the difficulty is that it is the experienced members who at the head of the question period consistently feel, for whatever reasons—and they are valid reasons—that their question at that point is quite important. It is indeed important; it should be and perhaps it deserves extra treatment. But it does not seem to me to contribute to the importance of the question or the answer by making them overlong. What it does do is contribute immensely and immediately to the frustration of many members. I now have a list running for several days of many members who have simply been denied access to the question period. It is very difficult for them to continue to suffer this denial at the price of an extended performance at the beginning of question period.

I have asked several times for the co-operation of members and I plead with members again to examine this matter to see why it is that members at the end of the question period have to be expected continually to put questions and get answers in a minute or two. They seem to put effective questions and get effective answers. I am wondering why the same thing cannot be done at the beginning of the question period as this would multiply immensely the opportunity for distribution of time and participation throughout the question period. I ask that again, and I ask for co-operation from members on both sides of the House in putting shorter questions and shorter answers, as I think this would go a very long way towards solving the very legitimate matter raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could take just a minute or two on the same point. I want you to know on behalf, I am sure, of most members of the House that if members do not respond to your plea for co-operation most of us in this House would be fully supportive of you if you were to get really tough and just cut them off. It seems to me that if that happened once or twice to a member, even an experienced one, members would start co-operating with you and that would be better for all of us.

I suggest the same thing goes in respect of answers by the government. If they tend to be windy and drag the answers out, and if they do not respond to your plea for co-operation, you should just get really tough and cut them off, and I am sure you would have the overwhelming support of members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this debate, but I do want to make a point. We have witnessed a very considerable change in the question period over the last while, not beginning in the present Parliament. The question period evolved quite directly and quite obviously into almost a self-disciplining situation during the last Parliament. When I sat on the government side I thought that development was very much to the advantage of the opposition. When this Parliament opened, Your Honour, and when my leader extolled your virtues, one of the points he made was that we hoped the same rights that had been accorded to the opposition in the last Parliament would prevail in this Parliament.

We are prepared to look at changes in the question period, but we will resist very vigorously any attempt to deny to the opposition the rights which were so advantageously and effectively employed by the present members of the government against us when we were in the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure this House could be tempted to discuss this at great length. I think the point that has to be made is that it must be understood that the Chair is not going to lose during the question period. I have nothing to lose during the question period. I do not put questions. I have to try to preside, not on my behalf, but on behalf of hon. members, and the victims of disorder during the question period are not those who have the responsibility to preside, but those who are trying to participate. They are the ones who pay the price, and that is the concern I am attempting to express.

Therefore, I hope all of these interventions will be examined in the light, not of reducing participation during the question period or of access during that time, but, instead, of increasing it.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE STAGE OF BILL C-20

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, as you know, the House gave approval in principle to the government's Bill C-20 regarding property tax credit. That having been done, I consulted with my colleagues, the other House leaders, to see whether there would be any possibility of arranging an allotment of time for the Committee of the Whole proceedings. I wish to advise the House that this was done pursuant to Standing Order 75C, and that the representives of the parties were unable to reach an agreement under Standing Order 75A and 75B on the allotment of time for the Committee of the Whole stage on Bill C-20, to amend the Income Tax Act and provide a tax credit with regard to mortgage interest and home owner property taxes.

In those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I therefore give notice of my intention to move a motion on Friday, December 7, 1979, allocating one sitting day for the consideration of the proceedings at that stage of this bill so this debate can continue.

Some hon. Members: Open government.

An hon. Member: It is the only way to deal with a filibuster.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 89, 213, 231, 313, 321, 383, 387, 401, 409, 413, 417, 436, 577 and 653.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM—RIMOUSKI

Question No. 89—Mr. Allard:

1. Since 1978, did the Department of National Health and Welfare finance projects in the constituency of Rimouski as part of the New Horizons Program and, if so (a) what were the projects (b) what was the (i) total amount (ii) amount in each case (c) what were the areas?

[Mr. Speaker.]

2. Is the department planning to do so in the near future and, if so (a) what will be the amount (b) in which areas?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Please see list A.

2. Please see list A.

2. There are two further projects under review.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES

Question No. 213—Mr. Herbert:

How many (a) permanent (b) term employees were on the Department of National Health and Welfare's payroll on March 31, 1979?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

(a) Eight thousand eight hundred sixty permanent employees of whom 190 were continuing part-time—working more than 15 hours per week, but less than full-time hours.

(b) Six hundred fourty-six term employees over six months and an estimated 680 term employees less than six months.

MINING SECTOR—CAPITAL EXPENDITURES

Question No. 231—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For each province, what was the decrease or increase rate of capital expenditures in the Canadian mining sector for (a) 1978 (b) the first nine months of 1979?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources):

Province or Region	(a) 1977 to 1978 (per cent)	(b) 1978 to 1979 (per cent)
Atlantic Region	– 4.8	32.8
Quebec	–57.9	2.2
Ontario	–22.7	31.6
Prairie Region	17.9	– 5.2
British Columbia	–19.3	35.4
Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories	– 2.3	–15.6

Notes: (1) Disaggregated data unavailable for Atlantic and prairie regions; (2) Partial-year data for 1979 unavailable; and (3) Data shown for 1979 results from survey of company investment intentions and thus may differ significantly from actual data.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—APPROVAL OF DRUGS

Question No. 313—Mr. Herbert:

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare received complaints that two departments, cardiovascular and renal and neurological are causing delays in the approval in Canada of compounds that have been marketed in England and Europe for several years?

2. Have some compounds been stalled for more than two years?

3. Is there a manpower shortage and, if so, is it the government's intention to take immediate measures to rectify this situation?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. A number of pharmaceutical companies awaiting completion of reviews of new drug submissions by the bureau of drugs have complained of the delays in the division of cardio-renal and arthritis drugs, central nervous system drugs, and the division that reviews anti-infective (antibiotics) drugs. A four-month backlog of submissions exists in all three divisions.

2. If a drug manufacturer is not issued a notice of compliance for one or two years, it is because of problems with drug quality, safety concerns, or inadequacy of efficacy data.

3. There is a shortage of pharmacologists, pharmacists and physicians to carry out reviews of manufacturers' submissions. In the light of the increasing work load, a review of staffing needs is being conducted.

RESIDENCE OF THE PRIME MINISTER—ITEMS REMOVED

Question No. 321—Mr. Cossitt:

According to the government records or knowledge, during the period of time that the former Prime Minister vacated the premises of the official residence of the Prime Minister at 24 Sussex Drive, were any items removed that were paid for, belonged to or in any way in whole or in part, the property of the government and, if so (a) under whose instructions were the items removed (b) what is a complete list of all the items (c) what was the approximate original cost to the taxpayers of the items (d) did the former Prime Minister pay the government any amount whatsoever toward the cost of the items and (i) if so, in what amount (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works):

(a) Items of furniture were moved to Stornoway, the official residence of the Leader of the Opposition, at the request of the Leader of the Opposition. The items in question were mutually agreed upon by the parties concerned after discussions took place between them.

(b) The complete list of items moved is as follows:

2 large easy chairs
1 sofa
3 brass end tables
1 brass tea wagon
3 lamps
2 arm chairs
1 wicker lamp
2 brass end tables
1 floor lamp
1 safe
3 chairs
1 sofa
1 night table
1 high boy and dresser
1 chair
1 end table
1 brass bed—head board & foot
2 end tables
1 chair
1 dresser and bookcases assorted linen for beds
assorted towels
1 canoe

(c) The furniture moved was from the personal living quarters, and not from the "official rooms" at 24 Sussex. The total approximate cost to the taxpayer of the above items was $14,000.

(d) The former Prime Minister did not pay any money toward these goods that were transferred.

(i) Not applicable.

(ii) As the former Prime Minister is still an MP and the Leader of the Opposition, he is entitled to reside in Stornoway which is the property of the Government of Canada, and as such, has not removed any property belonging to the taxpayer from those designated premises.

Order Paper Questions

HEALTH—VIETNAMESE REFUGEES—HEPATITIS B VIRUS

Question No. 383—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare aware of a bulletin issued by the Canadian Dental Association claiming that up to 7,000 of the 50,000 Vietnamese refugees being admitted to Canada are carriers of Hepatitis B Virus and that (a) the Canadian Dental Association has advised its members not to treat any of these people unless they have been tested to see if they carry such virus (b) provincial governments have been requested by the Canadian Dental Association to establish specific dental units for treatment of Hepatitis B Virus in major populated centres (c) Hepatitis B Virus is extremely dangerous and quite different from Hepatitis A Virus, normally found in Canada?

2. (a) What is the policy of the government on this matter (b) has the minister discussed it with provincial departments of health (c) what action has the department taken, if any, or is prepared to take?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Yes, the minister is aware of the bulletin issued by the Canadian Dental Association claiming that 7,000 of the proposed 50,000 Indo-Chinese refugees may be carriers of hepatitis B virus.

(a) The minister has decided that all Indo-Chinese refugees arriving in this country will be tested for hepatitis B virus by the Canadian Red Cross blood transfusion service.

(b) The results of the tests carried out by the Canadian Red Cross laboratories will be forwarded to the appropriate provincial department of health within five to seven days of the blood specimens being taken.

(c) Although advice given to the department by experts has in general been reassuring respecting the potential risk of hepatitis B virus, a further program of testing of hepatitis B virus among the arrivals from Southeast Asia is being carried out by the department to establish the parameters of the problem and the most appropriate manner of dealing with it.

2. As mentioned, the policy at the present time is to carry out tests on all immigrants;

(b) The department has discussed this matter with all provincial departments of health who had been invited to meetings of an expert committee on refugee health problems over the past two months;

(c) The department, as mentioned, is prepared to take tests on all refugees of all age groups and the results of these tests will be made available to the provincial departments of health concerned.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—GRANTS TO PLANNED PARENTHOOD FEDERATION

Question No. 387—Mr. Mitges:

1. For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975 (d) 1976 (e) 1977 (f) 1978 (g) 1979, did the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada apply for a grant to the Department of National Health and Welfare and, if so, for what amount?

2. For each year, was the application approved and, if so, in what amount?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1.	Yes Amount requested	2. Yes Amount granted
(a) 1972-73	$ 500,000.00	$500,000.00
(b) 1973-74	547,479.00	457,500.00

An Air Traffic Control (ATC) loss of separation results when the required spacing between IFR-instrument flight rule-aircraft is not maintained. There is no definition of "near miss" however, it is commonly used to describe critical situations when avoidance action is required by the pilots.

OLD AGE SECURITY PENSION

Question No. 409—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

On March 31, 1979, how many (a) female (b) male persons received the old age security pension?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): On March 31, 1979, there were 2,145,383 recipients of the Old Age Security pension. Information to indicate the sex of Old Age Security pension recipients is not available on a regular basis. However, data compiled for the month of June 1979 only indicate that 46 per cent were male recipients and 54 per cent female recipients.

PENSIONS

Question No. 413—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

During the fiscal year 1978-79, what amounts were spent for (a) old age pensions (b) spouse's allowance paid to persons aged 60 to 65 (c) Guaranteed Income Supplement for spouses and, how many (i) female (ii) male persons received such allowances?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

	Number of recipients March 31, 1979	Amounts paid Fiscal Year 1978-79
(a) Old Age Security Pension	2,145,383	$4,130,612,910
(b) Spouse's Allowance	75,292	126,301,725
(c) Guaranteed Income Supplement	1,161,610	1,234,160,749

Information to indicate the sex of Old Age Security, Spouse's Allowance and Guaranteed Income Supplement recipients is not available on a regular basis. However, data compiled for the month of June 1979 only indicate the following percentage distribution:

Type of benefit	(i) Female	(ii) Male
Old Age Security	54 per cent	46 per cent
Spouse's Allowance	92 per cent	8 per cent
Guaranteed Income Supplement	60 per cent	40 per cent

Order Paper Questions

SOULANGES CANAL

Question No. 417—Mr. Herbert:

1. Was the Soulanges Canal sold to the province of Quebec and, if so (a) on what date (b) under what terms and conditions?

2. Has the government taken any position concerning the re-opening of the canal?

3. Was the government approached by the government of the province of Quebec, in the last year, with any proposal for the use of the canal or did any discussions take place during this period?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows:

1. Governor in council transferred to the province of Quebec, on February 11, 1965, by Order PC 1965-251, the administration and control of the Soulanges Canal and the reserve of land of the said canal, subject to the following condition:

> Her Majesty in right of the province of Quebec will permit Her Majesty in right of Canada to store on the upper entrance wall of the Soulanges Canal, during the period extending from the close of navigation of Lake St. Francis each year until the opening of navigation on the said lake the following year, at such location or locations thereon as may be mutually agreed upon between the deputy minister of the Quebec department of roads and the Deputy Minister of Transport Canada, the navigation buoys and other aids to navigation on Lake St. Francis.

The governor in council also authorized by the said order the payment to the province of Quebec the sum of $416,000.

2 and 3. Not to our knowledge.

WIDOWS

Question No. 436—Mr. Herbert:

Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in a speech he made in the House of Commons on October 22, 1979, express concern for a very vulnerable segment of our society, the newly bereaved, near aged widow and did he say, as printed at page 459 of Hansard "at the age of 60-plus it is clearly unreasonable to assume that they would be able to go out and fully sustain themselves on the labour market" and, if so, what is the estimated number of women aged 60 to 65 who were widowed before they attained the age of 60 and how many of these widow's husbands, at the time that they died, were (a) 65 or over and in receipt of the old age pension (b) aged 60 to 65?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. Statistics are available from the 1971 and 1976 censuses to establish the age distribution of widows. Statistics indicating the age at which women become widowed, or the age of their spouse at the time the spouse died, are not available.

GRAIN TRANSPORTATION TASK FORCE

Question No. 577—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What budget has been made available to the Grain Transportation Task Force and specifically, what amounts have been budgeted for (a) transportation and communications (b) professional services (c) printing and distribution of report(s) (d) material and supplies (e) salaries and per diem allowances?

2. Are all members of the committee also members of the Progressive Conservative Party?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport):

1. With respect to the Grain Transportation Task Force, the amounts spent to November 14 are:

(a)	transportation and communication	$6,943.27
(b)	professional services	1,552.57
(c)	printing and distribution of reports (est.)	400.00
(d)	material and supplies	266.00
(e)	salaries and per diem allowances	nil

2. Yes.

RESEARCH IN DRUGS

Question No. 653—Mr. Herbert:

Is the government undertaking research or the publishing of the results of research in the private sector, that would identify drugs that are chemically equal but not therapeutically equivalent?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council has mentioned question No. 436 and immediately after question No. 477. I am sure he meant question No. 577.

Mr. Kilgour: That is right, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 5 and 11 are acceptable to the government.

TREASURY BOARD—SELECTED PERSONNEL ADMINISTRATION POSITIONS

Motion No. 5—Mr. Herbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Report on the Compliance Audit of Selected Personnel Administration Positions prepared by the Evaluation Program Group, October 1977, Treasury Board.

Motion agreed to.

STEVENSON AND KELLOGG LTD

Motion No. 11—Mr. Herbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report by Stevenson and Kellogg Ltd. on a new classification system for the government.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 8 and 24?

PUBLIC SERVICE—JOB CLASSIFICATION

Motion No. 8—Mr. Herbert:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the study on certain occupational groups in the public service intended to determine the extent of job classification accuracy.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), the only study conducted on certain occupational groups in the public service was the classification audit in the national capital area and the non-national capital area. This study was tabled in Parliament by the President of Treasury Board on December 18, 1978. On behalf of the minister I would, therefore, ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I have reason to doubt the accuracy of that statement and I would, therefore, ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

JUSTICE—APPLICATION OF FEDERAL LAWS BY PROVINCIAL COURTS

Motion No. 24—Mr. Herbert:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest study by the Department of Justice on the comparison of the application by provincial courts of federal laws.

Mr. George Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as far as the Department of Justice is concerned, there is no such study as that requested by the hon. member in his motion No. 24. Therefore, I ask that this motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Herbert: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of documents be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERBERT—TABLING OF REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I notice that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is in his seat today. I was under the impression that he would be tabling a committee report today, a report which we on this side of the House consider to be extremely important and which would affect our work. I wonder if, under those circumstances, we can be advised as to why such report has not been tabled since it has quite an effect on the conduct of this House?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the answer is very simply that I have not got the report. If I have the report on Friday I will table it. There was no direction as to time.

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE TAX CREDIT IN RESPECT OF MORTGAGE INTEREST AND PROPERTY TAX

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 4, consideration in committee of Bill C-20, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax—Mr. Crosbie—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Tuesday, December 4, 1979, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration.

Mr. Comtois: Mr. Chairman, I would have preferred to make my speech before the second reading stage of the bill but since I did not want to delay the vote unduly, I agreed to postpone my intervention to this stage of this bill. This afternoon I would like to give the House the reasons which motivated my voting in favour of Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax.

At the same time I would like to explain to the hon. Minister of Finance the amendments I would like to see made to clause 2 of the bill so that he may consider them now and I hope agree with them. Bill C-20 is a measure designed to bring about a tax rebate and help young couples who want to raise their families in the best conditions possible. As for me, any measure intended to facilitate single unit home ownership will meet with my support. Yet, I think that this measure should be integrated into a more general family policy.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard during the debate all those grand theories for and against Bill C-20. It has been said that it is a discriminatory bill. I should like to remind my hon. colleagues that all bills that the House passes discriminate against parts of the population or particular groups of citizens, and I will give as an example the measure we passed to make sure that those people over 60 years of age who are entitled to the spouse's allowance will keep receiving the allowance until they are 65, after the death of their pensioned spouse over 65. That measure discriminates against all single persons between 60 and 65 years of age, but that did not stop the House from supporting it unanimously.

So this is a similar case. It is a tax cut intended for a particular group of Canadians who are or will become owners of single-family dwellings. Some have said that the legislation puts at a disadvantage some provinces where the number of home owners is not as great as in others. That is why I thought of moving an amendment, or rather two amendments, to change the proportion of tax credits applicable to mortgage interest and property tax. When we come to clause 2, I intend to ask the minister to consider the possibility—I would appreciate it if the minister listened carefully to what I am saying—of reducing the tax credit in respect of mortgage interest to $1,000 from $1,250, and of increasing the tax credit in respect of property tax to $500 from $250, thus leaving the allowable maximum the same as it is now, at $1,500. That would help more the Atlantic provinces and Quebec where more people own homes that are mortgage-free or almost completely paid.

So a higher tax credit for property tax would be, I think, much fairer and would not affect future government spending.

Mr. Chairman, with regard to housing and single-family dwellings, there is some concern, and rightly so, about the future of single-family homes in Canada. Only recently, the Quebec provincial home builders Association at its convention held in Chicoutimi, I think, spent a whole weekend looking into the future of single-family homes, in Quebec in particular, all the more as the majority of buyers of this type of housing are in the 25 to 44 age group. Most are young couples with or without young children or who intend to raise a family, of course, in the best conditions possible. I think we might have erred in our housing policy in that large housing projects have been promoted rather than smaller single-family or multiple family dwellings, with the result that there are now terrible social problems in those large projects. There are communication, public transportation problems, the solution of which requires millions, if not billions, of dollars. As to the single-family dwelling, it causes the least social problems and no congestion in downtown areas because they are located mainly in the suburbs.

I should also like to deal with the situation of tenants who are ignored in this legislation, but it is a comfort to think that the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation stated a few days ago that he was in favour of housing subsidies for senior citizens. It is perhaps the group of tenants that are the most penalized at present by rental or heating costs, energy costs in general and the cost of living. If the government wants to go further in that direction, it will surely get the support of my colleagues on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to say this legislation is going to cost $2 billion or $2.5 billion in four years. It is more difficult to try to figure what this legislation may save in social allocations, in unemployment benefits and other government expenses when we know that in Quebec alone more than 150,000 unemployed are looking for work in the housing sector. If this measure is going to boost housing construction, I think it represents a step in the right direction even if it is a small step.

I would like the government to examine the question of public transportation in the big cities and their suburbs in order to reduce the costs incurred by single dwelling owners. As I said earlier, they tend to live in the suburbs of big cities where the atmosphere is more favourable to raise their families. It should be part of a global policy which the government should examine without delay. We need answers that will be of real interest to the whole population.

Those who think that single-family dwellings are more expensive in the way of infrastructure are either misinformed or inexperienced. There may not be too many members here who in the past had an opportunity to plan, develop and build a municipality mostly made up of single-family dwellings. This was part of my experience, and I can say that infrastructure costs were lower than those in large centres or housing projects, and social problems in my town are much less acute than in larger cities.

Those are some of the reasons why I supported the bill. I feel that the tax credit approach can be handled with a minimum of intervention by officials and will not create an unnecessary and costly bureaucracy. It is simply a matter of completing an income tax return and adding mortgage interests and property tax receipts, and from then on computers take over.

The Minister of Finance suggested he would not accept amendments that could change the nature of his bill or the nature or make up of income tax returns. I say to him that all that is involved in the amendments I shall be moving to clause 2 is a transfer of amounts, and the only thing to do is to change the computer program. There will be no need to change the income tax returns which are already printed and will be sent to taxpayers within a few weeks.

Mr. Chairman, this is what I had to say, the few explanations I wanted to give to hon. members and to my constituents who also support the bill. Since we heard all sorts of comments during the debate, I should like to conclude by saying, as I often do, that in every area the experts are always right, except when things go wrong, at which time they turn to politicians to solve the problem. So, in the long run, it is always a political decision. Whatever the experts may think, it is my view that as politicians and elected representatives of our fellow citizens, it is our duty to make decisions, and I hope that jointly we made the best possible one.

I have the firm intention when we come to clause 2, to move two amendments, and I hope the Minister of Finance and the government will accept them for the benefit of home owners, especially those in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

Mr. Veillette: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to rise in the House. Several of my colleagues have already expressed their views regarding this bill to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax. I expect that the remarks and suggestions made by all speakers in the course of this debate on Bill C-20 will be taken into consideration in order to offer Canadians a fair scheme for all those who have housing needs. Mr. Chairman, I say housing needs because I do consider that Canadians need shelter the same way they should have clothes. This to me is a basic rule. What I find detrimental and unfair is that the government opposite tries to make Canadians believe that this scheme is a product of their imagination when in fact it is derived from the ideology of the Liberals who for years have made serious and extensive studies on the possibility of establishing a scheme which, through an allowance, would encourage Canadians to become home owners in the proper sense of the word.

Because of an election promise, the government now introduces this bill with the firm intention of having it passed before the holiday season. Does the government want to make a Christmas gift to the Canadian public? Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell my friends opposite that when a father makes Christmas gifts to his children, at least he tries to be fair to the whole family so that everyone can be happy during the holidays.

Mr. Chairman, the government is anxious to keep its election promise because it wants the Canadian people to forget the mistakes of the past. They have introduced this bill too hastily without making an in-depth study of this matter, just as they did in the case of the election promise to move the Canadian embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. We all know that to save face the government had to send Mr. Robert Stanfield as ambassador extraordinary to the Middle East and that on his return, Mr. Stanfield immediately and quite logically submitted his report, following which the Prime Minister stated not too long ago in the House that he had made a mistake and had to withdraw. We all know that the government had to change its plans concerning Petro-Canada and is now making every effort to find an answer to keep its election promise.

Because of all this, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that this government, just to prove its efficiency, will implement this last promise even though it is certainly detrimental to the Canadian people.

In view of the irresponsibility of this government in the past, I find it hard to believe that this bill will prove beneficial for the whole population. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly not against a mortgage tax credit. What I oppose in this bill is the fact that a group of Canadians, who are already privileged in certain respects, will benefit from additional advantages to the detriment of other Canadians who do not have the good luck to be home owners. I am thinking especially about the middle income worker who is lucky enough to own a home in which one floor or one part could be converted into an apartment. This home owner could not benefit fully from the exemption because of subclause 2(7)(c) which reads:

> qualified home does not include a property for any period during which it is used principally for the purpose of gaining or producing income,

We can say that, basically, this bill will contribute to increasing the gap between various groups of Canadian citizens. This gap, of which the government is certainly aware, is becoming increasingly wider, and a responsible government with coherent policies should try to bridge this gap as soon as possible, but our friends opposite are doing everything to maintain these disparities and even to make them worse, which is more serious.

Mr. Chairman, the government should reconsider this bill and review it substantially to make it more equitable for the underprivileged members of our society, for the workers who are trying very hard to earn enough money so one day they too might become home owners like many others.

Mr. Chairman, I am also thinking about all those people who have worked hard for years to buy a small house. What makes it worse is that those people had to work even harder to repay their mortgage as soon as possible so that they would not be swamped with interest charges. I know of wives who had to get a job to help their husbands with that mortgage. Today, through their hard work, those people have managed to repay their whole mortgage but will not be able to benefit from this bill as proposed by this government. Mr. Chairman, if this program were improved so that all prospective home buyers, including tenants or people who pay little or no federal income tax, may have access to housing, this program would certainly be much more acceptable.

Mr. Chairman, at present we have many social programs. Take old age security for instance: as I see it, all senior citizens get a cheque; take family allowances: every mother gets her cheque every month. So, Mr. Chairman, I wonder why all tenants who wish to buy their own house eventually could not avail themselves of government assistance.

Mr. Chairman, I will not support this bill and here is why: According to recent rumours, the government would draw the money necessary to cover the cost of this program from the family allowances budget. On this matter, I must say to the government that it would be compounding injustice to take the funds from there. The hon. Minister of Finance will present his budget only in December and we shall not know until then where the money will come from. One thing I know for sure is that eventually someone will have to foot the bill and there is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Chairman, that it will be the vast majority of Canadians who will not even benefit from that tax credit who will have to pay the bill through a direct or disguised income tax increase. I imagine that that concealed tax, Mr. Chairman, will be a 30 per cent excise tax on gas which the government is ready to levy on all Canadian drivers.

To briefly put it, I blame the government for introducing this draft without an in-depth study and a thorough consideration of the matter. This is easy to realize when we look at the fact that the people who have rather high mortgages and pay over $1,500 in income tax to the federal government are those who will benefit from the bill. This measure which I feel is quite exceptional confirms what I said before, that the government wishes to increase disparities among Canadian citizens.

With this new tax credit, the government is not increasing the number of potential claimants, at least not more than under the previous plan for tax deductions. Renters are entirely excluded from the scheme which is too bad, because they are first-class citizens; they are as Canadian as the home owners and they are entitled in the same degree to the services of the federal government.

As usual, Ontario is the winner at the expense of Quebec because the number of home owners with mortgages high enough to be eligible for that tax credit is 20 per cent higher in Ontario than in Quebec. To thwart those unfair measures at the national level as well as the individual level, I suggest to the government it should reassess the matter and remove those disparities. I therefore advocate a policy designed to rationalize Canadian housing through considerable assistance to home ownership. In closing, Mr. Chairman, I reaffirm that I am not averse to the idea of a program that would facilitate home ownership and as a result would stimulate the building industry, and I hope the government will benefit from the constructive remarks of my colleagues. I also hope that the government has fully analysed the financial situation of the country and I look forward to the day when it can tell us how we will pay for that luxury without, however, increasing the national debt.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I too would like to rise in opposition to the proposals in front of us. There is no doubt that there is a tremendous need for action in the field of housing in our country today. The difficulties faced by a vast number of people in the "middle class" and in the lower income group in meeting their monthly mortgage payments is making it increasingly difficult for people to own their homes and to live with any degree of security.

All members of the House are committed to the notion that families should be able to enjoy a secure home which will provide warmth and shelter in the years ahead without that simple basic necessity becoming a major economic problem in their lives. Indeed, I think the government recognized the need for action in the field of housing. I think that the record of the former government in that respect was a dismal one. There were cutbacks in all sorts of housing programs in the last few years that had a detrimental effect on the provisions of adequate housing for Canadians. Under the Liberal government we had high interest rates, which I think was the reason for which the Tory policymakers introduced the mortgage tax deductibility scheme during the last election campaign.

Tory candidates were going around the country saying to new home owners: "Look at the difficulties you are having in securing a home under this Liberal government; elect us and we will do something about it". As I hear Liberal members of the House make grandiose proposals for housing, I cannot help but smile and wonder where they were seven or eight months ago. In fact, their heart was in a much different place than it is today. It is amazing how such a switch of the heart and of the mind can take place in such a short period of time.

There were cutbacks in housing while the Liberals were in government, but now in opposition they have become progressive. It is quite a conversion. Of course, such a conversion is not restricted to the Liberal party. We have seen a similar conversion taking place among members of the Conservative party. They were criticizing high interest rates when they were in opposition and promising to do something about it, but in fact they continued down the same road with this insanity until now when the home owners are facing interest rates which are anywhere from 14 per cent to 15 per cent.

The number of defaults that are occurring across the country is alarming, there is no doubt about it. Many Canadian home owners are facing a period of crisis in attempting to maintain their homes and to hold on to what they have invested in their homes and what they paid in down payments to secure a shelter and a roof over their heads. But is this measure before us going to help? I am afraid it is not. It is not a housing program.

Had the government decided to move $500 million into CMHC or had it decided that in four years' time they would drop another $2.2 billion directly into housing in this country, we might have had a housing program. If the government decided to use $500 million to secure urban land, bringing down the cost of urban land in this country, then we might have the beginning of a housing program. If they decided to use the $2.2 billion which they will be spending four years from now in building co-op and low income housing, then indeed we might have a housing program. As it is, we do not have one. We have vast sums of money invested in a program which will slide through the hands of consumers and home owners into the pockets of the banks and developing companies like a piece of fat passes through a goose.

It was under the Liberal government that we saw a tremendous increase in the holdings of land development companies. For example, Nu West, a major land holding company and developer, increased its assets in 1973 from $89 million to $482 million in 1977. This was done under the Liberal government. The Liberal government allowed this type of exploitation of Canadian home owners.

In 1973 Cadillac Fairview had total assets of $900 million and in 1978 they had doubled to $1,800 million. In 1973 Bramalea had $147 million worth of assets and in 1978 it had $347 million. A few large developing companies acquired a monopoly situation. They were able to boost up the cost of land to a point where in cities such as Toronto and Vancouver one has to pay an extra $25,000 for a lot. This is because of the exploitation which the former government allowed to occur. Thus, the Liberals must accept full responsibility for that development, there is no doubt about it.

I join with members opposite when they condemn the Liberal party for allowing that to occur. It was a major rip-off of Canadian home owners. It is why urban land prices in Canada today are so much higher than they are in the United States. There is a lot of land in Canada, and obviously it is ridiculous that land should cost more here than in the United States. Obviously it must have been a sweet deal for the former government to have allowed such a major rip-off to have occurred. It should have been investigated under the Combines Investigation Act and the monopolies act. It should have been prevented. Had it been prevented, Canadian home owners would have saved thousands and thousands and thousands of dollars. When I hear them now plead for the average home owner, I become cynical about the political process. Where were the Liberals a year ago, two years ago or three years ago when they allowed this rip-off to occur?

Will the present government do anything about it? No, they will not. Will they tackle the real reason why housing in the country is so expensive today? No, they will not. They will not go after the developers. Somehow or other, once a party becomes the government it becomes the friends of the same type of folk who were friends of the former government. Something must happen the moment one passes to the government side; one must acquire a whole new different mentality and a new set of friends. We see no change. In fact, I fear that the bill before us today will only benefit the very same developers. Yes, it will increase the cost of housing because the benefits received by the average home owner under this proposal eventually will find their way into the cost of houses. The cost of homes will increase by the amount of the benefit given to home owners by the proposed act.

Who will benefit from this? Who will benefit from the increased cost of housing? Surely it will be the land developing companies and the banks. It will not be the average home owner. It will not make housing more accessible to the average home owner. Eventually it will drive up the cost of housing rather than reduce it; it will increase inflation rather than decrease it.

I cannot understand the economic thinking of the government on this particular proposal. In fact, I cannot understand the thinking of the government in the entire area of economic policy. The government and the Minister of Finance claim that the proposals before us today are to stimulate. Yet on the other hand the minister defends higher interest rates because he suggests it is time to reduce consumption, not to stimulate. On the one hand we have stimulation, on the other we have the opposite. It is a jig which they must do in Newfoundland; one step one way and another step the other way. It must be called the splits. It is the Tory splits. I am afraid it is the country that is hurting; it is the country that is being torn apart. They are inconsistent policies, policies which are to stimulate at the same time as tackling inflation and decreasing consumer demands. It is schizophrenic. A schizophrenic proposal such as this must originate in the fogs of the maritime provinces.

I, and I think the Canadian people, would dearly welcome a new, imaginative initiative on housing. One can imagine what the government could do if the amount of money being spent on this program was directly spent on housing. It would break up the urban land monopolies. It would actually start reducing the cost of housing for Canadians. We could get into land banks. We could get into co-op housing on a massive scale. It would actually reduce the cost of housing in this country. By doing that, all Canadians would benefit. At present the proposals before us, as many members and tax economists have shown, will benefit only people with higher incomes.

If these sums of money were to be used for housing, we would reduce and in fact subsidize interest rates. One can imagine what it would do for housing if we were able to reduce the interest rate to 8 per cent for all families earning $25,000 or less a year, or if we were able to reduce it to 9 per cent for all families earning $30,000 a year.

An hon. Member: What about those who earn $31,000?

Mr. de Jong: Those people who earn $31,000 are in a position to pay what the market will bear. Now we are helping those who are earning $31,000 and more per year, generally at the expense of those who are earning less than that. That is why I suggest that the measures before us are unfair as well as unsound. Not only are they unfair in terms of the distribution of wealth according to income groups; they are also unfair according to geographic location. We could do so much for housing if the amount of money being spent in this tax bill was spent directly on housing. Why not do it? If these types of expenditures will be made, surely a housing program of $2.2 billion would be something every Canadian would welcome. I am sure it would be something that would increase the government's popularity ratings to more than 28 per cent.

This government seems to be committed to committing suicide. It has not thought out any of its proposals. It comes in one day with one proposal and the next day it says something else which is counter to what they were intending to do at the beginning.

The way in which this bill has been introduced in this House is another point. The government had the whole summer to set up a timetable for this particular measure, but somehow or other it could not come to grips with it and make a decision early enough. The government then made the decision without thinking of the consequences or a timetable.

The Prime Minister then gets up in the House and says that he would welcome all amendments and suggestions and that he wanted this bill to be a co-operative effort. We took him at his word and have prepared a whole series of amendments, many of which are very sound and which the Conservatives, particularly the small "c" Conservatives, would accept. A sunset clause would make this legislation a little easier to predict from year to year in terms of what it will cost.

We have now been told, "Sorry, boys, no time". In fact we learned today that closure will be introduced.

Mr. Crosbie: Time allocation.

Mr. de Jong: Pardon me, time allocation. But what is the difference? We still do not end up with any real opportunity to introduce amendments which would strengthen this bill and allow us in our roles as members of Parliament to contribute something to this particular proposal. I am sure that most members of this House and, indeed, most members of the government in their hearts would find our proposals very acceptable and eminently reasonable. But we are not being allowed that opportunity because the timetable was not thought out in the preparation of this particular bill. I am afraid that that is not only true for this bill but for many other measures which have come before this House.

The government does not seem to have a grip on the problems confronting this country. It flies off by the seat of its pants making one proposal one day and another proposal the next. It has no coherent idea of how it will get hold of the problems which it has been left by the previous government. There is no doubt that the Liberals left this House a whole host of problems and, indeed, Tory times are often bad times because they follow Liberal times. The former government is now sitting like a bunch of Cheshire cats in the trees smiling down at the new government. It handed the new government a real mess, but I am afraid that all it is doing is mixing it around and making it even worse. The government is following the bad examples and bad policies of the Liberal government to the insane end. This can be seen in their high interest rate policy, crazy money policies and give-away programs. The former government gave away half of the treasury to their friends in all sorts of little proposals such as the MURBs, give-aways to the oil companies and the tax measures which nobody had any control over and which resulted in the deficit in which we now find ourselves. I understand that the Minister of Finance intends to tell us how much these policies in the past have cost the Canadian people. Instead of stopping it with this bill, however, the government is merely continuing down the same path of financial responsibility.

The only reason the government has decided to go ahead with this proposal is that it has already had to change some of its other political promises. It had to insist that it kept one promise, come hell or high water and whether or not it makes sense. That is why this proposal is before us today. I am sure that it contradicts the government's basic philosophy of trying to get some proper fiscal management into government. The only reason for this proposal is that it is political. The government had to show that it was able to stand tough on something, so now it is posturing.

I am sure that Canadians would be much happier if the government came across honestly and said to them, "We made a mistake on this; it does not make any sense to us now, so we are going to scrap the idea". I am sure that the government would receive some jeering and ribbing, but the Canadian people would at least give the government credit for having the guts to stand up and say, "Look, we were wrong; we are going to bring in something that is a little better".

Had the government spent this money on a housing program instead of the tax credit scheme, then the Canadian people would have understood and applauded. Instead, it is damned determined to go ahead.

An hon. Member: Talk to your constituents.

Mr. de Jong: The hon. member suggests that I should talk to my constituents. I talk to them every week because I faithfully go back and knock on doors. I have been knocking on doors in the new housing districts of my own riding and also the riding of Prince Albert. The one thing the people seem to talk about is the fear of losing their homes because of higher interest rates. When I ask them if the mortgage tax scheme will help, they say, "Of course it will not save me because the amount of money I will have to pay out in interest rates is much higher than I will ever get back from this particular program". When I asked them if the NDP proposal of reducing the interest rate to 8 per cent or 9 per cent makes any sense, they say, "Boy, I wish the government would at least adopt that type of program; then the money markets for housing would be stabilized".

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): How would you do it?

Mr. de Jong: The hon. gentleman asks how I would do it. The government is already doing it in various areas such as the Farm Credit Corporation guarantees on interest rates. Why does the government not do it for housing? Why does it not use the money which is being spent on this scheme to subsidize and stabilize the interest rates for housing so that when a person buys a house they will know how much they will pay for it next year and in the years to come? That makes sense because it means stabilizing our society and helping to stabilize the economy and the housing market. That is what the Canadian people are asking for. Instead, what we have in front of us today is a gimmick which the people of Canada do not understand, do not want and do not appreciate.

For these reasons, and if time and opportunity permit on Monday in the restricted time period, we will attempt to introduce some amendments. I hope that the government will consider our proposals, which we will make in good faith. I think they will strengthen this tax bill in front of us and I urge the government not to reject them out of hand. I think that the proposals of a sunset clause and certain ceilings make good sense. I know that these proposals will make sense to the Minister of Finance. I am sure that he wishes there were more ceilings and sunset clauses in some of the measures with which he must deal from day to day. So we will be helping him in trying to convince this House to accept at least some of our proposals for this particular bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise again and speak to Bill C-20 which amends the Income Tax Act in order to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax. At every stage in the examination of a bill, an hon. member may intervene to make his remarks and, if need be, with the help of those remarks the government or the minister responsible can improve the bill in question. On November 21 last, Mr. Chairman, I rose in the House to wonder out loud about the housing situation in Canada.

I was pointing out the situation in Canada to my colleagues, and I mentioned how proud I was to be part of the Liberal team that has designed and implemented rather exceptional housing policies, if one considers that following a Gallup poll in October, 1968, in which Canadians were asked whether they were more or less satisfied with their housing conditions, 60 per cent said they were satisfied. In 1978, ten years later, 85 per cent of Canadians said they were satisfied with their housing.

In 1968, 34 per cent said they were unsatisfied, whereas in 1978, 13 per cent said in October, 1978, that they were unsatisfied. All this to say, Mr. Speaker, that the building of 235,000 housing units on average during the past ten years under the Liberal government through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has considerably improved housing conditions in Canada. That is why in my remarks I wanted to review housing conditions.

I also expressed my concern as a Liberal about the status of our various housing policies with respect to non-profitable organizations: the municipal infrastructure, the neighbourhood improvement program, the senior citizens residence construction program, the assisted home ownership program and the role of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Of course, I would have been happy to see today in the House a minister responsible for urban affairs who could enlighten me a bit about the future of those programs. But as this is a fiscal policy, it is not a policy designed to improve housing conditions in Canada. It is a fiscal policy, a tax cut, a measure in respect of mortgage rates or property taxes. I wanted in my first intervention to review the housing situation. I should like to say today that from a fiscal point of view I cannot object to that tax cut for Canadians.

Every shade of opinion may be expressed about this legislation whether one lives in one area or another of Canada or whether one views it as a social policy, a socioeconomic policy or a fiscal policy. I represent an urban riding located in the second largest Quebec City resulting from the merger of 14 municipalities. I have experienced the problems of these residents and it is in light of meetings I had with the people of Laval that I realized to what extent our existing policies concerning housing assistance for the elderly had been effective. But having studied that policy, which is not a housing policy, I also realized that I do not fully agree with the preceding speaker in the sense that in my view it will not necessarily stimulate housing development.

However, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it will stabilize conditions for Canadians who already own a home and who see their mortgage interest or their municipal taxes increase annually. One has to live in a city which has mushroomed over the last ten years to realize how difficult it is for home owners to meet that yearly increase in their municipal property taxes. That is why I will support this bill which will alleviate the tax burden for home owners. This will obviously mean an annual saving.

As I said at the beginning of my comments, when we consider a bill we can improve it and expect to do so through our suggestions to the government, and after discussing this matter with my colleague from Terrebonne, who has also lived in a municipality which has expanded, I intend to support the amendment he suggested to the minister this afternoon to protect the owners of single-family dwellings which are not mortgaged.

In Canada, 27 per cent of all home owners do not hold a mortgage. This means that 2.2 million Canadians who own single-family dwellings and do not have a mortgage will not be able to claim the amount of $1,250 provided under this bill to reduce the cost of mortgages. We therefore ask the Minister of Finance to consider doubling the amount provided for the municipal tax credit to help these 27 per cent of Canadians whose houses are no longer mortgaged. Over the first year, instead of having the $62.50 municipal tax credit, home owners who do not have a mortgage will have nothing. If they had a mortgage, they would receive $125. In my opinion, if this amendment is accepted, not only would an additional 2.2 million families be able to benefit from this legislation, but we would also be doing something for senior citizens, since my colleagues are also anxious to have as many Canadians as possible benefit from this bill.

Since only 6 per cent of senior citizens have a mortgage on their home and a great many of them have only a small house, and in fact 63 per cent of them have a small home or a small bungalow, it is plain to see that these people often have only the income from their pension. I repeat that 63 per cent live in their own home and these are single-family dwellings, and only 6 per cent of them have mortgages. They would be added to the Canadians who will benefit from this legislation. As a matter of fact, if we take only the present legislation, only 32 per cent of taxpayers could have either the property tax credit or the tax credit in respect of mortgage interest, whereas if we add those who do not have a mortgage and who could deduct a double amount for their municipal taxes, we would add another 29 per cent. Mr. Chairman, this consideration is important, in our opinion, and we hope that the minister will be able to consider the possibility of providing the benefits of this legislation for those Canadians.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding, I shall say that some newsmen misinterpreted my position when they mentioned that on November 21, in my speech, I did not seem to share the views of this bill. At that time, I based my assessment of the housing situation in Canada on quantity and not on quality. Well, now I am trying to bring some improvements to this bill, which I think will better meet the aspirations of the Canadian people. This is why I support the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Terrebonne this afternoon so that Canadians are better protected.

Mr. Bockstael: Mr. Chairman, it would have been inconsistent on my part to vote in favour of Bill C-20 precisely when I wanted to point out its deficiencies. I have a lot of respect for traditions, and it should be recognized that, according to parliamentary tradition, the official opposition is normally against any tax increase proposed by the government. Consequently, the opposition should not object to a tax reduction if it is a real reduction applying equally and equitably. Unfortunately, Bill C-20 does not meet those requirements in my opinion.

[English]

Bill C-20 is a far cry from the proposal that the Conservatives promised during the election campaign. It represents a token effort to meet the promises they made concerning their original tax deduction program. This tax cut favours one segment of our society; it sets a dangerous precedent and can be described as a handout to a few at the expense of others. All Canadians know that they cannot expect something for nothing. A mortgage interest tax cut benefits only those households that carry a mortgage, but their neighbours who do not qualify for such a benefit will have to help pay for it in some way or another.

The mortgaged property owners themselves and all Canadians will soon be finding out that they will have to pay a lot more to heat their homes, to operate their equipment and to drive their vehicles. It is impossible to obtain information from the government as to how the moneys will be raised before the presentation of the budget.

This scheme sets a very dangerous precedent that will ultimately become ingrained in our tax system while we recognize that it is an inequitable and inefficient use of funds. It is a proposal which is at cross-purpose with the government's stated goal of reducing expenditures. I find it difficult to accept that the Minister of Finance, who went on record at one time as opposed to such a measure, could do a personal about-face and become a prime supporter of such a crass, politically motivated proposition.

Another aspect of this bill concerns the municipal tax credit. As a municipal councillor I quickly discovered that municipal tax credits were nothing more than a vote gaining move by an upper echelon of government. Let me describe the Manitoba scene as follows. A young couple purchased a new home. The mortgage company listed their tax bill as $1,250. On applying to the city for a tax certificate, the assessment department told them that their taxes amounted to $1,000. That was all the city, in establishing its tax rolls, claimed from them for their property, but the province had directed the city to add an additional $250 on to their tax bill so they could in turn show it as a tax deduction on their income tax form. People were wont to run around and say, "Thank God we have a good government who gives us a $250 tax refund on our municipal taxes because those lousy councillors are overtaxing us." Actually they did not realize that eventually they could only claim that portion of the $250 that was applicable to them when they filed income tax returns.

I realize that the proposal before us today is for a genuine tax credit, but what I am trying to point out is this. In earlier systems and earlier relations with senior government and municipal governments, the senior government simply sent one cheque from their treasury to the city treasurer to accomplish the same ends. But that in itself was only known between both treasurers and the city council, and it did not draw the government any individual votes. Whether citizens are poor, middle class or very wealthy, they are all ready to accept what appears to be a free handout. So to make themselves look good, this PC government chose the more elaborate route of an offset to all the bitter pills they are planning to make Canadians swallow eventually. As far as I am concerned, this is a form of misleading advertising that I cannot condone.

The hon. House leader for the government used his most eloquent and persuasive manner, just as if he were trying to win over a reluctant jury, when he urged us to pass this bill quickly without any amendments. He even issued a veiled threat by inferring that if we did not rush it through in its less desirable form, we would be held accountable by the public as the ones who did not want them to have a tax break in April, 1980. Remember that we on this side of the House did not make such a promise, much like the Minister of Finance when he said that our government did not promise renters any relief from their shelter costs. If the government cannot deliver the first phase of the mortgage tax deductibility plan in time for the 1979 taxation year, it could very well be deferred. All they have to do is to keep down their proposed tax increases in other areas.

I must confess, as a man involved in the construction business for 35 years, that I was very much amused by the suggestion by government members that such a move would prevent people from buying homes, that this program was in fact a real incentive to move people out of apartments into their own homes and that this bill would stimulate construction and the home building industry. Who are they trying to confuse? I defy them to show me one couple who would be prepared to go out and buy a house right now because this government is promising them a $312.50 tax credit if they would hurry and do so, at a time when new mortgage interest rates are at an all time high. Conservative policies are systematically bringing the house building industry to a standstill while creating massive profits for the bankers and the financiers in this country.

The same $2.87 billion that this ill-conceived proposal is estimated to cost by the fourth year, applied to a practical home owner assistance program, would boost our whole economy a great deal more than the measures this Conservative government has proposed thus far. Please do not try to give the people a snow job by trying to make them believe that this can also be construed to be a housing policy, an incentive to build or acquire a new home, while high interest rates are currently forcing the housing industry and all its satellite industries to make drastic cutbacks in manpower and material requirements, resulting in more unemployment and a lower gross national product. I urge the government to reconsider.

This latest move this afternoon of imposing closure on us, saying they have to do it because there is no other solution, is another mark of the arrogance of this government which has continued to accuse the previous government of arrogance. I would ask hon. members opposite to consider for a moment what the attitude of this same Minister of Finance and the leader of the government would be in opposition today if the Liberal government ever dared to suggest that they had to pass this bill by a certain time or else they would be responsible and they would be blackmailed with the public. How would they react to this proposal of closure?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The proposal that is being brought in by the government, Bill C-20, as I understand it, will not require one additional bureaucrat to administer, but in fact will just involve one line on the income tax form supported by certain receipts. Is it correct that we will not have to hire one additional staff member to administer it?

Mr. Crosbie: Perhaps I might answer that, Mr. Chairman. The answer is yes, this is a PC policy. We will not need to hire any additional people. We will not have to hire thousands of additional government employees or civil servants to administer this plan which is going to benefit home owners in this country to such a great extent. Rather than do as the Liberals did before us and hire extra tens of thousands, this proposal will not require one extra person, but it will be administered by the Department of National Revenue, as is now the case. It will involve a simple tax credit and will not require any enlargement of the bureaucracy.

While I have the floor, can I continue on for a few minutes, Mr. Chairman, or do you want to give the floor to someone else?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: This time I prefer to give the floor to someone else; I will call upon the minister later.

Mr. Crosbie: That is very good of you.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have the opportunity of saying a few words with regard to Bill C-20 to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax.

My constituency is an urban riding where this kind of legislation creates a lot of interest and enthusiasm. The home owners and renters are all concerned about this kind of legislation. I hope the government is not serious when it suggests, in effect, that there are obstructionist tactics being used by members of the opposition, because that certainly is not the intent. Rather, as far as I am personally concerned, this is a matter of my responsibility as a member of Parliament speaking for my constituents with regard to matters and important issues that are before the government in terms of legislation.

I would also say that, as far as the delay is concerned, the minister first announced this plan on September 17, 1979. The bill did not receive first reading in the House until October 29, 1979, some six weeks later.

Mr. Crosbie: Because of your budget.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): If there was any delay, maybe the minister intended it because he was not happy with this legislation.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the budget that you brought down and your legislation which you delayed for weeks?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): There is, of course, the question of deductibility versus the tax credit, and I must say that initially I think the government did show some good sense in that it scrapped the original vote-getter, the mortgage interest deductibility program, in favour of the tax credit scheme.

In 1978 the deductibility promise proposed that a home owner be allowed to deduct from taxable income all mortgage interest up to $5,000 and property taxes up to $1,000. However, under this legislation, mortgage interest paid and the amount of federal income tax paid are principal determinants of benefit. Without doubt, the tax credit plan distributes benefits more equitably among the eligible portion of the population, for it shrinks the tax benefit for high-income earners and fattens it for those in the middle-income group. However, despite the government's attempt to make the best of a bad pledge, in my view the bill certainly has a number of major flaws.

First of all, let us take a look at what we might call a balance sheet and imagine that the balance sheet has two columns, one column entitled "who benefits" and the other column entitled "who does not benefit". On the "who benefits" side you have 3.8 million families in Canada who pay federal tax and have mortgages, of which 2.3 million are eligible for both the mortgage interest and property tax benefit. There are another 1.5 million of the 3.8 million I mentioned who will receive only the property tax benefit.

On the other side of the ledger you have the "who does not benefit" column, and that includes the 5.5 million families who are disqualified for various reasons—the elderly, those who have already paid off their mortgages, the poor who pay no taxes or maybe very little tax and who cannot afford a down payment in any event, the single parent families, many of whom cannot cope and certainly could not afford to buy homes and pay off big mortgages, the mobile workers who find it unrealistic to purchase homes, and, of course, the renters as well. Obviously the balance is tilted in favour of a very specific group of taxpayers.

I do not suggest that home owners are not entitled to some assistance, and they have received some assistance in the past and will continue to do so in the future. It just seems that we are giving a little bit more assistance to this select group than maybe we should be at this time.

Of course, there is the whole of the expense of the program and who pays for it. When we look at the cost we find that by 1982, when the plan is fully matured, it will cost $2.87 billion. I ask the Minister of Finance how this is to be paid. The only explanation I have been able to find so far is a statement by the Minister of Finance which appears at page 1463 of Hansard of November 19, 1979 as follows:

> The money is going to stay in the pockets of the 3.8 million Canadian taxpayers who would otherwise have paid it. That is where it is going to come from.

Consider that as a non-explanation. We cannot forget the families who do pay the taxes but who do not benefit because of the reasons I mentioned earlier, particularly the renters, the elderly, the mobile workers and so on. The list is quite extensive.

If the Minister of Finance is not prepared to explain who pays, perhaps I could provide a little insight. It would appear that there is no doubt but that the burden will be reshuffled among the middle class. One must consider that, aside from the taxes paid by Canadian home owners, the government has one significant alternative source of revenue, and that is the people who are living in rental accommodation. Some of my colleagues have already, to some extent, pointed out this major discriminatory aspect.

I would like to quote from an article by Mr. Peter Myers in the November issue of the Executive in which he states:

> Canada's economists do not object to the mortgage plan because of any disagreement with the objectives stated by the government. None of them questions the need for more jobs . . . However, the economists have challenged the government to show how a massive shift in income from renters to home-owners would achieve any desirable social objective. They see no logic in additional inducements to home ownership when Canadians already have achieved an unusually high ratio of ownership to rental and when the tax system already provides home owners with an enormous financial advantage through the exemption for capital gains on private residences.

Perhaps I should give the Minister of Finance the benefit of the doubt by waiting to see what he tells us in the budget he will be presenting next Tuesday night. Maybe at that time he will let us know where the $2.3 billion will be coming from by 1982.

In the meantime my major concern has to do with federal programs which are presently in place, such as old age security, family allowances and so on. There have been considerable cutbacks, as we all know, affecting Canada Works grants. In my riding of Etobicoke-Lakeshore no grants have been received whatsoever. Members may say this is because unemployment is low, much lower than in most other ridings. Nevertheless, there are certain people who are affected by the cutbacks in Canada Works grants. In particular, I can think of one organization called Storefront Humber which was obliged to give up the work it was doing for handicapped people, senior citizens and other groups because of lack of funding.

I am also greatly concerned about the rumours which have been going around concerning pension reviews, universality versus selectivity, and so on. My constituents are uneasy about this kind of thing and they would like assurances from the government that programs such as pensions for senior citizens which are already in place will remain in place.

Another question I want to ask is this: What are the government's priorities with regard to tax cuts? In particular, I ask the government, since they are in a mood of austerity, whether it is proposed simply to add the $2.8 billion to the federal deficit which is already astronomical—

Mr. Brisco: You said it!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): In a so-called "bite the bullet" speech in Toronto the Minister of Finance asked the following question—I am quoting from the Financial Times of November 12, 1979:

> Are we so unique that we think our natural advantages in resources and geography somehow protect us from fundamental economic realities? I don't think so. There is no magic in this, there is nothing new in it. Success will involve some hard work, some cutting back, some putting off of real increases in our standard of living, some restraint.

Well, the minister cannot have it both ways. He cannot have his cake and eat it too. With the passage of this bill there will, no doubt, be an increase in the demand for housing and, in turn, the demand for mortgage credit will increase with unavoidable inflationary consequences.

In July of 1979 in the magazine Executive an article appears by Peter Myers. He writes:

> While the Tory economists profess considerable confidence that their concept of a stimulative deficit can bring net benefits, many of their professional colleagues outside the government have been voicing serious doubts. If the concept does not pay off or even if there is a significant delay before government revenues recover, then a larger federal deficit would be unavoidable. The consequences would be more inflation and further depreciation of the Canadian dollar.

We in opposition are concerned about the fiscal responsibility of the Government of Canada, and I am sure hon. gentlemen across the way share this concern. To place a program of this kind before Parliament in present circumstances seems to me rather ridiculous. On the one hand, the government talks about restraint and belt tightening, and on the other it is proposing to spend $2.87 billion with no explanation of where the money is coming from.

What about the American experience? As we know, an all-party committee went down to Washington to look into the system there and find out whether it could be used here, whether it would be worthwhile. The information I had from the members when they came back was that we should avoid this kind of program at all costs. Well, we are to have it anyway. The comments of Mr. Richard Pomp, an associate professor of law at the University of Connecticut School of Law, are important in this connection. He said:

Although international comparisons are not always meaningful Canadians should find it curious that despite these deductions the home ownership rate in the United States is virtually the same as in Canada.

I believe the Prime Minister has acknowledged that the mortgage plan, once established will be difficult to reverse. This aspect seems to be in conflict with the idea of sunset legislation proposed by the Minister of State (Treasury Board). I note that in an article which appeared in The Ottawa Journal on November 28, the following appears:

Minister of State Perrin Beatty, who is preparing the legislation, said yesterday Parliament could terminate or drastically change programs after they had been reviewed.

What about Canada's housing situation? Once again I want to quote from Professor Richard Pomp. He says there would really be no increase in home ownership whatsoever as a result of the introduction of this kind of legislation.

A study carried out recently by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development reached the conclusion that Canadians were the best housed people in the industrial world. A Gallup poll conducted just before the election of May 22 indicated that Canadians were well housed; over 80 per cent of the people who responded to the questionnaire said they were satisfied with their present housing situation.

Mr. Chairman, I have touched on a number of areas which concern me with regard to this bill. I was prepared to look at it favourably during the election period; I felt that this mortgage deductibility concept might be acceptable within certain limits. However, at the present time, the economic situation being what it is, I believe it is untimely and would benefit only a few at the expense of many. Without doubt it is a seductive sales pitch to voters, but throwing money at a problem has never been a satisfactory answer. I hope the government will consider very carefully the amendments which are to be submitted. I will only say in conclusion that Canada cannot afford this expensive program at this time.

Mr. McDermid: Would the hon. member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore accept a question? If the government is so irresponsible in presenting this bill, would the hon. member tell me why the housing critic for his party, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, has suggested it be extended to include renters and other groups?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry will be quite prepared, I am sure, to answer that question when he gets back to the House. I do not pretend to speak for my hon. friend from Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

Miss Nicholson: I want to address clause 1 briefly, Mr. Chairman. There are many social as well as economic reasons why as a matter of public policy a government might wish to encourage home ownership; it contributes to the stability of neighbourhoods and helps citizens have a stake in their country. But this bill does nothing to help young families buy a home. It does nothing for renters and therefore does nothing to assist people at the time they are trying to save money to buy a home. It does not address the question of the affordability of homes, in particular the very high interest rates which buyers are now facing as result of present government policy. Except for a limited credit in respect of property tax, it does nothing for those who have already paid for their homes—for example, senior citizens who are struggling to maintain themselves in their own homes on fixed incomes.

I voted against the bill on second reading because it is a poorly designed piece of legislation which does not stimulate home ownership or construction.

During this committee stage we will be coming forward with a number of motions to try to improve the bill and rid it of some of its most obvious inefficiencies and inequities. We are limited in what we can do, however, by the rigidly intransigent attitude of the government, which is so sure it will be able to use its majority to pass the bill in its present form that it has already printed and distributed tax credit forms based on the bill as it now stands, even though the bill has not been passed by Parliament.

The Prime Minister complained in Vancouver recently that Liberals were obstructing this bill. The Prime Minister made his complaint three days after the second reading debate was begun. At that time six members of the official opposition had spoken on the bill. This government is showing an arrogance and a lack of respect for Parliament which are unmatched in our history.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Nicholson: To print forms before a bill has even had second reading on the assumption it will not be amended, to complain because the bill is not rubber stamped and to complain after only six speeches—six thoughtful speeches, I might add, with a lot of constructive suggestions for change if the government had been disposed to listen to them—is surely very strange behaviour for a party which claims to have respect for Parliament.

The mortgage interest and tax credit plan which we have before us is, admittedly, less objectionable than the original tax deduction proposal put forward by the Conservative party during the election campaign. However, as the bill now stands it does not assist people on limited incomes to buy homes, nor will it stimulate residential construction. This tax credit reduces the ongoing costs of home ownership to a very slight extent, but the major obstacle to home ownership is still high mortgage interest rates. High interest rates are also reducing construction industry activity across the board. If the government really wants to do something to make it easier for people to purchase homes and to assist the construction industry, the first choice would be to do something about reducing mortgage interest rates.

Bill C-20 represents an expenditure of $2.87 billion after four years and in every year after that. The bill represents an expenditure this year, 1979, of $575 million. Where is that money to come from? The bill will reduce federal taxes for perhaps 30 per cent of Canadians, but who is going to pay for those lost revenues? The Minister of Finance has been threatening us with a tough medicine budget. Is he going to get the money to pay for this program through a general tax increase? There is only one taxpayer, who pays from one pocket or another.

The statements on the proposed excise tax on gasoline are vague in the extreme. Could this be a disguised way of getting Canadians to pay for the mortgage tax credit? Will programs and services be reduced to pay for the mortgage tax credit? If family allowances are reduced, the tax relief from mortgage payments may be cancelled out. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said that family allowances and existing tax deductions for children will continue during 1980 only. What happens after that? Will those programs be cancelled to pay for the mortgage tax credit scheme, which will cost $2.87 billion in its fourth year of operation?

We should not be asked to deal with this bill before the budget, before we know how it will be paid for and what Canadians will be asked to give up in exchange for it.

The minister is now introducing closure at the committee stage, which prevents us from asking further questions. Nevertheless, we will be introducing some amendments in the hope of improving somewhat this poorly designed bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Savard: Mr. Chairman, if I rise to speak on Bill C-20, it is because things most strange and mystifying are occurring. As a rule, the purpose of this program is to grant taxpaying home owners a tax credit of 25 per cent on the first $5,000 of interest paid up to $1,250 per year, which would enable taxpayers to claim at the end of the first year $312.50 in mortgage interest and $62.50 in property taxes. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am greatly concerned when I consider and analyse the snare which the government is preparing for the Canadian people. Mr. Chairman, has the glaring unfairness that will be done in my constituency been considered? It is true that this government has not been well received by our people. One aim of the program is to promote economic activity as a whole by increasing the net income of home owners after taxes. This mechanism will not be effective because the credit will be universally granted to all owners according to the amount of their mortgage. In most areas in recent years, people have been more deterred from buying houses by the ever-increasing mortgage interest rates than by the increase in the price of homes.

This bill does not even guarantee that all home owners will benefit from the mortgage interest tax credit. I am referring to people of my riding, the elderly who have worked hard and who have paid off their homes. I can understand that turnabout. One day they tell home owners that they will be able to deduct their mortgage interest, which would leave them with only their property tax to pay, but the next day, as is the case with every policy established by the new government, there is a complete turnabout and now we have the government telling home owners that they will only give them a tax credit against their mortgage interest and property tax. Mr. Chairman, I am very confused. Further, the true benefits of the program will probably be neutralized by higher interest rates. The increase in interest rates for mortgage loans which brought the rates from 11 per cent in July, 1979, to almost 14 per cent recently gives a good idea of the incidence of these raises on home ownership. In 1978, the average value of houses purchased through loans under the National Housing Act was $44,874. At that time, a household with a reasonably secure $20,156 income could afford such an investment provided the monthly payments at a mortgage rate of 11 per cent did not exceed 25 per cent of its gross income. Now that the mortgage rate has gone up to 14 per cent, a $23,283 income is required to make the same purchase.

It seems that the Progressive Conservatives want to facilitate residential home ownership. If so, they should design their program so as to do away with the main cause of erosion of the purchasing power of future home owners, that is high mortgage interest rates. In the 1970s, housing costs have increased much faster for home owners than for tenants. And what about tenants? This program will cause them to despair of ever owning their own home just because they could not afford it.

Mr. Chairman, this government should earnestly look into a shelter allowance scheme for tenants, for elderly people, for young couples who want to purchase a home. This government will be responsible if young people are discouraged from ever getting established. Just think that the mortgage interest rate is 15 per cent, Mr. Chairman.

Elderly people and home owners with low income who therefore do not pay any federal taxes and thus are not eligible for that credit may find themselves in dire straits.

Mr. Chairman, this government's priority is to meet the needs of small wage earners and of those who cannot manage on their own. To whom will this money go? Will it help average income people pay their mortgage or senior citizens whose living standards are below the poverty line? This tax credit is a mere wasteful patronage scheme which will only deprive small businessmen. It is wasteful mainly because it is a questionable fiscal program purporting to promote ownership. One need not be very bright to realize that this is not a proposal designed to improve housing but merely a tax cut. This program will give rise to three types of injustice.

First of all, renters who account for about 40 per cent of Canadian households are excluded. Then, the benefits are inequitably shared by the various groups of wage earners. And finally, the program entails regional inequalities. Mr. Chairman, home owners are treated better than renters. The tax credit scheme will encourage even more home ownership, but will in no way benefit Canadian renters who represent some 40 per cent of the population. Of course they could take advantage of it if they decided to buy a house, but even with the tax credit a large proportion of Canadian families cannot afford it.

There is also the difference in treatment according to the income groups. About 60 per cent of households could in principle claim a tax credit for property taxes and a tax credit for mortgage interest. But actually the figure will not be that large since some of them do not have enough income to pay federal tax or do not pay enough federal tax to be entitled to a full return.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to mention the regional distribution. The credit for mortgage interest clearly favours some regions over others. On the whole, the maritimes and Quebec will benefit least, whereas Ontario and the western provinces will gain most.

Mr. Chairman, the tax credit program is expensive. It will change the distribution of resources within the economy and will increase inflation and unemployment. Once fully implemented, the program will cost about $2.3 billion a year. However, it can be estimated that in fact the cost of the program will be a little higher inasmuch as it encourages families to buy houses, to contract mortgage obligations and to make to their home improvements worth more than $5,000.

Without budgetary cuts in other sectors, the mortgage tax credit program will increase the federal deficit and thus create more inflation. It may also result in more inflationary pressures as the price of houses will rise and financial institutions will feel free to raise mortgage interest rates that in some cases could boost inflation. Any substantial increase in the inflation rate which was estimated at 9.6 per cent in September would be bound to create an inflation spiral as bad as the one experienced in 1975.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to expose the weaknesses of this program as a rational housing policy. Other arguments could be raised to deal with it from the fiscal point of view. From that angle, it is obviously plagued with serious blunders. Anyone who sees in this bill anything other than a refusal of fiscal responsibility, a foolish gift that the Progressive Conservative government must make because it promised to do so during the electoral campaign, refuses to see what it is in reality: a bill that shows a lack of vision and the fact that the government is clinging to an unfair, extravagant and economically foolish proposal.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that I was shocked to hear the NDP member for Saskatoon say that the people of Quebec live in conditions that are as unsanitary as those in which the people of northeast Brazil live. I want to point out to him that the poor of Quebec have clean and decent houses, and I quote what he said, if you will allow me:

In the area—

—that is to say, he compares Quebec with the people who live in northeast Brazil. According to me, Mr. Chairman, before saying things like that he should check his data. His words may have exceeded his thoughts but, as a Quebecker, I would invite him to retract what he said and restate the facts, as he should, because this is what he said and I quote:

I make this point now not because there is this type of bug—

—of which he spoke—

—in Canada but because one of my colleagues who now works in the inner section of Montreal—

So this is hearsay, he did not see it personally. I would invite him personally to visit my riding, to visit the people in the east of Montreal; then he will see that the people we have in Quebec, in Montreal, are clean people, people who can take care of themselves; to my mind, they can very well do without this kind of remark, the type a friend of his told him, and I quote:

—told me that, on returning to Canada after working with me for six or seven years in northeast Brazil, he was surprised there was such a similarity between the housing for the poor in Montreal and the housing for the poor in northeast Brazil.

It is really unfair to say such things about the people of the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec. It is terrible, we cannot accept that. So I invite him to withdraw his words and explain further what he meant when he said that. In concluding my remarks, Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: He talked about "bugs", and he thinks we are full of "bugs" but we aren't.

Mr. Savard: Yes, what my colleague is saying is true. He talked about "bugs", and he thinks we are full of "bugs", but we aren't. I am going to tell him that we are clean.

In concluding, Mr. Chairman, I should not like to write a blank cheque without being certain that the housing subsidy program will be included in the bill. Consequently, I voted against passage of this bill because, in my opinion, it does not meet the needs of the elderly and the renters. In other words, we should not take the money out of the pockets of the poor to give it to the rich.

Mr. Rae: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Unfortunately the hon. member for Saskatoon East is not in the House. I believe he is touring Quebec and eastern Canada, the maritime provinces, with my colleague from Winnipeg-Birds Hill to discuss health problems and conditions. However, I should like to assure my colleague, my good friend from Verdun, that if the hon. member for Saskatoon East were here I am sure he would want to clarify his remarks because I know for sure, knowing the hon. member, that he did not intend, and our party did not intend either, to insult the people of Montreal or of any other part of Canada. I feel sure my colleague from Verdun would agree with me, and if the hon. member's words did not convey his thoughts I am sure he would want to clarify his remarks. He meant that there are in Canada deep-rooted and real poverty problems. Instead of handing out a Christmas gift to home owners who obviously do not have the same needs as others, the government would do better to give something to those who really need it.

So I am quite sure that it is something which in his mind my colleague from Verdun shares with our party, and in the name of the member for Saskatoon East I would like to say that he had not the least intention of insulting the people of Montreal. He could just have said the same thing about the people of Toronto. I might have had the same reaction had he talked about my riding in such a manner, but in any case I want to assure the hon. member that my colleague did not mean to insult anybody.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few short comments on Bill C-20, in particular clause 1, in response to some of the discussions I have heard about this very valuable and attractive measure, and to some of the negative comments I have heard in recent days.

Continually we get the message from across the way that this program will cost the government something. It reflects a mentality which effectively says that anything we give up, in the way of leaving tax money in people's pockets, is a cost to government. Nothing could be further from the truth. Governments incur costs by spending, not by relinquishing their access to the taxpayer's purse. In fact, these measures will produce savings to government by reducing levels of taxation and by reducing the need for bureaucratic systems to process that tax revenue. We believe that those dollars ought to be rightfully left in the pockets of people who need them.

That brings me to my second point. I listened to the hon. member for St. Boniface this afternoon make the same error that has been made by other members opposite. That is the error of misleading the people of this country into thinking that this tax credit program, Bill C-20, represents a watering down of our earlier mortgage interest deductibility proposal. Nothing could be further from the truth. This tax credit measure represents a strengthening of the previous proposal. In fact, it will return more money into the pockets of people who earn it than the previous program. It has been said that instead of a $5,000 tax deduction, we are giving people only a $375 tax credit. That is a misleading comparison, because the previous proposal was a program of deductions from taxable income on which tax was calculated. So for Canadians home owners at a tax level in excess of 25 per cent, the previous program would have been more attractive than the present one. But those Canadian home owners who are in tax brackets of less than 25 per cent would have been disadvantaged by the previous proposal.

This proposal is of greater advantage to lower income Canadians who own their own homes than the previous one. Because it has a more positive benefit for Canadians in tax brackets of lower than 25 per cent, the negative impact on higher income Canadians in fact leaves more money in the pockets of low income Canadian home owners, which this program is designed to serve. I want that to be clearly entered on the record, because for far too long I have heard that fact being misrepresented by members on the opposite side.

Another point relates to the constant references made to interest rates in relation to this program. We would not be in the disastrous situation with which we are faced in this country today with high interest rates—because we have to maintain some relationship with the high interest rates in the United States and the western world—if it were not for the fact that our country pursued a policy of deficit financing. This has led to the disastrous state of our economy, a state from which there are no simple escapes, no simple solutions. But I should point out that what we are doing is right in the ball park of what the New Democratic Party has been asking for. The NDP and the Liberals have asked us to somehow subsidize interest rates, to somehow hold down interest rates. That is exactly what this program does.

If one calculates on the basis of current interest rates the benefit of the $375 tax credit, it translates to an interest reduction of roughly 1 per cent for the year 1979. At the end of the full implementation of these measures, the effective interest rate benefit will be between 3 per cent and 4 per cent. If, as we all expect, interest rates will begin to decline in the springtime and drop to levels of 10 per cent and 11 per cent once again, then this program, when it has reached its full implementation, will reduce the effective interest rate by 3 per cent or 4 per cent. Thus the interest rate could be reduced to something like 7 per cent on a residential mortgage.

I do not care how the NDP or the Liberals want to cut it: essentially we are doing something of benefit to Canadians which in a way is equivalent to an interest rate deduction. I, for the life of me, cannot understand how these hon. members can sit there complacently and argue against this very effective and very positive program for which all Canadians will thank this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Chairman, I am extremely grateful to you for allowing me to participate in this debate in Committee of the Whole on clause 1 of Bill C-20. This bill is the result of an election promise. Before the elections, the Tories were prepared to promise anything to get the support of the voters without any consideration for the consequences of such promises. In view of the result of the elections, those same Tories now feel they have to fulfil a promise. They feel all the more strongly about it because having been in power for a mere six months, they have already had to change their minds on the issue of moving the embassy. That is why, Mr. Chairman, they want to have Bill C-20 passed at all costs.

The minister even told us yesterday in this House that the printing of the forms had already been ordered on the assumption that this bill would be passed. Although my colleagues in the official opposition on this side of the House have made a great number of arguments and points against this bill, I would like, Mr. Chairman, to add my voice to those of my colleagues to show why I am personally against it and why, in my opinion, this bill should be abandoned or at least substantially amended to make it more equitable and fair. Before doing so, I must say that in the area of housing, my riding is similar to many others in the sense that several of my constituents want to become home owners, but not at any cost, however. Others, and there are also many of them both among young and older people, will never be able to afford such a luxury. There are even more of them now after the unprecedented rise in interest rate. And finally, my riding has a high percentage of home owners who carry no mortgages.

Renters, older people, home owners without mortgages, Mr. Chairman, are as far as I am concerned all full-fledged Canadians, all taxpayers. They will get no benefits out of the measures introduced under the umbrella of a housing policy. Quite the contrary, they will contribute for a large part to the financing of that program. So it is a plea I am making for those thousands of people who also have a right to improve their lot. Furthermore, their situation requires major and immediate attention.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, the first reason why I think Bill C-20 should be substantially amended is that it greatly discriminates against thousands of Canadians who are nevertheless also concerned with finding a decent home at a reasonable cost they can afford. Not only does this bill not improve their condition, but it makes it substantially worse because it forces them to pay the cost without considering that in the very short term they will have to pay substantial increases as a result of high interest rates and the increase in the cost of home heating oil or perhaps tax increases to pay for the cost of this program that is estimated at about $3 billion when fully matured.

I respectfully submit that a housing policy should definitely apply to all Canadians and not only to a small group. If it must be more generous for some people, it should favour the less privileged, the poorest among us. If we suppose that the bill is aimed at promoting home ownership, I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I am in complete agreement with such a purpose, which is basically and objectively most valid and even most laudable. In this regard, I would like to relate the conclusions of a brief survey that I made among the contractors and lenders of my constituency. No one will be surprised when I say that I have learned that very few loans are presently granted and that accordingly construction has, to all intents and purposes, come to a dead standstill. Why is this? Very simply because of interest rates. In my opinion, this notorious Bill C-20 therefore does not meet its objective, and even worse, the present economic situation is discouraging thousands of Canadians and hundreds of my constituents who wanted to invest in property.

Mr. Chairman, the Progressive Conservative members will probably reply that the interest rates will come back to normal very soon. Even though I am quite sceptical about this possibility in view of their high-handed attitude in the face of what I consider to be a dramatic situation, I believe that the forthcoming oil price increases will slow down as never before the construction of single family dwellings and multiple unit housing in Canada. To summarize, the mover of Bill C-20 wants to give the impression that he is promoting home-buying because this is electorally profitable. In my opinion, reality is very different and even quite the opposite especially if we examine this legislation in the context of the present situation in Canada, and even more so if we refer to the latest Gallup poll, which was most revealing in this regard.

Mr. Chairman, who will benefit from Bill C-20? Only present home owners whose houses are mortgaged. They will naturally be pleased to benefit from a mortgage tax credit. However, this pleasure will change into bitterness when they see the tremendous increase in heating oil costs and when their monthly payments are increased on renewal of their mortgage. Everything points to a loss of a few hundred dollars.

The Minister of Finance has said:

> This is not an income distribution scheme, not at all; it is a scheme which concerns property. Its objective is to help Canadians become home owners.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the bill in its present form will help Canadians become home owners. At most, it will prevent a few Canadians from losing their property. I am quite convinced that the same Canadians would have been more satisfied with a program that could protect them against interest rate increases and ensure stability in heating oil costs. The residential construction market in Canada and especially in Quebec has slowed down considerably in the last month and this will have greatly unfavourable consequences if the Progressive Conservatives do nothing to correct this situation. For that purpose I believe they must amend the bill and try to find real solutions through genuine and not phony assistance. If they maintain the attitude they have adopted since May 22, they will be responsible for, not to say guilty of, destroying any hope which young families and young couples might entertain to buy their own house some day.

If we believe the Progressive Conservative government, Mr. Chairman, in coming months and even in coming years Canadians will have to live with government restraint policies. Therefore, they question now the universality concept of some programs. They repeat every day that they will consolidate as much capital as possible in productive expenses, that every expense will be carefully considered for investment in the most promising sectors to stimulate and restore the economy, or so the government members say. Although I am not an economist, I do not understand how it is possible to reconcile such a policy with Bill C-20. Indeed, they propose to spend billions of dollars in a sector where there will not be any economic spin-off, no new employment in a foreseeable future. On the contrary such a measure may place our economy in a complete state of stagnation. If at least the program were fair, but it is dramatically unfair.

No matter what the approach is, Mr. Chairman, this bill is completely useless in my opinion, and moreover it is extremely expensive. Its impact would be disastrous. I will point out, with all due respect, that the capacity of Canadians to pay is not unlimited and that in a very short time, with such actions, we will quickly reach those limits. The bill is only an attempt to follow up on an awkward and irresponsible election promise, and it should not have been introduced in this House, once again taking into account the present state of the economy.

Mr. Chairman, we must devote all our energies to make sure that over the next few months the government will spend the taxpayers' money in an effort to raise or at least maintain their standard of living, instead of increasing the deficit without any justification.

But, all things considered, I do not want to be negative but essentially realistic and positive. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the government should withdraw its decision, review its position and seek out means—we would certainly be ready to co-operate—to make home ownership easier for low-income Canadians, by reviewing the high mortgage interest and establishing programs to slow down the rate of increase of energy costs.

Bill C-20 is discriminatory, unjust and useless, and the government should also forget its election promise and work on a really fair legislation such as, for instance, a national assistance program to renters who are mostly single people, young couples, old people, single parent families, of which there are quite a large number in my riding, Mr. Chairman. Even though its cost is astronomical, the program put forward by the Tories exclude all these Canadians, and it is for that reason, at the risk of repeating myself, that I must oppose this bill. This promise which initially gave much hope to many Canadians has now become a very sensitive and especially very controversial question.

The great majority, myself included, see in this program a very badly conceived idea, falling far short of the intended objectives and finally introduced in circumstances that void all effects it could have. Moreover, all agree that its limited and temporary advantages will result directly in excessive costs, for much longer than the program will last.

I think the Canadian Building magazine describes perfectly well and particularly clearly the consequences of the bill. Here is what it says:

> It is a clumsy, discriminatory and counter-productive appropriation of capital funds. It will distort the tax structure, the rental market and the money markets and will result in higher home production costs, interest rates, property taxes, inflation, personal debts and federal deficits.

Those were the remarks I wanted to make to the House in the debate on clause 1 of Bill C-20.

● (1740)

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make two points in this debate. The first is in response to many of the comments made by members of the Conservative party to the effect that Saskatchewan has a similar tax plan to the one they have put forward. I should like to make a couple of brief comments to point out that what the Conservative party is saying is not true at all. There are a couple of very significant differences between this government's plan and the one in Saskatchewan. The Saskatchewan plan is a lot more progressive and is weighted more toward people on lower incomes. In fact, the tax credit becomes larger for people on smaller incomes. In other words, the tax credit is less when people earn higher incomes. That is a very important difference between the government's plan and the Saskatchewan plan.

The other important difference is that the Saskatchewan plan is tied to a rental program. They realize that people who rent homes are just as entitled to some kind of tax assistance from the federal government as people who own their homes. I thought it important to make those two points in response to spokesmen for the Conservative party, who have claimed that the Saskatchewan NDP introduced a plan which is the same as the one they propose. Those are two very important and fundamental differences that separate the plan of Premier Blakeney from the plan of the Minister of Finance.

I also believe that the plan before the House is, in essence, a Christmas gift to the wealthier half of our society, or perhaps the wealthier one-third or one-fifth of our society. It is certainly a Christmas gift for people in my own income bracket and this year it will mean a $375 tax saving. People like us do not need it, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: Until the mortgage comes due!

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, I know, until the mortgage comes due. Then I face the increased cost. In this taxation year, however, it is a gift of $375. Little Joe is playing Santa Claus for me and he has wrapped it up in nice paper and put it under my Christmas tree. I appreciate that and I am sure people in the same income bracket will appreciate it as well.

The purpose of this House, Mr. Chairman, is surely to see to it that people in greater need than ourselves receive some of the riches and wealth that they deserve. I want to make the point that instead of giving the money to me and to other members of this House who have mortgages, the government should do what the Saskatchewan government is doing, and that is make sure that the credit becomes smaller as income increases and also that the program will aid those people who rent their homes.

The second point I want to make is that I think there is a growing disrespect for Parliament by the Conservative party that sits across the way. I know that the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who was the former member for Prince Albert, would have made the point if he were here. He complained many times in the past about the Liberal government printing a taxation form before the relevant bill was passed, but again the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue have had the taxation forms printed before the bill is passed. I ask, Mr. Chairman, what kind of disrespect is this for Parliament, for this institution that is supposed to be supreme? They are pre-judging the institution. How do they know that we will pass this measure carte blanche, without amendment, or that we are not going to change the thoughts of chairman John who has just come into the chamber? Is it not arrogant of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue to have the tax forms printed before the bill goes through the House?

This is a reflection of the Conservative party's disrespect for Parliament, Mr. Chairman. On Friday, a motion for closure will be brought before the House. Surely after such a short debate on this bill we should not be faced with closure.

Mr. Clarke: After a filibuster.

Mr. Crosbie: A "taxabuster". You are trying to bust our taxes.

Mr. Clarke: It is time allocation and you know it.

Mr. Nystrom: Time allocation? What a difference there is when a member moves 20 feet from this side of the House to that side of the House, Mr. Chairman!

An hon. Member: You will never make it.

Mr. Nystrom: The very same people used to call it closure when they sat on this side of the House. It seems to me they are overzealous, Mr. Chairman. A week ago this party and the Liberal party offered to have a vote on second reading but the Conservatives—particularly the hon. member from Owen Sound, I think—filibustered for 35 minutes. There was no vote because they filibustered their own bill.

An hon. Member: Sit down and we will vote.

Mr. Nystrom: This bill could have gone through the House on second reading six or seven days sooner than it did had the Conservatives not filibustered it. Now they are talking about closure and that is an utter disgrace which, I think, reflects their disrespect for Parliament.

We have never seen so many senators in a cabinet as there are now. Senator de Cotret is a member of the inner cabinet, as are many other important ministers, but the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, who are very important figures, are not in the inner cabinet. The senator who was a defeated candidate was rewarded with a seat in the other place and chairs a very important committee in cabinet—

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville is not speaking in a completely irrelevant manner. I do not think that what he has said in the last few minutes has anything whatsoever to do with the matter before the House. I would ask for your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that clause 1 is now under discussion.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I was speaking about the Conservative party's disrespect for Parliament, as exhibited by the fact that they had tax forms printed before the bill was through the House. This is not the first time we have seen this happen in the short period they have been in power. Yesterday the Chairman ruled that debate on clause 1 is very wide. It seems to me that one of the most relevant things to be discussed is the fact that the Conservatives had the tax forms printed in advance. It is something that the Canadian people should know about. It is symbolic of the fact that they did not call this Parliament back for four or five months after the election. We could have been doing work like this; we could have had a chance to debate this bill and move appropriate amendments to it. The fact that important ministers are sitting over there in the Senate where we cannot question them does not show much respect for Parliament. I know many capable Conservatives sitting over there, like the hon. member from Vancouver who has just interjected, who are just as capable, if not more so, as Mr. de Cotret or a couple of others in the Senate, but the Prime Minister has disregarded democracy and disregarded the House of Commons.

If I could quote Mr. Diefenbaker when the selection of the cabinet was made, I am sure there are backbenchers who would agree that they should not have been passed over. As I said, I think the party across the way is disrespectful of Parliament. It should be noted at this stage that it should not be introducing closure and it should have not printed the taxation forms. That is real gall and arrogance on the part of the Minister of Finance—the Ayatollah of Newfoundland. He thinks he can get his own way with everything. We cannot let this bill pass without protesting the fact that they disregard and are disrespectful of this institution, and many of the Conservative party members who have been here in the past I am sure are very unhappy with the new Conservative party that sits across the way.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Chairman, only a few minutes remain before six o'clock, and I would like to take this opportunity to comment briefly on the legislation now before us. I listened earlier to our hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, who was coming back to the House, and I had the feeling that had he had a choice between the proposals to initiate in the House, and especially during the preparation of his budget which is very much on his mind now, surely this measure would not have been his top priority. Having known the Minister of Finance for some years, I am convinced he had his mind on something quite different than this election promise. As he said himself over the last few weeks, his margin of manoeuvre is altogether narrow. Members opposite blame the previous government for the somewhat tight financial situation he was referring to, but by proposing this election promise of the Progressive Conservative Party the Minister of Finance is committing government revenues, because this will reduce government revenues by more than $2 billion over the next few years. The fourth year of operation at least entails a loss of revenue of over $2 billion.

I am convinced that listening to the debate and getting acquainted with the proposal, Canadians were originally interested, but I see things differently. And there is a specific point with which I would like to deal. I wonder whether the Progressive Conservative government, when they took that political commitment to capture votes of course, thought more of it than of really helping the housing industry.

Furthermore, I am not sure whether the government has consulted with the provinces before proceeding with its plan. What I mean is this: in the proposal brought forward by the Minister of Finance and the government, we have two elements: the first one aimed at reducing the cost of interest. This is fine since it comes under the jurisdiction of the federal government as we are responsible to a very large extent for the interest rates in the country.

But as concerns the second element which proposes to reduce by way of a tax credit the property taxes paid at the municipal level, I have some reservations because that political party has consistently accused us, when we formed the government, of interfering with provincial responsibilities. None of my colleagues has discussed this aspect of the government's proposal. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance has actually reflected on this. They claim to be the advocates of provincial autonomy and they say that they do not want the government to interfere with the provincial jurisdiction but is this not what they are going to do in indirectly subsidizing property taxes? I think that the minister should have set himself another objective as you can easily suppose that the benefit of some $62.50, for instance, that will result from the implementation of this legislation when it is passed, if it does go through, might be very quickly diverted by the municipal authorities. We all know that municipal authorities are always short of money. We all know that they must continuously appeal to provincial governments to get some assistance. It is obvious, Mr. Chairman, that in the coming years, if this legislation is implemented, provincial and municipal governments will try to recover that money and this taxation field that we are virtually giving up. As home owners will be subsidized indirectly by us, some of them at least, the municipalities will be tempted to occupy that field. As all home owners will not benefit from this program you will tell me that municipalities may have to resist this temptation because if they raise the property taxes, these will apply to all citizens, whether or not they benefit from this tax credit. I would like us to reflect on this, and I would like to say two things in this regard: either we do not subsidize this part of the interest. Thus, we would only be subsidizing the property taxes and this would benefit all home owners who have to pay them. This would be a little less discriminatory. Or else, we do not concern ourselves at all with this part, and we only pay an indirect subsidy by way of a tax exemption for lower interest, since that is where we stand as a Canadian Parliament which is directly involved.

I would like us to reflect on this and I would like the Minister of Finance, when he is given the opportunity to speak, probably during this debate, to tell us whether he has consulted with the provinces on this aspect of the proposal and whether he has heard the opinion of the provincial finance ministers or municipal affairs ministers on this aspect of the proposal. It would be interesting to know their point of view, Mr. Chairman, because the municipalities are most certainly a creation of the provinces. As we have said, the provinces provided the municipalities with the authority to collect property taxes and they certainly have the responsibility and the right to do so.

REQUEST THAT SUPPLEMENTARY IMPORTS OF POULTRY FROM U.S. BE STOPPED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, considering the dire straits in which the chicken industry is in Quebec and in all Canada.

Yesterday I received a copy of a telegram which the Quebec poultry producers' union sent to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) in which they urged him to order an immediate stop to any issue of supplementary import quotas to the United States, since the present inventories and physical production facilities are sufficient to meet the demand of the Canadian market. Besides, the Quebec Fédération des producteurs de volailles, supported by the UPA, is worried about the excess production of chicken piling up in storage facilities in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia. Therefore, I move:

That the government give instructions to have any supplementary imports of chicken from the United States stopped immediately, that the agreement on import quotas with the United States be re-negotiated to the level of egg import quotas, that the government submit the request of Canadian producers to GATT arbitration if the Americans disagree.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ELECTION PROMISE TO REDUCE CHEESE IMPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. Due to the fact that this government has been in office more than six months now, and that the dairy producers of this country are still awaiting the delivery of the election promise, namely, to reduce cheese imports by some 10 million pounds, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan):

That this government take immediate action to deliver this election promise, and if not that the Prime Minister make a public apology for deliberately misleading our Canadian dairy producers during the May 22 election campaign.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. An application for unanimous consent must retain parliamentary form.

REQUIREMENT THAT MINISTERS COMPLY WITH CONFLICT OF INTEREST REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of recent press reports that two government ministers, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry (Mr. Huntington) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), have stated they found complying with government conflict of interest regulations regarding making public, or blind-trusting, their personal financial affairs so onerous as to cause them to question their commitment to public life, and since the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) are seeking to be exempted from the regulations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That in view of their contempt of Parliament, the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board be suspended from their ministerial posts, without pay, until they comply with the regulations.

LAND CLAIMS—LEGALITY OF POWERS CONFERRED UPON YUKON TERRITORY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity. Whereas on December 5, lawyers for the Council of Yukon Indians sent a telex to the Minister of Justice alleging that the new powers recently conferred by the government on the Yukon territory were unconstitutional and illegal, and whereas the Council for Yukon Indians have requested the Minister of Justice to direct a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada under section 55 of the Supreme Court Act to determine the constitutionality of these changes, I move:

That this House direct the government to make such a reference to the Supreme Court as quickly as possible so that these legal questions can be settled in order to facilitate land claims negotiations and planning for the pipeline in the Yukon.

PENSIONS

INCREASE IN PENSIONS OF PERSONS INJURED IN 1917 HALIFAX EXPLOSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. George Cooper (Halifax): I rise, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Sixty-two years ago today, in history's largest non-nuclear explosion, 2,000 citizens of Halifax were killed and 9,000 injured following a collision in Halifax harbour of a munitions ship bound for the front lines during World War I. Fifty-two people still receive spouse's pensions, or pensions for blindness caused by the explosion, fixed at only 71 per cent of the equivalent pensions received by combat veterans of World War I.

In view of the inadequacy of these pensions, in many cases, to meet the requirements of the recipients, and in view of the understanding long held by many that pensions would be paid as if the explosion had occurred at the front lines, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), and concurred in by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That, in the opinion of this House, the government consider bringing forward legislation at the earliest opportunity to increase pensions to those injured in the Halifax explosion to the same levels as those received by other World War I casualties.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only upon the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

In view of the fact that exactly a week ago today the nation was treated to the spectacle on TV of members of the Saskatchewan, NDP government, led by their premier, crossing a picket line, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming):

That this House continues to request that the Minister of Agriculture renegotiate the chicken import quotas agreement with the United States and, if that is not possible, takes the present levels to GATT for arbitration.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF IMMIGRATION POLICY FOR BOAT PEOPLE

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the minister announced yet another flip-flop in government policy, namely, that he would be reversing the very successful boat people matching program. The new leadership which the government is providing means that for every boat person sponsored by private citizens, our government will sponsor one less, rather than one more. I believe the minister and the government are caving in to the backlash. Will the hon. gentleman not acknowledge that the people have been misled by this reversal of policy? Will he not change his mind and reinstate one of the most successful programs he has established, and abandon this reactionary change?

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The commitment of this government to accept 50,000 refugees by the end of 1980 remains firm. That is the Canadian commitment which will consist of privately sponsored refugees and government sponsored refugees. Twenty-one thousand of those refugees have already arrived on our shores; the balance will be coming, hopefully, within less than a year.

Rather than a "caving in", as the hon. member alleges, this is an expansion of the program because we have suddenly recognized—it was not really sudden, though it may have been sudden for the hon. member opposite—the very serious problem which exists in Kampuchea and in Thailand, where some 600,000 people are fleeing for their very lives. We want to free up sufficient funds from the existing program through a shift from government to private sponsorship. This will enable Canadian contributions of food and medical aid to be given to the unfortunate victims in Kampuchea. That is an expansion of the government's program.

Mr. Kaplan: I should like to ask the minister further about this so-called expansion. In the statement this morning, the hon. gentleman announced that $1,300 would be saved by each of the non-sponsored refugees.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Kaplan: About a month ago he indicated in an interview he gave to The Toronto Sun that the cost of sponsoring a refugee was $2,300. The difference between $1,300 and $2,300, $1,000, has been taken away per refugee from programs in this area. So how can he call it an expansion? If he insists on transferring it, against our views, why does he not transfer the full $2,300, instead of apparently chiselling $1,000 per refugee for some other government program?

Mr. Atkey: It is hardly chiselling to take $1,000 or $1,300 and apply that sum to food or medical aid for a situation which the hon. member should well know is far more serious than that of the boat people. There are 2.5 million people in danger of their lives in Kampuchea, and this government is determined to do something about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: It is because of the warm and generous response of the Canadian voluntary sector in sponsoring, now, 26,000 refugees that the government is able to free additional moneys to provide assistance in Kampuchea.

Mr. Kaplan: That warm and generous response emerged because of the government's matching program, so I want to ask the minister whether he will not consult again with those groups he told us he met with yesterday, groups that he claimed were warmly supportive of his program but which, in fact, feel abandoned and betrayed by his decision. Will he consult with them again and reconsider this reactionary policy?

Mr. Atkey: Consultation with regard to this program has been ongoing, not only with the voluntary sector—and there were a good number of representatives in Ottawa yesterday—but also with the provincial governments which have played a major role in determining the absorbative capacity of Canada in terms of the acceptance of refugees, and in terms of the Canadian responsibility to provide food and medical aid in Kampuchea.

The hon. member seems to be unable or unwilling to see the relationship between the freeing up of moneys, the provision of governmental moneys in Kampuchea, and the continuing challenge on a one-for-one basis which exists under our program.

AID TO KAMPUCHEA

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Having stated in committee today that the amount of money to be directed to aid the starving Kampucheans will be determined indirectly by the number of Southeast Asia refugees sponsored privately into Canada, would the minister please explain at what time and for what possible reason Canada's policy on emergency aid to a starving, war-torn country should be linked to a nebulous and changing domestic immigration policy?

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member opposite, unlike the other opposition party in this House, is unable to see the relationship between the two problems. There is a very deep and serious problem in Southeast Asia. Canada has a number of responses. We have a political response that is pursued by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We have a refugee resettlement response that is symbolized by the 50,000 coming to our shores before the end of 1980. We also have a humanitarian response that is reflected in terms of the food and medical aid which we will provide to that part of the world.

We have expanded the program, and we will find additional moneys to provide assistance in that part of the world along with other countries of the west, the United States, France, Australia, West Germany, Japan. Canada will do its bit.

FUNDS FOR CAMBODIAN RELIEF

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Clearly, the Secretary of State for External Affairs on November 5 made a commitment to the United Nations, that she cannot live up to, of $15 million for Cambodian relief.

Some hon. Members: Louder.

Mr. Stollery: The government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stollery: Will the minister explain to the House why the same moneys originally taken from Canadian employment programs were given to the boat people, and that same money is now being taken away from the boat people and turned over to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and why the Minister of Employment and Immigration has not, instead, taken the money from the advertising budget for his department instead of moneys meant for people in dire straits in this world?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I can assure hon. members opposite that that commitment was made, will be kept, and perhaps will be expanded, as a result of the program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: At whose expense?

Mr. Atkey: What the hon. member opposite fails to realize is that this, being a very expensive program—and no one denies that—there are many expenses involved, whether with regard to privately sponsored refugees or publicly sponsored refugees. Those expenses will be met by this government. However, unlike the party opposite, we are not going to turn off the enthusiasm and the voluntary generosity which has come from the private sector in Canadian society to assist in a Canadian response and not merely a Canadian government response.

ENERGY

PLANS TO DEAL WITH POSSIBLE OIL SHORTAGE THIS WINTER

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does the minister agree with the statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday in this House concerning oil supplies that, and I quote:

The National Energy Board has now, as a result of increased consumption in Canada and some other activities, come to the conclusion that there may be limited shortages this winter in Canada.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I always agree with the Prime Minister, who is always very perceptive with respect to this particular situation. The fact of the matter is that I indicated to the hon. member in committee this morning—and I mentioned this during the course of preceding months this fall and last summer—that we are and have been in a very tight situation in Canada. Naturally, in a tight situation there are going to be circumstances in which there could, indeed, be shortages of a temporary nature.

We are hoping that the situation will not deteriorate any further. We are continuing to take steps, on a daily basis, in consultation with importers and industry in general, to try to tide us through this winter. The Prime Minister is right: there could very well be interruptions in terms of supply in the course of this winter. But we are doing everything possible to avoid that situation and we are taking every initiative we can.

Mr. Symes: Now that we have that clear admission about the possibility of shortages, the question is what action the government is prepared to take. In that regard, I have a question for the minister which relates to a confidential report given to him last week by the National Energy Board, since revealed somewhat in the text of the telegram I have here from the board to the deputy minister of energy in Ontario, sent two days ago, in which the minister was advised of the very precarious situation in eastern Canada and that we would need an additional 2 million barrels of distillates as of the end of November.

Given the fact that now diesel and home heating oil supplies are down 15 per cent in Ontario and eastern Canada over the same amount last year at this time, what specific action is the government taking to make up this shortfall so that the shortages will not, in fact, happen over the next few months?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have indicated on previous occasions, as well, that we are in a position, after the actions taken under the previous administration, of building up the inventories in our country to an acceptable level. It is quite true that we have been striving to accomplish that over the time we have had this responsibility as the government. The fact is that I and my department, in the course of discussions with industry, have been working very closely with them to determine what can be done in the way of import requirements on the part of each of the companies, and what we can do to bring in additional product in order to meet our requirements this winter.

There have been instances, which I have mentioned in the House, of various companies, such as Imperial and Gulf, being able to indicate that they will be obtaining additional imports of product for us to help tide us through the winter.

Mr. Symes: The National Energy Board indicated to the minister that there were three courses of action that could be taken to try to alleviate the supply problem. The minister has alluded to one, which is increasing imports. The other was instructing refineries to convert from gasoline production to home heating production. The third was curtailing exports. It is in the latter regard that I should like to put a question to the minister.

Given the fact that we are currently exporting 75,000 barrels a day of fuel oil products, half of which are home heating oil supplies, and given this precarious supply situation, is the minister prepared, today, to recommend to the National Energy Board the cancellation or curtailment of those exports to the United States? Surely Canadian interests come first in this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In fact, as the hon. member knows, the National Energy Board has Canadian interests very much in mind as part of its mandate with respect to applications for exports of product, and this is a prerequisite and a condition upon which any licence for export is undertaken. The fact of the matter is that we are canvassing a number of possibilities to increase the inventory we have. I have taken steps to reduce general exports in terms of crude to the United States, to supply our domestic needs.

Naturally, I will be glad to look into the matter raised by the hon. member with the National Energy Board and receive an up-to-date report from them, so that I can assure the hon. member that I am taking all steps to get us through the winter, all steps available to us in light of the situation in which we find ourselves.

POULTRY INDUSTRY—INQUIRY WHETHER REPORT RECEIVED FROM COMMITTEE STUDYING SUPPLEMENTARY IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, further to the telegram the Prime Minister received yesterday from the UPA, and in view of the very serious difficulties the poultry producers are now experiencing, which will surely lead to bankruptcies in 1980, I should like the Minister of Agriculture to tell the House whether or not the committee that was created to study additional quotas, the renegotiation of import quotas of poultry and the redistribution of import quotas among the various poultry importers, has advised him in that regard. If not, is the committee now sitting continuously in view of the urgency of the situation across the country?

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the committee is active and, indeed, it has made some recommendations to me. I have discussed those recommendations with my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. At this point in time—and, I think, for the foreseeable future—we will be in a position to follow those recommendations.

POULTRY INDUSTRY—PROBLEM IN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that production in the poultry industry requires between 11 and 13 weeks, that the enormous inventory of chicken which is accumulating will soon become worthless in the hands of the stockers, and that the Prime Minister received yesterday a telegram from the UPA, will the minister reach a decision, as he promised he would and as a politician should, or will he remain indifferent to this problem the industry is facing both in Quebec and Ontario?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this minister has never been at odds with the industry or at odds with my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am getting a little tired of people trying to misinterpret our remarks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Arrogance.

Mr. Wise: There is no difference between us whatsoever. On many occasions both he and I have said before the Standing Committee on Agriculture that we want to co-operate and consult on a day to day basis with people in the industry, thus the reason for establishing this industry committee. Both of us have said that we want to be in the position in the very near future, or as soon as possible, so that the national industry can provide a sufficient quantity of product from domestic sources to supply the domestic market. To this point in time, we have achieved that. I think there is sufficient good will in the industry, and certainly there is good will between the industry and the government, to achieve that goal as soon as possible. I am quite satisfied that we have achieved that today.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

INQUIRY RESPECTING NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC AND POULTRY PRODUCERS' UNION

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Given the telegram forwarded by the Union des producteurs agricoles to the right hon. Prime Minister, can the minister tell us what consultations he had with the Quebec government and with UPA representatives? How can he explain that the telegram mentions that the federal government should consult the Quebec authorities on this matter, that it should reconsider its agreement with the United States and, finally, that it should immediately stop allowing supplementary quotas? More precisely, I would like to know what negotiations the minister had with his Quebec colleagues both at the government and at the UPA level.

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated on a number of occasions, I communicate very regularly and quite frequently with my Quebec counterpart. If there is any question on any member's mind in the House as to the inability of the minister of agriculture of the province of Quebec to communicate his feelings to the Minister of Agriculture of Canada, they should remove those doubts immediately. We have consulted with the industry.

Of course, we must recognize that the national board is made up of provincial parts. There is all kinds of input from the people within the industry in that province, like any other province. There is no difference between the position taken by the minister of agriculture for the province of Quebec on that particular issue and the position taken by the minister of agriculture for the province of Ontario. I agree with them and I support them. We are working with the industry to reach that goal as soon as possible.

FINANCE

THE BUDGET—TAX ON GASOLINE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In light of the increase in the price of oil and gasoline by some oil companies yesterday, is the Minister of Finance in a position to assure the House, since nobody has given any indication to the industry, that he might raise the tax on gasoline next week so that the companies will be in a position to raise their prices before the minister raises taxes?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, certainly I have not given anybody any indication that there will be any increases in any taxes. That would be the last thing I would think of doing. If I was going to do it, it certainly would not be done to the oil companies. No one from the government has communicated with the oil companies about price increases.

As far as the increases of Imperial Oil are concerned, whether they are justified or not justified the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are looking into that. The fact remains that we do not have any wage or price control system at the present time, so there is no law which prevents them from raising their prices. It certainly has no connection with the budget which is to come down on Tuesday. I hope that budget will have many pleasant surprises.

REASON CANADA-MEXICO OIL AGREEMENT NOT RATIFIED

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the face of concern about oil supply in the immediate future, and the inaccurate and unsatisfactory answers yesterday given by the Prime Minister to my question about Mexican arrangements, will the minister now give the House a clear explanation why the Canada-Mexico oil agreement, which provides for the sale to Canada of 50,000 barrels per day in 1980 and 100,000 barrels per day in 1981, has not yet been ratified and implemented by the new Government of Canada?

Furthermore, at the earliest opportunity will he make a full statement and table the pertinent documents and records of all negotiations, if any, on this matter that have taken place with the Mexican government since May 22?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I reject out of hand any suggestion the Prime Minister was not, in fact, forthcoming. In fact, he told the hon. member and the House yesterday precisely the state of affairs in the Mexican negotiations.

Mr. Andras: It has not been signed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The hon. member knows that he is less than candid with the House. He knows full well that the interim agreement provided that the initial shipment of upward of 50,000 barrels per day would take place during 1980. The Mexican government is now—

Miss Bégin: He said that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We are having ongoing discussions with the Mexican government. We are continuing at a satisfactory rate our discussions with respect to the availability of supply by them. We are continuing those negotiations and have had exchanges of delegations and will continue to do so in the weeks ahead. The fact is that we are satisfied we will be able to bring a final agreement into place some time in the near future, that is to say, some time prior to the visit to Canada of the Mexican president.

STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS ON CANADA-MEXICO OIL AGREEMENT

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, that negotiation has not been resolved, and it is now seven months later. Let me try another one with the Prime Minister.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Oh, you can do better than that.

Mr. Andras: Following my question about Canada-Mexico relations yesterday, will the Prime Minister confirm that it is only really within the last several days that the Canadian ambassador to Mexico has begun conversations with Mexican officials about the renewal of the invitation for President Portillo's visit to Canada, which was scheduled for May and postponed because of the election, and in fact that no formal invitation as of now—seven months later—has gone from the Prime Minister to the president of Mexico?

If that is essentially correct—which I am told it is—then why has there been this neglect and delay which, along with these other measures of inaction, is causing a cooling of relationships with Mexico, a very valued friend of this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all, it should be clear that there is no cooling of relationships between Canada and Mexico. Second, it should be clear that the reason a formal invitation has not gone forward is that the President of Mexico has not yet been able to indicate to us the precise dates on which he would be free to come in May or in June.

There have been extensive conversations among officials of the foreign office of Canada and officials of the foreign office, and perhaps the office of the President of Mexico, with relation to his visit. There have been a number of conversations and discussions involving representatives of the Government of Canada and representatives of the government of Mexico regarding the bringing into effect of the oil agreement between Canada and Mexico.

As the hon. member will remember from his days in the ministry, the agreement between Canada and Mexico was one which was not specific as to delivery dates or quantities of oil and, indeed, cannot be until the President of Mexico, under the regulations of his country, is in a position to determine the reserves in Mexico and, consequently, the amounts available for export to Canada or to other countries.

An hon. Member: Olé.

SAME WAGES AS MEN FOR SAME WORK

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State in his capacity as the minister responsible for women. In light of the report of the Department of Labour that the gap between the wages earned by men and women is widening, rather than narrowing—55.6 per cent wider in 1977 than in 1972—and that in all but two of 48 industrial occupations men earn substantially higher wages than women for the same work, what measures is the government taking to oblige the government itself and the companies doing business with the government to pay the same wages to women as to men for the same work?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised an extremely important question in light of the disturbing report from the Department of Labour. It points out, again, the situation vis-à-vis the salary levels of women which do not remain a constant factor, and in some very important ways there has been a very serious situation with a backward step being taken in respect of the actual salary levels of men and women.

It is for this reason that two years ago Parliament passed, as the hon. member may recall, the principle of equal pay for work of equal value, which remains a principle for this government and, of course, in pursuit of which the Human Rights Commission is attempting to make it a practice. In addition, the member will know that we are very much committed to developing an over-all employment strategy for women. I have had meetings with provincial counterparts, and we hope before too long to be able to give more explicit details.

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, the minister does not know the difference between equal pay for equal work and equal pay for work of equal value. I was talking about equal pay for equal work, which is a basic minimum. I was not even asking for that yet elusive goal of equal pay for work of equal value: it is equal pay for equal work that we are first of all trying to seek.

I would like, as a supplementary question, to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration, since only a few companies on government contracts—and only a very few—have signed affirmative action agreements, when the government will make it obligatory for businesses and companies with government contracts or receiving financial assistance from the government to sign affirmative action agreements.

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of assessing and evaluating the program of voluntary compliance by companies who contract with the federal government. I am not yet satisfied that the voluntary approach, with some promotion, will not work. However, I will have in my hands before the end of the calendar year a study both as to the federal contracts compliance aspect of the program and as to the affirmative action program.

I hope, frankly, to go to cabinet either before the end of the calendar year or early in the new year with a proposal for the advancement of both the affirmative action program, not only for women but for the handicapped and natives, and a federal contract compliance program that will achieve the objectives stated by the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications and the hon. member opposite.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LAND CLAIMS—LEGALITY OF POWERS CONFERRED UPON YUKON TERRITORY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice, but since we cannot question him in this House and they will not let us in the other place to do that, I will put the question to the Prime Minister.

Has the Prime Minister received and read the telex sent to the Minister of Justice yesterday by the Council of Yukon Indians alleging that the recently expanded powers given by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Yukon government were unconstitutional and illegal, and asking the Minister of Justice to refer these matters to the Supreme Court under section 55 of the Supreme Court Act, and is the Prime Minister ready to make that reference to the Supreme Court so we can settle these important legal questions quickly and not impede land claim negotiations and the building of the northern pipeline?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should not complain to me about his leader's failure to name him to the other place.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: In answer to the question he directed to me, I have not seen that telegram which was directed to the Minister of Justice. I suggest that if he has supplementary questions regarding the substance of the matter, he direct them to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. When is he going to start respecting our system of responsible government and appoint a minister of justice in this House where the elected representatives of the Canadian people can question him? Does he not realize that the Minister of Justice, as Attorney General, has very special responsibilities that cannot be handled by an acting minister?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, there has been a reflection cast upon the capacities of the ministers who respond in this House, a reflection which I think on reflection the hon. member will want to withdraw.

Mr. Allmand: Not at all.

Mr. Clark: There is no question at all that there is within the House a capacity for members to put questions to acting ministers in relation to those ministers who serve in the other place, in the same way as exists in relation to ministers who are absent from this House by reasons of business elsewhere. If the hon. member is telling me that he thinks it would be preferable for the Government of Canada to be constituted with inadequate representation from the province of Quebec, then that is a proposal that I reject outright.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING CHRYSLER CANADA—BENEFITS FOR CANADIAN WORKERS

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to question the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Whelan: Because he is in the other place and he is from Ontario. I am not able to question the Minister of State for International Trade because he is not here today. If I may, I would like to question the Prime Minister.

During the discussions that took place among ministers and the Canadian-U.S. Chrysler officials, was there any discussion about a price-wage freeze of three years on the workers in Canada, and was there any discussion about the laws that affect the Canadian workers' benefits here in Canada?

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry): Mr. Speaker, these negotiations are very deep, very serious and they are at an advanced stage. Nothing will be done here with the Canadian position until the U.S. position is finalized. The details are well known to both parties and negotiations have been going at a very positive pace, but the fundamental issue is that nothing will be said or done here until the situation in the United States is clear to us.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry. I want to ask whether he will keep in mind, and remind his colleagues, that in any further discussions the workers themselves should be informed about what is going to be done either for them or to them.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the very concern of this government for the workers is the reason we are in these negotiations with Chrysler. This time we are going to insist that there be staying power in the Chrysler organization before we get involved in permanent commitments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

PLANS TO DEAL WITH LAY-OFFS IN AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. If, as I hope, the $1 billion Chrysler expansion takes place in Canada with federal government assistance, no doubt there will be enough jobs in Windsor, the principal site of Chrysler Canada production, in the long run; but in the short run there is a serious unemployment situation, with new lay-offs taking place daily, so that Windsor has probably the highest rate of unemployment in the industrialized part of the country but is not eligible for assistance under the Canada Works program. May I ask the minister what plans the government has to deal with the continuing lay-offs in the automotive industry?

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the lay-offs in the automotive industry is, of course, of great concern to this government. We are monitoring very closely the situation in Windsor and in other locations. I have said on a number of occasions in this House that Canada Manpower consultative services are available in lay-off situations which provide committees and consultative services in terms of the services that can be made available to individual workers, whether that is unemployment insurance or, more important, whether retraining opportunities are available, or work-sharing, or other programs within the purview of my particular department.

As the hon. member knows, there will be a full exposition of the government's employment strategy next week, first, as part of the budget debate and subsequent to that, of course, in the context of the budget debate.

Oral Questions

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

CHRYSLER CANADA—ACTION TO ENSURE VIABILITY OF CORPORATION AND MAINTAIN CANADIAN JOBS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry has said that no decision on aid to Chrysler Canada will be made until there is a decision by the United States Congress. I want to ask the Prime Minister if he will not change that attitude, in view of the fact that opinion in the Congress is sharply divided on helping Chrysler U.S. and a favourable decision announced, at least in principle, to help Chrysler Canada could well tilt the balance in the Congress in favour of helping Chrysler U.S.

This is essential in order to ensure the viability of Chrysler Canada, since it exports some 70 per cent of its production to the United States. If the Prime Minister is really interested in maintaining jobs in Canada, surely he will change his position. I ask him if he is going to do that today.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): I will try to be brief in answering that question, Mr. Speaker, which is a repetition of one put yesterday. I will certainly indicate, as I did yesterday, that if an arrangement is worked out between the United States and Chrysler, we will be prepared to consider an arrangement between Canada and Chrysler. But certainly we are not going to signal our agreement to an arrangement whose details we cannot know.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): You must know.

Mr. Gray: A supplementary question to the Prime Minster, Mr. Speaker. Does he not realize that if there is not a favourable decision in the U.S. Congress to help Chrysler U.S., then the viability of Chrysler Canada and its affiliates, even with support from the federal government, will be very questionable? Does he not see the common sense of indicating a decision in principle now, in order to make sure that Chrysler Canada will have an outlet for production in the United States? Does he not see this obvious point?

Mr. Clark: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is precisely that obvious point that we have been arguing, that it is not going to be possible for the Government of Canada to come to any arrangement with Chrysler until we know that there is a firm arrangement in relation to Chrysler and the United States government—to the U.S. government and the parent corporation. We have indicated in this House that if there is such an agreement, we would agree in principle to working out the details of an arrangement in Canada.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is not what you said yesterday.

[Mr. Atkey.]

ORGANIZED LABOUR

UNIONIZATION OF COASTAL FISHERMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Could he tell the House and the country where he and his officials stand with regard to the studies which I believe have been undertaken in the fishing industry for the organization of the fishermen on the east coast and the west coast into labour unions?

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been under serious consideration for some time. As I understand it, in 1977 a decision was made with respect to the collective bargaining rights of fishermen under part V of the Canada Labour Code. It was found that they did not have any, and accordingly representations were made and hearings were held with the fishermen and with the industry.

I understand there have been consultations with the provinces because of the question of jurisdiction. Interdepartmental studies have been undertaken. I hope to have a report in the very near future, when I will advise the hon. member of what action will be taken.

POSSIBILITY OF CLOSING BOMBARDIER PLANT IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for International Trade, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement made by the president of the Bombardier company that the "Buy America" program will compel that company to make emergency plans, close its Quebec plant and move to the United States, can the Prime Minister announce today in this House the specific steps which he intends to take to guarantee the survival and development of that important industry in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot do so today. However, I will speak to the minister involved and other officials of the department to see if there are some plans and if it would be possible for me or another minister to announce them in the House or elsewhere as soon as possible.

AIR TRANSPORT

IMPLEMENTATION OF HEALD, SINCLAIR, CHOUINARD REPORT

Mr. Serge Joyal (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

On November 16, in reply to a question I put to him in the House about the steps he intends to take to shorten the delays which have caused departmental services to become bogged down, and implementing the recommendations of the Heald, Sinclair, Chouinard commission, the minister told me he expected the report of the task force around November 25 or 26. Can the minister tell us today whether or not he has received that report and, if so, whether he has taken the necessary steps to increase staff, improve training procedures and make sure that the necessary equipment is now available in order to shorten the delays in which the Gens de l'air are now trapped?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I received the report in the week of November 27 and I have accepted it. It is now the subject of a proposal which is going before cabinet. I am confident that the hon. member will be satisfied with the position we are taking. The implementation is going on. I have to tell him, though, that the speed of the implementation process is contingent upon recruitment, training and certification. Having regard to all those conditions, the schedule for implementation will be taken before cabinet in the next week or so. I shall be able to report in more detail after that date.

LABOUR DISPUTES

BELL CANADA STRIKE—PRESENTATION OF CONCILIATION REPORT—INQUIRY WHETHER STRIKE WILL BE LEGALIZED

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Is he aware that yesterday and the day before, and today in certain places in Canada, mainly in Sault Ste. Marie, some Bell Canada employees went on strike? Whether this strike is legal or not, can the minister tell us if the conciliator who has been designated, Mr. Tremblay, has already submitted to him his conciliation report and if that report has indeed been submitted to him, when does the minister intend to make the strike legal?

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will not answer the question of whether I think the strike is legal or not. I think the hon. member knows that under the provisions of the Code, the Canada Labour Relations Board is the proper forum to determine whether any disruption—and I call it a disruption—is illegal.

As far as the conciliation commission report is concerned, I understand that it will be in my hands, with the necessary recommendations which I hope will be satisfactory and will lead to a just settlement, by the middle of December. At that time we hope hon. members will accept the report. I can also advise the hon. member that the company has brought before the board a procedure regarding cease and desist with respect to disruptions that are taking place right now. It is my understanding that this will be heard tomorrow.

TREMBLAY REPORT—WORKERS' RIGHT TO STRIKE WITHOUT BEING SUSPENDED

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? I do not know if the minister misunderstood me, but I did not ask for legal advice and I would never ask a lawyer to settle a labour dispute. I am more interested in the fact that we are dealing here with employees who are mostly women and who received a 2.8 per cent wage increase back in 1977, and that nobody seems to care about them. Mr. Speaker, I want the minister to tell us if he has reached a decision regarding the implication of the Tremblay report, and whether or not he has decided to grant them the right to strike and, if so, what he intends to do to make sure that the employees who will get it can resort to it without fear of suspension by their employers.

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): I just do not understand, Mr. Speaker, why the hon. member does not understand the procedure under the collective bargaining process, and in particular part V. As I indicated to him, the collective bargaining process calls for the intervention of a conciliation commissioner. He can only do what he is allowed to do under the law; that is, when a settlement has not been reached, he can prepare a report and make recommendations for settlement. Until the report reaches my desk and until it is given to the parties involved, the hon. member knows that any contravention of the process within part V of the act calls for no disruption.

The hon. member will have to be patient. Unfortunately, it is a serious matter. I am very concerned, not only about the women involved but about the men involved and the workers in general. We have to wait until we receive the report of the conciliation commissioner, Mr. Tremblay, in terms of the recommendations and, hopefully—I say "hopefully"—the parties involved will accept the recommendations that will be put before them.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASED CHARGES BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Given the fact that in the last ten days or so the major chartered banks have increased their charges for bank servicing, including the charge for writing a cheque, the charge for making an entry on current accounts, the certification of cheques and the rental of safety deposit boxes, and given the fact that the chartered banks have shown all-time high profits, with increases of more than 20 per cent over the same period last year, would the minister himself, or one of his colleagues who deals more directly with the banks, make representations to the banks that they ought not to be increasing these charges when their profits are so high?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that question would be more effectively, and certainly more properly, answered by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance—perhaps he cannot answer today—to look at the increases in bank charges to customers which the banks have recently announced? In light of their very substantial—I do not want to use the word "exorbitant"—increase in profits, would the minister make representations to the effect that they should give some consideration to the needs of their customers?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, some banks have increased profits, and one bank we know has had reduced profits. It is very difficult to generalize. These things also go in cycles. The quarter before last their revenues were down. This quarter the revenues were up because of the spread. I will certainly communicate to the banks my desire that they charge as little as possible to their customers, and that they operate in every case on a very thin margin.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have several notices of questions of privilege. I have received notices from the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell).

MR. LALONDE—INQUIRY WHY NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD REPORT NOT PRESENTED

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, not only do I raise one question of privilege but, following developments that have occurred since two o'clock this afternoon and in light of a recent report concerning a press conference to be held this afternoon by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn), I will have a second question of privilege. But I will submit the first one now and, with your permission, I will come back to the second one later.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

As to the first question of privilege, it relates first to the statement made in the House yesterday by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), as reported on page 2030 of Hansard, and I quote:

> To come to the last question, the National Energy Board has now, as a result of increased consumption in Canada and some other activities, come to the conclusion that there may be limited shortages this winter in Canada.

This morning, we were supposed to receive from the National Energy Board a report which was to be made public and available to all members on the oil supply situation in Canada and especially in eastern Canada during the month of November. This morning the minister informed the committee that the report would be made public only in a few days. I have solid proof that the report was indeed ready to be made public this morning, but that the board held it back because its content was at odds with the Prime Minister's statement in the House yesterday; the board decided to keep the report in order to change it, to doctor it and to make it conform to the views expressed yesterday in the House by the right hon. Prime Minister.

It seems to be, Mr. Speaker, that this is grounds for a question of privilege, because there is an indirect assault on the independence of an agency such as the National Energy Board which, because it has been attributed statements by the right hon. Prime Minister, is now forced to amend the content of its report. I do not want to hold up the work of the House unduly, Mr. Speaker. However, I draw your attention to this matter which obviously concerns the privileges of members and I ask the minister to make public immediately the exact report that was prepared by the National Energy Board, and not the version that was modified and cooked to agree with yesterday's statements by the right hon. Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, rarely has such a false and irresponsible accusation been made in the House of Commons by a member of Parliament, a Privy Concillor, a member well acquainted not only with the rules of the House of Commons, but also with the rules concerning the autonomy of agencies such as the National Energy Board. I can indicate to the House and to the hon. member that the accusation the member made is unfounded and totally false. No evidence was given because the hon. member has no proof and the accusation is false. I hope the hon. member can now respect the independence of the National Energy Board and have the courage to say to the House of Commons that he erred and made a false and irresponsible accusation.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The matter is obviously one of disagreement and not one of procedure.

MR. KNOWLES—APPRECIATION EXPRESSED TO PRIME MINISTER FOR HOSTING TESTIMONIAL DINNER FOR HON. PAUL MARTIN

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is in a totally different vein, but it does relate to a matter concerning which I feel there should be something on the records of this House.

If I may speak as a member of a third party who can therefore be objective about it, I am sure that many members would agree with me that a word of appreciation should be expressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) for the gracious way in which he hosted a dinner last night as a testimonial to our friend, the Hon. Paul Martin.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: The generosity of spirit of the Prime Minister was something that we all appreciated. I know that our friend Paul and his friends were gratified, and to all of us it was a unique parliamentary event.

I express the hope, Mr. Speaker, that if there are records of the speeches either in written form or on tapes, they might be preserved in the National Archives or in the Library. As I say, it was a unique occasion and I felt that it should be noted on the records of Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. ALLMAND—MINISTERS NOT MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, during the question period when the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) was answering my questions with respect to the appointment of ministers to answer questions in this House, the Prime Minister refused to acknowledge that in our system of responsible government, senior ministers—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Allmand: —and especially the Minister of Justice, the Attorney General of Canada and the senior law officer of the Crown, should be elected to sit in the House of Commons. That is our system.

It is true that it is customary to appoint ministers in the Senate to be leaders of the Senate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce will know that he will have to identify the nature of his question of privilege to me. If it is simply a grievance that ministers of the Crown sit outside of the House of Commons, he will know that that is a repetition of previous practices of the House, and while it may be an annoyance and a matter of commentary, it does not constitute a procedural problem in which the Chair can be expected to intervene. If he has some special nature of the matter which does bring it within the orbit of privilege, I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the special aspect that I would argue strongly for is that the Minister of Justice, who is the Attorney General of Canada, has very special responsibilities in the laying of legal actions and so on which cannot be answered for by any other minister, because he is sworn in as Attorney General and Minister of Justice. I would argue that only he and not the ministers who are designated can answer these questions. In our parliamentary system of responsible government, it is not correct for such a procedure to continue. I can understand an Acting Minister of Justice sitting in the Senate on a temporary basis, but this situation is completely against our system of responsible government. There has been an opportunity in Prince Albert and in Newfoundland for that minister to run in an election and be elected.

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, I would remind the hon. member that he is raising a matter which he considers to be a grievance. That may be so, and it may be an annoyance upon which he may make a comment, as he has done. I cannot bring the matter within the realm of procedure. It is the right of the government, and it is in keeping with previous parliamentary practice, whether it be the Minister of Justice or, as in a previous case, the Minister of National Revenue, to have ministers who sit outside the House for a period of time. There is no necessity, in fact, that all the ministers even be members of the House of Commons or the Senate. Therefore, I am not able to act on procedural grounds on the hon. member's case.

MRS. MITCHELL—ALLEGED MISUSE OF FUNDS FOR FOREIGN AID

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is with regard to the statements made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) this afternoon when he misrepresented the position of the New Democratic Party concerning the misuse of immigration funds for foreign aid to Kampuchea. The minister stated in this House today that my party agreed with his decision, made in collusion with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald), whereby they would take $10 million, which was originally promised as foreign aid to Kampuchea, from immigrant services that had been allocated for Vietnamese refugee programs.

We object to that because we disagree strongly with the position of the Conservative party and in particular the two ministers. We feel that there has been a misuse of funds and a breach of faith both with the United Nations and the private sponsoring groups. We feel that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should contribute the $10 million to Kampuchea, but that this—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has been given an opportunity to indicate the areas in which she departs from the representation made by the minister today during the question period. That point has now been made by the hon. member in her intervention. I do not think that I ought to allow her to go on and give a full exposé of her party's position on this particular problem.

Point of Order—Mr. Lalonde

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. LALONDE—PROPOSED STATEMENT ON GAS EXPORTS BY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege has to do with consultations that took place yesterday between the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker), members of our party and the other parties in the House. It is with regard to a statement which was to be made in this House at six o'clock by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

My party agreed to that arrangement, and now we have heard that the minister instead intends to call a press conference at the end of the day after the markets have closed in order to announce certain decisions concerning gas exports to the United States. With respect to this matter, I have a motion that I would like to introduce, because this arrangement implied that the minister would make—

Mr. Speaker: Order. How can I be asked to adjudicate on something that may or may not happen later in the day?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could clear up the difficulty. The hon. member is either mischievous or just plain mistaken.

Mr. Crosbie: He is a mischievous mistake.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Arrangements were made with my colleague, the opposition House leader, for us to revert to statements by ministers when we get to motions at six o'clock, after reverting to the tabling of documents. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has a document which he wishes to table and upon which he wishes to make a statement. Not only have the arrangements between my friend and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) proceeded in that manner, but we indicated that we would give an advance notice of two hours to the other parties and groups which are interested in this matter.

I do not know what has possessed the hon. member, but he is completely mistaken.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, my point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With regard to the ministers making statements, we have not called ministerial statements or motions. Perhaps we should wait until we reach that point before procedural arguments are raised as to whether or not anything will take place. We have not come to routine proceedings, and I cannot adjudicate on the actions of a minister during routine proceedings until we come to them.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, it was alleged that I was making a mischievous statement. The basis for making my statement is simply the declaration of the minister in the energy committee this morning. Members of both sides of the House were present when the minister said he had no intention of making a statement in the House today, that he had not heard anything about the matter. Members who were present at the committee can testify to that. If the government cannot get its act together, it should not be surprised when we get the wrong information.

Mr. Speaker: Order. How can I entertain argument about what a minister will do during routine proceedings when we have not come to routine proceedings?

MR. ALEXANDER—RELEASE OF RAY REPORT ON EQUAL PAY FOR WOMEN

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), I believe, made reference to the wage gap report which was prepared by Dr. Ratna Ray, director of the Women's Bureau—and I congratulate them on their excellent work. There may be the misconception that the report is now ready. It is not ready at this point. I am not questioning how the hon. member received the report, but it will not be ready for general distribution to the public, as I understand it, until the first week of January.

I have also been advised that we may be able to get a limited number of reports to hon. members in the very near future. I merely wanted to inform the House, before there is a great run on the department, that we will not be in a position to release the full report until the first week of January.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if the government House leader has any idea what the House business will be for the next week.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. Today, of course, is an allotted day to the hon. member's party. The motion is in the name of the hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes, and we look forward to it with great anticipation. Tomorrow we continue with the consideration of Bill C-20 after disposal of the motion under Standing Order 75C, of which I gave notice yesterday.

On Monday we will be moving into Committee of the Whole and, hopefully, all matters with respect to the committee stage will be disposed of at 9.45 p.m. I say hopefully because it is subject to the will of the House. On Tuesday it is my intention to continue with Bill C-20 during the afternoon. Of course, at eight o'clock in the evening of Tuesday, December 11, the Minister of Finance will be introducing his budget.

At the moment, and so I can give some notice to my friend, it is my intention to call Bill C-20 for third reading next Wednesday. I will be seeking an arrangement with the other House leaders with respect to the quick disposition of Bill C-20. It is my intention to call the main estimates on Thursday, December 13. Friday, December 14, will likely be the first day of the budget debate. Of course, I will be in close consultation with the other House leaders on that matter.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the veterans bill is on the order paper to be introduced today. The Minister of Veterans Affairs is here to do that. I would like to have a chat with the other House leaders, either formally or informally, with respect to how we might dispose of that matter before we recess for Christmas. I recognize that there is, indeed, a tight schedule between now and what would be the anticipated adjournment debate. To accommodate the work of the House and the work of all members, I want to assure them that I am quite willing to accommodate them in terms of extending the hours of the House of Commons so that their reasonable rights will be satisfied.

Mr. Knowles: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say how glad I am that we have reached the point at which a bill respecting veterans is on the order paper and will be introduced within the next few minutes. I might say to the government House leader that once that bill has received first reading and has been printed and we have had a chance to look at it, we shall be glad to assess the possibility of dealing with it expeditiously.

Perhaps I could take this occasion to ask the hon. gentleman about two other possible pieces of legislation. In view of the fact that a lengthy and very strong telegram has been sent to the Prime Minister within the last day or so regarding Heritage Day, and in view of the fact that the date foreseen for such a holiday is not far off—the third Monday in February—will the government consider legislation on that subject before we reach February of 1980?

There is one other question I should like to ask. This is a question which always raises my popularity in the House of Commons, but one gets used to that. In view of the fact that Mr. Alfred Hales, as a commissioner, is studying the question of the pay and other benefits that go with being a member of Parliament, has the government given any consideration to deferring the automatic pay and allowance increases in January until a report is received from Mr. Hales outlining what he thinks our situation should be?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): With respect to Heritage Day, the government is not contemplating any legislation with respect to that proposal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I feel I should be very candid and direct with the hon. member. With respect to the question of deferring the automatic escalation, I think it would be unwise for us to anticipate in either direction what Mr. Hales is doing, given his knowledge of parliamentary affairs. I am satisfied it would be quite improper for us—and I have considered the matter—to anticipate in any way whatsoever what his report might say. I believe it would be more appropriate to allow the commissioner to do his work; he might have certain views, as we all know, with respect to the rate of escalation, special allowances for members and a whole host of things. We have no indication of when he is going to report and I feel it would be quite inappropriate to undercut the work of the commissioner, a very distinguished Canadian whose appointment, I know, has the support of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I would like to have only one clarification concerning the order of business just given by the leader of the government in the House. Are we to understand that he has the firm intention of completing third reading of Bill C-20 before the debate on the budget can be allowed to start?

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Well, Mr. Speaker, hope springs eternal in the human breast. I have always been a hopeful and optimistic person and I trust I have always been found to be reasonable. I indicated that I wanted to discuss the question of arranging appropriately the business of the House with respect to completing the legislative program to the extent we have given notice it should be completed with respect to Bill C-20, the property tax credit bill, and, of course, the opposition has some feelings with respect to examining the estimates of the government. I recognize that; I am prepared to allow that to happen and I am not going to hold back in any way. It is a matter we would like to discuss.

Mr. Harquail: By way of a point of order, Mr. Speaker, which might very well be a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: I do not want a new point to be raised. I am trying to conclude the regular Thursday question about House business.

Mr. Harquail: I seek clarification from you, sir, with respect to the work we have to do in this House arising from the question which was raised about accountability. Outside the government's right to appoint ministers of the cabinet, I should like to know from you, sir, your interpretation and ruling as to our right as members of the House, in terms of the accountability of ministers, to be able to direct questions to such ministers as the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is returning to the subject raised by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce on which I have already ruled.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the House leader. If I understood him correctly, he said that next Thursday we would start on the estimates. He is probably aware that the committee on miscellaneous estimates did vote negatively on the estimates for the Treasury Board, votes 1, 5, 10, 15 and 20. Does he intend to introduce a motion reinstating those votes before we proceed to the general study of the estimates?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am aware of what happened in the miscellaneous estimates committee and I want to assure the hon. member that the problem is very much within my contemplation. When I have resolved it I shall be speaking to the hon. gentleman and asking for his assistance.

MR. LALONDE—PROPOSED STATEMENT ON GAS EXPORTS BY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde), in raising a question of privilege, referred to some remarks made this morning by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and stated as a fact that the minister had indicated that neither he nor the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) would be making a statement on the energy and gas supply report which would be coming out today. Mr. Speaker, I was at that meeting and that is most assuredly not what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said. I will grant the possibility that the hon. member for Outremont is incorrect as opposed to mischievous. He frequently is incorrect. But if he is mischievous, it might well be a violation of the privileges of this House for a member to stand up and state categorically as a fact that certain information was transferred in the committee this morning whereas it certainly was not transferred.

An hon. Member: What did he say?

Mr. Andre: The question put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources by the hon. member for Outremont was whether the minister would have anything to say about this question of hypothetical shortages of heating oil in eastern Canada this year, and the minister said no, he would not be making a statement on that today, nor was he aware whether the Prime Minister would be making one. That is what was said this morning and it is quite different from what the former minister inaccurately told the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have no intention of prolonging an argument which relates to testimony given in a standing committee. The record there will speak for itself in any case. Whether or not the minister intends to make a statement today is the subject at issue, and I presume that will be adequately covered during routine proceedings if, once again, we can be permitted to reach them.

Mr. McKenzie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. To assist you to clear up this constant confusion in the House—

[Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should just like to move along to routine proceedings and committee reports. I am grateful for the offer of assistance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

TABLING OF PAPER "THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA TAX EXPENDITURE ACCOUNT"

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I now table in both official languages copies of budget-related paper entitled "The Government of Canada Tax Expenditure Account", the purpose of which is to make the public and this House aware of who is benefiting, and to what extent, through little known tax preferences. This is part of the process of opening up the budgetary process and letting the public know what has been happening for the last ten years.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HAWKES—WITHDRAWAL OF REMARKS BY MEMBER FOR NICKEL BELT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to get your attention to rise on a matter of order. Two days ago I made my maiden speech in this House of Commons during the private members' hour. The subject of debate was an amendment to part IV of the Canada Labour Code in a private members' bill introduced by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Prior to my participation in that debate I read the bill and sought expert advice from officials within this government as to the consequences of that bill if we were to approve it in principle and then approve its passage.

During the course of that debate I drew to the attention of the hon. member for Nickel Belt that one of the repercussions of this House's accepting that principle and that wording was a possible harmful effect on the travelling public and on the employees who work on aeroplanes, trains and ships. I draw your attention to page 2006 of Hansard. The hon. member for Nickel Belt rose on a point of order and said the following:

—I think the hon. member is deliberately trying to give the wrong impression to this House.

Immediately after that I responded as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that at some appropriate time the hon. member opposite would withdraw the word "deliberate". I am not sure that it fits into the traditions of this House.

I have given the hon. member 48 hours. I told him this morning that in the absence of an initiative on his part I would attempt to raise this matter on a point of order. I draw this to your attention and would like a ruling.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege, I would like to withdraw the word "deliberate" and replace it with "stupid".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) intervened to seek the withdrawal of the language. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has withdrawn it, and I believe that that closes the matter procedurally.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the disagreement which occurred as to what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said, there have in fact been the discussions to which I alluded, and pursuant to the discussions and after consulting my colleagues, the other House leaders, I would like to move, with the unanimous consent of the House:

That the House revert to statements by ministers at 6 p.m. or upon return from the giving of royal assent to certain bills this day, and that the hours of the House be extended to allow members sufficient time to respond to this statement pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 15(3).

I should inform the House that at the same time the minister will be tabling documents, and we will want to revert to that part of the day's proceedings as well.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council. Is there a disposition to give consent to put this motion and to make this order now rather than leaving it until later today? Does the minister have consent to put the motion at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. In accordance with the terms just alluded to by the President of the Privy Council, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER

On the order: Government notices of motions:

December 6, 1979—The President of Privy Council

That a special joint committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages, 1978, tabled Tuesday, February 20, 1979 (Sessional Paper No. 304-1/301) and the report of the Official Languages Commissioner for 1979 once it has been tabled in the House of Commons;

That nine members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, be members on the part of this House on the special joint committee;

That the committee have power to appoint from among its members such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable and necessary and to delegate to such subcommittees all or any of its powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

That the committee be empowered to retain professional, clerical and stenographic help as may be required;

That a quorum of the committee be four members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when three members are present so long as both Houses are represented; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that that House do unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it to be advisable, members to act on the proposed special joint committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 21(2), this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 87, 343, 469, 480, 555, 563, 608 and 648.

JUSTICE—PROJECTS IN RIMOUSKI

Question No. 87—Mr. Allard:

1. Since 1975, did the Department of Justice finance projects in the constituency of Rimouski and, if so (a) what were the projects (b) what was the (i) total amount (ii) amount in each case (c) what were the areas?

2. Is the department planning to do so in the near future and, if so (a) what will be the amount (b) in which areas?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

MR. HUGH R. HART—BROCKVILLE

Question No. 343—Mr. Cossitt:

Did Brockville solicitor, Mr. Hugh R. Hart, receive more payments of public funds from the government than any other Brockville solicitor over the past five years and, if so, for what reasons?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): In so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, the reply to the first part of the question is yes. The reply to the second part of the question is: "Mr. Hart did more legal work for the government than any other Brockville solicitor over the past five years."

NATIONAL CAPITAL FUND

Question No. 469—Mr. Herbert:

In each of the past five years, what amount was transferred to the National Capital fund?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works): The amount transferred to the National Capital fund in each of the past five fiscal years was as follows:

1978-1979	$23,500,000
1977-1978	36,750,000
1976-1977	32,000,000
1975-1976	30,000,000
1974-1975	23,080,000

Question No. 480—Mr. Herbert:

As at March 31 in each of the past five years, what amount was outstanding in the accounts of Canada in respect of the National Capital fund?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works):

The balance outstanding in the accounts of Canada in respect of the National Capital fund as at March 31 of the last five fiscal years was as follows:

1978-1979	$34,500,000
1977-1978	37,750,000
1976-1977	18,000,000
1975-1976	7,000,000
1974-1975	12,000,000

SMALL BUSINESSES

Question No. 555—Mr. Corbett:

1. What was the number of cases the Department of Justice instigated against small businesses in the fiscal year (a) 1976-77 (b) 1977-78?

2. What was the (a) number of favourable judgements for small businesses (b) total cost on the part of the government (c) average cost per case (d) number of cases settled out of court favourable to the government?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): We regret we cannot answer this question as stated. Even with clarification of the terms, a reply would involve extensive research which in time and cost would be prohibitive.

FEDERALISM—PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS

Question No. 563—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the former Prime Minister or anyone else in the former government commission a study in regard to federalism vs. the Parti Québécois and, if so (a) on what date and specifically was it just after the 1976 electoral victory of the Parti Québécois in Quebec (b) how many government departments and agencies supplied information for the study (c) what are the names of all members of the Privy Council staff or the former Prime Minister's Office staff who were engaged in the work (d) what is the estimated total cost of the study (e) specifically, did the study claim that officials of the former government were unaware of "general cultural, social and political" matters in Quebec (f) is the report consistent with the policy of the present government and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations):

No. (a) to (f) Not applicable.

ONTARIO-QUEBEC BORDER—GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 608—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the government prior to May 22, 1979, follow a policy of moving government departments, branches, etc., across the Ottawa River and, if so, as a means to save money, did the government give consideration to proposing an amendment to the existing Ontario-Quebec border whereby the existing points of entry to Quebec would be extended across the Ottawa River in a bulging line, to encompass wherever necessary, all government buildings presently in the City of Ottawa, including Parliament Hill?

Mr. John Bosley (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): In so far as this government is concerned, it has no knowledge as to whether the previous Ministry considered a course of action which would have as a consequence the possible outcome anticipated in your question.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

Question No. 648—Mr. Herbert:

1. What is the current percentage drug royalty fee to the original patent holder under the compulsory licensing provisions in the pharmaceutical industry?

2. Has the percentage changed in the past ten years?

3. What is the comparable percentage in Great Britain?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Four per cent.

2. No.

3. There is no comparable percentage in Great Britain, since the party that corresponds roughly to the compulsory licensees under the Canadian law, is the British Government itself.

PETITION

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT—PETITION PRESENTED BY RIVIÈRE-VERTE, NEW BRUNSWICK, WORKERS

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): On behalf of the unemployed workers of Rivière-Verte in northwestern New Brunswick I have the honour to present a petition dealing with the adverse effects of certain provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act which were promulgated by the new government on July 1, 1979. There are 522 names on this petition which I have examined and which appears to meet the requirements of our Standing Orders. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I request that, after due examination by the clerk, it be referred to our Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before calling orders of the day, may I advise the House that in keeping with a practice which we have encouraged and which I think has been to the benefit of all hon. members in the past, the supply bill which will be considered by the House in the ordinary way later this day has been prepared, and it has been our recent practice to distribute it to hon. members earlier in the day in order that they might not be caught by surprise by the distribution of the bill at ten o'clock later on this evening.

I have sufficient copies of the bill, and I would encourage their distribution if the House agrees that it be distributed this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—UNEMPLOYMENT AND JOB-CREATION POLICY

Hon. Francis Fox (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes) moved:

That this House deplores the complete inaction of the government, after six months in office, with regard to the creation of jobs, regrets the inhumane cutbacks in the Canada Works program that have eliminated hundreds of communities across Canada that have been suffering from high levels of unemployment and condemns the government for its failure to date to bring forward a comprehensive employment strategy for the coming year.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will note that not later than 9.45 p.m. this evening, pursuant to Standing Order 32(1)(k), proceedings on this motion shall expire in accordance with that order and also with Standing Order 58(10).

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, a few days ago during question period in the House, we celebrated—of course "celebrated" may not be the right word because this is certainly not cause for celebration throughout the country—let us say therefore that we noted the first six months in power of our colleagues on the other side of the House. Mr. Speaker, we would have liked on that occasion to be able to tell members opposite, and more especially the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey), that they had done a good job.

Unfortunately, the only thing we have seen in the last six months has been nearly complete inaction. This is why, Mr. Speaker, after six months of this government, after six months of having the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration on the job, we would like to tell him that he has yet to present to the House and to the Canadian people an employment strategy for the forthcoming months.

Mr. Speaker, it is not normal to wait until just before Christmas, until mid-December, until snow is coming down throughout the country, to present an employment strategy for the current year. This year is coming to an end and we are entitled to ask the minister to tell us about his plans not only for the forthcoming months, but more important, for next summer and next fall.

[English]

The minister has thrown away six months of lead time that was given to him by the previous government. He inherited a position where job creation was strong, where we led most of our trading partners in the area of job creation. The minister benefited from a situation where the rate of unemployment dropped for 14 consecutive months in this country. He inherited a situation where the economy was still strong, in spite of the fact that there were turnarounds on the horizon, turn-arounds caused in many instances by events occurring outside our borders. The economic climate has deteriorated a great deal, and in spite of that his response has continued to be to do nothing. Since taking office the first response of the minister, whose responsibility it is to try to create employment in this country, in his first interviews on television, was to say that he thought his position within the cabinet was one of creating "jobs, jobs, jobs". These were the words he used. Since that time we have seen no concrete measures or steps but we have heard speeches and a lot of rhetoric, in spite of the fact that the economic climate has indeed changed and requires new steps to be taken to stimulate the economy and create employment in this country.

The minister knows full well that there is a recession in the United States. Surely he knows, as do his advisers, that the recession in the United States will have deeply-felt repercussions on the Canadian economy. When our major trading partner goes into a state of slow growth, it is evident that we will be trading less with them and that there will be grave repercussions in the factories, in industry and in commerce in general throughout this country with the consequent loss of jobs.

That is not the only thing, Mr. Speaker. There have also been successive increases in interest rates. The bank rate, as we all know, has now climbed to 14 per cent. Prime rates charged by the chartered banks to their best industrial customers have now climbed to 15 per cent, putting businessmen in a precarious position. Plant closures, which have been brought to the minister's attention time and time again, have begun to occur, with many of the people involved pointing directly to the high interest rates subscribed to by this government as the main cause of those closings. We also hear about unfortunate problems encountered by the employees of Chrysler in the Windsor area and the employees of ITT in northern Quebec. We hear of the problems in shipyards, and there is a general situation of slow growth in the country. But the minister, whose main responsibility it is to bring about job creation and employment opportunities in this country, does nothing.

What about the most important policy direction of this government? The most important policy direction of this government is to raise oil prices to 90 per cent of the Chicago price. We all know that while the domestic price of oil in Toronto today is around $15.63 a barrel, the Chicago price by 1985 will be around $43.46, according to figures published by the minister's colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and it will be reaching about $62.81 by 1990, which will be slightly higher than the international price.

One of the stated objectives of this government is to raise the domestic price of oil slightly above the international price, thus taking away one of the main advantages that industry, trade and commerce has in this country in dealing with competitors outside of our borders. Where does the Minister of Employment and Immigration stand on this question? We have not heard him say anything about this matter. We have not heard him take a stand against the scandalous increases in the price of oil, despite the fact that the minister knows full well that these increases will have dire consequences on our economy.

I am not quite sure whether the minister has actually examined the effect which such policies will have on employment in this country. Perhaps I could quote to him the already well-known study that has been done on the economic impact of oil prices, because the minister tells me his department does not do any studies on the economic impact on the country of changes in the interest rate or increases in the oil price; he leaves that to the Department of Finance, although I would expect him to act on that and bring forward new policies when such drastic changes in the economic picture of the country are taking place.

Let us look at what the Conservative Premier of Ontario is telling the Minister of Employment and Immigration through his colleague, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). He is telling him that these increases in the price of oil will have a drastic effect on the Canadian economy, particularly on the job-creation sector in Canada.

An hon. Member: What do the other nine say?

Mr. Fox: Let us stick for the moment with the Premier of Ontario. If the hon. member thinks that increases in oil prices will increase job creation in Canada, I should like him to quote the name of the economist who said that. So far as the Conservative government of Ontario is concerned, their main conclusion is that by the end of 1981 consumer prices will be 4.5 per cent higher. In the area of job creation there will be 137,000 fewer jobs, which is probably a greater destruction of jobs during the course of the possible tenure of the minister than the total number of jobs he will create in that period of time. The way things are going now, the minister should be concerned he will end up with fewer jobs by 1981 than we would have had without this. By the end of 1981 we are talking about 137,000 fewer jobs in this country. We are talking about a real gross national product of 2 per cent less, if these oil price increases are indeed brought forward by this government, than would be the case.

Let me digress for one moment to say that not only is the government talking about slowing down the economy and doing it in a purposeful fashion by increasing the price of oil, but they are also talking about taking 30 cents a gallon out of the pocket of every car owner in this country. When the Prime Minister speaks about an excise tax of 30 cents a gallon, he is also telling us he will take around $2.8 billion out of the pockets of car owners across the country, and that too will have a significant impact on job creation.

As I have said, we have heard speeches today. From the beginning of his mandate this summer, the minister has promised us a number of initiatives in the job-creation field. He spoke about youth employment. He told us he will be seeing some of these initiatives taking place in the early fall. It is almost early winter and we have yet to see them. To date the only thing he has actually done has been to go the other way. Not only has he not created jobs; he has decided, in a cold blooded fashion, to decrease the amount of money available in this country for job-creation purposes. His response to date has been to cut back on the Canada Works program and make cutbacks in the LEDA program.

The minister will tell me that what he is interested in doing is creating permanent jobs, and I agree with him. I too am interested in creating permanent jobs. But what the minister is saying is that he can do away with some of this temporary job creation, and what I am telling the minister is that in a country like Canada where there is a cyclical slowdown in the economy, what he is doing really is telling people that they will be on unemployment insurance or welfare during the winter months instead of being able to benefit from programs such as Canada Works. Instead of being able to fulfil strong local community objectives and needs, they will be collecting unemployment insurance cheques, in spite of the fact that these people would much rather work.

I do not want to insist only on increased use of the Canada Works program because I am reminded that our own employment strategy a year ago included a number of initiatives which, from reading the minister's speeches, I see he will try to wrap up and put a ribbon on, perhaps because it is Christmas and time to deliver a new package to the Canadian public. When I look at the employment strategy which was brought down in September of 1978 by the Hon. Bud Cullen, I see that already at that time there was under way an employment tax credit program of $106 million. I see also that there was a summer youth employment program of $116 million, there were year-round youth employment measures of $109.7 million, there was a JET program in existence at the time, there was the Canada Works program and a skilled training program of $101.5 million. In this sense I hope the minister will be continuing the initiatives of his predecessor in the skilled training area because I really think this is one of the most important areas with which we have to be involved in the years to come.

I have with me a copy of the sixteenth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada. One of their recommendations touches upon labour market policies. It hits home in one of the most important areas of job creation in Canada, and that is shortages of skilled manpower. It is one thing to create jobs in the immediate future, and it is one thing to try and create temporary jobs to get over periods of high unemployment. But it is another thing to deal with skilled shortages, something to which the previous government allocated substantial funds. I hope the minister will continue with that thrust.

I should like to quote from the sixteenth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada entitled: "Two Cheers for the Eighties" at page 87, which reads as follows:

> It is apparent that as we enter the 1980s, skilled shortages . . . will get worse. This has major implications for occupational forecasting and training programs. Clearly, appropriate treatment of labour market imbalances depends crucially on accurate and timely diagnosis. A critical review is needed of the capabilities of Canadian government and industry in forecasting the demand and supply of occupational skills, translating these into skill-training requirements, and mounting effective training programs.

One of the major recommendations of the council was that the federal government, in conjunction with the provinces, should reassess the present programs with a view to tailoring them more efficiently for labour market needs of the 1980s.

The minister made a speech in front of the Canadian Club in Toronto. He talked about critical skill training programs. I applaud that type of remark because I think in that regard he is indeed on the right track. But instead of cutting back his job-creation programs, if he is going to transfer funds to other areas of his department I trust that he will cease the practice he has been involved in since the beginning of the year of transferring funds to purposes other than job-creation purposes, and that he will think in terms of transferring them to this type of program.

This brings me to the Canada Works program which is mentioned quite specifically in the motion. In that regard not only is the minister not content to decrease the amount of money put into the Canada Works program this year by something over $40 million, but also he talks of eliminating the program completely next year. Perhaps moneys can be used in a better way, but the minister has yet to tell us what that better way is. It is really incumbent upon him, before eliminating programs in such a complete and drastic fashion, to tell us what he is going to do with the program and where he is going to spend the money. It would be a good idea if now and then he told Parliament what he was going to do or what he has in mind, instead of telling the Canadian Club in Toronto or other service clubs across the country. But at the moment the minister refuses to answer questions put to him by members of Parliament. He keeps on putting us off by telling us that all of his answers will be in the budget, the budget which has been put back a number of times over the past few weeks. We end up with a situation where we have no answers given to us by the minister, and the only way we can find out what is on his mind, if anything, is by reading the speeches he makes outside this House.

The minister takes a great deal of consolation from the fact that 98 per cent of his Canada Works funds this year will be spent in Quebec and the maritime provinces, with a few dollars dropped off in British Columbia, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I should like to go over the list with the minister. I should like to compare what was done last year for a whole series of communities in Canada under the Canada Works program. In Newfoundland last year the amount was $17.1 million. The minister has increased it slightly by bringing this amount up to $19.6 million. Taking 10 per cent away for inflation, we are at about the same situation as last year. Prince Edward Island last year had $3.1 million. This year it will be $3.7 million. Nova Sotia last year had $11 million and will have $11 million this year, a decrease in real terms of about 10 per cent. New Brunswick last year had $15.7 million and New Brunswick this year will have $15.1 million, another decrease of about 10 per cent in real terms.

Dealing with Quebec, I should like to quote from a communiqué which was released by the minister's colleague. But first, let me point out that:

[Translation]

In Quebec, this year, in relation to the Canada Works program, last year the government had $62.3 million available for all Quebec constituencies. This year, the new Conservative government cancels the program in 33 constituencies—

Mr. Savard: Shame!

Mr. Fox:

—and reduces by $14 million Quebec's allocation, without any provision for the eroded value of money due to inflation.

So the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. La Salle) stated in his press release, and I quote:

Mr. La Salle expressed his satisfaction with Mr. Atkey's announcement—of a reduction in the order of $14 million, and if I add another $4 million because of inflation, he expressed his satisfaction at the $18 million reduction, his satisfaction at the disentitlement of 33 constituencies with a high unemployment rate—

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Fox:

—his satisfaction that next year he is completely eliminating the Canada Works program not only in Quebec but across Canada, he expressed his satisfaction—

Mr. Olivier: Horrendous!

Mr. Fox: On this side of the House, this gives us no satisfaction.

An hon. Member: Wait and see what his constituents will have to say!

[English]

Mr. Darling: Read the Ontario figures.

Mr. Fox: I will read the Ontario figures at the suggestion of my colleague on the other side of the House. They are very embarrassing. It is very embarrassing for those good members of Parliament who were elected in the province of Ontario. It is very embarrassing to those people who went from door to door during the last campaign telling people what type of job-creation programs they would be offering.

Some hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Fox: It is very embarrassing. Last year the province of Ontario received from the previous Liberal government moneys under the Canada Works program for communities across Ontario where there were high levels of unemployment and in which there were many valid social objectives to be met. They received $22 million from the Liberal government.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Fox: This year those same northern communities across Ontario, those same eastern and southern communities as well, which used these funds for valid local purposes and for valid social objectives, are receiving nothing. Last year $22 million was given to municipalities and groups across the province of Ontario. The new government has taken that $22 million away from them completely and has left nothing in its place.

What have they done in Manitoba? Last year Manitoba received from the Liberal government $9.4 million under Canada Works. What is it receiving under the guidance of the new Minister of Employment and Immigration? It is receiving nothing.

An hon. Member: Zero.

Mr. Fox: What is happening to the communities in northern Manitoba? What is happening to the ridings represented by members of Parliament who have undoubtedly brought their points of view to bear? I challenge the Minister of Employment and Immigration to tell me that there is no Conservative member of Parliament from Ontario or Manitoba who has not registered his strong dissent with the minister over the elimination of their provinces from the application of that program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: It is the same thing in the province of Alberta which received $5 million last year and will receive nothing this year.

But let me mention also the great largesse of this government toward the people of the Yukon. This year the Yukon will be receiving something like $99,000 from this program. Last year it was ten times that amount. The Northwest Territories is receiving an amount which is almost an insult, but of course we are used to seeing insults bandied about by the present Minister of Employment and Immigration who treated in a cavalier fashion all those young Canadians presently working in one of the programs sponsored by his department. He was quoted in one of the Toronto newspapers as referring to them as "middle-class people who are looking for a job to spend a year on their own". I challenge him to come into my riding and see some of the things being done by these kids at Camp Bouchard in the city of Blainville.

To get back to the Northwest Territories, this year the government, which is interested in the north, is handing out $39,000 to the Northwest Territories under the Canada Works program. To my mind that is an insult. I am sure the people there would have preferred to receive nothing, rather than have the piddling sum of $39,000 thrown at them. Last year the amount of $2.8 million was spent by the previous government in the Northwest Territories.

[Translation]

In other words, Mr. Speaker, this is—

Mr. Olivier: The minister of state for unemployment development!

Mr. Fox: —the present situation. Six months of inaction, six months during which the minister had time to develop policies for the new economic conditions we are going through. Rather than formulate new policies, he has been content to this day to come up with programs we introduced last year. They are excellent programs, but because they were designed last year, they are not relevant to the new economic conditions.

The minister ignored the fact that there is a recession in the United States and that under his government we are subject to the highest interest rates in our history. He totally ignored the fact that with his energy policy and his decision to increase oil prices, he is going to create, according to even his Conservative friends in Ontario and the Ontario premier himself, 137,000 more unemployed by 1981, and this is his policy, Mr. Speaker.

And now, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the minister two or three approaches. In my opinion, if those policies are to be consistent, they must aim at two or three objectives. There is the temporary job creation. Whether you like it or not, in our country, temporary job-creation will always be necessary to make it through the hard winter months, unless, as the minister proposes, we force people on to unemployment insurance all through the winter. We should see to it instead, Mr. Speaker, that these people are productive in our society. Now, mention is made of temporary job-creation during the difficult months, of permanent job creation, of course, and more important, manpower training, the training of skilled workers, since we know that the reservoir of skilled workers we had in the past no longer exists. We cannot depend any more on immigration to meet our needs for skilled workers. We must train those workers in our own country.

And what is most shocking is to realize, every year in September or at graduation time, that CEGEP, secondary level and university students have been trained for jobs that no longer exist. And I wish to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to set up the mechanisms required to put an end to that situation. These matters obviously come under provincial jurisdiction, but if the Minister of Employment and Immigration really wants to promote a national manpower policy, he must see to it that those young people will not undertake years and years of studies that lead to a dead end.

• (1600)

[English]

The minister was telling the Canadian Club in Toronto that there are going to be a number of openings for skilled workers because of the pipeline construction to come. These are new developments that are coming about. I think it is incumbent upon the minister to see to it that we cease training people in this country for jobs that do not exist and that we make a concerted effort to see to it that skilled training meets the requirements and the needs of industry.

As members of Parliament we have all had constituents come to our office and tell us about the fact that their children have gone to school for a number of years and there is nothing for them at the end of that schooling period. I tell the minister that up until now the type of system we have had in place does not sufficiently take into account the over-all employment needs of the country. I am not saying it is his fault, and I am not sure it is anyone's fault. It is one thing to have manpower needs in one province and deciding what the manpower needs are in that province, but it is quite another thing to consider the needs right across the country. That is not the proper way to consider the problem. The proper way is to look at what the national manpower needs are right across the country. Looking at the manpower needs of one province is perhaps the way to prepare people for jobs in that province, but that closes frontiers in relation to jobs in other provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would urge the minister to reconsider past decisions. The position taken by the minister today to eliminate entirely the Canada Works program, when he has absolutely no alternative to offer that idea of forcing people on unemployment is absurd. And I also caution the minister against the temptation to which he will undoubtedly be subjected, that is to take all existing programs within his department, to arrange them in a certain way and present them to us in a new wrapping during the Christmas season. That is not good enough.

We think there are several excellent programs within that department. We feel those programs could be rearranged, must be assessed in depth and can be somewhat reoriented. But we think the present attitude of the minister who reduces the funds earmarked for job creation and resubmits nearly everything that exists within his department in a new wrapping is not good enough. It is an approach we condemn as well as his attitude today in this area, since taking over that department on June 4 last.

[English]

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in looking at this motion I notice its central theme is that the government is supposed to have taken more action than it has to create the jobs that Canadians need. I would like to suggest to hon. members opposite that there is a central fallacy in the whole philosophy of the opposition's approach to job creation.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: I want to apologize to the minister for my intervention. Whe he started his speech, we did not have the translation, and I wanted very much to understand the beginning. So I am sorry for interrupting him. I do not know whether the translation is available now, but we did not have it when he started his speech.

Mr. Atkey: There is no problem, Mr. Speaker, I will repeat my speech over again.

[English]

This is a motion, Mr. Speaker, that has as its fundamental premise the notion that the government somehow must do more in the creation of jobs in Canada. I would suggest there is a fundamental fallacy in that approach of members of the opposition, because in the real world it is not the government that creates real, long-term, continuing jobs in Canada. It is the private sector which creates the real goods and services that sell in the real world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: Governments do not create the productive goods and resources in our society. Governments are merely organizing vehicles. It is the private sector, the manufacturers, the industrial strength of Ontario, Quebec, the western provinces and the Atlantic provinces, that create the real jobs which are going to last.

What government can do, what government should do, and what this government will do, is to set the right climate for the creation of jobs by the private sector. Government can supplement the job creation of the private sector, or government can provide incentives to the private sector to create jobs, but I emphasize and I repeat—and I cannot do this strongly enough—that it is not the government that creates the real, lasting jobs in our society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: Let us look at the record of those persons opposite who formed the government, including the hon. member who just spoke. That government had a golden opportunity when it came into office in July 1974 with a very substantial majority—well I remember. Let us look at the record. When that government was elected there were 490,000 persons unemployed in Canada. That was in 1974. The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was 5.1 per cent. That was their beginning point and they had an opportunity then. Let us look at the record when the government was defeated in May of this year. We note that the seasonally adjusted figure indicated that 853,000 persons were unemployed and there was an unemployment rate of 7.7 per cent. That is some record—unemployment up in that five-year period, with that golden opportunity, by 2.6 per cent. The absolute number of unemployed is up by some 463,000 people. We know who these people are, Mr. Speaker. The women and the disadvantaged constitute the majority of that 463,000 increase suffered at the hands of the previous government.

• (1610)

There is a lesson in those numbers, Mr. Speaker. The short-term palliatives introduced by the previous government with their fancy acronyms—Canada Works, Young Canada Works, JET, JES, LIP, the Summer Job Corps—the year-round Job Corps, together they did not succeed in reducing unemployment but rather assisted in increasing it. If a multiplicity of ill-co-ordinated, short-term, stop-gap creations was the way to cure unemployment, then the numbers should have gone down rather than up. The fundamental problems that the previous government failed to deal with have come back to haunt them in their search for band-aids.

Now hon. members opposite are saying, "Let's have more of the same. Let's have more of JET, JES, LIP, Canada Works, and all those short-term make-work projects." Those projects did not leave any lasting jobs for the young people of this country, Mr. Speaker. There is a record of continued failure, and the people of Canada let the party opposite know about it on May 22.

[Mr. Atkey.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: A basic aim of this government is to stimulate long-term economic development and provide adequate incentives to the private sector which would expand and provide full-time and continuing jobs for more Canadians, and particularly young Canadians.

We have to create a climate of confidence in the country in order to achieve this, Mr. Speaker. We have to assure businessmen that the private sector can grow, that they can expand their labour force and that their community, their province, their country, is a good place in which to invest. We have to ensure that government assists the expansion in a variety of constructive ways. We have to ensure that the groups in our society which are the hardest hit by unemployment are those that benefit most by that expansion.

Direct government job creation has a role to play but it cannot be the primary means of creating jobs in Canada. It should not be the main vehicle in which a government puts its trust and its funds, because it is wasteful.

The hon. member who just spoke asks what the government has been doing for six months. That party would have people believe that the government has done very little and accomplished less. Nothing is further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. Let me put on record some facts that may be of cold comfort to hon. members opposite.

An hon. Member: That will not take long.

Mr. Atkey: Since this government took office, seasonally adjusted employment has risen by 232,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: What is more important, however, is that the unemployment rate, which was 7.9 per cent under the Liberal government on May 22, has fallen to 7.4 per cent, a drop of .5 per cent. The record of the last six months shows that the figure that really counts, which is the number of people not in the work force, has improved. It has not deteriorated, as was suggested.

I am an honest man, Mr. Speaker. That improvement was not merely the result of direct government job creation, nor was it a result of all the activities of this government since June 4.

Mr. Fox: That is true.

Mr. Atkey: Since June 4 we have had an improved climate for business in Canada. This is shown by record levels of investment in manufacturing. We do have large portions of the country which enjoy a considerable degree of prosperity. We have record high labour earnings, and we have a developing sense of partnership in the economic progress and the future of our country.

This improved climate of confidence and of trust is not something that just happened. It was not spun out of thin air. It happened because a new government, determined to change things, had let the people of Canada, its partners—the unions, the provinces, the private sector—know that it is looking to them to participate in economic growth. The federal government has never stated that it alone is able to solve all the job-creation problems.

In the course of the coming budget, Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) will set out the fundamental directions which Canada must take to live and thrive in an energy-scarce world. He will outline the measures we must take to begin to bring our deficit down rather than up, and some of the measures we plan to take to stimulate the private sector, particularly for youth.

As early as October 16, the hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) asked me in this House when I was going to bring forward my employment strategy. I told him then and on a number of subsequent occasions in this House, in committee and privately, that the details of the government's employment strategy would be set forth in the context of the budget, first in general terms by my colleague the Minister of Finance, and then in greater detail in the course of the budget debate. Unless the hon. member has been away or has been ill or something, he will realize that the budget has been set for next Tuesday, December 11. I think he is aware that, in the normal course, the budget debate follows the budget. Within the next week, therefore, the full employment strategy of the government is going to be set out in this House. There has never been any doubt about that.

I would therefore ask him why a motion couched in these terms is brought before the House at this time, when he knows that if he had waited five days he would have seen the full detail of what he wants?

Mr. Olivier: It is too late.

Mr. Atkey: Hon. members opposite are very concerned about what they are going to hear next Tuesday night. They are concerned about the budget debate. They are concerned that an employment strategy will be put forward that relies on the private sector and gives it some incentive to create the long-term jobs which the previous government was unable or unwilling to create in their five years of opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: I am sure the hon. member opposite knows that we have not been proceeding in a vacuum during this six-month period of planning. He knows that there is in force and operating in the field among the some 25,000 employees across Canada an employment strategy for 1979-80. That program runs, for the most part, through to the end of March, 1980. He should know that, because for a period he sat in cabinet with colleagues who created portions of that employment strategy. I appreciate that he was absent for a few months.

Mr. Alexander: He is still short.

Mr. Atkey: He realizes, of course, that there are operating programs. If we were to take his motion seriously, it would constitute a direct and frontal attack on the programs of his own government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: Let me tell the hon. member some of the ongoing programs during this so-called period of "inaction" that he is referring to. I mentioned Young Canada Works. I have some reservations about that program. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, there were 6,262 projects this past summer with a total commitment of over $54 million and some 33,000 jobs. That is since this government took office.

I am sure he has heard about the Local Employment Assistance Program. It was started on a very ineffectual basis by the previous government but this government has expanded it by some $30 million to service the communities that need it most—that is, the native communities of Canada. They have responded to it in a positive way and in very large numbers. I am sure he is well aware of the grants of half a million dollars each to Guysborough county and Nanaimo under the LEDA program. These programs are creating jobs in those communities which were hard hit by unemployment.

I am sure the hon. member is also aware of the employment tax program. I am sure he knows that one because we have certainly taken some lessons from it. It created 58,000 jobs in the private sector across Canada in a year and a half, about 36,000 of them in the last year. It is a program that happens to be working. It has as its basic and principal philosophy the use of tax incentives to the private sector to create permanent jobs in our society.

I am sure the hon. member has heard of the JES program. It was operating this past summer. There were about 5,000 jobs thereby available during the summer, which is not a bad record for a new government coming into office to make a program work. Then there was the critical trade skills training program which had some difficulties. We are going to expand this program. It will give Canadians the skills they will need in the future.

Of course, the hon. member has heard of many of the other programs as well. I am not going to go through the record. There was a summer youth employment program which operated in June, July and August under the new government. Was the hon. member aware of the 293,000 cumulative placements in the public and private sector for summer jobs under that program operating under this government? The hon. member did not mention those. To have mentioned those in the context of his motion would have been to attack some of the basic programs of his government, the government which he supported, and he knew that.

I expect to have an opportunity, I hope very shortly, to introduce legislation in this House which will help give effect to a major new youth employment program which is to begin this winter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: As I have already indicated, it will be a program to increase the ability of the private sector to employ young people who make up nearly half of our unemployed in Canada. We will also be putting forward plans to assist the non-profit voluntary sector. In other areas this group has shown a tremendous degree of skill and tenacity as displayed in the refugee program. The same voluntary sector will have an opportunity to hire young people to carry out environmental and other important community needs projects under the national youth service corps. Finally, I will be taking measures in the very near future to strengthen our training programs to help the private sector eliminate the bottleneck in overcoming the skill shortages which, frankly, are a legacy from the previous government.

One thing I want to assure all members is that we will be achieving more jobs, and I will say it three times—jobs, jobs, jobs at less cost, cost, cost.

Our programs are not going to fritter away the funds on jobs that are here today and gone tomorrow, like the will o' the wisp in the middle of the night. We are going to replace the employment impact of the former hodge-podge of Liberal programs with a smaller number of programs, better designed to do the job. In particular they will be designed to stimulate the creation of profitable and continuing jobs in the private sector for our unemployed young people. The way in which we have gone about the reorientation of Canada Works, which the hon. member spent a portion of his time discussing today, is a good example of the sort of approach that I have in mind. I am the first to admit that in previous periods there were isolated instances where Canada Works had its successes. But it has been an unnecessarily expensive and wasteful way of trying to create artificial jobs for Canadians.

What Canadians want is not jobs that average 30 weeks, which is the experience under Canada Works. They want jobs that last, not jobs that disappear with the government funds that supported and created them in the first place or created dependency upon provincial or municipal governments. Canadians want solid, long-term job creation, not the kind that disappears and leads people right back to unemployment insurance. We will get rid of that vicious cycle of government job creation back to UI and then back to government job creation. That is a vicious cycle, Mr. Speaker, which destroys the very creative soul of our young people in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: The opposition seems to ask why the program was not in place the day we took office. Where was your program on June 4, they ask. They know perfectly well why it was not in place.

Mr. Fox: This is December 6, six months later.

Mr. Atkey: Hon. members know why it will be in place next week. Hon. members will know why it took six months to put it together. One cannot streamline and rationalize overnight a large hodge-podge of old programs, and a few sensible ones I confess. To turn programs around and point them in the right direction takes time, thought and planning.

I want to pay a particular tribute to officials in the Canada Employment Immigration Commission for their willingness to innovate and to respond to a philosophical direction that will put this country back in the right direction.

The program was not put together overnight, but it is put together. The important thing is that it will be done right.

An hon. Member: That will be a change.

Mr. Atkey: That is why we decided rather early on in Canada Employment and Immigration that we had no choice but to go ahead with some of the plans of the previous government, particularly to mount a further Canada Works program, on a limited basis albeit. We knew that it would not be possible to have major new youth programs operating right away, although we were comforted by the fact that there were some youth programs operating then, some effectively and some ineffectively. We decided to use the plans of the previous government as a temporary bridging device from the old to the new.

I am happy to be able to say, however, that we simply did not repeat the old Canada Works program with all its unnecessary expenditures and abuses. We deliberately chose to restrict the temporary and final phase of Canada Works to those parts of the country with the highest unemployment, the highest labour surplus rates. Hon. members opposite know that. They know the areas of greatest need. It is no secret that the constituencies of greatest need and highest unemployment are not represented by members supporting the government. Nevertheless, the money was put where the people needed it the most.

All constituencies with a labour surplus rate of over 9 per cent are receiving Canada Works funds. Any constituency with unemployment rates below that rate are receiving no funds at all. I hardly need point out that this is a very different practice from that of the previous government. In earlier phases of Canada Works large areas of the country which had relatively low unemployment rates nevertheless received funds to stimulate a temporary job creation.

Saskatchewan and Alberta had seasonally adjusted unemployment rates of 4.1 and 3.9 respectively, yet they still received substantial funding under the arrangements of the Liberal government. This was not only unnecessary, it was wasteful and in many instances it was pernicious. The city of Edmonton—I have nothing against Edmonton; I am very fond of that city—had an unemployment rate of less than 3 per cent. It received $600,000 in Canada Works funds under the Liberal government from 1978 to 1979. It is extremely difficult to understand why in an area where labour is in short supply the previous government would insist upon stimulating the demand for labour. It is pushing where one should be pulling. That is exactly what the previous government did. In many areas of the country where unemployment was either moderate or low the previous government used Canada Works funds in a way that increased labour shortages rather than reduced unemployment.

Mr. Fox: Table the study.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. The Chair has been very lenient in allowing the conversations that are going back and forth between members on both sides of the House. They have not been directed to the Chair. If hon. members wish to carry on these conversations in a jestful manner, there is space provided behind the chamber. I suggest they do it out there. I ask that the remarks of the hon. minister be directed to the Chair. Let us have order in the House, please.

● (1630)

Mr. Alexander: Well said, sir.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to address my remarks to you. What the previous government was doing in its Canada Works program was engaging in the kind of wasteful, unfocused and inappropriate expenditures of funds which no government, looking at the labour market demands of the 1980s, should ever tolerate. As I said, this government will not squander the funds in that manner. We have too great a responsibility to the people of Canada, who elected a responsible government—which means a fiscally responsible government—not to squander funds in that fashion.

Instead of spending Canada Works funds in the low unemployment areas of the country, we have used them to increase the funds available for the creation of medium-term and long-term employment of, for example, native people. The LEAP program, to which I have already made reference, has increased its budget this year by about one-quarter to a level of nearly $50 million. This money will create long-term, permanent jobs for native people in areas where they need them the most. Of course, those native people have suffered for a great many years from a lack of long-term economic development and high unemployment rates. It is a very serious situation and we will come to grips with it directly.

I think that the House and the country will agree that this money is better and more productively spent in that fashion than if it were used to increase labour shortages in Calgary, Edmonton, Regina and many other parts of the country where labour shortages actually exist. I must add that the restriction of Canada Works to the high unemployment areas of Canada and the use of Canada Works funds to assist the long-term native development under LEAP is a course of action which is heartily concurred in by all provincial governments from coast to coast.

I asked members of the provincial governments directly in July, November and December what their view of Canada Works is. Now, I can say that without exception the provincial governments have indicated to us that because of its ineffectiveness, moving toward a phasing out of Canada Works is a step in the right direction. They have, as have the members on this side, no love of short-term, stop-gap, make-work type projects which create dependency on provincial and municipal governments and leave no long-term benefits.

It is significant that despite the suggestion of inhumane cutbacks from hon. members opposite, I have received very few complaints from the communities or individuals who are allegedly subjected to this inhumane treatment. Ordinary people know that Canada Works was not an effective program. They know that it makes little sense to create artificial jobs like these, particularly in areas where jobs often cannot even be filled. I suspect that the opposition will soon come to realize this as well.

I must make reference to the fact that the greatest number of complaints I get about the Canada Works program and its cutback are from some of the hon. members opposite who have been accustomed to the fact that they have had a so-called right of appearing to dispense local patronage in their constituencies. Somehow with the cutback, that right of dispensation of local patronage is no longer there.

Indeed, I am constrained to make reference to one hon. member who just yesterday was saying to me that he needed a Canada Works project in his riding to keep open the almost 1,000 miles of snowmobile trails which the tourists use to service the commercial hotels in his region. I asked the hon. member why he needed the snowmobile trails open, and he said that it was good for the business of the hotel operators. I asked him, if no Canada Works is available next year, what he intended to do. He said that the provincial government would pick it up. I then asked him why the keeping of the snowmobile trails open must be subsidized by the federal government. He replied that it had always been done that way. That was his answer, and he went on to say that this would be the fourth time around. Without naming the hon. member, I can assure him that there will not be a fourth time around on that sort of make-work project.

It is the intention of this government to build a real economic partnership with the private sector in the provinces. It is well known now that in January there will be a national economic development conference which, I hope, will be a key step in the building of that partnership. Much of the success of the measures which we will be undertaking will depend on collaboration and support from the provinces, employers and union leaders. It is fallacious to suppose that the federal government can, just by spending money in isolation, generate the economic growth and employment development which Canada must have in the 1980s. To repeat, "partnership" means a climate of mutual confidence, confidence on the part of the private sector that the goal of government is to encourage, not to interfere merely for the sake of doing so. It means confidence on the part of the government that the private sector can and will make the most of the opportunities available to provide Canadians with the goods, services and jobs that we need and can absorb.

This is not, and it must never be, a matter of mere blind ideology. Rather, it involves a certain political commitment and faith in the essential rightness of our pluralistic and private enterprise system and a political commitment on the part of the government to encourage, rather than stifle, the creativity of private business in Canada. I fully realize that after years in which the prevailing climate was one of mutual suspicion and mistrust—certainly in the last 11 years—it may take some time for a new climate to prevail. It may take more than the six months we have had.

Mr. Fox: Or the six months you have got.

Mr. Atkey: There is no doubt that this is our goal, and it is a goal that we will attain. We have already gone some distance to repair the tears in the fabric of Canadian society. I look forward next week to outlining in this chamber the youth employment program of this government. This program is just not for this winter but for the long-term future as well. We are now approaching the peak in the youth labour force, which will come around 1982, perhaps 1983. In that sense it is a shorter, medium-term problem, not a long-term problem.

Extremely high and rising youth unemployment rates have made it plain that we must take measures now to help the young people. In the mid 1980s I believe that the problem may be somewhat different. In fact, it is an economic and social imperative in Canada that if we do not get jobs for or train our young people for the skills that they will need, we will merely be creating another generation to live on unemployment insurance. This government does not intend to do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order. I regret to advise the hon. member that his time has expired. He can only continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Mr. Knowles: Provided he takes only a couple of minutes. There are too many members who want to speak today.

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I did want to mention, in my two minutes that I can utilize in this context, another serious problem, and that is the problem of unemployment among women. This government, as was indicated by the Secretary of State (Mr. MacDonald) and myself during question period today, is committed to reducing the female unemployment rate in Canada. We are committed to reducing job segregation with the ultimate aim of eliminating it altogether, and we are committed to lowering the wage gap between men and women, again with the eventual aim of getting rid of it.

I also want to mention the commitment of myself and this government to affirmative action in a promotional sense on a federal contract compliance program on a much greater and effective basis than that attempted or realized by the previous government. I want to reaffirm the commitment of this government to establish pilot projects in our Canada employment centres for improved service to female clients. I want to make reference to the restoration of the Liberal budget cut in the Outreach program and to giving higher priority to women as a target group for Outreach projects in various communities.

I want to talk about, develop and implement policies relating to employer exploitation of domestic workers here in Canada on work permits. As minister responsible for immigration as well as employment, I have the power and authority to implement such programs. I want to make available for women who are training in non-traditional occupations the facilities of support services, such as daycare centres, to enable them to go into that non-traditional sort of work.

I want a model training program for women on mothers allowance in the life skill-training program for native women to be developed. This is all with a view to giving women an opportunity to enter into the work force and participate on a full basis.

If I can end on a more futuristic note, the problem of the next two or three years is youth employment. This government will meet that challenge in co-operation and in partnership with the private sector. In longer terms, perhaps, an equally if not more serious problem is women's unemployment. That is not going to disappear in two or three years, because women are in the work force, Mr. Speaker. Women are in the work force to stay. This government will create the climate, create the framework and create the programs which will allow more women to participate effectively and equally in Canada's work force. I look forward to developing and implementing those programs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize, Mr. Speaker, I thought you had recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and as I had not seen him rise, I thought I had risen before him. That is all I wanted to say.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. I recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Had the motion moved today by the hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) been slated to come to a vote tonight, members of the New Democratic Party would have voted for the motion. But I say to the hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes that we would have done that in spite of his speech and not because of his speech.

Whenever I listen to Liberal speakers, Mr. Speaker, I am again amazed, and increasingly so, by the arrogance and gall of Liberal members of Parliament. The hon. member attacked the government—the Conservative government—for a number of reasons, and for each reason for which he attacked the Conservative government, he was attacking them, in fact, for continuing policies which were implemented and continued by Liberal governments through all the years I have been in this Parliament.

The hon. member attacked the Conservative government because it had no employment strategy. Well, I say to him that his government, which was in office from 1963 to 1979, had no employment strategy. I would like to put on the record the fact that in 1970 when the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) was prime minister we had in this country 420,000 unemployed and the rate of unemployment was 5.2 per cent. Eight years later, in 1978, we had nearly one million unemployed and the rate of unemployment was over 8 per cent. Mr. Speaker, that is what the Liberal government had in the way of an employment strategy.

The member attacked the Conservative government because interest rates have gone up. The record is clear. Whenever in recent years interest rates went up in the United States, the governor of the Bank of Canada recommended an increase in the bank interest rate in Canada and the Liberal government acquiesced in and approved that increase. What has the Conservative government done? It has done precisely the same thing; it has followed the advice of the governor of the Bank of Canada and increased interest rates in the same way as when the Liberals formed the government.

The member attacked the government opposite because it is permitting oil prices in Canada to move toward world prices. Well, of course, the Conservative government is pledged to increase oil prices in Canada at a faster rate than they were increasing under the Liberal government. But the objective is precisely the same. I see the hon. member shaking his head. This is not the time, Mr. Speaker, but we could put on record the statements made on more than one occasion by the former Liberal minister of energy, mines and resources in which he said the objective of the Liberal government was to move oil prices to where they would reach 90 per cent of the Chicago price. The hon. gentleman can shake his head, but at the right time we will set the record clear.

The member criticized the present government because there is a shortage of skilled workers. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a shortage of skilled workers in this country. In my province of Manitoba, just last week Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting, which operates a number of mines in Manitoba, applied to the department of manpower for permission to bring in a substantial number of skilled workers from outside Canada because they could not fill their needs from within Canada. That has happened in virtually every other province in this country. Under Liberal governments we have been spending hundreds of millions of dollars each year on manpower training, yet despite the fact that we had a million unemployed we have not been able to fill the jobs in this country which call for skilled people. That is to a large extent the responsibility of the mistaken, misguided policies of the department of manpower under a Liberal government.

Let me begin by saying that unemployment is a very serious problem. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) who spoke a few minutes ago was proud of the fact that unemployment has gone down in recent months. That is true, it has gone down in recent months, but the fact is that in October the number of unemployed went up for the first time in a number of months and there were 843,000 unemployed. In October the rate went up to 7.4 per cent. Mr. Speaker, surely the minister is aware of the fact that the United States, not only our neighbour but our biggest customer and biggest supplier, is now into a recession, one which looks as if it might be a major recession. That being the case, I think the minister and the government are making a major error in assuming that the programs which they and the former government have initiated are likely to have any serious effect on the increasing unemployment we shall see in the coming year.

Mr. Speaker, our party believes this country should aim for full employment. When we talk about full employment, we are not talking about a rate of 7 per cent or 8 per cent which some of the so-called experts—the economists in universities, in government and in private industry, all of whom have pretty good, secure jobs—are trying to explain means full employment? When we talk about employment, we are talking about full employment as described some years ago by the Economic Council, among other organizations. Full employment in Canada, Mr. Speaker, is 4 per cent, not 8 per cent or 7 per cent as some economists are now saying.

We have not been anywhere near that rate for a long time. What does that mean? The difference between full employment—that is, an unemployment rate of 4 per cent—and the 8 per cent to 8.5 per cent unemployment we have had in recent years means that in this country we have lost in each of those years in the neighbourhood of $5 billion worth of production. That means that federal, provincial and municipal governments have lost in the neighbourhood of $1.5 billion in taxation. That is the result of the failure of Liberal and Conservative governments to have as an objective and to put into effect a policy and a program of full employment.

In beginning his remarks the minister said that his government believes that the major responsibility for providing employment rests with the private sector and that it is the private sector which must provide real and permanent jobs. Nobody in this House would question that in a theoretical way. Whether the present Conservative government believes more in private enterprise than did the Liberal government is not important.

We live in a mixed economy. Large sectors of the Canadian economy were established and operated by Liberal and Conservative governments. I do not want to list them all, but I can think of the electric power systems which are publicly owned and operated in virtually all our provinces. I can think of the telephone systems in the three prairie provinces which are publicly owned and operated. I can think of Air Canada, the CNR and a host of others. That is not going to change under any government, including an NDP government, so the minister is correct when he says that the main responsibility for providing jobs rests with the private sector.

In order for the private sector to provide jobs it has to have the right climate. I suggest that it did not have the right climate under the Liberal government and that it does not have the right climate under this Conservative government. Interest rates have increased sharply in the few months during which the Conservatives have been in power. High interest rates are a disaster. For whom? For the small businessman, because large corporations do not have to depend as much on banks as do small businesses. Large corporations have internal funds. They can go to their multinational headquarters. They can go to their deferred income tax accounts, which now range in the billions of dollars.

In the last few months I have met many small businessmen who have told me about the high cost of keeping inventory with interest rates at 15 per cent or 16 per cent. Many of the people to whom they sell are slow in paying their bills because they have not sold their merchandise, and that is killing business.

With the exception of Italy, we have the highest rate of unemployment of any of the western industrialized countries, and the reason for that is the failure of both Liberal and Conservative governments to develop an industrial strategy. That failure has led to the deterioration of our manufacturing industries and the inability of Canadian manufacturers to compete with other corporations in Canada or on world markets. The microphones which are in front of me and every member of Parliament were built in Austria, a country which has about a quarter of the population of this country, yet it is able to produce these microphones and sell them in Canada obviously cheaper than any Canadian manufacturer can. That says something about our position with regard to manufacturing.

A large part of the reason for our difficulty is the stranglehold which multinational corporations have in many of the vital sectors of manufacturing. In the automobile industry, in chemicals, in the rubber industry—to mention just three examples—multinational corporations have virtual control. Multinationals have no responsibility to Canada as a country. They have responsibility only to their shareholders to produce the largest profits possible. I do not blame them, I blame ourselves. I blame our governments for not developing an industrial strategy to meet the needs of the Canadian people for jobs.

Given the slowdown in the economy, which is worldwide, and given the double jeopardy of the cutbacks in government activity by this government, we are going to see a sharp increase in unemployment in the next year. We are going to see that, as I said, because this Conservative government does not—nor did the Liberal government—accept the principle that it is the responsibility of governments to see that people in Canada who want to work will have the opportunity to get work.

We were critical of many of the aspects and features of the job-creation programs brought into effect when the Liberal party formed the government of this country. Some of the criticisms made by the present Minister of Employment and Immigration and by his colleagues when they were in opposition were justified because those job-creation programs were ad hoc programs. They were put together to meet situations which the then government had not anticipated and with which it tried to deal through a whole patchwork of programs. We made these criticisms when those programs were in effect. We welcome any concrete, workable improvements, but I say to the minister that, given the fact that unemployment has increased and is going to increase even more, the cutbacks in job-creation funding implemented by his government will have a disastrous effect on the unemployed in this country.

I know that the minister has not agreed with me on earlier occasions when I said that the cutbacks amounted to about $75 million, but they are very substantial cutbacks. If they are not $75 million, they are at least $50 million. The smaller amount which is now available through Canada Works programs in those provinces in which the Canada Works program is still operating—and those are the provinces east of Ontario—and the increased LEAP funding which, when taken together with the Canada Works programs which are funded for this year and the coming year, amount to substantially less than what was available last year and the year before, is not good enough. The fact is that there is not enough money in total. The minister and his department has decided that provincial unemployment rates in Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia were lower than the 8 per cent which I think they said was the floor over which they would provide Canada Works programs. The minister should know that, even if that were true, in each of those provinces there are areas and groups of people among whom the rate of unemployment is very high. In my province, the rate of unemployment among the native people is very high, ranging from, in some reserves, 80 per cent to 90 per cent and at some times in the year to a situation in the city of Winnipeg where the unemployment rate for native people is very high while the over-all rate, as the minister knows, is relatively low. Yet the minister cut off the Canada Works funding, and I say to the minister that the LEAP funds provided for the province of Manitoba are far short of what is required to meet the needs of the native people.

My colleague from Newfoundland tells me that while the Canada Works funding has not been reduced directly in his constituency, funds which were available previously through the department of fisheries and which were used to supplement the Canada Works programs for improving harbours and wharves have been cut back this year. My colleague the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)—and his is a constituency with a very large native population—tells me that last year $3 million was available but this year only $500,000 is available.

I say to the minister that I have tried to make it my business to be in touch with leaders of the native communities in my own province and across the country, the leaders of any native organization, whether it be the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood or the Manitoba Metis Federation—and one could go across the country listing the various organizations—and I have not met one who has not felt and does not feel that the funding of employment programs or job-creation programs for these people is, to say the least, insufficient.

We are facing a very difficult time. Unemployment is not going to disappear, it is going to get worse. The length of time in which the people of Canada were prepared to accept the arguments of the present government that whatever their problems are is the fault of the former government has run out. The polls taken by Gallup recently which indicated that the support for the government has dropped to 28 per cent is a clear indication that the people of Canada do not accept the arguments of the present government that it is following correct policies and that it is doing all that can be done. The Liberal government which was defeated in May of this year was defeated because the people of Canada felt that the government was not dealing with their problems.

The government was elected because it promised to follow different policies. What the people of Canada are finding is that the present Conservative government is following precisely the same policies as the former Liberal government. They are indicating their disapproval. They did so in two byelections and they did so as indicated by the Gallup poll.

I urge the minister and the government to take the problem of unemployment seriously and to face up to the fact that this country and the world are facing difficult times. I urge the minister and the government to stop believing in the principle—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He can continue only with unanimous accord. Is there unanimous agreement to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Two minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member may continue briefly.

Mr. Orlikow: I urge the minister and the government to drop the simplistic notion that the private sector of the economy, if it is unshackled, will get this country moving, that it will by itself provide all the jobs which are required. That was the prescription tried in the 1930s by another Conservative government headed by Mr. R. B. Bennett. That policy was an abysmal failure and I hope that the present Conservative government has learned something, that it will adopt policies and give some government leadership so that we can get this country moving and start reducing the number of unemployed, which we have not done now for a number of years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Under Standing Order 29, I move that the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) be now heard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Could the Chair have the motion in writing, please.

Employment Strategy

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since our friends of the Social Credit party are likely to get only one speaker today, why should we take 20 or 30 minutes to vote on this issue? I wonder if my friend would not consider withdrawing his motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member for Longueuil on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I merely want to remind the previous speaker that he knows the standing orders quite well. The motion under consideration is not debatable and he has just spoken merely to take up the time of the House.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The House has heard the motion of the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): In my opinion the yeas have it. The hon. member for Longueuil has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for having so closely considered the motion which has just been passed. I think that once and for all, when the official opposition has an allotted day, we should know if it is really for the official opposition or for the other parties which will have their own allotted day to deal with motions and perhaps continue to support the government. We do not want this, we want to show during allotted days that as far as job creation is concerned the only result we can see, if we really try to get a general idea, the only tangible result we find is that it is already too late, that there has been no job creation in the country; on the contrary, unemployment went up again in October. Our socialist friends tried to show that we in the opposition were responsible for the creation of jobs, that we were responsible for the government.

I do not know what they are aiming at, Mr. Speaker, but we realize that this group of intellectuals who have practically never worked and have always maintained that they were in favour of the workers are merely interested in their votes. They are the people who want to win on all counts and who most of the time suggest extreme solutions which they know to be ineffective. They already know it. In that sense, Mr. Speaker, I wonder sometimes what they are doing here. If they are here strictly to talk, I have not yet seen any constructive achievements. We are asking them to support us in the job-creation process. The hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) showed very well that, as far as job creation is concerned, the minister has not been able to name one project of his own.

● (1710)

Mr. Speaker, they keep telling us that they did not have time, the session has just started. Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, they were elected more than six months ago. They have had over six months to look into the situation. What is most funny is that, if I remember well, before the election they had set up a famous take-over committee to prepare for the transition if they ever won the election.

Mr. Alexander: Wait till you see our budget.

Mr. Olivier: They won the election, Mr. Speaker. If the Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander) wants to speak, if he wants to deal with labour problems and strikes, if he really wants to deal with the problem of Bell Canada employees who only got a 2.5 raise since 1977, he should look after his business rather than shout across the House. He is now becoming, by his answers in this House, the greatest dodger we ever had as Minister of Labour. He should concentrate on learning about his department, on opening files and reading them.

Mr. Speaker, I will come back to the creation of non-employment. He is called the minister of employment. I wonder why, but he is called the minister of employment. I would call him the minister of unemployment creation. One could call him a lot more things than that. He was unable to show what he had done to try and solve the problem of unemployment. The hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes showed quite clearly that by successive and dangerous increases in energy prices, by the bargaining between the Prime Minister and the Conservative premiers who decided to overtax Canadians, to allow oil companies not to pay taxes—Shell Canada made a profit of $400 million last year and did not pay a single cent in taxes. After that, they tell us they are going to create jobs with private enterprise.

Mr. Speaker, we are here to represent small businesses and all Canadian workers. Unlike the Progressive Conservative party, we shall never agree to be identified with the multinationals that are called big finance. You need only see how their party hires the members of its executive to realize that their best friends are not strangers to Imperial Oil. They are often very close to them.

Mr. Alexander: Shame!

Mr. Olivier: The Minister of Labour shouts: shame! I agree with him but he should admit it publicly. He should have the courage to rise and say: Shame on my party for always being on the side of multinationals. But he lacks courage. If the Minister of Labour lets me continue in peace I shall do the same for him. He should deal with the problems in his own department.

We have been told that jobs have been created but they were unable to tell us how many were created. I hope the parliamentary secretary will answer that question. Mr. Speaker, unemployment has increased in October. They did not say much on that subject. The minister himself asked leave to go beyond his allotted time. We accepted. Why? Because after 30 minutes he had yet to say one word about female manpower.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) has not said a word about women workers in Canada even though they are being exploited. Members on this side decided to give him an opportunity to speak because we are interested in knowing what will happen to these underprivileged people. We only have to look at small manufacturers to see how these people are working for minimum wages, 10 and 12 hours a day, because there is no labour minister responsible enough to present legislation to help them to regroup and defend themselves.

Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I asked the following question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie):

> Do you not find that minimum wages of $2.90 an hour in Canada are somewhat indecent and do you not think that you could increase them somewhat?

His only answer was to say that he would deal with this in his budget. The government is lucky to have a budget to bring down in the near future because whenever we ask them very specific questions, Mr. Speaker, they reply that we must wait for the budget.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it will be too late on December 11 to create employment for this winter; it will be too late for the unemployed of Matane, of the Beauce region, of Montreal, of Roberval and of Quebec City. Mr. Speaker, members opposite do not seem to be taking seriously the issue of job-creation. They talk about creating a peaceful climate for private enterprise, and then they tell us an employment strategy cannot be developed by the government, job creation should not be the priority of a government. This is shocking, Mr. Speaker.

We know very well that without a mixed economy, some people will be exploited in an overly capitalistic system. Mr. Speaker, the minister has come back. He said that he had created employment. What has he done for the ITT-Rayonier company? What has he done for Redpath Sugars? What has he done for the Montreal Star? Three thousand jobs have been lost! He did not speak about this, Mr. Speaker.

I know of two companies in LaSalle that closed down. Kenworth laid people off, but no reference is made to that. References are to big business' nice problems. This is what pleases them. Their people work for high finance exclusively, the multinationals. They understand each other, that is their problem. Mr. Speaker, there were 49,000 more unemployed in October than in September, and they tell us they created jobs. This is something I do not understand. In a very long time this is the first hike in the unemployment rate. The previous government succeeded in maintaining a low rate of unemployment. Under this Progressive Conservative government, we now have a 10 per cent rate in Quebec.

An hon. Member: They will remember that!

Mr. Olivier: Turning to the temporary job-creation programs, the minister this afternoon announced the end of those programs.

An hon. Member: Right!

Mr. Olivier: It is clear to him that they will disappear.

An hon. Member: No.

An hon. Member: They will teach him in no time.

Mr. Olivier: I wonder if he has been living in California, I wonder if he knows this country, this northern country with hard winters. Since the winter season is more difficult, we need a temporary job program.

An hon. Member: Even the minister of employment agrees.

An hon. Member: His is against snowmobiles.

Mr. Olivier: They succeeded in killing the program's credibility, the Canada Works program. And how did they do this? They said: Wherever there is less than 9 per cent unemployed, there will be no Canada Works program.

An hon. Member: When you are unemployed you do not need to eat.

Mr. Olivier: They maintain that 7 per cent, 8 per cent, 8.5 per cent unemployment is acceptable in our society. Mr. Speaker, in an affluent society such as this, suggestions that a 7 per cent or 8 per cent unemployment rate is acceptable are simply shameful.

I suggest that the minister should reconsider his approach. It is easy for him to say fine things, just like a university professor. Again, Mr. Speaker, these are people who never had to work with their hands. Their lives have always been easy. I am not blaming them for that, but they should not impose additional burdens on the shoulders of those who leave their homes at six o'clock in the morning and return at five o'clock in the evening, earning some $200 a week. These hon. members could not care less. They are not concerned about how they will cope with higher gas prices. Do they know that a worker who earns $2.90 an hour, the minimum wage which the Progressive Conservative party refuses to raise, may have to buy two gallons of gas to get to work? Do they know that he may have been working for two hours already even before getting to his job? This kind of thing is not acceptable.

What is this youth program? Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson) has been urging the government for several months to adopt a clear policy on the creation of jobs for our young people. Our party critic on youth has demonstrated often, also in committees, that the government is not concerned about the future, and our youth is our future.

Mr. Speaker, this government seems just as surprised as Canadians were to find itself in power. It is just as if its members had woken up one day holding the power and not knowing what to do with it. Mr. Speaker, they have been at it for six and a half months and they are still studying. I recall the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) saying they were a government of students. I reckon students are a more intelligent bunch than this government. If those in power were actually students of economics and finance from anywhere in Canada they would have done things a hundred times better than them, Mr. Speaker. A hundred times better would not be so difficult, I can tell you.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get gack to the very obvious reluctance of the government to protect working women. The Minister of Labour, the man who should care about that situation, should realize how working women are being exploited and how small and big enterprises exploit them.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that in 1979, almost 1980, it is unacceptable for a woman who often brings food to the household to live in a system which does not produce the number of jobs needed because of the lack of an employment policy. This lack of policy is difficult to understand. If the price of gas is soon raised to $2.25 a gallon it will have repercussions throughout the economy, it will boost the profits of companies by hundreds of millions of dollars, it will generate inflation. Inflation reduces employment, thereby creating more unemployment, and in addition, this government decided to introduce legislation cutting the present unemployment benefits to solve the problem of the unemployed. Well, it looks as though this government has made its choice: the rich in our society should dominate, they should be in control and the poor should listen, they should follow, they should always say yes. Their policy is something like that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I would have liked the minister to announce that there would be new programs for youth this winter, that the Canada Works program would remain.

I should like to stress here, Mr. Speaker, the partisan way in which they intend to create jobs. They decided that a constituency would need to have a 9 per cent unemployment rate to be eligible for Canada Works projects. Mr. Speaker, Longueuil has a population of 130,000. Prince Edward Island has 118,000 and they have four federal members of Parliament and, I believe, 30 provincial members. Longueuil is home to about 85,000 votes. They have decided it would be based on a percentage. So suppose you have 130,000 people in a given constituency and 30,000 in another . This means, to use round figures, 10 per cent of 130,000 unemployed. Well, even if there were 13,000 in our constituency, because they are numerous, they are not eligible for a Canada Works project.

If they think there are fewer unemployed but the percentage is a little higher, then they are entitled to one of these projects, Mr. Speaker. These are the selective programs of the Progressive Conservative government. And this is the partisanship shown by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Nielsen) and especially by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. La Salle) who is now the one who makes the decisions in Quebec. It is the hon. member for Joliette who decides, Mr. Speaker, who in Quebec will have funds for a Canada Works project. The applicant must prove he is a Conservative before he gets the grant. I suggest this is shameful for our Parliament. It is a shame to this Parliament, Mr. Speaker, to make partisan politics at the expense of the unemployed, at the expense of women, and it is outrageous, Mr. Speaker, not to have any policy for working women, for young people and for the unemployed.

Mr. Alexander: With the consent of the House, would be hon. member allow one short question? I wonder whether he could advise the House if his particular constituency is involved with Canada Works, and to what extent in terms of dollars. I just wanted to know whether he had been excluded or included.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to inform the hon. member that I have as many projects as there are Progressive Conservatives. I have none.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to be brief, and I want to thank all my friends from Quebec, the Liberals, for that dirty trick this afternoon. Only guys from Quebec could do that, and I apologize to the people for them. Besides, if I had been asked I would have gracefully given him the floor. I am very happy to have the opportunity to speak on this opposition motion. I also want to congratulate the hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) for introducing the motion which reads as follows:

That this House deplores the complete inaction of the government, after six months in office, with regard to the creation of jobs, regrets the inhumane cutbacks in the Canada Works program that have eliminated hundreds of communities across Canada.

We must say to the people, Mr. Speaker, that this opposition motion is of course another opportunity for us to criticize the government and urge it to propose policies which are more in keeping with the needs of the times. In these discussions, as in all others, we of the Social Credit Party of Canada always try to be as constructive as possible because our motto is not to criticize for the sake of criticizing. We rely on concrete proposals, faced as we are with the lack of decisiveness shown by those responsible for our financial situation and who have always been the policymakers in Canada.

When we read the motion, we realize that it insists on job creation. Here the two old parties show what they really stand for, the belief they still have in the full employment thesis, while we believe in guaranteed income for all. The Liberals, who are only slower socialist unionists than the New Democratic Party or sometimes reformed socialists, since the former prime minister was once a socialist, still hang on to the full employment theory. They have not yet been able to attune themselves to progress in all sectors.

And I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the present government will finally revolutionize the old ideas, because Tories are said to be extremely conservative, to launch into real social reforms which will allow us to catch up on the extraordinary scientific, industrial, mechanical and even electronic evolution, so that we can achieve a humanized economic system in which each and every Canadian will benefit from our tremendous wealth.

We are living in the electronic age, I would even say the space age; yet from the social and human point of view we are 50 years behind the times. One hundred years or even fifty years ago people said right and left that one had to work to make a living; that was understandable in those days, Mr. Speaker, since the cottage industry was the basic industry and production depended on the actual number of craftsmen.

But today, now that the machine has replaced the artisan, forcing over 60 per cent of the regular labour force into unemployment, while production increased at the rate of 10, 20 and 50 times its former volume, you will agree with me that we can no longer speak the same language as our great grandfathers and even our grandfathers when we speak of full employment. And when we shout at the government, as the Liberals and the NDPs are now doing, criticizing it for not creating jobs, we are becoming increasingly ridiculous because we know, from all those years of experience we have spent here, that the jobs the government created in industry were for the most part temporary. And permanent jobs only confirm this fact. All those temporary jobs did was to modernize the industries and create new lay-offs instead of new permanent jobs. I limit myself strictly to industrial employment, deliberately overlooking employment in the service industries, because the latter always mean a new levy against the taxpayers.

We should stop talking about full employment once and for all and work hard to bring in the best possible system of guaranteed annual income not only for all those who have been fired and replaced by machines, but also for all consumers who have no job and no income based on their production or even on their over-production or the super production capacity of our country.

What do we need to produce today? Is it machinery? Manpower? It is not machinery since it can produce three or four times more than humans. It is not the manpower either since we have over one million unemployed and even more people on social welfare. Could it be consumers, Mr. Speaker? Yet so many families cannot even afford essential food products like milk because it is too expensive. Food costs too much for them. The only thing wrong is the distribution which for most consumers is still based on the percentage of jobs. The logic of this crazy system of ours is quite simple: you don't work so you are entitled to unemployment insurance for a few weeks, but after that, nothing. Production cannot be bought without employment. The only solution that our economists could find was to force quotas on producers and fine them if they ever dared exceeding these quotas. We have that in agriculture. We witnessed and we are still witnessing the most glaring abuses of our times.

While infants and children were denied the milk they needed because their parents were too poor to buy it, farmers were forced to spill the milk of their cows down the drain. I really mean "forced", for if these producers took that milk to the dairy plant they were fined in addition to losing all their production. For instance, if they had $500 worth of milk, they were fined $500 and their production was seized and sold on the market. They were fined for their milk surplus. Such unbelievable contradictions occur because no government so far had the intelligence or the "free" will to create a system that would bring this super production to the consumer who has no access to it simply because he was replaced by a machine. For years we have been looking for means to help the worker in his daily work, and now that we have found some, the most victimized is the worker.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the official opposition is still serving us the same salad, full employment, always employment, many jobs in order to eat, in order to provide a decent living for all Canadians. It is as preposterous as ever.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that there are not enough intellectuals in the opposition to suggest a distribution system which could operate concurrently with our modern production system. It is not enough to condemn the government's inaction. We have to suggest as soon as possible to this government remedial measures designed to deal with this unacceptable situation for all the Canadian people. Moreover, having been in power for six months, the government has not done much to set the economy afloat and to urge investors to create new jobs, and I repeat, urge.

I was quite pleased to hear the minister this afternoon. I personally agree with him that the government can only create temporary jobs. I have always thought so, because necessarily permanent and well-paid jobs are always created by private enterprise. Today the Prime Minister reminds me of a captain who inherited an old damaged boat years ago and which he is stubbornly trying to lead safely into port with a big hole of $12 billion in its hull. I wonder whether he will reach the shore before March 31, 1980.

After all, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian public must be told that we are still living with the estimates and liabilities of the former government. There is no need to worry. The estimates for the fiscal year 1979-1980 which began on April 1, 1979 will apply until March 31 of next year. Therefore, we must manage within the current fiscal year ending on March 31. Now, the present government is trying to adapt. The first projections which the Liberals made in April 1979 were of course for the full fiscal year, and I think that the present government is trying to make the necessary adjustments due to the circumstances and current events.

That is why I mentioned a while ago the ship which is going through difficult times. It is much easier to abandon ship and tell the crew: Well, take over, it is your turn to try. Listening to the speeches a while ago, I felt it was exactly like that. The former government is blaming the new one for what it failed to do and should have done. But if we blame the present government, we must be fair and praise its efforts over the past six months in the area of consumer protection. To mention only the last two bills, I point out the measure extending the spouse's allowance at the pensioner's death, and Bill C-20 being considered by the Committee of the Whole, which, in addition to creating new jobs, will bring about a reform advocated by members of the Social Credit party of Canada for the past 20 years and allow the deduction of mortgage interest paid by the head of family and home owner. We have been asking for that for the past 20 years. It is not perfect. The Liberals said: You should have given everything and made it universal. Yet, this is a start. The door is now open. That is one way of reducing interest on single family dwellings, and in so doing, creating employment by encouraging young people to become home owners without having to spend 30 years working for big finance.

The Liberals will maintain that they too encouraged housing construction, and even that they helped the average Canadian to own his home, thus creating new jobs. I say to that, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberals helped first the owners of multiple unit residential buildings; and since they can avail themselves of all kinds of tax deductions on their properties, so that the money they borrowed cost them almost nothing, thanks to the deductions. As for the average owners, the former government helped them to get into debt for 25 or 30 years and at the rates of interest we know. Just think of it, the rates of interest run up to 15 per cent! Small owners were helped into debt, which means that big finance was helped out first and foremost.

Today, those small owners find themselves on a dead end street because of the increase in interest rates. That is why Bill C-20 is so timely. And what does the government do, Mr. Speaker? Well, it tells us about finding employment for 105,000 young people from now until the end of March, 1981. It talks about the 44,000 agreements reached with employers right across Canada, which have enabled them to create over 57,000 jobs. To our mind, the Progressive Conservatives do not seem to be efficient enough. They keep talking about tomorrow, while the Liberals spoke of nothing but yesterday and while the unemployed stay with the same problem, that of being self-sufficient with regard to job shortages. Now, about the Canada Works program, this is what we read, and I quote:

—the cutbacks . . . that have eliminated hundreds of communities in Canada—

I was somewhat surprised to find that in the motion.

● (1740)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order. I regret to advise the hon. member that his time has expired. He can continue only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Liberals very much. For once, they are going to learn to be polite.

In fact, I was a little surprised to find again—I say it again because of the shouting, but it will calm down—I was a little surprised to find that again in the motion. In fact, as far as the Canada Works projects are concerned, I had the impression there was no difference compared to previous years in my constituency. When I compare with other hon. members, I think that Roberval received its fair share of the pie. Of course, I should have liked, like all my colleagues, to see a much higher total amount, although it is a million more than last year. I should have preferred to see all 156 projects submitted by the people of Roberval approved. If I put myself in the position of the promoters of those projects, I am convinced they all consider their projects acceptable and very urgent. But if there are some criteria to be met, if I consider the local unemployment level compared to the amount allocated by the government to each constituency, it is all right.

The purpose of those projects is still to provide seasonal work for unemployed people who are on the labour market so they can at least accumulate additional stamps to extend their future benefits. Of course, those projects will have to bring permanent benefit to all those municipalities where they are carried out. That is why I encourage and thank the minister who this afternoon gave us some idea of the rearrangement he wanted to make in Canada Works projects. He wants to do more to support private enterprise, as he said, because the real jobs, the permanent jobs, are in the private sector and he can be sure we will be behind him on this side and we will try to provide more permanent jobs in Canada.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-17, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, and Bill C-18, to amend the Customs Tariff and to make certain amendments to the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932, the Australian Trade Agreement Act, 1960 and the Union of South Africa Trade Agreement Act, 1932, without amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

December 6, 1979

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Roland A. Ritchie, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 6th day of December, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy of the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

● (1800)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate chamber to attend His Excellency the Deputy Governor General, His Excellency was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-17, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to amend the Canada Pension Plan.—Chap. 5.

Bill C-18, an act to amend the Customs Tariff and to make certain amendments to the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932, the Australian Trade Agreement Act, 1960 and the Union of South Africa Trade Agreement Act, 1932.—Chap. 6.

Bill S-10, an act to confirm the authority of the Federal District Commission to have acquired certain lands.—Chap. 7.

ENERGY

TABLING OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD REPORT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, under part VI of the National Energy Board Act I should like to table, in both official languages, a copy of the National Energy Board's reasons for decisions pertaining to various applications for the export of natural gas.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING NATURAL GAS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement to the House on the government's appraisal of our natural gas situation and on the principal elements of our policy for this important source of energy, including the question of additional exports.

First, I want to talk about the place of natural gas in our energy strategy.

Gas is a Canadian success story. We have a favourable endowment which is responding well to the development efforts of the petroleum industry. It is one of the keys to energy self-sufficiency for our country.

● (1810)

The extent of the resource base in southern Canada has recently been re-evaluated by provincial and national regulatory bodies. Their findings indicate that remaining-recoverable reserves of gas in western Canada are of the order of 72 trillion cubic feet, about one third more than earlier estimates.

Exploration activity in the Beaufort Sea, the Arctic Islands and off our east coast continues to turn up encouraging gas discoveries. Of these, the finds in the Sable Island area offer some of the best opportunities for early development.

As was indicated at the first ministers' conference in November, it is the government's intention to create the conditions for natural gas to be available to more Canadians right across the country. Our priority must be to make maximum use of what we have in relative abundance. Every gallon of oil substituted by the use of natural gas contributes to our energy independence.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) indicated following his discussions with Premier Lougheed last week, we are working towards an agreement with Alberta on an incentive price for natural gas. Alberta has already introduced legislation to facilitate the implementation of marketing incentives for new sales of gas.

This will enable gas distributors to expand markets by helping to support the costs of extending service and bring about conversion from other fuels. The gas transmission and distribution industry is responding with ambitious plans for the geographical expansion of markets in Quebec, the maritime provinces and British Columbia.

The substitution of gas for oil fuels in areas of Canada supplied with indigenous oil can help "stretch" our dwindling supplies of conventional crude oil while we get on with the job of developing the oil sands and heavy oils from which the bulk of our western supply may have to come in the 1990s.

[Translation]

Gas has an especially important role to play in provinces which are actually or prospectively dependent on costly and insecure sources of overseas oil. The government is determined to reduce this dependence and to secure for Canadians living in these areas a stable and reliable supply of domestic petroleum energy.

The greatest opportunity is presented in the province of Quebec. There, by 1990, additional gas sales could be equivalent to 80,000 barrels daily of oil. Taken together with efforts which the province is making to develop its own hydroelectric resources, this can make an important contribution to achievement of our national self-sufficiency goal.

[English]

We will work closely with the provincial governments and the gas distributors to ensure that there is a rapid but orderly conversion to natural gas. I want to extend this undertaking especially to Ontario, whose government has requested an integrated effort to obtain maximum substitution within the physical limitations of the industry.

The federal government believes that very substantial domestic gas market expansion will be accomplished in the next decade as a result of incentive pricing and industry's planning for pipeline expansion.

There is an abundant supply for existing users. Consumers in areas already serviced can switch to gas as quickly as equipment and labour will allow. And the needs of future new users are assured by the size of our resource base, the vigour of its development and the vigilance of our regulatory authorities.

Now, as to the matter of additional exports in the circumstances I have outlined, the government is fully prepared to see the export of those quantities which are surplus to our foreseeable needs for use in Canada. Such exports stimulate exploration, and success could mean more oil as well as gas, and make a valuable contribution to our trade balance.

The export of natural gas is subject to licence of the National Energy Board and approval by the governor in council. The board must be satisfied that the quantity to be exported is surplus to reasonably foreseeable requirements for use in Canada and that the export price is just and reasonable in the public interest.

The National Energy Board, which enjoys the government's complete confidence in carrying out the task entrusted to it by Parliament, has now determined that we have a significant exportable surplus of natural gas. Consequently the board is prepared to issue licences for a total of 3.75 trillion cubic feet.

The board in February, 1979, decided to apply three new tests to applications for additional gas exports. The amount of gas which the board is now prepared to license is very much within the most stringent of these, the "current deliverability test". This means that the surplus to be exported has actually been found and developed. It is not dependent on future discoveries.

The board received applications for the export of 8.8 trillion cubic feet for terms of up to 15 years. The board found it could approve the full amount of applied-for exports only through 1984, with reduced levels through 1987, and no new exports after 1987. The government agrees with the board's findings and will allow the licensing of these exports to proceed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: Shame on you!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The government is satisfied that future Canadian requirements have been appropriately assessed and that the new exports are surplus to these requirements. These exports are short-term in nature and will be of substantial economic benefit to Canada. At today's export price, they are worth $13.2 billion dollars U.S.

I want now to touch on some of the other implications of this decision. Almost half of the new exports are for Pan-Alberta and will assist the pre-build of the Alaskan natural gas pipeline. In approving the Pan-Alberta exports, the board imposed the requirement that exports be delivered only through pre-built sections of the Foothills pipeline. It further conditioned approval on the understanding that the construction of pre-built facilities will proceed expeditiously for completion of the western leg by November, 1980, and the eastern leg by 1981. Should this not take place it would be the intent of the board to conduct a review of these licences.

Thus it will be up to the sponsors of the Alaska natural gas pipeline to respond with firm commitments for the entire pipeline. The board's decision clears up any ambiguities that may have existed and thus should give impetus to the completion of the whole system.

The other half of the new exports will be shared by other exporters and these can begin almost immediately after United States approvals are obtained. The Pan-Alberta exports already have conditional approvals from U.S. authorities.

Many Canadians, I know, would be uneasy in today's oil situation about increased exports of any form of energy. However, the government is satisfied that ample provision has been made for expanded Canadian needs for gas, and that the price to be received is fair and just to us. Given the circumstances it would be hard to justify withholding these supplies from our neighbour. As the Prime Minister has said, we are not immune to economic problems faced by our trading partners as a result of oil supply problems. It is in our own interest to help reduce these.

Canada has a great opportunity to move towards energy self-sufficiency. Its achievement will in no small way depend on the wise use of our natural gas resources. This government is responding fully to this challenge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for having sent us a copy of his statement. I regret, however, that contrary to our understanding with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) we did not get it before five o'clock and while we were assured that we would be given two hours this afternoon, it was 5.35 p.m. by the time we received the documents which were tabled.

Mr. Clark: It is better than in the past.

Mr. Lalonde: You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that it is difficult to read such a voluminous document in 35 minutes. This is why our comments should be interpreted in that context and we hope that we will have the opportunity to reconsider this very important matter. Just the same I would like to congratulate sincerely the minister for the quality of his French and for his effort when he made his statement. Let us deal now with the subject matter of the paper.

• (1820)

[English]

I think that today we had another unbelievable statement from this government. I think this statement will be one that Canada will live to regret and that may go down in the history as one of the greatest sellouts we have seen.

To begin with, the government has its priorities all wrong. We are threatened with a shortage of oil in this country. I see members on the other side laughing at the situation. There are many people in Canada today, in eastern Canada in particular, who are not laughing at the situation, who are not joking as are these guys on the other side.

This government has its priorities all wrong. We are threatened with a shortage of oil in Canada, and in eastern Canada in particular, as has been admitted by both the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn). The government has been fiddling for the last few months with huge price increases in oil and gas in the form of direct or disguised taxes, and we are faced with the situation where eastern Canada, the Atlantic provinces, need more natural gas and need a gas pipeline to take gas to the homes and to the industries there.

What we have today is a general statement about the domestic situation, a number of platitudes that we have heard before, and then, to resolve that dramatic and tragic domestic situation, we have an announcement that we will sell 3.7 trillion cubic feet of gas to the United States. That certainly is a clear indication that this government has its priorities all wrong.

There is one good thing in this statement, and that is at the beginning where it tells us that gas is a Canadian success story and its speaks pretty eloquently about the great things that have been done in Canada. I should like to remind the minister that these things have not taken place by themselves. They have taken place through legislation that had been put forward by this government when it was in office—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: —often over filibusters by the opposition.

The minister spoke about the discoveries in the Beaufort Sea, the Arctic islands and off the east coast of Canada. I should like to remind the minister that most of those discoveries have been done either with or by Petro-Canada over the last three and a half years—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: —and that Petro-Canada today is the second largest gas producer in this country.

Mr. Andre: So is Pacific Pete.

Mr. Lalonde: In terms of the non-renewable resources in this country, gas is the largest non-polluting resource we have and the easiest and cheapest to transport across the country. Therefore, we should be extremely careful and cautious when we talk about exports. We should think in terms of the necessity of conserving it for future generations and of the future needs of our country. The worst thing we could do is to export gas for a fast buck or in order to support a faltering dollar, because then it will mean that down the line we will have to supply our Canadian needs with more expensive and more polluting resources, such as coal for instance. We have to be very cautious about relying upon illusory, short-term gains.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I would remind hon. members that we listened with politeness and courtesy to the minister. I would hope they would extend the same courtesy to this side.

Mr. Pinard: They are not taking this seriously.

Mr. Lalonde: And I hope they will take this question seriously, because it is very serious.

So in the short term we may increase the value of our dollar but we might very well diminish the competitiveness of our farmers, fishermen, and our manufacturing sector, by artificially propping up the dollar in the short term and finding ourselves less competitive in the world.

Therefore, if we have to have a bias, our bias as Canadians should be against any gas exports outside Canada. But let us assume that it might be possible to export surplus gas at this time. That should take place only on the basis of an overriding national interest, and only with the guarantee that Canada is getting the maximum advantage out of such a deal. In particular, no long-term commitments should be made.

In the past we know that, on the basis of information that has proven erroneous subsequently, Canada has exported gas and oil which now we wish had not been exported and had remained in Canada. It is therefore important that we approach the question of exports with utmost caution. Obviously that applies to gas in particular. It does not apply to oil since we do not have a surplus of oil, even though the Prime Minister last January made a generous offer to Japan of a non-existent oil surplus during his famous world tour.

So far as the statement of the minister is concerned, we note the vagueness of the statement about the building and completion of the pipeline which is essential. It leaves open the door to delays in the pipeline construction by extending the authorization of exports over a period of seven years and the possibility of reviewing the authorization after exports have started, therefore authorizing exports before the commitment for the building of the line has been made.

There is no word in this statement regarding swaps, and nothing about the eastern Canadian situation, the building of the Quebec and Maritime pipeline, and the possibility of exports to the northeastern states. In our view, exports of natural gas to the United States should be authorized only on the basis of, first of all, an ironclad commitment regarding the building of the whole Alaska gas pipeline. Everything has to be signed, sealed and delivered, particularly the financing plan and the financing guarantees, before we start exporting one cubic foot of gas out of this country to the United States.

Second, there must be an arrangement for swaps in this agreement with the United States so that down the line, if Canada were to need natural gas, we would be in a position to obtain natural gas from the Alaska gas pipeline which we might need in exchange for the gas we are now providing to the Americans. That would be the second point.

The third point is with regard to revenues arising out of gas exports to the United States. They should be used to ensure the initiation and completion of the Quebec and Maritime gas pipeline so that eastern Canada would be fully served in terms of gas service and so that people in the maritimes and eastern Quebec would be assured of getting natural gas at a reasonable price.

Fourth, I find it unbelievable that the minister says it is up to the sponsors of the pipeline to come up with firm commitments for the entire pipeline, leaving out the United States government in this matter. Negotiations have taken place on this matter under the previous government with the U.S. government, and we should have a commitment from the U.S. government in this respect, as well as from private industry. Experience should have shown us that we should not be satisfied with relying only on the sponsors of the Alaska natural gas pipeline for the future building of the whole pipeline.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Lalonde: The government opposite is even ready to privatize the whole of the country and to give it to the United States companies, without even dealing with the U.S. government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: The last point concerns the fact that we have a commitment for seven years on this sale. Our preference, based on discussions that have taken place with the industry and the community in general, has been for five-year agreements on exports. We are surprised that the government has been considering seven-year agreements.

Because of all these factors which are not referred to in this document and which, in our view, are fundamental to the export of such large quantities of gas, we believe that the government does not have sufficient guarantees from the United States authorities and from the U.S. purchasers of gas to protect our security in the future.

This statement is completely unacceptable to us as the opposition, as I am sure it is to the people of Canada. It does nothing on the building of the entire Alaska pipeline. It does nothing on the question of the Quebec and Maritime gas pipeline. It does nothing on the question of swaps. For these reasons we are very distressed and very dissatisfied with this report.

● (1830)

In conclusion, I should like to make it clear that the opposition is deeply dissatisfied with this statement announcing the sale of a huge quantity of natural gas to the United States without getting in exchange any guarantees that Canada's natural gas supply will be secure or that eastern Canada, and more particularly eastern Quebec, will be in a position to get natural gas at a competitive price in the foreseeable future. In our opinion, once again the government has got its priorities all wrong. While we are threatened with a gas and heating oil shortage in eastern Canada, the government announces today a big natural gas sale to the U.S. without having dealt with the crisis and without having provided any answers to the domestic problems of vital interest and concern to the Canadian people.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

[English]

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party I want to say at the outset that we are unalterably opposed to this decision to export more natural gas to the United States. We consider this export decision shocking and irresponsible.

I find it utterly incredible that in one breath the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) is stating the real possibility of imminent fuel shortages, and in the other breath, his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn), is approving future and greater exports of natural gas to the United States. Surely any responsible government, aware of the precarious fuel supply situation we are in this winter, would look toward the future of the energy security of Canada and keep those domestic natural gas supplies here in Canada for future use by Canadians.

In a nutshell, it appears to me that the government has put the earning of some fast bucks, and reducing our trade deficit through these exports, ahead of the long-term energy security of Canadians. I think really what has happened here is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is making energy policy. The Minister of Finance is concerned about the government's deficit and the state of the trade balance. He is looking toward the next election and taking the easy way out by approving these natural gas exports. We are giving away our trump card; we are selling out our birthright. It is incredibly shortsighted, given the domestic and international energy supply situation, that this government, on the eve of an energy crisis, would be approving these massive exports of natural gas to the United States.

Before I get into the critique of why I think this should not take place, I want to address a few comments to what I consider the utter duplicity and hypocrisy of the spokesman of the Liberal party. It was only last February when the National Energy Board, in a preliminary report, was talking about possible exports of two trillion cubic feet, that not one member of the Liberal party, then the government, rose in opposition to such a concept. Yet we hear tonight from the spokesman of the Liberal party that they have done a flip-flop and are opposed to this export. Indeed, the former minister of finance, in his last budget, was supportive of natural gas exports. I can only conclude that the Liberals are utterly devoid of any intellectual honesty.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: On the matter of why the government is approving these exports, it said that it bases its decisions on the recommendations of that reputable agency, in the eyes of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the National Energy Board.

Every Canadian knows that the credibility of the National Energy Board is shot. Its track record at predicting supplies of energy in this country is as bad as the private oil industry itself. Only in 1971 we were told that we had over 900 years of supply of natural gas. Then, as late as 1975, the National Energy Board predicted that we would be running short by 1985. Then, of course, when the push was on by the industry for a Mackenzie Valley pipeline, the NEB reduced its prediction and said that we would have a shortfall in 1983. Now we are told that we have a surplus and we can export.

In light of that dismal record of prediction by the NEB, surely the government should be proceeding with caution. The NEB admits that domestic gas demand will outstrip production in just 12 years. Of course this is using a new formula which reduces the estimates of reserves for our future needs.

Even the minister's own department, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, cautions against allowing exports of natural gas. They are saying that we should be more conservative in our surplus estimates; if we are to err, it should be on the side of safety.

Surely we have a brilliant opportunity here, by retaining these gas supplies, to substitute natural gas for oil in this country. I thought that was one of the key elements of this government's policy which would move us toward energy self-sufficiency, that is, natural gas substitution. Yet when we hear from the applicants for the pipeline to eastern Canada, the Q & M pipeline, their prediction indicates that they foresee a demand of two trillion cubic feet in excess of what the National Energy Board predicts for eastern Canada. In light of this government's commitment to substitute gas for oil, in light of the company's own projections of demands in eastern Canada, surely the government should not approve these exports. Indeed we have an opportunity as well to be developing a petro-chemical industry in eastern Canada, if we retain these reserves here for us.

I should like to quote for the minister from the 1979 policy paper which was put out by his department. It reads as follows:

> The security of supply argument for retaining gas in Canada for domestic consumers provides a persuasive counter-argument to the proposals for rapid expansion of exports.

It appears to me the Tories have decided that it is more important to export gas to enable Californians to heat their swimming pools, than to enable Canadians to heat their homes in the years ahead. I consider that utterly shameful for a government which claims to represent the Canadian interest.

My leader predicted last week that the government would approve this gas export which represents a 50 per cent increase over current levels. I can only conclude that this government's energy policy is jeopardizing Canada's long-term energy security, by selling off inexpensive gas now in Alberta, in return for imposing on Canada in the future expensive Arctic and far northern gas, which will be at least four times the price of this gas that we will be exporting to the United States.

Their talk of self-sufficiency is a sham; their actions belie their promises. In this approval of natural gas exports, we see where the Tories really are in terms of an energy policy. It is nothing less than a continuation of the Liberal policy of selling out our natural resources. It is one step closer to a continental energy policy. It is nothing short of treachery for future generations of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the minister. I should like to know from him whether, in the export sale he announced tonight, he intends also to include in the bargain for export his mother and his father, his grandmother and his grandfather, his daughter and his son, his granddaughter and his grandson; all the children, sons and daughters—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Caccia: —and all the grandsons and granddaughters of the 23 million Canadians whose heritage he is supposed to protect? Will he answer this question, please?

• (1840)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in response to the question, I can only say that I feel very sorry for the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) representing, as he does, the flip-flop position that the Liberal party has taken in respect of the matter of exports. I have to agree with my friend across the way, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), that there is no political morality in the Liberal party today and they are prepared to take any position in opposition to a progressive step. What I want to say to the hon. member is simply this. This opportunity for Canadians to expand their energy potential is a challenge which this government will accept, and a challenge which this government will carry out. I want to tell the hon. member that his position—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Perhaps he would like to be quiet and just listen to my answer. I listened to his question.

An hon. Member: Then answer the question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I say that the position is quite clear. This particular export application is one that is acceptable in relation to the foreseeable demand in Canada even with the extensive expansion that we anticipate in Canada under this particular government. The hon. member is misleading the House when he suggests anything else. He is simply not basing his case on fact. The fact is that we are looking ahead to future generations, unlike the previous government which did not plan and did not in any sort of context have an energy policy. We have a national energy policy which involves very great expansion, indeed, in terms of natural gas across this country. This particular application is very supportive of that objective.

The two points the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde) mentioned, suggested that in fact this export was somehow not supportive of the Alaska natural gas pipeline. He is completely wrong. If he will look at the statement I made today, and study it carefully, he will see the condition upon which the Pan-Alberta application has been approved. It is conditional upon the pipeline going through to completion. He simply has no basis of fact in that regard. The second aspect is that he suggests it does nothing in respect of providing natural gas to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister is, of course, volunteering more information than he has been asked to provide, for which I am sure he is to be commended, but I think I have to confine him to answering the questions that have been asked.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I find this additional export permit a very, very dangerous thing. It disturbs me a great deal. I am very much concerned about a document we received this spring in June, or somewhere about that time, which had reference to the 25-A1 formula. That formula involves 25-years' prediction, taking next year's demand, and that took us in terms of natural gas only to 1992-93, which is about 12 or 13 years. That is where the supply and demand line crossed. I just wonder what has happened in the course of three or four months that makes it possible for us to export additional amounts of gas, given only 12 or 13 years' supply and not 25 years. This is a very misleading figure. We think that 25 years means 25 years of assured supply when it means only 12 years of assured supply, particularly if those figures this spring were correct. I would like to know what the difference is now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong. The National Energy Board is not basing its recommendation on the formula which the hon. member has presented to the House. The fact is that this is one of the tests used by the National Energy Board. That board uses the most conservative estimate with regard to the actual reserves we have on hand, and the availability, not on the basis of demand down the road, but on the basis of our reserves we can put our hands on. The fact is that, in anticipation, the Energy Board has looked ahead to the foreseeable future, not only to the existing demand for natural gas here in Canada, but also to the expanded use that is contemplated by our particular policy. That represents a very substantial conversion to natural gas.

The policy we enunciated in the course of our energy package is one that is going to change consuming patterns in Canada in respect of natural gas very substantially. The policy is forward looking and it will in fact expand gas markets in Canada. The National Energy Board makes it very clear, through statistics, that all those assessments that have been put forward do contemplate our future demand.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, because this is extremely disturbing, I want to make sure that the figures we were given in June, and I guess they were put together during 1978 and early 1979, no longer obtain, and that the 25-year formula will not end up with the lines crossing in 1992, but that we have a lot more gas than that and we will have a new set of figures that will show the crossover point well on into the next century. Is that what the minister is saying?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that the National Energy Board has updated its information regarding the availability of natural gas in Canada. In fact there has been substantial natural gas proven over and above that indicated in the last report. I am satisfied that—

An hon. Member: For how many years?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What I am saying is that on the 25 times basis the hon. member refers to, we have sufficient additional supplies and these facts have been taken into account. We have additional known reserves in western Canada quite apart from the discoveries to which the hon. member for Outremont refers. On the basis of this we are only allowing a short-term export for four years, after which there is a diminishing of the amount of export that will be allowed. I think the facts presented by the National Energy Board substantiate the validity of this particular decision.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am a bit disturbed by what I am hearing from the minister. I have seen the document that was published early last summer which showed the crossover of demand and supply in 1992-93. The minister is telling us that in the last nine months there has been such a substantial increase in known and proven reserves that the demand supply no longer crosses over in 1992-93. I would ask him, if that is the case, precisely where does the new revised demand supply condition cross over; is it the year 2000, or the year 2010? Where does this happen?

I do not think it is good enough for the minister to stand up and say that we have new estimates now, new known reserves which are going to take us way down the line and things will be fine for future generations of Canadians. That is simply not good enough. I would like to have the minister—

An hon. Member: Why don't you ask a question?

Mr. Evans: Had we had this statement more than half an hour before this event we probably could, but I would like the minister to tell us the answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate that if the hon. member will look at the report and the statistics that are there, he will see that they have been revised.

An hon. Member: Tell us now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to hear the answer I am prepared to give it to him.

An hon. Member: I want to hear it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Does the hon. member want to hear the answer? What I am saying is that the National Energy Board projections have been updated. They have in fact extended the time when the supply demand crossover occurs, and this is contained in the report itself. On the basis of these export applications, I am suggesting we have more than sufficient evidence that these particular export licences are in the national interest of Canada, and provide a number of initiatives for even further expansion and development of our natural gas supply throughout Canada, not just in the western part.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the minister has obviously read the report; at least I assume he has read it. If he has read it, I would like him to tell us right here and now, not to go and read the report, but exactly in what year that demand supply condition in fact occurs or finds itself going negative. I would like him to tell us that this massive conversion program he will be stimulating in eastern Canada will not end up in a situation in which we have all these Canadians converting, and then five to eight or ten years from now we will not have the gas. I want to hear an answer to the first question: when exactly does this happen?

• (1850)

Second, will the conversion program that the minister is going to bring forward, and with which I agree, have any effect on those figures he is going to give us now?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a copy of the table of statistics available to me at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Obviously the information is in the report which will be made available to the hon. member. I can tell him, however, that we accept the assessment of the National Energy Board, which takes into account massive conversions to natural gas over the next ten years. This will be induced by the policies we are bringing forward for incentive gas prices.

I do not know what the hon. member wants me to do. I can provide him with the statistics he asked for, after the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister several questions. Have any studies been done by the National Energy Board or the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the development of a petrochemical industry in western Canada, using our gas? This would provide large numbers of jobs in a high technology industry, rather than exporting this large amount of supposedly surplus natural gas, as the minister has announced.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I reject the premise of the question, that somehow the two are mutually exclusive. Naturally, we are investigating this aspect of the matter, both in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and my own department.

I reiterate that all the factors are taken into consideration. These export applications and the licences to be granted, are ones which are in surplus to the foreseeable Canadian needs. I reiterate that, but if the hon. member does not want to accept it, that is his problem. The facts are quite clear. It is going to be a great stimulus to Canadian industry in terms of additional exploration and development. This is a very positive step being taken by this government to ensure the development of natural gas and oil across Canada, in western Canada, and throughout the frontier region.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, section 3 of the Northern Pipeline Act states very clearly that the minister and the National Energy Board must be satisfied that financing has been obtained for the whole pipeline, not just the pipeline from Alberta Gas to the U.S. border, but the pipeline from Alaska down. When our cheap gas is gone, there will then be a substitute from Alaska.

In the Northern Pipeline Committee, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp suggested the possibility of the government changing this condition. On November 22, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. de Cotret) stated that he is only now in the process of determining the specific criteria to satisfy the government.

What assurances do Canadians have that the whole pipeline from Alberta down will be built so that, at some point, when we have sold our cheap Alberta gas to the United States, there will, in fact, be a gas line from Alaska to supply our needs when present gas sources in Alberta have been used up?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in my statement I pointed out that the particular application from Pan-Alberta, takes into account the government's concern with providing impetus for the completion and financing of the Alaska gas pipeline. The application and licences granted in Alberta are conditional upon that project going ahead. We in Canada have to demonstrate that we support the project and that it will go ahead. And in this particular application the licences were granted on the basis that the project will go ahead. As far as this particular matter is concerned, we are taking steps to support completion of that pipeline on schedule.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it will be understood that the opposition would be regarded as irresponsible at a time when increasing problems have been noted in the petroleum supply situation, if it did not question the government's action. For months we have asked about the supply situation and have been told that it is tight and getting tighter. We can see shortages ahead, Mr. Speaker. We would be remiss if we did not question the basis of the information that is given to us about natural gas.

We do not know the date of the crossover, and it is not only that which is at stake, but also the cost. We are aware of the fact that out of tight lock formations you can get more gas but, of course, it becomes more expensive. There are two parallel questions here—the cost of gas and the amount that is supplied. At a certain point it would be possible to get very expensive gas and say the reserves are there. Can the minister give us the basis for the statement that 72 trillion cubic feet are available? Does this mean gas that is easily available, or is it gas that requires tight lock formation and so on?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the 72 trillion cubic feet referred to is proven reserves, accessible and available for exploitation in Canada. The question of supply of petroleum products and the question of export of surplus are two different matters altogether. In this application, all domestic requirements are taken into account with respect to the expansion of use of natural gas. This is surplus to domestic needs and is clearly demonstrated by the proven, deliverable reserves that we have. The reserves I spoke about in western Canada are exclusive of other discoveries and ultimate reserves in frontier areas, offshore or the east coast.

In regard to the application, we are saying that it is not going to affect the supply we have in Canada in any way. It is surplus to the anticipated expansion of natural gas throughout Canada—to Vancouver Island, to Quebec, to the maritimes, and the expansion of natural gas in the province of Ontario. We have sufficient reserves to go ahead, on the basis of the statistics I have given to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not propose to allow hon. members a second round of questioning. I think I should conclude the questioning with a supplementary from the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde), and I thought I saw the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose).

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I did not get a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: When the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) put his question, I did not think it was deserving of a supplementary, and I do not think he should have a chance to persuade me otherwise now.

I think I should conclude the questioning with a supplementary from the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence, a question by the hon. member for Outremont, and then the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody. That ought to be a fair distribution.

Mr. de Corneille: I should like to know what kind of formula is proposed for the price we will charge the United States. Second, is the minister prepared to consider building in the concept of swaps?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The price is under constant review by the National Energy Board, Mr. Speaker. At the present time the going price is $3.45 per thousand cubic feet. This will be reviewed in light of the equivalent cost of energy in the United States. I have asked the NEB to look into the process of more quickly reflecting increasing and changing costs for natural gas, and setting a price so that there will be more sensitivity to changes on the international scene and in the United States.

These licences are for the short term. They are explicit for a four-year period and will diminish substantially over the last three years, to 1987. There is great benefit. It will bring new activity in terms of exploration and development in Canada. It will have a substantial economic benefit to Canada. In the over-all picture it is a forward move as far as we are concerned, one which will bring terrific benefits in terms of economic development in Canada in the development of our resources for our national energy self-sufficiency objective.

● (1900)

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have one question which will be followed by a supplementary.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

First, the decision that has been announced today is a decision by the government, not by the National Energy Board. It is not good enough to rely on the Energy Board. The cabinet and the minister have made the decision.

I find it incredible that the minister seems to refuse to tell us, in the estimation of the government, when the demand for gas will be less than the supply of gas. That appears to me so fundamental to a decision to export gas that it should be elementary. My simple question to the minister is this: please tell us, is it the year 2009, 2010 or 1992, as we heard in June? Surely there is a date. Please tell us when, in the estimation of the government which made the decision—and the minister who made the decision—on what basis was it made? What year are we going to start running short of gas?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member did not want to mislead the House. The year of the crossover on the present estimates is 1997.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, that will be extremely important in the future debate. It certainly indicates the decision that has been announced today is even more incorrect than anyone could anticipate.

My supplementary question to the minister is this. He knows that the previous government indicated to the United States that no authorization for any gas exports would take place unless we had an iron-clad commitment to build the whole pipeline, and second, unless we had the possibility for swaps. It meant in effect the possibility of getting back, in the future, from the Alaskan fields an equivalent amount of gas that would have been sold to the Americans in the next few years to help them out of their present crisis. This would fully preserve Canadian security of supply down the line and make sure that even though we were willing to help our American friends in the short term, we would be in a position to be fully protected down the line. Why has the minister not kept to those basic conditions that had been put by the previous government?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is that I am not announcing the final step in terms of the Alaska natural gas pipeline. I am talking in terms of export licences. The specific question here is with respect to the Pan-Alberta application, is that it is conditional upon the whole line going ahead. It is conditional upon that. It is one element with respect to the negotiations that are going ahead. It is one signal with respect to the negotiations that are going on about the Alaska natural gas pipeline. I reiterate the fact that I am not here to announce another project.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, as a regulatory body, I think the National Energy Board is about as politically independent or is as impervious to government influences as is the CTC or the CRTC because their ability to predict the future indicates they try to view it through a very cloudy crystal ball at best.

The main gas producers, except perhaps for Petro-Canada, are foreign owned. At least some of the additional revenues—I believe the figure was $13 billion—flowing to these companies will end up as dividends to shareholders and create a problem in terms of balance of payment deficits, because they will be flowing out of the country. I ask the minister whether any calculations have been done as to the extent of these, because obviously there will be this cash outflow, and whether there has been any consideration of how this will affect our balance of payments deficit? How much of the $13 billion revenue will come to Canada, and how much will go out on the basis of windfall profits to multinationals?

If I have an opportunity to ask a supplementary, I will go further, but it seems to me there are two or three questions wrapped up in the one above. Only four?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there is very substantial Canadian-owned participation in the natural gas industry. The hon. member just does not want to acknowledge that, but that is in fact the case. It is a substantial one and there is a substantial economic benefit coming to Canada. There will be revenues generated, taxation and revenues available to the Government of Canada in order to carry out our national energy policy. It is quite clear that with respect to any transaction that goes on one could get involved in deciding, I suppose, how much money we will possibly see leave the country in future.

In terms of the exploration by the natural gas industry, and in terms of the investment, that it has reinvested that has been made evident by some recent statistics I have tabled in this House. I am confident the lion's share of this money will be reinvested. Profits realized will be invested and in fact there is a substantial and important Canadian ingredient in the industry that is going to be affected by this decision and will enhance Canada's future and prosperity.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being after six o'clock, I do now leave the chair till eight o'clock this evening.

At 7.08 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—UNEMPLOYMENT AND JOB-CREATION POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Francis Fox (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes):

That this House deplores the complete inaction of the government, after six months in office, with regard to the creation of jobs, regrets the inhumane cutbacks in the Canada Works program that have eliminated hundreds of communities across Canada that have been suffering from high levels of unemployment and condemns the government for its failure to date to bring forward a comprehensive employment strategy for the coming year.

Mr. Paul McCrossan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak today on this motion because I think nothing could better illustrate the differences between the new government and the old government in our approaches to solving the unemployment problems in our country. Canada is a rich country with virtually unlimited potential, yet we have seen over the last three years one of the highest rates of unemployment in the western world.

This unemployment is particularly concentrated among our young people. At the same time as we have seen this heavy unemployment develop among our young, we have also seen industries on which our growth should be based curtailed because of a lack of skilled workers, workers which we have, too often, had to import from other countries. How could the previous government see this situation of our young people being deprived of their future develop and not attack the real problem? I do not want to suggest that the previous government was not spending money on job creation—far from it. At times they almost threw money at the problem.

However, I do want to emphasize that the vast amounts of money spent served in large measure solely to increase the deficit, rather than to develop permanent opportunities for our unemployed or to build infrastructures such as harbours on which our future wealth could be based. We all remember the previous government's attempt at addressing the serious problem of our young people through the Opportunities for Youth Program. This was a very Christian program. The government's approach was right from the Bible—if youth wanted money, the government told them, "Ask, and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Unfortunately, the government found not that the "meek shall inherit the earth", but that the wily will find out how to get the money.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the previous government had better plans than that one. The motion today refers to "inhumane cutbacks in Canada Works programs" and refers to the suffering caused in many areas of the country through our government's actions in not extending the programs next year in all areas of the country.

Last year the total budget for Canada Works was approximately $175 million. Money was spent in all provinces regardless of how prosperous those provinces were. In addition, the budget for Young Canada Works was $62 million.

Let me deal with Young Canada Works for a moment. It would be useful to review the plan and what it was supposed to do. The objective of the program was to reduce student unemployment through useful work experience, by providing financial resources to fund projects whose objectives or method of operation contribute to the benefit of non-participants in the following ways—stimulate job creation in the private sector, identifying permanent employment opportunities, providing services, or improving the environment.

As I said, every area of the country and every riding in the country received money for Young Canada Works last year. York-Scarborough was no exception. I was told last year that $50,000 would be spent in York-Scarborough on Young Canada Works. That money would be spent solely because there were enough submissions for the money. I would like to review just how the money was spent in my riding, because I think we have to look at just how inhumane the cutbacks could be, and how much suffering would be caused if the money were not spent the same way next year.

There were eight projects approved in York-Scarborough. The number one priority project was called "Save our streams". This was a group of three students who wished to encourage other groups to "adopt" a stream in York-Scarborough. Just where does "adopting" a stream fit in our long-term economic plans? Well, the stream might be sick and, if so, this project on which $5,500 was spent would prepare an extensive bibliography on streams and how to rehabilitate them. As the application notes, "Considerable time would be involved in compiling a bibliography but it would be extremely helpful to anyone interested in such topics". I do not for a moment want to suggest that the young Canadians who took part in this project ripped the people of Canada off, but I do find it incredible that under the previous government $50,000 had to be spent in York-Scarborough and that the most worth-while project the previous government could find to spend it on was "to adopt" a stream.

The second priority project approved in York-Scarborough was called "Creative Learning Experience". This program, which cost $7,000, was to provide arts and crafts, gymnastics, cookouts, carnivals, day trips and daily swim lessons to children with learning disabilities.

The third priority project, costing $8,100, related to Metis and non-status Indians in York-Scarborough. Now, my riding is the largest riding in the country in terms of population and has a large ethnic mix. We have significant Italian, Greek, Chinese, East Indian populations. In fact we probably have someone in York-Scarborough from every place in the world. However, I must admit I was surprised when I learned of the existence of a Metis and Non-Status Indian Association in my riding, and even more amazed when they applied for a grant to "research and document available information on the marketing of native handicrafts and souvenirs". Mr. Speaker, I accept this as a serious project, but I think you will agree it is a little far from the mainstream of economic life in Metropolitan Toronto.

The fourth project was called "Summer Outreach". It was designed to train library staff in story-telling for children, as well as to put on puppet shows for children.

The fifth project was called "Joie de Théatre". It received $8,400. These six students proposed to improvise a bilingual play according to the style of the Commedia del Arte, a 16th Century improvisational mode of theatre in Europe. The play to be created and performed would "utilize the characters, the exuberant gesture and the humour of the Commedia del Arte in a series of scenarios which deal with the French and English cultures in Canada. The scenarios will be used to acquaint French and English speakers with one another's culture. Audiences will learn colloquialisms as well." I think that means they will swear at each other.

The sixth project was called "Accent on First Base". As I recall from watching Abbott and Costello, "Who's on first, what's on second, and I don't know who is on third." These three students received $6,200 to hand out questionnaires to day-care centres across Metropolitan Toronto. The questionnaires were given to staff, parents and children. Parents would be asked to describe what type of activity they would like their children to participate in. Children would tell their favourite activity. After the survey, the data would be collected, analysed, and categorized within a manual.

The seventh priority project for $6,400 was entitled "Safety in Action", involving four students who would try to increase knowledge of water safety, life-saving and first-aid, through conducting assemblies and workshops in schools, camps, etc.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my eighth priority project involving three people for $2,900 was to "Discovery Centre '79" and was to enable mentally retarded young people "to be physically active, to socialize, to learn, to explore and generally to have a good time during their summer holidays."

That was how the $50,000 was spent in my riding last year. The projects met the objectives. They reduced summer unemployment. They provided work experience. They provided financial resources, and all of the projects could contribute to the benefit of non-participants. Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today suggests that we are inhumane in cutting back on the funds for projects like these. It further suggests that we will cause suffering by not continuing these job-creation programs.

I wish to stress that I did not edit the list. I outlined every single worth-while project that was approved in my riding. Is this the way we should be spending our money to solve Canada's unemployment problems? Is this the best use we can make of $62 million across the country? Members in the opposition are nodding their heads. They contend it is. The position of the official opposition is that in spite of the fact that the unemployment rate in York-Scarborough is 2 per cent, money must be spent on job-creation programs of this type.

The approach of the government is to get the money out into the areas of the country where jobs are scarce and where much more worth-while projects can be found. What our country needs is projects which employ people. To build for the future of Canada we feel we need to concentrate our efforts in areas of most need.

So far I have spoken about Young Canada Works. Let me now turn to our analysis of the Canada Works Program. In spite of the fact that unemployment was only 2 per cent, the minimum amount which could be allocated to York-Scarborough was $150,000 under the old rules. In July we announced that the Canada Works Program would be discontinued after the fourth and final phase, and would, in that final phase, be limited to those areas of the country with particularly severe seasonal unemployment problems. The decision to discontinue Canada Works after phase IV reflects the determination of the government to move toward an approach which will result in increased long-term employment in the private sector.

Members who have been involved with the Canada Works program over the last few years, know full well that the short-term employment created by Canada Works and other similar programs has not met longer-term needs. We need more than a band-aid approach to stimulate economic development in Canada.

Programs such as Canada Works were known to a great many people as make-work programs. They provided people with jobs for short periods of time; but they were jobs that were not meaningful. Unemployed Canadians do not want make-work programs; they want economically meaningful jobs that will allow them to make a real commitment to the Canadian economy.

One of the uses to which employment development programs should be put is to provide job experience that can be usefully transferred to other jobs. However, what happened with Canada Works in some cases is that people went from work on a Canada Works program to unemployment insurance, and then to work on another Canada Works program. We want to stop that kind of cycle and provide opportunities for people to move on to rewarding jobs in the private sector.

In some cases, Canada Works did provide communities with lasting benefits in terms of new or upgraded facilities such as tourist, harbour, or recreational facilities. However, it did not provide for projects which have contributed to longer-term economic development. Canada Works proved inadequate to combat structural, long-term unemployment. Canada Works was found particularly inadequate to support the long-term economic development our native people urgently required. It is for this reason that, when the decision to cancel Canada Works was made, it was also decided to make considerably increased moneys available to native communities through the Local Employment Assistance Program, or LEAP.

LEAP is a permanent program which provides long-term funding—for a one-year start-up phase plus three years of operation—for projects. These projects either assist in the development of an enterprise which will provide ongoing employment for project participants, or serve as a method of preparing people for regular jobs by giving them the opportunity to learn social and work skills in a supportive environment.

This fiscal year across Canada native communities are receiving $38.4 million through LEAP and Canada Works. In addition, during this year of transition from Canada Works to LEAP and in recognition of the fact that good, long-term proposals for economic development take time to prepare, the LEAP criteria have been modified, for native communities, to allow LEAP allocations to be used during this transitional period to fund short-term activities where they relate to the long-term economic development of the native community.

Canada Works projects did result, in some cases, in permanent jobs. However, these were exceptions, for Canada Works had an extensive array of checks and regulations to ensure that people did not do anything which would earn a profit or create needs. Sometimes Canada Works projects did create needs, some of which had to be met by provincial or municipal levels of government which, quite frankly, were not too pleased to take over projects which the federal government had started and then abandoned. However, in other cases the requirements not to create needs meant that long-term, economically viable jobs which provided real goods and services were rare.

This government is committed to the creation of enough jobs to ensure a satisfactory level of economic growth to allow Canadians to make their own distinctive contributions to society. We know that if we want real jobs that will provide us with economic growth potential, we must look to the private sector.

Our task as a government is to bring forth initiatives which will encourage the creation of those jobs and encourage the private sector to play its full role in developing new employment opportunities. To that end we will, in next week's budget, be proposing incentives for private employers to provide up to 105,000 jobs for young people. In addition, we will provide youth with training they need to meet the needs of Canadian industry and establish a national youth service corps.

The national youth service corps will differ from the employment development initiatives of the past in that it will be targeted to those young people who most require help in finding work.

This government is committed to directing the money available for employment development to those areas where it is most needed and where it will do the most good. As hon. members know, we are examining the concept of universality in our social programs, and the same idea extends to our employment development programs. Youth unemployment is a problem of vast proportions in Canada, but certainly not every person between the ages of 15 and 24 needs our help. We will limit programs like the national youth service corps to those young people who can most benefit from them.

During the first three phases, Canada Works created 107,000 short-term jobs at a cost of approximately $510 million. We think we can use the money available for employment development to create real jobs in the private sector which will last and lead to the creation of still more jobs. In that way we hope to invest our money more wisely than has been done in the past.

Finally, I would like to underline the fact that my own riding did not receive an allocation for the final phase of Canada Works as a result of our government's decision, and I can see the reason why.

We need more than a band-aid approach to stimulate economic activity. We need more than simply throwing money at problems. We need to compare the alternatives and choose the best ones to use our scarce resources. We need to ask piercing questions. How does spending money to "adopt" a stream compare with spending money to train a tool and die maker? Our government is determined to increase the level of our critical skills training. Already legislation is before the House to provide greater flexibility with adult occupational training. How important is it to learn what games parents want their children to play compared with providing tax credits to stimulate permanent employment in the private sector?

While all of the projects approved in my riding had some value, these are days of scarce resources, days in which the people of Canada expect us to cut down on the prodigious levels of government spending embarked on by the Liberal government.

The people of Canada believe in Canada. Our young people want to realize the potential of Canada. We owe it to them to spend their money as if it were our own, and that means we must put it where it will be of most use.

The opposition claims that the cutting back of these types of programs is inhumane and causes suffering in Canada. I contend that not allocating our scarce resources in the most effective way to create jobs which Canadians want, deserve and need, would indeed be inhumane and cause far more suffering.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parent: I thank my colleagues on all sides of the House.

This afternoon the minister made the statement that the programs he advances will work in the next six months. It has taken us six months to come this far, and what the motion states very clearly is that there has been inaction. That is to say, this new government has not moved us any way except to go with the programs which we initiated early in our mandate, programs which seemingly were pretty good for the time because there was a decline in unemployment, until this last month. If we are to believe what the minister says, in the sixth month of any kind of program we are going to have some kind of a result. Now that we have had this government for six months, we see that we are already going downhill.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) also spoke this afternoon and made all kinds of criticisms, but it seemed that he took up most of his time talking about the programs the Liberals had brought in and not at all discussing the programs which are to be forthcoming from this government. It seems to me that the only solution he had was the age-old solution of letting government take it all over, letting the government do it all, and letting the people just sit back and not worry. Well, that is not the answer of the Liberal party and, unlike the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) who just spoke, we happen to believe in the decisions of the people of Canada. In other words, we are not afraid to take money, put it into the hands of the citizens, and let them decide in their own communities what is best for them. It is a matter of trusting them, and we do indeed trust the people in our constituencies and the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parent: I maintain that the Canada Works program was good for Canada and is good for Canada—

Mr. Fox: And will be.

Mr. Parent: —because it creates the short-term jobs which we are looking for. In the words of my colleague, the hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox), earlier this afternoon, the Phase IV program as announced by the minister was a disappointment to the unemployed of the country, but it is also an indication to virtually thousands of people throughout the whole of Canada that their federal government no longer wishes to work with them in reducing local unemployment while meeting their community needs.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Parent: Once again, this is a reflection of a change in philosophy. The Conservative party is known as the party of the flip-flop. It has changed so much and in so many ways that it is even doing political somersaults.

An hon. Member: Look at the polls.

Mr. Parent: This is brought out time and time again by the esteem with which the people of Canada now hold it, as was brought out earlier this week.

• (2030)

We know that the U.S. economy faces a serious slowdown and that the Conference Board in Canada predicts an extremely low rate of growth. The federal government seems to be pursuing policies which will enhance neither growth nor employment. Witness the high interest rates, the cancellation of the movement of government agencies to areas of slow growth, and the over-all reduction in allocations.

Perhaps the hon. member for York-Scarborough, who spoke earlier, has reason to believe that these people "adopted" a stream. I think we must take a look at some of those programs. He seems to imply that the eight programs that were allocated in his riding under the Young Canada Works were really of no use at all. What he is saying is that the young people in his community received no worth-while benefits or experience from the programs which they had decided upon and which they pursued. All he could do was make fun of them and say, "They really cannot make up their minds, so let us make up their minds for them."

Things have changed a great deal, because before we used to have the people of the community getting together in what we called a minister's advisory board. Members of Parliament would choose people in their community, people who had invested their efforts and their talents working for the communities. We asked them, "Where do you think we should be putting our moneys? Where do you think we should be investing the moneys of Canada and the talents of Canada?" We got these people together to give us their opinions and we said, "Yes, we will try this because we believe in you, and we believe you can help us make the decisions."

But now this has changed a little bit in the short four months. Now we have cutbacks in the phase IV program. I stand to be corrected by anyone in the House who has pertinent information on this, but I understand that now these ministers' advisory boards no longer exist. What happens is that we have the defeated Tory candidates, in the lucky areas in Canada which were able to get money, advising ministers as to the programs that should come in and who should benefit from them. What about the elected members of Parliament in these areas? I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that once we bypass these members of Parliament who were elected to be the spokesmen of the people, we are hop-scotching over the legitimate authority to which these people should be coming for information.

Let me tell the hon. member for York-Scarborough, who told us about these programs, that I happen to believe that the moneys from Canada Works can and should be used to develop the skills that the community is going to need. Let me tell you about one of the projects which took place in my riding and which I discussed as recently as last week with Mr. Bill Miller, chairman of my minister's advisory board. It was a program under which bricklayers were trained, and the money came from the Canada Works program. We have information that of the 28 young men whom we trained under this bricklayers program, 92 per cent have jobs today. What I am saying to you is that the Canada Works projects are good for Canada if they are used in the right way. If they cannot be used in the right way by members opposite, why should we be penalized as well as the rest of Canada, we who take our obligations seriously and who want to make these programs work in all of Canada?

Mr. Fox: They will have to increase the budget of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Crombie).

Mr. Parent: I was going over the figures and I saw that in October of 1977 under the Canada Works program in St. Catharines, which I represented in the last Parliament, 39 jobs were created. In August of 1978, under the Canada Works program 33 jobs were created. Before the phase IV came in, in March of 1979, in our area under the Canada Works program 148 jobs were created for these young men and women who needed these jobs and this experience.

Mr. Atkey: At what cost?

Mr. Parent: When we look at the cost of getting experience for these people, at the cost of giving them a chance to learn to do things, we are looking at not only the short-term but, we hope, the long-term benefits which they will obtain from having developed skills and the long-term benefits for Canada, because we will develop the skills of these people thus helping them to take their place in our society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parent: I suggest that perhaps the minister does not exactly understand what the Canada Works program was to be all about. Witness the fact that it was this very minister, who is sitting in the House now, who cut back phase IV from $140 million by $40 million, so indeed we do not have the money to carry on the programs and thus create jobs for Canadians who live in pockets of high unemployment.

I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) the other day on the government's plan to help the unemployed across Canada. He said in effect that all that would appear in the budget. I praise God that the budget is coming out at long last, after this government has been in office for six months. This government and its ministers had been chomping at the bit to assume power, but now that they have it we have to wait six whole months so that the ideas which were supposedly germinating in their heads for 16 years could come to the fore.

What happens is that there is some cross-up between ministers so that they are not too sure as to where they should be going. It should be noted that in his speech of November 26, the minister said he was going to create a youth employment agency—I do not know if that is the exact term. I am sure he is aware that it was the Liberal government which had created programs for students under the Canada employment centres, the Young Canada Works programs, the Youth Job Corps, and the Native Internship program. These were all in place, and they created thousands of jobs for our young Canadians across Canada.

The minister cannot have it both ways. In one voice he is criticizing what the past government has done, and in the other he says, "Now we are going to expand it." Boy, that is some great idea! He takes the ideas which are in place, he criticizes them, and now he says they are so good that he will continue with them and expand them. It seems that this party has the reverse of the Midas touch. In other words, everything good they touch turns to bad rather than to gold.

[Translation]

And now, Mr. Speaker, I must say that only six provinces and two territories got some of the money that was allocated for the entire country. Ontario has received nothing, and neither did Manitoba, Saskatchewan nor Alberta, Mr. Speaker. And to think that six or seven months ago, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Alexander) said in this House that we, in the Niagara peninsula, had a 14.6 per cent unemployment rate.

[English]

After the election, all of a sudden, this figure which was bandied about by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Froese), who is in the House now, by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), and by the present member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), concerning the rate of unemployment in the Niagara Peninsula, has proven incorrect. They spoke of 14.4 per cent unemployment in that area. Yet when I made inquiries at the minister's department some two months after the May 22 election, the figure that I got for my riding in Welland was 5.9 per cent. A miracle happened! All of a sudden, because of the May 22 election, the unemployment figure dropped. I said to them, "You know, that figure must be wrong. It is too good to be true." So I called Statistics Canada and, do you know, Mr. Speaker, the figure I got for my riding in Welland was 6.9 per cent.

● (2040)

Now, what am I to make of that? Am I to make of it that it was an honest mistake by the candidates who were running in that area? Am I to surmise that perhaps they indeed knew we in the Niagara Peninsula, who had been governed by the Liberal government, were not doing so badly after all? The figures will speak for themselves.

Mr. Fretz: They are your figures.

Mr. Parent: We know that we are doing well in Ontario, even where there are pockets of high unemployment. I refer my comments specifically to the hon. member for Erie who is sitting here tonight: in Fort Erie there was unemployment in that particular town of up to 20 per cent for the last four years. I would stand to be corrected, because the hon. member for Erie is here right now. But this area was overlooked. Of course it was overlooked, "because these people do not deserve the same benefits as they do all across Canada!" In that particular area they said that the unemployment figure was not high enough and that they would bypass it.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Parent: There was another program, the job experience training program. I compliment the minister because of what he stated in his speech in Toronto. I cannot quote from it directly, but the idea was that he believed permanent long-term jobs had to be created through private industry. I agree with him. I think that is a valid point.

Mr. Atkey: You did nothing about it.

Mr. Parent: As a matter of fact we did a great deal about it. We were the ones who brought in the job experience training program. They are the ones who are now going to get on our coat tails and say, "We are now going to expand that". Now they will say that they are creating jobs for young men and women between the ages of 15 and 24. Well, what was the JET program? It was a co-operative effort between government and business. It was to train young people to be able to get into the work force, to get experience, and to take their places as productive members of our society. We had a program in place for job experience training. We paid up to $2 per hour in subsidies to the industries that wanted to take in these young people, teach them, and show them a trade. Now what do we get? We get this "great" sum by this government that was all involved and worried about the people of Canada. What will they give people in small business? It will be $1.25 an hour!

What we had was something that was working and was workable. For example, in the large urban areas of Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver, we had subsidies of $1.50 an hour to the employer up to 26 weeks. In the areas outside of these centres, it was $1.75. In areas such as the Gaspé and the Atlantic region, there was up to a $2 subsidy, because these were areas where indeed money must be put to get people working again. At least that would give them the dignity of work; they would know their worth and feel it as Canadians who are contributing to our society. It is very, very important that we keep that point in mind.

Earlier the hon. member for York-Scarborough said that it was the fault of the previous government that there was such high unemployment. Tonight the minister said that we did nothing while we were in power. I point out to him, and I point out to Mr. Speaker, with all respect, that 280,000 jobs were created between February, 1977, and February, 1978. Yet the minister sits there and says that we did nothing about it.

The number of Canadians who were working Canadians between 1974 and 1978 rose by 825,000. We are the ones who provided the atmosphere so that these people could take their places in society. I say to the House that Canada had the highest job-creation rate of any western nation, bar none.

Mr. Atkey: Tell us about the unemployment rate.

Mr. Parent: I suggest that it was the programs we put in place; that is what is called performance. We did not wait for six months to bring programs forward so that young Canadians could take their places and become productive members of society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to participate in this debate this evening on the motion of the hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) which deplores the inaction of the government on employment strategies and efforts to create jobs. In part it reads as follows:

—regrets the inhumane cutbacks in the Canada Works program that have eliminated hundreds of communities across Canada—

I question whether the hon. member is really serious in presenting this motion. It appears to me, if we are to take his motion seriously, that it constitutes an attack on the programs of his own party. The make-work or job-creation programs in place right now were the brain children of many programs brought forward by the Liberal government when it was in power. If he has any complaints about the fundamental basis of those particular job-creation programs, he has to look to the philosophical basis of those programs instituted by his own party.

For years we looked to the Liberal party for an employment strategy to take care of the serious unemployment problems in many areas of the country. We looked for programs which would create long-term jobs, long-term employment, and jobs which would not be dead end ones paying starvation wages. But we really did not find them, certainly not from the point of view of my part of the country. In my riding all the jobs which were created were dead end ones, because no matter what experience individuals obtained working on these particular jobs, there was no other employment to go to afterwards.

There was a continuing cycle of dependency on Canada Works programs in one part of the year, and unemployment insurance in another part of the year. My constituents are quite perceptive in this because they saw that all Canada Works programs did for them was provide a little bit of income to tide them over to the time when they could collect unemployment insurance afterwards. Nobody recognized these dead end jobs as anything other than a glorified form of welfare.

I have a little quote which demonstrates the cynicism of some people in Newfoundland about particular make-work or job-creation programs. It was quoted in the report of the People's Commission on Unemployment which was released last year. They quote from a submission from a town called Roddickton, which is not in my riding, as follows:

Job creation is like ice cream work—melts away when the good weather comes.

That has been the order of the day for the last dozen or so years. All we had from the Liberal government was ice cream work, work that melts away when the good weather comes. Between 1971 and 1978 almost $114 million was spent in the province of Newfoundland on make-work or job-creation programs. It created almost 50,000 part-time or short-term jobs, for a total of 4,100 projects. That was fine for the time, but when those projects were finished it left the province of Newfoundland in precisely the same position as it was before. To give a little bit of credit, that is not quite true as there were some good projects.

● (2050)

In fact I found it quite interesting to listen to the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) on the one hand talk about how terrible and wasteful the projects were, and the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent) on the other hand talking about how wonderful the projects were. I suspect the truth is somewhere in between. Some of the projects were excellent.

In my own riding many communities got harbour facilities, wharves, breakwaters, and community halls through the Canada Works program. Many other programs were just total waste, and everyone in every community in my riding has a story about the type of waste that occurred.

This motion today demonstrates a tremendous cynicism on the part of the Liberals who present this criticism of a program that they themselves instituted. It is a program that provides really nothing for the unemployed people in high unemployment regions of the country.

To his credit, and this is about the only bouquet I will give the minister this evening, the minister has seen the deficiencies of Canada Works and has said he is going to replace it in the coming fiscal year. He has seen the need for a replacement for Canada Works, and I will deal with this from the perspective of my own riding, as a basic need for decent jobs of a permanent nature. One of the difficulties in respect of Canada Works jobs is the starvation wages they offer, and these wage levels are not uniform across the country. Because the wages were tied to minimum wages in each province, the wages paid in my province of Newfoundland were the lowest in the country, and starvation wages at that. In real terms the wages paid under the old LIP program were higher.

There was a tremendous amount of waste in many of the projects that were presented. Many were work projects that did nothing more than make work, and there were no new additions in communities. They were simply an excuse to bring more money into the community for very temporary periods of time.

The serious problem with the whole concept of make-work programs is that they create a dependency cycle among individuals and communities for this type of annually injected but needed money. As a result, it becomes almost impossible for people in communities to survive in any other way as there are not other jobs in particular areas and they are forced to accept the type of dead-end, short-term jobs that these programs provide.

However, in the absence of any alternative it is irresponsible and cruel to take from many ridings and many areas of this country the only employment opportunities for many individuals. It has been said by the minister that it is more efficient to concentrate these efforts in areas of high unemployment. That makes sense, but what it does not recognize is that there are pockets of high unemployment in areas of this country that still need some sort of additional government input to tide the people over difficult times.

The cutbacks the minister instituted this year in the absence of an alternative program for particular areas with high unemployment rates, became a very cruel and irresponsible move on his part. The whole cutback program of the government in the last few months really belies its commitment to an employment strategy. The cutbacks in my province from the federal government perspective and from the perspective of the provincial government, both Tory governments, compounded the problems of administering Canada Works programs. Many of the projects, again referring to my own riding, only had funds provided by Canada Works for part of the job or the needed facility, such as a harbour facility.

The cutbacks in the small craft harbour budget under the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has meant that many projects are left high and dry, with no possibility of getting off the ground this year or in any other year. This points to another serious difficulty in the whole Canada Works program.

Over the last few years provincial and federal departments have seen in the Canada Works program an excuse to cop out of their own responsibility to provide wharf facilities and harbour facilities and other things under the federal Department of Fisheries. They have said, "let Canada Works do it," and that has led to very tragic and very expensive results. Some of these projects could not be done adequately under the constraints of the Canada Works program.

There was one case, again in my own riding, of a project that was instituted before I became the member for the riding. A breakwater and wharf were under construction with the use of labour-intensive methods under Canada Works, when what was really required was heavy equipment and machinery to do the thing properly. Since it could not be done properly with human labour, the job was not sturdy enough to withstand the ice in the winter, and when the ice left in the spring there was nothing left of the harbour facility. What this did was force these particular communities into using a vehicle for the creation of certain facilities that was totally inappropriate to the facilities themselves.

I referred earlier to the decision of the department to cut out areas with low unemployment rates, and I said that was a good idea in theory. Let me refer in particular to the riding of a colleague of mine, the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). His riding in Manitoba has an unemployment rate of something in the order of 75 per cent because the riding has a large native population which is excluded from the true unemployment figures. We have seen this concept of hidden unemployment all across the country. What happens is that people know there are no jobs so they stop reporting to the manpower offices.

Statistics Canada figures do not include chronic unemployment areas and, worse still, a riding such as Churchill is in a double bind because not only have they been cut off from works programs, they have also been cut off or have had programs through Indian Affairs frozen, for example, the Indian Economic Development Fund, and only emergency funding is now avaiblable. The cutback program of the government has given that particular riding a double whammy.

Let me now refer to the minister's commitment in relation to a real employment strategy in Canada to help the unemployed people who live in various regions of the country. He has made a commitment to do this through the private sector. Many times hon. members on the other side of the House have criticized us for what is termed our blind adherence to ideology. They have an ideology as well, privatization, and that blinds them to the realities in certain areas of the country where the private sector and the market economy have totally failed to alleviate real chronic unemployment problems.

To cut off make-work programs and turn the solutions to the unemployment problem over to the private sector, in my part of the country is to turn it over to a non-existent entity. Those on that side want privatization. I say that is blind adherence to a mindless ideology that just does not make sense when viewed in the context of particular areas of the country. The entire Atlantic region has been held by this government, as it was by former governments, through their adherence to an ideology which maintains a high rate of unemployment in the area without offering any means to improve conditions.

I should like to refer to the minister's final remarks this afternoon when he announced the government's commitment to alleviating unemployment among women. He said that programs will be announced within the next few months which will alleviate the problem. I should like to examine the record of the last six months so that we may know what to expect in the future.

The Liberal government cut $3 million from the Outreach program when they left office; then the Tories promised to reinstate the funds. According to the minister, $1.3 million will be reinstated in this fiscal year and $1.7 million in the next fiscal year. This year $300,000 to $400,000 of the $1.3 million will be allocated to women's Outreach programs. Although this statement was made last September, none of the funding has been disbursed to this point.

The government's only real response to the unemployed people of this country was to cut back on unemployment insurance benefits. That was their only—they would say positive but I would say negative—response to unemployment problems. Last year the Liberals raised the eligibility requirements for part-time workers and seasonal workers. The majority of these are women. The specific regulations that would have brought those changes into effect were not enacted by the Liberal government, but were by the Tories when they came into power. At the time the minister said he was committed to putting into effect what the Liberals had done, but I would remind him that as minister he has the power to make changes and he could have changed it in June or July.

The government's commitment to affirmative action has been sadly lacking. This program, instituted by the former government, and in place for two and one-half years, is based on the voluntary agreement of the private sector to institute such programs. But these programs lack teeth, Mr. Speaker. Figures issued this week show that the income gap between men and women has increased, yet just today the Secretary of State (Mr. MacDonald) announced that he was not prepared to put teeth into the affirmative action program but would continue to evaluate the work of the voluntary sector.

Mr. Atkey: Give it a chance.

Mr. Faour: Well, Mr. Speaker, it has not worked in three years. In that time the gap has widened and the position of women, relative to the over-all labour force, has become worse. Yet there is no commitment from the government that it will improve the situation.

The most telling thing is what the government has done in its own shop. The public service has become the target of cutbacks, and 60,000 jobs will be cut, 35,000 of them in the "controlled" public service. A disproportionate number of these jobs will involve women, since a major method of cutting back will be by attrition. Women in the public service are historically more mobile and leave their jobs more frequently than men. As a result, the proportion of women in the public service will drop, but the government refuses to commit itself to reversing that trend.

Buried in the government's campaign promises last spring was a pledge to provide day care in government buildings, but no initiative has been taken on this. I think most hon. members would agree that if women are to achieve equal status in the public service, or in any other sector, day care is a necessary adjunct to the working environment.

The motion before us today deals with the need for an employment strategy, job-creation programs, and the failure of the government to do anything about these things. I maintain that both the former Liberal government and now the Conservative government have totally failed the people of Canada. All that has been provided are dead-end jobs in these make-work programs—jobs that lead nowhere and jobs that have elicited cynicism on the part of the unemployed, and which do nothing to solve the underlying cause of unemployment.

On page 87 of the report of the People's Commission on Unemployment there appears the following statement:

Job-creation programs can be seen as attempts by the government to keep people committed to the economic and political system, when in fact the high levels of unemployment are telling people that the system does not work, at least as far as their own interests are concerned.

I should say this report was prepared after hearing from hundreds of unemployed people in Newfoundland. That quotation tells us that the people of Newfoundland in particular, and I suspect people all across the country, recognize that the job-creation program is a sham. It is an effort on the part of each government to cop out of its serious responsibilities without making a serious attempt to alleviate the unemployment problems in many parts of the country.

The hon. member for Welland referred to the some 280,000 jobs that were created by the Liberal government from February, 1977, to 1978, but he did not tell us that most of them were dead-end jobs which came about through these job-creation programs. Governments have used these programs as an excuse for not providing proper economic development.

I see my time is just about up, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the House for its indulgence.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Janelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this important debate on an opposition motion. Tonight I should like to dwell on one aspect of the motion: the creation of temporary jobs. The creation of temporary jobs that the government continues to finance in the eastern part of the country, under the Canada Works program, is an effort with a tremendous impact. We could certainly talk about individual achievements that allowed communities to get many recreational facilities, services and all kinds of buildings Canadians will keep enjoying. Over this past year the Canada Works program provided jobs to about 33,935 unemployed, mostly in Quebec and in the maritime provinces. It makes it possible for an impressive number of workers, out of work for some reason, to stay on the labour market, to keep their knowledge or expertise, or to acquire new ones.

In view of the present rate of unemployment, which is especially high in Quebec and in the maritimes, job-creation programs such as the Canada Works program serve a particular purpose, that of giving workers who are temporarily out of work or in between jobs the opportunity of using their expertise for the benefit of the community on projects subsidized by the federal government. It is important to note, however, that this job-creation program, whose role remains very important in Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces, cannot be considered an effective tool against structural unemployment. A program such as the Canada Works program can only lower cyclical or seasonal unemployment. This program is for workers who are temporarily out of work or for those who want to get some experience in a particular field over a few months, which can help them land a permanent job afterwards.

A program such as the Canada Works program also helps community groups undertake certain projects which, without government assistance, would never get started. In a number of communities throughout Quebec, for instance, Canada Works projects have helped improve the welfare of some members of the community or the community as a whole. For instance, in my riding of Lotbinière, this year, the Canada Works program provided work to about 80 persons who will now be able to help their community. Of course, last year the subsidy was much higher in my riding but at that time the rate of unemployment was also much higher than it is now.

Permanent jobs were created which gave people a chance to find employment; this will eventually be much more profitable than the temporary jobs created by Canada Works programs. That is the type of program the government is putting forward. In addition, the diversity of those projects calls for a wide array of skills. Sometimes those temporary jobs may also lead to permanent employment.

As we all surely know, the Canada Works program subsidizes projects in areas where the unemployment rate is particularly high, where the need for help is the greatest. That is why there are no projects this year in some cities such as Calgary or Edmonton, while there are in Rimouski, Gaspé and Bathurst. Mr. Speaker, it is this ability to relieve unemployment in those areas which have special need for assistance that makes the Canada Works program worth while.

The projects we subsidize in Rimouski, in the province of Quebec, meet the specific needs of that city in terms of employment. We do not subsidize projects that use workers in areas where there are job opportunities. So, by granting Rimouski, for instance, $73,000 for a cultural centre, we are sure that the project will hire local workers who will be employed until such time as a permanent job becomes available. We keep encouraging workers to look for a permanent job while working on a Canada Works project.

Faced with a particularly high rate of unemployment among the young workers of Canada, and especially those of Quebec and the maritime provinces, the Canada Works program very often reaches a double objective, preventing their going through a long period of unemployment and sometimes providing them with their first important jobs. So for the young people who are looking for their first jobs, the waiting period before finding permanent jobs is tempered, and they keep their hopes and motivations.

Mr. Speaker, I prefer by far seeing our young graduates from the various community colleges work on the construction of a system of cross country ski trails while waiting for permanent jobs than wasting their time standing on street corners.

Mr. Dawson: The hon. member should talk to his minister, for he said the opposite this afternoon.

Mr. Janelle: My minister is listening. Some of the activities within a Canada Works project may even lead to the development of tourist attractions which may eventually be a source of still more jobs. I think we all know—

Mr. Dawson: I am sorry.

Mr. Janelle: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very difficult to continue. I think we all know a project funded by Canada Works whose immediate result was the development of a sports centre, or a library which continues to provide permanent employment to several people, let alone the people who continue to benefit from community services set up or developed under the Canada Works program.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Canada Works program, in spite of its merits and its successes, could not last forever in a role that only serves to correct the problem of unemployment on a partial or temporary basis. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the government in power showed yesterday that it has already started to solve the problems of unemployment when the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. MacKay) announced in Montreal the DREE grant program in a special area of Montreal. The program brings several major amendments to the former special area of Montreal and satellite cities, those cities that among other things will be able in all industrial sectors without exception to be eligible for the DREE program, and that will really create new jobs. Indeed, it is important to know that the area of application will be extended to include from now on the ridings of Vaudreuil, Soulanges and Huntington, as well as the non-designated part of the Outaouais area. My friends opposite were asking me earlier if that would create employment if DREE is to be called upon to fund over 500 projects in the four years planned for this new program. Those projects should generate investments of nearly $500 million and allow for the creation of over 32,000 direct and indirect jobs. That is constructive.

This government also looked for practical, new and appropriate solutions suited to the needs and circumstances. It is precisely the reason why a new policy of job creation was established by this government in the last few months and why its content will be revealed in the budget speech, in a few days.

[Mr. Janelle.]

An hon. Member: On what date?

Mr. Janelle: If my hon. friend does not know this, perhaps he should read newspapers now and then. I think during his time with the government in power the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Savard) should perhaps have endeavoured to do something for the Montreal area and, for the special areas in the Outaouais region, instead of criticizing the present government which has to make up for the errors made by them for 16 years.

• (2120)

Such policies on the part of this government will better meet the needs of all areas of the country because it must be emphasized that they were developed after full consultation with provincial authorities. They will be part of a comprehensive strategy to promote and stimulate the job-creation efforts of both private enterprise and other government levels. Mr. Speaker, I believe that these facts will have provided a few answers to hon. members opposite concerning this part of the motion now under consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

An hon. Member: Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, Mr. Speaker. We must certainly not forget Bonaventure.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat surprised at the speech made by our colleague from Lotbinière. When I was listening to him, I wondered on behalf of whom he was speaking. After being elected under the Social Credit banner in Lotbinière at the last election, he has become a defector to the side of the Progressive Conservative party—

An hon. Member: A "turn-coat".

Mr. Bujold: A "turn-coat" as we say where I come from, and when he crossed the floor of the House—in fact, he did not cross the floor, he simply moved down two or three places—the whole executive of the Social Credit association in his riding resigned. Therefore, who is he representing now? Does he speak for himself or only on behalf of the government? What is even more surprising, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the hon. member for Lotbinière was extolling the virtues—

Mr. Janelle: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion on a point of order.

Mr. Janelle: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member is speaking on the motion introduced by his party today or whether he is indulging in petty politics.

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Longueuil on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, the question just put by the parliamentary secretary is extremely important. I strictly refer you to his speech in which he dealt almost exclusively with DREE, ignoring the main motion and what it means. Throughout his speech he never realized that the motion was on the Canada Works program. And now he wants to tell us how we should deal with this motion. Mr. Speaker, I think he did not even take the time to read the motion. He does not even know the first paragraph of the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since I feel that two negatives do not make an affirmative, I shall recognize the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

Mr. Bujold: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was going to quote the flattering remarks made by our colleague from Lotbinière about the Canada Works program. While listening to him, we wondered whether he was on the right side of the House and whether he should not be on this side—

An hon. Member: We do not want him!

Mr. Bujold: —but particularly when I heard his colleagues applaud when he contradicted most of their speeches this afternoon and spoke against the Canada Works program. Mr. Speaker, either the simultaneous translation is not working well or the government members did not understand anything. I saw the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) looking at him during all his speech and I think that he left because he was too embarrassed to listen until the end.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I would now like to speak on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) and raise two very important issues, one of which is job training. This job-training program is extremely important, especially in outlying areas, in areas remote from large urban centres such as most areas in Quebec and eastern Canada. I do not think one should distinguish in the matter of job training with regard to the various social classes between the 15 to 24 age group, the 25 and over age group, and women as well. All these groups have an equal importance, Mr. Speaker. That is why I think we must warn the Minister of Employment and Immigration against a passage of the speech he delivered here in Ottawa last November 22. I quote:

> According to demographers, the post-war demographic explosion ended around 1960. And while in the first half of the 1980s we will have to deal with young people wanting to find a place for themselves on the labour market, the situation will reverse itself afterwards. The further we will go into the decade, the more the age pyramid will change: young workers will no longer be the majority but rather middle-age workers.

Mr. Speaker, the minister will have to be extremely careful with this kind of statement, because in our area, in eastern Canada and more particularly in eastern Quebec, in the Gaspé Peninsula, the middle age population is in dire need of this vocational training. Let us not wait the mid 1980s to meet the needs of these workers. They are the ones who, in our area, did not have the chance to make advanced studies and to attain a high level of education in order to compete in labour markets where manpower is more restrictive. They have to be content with being part of a second-grade labour force which always gets the jobs that provide hardly any employment security. Further, they have to accept lower salaries and fringe benefits. Finally, they have almost no promotion opportunities. That is why, Mr. Speaker, occupational training is extremely important to people in that social stratum.

While workers were facing a very serious problem, having only 52 weeks of occupational training, the minister brought Bill C-8 back to the House in an attempt to change that and extend the training period to over 52 weeks. We will have the opportunity to talk about this again when the House considers the bill. But I would like to give some figures which are very important and which show the urgent necessity for that occupational training and its deep significance for the people who live in large urban areas. For instance, in the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine alone 1,636 jobs have been created in institutions under this program from December 1, 1977 to December 1, 1979. This means the minister will have to make a tremendous effort to invest in this program, and I hope that on Tuesday next, on December 11, the budget will give us more details and bring us more money. However, I would like to quote once more from the speech made by the minister on November 20:

> The government will also put the accent on its work-training programs, both in industry and in technical schools.

As I said, the minister is pursuing the previous government's manpower training policy. But nothing new is introduced in the area of occupational training. On this subject, I would like to take a few minutes to describe the importance of manpower training for our region and most of eastern Canada, where there is a growing trend to create small and medium industries. This specific area of manpower training can help the people gain experience during those weeks where they can be paid jointly by the government and by industry. I am aware that the Quebec government also has a responsibility in this area to evaluate the kind of training it must give and to establish the six-week period in which industries can be paid. I also believe, as the minister emphasized this afternoon and as can be seen, that it is the thrust of the new government to help private industry. I think this is a case where the government really can do something to allow industry to develop in areas where it could hardly do so without government help.

To this effect, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to quote a few rather revealing figures concerning the Gaspé Peninsula and in particular the Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine riding. During that same period, from December 1st, 1977, to December 1st, 1979, 780 jobs were created under the industrial training program. This means, Mr. Speaker, that in a region where there is an incredible resurgence of vitality, this part of the program is extremely important. I say to the Minister of Employment and Immigration that I hope there will be something in next week's budget to help those industries, that there will be more than what the minister has done in the last six months. He says he will do something, but we have not seen anything yet. In the speech he made on November 20, he said he had introduced a bill before the House, but we see that it is just a reprint of the bill introduced by the former government. Is that what the minister calls new initiatives in this area? This government has nothing to show yet in the area of employment, and we might wonder whether the government really want to do something to improve the employment situation in areas where the need actually exists or whether they are merely trying to help the private sector.

An hon. Member: They are laughing at the workers. That is what they are doing!

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, I would now like to address myself to another extremely important matter which has already been discussed in this House, and which has been debated from both sides this afternoon, i.e. the much talked about Canada Works program. I would like to deal tonight, Mr. Speaker, with the way selections were made by the new Minister of Employment and Immigration, and the integrity of this program which has been in existence for the past four years and through which the former government managed for three years to make a rather fair allocation of money in all these areas. We mentioned these problems to the minister many times but he has never been able to tell us exactly how this selection had been done.

Mr. Speaker, I really question the way these projects were selected. I am convinced the Minister of Employment and Immigration probably depended on his department for services rendered or maybe on the member who had the floor before me and who spoke so highly of the Canada Works projects. That might be the reason why he had so much to say about these projects, because this year he and his colleague, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), really had a lot to do in that field.

An hon. Member: Porkbarrelling!

Mr. Bujold: Several of my colleagues in the House have already pointed out to the Minister of Employment and Immigration the problems that have been raised on that subject. I questioned him in the House and in committee but I could never get a precise answer.

An hon. Member: You will never get one, either.

Mr. Bujold: Probably because the minister is involved in a situation where he finds it difficult to select projects. In order to demonstrate how he could oppose the recommendations made by the officials reponsible for housing and employment in several regions, I would like to refer to what happened in my riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine and give you some facts which I think—if I am to believe the information I have been given by some of my colleagues—are very interesting. A policy has been established for Quebec and probably for other provinces where Canada Works projects have been implemented.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, employment and immigration officials have established a practice in that riding which I am told was used frequently in other regions in Quebec and in the maritimes.

They looked into the first three phrases of Canada Works to know how the money had been distributed and spent. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, I would quite simply like to say how the money was distributed in the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine. We see, for example, that in phase one our area got $300,000 for Causapscal, $450,000 in New Richmond, $200,000 in Chandler and $450,000 in the Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

That goes on in the second phase where one had up to $3 million to arrive at the fourth phase where they set about the same proportion in those four areas of the riding based on the data put together during the three first phases and looking at how people had worked and the success of the projects. Once again this year they divided hypothetically the amount of $3 million that had been allocated. They came to the conclusion that in one part of the riding there should be $330,000, in another one $474,000, and in another one, $1,400,000 and finally, in the Îles-de-la-Madeleine, $700,000, for a total of $3 million.

They also decided to establish a per capita ratio. They established across the riding a per capita ratio of $52.43 which meant they were giving a normal proportion for all people in the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine. The minister told me in the House, and I am quoting the official report of the debates, at page 1495, that he was relying on past performance. Past performance was the basis which government officials adopted in establishing the data to that effect.

Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister why he had made those selections, and when the decision was made this year in the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine. We realized based on the figures I quoted earlier, the minister had awarded $640,000 in the area of Causapscal, $1,300,000 in the area of Richmond, $175,000 in the area of Chandler and $814,000 in the Îles-de-la-Madeleine. What is worse, Mr. Speaker, the minister had on his own initiative awarded $100,000 more to one single municipality in the riding, that of Havre Aubert, in the Îles-de-la-Madeleine. Therefore he changed all the figures established by his civil servants, who are extremely qualified people who had experience in the area and had made studies of the last three phases to see what were the achievements which resulted in the per capita amount established for the constituency as a whole at $52.34, to come to $60.25 only in the Îles-de-la-Madeleine and to $47.50 on the mainland, in Bonaventure.

Then I wonder on what basis the minister made such a decision. I asked him that question, and so did some of my colleagues. We were never able to obtain an answer, Mr. Speaker. We think, as I stressed earlier, that our colleague, the hon. member for Lotbinière, was so happy to talk about the merits of Canada Works projects that we got no answer. I am afraid the Minister of Employment and Immigration was influenced by other colleagues in his party, and that he indulged in a shameful political favoritism, Mr. Speaker. The minister was never able to give us an answer, he was never able to give me the precise reasons for favouring one project over another—

• (2130)

[English]

Mr. Cameron: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said, or implied, that we were dispensing political favours. I want him to know that in my riding of Kamloops-Shuswap we had a million dollars last year and, this year, nothing. So there is no political favour being dispensed. If it is, it is in your favour.

[Translation]

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, I have a statement here. My hon. colleague may well know what I am driving at. I said that the minister has never been able to explain why he changed the decision made by the departmental officials, while I personally suspected that there had been patronage. I would simply like to read an excerpt from a news bulletin given on station CHNC on November 23, 1979. As a matter of fact, the additional $100,000 was handed over to a municipality where the applicant for the project, Mr. Carbonneau, stated that he had obtained the sum of approximately $204,000 because he had been a candidate for the Progressive Conservative party. Is this pork-barrelling or has the minister made an enlightened decision on this matter? This is the question that I have asked the minister, but that he has never been able to answer. Is this patronage?

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the minister was persuaded by someone else. I believe in the integrity of the minister and in his desire to help the cause of the workers and the unemployed, but I find such a decision shameful. Still in this same news bulletin, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative candidate at the last election was saying, "I have the feeling that I would have had the additional $100,000 if I had not been a Progressive Conservative candidate. I had to bring pressure to bear to get the additional $100,000." Mr. Speaker, I believe that I understand tonight why the minister has never been able to give me an explanation and why he changed the recommendations of his officials, which I had myself approved as the member of Parliament for that constituency. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, what is even more surprising is that $103,000 had already been allocated to this same project. Out of the 72 projects accepted in the constituency, only four were allowed in excess of $100,000, and these amounts vary between $100,000 and $120,000, while this project alone received $204,000.

Mr. Speaker, this is how the unemployed are treated in my area. I think that the minister will certainly have much to explain in this regard. He will probably have a chance to give an answer about this. I hope that he will also take time to answer all my questions. I finally asked the minister after seeing what was happening in this riding, why the unemployed deserving to be able to work this winter had been penalized, and I am sure that the government members are also aware of the unemployment problems in eastern Quebec, especially in the Gaspé Peninsula and the Magdalen Islands. And this is why I asked about the $100,000 he granted unilaterally. I do not know whether this was on the recommendation of his officials, but I rather believe that it was on the recommendation of politicians. I will ask the minister to find the $100,000 somewhere in the general funds of Canada Works and allocate it to the Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine riding so that his officials will be able to distribute it equitably and allow the largest number of unemployed to work this winter.

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I think we would certainly have much to say about Canada Works and the performance of this government, particularly when we see to what extent the minister—

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have been debating this motion for a full day. There have been three speakers from this side of the House. Half of the members of Parliament are on this side of the House. There have been two speakers in a row from the Liberal party.

Mr. Knowles: Are you challenging the authority of the Chair?

Mr. Hawkes: I am requesting permission to have the floor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has the floor. I am waiting for his point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: We have had several understandings from the Chair that there is an attempt on the part of the Chair to make sure that time is given equally to all members of Parliament. I have been waiting patiently all day for what I took to be the turn for our party to speak, and I am wondering if Your Honour might allow me to use the few remaining moments to address this issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Dawson: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, if the hon. member of the government party is willing to share the next 15 minutes so that we may have seven minutes each, I will be very pleased.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member on the government side has just received a proposal from the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson). He knows very well that if he really wants to take the floor he simply has to rise under Standing Order 29 and ask that such or such a member have leave to take the floor. Since he did not do so, Mr. Speaker, I think that the point he raised is out of order and that the hon. member for Louis-Hébert should have the floor to continue his speech.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the point raised by the hon. member, I understand his frustration. It is not easy for the Chair to compensate and satisfy everybody. We were just coming to the conclusion of the debate, which we have now reached at 9.45 p.m. It was my decision—and I do not have to explain it—that with 30 seconds left and this being an opposition motion, one opposition member should have the chance to sum up the debate. In any case, the hon. member had the alternative to move that he be heard. He did not do that. The debate is now concluded, and I must put the question. I do not even need to rule on the point of order he has raised.

It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 58(10), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of all business of supply now before the House, including the bill based on Supplementary Estimates (B).

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (for the President of Treasury Board) moved:

That Supplementary Estimates (B), 1979-80, laid upon the Table, Wednesday, November 7, 1979, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Beatty thereupon moved that Bill C-29, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1980, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Beatty thereupon moved that Bill C-29, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1980, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On Clause 2—$431,102,010 granted for 1979-80

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Can we be assured by the government that there is no borrowing authority tucked away in this bill or anything else which should not be there? I cannot find it, but you never know.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member cannot find it, it is not there.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, as my House leader says, if the hon. member cannot find it, it certainly is not there. However, I can assure the hon. member that the form of this bill is the same as that of those passed in previous years.

The Chairman: The hon. member is aware that the bill was distributed this afternoon.

Mr. Knowles: I would just like to be sure that there is nothing in it that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) would not have liked last year.

● (2150)

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Beatty moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 9.52 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

REQUEST THAT CHICKEN IMPORT QUOTAS FALL WITHIN JURISDICTION OF CHICKEN MARKETING AGENCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that our chicken producers are faced with serious problems because of the high import quotas accorded by Industry, Trade and Commerce, and due to the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said in a statement in this House on April 13, 1976, that the government should transfer the control of all dairy import quotas from ITC to the Canadian Dairy Commission, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger):

That the Minister of Agriculture be consistent with his philosophy of 1976 and ask his government to transfer the control of chicken import quotas from ITC to the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion under Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REAPPOINTMENT OF GOVERNOR AND DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in light of the reappointment announced this morning of the governor of the Bank of Canada before the standing committee on finance had an opportunity to make its views known on tight money and high interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That this House condemns the reappointment of governor Bouey and his deputy without prior consultation with the standing committee on finance.

Mr. Speaker: The motion can be introduced only upon unanimous consent? Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CBC PRODUCER ASSISTING KGB AGENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity as a result of a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) this morning at his press conference, that there was concern within the CBC regarding an individual who allegedly assisted a KGB representative in Canada, and I might add that this individual had been previously identified in the Ontario legislature by the attorney general of Ontario as CBC producer Mark Starowicz. I move, seconded by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble):

Whereas CBC producer Mark Starowicz assisted KGB agent Konstantine Geyvandov in compiling information on certain persons, allegedly on six different occasions, and also promised "to act on behalf of Soviet interests", that the CBC be required to give a public explanation as to why Mark Starowicz continues as producer of the public opinion influencing program "Sunday Morning" and, finally, as to why he is being considered at this very moment to head all CBC national news and public affairs programming.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only upon unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PENSION SUPPLEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an urgent matter of pressing necessity.

Considering the new data published yesterday by Statistics Canada on aging in Canada, indicating that the number of persons aged 65 or over will more than triple during the next five decades, and that the number of destitute single women will quadruple, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart):

That the government immediately allocate the required sum to increase the pension supplement granted to retired and needy single persons, to raise them above the threshold of poverty.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such motion can be introduced for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

CRITICISM OF MINISTER AND NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the Canadian government and the National Energy Board have approved substantial exports of heating oil to the United States while domestic inventories have shrunk, and whereas Canada now faces an immediate energy crisis, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House has no confidence in both the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the National Energy Board, and urges that they be dismissed immediately for their stupidity.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF EXHIBITION BUILDINGS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to put forward a motion which I hope will receive the unanimous consent of the House. Regional agricultural exhibitions across Canada, like the Atlantic Winter Fair, provide a vital showcase for farmers and local trade and industry. Accordingly, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this House request the Minister of Agriculture to consider the reinstatement of the financial assistance formerly provided for the construction of multipurpose exhibition buildings which can be used for agricultural and trade fairs.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST DANUSE HANZLIK BE ALLOWED TO VISIT FATHER IN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It concerns the case of Mr. Richard Hanzlik, on whose behalf I approached the Secretary of State for External Affairs last August requesting her to petition the government of Czechoslovakia to grant Mr. Hanzlik's daughter permission to visit him in Canada, as he has not seen her since 1965. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs contact the government of Czechoslovakia forthwith and directly request that Danuse Hanzlik be granted permission to visit her father in Canada, since he may not return there himself without government reprisals.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time, pursuant to the Standing Order, only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

INTERNATIONAL PEACE DAY

CALL FOR BAN ON SALE OF WAR TOYS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas today is International Peace Day and the need for world peace has never been greater than it is at the present time, and whereas countries such as Sweden have implemented measures to ban the sale of war toys, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House ban the sale of war toys in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time only by unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES

COMMITTEE STUDY OF LICENSING POLICIES ON EAST AND WEST COASTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Haliburton (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is in the process of reviewing fisheries policies in general and plans to introduce a white paper in the spring, and given the importance of enabling members of Parliament to participate in this process and provide an input in the formation of fisheries policy, in particular of licensing policies, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. MacDonald):

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry commence forthwith an examination of proposed licensing policies on the east and west coasts, including the Levelton and Sinclair studies, and that the committee be authorized to take such evidence and undertake such travel as may be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of this motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ENERGY

EXPORT OF NATURAL GAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the government announced last evening the decision to export 3.75 trillion cubic feet of natural gas at a time that Canadians face a cold winter, threatened by an energy shortage, and whereas these energy resources should be used to replace imported oil and expand the usage of natural gas both by consumers and industries in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That this House condemns the government's stupid and treacherous act of selling out our birthright.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

EXPORT OF NATURAL GAS TO UNITED STATES—ALASKA NATURAL GAS PIPELINE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question concerning yesterday's announcement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about exports of natural gas.

Could I remind the hon. gentleman that our government obtained from the United States a commitment that if there were to be any pre-build of the Alaska gas pipeline, it could only be authorized if there were a commitment to build the entire line? Could I hear from the Prime Minister whether that commitment obtained from Mr. Schlesinger last March still stands?

● (1115)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that commitment stands.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if that commitment stands how is it that in the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources yesterday there was the following assertion by the minister:

It will be up to the sponsors of the Alaska natural gas pipeline to respond with firm commitments for the entire pipeline.

This phrase obviously indicates that there is no firm commitment, that we are asking them for a firm commitment and that we have authorized the export before obtaining this commitment. How is it that now we are relying on the private sector to make commitments when we had obtained one from the government of the United States?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the export is conditional on the commitment being given and honoured.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, does that mean that when the pipeline is built—if it is built—there will be supplies from Prudhoe Bay which will permit us to get exchanges for the amount of gas that we have sold to the United States? In other words, will we proceed with the arrangements which we had discussed with the United States, selling gas to the United States now in return for equal amounts of gas which we would get from them later?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition will recall that swaps were discussed but were not a formal condition of the agreement. What proceeding with the pipeline will mean is that Canada will be in a position, through the Dempster hook-up, to take advantage of Canadian requirements for gas in the Mackenzie Delta.

NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO MARITIMES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister why, in the announcement made by the minister yesterday with respect to the export of natural gas, the maritime provinces were ignored and no guarantee was given that as part of this policy a gas pipeline would be built into the maritime provinces?

In the light of this momentous decision, is the Prime Minister now prepared to give a guarantee, and is he now prepared to say that additional revenues which are made available to Canada will be used to finance this vital link in our energy distribution system to the Atlantic provinces?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the guarantee has already been given to the maritime provinces that there will be an extension of the Q and M pipeline beyond Quebec if it is the desire of the Atlantic provinces to have that kind of extension. As I have made clear several times in the House and as has my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, this is part of the comprehensive energy package proposed by this government to ensure that we are not again caught in a situation of having to increase our reliance upon foreign sources.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I know the Prime Minister on an earlier date said that a government headed by him would begin the construction and planning immediately of this gas pipeline. I want to ask him today when the planning and construction of the pipeline will begin, and how does he propose to finance it?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to which pipeline the hon. member is referring. There is an application, as he knows, for a pipeline to Quebec—

Mr. MacEachen: Gas pipeline.

Mr. Clark: —gas pipeline to Quebec before the National Energy Board. The question may relate— it was not clear—to the possible extension of that line beyond Quebec to the maritime provinces. My commitment in relation to that pipeline was that we would be prepared to move on it as soon as there was agreement on the part of the maritime provinces that that was necessary. That agreement, naturally, will not come until there is some further certain knowledge as to the gas potential off Sable Island. Once there is agreement from the maritime provinces that such a pipeline extension is necessary, we will proceed immediately with it.

Naturally, it will be helpful to us, to the Atlantic provinces and to the whole of Canada if there is support in this House for the comprehensive energy package which we have put forward, one element of which would allow Canada to proceed with the extension of the Q and M line to the maritime region if that is desired.

POSSIBILITY OF OIL SHORTAGES THIS WINTER

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister. Why did the Prime Minister allow the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to mislead this House and the people of Canada about fuel oil supplies by describing the situation as "tight but manageable", when the Prime Minister admitted this morning at his press conference, and I quote, "We knew all along that shortages were possible"?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): The hon. member, I am sure, in the interest of integrity would want to quote to the House of Commons the whole of my statement at my press conference this morning, in which we indicated that we knew there would possibly be shortages, given certain circumstances such as an unusually severe winter, given excessive consumer demand and that kind of thing. We have been receiving from the National Energy Board monthly indications of their views on the current situation in Canada. Until recently their view was that the situation in Canada was tight but manageable. That was the information that I and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources communicated to the House of Commons.

There is now a view, as a result primarily of unusual increases in consumption in Canada, that there might be some limited interruptions. My hope is that by drawing the attention of Canadians to the possibility of limited interruptions, caused in large measure by excessive demand, we can encourage Canadians in all parts of the country to exercise much more conservative practices in relation to energy use, consequently avoiding the possibility of shortages anywhere in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the phrase "we knew all along" squares with the answer just given by the Prime Minister, and I have given notice that I intend to raise this as a question of privilege.

By way of a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister, since the National Energy Board, on the one hand, is telling the government that oil shortages are possible and, on the other hand, is still permitting the export of fuel oil to the United States and now has also approved massive exports of natural gas to the United States, how can the people of Canada have any faith in the National Energy Board and in this government about energy supplies? Why does the Prime Minister not admit that this government does not know whether it is coming or going on the issue of energy supplies?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is that we have a government that does know where we are going on the national energy policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What we are doing is moving this nation toward energy self-sufficiency to fill the gap created by the absence of planning in former years which has created the possibility of shortages in Atlantic Canada and has increased most dangerously the dependence of Canada upon unstable foreign sources. I can also indicate to the hon. member, whose qualifications for being the energy spokesman of his party seem unrelated to any knowledge of the industry—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —the simple and elemental fact which has apparently escaped him to this date, that the export of surplus natural gas now will have two immediately beneficial impacts upon Canada. One is that it will save a number of small Canadian companies, which cannot afford to keep their reserves locked in, from bankruptcy or from sale to foreign ownership; and the second is that the export of natural gas, as well as the positive impact it has on our balance of payments situation will stimulate exploration in this country, which will bring on new reserves of natural gas and oil and move this country again toward energy self-sufficiency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: Talking about knowledge of the industry, this is the same Prime Minister who a few months ago was running around telling Japan and Israel that we had a surplus of oil and also, more recently, finding himself able to export the surplus supply of fuel oil to the United States. If this was not bad enough, he has now indicated that he is prepared to sell out the future security of Canadians in terms of substituting natural gas for imported oil by allowing a massive export to the United States. For the sake of the Prime Minister's own credibility and the domestic security of Canadians in future energy supplies—

• (1125)

An hon. Member: Speech.

Mr. Symes: —will he now reverse his decision to export this gas to the United States?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I will not reverse the decision. What I will do is suggest to the hon. member, who pretends to be an energy critic, that before he rises in the House to criticize the National Energy Board report he should read the report—

An hon. Member: What credibility does the NEB have?

Mr. Clark: —because the report made it abundantly clear that the gas surpluses that were found, or the amounts of gas that will be available for export are surplus to Canadian needs, including needs contemplating substantial substitution of oil to natural gas.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The hon. member shouted from his seat, "What credibility does the National Energy Board have?" Considerably more than the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXPORT OF NATURAL GAS TO UNITED STATES—EFFECT ON VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Thank you very much for your applause! Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of State for International Trade. An increase in natural gas exports of the magnitude we are talking about here will lead to an increase in the value of the dollar, which will inescapably operate to the detriment of secondary industry in Canada and the development of secondary industry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Evans: That shows how much they know about economics. I should like to ask the minister: has the government analysed the effects of the projected gas export levels on the value of the Canadian dollar, which the minister indicated would earn about $13.2 billion at today's export prices? If so, will the House be informed of the results of this analysis and its effect on secondary industry development in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member that the value of the Canadian dollar slipped slightly today, so I do not think what he is expecting to happen will necessarily happen.

Mr. MacEachen: Check with Hnatyshyn.

Mr. Wilson: We are pleased that there will be less pressure on the balance of payments as a result of this decision to allow increased exports of natural gas. I do not think that it will have the significant impact on the level of the dollar that the hon. member suggests. I would, further, point out to the member that there is a range within which the Canadian dollar can move which will still allow Canadian industry to maintain the strong competitive position it has now in industry relative to world markets.

ENERGY SELF-SUFFICIENCY, OR OIL SELF-SUFFICIENCY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister. I would ask the Prime Minister if he would clarify to the House whether the policy of this government is energy self-sufficiency, or oil self-sufficiency. If, indeed, it is energy self-sufficiency, will he tell us, since we have a 6 per cent surplus of energy in this country now, is it the policy of this government to export natural gas to ensure that he needs an energy self-sufficiency policy in the future?

An hon. Member: Right on.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, once again, I respect the hon. member's qualifications and formation as an academic economist. What I want to draw to his attention is that in the search for oil, in the search for natural gas and other energy sources, it is necessary for us to have incentives for the practical people in the field who go out to look for new sources of oil and new sources of natural gas.

One of the consequences of exporting natural gas which is clearly surplus to our needs—including the need to have enough for substitution purposes—is to encourage practical

Canadians who work in the field looking for new sources to go out and look for new oil, look for new gas and to bring this country toward self-sufficiency in all forms of energy to the degree that is possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOURCES OF FUTURE ENERGY SUPPLIES

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I refer to his statement yesterday when he informed the House that 17 years from now the demand for natural gas will be greater than the supply. Could the minister inform this House today where Canadians will turn 17 years from now for home, commercial and industrial requirements across the nation?

● (1130)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the reference the hon. member makes with regard to that particular projection simply does not take into account further exploration and bringing further discoveries on stream. The hon. member is using that particular chart to indicate that nothing further is going to happen.

As the Prime Minister pointed out, this particular export activity now is going to generate a very great degree of involvement in terms of conventional oil supplies and the immense amount of tight gas out in western Canada. It does not take into account the offshore potential and it does not take into account frontier possibilities in this country. We have great potential in this country, and this government is committed to determining and deciding upon a course of action that will bring us to the great future that we deserve.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, that reply sounds as though it was drafted by Imperial Oil. I would, therefore, turn to the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment. I would ask whether he was consulted, and does he support this proposal involving the heating resource that is the least environmentally detrimental to the country?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I most certainly do support the proposal. I would remind the hon. member that this country has to make appropriate use of its resources, and when there is gas surplus to our needs it is almost negligent, and certainly not in the public interest, to allow the continuing and deteriorating balance of payments situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBILITY OF IMPOSING EXCISE TAX ON PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—DISCUSSIONS WITH PREMIER OF QUEBEC

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister who accuses the former government of lack of planning. I should like to remind him that in 1970 Canada was dependent on others for 50 per cent of its energy consumption and that by 1978 that dependence had decreased to 30 per cent as a result of the excellent policies of the Liberal government.

Mr. Speaker, would the right hon. Prime Minister tell us how he will respond to the request of the Quebec premier who indicated to the Canadian Prime Minister that he disagreed with the proposal that the federal government might levy an excise tax on oil products? How does the Prime Minister, who has spoken of great co-operation and agreements with the provinces, intend to respond to the request of Premier Lévesque?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the House that a recent list certainly indicates the lack of efficiency of the energy policies of the former government with regard to self-sufficiency. However, if I may answer the question directly, I did get a message from the Quebec premier indicating the position of his government against the levying of an excise tax by the federal government. It was a confirmation of the position adopted by Minister Bérubé during the first ministers' conference. As the hon. member and the House will understand, there is clear federal jurisdiction in the matter of levying an excise tax on oil. That jurisdiction was exercised by the former government when it applied an excise tax. It is the intention of the federal government to follow our plans with regard to excise tax in a field over which there is clear federal jurisdiction.

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTMENT NEEDED TO REACH ENERGY SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. If the Prime Minister wishes his consultation policy to succeed, could he not give some evidence of it to the Quebec premier who really needs those funds? He cites figures. He talks about the need for investment from Canadians. We members of the opposition would also be interested to know the investments required to reach self-sufficiency. Therefore I ask whether he could give us those figures, and try to convince Premier Lévesque.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the development of our proposal to establish a Canadian energy bank, we are identifying the energy projects where it will be essential for us to have more money—funds that are not available in the private sector—to promote energy projects. I hope that as soon as we can identify all the elements of our over-all position on energy, particularly on the creation of a Canadian energy bank, it will then be possible for us to give figures indicating the needs in the area of energy projects.

PROPOSED GAS EXPORTS—EFFECT ON COST OF ENERGY FOR CANADIAN BUSINESSES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. In view of the fact that there is always a necessity for Canadian business to be able to rely upon dependable and reasonably-priced energy for its creation or its continuation, was the minister consulted before this decision was taken and, if he was, what is his view as to how the proposed export gas will have an effect in terms of giving some hope, promise or solidity to Canadian businesses to dare to venture forward either to expand their present business or to create new business; or is there an idea that there is going to be, on the basis of past NEB figures, a great reliance upon just that figure for the future?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think part of the question the hon. member has just asked was answered in my response a short while ago. One thing we have to consider is, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said, that this is going to generate a considerable amount of employment and activity in the west in future exploration and development.

The other factor which touches on the hon. member's question is the whole matter of energy supply and energy growth demand in this country which was taken into account by the Energy Board proposal. There should be ample reason for the industry to have confidence, in that in this country we are going to have a confidence of energy supply for many years down the road under the policy being put forward by this government. That is a very important factor in our over-all industrial development.

INQUIRY AS TO HOW PRIME MINISTER CAN RECONCILE HIS TWO STATEMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. As the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie has just said in his question, now that the Prime Minister has stated, on one hand, that he has known for a long time that there was a possibility of oil shortages in Quebec and in Canada this winter and, on the other hand, on November 6, in a letter addressed to the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada he stated that there would be no oil shortages in Quebec and in the maritime provinces, I should like to ask whether he can tell the House how he can reconcile his two statements.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I have just said in English to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, I qualified my remarks this morning by indicating that there was some knowledge of certain possibilities, like an unforeseen increase in consumer demand, a hard winter, and things like that. We received every month from the National Energy Board their most up to date data on the state of Canadian supplies and the possibility of a shortage. To date there has been no indication by the National Energy Board of any possibility of a shortage in Canada. Now, because of some changes in the rate of oil consumption throughout Canada, there has been a change in the analysis of the National Energy Board. I think the most responsible approach for us is to point out the necessity for all Canadians to conserve oil to ensure that there will be no shortage.

• (1140)

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not he thought he was being straightforward with the House, when he knew all along that there was the possibility of a shortage, in light of the letter which he wrote to the Leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada and which he repeated in this House on November 6? Was he being straightforward?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I was being straightforward.

[Translation]

In my reply to the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada, I said that, on the basis of the information I had at the time I wrote the letter, there was no risk of oil shortages. But afterwards there was a change in the National Energy Board's analysis, which is quite normal.

M. LeBlanc: The change came after the vote.

Mr. Clark: We now face a greater risk of shortages—

Mr. LeBlanc: Where are the Socreds this morning?

Mr. Clark: —but, as I have said—

M. Ouellet: You were told lies.

Mr. Clark: —members of Parliament and Canadians in general must accept the facts and understand that the best way to help Quebeckers, to help people in the Atlantic provinces, is to emphasize conservation.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL MAKE $20 MILLION SUBSIDY FOR GERONTOLOGY RESEARCH

Hon. Monique Bégin (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Statistics Canada published yesterday the famous study called "Hospitals: Horizon 2031" which clearly shows that within the next five decades Canada's old-age population will increase to the point where it will in fact quintuple and the total present capacity of hospital beds will be occupied by elderly people. In this context, I should like to ask the minister whether he could tell the House when his government will honour the electoral promise made last May 3, when he said he would immediately make an additional $20 million subsidy for medical research in gerontology?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the statistics report published yesterday is, of course, as the hon. member has indicated. With respect to medical research—and I take it that that is the hon. member's question—there are now before cabinet provisions outlining opportunities for both an increase in the level and an extension of the five-year formula established by the previous government. I am hopeful that the result will be a positive one.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the hon. minister.

I have a lot of trouble with this minister: either he does not know how to use the little earpiece for simultaneous translation—in fact, he plays the same trick with us in committee, where we have seen him use his earpiece the wrong way—or there really is a learning disability somewhere.

I would like to repeat my question: When will the government announce an additional $20 million subsidy for gerontology, as the minister promised Canadians over six months ago now, what share of these moneys will go to practical research for health care aimed at elderly people and the training of specialized personnel, and what share will go to pure research? The minister has mentioned the Medical Research Council, and I do not know what it has to do with this question.

[English]

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I think I heard it that time. The commitment that was made during the election campaign is one which we intend to keep. I had some discussion with the provincial ministers of health at the conference in September. We will be meeting again very shortly. As the hon. member knows, this is a matter of concern to me and I hope we will be able to resume discussions with the provinces on this matter in short order.

SOURCE OF FUNDS FOR GERONTOLOGY RESEARCH

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, would the minister of health tell the House where the money will come from?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there are, of course, a number of places from which the money can come; but it will all come from the taxpayers of Canada. My view is that the taxpayers of Canada would support such allocations.

LOTTERIES

CALL FOR INVESTIGATION INTO EFFECTS ON SOCIETY

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Secretary of State who is also the inner cabinet minister responsible for social policy. It deals with lotteries and the impact they have on the poor, the elderly and the ability of private sector charitable institutions to raise money, as well as the question of responsibility in advertising. I wrote to the minister last summer asking if he would push for an investigation. The minister responded by asking for my suggestions, and with a letter indicating that he would take the matter up with cabinet. That letter was dated September 19.

Has the minister taken up with cabinet the possibility of a full investigation into the effect of this $2 billion business in the marketplace, and have his colleagues agreed to do something about this situation; or have they rejected this common concern which the minister and I share?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has pursued this matter for some time. I can recall that over the last couple of years he has raised this topic on repeated occasions. We have not had an opportunity to deal with the matter in cabinet because we are very much engaged in pursuing matters of priority which have been identified by the new government. I would hope that we can deal with this subject fairly soon, because it is important.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT REACHED TO RESERVE ONE LANE ON CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL, FOR SOUTH SHORE BUSES

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, the question I am directing to the Minister of State for Transport deals with the Champlain Bridge and the lot of Montreal South Shore suburbanites. Could the minister indicate whether the new government intends to renew an agreement which our government signed in the past whereby a special lane would be reserved during peak hours for the buses of the transport commission in Montreal South Shore, an agreement which is to expire within the next few days and which has been an unqualified success?

[English]

Hon. J. Robert Howie (Minister of State, Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. The experimental project regarding the lane on Champlain Bridge reserved for buses has been in operation for 18 months and expires the last day of this month. The ministry of transport of Quebec has attempted to do an evaluation of the project, but they have been hindered by labour problems.

I understand that the minister is in the process of communicating with this government to ask for an extension of this experimental project. As soon as the communication is received, we shall give the matter immediate consideration. I sincerely hope that we will be able to give as favourable a response as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the same minister. For the information of the House and Montreal South Shore residents, could he indicate, in connection with the Champlain Bridge file which he is currently reviewing, whether he intends to continue the toll-free policy for the buses of the transport commission in Montreal South Shore which is provided for in an agreement which, I repeat, is to expire within the next few days?

[English]

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, the provision regarding tolls results in a loss of revenue of about $150,000 a year. On the other hand, it results in a very marked increase in convenience for the people who use the service. There is also a very considerable saving with regard to energy conservation. We are currently balancing and giving weight to these factors. I expect to make a decision in the next few days, which I will communicate to the hon. member.

TOURISM

PROMOTION OF TOURISM BY CANADIAN PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for International Trade who is also responsible for tourism. Since the first contact with Canada and the first impression of Canadian hospitality by the travelling public is often that of staff members of various ministries of the government, what is being done to inform civil servants of the importance of tourism and the major role which they play in assuring that we have repeat visitors from other countries?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this particular matter came up in October at the conference of federal-provincial tourism ministers and it was identified as being a question of real importance. There is currently under way an interdepartmental review by officials of the particular aspects of this problem as it relates to immigration and customs. That committee originally stated that it would be able to report to me some time around mid-year, but they have since extended the deadline to some time later in the year or into the following year. I instructed them that was not good enough and that I wanted the report sooner, hopefully by mid-year.

FINANCE

REAPPOINTMENT OF GOVERNOR AND DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): My question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of the announcement this morning that governor Bouey and his deputy were being reappointed for another seven years, does this mean that we will have another seven years of tight money, another seven years of high interest rates and another seven years of domination of our economy by the Bank of Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the governor of the Bank of Canada and his deputy were reappointed by the board of directors of the Bank of Canada. We have concurred in their reappointment. That means for another seven years, or however long they choose to fill those offices within that period, we will have a sound central bank, uninterfered with in a political sense by the government.

I cannot answer for what would happen if hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, but we are not going to interfere politically with the Bank of Canada. I think for another seven years we will have sound, sensible monetary policy administered by the Bank of Canada. I would like to congratulate Mr. Bouey and Mr. Lawson on their reappointment and wish them well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL REVENUE

EXCESS PROFITS OF OIL MULTINATIONALS—STEPS TO PREVENT TRANSFER OUT OF CANADA

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Two weeks ago I asked the Minister of National Revenue what steps his department was taking with respect to the transfer of excess profits by the multinational oil companies outside the country. At the time he assured me that the department would have that matter very much in mind.

This past week we have had reports that two of the multinational oil companies have transferred multimillions of dollars out of this country at the same time as raising oil prices. I wonder whether the minister could advise this House what steps he is taking to prevent this intolerable situation.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, it is improper to discuss on the floor of the House of Commons specific matters in relation to income tax and the Income Tax Act. I am sure the hon. member understands that. I wish to reassure him that the Department of National Revenue is taking its responsibilities under the appropriate statutes with respect to the specific matters he has raised.

TAXING INCREASE IN REVENUES OF OIL MULTINATIONALS

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Since it was the Prime Minister who first raised this subject in the House when he said he was going to discuss an excess profits tax with the multinational oil companies, I ask the Prime Minister this: is he going to pursue this aspect of taxing the increase in revenues rather than the increase in profits as a result of the oil price increases which we expect to experience in the next few weeks?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are now actively discussing the mechanism that will be used to ensure that virtually 100 per cent of the revenues that would go to the companies as a result of increases in energy prices will, in fact, be regained by the Government of Canada for the specific application by the Government of Canada for national energy purposes.

ENERGY

OIL SUPPLIES FOR MARITIMES THIS WINTER

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the non-answer by the Prime Minister to our leader with respect to supply to the Atlantic area, in view of the oil supply cut off by Iran, and in view of the announcement by the Prime Minister that there are no plans for a pipeline to the maritimes, could the minister responsible indicate to the House what he intends to do in view of the cries by the Premier of Nova Scotia in this morning's newspapers for a guaranteed supply for the citizens of the maritime provinces?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member I simply want to say that I am, in fact, taking a number of initiatives to ensure that we do get through this winter. The fact is that the federal government is proceeding with a number of initiatives, in consultation with industry, for obtaining alternative sources of supply. These consultations are actively going on with the companies involved.

Also, I am taking some initiatives with respect to conservation practices that might be followed, and leadership that might be given at all levels of government. Today I am writing to the provincial premiers asking them to consider a number of conservation initiatives that might be taken and the leadership that might be given by all levels of government. It is a matter that I want to discuss at the first ministers' meeting. It is a matter that will assist us in getting through this winter. It is a manageable situation provided that we do not have any untoward or unforeseen interruptions of rather large proportions. We are attempting to come to terms with this particular problem.

AIR TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING DISPOSITION OF NORDAIR

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I apologize for not having given him notice. Being aware of his concern for the people in Atlantic Canada who use air services for travel, would he indicate to the House whether or not the government has now taken a position with respect to the disposition of Nordair?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that question is now before cabinet. We are considering the transportation concerns of the citizens of Atlantic Canada, Quebec and Ontario.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED AIRLIFT OF FOOD FOR KAMPUCHEA

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): My question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration stated that there was great suffering by the people of Kampuchea. Having returned from the United Nations just recently—and I am sure the Prime Minister is aware of this—we know that in the last ten years as many as two million citizens there have died from famine. The Minister of Employment and Immigration talked about a political response—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put a question.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister this: would he try a practical approach and suggest that an airlift of food be sent to the people of Kampuchea to relieve their plight?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is already under way. What this government is doing, in addition, is proposing means—for which we hope we will find support in this House—to turn money from the refugee program, which the government need not spend now because of the generosity of participation by individual Canadians, toward aiding residents of Kampuchea. Also, through the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs we are continuing her vigorous leadership in trying to bring pressure to bear upon the government of Vietnam in a way that will move toward a political solution of this very grievous human problem for the world.

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH ANTONINE MAILLET PRIZE

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the great joy which France has given us by awarding the Prix Goncourt to Mrs. Antonine Maillet, would it not be in the interest of all Canadians to establish an Antonine Maillet prize to encourage French literature in Canada?

INCOME TAX

MECHANISM TO ENABLE WHEAT PRODUCERS TO DEFER TAX ON INTERIM PAYMENTS FROM WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): My question is for the Minister of National Revenue. I believe the minister is aware of the difficulty faced by some wheat producers who expected deferred payments for crop deliveries this year and are now receiving interim payments from the Canadian Wheat Board.

It would appear that these payments will have to be included in income tax purposes in 1979. I wonder whether the minister has had an opportunity to consider some mechanism whereby they can receive a deferment of this amount, for tax purposes, which they otherwise would not have anticipated.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, that matter was originally raised in the Senate. There have been some reviews of the matter within the Department of National Revenue to see whether or not that would be possible. The preliminary judgment of the department is that it is not possible. I am reviewing the matter to see whether there could be any change, because I recognize the position put forward by the hon. member. When that review is completed, I shall inform the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEPLOYMENT OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN EUROPE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who will be attending the NATO meeting of foreign defence ministers in Brussels next week at which meeting a decision will be taken on the American proposal to station Pershing and cruise-missiles in five European countries.

Does the minister share the position of the Minister of National Defence in not having a position on the U.S. proposal, or does she intend to follow her own convictions and those of the United Church of Canada—and, indeed, of this party—that as a minimum Canada supports the proposals that have come from three European countries to postpone further deployment of any nuclear weapons in Europe pending ratification of SALT II and exploration of new possibilities in east-west arms control negotiations?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the very important discussions that will be going on next week with regard to the modernization of the Theatre Nuclear Forces in the NATO alliance are in large measure a response to the deployment that has already taken place in the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact countries with the SS-20 missiles and with the Backfire bombers. This is a question as to whether or not the NATO alliance speaks from a position of strength or a position of weakness.

I would say to the hon. member that in the discussions that will be taking place in Brussels next week, Canada will be working with the European countries to reach a consensus that will strengthen the role of the NATO alliance. There is no question as to where we stand on that. It does not mean that Canada has any personal commitment to nuclear missiles or nuclear weapons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, three of the European countries have their representatives, in one case their premier and in the other two their foreign ministers, in Washington today to discuss their very serious reservations about the American proposal. Perhaps the minister has not understood what the American proposal is. I want to ask her specifically whether Canada is also going to express those reservations on the American proposal. The decision will otherwise be made on December 12.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the subject under discussion is not just an American proposal; the subject under discussion is the modernization of our NATO alliance and of the theatre nuclear weapons within that alliance. As the hon. member knows, a good many other countries will be taking part in that. It will not just be the American position, but the position of the United Kingdom, West Germany and a good many other countries. That is the one in which we will be involved.

There is no question that there is opposition to it from Norway, Denmark and The Netherlands, but it is a different kind of opposition than the hon. member would seek to leave with the House, because the various positions of these three countries are in no way the same. Therefore, what we will be seeking to arrive at at that meeting is a consensus on which all NATO countries can come to agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I want to call the attention of the House, in order that it may not always be seen that I have only negative comments about the question period, to the fact that I recently asked for the co-operation of the House to try and operate in a way at the beginning of the question period which was in balance with that expected at the end of the question period. Today members will note that the exchange at the beginning of the question period was ideal in nature and still very forceful on a very important subject. The result was that participation in the question period was much more generous than it has been in recent days. I think I am expressing the views of most members of the House in thanking the members for their co-operation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I have received six notices of questions of privilege, one application for an emergency debate pursuant to Standing Order 26, and I believe I observe a point of order which has arisen during the question period. I believe it is my duty to take that even before I take the questions of privilege in respect of which I have received notice; that is to say, the items which arise during the question period and by our recent practices have been deferred until the end of the question period have priority on their own, had they been taken during the time they arose during the question period. I think I should take those now.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. PINARD—ADJOURNMENT MOTIONS DURING ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention to page 9595 of Hansard for November 16, 1971 when the situation was absolutely identical to what happened today during oral question period. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux was in the chair and the hon. Mr. Stanfield, in the middle of the question period, moved the adjournment of the House without debate and without postponing the debate until after question period. The Speaker put the question—

[Miss MacDonald.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The House should understand that Standing Order 25 does indicate that a motion to adjourn the House is always in order. However, I have ruled in the past that a motion being always in order surely means the hon. member must have the floor for the purpose of putting a motion. For example, I asked the hon. member—and our recent practices are perhaps not enshrined in the Standing Orders—could a member put a motion pursuant to our period at the beginning of the day for the calling of motions pursuant to Standing Order 43? Motions pursuant to Standing Order 43 must receive the unanimous consent of the House.

Standing Order 25 says that a motion to adjourn the House is always in order. Could the Chair, therefore, on the hon. member's reasoning, take a motion to adjourn the House on a motion pursuant to Standing Order 25 during the period of motions pursuant to Standing Order 43? I think not. That period is reserved for motions to be put only upon unanimous consent. Obviously a motion to adjourn the House does not require unanimous consent. How do the two blend?

Similarly, as I indicated quite clearly on February 21 of this year when an attempt was made at that time by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) to adjourn the proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 25 during the course of the question period, I had the following to say:

> The hon. member will know that I recognized him during the course of the question period. A motion to adjourn is always in order, according to the Standing Orders of the House. However, such a motion must be put forward, as I have ruled on more than one occasion in the past, at a time when a member has the floor for the purpose of putting a motion, which is not done during the question period. When a member has the floor at a time which motions are received, then that motion is always receivable.

That reason remains for the reasoning I have applied. I could not controvert it today. To do so would be a direct contradiction of my own ruling only months ago.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if I may simply and shortly express my point of order. I understand you are saying you will not contradict yourself. What I was saying is that you contradicted Speaker Lamoureux. I was referring you to a precedent at page 9595 of Hansard for November 16, 1971 when Speaker Lamoureux was in the Chair. This very situation occurred when Mr. Stanfield rose during question period and moved the adjournment of the House.

May I also refer you to Standing Order 25 which is very clear in its wording. It reads:

> A motion to adjourn, unless otherwise prohibited in these Standing Orders, shall always be in order—

First, I would like to know the meaning of the words "shall always be in order". Second, before you give your final ruling, may I seek your guidance as to how your ruling compares with Speaker Lamoureux's ruling in 1971 when the very same situation occurred during question period. Mr. Stanfield rose and simply said:

> Mr. Speaker, in view of the kind of answers we are getting this afternoon, pursuant to Standing Order 25 I move the adjournment of the House.

It was not seconded. The Speaker then said:

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

A vote was then taken. You are saying you will not contradict. I am asking, will you contradict Speaker Lamoureux?

● (1210)

Mr. Speaker: The answer to that, of course, is I already have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I bring it to the attention of the hon. member that our practices have changed substantially since the Lamoureux ruling to which he has referred. At that time motions could be put prior to the question period and, in fact, questions came at the end of Routine Proceedings. We have now reversed that order and placed a priority on the question period, by our practice and by agreement, placing questions ahead of motions. Furthermore, we have, by agreement, purged the question period of points of order and matters of privilege which might arise, deferring them until later.

In other words, since the ruling to which the hon. member referred we have taken steps to give the question period priority over other proceedings. That is the reverse of the practice followed at the time the Lamoureux precedent applied. I might act differently—I might—if during the question period we were still operating under rules in accordance with which, prior to the question period, we had already entertained a number of motions. I do not know whether I would or not. I can only say to the hon. member that the conditions under which Speaker Lamoureux made that ruling were quite different from those under which I made mine. If mine contradicts his, that may partly be attributable to changes in the practice in the meantime. In any case, I have no intention of contradicting my own ruling.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): As the one who moved the motion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have further clarification. I checked the book you have in your hand while you were speaking from the chair and you quoted from it that motions under Standing Order 25 were always in order. That is what I checked this morning. I checked the precedent set by Mr. Stanfield, then leader of the opposition, in 1971 and felt that if I obtained recognition during the question period I could legitimately move such a motion. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that when members are issued with what we call the green book on orders and regulations, perhaps it should be accompanied by a printed listing of your rulings; that when we come to a chapter in this book which we can no longer rely upon, you give us the precedent created by what you have done today in every instance in the book. We are not all experts on the rules in this book.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lefebvre: I gather from the applause that hon. members over there agree with me. To help hon. members who are not in your position and who do not possess expertise in these matters, I suggest you issue these precedents and the rulings you have cited to go with every chapter and verse in this book.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion made by the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle is, actually, not a bad one. It would bring into play what would be called an annotated version of the Standing Orders of the House. That is a mammoth undertaking, almost an impossible one; I despair that I would ever have the time to do it. It would involve a great deal of research, a great deal of work. The hon. member will realize, also, that there are situations in which both the precedents of the House and the Standing Orders come into conflict not only with previous rulings but also with one another. This is one of them. Certain motions are declared in their very own terms in the Standing Orders to be always in order. What that language does is relieve the hon. member of the necessity of giving notice of his motion, as is required in other cases.

As the House knows, private members are entitled to have their motions considered by filing first a notice of motion, and then having them go through in rotation. Those are the conditions which surround the introduction of a motion under other circumstances. What Standing Order 25 does, with regard to a motion to adjourn the House, or to adjourn the debate, is relieve the hon. member of the necessity of giving the House notice of his intention to move that motion. It is in order at any time. This does not mean it is relieved of all constraints or, in my opinion, that it can be put during a period of time in which the House does not receive motions—for example, during the period in which we receive only motions by unanimous consent under Standing Order 43 or during the question period, and equally, during the taking of motions which relate to House business and procedural motions. These are sometimes received while motions are being put, but not during the question period.

Therefore, as I have said to hon. members, there are times when the rules come into conflict with one another and into conflict with precedents which were laid down when the rules were in different form. The Chair has to reconcile such conflicts and I have consistently reconciled this one in the following way: that I will receive such motions, obviously without notice at any time, during a time when motions can be put by members. But we have never received motions from members during the first hour of the day unless they conformed with the terms of Standing Order 43, and never during the question period. That is the precedent I have set and one which I intend to continue.

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Leader of the Opposition): Speaking to this point of order, Mr. Speaker, we shall of course abide by your decision, but in the future we might examine further the decision you have just made because you have referred us to Standing Order 43 which specifies that at the beginning of the sitting of the House the only motions to be moved will be those that ask for unanimous consent. However, as concerns the period following motions under Standing Order 43, nothing is specified. You have yourself referred to your decisions on previous occasions, but is it possible to go against a rule as clear as that? A motion to adjourn can be moved at any time. Unless there is a specific rule forbidding such a procedure during this period, I do not understand how you can conclude that your decision can visibly contradict one of our rules. This is my first point.

The second, Mr. Speaker, is that we must also consider the purpose of Standing Order 25. As Mr. Stanfield explained in 1971, the purpose of this rule is to express the displeasure of the House with the way the government carries on its business. Obviously, this displeasure can be expressed, as in the case of Mr. Stanfield, just as well during oral question period as at any other time. Otherwise, the rules make no sense.

I therefore appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, since you have already gone against a past decision, to think about going against it another time in keeping with the spirit and the letter of Standing Order 25.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) is perfectly correct. The first time this problem arose some five years ago, I might have taken the view that, because it is said in our Standing Orders that motions pursuant to Standing Order 25 are always in order, they could be received at any time. I might also have believed I was open to take the interpretation that, because of the way in which we had rearranged our proceedings, it was not open to the Chair to receive motions during the question period. In my view, both interpretations were open to me.

The one I chose is the one I announced six months ago in February of this year, a repeat of a decision I had made several times previously. No grievance was raised at that time. It was an interpretation I have made very clearly on several occasions based not only on the Standing Order but also on the way we have adopted practices since the Lamoureux ruling which has been referred to. My language is quite clear and I have no intention of reversing my ruling.

Order, please. I have notice of six questions of privilege—

Mr. MacEachen: I have a point of order related to the question period.

Mr. Speaker: I have now ruled on this three different times.

Mr. MacEachen: It is a different point, Mr. Speaker.

● (1220)

MR. MACEACHEN—RAISING OF POINTS OF ORDER DURING ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order on what appeared to be a ruling on your part that it was impossible to hear a point of order during the Oral Question Period. Your Honour will recall that at a certain point some years ago the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization made a report to the House in which it requested the House to absolve the Oral Question Period from questions of privilege and points of order. That concurrence was granted, but it was put under a specific time limit as to its duration. That time limit has long since expired.

When I was leader of the government, I approached hon. members opposite to have that rule continued in the House of Commons, and they were not in favour of doing that. At that point, when that proposal from the standing committee was not reinstituted, the preceding regime came into play, namely, that it is possible during the question period to raise a point of order or a question of privilege unless by consent or by agreement of the House that is not possible.

There was a point of order raised during the question period. It was not heard. I am arguing that if there is a rule in the authorities—Beauchesne or any of the British authorities—which is crystal clear, it is that when a breach of order is apprehended to take place, then it must be heard; and I am arguing that unless there is consent or action by the House of Commons to reinstitute the report of the standing committee, it is open to hon. members, if they wish, to raise questions of privilege or points of order during the Oral Question Period. If not, we have to take whole pages of Beauchesne, tear them up and throw them out.

I am putting that before Your Honour for consideration. I am not one to seek to create disorder in the question period. This is the first time that we in the opposition since we moved over here have raised a point of order in the Oral Question Period. We were denied an opportunity to have that point of order heard, and I believe it ought to be considered very carefully as to whether an important right of the opposition has not been abrogated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The point of the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) is well taken, and after the session to which the hon. member referred in his remarks—that is to say, that arrangement had a sessional life which has long since gone out of formal existence—I indicated to the House that that practice seemed to be one which was successful in the management of the question period. In addition, it seemed to be one which had, for that reason, very general acceptance, and therefore I would continue to be guided by that practice on behalf of the House, notwithstanding the fact that it probably does not have a sound legal foundation.

I still intend to be guided by that practice, not because I am directed to do it, but because I believe I am expressing the consensus of the House that it is, in general a successful practice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: What consensus? On the other side is the consensus.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises a point about the ability of a member to raise a point of order or a question of privilege during question period. All that is happening is that the Chair exercises a discretion to defer the matter until the end of the question period. The Chair does not have the absolute right to defer the matter to the end of the question period, and today, as I would have done on any other day, I indicated when the point of order was raised that I would defer it to the end of the question period.

I believe on one occasion, if I recall, the late right hon. member for Prince Albert and other hon. members raised matters which were so fundamental to the progress of business in the House that the matter had to be taken into account at once, and that discretion always remains in the Chair.

In summary, therefore, I return the hon. member to the two points, first, that the practice is not one which the House is compelled to follow. It is one which I believe the House wishes to follow, and if the House wants to tell me that it does not wish to do so, then, of course, I am bound by that, and we will revert to the previous practice.

Second, the Chair always has—I want to make it clear that the hon. member is correct in his second premise as well—the discretion to take a matter into account if the Chair feels that the matter requires to be taken into account at that very point and that the progress of the question period must be arrested in order to take the matter into consideration. There have been some and there will continue to be questions which so fundamentally relate to the progress of the business of the House that they must be dealt with then.

I think I will always indicate to the House, as I did today, that my preference would be to take these matters at 12 o'clock; however, if an hon. member insists that it be done, he has the right always to explain to the House why the matter must be taken into account at that time, and then I have to exercise that discretion.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: I have six notices of questions of privilege. The first was received from the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). The six are from the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) and the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming).

MR. NYSTROM—CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS OF TASK FORCE ON GRAIN TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am raising this question of privilege at the first opportunity I have. I think it is a very serious question of privilege which infringes upon my rights and privileges as a member of Parliament. It arises out of a report which was tabled by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) yesterday in the Standing Committee on Transport. It is a report entitled "Final Report of the Emergency Grain Movement Task Force, October 30, 1979".

My question of privilege also arises out of a question on the order paper which was put there by myself and which was responded to by the government on December 5. The question was as follows:

> What budget has been made available to the Grain Transportation Task Force and specifically, what amounts have been budgeted for (a) transportation and communications (b) professional services (c) printing and distribution of report(s) (d) material and supplies (e) salaries—

The second part of the question was as follows:

> Are all members of the committee also members of the Progressive Conservative party?

The answer to the question whether all members of this task force are Conservative members was "Yes". There were three members on that task force. One was the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta). Another was the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). Another was an hon. member from Alberta, and I believe his riding is Wetaskiwin. That information presents me with a problem because I think it infringes upon my privileges as a member of Parliament.

A similar question was raised in this House on November 5 by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier). I say similar because it dealt with a similar task force which was headed, I believe, by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) and which dealt with an inquiry on beef imports. I believe my question is different because we have this report which was tabled before the Standing Committee on Transport yesterday, and we now have information on the order paper that the federal government paid with public funds for the printing of this report. It paid for travel by the members of Parliament involved, and it paid for some other services such as the translating of the report which is before us today.

Essentially what happened was that the transportation and communication cost $6,943, professional services $1,552, printing and distribution $400 and material and supplies $266, and the cost of that report to the public treasury was $9,161. I have since also learned that that is not really the only cost. The task force also borrowed the services of at least one secretary from the grains group. It also had the use, I believe, of other technical advice, technical information and technical expertise from other departments or agencies of the Government of Canada.

My question of privilege is the following: It is my understanding from conversations I have had with the opposition House leader and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that never before in the history of this Parliament have we seen a minister of the Crown select members of Parliament from his own party to conduct a study on an important area of policy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not reflecting on the ability of those three members, but what is important here is that those three members are members of the Conservative party. In essence, what we have here is a Conservative subcommittee on grain transportation. Its report was printed at public expense. My question of privilege is that as a member of the NDP I do not have the privilege of being a member of that committee, nor do members of the Liberal party or members of the Social Credit party.

I also want to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think, although I am not sure, that an order in council was passed to form that task force. I do know there was no order of the House because the House was not sitting back in June or July when the task force was struck. I believe it was the minister himself who chose this task force and who allocated funds for the task force to travel across the country. The report of the task force has been published by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, so we have two government departments involved in this.

I am not the only person who has raised a question similar to this because we have the beef inquiry, we have another inquiry raised by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) concerning the matter of branch line abandonments in the prairies, and also a question in the House raised by the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley) to which he might want to refer later on in the debate.

My question of privilege is as follows: Does it not infringe upon my privileges and rights as a member of Parliament not to have access to the same public funding, to the same services from the Department of Transport and from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and to the services of the translators of the Government of Canada to translate a political report or a report from members of one political party? We do not have that right as members of Parliament, and because of that I think it is a very serious question of privilege. I believe that this is a precedent. I believe that this type of thing has never happened in the history of the country. It is a practice that should be stopped by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), the practice of using public funds for narrow party purposes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, there is a second important part to this question of privilege, in my opinion. Many people have called me and said, "I understand that there is a parliamentary task force studying grain transportation in this country. Are you, as the food and agricultural critic, or is the member for Regina West as the transportation critic, a member of that task force?"

An hon. Member: How could you be?

Mr. Nystrom: That is the very point I am raising. Because public funds are being spent, we were not invited to be members of that task force, and nor were members of the Liberal party or members of the Social Credit party. That is a misrepresentation of this Parliament. There is an impression among the population of this country that this is a parliamentary task force report and therefore a non-partisan report prepared by representatives of all parties in this House.

My question of privilege is that public funds and services were used, the services of translators, the services of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the services of the Department of Transport. The report has now been tabled in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of this House. Also we have answers on the order paper which state that over $9,000 from the public treasury was spent. I have it from a good source, as I said, that other government services were used in terms of secretaries and technical assistance from other departments.

I think that that is an infringement upon my rights as a member. If they have those rights, should we not all have the same rights and the same access to that type of public funding? It seems to me that it would only be fair. I raise that as an important question of privilege which affects the privileges of all of us in the House. Regardless whether the Prime Minister thinks so or not, all of us in this House are equals and we must be treated as equals by the ministers of this cabinet and by all departments of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I see several members who want to participate in the discussions of this question of privilege and I am prepared to hear them either now or later. The one that has been raised by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) concerns the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). The Minister of Agriculture has indicated he wants to respond to that on Monday. I want to indicate to the House that I have examined the one that has been raised in respect of the Minister of Agriculture and it will not be decided until I hear the minister, of course. The situation is the same with respect to this question.

I do want to say to the House, however, that if in fact public funds have been spent on a committee activity of this sort, a committee made up of only one party, it is a practice which, if it does not constitute privilege, is one which the House would want to examine very carefully and reconsider. I want to invite earnest consideration by the ministers involved—the Minister of Agriculture on the previous question and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) on this one. Whether or not technically this comes within the orbit of a question of privilege, it is a practice that ought to be carefully examined.

The reason I say this now is that I do not want to get an off-hand intervention in the absence of a notice to the minister. I would invite the government members involved, including, of course, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) who is responsible for parliamentary practices, to give this matter careful consideration. If it is in fact a practice in which this government wishes to engage and wishes to defend—which, of course, is not my option, it is the option of those involved on that side of the House—then it ought to be done after careful consideration, following which an argument should be addressed to the House. If it is an issue which, after consideration, they decide should not be pursued, the House should be so informed.

I am simply saying that this is a matter which I take seriously and which I consider to be of great importance. I want to put it into the hands of the House to decide whether or not this matter should be deferred until Monday to give members on both sides an opportunity to prepare their interventions, so that I could reach a decision on Monday on both questions at the same time. But I do consider it to be a matter which, even if it is not a question of privilege, is a practice that be done only after careful reflection and a defence here in the House, after which I would want to decide whether or not it was privilege. Perhaps I could get some indication from the House whether we want to proceed with this now or whether we should defer it until Monday for further argument.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to you that the Minister of Transport is in the House. He is aware of this question because he knows of my concern. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not here, he is in the other place, so I suggest we start dealing with this matter this morning. It is a very important question.

You ask whether or not public funds have been spent. What I was quoting from was an answer provided to me by the Government of Canada. It appears at page 2044 of Hansard in reply to a question I put on the order paper. So indeed the government is saying it did spend funds. The Minister of Transport is nodding his head in the affirmative, so we know that that is a fact. I think we should pursue it.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, you have raised a very important point on a matter which we regard as being of some significance, and I think it is important from the point of view of parliamentary practice. I understand there is one almost related matter that was put over until Monday involving the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), and there is the matter which was raised today concerning the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

With respect to the importance of engaging the attention of members of Parliament generally with respect to public policy, I think your suggestion is an eminently sensible one, and if it is agreeable to you—and I hope it will be agreeable to members of the House—we can give attention to it in the period of time and deal with the matter on Monday because we regard it as being quite an important matter as well. I hope you will use what authority you have in these circumstances to breathe some life into that suggestion because I think the argument is very important in terms of parliamentary practice.

● (1240)

Mr. Speaker: I suppose we can accomplish both things. There are some hon. members who want to make interventions today. I can hear them, then I can defer the matter, which I will most certainly do, for interventions from the government side on Monday, or I can hear the minister today. The Minister of Transport might be able to shed some light on this.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will not be in the House on Monday. I would be prepared to make a few comments right at this particular time.

Perhaps I can clarify a couple of items raised by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He questioned whether there was an order in council. I think he will find that there was. The member suggested that it is a political report to be used for partisan purposes. Upon reflection I think he would want to reconsider those remarks, because quite frankly the report clearly speaks for itself. There is nothing partisan or political about the report.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if I could deal with that point now. It seems to me that is a point which we could conveniently leave out of the argument. It does not matter. The quality of the report makes absolutely no difference to the end result. Whether in fact it is of a partisan nature or not, it does not make any difference if it is a report of a one-caucus committee. I think we can keep the matter on a rather higher plane. Regardless of the nature or the quality of the report, it seems to me that has nothing to do with the ultimate decision.

I would invite members on my left to abandon those accusations and members on my right to abandon those defences and just to stick with the basic problem of whether or not it is within the practices or contrary to the privileges and practices of the House to spend government funds on the report of a government committee only.

Mr. Mazankowski: Only Mr. Speaker would be able to decide that question. I am sure that in Your Honour's wisdom you will decide in a manner which is consistent with the traditions of this House.

I am sure the hon. member will find that the order in council was made. The report has been made public. There were members of the government party involved in the formation and the establishment of this report. I think upon reflection there have been a number of reports which have been considered with respect to grain transportation and movement. I think the Booze-Allan study was worth some $600,000. It was done by a consulting firm that was appointed by the former government. We have here a very comprehensive analysis and some very good recommendations which are not limited to the consumption of the government or the members of a political party.

I presented this report to a committee of the House yesterday for the benefit not only of the government or Conservative members of the House, but in the interests of achieving a better grain handling and transportation system. The cost was $9,161. We have been completely open about it. There were some 30 groups and associations consulted. Discussions had gone on. The report is public. It is in the hands of Parliament. Quite frankly, I think it is designed for and aimed at facilitating grain movement. We have indicated what costs were associated from the public treasury. So there is absolutely nothing to hide. If, in Mr. Speaker's candid opinion, there is a breach of the privilege of the House, then of course it is a decision Your Honour will have to make.

I can assure hon. members of the House that this initiative was taken by the government in the best faith and in the best interests of improving grain handling and transportation facilities in this country. It is a responsibility which I have. It is something to which I give top priority. The House was not in session at that particular time, and there were no committees established. If there had been a parliamentary committee in existence at that time, perhaps the parliamentary committee may have considered this important factor. Certainly there was nothing untoward, political or partisan about the appointment of this task force. It was in the best interests of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: It was in the best interests of improving the grain handling and transportation system in this country. I put that to Your Honour in the most sincere and genuine fashion that I possibly can.

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), mainly because I heartily agree with everything he said. On November 23 I raised this question with the House leader.

I do not doubt for a second the sincerity of the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in initiating a study of this kind, because of the importance of the grain transportation or rail line abandonment study which he initiated with another hon. member. But I think he has missed the point. The point in fact is that hon. members on all sides of the House were not involved in that particular study where government funds were involved. As the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville stated, it infringes upon the rights and privileges of each and every individual member of this House.

Yesterday the minister said that the committee was formed when the House was not sitting. Well, we have an office of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau); we have a deputy House leader and a whip. All it would have taken was a telephone call to ask if members of this particular party, the NDP or the Social Credit were interested. Because of the national interest of the two studies, in particular the report of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), I am sure any number of members of Parliament would have been interested in co-operating with the government. One cannot compare this particular study to the Booze-Allan report which was an outside study commissioned by the Government of Canada.

There is another element which has been missed so far. When government expenditures are used to pay for trips by hon. members, we should have equal opportunity. As members of Parliament, we have ten trips a year for travel anywhere in Canada. As the hon. Minister of Transport knows from his days as transport critic, it is very difficult to be able to maximize the use of those ten trips in doing things in the interests of transportation. Yet hon. members opposite were offered a special opportunity to travel to various areas in Western Canada to meet with interested parties who were not available to members on this side.

Another point is that members of the task force were invited to discuss at the federal-provincial ministers' level this report to get the input of provincial ministers of transportation and agriculture. That privilege was not offered to members on the opposition side of the House.

It is worth reading into the record the answer of the House leader to my question on November 23. With respect to the so-called parliamentary task force which included only Conservative members of Parliament, while acknowledging the dedicated effort of the individual members concerned, I asked the following:

> —would the President of the Privy Council assure the House that in future parliamentary task forces will include members from both sides of the House—

As reported in Hansard, the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) said the following:

> Mr. Speaker, I am very happy the hon. member raised that question. It has been my view—and I know it is the view shared by the Prime Minister—that for too long the talent which exists on the benches on all sides of the House of Commons really has been underutilized. We adopted as an experiment the procedure to which the hon. member refers.

It is too bad he did not consider opposition members at the time this thought process took place.

Mr. Lefebvre: It is just an oversight.

Mr. Lumley: He continued:

> I have no objection whatsoever to considering that kind of task force involving all members of the House of Commons. There are many issues which could be considered respecting the operation of government that really are not partisan and that could engage properly the attention of members on all sides of the House of Commons. I certainly agree with the representation contained in the question.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker will rule in favour of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville on his question of privilege. Perhaps even before Your Honour makes your ruling, the House leader of the government party will make a firm commitment to the House that never again will there be a parliamentary committee which only involves members of the government party.

Mr. Speaker: I see quite a number of members seeking the floor. I should like to ask their co-operation in making sure that they are adding something to the debate which I have not already heard.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to welcome most warmly your suggestion that we not engage any further in references to the matter being of a partisan nature. In other words, we should not contend that the matter is partisan, and the government should not worry about defending that position.

By the same token, I suggest that it is completely irrelevant to argue about something in the report being good. Whether it is helpful or not to the situation is irrelevant to the basic issue, namely: Have the practices and rules of this those been offended?

I feel that has been done in two ways. In the first place, I think that it is an affront to Parliament when a committee is set up which consists of members of only one party in the House. In the second place, I think that something is wrong when the government is able to provide money, whether it is only $9,000, $9 or hundreds of thousands of dollars, for a purpose not usually handled in that way.

I emphasize the fact that our rules are very extensive on the setting up of committees. Standing Order 65 is the main rule in that situation and, of course, it provides for appointments to those committees, by virtue, first of all, of there being a striking committee. That striking committee works hard at achieving a fair balance among the members of the standing committees. The striking committee had nothing to do with this Conservative committee.

I also point out that the standing committees are given certain powers, one of them being the right to send for persons, papers and records, and then the right to print their reports. In other words, when a standing committee spends money printing its report, it has been given that authority. But even a standing committee cannot travel, cannot have any expenses for travelling or hotels or what have you, unless it gets a special order. Yet here we have a committee which was not set up under Standing Order 65 but which has printed the results of its work, has done some travelling and had it paid for out of public funds.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the matter is as serious as was suggested the other day by the member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier), and as suggested today by my colleague from Yorkton-Melville. We know there are other such committees, and the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) I believe is the head of one of them. Perhaps he is a one-man committee doing the same kind of thing on the subject of branch lines. As I say, our provisions for committee structure are well set out. We cannot have a special committee without a special motion, and no committee, standing or otherwise, can travel or spend money without the authority to do so.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), for whom I have a great deal of liking and respect, answered quite straightforwardly that he believes there is an order in council. It is nice to have that straightforwardness, but what he is telling us is that the government got around the usual way of setting up a committee and providing money for it, since it was a committee of the government side only, by passing an order in council instead of using the rules of this House.

I dare to hope, Mr. Speaker, that the arguments that are being made, and your own emphasis upon the seriousness of the issue, may lead the government to reconsider its position and discontinue this practice completely. The government can avoid your having to make a ruling on it. As someone behind me suggests, the Conservative party should pay back the money that was spent on this task force.

All the caucuses in this place set up committees. We have committees. We have two members right now, the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) and my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who form a committee concerned with health and social matters. They are pursuing that work, as charged by our caucus, by travelling. They are in the Atlantic area right now. They are able to travel to some extent on the basis of the members' travelling privileges which we have, but there is no hotel money and no money for meals. When they come back and draft a report, nobody on the government side is going to print the document.

But there is this report. It is a very official looking document with a maple leaf on it and it is put out by the Government of Canada through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This one also gets translated. We would not even think of asking for our two-member committee, to which I just referred, to have government support or funds out of the treasury. They are doing their work at the request of caucus and they are paying their own way, except for the fact that they do have the right to travel, just as any other member of Parliament has the right to travel. But in doing that they are using up some of their flight privileges. They have no government staff, no translating staff, yet on the government side this has happened.

As I say, I respect the concern of the Minister of Transport to find ways to solve the problem. I request his suggestion that there are probably some good proposals in this report. That is not the issue any more than it was the issue for my good friend to suggest that this is a partisan operation. In any case, we have ruled that out of the discussion. What is involved is a committee structure, a committee set-up, which is not provided for in Standing Order 65 at all. The government has got around that and got around the business of providing money for the committee by having it done by order in council.

I argue this not so much as a matter of procedure or rules, so as to try to get Your Honour to make a ruling, but more in the way of making an appeal to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) to reconsider this whole matter. They should be expected to discuss it today because they have known about it. This question has not been sprung on them today. The hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell raised it some time ago, and my friend the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville put his question on the order paper on November 7.

I thank the Minister of Transport for giving a frank answer, but under four different headings payments were made to the total of $9,000. The government have had plenty of warning. They have postponed a decision on the issue until the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) had his chance, Mr. Speaker, but this really adds up to a pretty serious aberration of the committee practices in this House.

I commend the Conservative party on putting its backbenchers to work. That is a good idea. I think in fact, if I may say so without attracting the ire of my friends over here on the right, they are a little better at it than the Liberals were when they were over there. That is not the question either. If the Conservative party wants to put its members to work, God bless them, but let them pay for it and not find a way to get funds out of the public treasury to pay for the expenses and to get the report printed. In addition, they should not engage in an affront to Parliament by giving the idea that somehow this is a parliamentary committee. It is not a parliamentary committee any more than our Ogle-Blaikie committee is a parliamentary committee. We put them to work. We think it is a good idea that they are doing what they are doing, but they are doing it on behalf of our caucus, and the results of their study will be reflected in the things that are said from this corner of the House in due course.

I believe this is a very serious issue, Mr. Speaker, and I really think that the best way to resolve it would be for the ministers involved to say that they moved too quickly into this thing, that they are prepared to back up and withdraw the whole operation, and that the Progressive Conservative party will put up the funds that have been spent improperly in this way.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the issue has been clouded. There is a very narrow point I should like to bring to your attention.

The former minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board appointed by order in council a commission under Justice Hall. There was no problem in relation to paying his expenses because he was undertaking a mission relating to issues associated with the movement of grain. I would point out to you, sir, that the minister now in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board has done that very thing. He has appointed individuals to a commission to undertake a job because of their ability and capability of bringing in a report that will be knowledgeable and acceptable to the growers of grain in western Canada.

The question you have to decide, sir, is whether members of Parliament are ineligible for appointment to these commissions. If you rule that they are ineligible, then certainly the government will have to be guided by that. For the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board not to have the privilege of appointing a commission to bring in a report on an issue would be in exact opposition to what the former minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board did in respect of the Hall commission.

I just want to bring to your attention, sir, that the question is whether members of Parliament, as chosen in this case by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, should be allowed to serve in that capacity.

An hon. Member: One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to contribute to this very important debate on the question of privilege raised by our colleague from Yorkton-Melville, but I wish to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I shall be very brief. I shall be brief because the points raised by my colleague from Stormont-Dundas are self-explanatory, as are those raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that it is in all sincerity that I speak this afternoon because it is not the first time unfortunately that I have an opportunity to speak about this tragic matter.

Indeed, as we can see on pages 1374, 1375 and 1376 of Hansard for November 15, I rose in the House to tell the minister how disappointed I was that he had interfered with the rights and privileges of members of Parliament by not inviting us to take part in this debate. The minister knew very well that certain members of both main parties on the other side of the House could have taken part in this task force.

Mr. Speaker, the minister said earlier that since the House was not sitting, he found it difficult to call on members of other parties. However, he only had to look at the example that you yourself, Mr. Speaker, gave to the House this summer when you led a mission to China accompanied by members on both sides of the House. He had only to think also about the meeting of the parliamentary union held this summer in Venezuela while the House was in recess and while delegates from both sides of the House attended.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the argument made by the minister concerning the lack of daily business in the House and the fact that the House was not sitting does not hold water.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to remind the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) who spoke just before me that he erred thoroughly because there is a world of difference between, on the one hand, appointing a judge as chairman of a commission of inquiry and, on the other hand, appointing a member of the House on a commission of inquiry without allowing hon. members of the opposition to sit on that commission.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Deniger: As you know, Mr. Speaker, I was elected last May 22. Before, I was under the impression that all members of the House were treated equally.

An hon. Member: Not quite!

Mr. Deniger: Unfortunately, I deplore the attitude of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), whom I respect nonetheless, because I think he was sincere but unfortunately he forgot the most elementary rules of the House concerning the equal rights and privileges which fall to all members.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised very interesting points when he referred to the specific rule dealing with the establishment of committees. This is what he said in his argument quite simply: Only a duly established committee can spend the Canadian taxpaxers' money on a mission. It is my conviction that hon. members opposite are aware of this, and it is for that reason that the document now before us refers to a task force rather than a committee. And this is why the answer given to the hon. member—

An hon. Member: They are charging personal expenditures!

Mr. Deniger: —for Yorkton-Melville also deals with a task force. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if this be a task force they have no right, any more than we do, or the New Democratic Party for that matter, to spend public moneys. I must speak frankly. I read the report. I already gave interviews on television on the contents of the report, and I would have liked to co-operate, but this is first and foremost a caucus report—

An hon. Member: Partisan!

Mr. Deniger: —that was referred to the minister in charge of the subject matter discussed in caucus, but unfortunately it required a contribution of several thousand dollars from Canadian taxpayers.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Deniger: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville submitted that the amounts referred to may be a small part only of the total expenditures.

An hon. Member: Twenty thousand dollars!

Mr. Deniger: And this is not all, Mr. Speaker. There is the other committee of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), and other committees of the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

We opposition members are as much interested as members opposite in the problems of western farmers, because they are national issues that should be of interest to every member in the House.

An hon. Member: Quite true.

Mr. Deniger: We are not like the Prime Minister who is not interested in the referendum.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deniger: In concluding, Mr. Speaker, allow me to point out once again my disappointment as a new member. When I learned that this task force was being set up, if I had known what I know now about the rights and regulations of the House, I would probably have asked the Chair to correct that mistake. I do so this afternoon, unfortunately in difficult circumstances on a Friday afternoon during the consideration of a question of privilege in which I am taking part and which I support. I am, however, deeply disappointed, as I indicated to the minister, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that when you make your decision this afternoon or Monday on that basic issue, you will take into consideration the fact that a young member deserves as much consideration as a member with years of experience. If young members opposite were appointed to that committee, I do not see why as a new member I could not be on it as well.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would like to conclude this discussion with the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that we are going to end it on a high note. My support for the questions raised by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has to do with the question of the privileges of members on all sides of the House. I think that the privileges of all members have been affronted and abused in this situation of an in-party, in-government caucus appointment of a task force to study this particular aspect of grain handling.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) mentioned that the previous government had appointed Justice Emmett Hall to study the question of the railroad system and the movement of grain in western Canada. How can anyone equate the appointment of Justice Hall, who is outside the parliamentary structure, to study a problem with the appointment of three Conservative backbenchers by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) to study a problem? How can anyone use that argument to say that that justifies the appointment of three Tory backbenchers to do a study paid for by the taxpayers of Canada?

● (1410)

People in Canada today are cynical about politicians and politics. In fact, when they voted on May 22, they thought they were exchanging a happy Liberal government for "Mr. Clean". Now we are finding out we have "Mr. Sleeze". In fact, they expected a different kind of performance.

An hon. Member: Instead of greensleeves it is bluesleeves.

Mr. Rodriguez: I remember when this government was in opposition and members would raise questions about such things as Christmas trees at 24 Sussex Drive and about the expenditure of taxpayers' money for things which were primarily related to only one political party in this House of Commons. Indeed, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt), who is extremely quiet these days, was always the bug in the government when he was on the opposition side of the House with respect to the whole question of these kinds of expenditures.

The Conservative party does not need to eat at the public trough to have a study done with a partisan slant. They are backed by all the Bay Street boys. They charge 125 bucks a throw for a dinner.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: They do not need to eat at the public trough to get these particular studies done. Indeed, they may well have prejudiced beneficial results for the people of Canada and Parliament by having cast the task force in such a manner as to have only three members.

In this corner of the House we are always prepared to accept good proposals and to look at good, concrete results from any task force, and, of course, we are always willing to participate. We were denied the opportunity as parliamentarians to participate in the discussions and in the final recommendations, whether or not it was a majority or minority position.

The fact is that the people of Canada have to pay for something which has now become—and I believe it is not out of order to say it—a partisan report. I know and we all know that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) was very upset that he did not get a cabinet post—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are not necessarily on totally firm ground in terms of a question of privilege to start with. I do not think we should stretch our luck any more than we have already.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to do that, but in conclusion—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I can see I have some approval over there so maybe I will make one or two more points. We are all concerned about restraint in government. We are all concerned about the spending of taxpayers' money. The people of Canada were expecting a different kind of performance, and in fact the appointment of this task force—it was a cozy little reward—to do this kind of a study does not do anything to bolster the confidence of Canadians that what we do here in the House of Commons will have some benefit for them as the people of this country.

One last point that I want to make on this question of privilege that has been raised by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville concerns the whole question of other parties having their committees go around the country to do studies. Does that mean that we will be able to apply to the government for funds by telling them that we have a committee studying occupational health and safety in Canada, and that we would like the same kinds of fund flow so we can go out and do a similar study? Where does it stop? The answer is that you cannot encourage that sort of junketing across the country. If the House of Commons wants to investigate a serious matter, it ought to be done in the way we have established in the past, and that is by having members from all sides of the House participating. If members who are sitting on the committee do not agree with some of the ideas expressed, they have the opportunity to submit a minority report for the consideration of all members of the House.

As I said, I think what has happened here is unfortunate. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that you would rule that the government cannot appoint members from its back benches exclusively to look at any particular problem in this country, paid for by the taxpayers of Canada which does not reflect the adversary nature of the House of Commons. That is what this place is all about. It is an adversary system. It is like the legal system and the labour scene in this country. That task force paid for by the taxpayers of Canada does not reflect the nature of the House of Commons or the 36 per cent support that the Prime Minister got to win government in this country. The Prime Minister is acting as if he had a majority government and as if he had all the members of the House of Commons. I think that is arrogance that can only be equalled by his predecessor.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I had indicated that I wanted to conclude the discussion and I have concluded the discussion. I do not need to hear any more—

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Olivier: I wonder why I cannot have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have indicated that I wanted—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Order. The hon. member understands, I am sure, that it is impossible for the Speaker and the hon. member to speak both at the same time. Order.

[English]

I have asked for the co-operation of the House in the discussion of this matter. I have indicated that it already remains under reserve with the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, who raised another point similar to this. I had indicated to members earlier that I had asked them not to be repetitious. I have had a rather full discussion of this matter, as I have had on the point raised by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. The matter will not be decided today. It remains to be held over until the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell are here on Monday. I hope to be able to give the House some direction on this matter on Monday. If hon. members who have not been heard today still seek the opportunity to intervene at that time, I would be glad to hear them.

In the meantime, as invited to do, I trust that the government will give very serious consideration to the interventions made today. I intend to do the same and hope that we can come to some assessment of the matter that will satisfy the House on Monday.

I also have a notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming).

MR. FLEMING—PROPOSED CANCELLATION OF CBC TELEVISION PROGRAM "THE NATION'S BUSINESS"

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I bring this matter to your attention today as a result of developments yesterday. It concerns a matter that has been brought up both in committee and here in the House of Commons in recent weeks regarding the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its decision to cancel "The Nation's Business", "La politique fédérale".

I believe it is an important matter to be discussed, and I rise today not only because a question of privilege is a legitimate means to bring forward a grievance here in the House of Commons when members' privileges or Parliament's privileges are being contravened, but I think there is some ground even for saying it goes the full distance of being a legitimate and full question of privilege which may call for some investigation by a parliamentary committee.

The situation at the moment as I understand it is that a meeting to be held with senior representatives of the major parties and representatives of the CBC yesterday was cancelled because the President of the CBC, Mr. Johnson, wanted to take the issue back to his board of directors. His board of directors at an earlier stage did endorse his position that "La politique fédérale" and "The Nation's Business" would be cancelled for the six-week period of the Quebec referendum. What is unclear is whether he is going back to get a reconfirmation because of the objections raised strongly in committee by this side of the House, the opposition. Certainly at least one member on his own behalf from the New Democratic Party and a number of members on the culture and communications committee from the government side had some real concerns as well.

I believe that our rights are being abrogated by the attitude taken by the president of the CBC and the decision of his board. I want to give some reasons for that. First, I think this program is established as a—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member really seriously contends that action taken to cancel a public affairs program in which some political parties of the country have an opportunity to air their views, while it may be a matter of grievance which he can take up with the minister who reports to Parliament on behalf of the national broadcasting corporation, and while it may be a matter of great concern that can be taken up in that way, really is a question of privilege. I would have to hear him on that.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I would argue it can be for several reasons. One is that that program, by its very name and title, by what it has come to be known by the Canadian public, is an extension of this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I really have to confine the hon. member. There have been several public affairs programs on both private and public networks. They are all excellent vehicles through which hon. members have the opportunity to express their views. They are interviewed. I understand the time is usually shared equally in proportion to the representation of the parties, perhaps in this House or a provincial chamber, and things of that sort. However, just because these programs give members of political parties the opportunity to put forward their views, does it mean that that has become an extension of the rights that members enjoy by virtue of being elected members of the House of Commons and without which they can be said to be interfered with? The House must remember that in these questions of privilege, what we are dealing with always in the area of privilege is an interference with a fundamental right that a member has which enables him or her to carry out their basic responsibilities as an elected member of the House of Commons.

There are a number of additional consequences, results or benefits that come with the position of being an elected member of the House of Commons, but essentially a question of privilege deals with an interference with the basic opportunity of a member to function and carry out his or her responsibilities as an elected member of the House of Commons, such as physical interference with a member in getting to the House, deception of the member and things of that nature.

Surely access to the airwaves in any kind of form is not fundamental as a right consequent upon being elected but rather something in addition to that. I do not know how I could ever consider a decision of that sort to take away the program entirely. If it were perhaps proposed to take it away from one set of members and not another, and I do not extend to that, it might be a different situation; but to take the program off the air is not something to which we can attach our rights simply by being members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Fleming: If I can expand my point, Mr. Speaker; I did not have much chance to make several points which may have some pertinence. Certainly as I know the practices of this House, members have been able to rise when they feel they have a grievance. In most cases, Mr. Speaker, you found that that did not carry through to being a legitimate question of privilege and referred to a committee. Aside from the arguments—I will keep what you have said in mind, and I will skip the part of the arguments which I think are important and are worth hearing—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Filibuster.

Mr. Fleming: The government can shout filibuster if they want. I am concerned about this issue. Canadians who care about their country know that the CBC has a mandate to promote national unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I briefly want to argue that in fact the position of the president of the CBC contravenes an act passed by this Parliament, directions given to it under the act and rights given us under that act to have access to the Canadian public. For that reason I think it is a contravention of my rights as a member of Parliament and of all members in this Parliament.

A situation where this particular program representing Parliament to Canadians is not interfered with during a federal by-election, is not interfered with when there are provincial elections, but when there is a referendum in a particular province the president of the CBC decides it will be interfered with, is quite inappropriate. He is overstepping his rights. In the Broadcasting Act, if I can simply quote section 3(b)—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will surely realize he is arguing a case that the president of the CBC may be acting against the tastes of him as a member or the House collectively, or that he may be acting in contravention of a particular statute. Those arguments may be entirely correct. My difficulty is not that the point is unimportant or that the House is not concerned about it. It may be. However, it simply does not attack in a fundamental form the rights of members of the House of Commons collectively to carry out their fundamental duty as elected members.

Even if the hon. member is correct that the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is contravening the Broadcasting Act—and I do not know whether he is or not—that is an illegality. Even if the policy is such that it becomes distasteful to the hon. member or to several hon. members, that is a matter to be taken up by way of grievance, not by way of a question of privilege.

MR. SYMES—ALLEGED MISLEADING ANSWER GIVEN BY MINISTER

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I gave you due notice of a question of privilege I wished to raise today in relation to statements made in the House by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) concerning fuel oil supplies over these winter months. I also gave notice to the energy minister that I would be raising this point this afternoon or this morning. I notice he is not in his place. However, an element arising out of the question period today also involves the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). I see that he is in his place and I would like to proceed.

[Mr. Fleming.]

The fundamental question of privilege I have is whether or not members of the House of Commons, and hence the people of Canada, are receiving accurate information and an honest appraisal of a particular situation. I would like to contend by way of argument that the energy minister has been misleading myself, the House of Commons and the people of Canada as to the true situation concerning fuel oil supplies in Canada. Through argument I would like to develop by way of some very brief quotations over the past few weeks by the energy minister, indicating that he is saying one thing when in reality, as confirmed just a couple of days ago by the Prime Minister and today by the National Energy Board, the situation is quite different—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) is in his very own terms raising a matter of debate. If I were to give him the floor now to take issue with statements made by the energy minister or any other minister in answering questions over the last several days, whether or not different answers to the same questions may have been given, as he well knows contradictions in answers given by the same minister are the subject of comment, criticism and attack but are not the subject of a question of privilege.

I have said to the House in recent days that if I am going to permit members to rise here and take up disagreements with ministers by way of questions of privilege at the end of every question period, we will begin a whole round of explanations of the question period in which members will get up and say they asked a minister a question today, that the answer is the following, and they want to show to the House that that answer is incorrect. That surely is a subject of debate and disagreement. If there are situations in which there is an allegation that there has been an actual falsification, perhaps indeliberate or not, that is another matter. But I cannot permit the hon. member now to develop an argument that the answer he was given was inaccurate or incorrect or not of good quality. That becomes, by its very nature, a debate, and I simply could not permit the hon. member to do that, any more than I could permit hon. members every day to use a question of privilege as a vehicle for taking up disagreements with ministers.

● (1430)

Mr. Symes: Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether Your Honour could inform me how this House is to operate if the information given to members is misleading.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Symes: What is Your Honour's definition of a misleading answer? What I have been attempting to show is that the information I have been receiving is inaccurate and misleading, thus inhibiting me in carrying out my duties as a member of Parliament. I cannot function without accurate information and replies from the ministry.

Mr. Speaker: I have to confine the hon. member to the practice of the House in that regard. He is entitled to put questions and if he is dissatisfied with the answers he is entitled to have access to the opportunity provided by the adjournment debate. As I have indicated to other members, in order to found a question of privilege he really must immediately develop an argument that there is misinformation to the extent that it clearly touches the privileges of the House. The Chair has to decide quickly and early in this argument whether or not the hon. member is attempting to raise what is obviously a disagreement, a matter of debate, or whether in fact the allegation contains an element which might touch the privileges of the House.

I have to tell the hon. member that in this case, as surely he must understand, he is in the area of disagreement and debate. If he wants to question the matter further, to establish the point that I am in error, I would invite him to use the adjournment debate proceedings for that purpose.

MR. HERBERT—UNAVAILABILITY OF PAPERS PURSUANT TO NOTICE OF MOTION FOR PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, if I heard you correctly this afternoon you said a question of privilege must be founded upon interference with an hon. member in carrying out his duties, since it is a fundamental right of an hon. member to carry out those duties without impediment.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I shall be quoting from Beauchesne. I want to say that, as far as timing is concerned, this is the first opportunity on my part to raise this matter because of what I read in the debates of yesterday and, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, I have given you due notice. My question of privilege derives from Beauchesne's fifth edition, citation 79 on page 24, which reads:

> The House maintains sole control over documents in its possession. The public may see papers which have been tabled in the House.

I move to citation 57 on page 20, where I read:

> Under the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act any report, paper, votes or proceedings of the House enjoys an absolute privilege—

Reading further, I find that citation 390 on page 138 states the general principles governing Notices of Motions for Production of Papers to be as follows:

> (1) To enable members of Parliament to secure factual information about the operations of government to carry out their parliamentary duties and to make public as much factual information as possible—

Having read from Beauchesne, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you why I am raising this question of privilege today. I have several illustrations to support my contention that, possibly not intentionally—and I say possibly not intentionally because, again consulting Beauchesne, I am told I must avoid the use of words such as "deception", "distortion", "falsehood", "misleading", and so on, and that I must not say "deliberate" or "intentional"—

An hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Herbert: Nevertheless, I shall produce evidence which will indicate that if it is not intentional, it is grossly negligent. My specific point of order will deal with motion No. 15, but to support my argument on that motion I want also to refer to three other motions, motions 18, 20 and 23.

On October 31 of this year a motion was passed by the House stating that papers would be deposited. These documents would then become available not just to myself but to all members of Parliament, according to the citation from Beauchesne which I have just read, as well as to the public generally. I have experienced considerable difficulty in my constituency. These documents are supposed to deal with public transportation—I am using this as an illustration of my point; there is more than one example—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member would direct his attention to the fact that we call Notices of Motions for Production of Papers every Wednesday as we do, now, call Questions on the Order Paper every day. It is for the convenience of hon. members that every day we allow questions on the order paper which are not answered to stand; and similarly we allow Notices of Motions for Production of Papers which have not been dealt with to stand every Wednesday when they are called, when they have not been dealt with.

When that question is asked each day with reference to Questions on the Order Paper and every Wednesday with reference to Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, any member who is aggrieved either by failure to deal with a notice of motion or a question, or by inaction with regard to any which have been dealt with, can raise the point at that time. If the hon. member now wishes to make the point that a Notice of Motion for Production of Papers in his name has been dealt with by the House in some way but that the response has not been satisfactory, he ought to make his objection when that item is called on Wednesdays and not by way of a general question of privilege.

Mr. Herbert: Perhaps Your Honour would indulge me for a few moments longer because there is an essential point here, one which genuinely affects me. Might I have the attention of the House for a few moments?

Some hon. Members: Filibuster!

Mr. Herbert: Maybe I digressed by giving other examples. I started off by talking about motion No. 15. Motion No. 15 is directly relevant to the decision I may have to make today and it affects my rights as a member in that if, because of actions initiated by the government, I am forced to make a decision, then I am deprived of information which has theoretically been made public in accordance with a motion adopted by this House on November 14 but which has not in fact been made public.

I refer to a copy of the report of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation on the deductibility of mortgage interest which is directly relevant to what we are debating today. The government has admitted that there is such a report and has stated that it is prepared to table it in the House. In fact, though, it has not been tabled and it is not available. I am supposed to make a decision based on whatever information I have. The public has a right to see this document, too, in order to determine its attitude on the measure to be debated today and in ensuing days. I feel its absence is a direct infringement on my privileges. In fact, it is an impediment to my work when I am denied access to a document which the government admits is in existence and has agreed to table. It has certainly not been tabled in time for an important debate.

I would point out, also, that it would be too late next Wednesday to raise a grievance at that stage, as has been suggested, because by then the debate might well be over. This document should have been available to me and to the public generally.

I suggest that this is a genuine question of privilege, and if Your Honour rules it a question of privilege, then I would like to move a motion referring it to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises the additional point that the House is being asked—that is to say, all members—to participate in a debate on a matter relating to mortgages, interest rates and their deductibility. The hon. member seeks a report which he says was ordered by the House pursuant to previous motions for the production of documents, that that document is not forthcoming and therefore not in the possession of members, and that that puts a nature on it which I would think, if not privilege, is certainly a very serious matter.

I do not know if there is anyone representing the minister in this matter at the moment, but I will certainly take the matter under advisement and hope that all action would be taken which would comply with that order if at all possible before the House is asked to proceed with that particular debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. RAE—THE BUDGET—ALLEGED MANIPULATION OF TIME TO DEBATE

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I gave you notice of a question of privilege, and that was not done lightly. It concerns the manipulation of parliamentary time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: My old riding would be ashamed of you.

Mr. Rae: The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) says his old riding would be ashamed of me. I do not think that is the view people there will take when they hear what I have to say.

My question of privilege concerns the time allocated for the debate on the budget statement on Tuesday night. I want to quote from Erskine May at page 785 as follows:

> The consideration of the financial statement for the year made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer is the most important business of ways and means.
> [Mr. Herbert.]

It is precisely because it is the most important business of ways and means that I, speaking as the finance critic for my party, resent most deeply the way in which parliamentary debate on the budget has been manipulated by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker). That is to say, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is allowed on Tuesday night at 8 p.m. to tell the House of Commons what his budget is going to be, with all the focus of public attention which is derived therefrom. The spokesman for the official opposition is given an opportunity on Tuesday night to reply to the statement of the Minister of Finance. We were told in yesterday's debate by the President of the Privy Council as recorded in Hansard at page 2077 that he cannot even tell us precisely what day after that time will be allocated for the discussion of the budget. The best he can tell us is that it will possibly be—or to use his words, it "will likely be"—on Friday, December 14.

Since the categories of privilege are not closed, I think a case can be made that the government has so manipulated Parliament's time in the consideration of the budget that it is guaranteeing that the same public attention will not be available to those in my party and on this side of the House who are concerned about making constructive criticism of the budget presented by the Minister of Finance.

In any other statement made by a minister—this will be a financial statement by a minister on ways and means, and there was an example yesterday of a statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—time is allotted in such a way that official spokesmen for all the parties are able to make statements at the same time and not have those statements subject to the manipulation by the government of parliamentary time. I think it is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will realize that it has been a long standing practice of this House that on budget night, regardless of the duration of the speech made by the Minister of Finance in delivering the budget address, the second intervention is that of the financial critic for the official opposition who, before he concludes, adjourns the debate.

That has been a customary practice. Even it were not, the hon. member would realize that he is asking at one and the same time, first, for a ruling on something which has not yet happened and, second, for a ruling on a practice of the House which, as long as I have been here, has been the practice in the delivery of any budget speech for this to take place, which means that the intervention by a third party in the discussion on budget night has never taken place.

The hon. member may wish to see if he can pursue the situation. He may wish to raise it, as he has done, by way of a grievance; but surely since it has been part of our practice for at least 10 to 15 years—and I assume for much longer than that—I am not able to regard it, even on a preliminary basis, as a question of privilege.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, the question I am raising is a question of the consecutiveness of the debate. I am not asking Your Honour to carry out a revolution in procedure. I am asking the government to recognize that it is in danger of manipulating parliamentary time in such a way as to make a mockery of the budget debate.

Mr. Speaker: I have to tell the hon. member again that he may have an area which he wishes to work on, and to try to improve and to criticize as it stands. However, it has been a long standing practice in both respects that he has addressed himself to, both on budget evening and the right of the government to call the continuance of the budget debate as it wishes.

MR. REID (KENORA-RAINY RIVER)—LEVEL OF LIGHTING IN CHAMBER—RECOGNITION OF MEMBERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from my frustration during question period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): And it goes further than that because of some particular problems which have developed over the last little while as a result of the changes we made in the House of Commons by bringing in additional lights. As a result of the lights coming in, I find it extremely difficult to spend too much time in the House of Commons. I get very bad headaches.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Why don't you leave?

An hon. Member: Your constituents will look after that.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): I am thinking of asking the Chair to allow us to wear hats in the House as used to be the case when the House of Commons began. In any event, this has caused a great many difficulties for me personally.

Second, I want to raise the point that the rural constituency I have calls for me to spend a fair amount of time travelling. I know that there are difficulties in terms of allocating the time amongst members on this side and the other side for question period. Let me make it quite clear that I have no objection to the way which the parties use the first half of the question period to raise questions of importance to the parties. I think that is fair. I think it is also fair that the rest of the time should be left open to a free-for-all.

The dilemma we have is that those of us who stand in this corner seeking to be recognized by the Chair know that we cannot be recognized all the time. We recognize that Your Honour has said in the past that in fact you do keep a list and that you try to recognize everybody who rises seriatim in order to be able to cope with the demand of more participation of hon. members on this side. The dilemma we on this side have is, first, that none of us knows where the list is kept, none of us knows where we stand on that list, and, third, we feel that we lose position on that list if we happen to miss a day or are out travelling, and that we drop to the bottom of the list, missing our time.

We feel that that is a point of some importance because, if we know where we stand on the list and are able to cope with that, then perhaps we are in a better position to arrange our time in a different way in order not to miss our opportunities. As a result of that, many of us on this side of the House feel that there is a question of arbitrariness in the way members on this side are recognized. We know that it is not so. We recognize that there are problems in terms of the way in which Your Honour sees us as well.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, could we have order in the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suppose the most direct way to bring about order would be to indicate with all the severity that I can command that the hon. member has no question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF FUTURE DEFENCE CO-OPERATION WITH UNITED STATES

On the order: Government notices of motions:

December 5, 1979—the Minister of National Defence:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be empowered to hear evidence and consider Canadian policy with respect to future defence co-operation with the United States in the North American region with particular reference to air defence and related arrangements embodied in and flowing from the North American Air Defence agreement, and that they report their view thereon no later than the end of March, 1980.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21, this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE STAGE OF BILL C-20

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath):

That in relation to Bill C-20, an act to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax, one sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration in Committee of the Whole stage of the bill; and

That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceeding before the committee shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the Committee of the Whole stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker), seconded by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Lachance.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, members were talking a few moments ago about the manipulation of parliamentary time. If I had any qualms or any worries as a parliamentarian about bringing forward a motion of this nature to close off debate, these qualms and worries disappeared a few moments ago when I watched a long litany of motions and other matters being brought forward that bore no relevance to the business of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): All these matters of privilege, specious as were all of them, with one exception, were rejected by Mr. Speaker. I think it is quite important that the public of Canada understand just what happened today in this House of Commons. I think it is important as well that members of the House of Commons on both sides of the House, but today particularly on the other side of the House, realize that the people of Canada watch what happens and they register disgust with what they see and will with what they saw today.

At the outset I had some trepidation with respect to moving this motion because I did not want to move a motion to allocate the time of the debate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: That will not wash, Walter.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —on this bill which would give some advantage to property owners in Canada with respect to a property tax credit and to those who would like to be home owners in Canada. This is a popular measure with the people of Canada and I think it is high time the House of Commons dealt with it. That is the reason I moved this motion today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There can be no doubt that the people of Canada want the property tax credit bill passed before Christmas so that they can take advantage of this measure in their taxes when they file their income tax this spring.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I think it has become abundantly clear that the Liberal party wants it as well. I ask all members of the House, through you, sir, to recall that it was the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Phillips) who sent out a questionnaire in his riding. That is the fellow who got more publicity by withdrawing from the leadership contest than anybody will ever get from entering it. In any event, he sent out the questionnaire and when it came back it showed that over 60 per cent of his people wanted this kind of bill which this government intends to give to the people of Canada. That is a riding with a great proportion of renters.

Secondly, I would like the House to listen again to the words of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). He spoke eloquently with respect to this bill by standing up and voting against the Liberal party when they wanted to obstruct the bill on second reading. He said something that is more relevant to this motion than anything else. By the way, Mr. Speaker, his name is Baker and we could use a few more Bakers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He said:

I have listened to all the arguments against the bill and they don't hold any water.

Boy, that is true, Mr. Speaker, they do not hold any water. The people of Canada know that, and it is just about time this Parliament went on to deal with the bill.

I do not want to have to rely on the word of Liberal members of Parliament, as estimable as some of them are. I want to rely on their actions. Seventeen Liberals missed the vote on second reading of the bill—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —and three members of the Liberal party, including the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, voted for the bill.

Now, the NDP has made some pious speeches against this bill but I happened to notice that some members, when asked, could not indicate they would not take the property tax credit if they were given the opportunity. I remember that very well in the debate. What is more, even more eloquent than that, the NDP had five members who missed the vote on Tuesday.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What is more, all five members came from ridings with a high incidence of home ownership and of people who would like to own a home.

Despite what I have said, I have no doubt in the world that when my friends on the other side rise to speak on this motion, there will be synthetic howls of anguish over the use of closure. By this motion we are not moving closure—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Closure was used by C. D. Howe and it became an infamous rule of the House in the flag debate. It was the initiative behind the debate to ram changes in the rules of the House down the throats of members. I do not intend to do that today. What we are using here, and I think we had better make it clear to the people of Canada, is time allocation under the provisions of Standing Order 75C. This is a far gentler measure. If the Liberals were honest, they would admit that they do not greatly object to it at all, despite all the pious protestations to the contrary. In fact they objected so little to the use of time allocation that they used it five times in 1977: on January 31, on February 9, on March 29, on November 22, and on December 5. There may have been other times. I have only had an opportunity to make a very fast check.

• (1500)

Mr. MacEachen: And your party voted against all of them. Your party howled, your party screamed!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Also we are hearing from the other side of the House great appeals to parliamentary democracy and that we are destroying it. I should like to indicate to the hon. member that I know it is the kind of thing I used to say when I sat on the other side of the House of Commons. Having watched a former government claiming abuse of the rules, let me say that if I ever had any doubts about the importance of Standing Order 75C, those doubts were blasted away by the actions of that party under the leadership of the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen), who should know better.

Mr. Stollery: We will wait and see what you say this time next year.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I happen to be quite a reasonable man.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We have already spent seven days discussing this bill. Frankly, I would not use time allocation on short notice. They have been provided with a long time to debate a relatively simple tax bill.

Mr. Stollery: For $3 billion.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have only done this because there is no end in sight to the debate, none whatsoever. We want this bill before Christmas, if we can get it, and the time is running short. I do not think Canadians should be shortchanged by a short-range government and a short-range opposition.

An hon. Member: A short-range government?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We want this bill before Christmas. Canadians want this bill, so do the Liberals. They do not want to be known as the party which refused to pass this bill, because they know it might jeopardize their chances in the next election.

An hon. Member: Not at all.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): However, they are not afraid of being the party which talked so long on the bill that the government became impatient to get on with other legislation and refused to bring it forward any more, knowing what a waste of time it would be. We do not intend to allow the opposition to put the government into that position, or to so ruin the proceedings of the House of Commons that the people of Canada cannot get the piece of legislation which the government promised during the last election.

Mr. Stollery: Don't forget that you are talking for only 28 per cent of them.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): As well as being a reasonable man, which I know is generally agreed on the other side—

Mr. MacEachen: Walter!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) said, I am a patient man. I do not want the Liberal party to try such a feeble argument that they can appear to be co-operative on the one hand and obstructive on the other. I want them to be known for what they are—obstructers. They have proven this today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If the truth were known, by bringing this motion today I have really saved the Liberal party from themselves. I have saved them from straining the credulity of the public with respect to their motivations.

I think the opposition will strain the credulity of the public in other ways. They will be claiming that they have been cut off at the knees; that their pearls of wisdom on this bill have not been given sufficient time to be heard; that the Canadian government is so Draconian that it is cutting short the debate on Bill C-20. I think this government has been extremely generous with the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): For instance, the opposition has had four allotted days, eight days for the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, six days on Bill C-23, the bill on interim supply and supplementary estimates, for a total of 18 days. Also we have agreed to give them five days, if they want them, to debate whatever they wish in the main estimates. There will be at least two days of budget debate before Christmas. That is a total of 25 days out of a possible total of 54 parliamentary days. They have no case at all to stand in the way of this bill and claim that they have been wronged. If there is a case, Canadians have a case against them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Happy Birthday.

Mr. Axworthy: —after listening to the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) pleading with this House to have the bill before Christmas, it brings to mind the words of the old song "All I Want for Christmas is my Two Front Teeth".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I think that is all the minister wants.

[Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton).]

Mr. Huntington: What about your leader?

Mr. Hees: What do you want?

Mr. Axworthy: Let me tell Mr. Hees and members opposite—

Mr. Hees: Order. It is the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees).

Mr. Axworthy: Members opposite should spend less time worrying about our leadership race and more time worrying about the bad performance of their government. If they did that, the Canadian people would not be giving them 28 per cent of the vote and the country would not be in the mess it is right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I would say that they should be far more worried about their own leadership than ours. It is their own leadership which is in trouble, not our leadership.

An hon. Member: That is a 28-per cent joke.

Mr. Axworthy: I would say to members opposite on the back benches: if they look at the Gallup poll they have a lot more to worry about with their leadership than ours.

If I might, I should like to speak to the motion in front of us. The President of the Privy Council had some very interesting things to say about why this particular motion was necessary at this time. At the opening of this debate we said that we would learn a lot about the Conservative party in Bill C-20. Well, we have learned a lot about them. We have learned that they do not know how to manage the economy. We have learned that they are the only party that would bring in a bill committing an expenditure of $3 billion for years in advance, without knowing whether they have the money, or whether conditions require it.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Axworthy: Also we found out very quickly that they really are socially discriminatory. They are really not prepared to provide relief for a population which shares the pressures of housing equally. All they are prepared to do is to provide for a select group of people in the population.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: We have found out this afternoon something more serious: this is a party which does not really believe in Parliament.

Mr. MacEachen: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: For a party which campaigned up and down the country on the pretence that they would restore the rights of Parliament, and that they were going to give individual members more responsibility, to introduce this motion for closure after one-half day of committee hearing, shows that they have no regard or respect for the rights and role of Parliament or its members.

The President of the Privy Council is quite correct when he said that Canadians will learn a great deal this afternoon. This is blue Friday in Canada. They will learn exactly how the Tories treat the economy and Parliament. They treat it with disdain and oftentimes ignorance. They do not really care about this particular motion.

The reason the closure motion was introduced by the President of the Privy Council is because they are in a panic. They saw the Gallup poll on Tuesday and they were frightened. That is why we have this closure motion. They are attempting to pretend that they are up to something, that they will produce Christmas goodies, which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) is always talking about. He wants to have those presents under the Christmas tree for his friends and neighbours. That is the reason why we have this motion. It has nothing to do with whether the opposition is acting reasonably or not.

I remind members opposite of some important facts. Fact No. 1 is that the Minister of Finance introduced the basic proposal on the tax credit on September 17. Parliament could have been called at any time after that to introduce this bill. Parliament was not called for a full three weeks after, and the bill was not introduced until 41 days after Parliament had been meeting. Is that a party in a hurry? Is that the thinking of a government which says that it must get this bill through in time for Christmas? Who was dragging their feet? Who slowed down the process? Why did we wait so long to see the bill?

An hon. Member: Why did we wait so long for Chrétien's bills?

• (1510)

Mr. Axworthy: When the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue has the nerve to stand up and say, "Well, we have allowed all the debate because it is such a simple bill," I would ask since when is $3 billion a simple matter? Since when is a measure that is going to totally distort the Canadian economy a simple matter? Since when is a bill that is going to totally discriminate against three-fifths of the Canadian population a simple matter? It takes a lot of nerve to get up and say to the Canadian people that we should treat this as an offhand gesture.

We take our job responsibly. We have suggested all through the debate that we think this is a bad piece of legislation, and we have been prepared to try to improve it. During the debate on first reading we issued the kind of amendments that we would be prepared to propose. We asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) whether he was prepared to accept reasonable amendments and he said, "Of course I am prepared to accept reasonable amendments". Then the Minister of Finance said; "No, I won't accept reasonable amendments". Then the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue said; "No, I won't", and the Prime Minister said; "Yes".

All this shows, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a government that pirouettes 180 degrees from Tuesday to Wednesday to Thursday, and cannot make up its own mind what it wants to do. All it is trying to do with this motion of closure is find an easy solution to its own confusion. That is the reason why we have a closure motion in front of us.

I would like to remind members opposite of some very good authorities on whether in fact a motion of this nature is required at this time. Let me quote from one of their more distinguished members who, on a bill which had far more reason for closure, when the committee stage had gone on much longer than this, used the following words:

> A government is judged not only by the things it does but by the way it uses its power. . . . It is a government which now uses a form of closure to force through parliament a measure which the government knows is wrong and knows it is going to change. That is an abuse of the rules of parliament. It is an abuse of the rule of the provinces. It is an abuse of the rights of the citizens of Canada.

That same distinguished member of the Conservative party went on to say:

> The use of closure is just one more indication of the incompetence of the Minister of Finance.

Truer words have never been spoken, Mr. Speaker. He went on to say that this shutting out of the right and the duty of Parliament to debate what is happening at this stage is a denial of the rights of Parliament. That distinguished member I am quoting, Mr. Speaker, is none other than the right hon. Prime Minister of this country, Joseph Clark.

An hon. Member: Joe Clark.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, Joe Clark. How quickly they forget, Mr. Speaker. How quickly the time passes by when they forget their own words and their own admonitions. It does not take very long for members opposite to start exercising the kind of disdain or arrogance about the rights of this Parliament that really has no equal.

This bill has not been debated thoroughly. The Minister of Finance has not seen the kind of amendment that could be introduced, debated, and accepted. They were not patient or prepared to listen. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we gave them full opportunity. We offered to close the debate and vote on the bill well over a week ago. They are the ones who asked for an extension of three or four days. It is not members of the opposition who did that. It was members opposite who extended the time of the debate. They filibustered their own bill.

How can we be expected to treat the bill seriously when again at the committee stage we put very clear questions to the Minister of Finance about how he was going to pay for this measure, what kind of amendments he was prepared to accept, and all we got from him was the sort of down country corn pone humour which is actually getting to be pretty sad and tragic for the Canadian people? It is no longer funny when the Minister of Finance refuses to deal fairly and squarely with questions put to him, honest questions, and instead uses his poor excuse for humour to get out of his difficulties. We know that the Minister of Finance does not believe in this bill. We know he is embarrassed by it. All we are seeing now is a way for them to avoid any further embarrassment.

It is very clear that we cannot allow this bill to pass this House until one very important condition is met. That is a condition that must be met on behalf of the Canadian people. How is the measure going to be paid for? We will have an opportunity of finding that out soon enough, we hope. That is one of the reasons why debate must continue.

We have no intention of denying the Tories their Christmas goodies or their presents under the tree, but we do believe that the rights of this Parliament should be recognized. We believe that this Parliament has the right to introduce amendments, to have those amendments examined thoroughly, and to have them debated properly so the Canadian people can see if there are better ways of delivering proper relief measures for property owners.

There is no one on this side of the House who has ever said that we are against relief for home owners. Our argument very clearly has been that we are in favour of relief for other people as well, and the excuse of the Minister of Finance simply will not wash. When he says there is simply no money to pay for these relief measures, we know the money is there in his own appropriations. He would not allow us to put those amendments forward. He would not give us the opportunity even to present the alternatives. He did not want to hear the truth. He did not want to see the alternatives, so he convinced his friend, the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue, who is in a cold sweat anyway over the Gallup poll, to introduce closure. That is the reason we have this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is that we are suggesting—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: I would just like to say, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Axworthy: I would just like to thank the minister and the House for its courtesy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in almost every debate during the last several years on a motion under 75C the second speaker has been the hon. gentleman who is now the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker). His comments on what he then called closure, and what he now calls an allocation of time order, make very interesting reading. I will not take the time to present them all, but I did enjoy what he said on March 10, 1976, when he started off in this way, as reported at page 11676 of Hansard for that date:

[Mr. Axworthy.]

> Mr. Speaker, I listened with some amusement to the government House leader a few moments ago saying that he approached with reluctance this whole question of closure in introducing this motion at this stage. I hope he will forgive me if I suggest to him that his approach bore all the semblance of the reluctance of a vulture approaching a fallen deer.

Then, having used that colourful language, the President of the Privy Council went on to say that the action of that day was "treachery". Then he said it was "double treachery". Then he felt the exuberance of his own oratory and went on to say it was a "triple act of treachery", and "this is a black day for this Parliament and for this country". Those are the words of a few years ago of the President of the Privy Concil describing the very kind of motion that he now presents to this House.

In his attempt to justify this act he tries to talk about this matter having been debated at great length. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has just pointed out that the debate in the important Committee of the Whole stage on this bill has barely started. We had a part of last Tuesday and a part of a short day on Wednesday, and that is all the time we have had on the clauses of this important Bill C-20. For the government to say that there shall now be only one more day's debate on this important measure makes this, in the language of the President of the Privy Council when he was on this side of the House, a black day for this Parliament, a black day for this country.

This is a very serious measure. As has been pointed out a good many times, it is not just a housing measure. In fact, it is not that at all. This is a taxation measure involving a cost to the treasury over the years of billions and billions of dollars. Many a time I have heard it said that this House has to take seriously its responsibility for the public purse. Surely in a matter like this we should be giving it the attention it deserves.

The government tried to tell us down through the piece that it would pay attention to our amendments and it was anxious to look at the matter with care during the Committee of the Whole consideration. Now in effect we are not to have any Committee of the Whole consideration at all.

One other thing that I want to emphasize is that there is sense to our rules that prevent things from getting through in a hurry. Even in this modern age of rapid communication it still takes time for ideas to get across the country and for the people of Canada to realize what is happening. I have seen instances in the past when governments of other stripes pushed measures through only to find a few weeks later, when the mail began coming in, that they had made a serious mistake. In my own experience it is only now that the mail is becoming heavy from pensioners, renters and from persons who own their homes and make mortgage payments or property tax payments but pay little or no income tax. They are beginning to realize that this measure provides nothing for them at all. There is no rebate, no credit, no money to persons who do not pay any income tax, even though they may be paying on their mortgages and are paying property tax.

More and more the people of Canada are realizing that this is a measure that gives a bonanza to a privileged few. When something is done for a privileged few, it means that the whole mass of the Canadian people must pay for it. There is sense in the general rules of this House that require us to take a bit of time to put important measures through. As the President of the Privy Council knows when matters are not of an important nature we will co-operate. He knows that we met last week and agreed that we would try to get a certain number of measures through by last Monday, and that we got through more measures than he had asked for or expected.

When legislation does not require that time be taken, we co-operate and put it through. But here is a serious measure in so far as its charge on the public treasury is concerned. Canadians are just beginning to understand and realize that it is a fraud and that it should not be put through. Why is the government so anxious to go through with this proposition, to the extent that it has even printed the income tax forms? It wants to be in a position, in case there is an election in the spring, to go to its Rosedale type constituents across the country and say, "See, we delivered, we made the people of Canada pay through the nose for the bonanza we are giving to a certain privileged few".

The government is defying all the traditions and the rules by printing the income tax forms, using closure and muzzling Parliament in the way that it is this afternoon. I suggest that this is no way to treat the House of Commons. My friend, the President of the Privy Council, has said these very things in the past about the use of closure. After all, that is what it is; it closes off debate.

When the Liberals were on the other side they would try to tell us that it was not closure, but they have changed their view now that they are on the constructive side of the House. When the Tories were on this side they called it closure, but now they try to tell us that it is just an allocation of time. Call it what you will, it cuts off debate right at the important Committee of the Whole stage.

The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) courteously, and with the approval of this caucus, submitted to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), when we went into Committee of the Whole, the list of the amendments that we were proposing. In other words, the government knows what we would like to do to improve the bill, even though we have been told that the forms have been printed and there is not much chance. We are prepared to give the matter the consideration that it deserves, but do we get any positive response for our efforts? The response we get is the use of this Draconian measure, this treachery, this double-treachery, this triple-treachery—those are not my words, they are the words of my friend and neighbour, the President of the Privy Council.

The government House leader tries to tell us that this is a less severe measure than the closure rule C. D. Howe implemented. All C. D. Howe was doing was using the very severe closure rule that was first brought into Parliament many years ago by Sir Robert Borden, another Conservative. Please remember, Mr. Speaker, that in that case the Conservatives of the day were having trouble getting a certain bill through, so the Borden government stopped debate on that measure, brought in a proposal to change the rules in the form of that severe measure, closure, and then took up that naval aid bill and went ahead with the closure rule.

My friends across the way are reverting to type. They have produced a paper on parliamentary reform and they try to talk about open government, about giving more attention to the views of the members of Parliament in all parties of the House. They talk about committees. The government is affronting Parliament every time it turns around.

They complained today about time being taken on privilege. I suggest that there has not been in this session of Parliament a more legitimate and worth-while question of privilege than the one raised today by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). It is significant that we dealt with that question of privilege on the same day we are dealing with a government that is snubbing Parliament and muzzling it in this way. This is just as wrong as every attempt in the past to close off debate. It is even more deleterious to the operation of this House.

As I say, the amounts of money involved are tremendous and the unfairness of this legislation to pensioners, renters, people who do not pay income tax and the great masses of the Canadian population which will have to put up the money for this bonanza, is such that this Parliament should be given the time to discuss this bill in full. My colleagues and I will vote as strongly as we can against this Draconian measure which makes this a black day for Parliament and a black day for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a nice change to hear an NDP member worrying about the money that will be spent. The hon. gentleman who just sat down is the biggest spender in the House. He would like to spend money on everything, but he does not want to spend money to help the working class or middle class home owners of Canada.

The hon. member says that this legislation is a special piece of discrimination. What is the legislation which we pass all the time if it is not for particular groups? We passed some legislation the other day providing aid to spouses under the spouse's allowance. That legislation was for a particular group of people. Is it to be suggested that we should give the baby bonus and family allowance to every Canadian because it discriminates against adults? What a lot of trash and nonsense we have heard from the hon. gentleman opposite.

What about the veterans allowance? Is that not for a particular group of people?

Mr. Knowles: Who deserve it!

Mr. Crosbie: But when it comes to the lower middle class, the middle class, the home owners, the people who are paying taxes and the people who are working hard, they are saying that we should stamp on them. That is the cry from the opposition. We expect it from the NDP, but it shames one to see the Liberal party take that attitude.

The hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), the toothless Tarzan, the "hon. Taxworthy," has sent out a householder report which says:

—65 per cent of the elderly own their own homes but only 6 per cent hold a mortgage on those homes and the remaining 59 per cent are therefore ineligible for a tax credit.

It is an untruth and a misleading statement. If only 6 per cent hold a mortgage, then only 6 per cent will get the mortgage interest deductibility credit, but every person who owns a home gets a property tax credit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: This householder should be withdrawn before it gets out into the constituency and misleads the people. The hon. member goes on to say:

—the plan does nothing to assist families or the residential construction industry over the grim months ahead.

This plan, if passed, will help a man who has a mortgage of 12 per cent interest and pays $5,000 in mortgage interest a year, because it will give him in effect a reduction of 3 per cent in his mortgage interest. In other words, he will get relief of 25 per cent on his mortgage interest rate. The hon. ladies and gentlemen opposite are making the country ring with their cries about high interest rates, and they are stopping this legislation from going to the home owners of Canada.

The hon. member goes on to say in his householder:

—low income home owners would not be eligible for full benefits.

That is a complete tissue of misconception. It does not matter what your income is. If you have a mortgage, you are eligible for assistance, and if you are a low income home owner with a large mortgage, as most of them are, then you will benefit tremendously. These people will get a tax rebate of 25 per cent from whatever mortgage interest rate they pay.

The hon. gentleman, in crocodile tears, said that his party has not been allowed to move any amendments in the House, that their amendments were not given consideration. While in committee on Wednesday, 20 members spoke, three of whom were from our side. The rest were from the tatterdemalion crowd from across the aisle. They did not move one amendment. They merely talked about the principle of the bill. They are the tatterdemalion Tarzans without their teeth. The toothless, tattered and tatterdemalion Tarzans never moved one amendment, not one single amendment, not one.

● (1530)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We had committee stage back here on Wednesday. I never got a chance to open my mouth to answer a question. Members popped up like a jack-in-a-box so I would not have a chance to speak again to answer any questions. That is the truth, and that is the hon. gentleman who said he could not get any answers. He could not get any answers because he made his speech, left, and we never saw him again. He never came back to the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: He was on the leadership trail all week except once when he spoke in committee. Welcome back. I hope he is not going to go on that forelorn hope again. Stick around. I say stick around and he will get some answers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: He said the bill was only introduced after 41 days had passed. I ask why? Because it was the legislation of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) that we brought into the House from the last budget, legislation for which they were solely responsible and which they did not put through in a year. They took week after week to debate their own legislation, the income tax and the customs amendments. That is why we could never get on with the new business of the country because we had to deal with the old business, the tatterdemalion remnants over there would not allow it through the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I suggest that if that is the best the official opposition has to offer, let us have a petition go round to bring back Pierre. He should never have left in the first place if that is what we are going to have to put up with. How is the mortgage and property tax credit going to be paid for? The hon. PC from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wants to know how it is going to be paid for. This is how. We will leave the money in the pockets of those taxpayers so they do not have to pay us their money—$575 million next year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We know the NDP theory that everybody in the country, as I said a couple of weeks ago, should make out a cheque for their total income, send it in here, and the NDP will send them back what they think they should have. That is not our system. We want to leave it in their pockets, Mr. Speaker.

The finance critic for the New Democratic Party said "that the relief here is going to go to those people who need it least". So, home owners of Canada, you have been categorized by the hon. member from Toronto-Broadview. You, the home owners of Canada, you are the ones in Canada who need it least. Sock it to the home owners of Canada, put the boots to them, tax them unmercifully, do not give them a break, they need it least. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, there are many, many thousands of home owners in Canada who are poorer than renters in Canada. The renters in the penthouses in Toronto-Broadview, the renters in their penthouses in Winnipeg—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —are far better off than the low income householders in Newfoundland, and some other crocodile characters from across the House said that the Newfoundlanders were really getting the foot put to them. Some 82 per cent of them own their own homes without a mortgage. I say that it is wonderful that 82 per cent of Newfoundlanders own their homes without a mortgage. Wonderful! They build their own homes. They are not like that crowd up there who cannot build a matchbox.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Every one of those Newfoundland home owners who is a federal taxpayer is going to get a property tax credit of $67.50 this year, and $250 in four years' time. Every one of those Newfoundland home owners is going to benefit. The same with Quebec home owners and other home owners in Canada. So the gentleman from Toronto-Broadview should forget his concern about the penthouse occupiers in Toronto-Broadview and Metropolitan Toronto, and also the hon. member from Quebec city who suggested that the Newfoundlanders were getting done in.

Another gentleman who asked where the money is going to come from, was tattle-tale Gray. He is wondering for the first time since 1962. He wondered where the money was going to come from. We never once heard him talk about where the money was coming from when the Liberal party was in power and they were slashing it out in every direction in the last ten years, the tax expenditures, the document I filed yesterday, the $30 odd billion of tax expenditures they lashed out—Lash Larue had nothing on them, Mr. Speaker. Between 1972 and this year they gave out $15 billion in tax relief, and when we are trying to give out a little squeezly-measly couple of billion dollars over the next four years—we are phasing it in because of our fiscal responsibility and requirements—they cry, "where is the money coming from?"

An hon. Member: The toothless tooth fairy.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, the NDP, somebody suggested, is the toothless tooth fairy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. member I saw on TV, up in the office today, the member from Sudbury—

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Crosbie: Sorry, Nickel Belt. He was one of the people described here as a loose coalition of radical groups, feminists, gays, Trotskyites, radical socialists, and those disenchanted with the party's moderate profile. I was wondering which one was he?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson):

Time Allocation

That the House sit through the dinner hour and extend the hours of sitting tonight to have the two-hour debate required under the provisions of Standing Order 75C, in order to complete the time allocation motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Upon receipt of this motion I have to refer members to Standing Order 6(5)(a) which authorizes a member to move such a motion to extend the hours of sitting. The motion has to be moved at this time in the last hour before the completion of debate on the subject matter. The Chair, after putting the motion, has to ask members who oppose the motion to so indicate. If there are more than ten members who oppose the motion, it is withdrawn.

All members who oppose the motion, please rise.

And more than ten members having risen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly tough to get up here and yell fire and brimstone like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). I must confess I have a great deal of difficulty understanding some expressions like a squeezy-measly couple of billions of dollars. I guess it will take me a few more years in the House to be able to handle billions of dollars with that kind of language.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as a new member I find it difficult to reconcile this motion for closure with the behaviour of the government with regard to Bill C-20 because of the latter's holier-than-thou attitude towards parliamentary procedure when it represented the official opposition. The right hon. Prime Minister said repeatedly that the government was willing to consider reasonable amendments, but its actions indicate the contrary. In fact, the government knows that what little time it allowed parliamentarians would eliminate any possibility of proposing amendments. The government dragged its feet for almost five months before calling us to work.

● (1540)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask hon. members not interested in listening to the speeches to at least allow the Chair to hear what is being said.

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, the government dragged its feet for almost five months before calling us back to work in October, and it waits for seven months before deeming it time to bring down a budget. But, cynically, it introduces this bill just before the deadline for printing the income tax return forms.

[English]

I cannot understand what the haste was, what the necessity was for the government to introduce this measure this year. It could have made the bill applicable to 1980 only, if it really wanted to encourage proper parliamentary review as ministers always claim is their intention. It could then have been referred to a standing committee of the House where expert witnesses could have been called and alternatives could have been considered.

What is the use of talking about it? The bill was politically motivated. It is not by any stretch of the imagination a housing initiative. The government knew this all along. Its actions in the past few weeks have confirmed this.

I repeat, this is not a housing bill. Yesterday this was confirmed once more after the many times it has been confirmed in recent months in debate in this House and in the press. Yesterday we received the November economic research committee newsletter, from no less an authority than the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada. It notes that from its estimate in February of 215,000 housing starts in 1979 it has revised its forecast downward to 195,000. It is forecasting a further drop to 175,000 in 1980.

This authority on mortgage and property tax credit states in its November newsletter, and I quote:

> The impact of the mortgage interest tax credit introduced by the federal government is deemed to be marginal during 1980.

If it is to be marginal, what is the haste?

> Since the tax credit is small during the first year of the program and since it will not have an impact on home buyers until after they complete their tax forms in April, it will have a minimal effect on stimulating housing. The increase in mortgage interest rates for home purchasers has largely negated the benefit of the tax credit during this first year as well.

Another option open to the government, if it wishes to promote passage of this bill, is to consider a sunset amendment to permit a review of the bill in 1980. We will propose such an amendment when the bill is sent to the Committee of the Whole. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) suggested such an amendment under Standing Order 43, last Tuesday, November 27. I did not see any hurry on the part of the government to concur. Our party will vote against this closure motion and we will vote against the bill on third reading.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (Minister of State, Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add my voice to those members supporting the passage of Bill C-20 to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit for mortgage interest and property tax paid by home owners. I am very pleased also to support the use of time allocation, speedy passage of this bill.

This legislation is the most important tax reform measure to be proposed in this House in the last 16 years. This change is vital to those citizens desiring to own a home and in assisting these citizens in achieving that goal, and is equally vital to home owners who find the cost of living has become a more difficult problem in balancing the family budget. Why this positive reform is being opposed is beyond me.

The members of the opposition regard this reform measure as one very distasteful to them. In the first opposition attack on the bill, one hon. member described this measure as a scheme that will have a very limited impact, a discriminatory tax measure that is based on bad economics. Since the assault was launched, it has been carried on daily. "Inefficient", "inequitable", "expensive", "arrogant" and "blackmail", are some of the epithets that have been used.

These are the descriptive words opposition members apply. The longer the opposition participates in the debate, the greater their display of distaste for the bill, the more intemperate their assault, and the less valid their arguments.

In the time my constituents have had to consider the merits of this bill to provide major tax relief to home owners, I have not had one citizen of York-Sunbury suggest that this mandate of the Clark government ought not be enacted into the law of the land.

The only reasons I can honestly think of for the strong opposition to this tax relief for the people of Canada are three in number, namely, the reform never occurred to the former government, although the Liberal administration had 16 years in which the bolt of lightning could have struck; second, the opposition did not know the principles involved have long been accepted in tax law by our neighbours to the south; third, perhaps the chief reason for the opposition is the fact that this administration supports and proposes this long needed reform.

This bill is before this House because it is right for the people, home owners and would-be home owners alike; it is right for the people of New Brunswick, and it is right for the people of Canada. This legislation represents a new benchmark in income tax reform for Canada. I have no wealthy friends and I know of no wealthy people who have large mortgages and pay high interest rates.

This bill benefits the lower and middle income group, the breadwinners of Canada, the people who pay the taxes and make Canada the great nation that it is. They deserve a tax break, and this bill gives it to them.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a sad day for Parliament and democracy when we are faced with the irresponsible and ill-advised actions of this government. They want to rule Parliament by force, they resort to every possible and conceivable trick to prevent the people's elected representatives from expressing their views and, those of their constituents and putting forward sensible alternatives to this government's proposals. It is apparent, Mr. Speaker, that with this motion the government House leader, the President of the Privy Council and minister of National Revenue (Mr. Baker) is trying to save face, no more and no less.

How can they explain otherwise that the person under those hats, even before Parliament had an opportunity to discuss a measure, probably ordered the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. La Salle)—because he is responsible I suppose for government printing services—to print the income tax forms for the current year, even before Parliament had an opportunity to deal with this financial legislation?

The Minister of National Revenue, who is also President of the Privy Council and government House leader, when he realized his error, panicked at the thought that those forms might get into the hands of Canadians before Parliament had passed the legislation. So he now comes before us with the air of an offended virgin to urge us, almost imploringly, to support this motion for closure, because this is what it is.

It is therefore certainly not up to us in the opposition to rectify the mistakes of the government or confess to its ignorance. It has already been said that this is a new government, a student government. This is becoming increasingly obvious. The more it studies, the more the economy bogs down and the more Canada goes under, not only as concerns matters of economic administration, but also matters concerning oil supplies and so on.

The list is too long and too sad for me to go over it today, but it is obvious that with only 28 per cent of popular support, this government is finally realizing that it is in deep trouble. What is now suggested is a "rescue" or retreading operation. The government wants to make new tires out of old rubber. After less then six months of experience, the government has already exhausted its possibilities and is trying to blame the opposition for its inaction and irresponsibility. This goes beyond anything we could have imagined. Public opinion is justifiably confused.

I could quote many newspaper articles and many economists who are concerned about the persistence of the government to disregard public opinion and force Parliament to swallow whole a piece of legislation which has been badly cooked up, is indigestible, and will surely have unfavourable effects on the economy and the entire Canadian population for years to come. This is why, instead of simply criticizing this legislation, we have made concrete proposals to improve it.

The motion of closure moved today aims at preventing the official opposition from introducing constructive amendments to allow all Canadians to have a fair and equal share of public funds. The President of the Privy Council, the great reformer of parliamentary procedure, who just a few weeks ago tabled a white paper, is now hiding under the skirts of the Queen and under the cloak of power to try to muzzle the opposition and prevent it from fulfilling its duties towards the voters.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue is in a delicate predicament and it is the President of the Privy Council who is trying to get him out of it! I have never seen such an ugly situation in my life because it is created by one man with the support of his government and the assent of his cabinet colleagues. Having lost all the rest, having lost face before the Canadian electorate, they are trying to save the rags, the pieces, the tatters of their election promises. It is nothing more than that, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister does not even have faith in his Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie); he left the House this afternoon, he did not even want to stay here to listen to the king's fool entertaining his colleagues who are bringing down the House, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister went back to his office to shed tears over his disfavour with the public opinion expressed earlier this week. Never have we seen in the annals of the Parliament of Canada such a shameful behaviour as the behaviour of this Minister of Finance. Never have I seen anything like that. All we get is jokes. It is fair enough to make jokes about the opposition, about the former government, but not about the present economic situation; making fun out of that exemplifies the height of this government's incompetence.

Mr. La Salle: You were in power for 16 years.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, it looks like the minister of patronage wants to say something. If that is the case, I will gladly sit down and give him my time. If he wants to do some patronage, let him do so and fast, and let him make sure that the Prime Minister who promised to extend an airport runway from 4,000 feet to 6,000 feet keeps his promise, and the sooner the better.

Mr. La Salle: I do not see that.

Mr. Corbin: Because that is about the only promise which so far has not been put to the test. After this one, that is the only one of his election promises left. At home, in the riding of Madawaska-Victoria—

Mr. La Salle: Why did you not do it yourself?

Mr. Corbin: Why did I not do it? I am going to tell the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would urge the hon. member to come back to the subject under discussion.

Mr. Corbin: With the unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, I could continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member has another minute if he wants to continue. I was simply pointing out to him that the issue he was debating has nothing to do with the motion under consideration. That is all.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge your fairness and your objectivity as always. The supply and patronage minister was wondering why we did not build the 4,000 feet. We did so. At the time of the election, we were setting a mechanism to extend the runway to 6,000 feet. My government and the Prime Minister have promised to extend that runway, Mr. Speaker. Coming back to the motion—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is too late for the hon. member to come back to the motion because the time allotted to him has expired. If he wants to ask for unanimous consent, he may do so.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Since there are four minutes left, I would like to begin my speech.

[English]

I should like to make a few points in this debate. The Canadian people are overwhelmingly in favour of this measure.

An hon. Member: Twenty-eight per cent!

Mr. Kilgour: A questionnaire sent to every household in my riding produced the following response: in favour, 67 per cent; against, 27 per cent; undecided 4 per cent. What data do any of the pious members opposite have to support any suggestion that the figures are different in any of their ridings—in any apartments, in any group of the Canadian society except for their little band of caucus?

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Phillips) has already been referred to in this debate as being 60 per cent in favour. Members over on the other side who might have visited other parts of the country will know that there are many apartment buildings in Vancouver Centre, more, I suggest, that in any other riding in Canada. Well, 60 per cent of the people in that riding support the measure. I say to members opposite: I suspect when you go back to your constituents and explain why you voted against the bill—those who have the gall to do so—

Mr. Ittinuar: How much do renters get?

Mr. Kilgour: Does any member of this House doubt that this is a popular measure?

Some hon. Members: Four o'clock!

● (1600)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, just because the members of the New Democratic Party, who profess such love and respect for Parliament, do not like the motion is no reason for them to interrupt a member who is trying to make a speech.

Mr. Ouellet: Come on, sit down.

[Mr. Corbin.]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) ought to admonish his group not to make that kind of noise.

Mr. Ouellet: Who is the new Speaker? Are you now sharing that job? Are you the Speaker too?

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Is it really incumbent upon any member of this House at this late hour on a Friday afternoon to be lectured to with unrelieved pomposity by the government House leader? If his backbenchers cannot look after themselves in these situations, they do not belong here. They should get back into their playpens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: Four o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it is understood that we will discuss the government member's motion on capital punishment. I do not know the exact number of the motion. Are other notices of motions allowed to stand by unanimous consent of the House?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Can the parliamentary secretary give the assurance that the movers of motions Nos. 9, 12, 13 and 14 have been contacted, are now ready to proceed, and agree to let motion No. 15 in the name of the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) proceed today?

Mr. Kilgour: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not able to give that undertaking, but I think Your Honour will be aware of the fact that in every other case in which we have got ourselves in this position, that check has been made. However, I cannot give you that assurance today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that we proceed with motion No. 15?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

SUGGESTED REINSTATEMENT OF DEATH PENALTY FOR FIRST DEGREE MURDER

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the death sentence for first degree murder should be reinstated.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything more dastardly to the thinking of Canadians everywhere, besides having a murder committed which was either pre-meditated, planned, committed by a hired murderer or committed in the pursuit of a crime, than to have one who commits such a murder not pay the supreme penalty as the laws of Canada provided and insisted upon prior to the passing of the legislation which abolished capital punishment in 1976.

It is clear to me that no other issue in many years has moved so many Canadians to speak out. Most members of this House can attest to the feelings of their constituents, for the issue of capital punishment has undoubtedly resulted in more mail to Parliament than any other. The reason is that most Canadians believe this important ingredient in our system of law and order must be reinstated.

I find it impossible to ignore the fact that 82 per cent of the constituents of my riding of Grey-Simcoe who responded to my questionnaire favoured capital punishment. The percentage of all Canadians who favour capital punishment is just about the same. Mail received in my office indicates that some 98 per cent favour capital punishment for premeditated murder.

There is no question that Canadians everywhere are demanding strong law enforcement. We have seen too much of the soft attitude which places the rights and concerns of the criminal ahead of those of law-abiding citizens. We have had enough of the loose administration of justice whereby criminals, rapists, murderers and child molesters, are introduced to country club living and then let out on holidays, weekends and parole and whereby the safety of society seems to have been completely forgotten in our headlong rush to demonstrate our humanity for criminals but with little concern shown for the victims of crime.

As things stand now any armed robber or hijacker is prone to murder because he knows he can only be given a prison sentence. He also knows that under our present system through either parole, holidays, temporary leave, or even escape, his sojourn in custody may well be just a few years or even a few months, and the risk of killing someone is truly worth it, especially if a key witness can be wiped out.

We must make it absolutely clear to the potential murderer that he risks the chance of being executed for his crime. There is no question in my mind as well that the increased lawlessness in Canada, more evident than ever before, is the result of a loose morality which has permeated our society like a cancer, especially during the last ten years. I might add that that loose morality has no boundaries. It invades governments, people in high places and, in fact, all classes of our society.

The abolition of capital punishment, the easy obtainment of bail, increased laxness toward inmates regarding discipline in our jails, and undeserved extended weekend passes for many repeaters in jail, have only added more fuel to the fire.

I can well understand the exasperation and frustrations of our police officers all across Canada who are trying to do their duty in apprehending criminals and carrying out their responsibilities, only to see their efforts go for naught when so many of these same criminals are soon walking the streets again either on extended bail, suspended sentences, or after serving only portions of their sentences.

The murder of our policemen in the carrying out of their duties, in ever-increasing numbers, is having a most unfavourable reaction among all our police forces from one end of Canada to the other. It has serious effects on their morale and desire to carry out their duties, or even to continue in their careers. There is no question that if the murder of Sergeant Ronald McKean, a police officer gunned down and killed in Collingwood, Ontario, in my riding, in 1977, in the performance of his duty, had occurred some ten years ago, it would have resulted in the death penalty for his assailant. There is no doubt that many other hon. members in this House can relate similar experiences in their own particular ridings.

There is no question in my mind that the re-establishment of capital punishment in our statutes would once again be a step forward to a greater respect for our laws by all criminal elements. It would give our law enforcement agents the tool they so desperately need to carry out their duties with zeal and determination. I would say that the zeal is now somewhat lacking because of the murders of their brothers in the pursuit of their duties by assailants who know that, if apprehended, they will have to serve only a few years for their crimes and then be free to commit murder and other crimes again.

Naturally, one has to ask just what the retention of the death penalty would do. Abolitionists would argue that abolition does not result in crime run rampant, or social peace if the death penalty is not restored. They would argue that capital punishment has no deterrent value. With that kind of elitist argument they ignore the real issue at hand.

A former chief justice and president of the United States, William Taft, once said:

The abolition of the death penalty is a mistake. It certainly is a deterrent for crimes of bloody violence.

In looking at the deterrent factor one must consider it an attempt to save innocent lives in the future and not, in isolation, in relation to the fate of the guilty murderer. The only question one might raise is whether capital punishment is an effective or significant deterrent. Perhaps we should look at the deterrent factor from the point of view of whether capital punishment would prevent all murders. I think not. Surely, we could not expect that any more than that a 25-year sentence in prison would stop murder. In speaking of the 25-year prison sentence, one has to consider seriously the possibility that such a law could be amended or even repealed at any time. Such a law is no guarantee that society will be protected from the criminal element. In all seriousness, I wonder how effective the 25-year sentence would be and how strictly it would be enforced.

● (1610)

In this debate one could quote reams of statistics, but I believe that the common sense of most Canadians is more important than statistics when they state, in overwhelming numbers, that the threat of the death penalty is a deterrent. It is superficial even to suggest that the threat of capital punishment has no deterrent value.

There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that people are fed up with the over-emphasis on the rights of the convicted. There is too much emphasis today on the rights of the convicted as opposed to the rights of the victims. I believe it is not only irresponsible but downright immoral to disregard the rights of those who are victimized. It is irresponsible for governments and others to address themselves only to the rights of the convicted and almost totally neglect the rights of the victims.

We, as members of this House, must make sure that our laws concentrate not only on those who have been victimized but also on those who are the potential victims which, by and large, is the whole of our citizenry. A society without that ultimate protection might some day find itself in the sad state where the law of the jungle rules.

I believe the time has come to stop lulling the Canadian people into believing everything will be fine if only they would follow blindly. I for one have more faith than that in my fellow citizens. I believe, Mr. Speaker, Parliament must get its head out of the sand. Parliament must face the fact that our society is not perfect, that crime does exist, that we do have a responsibility to our citizens to fight crime, with every tool available, including capital punishment.

If we cannot settle this important issue of capital punishment here in this chamber, Mr. Speaker, I believe we should take our case to the people of Canada and have a referendum on capital punishment.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize again that I would like to see the reinstatement of the death penalty for those who commit premeditated, first degree, cold-blooded capital murder, call it what you will. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to my colleagues in this House, that no single issue, certainly since my election over seven years ago, has caused me more personal concern and torment than the issue of capital punishment. To me, despite the wailings of many do-gooders, capital punishment for first degree murder is a deterrent to murder and should once again be reinstated in our statutes. Once it is reinstated in our laws, Mr. Speaker, the carrying out of that law to the full letter of the law must be exercised by those responsible, instead of resorting to mere lip service which would only be construed by Canadians throughout our land as a mockery and a disservice, not worthy of the high office and high position of responsibility entrusted to them by the citizens of Canada.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond very briefly to the points made and the issue brought forward by the hon. member who has presented this motion in favour of the death penalty.

[Mr. Mitges.]

I know there are quite a number of other members in the House who want to speak on the subject, so I will be brief and give other members the opportunity to speak. But I also want to indicate that it is my belief that there are two issues which the House now faces in the discussion of this private member's motion. The first, of course, is the issue related to capital punishment, and in that regard obviously the hon. member and every other member is perfectly entitled to express his opinion and to see the matter brought before the House in due course for a vote. The second issue, I submit, is that we are now witnessing something similar to what we witnessed this afternoon when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), and others, attempted to manoeuvre the scheduled business of the House of Commons in such a fashion as to suit the governing party but not to respect the rights of parliamentarians.

I put to this House, and I put to you, Mr. Speaker, that apparently we are expected to suffer in the House of Commons from promises made during the electoral campaign by the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Clark) to the effect that, while he himself is on record as having opposed the death penalty, he has offered an opportunity to the members of his own party in particular, but still to all members of the House as well, that they may be able to vote on the issue in the normal course of business, by way of a private member's motion or a private member's bill.

I want to have the record clear that I think that on an issue of such moral importance—and that is what this issue is about and that is why it attracts such attention, not only in the House of Commons but in the country at large—I find that the Prime Minister of Canada is proceeding in a manner—here I want to repeat a word which I heard the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) use this afternoon, and I will be ready to answer to a question of privilege, if I have to do so—with respect to the death penalty and with respect to the organization of a bootlegging bill, the organization of a smuggling concept to bring the death penalty issue before the House of Commons without the moral rectitude which I think the leader and the Prime Minister of Canada should have, and I find that this manner in which the procedure is being used smacks of sleaziness—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaker: Let it be said also that before I used that word, I indicated to members of the House of Commons—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mrs. Stratas) wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mrs. Stratas: Mr. Speaker, forgive me if I commit a breach of protocol, but I have been present in the House of Commons this afternoon and I have seen and heard many things, but I cannot sit here any longer when I hear what I am hearing now. So I am rising on a point of order to state that it should be known to hon. members opposite that in this party we act of our own volition. The hon. member who has proposed this bill did so of his own volition, and I resent it and it confounds me to hear the comments I have just heard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not have any difficulty with the intervention made by the hon. member and I respect that intervention. I did not suggest that the hon. member who presented this motion is doing so in some form of conspiracy or in some form of dishonourable presentation. I have not the slightest doubt that the hon. member presenting the motion did so in good faith and quite honestly, so far as I know.

An hon. Member: Speak to the motion.

Mr. Blaker: I am speaking to the motion. I make the assumption that the hon. member firmly believes that it is for the betterment of Canada that this particular motion be brought forward with respect to the death penalty. But the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Stratas) seems to think that I am accusing the government of some form of conspiracy, which I am not. What I do say—and if I had the particular quote in front of me, I would use it—is that the Prime Minister indicated during the election campaign that while he personally is opposed to the death penalty, he would be prepared to permit the bringing forward of private members' motions and bills in order that the House may decide.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are not used to that.

Mr. Blaker: The hon. member is quite right, I am absolutely not used to that. I am accustomed to a party, and I have one to my right and one to my left, which has some concept that we stand on principle. I have yet to see the indication of the Prime Minister of Canada who has voted against the hanging bill and spoken against it and who then campaigns on the idea that there is an undercurrent of promise that, despite his own stand on capital punishment, he is prepared to see that same bill go through the House. There are a few examples of debate in Canada of greater moral attachment, philosophy and concept, but on this issue the Prime Minister stands before the House and the people of Canada and says that, while he voted against capital punishment, he is prepared to comply with a private member's bill which will allow his own views to be overruled. It is a cop-out, that is what it is.

• (1620)

An hon. Member: It is a game.

Mr. Blaker: Just let me be very clear about this. This is not the first time that this governing party and this Prime Minister have done the same thing. I am one of the members who stood up in the House of Commons and asked the Prime Minister to lead in the issue of Canadian national unity, and he collapsed on that as well. It is a regular collapse.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mrs. Stratas) on a point of order.

Mrs. Stratas: Mr. Speaker, I only suggest that perhaps the member opposite does not understand the freedom of speech concept and the parliamentary system as our Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) and we understand it. I put in a plea for relevance to the issue which is the private member's bill, rather than a personality debate.

An hon. Member: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Blaker: Yes, I will speak to the bill.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is a motion.

Mr. Blaker: I will speak to the motion, then. There is a very clear understanding here. For one of the first times of which I know in the seven years I have been in the House of Commons, it is proposed to use some of the advantages of certain procedures in order to bootleg in a bill which the Prime Minister of Canada and the governing party of Canada do not have the guts to put before the House in a normal fashion. That is the problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaker: If I have to put it any clearer, or if I have to put it in simpler words, it is an act of cowardice.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) must return to his seat to be recognized. The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry; I was not standing up to speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It has been a long day.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I am getting somewhat dizzy going up and down. May I finish?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member for Bow River on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, our Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) does not tell us how to vote, like the hon. member's prime minister did in the last cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: Has any one of these points of order been a point of order?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I must respond to the last intervention. The suggestion that the leader of the Liberal party informed, instructed, or commanded the members of his party on how to vote is ridiculous, when one considers the actual vote which took place and the split in his party.

An hon. Member: Not in cabinet.

Mr. Blaker: I do not know how the hon. member goes on believing that ridiculous assumption. But I want to make the point which I rose to address. I will not spend too much time on the subject matter of capital punishment. It will be debated nine times, ten times, or whatever number of times, before it finally gets before the House for a vote. I respect the opinion of every member in this regard. They will vote as they see fit. Some, regrettably, will understand their roles as members of the House of Commons as being that they ought to vote on the basis of some unscientific and inoperative poll of their riding. That is their business. I want to address myself to the issue. A bill of such importance, or a motion in this case, will appear again and again. It will be bootlegged into the House, smuggled into the House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is not bootlegging.

Mr. Blaker: I want to make it clear that the action I am taking is a deliberate effort on my part, for as many minutes as I stand in the House of Commons, to talk out that motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaker: I am prepared to go on the record, and be seen and known in the public to do so. On the simple understanding that the Prime Minister and leader of the Conservative party does not have the moral fortitude to stand in this House in the normal way and to deal with capital punishment in the normal way, then I am prepared to use the procedures of the House to deny him or his members the right to bootleg a bill in. We are getting to the point where we will have hanging by accident, if this goes on.

I want every member to have a full opportunity to discuss this; not have it smuggled into the House for debate in one hour and slipped into committee before anyone knows what is happening. I want to see the Prime Minister of Canada stand up in his place and vote on this issue.

Some hon. Members: He will.

Mr. Blaker: Until he stands in his place—

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Blaker: Until he is prepared to be in the House of Commons to debate capital punishment, I will do everything I can to prevent this motion from going to committee.

An hon. Member: Hon. members opposite are afraid of the vote.

Mr. Blaker: I should like to finish off by referring to one or two quotes, if I may. I will quote a leading member of the House of Commons, as I heard someone refer to that this afternoon, on the subject of capital punishment. He said the following:

—it has been my judgment that capital punishment does not function as a deterrent in the case of those peculiar people who commit murder.

I am quoting the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada.

An hon. Member: We know how he stands.

Mr. Blaker: Why is he not here discussing the issue, if this is what he believes?

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Blaker: I wonder if I might quote that same gentleman again. He said:

What we have to do is determine whether the threat of capital punishment would stop those people who are likely to . . . commit murder, from undertaking that act. I have seen no firm evidence to suggest that the threat of capital punishment is a deterrent.

Again this was said by the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada on an issue of such moral importance, and that man is not in the House. The Prime Minister is not in the House at this time to discuss or debate this issue or take his stand. Until the Prime Minister is prepared to take his stand publicly, I am prepared to use the procedures of the House to deny the passage of this motion directly to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) on a point of order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be brought to the attention of the hon. member that it could hardly be conceived that anyone with views on capital punishment, such as those of the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), could bring forward a bill to restore capital punishment.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The hon. member is talking absolute rubbish. But the Prime Minister is prepared to let other hon. members bring forward the bill.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I know the Prime Minister is prepared to allow other members to bring forward this bill. The rules of the House of Commons make it clear that any member can bring forward a bill through the normal course of the draw and the procedures of the House.

An hon. Member: But you are talking about bootlegging.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with it? It is not bootlegging.

Mr. Rose: They are upset.

Mr. Blaker: The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), who is a very respected and dignified member of the House of Commons, advises me that I am making members opposite very upset. I do not want to make them upset. I simply want to put this proposition: a motion, an idea, or a bill of this importance ought to be presented by the government. It ought to have the moral commitment of the Prime Minister attached to the debate which goes on concerning that bill. I, for one, will contribute every minute I can to stop this motion from going to committee. I will do the same on any other bill or motion, until such time as the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada steps into the House and gives his opinion openly, or, in his words, "comes clean". It is about time he does so on this issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to have this motion or a similar bill brought forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). I think the example set by the previous government in this instance was the right one. It allowed the bill to pass in 1976.

I hope the Prime Minister will, particularly since he is well-known and respected as an abolitionist, stop this practice of having dozens of motions coming forward, and instead bring forward a bill himself, if he feels that we have now reached a point where we should no longer have the bill that was passed in 1976. I do not think the Prime Minister believes that we should change it. I have heard him say many times that he does not believe in the death penalty. Also I have heard him say that since the act, which the hon. member wants to reverse today, was passed only in 1976, there should be further time before one starts changing it again.

This matter is so important, as I am sure the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) will agree, it is not something which should be changed or amended every year or every six months. It is something I think most hon. members feel that we should stay with for a period of at least five years. I remember the Prime Minister saying that, and for that reason I would doubt very much that the Prime Minister would introduce a bill comparable to the one we are discussing today.

I, too, like the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker), am a little disturbed that despite his own strongly held views, views that have been shared by every prime minister of the country, that is, the abolitionist view, the Prime Minister would not exercise more leadership with his own members. I do not mean that they have to be sheep. I do not believe in that. He could exercise more leadership with his own members by suggesting that we do not re-examine this question only three years after it was thoroughly examined. Perhaps in another two or three years it might be appropriate to do so. I feel that is his wish, but it would have required not only a strong conviction, but a willingness on his part to lead his own party in that direction.

The position I take is in opposition to this bill. I took that position throughout the election campaign. We had many debates in New Westminster and Coquitlam on the advisability or otherwise of restoring the death penalty. The member who introduced the motion today has said that the death penalty is in fact a deterrent, and he quoted William Taft who, I think, lived about 100 years ago. It is possible it was a deterrent when William Taft lived, but how the hon. member can go on saying it is a deterrent when we have the data for the last three years which show that the incidence of murder on a per capita basis has dropped, I do not know.

I am baffled when he criticizes us for saying that the death penalty is not a deterrent, and then turns around and says it is, but presents nothing to back up his statement. At least we try to back up our statements with fact, as we have done when we suggest it is not a deterrent. Certainly I have always tried to do that, and I did so during the election campaign. That is the fact as indicated by the statistics in the past three years. Those statistics were published during the last election campaign by the department of the solicitor general.

I am led to believe that the real reason for wanting to reintroduce the death penalty is not that the hon. member and others who want it reintroduced think it is a deterrent. Nor is it because they think it will remove some of the crime from our streets. The hon. member mentioned all kinds of things, very serious offences, indeed, that had nothing at all to do with murder.

Bringing back the death penalty for murder will not address some of the very serious problems that we all agree exist today in Canadian society, although not nearly as serious as in some other societies which have the death penalty. The problems we have in our cities bear no relationship, in my view, to the existence or otherwise of the death penalty. The only ground which I can find upon which he advocates the return of the death penalty is basically one of revenge, or the eye for an eye argument. If someone does commit murder he should in turn be murdered. It is not really because it is a deterrent that he wants it back, but because he feels, and I trust genuinely and honestly, that if someone murders he, in turn, should suffer the death penalty. That is a fundamental principle of revenge which I do not think has any place in our society. I have never felt it had any place in our society or in any society that prides itself on having achieved some measure of growth and civilization.

The death penalty does not bring back the dead person. One might perhaps even consider, if it did so, there would be a point in having the death penalty. It does not help the friends and relatives of the victim, those persons for whom we all have concern. The death penalty does not help them. It seems to me that the hon. member and others who favour it are only looking at the principle of retribution.

Another matter that bothers me is that in Canada, at any rate, when we did have the death penalty, sentences were commuted on every occasion subsequent to December, 1961. The hon. member mentioned that a policeman in his constituency was murdered some ten years ago. He said that because there was no death penalty on the books that murderer did not suffer the death penalty. I would remind him that the murderer would very likely not have suffered the death penalty in any event, because in every case the sentence was commuted by the cabinet. The last prime minister who allowed the death penalty to be carried out, not having commuted the sentence, was the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. I remember him saying very vividly to me, and I do not recall whether he said it publicly, that he would never again allow that to happen; an occasion when he would not commute the sentence.

The late Right Hon. L. B. Pearson and the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) all commuted death sentences. I suggest that was not because they were part of some elite, as the hon. member suggests, but because they knew in their hearts that the imposition of the death penalty was solely an act of retribution, that it does nothing for the victim's friends or relatives, that it does nothing to bring about a more just and fair society, that it does nothing about the violence in our society, and that it is in no way a deterrent.

I think everyone, regardless of party, is anxious to find solutions to our problem, solutions which are more complex than a reintroduction of the death penalty. I am sure they are all anxious to find solutions to our social problems. Even if a bill like this were passed and we reintroduced the death penalty, I am as sure as I stand here that neither the present Prime Minister nor the Minister of Justice (Mr. Flynn), would refuse to commute the sentence. I should also have included a reference to the relevant ministers of justice when I referred to past prime ministers recommending commutation of the death sentence on each occasion.

I feel very strongly that those who vote to reinstate capital punishment are putting on the shoulders of other people, particularly the cabinet, the real decision as to whether the death penalty will in practice come about.

An hon. Member: Particularly the Prime Minister.

Miss Jewett: Certainly, as I have just been reminded, and going back to the point I was making at the beginning of my remarks, although I do not know the views of the Minister of Justice, I do know those of the present Prime Minister, and by reinstating the death penalty we will be putting on his shoulders the responsibility for commuting that death penalty. It is a responsibility I know he would take, but I do not think we should shift that responsibility, and that is exactly what we would be doing.

For these reasons primarily, I would find it absolutely impossible to support this motion or any similar motion. I urge hon. members to give the present act a longer period of time on the statute books, to think about the alternative, and to ask themselves if they would want a system based fundamentally on an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.

As I have just said, such a system would not be a deterrent to murder and would, in the final analysis, only place the onus in dealing with this problem on the Prime Minister and the cabinet who, I am sure as I stand here, would commute the sentences just as their predecessors have done.

[Miss Jewett.]

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief in my support of this motion introduced to the House by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges). I am on record through private members' bills and several speeches which I have given in the House on this issue as being in favour of capital punishment. We on this side will push for the parliamentary reform package which has been introduced by the government House leaders so that we can have this issue brought to a truly free vote in this House of Commons.

Members opposite can say that there was a free vote in 1976, but that is nothing but a bunch of garbage. It was a government sponsored piece of legislation, and cabinet solidarity required that all the cabinet members vote for it. I know that pressure was brought to bear on a good many of the backbench members of the then government with regard to this issue. Some members of the NDP have stated that our Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) is not willing to take a stand on this issue. The Prime Minister has taken a very direct stand, but he is willing to give Parliament an opportunity to speak on the issue.

The Prime Minister is not like some members opposite who, when it comes to issues such as veterans pensions, wish to have Parliament voice its opinion—and I think that is good—but on issues such as capital punishment or issues with which they disagree, they want to muzzle Parliament. The hon. member opposite also said that she does not wish to see this issue put upon the shoulders of the cabinet. There is nothing to stop this Parliament from introducing an amendment to the legislation, when it comes before the House, to have any commutations brought before Parliament. There is nothing which says that the responsibility must be placed upon the shoulders of cabinet. In fact there are members on this side advocating that Parliament have a role in this matter.

Personally, I disagree with that position. I believe that the responsibility, if the death penality is to be commuted in a particular case, should be placed in the hands of cabinet. If this private member's bill does come forward under our new parliamentary reforms, it will give all members an opportunity to speak on the issue.

Once again, I commend the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe for bringing forward this motion and not taking the easy way out by leaving the issue to die. No matter which side one takes on this issue, it will not be pleasant to deal with. At the same time, it is not an issue that can be avoided. Too often when a ticklish issue such as this comes up, members opposite are only too willing to push it under the carpet so that it will not have to be dealt with.

Hopefully we on this side can introduce this matter by way of a private member's bill, as was the case in this House in 1966. Then four members combined to introduce legislation by a special House order pushing for the abolition of capital punishment. By taking this method, cabinet solidarity was not required, nor were members instructed on how they should vote on that piece of legislation.

I wish to conclude by indicating to the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe my support for his motion. It is obvious that the members in opposition to this motion will talk it out. However, some time in the new year when our parliamentary reform package is accepted, we will have an opportunity for a more in depth debate and an opportunity whereby all members can put on record, in the form of a vote, their stand on this very important issue facing the Canadian people.

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, this has been a great day for Parliament. We had the guillotine between three and four, and now we have the rope between four and five.

Mr. Nystrom: That is not a bad line.

Mr. Axworthy: No, it is not a bad line.

The resolution before us could be properly characterized as one of mixed motives. We should not be trifling with this issue in the way in which the hon. member introduced his resolution. He seemed to be far more concerned with matters of coddling prisoners, softness in society, do-gooders, bleeding hearts, and all those kinds of totally spurious judgments about what he thinks is wrong in society.

Somehow that has become confused with the introduction of the death penalty. Somehow all those questions of what he thinks are loose morality will be solved if we start hanging people, and somehow all those questions of licentiousness and degradation which he thinks are sweeping the country will be solved by putting someone in a chamber or on a scaffold! That is not the kind of debate that we should be conducting. If we wish to debate the return of capital punishment, then we should be debating what it is, a punishment for murder.

Capital punishment will not solve the problems of softness in society, the problems of coddling prisoners, or of dealing with all the other kinds of apprehensions of the hon. member. It will deal with the simple fact of murder and the punishment for it. Let us define our terms properly and not confuse the issue. The problem is that if we allow the terms of reference posed by the hon. member to be used, then we will be debating the wrong issue. We should be debating the causes of this issue.

No one would argue that there may be breakdown in the normal order or the fabric of the family, but it will not be solved by representing to Canadians that a simple act of execution is the panacea for all these problems. If the hon. member thinks that that will solve all those problems, then he is sorrily mistaken because, in fact, it will add to the problems. People will say, "Now it is all over. I can relax because they brought back the scaffold and all these problems will disappear". These problems will not disappear because capital punishment has been reintroduced. These problems will exist and continue to exist, because there are other reasons for their cause which are totally unrelated to that act of murder which the hon. member would like to punish with another act of murder.

We should be aware of what we are debating in this resolution. We are not debating the softness in our society. We are debating a very specific solution to a very specific problem and, as a result, the onus is on members opposite who will support this bill to show why a change is necessary.

There is a great cry that Parliament should speak on this issue. Well, Parliament has spoken. No debate took more time than the debate on this issue in the House three years ago. Should we have a revolving door Parliament where every time five newly elected members can review the laws again? Parliament has debated that issue, and it is disrespectful for our members here to suggest that the members at the time were being frivolous in their concerns. I have read those debates, and it is very disrespectful to those members.

● (1650)

We have the same debates going on in the provincial legislature in which I sat at the time. We are debating the same thing simultaneously. It is an issue of some importance. I do not think it is proper to say somehow that it was an act of intimidation. The last speaker suggested that there was arm-twisting and acts of intimidation.

An hon. Member: Prove it.

Mr. Axworthy: That is what you have to do. You have to prove that. Otherwise your resolution is really unwarranted at this time.

I have heard members here say that public opinion says it is the right answer. At the same time I have listened to Conservative members say that they do not give a damn about public opinion when it comes to PetroCan, but all of a sudden they are very sensitive to public opinion on capital punishment. What are you choosing? Those public opinion polls you want to read? If you want to read a public opinion poll, I suggest you read the one that came out last Tuesday which shows that this government is declining in credibility. That is the one you should be reading because people really do not trust what you are up to any more. That is the poll you should be looking at. People want a serious government getting at serious problems. I would suggest that they would be much more effective, Mr. Speaker, if members opposite would spend their time introducing resolutions to deal with many of the social and economic conditions in this country and not worry about this particular problem. It has been debated, and it has been decided by this Parliament.

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Axworthy: Our filibustering is simply an act to defend the rights of this Parliament. That is not filibustering. That is all it has been.

If one gets down to the issue, the onus of truth is on members opposite. They must show, somehow or other, by abolishing capital punishment in this Parliament that that has added to the incidence of murder, that it has added to the insecurity of society, and that it has endangered safety. Yet, the member opposite in his resolution did not offer one shred of evidence to prove that. He did not show one single fact to demonstrate his case other than to say that he is appealing to common sense. Common sense is something that each of us tries to apply.

In effect, all he said was that this is somehow a nefarious act, by a bunch of elitists and do-gooders, to impose something upon the population. What he is talking about are members of this Parliament in a previous session. Those are the elitists he is talking about who were duly elected by their electors to come to this Parliament and act on their own conscience. Those are the elitists he is talking about. They are the ones who imposed abolition. They are not a bunch of sophisticates up in the penthouses of Broadview-Greenwood who imposed it, they are members of this Parliament who represent urban and rural ridings and who represent people from east to west. They are the ones who voted to abolish it.

Let us get down to the facts. Where is the evidence and where is the proof that the member is prepared to put forward?

An hon. Member: We can do it.

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to see it. Unless the member is going to manufacture facts—

Mr. Elzinga: You are blind.

Mr. Axworthy: There may be a certain bias on my point; I like to look at the facts. In the last ten years the rate of murder in society both with and without capital punishment has been about the same. Furthermore, there is another interesting fact we should point out. In the latest report put out by Amnesty International—an organization respected world-wide, it has defended civil rights and liberties, an organization of which members opposite and members on this side are members—it shows which countries have been moving forward and which countries have been moving backward in terms of abolition.

It is important to ask each and every one of us in which kind of country we would prefer to be. Would you prefer to be in a country like Norway, like Denmark, like The Netherlands, like West Germany or like Great Britain, all of which have had long traditions of respect of human rights and liberties and a high degree of interest in issues of human responsibility, or do you want to be put in the same category as the Irans, Nicaraguas, and the Bolivias—no aspersions on them—but they are countries which are emerging and evolving into more mature societies? That is one of the tests we have to face in this Parliament from time to time. We must apply certain measurements upon our own degree of maturity in society.

One test of maturity is, are we prepared to stand up against raw emotion? Are we prepared to provide laws which do not allow interference of natural fears, and frustrations to take hold? In my opinion, it would be much more important for members of this House to go to their constituents and explain, saying, "Yes, there are some serious difficulties that create insecurities in our society that have nothing to do with hanging or not hanging."

It has to do with the kind of societies we are building. We are allowing our communities to break down. In many cases we are allowing the fabrics that hold us together to be unravelled. We should be concerned and worried about those kinds of problems. We should be paying attention to them in this Parliament. Instead, we are spending our time arguing about capital punishment as a cure for those problems. I would ask members opposite to think about that for a moment, to bring in questions about what do you do to bring back the family and give it a sense of stability in this community. That is an important issue. Yet, what we are doing is allowing things to unravel day by day. We see in front of us the enlarging growth of children with disabilities who are not being cared for. We are allowing medicare money to be spent, not in the proper treatment of health but in building roads to Mafeking. That is true.

An hon. Member: You spoil your argument.

Mr. Axworthy: I am not spoiling my argument. We are allowing the social priorities of this country to be put on the back burner. We are not addressing ourselves to the important social issues of this country. We have this kind of macho-ism which prides itself on its political toughness. When I hear the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) say they are going to tighten their belts and pull in their girth, I know who they are talking about. They are not talking about the rich and powerful society, they are talking about those who cannot defend themselves. That is where the real problems are.

I would be much more satisfied if members opposite—

An hon. Member: We are not here to satisfy you.

Mr. Axworthy: —were concerned about conditions in the jails. I say to hon. members you are going to have lots of time to debate this. As I said to one member before, if you want me to come in here and debate it, I will come in at any time. Let us debate it together and not through interruptions.

This resolution is the wrong solution for the issues and concerns that we have. The onus of proof has not been provided. We have not heard of anything except to hear "that is the way we feel". Surely, it is not enough to hear "that is the way we feel" as a basis for an argument. Surely we are more rational than that when we come to make such a momentous decision as this.

A member opposite suggested that we should bring it into Parliament to be decided. I do not know where he got the idea, but I can see Friday afternoons being used now for questions such as whether to hang or not. We are reverting back to the days of the Roman forums where it is thumbs up or thumbs down in Parliament on Friday afternoons, as to whether that guy will go or not. What are we talking about? How quickly can we reverse ourselves? How far backward and how quickly do these people want to go? Are they not prepared to say that civilization deserves better than that?

I do not have to repeat the arguments in this House that have been used many times before about the rights and responsibilities of a member of Parliament. When we have to go back to Edmund Burke, who was a dignified Conservative, to use his arguments in a speech at Bristol to say that it is not the temporary ways of opinion polls or even necessarily the insistent demands that are what are important in—

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON TAXING ADDITIONAL REVENUES OF OIL COMPANIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, December 7, the Prime Minister made a statement in the House to the effect that the government would tax away 100 per cent of additional revenues accruing to the oil companies as a result of any oil price increases. This sent the Toronto Stock Exchange oil price index crashing 109 points and caused panic in the Toronto and New York investment communities before the right hon. gentleman's office could clarify the position. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Verchères (Mr. Loiselle):

That in light of the Prime Minister's continuing obsession with contradictory and confusing statements, from now on the North American investment community be instructed to check with the office of the Prime Minister before believing anything he says.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

ENTRENCHMENT IN BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Today marks the thirtieth anniversary of the abolition of appeals to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of Great Britain, thus making the Supreme Court of Canada the ultimate appeal tribunal for Canadian law. What is not generally recognized is that the Supreme Court of Canada, unlike the supreme court of the United States, is not a constitutional court but merely a creation of Parliament and, therefore, subject to abolition by an act of this legislature.

In order to provide our supreme tribunal with formal as well as substantial independence from political institutions so that it can enhance its role both as a court of appeal and as a constitutional arbiter, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan):

That this House urge the government to introduce a constitutional amendment making the Supreme Court a constitutional court fully protected by entrenchment in the British North America Act.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, unanimous consent of the House is required before the motion can be presented. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

FUNDS TO RESTORE FULL SERVICE TO NORTHERN COMMUNITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the residents of communities in the Mackenzie Delta area are experiencing severe hardship as a result of power shortages caused by faulty generating equipment, and whereas the Northern Canada Power Commission has blamed its inability to properly repair and maintain this equipment on lack of funds, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That emergency funds be provided to NCPC so that they can immediately carry out necessary repairs and restore full service to the affected communities.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed. Is there unanimous consent that it be presented?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER BY U.S. CHEMICAL COMPANY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

• (1410)

In view of the fact that a company by the name of S.C.A. in the United States has been dumping thousands of gallons of PCBs and other harmful chemicals into the Niagara River on a daily basis, and in view of the fact that the continuation of this method of disposal has a potentially harmful and lasting effect on the health of all citizens, Canadian and American, who live along the river, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Froese):

That the government express its concern that the S.C.A. Company of the United States has been dumping thousands of gallons of PCBs and other harmful chemicals into the Niagara River on a daily basis, and urge the government of the United States to look directly into this matter and take what action is necessary so as to alleviate the potential danger of such a continued disposal method of harmful chemicals.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate, under the terms of Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SUGGESTED DEBATE ON OIL SUPPLIES FOR EASTERN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that in a letter dated November 6, 1979, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) gave us assurances as to the gas and heating oil supplies for eastern Canada; considering the many inconsistent statements made by the Prime Minister since then; considering that the people of Quebec and the maritimes are facing uncertainty this winter, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That, in the opinion of this House, an emergency debate should be held on oil supplies for this winter, in order to review and ascertain the situation by examining proposals or measures to ensure sufficient supplies to meet the needs of eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, unanimous consent of the House is required before the motion can be presented. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

CUMBERLAND, ONT.—PROTESTED SALE OF LAND BY FARM CREDIT CORPORATION FOR NON-AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that the Farm Credit Corporation uses its status as a Crown corporation as an excuse to ignore municipal bylaws, especially zoning bylaws, as happened recently in Cumberland where the Farm Credit Corporation divided a piece of agricultural land to resell the lots at residential and speculative rates, contrary to the zoning bylaws of that municipality; considering that it is both urgent and pressing that this practice be stopped, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

That the Minister of Agriculture, who is responsible for the Farm Credit Corporation, order the corporation to refrain forthwith from such practice and that a letter be sent to assure the municipality of Cumberland that such action will not be repeated.

Mr. Speaker: Under Standing Order 43, such a motion cannot be introduced for debate without unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA COUNCIL

GRANTS TO TALONBOOKS LTD., VANCOUVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my motion, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity comes in light of the fact that Talonbooks Ltd., of Vancouver, has basically existed on Canada Council grants and has published much material which is greatly questioned by Canadians. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That this Parliament urge the Canada Council not to announce a final decision respecting extended grants to Talonbooks Ltd. until such time as both the council and the publishing company have appeared before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

I might add that I understand the Canada Council will be reviewing that in the next three days.

Mr. Speaker: The motion as presented cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENERGY

SUPPLY OF GASOLINE TO INDEPENDENT DEALERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that independent gasoline dealers are being unfairly cut off their supplies by large multinational oil companies—specifically, 41 independent service stations will be out of gas this week in the Ottawa area because of these unfair market practices by Gulf Oil—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources immediately investigate the current marketing practices of large oil companies in cutting off supplies to independent gasoline dealers, in order to stop their unfair and unethical practices.

Mr. Speaker: The motion can be introduced for debate, under the terms of Standing Order 43, only upon unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON TAXING ADDITIONAL REVENUES OF OIL COMPANIES—EFFECT ON TSE

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As we know, the Toronto Stock Exchange oil index dropped down 109 points in one day, which is a 4 per cent swing from high to low, due to the Prime Minister's incredible and unprecedented statement during question period on Friday that he would——ensure that virtually 100 per cent of the revenues that would go to the companies as a result of increases in energy prices will, in fact, be regained by the Government of Canada—

● (1415)

Will the Prime Minister be announcing any further economic measures in relation to corporate taxes?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is seriously interested, I suggest that he pay attention to questions in the House and also be present here for the budget tomorrow.

Mr. Hopkins: That will be a clear indication to the Canadian people of how well the Prime Minister of Canada answers questions in the House. I have a supplementary question. Is the Prime Minister aware of the serious effect of such rash statements, and will he try to break the stock market single-handedly again soon with such irresponsible and careless timing of his remarks?

Mr. Clark: The answer to the first part of the question is yes, and the answer to the second part is no.

ENERGY SELF-SUFFICIENCY BY 1990—EXPORT OF NATURAL GAS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and it relates to the often stated proposal by his government of the intention to reach energy self-sufficiency by 1990.

I would ask the Prime Minister how he rationalizes the sale of 3.75 trillion cubic feet of natural gas to the United States with the statement by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources on oil and gas supplies of November, 1979, stating that additional sales to the United States would make Atlantic Canada continue to be dependent upon foreign oil supplies.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to which statement the hon. member is referring. It may well have referred to the statement of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources with regard to heating oil, or to oil, and not to natural gas. In any event, since it came down in November, it was a statement which predated the publication of the National Energy Board report which indicated that the amounts recommended for export to the United States were clearly surplus to Canadian needs, and that those Canadian needs to which they were surplus included the possibility of significant substitution in eastern Canada.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister about his statement on Friday not to extend the natural gas pipeline to the maritime provinces, thereby making the maritime provinces continually dependent upon offshore oil supplies and, once again, putting the Atlantic region in an inferior position to the rest of Canada.

I would ask the Prime Minister why his government does not extend, right now, the natural gas pipeline into the maritime provinces, thereby enhancing the possibility of an early extraction of natural gas from the Sable Island area and reducing the dependence of the maritime provinces on offshore oil.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member's misrepresentation of what I said was not intentional. Our position is that if there is a desire on the part of the maritime provinces to have a gas pipeline extended beyond Quebec City, we are prepared to consider that with the utmost seriousness. Indeed, if they agree, we would be prepared to go ahead with such an extension beyond Quebec City.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: But we are not going to force down the throats of Atlantic Canada a pipeline that they do not want. So we are waiting for the agreement of the Atlantic provinces.

Oral Questions

PROVISION OF NATURAL GAS TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in a press release of December 4, the Foothills Pipe Lines group put forward some projections that there would be labour shortages in some of the key pipeline areas in eastern Canada and in western Canada where the Alaska pipeline and the Q and M pipeline and others would be laid down at the same time.

In view of the government's program to substitute gas for oil in eastern Canada, would the government give the assurance that these labour shortages will not delay the provision of natural gas for eastern Canada?

● (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will certainly take account of labour shortages and act to try to anticipate them. I am not sure whether the hon. member is suggesting that the position of the Liberal party is to oppose the Q and M pipeline and to oppose substitutions of natural gas for oil.

STOCKS OF HOME HEATING FUEL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In its Friday statement on oil product supplies, the National Energy Board revealed that not only at the end of October were stocks in Canada of home heating fuel down by 6.3 per cent but, incredibly enough, exports from Canada for the same period of time were up by some 27 per cent. In a statement last Friday, the Prime Minister said the following:

We knew all along that shortages were possible.

He was referring to shortages of fuel oil this winter. In view of that statement, how could his government, during the six months it has been in office, possibly have permitted the exports to have taken place?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in some of the cases where exports took place, they took place as a result, as I understand it, of the fulfilment of a condition having to do with the construction of certain refinery capacity in plants and in areas where there was not likely to be, and indeed will not be, any shortage this winter.

I think the hon. member will understand the reports to which we were referring from the National Energy Board are reports that give us, as up-to-date as possible, an assessment by the National Energy Board of the possibility of shortages in a particular region at a particular point in time. The latest information is that there is the possibility now of some interruptions, although they can be avoided if there is control upon exports and if there is conservation practiced. My understanding is that companies which had been in the practice of exporting previously have not been exporting since October or November.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister confirm that had his government been on its toes for the past six months in this regard, instead of being faced with a 6 per cent shortfall of home heating fuel in Canada, compared to last year, in fact we would have had a 6 per cent surplus?

If he will admit that, could he possibly explain, in the case of Irving Company, why that company was permitted to increase its exports very substantially during the precise period to which the Prime Minister referred in his comment on Friday, that the rest of us, particularly in Ontario and eastern Canada, could be anticipating shortages?

Mr. Clark: Yes, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I reject the invitation to make the statement that the hon member extended to me. With regard to the Irving plant, my understanding is that in November, Irving had very little in the way of exports; that in terms of Irving's service areas, no area has been short of heating oil or heavy oil; that last month Irving was denied a number of export licences because there was not a great surplus.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, there are no shortages yet, but it has been the Prime Minister and others who have warned about the shortages which will come this winter. Because I checked just before noon today, would the Prime Minister confirm that the National Energy Board now is still permitting exports to take place, and that it has before it applications for permits which will allow companies to export more home heating fuel later on this winter? In answering those questions, and I think the answer will be unequivocally in the affirmative—

An hon. Member: Then why ask?

Mr. Broadbent: —could the Prime Minister explain to the House and to the people of Canada why he has not issued an instruction to the NEB that no more exports of home heating fuel should take place in Canada this year?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I will check into those matters on which the Leader of the New Democratic Party has informed himself, but they are details on which I have not yet been informed. I will not only look into the particular questions the Leader of the New Democratic Party has asked; I will also look into the existence of any other conditions that, if the case he suggests is in fact true, would have led the National Energy Board to make that kind of authorization.

REQUEST FOR PRECISE DETAILS ON SUPPLY SITUATION FOR INDEPENDENTS

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is also directed to the right hon. Prime Minister, naturally deals with the energy issue. In his letter to us which was included as an appendix to Hansard of last November 6, the Prime Minister indicated the steps his government had taken to reassure the people of Quebec and the maritime provinces, that is to say, eastern Canada, concerning oil supply security.

He also indicated the steps his government had taken to maintain quotas and ensure supply for independent distributors. Could the right hon. Prime Minister advise us, taking into account everything that has been said over the past few days, where we stand now as far as supply for independent distributors is concerned?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would be necessary for me to check the exact situation of the independent distributors. I do not have the relevant information with me today. I should like, however, to mention to the hon. member that in the letters I wrote him I indicated the following:

Should we be faced with a disruption of oil supply sufficient to cause a national emergency, then I can assure you that the government is prepared to use the powers available to it under the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 to conserve supplies and to provide for their equitable distribution.

FUEL OIL—REQUEST FOR STUDY OF REDUCTIONS IN SUPPLY FOR INDEPENDENTS

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he was informed that independent distributors had their quotas reduced by almost half for December alone. I have an example for him. An independent distributor who had a quota of 98,000 gallons of heating oil had it reduced to 58,000 gallons in December, which means that his quota was reduced by 40,000 gallons. I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he is prepared to inform the House today that his government will take every measure necessary to correct the situation forthwith.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): First, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to review and consider the situation referred to by the hon. member. Second, last week I indicated that the government intends to announce the names of the members of the supply board later this week.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PRINTING AND MAILING OF 1979 INCOME TAX FORMS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader in his capacity as Minister of National Revenue. Not long before the House opened today, it was alleged to me that not only have the personal income tax forms for the 1979 tax year not yet been mailed out, but the printing of them has not yet been completed. This clashes with what the minister told the House on November 28, when he used words to the effect that they had been printed and the mailing was to be completed by early last week.

Could he tell the House, now, exactly what the state of affairs is and, in particular, if they were printed, the exact dates the printing was carried out, and if they were mailed, the exact dates on which they were mailed?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member the exact dates, but when I made the statement in the House during the course of the debate on Bill C-20, the forms were in fact ready. I am advised that the mailing has begun in respect of those forms. I want to assure the hon. member—and he should know, as a former minister of national revenue—that the decision had to be made when it was made, and the action taken when it was taken.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, since this is important in terms of the vote we will be taking on the closure motion later this day, I would ask the President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue if he could give us the exact information before that vote is taken. Exactly when was the printing of these forms completed; exactly how many forms were mailed out, and on what date, and exactly how many forms remain to be mailed out? The minister should know that there is no absolute legal requirement within the law insisting that the procedure had to be carried out, as he said when he spoke in the House.

• (1430)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, as a former minister of national revenue, ought to know that the Department of National Revenue would act on behalf of the provinces with respect to property tax credit legislation, as it does with the child tax credit. These refunds would be delayed if the steps which I outlined in my speech on Bill C-20 were not taken. These steps were taken for administrative necessity, and the hon. member, being a former minister, ought not to be so silly as to deny that they are necessary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING DUTY-FREE ZONE BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last July he gave us to understand that the formula to establish a duty-free zone between Canada and the United States deserved serious consideration. Can the minister say whether he is still in favour of such a duty-free zone between Canada and the United States, and does his position reflect the position of the government?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have never said whether I favour a duty-free zone between Canada and the United States or any other kind of zone. What I suggested, and what I suggest again today, is that it is time for Canadians to assess very carefully the options that they have for the future, including questions such as whether we should have freer trade between us and the United States, a North American common market, or a policy of more Canadian independence and more Canadian control over Canadian industry.

I have indicated that these are matters which should be seriously studied and on which the public should be informed so that they can make a conscious decision in the next few years as to our economic future. What I favour is a complete study, a weighing of the costs and benefits and a conscious decision by the Canadian people as to what direction we should take.

INQUIRY WHETHER HOUSE COMMITTEE WILL STUDY ADVANTAGES OF PROPOSAL

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. If the minister is so interested, can he tell us if he has formed a committee to consider the pros and cons of that matter and, if so, when can the House expect to receive its recommendations?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I am in favour of is not proceeding blindly down a path which leads to we know not where, as the last administration did. I am in favour of adopting a course consciously. No committee has yet been appointed, but I have asked the officials of my department to have a preliminary look at these questions and to prepare the data.

I agree with the Senate committee which studied this issue, and the Economic Council of Canada, that these are matters which should be seriously looked at before we decide what is the most reasonable way to determine our future on these matters.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

CONSIDERATION OF INCREASED EXPORTS OF GAS TO U.S. IN RETURN FOR MARKETS FOR MANUFACTURED GOODS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Five weeks ago, in answer to questions in this House, the Prime Minister stated that the effect of the Buy American act on Canadian exports of urban transportation equipment was a very serious concern to the government, and that the matter was on the agenda for discussion with President Carter.

The Minister of State for International Trade stated in the House the next day that he had discussed the matter that very morning with the U.S. ambassador. Last Thursday morning the Gazette reported that Bombardier may have to move its 800-employee transit vehicle manufacturing operation to the United States because of that act. Last Thursday evening, the government announced increased gas exports to the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Berger: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I said, last Thursday evening the government announced increased gas exports to the United States.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Berger: Was any consideration given by the government to tying one to the other, that is, to provide increased gas exports to the U.S. if they provide us with markets for our manufactured goods?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of State for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite right, that the possible move of Bombardier to the United States is a very real concern of this government. It is a matter on which I had discussion in Washington last Thursday. To specifically answer the question on whether consideration has been given to tying the two matters together, the answer is no.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of State for International Trade. After the minister's discussions with the United States, would he now give an indication as to our chances of obtaining amendments to that act?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I think that there is a very good chance that we will be able to settle this matter on a satisfactory basis for the urban transportation industry. Our ambassador in Washington has had discussions with the new administration for the department of transportation in the United States. He advised me last week that there is a good opportunity for a satisfactory agreement. At this stage, I do not have any details which I can put before the House, but as soon as I have something I will do so.

HIGH INTEREST RATES AND GOVERNMENT CUTBACKS— DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON CULTURAL ENTERPRISES

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the urbane, refined and cultured Minister of Finance.

Mr. Knowles: He isn't here.

An hon. Member: Did they change ministers?

Mr. Rose: According to press reports, a number of labour-intensive Canadian cultural enterprises, including the Stratford Festival, smaller theatre companies and the Canadian book publishing industry, are reeling under government cutbacks, high interest rates or a combination of both. Is the minister aware of the tragic effect this policy is having on the Canadian book publishing industry and its employees—10 per cent of whom have been laid off already—and what contingency plans has the government to ensure employment stability within that industry and the survival of Canadian book publishing?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have greater faith in the Canadian book publishing industry than does the hon. gentleman. My seatmate has already announced a policy to help the Canadian book publishing industry. As far as the high interest rate condition is concerned, that of course has its effect on all businesses. We are hoping for improvement as soon as our policies get a grip on the economy. I can assure the hon. gentleman that his worries and concerns are shared by the government, but we have more optimism for the future of the industry than he does.

FUNDING OF THEATRE COMPANIES

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I will extend the minister's sympathy to the industry and assure them that we know that the government has a grip on that industry. My supplementary question is to the Secretary of State. Have any officials of the Stratford Festival approached him with regard to funding discrimination, and is the minister considering reallocating the $10 million budget for the National Arts Centre in Ottawa to assist the smaller theatre companies across Canada, in general, and Stratford in particular?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Stratford Theatre Company—a very important theatre company to all of Canada—the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations has raised this matter with me many times. I have had meetings with representatives of the Professional Association of Canadian Theatres in an attempt to develop some long-term and positive policies with respect to professional theatres across Canada. I think we are making good progress in that regard.

COMMUNICATIONS

PROPOSED CHANGE IN BILLING BY BELL CANADA

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. It stems from recent discussions which I have had with Bell Canada and the CRTC that there is an impending likelihood that a study by Bell Canada will take place to determine a new means of billing Canadian consumers. My concern is that this—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Domm: My question is, would the minister use the authority of his office to ensure that this new study is not a means by Bell Canada to increase consumer rates?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the proposed experiment by Bell Canada of usage-sensitive pricing is a controversial topic and one with considerable implications in terms of possible increased charges to individual subscribers. Even though there has been no clear decision as yet on whether or not the proposal and the experiment put forward by Bell two months ago is acceptable, I will inquire of CRTC to make sure that there is no momentum given to this issue which would, in effect, contribute to a decision that would not be in the public interest.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED WITHDRAWAL OF GOVERNMENT FROM AID PROGRAM FOR VIETNAMESE REFUGEES—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I will put my question to the acting minister.

It relates to the Vietnamese refugee program. Last week, when the Minister of Employment and Immigration appeared before the committee and announced the end of the Vietnamese refugee aid program, he said that he had consulted with his provincial counterparts, including Mr. Couture, the Quebec minister of immigration, and that they had given him their support. Mr. Couture denies that these consultations ever took place and he says that he is opposed to the withdrawal of the program. My question to the minister is this: Is Mr. Couture lying on this subject? Would the minister be willing to take his advice and restore the program the way it was?

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that very important question. As I understand it, Mr. Couture was concerned about the fact that we not receive some 10,000 refugees which was the understanding of all the parties involved. In terms of who is telling the truth, I must state that I stand by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who indicated that he had consulted with the provinces and they were in agreement with his plan, given the fact that the total number involved is 50,000.

As the hon. member knows, there was a recent release, under the date of December 6, which has now placed more emphasis on the private sector in order that moneys can be freed to assist those who are suffering in Cambodia which, in all, is still part of the refugee question. In other words, we had the 50,000 limit, but we are involved with the Kampucheans and also with other refugees.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF AID PROGRAM

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When he appeared before the committee, the minister also said that he had consulted with and been given support by the private sector. We know now that they are almost unanimously opposed to the proposed changes in the program. Therefore, what we have here are two instances of ineffective consultations and one instance of denied consultations, namely, by Mr. Couture. Will the minister undertake new consultations, or will he restore this excellent program to what it was before?

[English]

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think it has already been indicated by the minister that there is, indeed, a great need in Cambodia. We have not given up the refugee program one bit, but there are two prongs to it: one happens to be the boat people, and the other happens to be those in Cambodia who are suffering from lack of food, who are in need of temporary shelter and who are in need of medical aid. Therefore, this is a good cause.

In terms of reversing ourselves, I have no knowledge at this time whether the minister will or will not, but my understanding is that he intends to proceed in accordance with the press release, which he has now on his desk, dated December 6.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REPORTED TAKEOVER OF NEWSPAPER CHAIN BY ARGUS CORPORATION

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. There are now confirmed reports that the Argus Corporation is proposing a major takeover bid of the FP newspaper chain. Under these circumstances, we would have one of the largest economic conglomerates in the country taking control of one of the major newspaper chains.

I should like to ask the minister if the government has expressed any concern over this action in relation to how it would affect the public interest of this country. In particular, has the minister instructed the director of combines investigations to undertake an inquiry as to whether this proposed takeover would be in the public interest, and whether the government has any involvement in the case?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has expressed concern. The director of investigations will certainly look at this matter.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Axworthy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering the imminence of the takeover bid, does the minister have any timetable in mind as to when the director of combines investigations will report? Does the minister also intend to make a public statement about the government's concern regarding this proposed takeover, and does he intend to take any immediate action to declare a moratorium on the takeover until the director has had an opportunity to fully assess and study the implications?

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the director of investigations is an independent office. I imagine the director will require some time before he will be in a position to indicate whether a formal investigation is required.

DAMAGE TO POINTE AU PIC WHARF—REQUEST THAT REPAIR BE EFFECTED AS SOON AS POSSIBLE

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): In view of the absence of the Minister of Transport, the minister of state for maritime transport and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, I shall put my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I should like to know whether the government has been advised of the very extensive damage caused to the Pointe-au-Pic wharf, which is one of the most important economic factors in that area, and whether the government would be willing to consider allocating special funds to undertake the urgent repairs to that marine structure with a view to saving this economic tool which is of such importance to the riding of Charlevoix?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss the matter with the minister.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER QUÉBECAIR GROUP WILL BE FAVOURED IN PURCHASE OF NORDAIR

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): In view of the absence of the same people, Mr. Speaker, my question will be directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Since he is an expert on easy solutions, and since the Gagnon group has now withdrawn its offer to buy Nordair, and now that Québecair is the only group left, does the Prime Minister intend to announce to the Canadian people before the holiday season— before Christmas—that the Québecair group's offer to purchase Nordair will be looked upon favourably?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the sale of Nordair is a matter which is now under consideration by the government. The Minister of Justice discussed the matter with some of the interested parties in the Nordair charter before the announcement alluded to by the hon. member. I have not yet had a chance to discuss that conversation with the Minister of Justice. I should like to do so with both him and the Minister of Transport.

INQUIRY WHETHER EARLY DECISION WILL BE MADE TO SETTLE PROBLEM

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary, now that there is only one group from Quebec, and that the main reason the Minister of Justice is involved in the matter is that, as minister representing Quebec concerning his counterpart, he takes care of Quebec problems, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether, now that a serious group has offered to purchase Nordair, he and the Minister of Transport—and not only the Minister of Justice who sits in the other place—will reach a decision so that the matter can be settled? They have been in government for six months now, so a decision could now be expected and now that the situation is easy to solve, and since the Prime Minister likes easy solutions, will he soon be in a position to make a statement to the House?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is now under consideration by the government. As the hon. member has just recognized, only three or four days have elapsed since the situation changed with regard to Quebeckers interested in Nordair. With the change in circumstances, we shall now probably look into the matter in depth this week.

CRIMINAL CODE

REVIEW OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the President of the Privy Council? In view of the fact that a notice of motion has already been introduced by the Solicitor General which would give the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the authority to completely review and amend the whole aspect of gun control legislation, I should like to ask whether the President of the Privy Council would tell us on what date the committee will be given the necessary authority to delve into this legislation?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is unlikely, given the calendar of the House between now and the expected adjournment date for Christmas, that we could deal with the matter before then. It would be my intention to discuss the matter with the House leaders in terms of time. It is our intention to proceed with the reference as quickly as we can after we come back in the New Year.

ENERGY

SENIOR CITIZENS' DISCOUNT ON HOME HEATING FUEL

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. It is based on the fact that some of the multionational oil companies, Imperial Oil and Shell in particular, have given notice to their agents in Canada to terminate the two cents per gallon discount on home heating fuel that has been available to senior citizens.

In view of the fact that this action must be offensive to the Prime Minister, coming as it does just after the government has talked to Imperial Oil about an increase in the price of gasoline, will the Prime Minister, either himself or through his ministers, make strong representations to the oil companies in this country to continue to make available to senior citizens a discount on heating fuel?

● (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the information the hon. member gives the House: it is the first I have heard of it. I am concerned about it, and I will be in touch with the companies that have been cited.

As the hon. member knows, it is the intention of the government to ensure as much as we can that actions which the government takes with regard to increases in fuel costs will not fall disproportionately upon the elderly of the country, but that, indeed, they will be helped by government programs. I would think as a matter of general principle that should be followed by the private sector as well.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

OPEN HOUSE CANADA PROGRAM—ALLEGED TRANSPORTATION MONOPOLY TO CP AIR

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and deals with the Open House Canada program, an excellent program established by the former government which enables a great many young Canadians to visit their country and meet other young people of different backgrounds. Can the minister tell us whether it is true that his department has decided that CP Air instead of Air Canada shall provide transportation for these young people? If so, why; on what criteria has the minister based his decision, and does this decision not run counter to the government's policy of favouring Air Canada when public funds are involved?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that the hon. member is misinformed.

FINANCE

RECOVERY OF TAX EXPENDITURE UNDER BILL C-20

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the government's determination to ram Bill C-20 through Parliament, thereby depriving members of a full opportunity to put questions to the minister and to come forward with reasonable amendments, can the minister inform this House how he intends to recover the mammoth tax expenditure under the bill? Will it be by the introduction of capital gains tax on the sale of principal residences of Canadians, or will it be by scratching the registered home ownership savings plan? How will the Canadian people pay for the election goodies?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was certainly scratching when he made those suggestions. We are hopeful that hon. gentlemen opposite will stop their obstruction of this tax credit legislation in the next few days so that it can go through before Christmas. The way it will be paid for is this: the taxpayers of Canada who are now home owners, who pay federal taxes, who have mortgages or who pay or do not pay municipal taxes, will retain in their pockets next year $575 million that they would otherwise have had to pay the government in taxes. However, if hon. gentlemen opposite had their way, the taxpayers of Canada would not be in a position to do that and would pay $575 million more next year, $1,200 million the year following, up to $2,900 million. I hope they will see reason and allow the taxpayers to keep that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

ACHIEVING OF LEVEL ESSENTIAL TO ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN 1980s

Hon. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. At committee, the National Defence officials indicated that the cost of the new fighter aircraft in 1982 dollars would be approximately $3.5 billion. What guarantees can the minister give Canadians that such a massive expenditure of taxpayers' funds will help to achieve the level of research and development that his government has stated is so essential to the economic development of Canada in the eighties?

Hon. Heward Grafftey (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that officials of my department are on the review panel for the new fighter aircraft. We are ascertaining to as great an extent as possible that research and development offsets and technological transfers will be maximized as much as possible.

Let me repeat, that my officials are monitoring this matter very, very closely. I appreciate the hon. member's interest. I can assure him that everything possible is being done with either of these aircraft—as he knows, the choice has not yet been made between the aircraft—to ensure that the R and D offsets are as great as possible.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, all available information indicates that there will not be one ounce of Canadian technology in these fighter aircraft. Can the minister indicate how much indigenous, high-Canadian technology will be in the aircraft and how much will be simply paint-by-numbers or work-to-drawings type of assembly?

Mr. Grafftey: I am sure that when the last government narrowed the choice down to these two, they did not agree with what the hon. member has just said. One is never satisfied: I am the first to admit, with the hon. member, that we are never satisfied with the totality or the quality of the R and D offsets. But we are making sure, by monitoring this matter as closely as possible, that they are going to be maximized as much as possible in terms of R and D done in Canada from whoever gets this contract.

POST OFFICE

DIRECTIVE FOR TWO PER CENT REDUCTION OF STAFF

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. The President of the Treasury Board has issued a directive for a 2 per cent reduction of staff in each department. In the Post Office, these cuts would mean a requirement of about 3,600 person-years in the remaining four or five months of this year.

Since the Postmaster General told us last week in committee that, and I quote, he cannot tolerate a 2 per cent cut in person-years in the Post Office, because if he did he could not even maintain the limited service that he is trying to maintain under very difficult conditions—that was his public answer to the Treasury Board—can the Postmaster General tell us if he has received a favourable answer to his ultimatum to the Treasury Board making the Post Office an exception to this arbitrary directive?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the statement that I made was to a committee of this House. That statement and that information stands. It is the best assessment that we in the Post Office can give it. It has been transmitted to my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board. There will no doubt be discussions. I remain of the opinion, and it is soundly based, that a 2 per cent across the board cut in person-years is not possible at this time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED CONTRIBUTION OF DEPARTMENT TO REDUCTION IN POSTAL SERVICE

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we did not, of course, get a clear and specific answer from the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the promise made by this government to eliminate 60,000 civil service jobs, could the Postmaster General tell us what has been his department's contribution up to now to this generous promise as a result of which postal services are eliminated or reduced just about everywhere in Canada?

[English]

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give an exact answer except to say this: under my direction there has been strict adherence to the principle which was enunciated earlier by this party, and then by this government, that there would be no reduction in person-years except by attrition. I have pointed out, as the hon. member well knows, publicly to a committee of this House that the difficulty in the Post Office is that we are having a serious problem in maintaining service and that it is not a department of government that can withstand severe cuts in personnel.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. We have now heard this minister indicate twice that he has taken positions that are diametrically opposed to the decisions or the policies of this government, first in terms of opening the mail and now in terms of the 2 per cent cutback. In view of the fact the minister has made public declarations on two of the major issues that affect his department, should he not be successful in persuading the members of the cabinet of the position that he has made public is he ready to submit his resignation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is, of course, hypothetical by its very nature.

AGRICULTURE

COMPENSATION FOR POTATO GROWERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns a very serious problem in the Atlantic provinces, namely, the fact that many potato growers in the Atlantic provinces have seen all or part of their crop rot because they cannot find markets for it. This is the third year in a row that potatoes have been sold at less than the cost of production.

Can the minister guarantee the producers in that part of Canada that there will be compensation so that they will at least get back the cost of production? Can he assure the House there will be a pay-out under the stabilization plan to the potato farmers in eastern Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member touches on a very serious problem. I have answered questions on this very subject over the last number of days. As of today, no, I cannot stand here and say there will be a stabilization payment for the 1978 crop year; nor can I, in all honesty, say there will be participation on behalf of the federal government with reference to the diversion program that the maritime producers want.

I fully appreciate the difficulty in which the potato producers of Canada find themselves. This afternoon I am meeting with two of my provincial counterparts to discuss this whole situation.

Mr. Nystrom: In the light of the fact that Irving Oil, of all companies, has bought out a potato processor in Prince Edward Island, and that Europeans are now purchasing potato farms in the Atlantic provinces, will the minister take the initiative and begin discussions with the provincial governments and the producers with a view to forming a potato marketing board or commission along similar lines to the Canadian Wheat Board, so as to ensure producers some protection?

Mr. Wise: With reference to the hon. member's first question, it seems to me he is talking more about land use or land tenure control, and that, as I am sure he will appreciate, is an area which lies directly within the control of the provincial governments. With reference to his second question, that is the number one item we intend to discuss this afternoon. I am pretty certain that my officials have been successful in setting up meetings with all my provincial counterparts in eastern Canada for dates prior to the Christmas recess.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ACTION TO BE TAKEN AGAINST PERSONNEL GUILTY OF POLITICAL ACTIVITY IN QUEBEC REFERENDUM CAMPAIGN

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In a recent newsletter, the Public Service Alliance allowed its members to take part in non-political and non-partisan activities in the Quebec referendum campaign, thus endorsing the position taken by the Public Service Commission. Now, Mr. Speaker, unless one is very naive, it is obvious that political and partisan activities will take place during the Quebec referendum campaign. I therefore ask, what will be the grievance procedure against civil servants who might break the law to the effect that only a candidate in an election can file a complaint with the Public Service Commission? Since there will be no election or candidate as such, what will be the procedure to file a complaint against those obstinate civil servants?

[English]

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will get the cabinet minister directly concerned to reply in writing to the hon. member.

TABLING OF LEGAL ADVICE RECEIVED BY PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): In that case, does the Solicitor General intend to table the legal opinion or opinions that the Department of Justice is reported to have sent to the Public Service Commission on the interpretation of section 32, because I understand that the legal opinions, one sent in July, the other in October, were contradictory? Can the Solicitor General table these documents or clarify this matter immediately?

[English]

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know nothing of any single legal opinion on that subject, much less about two of them. But, as the hon. member knows, it has not been the practice of past administrations to make public legal opinions coming from the Department of Justice. However, I will check into the matter and make sure the hon. member receives a written reply.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ETHIER—ALLEGED ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO POLITICAL GROUP—MR. NYSTROM—CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS OF TASK FORCE ON GRAIN—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There remain outstanding two questions of privilege, one raised by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) and the other by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Brief interventions were made by both ministers involved and neither minister seeks the floor again. One intervention was by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) with respect to the matter raised by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell and the other by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in regard to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Both questions of privilege make reference to a practice which was admitted to by the Minister of Transport and, to a lesser extent—or to a less formalized extent—by the Minister of Agriculture, in the sense that in the months since the election and the formation of the new government committees which were in fact entirely committees of the government caucus were encouraged to carry out investigation work in their particular fields and, in addition to being encouraged, were in fact financially supported through government funding. In some cases this entailed assistance in travelling, in some cases in defraying staff charges or research advice and in others in the printing and publication of documents.

There was an additional grievance advanced by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, namely that the committee work resulted in a report which was essentially for internal use and was published therefore only in the English language, the language of the members involved, and that since it was supported by public funds it ought to have been published in both languages.

The House has, I think, given very serious consideration to both problems raised; I certainly have done so. As I indicated to the House in the course of the discussions, in addition to the excellent presentations made by the two members involved there was an intervention by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) which related particularly to the second question and which I think hon. members might like to refer to. It was an excellent summation not only of the arguments on both sides but also, if I may say so, of the feelings of the Chair, feelings which I tried to express during the course of the discussion.

Very much along the lines of that reasoning, having examined the points raised by both members, I have concluded that it is most difficult for the Chair to determine these circumstances with technical precision—especially since, in one case at least, there has been an order in council passed and to place in conflict with the House an order in council and, therefore, to decide that there is a limitation on the order in council in confrontation with the privileges of the House. What I am saying is that this may very well be the situation but it is a very difficult point for the Chair to decide, and before making such a decision I would want very much more detailed information and would wish to hear far more argument.

However, I am able to say to the House that while I am absolutely satisfied—as I am sure the House is—that the practice initially entered into by the government since the election was entirely in good faith, and while it may in fact be defensible against the argument of privilege of the House, I hope hon. members will understand that it is a rather dangerous practice to embark upon. I refer to the practice of supporting from public funds a committee composed of members of any one caucus. In theory, I suppose, it is not likely that government funds would be used to support a single activity of an opposition caucus, but in any case that is no better.

The support of public funds, where applied to parliamentary activities, ought, I think, to apply across the floor of Parliament, particularly so since there has been a recent alteration of our practices, one that has been heartily endorsed, encouraged and, indeed, slightly expanded by the current administration; that is to say, the provision of funds for researchers for individual caucuses. This being the case, that fund is available for individual caucus committees to carry out research, to be used in whatever way the particular caucus sees fit.

I am sure the House will accept that these committees fulfil a useful function in providing information and communication with the public with respect to important policies and decisions, but while these are confined to one caucus it seems to me to be preferable that it is strictly the caucus research budget that would be employed to that end. Where public funds are used, I do not want to take the extra step and indicate that those public funds can be applied only to standing or special committees of the House. That may not necessarily be the case at all. It may be that public funds can in fact be used for ad hoc committees of the House, as was the application here. I am simply saying to the House, though not in a formal finding of privilege, that in my opinion the greater wisdom would be to ensure that in every case where this is done, where public funds are used to support such a committee even if it is an informal committee, such a committee consist of members of more than one party in the House. I think that is a wise practice to follow. Whether or not it conforms entirely to our practices and precedents or the departure from them that has been raised here is in confrontation with the privileges of members of the House, I do not need to decide at the present time.

I hope the House will take the sense of the argument, which I think is a very serious argument, and the sense of the Chair in this respect, that it is a practice which ought to be considered very carefully before it is entered into again. If it were to be attempted again, I would think the House ought to be consulted.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order with respect to House business. On Friday, December 6, the government House leader said that Friday, December 14, would likely be the first day of the budget debate. I wonder if he would be in a position to confirm that it will be the first day and, if not, when the first day will be.

• (1510)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have no reason—at this point in any event—to change that date as the first day or to suggest a change in that date as the first day of the budget debate. I realize what the hon. member is referring to and his concern about that, and I undertake to him that if there is a change in that I will communicate it to him either directly or through his House leader. I realize that the hon. member does not want to be caught by surprise. It is not my intention to catch the House by surprise either.

Point of Order—Mr. Lapointe

INCOME TAX

MAILING OF PRINTED TAX FORMS

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) put a question to me as to the date of the mailing of the forms. I can indicate a reply to that question. Part of it is contained in a speech I made in the House on November 28, 1979. The forms were put into envelopes about November 21. My speech was on November 28. The tax forms were sent to the Post Office prior to December 1 with an embargo put on their mailing until December 1, so the forms are in fact going as I had indicated in my speech would take place.

With respect to this I just want to repeat what I said in the course of that speech. Given the circumstances with respect to this, the mailing is two weeks later already this year than it has been in prior years.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. LAPOINTE—ABSENCE OF MINISTER FROM HOUSE

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the question period today. As you know, we now have in cabinet a Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), a Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Howie) in charge of water transport, and a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jelinek), and they managed today to be absent all three of them at the same time. I would like to remind you that, in the past, having had the honour to serve as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport under the previous government, there was a rule in force at that time for the question period to the effect that when the Minister of Transport was absent, I, as parliamentary secretary, had to be present in the House. I would like to know whether it is still the opinion of the Prime Minister that parliamentary secretaries have no importance in the new government. Also, now that there are two ministers of transport rather than one, for the information not only of hon. members, Mr. Speaker, but of the people who want to get answers to the problems in some areas in Canada, I would like the Prime Minister to tell us whether he is going to instruct his cabinet colleagues that at least one representative of every department should be present during the question period.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there could be an implication raised by the comments of my hon. friend as to the habits of attendance of the two ministers about whom he has directed his remarks. I think he knows—and he will accept from me the assertion—that the Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Howie) and, indeed, the Minister of Transport (Mr.

Mazankowski) are two of the most faithful adherents in the House, and that the only reason they would be away would likely be because of public business.

I am advised that the Minister of Transport is in Winnipeg today meeting with the western transportation ministers, and I do hope that the hon. member would think that that is part of ministerial practice. The government has taken the view from the beginning that, except for the necessary attendance of ministers at meetings elsewhere, their appropriate place is in the House of Commons, and I think we have adhered to that pretty well.

[Translation]

MR. ETHIER—REQUEST FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker I understood earlier when you ruled on our two questions of privilege, namely that of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and mine, that there might have been an error. After I stated my point of privilege, I attached a motion to it, and I said:

> That the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) be asked to appear before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that it be ordered that the said report be withdrawn and not made available to anyone until all hon. members can get it in either of the two official languages.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that you ruled on the propriety of that report. But I said during my intervention, and I repeat today, that a less than scrupulous government can do what it wants. That is not what I want to say. I asked for a report in my own language, and I did not hear anything about that. If it is your decision that those reports can continue to be released in English only, I must say it is a sad day for us French Canadians and that this promotes the cause of Mr. René Lévesque in Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will realize in reading what I have said today that the document to which he referred became, in that context, an internal document, and it was so treated in terms of the actual report itself. The public document to which he referred, the press release, may be what he was referring to as being in one language. However, I understood that his complaint was with regard to the report of the internal caucus committee. I have already indicated to the House that that is one reason why there is a severe danger in making such reports and then supporting them with public funds. The minute they are supported with public funds there is the demand that they be presented in a bilingual form, respecting the Official Languages Act, and that, therefore, is an unwise activity.

[Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton).]

STATISTICS CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONS OF INQUIRY TO REVIEW OPERATION OF AGENCY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House today of several steps I am taking to deal with questions and concerns relating to Statistics Canada.

First, I do not want my remarks to imply that I consider Statistics Canada to be ineffective or deficient in carrying out its mandate. While I have listened to the crescendo of complaints and criticisms of the agency, I am also well aware that Statistics Canada is vitally important to Canadians and to Canadian institutions and businesses, and that to many of those who deal directly with it, Statistics Canada is one of the best agencies of its kind in the world. For example, I received the following comment just a few days ago in a letter from the general manager of Data Resources of Canada:

> We currently reap the benefits of the best statistical collection agency in the world.

That view is shared by others who have been in touch with me directly to express their support for Statistics Canada and, in particular, to commend that agency's technical know-how.

It is worth noting here how critical it is that we can continue to have the utmost faith in this agency. Think of the legislation based on its figures and the programs and decisions involving processes which cannot do without Statistics Canada data. Let me cite a few examples. The consumer price index is used for indexing of old age security and family allowances and in support of COLA clauses in collective agreements, public service pensions and personal income tax.

The labour force survey is used for virtually all labour market policies and planning. The census underlies all social and economic planning and programming. Trade figures have a great relevance. Gross national product statistics are vital, and the monthly employment and unemployment releases are critical. In short, in a modern society about everything we do requires some sort of measurement, and without Statistics Canada we cannot function as a modern society.

Because of Statistics Canada's importance to Canada and because of my desire for a full and constructive review, the easiest thing for me to do would be to agree to a public inquiry into Statistics Canada, possibly by a parliamentary committee.

I have been critical of the agency in the past, and I have no interest in concealing any inadequacies which might exist. I am greatly concerned, however, that if we do not deal sensitively with the perceived and real problems of Statistics Canada, we may destroy the agency's credibility, morale and, ultimately, its effectiveness. I say this because it appears that many of Statistics Canada's alleged problems are inextricably bound up with human relationships and attitudes, not with the basic methodologies used by the agency.

I have decided, therefore, to initiate a comprehensive but private examination of Statistics Canada's operations, with the undertaking to Parliament that I shall make public the conclusions of the examination, subject only to the protection of innocent people. Because of the unusually complex and technical nature of the work of Statistics Canada, I am adopting some very special measures in this examination. First, as I have already indicated, I asked several management consultants to make proposals to me for studies of Statistics Canada's management processses and structures. I have accepted the proposal by Price Waterhouse Associates, and I expect their report by February.

Let me deal with the terms of reference for their study. First I will speak about the objectives. The over-all objectives of the inquiry will be to identify areas for improvement in the management, organization, personnel and communications processes in the agency, to recommend practical solutions that may be implemented expeditiously, and to provide advice on the terms of reference and work plan for a review of the methodology employed.

Now I should like to speak about the scope. This study will include a review of the agency's mandate and objectives and the relevant policies and practices affecting its organizational structure; a review of the agency's organizational structure; a review of the division of responsibilities, authorities and accountability in the decision-making process; an examination of the way in which resources are deployed in the agency; an analysis of policies and influences outside the control of the agency that might affect its policies, plans and programs; a review of the procedures followed in matching the qualifications of individuals with job skill requirements; an assessment of manpower and succession planning and other practices affecting human resources and human relations; the development of guidelines for a methodology audit and the provision of co-ordination and liaison with the technical audit team; an analysis and an assessment of quality assurance practices and procedures as they relate to the application of methodology and execution of plans and programs in general; a survey of the internal and external quality audit process, including surveillance over incoming and outgoing materials; an assessment of the methods employed in transmitting information in and between sections and upwards and downwards in the agency; an examination of the process for communicating with users and the news media, including guidelines for the preparation of releases and security over confidential information.

Finally, let me refer to the timing. The study will commence today, December 10, 1979, and a report will be presented to me in early February of 1980.

I should like to go on to the second item. I am negotiating with a well-known international expert learned in statistical science to study the technical and statistical production aspects of the agency's work. As the person is not a national of Canada and does not live in Canada, I am sure the House will understand that it takes a few days to negotiate a suitable contract with this gentleman. I shall announce the expert's name and the terms of reference of his study in a few days' time, however.

In order to help me in the co-ordination of these two studies and to assist their reports, I have secured the assistance of three senior public servants: the Clerk of the Privy Council, the Comptroller General of Canada, and the Secretary of the Treasury Board, to act as an advisory committee to me.

I am also taking a third step, which I do not wish to see misunderstood or given undue importance. I shall recommend to the governor in council that Mr. Edmund Peter Newcombe, Q.C., be named the commissioner under the Inquiries Act to investigate allegations regarding Statistics Canada made by Mr. Boris Celovsky or others. I must emphasize, however, that I have absolutely no reason to believe nor, for that matter, to disbelieve some of the observations that have been made. The commissioner will help us to dispose of these observations one way or another.

I have indicated that I shall make the conclusions of these reports public. I expect they will demonstrate that Statistics Canada, with whatever problems it might have, is, nonetheless, strong and reliable and its professional integrity is fully intact. We might learn that we have loaded the agency with so many demands for reports and data and have charged it with such difficult technical tasks that some problems are almost inevitable. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if problems of a continuing nature are revealed, be they in methodology, personnel or organization, they will be corrected. In due course, if Parliament sees fit, I am quite prepared to have the report's conclusions, together with my plans for any remedial action, referred to a parliamentary committee for review.

Finally, let me make one thing clear. While Dr. Peter Kirkham, chief statistician, took no part in the final decisions I have announced today, I advised him of them, of course, after the decisions were made. He assured me of his full co-operation, that he welcomes my approach and he is confident Statistics Canada will emerge with its credibility undoubted.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I will give the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) a C minus for courtesy in sending copies of his statement to the leader's office only at about two o'clock. I received one copy only after he came to the House. We got the copy but I think it is fair to suggest that it would have been better had we received it earlier and, furthermore, had it contained the terms of reference of the inquiry to which he referred in his statement. At this time I will say only that perhaps this is due to inexperience, but we are asking him and other ministers to perform in that sense the same way as they asked us to do when we were on the other side.

With regard to the substance of the statement, may I say that perhaps in any circumstances there should be notice of such a statement, but in this case when the issue arose because of questions asked in the House of Commons, most particularly by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and myself, I suggest that it is even more important for that kind of co-operation to be forthcoming.

Having said that, we welcome the fact that the minister has now acceded to the recommendations that this issue be aired. He has been careful, as I would commend him to be and as we would be, not to proceed on the basis that there is guilt before proof, that there is proof that the methodology and the economic information provided by StatsCan is in fact bad or erroneous, but recognizing that it is now in doubt. Most certainly, there is no attempt here to destroy the credibility of StatsCan but rather to maintain it to the maximum degree possible and in fact to restore it in the face of some questions that have been cast upon it.

The information we receive from Statistics Canada is extremely important; it is not just dull statistical data that we are getting here. The minister has indicated the usefulness of that agency in preparing information on the cost price index and all the economic decisions that are taken as a result of that information, such as the indexing of programs, labour relations and negotiations, and a host of very important economic and financial considerations based upon the flow of information. He has mentioned two or three others, and I have mentioned another one, to emphasize the importance of the accuracy of information such as the balance of payments information which we get from time to time stemming from Statistics Canada's collection of information.

I can remember when, a little over a year ago, a trade deficit was reported in one month which the following month was corrected to a trade surplus. I think the present government might have faced this same problem very recently. That is not just an accident or a casual error that can be corrected by some improvement in the arithmetic because speculative investment in the Canadian dollar took place as a result of that information. The dollar went down and corrective action was taken and millions if not billions of dollars were spent as a result of that decision. The correction took place, but that did not change what had occurred as a result of the interpretation of what turned out to be inaccurate or incorrect information. So accurate information is extremely important.

We commend the decision to proceed with this inquiry on the administrative, personnel and management side of that agency and, as we coaxed the minister to do and as he has now done, to move beyond that to look at the methodology of how information is collated, distributed and interpreted. To me this is even more important than the first, although they may in fact be related.

We commend him for the commitment to make this report public. He has sort of hedged a little on making the process or the actual inquiry public, but will make public the final report by the consultants who look at it. Perhaps I can understand why that is done.

Very much depends upon the quality and the reputation of the consultant who is finally selected. I understand that the firm named will do the management consultant analysis on the administrative personnel side. The other side, that is the question of accuracy of the information it conveys to us, is extremely important. I am a little intrigued by the suggestion that the person involved will be an international expert in the field, which of course means foreign. We will delay judgment on that until the minister is in a position to advise us who it might be and what indeed his credentials and reputation are. We will be looking at that very, very closely.

The minister went on to talk about the naming of a commissioner under the Inquiries Act to investigate the allegations regarding Statistics Canada made by Mr. Celovsky. We will accept that guardedly at its face value. The minister said that he did not wish to be misunderstood or to be thought to give undue importance to this additional inquiry which he announced today. I think all of us in the House will want to follow that very closely to ensure that there is no undue pressure brought to bear against anybody who has had the courage to state his mind, even if it is critical of the operations of the agency.

We are glad that we have received from the minister concurrence in the recommendations we have made at this time, which resulted from the stimulation we gave him when we raised the question in the House a few weeks ago. We look forward with a great deal of interest to the results of all the inquiries which he announced today. We hope that he will proceed with dispatch with the naming of somebody to look after the methodology, which I think in the end is the most important aspect of this approach.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Through Mr. Speaker, I want to register a very serious complaint to the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens). Not only did we not receive this document until well into the question period, but we did not receive the document as it was read by the President of Treasury Board. The report which he read—

Mr. Knowles: He is not even listening now.

Mr. Rae: If he will take the courtesy to listen to what I have to say to him, the report which he read was significantly different from the one presented to me. I see the minister shaking his head. I should like to tell him that it was. The guts of what he read had to do with the terms of reference for the report which Price Waterhouse will make. I have not seen those terms of reference. The minister departed from the text he left with me and took off on the guts of this report to the House concerning the very significant report Price Waterhouse will make on Statistics Canada. If that is respect for all the parties in the House, I think we are in for a very sad and difficult Parliament. Is that the standard of consultation we can now expect from the President of Treasury Board?

Mr. Breau: For just a few more months; it will not be very long.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Let me hasten to assure Parliament and at least to attempt to dispel the righteous indignation which seems to be welling up in the NDP. Any changes I made were simply of a non-substantial nature. I referred to the terms of reference and read them into the record because, as the hon. member knows, in the document delivered to him it was proposed that those terms of reference be tabled. Unfortunately, for technical reasons, the French version was not available in time. I thought that rather than delay the tabling until tomorrow, I should read it into the record, which I did.

Mr. Breau: In French?

Mr. Rae: I can assure Mr. Speaker that any righteousness or any righteous indignation which I feel is completely justified, even with the explanation we have just had by the President of Treasury Board. I do not see any reason why we should be expected to respond on 45 minutes' notice to a major statement concerning Statistics Canada, and then find, even as the minister is reading his statement, that the guts of what he has to say with respect to the terms of reference are missing from the heart of the report for what he calls technical reasons.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) that translation matters are not technical matters. They relate basically to the attitude of the government towards bilingualism and the principles of bilingualism, and it is not good enough for the President of the Treasury Board to come and tell us that he is not in a position to give us a full report of what he is going to say, suggesting he is unable to do so for reasons of translation. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that it is an intolerable attitude as far as opposition parties are concerned. It is not good enough for the minister to hide behind technical problems of translation and tell us there was not enough time. I would say to the minister that if it is a question of time, then let us take the necessary time to have them translated and to do everyone the same courtesy.

[English]

Dealing with the substance of the report, the one thing I would say to the President of Treasury Board is that there is a certain irony in the presentation of the report itself. On the one hand, he said that he has complete confidence in Statistics Canada and that he does not want there to be any morale problems. Then he announced not one commission into the condition of Statistics Canada but three. Rather than having appointed three, the minister would have been far wiser to have appointed one commission, the membership of which could be drawn from the areas of expertise that he has outlined.

We are quite prepared to recognize the necessity of a major study on all the fronts which he suggested. I see the minister is shaking his head. As usual he is "so willing" to accept suggestions coming from the other side! I would suggest to him that not only will there be problems of morale which will be devastating as a result of the establishment of these three commissions, but the very real danger that what is not solved before one commission then will become a problem for another commission, and that what is evidence before one commission will become second-hand evidence before yet another commission. Also there is the potential of conflicting reports among the three different commissions. I would suggest to the minister, with all respect, that it may well cause very significant personnel and other problems in the future.

I suggest to the minister that that, coupled with the attitude and the reputation of this government with respect to its public servants and the attacks which the minister himself launched on Statistics Canada while he was in opposition, does not bode well for the future of Statistics Canada. We in my party are in full support of the notion that there should be a commission of inquiry armed with the necessary expertise to deal with the technical matters concerning the technical and statistical techniques used by Statistics Canada. We think that there is need for a commission which will take into account the problems of morale, personnel and general management orientation of Statistics Canada. We are prepared to recognize that. However, we are deeply concerned that this government has chosen to throw not only one commission into Statistics Canada but three. We are deeply concerned about the possibilities of conflicting terms of reference among them.

Finally, we must say to the minister that we have some concern as to the protection of the independence, the integrity and the ability not only of Statistics Canada but of all the personnel of Statistics Canada to withstand the onslaught of not one but three inquiries.

That having been said, we support the notion that there should be a commission of inquiry. I hope I am not correct and that my fears are not borne out by events, but I suggest to the minister that by setting up three separate commissions of inquiry into Statistics Canada he is asking for trouble. Had he established one, it seems to me it would have been possible to have assured members of Statistics Canada that there was not a witch hunt going on but that this was a serious inquiry which had a good deal of good intention behind it. I think there is some ground for concern on the part of employees at Statistics Canada who will ask themselves what are the real intentions of the government.

I do not give the minister a C minus, I give him a failing mark for having failed to show us the minimum courtesy of giving us the terms of reference of the Price Waterhouse study which, as the minister knows, goes to the guts of this inquiry. Quite frankly, we have some real concern about the necessity of having three commissions in relation to Statistics Canada when the minister said at the outset that he has full confidence in Statistics Canada as it now stands. If the minister has full confidence, why should he have three commissions?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The spokesmen for all parties have been heard, but as before, I am ready this afternoon to allow questions to be put to the minister. I will begin the questioning with the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy).

Statistics Canada

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): I want to make a few brief comments on the statement just made by the minister and of which I heard at the same time as my colleagues, since it was handed to us in the middle of the question period. I would like to ask the minister why a public announcement was made today when the minister said in the first paragraph of his statement:

I do not want my remarks to imply that I consider Statistics Canada to be ineffective or deficient in carrying out its mandate.

The minister does not want people to entertain any doubt as to the role assigned to Statistics Canada. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the first concern of every member here, on either side of the House, is that Statistics Canada must remain above suspicion. This agency must not be a political instrument in the hands of the government. It must be ready and willing to serve all members of Parliament, because Statistics Canada has historically been, and shall be even more so in the future, a guide for all members of Parliament and all political groups in this House. In the first place, the reports issued by Statistics Canada are used to figure the consumer price index, and this in turn is the basis for indexing Public Service pensions, personal income tax, old age security pensions, family allowances and a number of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Beauce is entitled to put questions to the minister pursuant to Standing Order 15(3) and he should put them forthwith.

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, although I can hardly understand why I should be treated differently this afternoon, when other members from the Liberal party and the New Democratic Party have had their chance to make their own comments, because it is stated in Standing Order 15, on page 10:

A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly thereon and members may be permitted to address questions thereon to the minister.

The rules are the same whether they apply to the New Democratic Party or to the Social Credit Party of Canada.

I therefore respectfully submit that it is my right and privilege to add a few comments on the minister's statement as my colleagues have done.

Mr. Speaker, I can see that several members of this House would like to chair our proceedings, but nonetheless I would ask the minister, coming back to the first question, why he decided to announce publicly a private investigation of confidential documents at this point, rather than wait until he has more detailed information and to come up before this House with a concrete proposal. This would have prevented the credibility of Statistics Canada from being jeopardized.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in replying to the hon. member I would simply say that it has always been our undertaking that we would announce the appointment of the management consultants to look into Statistics Canada, and that we would not only name the management consultants who were retained but would set out the terms of reference for the management consultants to follow.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Secondly, we felt that rather than incorporate in the management consultant terms of reference framework, if you like, an expert to look at the methodology, the expert should come from outside Canada. Incidentally, we felt that if we simply turned to somebody who was learned in statistical information within Canada there might be some suggestion that he was not objective enough to pass on Statistics Canada. As a result, we chose to go outside Canada to retain an expert in statistical science to pass on the methodology of the Statistics Canada operation. Incidentally, that is why, in answer to the question by a member of the NDP as to why we did not incorporate this all under one, I said we felt there was merit in divorcing the two; having the internal Canadian study dealing with organization, personnel and management, with the outside study dealing in a very objective way with the technical side of Statistics Canada and methodology.

Finally in answer to the hon. member's question, the reason we wanted to make it public that Price Waterhouse are commencing today is that I did not want to delay making a statement to the House, as it may well have become public, through the usual brown envelope or leak fashion, that Price Waterhouse was already conducting a study. I felt that I should inform the House at the first opportunity.

I once more apologize for the fact that the terms of reference are not available in both official languages for tabling. They were not settled until a few hours ago, and unfortunately the French version is not ready. I thought the second best thing, in order to get it before the House as quickly as possible, was simply to read it into the record.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I put one question to the President of the Treasury Board. In his statement today about Statistics Canada he emphasized the importance of its work in connection with the indexing of old age security and other pensions and benefits. As the President of the Treasury Board will recall, in October I raised with the Prime Minister the question of a special index for senior citizens related to the things they have to buy. Outside the House that day the President of the Treasury Board said he would give serious consideration to that proposal. May I ask if any action has yet been taken on that?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to that question. I did follow it up and a report has been prepared. If the hon. member feels that it would be helpful, I could either deliver it to him personally for his consideration or I could table the report in the House.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in the interest of freedom of information I suggest that it be tabled.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to table the report.

● (1550)

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board indicated that they decided that a Canadian could not objectively look at the methodological questions dealing with Statistics Canada. Perhaps I am mistaken, but is it not true that the contracting and staffing regulations of the Government of Canada as promulgated by the Treasury Board indicate that non-Canadian citizens can be retained by the Government of Canada only when it can be clearly shown that there is no Canadian capable of doing the particular job? Could the President of the Treasury Board indicate whether such a search was conducted to determine whether or not a qualified Canadian was available to do the job and, if such a search was conducted—as is supposedly required by the Government of Canada in such cases—is the minister saying that he could not find a qualified Canadian in the area of statistical methodology to carry on this study?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member has overlooked the main thrust of what I was saying. It is not in any way a reflection on the capabilities of those who are educated in the statistical sciences in Canada. It is very, very difficult, if not impossible, to find such a statistician who does not have ongoing activity with Statistics Canada at the present time. These people are using the data and talking to Statistics Canada personnel, if not daily, at least on a weekly basis. Consequently, if we do retain such a person, he or she may in our mind not be purely objective. He will certainly be capable, but there could always be the suggestion that he did not have that degree of objectivity that one would like as would somebody who does not have an ongoing connection with Statistics Canada.

We consulted management consultant firms and people in government as to whether it was wise for us to go outside Canada for a suitable person. To eliminate any question concerning objectivity, it was unanimously agreed by the people whom we consulted that we should secure the services of one or more experts outside Canada who are world renowned as statisticians and let them pass on their views on methodology within Statistics Canada, and that is what we are proposing to do.

Mr. Evans: Since the minister is undertaking a procedure which is in violation of his own regulations, does he intend to expand upon this particular principle in other studies which will be done by the government and allow other government departments and agencies also to expand upon this principle of hiring whomever they consider to be the most qualified person, regardless of the fact that there may be a Canadian who is equally as qualified but who, in the minister's judgment or whomever, may not be as objective as one might like in conducting the particular study? I am quite concerned because it is not only a question of objectivity. Would the minister indicate whether objectivity or the ability to conduct an objective study is no longer to be the criterion for selecting contractors for the federal government?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the hon. member is desperately trying to make a point, but once again he has overlooked what I think is the very significant point in what we have done. We have deliberately gone to persons who are recognized in the world as being experts on this question of statistical data and the operation of institutions such as Statistics Canada. We have asked them to pass judgment on our Statistics Canada and, in so doing, have taken the most objective approach conceivable to ensure, if they do return a report that Statistics Canada is undoubtedly credible or, on the other hand, that there are problems, that we have a truly arm's length, objective study and review of the organization. I would think that most members of the House would welcome such a review.

What the hon. member seems to be concerned with are the regulations of the Treasury Board. In our opinion, that regulation was not applicable to a special situation such as Statistics Canada where one finds, as I have mentioned before, that most of the people we would normally turn to in Canada have an ongoing relation with Statistics Canada. I would not challenge the objectivity of the report, but it might be challenged by somebody down the road as not being as objective as one would like.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, my question to the President of the Treasury Board deals with the morale of the employees. It seems to me that the people within Statistics Canada have already suffered from the statements made by the minister, the opposition and other members in this House. I am concerned that the minister has not dealt with the concerns of the employees. I think that throughout the government service there is low morale at this time because of the reports of privatization and the proposed cutback of 60,000 employees. What is the cost of this study, not only in terms of dollars, but in terms of morale?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, we will be indicating the dollar cost of the Price Waterhouse study, and the international authority, which will probably be revealed later. With regard to the cost to morale, I do not think there will be any cost, other than a general building up of morale with respect to the activities of Statistics Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I will conclude the questioning with the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) and the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre).

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board has rejected one part of my argument. We could have different points of view with regard to the need to establish a separate inquiry commission concerning the technical activities of Statistics Canada. However, I do not believe that we dealt directly with what I was attempting to get at, and that is the potential conflict between Price Waterhouse and the commissioner, Mr. Newcombe. As the minister knows, the allegations that have been made by Mr. Celovsky which have appeared in the press and of others relate not only to the question of the technical aspect of the work of Statistics Canada, but also to the personnel practices of Statistics Canada.

Given that there is this overlap between these two inquiries, the Price Waterhouse inquiry and the inquiry of Mr. Newcombe, what guarantees have the employees of Statistics Canada that there will not be an unfair leapfrogging, if you like, going from one commission to another, in an attempt to achieve some kind of redress? What means do we have to guarantee that there will not be an unfair abuse of the inquiry process into Statistics Canada?

I think that this is a legitimate concern, that there should be one inquiry, that it be limited in time, and that the report be objective, rather than having a series of inquiries of an ongoing nature and a number of allegations which, I would suggest, have no end unless there is a clear summing up. I think it would be easier to have one commission.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, assuming that that was a question—

Mr. Rae: There was a question mark in there at one point.

Mr. Stevens: —I will try to reply. I think we are dealing with two different perspectives. It sounds as though the concerns of the hon. member are exactly our concerns. That is the reason we felt that we should allow the Price Waterhouse study to go on in the normal way, that such management consultant studies would be expected to carry on regardless of the nature of the company, be it Statistics Canada or some other type of business organization.

With regard to Mr. Celovsky, we felt that it was very important that we get somebody from the legal profession to hear him out as to the nature of his allegations and what the commissioner's feelings are. We are saying, almost contrary to what the hon. member is worried about, that by separating the two we hope to get to the substance of it. Or as I say in the statement, we hope the commissioner will help us dispose of Mr. Celovsky's observations one way or the other. Once we have his report I think we will know where and how to act. In the meantime, that should not in any way clutter up the ongoing study of Price Waterhouse and their report, which should be in my hands in the early part of February.

• (1600)

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister. I was not able to follow all the debate after his statement but I understood that one of the reports referred to was available in only one of Canada's official languages. The minister promised to table one of the reports he referred to. I should like him to ask for unanimous consent of the House if he intends to table any document which is available in only one of Canada's official languages, and that he ask that it be made an appendix to today's Hansard so that tomorrow everyone can read it in either or both of Canada's official languages.

[Mr. Rae.]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member indicated, he did not hear the whole debate. I had mentioned at one juncture that, much to my surprise, the document I intended to table had been delivered, for translation reasons, in one language. Rather than wait and table it tomorrow or to ask the unanimous consent of the House to table it in only one language, I chose to read it into the record. So it can be seen tomorrow in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The document that the hon. President of the Treasury Board referred to was, I believe, some report which I am sure would be in existence, because there was another reference. Perhaps that should be cleared up before we close the matter. The President of the Treasury Board undertook to table a report; was that another document?

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If I may, I should like to clarify that. The initial document which I was unable to table today is called, "Terms of Reference of the Ministerial Inquiry into Statistics Canada".

Mr. Lefebvre: That is what I meant.

Mr. Stevens: That is what I read into the record. The second document or report that I referred to was in answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, which deals with the possibility of having a CPI come out in relation to the cost of living, more accurately expressed for older people in the country.

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister have that?

PETITION

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT—POSITION PRESENTED BY RIVIÈRE-VERTE, NEW BRUNSWICK, WORKERS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the third report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 67(8), I ask that the text of the petition be now read by the Clerk of the House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The request made by the hon. member is in keeping with our practice under the Standing Order that he cited.

[Editor's Note: The Clerk Assistant read the petition to the House, which reads as follows:]

PETITION

TO THE HONOURABLE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The PETITION of the undersigned residents of the municipality of Rivière-Verte in the Province of New Brunswick who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefor provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHOWETH

THAT the revisions to the Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations make distinctions among the citizens of the Province of New Brunswick according to the economic area where they reside;

THAT these arbitrarily set distinctions do not grant the same rights and privileges to all Canadian workers;

THAT this practice can only lead to an erosion of the equal entitlement of workers to unemployment insurance benefits without distinction of economic areas;

THAT the erosion of rights on a discriminatory regional basis does not promote public good and social peace;

WHEREFORE YOUR PETITIONERS HUMBLY PRAY

THAT the Government of Canada take the necessary action to find them work;

THAT the Government of Canada make the necessary amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act so that benefits will be paid after a minimum of ten (10) weeks as was the practice in the past and also that it consider paying these benefits retroactively;

THAT the economic area where they reside be classified in the same category as Restigouche County and not Carleton County as is now the case.

The petition bears the signature of Mrs. Isabelle Therrien, Mrs. Monique Sirois and Mrs. Isabelle Lizotte.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the Order: Motions.

December 7, 1979—Mr. Murphy:

That the first report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on Friday, December 7, 1979, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has given notice of a motion which is shown on the notice paper in his name as follows:

That the first report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on Friday, December 7, 1979, be concurred in.

The hon. member may be aware that his motion appears to the Chair to run in conflict with the practices of the House. I do not know whether or not the hon. member is prepared to defend his motion today on procedural grounds. I would refer him, among other precedents, to page 420 of the Votes and Proceedings for June 18, 1973. He will find there that it is the practice of the House, which was interpreted at that time and on several other occasions, that when estimates are referred to the several standing committees, it is the business of those standing committees to deal with the estimates and with the estimates only, and to report back the estimates. If there are any aspects of the estimates reported back to the House that ought to be the subject of comment or vote, that takes place only on the allotted day on which all those estimates are deemed to have been reported back to the House and taken into consideration. That is the practice of the House.

In this particular case the hon. member seeks concurrence in a report on estimates from the committee to which his motion refers, a report which I believe, on the face of it, is secondary or complementary to one which had in fact dealt with the estimates. This auxiliary report, as it were, makes other recommendations. The importance or nature of the report does not matter for the moment. The fact is that in making the other recommendations the committee is clearly going beyond the scope of its order of reference, which was to deal with the estimates.

If we were to take this motion into account at this time, we would be embarking upon a course which departs from previous practice, that is, of confining argument on the approval of the estimates as they come from the standing committees to the allotted day upon which they are all taken into account.

Again I say that the hon. member for Churchill may not be prepared to defend his motion at this time. If he wants some time to take the matter under consideration, we can set aside his motion for today and reserve it until he has had an opportunity to argue the point if he wishes.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I will let the motion stand at this time.

Order stands.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 99, 207, 246, 448, 473, 475, 476, 527 and 687.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

RCMP—SENIOR POSITIONS—CIVILIAN MEMBERS

Question No. 99—Mr. Cossitt:

Are there any civilian members of the RCMP or civilians employed by the RCMP in senior positions and, if so, what are their names, job designations and annual salaries?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs):

Yes.

Name	Job Designation	Salary Range
Mr. M. R. Dare	Director General, Security Service	$42,700—$58,500
Mr. R. H. Jones	Security Service Officer	$35,052—$39,430
Mr. P. M. McLellan	Assistant Director, Canadian Police Information Centre	$33,600—$46,200

This reply is based on the understanding that "Senior positions" are those in which the minimum of the incumbent's salary range is $33,600 or more.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES

Question No. 207—Mr. Herbert:

How many (a) permanent (b) term employees were on the Department of Employment and Immigration's payroll on March 31, 1979?

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): (a) 21,473, (b) 2,554.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—RECRUITMENT FOR SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH— FRANCOPHONES

Question No. 246—Mr. Roy (Beauce):

Did the government recruit employees for scientific research during the fiscal years 1968-69 to 1978-79 and, if so (a) how many in each year (b) what was the percentage of Francophones?

Mrs. Diane Stratas (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows:

Yes, the government has recruited employees for scientific research during the fiscal years 1968-69 to 1978-79. See list below for the distribution by fiscal year.

1979	3	2	1	33.3

Data of defence scientist available from 1975 only. Group formerly employed under DRB for which Public Service Commission was not the appointing authority.

The main reasons why the Francophone community is so poorly represented in the scientific research area are:

(1) Due to greatly diversified areas in which scientists are employed there are not enough Francophone graduates to cover all the scientific fields. The universities in Quebec, which are our main source of Francophone PHD's, although turning out highly qualified graduates cannot hope to cover every field of research.

(2) On many occasions scientists whom we would have employed had no interest in working outside of the province of Quebec. The Public Service Commission has made special efforts to convince scientists that the National Capital Region area is a bicultural area but we have had little success.

(3) Treasury Board secretariat has completed a study that indicates that the problem of imbalance also exists in the provincial public service of Quebec where a high percentage of positions are filled by Anglophones. The provincial government is attempting to rectify that situation. Under those circumstances the federal government will be in competition with the provincial government for scientists in the same field.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—EMPLOYEES IN P.E.I.

Question No. 448—Mr. Herbert:

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

ENERGY

ADDITIONAL EXPORT OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the announcement by the Government of Canada allowing the export of an additional 3.75 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, an unacceptable sellout of our needed energy resources, coming at a time when Canadians face a winter threatened by even greater oil shortages.

It is imperative that an emergency debate take place today, Mr. Speaker, for reasons even more pressing than those which led to a similar debate in the Ontario legislature before the weekend. This House should be given an immediate opportunity to debate the serious continuing energy supply situation which has been exacerbated by the decision to export much additional natural gas which should be kept here in Canada.

● (1610)

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the terms of Standing Order 26, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) gave the Chair the appropriate notice, so I have had an opportunity to consider whether or not the subject of the hon. member's motion is in fact proper to be considered pursuant to Standing Order 26, and therefore whether it should precipitate a special debate.

There are two paragraphs of the rule upon which I rely in not finding the motion an acceptable one. The first is paragraph (16)(a) of the rule, which reads as follows:

> The right to move the adjournment of the House for the above purposes is subject to the following conditions:
> (a) The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;

The phrase "genuine emergency" is not capable of precise definition necessarily, but I must take into account the fact that the word "genuine" is used for a specific reason by the drafters of the rule. While I can never say it rules out forever a situation in which the emergency itself is a matter of dispute, it seems that the word "genuine" implies that the rule should be used where at least the emergency itself is not a matter of argument.

The question of a genuine crisis, an emergency in the country, is not one which generally in and of itself is not subject to argument. Again I say I could never rule out forever because there could always be a situation which I cannot anticipate. Basically I am inclined to rule against the application of this rule where the very emergency itself is a matter of interpretation or a matter of argument.

Therefore in this situation where the government maintains it is appropriate to take a step, the opposition, and the hon. member for Oshawa in particular, maintain that it is not only not appropriate but that it precipitates an emergency or crisis. That seems to become a matter of argument. Therefore, the question whether the word "genuine" would be applicable seems to come into doubt.

The second paragraph to which I would refer is subparagraph (5) of the rule:

> In determining whether a matter should have urgent consideration, Mr. Speaker shall have regard . . . to the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means.

I cannot, of course, ignore the fact that tomorrow evening the House is scheduled to receive a budget. Even though the budget debate may be deferred a day or two until Friday, there is, I believe, an impending vote of confidence in our normal practices on the entire economic policy of the government in the most direct and forthright way. I do not know how the House could improve on that practice. Therefore, under that paragraph I would be disinclined to allow a debate of this sort.

For those two reasons I am not prepared to accept the hon. member's application at this time.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE STAGE OF BILL C-20

The House resumed, from Friday, December 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

> That in relation to Bill C-20, an act to amend the Income Tax Act to provide tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax, one sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration in Committee of the Whole stage of the bill; and
> That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceeding before the committee shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the Committee of the Whole stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe that I spoke for approximately three minutes on Friday. Therefore I have another six or seven minutes. I will operate on that premise, if it pleases you, Mr. Speaker.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that members were listening carefully to the point that Bill C-20 appears to have broad support across Canada, particularly in western Canada. I suggested that the measure appears to be popular everywhere in this country. Do the 17 Liberal members who opted to miss the vote on second reading disagree with this? Do the three Liberals who voted for the measure disagree with this statement? What about the five NDP members who missed the vote? Is it a coincidence—

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member who has the floor is commenting on the vote we had the other day in the House. I suggest that this is quite contrary to our practices and our Standing Orders, Mr. Speaker, and that pursuant to our Standing Orders, the hon. member should stop forthwith making these remarks on the vote, its quality, as well as on those who were present and those who were not.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is perhaps getting into a hazardous area in casting reflections on the reasons or motives for members voting in the House. I do not think he did that in his remark, but it is a dangerous area. Incidentally, it is convenient now to formally advise the hon. member that his time expires at 4.22 p.m.

Mr. Kilgour: I was going to point out that my information is that about 69.8 per cent of the constituents of the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) live in houses; in the riding of the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle), 65 per cent; in the riding of the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), 77 per cent; in that of the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), 71 per cent; and in the riding of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), 69 per cent. I will not pursue that line of unfair accusations against members opposite.

The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) was quoted as saying that "the party is wrong", referring to the party opposite, "and I am right; I listened to all the arguments against the bill and they do not hold any water".

[Translation]

The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) made the following statement on December 4, as reported on page 2010 of the official report of our Debates for that day, and I quote:

> We have been asking this for years from various governments and especially from the Liberals in the 17 years they have been in power. We have asked for the measure that was partially introduced today, that is, to give the same benefits to single family home owners as to owners of multiple rental units. The Liberals have always benefited big housebuilders by giving them every possible exemption, but never did they do anything for the small home owner.

[English]

Some members opposite have suggested that this bill favours only the wealthy. The fact is that the wealthy do not have mortgages; they pay them off as quickly as they can and then use their credit at the bank to borrow money for business purposes from which they make business loans and investments, the interest on which is deductible. I do not see any experts on these matters in the House, but if members opposite have any doubts there are a lot of members who can explain that to them.

This bill is aimed at helping middle-income Canadians, the unsung, unhelped millions of Canadians who have been the most hurt by the huge deficits of recent years and the inflation created by the previous government. One thing that inflation does is take away from those who work, save and plan for their retirement and give to the speculators, the bankers and those who buy land, pieces of gold and other things that do not benefit the economy in any way, shape or form. That is what inflation does to this country. That is why middle-income Canadians have been hurt by the government for approximately 16 years. This measure is a modest step to help middle-income Canadians with mortgage interest and property taxes this year.

We on this side are determined to have this legislation enacted before the end of this year. I wonder if the ten members opposite who stood up last Friday to prevent us from extending the hours will show up for the debate before and after Christmas.

I wish to reinforce a couple of points that were made regarding the use of Standing Order 75C to allocate time for debate. We have already spent seven days debating this measure. What has been added to the sum of human knowledge by any member opposite during those seven days? Last Wednesday members opposite had all day in which to propose amendments. Which of them had any amendments to propose? Which one of them stood up to propose amendments? Yet they complain now that they have no time in which to do so. When they had the chance they did not put any forward. This illustrates the hypocrisy of members opposite with respect to time available in this debate.

● (1620)

Members of the opposition say they need more time to debate this matter further. But why were so many of them absent while this measure was before the House? Again, if they want more time, why did so many of them raise spurious questions of privilege last Friday? In particular, why did four of them, including the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Trudeau), get up to make exactly the same points although the Speaker had given a clear ruling on the matter under consideration?

I would remind the House that Standing Order 75C was introduced by the former government in 1969 and has been used on 23 occasions since then—

Time Allocation

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be able to say a few words on this motion of closure put forward by the government. It seems to me to be another case of a government flip-flop. They always talk about open government. To me, open government is not a government which imposes "le bâillon", as we say in French, after a few hours of debate on clause 1 of a bill.

I should also like to remind hon. members on the other side that 12 days ago, on November 28, I was the one who proposed a vote on the second reading. It was fortunate for the government that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) rose to carry on the debate in order to bail out the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker), thus avoiding a vote which we would probably have won.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, during the initial debate, I described Bill C-20 as being extravagant, irresponsible and unfair, and I still maintain it is all those things. The fact that the government is trying to prevent us from debating the bill adequately gives us the distinct impression that the other side of the House has lost all sense of responsiblity and all sense of proportion over the problems confronting Canadians. It also gives us the impression, which might not be far from the truth, that the other side is governing for the rich of the country and thinks that the problems of the have-nots will solve themselves while others are reaping the benefits. We see in the media the enormous profits made by certain companies and certain sectors of the economy. Yet a great many Canadians are struggling to make both ends meet in the face of inflation and all the other economic hardships of this day and age. We are being blamed for delaying passage of this bill. Some say that we have forced the government to resort to muzzling.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this is somewhat of a joke being played on hon. members and even on their own party. What has this government done since May 22 last? They waited five months before deciding to call back the House, and finally once it was back, they waited two months before introducing such an important bill.

I was reading a couple of days ago the speeches delivered on Friday during the debate on this motion. Naturally, I read carefully the remarks made by the hon. member who is perhaps the most experienced and the most respected of us all, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who was quoting a statement made by the President of the Privy Council, who now sits on the other side but was then a member of the opposition. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was quoting the following statement made by this hon. member:

[English]

This is a black day for Parliament and for this country.

Taking into account everything this government has done so far, we might believe we are going back to the dark ages.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it seems scapegoats are constantly being sought out by that side of the House. Attempts also seem to be made to cover up the obvious lack of experience and lack of realism amongst the government members, by blaming their errors on everything around them including, naturally, the opposition parties.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time they took serious action with regard to inflation, unemployment, the budget deficit, and that they assumed their responsibilities. But no, they keep on doing the same thing. At the present time the government, in my opinion, is doing nothing more than spreading confusion. We never know what they are going to do next. They seem to be in a constant state of uncertainty. We are going to Jerusalem, but then we are not going. Oil will be rationed, but then it will not. Energy will be controlled, but then it will not. The better off, the oil companies, are being favoured with higher energy prices while rumours spread to the effect that there will be an excise tax that will add from 20 to 40 cents to the cost of gas and heating oil. The government takes care, of course, of private industry and corporations. That is all very well but with this increase in the cost of oil, they seem to forget completely about the workers who have to use that oil to go to work. They also forget those who are not as well off, who are trapped by inflation and by their heating bills and who have to find the money, whether they like it or not, to meet the cost of their daily needs. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ritchie) also said, I believe, that if we are short of energy, controls may be applied.

The present government, Mr. Speaker, is in the process of spreading disarray, uncertainty and concern among the people. They do not seem to realize that an increasing number of Canadians, men and women, live on the threshold of poverty. You need only take a look at the latest statistics of the Senate committee or the commission on poverty to see that because of inflation and because the cost of energy and the cost of food are going up as they have been from last year to this day, the percentage of people living below the poverty line will certainly increase within the next few months.

Mr. Speaker, as I have been saying for some time, I think this government should focus its efforts on more serious problems instead of catering to a privileged group of home owners and spending $575 million this year and $3 billion in four years. It should certainly concentrate its efforts on some objectives like the reduction of inflation, job creation and Canadian unity rather than continuously trying to find some means to advantage a class of our society that does not really need it now. It should seek to help other people in several other fields.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) who is not in the House now, if he really wants us to resume debate on Bill C-20 in Committee of the Whole and if the President of the Privy Council or the Minister of Finance really intends to study carefully the amendments that we are going to propose and those that might come from other opposition parties. It is very important for our democracy that the opposition, whose responsibility it is to improve bills proposed by the government, be taken seriously and contribute to bills that will help not just a privileged group of home owners but also many Canadians and Quebeckers who would find it much easier to make ends meet in the disastrous situation created by this government.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot of fluff in this debate, but the fluffiest contributions came from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). The first myth—I would even say the first big lie—which has to be confronted head on and seen clearly for what it is by the Canadian people is the lie that we have to get this bill through before Christmas so that the Canadian taxpayers will be able to get a credit for 1979. That is simply untrue. It is recognized by everybody who has any understanding of the nature of our legal system that it is untrue, and it is recognized by anybody who has taken a look at the legislation, which makes it clear that it applies to 1979 regardless of when it is passed. So the theory put forward by the President of the Privy Council is that we are somehow under an obligation.

In his role as the executive assistant to the Queen's Printer, which he seems so determined to carry out in this House, he tells us that they had to get the forms out, there was no choice; that the agenda for this government is set by its printers, that the forms have already been sent and that therefore we have to pass this bill before Christmas. Not only does that put the cart before the horse, but it is also completely untrue, and it is time somebody called this government's bluff.

The second argument which has been made by the government is that we in this party have been holding up this legislation because we do not want to give the Canadian home owner anything.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Rae: That is not true. That is a lie. That is another lie. I will tell the House why it is a lie. It is a lie because what we on this side of the House have been saying is that both home owners and renters should get the benefit of any change to our tax system. I hear the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) squawking. He squawks every time I get up. However, the Minister of Finance said that we in this party were holding up this legislation and we did not want to give home owners anything, and that is a lie. We are holding up this legislation, we are asking questions about this legislation and we are putting forward amendments to this legislation which are on the desk of the Minister of Finance, and which have been on his desk for a week, because we are concerned about renters, pensioners and people with no income.

The hon. member from Edmonton who spoke for the Tory party said that we on this side of the House have put forward no amendments. That too was a lie. It is completely untrue to say we have put forward no amendments, and the Minister of Finance knows it.

So what are we left with? I am sorry the President of the Privy Council is not here to listen to what I have to say, but we are left with a government which, I suggest, has caused its own problems. Were it not for the inflammatory speech which was made on second reading of Bill C-20 by the President of the Privy Council, we would not be in the position we are in now. He told us that it did not matter which amendments we put forward because the forms had already been printed and the government had no intention of listening to us. Were it not for that speech it would have been quite possible for us to go through second reading, which was coming to an end—and the President of the Privy Council knows it was coming to an end—and go into committee, where we could have dealt with the amendments, as we should have dealt with them, on their merits.

The government could have told us its position. If the government did not want to accept our amendments, we could have been told. But that is not what the government did. I am sorry about what the President of the Privy Council did because it was a major mistake, and he should not be surprised that he has suddenly inflamed the opposition. I would have thought that a member of the government who was so recently and for so long a member of the opposition—and who will shortly again be in the opposition—would have recognized the position in which we find ourselves.

In the best of faith we have put forward a series of amendments for the simple reason that we want to see a tax credit going to all Canadians regardless whether they own property and regardless whether they have mortgages. That has been our policy all along. That will be our policy through the debate. We told that to the minister at second reading, and it has been no secret. Unlike the Liberal party, which cannot decide whether it wants to give nothing or everything, we have decided we want to give everything, and we have made that position clear for a long period of time.

An hon. Member: How will you pay for it?

Mr. Rae: We have made it quite clear how we would pay for it. If you go through those tax expenditures you fellows released yesterday and which the Tory party released last week, there is ample room in taxes which are not being collected, more than enough to cover the necessary expenditure for a tax credit which is universal, and the government knows it.

The President of the Privy Council made an inflammatory speech in which he waved a red flag at us, saying that the forms had gone off anyway, the printing had gone ahead and there was nothing the government could do. That is precisely what we came to expect from the Liberal Party of Canada, the tactic of closure, of shutting off debate, of having to get things through before Christmas and the creation of artificial schedules and artificial timetables which have nothing to do with the legal requirements and which have nothing to do with the law.

All of these things—

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was not in the chamber at the time but I understand that the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) indicated that a statement I had made was not correct. I do not know whether he used the word "lie", but everything but.

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. Kilgour: Did he? He used the word "lie", and I ask him to withdraw—

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member was not here.

Mr. Kilgour: Despite the chatterings of the oldest member of the Privy Council, or not the oldest, the youngest—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The most recent.

Mr. Kilgour: —I ask that that statement be withdrawn.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to look at Hansard tomorrow and raise this matter as a question of privilege, I will be glad to answer. I personally do not think I breached any privilege. I simply said that what he said was an untruth. He said we had not presented any amendments. I said that was a lie, and I will say that again.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I think it is well known, even to the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, that "lie" is an unparliamentary word. I would ask for a ruling from Your Honour with respect to that and that the hon. member be permitted now to withdraw it on the basis that it is clearly unparliamentary language, a fact which is known to every member in this House, even members in the corner.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, the point of my submission today has been to suggest to the government—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair should consider the point of order raised by the parliamentary secretary. I know that in the heat of passion generated by a raging debate of this kind sometimes we let our emotions get away with us, and we say things we should not.

● (1640)

Some years ago I myself had occasion to say that some statements made by the then prime minister were a lie, and I was compelled to withdraw it, which I did. I know that the hon. member feels very strongly about this. I admire and respect him as a very bright member with a future. He has some problem mathematically with regard to some of the issues which face this House, but I want to say honestly that Your Honour should give some consideration to the statement made. I heard only part of it—I was outside—but if he did say it was a lie, then I think he should withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: The House will know from the interventions that have been made that the point at issue, as always, is not what the hon. member can say but how he can say it. The problem does not relate to the ability of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) to differ with the statements to which he has made reference in his intervention and to indicate that they are, in his opinion, wrong or that they are categorically different from his own view of the circumstances or of the facts. No member is deprived of the right to make those interventions, and in fact debate is the very place for them, to challenge statements made on the other side of the House and to disagree.

However, the practice in terms of the etiquette of the House is that interventions, no matter how vigorous or how strident, always be made in parliamentary form. It might have been possible and accepted on past occasions that the word "lie" be used in some context, and it is indeed possible to use it, as the hon. member did at the beginning of his speech this afternoon, as "the big lie" or things of that sort. The precedent books will turn up examples in which the Chair has examined the use of the phrase and said that in a particular context it was acceptable. However, in general terms, as soon as the hon. member referred to an individual member—that is to say, the statements of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie)—and as soon as he indicated that in making those statements the Minister of Finance was lying, it seems to me that the hon. member has clearly departed from our practices and has clearly said what he is entitled perhaps to say but in a way in which he is not entitled to say it in the chamber. Therefore, I would ask him to withdraw the remark and perhaps put it in more parliamentary language.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that I did not want to attribute any motive, in so far as the word which I used could be ascribed as attributing a motive, and I would withdraw the word and replace it with the word "untruth", which I hope will be acceptable to Your Honour.

I can assure the House that I was not even particularly passionate when I was speaking. It was nothing compared to what I can be. But in so far as a motive could be ascribed to either the hon. member from Edmonton or the Minister of Finance, naturally, quite happily and generously I withdraw the word "lie" and replace it with the word "untruth". But I hope that the confusion that has been created—and it is my own fault—by the use of that word will not obscure the thrust of my intervention. The thrust of my intervention is that the government has been attempting to convince the people of Canada—

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has said that he withdraws the word "lie" and replaces it with the synonym "untruth". I have Beauchesne's here and I see there are about 35 Speaker's rulings with respect to the word "lie". I assume, sir, that your direction to the hon. member would not simply be to allow him to withdraw a word and replace it with a synonym which, to all intents and purposes, means the same thing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are two points to be made. In the first place, no member has the right to replace language that he has withdrawn. It is a freedom that members seem to take unto themselves when they make what has now become a characteristically ungenerous withdrawal of unparliamentary remarks. When members do withdraw their remarks, their ingenuity in finding a way to withdraw the offending words and still keep the sword in, as it were, is quite remarkable, and this was no exception.

However, it is not open to a member to attempt to replace retroactively language which he previously used. He can withdraw the offending phrase, which the hon. member says he does completely. In addition, the problem is that no expression which has been found to be unparliamentary can be categorically and always described to be unparliamentary until the context is seen. Therefore, attempting to reverse now and decide on the context to be put on the language by the hon. member, even if he could rephrase his language in the way he wishes to do, would be most difficult for the Chair.

I think that the point which has to be made in all these circumstances is the one that has been accepted by the hon. member, and that is that there are some constraints, not upon the message he can deliver but only on the form in which he can do it. He has accepted that and he has withdrawn it. I think that every member must be permitted to do that and that must resolve the matter procedurally.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, the point of my intervention has been to say that the government has been attempting to convince the Canadian people that the people who are obstructing this legislation are the opposition. I want to suggest to the government that that is completely untrue. The case is that we have a serious difference of opinion within the House of Commons as to the nature of the tax credit, which is a major reform of our income tax system and which some of us have been studying for some time. To suggest that members of the opposition should lie down and let a piece of legislation through because of some Gallup polls which have been put forward by the government and which are waved at us from time to time is, I suggest, an abuse of the democratic and parliamentary process.

The government does not seem to recognize that there is a legitimate difference of opinion in the House as to the merits of the proposal, that there are serious amendments which have been put forward. As I said before, we have played no games with the government. We have submitted our amendments, we have let them see our amendments, we have not concealed a thing. We have done it in a constructive spirit and we have indicated from the very first day on which I spoke in this debate on October 20 what our position was going to be with respect to amendments.

Now we are told that the government is not prepared to consider any of our amendments, that all our amendments will be considered, on a prima facie basis, unreasonable. That attitude, coupled with the untruth I have suggested that unless this legislation is passed before December 31, somehow we are robbing the Canadian taxpayer of a benefit—and that is an untruth because, as hon. members will know, the legislation provides that it should apply in 1979 regardless of whether or not it is passed in 1979, so that it can be passed in 1980—

Mr. Jarvis: Be practical. When are they going to file?

Mr. Rae: Let me suggest to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Jarvis) that he has created the problem by mailing out the forms prior to passage in Parliament.

Mr. Kempling: You haven't been around here long enough.

Mr. Rae: The chief whip, in his usual style, suggests that I have not been around here long enough. Perhaps some people have been around for so long they have forgotten the most elementary basis of parliamentary government, a matter that goes back to the origin of Parliament in the seventeenth century, that the control of supply must remain with the House. I would point out that the control of supply does not remain with the government, the Queen's Printer or whoever has to publish the tax forms.

● (1650)

If it is a question of holding up the mailing of tax forms for an extra ten days, I suggest the government has its priorities all wrong. It would be far better if Canadians understood that debate took place in Parliament, and that as a result of the debate a delay took place in the submission of a piece of legislation to this House. It would be far better if Canadians understood that, as a result of that debate in the House of Commons, there was a delay of a number of days in the sending out of tax forms. I submit there is absolutely nothing wrong with that. To suggest otherwise is to mislead the Canadian people. It is to tell the Canadian people that the Queen's Printer and the government together are dictating not only the schedule but the measures and legislation which will be passed by the House before we have had a chance to consider them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, after having witnessed Friday last the show given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) allow me to give my opinion a little more soberly on the subject matter of Bill C-20, an act to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax. In that area as in many others, the Progressive Conservative government has tried to improvise rather than develop a housing policy. It wanted to meet three objectives or promises; first, keep one of its election promises made on the basis of surveys; second, give the necessary impetus to construction to spur the economy; third, help the owners of single-family dwellings burdened by land taxes and now crushed by the mortgage interest rate which has now reached a record level.

Mr. Speaker, while the Liberal opposition recognizes that we have to assist owners, it deplores that the Progressive Conservative government has not made more original proposals. If we only take into account the mortgage interest rate set under this government, the benefits of such legislation are cancelled. I suggest that the government should tackle the cause of the problem instead of its effects. It should look for a scapegoat other than the previous administration since the Gallup poll showed clearly that the public is not satisfied with this excuse.

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative government must understand that it will not buy the credibility it lacks with its tax credit program on mortgage interest. What is expected from it is much more a sense of responsibility and the capacity to govern the country in the best interests of all Canadians.

As to the second objective of this program, here is what Mr. Barry Gander, a construction expert, had to say about it in the December 1979 issue of Construction magazine, and I quote:

> In fact, if the government is under the impression it has "taken care" of the construction sector problem with its tax credit program on mortgage interest, this impression will be shattered to pieces when it realizes that 75 per cent of the construction is non-housing construction.

And he added:

> The lesson to be learned from the intentions announced by the government during the present parliamentary session is clear: aside from a few measures of regional impact, industry needs much more diversified policies than those which were announced up to now and we would like to be informed of those policies before rather than after some of our businesses go bankrupt.

You have only to refer to the government buildings construction programme, where most of the projects have been cancelled throughout the country. This programme would have met the needs of the construction industry. The government has not even given it the least thought as a means of putting the construction industry back on its feet. This is one of the numerous examples shown by the present government of its inability to take wise and non-partisan decisions which are not inspired by electoral considerations. Canadians have now realized they were fooled on May 22, and a measure such as Bill C-20 will not help them regain their confidence in a government which shows no leadership.

Economically, it relies on the private sector or on the provinces. The case of Alberta can probably be solved without too much difficulty. But as far as the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and the other provinces are concerned, we need more than pious wishes. To date, Mr. Speaker, what kind of agreement has this government concluded with the private sector to ensure the revival of our economy? How many Crown corporations were sold?

As to the third objective, namely, helping owners in difficulty, in its July 1979 report, the Toronto Real Estate Board makes suggestions which seem interesting to us, and particularly which are less costly than the suggestions made in the bill. Under the heading "Tax Credits and Incentives", their report says on page 27, and I quote:

[English]

It is feasible to introduce a simple income-tests refundable tax credit which would provide benefits to lower income groups.

[Translation]

And the report reads further:

[English]

The deductibility of mortgage interest payments should be reviewed; such a review should give careful consideration to delivering the greatest benefits to the lowest income groups.

[Translation]

We realize, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-20 is very far from that recommendation. The lack of planning, the lack of concrete measures for renters in this bill, the lack of respect for the parliamentary system by the Minister of Finance who ridicules the business of the House, and sends the tax forms even before the discussions on the bill have been completed, as well as the lack of a—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to know whether we are discussing Bill C-20, or a motion which has been put forward this afternoon?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): It is on the motion on Standing Order 75C.

[Translation]

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Perhaps the hon. member has not read the bill. I think I am dealing with the subject matter. That is quite clear. So in view of that, coupled with the lack of a budget setting out the government's priorities, no responsible member of this House could support this measure. The philosophy and the leadership of the government are clearly expressed in this statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) during his weekly press conference of November 30 last, when he said, and I quote:

[English]

Our judgment was that it was far preferable to try to move the bill quickly through Parliament and allow the people of Canada to take advantage of the tax credit early rather than have an extensive debate with wide discussion of amendments now, which would mean that no benefits would get to Canadians for another year.

[Translation]

Quite simply, after six months, the government is proposing a bill which, when it is fully in force, will cost some $3 billion, yet the Prime Minister wants to limit the debate to its barest minimum. Not only that, but he wants to muzzle the opposition less than two weeks after the House has started discussing the bill. This is the same Prime Minister who emphatically spoke of deficits during the campaign and who refuses to tell Canadians how they are going to pay for this ostentatious and discriminating piece of legislation. The population of Mercier cannot be fooled, no more than the rest of Canadians who, with tomorrow's budget, will learn much of the Progressive Conservative's inability to govern.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the floor. I shall try to speak on this motion instead of on Bill C-20 because I understand that the motion we are studying this afternoon has to do with time allocation on Bill C-20. I do not understand why we should extend ad infinitum the time allocation on that bill. I have never been in favour of motions under 75C, especially when introduced by the former government in relation to a so-called omnibus bill. May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

● (1700)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. May I remind the House that the time allotted for this debate under Standing Order 75C was two hours. One hour and 54 minutes has now elapsed. The debate will, therefore, be interrupted six minutes after resuming debate at 8 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby)—Air Transport—Proposed sale of Nordair—Consideration of bid of Eastern Provincial Airways; the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin)—Unemployment—Alarming situation of the unemployed—Request for announcement of government policy; the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais)—Employment—Canada Works Program—Request for supplementary funds.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Lévis

(Mr. Guay) is not here today, I think that all hon. members will agree that we should proceed now with motion No. 12. May we do so with the unanimous consent of the House?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The House will now proceed to motion No. 12.

INCOME TAX

POSSIBILITY OF GRANTING FISCAL ADVANTAGES TO VOLUNTEER FIREMEN

Mr. Armand Caouette (Abitibi) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to exclude from taxable income all indemnities received by a volunteer fireman in the exercise of his duties, as well as to allow such firemen to deduct from their income $1,000 for all expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to deal for the third time with this motion which I moved for the first time some three years ago. Since then, I have received a great many letters from and made a great many contacts with firemen from various municipalities throughout Canada indicating that it is about time the government once and for all look into the situation of these people who are doing Canadians a first-rate service, so that income tax-wise they may get their fair share.

Mr. Speaker, the interest of several hundred Canadians who perform the duties of volunteer firemen is at stake here. As I said a while ago, this is the third time I have spoken on this motion in this House. Each time, the Liberal government, through its backbenchers, managed to defeat the motion. Of course, Mr. Speaker, all the parties represented in the House spoke of the need to pass the motion. However, they made sure beforehand of having enough speakers to use up the time allotted and so kill the motion. I therefore ask my colleagues today, both government members and members of the opposition, to overlook their parliamentary hesitations and realize the importance and necessity of passing this motion. I sincerely believe, Mr. Speaker, that the House, that all hon. members, would benefit from putting an end to this cynical comedy that recurs constantly when a motion of this type is introduced by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote a press release I received from the Quebec Federation of Professional Firefighters which strongly supports the resolution of the volunteer firemen of the province of Quebec asking that an income tax exemption be granted them on the money they earn in the exercise of those duties. That resolution was signed by Mr. Alfred Morin, president of the Quebec Federation of Professional Firefighters. And I also received from the Canadian Fire Chiefs Association the report of the 60th annual conference which was held between August 24 and 28, 1975, in Mississauga. In the report, there was a resolution which reads as follows:

Introduced by the volunteer section of the Fire Chiefs Association of British Columbia regarding the increase in the income tax exemption for all volunteer firemen;

Whereas volunteer firemen must face an increase in their responsibilities and their functions as a consequence of the rapid growth in population and in construction;

Whereas it is ever more expensive to ensure those essential services to the collectivity;

Whereas the Income Tax Act which provides for a $300 exemption for expenses incurred as a consequence of the functions of volunteer firemen has not changed since its inception 29 years ago;

Be it resolved that the Canadian Fire Chiefs Association asks the minister concerned both in the federal and in provincial governments to bring up the exemption to $1,000, with the recommendation to the committee on resolutions to approve that resolution.

Mr. Speaker, we can see from that request by the Canadian Volunteer Firemen Federation that they are asking for a supplementary exemption not only to the federal government but also to all the provinces. Later, I shall be able to say specifically that some provinces decided to follow the Professional Fire Fighters Federation and to change their income tax act.

But before that, Mr. Speaker, I should like, for the benefit of the members of this government, to read from the speech the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made last year on the same motion. He said, and I quote:

Having heard the proposer of this motion and the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications speak with such determination in the interests of this resolution I want to indicate on behalf of my party that we support the motion and are prepared to support the amendment in order to get it through private members' hour.

Let me put this in perspective. It is fine to have speeches in support of this very commendable motion, but I do not want to witness these speeches past six o'clock.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe in what was said by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when he was in the opposition and I hope that the message has been conveyed to his government colleagues, so that they will refrain from talking out the motion past six o'clock.

• (1710)

We are in this House, Mr. Speaker, to speak on behalf of our voters and only a greater feeling of equity and justice should guide our proceedings. It is in that sense that I am humbly asking all my colleagues to consider my motion.

I would like in the first place to point the reasons specifically warranting that request for an increase with tax exemption from $30 to $1,000. Firstly, Mr. Speaker, volunteer firemen are ordinary workers often with a low income. They must regularly use their car to get to the scene of the fire and they must face all the dangers involved in their duties as volunteer firemen. Those people must also pay their cleaning costs and often the loss of clothes or personal items such as a watch, a ring and other things.

And as far as their family life is concerned, volunteer firemen are on call in rotation in order to provide this service to the people. In addition, under the present tax legislation, volunteer firemen are getting harder to recruit for many municipalities. Mr. Speaker, many municipalities have represented to us how extremely difficult it was now to recruit individuals who are willing to go and help couples and families who have the bad luck of having their home destroyed by fire.

Volunteer firemen render a valuable service to the Canadian community either on a voluntary basis or at a very low rate of pay, and often at the risk or their life. Let us imagine how much more it would cost Canadian taxpayers if they had to pay the regular price for such services. These firemen perform exceptional duties at any hour of the day or night. For instance, I remember that a few years ago, in my home town, in the riding I have the honour to represent, volunteer firemen were called upon to fight a fire in a house where 18 people lived. When they got there, they realized that 11 persons were already dead.

Nevertheless, all local volunteer firemen mustered enough courage to answer the call even though it was 40 below. They wanted to try and save as many human lives as possible. By dint of hard work, they managed to save the other seven persons who were also caught in that house.

Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, I will be the first to do what I asked other hon. members, that is not to talk out the bill. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make another comment. Volunteer firemen work freely for the community, they serve it in all sorts of ways, for little or no pay. They provide an invaluable service to our sparsely populated cities. So the government should recognize this, tax-wise.

As I said earlier, I have here a bill proposed at the Quebec National Assembly asking the provincial government to raise the tax exemption for volunteer firemen from $300 to $1,000. That may have been too much for the government but there was at least some increase since the exemption in Quebec went from $300 to $600. That may not be very big but it is an improvement which could be significant if the federal government also did its share.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I find the motion interesting, and I congratulate the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette) for introducing it. I agree with half of the motion and I will discuss that in a moment.

This gives me an opportunity to say thank you to all volunteer firemen right across Canada. The two communities which I represent, Brampton and Georgetown, now have full-time departments and some of the best equipped and finest fire fighting troops one can find anywhere. Both communities had volunteer fire brigades at one time. Many of the volunteer firemen are still around, and I thank them for their protection.

Since volunteer firemen first received the right to deduct some of their expenses from their income tax, costs have risen drastically. I would support an investigation into the possibility of amending the Income Tax Act to increase their expense allowance. However, I am concerned about their exclusion from taxable income and the indemnities received for fighting fires, because it may set a precedent.

There are many volunteer organizations which could quite easily come under the same type of proposal. I am concerned that if we exclude certain portions of the taxable income from indemnities received for duties performed—whether they be on a voluntary basis or whatever—we would be setting a precedent and as a result many other community organizations would claim the same exclusions. However, I do support the hon. member for Abitibi in his request that the government look into increasing the deduction for expenses.

The types of problems which volunteer firemen face, such as having to go to a fire direct from their place of business, often results in ruined clothing, whether it be suit or whatever. The cost of clothing is going up, as is the cost of the fuel which firemen use in rushing to prevent and fight fires in their various communities. Once again, I congratulate the hon. member for introducing this motion and indicate my support for one half of it. The other half would cause some considerable grief to the government.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my support to this motion and commend the hon. member for bringing it before the House. Volunteer firemen are an example of volunteerism at its very best. These men are called upon at all hours of the day and night and must leave their families and/or their work. They do this work as a public service and as good citizens. It is asking too much of them to pay from their own pockets for the cleaning of their clothes, purchasing of extra clothes, gas to get to the fire and so on.

The very least we could do is to go as far as the province of Quebec has gone and bring in a tax exemption of $600. Personally, I feel that an exemption of $1,000 would be more reasonable. If there are differences in the motion which hon. members cannot go along with, these, of course, can be settled through amendments in second reading. There is no reason to defeat the motion because we do not agree with every item in it. In conclusion, if there has been an exemption in the past of $300, then an exemption of $600 or $1,000 for today is very practical.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my support and congratulations to those already received by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette). Without repeating too many of the comments and suggestions which have already been made, it is a very worthwhile motion because it recognizes the very worth-while services provided by firemen to small communities.

The one suggestion that I would like to make on this particular motion is that it should be broadened to include many of the other groups which provide rescue service within the community. The volunteer firemen are one of the best examples of dedication to public service. On the west coast of Canada there are people who have acted in a number of capacities, such as coastguard rescue agents, for which they receive no pay whatsoever. Some have also provided a great deal of personal equipment. I should like to give a couple of examples of individuals who have provided equipment and incurred expenses on the west coast in order to provide the same kind of service as that provided by volunteer firemen.

● (1720)

On Pender Island there is a rescue agent who has provided approximately $80,000 of equipment over a number of years. There is a vessel and some specialized rescue equipment which has been used in over 300 marine incidents. He has not received a penny for this. Operating expenses are covered but his outlay for specialized rescue equipment has been substantial.

Another example is a rescue agent in Campbell River who also works closely with the volunteer fire department. He has spent something in the order of $12,000 to provide VHF and HF radios. He monitors emergencies frequently and responds to them. He has donated a $10,000 boat for rescue service. It was mentioned in this House not too long ago that this particular individual was involved in a rescue in which a seine vessel overturned in one of the most dangerous pieces of water in western Canada, Seymour Narrows. Two members of the armed forces rescued people from inside the vessel. These divers were presented with medals for bravery but the private citizen I mentioned had to replace his torn wet suit and wrecked scuba diving gear at his own expense.

I believe there is an element of justice in the proposed motion, Mr. Speaker. I should like to congratulate the hon. member for bringing it forward and would ask the government to take it under advisement. People who provide similar services at their own expense and quite willingly should be recognized. I should like to lend my voice to supporting the motion, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say that I, too, support this motion. This is an initiative that has been supported by everybody for a long time. I would just like to point out to the House that many hon. members on our side also support this motion. I thank and congratulate the sponsors of the motion and I hope it will be referred to committee.

[English]

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on this motion but I was so moved by the eloquence of other members, particularly the mover of the motion, that I felt compelled to be identified with the sentiments expressed in their speeches and to lend what support I can, as a private member, to the motion.

My riding of Hillsborough essentially covers the greater Charlottetown area of Prince Edward Island. It is made up of several communities apart from Charlottetown—Sherwood, Parkdale and East and West Royalty. While it is a small community, it contains a number of very successful, well-developed, well-equipped and technologically sophisticated fire departments. More important than the technology, and even more important than the equipment and the endowment of those departments in terms of budgets, is the resourcefulness, the dedication and community spirit of the firemen.

I should like to congratulate the members who have spoken on the motion before me, Mr. Speaker. If I may be allowed, I should like to congratulate in particular the mover, the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette), and the seconder, the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier). Their speeches were not only a credit to themselves and to their ridings but to the firemen across the country on whose behalf they were speaking. Their remarks also reflect an awareness of the special role of firemen in the country and an awareness of the role of volunteerism in Canada and elsewhere.

It is true that more and more Canadians expect government to do almost everything for them. As government becomes more expansive and encroaches more and more on the private sector, it is a threat to volunteerism. I am sure that that threat is one of the reasons this government has seen fit to appoint a special body to examine the role and opportunities of different kinds of voluntary organizations.

Nowhere is volunteerism more important than in the sphere of fire fighting, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned my riding of Hillsborough and referred to the fact that it consists mostly of the city of Charlottetown and includes Sherwood, Parkdale and East and West Royalty. I should like to cite a few facts regarding fire fighting in my riding which I am sure will be equally true of other communities across the dominion.

In Hillsborough there are three fire departments, Charlottetown, Sherwood and Parkdale. The Charlottetown fire department comprises 57 members, 52 of whom are volunteers and five of whom are full-time. The department depends very significantly upon the contribution, dedication and community service of the voluntary sector. The volunteers receive $2,300 per year. That is not a remuneration although it covers some, but not all, of the expenses they incur in the fulfilment of their role. I am told that the Charlottetown fire department answers something like 350 calls per year and that every fireman, without exception, is required to turn out for each and every call.

Some of the volunteers lose pay from their jobs for the time spent at fires. That is very significant, Mr. Speaker. In effect, they are paying for the right to fulfil their role as fire fighters. The fire chief in Charlottetown has informed me that, in his judgment and in the judgment of his colleagues across the country, the motion we are discussing today is welcome and that he supports it 100 per cent.

I have mentioned the city of Charlottetown, which is my own city and which lies within the riding of Hillsborough. Another community that I should like to mention, to illustrate the importance of the motion's being implemented, is Sherwood, which is smaller than Charlottetown. In that village of less than 10,000 people there are 30 members of the fire department. Every single one is a volunteer. Today they receive something like $1,000. Again I stress that that is not salary, payment, recompense or remuneration. It is merely a part coverage of expenses incurred by firemen in the performance of their duties. For some that $1,000 will cover pretty well all their expenses. For many more there are other out of pocket expenses they will be called upon to meet themselves.

● (1730)

I want to elaborate on that point because I think it is important. It is especially significant in terms of the motion we are discussing this afternoon. Sometimes those of us who are laymen wonder how much is incurred by a fireman by way of expenses. One would perhaps assume that with fire trucks, hoses, water and everything else being looked after by the fire department, there would be very few out of pocket expenses for the individual member of the fire department. That is a misrepresentation; it does not accord with the facts. Everything from clothing to extra car insurance to, for example, time lost on the job as I mentioned earlier, is involved in the fulfilment of the duty of a fireman in every community, not just in my own.

The fire department in Sherwood, the smaller community I was referring to, had something like 92 responses last year. In addition, it had 44 training sessions. Therefore, we are not just talking about the time firemen take out of their busy lives, their personal and family affairs, to put out fires, but also about the time they devote to training. That has to be calculated into any equation involving the estimation of the sacrifice made by our firefighters in every community in this great dominion.

In Sherwood, and again it is just an illustration, members are required to put in five complete weekends per year on duty at that particular station. That represents a tremendous sacrifice. It is one of the conditions that motivates me this afternoon to speak as vigorously as I can on behalf of the motion.

I wish to use one final illustration. I referred to Charlottetown, the capital city of Prince Edward Island, and the smaller community of Sherwood, which is in my riding as well. I might also cite the example of Parkdale. It, too, has a fire department. It is manned by dedicated and community-minded people who make the same kind of sacrifices as those made by volunteer firefighters in Charlottetown and Sherwood. The fire department of Parkdale consists of 28 members. Every single one is a volunteer. Not one is recompensed other than by way of looking after some of the expenses incurred in the fulfilment of the duty of being a fireman in that particular community. Each fireman is allotted or allocated $400 to cover his or her expenses. That does not go very far in this day and age, especially when one considers the very expensive commodities such as clothing that are involved in being a fireman, not to mention time lost from earning one's livelihood.

[Mr. McMillan.]

In the community of Parkdale, the firemen responded to something like 50 to 60 calls last year. I understand in other years the number of calls has been even higher. One can imagine how much sacrifice is made by the firemen in that community when he considers there are only 28 members to respond to as many as 60 calls. You can see how thinly their resources are spread and what sacrifices are made in that community by firemen who are so dedicated and community-minded.

I conclude by saying how much I support the motion. It is an excellent one. The motion would have the Income Tax Act amended so that firemen could deduct from their incomes $1,000 for all expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties. It would give them absolution from taxes on all indemnities paid to them in the fulfilment of their duties. The motion is one that I support vigorously, without qualification, with great pride and with enthusiasm. I urge members on all sides of the House to give it their endorsation as well.

Mr. Ron Ritchie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I too congratulate the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette). All of us know, and it has been reiterated a few times in the last several minutes, how important volunteer firemen, their activities and their commitment, are in a great many communities in this country, not only communities wholly reliant on voluntary efforts, but communities which cannot from their own funds support a sufficiently paid fire force and therefore must have it supplemented by volunteers.

The hon. member will be glad to know that he is not alone, apart from hon. members who voiced their support in the House this afternoon. The Department of Finance has been receiving a great many representations, perhaps over some years, but certainly recently, on this subject. I think it might be useful to put a certain perspective on the actions that are proposed.

Most of the representations that have been received in recent months have dealt with the second part of this resolution, the proposal that the allowable expense be increased for income tax purposes. Very few have dealt with the first part, that any indemnity received by volunteer firemen not be included in taxable income.

Certainly as far as the allowance goes, if that allowance was right in the first place, the allowance cannot be considered large enough today if it was large enough originally. I think that allowance goes back to the year 1953, if recollection serves me right, and it has been an unchanged allowance through that period. We all know how much inflation has occurred since that time and how much costs have gone up.

I am told there are some costs incurred, to which volunteer firemen are subject to, which have not been mentioned in the chamber this afternoon. I am told that volunteer firemen often, or perhaps always, cannot get insurance to cover the times when they are rushing to a fire in their own cars. Some people paid very dearly for that part of their volunteer effort.

On the other hand, not every one who has made representations to the Minister of Finance is wholly in favour of the principle of this resolution. It might be better to say they may be in favour of the principle, but have concerns of their own. We have also heard there are other volunteer people, some of whom are active in rather hazardous occupations, who have expenses somewhat analogous to those incurred by volunteer firemen. We have had representations from some volunteer groups that their volunteers should have a comparable allowance and they should have it before that of the firemen goes up. I mention this only as a matter of information.

I would like to comment on the first part of the hon. member's motion, the proposal that the indemnity of volunteer firemen not be included in taxable income. Here I share at least a question with the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), that this is a part of the proposal that should win less instant acclaim than the second part of the proposal. It certainly does raise a principle which, if applied here, no matter how great the contribution of volunteer firemen is, and I agree it is very great, raises a principle that could be applied elsewhere and be extended perhaps indefinitely. Having said that, having raised the question, I would again congratulate the hon. member on his initiative and on his commitment in bringing forward this motion.

● (1740)

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the motion, and first, to commend the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette) for bringing it forward. When we think of the constituency and the area represented by our colleague, I understand his reasons for doing so, aware as he is of the problems and difficulties faced by the majority of small municipalities and also by larger centres in absorbing the cost of a fire brigade. Such a proposal will allow municipalities to see that the government accept, and support, the voluntary work done at the local level, which is totally acceptable. Each and everyone of us should commend the hon. member and see to it that the government implements this as soon as possible.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, in smaller municipalities and particularly in eastern Quebec and the Gaspé Peninsula, where most communities average between 2,000 and 8,000 population, it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to provide fire fighting at the ratepayers' costs.

The availability of volunteer firemen provides security for those people, the knowledge that in case of fire, at any hour of the day, they can count on people from their own area. This is why the motion put forward by my colleague from Abitibi deserves support. Some may be concerned with the $1,000 income tax deduction, but it must be realized that not all municipalities can count on people like company presidents or lawyers or doctors to serve as volunteer firemen in the normal course of life. Their duties preclude this and I feel it is to be expected rather than that people with more leisure time should provide this kind of voluntary service. For this reason I do not believe that a $1,000 deduction would unsettle or contradict the famous principle referred to by my colleague from York East, the fact that such a deduction could apply in other fields of society.

I therefore am in total agreement with the motion put forward by my colleague from Abitibi, on both items involved, that of excluding from taxable income any allowance received by a volunteer fireman and of allowing for a $1,000 deduction from their revenues, which could encourage a greater number of individuals in our small municipalities to co-operate in these volunteer firemen groups. In this way, the Canadian government would recognize and encourage the people in our small municipalities to volunteer their services in order to provide security for all their fellow citizens.

Mr. René Cousineau (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take just a few moments to support my hon. colleague from Abitibi and commend him on the motion he has presented today. If there is somebody who is underestimated in our society, it is certainly the fireman and particularly the volunteer fireman. He is the first to be on the spot every time there is a fire or a problem threatening the community's security. Mr. Speaker, this motion is commendable and I repeat that I strongly support it. I suggest that the government proceed with it as soon as possible in order to give benefits to this group of individuals who do a great service to their fellow citizens every day.

[English]

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to support the hon. gentleman's motion on volunteer firemen. All our firemen in Nunatsiaq are volunteers. Last year in Frobisher Bay, alone, a town of 2,500 people, there were no fewer than seven fire-related deaths. A school in my home town of Rankin Inlet was destroyed by fire. In Eskimo Point a power station was destroyed by fire. Three further deaths in Rankin Inlet last year were related to fire, revealing a lack of adequate equipment and training. Volunteer firemen do their best and deserve all the help we can give them. I think my people in Nunatsiaq would fully endorse this motion put forward by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Caouette).

Mr. Knowles: Question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question!

Motion (Mr. Caouette) agreed to.

Mr. Knowles: Six o'clock.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we might call it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Time Allocation

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At 5.48 p.m. the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE STAGE OF BILL C-20

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

That in relation to Bill C-20, an act to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax, one sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration in Committee of the Whole stage of the bill; and

That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceeding before the committee shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn every question then necessary in order to dispose of the Committee of the Whole stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I continue what I was saying before supper about the motion introduced by the minister to limit the time of debate on Bill C-20. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, if all members of this House want to be serious, I believe the discussion on this bill has lasted long enough. This is a bill made up of two clauses, the first one giving the principle of the bill and the second one determining the tax cuts being proposed by the ministry.

We have to be serious; after seven days of debate and so many speakers during those seven days—just on the official opposition side more than 25 members spoke and I think they had the time, Mr. Speaker, to give the lines of thought of their party, as well as those of their colleagues, the Liberals, who voted with us on second reading of this bill. I believe they also agree with us on this bill. I think a lot of people are watching us tonight. A lot of heads of families are waiting for this bill to try to reduce somewhat interests in arrears because of the continuous rise in interest rates.

We have ourselves addressed this bill. Government members as well as members of the New Democratic Party have had the opportunity to suggest amendments to this bill. Again this afternoon I could hear members of the NDP or the official opposition say that they could not get their amendments accepted. They knew beforehand that they could not do it, Mr. Speaker, because we had already been warned. The minister warned the House that he could not accept amendments which would increase the budget. Indeed, according to usual practice, an amendment which forces the ministry to increase its budget is not acceptable. It constitutes a finance bill and cannot be accepted. This is why the minister said simply that he would review these amendments and that it would always be possible to come back to this bill after the holidays.

If everyone were sincere and would stop playing politics, we would all agree that it is time this evening to take a serious stand before the Canadian people and to take the action that people are expecting from serious politicians who were elected to help them, at least partially, to solve their problems. It has been said during the debate that this bill provides no extension and is too restrictive. Others have said that it is too costly. It is a great thing to sit here and listen to speeches.

Mr. Speaker, since I only have three minutes left, I would like to appeal to all serious-minded members in this House. As your leader would say, let us stop this nonsense and try to be serious. We, of the Social Credit party, believe, first that this has gone on long enough, and second, that this bill is a priority. We have made our speeches. We have been asking for such a bill for many years, Mr. Speaker, and we now urge the minister to act as soon as possible before he gets discouraged. Mr. Speaker, for the first time in this House, we are witnessing approval of the basic principle of the Social Credit party in the area of housing.

Members are right to applaud because it is true. No one has ever listened to, or wanted to listen to, the housing reforms proposed by the Social Credit party. The opposition members believe that Social Credit is only a matter of dollars and cents. It is not. They should read the reforms proposed by the Social Credit party. It is a complete social reform, the monetary reform represents only one-thousandth of it, a social reform that puts the wealth of our country at the service of human beings instead of giving it to millionaires as you are doing. It is the first time, Mr. Speaker, that a bill will give some help.

In the last 20 years we have been asking that single family unit owners be given the same benefits as the big owners of multiple dwelling buildings. We have been asking for that for a long time. Never before has a government dared to do it. This evening, the party in power proposes a small amendment, I repeat, but at least it is a first step. This is why tonight we urge the minister to make sure by all means that this bill is passed before Christmas to give at least a big gift to family heads for the New Year. People are waiting for it. Millions of family heads, of young couples, are waiting for this.

● (2010)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 8.10 p.m., the two hours allotted under Standing Order 75(C) for the consideration of the motion before us have now expired. In accordance with that Standing Order it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put all questions necessary to dispose of this motion.

The question is on the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I did not vote because I had agreed last week to be paired with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKinnon).

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre).

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I understand that, under the rule, the House order would now mean one full day's debate. As the budget will begin at eight o'clock tomorrow night, should there not now be some arrangement about what exactly comprises a full day's debate? Will it be part of tonight, part of tomorrow, and part of Wednesday? That does not seem to be very clear at the moment. Perhaps the government House leader, with the leaders of the other parties—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lefebvre: Would you mind if I have a couple of minutes? I speak to these experts on the back benches opposite who have only been here a couple of weeks. I should like to get an answer from the government House leader, if possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I can indicate that the precedents are clear, that the day upon which the House embarks upon the business which is the subject matter of an order pursuant to Standing Order 75C does not count as the first sitting day. Therefore, one sitting day remains to be allotted at the close of the business of today. If an entire day is not used tomorrow for that subject, because of the budget tomorrow night, then some further hours would have to be spent. The number is not certain. Perhaps in the interval between now and the start of business tomorrow, the House leaders could decide whether they could come to some agreement on that account.

Pursuant to Standing Order 54 I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE TAX CREDIT IN RESPECT OF MORTGAGE INTEREST AND PROPERTY TAX

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 5, consideration in committee of Bill C-20, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax—Mr. Crosbie—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose on December 5, 1979, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration. Hon. members might be interested in what I am going to say. Because the order that has been adopted tonight provides, "that, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day"—meaning the day on which we will complete consideration of committee stage of Bill C-20—"all questions will have to be put." The danger is that the committee might be placed in some difficulty unless hon. members plan the work of the committee ahead of time.

During the day I heard some hon. members say to others that no amendments had been moved in committee, while others affirmed that some amendments had been moved in committee. I must say officially that the Chair has no amendment in front of it and no amendment can be in front of the Chair unless it is moved. Because we can only have one amendment in front of us at a time, and vote on only one amendment at a time, all those amendments of which the Table might have received notice are not officially in front of us until we reach them and make a decision on them.

If, by any chance, hon. members debate the bill on clause 1 up to 15 minutes before the end of the time allowed, the Chairman will have no alternative but to put the question on clauses 1, 2, 3, the title, and the bill, and will in no way be able to receive amendments at that time.

I just make that suggestion and I hope hon. members will take it into account when planning the work of the committee.

On clause 1—

Mr. Axworthy: Just to put your mind at ease, Mr. Chairman, I hasten to assure you that we intend to move several amendments to this bill. Any anticipation you might have of being able to go home early could be quickly discarded. We will be very glad to satisfy your request that changes be made to this piece of legislation.

Let me begin by observing that the Minister of Finance is unable to be with us this evening. I extend my sympathies to him, as I know what a difficult position he is in. He does not have an oil agreement, he does not have an agreement on pricing, and he does not have an agreement on most things that pertain to this government. We certainly understand that, in a moment of panic, he would flee the House very early, in the hope that he can arrive at some last minute negotiations.

By contrast, Mr. Chairman, I note the high rage and indignation he expressed previously about the fact that members of the opposition had not given him an opportunity to consider amendments. I am sorry he is not here to listen to and participate in this debate, which he has called one of the more important initiatives of his government. I suppose this is an indication of the priority the Minister of Finance gives to this bill. After he and his colleagues have flexed their muscles to deny totally the democratic rights and privileges of members of this House, he now feels sufficient disdain that he can leave even though, in his own words, this matter is of such great importance that he has reason to be elsewhere.

I welcome the presence of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, knowing him to be a person of great reason and rationality—probably more so than the minister himself. However, we want to express our own concern that the Minister of Finance is not here because we believe that the amendments that will be brought forward are ones which will have serious consequences for this bill. It is unfortunate that the senior minister responsible for the legislation is not in his seat and therefore able to exercise his judgment as to whether the government is prepared to accept them or not.

One of the questions we certainly want to raise at the outset is whether we are going to be treated to the same sham performance we received previously, where the government is really not prepared to accept the amendments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: It would help if members opposite were able to restrain their own particular form of verbal pollution for a while so that we shall be able to get these amendments out and make our arguments. We are obviously debating the wrong bill. We should be debating certain game laws to keep those people in their seats, in their own particular wilderness experience, to be restrained so that those of us in this House who treat these amendments with a degree of seriousness are allowed to do our job. I would only ask some co-operation from members because what I say is important to them. I only hope that through their behaviour in this House they might demonstrate how serious they are prepared to be.

In again examining the basic details of this bill, as has been expressed several times by members of our caucus, we have found a lot to disagree with, both in principle and practice. What gives us particular concern at this point in time is the statements made by the Minister of Finance.

What clearly is being demonstrated by the minister is that he does not know what his own legislation means. He has been so busy holding up his own gag routine he has failed to read the kinds of documents and papers prepared for him by his officials. He has made the most serious error any minister of finance can make, that is, the error of the sin of inaccuracy and misrepresentation about the intent of the bill. That may be all right if the minister is simply engaging in rhetorical flourish. However, when he is talking about the expenditure of $3 billion, a major change to the tax structure of our country, every Canadian has the right to expect the Minister of Finance at least to be precise and accurate in his statements, and not become so carried away with his verbal buffoonery that he ceases to tell this House exactly what the intent and purpose of this bill are.

I would like to comment in part on some verbal excesses of which the minister was guilty over the course of this debate. For example, he has accused members on this side of not caring about the middle-class home owner. He made some fairly violent accusations that members on this side are bleeding hearts and that only he, the Minister of Finance, is engaged in the crusade to defend the rights of the middle-class home owner. In fact, quite the opposite is true.

By the statement made in the document produced by the Department of Finance, which the minister obviously has not had the opportunity to read, called "Government of Canada Tax Expenditure Account", it points out that in the area of housing and urban renewal there are tax allowances presently amounting to $7 billion that are available to middle-class home owners. The non-taxation of capital gains on principal residences amounts to $2.5 billion of tax expenditure deduction. That is an issue that was introduced as part of the tax program of previous governments. For the moment, the non-taxation of imputed income on rental value of home ownership adds up to $3.7 billion of tax expenditures. The tax deductions allowed on the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan amount to $115 million.

In other words, in total contrast to the accusations made by the Minister of Finance, the opposite happens to be true. Middle-class home owners are treated with a high degree of preference in our present tax act. The argument of members on this side has always been that when providing for further relief of pressures due to the high cost of housing, those pressures should be assessed according to who is most seriously affected.

We have made the case time and time again, drawn from the government's own documents, this time from documents produced by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that by far the most significant need is being felt by renters, particularly senior citizens and single parent families, with close to 50 per cent to 60 per cent of the people in that category paying over 30 per cent of their income for rent, which is a much higher proportion than the home-owning public.

Those are not figures manufactured in some sort of Liberal think tank. Those are documents produced by the government itself, documents that obviously the Minister of Finance has either been unwilling or unprepared to read and to use as part of his own tax documents. When he says to us, "Why should we not be giving tax credits to a specialized group, we give them for children, and for family allowance," we say there is nothing wrong with that in principle, but surely it should be measured according to those who must experience the most severe need.

We also want to point out that, totally contrary to the statements of the Minister of Finance that somehow all those people, even those with the lowest income, will be eligible for some form of benefit under this tax act, again the contrary happens to be true. When I use figures that only 6 per cent of the elderly own their own homes and therefore are not eligible for any benefits, the minister scoffs. The fact is that 70 per cent of the elderly do not pay taxes and therefore are not eligible for any kind of either property or mortgage tax credit.

The Minister of Finance committed the cardinal sin for a minister with that kind of portfolio by not dealing with the facts, not exactly dealing with factual data that can be corroborated by proper analysis and assessment. He was so excited by his own flourishes that he was not prepared to do what a minister of finance should do, that is, at least be prepared to document his statements.

If there is any indictment that we must make of the Minister of Finance, and one that seriously threatens his credibility in terms of the budget tomorrow, it is that he is not prepared to talk about the honest facts. The minister is simply not prepared to talk about what is; instead, he relies upon the perambulations of his own fertile and colourful imagination rather than on the kind of facts and data that should be produced.

Perhaps the most serious challenge and criticism that we would like to introduce under clause 1 is the fact that the Government of Canada is now committing itself to an expenditure of $3 billion four years down the road, without any proposal or proposition to this House as to what the economic repercussions of that $3 billion of expenditure will be. These are the economic managers! These are the people who tell us that they are going to be the tough guys, the ones who are going to approach economic management with a high degree of competence and a high degree of reality. However, they are the ones who are committing the Government of Canada, and therefore the taxpayers of Canada, to an expenditure which will amount to one-third of the present deficit, without knowing where the money is coming from or whether the economic conditions will justify it. In fact, that proposal for spending $3 billion and adding substantially to the cost commitment of this government is being introduced at a time when we are being lectured daily by members opposite about the deficit problems, and when all kinds of forecasters are saying that four years down the road additional stimulus to the economy will not be needed.

While we are in a serious position now in terms of recession, we will be coming out of that recession two or three years down the road, and that added expenditure will simply add to the inflationary pressures. It will be far more serious when all the pressures as a consequence of these heavy expenditures are going to result in a heavier demand on housing. It will add 7 per cent to 8 per cent to the cost of housing. It will not stimulate construction of additional units, as might be the case if there were more selective targeting.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the $3 billion we are talking about represents almost three times the size of last year's CMHC budget under which close to 270,000 units of housing were produced, and of that number well over 150,000 were produced as a result of direct government stimulus. So we are spending $3 billion to get, on the average, some 20,000 units per year. Mr. Chairman, there are some people over there on the other side who pride themselves on their knowledge of economics. Do they think it is a "good bang for the buck" to be spending $3 billion to get 20,000 units, whereas we spent a billion dollars and got 270,000 units out of it? Do they consider that to be proper expenditure?

So, the first proposition we introduce is that it is essential the government should not commit itself automatically to a four-year expenditure. This is a point of view which has been supported by the hon. member for Peace River in the motion under Standing Order 43 he introduced last week. So it should be subject to review. The Secretary of State is also in agreement with the idea that there should be a sunset law applied to the mortgage credit program. We are in full agreement. We believe that a sunset law should be applied to this act so that, on an annual basis, Parliament would have an opportunity to review the expenditure and determine, in its wisdom, whether a commitment of money should be made. Each year a certain floor of expenditure would be established and under that floor we would have an opportunity to determine whether additional costs should be incurred by the government, whether economic conditions at that time permit additional expenditures to be made.

In these circumstances I should like to move the following amendment:

That Bill C-20, an act to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax, be amended

(a) by striking out line 16 on page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"taxation year"

(b) by inserting the following:

Expiration and extension

1. (3) This section expires on December 31, 1980 unless, before that day an order in council is made to the effect that this section shall continue in force for another year.

Periodic extension

[Mr. Axworthy.]

(4) Where an order in council is made under subsection (3), this section expires on December 31, 1981 unless, before that day another order in council is made to the effect that this section shall continue in force for another year, and the governor in council may in like manner extend the application of this act from year to year.

The Chairman: Order, please. We are faced with a difficulty. The hon. member seems about to read further details of his amendment. But the committee is still on clause 1 and I can only receive amendments to clause 1. When we get to clause 2, members can move all kinds of amendments to clause 2. The amendment as to the effective date, or the proposal to reconsider the act some time after it is in force, relates to clause 3. We have to proceed in an orderly way.

Mr. Axworthy: I think you must have misunderstood, Mr. Chairman. This is an amendment to clause 1—to subclause (3) of clause 1. If you will look at the bill, you will see on page 1 there are clauses 1 and 2. We are amending subclause (2) of clause 1 and are adding a subclause (3).

The Chairman: Very well. I have sorted out the amendment in reference to the clause.

The question is on the amendment.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, because of the interruption I had no opportunity to read the whole of the amendment. There are further subclauses I wish to move as part of the general amendment, as follows:

Consideration of motion

(5) A motion for consideration of an order in council referred to in this section shall be laid before Parliament not later than three days after the order is made or, if Parliament is not then sitting, within the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting, and each House shall, in accordance with the rules of that House, take up and consider the motion, and all questions in connection with the motion taken up and considered by that House shall be debated without interruption and decided not later than the end of the third sitting day next after the day the motion is first so taken up and considered.

Effect of failure to approve of order in council

(6) If, at the conclusion of the consideration of an order in council pursuant to subsection (5), both Houses of Parliament do not resolve that the order in council be approved, it shall thereupon cease to have effect.

Effect of failure to resolve

(7) Failure of either House or both Houses of Parliament to resolve that an order in council referred to in this section be approved does not affect the validity of any action taken or not taken in reliance on the order in council prior to the conclusion of consideration thereof pursuant to subsection (5)."

The Chairman: The hon. member for Davenport.

● (2120)

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, in speaking in support of this amendment I can think of more than one reason why the party supporting the government, the Progressive Conservative party, ought to support this amendment. The first reason which comes to mind is that the idea of sunset laws was actually propounded in this chamber at length by the President of the Treasury Board. It was he who actually encouraged the government of that time to consider this concept. If I am not mistaken, the former leader of the opposition supported the President of the Treasury Board very strongly on the idea of sunset laws when they were sitting on this side of the House and thinking perhaps this would be a good measure for any type of legislation which would have a long-range effect.

Having had this first great opportunity as the party in power to apply their own preaching and introduce this concept into this major piece of legislation, we on this side of the House are actually surprised that hon. members opposite would miss this opportunity. Were they asleep at the switch? Did the President of the Treasury Board forget all his preachings? Did hon. members opposite discover the realities of government, or did they just dump another of their highly held ideas once they crossed the floor to the other side?

In our view the proposal in this amendment should certainly be difficult for hon. members supporting the government to refute and reject, if they have any confidence and faith in the preachings of their leaders.

The second reason which comes to mind why this amendment ought to be supported is that Bill C-20, for the first time—at least in my memory—links municipal taxes to the federal taxation and fiscal system. It does it in a devious way, but nevertheless it establishes a link. It means, indirectly, that municipal taxes which can be deducted according to the principle of this bill would become in a way less of a concern for municipal politicians. They can turn to their constituents who are very much alarmed these days about high municipal taxes and say; "Why worry so much when you can deduct a portion of your municipal taxes, and if you are paying on a house you can eventually deduct it from your bill from Ottawa?"

Maybe a year from now, or later on, the Minister of Finance will begin to become worried about this link. He may notice that municipal politicians may be less concerned about keeping municipal taxes within certain bounds, since for the first time they can be partially deducted. A trend of this nature would be rather alarming, would it not? It would be alarming to see municipal politicians less on their toes in maintaining municipal taxes within the limits they have been able to keep them with some limited success so far.

This kind of link may have implications for the total fiscal picture in Canada. It may be a matter of concern for the Minister of Finance, and he may want, a year from now, to have the power, as so readily suggested by the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, to review the matter in the light of developments in the first year, in the second year or, for that purpose, in the third or fourth.

There are also other reasons why this bill should be reviewed at regular intervals. Some of them have already been given by speakers at second reading, and I will therefore review them very briefly.

It may well be that a year, two years, three years or four years from now, the government might re-think its position and come to the conclusion that perhaps it would be a greater stimulus to the housing industry to have a national rental assistance program or, for that matter, if this government is still in power—and God forbid—it may want to look at alternatives such as a mortgage interest subsidy on renegotiated mortgages. It may see perhaps greater merits to the alternative of having a residential operating cost rebate, a mortgage interest rate write-down for purposes of new homes, or mortgage interest subsidies to the apartment construction sector. You name it, Mr. Chairman; there may be a number of reasons, and the measures I just mentioned placed together would, in our opinion, provide a greater stimulus to the housing industry than the one which is before us here today.

One could bring the thought even one step further. One could think for a moment about the losses of revenue which will take place as a result of this measure and the limited stimulus this measure would have. One could think for a moment about what the Government of Canada, through the federal system and with its powers, could do if it had this revenue coming in, as it has until now, and think of measures in the social field which it could implement instead. This is an aspect which really worries me very profoundly and prompts me to support, as I am doing now, this proposed amendment.

For instance, with the revenue we are going to miss—which the state is not going to receive when this measure comes into effect—we could introduce programs which are badly needed in this country and for which, according to the Minister of Finance, there are not enough funds. We could introduce a program to subsidize mothers who stay at home to raise children, or people who look after ill or elderly relatives. Surely this is a costly program, but if we can afford this, why can we not look at alternatives which we could also implement? We should look at other options and choices before proceeding with this measure or going blindly ahead, as Bill C-20 does, without any sunset provision.

Another example of how this money could be better spent might be in providing grants to improve day care facilities or to improve maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act to provide working women with benefits over a longer period of time. Perhaps we could better spend money by bringing old age pension eligibility down to the 60 years of age level gradually over the years, but fairly soon. This would result in job openings for the unemployed.

There is a long list of what could be done as alternatives which the government might be able to finance if we were not to forgo this revenue. This amendment would at least give us a chance to re-think the whole approach a year from now.

I would like to add to the list an increment price policy for the protection of unorganized working people and those on fixed incomes. If one is not organized these days, does not have a union for protection and works in one of the industrial centres across this nation without the benefit of a strong union, it is very difficult to make ends meet. An income policy for people who are gainfully employed and who are active and productive, but who are in the lower economic scale in society, would certainly be highly desirable, or the implementation of what in 1973 in that most excellent orange working paper on social security was called an income supplementation plan for the working poor.

We could also reinforce Canada Works and create jobs in areas where they are needed, and bring Canada Works back into those areas where it has been completely cancelled and create jobs in the centres in Ontario and in other parts of the country where Canada Works no longer exists. Complementary to that, money could be better spent on producing incentives for employers to hire the unemployed, the handicapped, and all those looking for a job but who, for some reason or other, cannot find it at present. We could expand that list ad infinitum. However, the concept remains the same. It is important that Parliament have such an opportunity, having evidently failed to convince the government this time around to reconsider its measure, having failed to make it realize that this is an expenditure that is way above the possibilities that members opposite would accept under normal circumstances. But having made a promise during the campaign, without realizing that because of 36 per cent of the voters they would come to power, they see the necessity of keeping at least one of the many promises they cannot keep. They have to go ahead this year, but at least a year from now let there be here an opportunity to have this amendment adopted by the very people who were once proposing sunset laws. I can see here the President of the Treasury Board who looks the other way and smiles sheepishly because he does not know what to say now that he is on that side. This would give the House an opportunity for a second thought approach to such a policy.

As we all know, and as has been so eloquently described by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry and others who have preceded me, this is a measure that disregards social priorities in this country. Also, in terms of the industrial stimulus, in terms of economic advantages for the future, it gives a very limited return, as was explained in an earlier intervention.

Mr. Chairman, we all know who will gain from this kind of measure. We all know that the people who have already paid for their homes will not gain from this measure, nor will the people who rent apartments or houses, and people who have to pay rent or who have to pay for a house will pay one way or the other for higher taxes or for reduced services to make up for this lost government revenue.

Who will gain if we do not have a regular screening of this measure through the House, as a minimum rational concession that the government can make? Obviously the mortgage companies will gain, and so will the banks and the money lenders. We all know in advance that the effects of this measure will, in essence, boil down mainly to the following: the cost of mortgages will go up in all likelihood and so will the cost of houses, so that in order to save a dime on the income tax, those who will benefit from this measure will have to spend $1 more on mortgage interest. That is really not good economics and it does not make sense.

As many others have said, we would rather have selective policies and social policies which aim at target groups in particular need, rather than this kind of giveaway. Evidently we do not have a majority in this House and we have to recognize the power of the governing party. Therefore we urge the government at least to accept this very reasonable amendment. There is nothing that the government need fear from having to come back here at regular intervals to scrutinize this measure again and to assess its pros and cons and its effect on the economy, to see whether or not it should be proceeded with for a second year, a third, and a fourth. That would seem to be a logical and non-partisan proposal which we submit to the government.

[Mr. Caccia.]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have some sympathy with the principle advocated by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. Given the right circumstances, it might be a measure worth adopting. However, I want to point out to him its fatal defect. This is a tax measure, and as such I think it is quite improper to have a situation arise where a tax measure could be set aside by the other place.

The result of what the hon. member proposes might be the following. It is what is known as a positive resolution, and as such the bill would not continue in existence beyond the time stated unless the order in council was approved by both Houses. I point out to the hon. member that a situation might occur where this House, representing the people, might vote for the continuation of the measure, while the other place, not representing the public, and representing also—let us face the political fact—a considerable majority of the official opposition party, could vote against the measure and we would find that the other place would then be setting tax policy. I think even my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who has a deep measure of affection for the other place which he manages to conceal quite effectively from time to time, would probably agree with me on this.

If this were in the form of a negative resolution so that the measure continued unless it was set aside by a motion of both Houses, then the hon. member would, I think, be in a much more reasonable position. No doubt the Department of Finance will find ways and means by which this would cause all sorts of problems for the department and the administration. I have always found that department to be most ingenious in performing the right degree of mental and financial acrobatics—at least it did so under the previous government. I think it is much more sensible now. So I am not concerned with that. I believe it is not a bad idea to review the situation once in a while, but I cannot support this amendment which might put the Senate in a position of setting aside a motion of this kind, which would be quite against the constitutional practices of this Parliament.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member who has just spoken would entertain a very short and simple question?

[Translation]

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Victoria-Madawaska (Mr. Corbin) on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Corbin: The hon. member who just spoke made the statement that the other place does not represent the public. Is it then his opinion that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Justice, both of whom are in the other place, do not represent the public and therefore should run for election?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: That is a matter of high policy which I leave to my friend, the right hon. Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: He's been muzzled already.

Mr. Baldwin: I deal with the nuts and bolts of the tax situation—the nuts over there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: I listened with interest to the proposal of the hon. member who is worthy of this tax and who made some proposals in connection with the sunset laws. But he must realize that sunset laws do not normally apply to tax measures. After all, we have a sunset law on every tax measure every year when the Minister of Finance produces his budget and his budget bills. All these tax allowances and measures are reviewed by the Minister of Finance once a year and are part of his budget performance. Surely the Income Tax Act is not wedged in stone or carved out for time immemorial. It can surely be changed. This is not a place for a sunset law.

• (2140)

I thought I would hear something interesting in support of a sunset law with respect to the tax policy, until I heard the hon. member for Davenport. He got into unemployment insurance, day care centres, the working poor, Canada Works and all the rest of a myriad of things governments do. These are expense items, not tax items. This is a tax item. This is an amendment to the Income Tax Act allowing for specific deductions to specific taxpayers who have to pay interest to own property. They have to be positive taxpayers and therefore can take advantage of a reduction in their personal income tax.

With his budget resolutions and his numerous tax changes every year, the Minister of Finance alters in a profound way the allowance individuals can take from their taxable incomes, and the rules under which their taxable incomes are determined. Undoubtedly tomorrow night we will get alterations to the Income Tax Act. Probably these alterations will make changes to what is deductible and allowable as an expense of whatever.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Blenkarn: It happens every year. The hon. member asks how I know. I am assuming it will happen.

An hon. Member: Oh, you are assuming!

Mr. Blenkarn: There has hardly been a year in the history of this country where there has not been some change in the Income Tax Act with reference to persons or corporations. So, I assume that tomorrow night we will have evidence again of a suggestion and a total review, perhaps a sunset on the old system, and a new system coming forward with respect to how the taxes are to be levied on us as individuals and on the corporations of this country. Really, this is not a place for a sunset law at all. A sunset law should apply to items of expense and to items of government programs. This is not a matter for a government program. It is a matter of a tax allowance to individuals who happen to own their own homes.

I was most interested in terms of a housing policy, particularly with the hon. member who suggested that it seems to be the policy of the Liberal party to have capital gains taxes on single family houses, an imputed rate charge or something of that nature. If that is their policy, I would like to hear about it. Their last policy was AHOP. Their other policy was MURB. That looked after all their wealthy friends, but we have not had a concrete proposal from them other than a proposed sunset provision. Clearly they can do better than that.

They complained that this statute visualizes a change in the Income Tax Act for a four-year period. All right, that is what it visualizes. But there is nothing to prevent them from going to the people of Canada, after the act is passed, after they have amassed their friends in the New Democratic Party, and perhaps defeated us, because we are a minority government, and making it their policy in an election that this will be abolished.

In the last election this party laid out a plan of income tax allowance to home owners and a plan of tax allowance to home owners in respect of municipal taxes. We set it out in fair detail to all the people who voted in the country. We are now producing this plan. The other day they said that we have been in government for six months and have not done anything. Well, here is a thing we are doing; here is what we promised. If they do not want it that way, they can come out with a party policy in the next contest we may have, perhaps in three or four years after the act is fully in place. They can say that they do not want anything for the home owner. They can say that they do not want anything in terms of a tax allowance.

The hon. member for Davenport said that this provision does nothing for people who own their own homes absolutely. First I should like to tell him that if they are positive taxpayers they get an allowance against municipal taxes.

An hon. Member: It is $67.

Mr. Blenkarn: It will be $67.50 this year, and in four years from now it will be $250. That is 25 per cent of a $1,000 tax bill. That is a pretty good allowance, and it covers most of the houses in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: When a person owns his own home, one of the things he wants to do is to be able to sell that home when he can no longer look after it, must sell it and perhaps rent an apartment. This tax measure increases the saleability of houses for people who have paid for their homes. Let us not forget that factor. The saleability of their homes is increased because the buyer can go out and borrow on a mortgage to pay them off, to buy the property and to deduct from his income tax payable part of the cost of carrying his mortgage. There will be a 2 per cent or 3 per cent, or in some cases, a 4 per cent allowance off his 12 per cent interest factor which he will pay on his first mortgage. It is an important allowance. It makes the homes of senior citizens or people who have paid off their homes, more saleable on the market, and increases the mobility of property. That allowance to many people will be equivalent to $125 per month. It makes it possible for them not to have to be renters, but they can be owners. Surely our social policy is to make it possible for people to own a piece of Canada and be a part of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Watson: Mr. Chairman, Bill C-20 will permit the government's mortgage interest and property tax credit plan to begin in the current taxation year. It will provide a maximum tax credit of $312 for mortgage interest payments, and a flat credit of $62.50 for property taxes in the first year. These credits will rise to $1,250 per year on mortgage interest, and $250 on property taxes when finally phased-in in the fourth year. The tax credits are deducted directly from federal taxes payable.

The tax credit for mortgage interest will be 25 per cent of the first $5,000 of interest paid, to a maximum tax credit of $1,250. Unfortunately the property tax will be a maximum flat rate of $250. It is set at that level because, while the government recognizes a significant interprovincial variation in provincial property taxes and tax relief measures, it does not seem to recognize fairness would require that there be a variation in the property tax credit as well.

Thanks to the criticism by the Liberal party, particularly directed to the original plan contained in the Conservative election platform, at least Bill C-20 is fairer than the original one proposed. The plan no longer contains a straight deductibility of interest from mortgage payments but has substituted tax credits.

The Americans have had a mortgage interest deductibility system in place for 66 years. But a large majority of American Congressman and Senators, both Republican and Democratic, feel that their system is inequitable, benefits above all the wealthy, yet is almost impossible to change, let alone eliminate, because of the large numbers of taxpayers who perceive that they benefit from the system.

Why did I vote against this bill at second reading? It was primarily because Bill C-20 is unfair to so many Canadians. There are 7.5 million households in Canada, but 4.4 million homes in Canada are occupant-owned. The remaining are rented and are not eligible for the benefits of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Watson: But unfairness to renters is only part of the inequities contained in this bill. Forty per cent of Canadian home owners do not have mortgages. There are more than 1.8 million Canadian home owners, many of them senior citizens, who do not have mortgages and will be ineligible for the mortgage interest tax credit. It is true that they will be eligible for the $250 municipal tax credit, but if they live in Quebec or in certain other areas of Canada where financing of municipal services is not included in house mortgages but is handled through the municipal tax system, the municipal taxes are consequently much higher and those people in those areas are doubly adversely affected.

• (2150)

[Translation]

The mortgage tax credit represents a rather large percentage of total property tax in certain parts of Canada. However, in Quebec the system for financing municipal services is quite different. Up until recently the price of land in Quebec did not include the cost of municipal services. The cost of services was covered by municipal tax bylaws which means that, in general, in Quebec the cost of municipal services is not included in the mortgage and is paid with the annual municipal property tax. Municipal services in other provinces are usually included in the price of the land and consequently are part of the mortgage.

Bill C-20 gives a proportionately much higher write-off in respect of mortgage interest than in respect of municipal taxes so home owners in Quebec are seriously disadvantaged by the provisions of Bill C-20. I ask the minister to consider an amendment whereby people in those areas of Canada where municipal services are financed by local tax by-laws and taxes rather than mortgages would have their property tax credit increased to $500. That I think could be done while at the same time keeping the maximum tax credit at $1,250, and that would ensure a much more equitable distribution of the benefits of this bill among the taxpayers in all areas across Canada.

[English]

I note that the Prime Minister is in the House and, if I may attract his attention for a minute, I would propose an amendment which I think should come from the government as it would involve an expenditure of money in a slightly different way from that contained in the bill, but not very much different. It flows from the difference in municipal tax financing arrangements which exist in Quebec as compared with those of other provinces.

To make it very clear, what happens when a new development is built in Quebec, is that instead of having the municipal services included in the cost of a lot, these services are financed by municipal bylaws which apply to a street that is being developed, and the buyer of a home, instead of having the lot cost more with the mortgage subsequently higher, pays a lower cost for the lot and a lower cost for the home, but pays the cost of the services through municipal taxes. In Quebec the situation is that in almost every instance municipal taxes are double, or more, what they are elsewhere, but mortgages are less.

If the government really wants to be fair about this, I suggest a method that would be fair would be to allow, without specifying one province but simply specifying those areas in Canada where that type of municipal financing exists, the mortgage tax credit for municipal taxes up to $500 instead of $250, maintaining at the same time the present maximum of $1,500.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member is actually putting forward a proposal which is not related in any way to the amendment before us. The hon. member made a speech on second reading. I have been very lenient, but the hon. member has not said a word about the amendment now before us, which proposes to limit the effect in time of the bill before us. The hon. member must understand that if I let him continue in this way it would be impossible for the committee to progress, and that would be quite unfair to other members. We have an amendment before us and I would hope that the hon. member will relate his remarks, at least to some extent, to that amendment.

Mr. Watson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was taking advantage of the fact that the Prime Minister was present. I wanted to put that message across to him. I hope the government will have an opportunity to reflect on it in the next few hours, as I feel it would make the bill more equitable.

An hon. Member: Why don't you spend the money on sewers?

Mr. Watson: Let me return to clause 1 of the bill, Mr. Chairman, and I will refer to it in a general way. Many of our senior citizens are being forced from their homes by skyrocketing municipal taxes and do not have sufficient income to be paying income taxes and, therefore, are ineligible for the benefits offered by Bill C-20.

What does the present government want to do? Does it want to force older people out of their homes into senior citizens' homes built at public expense? Is this an adequate conception of social consciousness and fiscal responsibility? Does this make sense?

I voted against the bill on second reading because I believe it to be fiscally irresponsible, particularly when we compare the eventual $3 billion cost of this program in the fourth year with the total cost of CMHC programs in 1978, I believe some $600 million. Many of those programs covered with that $600 million were unfortunately phased out at the beginning of this year by the previous government in the name of fiscal responsibility and, in my view, in a mistaken concession to provincial requests to vacate the urban affairs field.

I would ask the government to think for a moment of the wide variety of programs that were providing benefits through the use of this reasonable amount of money, as compared with what is being proposed under this bill. Those programs ranged from 25 per cent of the cost of sewage disposal and storm sewers, to the Neighbourhood Improvement Program and many subsidy and grant programs. Somebody over on that side was making fun of this idea of assisting in the cost of sewage disposal plants, but if he were to ask the municipal manager of any town, the town council, or the mayor, about what they thought about this program, I think he would get a different kind of reaction than that expressed by members opposite.

This $600 million included programs such as the Neighbourhood Improvement Program, rental subsidies, subsidies for low and medium-income families and senior citizens. All of these subsidies, grants and initiatives, including CMHC direct loan and loan guarantee programs, cost the taxpayers a total of $600 million a year.

[Translation]

With that amount, we were able to fund a series of programs, for example, the New Communities program, the Land Assembly program, the Assisted Home Ownership program, the Non-Profit Housing Corporations Assistance program, the Co-operative Housing Assistance program, the Neighbourhood Improvement program, the Residential Rehabilitation program, including restoration assistance, buyer protection. There was a whole series of programs available to municipalities, benefits—

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—PROPOSED SALE OF NORDAIR—CONSIDERATION OF BID OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, on December 5, 1979, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in this House whether the proposal of Eastern Provincial Airways to take over Nordair was under consideration and when a decision would be made. In response the minister confirmed that the disposal of Nordair was being considered by the cabinet. This fact was subsequently confirmed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) in the House.

My motive in asking the question and raising the matter of the Nordair takeover is clear. Many hon. members from Atlantic Canada, including myself, have a real interest in the continued growth, development, and expansion of EPA. We think that it is important that Canadians are made aware of the relevant facts.

It is appropriate to note that a few years ago during a major expansion, EPA relocated its main operational centre in Nova Scotia at the Halifax international airport. Today EPA has more than 300 employees in the area and spends more than $10 million locally. I am proud to say that many of those EPA employees—pilots, cabin crews, air mechanics and others—reside in the constituency of Halifax West.

Let me review very briefly the history of the Nordair matter. In the fall of 1977, or thereabouts, Air Canada acquired 84.6 per cent of the shares of Nordair, more than sufficient shares for effective control. The cost was said to be $12.50 per share, or more than $23 million in total. It was clear that continued ownership by Air Canada was not consistent with the policy for regional air carriers. Thus, Air Canada was directed to sell, although Nordair continued to operate as an air carrier.

Meanwhile, EPA continued to develop as an effective and responsible air carrier, but it suffered from the constraints of its operation—short, unprofitable routes, and lack of access to the more lucrative markets. Only recently has Eastern Provincial Airways been granted a direct route between Halifax and Montreal, but it has no access to Toronto and western Canada. EPA's future depends on an opportunity to expand its operation and gain access to these important air markets. The takeover of Nordair would provide that opportunity.

Nordair operates in Quebec and Ontario and has extended routes to Winnipeg and to Frobisher Bay in the north. It has a fleet of Boeing 737's which are compatible with EPA's similar fleet. Both are active in charter flights. The combined operation would provide economies of scale that would allow first class service on major routes and provide the possibility of improved services on the local routes for both passengers and freight. The end result of such a takeover is a strengthened regional carrier for eastern Canada, and improved public service with better route facilities and equipment.

For once an east coast firm would expand westward, and we would have a financially sound major air carrier in Atlantic Canada that would foster further development in the region. Unfortunately, little public attention has been focused on the situation, and the support that exists for EPA has not surfaced. That is not so in Quebec. The hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. De Bané) has been publicly reported as advocating a takeover of Nordair by Quebec interests. According to reports, he says that Nordair should be turned over to Francophone interests so that French Canadians will control at least one major airline.

[Mr. Crosby.]

I ask the government to reject that view. I ask the cabinet to give full consideration to the EPA proposal and decide in favour of Atlantic Canada by providing us with a major air carrier.

● (2205)

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) for being able to document his position regarding Eastern Provincial Airways and also to congratulate him on being able to squeeze three questions into the one he put to the minister on Wednesday, December 5.

The three questions concerned the proposed sale of shares in Nordair. They were, first, whether the proposal by Eastern Provincial Airways was under active consideration; second, what other proposals were under consideration; and, third, when a final decision on this matter could be expected. According to the hon. member, these questions were prompted by an article he read in the Canadian Aviation magazine wherein the minister is said to have indicated, and here I quote the article, "That he (the minister) was ready to make a decision on the sale of Nordair to one of the bidders, which includes Eastern Provincial Airways". In fact, as the hon. member knows, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) stated last Wednesday in response to the member's question that the matter of the disposal of Nordair was under cabinet consideration and that a decision was expected soon. I am advised that as of this evening, this is still the case.

With respect to whether or not EPA is under active consideration, I should like to say that all the proposals made have been carefully examined, including EPA. Of course, it is not possible for me to speculate tonight on what the outcome of cabinet's deliberations might be, but as far as the minister is concerned the course of action finally taken will have been based on full consideration of all the relevant factors, including all the proposals.

On the question of who the other proponents are, they and their proposals are treated as matters of a commercially confidential nature, unless the parties themselves have made this information public. Some have done so and some have not. Those reported in the press, and I confirm here, as interested buyers are: jointly A. F. Lizotte Inc., Makivik Corporation, La Fédération des Caisses d'entraide économique TIW Industries; jointly EPA, Algoma Central Railway and Quebec interests represented by Mr. J. C. Hebert; jointly Québecair, Société d'investissement Desjardins and other interests.

The cabinet, of course, will decide on what course of action the government will follow in the disposition of Nordair shares. This could conceivably involve a course of action other than simply a choice from among the proposals received to date, as a variety of options are open to the government.

I want to add, in closing, that as I mentioned in this House a couple of weeks ago the sale of Nordair will also be subject to the regulatory process.

UNEMPLOYMENT—ALARMING SITUATION OF THE UNEMPLOYED—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, this evening, I should like to deal once again with the problems of the unemployed in my riding of Madawaska-Victoria and northwestern New Brunswick generally. The problem I bring up also affects many other areas of Canada. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time I have brought up this matter on the motion for adjournment. The first time, neither the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) nor his parliamentary secretary deigned to grace this House with their presence and deal with the matter. Tonight, I notice their absence once again, with considerable regret and bitterness.

The first time I brought up this question on a motion for adjournment, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment (Mr. Reid) had been delegated to read the text prepared by the civil servants or someone else, probably the political advisers, in the office of the minister. In any event, the general tone of the answer to the questions I brought up at that time indicated that the government and its spokesmen are merely, as I have said repeatedly before, making politics on the backs of the poor seasonal workers now unemployed in northeast New Brunswick and elsewhere. The problem is very simple, Mr. Speaker. Last year, Parliament passed Bill C-14 to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. The main purpose of that bill was to tighten up the unemployment insurance system with a view to putting a stop to the abuses from which it suffered. Members were well aware of such abuses.

This afternoon, I was speaking in private with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. McCrossan) and he told me that we were right in proposing this kind of amendment to the unemployment insurance scheme, and that it was not so much in the Atlantic region, in the maritimes, in the have-not provinces but in the rich, industrial regions that abuses took place. It was in those regions that there were abuses. And it is generally from there that we hear complaints about abuses to the system, not from the poorer Atlantic region.

But what puzzles me is that the minister, playing the political game, tries to blame the former government, the members on this side who voted for that legislation. What he forgets to say, however, is that it is he and his government who were elected last May 22 and who deliberately proclaimed the coming into force of sections 17 and 35, I believe, of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Originally, those sections were to come into force in June. The minister delayed the proclamation so that those sections, which specify economic regions under the act, would come into force on July 1, 1979. So I cannot understand how the minister can try to blame members on this side of the House for all the wrongdoing which may exist under the present application of the act, since it is he and no one else, he and his government who proclaimed the regulation and the other sections of the act. He must, therefore, assume full responsibility for it. It is about time for the minister to wake up and lend a sensitive ear to the plight of these seasonal workers.

Tonight also, Mr. Speaker—it is probably the Parliamentary Secretary to the Postmaster General and Minister of Environment who will again reply to me, as he is also the hon. member for the Niagara area—I should like to remind him that these seasonal workers who are no longer eligible for unemployment insurance benefits must leave their homes, cover sometimes a distance of over 700 miles and travel to his region in the Niagara peninsula and elsewhere in southern Ontario to help in the harvesting of vegetables, and I think it is quite unacceptable that a parliamentary secretary who is not really involved in the situation should be called upon to reply to me.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is evading his responsibilities and I accuse him of not assuming the duties he agreed to carry out under his oath of office. And I regret that his parliamentary secretary who has been appointed by the minister to look into the shortcomings of the legislation and propose amendments to this act would not condescend either to come to the House to reply to an hon. member, preferring instead to send a third-rate "master-of-all-trades" to deal with something he does not know anything about. That is an insult to Parliament, an insult to the member for Madawaska-Victoria and an insult to the constituents I represent in this House. Never mind what the parliamentary secretary will tell us tonight, Mr. Speaker, I dismiss it because I feel it does not constitute at all a serious effort on the part of the government concerning the situation that prevails in my area. And if it is not the Parliamentary Secretary to the Postmaster General and Minister of Environment who answers but another one I will address to him the same remarks.

I blame the government for its lack of consistency in that situation. It is a government which does not want to govern, it is a government of students, an extremely boring government which does not have the courage, the guts and the inclination to care about the problems facing Canadians. It is a government simply interested in achieving strictly partisan objectives and which are agreeable to its political supporters. He did not show any interest in the workers of New Brunswick, the Atlantic provinces and Madawaska in particular. That is quite regrettable, Mr. Speaker.

● (2215)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Kilgour) has the floor.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the time allotted to me is short so I will speak English to express myself more rapidly.

[English]

The parliamentary secretary to the minister in question is sick tonight. He left to go home to his bed and I am replying for him. The minister, also, is sick. I heard the cheap jibe from across the way that he was here this afternoon. Well, maybe he was here but he was sick.

Mr. Corbin: The government is sick.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the minister promised to respond further with respect to the difficult situation in Edmundston, New Brunswick. I understand there have been no further demonstrations in Edmundston and I am informed the situation there is now stable. As was said, the situation in Edmundston is a difficult one and one of the reasons is legislation which was passed by the previous government. I refer specifically to the repeater provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Members on this side of the House, when in opposition, fought against this provision, which was imposed by the previous government under Standing Order 75C. I am informed that the minister and deputy minister recognized the difficulty but that the cabinet decided no changes were to be made. In these circumstances it is sheer hypocrisy on the part of the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) to pretend that this repeater provision was not enacted by the government of which he was a supporter.

Tomorrow, a federal-provincial meeting will take place at which changes will be discussed, and I trust agreement will be reached so that the repeater provision which is causing harm in Edmundston may be altered. In this, we hope to receive support from all provinces.

The hon. member, in his question, himself admitted, as can be seen if one looks at the record, that this question has gone on for over a year. In other words, he admits that the factors giving rise to the difficulties in Edmundston arose prior to the change of government. Of course, the lack of job opportunities is also causing problems, but we cannot resolve the problems of the past 11 years overnight. A review process has been initiated by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) to look at the provisions of the legislation and to bring forward amendments.

With regard to the Canada Works program, 400 jobs have been approved for the constituency of Madawaska-Victoria. Attempts are being made to work with the provincial department of labour and use additional funds in that area. I see, Mr. Speaker, that my time is up.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

EMPLOYMENT—CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR SUPPLEMENTARY FUNDS

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me the floor. I am very nearly embarrassed to speak before such a large assembly.

My question this evening is very important and concerns phase IV of the Canada Works program. The question that I want to ask this evening of the spokesman for the minister is this: will the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) really inject additional funds in the province of Quebec to counter the rising unemployment rate, which will certainly go up even more this winter?

I raised this question for the first time on November 13, and absolutely nothing has been done since then, even though these existing difficulties have been compounded by major ones in my riding in early fall.

An important development has occurred recently in my area, namely, the closing of ITT Rayonier, Quebec. Over 1,500 people have lost their jobs and we have not yet been able to find any answer to create direct short-term employment.

Mr. Speaker, is it normal that to this date there has been no new development in the case of ITT Rayonier, Quebec, concerning job creation through Canada Works since I advised the minister of the serious difficulty this specific case was causing to the people of my riding more than one month ago? When 1,500 people lose their jobs, it means that 6,000 people will be affected. This is therefore an extremely serious problem and even a real tragedy for the people of Port-Cartier.

I recall quite well that on November 13 I asked the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) whether he had a solution to suggest in the specific case of Port-Cartier. He replied that he was himself looking for short-term answers to solve the problems caused by the closing of ITT Rayonier, Quebec. Phase IV of the Canada Works program provided opportunities for short-term solutions for these workers, but we have never received any reply, either in the negative or in the affirmative, from the Prime Minister.

I would therefore simply like to register that the people in our area have been discriminated against with regard to phase IV of the Canada Works program this fall. Amounts of approximately $2.6 million were allocated because of unemployment levels exceeding 16 per cent. This unemployment rate prevailed in the middle and lower North Shore and most projects were supposed to be aimed at this area.

Because the ITT plant closed down in Port-Cartier, a number of projects evidently had to be directed to that city, although the minister should have attempted to find extra funds to cope with that special problem. This is becoming unfair, Mr. Speaker, taking away moneys provided for a certain observed rate of unemployment when there is an extra problem, trying to solve a superimposed specific problem with regular funds.

I therefore ask the minister's representative this evening whether it is possible, yes or no, to have an extra $400,000 for the people in Port-Cartier under the Canada Works program with a view to directly and concretely helping the people in that municipality. I feel it is unjustifiable and shameful to use the money provided for a given population without finding extra solutions to help people with extra needs. To be fair, the minister should use that $2.6 million for the people on the lower and middle North Shore, and add $400,000 for direct help to the people in the municipality of Port-Cartier.

In view of the late hour, I simply ask the minister to give a clear answer to those two questions: what concrete means will the minister use to create direct employment under the Canada Works program in Port-Cartier because of the ITT closedown? And when will the minister have his answer available? If clear thinking leads to clear speech, I ask the parliamentary secretary to give us the clearest possible answer.

[English]

Mr. Bob Jarvis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly agree with the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) that there is injustice in unemployment and that there is a great deal of injustice in his particular riding, an injustice created by five years of chronic unemployment, five years of excessive government spending, and five years without any programs that would come anywhere near to grips with the problems which exist in my friend's riding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis (Willowdale): I would advise the hon. member that, first of all, with respect to his original question, there may have been an incorrect impression. The current budget on Canada Works for this fiscal year, exclusive of administration, is $134 million, to which must be added $18 million specifically earmarked for the Local Employment Assistance Program. I would further advise the hon. member that the proposal for the next fiscal year is to increase the Local Employment Assistance Program to $30 million, and it is our government's opinion that more emphasis on that program would be in order rather than on the Canada Works program.

I would remind the hon. member of the answer given by the minister when this issue was debated previously and the response to a particular question on the same issue in which he said no additional moneys would be provided for the Canada Works program. The object of the government's policy is to increase the capacity of the private sector to stimulate employment, particularly in the youth areas, as a long-term solution to this problem.

The program for 1980-1981 will reflect the government's particular concern for youth and our intention to strengthen the private sector's capacity to create permanent jobs. We are establishing a youth employment secretariat which will have the task of developing a coherent federal youth employment policy by co-ordinating the mixture of youth employment programs now in place, thus ensuring the most effective use of our resources. Consistent with the government's campaign promises, we will also be developing additional ways in which private sector employment opportunities can be provided for youth, and we will be providing training programs for at least 120,000 young men and women.

In addition, our government intends to establish a national youth service program. The government will also ensure that attention continues to be given to meeting the particular needs of groups and individuals who have special problems in securing and keeping jobs. New initiatives have all been the topic of consultation with the governments of the provinces of Canada and subsequently will be presented in more detail in the debate on the budget. If my friend would wait for the budget speech which is scheduled for tomorrow, I am sure he will have more specific answers to a chronic problem that has been with us a great deal of time and has not been given attention before this budget.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROTECT INDEPENDENT OIL DISTRIBUTORS AGAINST MULTINATIONALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that some multinationals have reduced the volume of oil made available to independent distributors and, in some cases, have already warned those independents that they would no longer supply them, thus driving them to bankruptcy, in view of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has failed to obtain from those multinationals a firm commitment that no independent gas station would experience a reduction or cut in supplies which would not also be applicable to gas stations under their control, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has failed to honour his public commitment of November 6 to the effect that independent distributors would not suffer any supply cut, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand):

That the House condemn the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for his lack of energy in protecting independent distributors against the activities of multinationals, condemn the Prime Minister for having reneged on still another promise, thus adding to the long list of broken promises made by his government, and finally condemn the member for Beauce for having been naive enough to believe in such a promise made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—POLICY TO PREVENT POLLUTION OF FARM CROPS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. Farmers in southern Ontario may be comforted by the conclusion contained in a recent study conducted at the University of Guelph, indicating that acid rain does not harm farm crops in southern Ontario. However, recognizing that northern Ontario has potential farmland totalling more than 12 million acres, and that northern Ontario farmers face high acidity levels in their soil caused by sulphur emissions in the United States and Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Andras):

That this House urge the Minister of the Environment to advise his Ontario counterpart as well as himself that northern Ontario represents 90 per cent of the total provincial land mass and that it should be given top priority in the formulation of environmental policies dealing with the problem of acid rain.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 permits the presentation of such a motion for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXPENSES OF CONSERVATIVE CAUCUS ON GRAIN TRANSPORTATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43 which I hope is supported by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). It arises out of Your Honour's words of wisdom in the House yesterday, when Your Honour commented that the practice of supporting from public funds a committee composed of members of only one caucus was a rather dangerous practice to embark upon. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House calls upon the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada to reimburse the federal treasury the $9,161 of taxpayers' money which was spent on the grain movement task force which was composed of only three members, all three of whom were members of the Progressive Conservative caucus in this House.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be introduced for debate only upon unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

APPLICATION OF B.C. HYDRO FOR EXPORT LICENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the National Energy Board has misled this House by indicating in a letter that the hearings on B.C. Hydro's application for an export licence would be held in the spring, in view of the fact that the hearings commenced this morning in Vancouver, and since the ridings of Kootenay East-Revelstoke and Kootenay West may be seriously affected by the decision of this hearing, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Graham):

● (1410)

That this House recommend to the National Energy Board that the hearing be adjourned until the spring of 1980, as promised.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DISMISSAL OF JUDGE MARJORIE CANTRYN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arthur Phillips (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It has come to my attention that Judge Marjorie Cantryn of the Citizenship Court in Vancouver has received a letter signed by the Secretary of State notifying her that her appointment had been terminated. No reasons were given by the minister.

Since she has served the community well as executive director of the Vancouver Indian centre, a member of the Vancouver police commission and in many other ways as an active native Indian citizen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand):

That the government immed'ately reconsider its decision on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

CALL FOR RETENTION OF CORPORATION AS VEHICLE FOR CANADIAN INVESTMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that an additional 2,400 barrels of oil a day has been discovered at the Hibernia well off Newfoundland, in view of the fact that this is very close to a commercial find, and in view of the fact that Petro-Canada is the only Canadian-owned investor in that well, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming):

That this House calls upon the government to immediately renege on its promise to dismantle Petro-Canada and retain that organization as a vehicle for Canadian investment in its own resources.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of this motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STUDY OF SERVICES FOR NORTHERN CANADIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the state of medical services for people in northern Canada is well below that of the general Canadian population, and in view of the fact that this government has not moved to upgrade medical and health services in the north, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare undertake immediately to conduct a comprehensive, in-depth study of the needs of northern people relating to health care, with a view to improving the accessibility of medical services throughout the north.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

DISBURSEMENT OF FUNDS FOR RELIEF OF STARVING PEOPLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the problems which the Secretary of State for External Affairs is having meeting Canada's commitment to the United Nations of $15 million for Cambodian relief, and the fact that a substantial part of this money is being taken from the boat people to whom it was given after it was taken from Canadian employment programs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier):

That the President of the Treasury Board reconsider the efforts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to get such a relatively small amount of money appropriated, and not pursue his present course of telling her to take relief money from one group of starving people so that she can give it to another group of starving people.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOREIGN AID BE WITHHELD FROM TANZANIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wightman (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given that the government of Tanzania has confiscated the property of S. Hassanali, a Canadian citizen, and that, despite having acknowledged this debt in writing, the government of Tanzania has withheld payment for more than three years. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist):

That the Government of Canada withhold foreign aid from the government of Tanzania until restitution has been made to Mr. Hassanali and any other Canadian citizen who has suffered confiscation of property and funds at the hands of the government of Tanzania, and that in determining which countries shall receive assistance, Canada's foreign aid policy take full account of unlawful actions perpetrated against Canadians.

FINANCE

BUDGET SECRECY—SPECULATION IN TV PROGRAM

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the very serious speculation on television last night to the effect that there was to be a serious change in the level of corporate taxes in the budget tonight, can the Prime Minister assure the House that the necessary measures were taken for tonight's budget to ensure that there was no leak, because these things can lead to a lot of speculation in the market?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance was concerned about any speculation upon the contents of the budget. He has looked into the matter and he is satisfied that, in fact, all the traditional precautions have been taken to prevent any advance leak of elements of the budget.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, can the right hon. Prime Minister assure this House that there was absolutely no discussion about the level of the increase in gasoline tax that, it is speculated, will be implemented tonight, in view of the fact that the oil industry decided to jump the gun on the government last week and increase its prices before the government in its budget tonight increases the level of prices of gasoline in Canada?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House and the hon. member that there has been no discussion of the level of any increases although, as the hon. member will know, there has been extensive speculation for some time about price increases of various kinds.

BUDGET SECRECY—NEWS REPORTS ON INCREASE IN PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and follows on those asked by my colleague. At the very least there is a general expectation of a hefty raise in the excise tax on gasoline this evening. In light of the very precise news reports this morning that the increase will be 25 cents a gallon, and in light of reports that some service stations across the country—perhaps many—already are raising their prices today in anticipation of this tax increase tonight, can the Prime Minister tell us what steps the government will take to protect consumers in this situation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not really quite sure what information that question was designed to elicit. Naturally, I will not comment upon speculative stories which have appeared. I think it would be wise as a general rule in the case of this budget, as in the case of past budgets, that Canadians let their actions be guided by what is said in the budget at the time of its presentation rather than by speculation about it.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister at least assure the House that if profiteering occurs on the part of service stations in parts of the country today, an investigation will subsequently be conducted?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, that is a very hypothetical question. I have indicated already to the first questioner who raised the matter in the House today that we have been looking into the question as to whether the traditional protections against budget leaking have been put in place. They have been put in place, and to our understanding they have been respected.

Mr. Speaker: On a supplementary, the hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, my question is not supplementary.

ORGANIZED LABOUR

NOVA SCOTIA—ALLEGED CONTRAVENTION OF ILO CONVENTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the government of Nova Scotia has introduced the infamous Michelin bill, which in effect indicates that all workers in interdependent plants must be organized by the same union and at the same time, that this legislation is contrary to convention 87 of the ILO, of which Canada is a signatory, as well as contravening all labour legislation in this country, including the federal Labour Code, could the minister tell the House what his reaction is to this sort of legislation and whether he intends to use this as a model for future changes in the Canada Labour Code?

● (1420)

Hon. Lincoln M. Alexander (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member would not want me to make a comment on something that is purely within provincial jurisdiction—and there is no question about that. I think what the hon. member has referred to is broader-based bargaining. As the hon. member may recall, a report was handed down in the past year or so, the Bairstow report, that indicates this is a matter that should be under intensive study by the federal government.

I can assure the hon. member that this matter, in terms of wider-based bargaining, is under intensive study but we certainly do not intend to take any leadership from any province. In short, I know the hon. member was just playing jokes when he asked me to make a comment on a subject that is purely within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that ILO convention 87 was signed by Canada, not the province of Nova Scotia, in view of the fact that the federal government is involved with the Michelin Tire Company in that it has given considerable amounts in DREE grants, in duty-free concessions and in accelerated depreciation on capital costs to Michelin company, and in view of the fact that this same company has an application for more of the same from this government, can the Prime Minister assure the House that he will not sign any agreements with the company which is so obviously flying in the face of civilized labour legislation, not only in Canada but in the world?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in his enthusiasm the hon. member has, I am sure, noted that jurisdiction for signing international agreements rests with the federal government; but, as the Minister of Labour indicated, the jurisdiction in this particular matter in dispute rests with the provincial government.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister a specific question and I repeat it because I did not get an answer the first time. In view of the fact that the federal government has been very generous with Michelin Tire Company in the past, vis-à-vis DREE grants and all sorts of other concessions, in view of the fact that this company now has an application before this government for more grants of the same kind, and in view of the fact that what is being perpetrated in Nova Scotia is a blot against the escutcheon of Canada in respect of labour relations, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he will use that leverage to get some concessions from the company in respect of the signing-up of workers outside the interdependent plants.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, many of us wonder what kind of Draconian regime might be brought in by the New Democratic Party were it to form a government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Speaking for this government, I can give the unconditional assurance to the hon. member that we will not deny federal aid or assistance to Canadian individuals, Canadian trade unions or Canadian companies simply because they might be involved in disputes within provincial jurisdictions.

Mr. Rodriguez: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYED—GOVERNMENT CONCERN

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance. When the unemployment figures came out last month, the Minister of Finance said he was not concerned about seasonally adjusted Canadians out of work, but only about actual Canadians. The latest figures show that, although the total working force is smaller, the number of what the finance minister calls "real Canadians" out of work has increased by 28,000 over the past month.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister why the government is accepting this so easily, or are 28,000 Canadians too "squeezly-measly", to use the term of the Minister of Finance, to merit the government's real concern?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are very much concerned about the number of actual Canadians who are out of work, and we will be indicating in the budget tonight another major step taken by this government to bring a sense of confidence to the Canadian economy so we can get Canada back on a growth track.

● (1425)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister was leader of the opposition he said that the way to get the country on a growth track was to have a stimulative deficit or, in other words, a larger deficit. Now the Minister of Finance is saying that the only deficit appropriate for Canada is a reduced one. Can the Prime Minister provide projections today on how many more real Canadians will be stimulated out of work within the next year by Conservative action or, more likely, non-action?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, in distinct contrast to the practices followed by the former government when the hon. member was a bit player in that government, we intend to publish tonight significant forecasts as to the nature of economic performance in the country, and we intend to indicate our expectations of the impact the new policies indicated in the budget will have upon those projections.

PETRO-CANADA

RETENTION OF CORPORATION FOR NEGOTIATIONS WITH MEXICO

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have addressed my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or, in his absence, to the acting Minister of Energy, but in his absence and the absence of no less than ten other ministers, I will address it to the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: He's a real sweetheart.

Mr. Lalonde: In light of the statement made in Toronto yesterday by the Mexican ambassador to Canada, to the effect that Mexico would prefer to deal with Petro-Canada in its future sales of oil to our country, can the Prime Minister tell us whether his government will finally come to its senses on the question of Petro-Canada, abandon its plans to castrate that corporation and use it fully as the government's instrument to negotiate with Mexico, or will the government again prefer to send the president of Imperial Oil on such matters, as it did last summer?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has been made abundantly clear in discussions with the Mexicans and, indeed, the Venezuelans that Petro-Canada is not essential as an instrument of negotiation in relation to oil between Canada and those countries. Instead of sending representatives of Crown corporations or private corporations, we intend to send the ministers of the Crown to Mexico and Venezuela in January to carry on negotiations which are close to being concluded in a way that will bring to Canada access to Mexican and Venezuelan oil supplies that eluded the former government.

ENERGY

MEASURES TO BE ADOPTED TO ENSURE SUPPLIES OF GAS AND HEATING OIL TO QUEBECKERS

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister surely knows, there has been a lockout at the Petrofina Canada Chemicals Ltd. refinery in eastern Montreal, which jeopardizes the supply of gasoline and heating oil in eastern Canada. I therefore want to know what action the government is considering today in order to truly ensure oil supplies for the people in Quebec, in light of the recent agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member indicated, it is a lockout, a work stoppage which has caused this disruption. To date, the federal government has only stepped in to stress to all concerned the threat that this oil production stoppage poses to the Canadian people.

[English]

ELECTION PROMISE OF OIL SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Does he agree with the statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on December 6 before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, that the minister expected that imported oil into Canada would continue to be about 250,000 barrels a day in 1990, or roughly equivalent to what it is now, which amounts to an abandonment of the Conservative election promise of oil self-sufficiency by 1990? Has the Conservative government abandoned this election promise of oil self-sufficiency?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have certainly not abandoned that goal. We hope that there will be some enthusiasm among members on the other side of the House in supporting some of the measures including measures that will be difficult in the first instance but which will be essential to bring Canada to a position where we are self-sufficient in oil and in energy.

● (1430)

PLANS TO ACHIEVE ENERGY SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. The statement released today concerning the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources meetings this week with the International Energy Agency in Paris indicated that great stress would be put on conservation. In view of the fact that in committee last week the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated that the government hoped to reduce dependency on foreign oil by 250,000 barrels per day through conservation techniques, can the Prime Minister indicate what the minister will say at the meetings this week in Paris, and what specific plans will the government introduce to achieve this goal, beyond hiking the price of gasoline by 30 cents or 50 cents in 1980?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be in a position to answer more detailed questions on his representations in Paris upon his return.

The hon. member will recall that we raised with the premiers the very real need for a combined approach by the federal and provincial governments to putting in place not only programs of conservation but also programs that will help to find substitutes for expensive oil. Federal government officials are now in direct contact with officials of all provincial governments in order to continue the work on detailed proposals for conservation and for substitution. This will be on the agenda for further discussion when the first ministers meet on December 17 and 18.

IMMIGRATION

SCREENING OF IRANIAN STUDENTS

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. A Southam News report has indicated an admission by John Sheardon, head of Canadian Immigration in Tehran, that only 15 per cent to 20 per cent of student applications for courses in Canada were likely to be screened. Can the minister tell me, first of all, if the news report is factual and, also, what his conception of screening entails?

[Mr. Foster.]

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there was a slight inaccuracy in the news report. All Iranian students coming to Canada from either Iran or the United States are subject to the usual medical and other screening procedures. If there is any suggestion of impropriety, alleged terrorism or other activities, of course they are then regarded as inadmissible.

There are, of course, other requirements that apply to all students no matter what country they come from, including proof of financial capability and proof of readmissibility to their home country, as well as valid acceptance from a Canadian institution. Those instructions have been communicated by officials in Tehran.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration why at the present time Canada cannot disallow the entrance of students until the situation with the United States embassy is over.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, each individual student application is treated on its individual merits. As a government, we have no interest in singling out Iranian students as a group. By virtue of the conditions which I explained a moment or two ago, some students will be inadmissible for those reasons. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that for practical reasons many Iranian students coming either from Iran or Washington would be inadmissible under the conditions I have stated. The government has no intention of excluding all Iranian students as a group just because they happen to be Iranian students.

EMPLOYMENT

PLANS TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the minister knows, today in the Atlantic region there is an increase in unemployment amongst those aged 25 and over. Can the minister tell us what his plans are to tackle this serious unemployment in the Atlantic region, especially amongst young people but in general amongst all people, because we have been suffering for so long?

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, unemployment is always a problem in this country, but I am pleased to say that unemployment among young people decreased rather than increased in the last month. Nevertheless, it represents a serious and continuing problem in the Atlantic region. I would urge all hon. members to listen very carefully to the budget address of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, tonight.

STATISTICS CANADA

SPECIAL STUDY OF LABOUR FORCE IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board who has announced an inquiry into the credibility of Statistics Canada figures. Is the minister directing the expert involved to make a special study of figures as they relate to the labour force in Atlantic Canada where there is so much underemployment now that is not captured by the so-called official unemployment figures? There is a great number of discouraged workers in that region, and we feel that the Atlantic region's official unemployment figures do not give the true picture.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member at this time that such a study is under way, but I shall certainly take his representation into consideration and report back.

INDUSTRY

SUPPORT OF RETAILERS FOR CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, my question would normally be directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of State for Economic Development, but in his absence perhaps one of the junior ministers will reply. The Canadian sweater industry, in its brief of December 5, requested the minister of trade and economic development to "advise the major retail stores that Canada needs a viable sweater manufacturing industry and suggest that they purchase at least three-quarters of their needs from Canadian manufacturers."

Does the minister intend to take specific action to ensure that the major retailers will act like good corporate citizens, support Canadian industry and ensure jobs for Canadians in this coming winter?

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry): Mr. Speaker, my department received a brief from the Canadian Apparel Manufacturing Association on the subject of sweaters. We have asked the branch responsible within the department to study the matter and report back to the ministers at the earliest opportunity the recommendations they anticipate.

I can advise that of the 11 bilateral agreements that we have with countries from which we import, 10 cover sweaters. I think it is up to consumers and retailers to solve the rest of this problem, except that we do have a Buy Canadian program in place.

[Translation]

REQUEST SWEATER IMPORTS BE REDUCED

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of the hon. member for Vaudreuil and directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Economic Development.

Within the next few months, some 2,000 jobs will be lost in the knitted wear and knitted sweater industry if the underdeveloped countries make full use of their import quotas. Would the minister submit this case forthwith to the Textile and Clothing Board for a decision to reduce the number of imported sweaters and distribute these imports over equal periods during the year, as recommended in the brief dated December 5 which the minister mentioned?

Moreover, would it be possible to know when the House of Commons, as well as the textile and clothing industries and their 200,000 employees, will be advised of the findings of the Textile and Clothing Board, following the investigation it is currently carrying out to streamline the recommendations of 1977 which brought about the decision concerning the quotas and the bilateral agreements?

[English]

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have met with the officials concerned. They are working on this whole area in order to give immediate advice to the ministers not only concerning sweaters but jeans as well.

A total review of the program is in place. I have had meetings with the responsible official about the reporting system, the permit-issuing system and the information-gathering system so that we can get a total handle on this whole area and so that we can improve the communication medium and the protection needed for Canadian manufacturers, without putting the complete imposition on the Canadian consumer.

REVENUE CANADA

INVESTIGATION OF WEARING APPAREL IMPORTS FROM HONG KONG—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. The officials of his department undertook, some time ago, an investigation of the valuation of imports of wearing apparel from Hong Kong. Despite the fact that these imports were found to be sold at dumping prices by Customs Canada, no action has been taken by the minister. Could the minister indicate to us today if he is ready to act on this pressing matter?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of the question. It is not fair to say that no action has been taken by the department. The fact is that Revenue Canada is presently studying all wearing apparel originating from major exporting countries. To date, measures have been taken to evaluate properly all wearing apparel originating in Korea and Taiwan.

A study is under way in the department with respect to wearing apparel from Hong Kong, and a decision is expected shortly. I can assure the hon. member that I shall act upon the results of that study.

INDUSTRY

INDUSTRIAL POLICY—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, one of the many reflections forced upon us by the series of questions we have just had is on the importance of import substitution in the development of an industrial policy. The minister of state responsible for industry mentioned in one of his first speeches that this was going to be one of his five priorities. Is he in a position today to tell us in general terms what he has been able to do and what he has been able to add to the existing capacity of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in this area?

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry): Mr. Speaker, in reply to that question, we are naturally placing emphasis on the Shop Canadian program that was already there. There is a business opportunity sourcing program which is of benefit primarily, in its present stage, to industrial operators in both Ontario and Quebec. Further to that, I think the important matter that has to be developed is co-ordination of the information-gathering system within the Government of Canada.

I am speaking specifically of the computer program in the department for imports and exports, and tying that in with the information-gathering system of Customs and Excise at National Revenue. We are working down that avenue in order to improve the information and statistical data base that will be available to guide both importers and exporters in Canada.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, in order to improve the quality of information on imports—because, obviously, this is what needs to be done—what has the minister been in a position to do? Has he had conversations with the minister responsible for StatsCan to this effect?

Mr. Huntington: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not had direct communication with the minister responsible for StatsCan, but I can assure the hon. member that I have had discussions with my officials as to the quality of the program that exists within Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am assured that it is really a Cadillac program and that it should be the nucleus of the information-gathering system in this general area, using both StatsCan and data available in National Revenue.

[Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton).]

MIDDLEPORT, ONT.—CARRIAGE OF TOXIC CHEMICALS THROUGH REGION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of the Environment. Given the recent Mississauga accident as an example of the danger when transporting hazardous substances, and in view of the fact that the Ontario government is planning to establish a major PCB storage facility with a capacity of at least 5,000 tons near Middleport, Ontario, which is only 15 kilometres from Brantford, where I live, can the minister assure this House and the people of that area that there will be no transportation of these highly toxic chemicals into this very productive agricultural area?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, I cannot guarantee that there will be no transport at any time in the future. What I can say to the hon. member is that under the Transport of Dangerous Goods Act which was recently before this House I will consult with my colleague and ensure that his department and mine are monitoring these plans, and every effort will be made to ensure that there will be no lack of safety in the transport of PCBs if, in fact, the site which my hon. friend has mentioned is chosen. I am sure that all members of the House realize that the selection of this site is not a matter within federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Blackburn: I would like to ask the same minister if he has been able to determine whether it is the federal Department of Transport, the federal Ministry of the Environment, the Ontario ministry of transportation and communications or the Ontario ministry of the environment that is responsible for the transportation of hazardous chemicals, because it appears to me at this time that this whole area is not only muddied but it is a mess.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has indicated that the whole area is muddied or a mess. I can assure all members of the House that very considerable concern must flow from the fact that there is in this particular, very important field an overlapping of jurisdiction which makes it very difficult for any particular government, department or agency to be completely in control. It is my own view that there is federal authority to ensure that the transportation of dangerous goods be done in a safe manner, and I can assure the hon. member that that is the position I will be maintaining in this particular case.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

BROADCASTING OF QUEEN'S CHRISTMAS MESSAGE TO COMMONWEALTH

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State through whom the CRTC reports. According to information appearing in the press today, the CRTC has instructed radio and television stations that, in preparing their itemized reports on foreign and Canadian content in their programming, our Queen's Christmas message to the Commonwealth is to figure as "foreign content".

Would the minister inquire into the accuracy of this particular information? If it should prove to be correct, would he ensure that that instruction is withdrawn, because surely the new chairman of the CRTC, because of his academic background, must know the position of the Queen in Canada and of Canada in the Commonwealth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that instruction. I would be very surprised if, in fact, it were true. But I would want to check the accuracy of it first, so I will immediately inquire of the CRTC and see what necessary action can be taken to correct it.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

CANADIAN DELEGATION FOR BILATERAL TRADE MEETING WITH MEXICO

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): My question is for the Prime Minister. In the week of November 26 there took place in Guanajuato, Mexico, an important bilateral trade meeting among the Canadian Association for Latin America and senior ministers of the Mexican government—considered extremely significant by the Mexican government—hosted by the minister of patrimony, with the delegation to be received by the President.

In light of his answer to my colleague, the hon. member for Outremont, about ministers going there on the oil agreement, could the Prime Minister explain to the House why, despite the insistence of the Canadian ambassador to Mexico and the insistence of the Mexican ambassador to Canada that a senior economic minister head our delegation to that meeting, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce refused to go, the Minister of International Trade refused to go, and we in fact sent a junior official with the rank of director general, further indicating the incompetence and indifference of this government to international trade and to Mexico in particular?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the allegation regarding the specific matter raised by the hon. member. I can assure the hon. member that the language he has used to describe relations between Canada and Mexico, if it ever applied—and I doubt that it did apply with accuracy—certainly does not apply to the relations between this government and the government of Mexico, as will be indicated by the visit of senior ministers of this government to Mexico for significant and wide-ranging discussions next month, and the visit of the President of Mexico here later next year.

An hon. Member: In the Christmas holidays.

Mr. Clark: I hear one member opposite talking about Christmas holidays. I should take the opportunity to warn him that unless the obstruction stops on the other side of the House, there will not be any.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stollery: He is warning us. I am not afraid.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLICY RESPECTING USE OF PCBs IN CANADA

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of the Environment in connection with the hearings completed yesterday by the review board responsible for polychlorinated biphenyls, PCBs. It stems from the fact that PCBs do pose a threat to human health because of their toxicity, their persistence in the environment and the fact that they accumulate in the food chain. I would like the minister to tell this House what his policy is and that of his government with respect to discontinuing the use of PCBs in Canada and the disposal of existing PCBs in the near future.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the objective of the government is to discontinue the use entirely of PCBs and the regulations will forbid any new use of PCBs. With respect to PCBs that are presently used in transformers, the policy is to phase them out through a process of attrition.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBLE INVESTMENT OF $200 MILLION IN INDUSTRIAL PARK AT BÉCANCOUR, QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Louis Leduc (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. It concerns the Laprade plants and the $200 million the former government granted it in compensation. I should like to know whether the present government, in its negotiations with the Quebec government, insists that those $200 million be used mostly in the Bécancourt industrial park.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the Laprade plants is still under discussion by the Canadian government and the Quebec government, as it was indeed by the former government and the Quebec government.

AIR TRANSPORT

SALE OF NORDAIR—POSSIBLE PURCHASER

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Because of apparent delays in the sale of Nordair, which is now in the hands of Air Canada, and because of the importance of this sale to the Atlantic region, could the minister advise the House when the CTC and the government will reach a decision on this matter? Hopefully, then we will get some service in the future in the four Atlantic provinces. We are particularly interested in the application by Eastern Provincial Airways.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): I, too, am interested in resolving the disposition of Nordair, as is the government. The matter is currently before cabinet, and when a decision is reached the wheels will be placed in motion for the disposition of Nordair subject to CTC approval.

METRICATION

CONVERSION OF RETAIL SCALES

Mr. Ray Chenier (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry. Has the cabinet approved the hon. gentleman's proposal to delay the metric conversion of retail scales which he has been threatening us with for the last two weeks, to the consternation and alarm of retailers?

Hon. Ron Huntington (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry): I am aware that the matter has passed one cabinet committee. I have not been made aware of the decision of the inner cabinet on that recommendation. I might take this opportunity to clear up the confusion which exists: what we are specifically concerned about is the weighing and the marking of individual measurements at point of sale.

PETRO-CANADA

CALL FOR RETENTION OF CORPORATION AS VEHICLE FOR CANADIAN INVESTMENT

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): My question is to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether the Premier of Newfoundland has been in touch with him to confirm that an additional 2,400 barrels of oil a day has been discovered at the Hibernia well, off Newfoundland? Can he confirm that this is, in fact, a find of commercial importance, and in view of the fact that Petro-Canada has a 25 per cent interest in this well and is the only Canadian company with such an interest, does he not think this is an adequate argument for retaining Petro-Canada as an adequate vehicle for investment by Canadians in their own resources?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, the Premier of Newfoundland has not been in touch with me on this matter and I cannot confirm the details of the rumoured find. We naturally hope that it is correct and that there will be more extensive finds yet to come. I am delighted that a spokesman for the Liberal party has now changed his attitude toward Petro-Canada and is accepting our view that Petro-Canada should be an instrument for investment by individual Canadians instead of simply being a static instrument of the state.

THE ENVIRONMENT

IJC STUDY OF WATER LEVELS IN LAKE ERIE

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment and concerns proposals contained in a study by the International Joint Commission on water levels in Lake Erie. It has been suggested that the flow of water from Lake Erie into Lake Ontario via the Niagara River, around the town of Fort Erie, be increased. As this area is heavily involved in tourism, and since many tourists and residents use Lake Erie and the Niagara River for boating, sailing and fishing, would the minister assure us that the increased flow would not adversely affect this area?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Postmaster General and Minister of the Environment): The study to which the hon. member refers is being carried out by the International Joint Commission on behalf of the Canadian and the United States governments. It will be the first stage of an investigation; no work will take place until after that. I can assure the hon. member that there will be sufficient time between his concern as expressed today and any definitive plans to ensure that the concern to which he has drawn the attention of the House will be met.

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—CAR ALLOCATION FORMULA

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The Conservative task force on grain movement recommends a change in the car allocation formula which would encourage the private purchase and leasing of rail cars by companies. Can the minister assure us he will reject a proposal which would give a great advantage to large corporations such as Cargill at the expense of farmer-owned wheat pools?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): We are looking at various ways and means of increasing the grain hopper carrying fleet. They will all be used as part of the grain carrying fleet under the direction of the co-ordinator. I welcome the opportunity to clarify that matter in response to the hon. member's first question in this House.

Mr. Hovdebo: Recommendation No. 14 in the same Conservative report suggests that supplementary quotas should be allowed to terminals capable of cleaning grain for export. Will the minister assure us that such a decision, which would favour Cargill and the Weyburn terminal at the expense of co-operative elevator companies, will not be implemented?

Mr. Mazankowski: The recommendations to which the hon. member refers are those which came from within the grain industry after extensive consultation with over 30 groups in western Canada associated with grain transportation and handling. All the recommendations will be considered in due course.

CONSTRUCTION OF TAX DATA PROCESSING CENTRE AT JONQUIÈRE, QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. It deals with the construction of a tax data processing centre at Jonquière.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister met the representatives of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean regional development council to whom he promised that if he came to power that construction project would remain unchanged. Now, the writer of an editorial published in a newspaper of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean region last weekend claims that the government is holding the people hostage, and that the tax data processing centre will not be built before the Quebec referendum is held. May I ask the Prime Minister to deny that information categorically and to give us an indication of recent developments with regard to that important matter, that is, to tell us whether he intends to do something in the very near future about the representations made to him, including the petition signed by 22,000 persons?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can deny absolutely the allegation published in the newspaper mentioned by the hon. member. I thank the hon. member for letting me know last night that he intended to put a question about the tax data centre at Jonquière. As the hon. member understands, I am sure, that project has not been cancelled by the government; it has only been postponed until such time as the financial resources of the government allow that kind of expenditure. The President of the Treasury Board has had meetings with the representatives from Jonquière. A representative of the minister visited the area and discussed the project with the citizens. We hope to be in a position to reach a final decision in that regard as soon as possible, but I cannot do so today, nor can I indicate to the hon. member exactly when I expect to be able to do so.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

APPLICATION TO SPOUSES OF POLITICIANS

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister. It has to do with a short editorial which was published in The Gazette this morning about the conflict of interest rules which the Prime Minister imposes on his ministers. Contrary to that article, I sympathize with Jane Crosbie. It is more than sympathy, because the rules the Prime Minister is about to impose on his ministers are of a nature which would incapacitate the spouses of politicians.

Will the Prime Minister side with these spouses—in most cases, women—allow them to operate as free citizens, not to be bundled up with their husbands—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Sauvé: —and be satisfied that they divulge their interests? And will he express some confidence in the oath taken by his ministers that they will not reveal the dealings of cabinet and allow women not to have to sacrifice their careers to the political ambitions of their husbands?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a very important question. As she knows, the problem is posed not simply for spouses who happen to be women, but also to a degree, which we hope will increase, to spouses who happen to be men.

We believe that conflict of interest guidelines have to deal with two important and combined problems: one is the reality of any conflict; the second is the appearance of any conflict. It was precisely because of the appearance of any conflict that we included in the regulations which we brought down—and which, I admit, are more stringent than those brought down by the former government—the provision relating to spouses.

As I have indicated in a press conference, I also share absolutely the concern expressed by Mrs. Crosbie. I am delighted to report to the House that, as a consequence of the sympathy I have shown for the case she has made, Mrs. Crosbie has now sold her shares and is in a position where she is free of any conflict. However, I think the obligation very clearly rests upon the government to continue a review of conflict of interest guidelines which will deal with the fact and the appearance of conflict with an eye to bringing in guidelines which are fairer to spouses as soon as we can.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I would express the opinion that Mrs. Crosbie is not free, but she has had to be subservient or bow to the interests of her husband and to rules which do not make any sense in this century but which were brought down by the Prime Minister.

To continue his reasoning, would the Prime Minister then say that a person who is employed, for instance, as a nurse in a hospital could not keep that job if her husband, or his wife, happened to be a cabinet minister?

Mr. Clark: Of course not, Mr. Speaker. Of course the rule would not apply in that way.

Mrs. Sauvé: Why not?

Mr. Clark: The problem has to do with holdings which might be felt to influence public policy, and I should simply say to the hon. member that if she knew Mrs. Crosbie as well as I know Mrs. Crosbie—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Dawson: Details?

Mrs. Bégin: Explain.

Mr. Clark: I rather regret that in this age, if I may quote the hon. member, a comment of that kind should excite this kind of reaction from hon. members on the other side of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dawson: It is the people behind you who are laughing.

An hon. Member: Your own members.

Mr. Clark: Mrs. Crosbie is a very strong individual in her own right. She is respected by me, by my government and by members of the House who know her in that capacity. She has raised an important public question. By the manner of her raising it she has caused us to review a difficult and delicate conflict of interest guideline.

Mr. Breau: She showed you that you are stupid.

Mr. Clark: By the manner in which she acted independently to bring herself into accordance with the guidelines, she has kept alive the necessity to review those guidelines and has yet allowed the government and her husband to adhere to a standard of freedom from conflict of interest which is probably without precedent in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MR. RODRIGUEZ—ALLEGED MISLEADING ANSWER BY PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: I have a notice of privilege from the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from an "answer"—and I put that in quotation marks—which the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) attempted to give to me this afternoon in the House to a question I asked. I think the answer he gave was misleading to this House. I think it may be misleading because of the fact that he does not understand the manner in which federal programs such as DREE interface with provincial programs and corporations which apply for these grants under the federal program.

My concern this afternoon dealt with the actions of the Michelin Tires Company in relation to the Nova Scotia government and the legislation which was introduced into that provincial house regarding the manner of organizing workers in the Michelin plant. The concept which was introduced there was one of the interdependent plant. It runs contrary to article 87 of the ILO of which Canada as a nation is a signatory. In response, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will have to move quickly to indicate the nature of the question of privilege. If it is simply to take issue with the answer or to grieve about the extent to which his question was answered, obviously, as he knows from previous days and several rulings, I cannot be permitted to extend that to him without doing the same for every member every day.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you for that comment, Mr. Speaker, and I will get quickly to the point.

I realize that that is a provincial legislature, and I asked the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that DREE is a federal agency and that it has entered in the past into agreements with the Michelin Tires Company with respect to DREE grants, accelerated depreciation, duty-free importation of tires—and, in fact, the new plant is coming before the federal government for the same sorts of agreements—whether he could use that leverage as means of getting the legislation withdrawn or to get the company to impress upon the provincial government that it does not want the government interfering with the legitimate right of the workers to organize.

I put that question to the Prime Minister. He replied that he cannot interfere in what is obviously a relationship between a provincial government and corporations or individuals in the province of Nova Scotia. I am not asking him to interfere with the provincial government and its relationship with its citizens. I am asking him on behalf of Canadians to indicate by reason of that leverage that we as Canadians are not prepared to see a step back into the past, 1948, with respect to labour legislation in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will realize that he is simply continuing the argument which his questions raised during the question period and that that does not fall within the grounds of privilege.

MR. BRISCO—NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD HEARING IN VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. Speaker: I have a notice of privilege from the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco).

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege relates somewhat to the question of privilege raised by my colleague, then the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, on November 3, 1978, when that member, now the Solicitor General (Mr. Lawrence), stated that he was misled in a letter from a minister of the Crown. I have not been misled by a minister of the Crown, but I have been misled by the secretary of the National Energy Board. I have been misled to the extent and degree that I am unable properly to represent the concerns of my constituents with regard to a hearing on an application by British Columbia Hydro for renewal, with modification, of its existing export licence. This hearing commenced this morning in Vancouver.

On the basis of correspondence from constituents and on the basis of editorial comment in the Nelson Daily News of July 27, 1979, I wrote to the National Energy Board and requested that hearings that it was contemplating here in Ottawa be held in Vancouver or in British Columbia where the majority of interveners were located. In a reply to me from the National Energy Board the following was indicated, and I quote only the two concluding sentences:

As a matter of interest I might mention that B.C. Hydro has applied to the Board and has been granted six months' extension on its current licence, thus, the hearing will not be held until some time next spring. I am placing your name on the Board's mailing list to receive a copy of the hearing order which the Board will issue concerning this application.

That was signed by the secretary of the National Energy Board.

In the question of privilege raised by my colleague, it was alleged at that time that he was intentionally misled. I cannot make that statement in all honesty and fairness with regard to the National Energy Board's secretary. However, I have acted as a member of Parliament with regard to these hearings on the basis of this letter from the National Energy Board. Therefore, at this moment I am placed in the position of having little, if any, time to prepare the type of intervention which would be expected of me by my constituents. Indeed, when I spoke to the secretary of the NEB this morning, he admitted the board's error, if it can be called that, and assured me that all pertinent information and application forms for intervention would be sent to my office immediately by messenger. I received them only five minutes ago.

If a member of Parliament from a riding not directly affected by possible NEB decisions in regard to B.C. Hydro's application were a victim of this error, I would not view the matter with the same degree of seriousness. However, of all the constituencies in British Columbia, Kootenay West and Kootenay East-Revelstoke are the ones that are most materially affected in both a positive and a very negative sense by the Columbia River Treaty and by B.C. Hydro, which has the authority given to it under the treaty to implement the conditions laid down in the treaty. Other official and quasi-official bodies in my constituency have, in the last 48 hours, raised their voice in protest over the fact that the hearing before the NEB commenced today in Vancouver at 9.30 a.m. without adequate notice having been given to them.

How can I conceivably represent the people most affected by the decision of the NEB when I have been so seriously misled by the board established by Parliament for the purpose of giving direction to Canada and to Canadians on energy related issues?

I seek your indulgence and advice on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Since the hon. member has indicated that it appears to be an error on the part of the board and as the board, of course, is not a government agency for which a minister has direct responsibility—I am not entirely sure of that but it is likely an independent agency for which a minister reports to Parliament—it seems to me likely that the hon. member has disqualified his problem as being a matter of privilege. However, it would seem to be that he has a grievance which is very important and for that reason I did not interrupt him in the course of his remarks, although it became clear early in his remarks that the likelihood of developing a question of privilege was not very great.

The hon. member has raised a point which is a matter of great concern to him, and I think to all hon. members, that when we seek information about matters which comes as part of our responsibility in representing constituents it is important that that information be accurate and that in the end the constituency or constituents not be penalized by the failure to have adequate representation through their elected representative.

It seems to me that the hon. member has raised the point publicly to the House at this time and he should pursue it probably with the minister who reports to Parliament for the NEB to see whether or not directly under the circumstances the minister is able to intervene to make such arrangements as would permit the hearings to be conducted in such a way as to permit adequate representation by the hon. member. I leave that to him. If that fails, he might want to raise the matter again.

MR. BUJOLD—OPEN HOUSE CANADA PROGRAM—ALLEGED LACK OF INFORMATION ON GRANTING OF CONTRACT TO CP AIR

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege relates to the question I asked yesterday of the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Mac-Donald) concerning the excellent program called Open House Canada. The minister alleged that I was misinformed on the policy of his department regarding that program, believing that CP Air had been selected to provide transportation for the young participants in that program. Knowing the integrity of the minister and his wish to provide true and correct information in the House, I think that he did not have the information and that he misled the House.

My information is that the civil servants who are responsible for that program left it to CP Air to approve all applications for reservations from groups wanting to travel in Canada, and that the company should share with Air Canada in all fairness.

Now, Mr. Speaker, always according to the information I have, from July to November 1979, CP Air transported 54 youth groups compared with 22 for Air Canada, in western Canada only, namely to the cities of Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Regina and Saskatoon.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel the minister did not answer my question, and that is why I ask that the whole matter be referred to the Committee on Communications and Culture in order to obtain clarification of this case.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the House would prefer to wait until the minister has had the opportunity to take part in the discussion.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DICK—REQUEST FOR COPY OF BUDGET SPEECH

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order which may be a question of privilege. It seems to me that this afternoon people from the media will be going over budget documents which will be seen later this evening, and indeed the spokesmen of the various parties will have that opportunity as well. When we come to the House this evening, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) will be on his feet and by about 8.10 p.m. everybody in Canada will know the highlights of the budget which will have been broadcast on their television set.

The practice in the past has been that members of the House do not receive their copy of the budget until after the minister has spoken, and although this party was in the opposition last time, we requested copies of the budget speech so that we could read it along with the Minister of Finance and perhaps mark our copies. I wonder whether Your Honour, through consultation with the House leaders, might see whether or not we could have copies, which we normally get in the lobby after the budget speech is made, placed on our desks. We would not open them until the Minister of Finance starts to speak, but we could follow along and mark our copies on the points we think are valid and important.

Perhaps the government House leader might respond to this, but I see he is not here at present and that is why I am addressing you, sir, as the person who is the custodian of the privileges of members. I think it is an important point and I wonder if Your Honour might see whether or not there is some concession that can be made.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may be making a very worth-while suggestion, but it is not my responsibility. The document remains the possession of the government, the Minister of Finance and the government House leader. If they wish to distribute it in some way, that is their responsibility not that of the Chair.

PRIVILEGE

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) rose on a question of privilege relating to the application of the Official Languages Act as it dealt with the publication or preparation of a report by a special caucus committee of the Conservative party in the matter of agricultural studies. As I understand, the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is seeking recognition from Your Honour on a question of privilege, and I rose in order to indicate that I will follow his intervention in order to join in that particular question.

Mr. Speaker: I have no notice of any question of privilege. The hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) raised a question of privilege on which I decided yesterday, both in respect of the practice of using government funds to support committees of one caucus and also in respect of the risk that that entails. The way in which I dealt with it yesterday was that that activity entails a risk of producing a report which has been publicly funded or supported and yet retains its identity as an internal document, and therefore faces the conflict of the requirement that since it was partly funded with public moneys it should be produced in both official languages. Because of that risk, I indicated that I thought the practice was most unwise, but I did not found a question of privilege upon past experience. Whether I might do so in the future is another question, but that matter is now closed on both accounts. It has been decided. I have no notice of any question of privilege from the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, and without notice of such a question of privilege I am not in a position to entertain it at the moment.

● (1520)

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Perhaps Your Honour has received notice of my question of privilege. I served your office notice at 11.35 a. m. today. My assistant personally brought it to the executive in Mr. Speaker's office at 11.35 a.m. this day. It was informing Mr. Speaker that I wanted to raise this question of privilege today. Now, I should like to be guided.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given the office notice. That is sufficient. Perhaps I could hear the nature of the question of privilege.

MR. ETHIER—ALLEGED ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO POLITICAL GROUP

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some hesitation in coming back to the question of privilege I raised last November 5. Following the ruling you delivered yesterday, I would like to make the following comments, that it was a sad day for French Canadians, if I am to understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ethier: —but I have new facts to introduce—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is seeking to raise a separate aspect of the same question of privilege. Surely he will realize that what he is seeking is the opportunity, by way of a fresh notice of a question of privilege, to review the decision which I have already taken on the point he raised. I simply cannot permit him to do that. There are no appeals of the rulings of the Chair; they have been abolished for some time. The hon. member seeks to reopen the matter or to have treated anew something based upon a matter which he has raised already and upon which I have adjudicated. I am simply not able to permit him to do that.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, following the remarks I made yesterday, Your Honour asked me to read carefully what you said. I sat down and I did not give an answer to that. I have read precisely what Your Honour has said. It is on that that I am raising my question of privilege today. I should like to be heard on that.

[Translation]

And that is when you invited me to examine Hansard to ascertain whether I was giving the correct interpretation of what you had said. Having read the question of privilege many times over and notwithstanding all the debate that took place since then, I want to introduce new facts. These facts relate to two statements made in the House last November 5, and on December 10, that is yesterday afternoon. First, I quote your remarks of November 5, as reported at page 943 of Hansard:

[English]

He raised one point about language to which the minister made the preliminary answer that this was an internal document, that it was used in the English language for English speaking members . . .

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, when you gave your ruling yesterday you said, and I quote from Hansard for December 10, page 2180:

[English]

There was an additional grievance advanced by the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, namely that the committee work resulted in a report which was essentially for internal use and was published therefore only in the English language, the language of the members involved, and that since it was supported by public funds it ought to have been published in both languages.

[Translation]

Very well. But here I wish to point out that you were still referring to a paper for internal use.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will realize that he is embarking upon a course in which he is asking me to review again a decision I have already made. I simply cannot permit him to do that by way of a notice of a question of privilege. Whether or not that decision raises another problem, or a disagreement with him in the interpretation of the circumstances in the decision, I am afraid he will have to wait for another occasion or another opportunity to raise afresh the point he wants to raise. But I have no opportunity to review that decision, and the House has no opportunity to attempt, by way of a question of privilege or otherwise, to appeal the decision which I made yesterday. The matter is decided, final.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I am simply answering what you asked yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ethier: I cannot accept that, Mr. Speaker. I want to be heard on this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ethier: Your Honour invited me yesterday to read his comments.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ethier: I want to be heard on this.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by ministers.

Mr. Ethier: I would certainly like to be heard, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ethier: I think I have a very valid question of privilege and I would like to be heard.

MR. HUGH R. HART

Question No. 4—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since April 20, 1968, did the government pay for legal services to Mr. Hugh R. Hart, Solicitor, Brockville, Ontario, or to the firm with which he is associated and, if so (a) what was the total amount (b) what was the amount by fiscal or calendar year (c) for which departments did he act and, in each case, what is the breakdown of the amounts received (d) what is a general description of each case he has handled?

2. What are all the reasons that Mr. Hart has been or is employed by the government and specifically, is one of these the fact that he is a member of the Executive of the local Liberal party?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations):

1. The Department of Justice: Yes.

(a) $58,251.15 (to September 30, 1979).

(b) See list below.

(c) See list below.

(d) See list below.

2. In reply to the first part of this question, Mr. Hart competently carried out the mandates assigned to him. The reply to the second part of the question is no.

PUBLIC SERVICE—POSITIONS RECLASSIFIED

Question No. 14—Mr. Orlikow:

In each of the past five years, by department, for each occupational group earning $20,000 or more in 1978 and 1979, how many (a) public service positions were reclassified upward (green-circled) and/or downward (red-circled) (b) individuals continued to hold a public service position after the position had been reclassified?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board): To provide a complete reply would entail a costly and time-consuming examination of all personnel and incumbent files in all departments and agencies. The cost of this study would be prohibitive in terms of both manpower and time.

NATO—CAST COMMITMENT

Question No. 177—Mr. Herbert:

1. (a) What was the total CAST commitment to NATO, in numbers of men, agreed to by Canada when it was first entered into (b) which units were tasked to provide these men (c) what equipment was committed to this force?

2. What have been the changes in the commitment in (a) numbers of men (b) the units which were tasked to provide the men (c) the equipment which was committed to this force and, in each case, what was the date that a change was made?

3. (a) What was the total CAST commitment in numbers of men, as of January 1, 1979 (b) which units were tasked to provide them (c) what equipment was committed to this force?

4. (a) What is the planned total CAST commitment by Canada in numbers of men, effective September 1980, in light of the Minister of National Defence's statement on October 31, 1978 (b) which units are earmarked to provide them (c) what equipment is it planned to commit to this force?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1. (a) Approximately 5,300
   (b) Two Canadian Brigade Group including:
   Second Regiment Royal Canadian Horse Artillery
   Eighth Canadian Hussars-Princess Louise's-Regiment
   Two Combat Engineer Squadron
   Two Canadian Brigade Group Headquarters and Signals Squadron

EMPLOYED MARRIED WOMEN

Question No. 410—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

On March 31, 1979, what was the total number of married women holding jobs in Canada and what was their average weekly income?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board): Statistics Canada reports: Estimates from Statistics Canada's monthly labour force survey, which refer to the week ending March 17, 1979, indicate that the number of married women employed in Canada at that time was 2,393,000. Data regarding their average weekly income is not available.

FAMILIES—AVERAGE INCOME

Question No. 412—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

On March 31, 1979, what was the average income of Canadian families?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board): Statistics Canada reports: The information for March 31, 1979, is not available. However, according to preliminary estimates, the average income of Canadian families in 1978 was $21,346.

FISHERIES PRICES SUPPORT ACCOUNT

Question No. 468—Mr. Herbert:

In each of the past five years, what amount was transferred to the Fisheries Prices Support Account?

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Pursuant to section 10(3) of the Fisheries Prices Support Act, the following are the amounts transferred to the Fisheries Prices Support Account for the past five years:

Fiscal Years	Amounts
1977-78	$1,874,394
1976-77	1,343,209
1975-76	2,401,459
1974-75	382,467
1973-74	Nil

TAX RETURNS—CAPITAL LOSSES

Question No. 504—Mr. Herbert:

What was the total of capital losses indicated on tax returns in each of the past five years and, of these amounts, what was the estimated percentage considered applicable to Canadian companies?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): The total of capital losses, in thousands of dollars, indicated on the tax returns of individuals was as follows:

1973	293,827
1974	506,162
1975	409,712
1976	376,653
1977	400,830

This data is provided in table 18 of the annual publication "Taxation Statistics". No data is yet available for the 1978 tax year. The department does not compile this information for corporations.

PUBLIC WORKS—COST OF WORK CARRIED OUT FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE

Question No. 590—Mr. Herbert:

Has the Department of Public Works carried out any work for the Department of National Defence and, if so, what was the dollar value for each of the past five years?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works): Public Works Canada has made the following payments from its working capital advance on behalf of National Defence:

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

1974-75	$ 284,425
1975-76	$2,820,476
1976-77	$1,098,540
1977-78	$1,257,233
1978-79	$1,451,856

This does not include capital costs, maintenance or other services for recruitment centres or other space that National Defence may have in buildings owned by Public Works including National Defence headquarters.

OTTAWA—GOVERNMENT TELEPHONE NETWORK—NUMBER OF OPERATORS

Question No. 669—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many telephone operators handle incoming and outgoing calls in Ottawa, on the government telephone network?

2. What is the total cost per year paid for all telephone services rented in Canada by the government?

3. What is the average length of time that operators, presently in service, have held such jobs and what instructions do they receive before commencing work?

4. Is it the policy of the government to insist that such operators be as polite and courteous in giving services to customers as requested of regular Bell operators and, if so, have there been occurrences when operators have spoken rudely to customers and purposely disconnected them, etc?

5. What steps will be taken to improve the current attitude of Bell Canada operators working for the government by the Department of Communications?

Mr. Scott Fennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the answer to the above question is as follows:

1. A staff of approximately 100 operators are available on a 24-hour basis, seven days a week, to handle incoming and outgoing calls in Ottawa, on the government network. From this staff complement, 25 to 30 operators are required for normal work days to meet our service objective which is to respond to 95 per cent of all calls within ten seconds. The number of operators on duty is adjusted to forecasted and actual call volumes.

2. The total cost of rented telephone services to the government in the fiscal year 1978-79 was approximately $110,000,000.

3. The contracted operators for the switchboard serving the government in Ottawa have an average of approximately ten years of operator experience. Operators receive standard telephone company training supplemented by special instructions applicable to government switchboard operations.

4. It is the policy of the government that operators provide as polite and courteous a service as required from regular Bell Canada operators. Telephone operator manuals and practices require that all difficulties that may arise, whether reported in progress or after the fact by the caller or the operator, be referred to the supervisory level. Procedures are provided for the resolution of all such occurrences. Only very few complaints concerning operator service have been reported.

5. My departmental officials carry out an active program, in order to achieve and maintain the highest possible level of operator services. This program includes the continuous update of the Telephone Operator Practices Manual, maintenance of bilingual services in accordance with the Official Languages Act, improvement of sensitivity and responsiveness to the public including the provision of information services such as the government index of programs and services.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the parliamentary secretary when we can expect an answer to question No. 576 on the order paper. It concerns the budget to the beef import consultative committee which was just referred to in the question of privilege. I think it is very important for us to receive an answer as soon as possible. I received an answer to a similar question last week which caused a very interesting ruling in the House.

While I am on my feet, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary can tell us when we will have an answer to question No. 578 which deals with the special Conservative adviser on prairie branch lines. Also can he tell us when we can expect an answer to question No. 579 which deals with other Conservative task forces. I know of at least two which are in existence. One was headed up by a member from Dartmouth, I believe; it dealt with energy self-sufficiency. I believe that task force is no longer in existence. Another one was headed by an Ontario member; I forget his riding, but it involved seasonal farm workers. Also I heard through the rumour mill that perhaps it involved a trip to the Caribbean. I am not sure of that, but I think it is very important to receive the answers to those questions.

In addition to the question of privilege with which we dealt the other day, and the four Conservative caucus committees which we already know exist that are possibly being funded by the treasury, perhaps many, many more exist than those we know about. When can we expect those answers?

Mr. Wightman: Mr. Speaker, certainly I will take notice of the three numbered questions to which the hon. member referred. I will undertake to give him a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 54, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE TAX CREDIT IN RESPECT OF MORTGAGE INTEREST AND PROPERTY TAX

The House resumed from Monday, December 10, consideration in committee of Bill C-20, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide a tax credit in respect of mortgage interest and home owner property tax—Mr. Crosbie—Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton) in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose on Monday, December 10, 1979, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 1—

Mr. Watson: Mr. Chairman, last evening I outlined a number of the inequities in Bill C-20 that undoubtedly will give rise to the second thought which the sunset amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry is designed to act upon.

Surely hon. gentlemen opposite must now recognize that the program outlined in this bill will be horrendously expensive. It will be uneven and unfair in its application to various regions of Canada. It will distinguish, in a most unjust way, between home owners and renters and between home owners with large mortgages and those home owners without mortgages, most of whom are in the older age brackets.

There is another aspect of this bill which is unfortunate. As unfair as it is to so many taxpayers in Canada, the bill has another major defect which has gone largely unmentioned in this debate. The hon. member for Mississauga South summed up what I mean by that last night when he referred to what this bill would do to help the sale of houses; in other words, what it would do to help the real estate industry. The brutal truth is that this bill is a continuation of Conservative policies which reflect the tremendous influence land developers have with that party.

● (1530)

Mr. Watson: Just listen to the facts. The land banking provisions of the National Housing Act have been on the books since 1953. The use of those provisions could have avoided fantastic inflation in land costs around Toronto and even around Ottawa, but those land banking provisions were ignored by the Conservative government of Ontario to the benefit of Ontario land speculators.

Let me give two or three other examples. What happened to Pickering and what happened to South East City? They were sabotaged by the Conservative government of Ontario. If that is not caving in to land speculators, then those opposite who are heckling should check their facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Watson: Those are the facts. Disheartening as well is the fact that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think the committee should give the hon. member some consideration by remaining quiet until he has finished his remarks.

Mr. Watson: Disheartening as well is the fact that the tremendous sums of money which are involved in the tax loophole that this bill creates, at least $3 billion by the end of the fourth year, will make it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for a government that has been boasting about its intention to reduce the federal deficit to spend money in many other areas where money spent now would mean tremendous savings in the future for all Canadians.

Let us consider conservation as an example. Here are some of the things we should be doing but are not doing. There should be additional funds for home insulation available to everyone over the age of 65, regardless of the age of their homes. These people should be eligible for complete insulation updating at a cost to the government.

There should be subsidization of the conversion of our heating facilities from oil to natural gas. This is not going to be an inexpensive program, but it is one that is desirable. We do not even have sufficient numbers of people trained to do this job. New manpower programs will be necessary to train those people who will be needed to encourage and speed up this conversion from heating oil to natural gas for home heating purposes.

There should be new metering systems to encourage and permit diversification of the timing of electricity loads. Surely this should be feasible. I understand these new type meters have been in use in Europe for many years. They permit, at a reasonable cost of installation, somewhere in the $200 range, the possibility of electricity loads for those who want to benefit from cheap electricity. Those who use electricity from eight in the evening till midnight get a special rate, and those who want to use electricity after midnight get an even better rate. This sort of evening out of electricity demand would save a fantastic amount of expenditure on the new facilities which continue to be necessary to increase our electrical production capacity.

Instead of the luxury of this bill there obviously should be shelter allowances, fuel allowances or a combination of both. Perhaps the budget tonight will contain something along this line, but the vast expenditure being proposed by this bill will make it extremely difficult for any government to put into effect this kind of necessary and, in the long term, sensible money-saving proposals.

There should be encouragement by tax incentives of company van-oriented pools and other methods of reducing transportation energy consumption. Consideration should be given to electrification of our railway systems, and we should be encouraging conversion to coal use—

[Mr. Watson.]

Mr. Blenkarn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We are in Committee of the Whole discussing a sunset amendment proposed by the hon. member from Winnipeg. This whole question of vans, electricity and subsidization of insulation have absolutely nothing to do with the amendment. The hon. member was called to order by the Chairman the other night on this very issue. He continues to break the rules of the House. Surely he should stay within the limits.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Chairman, this particular sunset amendment will be useful simply because the bill, as I have been trying to explain, is such that there will be second thoughts. I have been explaining what some of these second thoughts are going to be. I have been giving examples of these second thoughts, and the necessity of doing these things that will in the long term save Canada a lot more money. Perhaps you would permit me to finish my remarks in the few minutes I have left.

I would like to suggest that another matter we should be considering is encouraging by subsidy conversion to coal use in accordance with the highest environmental standards to ensure that such conversion does not contribute further to our already serious acid rain problem. There is a great deal to be done in the area of urban transit.

We should be looking as well at the living conditions in urbanized areas of Canada where 85 per cent of our population lives. Statistics have shown that Canadians spend 70 per cent of their lifetimes either in their own homes or in their own neighbourhoods. Surely we should be considering the quality of life in those neighbourhoods and the types of programs that can increase and improve that quality of life. Hon. members opposite are putting themselves in a position where it will be almost impossible to find money to deal with these very urgent, pressing and necessary activities to permit Canadians to achieve the kind of quality of life in their own municipalities, cities and towns to which they have a right to aspire.

[Translation]

It is a fact that the quality of life in the core of cities and in suburbs suffers from a lack of long-term planning and of co-ordination among the various departments and levels of government. It is a fact that a lack of long-term planning and co-ordination has given rise to many mistakes and deficiencies in municipal and regional services which are now extremely costly at all government levels and it is especially costly for municipal ratepayers to correct them. It is also a fact that the huge cost of some planning mistakes have a negative effect on the efficiency of the Canadian economy and the capacity of Canada to compete on the world market. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in English that—

[English]

In spite of the fact that 85 per cent of our population lives in Canada's urbanized areas we have still not achieved the kind of federal involvement necessary to improve the quality of life of that tremendous percentage of the population. It is unfortunate that the former government caved in to, at that time, Conservative opposition recommendations that we abolish the urban affairs department. As far as I am concerned, that was one of the most foolish things the previous government did, and this is one of the areas where the need remains and expenditure requirements are going to be increasing. Federal government involvement will continue to be necessary.

● (1540)

The United Nations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the Council of European Parliament and other such organizations all feel that they have a role to play in urban affairs, but the federal government feels that it does not have such a role to play. That is pure nonsense. Further expansion is necessary.

What the present government is doing by putting all their eggs in one basket through a tremendous burst of expenditures is tying their hands well into the future and inhibiting or preventing any future government from becoming involved in these matters which are so necessary to the future well-being of Canadians, particularly those in our urban areas.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Chairman, if one cannot persuade this government to withdraw this extraordinary, discriminatory and unjust bill, then we must at the very least ensure that there is a day of reckoning where maybe common sense will prevail. That is why I support a sunset clause in a measure which, even if it had any redeeming features, is far too expensive in these difficult times. If the full cost of the program as given by the Minister of Finance is distributed, we see that the cost of the mortgage interest deductibility proposal is equivalent to almost 20 per cent of the tax load of the individual taxpayer. That means that one dollar in every five dollars of the taxes paid by everyone—the poor, rich, young, old, single family parents, including all renters and all those who do not have mortgages on their homes—goes to pay for the program.

The Minister of Finance when speaking on this bill made the extraordinary statement that in 1974 with this bill 230,000 tenant householders could have become householders. Surely, this is the most absurd statement that has ever been made in this House. He also said that only 1.5 million people will get the property tax credit, which means that these people have homes that are not mortgaged. The Minister of Finance also said that this bill will help city housing to compete with suburban housing. Even if it were true, is that a desirable objective?

The Minister of Finance says that the plan is the same in every province. He forgets the difference in living style in Quebec. He also chooses to forget that this bill is the most discriminatory that has ever been presented in this House. One member suggested that one of his objections to this bill is that it is racist in nature. Well, I will let everyone judge on that, as I repeat that any bill that gives $2 to those who list English as their first official language while giving only $1 to those who use French as their official language is at least biased in favour of one language group.

An hon. Member: Explain that.

Mr. Herbert: This extraordinarily iniquitous distribution of public funds derives initially from the fact that there is approximately 70 per cent home ownership among the nominally English, compared to 45 per cent among the Francophones. Taking into account the difference in property values and the lower average mortgage level in the Francophone group, it is easy to see that the $2 for the Anglophone group compared to the $1 for the Francophone group is discrimination of the worst kind and is not likely to be a unifying force in this country.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to relate his remarks to the amendment to this bill. I think he is straying from that amendment.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Chairman, my reason for making these remarks, the reason I want to see this amendment pass and why I want to see an end to this legislation, is because the proposed amendment would ensure that when the government is changed in the foreseeable future there will be a vehicle for the new government automatically to end this discriminatory legislation. I am giving my reasons why it is important that this legislation be ended. I am sure that it will be ended via the passing of this clause, which will put a termination date on this bill and stop a situation which is at the present in force in the United States, even though it is undesirable, because it is impossible to stop.

The Tories have talked about putting sunset clauses in legislation, but they oppose a sunset clause in the first major measure which they introduce in this House. Let us examine the effect of this legislation on those who rent. The Minister of Finance in his remarks was critical of those who rent, inferring that one is less than Canadian if one does not have a burning desire to own a home. The person who rents pays for the higher cost of financing apartment buildings. The renter also pays when single family lodgings are given a tax advantage because it means a relative decrease in the value of apartment buildings and, therefore, a lessening of incentive to construct such buildings. Or, to compensate, it would be necessary for the building owner to increase the rent.

Let me read a short extract from a letter dealing with this subject which was written in November by the chief economist of the Canadian Construction Association:

> To understand ownership and renting, one has to view the home owner as a business person very much like the owner of rental property. The only difference is that the home owner engages in a 'not at arm's length' transaction, meaning that he sells housing services to himself. High rates of ownership relative to renting indicates that the return from an investment in home ownership is more than the return to the owner of rental property. The deductibility of mortgage interest for the home owner simply enhances an already better than average return he realizes. The ultimate net effect has to be again in asset value, which is an obscure way of saying that the prices of housing units for ownership will rise relative to the price of rental properties. The home owner realizes a capital gain but at the expense of the owner of rental property. This is discrimination, pure and simple, against the owner of rental property. Furthermore, in terms of altering the ownership—rental rates, nothing is accomplished.
> The basic issue is the use of the tax system to allocate resources in a way different than what would result from the market system. There is not only no need to allocate more resources to housing, but even if there was, the vehicle chosen will not accomplish that objective. On this basis, the policy is inefficient.

I reiterate that that letter is from the chief economist of the Canadian Construction Association. In another letter from this same association but written by the director of public affairs to another individual can be found these words:

—the government is about to let a measure expire that could have helped a rental situation. Many contractors have expressed concern over the expiration of the capital cost allowance on multiple-unit residential buildings.

This, I fear, is likely what the government will introduce tonight. The letter goes on:

In the budget speech of November 18, 1974, the Minister of Finance announced that the owner of a new multiple unit residential building . . . would be permitted to deduct capital cost allowance against any source of income at any time.

The allowance terminates on December 31, 1979. Further on in the letter we come to the words:

If the capital cost allowance is not extended, a further bias against the construction of rental units will be introduced into the system. The Government's mortgage interest deduction scheme will, in the opinion of the Canadian Construction Association, cause a one-time drop in rental construction. The combination of these two factors—elimination of capital cost allowance on MURBs and mortgage interest deductibility—could have a serious negative impact on rental construction.

To try to head off this eventuality, I proposed a motion in this House on November 20, but it was negatived by the Tories. We will know from tonight's budget how serious the Minister of Finance is about assistance to the housing industry. When speaking in this House on November 26, I was not accorded the usual courtesy of being allowed to finish my remarks. I wanted to quote from an editorial in the Canadian Builder which reads:

The mortgage interest deductibility scheme, which raised such high expectations during the election campaign, has become as explosive as other hastily improvised 'promises' of that time such as the embassy move to Jerusalem and the privatization of Petro-Canada. The reasons are the same: mortgage interest deductibility was a badly conceived idea, proposed for the wrong reasons, and introduced at the worst possible time.

Mortgage interest deductibility has been condemned by virtually every serious study. Benefits are limited and temporary, but the costs are massive and perpetual. It is a cumbersome, discriminatory and counterproductive allocation of capital resources. It will distort the tax structure, rental sector and the money markets. And it will increase house costs, interest rates, property taxes, inflation, individual debt and federal deficits.

● (1550)

The reason for this massive subsidy is unadulterated political patronage—the purchase of a few votes in the last election, and a stubborn insistence on paying the 'debt' with public funds.

To keep this one promise, Mr. Speaker, the government has been forced to renege on three much more important promises. The article in the Canadian Builder goes on to say:

The federal government must implement its crucial economic promises and set aside election bribery.

Another construction organization, the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, reports in a June newsletter, when speaking of 1979 housing construction starts, that a major drop in dwelling units will occur in multiple dwellings with single detached types slightly ahead of 1978 but not sufficiently to make up the difference. Then the newsletter says that 1980 looks like a better year.

Mr. McDermid: A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I find it very interesting to listen to the hon. member quoting from all those magazines. However, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry must be getting a little uneasy, as none of his colleagues is discussing the amendment he has proposed to the bill. The opposition has complained that the committee will not listen to their amendments, and now the amendments are before us they do not discuss them. I think you should order the hon. member to discuss the amendment to clause 1.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I have been following the remarks of the hon. member for Vaudreuil. While he has strayed very slightly, he has returned to the subject. The hon. member for Vaudreuil.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Chairman, quite obviously members of the government do not like to hear the few words of wisdom we offer in our effort to convince them that they should approve their own suggestion that there be a sunset clause in such bills.

I was quoting another construction organization, the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, which reports in a June newsletter, when speaking of 1979 housing construction starts, that a major drop in dwelling units will occur in multiple dwellings. The newsletter also says that 1980 looks like a better year.

The key point is that it is the multiple dwellings that need help. The government is going to take away whatever assistance presently exists and is pouring billions of dollars into the sector that least needs assistance.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer again to a letter written in October by the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. He writes as follows:

In the view of the lending institutions, an NHA insured mortgage backed by the guarantee of the government, represents a lower risk than a privately-insured mortgage.

Let us not, then, hear any further word about turning over the highly lucrative mortgage insurance business to the private sector.

The minister also writes—and this comment is worthy of repetition—that home ownership is a desirable goal for Canadians, and few will dispute that statement. But then he adds:

A sunset clause in the program could only be justified if home ownership were to cease to be a social goal at some future time.

If we applied that reasoning to every program, then surely it would be rare indeed that a sunset clause would be included in any bill. The minister says, and I quote again as follows:

I would not be in favour of including a sunset clause in the program at the outset.

I emphasize those last three words "at the outset". That very phrase acknowledges the principle of the sunset clause, and at what other time should it be included than at the outset? It is when a bill is introduced that we want to be assured that it includes a time limit, not automatically to end the bill or necessarily to end the bill, but to guarantee that action must be taken to review or extend the life of the law.

This has been a long-standing and loudly-professed plank of the Conservative party. Why are they turning their backs on it now when the first major measure of this government is before the House?

May I make one last suggestion, Mr. Chairman. If the government maintains its refusal to include a sunset clause, will it consider changing the year in clause 1 to read 1980 instead of 1979? There is surely something inherently unjust in backdating a tax measure. If the first effective year is next year, then at least the population of this country will be able to take maximum individual advantage of the Tory bill. It will also take some of the pressure off the government, which is forced to use closure in order to rush through this discriminatory, useless and highly undesirable measure that Canadians simply cannot afford.

A sunset clause is an absolute "must", and I plead with the government to reconsider its position.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Chairman, I do not appreciate the opportunity too much to listen to the remarks of the hon. member behind the curtain, but he may not be here for too long. I do appreciate, however, the opportunity to say a few words at this stage of Bill C-20 and to speak on the amendment put forward by my party. Of course, I speak in support of the sunset clause.

An hour or so ago I was a little taken aback to hear the Prime Minister issue a threat. In the seven or eight years I have been here, I have never seen a prime minister threaten members that if they do not do something right away, he is warning them. I have never been warned before, Mr. Chairman. I think this is something that members should take note of for possible discussion tomorrow. It is a dreadful display of parliamentary practice for the leader of the country to warn members of Parliament—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I cannot really relate this to the amendment before us to clause 1 of the bill. I would ask the hon. member to please deal with the amendment.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Chairman, I thought it was in order to remark on that because it relates to the time of the House that is being occupied with the amendment and, in a way, refers to what we are discussing.

I hope the government will accept this kind of amendment which will give them an opportunity to review in one year what is basically a bad law. This is a bad law that is before the committee, Mr. Chairman. This is a law that was intended by this government to make a $3 billion commitment before we even saw the budget. The opposition has been accused of obstructing Parliament because it thought we should see a budget before we approved a $3 billion tax expenditure.

The cost of this bill is to be paid for by all taxpayers but the money will go to a selected minority of taxpayers. We have taken the position that that is a gross misspending of the taxpayers' money at a time when Canada, like many countries, has severe economic problems with too much unemployment and too much inflation. Before this expenditure is made, we think the Canadian people should have an opportunity to see what kind of a budget the government is proposing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stollery: I ask the member across the way please to be quiet and control himself so that I can finish my remarks.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. That is the position of the Chair and I ask the hon. member for Spadina to carry on speaking about the amendment to the bill.

An hon. Member: Get to the point.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Chairman, thank you. I am trying to stay on the subject matter as closely as possible.

We are proposing an amendment that gives the government—whoever that government may be next year and it may not be this one—an opportunity to review a bad law. We are giving the government of the day next year, and I repeat it may well not be this one—

An hon. Member: You are not too sure.

Mr. Stollery: I just heard a comment from a member who wins every other election. I think we are giving the government an opportunity to re-examine this bad law. It is a sort of hare-brained scheme that has been proposed to try somehow to persuade the people of Canada that the government is living up to its commitment. We want to give the government an opportunity to assess the situation. Hopefully it will take advantage of it. There may be a time—I would not say its members would try to buy their supporters—when memories may have dimmed of wild, extravagant promises, almost all of which are being reneged on, and when they fell they may be able to manage the country and get rid of this very bad law. That is the point of the amendment. It is a good amendment because it gives the government a chance to get rid of a bad law that is being rammed through the House of Commons.

At this stage of the operation, I do not want to review the comments that I made about this bad law approximately two weeks ago. It is bad because it commits a large amount of money to a minority of Canadian taxpayers. It is a bad law because people who have paid for their own homes, for example, older people who often sell their homes because the upkeep is so expensive, and move into apartments, are being fined or penalized. They will have to pay their taxes to a minority of Canadian taxpayers who are living in homes on which there are mortgages.

It is a total disgrace to propose this kind of thing when we have the American experience in evidence only a few miles from Ottawa across the St. Lawrence. Places in New York state have enormously high property taxes partly because of the provision of claiming deduction of taxes from federal income tax. We all know, including members on the other side, about this situation. I cannot imagine how members of Parliament from the Conservative party could go to Washington, as I believe they did in the spring, and be told by everyone that this is the worst kind of law and yet still present it. Once something like this is put in the tax system, it cannot be taken out. To be told that fact by people in Washington who have interested themselves in this type of a tax law and then to return to Canada and present a bill such as Bill C-20 here in the House of Commons, I cannot understand.

There must be members in the Conservative caucus who speak independent'y. I cannot believe that in the group we see across the way there is not an independently-minded person. I cannot believe in that entire grey and rather rapidly aging group of monotonous blue suits—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stollery: I cannot imagine that they would not like to have an opportunity to get out of a bad law. Since we are talking about limiting the term of this law for a year, I believe it will become the subject of renewal by an order in council. I think members opposite would welcome this opportunity to get out of a $3 billion commitment and perhaps a year from now they may well be thanking us for the amendment. If they happen to be the government, and I suspect they will not be, they will be happy to get out of a $3 billion bad law.

I notice that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance has one or two officials with him. This law is so simple, I doubt that a lot of questions will be directed at those officials. However, it is an enormous commitment. It is a law that I am sure Conservative members will want to review in one year. I am sure they will want to get out of this expensive commitment even if the social significance escapes them—and it probably will.

Under this bill, everyone is paying taxes so that a minority of Canadian taxpayers will get the money. Apparently that point does not bother hon. members opposite at all. Surely after one year, members opposite, if they are still here, will want an opportunity to take a second look at a $3 billion commitment. I can see the enthusiasm on their faces because of their interest in being able to get out of this commitment a year from now. I know they are interested in not passing bad laws. They have painted themselves into a corner. They have come up with a bad law. And here we are, giving them an opportunity to get out of that situation. I hope they will take the course of courage and accept this amendment.

Mr. Richardson (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with sunset law amendments. The hon. member for Mississauga South last night mentioned the fact that we have a sunset law every year in the budget. The hon. member who just spoke told us we ought to have a sunset law amendment because of the cost of this program. I shall deal with that aspect and with the deficit which opposition critics have mentioned as likely to arise. I say there will be no such deficit. It is true the government is faced with an $11 billion annual deficit and with the problem of balancing the budget. The hon. member says we should not be passing this bill because eventually it will cost the federal government billions of dollars—he said $3 billion but we believe it will be $2 billion. We maintain that this selective tax cut will eventually increase government revenue.

This is the way we believe it will work. Last year, 16 per cent of those engaged in the construction industry in Canada were unemployed. Last year 70,000 housing units were unsold and this year there were 60,000 fewer housing starts. It has been estimated that this plan would help an additional 600,000 Canadians to own their own homes. It has also been estimated that if we can get those 70,000 unsold units off the market and increase housing starts this year by 60,000, an additional 105,000 man-year jobs would be created; in other words, a year's work for an additional 105,000 Canadians.

At the moment, the government is subsidizing the unemployment insurance program to the extent of some $2 billion a year. If we can take people off unemployment insurance and put them to work we will save money on the unemployment insurance program. Increasing the work force by 105,000 automatically broadens the tax base. Government revenue is thereby increased because there is an increased number of taxpayers even though they are taxed at the same rate. What we lose at the beginning we more that make up for in the end. That is why I say we shall not be increasing the federal deficit.

It should also be remembered that 100 per cent of the labour used in house building in this country is Canadian. Some 95 per cent of all materials going into houses here is Canadian. What better way could there be to help the economy than by using 100 per cent Canadian labour and 95 per cent Canadian materials to build houses for Canadians in Canada, while at the same time helping the construction industry, 16 per cent of whose work force was unemployed last year?

An hon. Member: What about the amendment?

Mr. Richardson (Humboldt-Lake Centre): I am dealing with the amendment—the sunset law. We do not need a sunset law to reduce public expenditure.

An hon. Member: Sunshine for everybody.

Mr. Richardson (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Right. We want to help the construction industry and this plan will do so. That is why we do not need this amendment.

My third point is this: There are tax cuts and there are selective tax cuts. This is a selective tax cut because it is designed to encourage people to invest in their own future. We do not want a sunset law for that. It encourages the private sector to invest in itself so as to get the economy of the country moving. Instead of using taxpayers' money to finance non-productive make-work programs, private investment money will be used to increase employment and build up this country. We want to reduce the use of public money and increase the use of private investment capital.

Let us suppose for a moment that this selective tax cut had been an ordinary tax cut. Let us suppose, for example, that we had removed the 5 per cent sales tax we have in Saskatchewan—it is 7 per cent in Ontario. An individual is not likely to go out and buy a dozen shirts simply because he gets a reduction of 5 per cent in the price. But it is not at all unlikely that an individual might decide to buy a car because he can get 5 per cent off the price. And where are our cars produced? They are produced outside Canada for the most part. Perhaps half the cars sold in Canada are foreign cars. In other words, if we remove the sales tax the chances are we would be stimulating the economy of a foreign country just as much as our own and the beneficial effect of such a tax deduction would be lost. With a selective tax cut such as our mortgage interest and municipal tax deductibility plan, the main effect will be to stimulate the Canadian economy, and that is one of our prime objectives.

We already have pension plans for the aged, baby bonuses for the young and unemployment insurance for the unemployed. Renters are charged lower rents because landlords are able to deduct interest on capital investment as a straight tax deduction. DREE grants are provided for industry. The fact is, we already have plans for practically every other sector of the economy. This program is designed to give the hardworking, average Canadian taxpayer a break while at the same time stimulating the economy by turning it around and getting the country working again. We do not need a sunset law on a policy of that kind. We plan to give the taxpayer a break.

Mr. Rae: Whenever I listen to a speech by the hon. member for Spadina I realize why he fought so hard against the introduction of a turkey marketing board. It is because if we did have such an institution he and many of his colleagues in the Liberal party would be in danger for their lives.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: Whenever I listen to a speech by one of these born again Liberals, I cannot help asking myself where they were over the past 16 years. Where have they been? The hon. member for Spadina spoke as if the Liberal party was ever the least bit concerned with the concept of a tax expenditure. In 1976 my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa, questioned the then prime minister, who is now soon to be once again the one and only member for Mount Royal. In 1976 he asked the prime minister, as he then was, why he did not bring in a tax expenditure budget so that we could have a look at the expenditure side of the budget and could see what kind of benefit he was giving to the men and women of this country, what kind of benefit he was giving to corporations, what he was doing about the oil depletion allowance, how much the oil depletion allowance was going to cost us, how much the investment allowance was going to cost us, how much the fast write-off of capital cost allowance was going to cost us, how much the research and development benefits were going to cost us and how much were the undeferred taxes were going to cost us.

● (1620)

What was the answer of the prime minister, as he then was, the leader of the Liberal party? The answer he gave was that that is something which takes place in the United States and that he was sure that people up here would not be interested in knowing how much all that was costing us.

I think it is worthwhile pointing out that if we had these new-found warriors over here to my right and my far right, the members of the Liberal party, still in charge, we would not know what we know today as a result of the publication last week of the tax expenditure figures which the Minister of Finance gave us last week. I will have ample opportunity to disagree with the Minister of Finance tonight and tomorrow, but I want to say that this is something that we in our party have called for for ten years. My predecessor, formerly the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, Mr. Saltsman, was in favour of this idea. I want to make it clear that we were calling for it right through the summer, and I am delighted that the Minister of Finance has seen fit to bring forward tax expenditure figures which allow us to see, once and for all, the costs not only of personal welfare and the tax credit system but also the cost of corporate welfare to each and every Canadian taxpayer.

I want to say to the House that we will not be supporting this amendment for a very simple reason. The simple reason is not that we do not support the concept of a tax expenditure and not that we do not support the concept of a sunset law on tax expenditures.

However, as is typical of the left wing of the Liberal party, the final word as to whether this measure will go ahead in future years is not left to the House of Commons. No, as we might expect from the left wing of the Liberal party, the final word on whether we will have a tax expenditure worth some $3 billion in 1980 does not rest with the House of Commons. The final word rests with that indoor relief department of the Liberal party, right, centre and left, the Senate.

I think it is worth noting that the first amendment which the left wing member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry brings forward is in defence of the right of the Senate to hold control over supply, a doctrine which is absurd in constitutional notions and which has no relationship to the democratic concerns of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: We in Canada are walking on one leg as far as our Parliament is concerned. We have one body which truly represents the Canadian people, and we have another body which remains the last unreformed, unreconstituted, unrepresentative and undemocratic representation of the Canadian federation. It was designed by the fathers of confederation to represent the federal principle in our government, but there is sad proof that that body has come to represent the final resting home of Liberal and Conservative politicians, proof indeed that there is life after death but proof of nothing else as far as a democratic principle is concerned.

I think it is extremely important that we make it perfectly clear as to why we in this party are not going to be supporting this amendment. The simple reason is that although we are in favour of a sunset provision on this matter and although we are not in favour of the mortgage tax credit as it is presently designed—nor are we in favour of a filibuster and the kind of malarkey we have been hearing from the Liberal party all afternoon which has had nothing to do with the amendment put forward—we are concerned about the fact that the last word in this matter would be left not to a resolution of this House but to a resolution in the Senate, which is completely unacceptable, I suggest, to any member of the House of Commons who is concerned about control of supply. For that reason and for that reason alone we shall be voting against the amendment.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in hearing the speech—or the semblance of a speech—by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood. While he may be concerned about turkey marketing boards, he should remind himself that we do have on the books an egg marketing board, and he may want to be concerned about that.

Mr. Hogan: You are laying one now, Herb.

Mr. Breau: I recognize that at this time in our political history the New Democratic Party is on its way down. It is obvious from its popular vote in Ontario last time that it does not have anywhere to go. Members of the New Democratic Party say they are for good legislation and that the House of Commons should have an opportunity to review legislation once in a while. The Tories have decided to ram this bill through the House and not provide for more than one day's debate in Committee of the Whole on such important legislation. After the Tories complained for years that when we were in government we were stifling Parliament and bringing in the guillotine, on the first important legislation they bring forward they do the same thing.

That once again is a sign of Tory hypocrisy, and to see the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood supporting the Tory party in opposing this kind of amendment is really something which is disconcerting to me. Even if the New Democratic Party is going to be wiped off the political map of Canada, I thought that at least its members would go down with their heads high. However, obviously in their old days—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think the hon. member is certainly straying away from the amendment which has been proposed, and I suggest he follow the wording of the amendment, please.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak about the amendment of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, to clause 1, which would give the House of Commons and Parliament an opportunity after the first year of operation of this legislation to review it and provide that the government would have to pass an order in council and have Parliament either approve or reject the application of this legislation for subsequent years. I find it very difficult to understand—and this is what I was saying—that the NDP could support the Conservative party, the government, in opposing such an amendment.

The reason we want this kind of amendment to this bill is that we are very concerned—contrary to what one hon. member of the Conservative party said a while ago—that this bill will not be a bill which will stimulate construction. This is not an effective stimulative instrument at all. If the Tories want to stimulate housing construction, stimulate the economy or stimulate any kind of construction, the most effective way to do that is through a reduction either in sales tax or an across-the-board tax cut. That is the way effectively to stimulate the economy of Canada in a real way. It is not done through this kind of legislation because the people probably are not going to get this tax credit before next May, June or July. Can the government say right now what the state of the economy is going to be in June or July? This is not an effective way at all. The Minister of Finance should have brought down a budget last June or July, and he could have included in it an effective instrument of economic stimulation, but he did not do that.

Another reason we want this act reviewed under the sunset provision is that we want to make sure that in the second, third or fourth years this kind of push to the construction industry does not do exactly the opposite of what the hon. member of the Conservative party said this afternoon it would do. It might happen that at that time there will be increasing inflation in the economy and therefore, as the Minister of State (Treasury Board) apparently said a couple of days ago or said in the statement which was issued from the office, that is why he was in favour of a sunset provision in such cases. How can a minister of the government, a member who used to speak so independently and so eloquently on any subject when he was on this side of the House, now be tamed so quickly by the Minister of Finance? Apparently he agrees with this kind of provision.

Speaking about ministers, let me point out that one of the reasons we want this matter reviewed by Parliament in subsequent years is that we are very concerned about the injustice and the inequity that this system will bring about in our taxes. Throughout the time I have been active in politics I have thought that the role of government in society was to help those who need help the most. Some of us were encouraged by the fact that members like the hon. member for Egmont made it to the cabinet, even to the inner cabinet. We are happy that members like the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands became Secretary of State for External Affairs or that a member like the hon. member for St. John's East was made a member of the cabinet, or that the member from Newfoundland was made Minister of Finance. However, these people have been completely shut out by the real people who run the Tory party, such as, presumably, the President of the Treasury Board, because how could the member from Newfoundland and the hon. member for Egmont accept such an unjust system?

While the House of Commons has agreed to give second reading to the bill, which is acceptance in principle, and we are in Committee of the Whole under the guillotine—to use the term of the Tories when they were in opposition—the only possible thing we can do is to suggest that the provision at least be reviewed.

Let us look at the effects of this provision. Newfoundland, which has 2.4 per cent of the households of Canada, will receive only 1.2 per cent of the benefits under this bill.

P.E.I., the province of the Secretary of State who wants to be the defender of his province, which has 0.6 per cent of the population, will get only 0.3 per cent of the benefits.

Take the province of the hon. member for Central Nova, who is Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Some of us thought that this man would be able to fight not only for Nova Scotia but for the Atlantic provinces, and we were happy to see that such an important portfolio was given to a member we thought to be sincere. We still think he is sincere but he is being controlled by the President of the Treasury Board and the barons of Bay Street. That province, which has 3.9 per cent of the population, will get only 2.8 per cent of the benefits.

My province of New Brunswick has been ignored in the real cabinet because we have a Minister of State who does not even have a portfolio, for the first time since confederation. My province has 2.9 per cent of the population of Canada—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure that this litany of households in the various provinces of Canada has anything to do with the sunset law amendment which was put forward by the hon. member's colleague.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I am explaining the injustices of this bill. The hon. member does not like to be confused by facts, and I can very well understand that, but I am trying to put some facts on the record to show that this bill is an unjust piece of legislation, that it is inequitable, and therefore I want it reviewed by Parliament next year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: The hon. member does not wish me to prove to the House and to the Canadian public, that the Tories are a party which does not want to use the resources of the government to help those who need help, they want to use the resources of government to help those who do not need help. I suppose that what they want to do is to help those who have complained for years that they could not buy homes. Now they will give them a tax credit so that they can go to Florida and buy a condominium there.

I am trying to show that in my province where we have 3.1 per cent of the households in Canada we will only get 1.7 per cent of the benefits.

Quebec, with 21.6 per cent of the households, will receive 18.7 per cent of the benefits.

Ontario, that poor province—I know that this government is making Ontario poor because obviously the Prime Minister and the premier of Alberta have decided that Ontario was no longer important to confederation and had nothing to say—look at how Ontario is being shafted. That province has 37.8 per cent of the households, but they will get 45.4 per cent of the benefits. Could this be the trade-off between being shafted by higher oil prices and getting benefits under this bill? The taxation structure and the property tax base in Canada are not uniform throughout the country; they are not the same everywhere. In my province, for example, school taxes are not collected on the basis of property value but on the basis of a central assessment by the provincial government.

For that reason, I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to put the question on this amendment now because we would very much like to have it approved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

An hon. Member: Obstructing the House.

Mr. Breau: Are you for or against the amendment?

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I rise to discuss the amendment, and it does need some discussion because of all the things that have been said in its alleged support that are highly questionable. The principles of this bill have been put before the Canadian people and have been the subject of intense discussion for more than a year. They are, moreover, closely related to a practice which has been in effect in the United States for 50 years. We are not dealing with something that is new and unknown; we are dealing with something that is known.

During the period in which the principles of this bill have been debated, not just in the House but in the country, we have heard the charge made by people who opposed it that the trouble with it is that once you put it in, you cannot get it out. To me, that is one of its greatest assets. If you analyse that statement, what is being said is that the will of the people will keep this law in place once it is in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: If you want it passed, let us vote on it.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): The argument is that the will of the people should not be allowed to be effective.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Breau: We speak for the people, so let us vote on it.

An hon. Member: Obstructing the House.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Mr. Chairman, I have sat politely while the supporters of the amendment made their case. I would now like to make mine.

One of the strong points to be said about this proposal is that it meets the will of a large number of people in this country. I am amazed at the kinds of things which have been said which obviously cannot be believed as some of them are so Alice in Wonderlandish. Surely they cannot be believed about proposals of this kind.

● (1640)

We hear that this bill represents a commitment of expenditure. What this bill really does is that it proposes to leave in the hands of the taxpayers of this country some of their income.

An hon. Member: Some of it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It benefits only Ontario.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): It is a form of arrogance which I find hard to accept that taxpayers are lesser judges of the interests of this country and themselves than we in this House.

An hon. Member: Bring back Crosbie.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): If this were a very limited group that was affected, then there would be some substance to that argument. But I ask the committee to consider that this is a long-term commitment. It affects not only the people who have mortgages today but those people who will have mortgages. It affects the renters who will buy houses.

An hon. Member: We will change it in six months.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Today in this country more than 50 per cent of householders are living in owned accommodations. Not all of them have mortgages, not all of them are in taxable brackets. This is not a proposal for this year and next year; it is proposal which will go on for 50 years. Therefore it is important to future home owners and future mortgage holders, as well as present ones.

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): As a result of this bill and its effects over time, I believe in due course that at least 60 per cent of the people in this country, in a normal situation, will benefit from this kind of tax relief. If one includes the people who at one time or another in their lives are householders and own their homes, it will be more than 60 per cent. This is not a class bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Say that with a straight face.

Mr. Breau: Only the people of Ontario and British Columbia will benefit.

[Mr. Breau.]

Mr. Ritchie (York East): In my riding there are a great many senior citizens whose chief asset is their home.

An hon. Member: We want John Crosbie.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I am referring to senior citizens who are in relatively straitened circumstances but still pay some income tax. These people are looking forward to this arrangement under which they as householders will receive more from that single asset that they possess.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): There are some things which should be told about this bill.

An hon. Member: The NDP will save your lives.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gloucester, that the question be put forthwith.

An hon. Member: You cannot do that on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Order. It is not the prerogative of members of the committee to move such a motion. Motions can be moved only when the Speaker is in the chair.

An hon. Member: Then call in Mr. Speaker.

The Chairman: Order. The only proposal which can be moved is that the committee rise and report progress.

An hon. Member: It was not a point of order in any event.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): I should like to report to the committee some of the experiences I have had with some of my constituents who are renters and hope to be home owners. They see this law as a definite advantage to them because it will enable them to become home owners sooner. Can Mr. Chairman imagine the effect of putting a one-year life on such a proposal? How attractive would it be to potential home purchasers to have the benefit of this law for just one year, and just the first stage of it?

Mr. Breau: You forced us into it. The House approved it on second reading.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): Effectively this amendment will kill all the attractions this bill has for potential home owners. This amendment is not in the interests of home owners.

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Ritchie (York East): The law which is proposed is in the interests ultimately of at least two-thirds of the population of this country, and probably more. This amendment would defeat the whole proposal which is now before the committee in terms of any reality. Therefore I urge that this amendment be defeated.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. Minister of State (Treasury Board) on a point of order.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, I am not rising on a point of order. I am rising to speak briefly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I am delighted to hear the response by hon. members opposite. It was not my intention to take part in the proceedings of the committee this afternoon until the hon. member for Gloucester mentioned my name in the context of sunset legislation. I think probably it is appropriate to put a few comments on the record with respect to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

This government is very much committed to the concept of sunset legislation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Indeed, we will be putting before Parliament a bill which will give it the opportunity to have reviews of programs taking place on a regular basis, including programs similar to this one, to determine whether or not programs that have been put into place by Parliament are serving the purposes for which they were designed. I will be looking forward, at the time I table that bill, to having the support of the hon. member for Gloucester and his colleagues on the other side. We believe it will be a fundamental parliamentary reform which will allow Parliament to do the job for which it was designed.

The question remains, with regard to this particular bill before the committee, as to whether it is necessary to incorporate a special sunset clause which will have a potential lapsing provision in it that will remove from Canadian home owners the tremendous benefit that allows them to finance their homes, and in many instances that allows senior citizens to hang on to their homes, when their ability to hang on to them is being challenged by ever-rising property taxes and the cost of housing in Canada.

The government believes very firmly that the bill before the committee today is in the substantial interest of the vast majority of Canadians, both Canadians who own their homes and those who want to continue to own them, those Canadians who find themselves pressed by rising interest rates, rising housing costs and rising property taxes at the municipal level. Also we recognize the fact that for millions of young Canadians this bill represents the best opportunity which they have.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. It is more than just passing strange that a government which introduced Standing Order 75C for closure on this bill now has a minister of the government talking out the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harquail: I think that is a terrible, disgraceful performance. We have a motion; we want to vote on it.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

An hon. Member: The minister can make his speech another day.

Mr. Beatty: Is it not a curious anomaly that this opposition, which just a few minutes ago argued there was not enough debate about the provisions in this bill, is now attempting to gag Parliament and to prevent members of Parliament on this side of the House from speaking to the bill?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: It is curious behaviour for an opposition which complains about the rights of Parliament.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Beatty: It is curious behaviour for an opposition, which complained that there has not been enough justification for the principles in this bill, not to allow members of the government to make a comment or two. How particularly curious it is, Mr. Chairman, that when I sat here this afternoon I noticed six, seven or eight members of the opposition speak while I am the second or third member from the government side. What a curious anomaly, Mr. Chairman, that freedom of speech should be reserved only for members of the Liberal party.

● (1650)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: I want to come back to this amendment because I think it is essential that the House give consideration to the proposal made by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. The assurance I can give to the House today is that if Parliament acts speedily on the bill which I will be introducing shortly to provide for sunset legislation, Parliament will once again have the power and the responsibility to keep an eye on the public purse and to ensure that programs which are put in place continue to discharge the responsibilities for which they were designed in the first place. I hope that the sort of interest in having speedy consideration which members of the opposition have shown today will continue at that time.

Mr. Harquail: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, how can this minister, similar to that minister from Toronto, the former tiny, perfect mayor who is in the outer cabinet, promise this House or this country anything? He is not in the inner cabinet, so how can he promise the House anything?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful that the proceedings of the House of Commons are now carried coast to coast on television, because I think it is instructive that Canadians should have the opportunity to watch their parliamentarians in action and to make a judgment as to the behaviour of members of the government and members of the opposition, and then ask themselves whether the opposition is being responsible in this instance. What we have seen in the course of the last several days has been a concerted attempt by the opposition to deprive millions of Canadians of a badly needed tax break and to deprive millions of young Canadians of the only opportunity they may have to own homes, particularly if they lose this tax break and this opportunity to make housing in Canada affordable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Day after day after day in this House we have seen every single parliamentary manoeuvre possible undertaken by this opposition. If they could not defeat the bill then they would drag it out and attempt to obstruct, to do everything possible to deny Canadians of that opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, is it not curious that as soon as members of the government begin to defend this bill which will give a tax break to Canadians, suddenly the opposition do not want to hear us? Suddenly they want silence in this House.

An hon. Member: We do not want silence, we want the question.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, clearly the job of the opposition is first of all to convince their own members of their case. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry was incapable of convincing three of his own members—

Mr. Lalonde: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. minister knows it is not the opposition that has closed the debate on this subject, but this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I am delighted, Mr. Chairman, that the former minister recognizes that members of this House should have the opportunity to debate the proposition that has been put forward by his colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. I intend to avail myself of that opportunity despite the shouts from the other side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: What the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry has conspicuously failed to do is convince three of his own colleagues that the case he was putting to deprive Canadians of this tax break could be justified. Three of them stood up and voted against him. Yet what we find today is speech after speech after speech by members of the official opposition who claim that somehow Canadians can be convinced of something that hon. members over there could not convince their own colleagues of. They are suggesting that somehow Canadians should be deprived of this right and opportunity to spend their tax dollars as they see fit.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am ready to recognize the hon. member on a point of order, but I hope it is a point of order this time and not just an argument.

Mr. Harquail: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it certainly is a point of order, and it has to do with the delaying tactics of the government in this place. The minister used the figure three; he has delayed the vote three times this afternoon in less than ten minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brisco: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Chairman, I would ask if this is Parliament or is it a zoo? Because those are the animals over there, and I am damned well ashamed of them. If they do not know how to behave in Parliament, then I suggest they go back to their constituents and ask them what they think about their performance in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Look at the Gallup poll.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Go back to the zoo.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: Order, please. Hon. members will agree with me that such exchanges are not improving the standard of our deliberations. I think these false points of order should be limited as much as possible. I would like to hear what the minister is trying to say.

Mr. Beatty: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for your courtesy. My comments will, indeed, be brief.

[Translation]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria on a question of privilege.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, our rules state that the language used in the House of Commons must remain within certain limits. The hon. member who has just raised a point of order called members of the opposition animals. I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to request that the hon. member withdraw his comments.

The Chairman: I must admit that the comments of the hon. member for Kootenay West were rather strong and spicy, but I do not believe they were addressed to any one member in particular. If we consider the exchanges, the provocations and the heat of the debate, I do not think it can be said that the hon. member for Kootenay West wanted to attack any one member in particular. It is not easy to control the words used during the debates of the House when hon. members do not want to control themselves. However, even though the comment of the hon.—

[English]

Although I feel that the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West were not of the best standard, I do not think they reflected that much on members.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to question your interpretation of the facts, but since I have had to withdraw certain comments made in the House which were less insulting than those of the hon. member opposite, I consider that, since members of the official opposition have been called animals, this does not concern only us but also all our constituents, and I do not believe that the 75,000 residents of Verchères would accept or appreciate hearing their representative being called an animal in the House.

The Chairman: For my part, I do not intend to change my ruling. The only possibility for the hon. member would be to appeal my decision or at least to wait until tomorrow and read Hansard. At that time, if we see that there has been a violation of our privileges, and if the hon. member feels personally concerned, he can rise on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, I regret that the interventions of hon. members opposite have taken so much time. Suffice it to say that this government is prepared at any time to justify this proposal, whether here or on the hustings. I would ask that the question be now put.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

• (1700)

Amendment (Mr. Axworthy) negatived: Yeas, 46; nays, 86.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

It being five o'clock p.m., it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill at the next sitting of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is the general understanding, with reference to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, that we will revert to motions at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that we revert to motions for the purpose of allowing the Secretary of State to introduce his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF REPORTS OF OFFICIAL PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONS

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications) moved:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be empowered to receive and examine reports from official Canadian Parliamentary delegations which have met with delegations from foreign Parliaments or attended inter-parliamentary meetings, and to report from time to time thereon.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Bob Jarvis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to stand all items before Bill C-212.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that we stand items 1, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 which appear before Bill C-212 in the name of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery)?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, you were to look into the possibility that we would have a recording as to whether or not the bills have been printed. Are we at the stage where it could be recorded whether or not the bills preceding Bill C-212 could be printed?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not have the list with me at this time but I checked it today. From memory, I know that item No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) is not ready. I know that item No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) and item No. 5 in the name of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) are not ready. The hon. member for Davenport is seeking the consent of the House to have one of his other bills called in place of item No. 5.

Item No. 7 in the name of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is not ready. I know that items 8, 9, 18, 19 and 20 are ready, but the hon. members concerned are not ready to proceed today. Item 11 is not printed. I am satisfied that the only member ready to proceed with his bill at this time is the hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, this matter was brought up in the House weeks ago, and we still do not have an answer as to why it has taken so long for these bills to be printed. Could you, sir, inform the House of the reason?

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that while the titles of many of the bills are ready the, shall we say, guts of the bills in many cases have not been drafted. In other words, some members have submitted the titles to their bills and that is all. The opposition whip is quite right that this matter was brought up in the House two weeks ago. The Speaker in the chair at the time said that he would look into the matter and report back to the House. As yet, we have not had that report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can give the House part of the answer. I know that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich has a very complicated bill. The hon. member has received from the legal branch either one draft or two drafts of his bill, and they did not quite satisfy him. I have been in touch with the parliamentary branch, which is doing its utmost to satisfy the requests of hon. members. For example, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce wishes to introduce a bill that was a government bill, but to adapt it to the present circumstances means a great deal of research. It is not only a question of drafting the bill but of considering all other acts that it might affect, and this would take quite a bit of time.

● (1710)

The bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Davenport is not ready and no instructions have been given to the legal branch. The hon. member for Davenport submits, and I think he has a good case, that he had given notice that his preference was not for that bill but for another, Bill C-299, I believe. By the time the notice was processed, the list of bills was printed. He hopes that when the bill is ready for consideration he can get unanimous consent to substitute it for another, so now he is waiting for Bill C-299 to be printed.

I have spoken to all hon. members concerned. I am satisfied that there was a great deal of research to be done and that the legal branch could not be blamed for the first 20 bills on the list.

The hon. member for Skeena has put down a bill concerning the boundary between Canada and the United States. Maritime boundaries have great implications and hon. members who know the subject will realize that. Bill C-208 is ready but I do not know why the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is not ready to proceed. Bill C-209 in the name of the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) and Bill C-210 in the name of the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Richardson) are ready, but I do not know why those hon. members are not ready to proceed. Bill C-211 in the name of the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is not ready because the hon. member is waiting for a draft of the bill which he says is very complicated.

This brings us to Bill C-212. I guess the House gave consent so I shall put the question on the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery).

PETRO-CANADA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING WIDER PARTICIPATION OF PARLIAMENT IN ROLE OF CORPORATION

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina) moved that Bill C-212, respecting Petro-Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that because of the information that was required, some of the time available to discuss Bill C-212 has elapsed. This is a very simple bill which calls for an amendment to the Petro-Canada Act. It would do something which I am sure hon. members will agree is necessary. There has been great controversy about Petro-Canada and the government has said that it would in some way abolish it. A lot of people in the country think that would be unwise and that it would be increasingly unwise as energy crises increase. Just today we learned from the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) that Petro-Canada has been actively involved in the successful well that has been drilled off the coast of Labrador.

This bill provides that before the government alters the role of Petro-Canada, the approval of a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons would be required. The committee would travel across the country and seek the opinion of Canadians. This would be a way for Canadians to participate in this very important decision that the government seems to have made, although now we are not sure just what the decision is.

I am sure hon. members opposite would be interested in this kind of resolution of the impasse they find themselves facing.

They know that decisions on petroleum and the energy question change almost weekly. They will appreciate that a way out of the dilemma would be for a parliamentary committee to hold hearings across the country, as was done on the immigration question and the constitutional question in 1970-71. I think it is most important that Canadians have direct access to their members of Parliament in any discussion on the future of Petro-Canada, and this would be a simple way of achieving that end.

I will not take up any more time of the House, Mr. Speaker, and I hope hon. members will support second reading of this bill.

I notice that hon. members opposite treat anything that is objective or that tries to be constructive with ridicule. This perfectly innocent bill, which is a way out of an impasse, is treated with ridicule. When they give the matter a little thought, however, they may see that it follows parliamentary tradition and that it would be a good way to get direct input from the average Canadian who cannot afford to come to Ottawa to try to influence a decision on Petro-Canada.

Quite a bit of time was taken up with the point of order, so in the spirit of generosity in this Christmas season I hope hon. members opposite will quickly see the wisdom of sending the bill to committee.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I hope no one will ask me what this bill means as I am still not sure. I get the impression from what the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) has said that if the Conservative party moves to change PetroCan, we should have some kind of a travelling committee, a road show or travelling circus, go around the country.

• (1720)

Mr. Stollery: I am right here.

Mr. Nystrom: Now my adviser is next to me, perhaps I can be straightened around. I want to say that I am not sure of the usefulness of the bill at this stage.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: The position I take, and I believe it is unanimous among my two colleagues and myself, is that Petro-Canada should not be changed. Any invitation to consider a road show where people can have input about the future of Petro-Canada is weakening the position that we are taking. Therefore, we should not be setting up a travelling committee to study the different ways that PetroCan could be changed.

I think the hon. member for Spadina is admitting defeat before he has even stepped into the ring. That is something Muhammed Ali would not do when he stepped into a ring, but the hon. member for Spadina has done just that. I am not willing to be that defeatist. I have seen my friends in the Conservative party across the way change their minds on many things these last few months.

An hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Nystrom: Someone suggests that I name one. The move of the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem is one.

An hon. Member: Another one.

Mr. Nystrom: We were promised a massive tax cut. I understand from everyone, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), that there will not be a massive tax cut tonight. That is the second one.

An hon. Member: How about a third one?

Mr. Nystrom: In the election campaign, at least according to the leaflets of the Conservative party that I have here, we were promised that the statutory Crow rate would remain as a statutory rate. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is now saying—

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not understand how what the hon. member is saying relates to this legislation. I understood we were dealing with a bill that suggested a committee be struck by Parliament to travel across Canada to gain input from Canadian citizens as to what we should do with Petro-Canada. I cannot see how this relates to what the hon. member opposite is saying in regard to this specific legislation.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely right. I was totally out of order. I got into trouble because my Conservative friends enticed me.

The bill before the House is a little premature. In my opinion, there is no need to set up a travelling road show or a travelling circus until we see what the government has in mind for the future of Petro-Canada. For all I know pressure from the able backbenchers on the government side will once again force it to change its mind and keep Petro-Canada as it is. I am fully confident that that will happen. I know how persuasive these members are. I know how concerned the Social Credit party is and the influence it has on the Prime Minister of this country. The real power sits on your extreme right, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, I think the hon. member for Spadina is being a defeatist. He is being premature and admitting defeat before we get on with the show.

I want to take about five minutes to tell the House why we should keep Petro-Canada. I will do this instead of talking about the merits of having a committee receive input from the public. There are approximately five important reasons why Petro-Canada should be saved.

First, PetroCan gives us a window on the oil industry. That is something I think is most important. As the House knows, the oil industry is almost totally controlled by five large companies. One of the problems we have had in the past is that we do not know as a Parliament a lot of what is happening in the oil industry today. We do not know about the impact of certain tax cuts or giveaways. We do know whether or not the oil industry needs certain grants. The only way of finding out is to be involved in the business ourselves.

Some Conservative members across the way are shaking their heads negatively. However, I am convinced from travelling across this country that the majority of people agree with us. One can quote Gallup poll after Gallup poll but the majority of the people want to keep Petro-Canada. They want to keep a window on the oil industry. Unfortunately at this stage, it is only a small window. I do not know why members of the Conservative party should be so concerned about having a company that is publicly owned. It will be able to give us all sorts of valuable information on that industry.

I would remind hon. members that in 1973 the oil industry told us, the energy minister and the prime minister of the Liberal party that we had an ample supply of oil in this country. We were exporting all kinds of oil to the United States. We were told that we had dozens and dozens of years of supply of oil in this country and that we had no problem whatsoever. Then all of a sudden, we ended up with a shortage of oil. I am saying to my friends across the way that surely we need that window on the oil industry so that we know what is happening.

If hon. members want a more recent example, let them look at the information we have received about natural gas from the oil and gas industry. First of all, we were told that we would not have enough, that there would be a shortage. Now there is so much that we have to export gas to the United States. I say that if we had a company like Petro-Canada, not only the size of Petro-Canada but much bigger and more involved in the industry, then we would have that policeman in the industry that we so vitally need.

Second, I believe we need Petro-Canada as a tool for national policy-making. It would be a policy-making tool to develop the industry and plan its energy needs rationally with a view to the future.

Petro-Canada is now involved in the northern part of Canada and off the coast of the Atlantic provinces. It is starting to do research and development in Canada. That is something that should have been started a long time ago. That is one of the real advantages of having Petro-Canada owned by the Canadian people.

Third, before Petro-Canada came along over 95 per cent of the Canadian oil and gas industry was owned by foreigners. Now with PetroCan we have a small chunk of the Canadian oil and gas industry that is owned domestically by the people of Canada. I believe that is very important.

Fourth, with so much foreign ownership of the oil and gas industry in Canada, the immense profits of that industry went abroad to the investors. That is the normal result. A lot of money for research, development and exploration was going abroad to help develop the resource in the North Sea and elsewhere in this world. At least by having PetroCan we have control over those profits. These profits can stay in this country and be reinvested in Canada.

The fifth reason for keeping PetroCan concerns what has happened in Iran. Along with the crisis in Iran, there was a diversion of oil last year by one of the large multinationals.

With Petro-Canada, we can have state to state deals such as one attempted by Petro-Canada with the government of Venezuela through its public oil company. There were deals arranged with the government of Mexico. We could have state to state deals and commitments. If there was a shortfall of oil, as in the case of Exxon being cut off by Iran and it wanted to divert some oil from Canada to the United States—a situation like that could happen, in fact it did happen just last year—if there was a deal between Petro-Canada and the government of Iran, then that type of arrangement would not happen. Those types of diversions would not occur.

If PetroCan was given a chance it would be only too willing to make those kinds of arrangements with Mexico and Venezuela. I remind the House that almost every country in the world, be it Britain, Germany or Mexico, have large publicly-owned corporations in the oil and gas business. Most countries have these companies because they feel it important that a non-renewable resource be under the control of and developed by the public sector.

I remind the House as well that President Carter and the Senate of the United States is now looking at PetroCan as a possible model for them. Once again, it seems to me that the Prime Minister of this country is the only person out of step with what is happening in the world around us. I suggest that the button that the leader of this party came up with a few weeks ago with the slogan "Keep PetroCan and sell Joe Clark" is a lot more appropriate than the approach that the Conservative party across the way wants to use.

In addition to those five reasons, I believe it is very important that, along with the need for a window on the oil industry, a role in policy making, Canadian ownership, keeping the profits at home and having the power to make state to state deals, we realize in this country the obsolutely immense power of the five multinational oil companies.

• (1730)

[Translation]

I am now referring to the five great multinationals—Imperial Oil, Gulf, Texaco, Shell and BP. Mr. Speaker, in our country over the last four years those five big oil corporations reported $4 billion in profits and during the first half of 1979 they made profits of $530 million, an increase of 32 per cent since last year. For example, Gulf Oil profits were up 1 per cent, but BP increased its net earnings by 44 per cent over last year.

[English]

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we have immense deferred profits. In the case of the oil industry they now amount to some $1.5 billion. I therefore do not see how a member over there can argue that PetroCan is too big, that PetroCan is going to be destructive in terms of the gas and oil industry in this country. I wish the government would, in co-operation with Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, the energy-producing provinces in this country, do something similar with gas and oil to what the government of Saskatchewan has done so successfully with respect to potash.

Somebody over there says "Here we go". The government of Saskatchewan now has public ownership of over 40 per cent of the potash in the province. They are doing very well in expanding that industry, in amassing and keeping for the people of Saskatchewan huge profits, in controlling the industry. The headquarters of the company are in Saskatchewan. The research and development takes place in the province of Saskatchewan.

An hon. Member: What does Canada get?

Mr. Nystrom: Canada, Mr. Speaker, is getting a guarantee, first of all, that the industry will be owned by Canadians, that the profits will be kept here in this country, that the decision-making and policy-making power rests with Canadians. In this case they happen to reside in the province of Saskatchewan but still we are all Canadians. It also gives us control of the potash industry, something, I think, which is very important.

If hon. members across the way are concerned about the loss of the potash market because it is publicly-owned in Saskatchewan, they do not need to be concerned. Sales have gone up. The price of potash has gone up, and expansion in Saskatchewan has been going very well. I think this demonstrates, Mr. Speaker, that the ownership of an industry by the people of this country through the governments of this country can be very efficient and decisive in the future development of any province, or of the country as a whole.

I suggest that PetroCan should become the major oil company in Canada in co-operation with the provinces which are producing gas and oil in a similar way to that being followed by the potash company in Saskatchewan. I know the premier in my province would be in agreement with that type of position. There are already some joint ventures being undertaken between Saskoil, which is publicly owned in Saskatchewan, and PetroCan at the federal level.

I do not know what hon. members across the way are afraid of. Why are they so intent on protecting Imperial Oil? They are afraid of government. They are afraid of their own Prime Minister. At least the Government of Canada is accountable in the House of Commons. At least the Government of Canada can be questioned by committees of this House. Governments can be defeated and new ones elected, if they are not carrying out the wishes of the people. But what can the people do about Imperial Oil or about Shell, Gulf Oil or British Petroleum?

An hon. Member: Tax them!

Mr. Nystrom: Somebody says "Tax them". But how can you effectively tax some of these large multinationals? If you start doing that, perhaps they will decide not to invest in the country to the extent we need. We need a lot of investment to take place in the future, and perhaps if you tax these corporations too heavily they just will not invest. It is a double-edged sword. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, we have not been taxing them. If I had a guarantee out of the government across the way that they would tax the multinationals, then perhaps I would be more willing to listen to some of their ideas on PetroCan.

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misleading the House. I have facts here that show that Shell Oil, in 1978, paid other taxes of $138 million and production royalties of $205 million, for a total of $342 million—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This is not a point of order. It is a difference of opinion. The hon. member will be recognized as the next speaker and will have the opportunity to correct whatever part of the debate he feels is not right.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) made that intervention because I have before me all the tables and statistics of the taxation of oil companies in this country. I have here those figures for the Big Five. I do not think I have the time, now, to read them into the record. I do know, of course, that some of the companies are paying taxes, but the effective taxation rate is very low in the case of many of the large companies.

I refer to Shell Oil, for example, and I find that they have not paid many taxes to the federal government. If hon. members would like me to go over all the statistics I would be very happy to do so, Mr. Speaker.

The point I have been making is that I do not see why the government across the way should be afraid of making sure that a little piece of our gas and oil industry is publicly owned. That is the position with respect to PetroCan right now. The position of our party, of course, is that PetroCan should be expanded, should be involved in all aspects of the gas and oil industry, and should become the major oil company in this country. That is precisely how we feel, and I maintain that the majority of the Canadian people support us in that position. I would be willing to debate with any member of the Conservative party in any part of my province or in my constituency on that topic at any time. It is what the people of our country want and I do not see why the Conservative government is so adamant in turning the gas and oil industry back into private hands.

The government has already done so many flip-flops, as was said earlier today, on Jerusalem, on tax cuts, on grain issues and so on. I am appealing to it to do a major flip-flop on PetroCan and keep the company for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise and discuss the private members' Bill C-212 introduced by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) whose intellect and wit are highly respected by dozens.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. McDermid: Here, Mr. Speaker, is an example of the type of government he would like to see. Government by committee, government by hearings, government by spending the taxpayers' money foolishly. I can imagine that at night he dreams of getting on his white charger and heading across the country with a joint committee, not to discuss the facts, but to foul up the system of government which we enjoy in Canada.

Mr. Foster: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member should really be criticizing my hon. friend from Spadina for referring something to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, especially the PetroCan bill, because the PetroCan bill is the work of that committee and, incidentally, he should realize that his leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), has appointed many, many committees—more than is possible for this House of Commons—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Again, this is a point of debate. The hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, that point is well taken and I am getting to it. Here is what the PetroCan act says:

In the exercise of its powers the corporation shall comply with such policy directions as may from time to time be given in writing by the Governor General in Council.

That is, by the government. Right? What the hon. member has proposed is that a House of Commons standing committee make the policy for Petro-Canada, not the government. Well, read his amendment. It is all there. He proposes a committee which would make policy decisions for the government, the committee being in this case the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. That is completely unrealistic. Why do we have a government? Why do we have a cabinet? Why do we not just govern by committee?

● (1740)

I will refer to the second proposal contained in the bill, to answer the hon. member's question further. The act reads:

No law relating to the insolvency or winding-up of any body corporate applies to the corporation and in no case shall the affairs of the corporation be wound up unless Parliament so provides.

The learned member has brought in an amendment which says:

No law relating to the insolvency or winding-up of any body corporate applies to the corporation and in no case shall the affairs of the corporation be wound up, unless a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons, following public hearings held by it in at least one place in each province and territory of Canada, recommends that such law apply or that the affairs be wound up, as the case may be.

The second proposal contained in Bill C-212 would change that section 28 drastically, and I think the hon. member will admit that. Instead of coming to Parliament for a wind-up of the corporation, the hon. member for Spadina would again have a committee make the decision, not Parliament.

A joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons would travel the length and breadth of this country holding hearings and spending taxpayers' money and, if you can imagine, have the power to hold only one meeting per province or territory, and then the committee would be allowed to make the decision, not Parliament. Well, you read it.

[Mr. McDermid.]

This is another example of how the Liberals would abuse the power of Parliament. This is an example of the philosophy of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau) that members of Parliament are nobodies: "Do not leave the decision-making power with Parliament, give it to a committee." This government plans to strengthen Parliament, not weaken it, as proposed by this ill-conceived Bill C-212.

If the hon. member were frank with this House and the people of Canada, this is a tactic—and a poor one at that—to prevent a decision on Petro-Canada. The Liberals and the NDP have used Petro-Canada to try to smokescreen some of the real problems which face this government and this country. They are trying to convince Canada that Petro-Canada is the answer to all our energy problems. It is unfortunate that the Petro-Canada issue has received so much attention in the last few months as compared with the far more serious problems of future energy supplies and the size of our trade and fiscal deficits.

There is a lot of confusion about Petro-Canada these days. I have spent a great deal of time looking into the Crown corporation, and it is time to state the hard, cold facts.

The original mandate of Petro-Canada was to explore and develop new sources of oil and gas supply for the country in areas where the oil companies were not prepared to gamble. Another key role Petro-Canada was supposed to fulfil was to import, transport, and refine oil and gas. This is a very difficult thing to do, as Petro-Canada does not own a ship or refinery.

It was supposed to give Canada security of supply and reserves. Petro-Canada bought Pacific Petroleums, a company which was, by the way, 37 per cent Canadian owned. The government bought Canadians out with their own money. Did this result in any additional reserves being made available to Canadians? No. These reserves were already secure to Canadians. Security of supply is achieved when new oil reserves are found by hard work and expertise. They are not found by buying companies which already have these reserves. There are 700 oil companies in Canada, not five, as the hon. member from out west suggested.

The members of the opposition parties said that with the formation of Petro-Canada we would have a window on the oil industry. That is what we heard. It is nonsense. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources employs 4,000 people, at an annual cost of $160 million, to observe every aspect of the oil industry. Governments control oil prices. They control wellhead gas prices, exports, rate of production and so forth. Petroleum monitoring legislation compels all oil companies to provide volumes of information to the government. The oil and gas industry is probably the most highly regulated industry in Canada, so Petro-Canada is not required to do the same job that the Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources is doing.

Petro-Canada was created by placing an additional tax burden on Canadians, $800 million in cash. This money comes out of the pockets of Canadians in the form of taxes which they otherwise would not have had to pay. The taxpayers also have the ultimate liability of $1.5 billion of debt incurred by Petro-Canada. As it now operates, Petro-Canada is like a medical patient who can stay reasonably healthy as long as he gets frequent blood transfusions. These take the form of money either directly from the federal treasury or money borrowed on the strength of the federal government's credit.

We hear about how well Petro-Canada is operating. In the first six months of 1979 it lost $7.6 million on assets of $3.3 billion. That is quite a feat. When almost every oil company is enjoying success, the state-owned Petro-Canada is losing money. In fact the financial structure of Petro-Canada as it now exists is over-burdened with debt in relation to its equity. Debt exceeds 250 per cent of equity versus a ratio of between 25 per cent and 40 per cent for other petroleum companies.

An executive vice-president of Petro-Canada said, and I quote:

> When we screw up, it is because of the government intervention; when things go well, it is a good business decision.

It has never been the intention of the Progressive Conservative government to dismantle Petro-Canada. We have never said we are going to dismantle it. It is the ownership we quarrel with, not the role of the company. Rather than public ownership through the government by way of a Crown corporation, the government wants a private company that Canadians will own shares in so that everyone can benefit from the potential Petro-Canada profits.

If one advocates an independent Canada with a true meaning of the word "independent", where does government intervention stop or start? Trying to protect a company like Petro-Canada from the free enterprise system is not independent; it is socialism. If there is a time for government to step in and take over an industry, then conversely there is a time when government should step out of an industry.

The proposed restructuring of Petro-Canada sets up a situation where a wholly-owned Canadian company could grow more quickly than under its current form. By transferring Petro-Canada to private ownership we will be providing it with the opportunity and the incentive to become the largest oil company in Canada, and the task force has recommended that only eligible Canadians—eligible Canadians—should be permitted to own shares in Petro-Canada and only eligible Canadians—Canadians, I repeat—should be entitled to buy shares in the after-market. I have stated many times that the shares must go to and remain in Canadian hands.

The new privatized Petro-Canada would have almost all the assets and responsibilities Petro-Canada has now—97 per cent of its responsibilities, to be exact—but it would be reorganized and strengthened to a degree that would enable it to play a far more important role than it does now in the Canadian energy industry.

The key public sector responsibilities of Petro-Canada would be transferred to the government. The government would have three essential functions: the negotiations of any necessary state to state oil contracts; the promotion of increased frontier exploration by Canadians; and the promotion of oil sands and heavy oil research. Our government favours a strong private sector energy industry managed by Canadians. We believe in Canadian citizenship ownership rather than Canadian-state ownership. A Petro-Canada owned directly by Canadian citizens would be more effective and efficient and would contribute more to Canada's objective of energy self-sufficiency. Share ownership in Petro-Canada is an opportunity for our children and their children to participate in the immense economic wealth of Canada.

There is no issue about which I feel more strongly than our freedom which exists under the private enterprise system. Our liberty is directly linked to private enterprise. If private enterprise is destroyed, we lose our political freedom. If we believe in the freedom of the individual from state domination, we must not allow any government to dominate our economy through unnecessary government ownership.

So, to sum up, Bill C-212 is another Liberal attempt to usurp the powers of Parliament. The Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has already stated that any changes to Petro-Canada will be approved in this House. He will bring it to this House. He has made that statement. We do not need the suggested committee to cross this country. A dastardly deed would be done to the Canadian people if this bill ever passed, and I for one oppose this proposal most vigorously.

• (1750)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jake Froese (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to thank the hon. member for bringing Bill C-212 before us because that gives us on this side of the House an opportunity to clarify some points that have been misconstrued so far as PetroCan is concerned.

I was delighted with the opening remarks of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) when he acknowledged the fact that Petro-Canada will go into the hands of Canadians. I am delighted with this, and I hope that as time goes on he will give up the struggle. In fact when I was preparing to speak on this bill this afternoon I thought I should be very careful with what I said.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize, and I do not wish to take up the hon. member's time, but I would like to ask him a question. Where in this bill have I admitted or suggested that the privatization of PetroCan is a fait accompli? This bill is clearly nothing more than a simple and specific recommendation that if PetroCan is to be abolished by this government, the people of Canada should at least have the opportunity to have some input.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Froese: I was just referring to the hon. member's opening remarks in which he spoke of the time before the government does anything, and I challenge him on that remark.

Let me come back to what I was saying. In the time I have been in the House I have heard people talk about Petro-

Canada, and my impression is that in the minds of some members it has become so sacred that it can be compared to the golden calf in the Bible. They just about worship Petro-Canada. I feel that any time we are so taken up with anything, we are in tremendous danger.

I am sorry the hon. member from Saskatchewan has left the chamber, because time and time again I hear members of the NDP talk about the potash industry which has been nationalized in Saskatchewan and what a great thing that is. If anything scares me, it is that Petro-Can can become like the potash industry in Saskatchewan. It scares the daylights out of me, because when the government of Saskatchewan took over the potash industry—every year I use great amounts of potash—what we found was that the price of potash doubled. If it means that when a government takes something over, the result is that the price doubles, then that scares me.

There is no control when the government takes anything over, there is no one who has the right to question government. Has anyone ever had the right to question the government of Saskatchewan with regard to potash? When I think about Petro-Canada staying in the hands of government, the way it was started, I am appalled.

Let me put something on the record. In August of 1976 Petro-Canada purchased Atlantic Richfield for the sum of $340 million. I am not so much concerned with the sum as with the principle. Then they also bought Bay Petroleum Limited. The purchase of Pacific Petroleum in November of 1978 was accomplished differently. Rather than use government cash, it used government credit. Petro-Canada issued redeemable, non-voting preferred shares at the bank to raise the required $1.4 billion for the takeover. The Petro-Canada Act prevents Petro-Canada from issuing preferred shares, so it was done through a subsidiary. If any private business in this country ever attempted to act in this manner, the opposition parties would raise a big outcry at what was going on. But when the government does it, nobody has the right to cry out except the opposition, and that does not change. I am sure that when our government was in opposition they cried out against such a principle which is contrary to every business principle. This is what I am afraid of.

They talk about PetroCan being a window for the industry. If that is so, then let us compare it with business. Tell me what business would ask a person with whom they were involved to be their window? Would the government be unbiased in such a situation? In every other area there are rules and regulations to control this, but all of a sudden we are talking about an industry that the government owns, and all business principles fall aside.

I imagine that PetroCan could change—and that is another possibility that I see—with the whims of government. I say that the Conservative party is as much in danger here as are the opposition parties. It does not matter what party is in government. My reason for saying this is based on the experience I have had with government since 1968. I realize that perhaps this government is not to be compared with any other government, but in principle it operates in the same way. So long as civil servants control an industry for which they are not responsible, it suffers. If a person is not directly responsible for the spending he does, he is not as interested. That is why it is so tremendously important that we allow Canadians, who will be directly responsible, to own shares in PetroCan. I find that most exciting.

Also, I know that PetroCan, the energy industry in Canada, is a most lucrative business and will be so for years to come. I cannot imagine why the opposition would want to stop Canadians from having an opportunity to become shareholders in the most lucrative business in the country. It is most exciting to own and be part of this country, and I can imagine the enthusiasm with which the Canadian public will want to buy shares in the greatest industry in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock at which time, may I remind hon. members, the House will consider the ways and means motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie).

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I begin my first budget speech I wish to express my thanks to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) for entrusting me with this heavy responsibility, and to express my thanks to my colleagues and to the officials in my own department and in the other departments involved for their assistance to me in this budget. I also wish to take the opportunity to express my appreciation to the members of the government caucus for their support.

An hon. Member: Up to now.

Mr. Crosbie: Do not worry, gentlemen.

As well, I wish to express my appreciation to the electors of St. John's West who have given me their confidence in four provincial elections since 1966 and who elected me on October 18, 1976, and on May 22, 1979, to represent them in this national institution. My three years in this House have been active and rewarding. I have come to know the country and members on all sides of this House in a way that convinces me beyond all doubt that Canada has immense possibilities. What do we need to realize them? All we need is the initiative, the willingness to work hard, the spirit of enterprise and the risk-taking and vision of our forefathers, whether English or French, or of other nationalities who came to settle in our part of the new frontier of North America.

[Translation]

My dear friends, a new era is opening before us. We will meet an extraordinary challenge. We will achieve the potential of the most beautiful country in the world.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: This is an "achieve our potential" budget. This is a realistic budget that faces the facts and sets out our view of how Canada can realize its potential. Laurier said that the 20th century belonged to Canada. That prophecy may not yet be realized. But if our fiscal and energy policies are adopted, the 1990s will indeed belong to Canada.

This budget is a "first" in several respects. It is the first which it is my privilege to present to this House; the first of the new government; the first federal budget ever presented by a Newfoundlander; and the first Progressive Conservative budget in 17 years. Perhaps most important, it is the first budget of a new era in the economic and financial affairs of this country—an era of new realism and an economic climate to provide improved opportunities and incentives for Canadians.

Since last May, I have met with finance ministers from many countries. I have discussed our economic and fiscal problems with my provincial colleagues. I have listened to the views of business and labour leaders throughout Canada. I have sought advice from economists in universities, research institutes and business corporations.

All these contacts and the independent advice offered at the Tokyo Summit by the IMF, the OECD and the Economic Council of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Hon. gentlemen do not know what those initials represent. All these contacts have strengthened my conviction that four overriding considerations should guide this budget.

• (2010)

The first is that the Canadian economy has great potential and offers brighter prospects than almost any other country in the world. Second, our economic performance, which has been disappointing during the 1970s, can be improved substantially by improving the framework of economic incentives for private individuals and firms. Third, to be successful our policies must face realistically the problems posed by energy costs and shortages and the huge and swelling budget deficit which we inherited from our Liberal predecessors. And finally, our policies must focus more than in the past ten years on the medium and longer-term potential and opportunities of the country and less upon fine-tuning in the short run and the political subterfuges of the moment.

The need for a new approach is apparent from our experience during the 1970s. In broad terms, the performance of the economy has been about half as good on average as during the 1960s. Our rates of price inflation and unemployment have been roughly twice as high and our rate of productivity growth has fallen by half. Over the past five years, productivity growth, the essential source for increases in the living standards of Canadians, has approximated zero.

This deteriorating performance reflects a number of factors, some beyond our control. These include international developments such as the huge increase in energy prices and the unhappy combination of slower economic growth and general price inflation found in most countries, including the United States. In addition, domestic developments such as changes in the composition and location of the population and changes in labour force participation have been outside the control of government.

In addition to these unavoidable influences, however, part of the reason for our disappointing economic performance during the past decade has been the failure of governments, particularly the federal government, to face up to economic reality and to make the most of the country's opportunities. In my view, one of the main reasons Canadians elected a new government last spring was to set a new and realistic course for this country. This I and my colleagues are determined to do even if it means risking some unpopularity, hopefully short-term. We are committed to the proposition that in the longer run good economics is good sense and thus good politics.

CHALLENGES FACING THE NEW GOVERNMENT

What are some of the challenges we face as a government charting a new course? There has been little or no productivity growth during the past five years. This year prices have been rising at almost 10 per cent. This is the seventh year in a row in which prices have been rising in the range of 7½ to 11 per cent. Unemployment is about 7½ per cent, below the rate in 1977 and 1978, but still high, especially in certain regions of the country, such as my own native isle, Newfoundland.

In addition, two yawning "gaps" large or Liberal gaps, have emerged in the economy, the Government of Canada deficit and the deficit in the current account of the balance of international payments. At present, federal government expenditures exceed revenues by 25 per cent and the size of the deficit exceeds the total size of the budget in our centennial year of 1967. Our current account deficit is equal to over 2 per cent of the Gross National Product, that is, over 2 per cent of the total value of all the goods and services produced by our country. This is the highest deficit ratio among the major industrialized countries. As a country and as a government we must face the fact that we have to pay our bills and cannot continue by borrowing ever more at the expense of our future.

Because of these deficits our interest rates have increased excessively, private borrowers have been crowded out of the domestic market for funds and our Canadian dollar has depreciated. Our ability to undertake new initiatives to promote the development of the country would be all but eliminated if we were not acting to reduce these deficits.

Our recent experience proves again that simply printing money and increasing government expenditures and the deficit does not help. Such actions only make our difficulties worse. A disciplined and realistic fiscal and monetary framework is essential. It is evident that a system of incentives in both the private and public spheres is critical. Individual choice in response to positive incentives is much more effective than attempts by governments to persuade, dictate and direct. A major priority in this and our subsequent budgets will be to create a system of incentives that will encourage Canadians to work, to save, to invest, to take risks in Canada, to become more efficient in production and to conserve energy and other scarce resources.

THE MAIN FEATURES OF THIS BUDGET

Tonight, I fulfil our election promise by providing detailed projections of our revenues, expenditures and deficits out to 1983-84. Hon. gentlemen opposite are shocked. They are not used to hearing the truth. I am also releasing a paper which sets out and describes the economic assumptions on which the fiscal projections are based.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, tonight I achieved what I most dearly wanted to accomplish. As promised, I reduced the budget deficit and the financial needs of the government dramatically. I am confident that this courageous action on the part of our government will give our economy, at long last, a new lease on life.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: They are going to be crossing the floor before I finish, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I will now set out the main elements of this budget.

The fundamental objective of our fiscal plan is to bring about a steady reduction in our deficits. Our cash requirements will be cut in half from almost $10 billion this year to less than $5 billion by 1983-84.

To achieve this objective, a tight ceiling is placed on our expenditures. We will limit growth to 10 per cent a year. This means little growth in expenditures after allowing for inflation.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

I now refer to a series of major new measures in the energy field to achieve our goal of self-sufficiency in oil by the 1990s.

Let me make the situation as clear as I can. The revenue and expenditure figures relating to 1980-81 and the following fiscal years are based on the assumption that we will conclude an agreement with the oil and gas producing provinces on our new energy policy and on oil and gas pricing. The agreement involves oil and natural gas price increases over the years 1980-84 so that prices rise at a measured pace toward 85 per cent—only 85 per cent—not the old 100 per cent of the previous regime—of the lesser of U.S. levels at Chicago or the international price.

The Government of Canada intends, in connection with any increase in oil and natural gas prices, to ensure that excess profits are not made by the industry as a result of accelerating prices but that the industry has an adequate rate of return and retains the necessary revenues for continuing exploration and development of new energy sources. We intend to ensure, through our new energy tax, that the Government of Canada obtains roughly half of the returns from oil and gas price increases that exceed $2.00 per barrel and 30 cents per thousand cubic feet per year. On this basis the Government of Canada will have sufficient revenues from the increases in oil and gas prices to carry into effect energy programs, conservation programs and offset programs to assist the regions and people of Canada.

The exact form of our energy tax has not yet been fully worked out—

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Chrétien: After seven months? Why are you having a budget?

Mr. Crosbie: It has not yet been fully worked out. Because this is a process of consultation, not of running roughshod over the provinces as did the last government.

But it will be a tax sufficient to give the Government of Canada the revenues we have indicated we need from oil and gas price increases to carry out the programs we consider necessary. I have every confidence that the agreements now being reached will go forward and that a new energy tax will be in place before July, 1980.

Because of the absolute necessity of further encouraging our people to use fewer oil products, to conserve oil products now having to be imported in ever larger quantities and at ever greater prices as our own domestic supplies dwindle, and in order to raise badly needed revenues for the Government of Canada in a manner that also serves another vital national purpose, an excise tax of 25 cents a gallon is imposed on gasoline, diesel and other transportation fuels effective tonight.

An hon. Member: Deals all over the place.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: After the crocodile tears are over, I will carry on.

This tax will not apply to heating oil in the home or elsewhere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The tax will apply to all users of transportation fuels and will replace the current tax of seven cents a gallon on gasoline which applied only to non-commercial users. Thus the increase is 18 cents a gallon for those using gasoline for personal use only. Farming, commercial fishing and urban public transit systems will be entitled to a rebate of ten cents per gallon and so will be taxed effectively at 15 cents.

All federal proceeds from the new energy tax and a substantial part of the proceeds from the excise tax will be returned to the economy in the form of direct measures to assist in developing alternate energy sources, conservation methods and to assist regions and people in Canada in absorbing these higher costs.

The former government stated that it was never its intention to maintain indefinitely the present regime of cheap energy in Canada while the rest of the world was adjusting to the new realities. They said then that there was no practical alternative to continuing a phased adjustment to higher energy prices. They stated that this was essential to provide for future supplies and to conserve this scarce resource. The problem that they left us is that they did not have the courage to carry out their own policy. We have to act now so that Canada can be self-sufficient in all energy sources, including oil, by the 1990s and to protect Canada from chaos whenever international oil supplies are interrupted. Unlike the previous government we will not declare a policy and then fail to act.

I am announcing tonight an income-tested, refundable, energy tax credit of $80 per adult and $30 per child per year, phased in over two years, for the benefit of lower and middle-income Canadians. The cost of this measure when in full effect will be $1 billion each year.

If the opposition parties permit our mortgage interest and property tax credit legislation to be passed into law, reductions in federal personal income taxes will be $1.2 billion in 1980, rising to $2.9 billion in 1982. Federal income taxes will also be reduced in 1980 by $1.4 billion through indexing.

Investment in common stocks of businesses in Canada will be encouraged by a new investment plan, the Canadian Common Stock Investment Plan, and by changes in the Registered Retirement Savings Plan rules.

To assist small unincorporated businesses, and to recognize the contribution many wives make to running them, salaries paid to wives or husbands by such businesses will be deductible. This will be another step along the continuing road towards equal status for Canadian women.

Tax measures will be introduced to reduce the borrowing costs of small business corporations during the present high-interest situation by means of a small business development bond.

New tax incentives will encourage regional development and promote investment in Atlantic fishing vessels built in Canada.

Farmers will receive substantial relief from problems caused by the taxation of capital gains on farm land.

Income tax changes of importance to family law reform will be introduced.

A surcharge of 5 per cent on corporate income taxes will be imposed for a period of two years as a contribution from the business sector to our overwhelming need to reduce the deficit.

The super depletion allowance for frontier drilling will be extended at a reduced rate to the end of 1980 and then replaced. The write-off for Canadian oil and gas property, including land bonus payments, will be reduced from 30 per cent to 10 per cent.

Taxes on alcoholic beverages, tobacco and some other products will be increased.

Measures will be taken to eliminate certain abuses in the tax system.

Unemployment insurance contribution rates will be increased while the employment tax credit will be enriched.

THE ECONOMY

Before turning to our specific objectives for reducing the deficit and a fuller discussion of the budget measures let me review our current economic situation and the general economic environment we face over the next several years.

Output and employment in the Canadian economy were stronger in the third quarter than had been generally expected. Gross national expenditure in real terms is likely to increase by something like 3 per cent in 1979. Over the past four quarters, business investment in particular has been growing strongly, showing an increase in real terms of 12 per cent.

Job creation has also been impressive. About 440,000 more people were employed in October, 1979, than in October, 1978. More than 135,000 of the new jobs were in the manufacturing sector.

But the news has not all been good. Of particular concern was the deterioration in our balance of payments on current account. During the first three quarters of 1979, imports of goods and services exceeded exports at an average annual rate of $6.1 billion, compared to $5.3 billion in all of 1978. Export growth slowed because of the slowdown in the U.S. economy while import growth accelerated, reflecting the high level of expenditures in Canada for machinery and equipment, most of which is imported.

Consumer prices continue to show year-over-year increases in excess of 9 per cent, despite some slowing of the rate of increase in food prices. At the same time, energy and other non-food prices increased at above average rates.

Our prospects for 1980 are clouded by the recession which now appears to be under way in the United States. Although their output may actually fall, we estimate Canada's will rise about 1 per cent. This means that fewer jobs will be created in Canada in 1980 than in this year, and that our unemployment rate is likely to increase to about 8¼ per cent.

The rise in energy prices will put upward pressure on the Consumer Price Index. This will tend to be reflected in continuing upward pressure on wages. There is already cause for concern in the rising trend now showing up in wage settlements.

● (2030)

We must look beyond 1980 even though forecasting is hazardous. Our policies are geared to improving the longer-run outlook for the Canadian economy and they are based on a realistic assessment of potential economic performance.

With recovery in the United States we believe that a growth rate of 3½ to 4 per cent in Canada for 1981-85 is attainable. This will mean some reduction in unemployment. But changes in the composition of the labour force, together with the influence of unemployment insurance and other social programs, have made unemployment rates in the 4 or 5 per cent range a thing of the past.

Our major challenge is to bring down the rate of inflation. This government fully endorses the Bank of Canada's policy of gradually reducing money supply growth. The government's over-all fiscal plan, and the tax measures I am presenting tonight, indicate our determination to reduce our deficit. Fiscal policy will now share in the task of reducing inflation and so provide a better balanced restraint than is the case when monetary policy is left to attempt the job alone. More funds for investment will be available for the private sector, hopefully at lower interest rates.

If confidence in our determination to reduce inflation can be fully established then the public's expectations may adjust downward. Future price and wage increases may then be lower than could normally be expected given the recent history of price inflation, the rather high levels of capacity utilization which prevail in many sectors and the impact of increases in energy prices.

The other main challenge is to improve our balance of payments position. Most projections suggest that the current account deficit will continue to widen, mainly because of the growing burden of interest payments, although it does not increase as a percentage of GNP. To do better than this we must export more and import less. We need more investment and we need more skills in order to increase our share in both foreign and domestic markets.

A major contribution to improving our balance of payments can come from energy through our new oil pricing and conservation policy which will lessen our imports of oil. As hon. members know, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has announced approval of the additional exports of natural gas recommended by the National Energy Board. The Board's findings are good news indeed. The intensive exploration and development effort in the Western Basin has paid off. We now have greater security of supply for our expanding domestic gas market and can increase exports. The effect on the balance of payments will be substantial. At today's export price, the 3.8 trillion cubic foot surplus would be worth about $15.5 billion, and this figure will be a good deal higher as export prices rise.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Let me return now to a more detailed discussion of our plans for deficit reduction.

REDUCING THE GOVERNMENT'S DEFICIT

We plan to cut the government's financial requirements from about $10 billion this year to $4.8 billion in 1983-84. There will be a reduction of $1¾ billion next year to bring the 1980-81 level to $8.2 billion, and further reductions each year thereafter. Relative to the size of the growing economy the reduction in financial requirements will be even more dramatic, falling from 3.9 per cent of GNP this year to 1.1 per cent by 1983-84. By that year we will have accomplished a substantial, if not complete, repair of the damage of the fiscal position incurred over the last five years when financial requirements were allowed to rise from $2 billion, or 1.4 per cent of GNP in 1974-75, to this year's $10 billion.

The most fundamental element in our plan to lower the deficit is severe restraint over government expenditures. We are planning to hold total expenditure growth to 10 per cent in each of the next four years. In real terms there will be no growth at all. To achieve a lower deficit next year we have had to reinforce this expenditure strategy with the tax increases introduced tonight. Continuation of this degree of expenditure restraint under conditions of more normal economic growth will bring substantial further reductions in the deficit without further tax increases.

The decrease in financial requirements of about $5 billion over the next four years results both from an increase in the government's non-budgetary sources of funds and from a reduction in the budgetary deficit. The budgetary deficit will decline each year, from $11.2 billion, or 4.4 per cent of GNP this year, to $9.1 billion, or 2.1 per cent of GNP in 1983-84.

That is an amazing decrease, Mr. Speaker, when one takes into account inflation and other expenditures. With the current level of the budgetary deficit the government's net debt is increasing at an annual rate of 20 per cent. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, 20 per cent. This, of course, implies a rising ratio of debt to government revenue and to GNP, and is a major contributor to rapid growth in interest costs which would sooner or later have to be met by higher taxes. It is not a sustainable position. This progressive reduction in deficits will bring the growth rate of net debt below 10 per cent by 1983-84. Government debt will then no longer be increasing relative to the size of the economy and public debt charges will no longer be pre-empting a larger and larger share of government expenditures.

The deficit on the national accounts basis declines very much in line with financial requirements. It is projected to fall from $10.2 billion in 1978-79 to $4.4 billion in 1983-84. On this accounting basis the consolidated position of all governments in Canada, federal, provincial and local, taken together, is expected to be in balance by 1983.

At this point I wish to make an announcement with respect to Canada's gold holdings. The great rise in the price of gold in the last three years, at a time when the other components of our official international reserves have been declining, has led to a substantial shift in the composition of our reserves portfolio. At the current market price the 22 million ounces of gold held by the Exchange Fund now constitute almost 75 per cent of our reserves. This is a far higher proportion than we have held in the past. It is also higher than the proportion now held by other industrial countries, with the exception of the United States which holds only small amounts of foreign currencies. From the standpoint of the efficient management of our reserve assets, I think it would be more appropriate if this proportion were reduced somewhat. This would provide a more balanced portfolio and allow us to invest more funds in interest-earning assets. Accordingly, I plan to sell up to one million ounces of gold in the relatively near future if the market for gold continues to be firm. Part of this may be purchased by the Mint in connection with its "Maple Leaf" coin program. The balance will be sold in the market.

LIMITING THE GROWTH OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

The 10 per cent planned expenditure growth rate is well below the nominal growth rate projected for the economy as a whole. It will mean that the ratio of federal government outlays to GNP will decline from 20.6 per cent in 1979-80 to 18.2 per cent in 1983-84. Relative to the size of the economy federal expenditures will be brought back to the level of the late 1960s.

An increasing portion of the fixed expenditure total will be devoted to new energy initiatives. Expenditure growth in all other areas combined will have to be restricted to about 9 per cent per year.

It is estimated that spending under existing major statutory programs will increase, on average, by 9.3 per cent over the next four years. The public debt charge component would be increasing much faster were it not for the reductions in deficit we are planning. Even so, public debt charges are expected to increase by 19.5 per cent or $1.7 billion next year. That is our legacy from our predecessors. Excluding this item, growth in outlays will be held to 8.1 per cent in 1980-81. Our commitment to provide substantial funds for new energy initiatives over the next several years, our desire to mount some new programs in other areas and our need to maintain reserves for contingencies mean that significant cuts will be required in existing programs. In general, new initiatives will have to be financed by reductions elsewhere. But the basic Progressive Conservative principle of support to less well off people and regions will be maintained, though programs will be re-examined and may have to be more selective.

In order to improve our control over expenditure, the government has put a new expenditure management system in place. This is described in a paper I tabled last week. I have also tabled an analysis of tax expenditures to draw attention to their importance and to the need for their control.

ENERGY POLICY

Mr. Speaker, energy has become an issue of fundamental concern to every Canadian. This government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, has pursued extensive consultations with provinces on energy policy. Our objective is clear. It is to move Canada rapidly away from dependence on oil imports and towards self-sufficiency by 1990. Our goal is to achieve this in three ways:

—constrain demand for oil;

—encourage substitution from oil to other forms of energy; and —bring on new oil supplies.

This reminds me of the Hibernia announcement today which is an example of bringing on new oil supplies.

In 1979 imports of oil will exceed our exports by about 50 million barrels a year and without new action this gap will widen rapidly. If no action is taken, by 1985 our net imports will be about 200 million barrels which valued even at today's prices would seriously undermine our balance of payments. These are the figures; these are the facts.

As long as Canada is so dependent on oil imports we will be vulnerable. Recent events in the Middle East have underlined that point for us. We must protect ourselves from international oil politics. If we do not, despite the fact that we are one of the few industrialized nations that has this potential, our children and our children's children would be right to scorn us for the desperate straits we had left them in.

We believe that the best way to begin to reach our goals is to establish realistic prices. Crude oil prices must ensure an adequate return to producers to finance needed exploration and development. Retail prices to consumers must encourage conservation. Both must be high enough to eliminate our oil trade deficit by 1990. Our own Canadian conventional oil reserves will be seriously diminished by the late 1980s. In the next 7, 8, 9 or 10 years they will be diminished and gone. We cannot wait for a cataclysm to occur.

As the Government of Canada we have a responsibility to all Canadians. The effects of more rapid increases in oil prices will be felt in every corner of the economy and by every Canadian. The Government of Canada must have the ability to soften the impact of higher prices where it is essential to do so. We want to take steps to ensure that those hardest hit by energy price increases are helped. There are interregional consequences to be addressed. The rights and aspirations of producing provinces must be respected. Industry must have an adequate cash flow. The federal government must have a fair share of the increased returns flowing from energy price increases to discharge our national responsibilities. These are the elements that we have balanced in developing an energy policy.

We are prepared, once full agreement is reached with the producing provinces, to permit oil prices to rise in stages, by $4 a barrel in 1980 and by $4.50 a year thereafter, subject to further adjustment after 1982 if necessary. Gas prices on existing flows of natural gas will rise to maintain the present 85 per cent relationship with oil but, to encourage substitution of gas for oil, distributors will pay a lower price on additional volumes calculated at 65 per cent of the commodity value of oil. The difference will be used by distributors to aid householders and industry in converting from oil to gas.

The new energy tax, to be introduced by a tax bill in this House in 1980 with a request for passage before August 1, 1980, will recoup amounts roughly equal to half of the return from oil price increases in excess of $2 per barrel annually and natural gas price increases in excess of 30 cents per thousand cubic feet annually. The technical details of this tax have still to be worked out in a co-operative effort. The additional price increases to commence on July 1, 1980, over and above the $1 increase already scheduled for January 1, 1980, will not take effect before the new tax is in place.

Producing provinces would levy their royalties on the full price increases and receive additional revenues. Over the next four years, under this projection, from 1980 to 1983 the total net revenues from oil and gas would amount to $90 billion. Of this, the provinces would receive about $40 billion and the federal government $17 billion. The industry would receive $33 billion net of all production costs and taxes. The funds flowing to the industry should be ample to support all needed new energy investments. If this does not turn out to be the case, adjustments will be made to ensure sufficient cash flow to the industry for all needed energy projects.

We need immediately, however, an added incentive to conserve our petroleum resources. Consumption of motor gasoline over the first nine months of 1979 was up 4.3 per cent. In contrast, in the United States, gasoline use was down about 4 per cent. Canadian prices of gasoline, diesel fuel, and heating oil are low by international standards. Indeed, our prices for gasoline are substantially lower than those of all major industrialized countries. They are now 30 to 35 cents per gallon lower than those in the United States. The United Kingdom is an oil producer and its prices are just about double our prices. The difference is all the more significant when it is realized that, historically, our prices have been higher than those in the U.S. by a few cents per gallon. Canadians now pay less for gasoline, when allowance is made for general price inflation, than they did 25 years ago. For example, in 1954 the price of gasoline was about 45 cents per gallon. If gasoline prices had risen as much as consumer prices in general, the price today would be about $1.20 per gallon. In fact, in large Ontario cities the price today is around $1.07 per gallon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We all have to face the facts, Mr. Speaker.

Low prices have led to excessive consumption. Canadian energy consumption, per capita, is the highest in the world. Our oil supply picture is tight and fragile. Stocks of fuel are lower than last year. Any major disruption of international or domestic oil supply, or an abnormally cold winter, could lead to major difficulties. It could raise the possibility of rationing. To sit back and do nothing would be criminal.

In order to further energy conservation efforts and to increase revenues, I have announced tonight a federal excise tax on transportation fuels. Even with this tax, the price of these products will generally be lower than in the United States.

These measures taken in total will produce tangible results. I expect that by 1985 they will result in import savings of 100 million barrels a year, or some $2.5 billion even at today's prices.

All of the revenues from the envisaged energy tax and a substantial part of the revenues from the excise tax will be used to finance a number of energy-related measures and offsets to the impact of energy price increases. These form an integral part of our energy program. I would like to provide some examples of the programs we envisage, some of the details of which are in the supplementary budget material.

First, we will be moving quickly to set up a national energy bank. It will help fund a wide range of energy-related projects.

Second, we will provide increased funding for the Canadian Homes Insulation Program.

Third, we will be mounting a major effort to ease the burden of adjustment to higher prices in the Atlantic region. We will provide grants to compensate for the additional costs of electricity generation resulting from oil price increases in excess of $2 per barrel per year.

Lower and middle-income Canadians need some protection from the price increases. A good deal of protection is already afforded to many by the indexing of social programs and the income tax system.

In addition, the refundable energy tax credit I announced tonight when in full effect will return about $1 billion to lower- and middle-income Canadians. The credit will commence with the 1980 tax year. It will be phased in to reflect the fact that the full impact of energy price increases is not felt until later next year. One-half of the benefit will thus be claimable in 1980, with full benefits claimable in 1981 and subsequent years. Credit benefits will be reduced for families with incomes over a threshold amount. For 1980 the threshold is $21,380. For every $100 of income in excess of this threshold, benefits will be reduced by $5. When the plan is in full effect a family of four will receive the full benefits of $220 each year as long as their income is below the threshold amount. If benefits exceed a family's tax otherwise payable, the excess will be refundable to them.

OTHER TAX MEASURES IN THE ENERGY FIELD

I will now give more detail on other significant tax changes in the energy field.

The depletion allowance for frontier drilling, the so-called super depletion, expires in April of next year. It has been attracting significant Canadian participation in frontier exploration. To achieve our energy goals, it is important that efforts to find new supplies not slacken. However, under the current system, high-income individuals can receive tax benefits that are actually larger than the costs of their investments. This is not tolerable. I propose to reduce the richness of the incentive. This modified incentive will terminate at the end of 1980, at which time a new policy of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for encouraging frontier exploration will be put in place.

I propose also to modify other aspects of resource taxation. Two types of schemes have recently developed that are resulting in undesirable tax leakage. Some non-residents have found ways of escaping tax on income from sales of resource properties. Measures are proposed in this budget to preclude this possibility. As well, rules are to be introduced to ensure that tax-exempt institutions cannot be used as vehicles to circumvent the income tax rules relating to resource taxation. Ingenuity is a wonderful thing.

Currently, amounts paid to acquire leases to explore, including bonus payments to provinces, can be written off at 30 per cent per year. The generosity of this provision has contributed to aggressive bidding up of prices for exploration rights, making it harder for small, new companies to compete. I am therefore reducing the write-off for Canadian oil and gas properties from 30 per cent to 10 per cent per year.

Finally, there is a serious anomaly in the federal sales tax on gasoline and diesel fuel. This tax is now a specific amount per gallon. It does not rise as prices rise. It will now be converted to 9 per cent of sale price to retail outlets. This change will ensure that the sales tax remains at 9 per cent on gasoline and diesel fuel as prices rise.

The two-year write-off provision for energy conservation equipment will be extended for five more years. At the same time I propose to broaden its scope to include certain solar-heating equipment, small-scale hydro projects and other conservation equipment. Solar heating is very valuable in Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker.

To encourage Canadians to experiment with fuel substitutes I am relaxing the licensing requirements under the Excise Act for the experimental production of alcohol. It is better known as gasahoil. I think that's what the name is.

TAX MEASURES

Let me now turn, Mr. Speaker, to other tax matters.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO PRIVATE SECTOR

I believe that the economic goals of this country can best be served by a revitalized private sector.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That has not been heard too often in budget speeches recently. Enterprise has to be rewarded, equity investment encouraged and incentives restored.

The new tax incentive measures I am announcing tonight are fully consistent with and reflect the commitments we have made to the Canadian people.

EQUITY INVESTMENT

It is our policy to promote equity investment by Canadians for Canadians. I have announced tonight two important tax measures to achieve this goal.

First, I am removing the impediments to investments in common stocks by Registered Retirement Savings Plans. After 1979, capital gains realized in an RRSP will no longer be fully taxed as income when distributed but will only be taxed at half rates upon withdrawal at retirement. Dividends on shares held in an RRSP will also be taxed at half rates when the funds are withdrawn. This tax treatment will be roughly equivalent to that available if the dividends and capital gains were received directly. The measure will apply to dividends and capital gains on common shares of public Canadian companies listed on Canadian stock exchanges. The changes should result in a significant shift of RRSP funds toward common stock investments.

Second, a Canadian Common Stock Investment Plan is created for investment in the common stock of Canadian companies listed on stock exchanges in Canada. The plan is structured so that it can be administered by investment dealers and stockbrokers—the acknowledged experts in this field.

Each investor will be able to contribute up to $10,000 per year to the plan, with a lifetime limit of $100,000. In order to give the plan a good start an investment of $20,000 will be permitted in 1980. Contributions will not be deductible when going into the plan and will not be taxable when withdrawn. Capital gains on eligible amounts invested in public company shares will not be taxed as long as the investor remains in the market through his plan.

These measures will significantly lessen the impact of the tax on capital gains on common stocks. They will mitigate the impact of inflation on taxation of capital gains. Canadians will have increased incentives to own a wide range of Canadian companies.

I want to announce yet another measure concerning capital gains. Capital gains on farm land are one of the major sources of retirement income for farmers. Farmers and fishermen are, of course, the backbone of the country. Tax on those gains is now deferred as long as the farm remains in the family. But farms are not always left to family members. Starting tonight bona fide farmers may put $100,000 of taxable capital gains on farm land into an RRSP without tax consequences. This will mean that on the sale of his land a farmer will be able to receive $200,000 in a capital gain without incurring any immediate tax liability. Farmers will then also be able to take further advantage of the various options for deferring tax when their RRSPs mature. They will of course continue to be able to place up to $5,500 annually in RRSPs out of income and to acquire an income-averaging annuity contract with capital gains proceeds not rolled into an RRSP.

We now have some seven years of experience with the taxation of capital gains. In 1980 I estimate that federal and provincial revenues from that source could amount to over $1 billion. A number of proposals have been made, and a number of concerns expressed, regarding taxation of capital gains. I have reviewed them all. I intend to table shortly a discussion paper on the tax treatment of capital gains and will refer it to a parliamentary committee for consideration. It will deal comprehensively with this whole issue, including the question of indexing capital gains and providing special exemptions for certain gains such as those on farm land and publicly-traded Canadian shares. After I have heard the views of the committee I will consider what further action should be taken in my next budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: My grandfather had five, and I expect no less.

SMALL BUSINESS

The small business sector is one of the great strengths of this country.

For the 1980 and subsequent tax years unincorporated businesses will be allowed to deduct salaries paid to spouses who work in the business. This measure is costly. It will reduce federal revenues by some $150 million a year. But, in addition to aiding small business, the measure is sound tax policy. It properly recognizes the contribution that many wives make to running small businesses and which has recently been denied.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have recently been reminded that wives are not chattels.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, the impact of recent increases in interest rates. I want to do what I can to alleviate the situation for small business corporations. As a temporary one-year measure, small Canadian-controlled private corporations will be able to issue up to $500,000 of special bonds. Interest paid on these small business development bonds will be treated as dividends. It will not be taxable to the lending institution nor deductible to the borrower. This form of after-tax financing will substantially reduce the borrowing costs of small business corporations. I emphasize that this is a temporary measure of special benefit and so it is proper to apply a "sunset" provision to it. It will be limited to indebtedness issued before the end of 1980 with a term of at least one year and no more than five years and each borrower will be eligible for only one such bond issue at any time.

• (2100)

REGIONAL AND SECTORAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage further the important contribution that the private sector can make to regional development. I am proposing to do this by facilitating the use of selective tax incentives. They will take the form of tax contracts with firms for investment projects in the Atlantic Provinces and the Gaspé region of Quebec. This stimulant will add to the range of federal incentives now available in the designated regions of Canada. The nature of the tax incentive will be determined on a project by project basis and will be administered by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in consultation with the Department of Finance. This selective approach will provide the flexibility to promote those economic activities which are most promising.

I also have particular measures to announce concerning the Atlantic fishing industry. After tonight, capital cost allowance on leased fishing vessels, newly-built in Canada for use in the Atlantic fisheries, may be used to reduce other taxable income. This will draw new sources of private financing into the sector and will permit an improvement in the quality of the fleet for vessels ranging in size from the long-liner to the freezer trawler.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: For those hon. members opposite who do not know, a long-liner is a vessel of anywhere from 40 to 60 feet in length. It has nothing to do with National Sea or anyone else.

REVENUE-RAISING MEASURES

There is need for a short-term temporary tax increase to ensure that the deficit comes down. There will be a simple, straightforward corporate surtax of 5 per cent of federal taxes otherwise payable by all corporations. The measure has an explicit "sunset" clause. It will terminate at the end of 1981. It will yield some $370 million in the 1980-81 fiscal year. The advantage of this simple surtax is that it leaves intact the structure of tax rates and tax incentives. For example, small businessmen and manufacturers who pay tax at lower rates will pay a smaller amount of surtax.

I have reviewed the federal commodity tax structure. The federal levies on alcohol products have not been increased for a number of years. With inflation, the real burden of these taxes has fallen significantly. Moreover, the taxes on alcohol need to be rationalized. The tax per unit volume of absolute alcohol varies dramatically from product to product. I am proposing a series of tax changes that will reduce this disparity and will, over all, yield some $130 million in 1980-81. Taxes will rise on spirits, brandy, fortified wines, table wines and regular and light beer. Taxes will fall on sparkling wines and on malt beer. The tax increases amount to about 11 cents on a bottle of spirits, 13 cents per bottle of table wine, and 1 cent per bottle of beer.

An hon. Member: What about screech?

Mr. Crosbie: Eleven cents on a bottle of screech!

There will also be an across-the-board increase in specific excise taxes and duties on tobacco and tobacco products of about 10 per cent. These taxes have not been increased since 1974 and their real value has also fallen. The increase on cigarettes will amount to 2.5 cents per pack of 20.

OTHER TAX CHANGES

Let me outline briefly some changes needed to tighten the law or to relieve tax burden. Details are contained in the Notices of Ways and Means Motions I will table tonight.

On the income tax side, I am introducing a number of important relieving measures in the area of taxation and family law. In future, new attribution rules will ensure that income on property transferred from one spouse to the other will not be attributed to the spouse transferring the property after the date of a written separation agreement. The deduction for maintenance payments will be extended to cover amounts paid under a court order on account of illegitimate children and common-law spouses.

For the 1980 and subsequent taxation years, the tax exemption for allowances paid to volunteer firemen will be raised from $300 to $500.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I have to admit that there is a slight conflict of interest here. I am an honorary member of the Goulds fire department.

The government attaches great importance to the voluntary sector. We have referred the whole matter of encouragement of the voluntary sector to a special parliamentary committee chaired by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). I have undertaken a review of this area, including the tax treatment of charitable donations, and will provide a paper to that committee. The recommendations of the committee will be carefully considered before my next budget.

I have also considered the vitally important matter of providing adequate and effective incentives for research and development. Our future growth is heavily dependent on how we handle this issue. Some rather complex tax incentives for R & D have only recently been legislated and I want to study these more closely before I introduce any other tax changes.

I will immediately introduce relieving measures for overseas remuneration of Canadians temporarily employed abroad. This will help the competitive position of Canadian corporations that obtain certain export contracts including construction, installation and engineering projects abroad.

I am going to introduce a number of technical changes relating to prepaid expenses, the so-called capital gains strips, deferred employee compensation plans, term preferred shares, corporate partnerships, transfers of corporate residence, options to acquire control and certain others. Many of these are designed to check tax avoidance arrangements.

Finally, I have reviewed the special capital cost allowance provisions for multiple-unit residential buildings. This tax shelter was introduced in 1974 and has been extended many times since. The pressure on vacancy rates is not now as serious as previously. Thus, I am letting this provision expire, as currently provided, on December 31 of this year.

There are also a number of tax structure changes in the federal sales tax. Manufacturers of cosmetics are not paying their fair share of tax. I am proposing that the tax on cosmetics apply to the full sale price to retailers. I am also moving to ensure that the photo-finishing industry pay its fair share of sales tax.

Amendments will be made to ensure that the exemption from sales tax for transportation equipment does not extend to service equipment mounted on the vehicles. The exemption for aircraft will exclude aircraft used for recreational purposes and flight training and put them on the same basis as automobiles. The exemptions for containers and coverings will be modified to confine them to manufacturers only.

EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

This government considers it essential to increase employment. We strongly believe that the jobs created should be of a permanent nature, be in the private sector and be available to those who are most vulnerable to unemployment.

The central feature of our approach will be an improved tax incentive to increase employment opportunities, particularly for the young. This will replace the current Employment Tax Credit Act and a number of other programs. It will include an $80 per week tax credit to help create jobs in the private sector for more than 100,000 people.

When this program is fully implemented, about $250 million per year in tax expenditures will be made available to the private sector for job creation for young people and for the long-term unemployed. This represents a substantial expansion from the $100 million set aside by the previous government.

We also wish to ensure that our programs respond to the differences in employment opportunities across the country. In addition to the tax credit, an amount of $50 million will be made available to initiate new measures, or to supplement existing programs, aimed at stimulating employment and economic development in Eastern Canada.

This government is committed to achieving greater consistency with insurance principles and to bringing greater financial integrity to the unemployment insurance program. To this end, effective in 1980, the costs of unemployment insurance benefits, except those associated with high regional rates of unemployment, will be financed by employer and employee premiums. The costs of job referral and related employment services will also be financed by premiums.

The weekly employee rate of unemployment insurance contributions for 1980 will be increased from $1.35 per $100 of insurable earnings to $1.60. The employer rate will be increased from $1.89 to $2.24.

This is only the first step in a comprehensive review of the unemployment insurance program started last June. Further proposals are now being developed in full consultation with provincial governments, labour and business. When these changes become effective, the premiums will be re-examined.

TRADE POLICY

In the Multilateral Trade Negotiations (MTN) we reached agreement with our trading partners on tariffs and on a number of non-tariff measures. In most cases implementation of these agreements will not require changes in legislation. With respect to customs valuation, we have not yet concluded negotiations with our trading partners.

● (2110)

We hope the results of these negotiations will provide important incentives to improve Canada's over-all economic performance. Clearly, if Canadian producers are to be exposed to increased competition at home and abroad, it will be important that we have the means to act at least as quickly and effectively as other countries to deal with unfair trading practices and imports which injure Canadian producers. This means that we should strengthen our emergency procedures, particularly on anti-dumping and countervailing duties and safeguards generally. I intend to issue early in the new year a White Paper proposing a number of changes in Canadian legislation and practice in these areas. The government will be asking that the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee be empowered to hold hearings on the White Paper.

I intend to introduce tomorrow a notice of ways and means motion to give effect to the tariff reductions agreed to in the MTN. The motion will include full details of the phase-in schedule for the reductions. The ways and means motion will also provide for the withdrawal of the benefits of the British Preferential Tariff system from the United Kingdom, Ireland and the Republic of South Africa.

Meanwhile I am introducing tonight a separate notice of ways and means motion setting out a small number of tariff changes not related to the results of the MTN.

THE BUDGETARY PROCESS

Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to open government and to ongoing appraisal of the effectiveness of existing programs and policies. I am determined that this include the budgetary process and programs based on tax incentives.

Excessive budget secrecy should be eliminated. To facilitate this process, I am taking the following steps. First, by publishing the major study on tax expenditures I am enabling Canadians to gain a better appreciation of how their government is using public funds to provide special tax incentives to particular industries and groups.

Second, I am undertaking to refer special studies on tax policy and tax system problems to a parliamentary committee for detailed review, beginning in the near future with a paper on the taxation of capital gains. I will also be referring the Report of the Commodity Tax Review Group back to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so that it may complete its deliberations.

Third, in future, prior to tabling tax bills I will make available to the public a draft of the legislation so as to enable tax practitioners to make technical suggestions for improvement.

Fourth, I am undertaking a general review of tax measures to which "sunset" provisions might be attached. I have taken such action already in this budget.

I am convinced that a more open budgetary process is desirable. I think it can be achieved and still ensure that sensitive tax changes are not revealed in advance of the budget.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to table projections of the government's revenues and expenditures together with explanatory notes, the notices of ways and means motions, supplementary information giving details of the measures I have proposed tonight, background material on our energy situation and strategy, and a paper setting out the economic assumptions underlying the fiscal projections. I would ask the consent of the House to include in Hansard the tables which provide four-year projections of the government's fiscal position on the public accounts and national accounts bases, and of the principal components of budgetary revenues.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), the minister asks for leave to table documents, but he seeks the agreement of the House that they be printed in Hansard as read. Is there agreement of the House to that?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Editor's Note: For text of the above tables see Appendix.]

Mr. Crosbie: I thank hon. members for being so patient.

IN CONCLUSION

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude on a personal note. Fifty-one years ago my grandfather, Sir John Crosbie, delivered his fifth and final budget speech to the House of Assembly of what was then the Dominion of Newfoundland. The revenue of that dominion in the previous year had been $8,932,000. The expenditures had been $10,533,000. There had been a deficit of $1,601,000. In that framework, Mr. Speaker, they had administered a dominion government, built and operated a railway, created the fishery, commenced mining projects and industrial development in pulp and paper mills, started a highway system and had that year completed a drydock in St. John's. They had little in the way of resources but they had vision, confidence and courage.

How much more do we Canadians have today and how much better off are we in comparison to our own country 51 years ago. How much better off are we in comparison to nearly all of the other nations of the world today. Few have our potential or our resources, especially in energy.

An hon. Member: Your grandfather was a Liberal.

Mr. Crosbie: We have doubters opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I have great faith in Canada. The people of Newfoundland share that faith today with renewed confidence in the fisheries and with offshore energy resources. The members of this government believe the possibilities for the future in Canada are tremendous and we are determined to create the conditions which will achieve these possibilities.

[Translation]

My dear friends, I trust you will see in this budget a step in the right direction. This budget faces facts. We have the choice: either Canada achieves its potential of which we can all be proud, or we go back to our bad habits of spending without concern for tomorrow. I beg of you to support this wonderful project, the achievement of the potential of our beautiful country.

[English]

I believe that with the measures announced tonight we are at a new beginning for Canadians. I hope that you will agree that this is a budget that faces the facts and a budget that will help Canada achieve its potential. The future truly can belong to Canada. It is up to us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, after listening to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) had to say tonight, I am sure that the people in Canada in general would not want to shake hands with him. I do not think it would be parliamentary for me to try to say what middle and lower-income people would like to do to the minister and the Conservative government after hearing his speech tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: What we have heard this evening is not really a budget—it is the Minister of Finance's biggest joke yet, a cruel joke on the Canadian people. How can this be a budget if it is based on an energy agreement on oil and gas pricing that does not yet exist and which may never exist?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: How can this be a budget if it is based on an energy tax that does not exist, whose form is unknown, and which is not even described in the budget speech or in the ways and means motion accompanying the budget speech? The government will have to bring in another bill to implement the proposed new energy revenue tax. So much for the minister's desire to do away with fine tuning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: To the extent the budget is a real one, it is still a cruel joke on the Canadian people. The increase in energy prices and excise taxes proposed in the budget will bring inflation back to double digit levels in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gray: It will increase unemployment by at least 1 per cent, and certainly will not do anything for employment except reduce it. It will reduce the gross national product next year in Canada by at least one point. All Canadians will be hurt by this budget, especially lower and middle-income Canadians. They will be hurt by the higher excise taxes and the higher energy prices. These are regressive taxes and the burden of them will be most severe on the lower and middle income Canadians. But this Conservative government are willing to drive the Canadian economy into the ground in order to carry out to the utmost their commitment to their Conservative doctrinaire policy. That is more important to them, than the growth of the economy or fighting unemployment and creating more jobs. None of that matters to them except that doctrinaire commitment, that doctrinaire fear of the word "deficit".

This budget, to the extent that it is a budget, is one of broken promises. Remember the promise of the $2.5 billion tax cut promised by the then leader of the opposition before the election and during the election on the hustings and in this House. It is not in this speech. Instead of that $2.5 billion tax cut promised, we have an increase in taxes for lower and middle income Canadians of close to $5 billion.

This energy package is really a disguised tax increase, a mammoth tax grab on the part of the Conservative government from the Canadian people, especially lower and middle income Canadians. A few days ago the Minister of Finance said that the promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) of a $2.5 billion tax cut was a temporary aberration. After seeing this budget, I think the Canadian people will hope that it will be nothing more than a temporary aberration, a temporary aberration carrying the Canadian economy away from the path of growth and development it was on at the time the government changed on June 4.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: In this budget speech the Minister of Finance talked about his concern for government spending and controlling government spending. But when in this House a few days ago he was asked about the cost of this mortgage tax credit plan, all he had to say was, "Don't worry about it. It is just a squeesly-measly couple of billion dollars". In order to pay for this plan—and he would not admit this during the debate on Bill C-20—obviously he has chosen the route of higher taxes on lower and middle income Canadians, higher taxes cancelling out benefits to people who are still hoping, in spite of Conservative higher interest rates, to benefit from the mortgage interest tax credit plan, and adding to the burden of taxes on the many more Canadians who do not benefit from this plan at all: the renters, the people with no mortgages, the people with incomes too low to pay income tax against which a tax credit can be claimed.

This is really just a "squeesly-measly" budget for Canadian workers, farmers, consumers, and small business people, when it comes to helping them to have better standards of living and to secure a chance for success in their chosen endeavours. This budget gives a little with one hand and takes away a lot with the other. The Conservatives in this budget are taking a lot more than they are giving.

The total tax grab of some $5 billion in this budget is a lot more than they are giving back through tax credits to lower income people and the other modest, and in some cases, useful changes offered, for example, to small business. In fact this budget will bring about an increase in inflation of more than 2 per cent; a loss in Canadian gross national product of more than 1 per cent; an increase in unemployment of some 1 per cent. All of this was set out in the Conservative government's own background budget paper.

The increase in energy prices, and the tax increases set out in this budget, will cost Canadians some $5 billion in 1980. This is the equivalent of at least a 14 per cent increase in personal direct taxes for individual Canadians. Imagine the burden of that on people already struggling with the burden of Conservative high interest rates. As a result of this Conservative "hard times" budget, it is likely that the real gross national product in Canada will decline in 1980, the first such decline in output in the last 26 years.

Let us take a quick look at the impact of what is in the budget—the higher energy costs proposed, the excise tax on gasoline—on average Canadian families. These increases will not be cancelled out by the special tax credit or anything else in this budget. I am told that the increase for an average family in Atlantic Canada will be $398. I am told that the increase for an average Ontario urban family will be more than $400, and for an average Ontario rural family in the dairy farm area, it will be an increase of some $621. For a family grain farm in Manitoba, there will be an increase of some $453, because of this Conservative budget.

This is a budget that is bringing hard times for Canadians who face higher taxes through the revenue grab in this budget, a revenue grab disguised by the government in its budget as an emergy self-sufficiency policy. These higher prices for energy will mean more inflation and fewer jobs, as Canadians companies draw back from their efforts in the economy because of the lesser competitive advantage than the one they would have had previously through lower energy prices.

This is no way to develop an industrial strategy for Canada, something our country needs, something we Liberals are working for and want to see implemented. Such a strategy means policies to create a more productive and efficient economy. It means capitalizing on the basic strengths we have in Canada. These strengths include our actual and potential energy supplies, and the justifiable fact that up until now, at least, we have had prices much lower than world prices. But these Conservative budget policies will greatly eliminate these natural advantages for economic development which we have in Canada. We have here an unreal attempt to bring our energy prices close to, if not right up to world prices.

To conclude for this evening at least, I want to say that, contrary to what the Minister of Finance tried to say at the beginning of his budget, this is not an "achieve our potential" budget. It hits at Canada's potential, it harms Canada's potential. The late R. B. Bennett would be proud of this new Minister of Finance this evening, but I do not think Canadians generally, especially middle- and lower-income Canadians, would be proud of the minister or of the Conservative government. They will be hoping for an early opportunity to get rid of that government. So, we will be accepting the invitation of the Minister of Finance to cross the floor. This party will cross the floor a lot sooner than many think; it will be the government once again.

[Translation]

I now move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin):

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On motion of Mr. Gray, debate adjourned.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHRÉTIEN

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a very serious question of privilege at this moment. Yesterday in the media there was what I would consider a very serious leak about the budget which was read by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) tonight in the House. I would like to give notice to the Minister of Finance and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) that we on this side of the House consider it a very serious matter and that it should be treated by the Prime Minister in the best tradition.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I gather my friend has given notice of a question of privilege. In that event, I move:

That the House do now adjourn.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) has raised a question of privilege, that is he has given notice that he will raise tomorrow or in the near future a question of privilege concerning information given in advance about the budget presented this evening.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

On motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton), the House adjourned at 9.30 p.m.

THE BUDGET—INCREASE IN EXCISE TAX FOR FUELS USED ON FARMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the provisions of the budget last night which will have the effect of imposing a new 15-cent per gallon excise tax on fuel for farm tractors and equipment and a 25-cent tax per gallon for farm vans and trucks, and considering the devastating effect this tax will have on farmers' costs which are already rising rapidly due to inflation, and considering that these extra costs will result in higher food costs to the consumers of the country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin):

That this increase in excise tax for fuels used on farms be reconsidered by the government and cancelled.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST LEADER OF CRÉDITISTES ASK PREMIER OF QUEBEC FOR INSTRUCTIONS CONCERNING BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance):

That the Leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada communicate forthwith with Mr. Lévesque to know whether he should support the people or the multinationals in the face of the Progressive Conservative budget of last night.

NUCLEAR POWER

ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that since June of this year many Canadians have been under the false impression that this government genuinely wished to review the development of nuclear power in Canada and intended to set up a parliamentary inquiry, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That this House instruct the government to get moving on the establishment of its promised parliamentary inquiry into nuclear power.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

RUSSIAN INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES IN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity arising from the quotation by CJOH TV Ottawa from a document classified "Top secret; Canadian eyes only" and expressing priority being given by the Russian intelligence service to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the National Research Council. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Beattie):

That the government make public all details in this regard, specifically mentioning the parts played by Captain Valari Nicolayevich Smirnov of the Russian GRU, Yuri Demitriyevich Shcherbina and Vasaliy Andrevich Shimchik who has been labelled a suspected member of the Russian military intelligence by the RCMP security service, and specifically that the government investigate why the former government never permitted the Canadian people to know the details.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATE NEW CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT TO PROTECT POULTRY INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a very important matter.

Considering that the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency has announced that under a Canada-United States agreement the import quota of American poultry was 22,250 tons this year and that it would be doubled next year, considering that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is issuing additional import permits and that Ontario has invaded the Quebec market with its quota, following the Quebec threat to withdraw for those reasons from the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency, I move, seconded for the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy):

That the House urge the government to renegotiate the Canada-United States agreement of October 22, to protect the interests of Canadian producers as well as Canadian slaughterhouses.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. This motion can be presented at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO POTATO INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I should like to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc):

That the government immediately establish an independent commission of inquiry or, if it prefers, a royal commission into all aspects of the potato industry in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 43, such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time only upon unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

DISBURSEMENT OF QUARTERLY PROFITS OF OIL AND GAS COMPANIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity regarding the projected increased profits in the oil industry of 1,000 per cent, meaning that by the mid-1980s foreign-owned firms producing oil and gas in Canada will be either repatriating large flows of dividends or acquiring large, new Canadian investments outside the non-conventional oil and gas producing sector. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin):

That the government allow the oil and gas companies to retain a certain percentage of their quarterly profits, while placing the balance with the government in trust, to be drawn down by and paid to the respective oil and gas companies if and when these drawdown amounts have been expended by those companies in oil and gas exploration or certain aspects of research and development.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be introduced for debate at this time only upon unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

THE BUDGET

PROPOSED MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In last night's budget speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) took pride in comparing his budget to the farsighted budget delivered by his grandfather to the Assembly of the Dominion of Newfoundland 51 years ago.

Noting that shortly after the delivery of that budget the Dominion of Newfoundland was bankrupt and that the Dominion was compelled to seek colonial status from the government of Great Britain, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That the Prime Minister table in this House records of any discussions or any correspondence between the Government of Canada and the British government dealing with the possible surrender of responsible government to London.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EDITING OF PROGRAM "THE NATION'S BUSINESS"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Cameron (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I hope hon. members will agree to my motion. I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Last Sunday night, on the CBC program "The Nation's Business", three answers were edited from the tapes of the House of Commons. The hon. gentlemen asking the questions clearly lacked the moral fibre, the courage of their convictions and the intestinal fortitude—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is just coming to it.

Mr. Cameron: —to include the answers to the questions as given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark). So that taxpayers will know the answers as well as the questions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That they use their next time allotment for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS NOT IN CONFORMITY WITH ELECTION PROMISES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I move that this House notes that the only generous part of the budget delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) was on page 83 of the Budget Papers, namely, that he is removing the duties on Bible recordings, certain bird-scaring devices and also the duty on farm storage tanks for animal waste.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: What is the matter with that?

Mr. Nystrom: In light of the fact that the Conservative party now has broken almost all the promises it made prior to the election, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to prosecute the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada for misleading advertising.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

THE BUDGET

REASONS HOUSE SHOULD SUPPORT PROVISIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the budget statement last night, painting a picture for the future for Canada of double-digit inflation, increased unemployment, higher taxes and slower economic growth, is the Prime Minister contemplating any special steps to try to convince the House of Commons that it should support this budget?

Will he, for example, be writing to the leader of the Social Credit group before the votes, giving him special reasons why that group should support the budget and, if so, would he make available copies of his correspondence to the rest of us, which might assist us in considering this extraordinary document?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the special measures that we intend to use to encourage the House to support the budget are the measures that were introduced and announced by the Minister of Finance last night in a budget which has been widely celebrated as the most honest budget in years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It is also a budget which spells out specifically steps the government intends to take—steps, by the way, which the former government, although they were urged upon it, refused to take—to help small business, to help women and to help a number of groups in the country. We believe the measures that are included in that budget will recommend themselves to the House. If the House is interested in having economic recovery generated in the country, then the House will support this budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's statement to the House on October 18 that inflation was public enemy number one, would he relate for me that objective with the very heavy burdens that are now placed in this budget on low and middle-income Canadians? Has he now decided to fight public enemy number one on the backs of low and middle-income Canadians, or have those groups become the new public enemy of the government?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the budget proposes to move this country towards a significant reduction in deficits, which will have an effect on bringing inflation down. The budget also proposes to change the Liberal practice of having Canada rely on unstable, expensive sources of foreign oil, which reliance is a significant contributor to inflation in the country.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am getting a number of homilies from the Prime Minister, but no answers to my questions. May I ask him one final question? In view of the fact that the substantial increases in the budget are intended to finance the tax credit program for home owners—and that is obvious—will the Prime Minister justify, or explain to the country why all the taxpayers in Canada should be called upon to finance a program which is intended to serve and help only a special group in the community?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the official opposition has carried its opposition to this program, which will benefit thousands of Canadian home owners, into obstructive measures in the House of Commons. They are now carrying that opposition into the question period. If the member has questions he wants to direct in relation to the budget, and to use the question period for the purpose for which it was intended, I invite those questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. For over a year now the Prime Minister has promised lower interest rates. Can he tell the House what measures there are in the budget that will have the general effect of lowering interest rates throughout Canada, outside the small business development bonds?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, while the whole thrust of the budget—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. While heckling has been part of our practice, I cannot understand how it is possible to start to heckle a person before they have begun to give a response.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the whole thrust of the budget is to create an environment in which interest rates can go down. That will be done by reducing the size of the government deficit and by reducing the government's financial requirements for next year by $1.75 billion, which will give more room to the private sector and ease the pressure on interest rates. I hope that the forecasts in our budget are more accurate than those made last year, when an inflation rate of 6.5 per cent was prophesied and it is now 9.2 per cent.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Prime Minister, who made the promise during the election campaign, could not answer my question and had to defer it to the Minister of Finance. I will put my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has talked about helping special groups in our society. Outside of the minimum relief provided by the energy tax credit, what does the Prime Minister plan to do for the senior citizens of this country, particularly those living on fixed incomes?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the senior citizens of this country will be assisted by the energy tax credit, which will apply particularly to those who have an income of up to $21,380. They have been assisted by our spouses' allowance legislation, which was introduced in this House this fall to account for a Liberal gap. Senior citizens will also be assisted by the new veterans' allowance legislation that has been introduced, and further assisted by the fact that we will bring our economy back to a healthy state, which will have the effect of increasing the amount that they will get from the government generally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED REVERSAL OF ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, blarney is blarney whether or not it comes from Newfoundland. I would like to ask the Prime Minister a serious question.

During the recent election campaign, the Prime Minister promised to stimulate the economy, provide low interest rates and bring forward major tax cuts for the people of Canada. Considering that in last night's budget the government reversed itself completely on virtually every one of these promises by bringing forward a restrictive budget, by maintaining high interest rates, and by increasing taxes by some $3.5 billion for the people of Canada, would the Prime Minister explain to the House and to the people of Canada why, in a parliamentary democracy, after reversing himself so completely, he ought not go to the Governor General to seek dissolution in order to get a mandate from the people of Canada for this complete reversal of policies?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one can always tell when the Leader of the New Democratic Party intends to raise a question that he does not regard as serious, because he prefaces it by calling it a serious question. The Leader of the New Democratic Party should know that if he wishes to force an election upon the country, he will have to take it on his own shoulders and not seek shortcuts in the way he has suggested and as he has done in a number of other ways.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will see from the amendments we intend to move today—when we will have all 27 members present—that we intend to be consistent, at least, with what we promised the people of Canada.

● (1425)

I should like to shift to the shifty Minister of Finance and ask him a question, Mr. Speaker. Will he confirm that out of a total of a $90 billion increase in oil revenues that is going to come as a result of last night's budget, less than 2 per cent will go to the energy bank, while some $73 billion will go to the multinational oil companies and the province of Alberta? If so, will he explain why Canadians from coast to coast are being gouged to provide such a small sum for an energy bank but are bankrolling the multinationals in the province of Alberta?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what a simplistic approach to problems the Leader of the New Democratic Party has! As the budget document shows, if there are certain oil and gas price increases which are outlined in the budget over the next four years, it shows how much of that will go to the provincial governments, how much to the industry and how much to the federal government. I think it is $17 billion to the federal government, $33 billion to industry and a larger figure to the provincial governments.

Of the amount that comes to the Government of Canada, all of the $17 billion will be spent on energy projects in Canada, conservation projects, home insulation programs, oil furnace retrofit programs, assistance to the Atlantic provinces because of their high dependence on oil-generated electricity, assistance for hydro projects like the Lower Churchill project in Newfoundland, assistance for gas pipelines like the gas pipeline to the maritime provinces, and assistance for projects that will help Canada and the people of Canada all over this country. That is what it will be used for.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO ONTARIO RESULTING FROM BUDGET—LOSS OF JOBS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is still 2 per cent for the energy fund and $73 billion for the multinationals. The minister could try again, Mr. Speaker. Will he confirm the figure used by a cabinet minister in the Ontario government when he said last night that in 1980 alone, as a consequence of the oil price increases forced on the people of Canada by this government, Ontario will lose some 20,000 jobs? Will the Minister of Finance confirm that figure?

Will he also confirm that, as a result of the policy of oil price increases of this magnitude, hundreds of millions of dollars in the next few years will have to be paid out to the province of Ontario in equalization payments as a result of the unprecedented attack by this government on the industrial core of Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm anything of the sort. First, with reference to the industry and the $33 billion that they will get over a four-year period, they will invest that in tar sands plants costing $5 billion each, in heavy oil plants costing $4 billion or $5 billion. There are billions and billions of dollars of projects for them to invest those funds in. If they do not invest their funds in those projects, then we will review their activities. But we know that they will.

As for Ontario, I will confirm, Mr. Speaker, that Ontario will rise with stronger industrial plant and capacity than ever after the next two or three years as we go gradually up in oil and gas prices. We have pledged to Ontario that we are not going to exceed 85 per cent of the U.S. or international price, whichever is the lower. The official opposition was going to go to 100 per cent, but we are only going to go to 85 per cent in the interests of Ontario and the rest of Canada.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WILL BE ALLOWED TO ISSUE POULTRY IMPORT PERMITS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

According to our information, the Maple Lodge corporation of Toronto has requested and obtained an additional import permit of over 1,760,000 pounds of poultry for 1979. Could the Minister of Agriculture confirm this and advise the House whether he will continue to allow chicken imports permits to be issued by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question, it is true that some weeks ago an application was made by a particular processing firm for a supplementary permit. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce did contact the national agency. The national agency, in turn, contacted its provincial counterparts. They were able to secure about half the amount of product that that particular processing plant wanted from Canadian sources, and a supplementary permit was issued. However, since that time a number of applications have been received from that processor.

● (1430)

My colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I have appointed a committee which is made up of a cross-section of the industry. We have said publicly that no further supplementary permits would be issued to any processor in Canada without the approval of that committee.

FLOODING OF QUEBEC MARKET WITH POULTRY—MEASURES TO BE TAKEN TO PROTECT PRODUCERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a supplementary. In allotting the quotas, a certain percentage was set for Ontario, another for Quebec and so on for the other parts of the country. In this regard, does the minister know that the Ontario company, Maple Lodge, has flooded the Quebec poultry market with part of the quota allotted to Ontario, so much so that it could lead to the withdrawal of Quebec from the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency? In addition, could the minister take steps to protect Quebec producers who are on the brink of bankruptcy, which will result in financial difficulties for Quebec slaughterhouses?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that some of these comments have been made and, indeed, some of these charges. I am quite certain that the national board, which is made up of provincial counterparts, will be able to resolve this difficulty.

THE BUDGET

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING FROM ALMOST NO ECONOMIC GROWTH

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Last night he indicated to the nation that his government will be satisfied with almost no growth in the economy next year. Consequently, there will be a big increase in unemployment in Canada. Will the Minister of Finance agree to follow what was suggested on April 18, 1978, by the hon. member for St. John's West when he said:

> Any government that is not led by a man obsessed with unemployment in Canada today should resign and get out and let people take over who are obsessed with unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is because I am obsessed with unemployment that we are going to do everything we can to see that these projections do not come true. We are honest with the Canadian public. We are giving the Canadian public what our professional economists think is likely to happen next year. We are going to do everything we can to show that the professional economists are wrong in unemployment as well as in other directions.

I am not going to pretend that inflation is going to be 6.5 per cent, when it is going to be 9.2 per cent, or anything like that, as was done last year. Nor are we satisfied with no growth in the economy. We are expecting real growth of at least one per cent. If our efforts are right, we will have in excess of that despite the impediments that we are carrying on our backs from the past. A lot depends on what happens in the United States of America.

INQUIRY WHETHER ENERGY SELF-SUFFICIENCY TAX WILL BE LEVIED ONLY AFTER AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the commendable efforts of the Minister of Finance last night in the use of the language of Molière, may I be allowed to ask him a question in French today? We are asked to approve this budget which contains a forecasted revenue from 1980 to 1984 of some $13 billion from the self-sufficiency in energy tax. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, nowhere is there any indication of how that tax will be levied, or what type of agreements will have to be reached with the provinces. At this time, there are no agreements.

So my question to the Minister of Finance is this: first, the budget indicates that additional increases in price in July 1980 will not become effective until such time as the new tax applies. Can the minister say whether he intends to apply this tax only after agreements have been reached with the producing provinces, or does he intend to apply it even if there are no agreements with the provinces? Will that tax be levied on corporate income, gross income, or profits, and does the minister intend to levy a 50 per cent tax, or less, on the surplus income of the companies? Finally, does the minister agree that by 1990 that tax will bring us to the point where we now stand, that is, the one explained by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources last Friday in the standing committee, where we will be importing 250,000 barrels of oil—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to answer the hon. member's question, I would have to read over the budget speech of last night and it would take me an hour and five minutes. The oil and gas price increases are going to be as set out in the budget. There will be an energy tax which will give us the revenues as set out in the budget. Whether that is to be a revenue tax or a profits tax has not yet finally been decided.

There will be such a tax. Without a tax there will be no such increases. We are going to take the amount of revenue that is shown in the budget and use that to help people all across Canada and help prepare Canada for self-sufficiency in energy. It was all laid out in the budget last night.

EXCISE TAX ON FARM FUELS—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON PRODUCERS

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given that the forecasts of the officials of the Department of Agriculture are for a drop in farm incomes over the next year of some 12 per cent, and that all producers' estimates find this optimistic in the extreme, given that those projections were made in advance of notice of the over 100 per cent increase in taxes on fuels to the farmer for land preparation, cultivation and harvesting of food, and given the fact that some farm organization representatives are now estimating that this fuel input cost increase is likely to cost something in the order of $50 to $200 more per acre next year, does the minister not now agree—

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Daudlin: —that the additional impact of the increased fuel costs as announced by the Minister of Finance last night is likely to result in an actual loss to the producers, by way of income, more closely approximating 16 per cent than the forecast 12 per cent, and that the rebate of 10 cents proposed by the minister is totally inadequate? Does he not agree that a blue Newfoundland herring drawn over and disguised as a tax concession is, in fact, a direct tax on the production of food and an indirect tax on all consumers in this country?

An hon. Member: Right.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has very little faith in the farmers of Canada if he is going to take that defeatist attitude. Food is always needed. Canadian farmers can produce it. They are efficient producers, and to assist them the excise tax on gasoline is reduced by 10 cents in connection with farm operations, which will be a considerable boost to them.

In addition, we are assisting the farmers by removing the tax burden when they sell their farms at the end of their careers to help in their retirement. We are going to look after the interests of the farmers; the hon. gentleman does not need to worry about that. On a comparative basis, the farmers will be in good shape next year.

REASON FOR 15 CENTS A GALLON EXCISE TAX ON URBAN TRANSIT SYSTEMS

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of Finance. In reply to one of my questions last November 23, the minister indicated that mass transit was a subject dear to his heart, and last night he urged Canadians to cut their consumption of oil products. Can the minister tell the House and the Canadian people why he is imposing a 15 cents a gallon excise tax on urban public transit and thereby taxing the users of this type of service?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government is levying an excise tax on urban transit systems which is 10 cents less than on the other sectors in the country—with the exception of farmers and fishermen—to encourage the use of mass transit. In addition, the energy bank which is to be funded from the new energy tax and other energy revenues coming from the energy tax will be used to help assist the development of urban transit systems throughout Canada on the basis that this is a conservation move. So there will be more good news for urban transit systems in Canada in the next 12 months.

NATIONAL SECURITY

RELEASE OF TASCHEREAU PAPERS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning recent statements attributed to him by the news media in regard to the release of the so-called Taschereau papers.

Is the Prime Minister now in a position to tell the House approximately when, or if, the papers will be released and whether there was really any legitimate statutory power for the former government not to release them after 30 years? Finally, was the non-release decision made in any way, according to investigations so far, to protect the interests of former Liberal governments?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the comment that was attributed to me after a press conference in relation to those files followed a question put to me concerning two files, the Featherbed file and the Taschereau file. I indicated in relation to the Featherbed file that in our judgment it contained primarily gossip and was not a matter to which we intended to give credence by publication.

The question of the Taschereau file is still under consideration. We are looking at a way by which we can have a respected and independent review of the contents of the Taschereau file prior to coming to a decision on whether or not it should be published.

THE BUDGET

SQUARING OF TAX INCREASES WITH ELECTION PROMISES

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I would like him to confirm that the tax increases which were announced last night—over $3.5 billion in personal taxes alone—were the highest tax increases since World War II, and that the effect on the average family will be somewhere between $260 and $480 a year, net, depending on whether one spouse or both spouses are working.

How can the minister square that tax increase with the promise that he and the Prime Minister took to the Canadian people before May 22, that there was going to be a significant reduction in taxes in the first Conservative budget in 17 years?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that this budget and associated measures contain a significant tax reduction for the people of Canada: $1.2 billion for 1980, which hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to stop, a mortgage interest and property tax deduction, another $1 billion in 1981 under the energy tax credit, and $1.4 billion in connection with the index of the income tax.

That is what I can confirm, that every consideration has been given to the Canadian taxpayer, but that we need to have a drive toward conservation and energy self-sufficiency, which is another part of the budget and which the people of Canada are responding to very positively.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, it is clear that this budget should be subtitled "New Adventures in Mathematics". I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of his statement last night that the creation of new jobs and new employment was essential, can he explain to us as well as he explained in his first answer how it is that the government saw fit to increase the cost of unemployment insurance premiums by $800 million at the same time as they are saying they want to increase employment. How does that increase jibe—to use a Newfoundland expression—with the intention of the government to create new jobs?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member accepted my answer to his first question and did not follow it up with a supplementary. As far as jobs are concerned, if the hon. gentleman looks at the budget he will see that the new employment tax credit program is going to create 100,000 jobs; that we are going to spend, in tax expenditures, $150 million more than the official opposition did last year; that we also have a special fund of $50 million for employment creation projects in eastern Canada, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces; and that this whole budget is replete with job-creation through our assistance to small business corporations by making the salaries of spouses deductible in small, unincorporated businesses.

There are 400,000 unincorporated businesses across Canada which can benefit from that, and 300,000 small business corporations from our small business development fund. On and on it goes, a budget of job-creation and reaching toward our potential.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADDITIONAL EXPORTS OF NATURAL GAS TO UNITED STATES—COST OF REPLACEMENT FROM FRONTIER AREAS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. The centre-piece that he announced last night in the budget—at least, the current account showpiece—is the 3.8 trillion cubic feet of gas to be exported to the United States which will bring $15.5 billion according to the minister.

Since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources admitted last week that conventional supplies of gas would run out, or at least demand would exceed supply in 17 years, can the minister give me an estimate of the cost to the next generation of Canadians of replacing this gas from frontier areas which would be far more expensive than what we are selling it at now?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. gentleman this assurance, that the next generation of Canadians will be freezing in the dark if we do not take the steps we are taking now for energy self-sufficiency in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: In connection with the export of gas, that has been approved by the National Energy Board, an independent agency whose members were appointed by the last government—all of them—and who have reached the conclusion after studying this area that we have this surplus that can be exported. Unless we export this surplus gas, we will not have any exploration and development of other sources that is going to go on year after year well into the twenty-first century. So the hon. gentleman does not need to worry: we are looking after the next generation, unlike his government which did not do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCREASE IN PRICE OF OIL—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON FOOD PRICES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that even before last night's brutal budget, spokesmen for the food industry and for consumers at a conference sponsored by Agriculture Canada yesterday were predicting an increase in food prices of at least 15 per cent in 1980 because of transportation and energy costs and high interest rates—a figure which will quickly become even higher as a result of last night's oil price hike—and in view of the fact that the chairman of metro Toronto has been quoted today as saying that it will be necessary to raise property taxes in metro because of the oil price hike, will the minister tell the House how he justifies taking billions of dollars away from consumers while failing to use it to finance energy-saving measures?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the important influences on food prices is the state of the Canadian dollar. Hon. members opposite have been complaining because steps have been taken to try to maintain the Canadian dollar around its present level so that the food and other goods which we import will not increase in price because of the price of our dollar compared to that of the United States, from which we import much of our food. That is one of our concerns. We are very concerned about the situation. It is the government's energy policy and its drive toward conservation and energy saving that is going to result in improvements in food prices in the future. There has to be some short-term pain for long-term gain; that is the way we have to look at it.

EXPENDITURES BY TREASURY BOARD AS A RESULT OF THE BUDGET

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board, who has revelled in his new nickname, "the slasher", which he thought he earned stemming from his bravado about indiscriminate cutting of people and expenses.

Mr. MacEachen: He slashed himself in committee: the "self-slasher."

Mr. Andras: Since the disclosure last night it is evident that he has accepted expenditure increases of 10 per cent per year, greater than in the past three years; expenditure increases from $48 billion to $78 billion in five years, an increase of 60 per cent in those five years; and since in the exposé—and that is what it is—the so-called cash deficit reduction stems, not from expenditure restraint but from increased taxes and an accidental accrual of pension funds, how can the President of the Treasury Board accept the total loss of his credibility, and what is left for him to slash but his own throat?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. member that if he has a knife available, he had better start slashing his own throat after I give him the answer. I cannot get over the gall of the hon. member in standing up and asking that question. He seems not to have read the budget of last night, which made it clear that there is a negative real growth in expenditure after inflation in the figures revealed by my colleague, the Minister of Finance.

● (1450)

Certainly, even the hon. member must know that, based on the figures we revealed last July—which were simply their figures—the figures released last night indicate we are going to narrow the deficit in Canada between now and fiscal 1983 by over $17 billion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Raising taxes.

Mr. Stevens: I think the former president of the treasury board and the immediate past president of the treasury board should get up and apologize to this House for not supporting—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEFICIT FORECAST IN BUDGET

Mr. Arthur Phillips (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my question of the Prime Minister, because earlier the Prime Minister said that one of the main objectives of this budget was to slash the deficit. The hon. minister who just spoke named some figures regarding slashing the deficit, and the people of Canada are being asked to make considerable sacrifices to this end.

My question is a very simple one: Why is it that in the government's own figures, at page 21, the deficit is shown—that is, the excess of expenditures over revenues—as droppping only from $11 billion in the current year to $9 billion five years from now?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if hon. gentlemen will be patient, the reason is this: that is a tremendous decrease, in view of the anticipated inflation, in view of the tremendous interest cost expenses which we cannot control, the $1.7 billion increase in interest expenses—due to the profligacy of the last government—that we are going to have next year in our budget, and in view of the fact that it takes two or three years to get that under control. This is going to be a magnificent achievement. With financial requirements reduced from $10 billion to $4.5 billion in the same time-period, that is a tremendous achievement.

EXCISE TAX ON FARM FUELS—COST TO FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question also goes to the excited Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that last night the minister increased the price of fuel for farmers by some 15 cents a gallon and that there will be a future increase of $4 per barrel coming in 1980— and this is on top of interest rate increases all year long—I would like to ask the minister whether he can tell the House how many hundreds of millions of dollars increase in tax this will mean for farmers. Does he have those figures for the House today?

Second, while he is on his feet, can he tell us why he will not rebate this increase to farmers, since fuel is a necessity, not a luxury, in the production of food?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have never yet seen an NDP member who could excite me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: With one exception, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I think the hon. member should look on the positive side. With this impetus to conservation, we are going to save the importation of 100 million barrels of oil by 1985. We are going to save $2.5 billion of current prices in our deficit and our current account. That is going to help the farmers of Canada; that is going to help all the people of Canada; that is going to give them a future; and that is going to make us a strong country. That is what he should remember.

CONCERN OF FISHERIES COUNCIL OVER INCREASE IN EXCISE TAX ON FUEL

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my good friend from Newfoundland, now that he is in the process of opening his mouth and changing feet. In view of the budget announcement of an increase in the excise tax on fuel to 25 cents a gallon, with the 10-cent rebate to primary producers, and in view of the statement of the Fisheries Council today that this increase raises serious questions about our competitiveness in the export fish market, can the minister confirm that the net increase of 15 cents a gallon, first of all, applies to all fishermen, both salt water and inland, and to all farmers; and, second, does the minister share the expressed concern of the Fisheries Council?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Burin-St. George's on his election to the House.

An hon. Member: You elected him.

Mr. Crosbie: It is true that his provincial district of Hermitage is now PC, so it was a good move.

An hon. Member: What happened to Carter?

Mr. Crosbie: With reference to the hon. member's question, the fishing industry in Canada is in a very healthy state. The main market is in the United States of America. Energy prices in the United States of America have increased far more swiftly than ours, and are going to continue to do so. We are going to keep our fuel costs well below those in the United States of America.

Although costs for the fishing industry and all other industries are going to be increased, they will still be very reasonable, from an energy point of view, compared with any other of the western industrialized countries, particularly in Europe and the United States. If the fishermen carry on with their usual efficiency and enthusiasm, there is no reason for them to worry at all—in addition to which we are giving them assistance. We are making it attractive for investors to invest in fishing vessels of sizes from 40 feet to trawlers, the long-liners. We are doing quite a bit to assist them in that direction.

INVESTMENT IN SMALL BUSINESS—NO TAX SHELTER IN BUDGET

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The government's decision to allow Canadians investing in Canadian companies listed on Canadian stock exchanges a $20,000 tax shelter next year does not extend to investments in small businesses. Will the government indicate why this new opportunity is limited to investors in large corporations and is not afforded to investors in smaller businesses? What has become of the Prime Minister's promise of last year to allow a tax credit for capital investments in small businesses?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the plan to which the hon. gentleman refers is one which will apply to publicly-traded companies on Canadian stock exchanges. For technical reasons, it is impossible to include in that plan companies which do not trade. But there are stock exchanges today which can handle companies in the trading of shares of no great size in the ordinary term, so that this will apply to a great many companies.

In addition, the small business sector will get the tremendous advantage—the incorporated small business sector—of the small business development bond after-tax financing. They will be able to cut their interest costs during 1980 very, very considerably. That is a tremendous incentive and boost to them. In the unincorporated area of small business, they will be able to deduct the salaries of their spouses, at a cost of $150 million. That is a tremendous boost to small business in all sectors, publicly-traded, incorporated and unincorporated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCOME DEBENTURE FINANCING

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance fails to point out that the very measure of which he is so proud is simply a recycling and a retread of an idea which was eliminated in Bill C-17, namely, income debenture financing. As far as the spousal allowance is concerned, he fails to point out that the recipients—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member wish to put a question?

Mr. Johnston: My question is to the Prime Minister in order to elicit a serious response. Why is there this patent discrimination in this budget against the small business sector, where no provision is made to attract equity capital into that sector at this time? Only in the case of listed corporations are these provisions available.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in Bill C-17 we were dealing with a problem of the previous government, where they let the giant corporations—the Petro-Canadas, the billion dollar outfits—get the benefit of after-tax financing. That loophole has now been stopped and we are giving that benefit where it should have been given in the first place—to the small business sector. That is our approach—not the approach of the monopoly capitalists opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SPORTS

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

● (1500)

[English]

Would the minister tell the House what precautions he took to ensure that our national sports organizations which were supported by Loto Canada will continue to receive support after the disappearance of Loto Canada? Also, what level of support can they expect to receive in 1980 as opposed to what they received in 1979?

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism): I have a question today. I should like to take this opportunity to thank the hon. member for his question.

I would like the hon. member to know, through you, Mr. Speaker, that after the wind-down of Loto Canada, as of December 31 there will be $12 million coming from the provinces from the wind-down, the full amount of which fitness and amateur sport will be getting, which means they will be receiving three or four times as much money as they have in the past three or four years. In the past, we have been averaging about $2.7 million, although we were promised at least $6 million annually from the lotteries. Now we will be receiving half of the $24 million which we negotiated, in 1979 dollars, connected with CPI.

THE BUDGET

CEILING ON GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES—EFFECT ON SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The minister is forecasting an 11 per cent inflation rate next year, yet the government has adopted a 10 per cent ceiling on all government expenditures. Since this will mean a $500 million cutback, can the minister indicate to the House what specific programs will be cut, and can he give us an unequivocal assurance that there will be no further cutbacks on health and social programs which are already being eroded by previous government decisions?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question points up the fact that we are tightening expenditures and that under the regime of my friend next to me, the President of the Treasury Board, through his fierce efforts a considerable amount of money will be eliminated from the budget which was previously wasted on cost overruns and the like.

I can also reassure the hon. gentleman that we are not planning any cutbacks in the health or social services. There will be a review to see whether funds can be better directed to those who need them most, not necessarily on a universal basis. This will be studied. It is one of the things we intend to do to better direct the funds. But as for cutbacks, there will be none.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the minister is not a member of the inner cabinet, can he find out from the Prime Minister what programs of his department, if any, will be affected by last night's budget; and will he inform the House and the Canadian people whether senior citizens and low income people will be further cut from government programs?

An hon. Member: He has not been told yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that there is absolutely nothing in the budget of last night—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You won't even be in the outer cabinet from now on.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that members opposite have so little to occupy their minds that they would halt me in the middle of a sentence. I can assure the hon. member and all members of the House that nothing in the budget of last night will adversely affect any health program or, indeed, any social service program. Also, I would like to remind the hon. member that the reviews now being carried out—which we have talked about in the House previously—will continue to be carried out through 1980. Indeed, the way we have approached it so far is to look for ways in which we, as the Minister of Finance has indicated, will be able to provide funds for those most in need.

I am sure the hon. member has already had an opportunity to read the report which has come from the National Council on Welfare entitled "In the Best Interests of the Child". On a number of occasions in the House I have indicated the importance of making sure there is sufficient income for low and moderate-income people. This report gives support to that kind of review, and I thank the hon. member for the question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHRÉTIEN—ALLEGED BUDGETARY LEAK

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege I raised last night after the budget speech. The confidentiality in which the details of a budget are kept is a constitutional practice which forms an integral part of a parliamentary system. Such practice is based on the principle that no individual, whoever he may be, must know in advance the details of a budget which he could use for personal gain.

On July 24, 1975, the hon. member for York-Simcoe, now the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), stated, and I quote:

[English]

Ministers deliver their budget speeches, and any amendments that the minister may think fit thereafter, in a spirit of confidentiality. For example, budget speeches themselves are usually delivered in the evening to avoid any possible effect on the stock market. The tradition of secrecy ensures that all Canadians will enjoy the same advantage or disadvantage with respect to any budgetary matter, and that any announcement will be made first in the House and not privately to those who rightfully have no access and should have no access to that information. I suggest that budget secrecy is essential to guarantee to all taxpayers that no group can escape its share of taxation, and that in particular those whom they have elected to the House of Commons cannot escape laws approved for everybody... The point is not only a question of budgetary secrecy, but also the importance of keeping any tax change also secret, and I would suggest that the two are really one and the same.

All the ministers of finance have been critical of the fact that this tradition was creating some problems for them in carrying on the normal consultations which they wanted to have with either the provincial government, the business community, economists, and so on. Ministers of finance have always been extremely careful about their actions in that field. Of course there are some precedents that are well estabished for this long-standing British tradition, to the effect that ministers of finance must keep budgetary information very close to the chest. This is something that I and all my predecessors were very careful about. I do not want to recite all the precedents, but there are two well-known cases in England where ministers casually revealed some budget information or someone around them did so, such as Hugh Dalton, a former chancellor of the exchequor, who had to resign as a result.

In Canada in 1975 there was a member of the House, namely, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), who was accused by the then opposition of leaking some budget information, which he denied. Despite his denial, the House ruled that he had to justify himself in front of a committee. He went before a committee of the House and explained the matter, following which it was proven that he had done absolutely nothing wrong and no leak had taken place. Nevertheless, members of the House, and especially members who are in the government today, cast innuendoes and accusations of all sorts so that for many weeks thereafter the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was subjected to them. He had to go before the courts to clear his name in the minds of the Canadian public.

On Monday night, on the CTV national news, the Ottawa bureau chief, Craig Oliver, who is one of the senior men in the gallery and a very respected reporter who would not have made this information public had he not been completely sure of his sources, said the following:

The finance minister's budget will be hitting hard at major corporations in Canada. They face an increase of five points in their corporate tax rates from 46 to 51 per cent. The government is expected to raise one and a half billion dollars with the measures, which sources say will be the highest corporate tax rates in years. To sweeten the pill they will receive some tax breaks.

But for individuals, there are no tax increases in the budget. However, there are no cuts either. To help with the increase in the costs of energy for low income Canadians, Ottawa will offer an energy tax credit of $80, to those whose income is less than $18,000 per year. If there are two of you in the house, you can both claim, and it doesn't matter whether you live in a single family dwelling in a highrise or whether you rent. The measure will cost Ottawa $1 billion. The budget will be heavily energy-orientated in other ways too—it will increase the assistance to and expand the home insulation program. To raise a lot of the revenues the government requires for the budget measures, Mr. Crosbie will impose a 25-cent transportation fuel excise tax—it will be registered on Canadian gas pumps Wednesday morning.

This is very close to what was in the budget. Today the press reports all over Canada that there were last night line-ups at the gas pumps because of it. The fact that he was very close to the real thing—

● (1510)

Mr. MacEachen: He was dead on in some places.

Mr. Chrétien: Of course it is very obvious it was someone who spoke—who did not deliver a document, but spoke to him, or through him, to another person.

It is nothing personal which I have against the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). But I have to tell the House that I have been the minister of finance myself. I went through an extremely difficult consultation with the provinces where some members of the opposition accused me, because I could not be as candid as I wanted, of being a dictator. That was because I was doing something with the provinces for the first time in the budgetary process in Canada. I was trying to involve the provincial governments. In spite of that, I took all the necessary measures to make sure that there was no leak. That gave me extreme difficulties in this House and outside, but I always kept in mind the responsibility which I had in terms of budget secrecy.

There were some stories in the press that it was the first time in history this budget was kind of a "strip tease", because we had bits and pieces—everything out—until yesterday we realized that there was absolutely nothing new when we sat in the House for more than an hour. Everyone knew, one way or another, what would be in this budget.

It is pretty ironic that I would be standing in my place defending the best British traditions. I am sure Mr. Diefenbaker would be very proud of me standing to defend the British tradition and asking the Minister of Finance to take his responsibility. Of course it is extremely difficult, and I have a lot of sympathy for the minister. He is forced to conduct those consultations in order to have a budget document prepared. Sometimes he has to consult with the department and so on. He has the responsibility of making sure that there is absolutely no leak.

With what I read to Mr. Speaker today, and with what has been said in the House over the last few days, I have no choice but to raise this problem. The oil companies have jumped the gun on the government by increasing the price of oil and gasoline in the last few days. There was a fantastic indiscretion by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) a few weeks ago, when he said to the House that he was to consult the industry before increasing its taxes. We see that he has done just that, because the industry was able to jump the gun and increase the price of gasoline last week.

I have absolutely no choice but to raise this fundamental problem of parliamentary democracy. When we have a government that is responsible to this House, the Minister of Finance has to take all the necesary steps to ensure that there is absolutely no leak. I realize that a pair of mukluks is more leaky than a pair of shoes. Also I realize that the hon. minister has no choice but to reveal to the House what happened. In order to help him to clarify the question of whether there was a leak—and I think there was a leak—in my judgment he will have to take his responsibility in the best British tradition.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid):

That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to investigate the advance knowledge by journalists and others of measures to be proposed in the budget, including proposed changes in corporate and commodity taxes, in advance of the delivery of the budget; and that the committee report its findings no later than December 31, 1979, and in the absence of a final report, make an interim report by that date.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is really straining with this motion. First I will submit to Your Honour that there is no question of privilege whatsoever.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Precisely.

Mr. Crosbie: But just let me say on a factual basis that there has been no budget leak. There was certainly no budget leak for which I am responsible. There was no budget leak from the Department of Finance. There was no leak, period.

Everyone in the country has known for some months that the Government of Canada is involved in negotiations with the provinces over the energy situation. It has been known in public documents tabled at the first ministers' conference and given to the government of Saskatchewan, the government of Alberta, and to the government of British Columbia. It was known to dozens of officials in the government that there were being contemplated energy price increases and an excise tax. They were given to the government of Ontario, every government in Canada. They were filed at the first ministers' conference.

It was widely known that there was likely to be an energy tax, and there was speculation to that effect. Some speculators said that it would be 30 cents, some said that it would be 20 cents, some said that it would be 25 cents. In actual fact it was 17 cents.

Mr. Lalonde: You are not even right. It is 18 cents.

Mr. Crosbie: If we look at the report of Mr. Craig Oliver of Monday, December 10, Mr. Oliver was guessing like everybody else. He guessed the 25 cents, and he guessed wrong because the increase to the personal consumer is not 25 cents; it is 17 cents.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is 18 cents.

Mr. Crosbie: I am sorry, 18 cents.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: When we look at this broadcast again, what do we see? Mr. Craig Oliver said that the rise in corporate income tax "will be a heavy blow to major corporations; they face a jump of a full five points from the present income tax rate of 46 per cent to 51 per cent; government insiders say the increase will raise as much as $2 billion." That is completely inaccurate. There is no accuracy to it at all. It is not correct—incorrect to the last degree. The increase of 5 per cent is in corporate surtax, Mr. Speaker. The 5 per cent corporate surtax will raise $370 million in the year to come. That is not even near $2 billion. It is really stretching the point. There was no increase in the corporate tax rate at all. So much for that allegation!

Then Mr. Oliver went on to say or to guess that there would be an energy tax credit. The possibility of an energy tax credit was discussed with all the governments that I have mentioned. They were aware of the fact that there might be an energy tax credit. Mr. Oliver suggested that there would be some incentives, that low income families would get assistance. He said that any Canadian whose income is less than $18,000 a year would receive a flat energy tax credit of $80. That is not accurate at all. It is every Canadian who has an income of up to $21,380 a year. So, on and on it goes.

Let us look at the rest of his report. He said that in the budget we would beef up grants for home insulation programs. That was not done in the budget. He said that we would offer generous tax incentives to convert furnaces from oil to natural gas. That is not in the budget.

An hon. Member: You should have done it.

Mr. Crosbie: On and on it goes. There was no leak in the budget secrecy process. But let me say that we are trying to open up the budgetary process. There is quite a difference between a budget leak which could give people a chance to make a large amount of money on the stock market or whatever, if they had inside knowledge, and some speculation that there will be an excise tax increase or not an excise tax increase, or whatever. So this is just in the realm of speculation.

In addition the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) yesterday, when asked a question in the House, denied that there was any budget leak. He denied the fact that there was any budget leak.

An hon. Member: How does he know?

Mr. Crosbie: This broadcast was made on Monday evening. That denial has not been accepted by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) who should know better.

I should like to refer to a statement made by Your Honour on April 17, 1978, where you ruled on a matter which involved the hon. member for Saint-Maurice. It was alleged that there had been leaks in connection with certain sales tax proposals. I do not like to mention this as it is a very painful experience for the hon. member for Saint-Maurice. He was trimmed, pounced on, trounced on and jounced on by the government of Quebec because of these sales tax proposals last year. Before the budget was brought down there was a story in the Toronto Star which indicated there were going to be these sales tax proposals in the budget. The actual sales tax proposals were outlined in the Toronto Star. This was also done on CTV national news on April 9. There were also allegations that the CTV had said there were going to be changes to research and development benefits for corporations. They had revealed that before the budget. The minister was very, very injured by the fact that allegations of leaks had been made against him.

Your Honour dealt with the matter on April 17. You pointed out that the minister had made it clear that there was ample room for speculation with respect to research and development benefits as this subject had been discussed at a recent first ministers' conference. That is right on, and a wonderful precedent in relation to the matter he is bringing up here this afternoon. His excuse last year was that research and development benefits had been discussed at a first ministers' conference. The whole House knows that energy taxes and energy tax credits, and the whole business, have been discussed at first ministers' conferences. Your Honour then went on to say:

> In addition to those, it seems to me that the matter has been disposed of in a complete way, as far as this House is concerned, by the minister's explanation that he was not able to discover and did not take any responsibility in any way for any leak of budgetary information.

I say that I am not able to discover and I do not take any responsibility in any way for any leak of budgetary information, and in fact there was no leak, so certainly I am not going to take the responsibility.

Then Your Honour went on to say:

> —I must express some serious doubt whether the conventional budgetary secrecy falls within the area of privilege at all.

You dismissed the whole allegation and the fact that it could have been a breach of privilege last year. The member has cited nothing to indicate any leak of budgetary secrecy. There was no leak, Mr. Speaker. There was scuttlebutt and there was speculation, as there always is when a budget is coming forward. Naturally people last night went to fill up their cars before the budget came down because they had heard so much speculation about an excise tax increase. The only one who did not was myself. I did not dare go and do it, but everybody else in the country who had any sense did.

So, Mr. Speaker, as far as mukluks are concerned, the hon. member is in the muck without any luck.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion that has been put forward is to be seconded by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). I am going to permit the hon. member a brief intervention, but I must point out to the House that there is no allegation in the motion of any misconduct on the part of the minister or on the part of any other member. The motion and precedents to which I have referred, and to which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) has referred, it would seem to me, ought to lay the matter to rest. However, I am prepared to hear briefly from the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River since he is named as the seconder of the motion.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refresh your memory as to the precedents on this going back to 1975. Your Honour may recall that you were in the chair and at that point I was accused of having released budgetary information illegally. There was an investigation by the Committee on Privileges and Elections as a result of a decision subsequently taken by the House and after Your Honour had made a decision that, indeed, there was a prima facie case of privilege involved. I do not want to go into the details of that experience, but I do want to indicate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member should realize that this is the point I have just made. That motion made an allegation directly against the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. This motion makes no allegation against the actions of any member of the House of Commons. That is the fundamental difference.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the motion says there have been budget leaks. Your Honour said in 1975 that the question of budgetary secrecy was one of the great constitutional conventions of our system, and that anything that broke that obviously put the people who had done that in contravention of our constitution.

It seems to me the fact that this is mentioned, with some evidence by the hon. member, is an allegation that the privileges of myself, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), and other members of the House of Commons, have been breached.

I think we could have an argument as to whether in point of fact budgetary leaks did take place as alleged by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, but that would be the job of the standing committee to decide. What is important is the fact that the hon. member for Saint-Maurice has brought forward some evidence to indicate that, indeed, a great deal about the budget was well known before the budget was presented to the House of Commons.

I am prepared to agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) and also with the hon. member for Saint-Maurice that the budgetary procedures that we go through in this House may, indeed, be obsolete. It may well be that with the kind of mixture of financial considerations by the federal and provincial governments we must have more negotiations taking place at public meetings between the two levels of government. I accept that, but the point is that if the Minister of Finance is going to change the rules in midstream, he ought at least to let the House of Commons know. He did not do that, and we feel that he has in fact changed the rules in midstream. Had he told us, we probably would not be raising this point of order.

There is no question, if you take the transcript of what was given by Mr. Oliver on CTV news on December 10, that you will find that he was more right in his discussion of what was going to be in the budget than was the Minister of Finance, in his rebuttal. Let me give you a couple of examples.

The Minister of Finance said that Mr. Oliver was wrong in his discussion of the increased taxes on corporations. Mr. Oliver said there was going to be an increase of five points in the corporate tax rates from 46 per cent to 51 per cent. The 5 per cent figure was correct. What Mr. Oliver got wrong was not that there was going to be an increase in the tax rate, but that it was going to be a surtax. The total amount of revenue to be raised over the life of that tax he said was going to be $1 billion, not the figure given by the Minister of Finance which was for one year. I would suggest in that case that the Minister of Finance has misled the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Reid: I think if you go on to the other point that the Minister of Finance dwelt a great deal upon, it was that Mr. Oliver's statement was that the excise tax would be a 25-cent one, when it was only going to be 18. Let us read what Mr. Oliver actually said:

—Mr. Crosbie will impose a twenty-five cent transportation fuel excise tax—

What is the value of that tax, Mr. Speaker? It is 25 cents. He has raised it from seven cents to 25 cents, and that is what Mr. Oliver said.

I think when you look at what is there and you take a look at the evidence, you will have to decide that Mr. Oliver had more accurate information than in respect of previous budgets we have had, particularly if Your Honour goes back and looks at other points in time when allegations of the same sort were raised against ministers of finance. Those allegations, after those budgets came down, were never seen to be as accurate as these particular allegations were in this specific case. It is for that reason we feel there is a question of privilege.

We think also that if Your Honour finds there is a prima facie case of privilege we should also have the reference expanded in order that we could look into the question of budgetary secrecy.

I agree with the Minister of Finance and the former minister of finance in thinking that the system we have entraps us into a situation where often we have to go the hard route of raising these matters on a question of privilege, and there ought to be other ways of resolving the difficulty. Successive ministers of finance have argued that there, indeed, is a real problem in terms of this matter, and we agree that it should be cleared up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House will understand, of course, that I am faced with an intervention by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) in which he has directly and categorically denied that there was any leak for which he assumes responsibility.

The House has several traditions, one of which is related to budgetary secrecy. The House also has the very firm and very strong tradition that it always accepts the word of any member given in debate in this House. When the Minister of Finance at any time stands in his place and says, as he has said today, that there is no leak, that he has examined and attempted to discover whether there was and finds none, and therefore does not take responsibility for one and, furthermore, disputes the fact that one in fact took place, that word must be accepted. Therefore, I am not able now to take action which would amount to a contradiction of that word unless, of course, there is a proposal by the House to directly contradict the word of the Minister of Finance in the debate today by accusing him, or someone else, specifically of taking responsibility, or failing in their responsibility, to safeguard budgetary secrecy. That allegation has not been made in this motion, and if there is any basis for such an allegation it will have to be made specifically.

There is a very clear rule which was enunciated by one of my most distinguished predecessors, former Speaker Michener, that to accuse a member of this House of misconduct in any way, and to expect that that accusation can be sent to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation and examination, the allegation of misconduct by a member will have to be clear. The minister has stood in his place and denied that he is responsible for any leak and wishes to argue, as he has said, that there is not in fact any leak at all. On the face of that, I have to set aside the question of privilege, after having permitted, I think, ample contribution by the mover and the seconder of the motion.

I cannot find on the face of the motion, as I am being asked to find, that there has been a publication, even if I were to be persuaded that the publication would appear to be based in some way on a theft of the budget document, as the result of a leak. The fact of an accurate appraisal or prediction of what is in a budget by an outside source speaks in and of itself and on its own merits of the fact that a transgression of the practices of the House has taken place, is not enough to constitute an investigation. I need something more than merely the existence of the prediction, a prediction with which the Minister of Finance takes issue. Therefore, the motion in its form does not allege any misconduct by the minister.

It is a motion based simply on the existence of a report by the reporter who was referred to in the argument. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has indicated, first, that he differs with that prediction and, secondly, having investigated the matter and indicated to the House that he is satisfied that there has been no leak and that he is certainly not responsible for it, the House, in its traditions, accepts the word of the Minister of Finance. On that basis, the matter remains closed.

However, if a member wishes specifically to raise an allegation at any time, as was the case with respect to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) when the motion made special reference to him, he may do so. When the matter came to a conclusion, it was obviously under a different consideration because it followed the Michener precedent. This motion does not come within that precedent at all. Therefore, I find this to be a different case and do not consider it to have a priority which can be attached to this kind of motion if it does in fact affect the privileges of the House.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I recognize from the comments which you have made that you have recognized, not only today but in the past, the importance of the principle of cabinet secrecy and its impact upon financial documents such as the budget. From what you have said, sir, I do not hear any withdrawal from that recognition which you have advanced in the past. I trust that what you have said in your decision is that we are completely free to present such a motion as would be in order in terms of calling the privileges of the House into play so that in effect we could get a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections as was the case with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid).

I trust that we are not debarred by your ruling today, sir, on circumstances that may involve circumstances which we have already identified, from presenting a motion that would be in order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is asking me to rule in advance on the procedural irregularities of a motion which I have not seen yet, he knows that I would not do that.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there still arises the question raised by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) as to what extent does an absolute denial by a Minister of Finance with respect to a particular leak exist. I assume that we have not come to the time when the Minister of Finance would have to face another motion drawn on exactly the same set of facts on another occasion, and to which he would give the same denial. That would be a waste of time for the House, and that is certainly within the purview of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) is on precisely the same ground as the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais). It is premature to speculate on what procedural decisions will have to be made until we see the motion.

I have notice of questions of privilege by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco).

[Translation]

MR. CORBIN—LANGUAGE USED BY MEMBER FOR KOOTENAY WEST (MR. BRISCO)

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 35 which says a member cannot use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, during the debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-20, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) said the following:

[English]

Mr. Chairman, I would ask if this is Parliament or is it a zoo? Because those are the animals over there, and I am damned well ashamed of them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me in accordance with the very spirit of Standing Order 35 and considering Beauchesne's citation 319, it is clearly indicated no member shall use blasphemous or indecent language. Beauchesne's citation 324 dealing with unparliamentary expressions says, and I quote:

—much depends upon the tone and manner, and intention, of the person speaking;—

The language may be abusive, unparliamentary or indecent. Mr. Speaker, I believe the tone goes far beyond the words, and the tone the hon. member for Kootenay West used to make that statement yesterday appeared to me at first glance both malicious and vicious. I was not the only member who rose on a point of order or a question or privilege yesterday. There was also the hon. member for Verchères (Mr. Loiselle) who dealt with the same matter. In addition, in Beauchesne, in the list of forbidden parliamentary expressions, it is clearly indicated that the word "animal" is prohibited.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to make this point of order harder than necessary. I quite simply ask you, if you think I am right in my argument, to ask the hon. member of Kootenay West to withdraw his offensive words toward all members on this side of the House, men and women alike.

[English]

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, at the time of my outburst yesterday I felt it was warranted. I would like to correct the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) who has used the descriptive adjective "vicious", and say that I do not have a vicious bone in my body. I have read my remarks, which were directed at no one in particular. I have also read the comments of the chairman, who felt that I was not out of order because I had not directed them to anyone in particular.

However, for the sake of the decorum of this House I do not hesitate to withdraw the word "animals".

Mr. Speaker: I think we have two principles here. The first is that it is always the individual presiding over the meeting who is in the best position to judge. The chairman at the time made a ruling with which I would not want to interfere, since he was the one present at the meeting when the words were spoken. The second principle is that technically it is difficult to ascribe an absolute meaning to any word so that in all circumstances it will be unparliamentary. But without waiting for that, the hon. member, having had an opportunity to reconsider his intervention, has rather generously withdrawn it. I think that that is in accordance with the best principle of the conduct of the House.

MR. BRISCO—NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD HEARING IN VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, if I may turn for just a moment to something which is perhaps a little more enlightening, yesterday when I rose on a question of privilege you, sir, indicated that it was not a question of privilege but made a contribution in your summary which was of significant value. I want to report to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House that on the basis of perhaps our mutual contributions on the question of the National Energy Board, it has today adjourned the meeting in Vancouver until January, 1980. I thank you for your help.

MR. KAPLAN—STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of statements made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) on December 6 before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. He appeared before the committee to deal with his estimates. On that occasion he announced a cutback was taking place by the government in its program to support publicly sponsored boat people as refugees from Vietnam. He indicated that in taking his decision he had consulted with the provinces.

● (1540)

I have a transcript here of his remarks before the committee where he said:

—committee members appreciate that federal-provincial consultations are an important part of my mandate—

Later he said:

And at the same time I should say that virtually all those provinces made the point—and this was made no more strongly than by Mr. Couture in the province of Quebec—they said: can you not find some way to provide increased food and medical aid to the victims of starvation in Kampuchea, Thailand. And it is having all those factors in mind—

He was referring to the consultations. Subsequently, an article appeared in La Presse on December 7 in which Mr. Jacques Couture denied that he had been consulted by the minister and denied that he was in favour of the change which the minister had indicated he was making after several provincial consultations. Yesterday, for the first time, I was able to speak to the office of Mr. Couture, the minister of immigration in Quebec, and was able to confirm from their point of view the accuracy of this report, that is, that Mr. Couture had not been consulted about these changes and that he did not approve of them.

In view of that, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, perhaps as much as anything, to give the minister an opportunity to indicate whether he or the minister of immigration for the province of Quebec was making accurate statements about the consultations which are alleged to have taken place.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will realize that for me to permit this would be an extension of the committee proceedings into this House in this way. That is an unwarranted extension of our practice. If the matter is to be pursued any further, it will have to be done in committee or in some other way on the floor of the House. To raise in this way what is evidently a dispute between two persons, one of whom is not a member of this House, on a matter which took place outside this House, would seem to be inviting an extension of committee proceedings on to the floor of this House. The matter will have to be pursued either in committee or brought on to the floor of the House in some other way before I can deal with it.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REVIEW OF PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION

On the Order: Government notices of motion:

December 10, 1979—The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion—The following proposed motion:—That the Standing Committee on Regional Development be authorized to review: the present role of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration in keeping with perceived federal responsibilities; whether the legislative base of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration should be expanded to include non-agricultural areas and other sectors of the economy, or whether these activities should continue to be implemented under the general Department of Regional Economic Expansion legislation; whether the agency should continue to operate under the auspices of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion; whether the agency should operate in the prairie provinces only, or whether there is a requirement for similar programs in other parts of Canada; whether the agency should continue to exist as a federal agency and if there are any changes to be made in its management and administration;

That the committee report back to the House of Commons no later than September 1980, on any legislation required to implement the committee's recommendations; and

That the committee be empowered to retain the services of expert advisers and to commission studies or research to assist in its work and that it also be empowered to retain such professional, technical, clerical and stenographic help as may be required.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 21(2) this notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

WAYS AND MEANS

MOTION REGARDING CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 60, I now table in both official languages, a notice of ways and means motion regarding the Customs Tariff, and request that you designate an order of the day for the consideration thereof.

This is the customs tariff that results from the MTN-GATT negotiations, the Tokyo round.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 46, 79, 71, 189, 208, 292, 301, 320, 442, 593, 594 and 597.

I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) said question 79 after 46 instead of 69. I believe the intention was 69.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): (a) 727 (b) 9.

NOISE LEVEL

Question No. 292—Mr. Herbert:

Does the government intend to introduce legislation requiring the labelling of all appliances, equipment and vehicles to indicate the decibel output of the item and, if so, will a maximum noise level be established?

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue):

Under the Hazardous Products Act, there is already a maximum allowable noise level of 100 decibels for toy products. Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada does not plan to introduce legislation requiring the labelling of all appliances, equipment and vehicles to indicate the noise emission of the products, nor does the department intend to establish maximum noise levels for all such products.

Labour Canada: Labour Canada does not plan to introduce legislation requiring the labelling of all appliances, equipment and vehicles to indicate the noise emission of these products, nor does the department intend to establish maximum noise levels for all such products. The Canada Labour Code which deals with occupational safety and health in federal enterprises, has no provisions for regulating this area. Noise control of these products is subject to provisions of provincial legislation to which provincial governments are actively involved in environmental noise concerns and controls at the manufacturing level.

However, an existing Canadian Standards Association (CSA) standard for chain saws, developed at the request of Labour Canada, includes a sound level and labelling clause which we plan to reference in the Canada hand tool regulations.

Background Information: Under the Canada Labour Code, Labour Canada is responsible for regulating occupational noise exposure in federal work places. The Canada noise control regulations, which apply in federal enterprises, specify the requirements to preclude hearing impairment by the workers. Conplementary provincial legislation also exists in this area. Health and Welfare Canada advises that it does not presently have any regulations under its Radiation Emitting Devices Act concerning noise emission, either audible or inaudible, of equipment but that department is looking at the development of guidelines for occupational noise. Environment Canada no longer has a noise program.

Provincial governments generally are concerned with and are actively involved in environmental noise concerns and controls. For example, the province of Ontario has developed a model modern municipalities in the province. The Canadian Standards Association (CSA) is presently developing a voluntary standard entitled the "Measurement and Rating of the Noise Output of Consumer Appliances." This draft standard includes a proposed labelling component concerning noise output of products. An existent standard at the request of Labour Canada for chain saws includes a sound level and labelling clause.

In the U.S.A., the office of noise control, environmental protection agency, has recently put forward a new package proposing noise labelling requirements for a variety of products such as equipment and appliances.

Transport Canada: Under the authority of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act the level of noise emitted by motor vehicles manufactured in or imported into Canada is regulated. The current maximum noise levels for various categories of vehicles when measured in accordance with specified test methods are as follows:

Motorcycles	86 dbA—decibels, A—scale
Passenger Cars, Light Trucks and Vans	80 dbA—decibels, A—N—scale
Heavy Duty Trucks and Buses	83 dbA—decibels, A—scale

It is planned to recommend requirements for the labelling of motorcycles by the manufacturer with the maximum noise level produced in a simple stationary test, in order to facilitate the control of inuse noise by the appropriate authorities. No plans currently exist for similar labelling of other categories of vehicles.

ST-JEAN MILITARY BASE, QUEBEC

Question No. 301—Mr. Herbert:

1. What was the total value of construction at the St.-Jean Military Base, Quebec, in each of the past five years?

2. For the same period, how many (a) contractors (b) sub-contractors had contracts exceeding $100,000 and, in each case, what was the name of the company and the total value of the work performed?

3. For the same period, what was the total design cost and who were the principle firms of designers?

4. (a) How many contractors and sub-contractors listed in Part 2 had authorized addition work exceeding twenty per cent of their original contracts (b) were any working on a cost plus percentage basis?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1974/75	$ 1,199,912
1975/76	2,972,369
1976/77	14,470,373

MORTGAGE INTEREST

Question No. 320—Mr. Herbert:

1. Is the government aware of the many errors made by chartered banks and other financial institutions in the calculation of mortgage interest and, if so, what measures are envisaged to correct the situation?

2. Has the government considered making it illegal for the vendor of a mortgage to absolve himself of any responsibility from any errors in mortgage interest calculation which are subsequently found?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance):

1. The government is not aware, at the present time, of any widespread errors in the calculations of mortgage interest by the chartered banks and other financial institutions. Rules defining the calculation of mortgage interest are set out in section 6 of the Interest Act and financial institutions must act in accordance with them. On occasions in the past when the government has received correspondence from individuals suggesting that an error has been made, investigations have been carried out in order to resolve the problem. The new disclosure regulations which will accompany the revised Bank Act will also be of help to the consumer in this respect as they will require the bank to clarify the cost of borrowing to consumers and the manner in which charges are being calculated.

2. The second question deals with the legal rights of certain parties upon discovering an error sometime over the life of a mortgage. This is a question of contract law which falls under provincial jurisdiction. The question of a mortgagor's right upon the assignment of title to his mortgage to another party is covered under applicable provincial law, usually under the Mortgage Act. Whether or not the originator of the mortgage can be held responsible for the error is determined in accordance with the contract law in that province.

CHARTERED BANKS—GENERAL LOANS

Question No. 442—Mr. Herbert:

What was the chartered banks' percentage increase in the average annual rate of general loans in each of the past five years and, of this percentage increase, what was the business loan component?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance):

This information is published monthly in table 10 of the Bank of Canada Review. For the years ended December 31, the percentage increases were:

	General Loans	Business Loans
1978	12.8	10.0
1977	12.6	11.0
1976	21.5	21.5
1975	15.5	12.9
1974	19.1	20.0

DEFENCE CONSTRUCTION (1951) LIMITED—EUROPEAN PROJECTS

Question No. 593—Mr. Herbert:

What was the cost to Defence Construction (1951) Limited in the fiscal year 1978-79 for the administration of its European projects?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): $248,777.

DEFENCE CONSTRUCTION (1951) LIMITED—RECOVERY OF EXPENSES

Question No. 594—Mr. Herbert:

Was any of the $509,322 shown in the 1978-79 fiscal year financial statement of Defence Construction (1951) Limited as recovery of expenses from government departments and agencies, recovered from the Department of Public Works and, if so, what was the amount?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): No.

DEFENCE CONSTRUCTION (1951) LIMITED—EMPLOYEES' BENEFITS

Question No. 597—Mr. Herbert:

In the last fiscal year, what percentage of interest was added by Defence Construction (1951) Limited to (a) accrued employees' leave (b) provision for employee benefits?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): None.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motions for the production of papers No. 40 in the name of the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Roy).

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC—SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES DURING WARTIME

Motion No. 40—Mr. Roy (Beauce):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the agreement signed during the War 1939-45 (1942) between the government and the government of the province of Quebec concerning the suspension of certain taxes during wartime.

[Translation]

Mr. Ron Ritchie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will answer for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). The information requested by the hon. member for Beauce is contained in the wartime fiscal agreement between the Government of Canada and the government of Quebec. This document is public and available at the Library of Parliament. I would therefore ask that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion withdrawn?

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERBERT—UNAVAILABILITY OF PAPERS PURSUANT TO NOTICE OF MOTION FOR PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, when I rose in the House on Friday to discuss a document that was relevant to the debate, if I may digress somewhat to another motion, you told me to remember that Wednesday was the day to bring up such points. I therefore would like to bring to your attention, and to the attention of the House, the fact that there remain outstanding three sets of documents that I have asked for and the House has ordered to be produced. If the government is going to inform the House and the public at large that the documents are to be produced, I suggest that it should at least indicate the reason for the delay.

Incidentally, the document to which I referred on Friday was produced in my office yesterday afternoon, some four weeks after the government said it would be produced. I thank the government for producing the document.

While I am on my feet, may I refer to the fact that of a total of 29 sets of documents which I have requested, four have been produced, three are now outstanding, awaiting production by the government which has said it will produce them, eight sets of documents have been refused, and 14 requests, at the moment, have not been answered by the government. In other words, they have neither said that I cannot have them nor that they cannot be produced. They have given no reason at all. At the moment, out of 29 requested, four have been produced.

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the kind remarks of the hon. member with respect to the productions that have taken place. I do not think I have to tell him that sometimes there is difficulty in locating the documents and the information. I think I can repeat to him the undertaking of the government to comply, to the greatest extent possible, with the request of hon. members.

I am sure the hon. member will be interested to know that in terms of the percentage of answers to questions, this government has exceeded the former government in the last session. If the hon. gentleman would like me to produce statistics with respect to that, I shall be pleased to do so.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, just before I adjourned the debate yesterday evening, I said:

> The late R. B. Bennett would be proud of this new Minister of Finance this evening, but I do not think Canadians generally, especially middle and lower-income Canadians, would be proud of the minister or of the Conservative government. They will be hoping for an early opportunity to get rid of that government.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, R. B. Bennett was the Conservative prime minister and leader of the Conservative government that was in power in Canada from approximately 1930 to 1935, the years of the Great Depression. There are disturbing resonances and similarities between what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) said and proposed in his budget last night and what Conservative ministers of finance said and did during the dark days of the thirties. They had the same fixation with the deficit as the present Minister of Finance and his government. Like the present minister, they insisted that tax increases, especially increases in sales and excise taxes, were necessary in order to reduce or eliminate government deficits, irrespective of the effects on the economy.

In 1932, for example, the Conservative minister of finance of that day, in presenting his budget said, I am told, it was necessary, "at whatever sacrifice, (to) fully meet our financial obligations, balance our budget and preserve our national credit". He went on to say:

> This course may result in hardship. It may entail sacrifice. But in the long run it will result in less hardship, it will call for less sacrifice than that which would flow from a policy less courageous.

We know all too well the results of that courageous Conservative policy of the 1930s. It helped push Canada into a depression, with untold hardship for millions of Canadians. In comparing what the minister proposed last night with what his predecessors did in the early years of the 1930s, it is obvious that the minister and his Conservative colleagues are like the Bourbon kings of Europe, of whom it was said regarding their past experience, "They learned nothing and they remembered nothing".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: This cannot be said of the Canadian people. They remember the harmful effects of Conservative policies during the 1930s and the harmful effects of Conservative policies during the years of the Diefenbaker government in the late 1950s and early 1960s. They remember the harmful effects on the Canadian economy of the Conservative non-government that we have had already over the past six months. The Canadian people have also learned a lot from what happened to Canada in the past 50 years during those times when Conservative governments were in office. The Canadian people have learned a lot from observing what is in this budget and comparing it with what the Conservatives promised in this House before the last election, and on platforms across the country during the election campaign.

The Conservatives promised that they would reduce personal income tax to Canadians by some $2.5 billion. They promised to do this in their first budget. They promised to do it even though they believed the government's budgetary deficit to be too high, and even though they predicted it would be higher than the Liberals predicted it would be, and higher than the Minister of Finance admitted it has turned out to be.

On November 20, 1978, speaking in the last budget debate, the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), then leader of the opposition, said, "We are in a deep deficit position today in this country". But in spite of this, he went on in the same speech to say that Canadians needed a "decrease in federal income taxes of at least $2 billion in favour of all Canadians who could spend that money quickly here in Canada". I say that is quite a change from what we heard in the budget speech last night. The Prime Minister also proposed, at the same time, his mortgage interest deductibility scheme.

In that same debate, the budget debate of last November, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), then the spokesman on finance for the official opposition, said that the deficit for 1979-80 would be $13 billion. This turned out to be quite incorrect. In fact the Minister of Finance has admitted the deficit is substantially below that figure.

The President of the Treasury Board, when he was spokesman on finance for the official opposition, argued also in that debate that the budgetary deficit of the government would rise to $16 billion by 1983. Yet, in spite of this, a few months later in January of this year, while speaking as leader of the opposition, the Prime Minister told CBC News Magazine, in a famous interview—although I suppose it is one the Prime Minister would like to forget—"that to reduce current and future deficits the government must spend more money now to stimulate the economy". A few weeks later he told a reporter that this stimulative deficit would last as long as three years. The Prime Minister and the Conservatives obviously have done yet another flip-flop. The Minister of Finance said just before the budget, as hon. members will recall, that the only stimulative deficit that he would agree to was a smaller deficit.

In order to work out their doctrinaire Conservative fixation with the government's deficit, the Minister of Finance and the Conservatives are willing to force the Canadian economy to come to a halt. They are willing to see tens of thousands of Canadians out of work. They are willing and anxious to impose on Canadians, in addition to the burden of record high interest rates they have placed on them since June 4, the burdens of double-digit inflation and higher taxation. Surely the health of the Canadian economy cannot be looked at primarily in terms of the government's deficit. What is also important, surely, are measures of performance such as the growth of employment, the growth of the economy, and the level of the cost of living. This is not what the Conservatives are doing in last night's budget. These measures are being given second place to a concept which was discredited or, at least, greatly called into question as a result of the bitter experience of the Conservative government of R. B. Bennett in the 1930s.

The budget speech contains the admission that both the government's deficit and the cumulative national debt must be looked at and measured, not in absolute terms, not simply in terms of how many billions of dollars they are, but in terms of what they represent as a percentage of gross national product. Our national debt at this time is in fact a lower percentage of our gross national product than it was during the years of the last Conservative government in the 1960s.

Even the government's own projections accompanying the budget show the results of the higher taxes it proposes for middle and lower-income Canadians will have limited effect on the size of the government's budgetary deficit, the difference between its expenditures and its revenues, a reduction from some $11 billion to some $9 billion by 1984. I want to say in passing that it is significant—perhaps I should say I hope it is not too significant—that all these Conservative projections end in the ominous year, 1984. I hope that concepts associated with 1984 will not arise out of the mis-government and the non-government of the Conservatives as seen in the budget presented last night.

The further reduction in cash requirements which the government projects in additon to the reduction in its budgetary deficit will come through what the budget papers make clear are non-budgetary manipulations of government loans and investments and its employee pension funds. Yet the government wants Canadians to pay a terrible price for all of this in terms of higher taxes, fewer jobs, less economic growth and more inflation. Prior to the election, the Conservatives said they would reduce the government's deficit not by raising taxes but by cutting expenditures. They are allowing expenditures to rise by 10 per cent, an amount higher than the Liberals' intended target. As I recall, their target was some 8 per cent.

The Conservatives are promising to cut expenditures. They criticized the Liberals for allowing expenditures to rise too much and too fast, but they are admitting they are going to spend more.

An hon. Member: Another flip-flop.

Mr. Gray: Another flip-flop. Instead of cutting expenditures as they had promised, they are working out their bizarre fixation with the deficit through raising taxes even though they had promised to do the opposite. They promised to cut taxes for individual Canadians by $2.5 billion in the first budget. The budget is in deficit in terms of its favourable impact on Canadians. It is a big zero. Here is their first budget. We heard it last night. We see they are raising taxes for individual Canadians in an unfair and regressive way.

• (1600)

The burden of the increase in excise taxes on gasoline falls most heavily on low and middle-income Canadians. It has nothing to do with anyone's ability to pay. These taxes fall on the Water Street merchant in St. John's Newfoundland, and on the factory worker in Windsor or Hamilton.

Obviously the burden on these two categories is certainly not the same in terms of ability to pay. This tax takes no account of the fact that many people have to drive to work or have to drive as part of their work since there is no practical alternative public transportation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: If the government wants to encourage use of public transport then the budget it presented last night shows a strange way of doing this since it now imposes the excise tax on gasoline used by public transportation companies. The higher price the government wants people to pay for gasoline, in addition to the excise tax and the higher price the government wants the Canadian people to pay for home heating oil, are the equivalent of a new tax. Yes, a new tax! It takes money out of their pockets just as much as would have been the case for a new tax announced in this budget last night, and we had enough new taxes in it as it was.

The government says it is imposing these higher prices to encourage conservation. It says it is imposing these higher excise taxes to encourage conservation. However, for millions of Canadians this is something they will react to with nothing more than bitter laughter. The Canadian climate means they have to use a certain amount of fuel oil to heat their homes adequately no matter what. The distances in our country and the lack of public transport mean they have no alternative to driving to work as much as they do now.

The only result of these higher taxes on gasoline and the higher prices for gasoline and fuel oil will be to lower the standard of living of Canadians. They will have to cut back on what they are now spending for food, clothing and shelter for themselves and their families, in order to heat their homes adequately, in order to be able to continue driving to work to keep their jobs, if they still have jobs, once this Conservative hard times budget goes into effect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: The Conservatives, I suppose, will now point to their refundable energy tax credit as a way of cushioning the unfair blows of these high energy prices and high excise taxes. These credits will not cover all the additional cost. They will clearly cover only a part of it.

The maximum credit for a family of four is estimated in the budget statement as being $220, and that is after two years. Last night I put on the record information about the impact of these high energy prices and high excise taxes on typical families across our country. In all cases the extra costs are far in excess of the value of the credit. For the typical Canadian family there will be, on the average, an additional annual cost of $381 for heating and transportation, far more than the tax credit.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these raises in the excise tax and the cost of gasoline and heating oil will be too hard on lower and middle-income Canadians. For example, the average Quebec dairy producer and his family will pay $800 more because of this harsh Conservative budget which will lead to depression and recession in the province of Quebec and in the whole country.

[English]

This tax credit that the Conservatives have proposed will not be paid to anyone until the spring of 1981 and, at that, only half of it can be claimed at that time. Millions of lower and middle-income Canadians will have to get by somehow, paying the higher Conservative energy price and the higher Conservative excise taxes for at least a year and a half, before they get any part of that credit. They will have to get by somehow for more than two years before they get all of it, just the full amount proposed for one year. In the meantime, they will have to take money away from needed food, shelter and clothing for themselves and for their families, necessities which are going up in cost anyway because of the impact of the higher oil prices and higher excise taxes on the cost of manufacturing and the cost of production.

It is likely that many Canadians will have to go into debt, borrowing at the Conservative high interest rates from finance companies and the like in order to get by until, at the very least, they can have that limited, almost illusory relief from the Conservative energy tax credit. Canadians will find this promised tax credit to be an empty promise, a non-existent promise for at least the next two years.

Last night I said the combination of the high excise taxes on gasoline and the higher energy prices for both gasoline and fuel oil is the equivalent of more than a $5 billion increase in taxes for Canadians, an increase falling especially hard on lower-income and middle-income people. I said last night it is the equivalent of a more than 14 per cent increase in direct personal taxes, like a 14 per cent increase in the combination of both income and sales taxes.

I have since had some further calculations of this done. I now say that, contrary to what I put on the record last night, there is an even more severe impact. I am informed that the household sector will pay a $2 billion net increase in taxes from the higher excise taxes on gasoline and the other excise taxes proposed. To this one must add the additional $5.9 billion consumers will have to spend for petroleum products and natural gas, higher prices for them that are a result of the Conservative policy set forth in the budget last night. As a result, consumers will be out of pocket a total of an additional $8 billion in the fiscal year 1980-81.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gray: Therefore I would like to correct my estimate of last night. I want to say instead that, compared to 1979 direct taxes, the impact of the higher Conservative excise taxes and the higher Conservative energy prices for 1980-81 is equivalent to an increase of 39 per cent in federal personal direct taxes—39 per cent more, Mr. Speaker!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gray: Even after allowing for the mortgage interest tax credit plan, this will still represent an increase of approximately 30 per cent. That is bad enough, but for those people who do not benefit from that tax credit plan, and most Canadians will not, it will be the equivalent of a 39 per cent increase in federal direct taxes, probably the largest single increase for individuals in the last 30 years.

That is from a Conservative budget, the largest single increase in taxes on individuals since the war, or perhaps even further back than that excluding the difficult period of the second world war. The increase is even larger when you add in the higher premiums imposed by this Conservative budget for unemployment insurance on individual workers. All this reduces purchasing power. It weakens the possibilities for consumer spending.

The government says in its budget it wants to strengthen business confidence. The confidence of business will not be very high when it sees that the result of the Conservative budget will be to cut back on consumer spending drastically. Business confidence will not be very high when it sees that the results of the budget will also be to increase unemployment by at least one per cent next year. This means some 100,000 people without work as a result of Conservative policy.

These 100,000 people will be out of work in addition to those out of work already, people without regular income to spend. The Conservative policy as admitted in the budget documents will have the effect of reducing the gross national product by one per cent next year and increasing inflation by some 2 per cent next year. This increase in inflation will certainly wipe out increases in real disposable incomes, and the reduction in gross national product will mean that there will be no gross national product growth in Canada next year, for the first time in 26 years.

Business confidence basically comes from its belief that business can sell its goods at a reasonable profit, but obviously to do this there must be enough Canadians working with satisfactory incomes to be able to buy those goods. This Conservative budget will have the effect of weakening this basic essential belief necessary for business confidence and the investment decisions which accompany it.

Business will see as well as anyone else that this Conservative budget is lessening the potential for consumer spending. Business will see as well as anyone else that the gross national product will be reduced severely because of Conservative budget policies. In proposing a budget which will increase inflation to double digit levels we see another bizarre flip-flop from a government whose Prime Minister said in this House just a few weeks ago that inflation was his public enemy number one. Well, I think this budget shows the public that its enemy number one has to be this Conservative government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: In his budget and the forecasts accompanying it the Minister of Finance has presented a pretty bleak picture of what to expect, even if there are five years of Conservative government, something the Canadian people, I am sure, have already reached the conclusion they want to avoid having as much as possible.

The Conservatives have made all sorts of promises, including some promises about the goals and objectives they want to reach in terms of the performance of the economy. They said that they were going to increase growth to over 5 per cent by 1985, that they were going to create 1.5 million jobs by 1985, that they were going to reduce unemployment to 5.5 per cent by 1985, and that they were going to reduce inflation to 5 per cent by 1985. In the light of this budget these promises are very hollow and very empty. Instead of now assuring us that the goal of 5 per cent growth will be achieved, the Conservatives in their budget documents are projecting an average growth of only 3 per cent to 1985. So much for another Conservative promise. And for 1980 the government, in its budget documents, forecast real economic growth of only 1 per cent. I say that the impact of the Conservative budget is not to permit any economic growth at all.

While the Conservative estimate, in my view, is obviously very optimistic, it still represents lower growth than any achieved in Canada in any of the past 26 years. That is a shameful proposal and a shameful willingness to accept unemployment and economic weakness in this country on the part of the Conservative government. Instead of reducing unemployment to 5.5 per cent by 1985, the Conservatives in their own budget forecast have opted to push it up from the current rate of 7.3 per cent to 8.3 per cent next year, and not to be willing to try to restore it to the current rate even by 1985. Instead of reducing inflation to 5.5 per cent, Conservative policies are now guaranteed to raise it from the current rate of 9.3 per cent to over 11 per cent in the next two years and then to achieve only a very modest reduction thereafter.

These projections themselves are probably understating the negative impact of Conservative policies on the economy because they do not take into account the possibility of efforts of catch-up in wages and efforts of catch-up in profits which will result from the burst of oil-induced inflation created by these Conservative proposals in the budget of last night.

We see that the Conservatives have abandoned their promises of what they want to achieve for the Canadian economy by 1985. They have been willing to admit in their budgetary documents they have done this. This is certainly not consistent with the request of the Prime Minister to Canadians not long ago to raise their expectations, unless, of course, the Prime Minister meant by that that they should raise their expectations as to what they would get from the Conservatives in the way of higher unemployment, higher inflation, and less growth as a result of Conservative economic policy.

What this budget proposes is a multi-billion dollar tax grab from lower and middle-income Canadians—a raid, in effect, on the pocketbooks and wallets of lower and middle-income Canadians—and not to pay for an energy self-sufficiency program, as suggested by the Minister of Finance, except perhaps in a very limited way, but simply to build up government revenues. This tax grab from all Canadians will be used to pay for the government's mortgage tax credit plan, Bill C-20. This tax raid is on the wallets and pocketbooks of all Canadians including Canadians who will not benefit from the plan at all—renters, people with no mortgages, people with incomes too low to claim tax credits—and also cancels out any benefits from those eligible for the plan, if any benefits remain after being offset by the Conservative high interest rate policy.

The Conservatives have also proposed a surcharge on corporate income tax, but this increase is only for two years, unlike the increases in excise taxes and unemployment insurance contributions for individuals—tax increases which are permanent, or at least for as long as the Conservatives are in power. I am sure the Canadian people by now hope that time will be as short as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: I think individual Canadian taxpayers will likely not agree that what is found in the budget with respect to corporate income tax increases and personal income tax increases is an equitable sharing of the higher tax burden as between individual Canadians and the friends of the Conservatives, the big business sector of this country.

In his budget the minister mentioned only in passing a deficit which deserves as much and, in fact, more attention than the government's budgetary deficit, and that is the deficit in the balance of payments of our current account of international trade. This budget will do little to help solve that problem in any meaningful way. This budget says nothing which really matters about interest rates, a factor in this deficit on current account. It does, of course, propose a temporary financing measure to help small business meet the burden of higher interest rates, but this is only for one year, and the burden of high interest rates on Canadians is much wider and heavier than the burden on small business and, of course, that is serious enough. A recognition of this is found hidden in the tables attached to the budget setting out what the government expects to pay in interest on the public debt over the next several years.

In addition, in its provisions to encourage Canadians to invest in shares, the government would allow this to be done only for companies incorporated in Canada and listed on the stock exchanges in this country irrespective of the ownership or control of those companies. Surely this proposal should be, if not limited, at least oriented, to companies which are Canadian-owned or Canadian-controlled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Otherwise, this proposal would serve mainly as a means of enabling foreign-controlled companies to have even greater access to Canadian savings than they do already simply by making a minority equity interest or an interest in non-voting shares available for public trading, with foreign control of these companies continuing all the same. Surely we want to use measures such as these not only to encourage share investment by Canadians but also to have this done in a way which helps Canadian-controlled companies which often do not have the same access to needed capital as do foreign-controlled subsidiaries. It is strange that the special income bonds proposed in the budget as being available to small business for one year are available only to companies which are Canadian-controlled. Why should this not also be the case for the share investment plan proposals? But at the same time why should the share investment proposals be limited as a vehicle for Canadians only for shares of companies traded on the stock exchanges?

This will make it all the harder for many small privately-owned Canadian companies to get the capital they need to expand, to grow, and in some cases simply to stay in business. This Conservative proposal is biased toward larger companies, those big enough to be able to list their shares. Certainy smaller, privately-owned companies should also be eligible under these proposals. Yet, while these proposals have some use, they will not be much help to most Canadians in the middle and lower-income groups. They will not have the $10,000 of the $20,000 to invest in these plans, certainly not with the additional burden over the coming years of higher energy prices and higher excise taxes imposed on them by this Conservative government.

There is something else that might have been done with respect to share ownership, something the Liberals proposed during the election campaign, that is, something specifically aimed at helping workers purchase shares of the companies where they work. It is a worth-while proposal that should have been given priority in the budget instead of some of the other things we have seen in it.

The Conservative answer to our balance of payments problem is to encourage more exports of unprocessed, non-renewable raw materials. this, in fact, is what their decision to allow larger exports of natural gas really means. Rather than use it to build up and expand our petrochemical industry, rather than use it as a substitute for imported oil, Conservatives have agreed to export it and they have done so without getting any commitment that American gas will be available later to Canada on a swap basis at the same price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: They have done so without getting any commitment in return from the United States for greater access for our manufactured goods. The Conservatives have allowed these exports, without getting any final commitment on the building of the northern gas pipeline. They do not have any final commitment from the gas producers that they will finance and ensure the building of a natural gas pipeline to Atlantic Canada. Instead, through this budget, Canadians are being asked to pay higher fuel prices and higher taxes under the guise of helping Canada reach energy self-sufficiency. But to the extent that any of this money is used to find new oil and new natural gas, I ask the House what assurance Canadians have from the Conservative government that any new reserves found at the expense of Canadian taxpayers, middle and lower-income Canadians, will not simply be exported to the United States. This is happening with much of the reserves of natural gas found in recent years in Canada, natural gas reserves found with money put up by Canadian taxpayers through higher prices and through tax expenditures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: There was no answer to this key question in the budget speech last night.

As I said yesterday evening, this budget is just the opposite to the kind of industrial strategy which this country must have. This kind of strategy must be based on the basic strengths of our economy, our actual and potential energy supplies, and our ability to produce them at less than world price. This strategy must also be based on a commitment gained through government leadership from our industry to produce more end products, more fully manufactured goods both for domestic and, above all, for our foreign markets. Rather than selling abroad more and more of our raw materials in an unprocessed form, we have to produce more end products or fully manufactured goods. This means encouraging Canadian innovation and technology, Canadian entrepreneurship, Canadian ownership and control. It also means ensuring high standards of productivity and efficiency on the part of all sectors of the Canadian economy.

This budget does not do this at all, it conflicts with these objectives, it hampers their achievement.

While I have spoken of the minister's speech last night as a budget, in one way it cannot really be described as a budget. The minister has admitted the government has no agreement at all with the producing provinces on the oil price increase he and the government want and which has been set out in the budget. He has no agreement on the new tax on additional oil company revenues from these high prices. As I said last night, this tax is not even described in the budget. It is not in the ways and means motion.

So two basic fundamental factors on which this Conservative budget are based are as yet unknown. They are hypothetical. This means we are being asked to vote on a hypothetical document, a phantom document which the minister calls the budget.

The minister says he is going to bring in a bill next year to legislate this new energy revenue tax.

An hon. Member: He won't be around.

Mr. Gray: But even if he is around for a few months next year, he will be doing so, in spite of his complaint about the Liberals using fine tuning because they presented budgetary statements more than once every 12 months. If this is not fine tuning, then at least it shows that the Conservative government is completely out of tune as it shows its inability to manage the Canadian economy. This document is a prime example of Conservative mismanagement and of their inability to lead and to govern.

The minister said in his speech that he will be taking steps to move away from the traditional budget secrecy. Let us look at what he has done already when it comes to this new energy revenue tax that he and the Prime Minister said in the House and at the meeting of first ministers they want to have imposed. The Prime Minister has already admitted, well before the budget was presented, that officials of the government were consulting with the oil industry about the form of this energy self-sufficiency tax, the form of this tax which was mentioned in the budget last night. The minister's officials did not ask lower and middle-income Canadians whether they wanted a higher excise tax on gasoline. They did not even ask them whether they liked the form, or what ideas they had on the form of such a tax. The minister's officials did not ask working people across the country whether they wanted higher unemployment insurance premiums, or even about their form.

The Minister of Finance has an approach to budget secrecy, which he has not outlined in his statement last night. This approach involves a different concept of secrecy, a different concept of consultation when it comes to discussing taxes of interest to the multinational oil companies, than the concept of secrecy, the concept of consultation on measures directly affecting individual Canadians. I say that is the wrong approach to budget secrecy. I happen to believe that we should be getting away in this House from traditional budget secrecy concepts. I think they are outmoded, I think they hamper proper and meaningful discussions of tax measures. What we need is more openness by the government about those parts of the budget that really matter to all Canadians. It means making proposals to the House in the budget statement on the basis that the government is open to changing them as a result of input from members of Parliament and Canadians generally at hearings, not in Committee of the Whole, but of a parliamentary committee after the budget is presented. I think that is the approach we should have to a change in budget secrecy, not two standards, not two measures, one for the minister's friends, one for the government's friends the multinational oil companies, and another standard when it comes to individual Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Tell that to Bronfman.

Mr. Gray: Essentially this budget hits the little guy in this country. If the little guy decides to have a smoke or a drink to try to find some solace from the impact of this Conservative budget, he will still be reminded of its unfair impact. He will also be reminded every time he pays for gasoline at a service station. He will be reminded every time he has fuel oil delivered to his home.

At the opening of my remarks, I spoke of how the Conservatives are like the Bourbon kings of France who learned nothing and remembered nothing. But I think the lower and middle-income Canadians and their families will remember this Conservative hard times budget and they will learn, as the result of its impact on them, the negative impact on them, of this budget, never again to trust the Conservatives with their votes. What we should have had from the Conservatives last night was a budget that would reduce inflation, strengthen the economy and create more jobs for Canadians, now, next year, and in the years to come. Instead, this budget brings Canadians a higher cost of living, including higher food prices, more unemployment and no economic growth, as well as higher gasoline and fuel oil prices, and higher taxes.

In his speech the Minister of Finance quoted Sir Wilfrid Laurier who said the twentieth century will belong to Canada. I say to this House that the twentieth century should belong to Canada and that largely because of the efforts of Liberal governments it has belonged to Canadians generally, but the twentieth century will not belong to Canada if the harmful and negative measures in this Conservative budget ever come into effect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1630)

Mr. Gray: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde):

> That all the words after "that" be struck out, and that the following be added: this House condemns the government for its budget which will place an unfair and unnecessary burden of higher gasoline prices, higher fuel oil prices, and higher taxes on middle and lower-income Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there is only one minister in the House now, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) also seems to be absent. Maybe he is writing a recommendation to the Socred leader in order that the latter supports him when the motion is put, but it is unacceptable to the House and to the Canadian people that there is only one minister present in the House when we are discussing the budget.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): I do not consider that to be a point of order, and I recognize the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae).

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the champagne was flowing freely in the penthouses in Broadview last night at eight o'clock, just as it was in the tenement houses on the Circular Road in St. John's West. After all, imagine the eager anticipation on the part of the Canadian people at eight o'clock as they turned on their television sets. They were eagerly awaiting the promises of the Conservative government, the promises they were looking forward to: the $2.5 billion tax cuts, the special incentives and tax write-offs for small businessmen, intensive capital programs for Atlantic Canada. Also, an end to big government was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), and an end to high taxes. This is the government that was going to set the iittle guy free.

Imagine how flat that champagne turned at 9.20 p.m. when Newfoundland's gift to seventeenth century economics completed his discourse. It was not a tax cut, but a whopping tax increase—billions. Over $3.5 billion in personal taxes alone were taken out of the economy and put into the hands of governments and oil companies. There was no action on interest rates. After all, the policies of "Bouey XVI" have been confirmed for yet another seven years. There were no capital programs. There was nothing for the poor, nothing for the pensioners. There was something for the private investors, and nothing for anybody else.

Some have called it a tough budget. Some have said that the budget was actually a courageous one. It was certainly tough on the average Canadian. While the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) swaggers down Main Street in his mukluks, he is tiptoeing softly through Bay Street and the corridors of power in Calgary and Edmonton. Somehow Clark Kent cannot find a telephone booth when he reaches the Alberta border. This budget is courageous only in the sense that the Charge of the Light Brigade was courageous: "Into the valley of death rode the one hundred and thirty-five."

In my remarks this afternoon I want to talk about the people of Canada, their jobs, and their standard of living. I want to suggest to the Minister of Finance that he start with the people of Canada, with their jobs, and with their standard of living. We ask ourselves: what does this budget mean for the average Canadian? First, it means punitive taxes. Second, it means prices which continue to climb. It means jobs threatened, that nagging and gnawing insecurity which lies at the heart of every industrial worker not knowing whether he will be able to have his job for the next six months. Down the road it means no change in pension plans, which leaves so many Canadians uncovered and in poverty as they reach age 65.

Thanks to these wonderful projections from the Conservative government, we have been told that we will have no social programs because, as was confirmed again today, there is no money in the bill. Finally the bottom line, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members opposite are so proud of telling members of my party that we have never shaken hands with the bottom line. Well, I should like to introduce them to this particular bottom line. For the average family of four with one working spouse, the tax increases and price increases which have been imposed mean at least $370, and a tax credit of $110. If both spouses are working, which increasingly is the case, because so many families require both spouses working in order to make ends meet, those families will not get a single penny of the tax credit which is being offered to them by the Conservative government, not a single penny of it. Single parent families will pay just as much and receive an even smaller break.

Such a sizeable tax increase would be bad enough when our economy is already slowing down, but it is not just any old tax increase that this government has imposed. It is a hidden tax increase, an indirect tax increase, which makes it worse. I want to try to explain in simple terms which everyone will be able to understand why it makes matters so much worse. Let us look at what the government has told us. The government has told us that we must concentrate on energy conservation. So, we do not have an income tax increase. We have what they call a "conservation tax". The rise in unemployment insurance premiums of some $800 million is to make the scheme look more like insurance. "It is not really a tax. It is in order to get the insurance principles back into the Unemployment Insurance Act." We were not told what the purpose of the tax on booze and cigarettes was. Presumably it is to pay for our sins, since we know that a deficit is sinful. We have been told that by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens), so it must be true.

An hon. Member: It is "sin tax".

Mr. Rae: That is right, it is "sin tax". It is "Sincful", not sinful. What about these arguments? Of all the taxes which have been put before us, I want to suggest that the so-called conservation tax is the most dishonest.

I ask Mr. Speaker to think of an average family in my riding. I want to remind the House that my riding is in the downtown area of Toronto. Mr. Jones works in a factory in an industrial park on the outskirts of Toronto. Mr. Jones drives a 1976 model car. Mrs. Jones works downtown. She takes public transportation to work, and the children go to school by bus as well. They live in a house which is 30 years old. They have an oil furnace. As the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) has said often, "Today there is no fuel like an oil fuel". Those are the people who are being lectured, being hectored, by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance as being the profligate energy wasters. These are the new profligates, the new sinners in our society, Mr. and Mrs. Jones.

● (1640)

I want to ask the Minister of Finance to answer these questions. Perhaps he can give these answers during the next election campaign when he has an opportunity to meet Mr. and Mrs. Jones if he comes into my riding. Did Mr. and Mrs. Jones build the factory that is on the outskirts of Toronto, requiring Mr. Jones to drive 20 miles to get to work? Did Mr. Jones design the car that gets 16 or 18 miles to the gallon? Did Mr. Jones design an urban transportation system that does not serve industrial parks such as we have in metropolitan Toronto? How can Mr. Jones buy a new, more fuel-efficient car, with consumer loans now running somewhere between 16 per cent and 20 per cent, and higher if Mr. Jones has had the bad luck to run into credit problems earlier? How can he do this when he is getting constant lectures from governor Bouey and others that he is over-consuming, that he is sinning and that he should be restrained?

How can Mr. and Mrs. Jones afford to buy a gas furnace when that involves a capital expenditure of over $1,000 and the interest rates are running at 16 per cent to 20 per cent? How can they do that when the Minister of Finance admitted in this House today that there is nothing in this budget that allows people to write off the cost of changing from oil to gas?

Another question that comes to mind, Mr. Speaker is this: are Mrs. Jones and her children encouraged to take public transportation when she is paying an excise tax of 15 cents a gallon? That is one of the things, along with the charge to the farmer and along with the charge to the fisherman, that puts the lie to this government when it says this is a conservation tax. If it is a conservation tax, why in the name of goodness are they putting it on urban transportation when that is precisely the means of transportation the government wants the people to use to replace the sinful car? If they want to replace the sinful car, what are they asking the farmers of Canada to do—go back to the horse and the oxen? Is that the standard of conservation the government is seeking to apply to the farmer?

Is the government seriously suggesting that the farmers of Canada will be able to conserve, that they are the profligate energy wasters? All the government is doing is passing this on to the consumer, or putting the farmer out of business. The government is giving the farmer two choices. Those farmers who have a lot of market power will be able to pass this on to the consumer. Those farmers, the vast majority of them, who do not have a lot of market power will get stuck. That is the policy and the result of the policy of this government.

Should the Joneses take advantage of the CHIP program, that program which the minister just two months ago was making such fun of and now has come out in favour of, and which is a substitute for a policy on insulation—should they take advantage of the CHIP program to insulate their home when their neighbour has just had wet cellulose poured into his walls by a night flyer insulation company and his house is suffering from undue damp and mildew with no reduction in heating cost? Is that the model the government wants to put forward when there is no inspection? I can give the figures, the people, and the houses, for the minister's information. I have done it already in one or two cases of people who have been taken to the cleaners by companies in the city of Toronto, and who have had no inspection from CMHC because CMHC does not provide that kind of inspection.

I want to ask this government where Mr. and Mrs. Jones will conserve? They will not conserve on energy because the energy costs which they are undergoing are constant. There is no way they can conserve without a dramatic change, but not in their lifestyle as has been suggested. The Joneses are not suddenly going to be transformed into upper income civil servants running around Ottawa in Volvos, Mr. Speaker. The Joneses are facing the realities of life. Mr. Jones' factory is not suddenly going to be moved next door to his house. He cannot suddenly demand that the Toronto Transit Commission, which has just had a $61 million deficit, start providing decent 24-hour transit for a 24-hour factory 20 miles from his house outside the city. He must have his car.

The hard fact of the matter is that it is lower and middle-income Canadians who have the gas guzzling cars because those were the cars they bought years ago and cannot now afford to replace.

An hon. Member: They cannot afford to drive them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The Tories say they cannot afford to drive them; "let them eat cake."

Mr. Rae: Where will they conserve? They will conserve on other items. They will not buy a new fridge which might be more fuel efficient. They will not be able to afford to buy it. They will not be able to buy furniture. Let me give the minister an elementary lesson in the realities of life. The people who make fridges and furniture are laid off when people do not buy their products. Mr. Jones' neighbour who works at the John Inglis factory making fridges is going to be laid off because the market for consumer durables like fridges is going to go down. That is the meaning of the multiplier effect. It was not invented by the anti-Christ Keynes. It was somebody looking at the reality of an industrial situation who said this is what happens. When you put people out of work, that puts more people out of work, and that puts more people out of work. If you take money out of the economy and tax people to death that is exactly what is going to happen. The people will cut down on entertainment. They will not drink so much, they will not smoke so much, and they will not have such a good time. They will cut down on clothing, and perhaps they will even cut down on food.

An hon. Member: It might save on health care costs.

Mr. Rae: If you cut down on food it might not save on health care costs. I suppose the hon. member who has just spoken might suggest that the only perfect energy conservers are dead people; the only people who do not consume energy are those people who have passed on to the other side, and I am referring to that side over there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: Let me suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the lesson is quite simple. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are being taxed, and they are being taxed punitively. That is what this budget does.

I want to compare Mr. and Mrs. Jones to Mr. Lawyer Jones who lives in one of those celebrated tenement houses on Circular Road in St. John's, Newfoundland. The excise tax is a tax that he can afford. Has Mr. Lawyer Jones been told not to buy a bigger or fancier car? No way; no one has said that. Has there been a tax put on luxury cars which are guzzling gas? The answer is no. Is this the kind of price increase that is going to have an effect, or hurt Mr. Lawyer Jones? No, he will not feel it or, if he feels it, he will not feel it as much, and that is the definition of a regressive tax.

I was upbraided the other day by a member of the press who said that the public does not understand me when I talk about a regressive tax. A regressive tax, to put it quite simply, is a tax which hurts some people more than others, and this tax hurts the poor people, the working people and the middle-income people, far more than it hurts the lawyers, the doctors, and the accountants.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: The Christmas message from St. John's West is quite simple. It is an old message; to them that hath it shall be given.

Perhaps we could put the lesson another way. If you drink, don't smoke; if you smoke, don't drive; if you drive, don't drink; if you drive, smoke and drink, don't think, because if you think you will wonder why you ever voted Conservative in the last election!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: What I have said about Mr. and Mrs. Jones is so much more true of the farmer, and is so much more true of the unemployment insurance payee who is now being asked to pay more through a completely regressive tax. It is a tax that is not progressive, a tax that does not get higher as your income gets higher.

Imagine the effect on a group whom we ignore in this House far too much, the six million Canadians who live in poverty; those people who, because of age, because of circumstances, because of region, because of the peculiarities of history, because of the marvels of the market system, which is the sine qua non of the party opposite, have competed in our society, and, when the race was over, have lost. Those are the people, and there are millions of them—young and old—who are, to put it bluntly, getting a kick in the teeth from the Conservative Party of Canada through the budget which was presented last night.

• (1650)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that socially the budget put forward last night by the Minister of Finance is very unfair. It reflects a regressive attitude that threatens the standard of living of each Canadian, whether French Canadian, English Canadian or other. I would simply like to suggest to my friends of the Social Credit Party of Canada that we are going to move an amendment to the motion put by my colleague from Windsor West. I also take the liberty of suggesting to them they can no longer support a government that is taking money away from the have-nots in order to give it to the haves.

Mr. Caouette: Come now, be serious!

Mr. Rae: I am very serious. I am hearing the minister's words. We have a system of excise taxes that is the most regressive that can be imposed, because these taxes have been rejected by all progressive parties since the turn of this century. And I urge my colleagues from the Social Credit Party of Canada to read it closely, and to weigh seriously the consequences if they go on supporting a government that threatens the basic principles of social justice, which are so important to our future, especially at this point when we are entering a period of economic and social crisis.

[English]

I would like to move from the condition of Mr. and Mrs. Jones to looking at the condition of the whole economy. It was John Maynard Keynes, who has become the anti-Christ of the Calvinist economics practised by the other side, who said something which I think is worth reading. John Maynard Keynes said:

—Practical men, who believe themselves to be quite exempt from any intellectual influences—

And that, I think, would include the Minister of Finance.

—are usually the slaves of some defunct economist. Madmen in authority—

And I will leave it to the imaginations of hon. members as to whom that implies.

—who hear voices in the air, are distilling their frenzy from some academic scribbler of a few years back.

I had a hard time trying to think of who the economist is behind the ideas of the Conservative party. It could be Milton Friedman, as it is frequently said, but while intellectually defunct, he is still alive.

Mr. Rodriguez: John Turner?

An hon. Member: Joe Clark?

Mr. Nystrom: Eugene Whelan?

Mr. Rae: Joe Clark, John Turner, many names have been suggested to me by my colleagues, but I think that we have tracked it down to that nineteenth century economist who tied the rise and fall of the business cycle to the existence of sunspots. There is about as much connection between sunspots and the business cycle as we get from the Conservative party in their understanding of the nature of a modern economic system. The fact of the matter is that the real health of the economy is portrayed by whether or not Mr. and Mrs. Jones have a job, can keep the inflation from which they are suffering under control, and can provide for their children in the future.

When we look at the over-all effects of this budget, they include a dramatic redistribution of wealth toward certain provinces, redistribution of wealth toward certain classes, and redistribution of wealth toward certain companies. That is the nature of this government's energy policy. There was a great deal of comment when my leader got up today, as we expected there would be, and pointed out that of this $90 billion which was being collected, $40 billion will go to the producing provinces, $33 billion will go to the multinational oil companies, and $17 billion will go to the national government. Of that $17 billion, a small fraction will go to the national energy fund.

The second thing about this budget is that it is a redefinition of a clarifying of the role of government in our society. It is a redefinition which ignores the economic, social, and political revolutions of our time. That revolution is that people will no longer accept being treated as commodities in our society, to be traded, shipped, transferred, and paid for as though they were another commodity.

With a reduction in the role of the government in the economy such as predicted over the five-year period by the Conservative party, the growth and expansion of large multinational companies, which will be subsidized again as they were subsidized in the past by the Liberal party, will continue. The Liberal party has presided over the sell-out of Canada to these multinational companies. It is something of an irony to hear these reborn, new born, born again Liberals, as if that party sprang immaculate from the loins of the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on May 23, 1979.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: That party has a history which the people of Canada will not readily forget. Whether they are left, right, or centre, they have presided over the economic sell-out of our country, and that is a lesson which no Canadian will readily forget.

An hon. Member: They should wash their mouths out with Tory policy.

Mr. Rae: They have been washing their mouths out with Tory policy for many years.

Finally, the element in this budget which is the most unacceptable to most Canadians is the unfairness or the problem of equity. The challenge of the crisis of the 1980s, if there is an economic crisis and an energy crisis—and we accept the fact that there is and are not doubting for a moment that there are very serious problems with energy and within our economy—and if an election must be fought on this issue then let it be so—is who will bear the sacrifices of the 1980s. Will it be the members of the Empire Club, whom the Minister of Finance is so happy to inform that they will have to tighten their belts as they dig into another course? Are those the people who will be making the sacrifices in our society? I suggest not.

I suggest that the people who are being asked in this budget to make the biggest, the most important, and the most difficult sacrifices, are those who can least afford to do so.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: I hear an hon. member catcalling; that is what we expect from him as he faces the slaughter.

We only need to look at those elements. What have they done? It is appropriate as the power in Canada moves from Toronto, where the Liberal party with MURBs as tax shelters put big advertisements in The Globe and Mail saying, "get your shelters in there". Let me suggest that as soon as this budget is passed, there will be other advertisements, but the difference will be that instead of advertising for MURBs they will be advertising for fishing vessels. It is appropriate that the Minister of Finance have an interest in seeing that fishing vessels are built. We have the same interest, but the question is how do we get them built? Do you bribe the lawyers, the accountants, the doctors, by giving them a tax write-off? If that is the way to do it, then I suggest it is a society of which most Canadians do not want any part. If they were aware of the cost of the tax expenditures and the subsidies to the wealthy in our society, they would be shocked.

● (1700)

I want to suggest an alternative to these policies. I think it was Maurice Chevalier who, when asked what it was like to be 75, replied that when you consider the alternative, being 75 is not so bad. I said it was Maurice Chevalier, Mr. Speaker, and not the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)!

None of us like the fact that the Liberal party has left us with a gigantic deficit as a result of the extraordinary tax policies they followed, the incredible expenditures they allowed, and the pork-barrelling which was the defining quality of the Liberal party. When the tomb of the Liberal party is built, a large statue of Mirabel will be placed on it. That represents the worst form of public spending that we have seen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: Even the Tories applaud you.

Mr. Rae: I find it no more unacceptable to be applauded by Conservatives than I do the odd time that I am applauded by my friends to the far right in the Liberal party. Guilt by association is not pleasant, but it is not always possible in this game of politics to choose people who decide to align themselves with you for their own reasons.

Mr. Grafftey: How pompous!

An hon. Member: You should know.

Mr. Rae: There are alternatives to the policies of this government, Mr. Speaker. This is the last time we should be taking Canada on a forced march to a reduced deficit of $4 or $5 billion in 1984. On the government's own figures, this will lead to unemployment of 7.5 per cent, which is an increase. Inflation will remain at exactly the level it is at now, but next year will be higher. We have to ask ourselves what we are getting. We are getting Herbert Hoover and R. B. Bennett, but I do not see any advantage to the policy.

The minister says that we have terrible unemployment and terrible inflation in Canada and that we need a five-year plan to deal with these horrendous problems. But with this five-year plan we find we have exactly the same inflation and the same unemployment as there is now. If that is the kind of long march the minister now wants to take us on, I suggest he put on his mukluks and head off by himself. He will not be followed by the rest of the Canadian people.

In his closing remarks the minister mentioned his grandfather. I should like to mention my grandfather. Seventy years ago he came to Canada as an immigrant, worked hard, fought in a war, suffered through a depression. Were he alive today, I doubt very much that he would find anything has changed in the consecutive budgets produced by Liberal and Conservative governments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: I should like to recite to hon. members a poem by T. S. Eliot, which goes as follows:

Though you have shelters and institutions,
Precarious lodgings while the rent is paid,
Subsiding basements where the rat breeds
Or sanitary dwellings with numbered doors
Or a house a little better than your neighbour's;
When the Stranger says: 'What is the meaning of this city
Do you huddle close together because you love each other?'
What will you answer? 'We all dwell together
To make money from each other'? or 'This is a community'?

Mr. Grafftey: You look like a college boy now.

Mr. Rae: I see the minister with his usual knowledge and common sense has a comment. I should like to tell him where I first saw this poem. It was in a United Auto Workers' hall in Port Elgin, Ontario. If he wants to go and see it himself, he can. The message that came from that union movement is one with which I am not the least bit ashamed to associate myself. It is:

What will you answer? 'We all dwell together
To make money from each other'? or 'This is a community'?

Let me suggest that there is a very clear alternative to the policy of this government which is about to be defeated, and that alternative is a policy which recognizes that Canada is a community—not a community of communities only, but a community. It is a community in which the critical question in the 1980s will be: are we simply here "to make money from each other" or are we here to do something different?

In the policies which this party suggested during the election campaign, such as a cost of living tax credit, the need for an industrial strategy, the importance of providing jobs for Canadians and looking at the real health of the economy, and not some abstractions which so upset hon. members opposite, we have suggested that there is an alternative to the policies of the government. That alternative is the social democratic alternative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: Let me suggest that between the new Conservatism and the new democracy there is no middle ground. It has something which my friends to the far right in the Liberal party are quickly going to discover, that there is a message in this budget—the government has thrown down the gauntlet, the government has waved its flag and said, "We dare you in these trying political times, with the resignation of the leader of the Liberal party, to oppose the policies with which we want to take Canada into the eighties." We accept that challenge, Mr. Speaker. We accept it happily. We accept it with confidence and with vigour, because we are convinced that the message contained in this budget is a message of injustice. It is a mean message, not a generous or compassionate message; it is a message which will be rejected by the Canadian people because it is so mean and not compassionate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

and this House unreservedly condemns the government for its outright betrayal of its election promises to lower interest rates, to cut taxes, and to stimulate the growth of the Canadian economy, without a mandate from the Canadian people for such a reversal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1710)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House as the first new member of Parliament to speak on the budget debate. As I sat here and listened to hon. members opposite, I was reminded of some phrases that were thrown at us that I might like to twist and throw back at them.

There is a choice for Canadians, and the hon. member is correct when he says that our budget clarifies that choice. One of the choices we have is to continue to deal with poetry or choose to deal with reality. Are we going to become a nation of doers, or are we going to continue to be a nation of dreamers? Are we going to deal with promises, or are we going to deal with plans?

I am particularly proud to stand up in this House today, because about three years ago I committed a significant portion of my life working within this political party to develop plans for governing this nation. As most new members of Parliament have done, one does so at some personal cost in terms of time and other dimensions. I chose to do so, and I think most of the new members on this side of the House chose to do so because we were concerned about this nation and about the direction in which it was heading.

I understand that it is parliamentary tradition to be allowed a little latitude on the subjects to which one chooses to address oneself during the throne speech debate and the budget debate. I am going to digress from the budget for a moment but I will return to it.

I want to deal with something which has caused me increasing concern as I sit here day after day. We on this side have been accused of being no different from the previous government. I think one of the differences, which has been long in the planning and is taking some time in the execution because of obstructionist tactics from the other side, is the reform of the institution of Parliament. In the last week or two we have been treated with increasing frequency to those kinds of tactics which delay, which waste the time of members of the House, which waste the attention of the Canadian people, the long-term consequences of which are for Canadians to lose faith in their political process.

An hon. Member: They waste the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Hawkes: This government is concerned about changing the institution of Parliament and, after having sat in this House for only two months and three days, I understand even more completely why that is a priority of this government. In that connection I would just like to review our two-month record with respect to the change of this institution. The most important piece of legislation which is before this House and before the Canadian people is the freedom of information bill. If we, as Canadians, are dependent upon the interpretation of information which flows from the other side of the House, we are going to be bankrupt of ideas, bankrupt of the kind of information which will enable us to make solid decisions. If we pass the freedom of information bill in this House, and then put the information out into the public domain, we can let Canadians decide who is telling the truth and who is playing a magician's game.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: We believe in that principle over on this side of the House, and I believe our actions give credence to that principle.

Last night we had our Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) stand before us and lay out for the information of the Canadian people, for the members of this House, a five-year budgetary projection, not a six-day wonder, not a six-month wonder, but a five-year budget projection. That is what we laid out in the House of Commons. And that is an important principle for the kind of stability which this nation needs.

Members opposite might ask: what is so important about that? Where is the courage in that kind of step? Well, Mr. Speaker, I say to the people of Canada and to the members of this House that in the next five years we are going to have those numbers thrown back at us. They are projections which represent the best guess we can make today as to the state of the economy over the next five-year period of time. As is true of all guesses, not all of them will be correct. And members opposite will take advantage of that and attempt to throw those figures back in our faces. But I say that the Minister of Finance, and this government, have the courage to say to the Canadian people, "This is the way we think it will go." We had that same kind of courage in March, April and May of this year.

Based on the information which was provided to us we laid out to the Canadian people the kind of steps we felt we would be able to take, the kind of things we felt were necessary to undertake. And today we are getting some of those things flung back in our faces. In some cases I welcome the opportunity to debate them.

One other thing I would like to say before I turn to the budget itself is that we have had another historic precedent set by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Clark) in recent days. The Prime Minister chose to voluntarily appear before a committee of the House of Commons to defend his personal budget. The accountability of the expenditure of taxpayers' dollars begins on this side of the House. From the Prime Minister it flows to the cabinet, and it continues to be a concern of each and every one of us who sit on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: As I learn my parliamentary responsibilities in the ten standing committees of the House, and listen to question period, I hear many pleas from the other side of the House to spend money. I cannot recall, in two months and three days, a single suggestion of how to save money or how to raise the increased taxes to pay for what they propose to spend.

Mr. Speaker, the information provided to me as a member of Parliament, which is relevant to this budget and to the Public Accounts of Canada, is a stack of information which in reality is about 12 inches high. It is difficult material to comprehend. It was made available to us yesterday. If it is difficult for a member of Parliament to comprehend, I can imagine how confused the Canadian people must be in many cases about the provisions of the budget and about the state of the economy in Canada.

I would like to try to pin it down to some fundamental aspects that we should be debating with great gusto. The New Democratic Party is clearly on record as favouring a larger deficit. The Liberals talk about our "bizarre fixation" with the deficit.

An hon. Member: Bookkeeping matters!

Mr. Hawkes: I would like to ask the Canadian people to look at their family budgets. If one makes $500 a month and spends $600 a month, I ask the Canadian people: how long can you continue to do that? If you make $500 and you spend $600, how long can you continue to do that? If you make $2,000 but each and every month you spend $2,400, how long can you continue to do that? One year, two years, three years, four years—we have now had seven years in a row of that kind of spending. When we stand on this side of the House, and the finance minister stands up and says, "we must reduce the deficit," that is what he is talking about.

In the absence of the kind of controls which we on this side of the House are proposing, we have a future, but it is a bankrupt future. In the presence of the kind of expenditure controls and taxing policies proposed on this side of the House we have a rosy future. But we must begin to pay our way.

I ask the people of Canada to consider what happens if they take their Chargex card, or oil company card, and spend each month 20 per cent more than they make. Sooner or later you have to pay it back. You have to begin paying the interest on it and your expenses rise. The situation in Canada today is such that the federal government will be borrowing something in the order of $12 billion. That is the size of our deficit. The finance minister stood up in this House last night and talked about the cash requirements of the government. I wonder how many Canadians really understand those words, the cash requirements of the government.

I would like to draw an analogy. Out west we have a tradition called the auction sale. I think it exists in all parts of the country. We make great use of it. The auctioneer tries to get a big crowd with a lot of money, to compete for what he is selling. That is his job, to get the best price he can for his customer. I draw to the attention of the Canadian people that money is a commodity. It is like a car or a sofa, a commodity. It is in limited supply under any responsible government.

The way we auction money in the world is on the basis of interest rates. What you are doing in Canada today with a $12 billion debt is forcing the Government of Canada to go out and borrow in that restricted money market $600 for every man, woman and child. You are putting pressure on that auction market. If the government were not borrowing that much, the lenders would have it to lend to the private sector. There would be less competition. Ultimately we would have lower interest rates, the kind we can all live with.

The government is an unfair competitor in that auction sale for money and for resources. It, and it alone, has the power to tax. It can determine what it spends and what it raises. None of us in a free democracy have that choice. The government makes that decision on our behalf, and it has been making some terrible decisions over the years.

I would like to go to another feature of the budget. I saw over television last evening the president of the chamber of commerce from my area, Calgary.

Mr. Benjamin: Another barefoot boy.

Mr. Hawkes: He was one of the people who was very critical of the government for its budget. This criticism was based on the fact that we were not cutting budgetary expenditures quickly enough. I bring to the attention of the House that close to 80 per cent of the budgetary expenditures laid out in the documents before us are a consequence of legislation passed by this House or agreements signed by the previous government. I wish to illustrate the three most important parts of those expenditures.

The first is interest on public debt. We are approaching the point where 20 cents out of every dollar we raise through taxation is used to pay the interest on the debt created by government. I ask members opposite who want this bigger deficit, who want this government to borrow more money, how much social good could be done if we had that 20 cents of every dollar to give to the senior citizens of this country. Let's not be dreamers, let's be doers.

Let me come to the second large item which accounts for more than 30 cents of every dollar. That is the transfer payments to persons: unemployment insurance, old age pensions, family allowances, and social assistance of various kinds. Thirty cents out of every dollar goes to those kinds of people. This government has decided to leave the indexing provisions in place. Those allowances which go to the disadvantaged of this country will increase at the same rate as the cost of living. They are protected by this Minister of Finance and this government. That is a point we should make with clarity.

Another area of expenditures which accounts for approximately 20 cents out of that dollar is the transfers to provinces and other jurisdictions. Those are agreements which come up for renewal in 1982. If the Prime Minister continues on the course which he has started, which is working within a federation—not trying to run the whole show, but working with the provinces—I am optimistic that by 1982 the fiscal arrangements which we as a federal government have with the provinces can be arranged. Somehow they can be made more equitable so that the federal government will have more freedom of choice in its expenditure pattern.

These are the major features, interest payments on public debt 20 cents out of every dollar, transfer payments to persons 30 cents out of every dollar, transfers to provinces 20 cents out of every dollar. There are other agreements which account for the remaining 10 per cent. There is very little room in a federal budget for a new government to make significant changes because the agreements which have been signed are historical and long range.

Mr. Benjamin: Why didn't you say that during the election?

Mr. Hawkes: We did say much of that during the election. We said we wanted information, we could not get it and we could not tell. However, these were the directions. This budget is consistent with the directions I talked about during the election campaign.

Members opposite would have Canadians believe there will be no change in what they are going to find in their income tax form when it arrives at their houses next January. Let me just run over a few of them. I have used the context of a man and wife with a couple of children. I simply say that Canadians should look at this tax form. Their personal exemptions this year compared to last year will be $530 higher. The mortgage deductibility provision will allow many of them to deduct $375, and the energy tax credit will amount to $240 for many of them. Those are three of the major ways in which each individual Canadian family will be helped. That comes to almost $1,200, which is $100 that is non-taxed each month. Those are significant changes to all Canadians, and they should be identified. On that one they do not have to trust members on this side or the other side of the House. They can look at their individual tax forms and determine for themselves.

What have we done in terms of raising taxes? Members opposite would have you believe that we have really clobbered the Canadian people. That, I suggest, is simply not so. The group which will be hardest hit in terms of tax increases are the corporations.

● (1730)

The group of corporations which will be most affected by changes in tax legislation are those corporations which are engaged in the oil and gas industry. Those are the corporations, some 700 of which have headquarters in the city which I represent in this House of Commons, and I know that the chief executive officers and employees of those companies do not welcome the kinds of tax changes which will affect them, because the world for them will be significantly different after last evening than it was before. However, at the same time, the people in that industry—my friends, my neighbours, and the people who live around me—are Canadians first. I should perhaps back up from that and say that they are human beings first, the same as the rest of us.

Hon. members opposite talk about multinationals as if there were no human beings inside those corporations. Well, my friends and neighbours laugh, love, and breathe the same as hon. members of this House of Commons and those who work in the automotive industry and every other industry in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: I said that they are the same. They are in some ways. In some ways we do not do justice to what may in fact be the best example of pioneering left in Canada today, but there is a branch of that industry which is very seldom talked about and should be talked about more, and that is the exploration end of the industry.

Living in this part of the country, Ottawa, is a new experience for me, but when you live in this part of the country you come into contact with the oil and gas industry because someone drives a truck up to your home and puts fuel oil in your tank, or you drive your car to a service station and somebody puts gasoline in your tank. Let me tell hon. members that the oil industry begins out in the field in 40 below Fahrenheit weather with a wind-chill factor of 120.

What are we doing out in the bush country day after day in that industry? We are drilling a hole one mile, two miles, three miles, or perhaps four miles deep in the ground. How are we drilling it? The same way one drills a hole in a piece of wood. There is a drill down there except that that drill is going down through a narrow pipe. Sometimes it runs into granite, and it does not last very long. You are down there two miles in your search for oil and gas, and you have to bring up that whole two miles' worth of pipe to change the bit on the end of that drill. It comes up in 30-foot lengths. It is steel, and let us remember that the wind-chill factor is 120 below. That is where the oil industry begins, and that is what we are talking about when we are talking about oil self-sufficiency. It is human beings out in the bush in very difficult circumstances.

I would like the public record to show that by October 1 of this year in the province of Alberta alone there had been 19 industrial deaths in that industry. It is an industry which employs approximately 7,500 people when it is flat out. There were 3,500 time loss accidents. It is a hazardous occupation, full of risk for those who choose to invest in it, but a risk of life and limb for those who choose to work in it. Let us not forget that.

Mr. Benjamin: No health and safety laws in Alberta.

Mr. Hawkes: The hon. member opposite talks about health and safety laws in Alberta. We have a tradition in Alberta and in Alberta governments of listening to the people, not telling them what is good for them. We have just gone through a commission in which we looked at health and safety aspects. That will be done again and again. If there is any chance to improve the climate, I think we will be out in the forefront of those who seek to provide the kind of improvement which is necessary.

Mr. Speaker, all public policy is biased. There was never a government invented which could make a decree of any kind which did not show bias in favour of some and against others. Any document such as a federal budget should be judged in the light not only of its details as they impact on particular individuals but also in the light of what it attempts to do and the fact of whether it will accomplish what it intends to do. In his own words and in his own way, the Minister of Finance expressed his view of the budget as a budget which would rely on the initiatives and the sense of enterprise of Canadians. I reviewed the budget and came to some different words which may have relevance for our deliberations, but I think the budget addresses itself in two primary ways to the Canadian condition. What it attempts to do and what I think the policies of this government collectively attempt to do, is bias the universe for at least a period of time in favour of ownership. That is the first thing it does, and if one really looked inside the tax changes as they are going to affect Canadians, I think one could see that.

The most publicly visible part to this point is the mortgage deductibility plan, which encourages Canadians to own homes and makes it a little more possible for them to finance the costs of those homes.

One of the provisions which is in the same category is the provision related to spouses in small unincorporated businesses. For years, husbands and wives have been running small businesses and working long hours. The tax system has not encouraged that. The tax system has discouraged that. In terms of signalling a change in direction, that small provision, which is not at high cost to the taxpayers of Canada, is simply an expression of willingness on the part of this government to acknowledge the importance of husbands and wives working together to create businesses and economic futures for themselves. Owning a business and spending the 16 to 18-hour days which small business frequently requires is not everybody's cup of tea, yet as a government we still wanted to encourage ownership.

The provisions in this budget which address themselves to the issue of common stocks and related matters, I think, are an encouragement to all Canadians to invest in enterprises inside Canada. If you do not feel competent to run your own business, then this government wants to encourage you to put up part of the money and put it into the hands of somebody with the skill and drive to go out and make it grow through some other means. That is what the common stock provision is, and that relates to the issue of ownership.

The debenture bonds which will help relieve small business from the high cost of interest rates are interesting in two ways. It is a budgetary provision which is targeted to the principle of ownership, and it is a time limited provision. It is a step we need to take in this particular economic climate, but it is one which we hope a year or two down the road can disappear because it will no longer be needed as the government will be borrowing less money. The cost of money will go down, and we will all benefit from that.

The provisions related to capital gains on farms are another example of what I call the ownership philosophy which characterizes the budget which we heard last night.

The second major issue to which this budget addresses itself is something which professional economists would call the infra-structure concern, and we see its expression in the energy package. We see some words dedicated to the starting of an energy bank. In my city the words "energy bank" conjure up an image of oil and gas and their exploration. I want to say to the people in my riding that the words "energy" and "energy bank" in the Canadian context are much broader than that. We are talking about bringing substitute energy sources on stream so that individuals and corporations can have the kind of fuel which is indigenous to the regions of this country in economic terms so that they can go out and get the job done in the region.

● (1740)

Is my time up, Mr. Speaker? I will conclude very shortly. I have one idea which I would like to lay out for public debate and I hope that people will communicate with me on it. I think there is something psychologically damaging about the concept of unemployment insurance. I would like to throw out into the public arena of policy debate the whole concept of employment insurance. I believe the key word in both instances is insurance, and I think the steps in last night's budget move us closer to the reality of the insurance principle. But I think there is something psychologically damaging to the recipients of insurance payments when we say to them, "You cannot work, you cannot do things that are socially useful the way your friends and neighbours do." I would like us to begin to engage in a debate on a fundamental change in relation to that program in the direction of employment insurance. I would caution members of the House and members of the government that such a fundamental change should not be entered into hastily, but I think it is an issue that we might well support over the next year or two. Thank you for your attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in this debate on this budget which is the first and, I hope, the last one of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). It would have been more interesting even for the new member to speak on a budget with positive points. The hon. member even admitted to participating a few years ago in drafting the economic policy of the Progressive Conservative party, so I think he might have been better off keeping his mouth shut.

That is not so, Mr. Speaker, no, there is nothing in this budget to talk about, nothing to give Quebeckers and Canadians generally the least impression that there is something progressive in that so-called Progressive Conservative party. I would have liked to see the hon. member talk of job creation. Unfortunately, we heard nothing or nearly nothing about that, Mr. Speaker. In a speech that lasted over an hour, there were 30 seconds on job creation. One paragraph out of 25 pages, Mr. Speaker.

Not only nothing in terms of job creation, but in addition there are measures harmful to job creation in Canada. The rise in the price of gasoline, Mr. Speaker, as was pointed out by the critics of this budget, is going to create at least 100,000 more unemployed. If you add to that the other harmful measures in this budget, we will have at least 150,000 new unemployed. I could talk at length about the absence of concrete measures in the budget to protect the purchasing power of older people. There is nothing, Mr. Speaker, absolutely nothing, only higher transportation costs and unemployment. Nothing for pensioners. They will have to pay more to travel within their cities. They will have less purchasing power because inflation will probably reach 10 and 11 per cent. There will be less money for food and less money for clothing.

What about workers, Mr. Speaker? Workers will see in this budget an increase in their transportation costs to get to work, an increase in their contributions to unemployment insurance so that at the end of the week they will end up with a loss of at least 2 or 3 per cent on their regular salaries as a result of the budget measures alone, not to say anything about inflation. Before this budget, these same workers, these same unemployed, these same pensioners were sure that thanks to these programs their purchasing power would be protected. This is no longer the case, and I shall mention the high interest rates they have to pay on their loans.

The Canadian farmers whom hon. members of this Progressive Conservative government and the Social Credit Party of Canada claim they want to defend will have to pay more for the gas they need to operate their farm machinery and to carry their products to markets and to consumers. The budget will cause all these things farmers need to cost more. They may cost the average farmer between $500 and $800 more a year. This budget was put together by a Progressive Conservative government which claims to be the farmer's friend. This Progressive Conservative government has been supported for the past six months by Quebec Social Creditistes who also claim they are the farmer's friends. Well, Canadian farmers will certainly remember this Progressive Conservative government. In the next election Quebec farmers will remember Social Creditistes who let this government come up with this budget. We hope it will be called soon, Mr. Speaker, even if it implies an election campaign in the middle of winter. Farmers will remember Social Creditistes and Progressive Conservatives.

We could elaborate on the small and medium-size business and on the instability this government has been creating around them for the last six months, but in their case as in the case of other persons, of senior citizens, of pensioners, of businessmen, they will be penalized by the same increases in the cost of transportation, they will be penalized at all levels. Those people are going to remember in the next election.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), emphasized, I hope that Social Creditistes will stop propping up this Progressive Conservative government, as they have done in the last six months, and that they will co-operate with us to defeat it in the weeks to come, not only in this House but in their constituencies.

I also urge the Social Credit leader to remember his past as a great champion of provincial jurisdiction. That same leader, who claimed that the federal government interfered too much in provincial policies, will remember today that several provincial premiers, that of Alberta and even the Quebec finance minister have told this Progressive Conservative government that the excise tax is an unwarranted intervention in provincial jurisdiction. I trust the Social Credit leader will remember that when the time comes to vote on the budget and the non-confidence motions.

I trust that, tormented by his support of the Progressive Conservative party, of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), and tortured by the support he gives the Parti Québécois, he will for a change fight for the interests of Quebeckers and quit supporting this Progressive Conservative party as he has done in the last six months.

With regard to unemployment, let us look at the performance of the present government. For six months now they have been in power and they keep putting off implementation of their promises which have been changed only to shrink. They keep telling us they are looking into the problem and consulting the provinces. That is all very well, Mr. Speaker, but they should now start to act. Waiting till December to announce the employment programs for the fall, winter and spring is irresponsibility on the part of this government. In fact, we are still waiting because in his budget last night the minister spent only 30 seconds on the problem.

I trust the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) will take the opportunity of his intervention to announce concrete measures for job-creation. The only thing they have managed to do is reduce the Canada Works program, freeze funds for job-training programs, create economic uncertainty which penalizes especially the young, those who in the past were encouraged by the former Liberal government to propose programs for their communities which gave them both a chance to get some experience and earn a little money.

As early as June last, young people were told everywhere in Canada that unfortunately there would be no jobs for them in the civil service because the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) had decided to stop making jobs available especially to young people, women and Francophones. Those young people, Mr. Speaker, even if they have graduated from college or university during the past six months cannot plan a career in the civil service due to the drastic steps taken by the Progressive Conservative party which are based on Progressive Conservative dogma no longer consistent with the policies of 1979.

In addition, these same young people cannot hope to find a job on the labour market, as we can see from the figures published last month. These show that two-thirds of the newly unemployed in October were young people under 25 and that only one-third of all new workers were young people. There is therefore a gap and it is increasing steadily; it has increased by 25,000 for men between 15 and 24, by 18,000 for women 25 or more and by 4,000 for women between 15 and 24, which means that 22,000 people more have been forced into unemployment by this Conservative government, and that less than one-third of the new jobs went to young people.

This is the first increase in unemployment in over one year and it reflects the difference in the programs of the previous government and those of the new government. Mr. Speaker, it would be appropriate to underline the contempt that this new government has shown towards the House, as exemplified by the actions of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last month, the hon. member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox), the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) and myself asked the Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration to give us details about job creation. They replied that no details would be made public before the budget speech last evening. Mr. Speaker, I could quote the right hon. Prime Minister who said that if we wanted answers concerning the budget, we would have to wait until after the minister made his budget speech. He said the following:

Mr. Speaker, I can repeat for the information of the hon. member that a job creation program aimed at providing job experience for young Canadians will be included in the budget.

This took 30 seconds, Mr. Speaker, and two paragraphs over 25 pages. I do not believe that this can be considered as fulfilling the promises or commitments made by the government. That same week, Mr. Speaker, before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced that the budget would contain concrete measures, but without giving any details. The next day, he spoke before the Canadian Club in Toronto and gave them scoops on some details he refused to give us as members of Parliament, he refused to give to this House and the committee. That kind of arrogance will destroy the government.

In that budget the minister tried to get rid of the problem by passing it on to private industry, or by blaming rising unemployment on the population explosion. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why an increase in the population growth rate should penalize the young. It is my view that young people born in times of high birth rate have a right to work as much as those who were born in times of low birth rate.

Mr. Speaker, the same minister announced a program for the placement of 105,000 young Canadians by March 1981. In his budget he repeated this last night, but he brought no concrete measure that could show us he is going to achieve this. All we know is that they reduced the Canada Works projects, they froze the manpower training budgets. In that statement he tried to pass the buck once more by suggesting this will require total co-operation from private industry. What the minister is ignoring is that private industry is waiting for government leadership and this has not yet been forthcoming from this government.

It is wishful thinking to imagine that the tax credit programs will solve every problem, because there must be a tax liability in order to receive credits, and under the current conditions many companies do not pay tax. Where are the programs to help municipalities and co-operatives that do not pay tax, companies that do not have enough money, that do not make enough profits to pay tax, Mr. Speaker? We find nothing in the minister's proposals that could be of help to them.

Since I represent a riding with one university and five colleges, and 56 per cent of the unemployed in my riding are between the ages of 17 and 25, I must say that it is a subject of interest for me. I would not pretend to have found some miracle solution to a problem which plagues the economy of the whole western world. But I would say that it is our duty to do the utmost to "sensibilize" and to convince the government that we must make a supplementary effort if we are to heal this unacceptable situation.

As I mentioned before, we are not the only country to be faced with this situation. Hon. members surely know that youth unemployment in all countries is higher than the national average in each country. But for reasons I have yet to discover, whether they be historical, economical, seasonal or what, Canadian youth are, or at least seem to be, harder affected than the youth in other countries. We have statistics on that. In 1976 there was a 10 per cent unemployment rate for youth in Canada, and it was half that amount in most European countries. Those are the figures of the O.E.C.D. It is even more dramatic in the part of the country I represent which is French. They do not have the same possibility as those in the rest of Canada, the same possibility to pick up their belongings and move away, leave their province or leave their country. That is because of the linguistic situation which does not always guarantee the Francophone his rights all across the country.

[Translation]

In Quebec's case, the difference in language and culture limits the mobility of young people towards provinces offering more job opportunities. Statistics show a lower mobility rate for all Quebeckers. The most recent figures unfortunately date back to the 1966 to 1970 period. The study from which these statistics are taken points to the difference in language and culture as one of the causes for the lower mobility rate.

Thus Ontario, where the unemployment rate is lower, has a higher mobility rate than Quebec even though its net migration is positive. The same study points to the high proportion of young people among the migrants and the importance of economic reasons in the migration phenomenon. Therefore, the difference in language and culture keeps the unemployment problem among young people in Quebec at a higher level than would otherwise be the case.

Some technocrats in our present government and in past governments have found many reasons which explain our present predicament, such as the lack of effective bridges between the world of school and the world of work; the baby boom, or the demographic aspect of Canada; the general weakening of our economic situation and the structural factor of our labour market. These reasons might be acceptable to technocrats and government officials, but I do not think they are acceptable to Canadian youth and Canadian politicians. They cannot explain the fact that as long as 15 years ago youth unemployment was 1.7 times higher than adult unemployment.

Youth unemployment is not the difficulty of a splinter group or minority. At present there are 2.5 million to 3 million young people under the age of 25 in a labour force of ten million people. Since 1966 the number of young people unemployed has tripled, to more than 400,000, and the youth unemployment rate has more than doubled to 13.1 per cent in October.

Figures given out by the Economic Council of Canada are not more encouraging. In 1960 the youth unemployment rate was 1.7 times higher than the adult rate. By 1970 it had climbed up to 2.3 times the adult rate. In 1976 it was 2.5 times the adult unemployment rate. Now it is three times that, three times the unemployed rate in the regular work force. Technocrats can probably find the reasons for it, but that does not make it more acceptable for those young people who are unemployed.

But we also have to give the other side of the medal. It is a known fact that youth unemployment causes a company to make major investments. When an employer hires a group of youths, it is a fact that there is an expense cost for him in developing skills training programs. A high rate of turnover in youth is often a major factor which might make an employer hesitate. Also it is a fact that many young people at least seem to be less productive at the beginning of their careers than the rest of the labour market. But I think it is the responsibility of the government to try to minimize these effects, and the Liberal government was doing that already.

I can talk about the different kinds of youth unemployment programs. For the last few years the Liberal government set up a special Canada Manpower centre for youth co-operation and education programs which were joint federal-provincial initiatives to encourage the development of co-operative and work experience programs in order to facilitate the transition of young people from school and their integration into the labour force. Canada Manpower centres on campus play a positive role but there are jurisdictional federal-provincial conflicts. Job exploration and job experience training programs were designed to provide secondary school students with opportunity, based on exposure to the unemployment market, to make an informed and realistic career decision as to whether to continue with the in-school education process or to enter the labour force market on a permanent basis.

Following that, the Liberal government set up the Student Summer Employment and Activities program, Canada Manpower Centres for Students, the Young Canada Works program and the Summer Job Corps. These programs all have budgets which have increased in the last few years. The rise in youth unemployment must be kept to a minimum. We are hoping that the present government will continue those types of programs, not only for now, but for next summer. Also we are hoping that even though they waited for the month of December to announce programs for the creation of jobs for the winter and the spring, they will not wait until the month of July to do the same thing for the summer and fall.

An hon. Member: They probably will not be here.

Mr. Dawson: As the hon. member behind me said, probably they will not be here then. I hope we, as a Liberal government, will be over there trying to create those jobs.

May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

PROPOSAL THAT FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF CANADIANS BE ENTRENCHED IN CONSTITUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

Being aware that respect for minorities is, in any parliamentary system, a guarantee of its quality; considering the alarming rate of assimilation of Francophones outside Quebec in a Canada advocating linguistic equality for its two founding peoples, considering the necessity for Canada to convince all provinces of the necessity of recognizing the linguistic rights of its citizens, and considering the historic judgment delivered today by the Supreme Court of Canada concerning constitutional respect for linguistic rights, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin):

That the Canadian Parliament urge the government to implement a very strong, bold, untiring and fair linguistic policy by convening immediately a federal-provincial conference to convince the still wavering provinces of the necessity of entrenching basic rights in a renewed constitution, including linguistic rights for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

EXCISE TAX ON NATURAL GAS AND GASOLINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In preparing his budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) neglected a major area of potential government revenues—an export tax on natural gas. As the matter now stands, the natural gas industry gets $1.85 more per 1,000 cubic feet for exported natural gas than it gets for the gas it sells in Canada. That $1.85 premium provides the industry with $1,850 million a year in additional revenues, and with the 40 per cent increase in exports recently announced that figure will continue to grow. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans):

That the Minister of Finance revise his budget by imposing an export tax on natural gas that will remove the considerable incentive to export which is built into the present pricing scheme, and permit the government to reduce its excise tax on gasoline while maintaining its increased revenues.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GASOLINE EXCISE TAX REBATE FOR HANDICAPPED PERSONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter not only of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43 but because I believe there has been a slight oversight in the preparation of the budget which, I am confident, was unintentional on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) and his colleagues.

In view of the fact that the government's budget eliminates the excise tax rebate on gasoline for the handicapped, which will increase their gasoline cost by 25 cents per gallon, compared with an 18-cent per gallon increase for the rest of us, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House rescind the cancellation of the gasoline excise tax rebate for handicapped persons and reinstate their eligibility for a full rebate.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only by unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO BANKING SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity—a motion which, hopefully, will be unanimously supported.

In view of the fact that Canada is currently facing a difficult economic and financial situation, that interest rates are higher than ever before in the history of our country, that the chartered banks stand to gain most from this situation and accumulate scandalously high profits, that these institutions are not required to submit individual reports by regions or provinces, and that the chartered banks enjoy exclusive rights and privileges with regard to granting credit to the Canadian society, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House recommend to the government the establishment of a royal commission of inquiry into the Canadian banking system.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STATUS OF WOMEN

DISCUSSION AT UPCOMING MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that 900,000 women over the age of 65 in this country are below the poverty line, and in view of a persistent and increasing wage gap wherein the average wage of a woman is 60 per cent of that of a man—a figure which represents only in part the deprivation of women in Canada—and in view of the need for a whole arsenal of support systems for women wishing to work outside the home, including child care facilities, retraining centres, secure unemployment, maternity and pension benefits,

[Mr. Speaker.]

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chenier):

That the Prime Minister, on recognizing the urgency of this pressing national issue, act unilaterally to replace the topic of women as an agenda item before the first ministers' meeting next week.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion can be introduced only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PUBLICIZING OF U.S.S.R. DOCUMENT ON PLAN FOR MILITARY ACTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity concerning the angry reactions, particularly this morning, from Moscow concerning the deployment of further nuclear missiles by the United States and NATO allies in western Europe, and at the same time the existence of a restricted British intelligence document, ten pages of which are in my possession and which I intend to give immediately to the Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKinnon). I move, seconded by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble):

That the Canadian government request the government of the United Kingdom to make public a document entitled "Soviet Military Doctrine and Order of Battle", approximately 100 pages in length, detailing the entire plan of the Soviet armed forces for military action, including nuclear, against the west and, finally, that this should be done particularly to put a stop to the Soviet Union indulging in the old habit of the pot calling the kettle black.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

LIGHTING IN CHAMBER FOR TELEVISION BROADCASTING

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before commencing the oral question period, may I point out to members something which they may not have noticed. We are undergoing in the House an experiment with lighting. There has been an installation of lights high in the ceiling on one side, in the hope of being able to relieve the severity of the lighting that is placed lower down. This is experimental only. I should not, I suppose, add that the technicians hope the experiment will last more than one day. In any case, the experiment is there and the technicians have asked me and our colleagues in the House to evaluate this experiment to see whether it is better than the more severe lighting lower down.

Oral questions.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REQUEST MINORITY RIGHTS BE ENTRENCHED IN CONSTITUTION

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I shall direct my question to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled on two historic cases concerning the protection of official languages in Quebec and in Manitoba. Mr. Speaker, that judgment demonstrates the protection our federal system could give us concerning the rights of minorities and basic liberties. My question to the minister is the following: During the negotiations on the constitution, is he now going to insist on having the rights of minorities, and basic liberties, protected in the renewed constitution?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to say that I, for one, have not yet read the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, but half an hour ago I spoke with officials in my department who did read it. I am not sure what consequences this decision may have.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we should delay the proceedings until the technical problem is solved.

After a delay of 30 seconds:

[Translation]

Mr. Jarvis (Perth): Second, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that a meeting of the standing committee on the constitution will be held on January 23 or 24 next, I believe. This topic will be on the agenda, as a priority, with four or five other matters. I told the House some two or three weeks ago that this question is a priority with this government.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, would the minister agree that of all the benefits of our federal system, none is more evident than the one we see in the judgments rendered today, namely, the capacity of federalism to protect fundamental rights from the jurisdiction of any one legislative authority? In view of that self-evident proposition, could the minister assure the House that he and his government share that fundamental philosophy?

● (1420)

Mr. Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in saying, as a member of the government, that I share that philosophy: I doubt that there is a person in this chamber who does not share it. I might ask the hon. member to agree with me on one point related to the judgments. On my first briefing I did not perceive a direct implication on federal laws arising from these judgments. I would ask the hon. member to be a little patient, because there may be implications that on first reading one does not see.

I have instructed my officials to analyse the decisions. I emphasize that the decision was a very strong one—a unanimous decision of a nine-person court—and, as a lawyer, I appreciate its significance. I would ask the hon. member to be patient until I am advised of the implications that might flow, not necessarily on policy but in terms of federal legislation, from the decision.

SUPREME COURT DECISION—DISCUSSION WITH PREMIERS OF MANITOBA AND QUEBEC

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the House leader.

In view of the historic decision brought down today by the Supreme Court of Canada, which recognizes the rights of the Francophone citizens of Manitoba——will the Conservative cabinet urge the Prime Minister to contact the Premier of Manitoba to discuss ways and means of implementing the decision of the Supreme Court as it affects the citizens of that province?

[English]

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I certainly accept the hon. member's question as a representation. I would not be hesitant, if I were to ask the Prime Minister to contact the Premier of Manitoba, to ask him also to contact the Premier of Quebec.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS BE GUARANTEED

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations or to the Acting Prime Minister.

In view, once again, of the historic decision brought down today by the Supreme Court of Canada on the constitutional respect for linguistic rights, is the government willing to recognize that the present laissez-faire policy toward the provinces in linguistic matters has been called into question now by the Supreme Court of Canada, and is he willing, today, to guarantee all Canadians the same constitutional rights that are granted the citizens of Quebec and Manitoba and, in particular, those of Ontario and the provinces where we are now a minority threatened with extinction?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to say that ours is not at all a laissez-faire policy. I have pursued the work initiated by the former government on the constitution by using the sector approach which includes languages, communications and other topics. The work is progressing. The next conference will be held next month. Language is on the agenda. Our policy is not one of laissez-faire. We are trying to make the progress the former government tried to achieve. With regard to Ontario, I have little to say because I do not know what the consequences will be of those court rulings. I recognize that it is an historic decision, the consequences of which will be very important, so I think I should wait till I receive the report of my legal advisers before commenting further.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT RECOGNIZES TWO FOUNDING PEOPLES AND DISTINGUISHES MULTICULTURAL GROUPS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the major implication of this decision is that we need a national leadership. I would like to know whether that national leadership will come from this government. That is the question I put to the minister. Also, last November 23, again in the absence of the Prime Minister, I asked this government whether they recognized the equality of both founding peoples. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism answered, and I quote: "We on this side have always realized that this is a bilingual country and a multicultural society." In view of this ambiguous answer by the minister, I would like to ask the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations whether he can assure the House that the definition of the two founding peoples differs from that of multicultural groups, and that his government recognizes the equality of both founding peoples while respecting the major contribution of multicultural groups?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has put two questions to me. First, the leadership came on May 22. Second, I said, for instance to the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, that there was a difference between the two peoples and other minority groups. As I see it, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism did not confuse the situation.

[Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier).]

ENERGY

HOME HEATING FUEL—LACK OF SUPPLY FOR INDEPENDENT DISTRIBUTORS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that my colleagues and myself agree entirely with the ruling given today by the Supreme Court of Canada. We must at last recognize the rights of minority groups in all provinces.

● (1425)

[English]

Is the minister aware that Ultramar, a British multinational oil company, has cut off the supply of home heating fuel to at least 50 independent distributors in Ontario and Quebec in recent weeks? If so, what he has done about it?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the supply to independents I took a number of initiatives this summer and fall to increase the supply to them. There is a tight situation. My department does monitor the situation and the cost on an ongoing basis. We are continuing to look at the situation to see whether any sort of assistance can be given. I wrote to all the refiners and terminal operators this past summer, indicating to them that it was this government's policy and issued a directive to the companies that they should treat independents in a fair and equitable manner. The responses that I have had from all the refiners and operators that responded to my telex indicated that they understood this principle and were prepared to comply with it.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest to the minister that he check this out, because at a meeting this morning with representatives of independent distributors from the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario I was informed that the cutting-off process is continuing and a number of them are in danger of going completely out of business.

In this context, since these gentlemen brought to my attention their concern about the actions of Ultramar in this respect, and since there have been serious allegations that Ultramar just recently diverted oil supplies intended for Canada and sold the same supplies on the spot market, has the minister investigated that situation and, if so, what can he report to the House?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has any specific information with respect to diversion, I wish he would bring it to my attention, with all the details connected with it, so that I could investigate the circumstances that he brings to the attention of the House. If there is any such report, naturally I and my department will follow it up with respect to the kind of information that is obtained. If any diversion has taken place, I will advise the hon. member that it has taken place on the basis of the information I receive. I repeat, if the hon. member has any specific information I wish he would give it to me so I can follow it up.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to send the information to the minister about the dealers who have been cut off completely and also the allegation that a shipment intended for Canada has been sold on the spot market, specifically to Algeria, which country has been mentioned as the destination of the ship that was originally scheduled for Canada.

The final question I would like to ask, in the absence of the Prime Minister, is that in the House on Monday the Prime Minister assured me that he would check with the National Energy Board to see if the NEB was still considering export permits for home heating fuel. I wish to ask the minister if that checking has been done. More specifically, has the government taken steps to ensure that no more home heating fuel will be exported from Canada this winter?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, through my office, has in fact checked with the NEB. He will be providing the hon. member with a full and detailed explanation of the circumstances. I can assure the hon. member that recent applications with respect to the export of home heating fuel have not been accepted. There have been three over the course of the last month or so. I understand that three exports did take place during the course of last summer, with respect to summer heating fuel as opposed to winter heating fuel. A full and detailed explanation will be given to the hon. member by way of a letter, so that he can assess the information.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION ON QUEBEC BILL 101—LEGALITY OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. Now that the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled certain sections of Quebec bill 101 ultra vires and unconstitutional, what does the government intend to do to settle the legality of the other sections?

Will the minister make a commitment to this House to continue assisting the actions of individual litigants right up to the Supreme Court, in the same way as the previous government assisted Mr. Forest? I have in mind, in particular, the actions that are now before the Supreme Court by the Quebec Home and School Association, the Protestant School Board of greater Montreal, and the Devine case. Will he make a commitment to this House to continue supporting financially those actions right up to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I thought that commitment had already been given by the Secretary of State in response to a question some weeks ago. Certainly that continues to be the policy of the government.

TRANSLATION OF ALL MANITOBA STATUTES

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. In view of the historic decision as it affects the province of Manitoba, will the minister get in touch with the premier of that province, Mr. Sterling Lyon, to offer him what translation facilities and technical expertise can be spared by the federal government in order than he can begin the historic job of translating all Manitoba statutes passed since 1890, some 89 years of statutes passed only in English, so that they can quickly and speedily be translated into French in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am not convinced that that is the implication of the decision. The hon. member may be right. I ask him, please do not misunderstand, but on the basis of my preliminary briefing I am not sure that the decision extends that far. It may be significantly more narrow and may relate to the legal process rather than to all statutes. As the hon. member will know, on the exact point that he raises there is litigation pending: if I am not mistaken, it is the asbestos nationalization case.

I apologize, but as the hon. member knows, the decision is only a very few hours old. I am not sure that is the implication. Once I have received the advice of the government's legal advisers, I will be in a much better position to respond directly to the hon. member's question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Hon. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Defence. There is growing concern that we are not being given full and complete information on the proposed F-18A fighter aircraft. Has the minister seen the report of the past week which was prepared by the General Accounting Office in the United States government and which states that the F-18A program is in difficult straits due to major cost overruns, deficient performance, severely delayed delivery dates and, of extreme importance, deliberate concealment of information needed to redress these difficulties?

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Minister of National Defence and Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the critic for the Liberal party is now on the distribution list, courtesy of the NDP, of leaked documents from the GAO.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: I was made aware of the existence of this draft document last week and realized that the General Accounting Office in the United States plays a very important and real role in their selection of all military equipment in a critical fashion. They have pointed out the difficulties that the F-18A is undergoing. We had our chief of the project office down there two weeks ago. There are five or six areas, some of which were mentioned by the hon. member, of real concern. We are confident that in four out of the five, corrective action is being taken. There is one other area that we are more concerned about, and we will be reporting back on it later.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to hear that the Minister of National Defence is also on the receiving list for the reports. The reports seem to indicate that they are having considerable difficulty in keeping the F-16 in the air, and are having even more difficulty in getting the F-18A off the ground. As the minister indicated, the report pointed out that there are structural faults with this aircraft which may well entail some major redesign. There are problems with late delivery of the sub-systems, and many other difficulties.

In light of these difficulties, will the minister indicate to this House that any decision relating to this aircraft and to the choice between the two aircraft will be delayed until there has been a full and complete investigation of these allegations, and the concerns that have been expressed in this House have been allayed?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to tell the hon. member that the cost overruns are not one of our serious concerns. The contract that we will have to sign with either company will cover us against cost overruns. They are going to be in fixed 1977 dollars. The report will be studied in great detail. We will not take any precipitative action until we are satisfied that the problems they are having are only the normal problems that any plane manufacturer has when putting a new plane into production.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASED OIL PRICES—STEPS TO PREVENT GOUGING OF CANADIANS

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last week, Imperial Oil raised the price of gasoline to their dealers by the equivalent of eight cents a gallon. This week they have directed their retailers to increase immediately gasoline by 20 cents a gallon at the pumps, for a total of a 28-cent increase. Diesel fuel has gone up by 35 cents per gallon in the last week and a half. An excise tax official in the Department of Finance informed my office this morning that an oil company has the right to set the price at whatever they feel the market will bear.

Is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs monitoring this situation in order to prevent Canadians from being gouged by much higher than necessary prices, and also to protect individual service station and outlet operators from being criticized simply because they have no choice but to charge the price that has been dictated to them by the oil companies, the latter of whom were obviously supported by the present government in last Tuesday night's budget?

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs monitors price increases only from the aspect that there may be a conspiracy to restrict trade or to restrict competition.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRAMS FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, the Minister of Finance spoke of the effect of higher energy prices and also of programs for the maritimes and Newfoundland. We are also aware of the spin-offs on central and western Canada. As the minister said nothing of projects for Quebec, I was wondering whether that was just an oversight or whether the minister simply had nothing to announce for Quebec.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to the hon. gentleman that I cannot answer him in his native tongue but, as hon. members know, I am a bit clumsy in that language. There are many things in the budget that will benefit the people of Quebec. For example, 30.3 per cent of the energy tax credit will go to the people of Quebec yet they have 26.7 per cent of the population, and 81.5 per cent of the people of Quebec will benefit from the energy tax credit.

In addition, we have rectified a wrong imposed on the taxpayers of Quebec by the government which preceded us. I refer to page 68 of the budget papers. We are going to make a refundable Quebec abatement. We are going to assist Quebec taxpayers, those with low incomes who presently lose the benefit of the existing 16.5 per cent Quebec abatement. From now on they will be paid the amount of that abatement. This is to rectify the injustice done to the taxpayers of Quebec by hon. gentlemen opposite during the past five or six years.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER AMOUNTS RECEIVED BY QUEBEC WILL BE USED FOR PROJECTS IN THE PROVINCE

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to tell the minister that he does not need to apologize for not using my mother tongue. Besides, he made a commendable effort in the House and I congratulate him on it. But I must say, Mr. Speaker, that through our excellent simultaneous translation service I noted he deftly evaded my question.

Mr. Speaker, the credits announced are not solely for Quebec, they will benefit all Canadians. There remains a balance of $360 million to $375 million which the federal government will get from Quebec taxpayers. Can the Minister of Finance tell us today, yes or no, whether he is ready to guarantee that the money coming from Quebec will be used for projects in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are many other benefits I could mention. The provisions of this budget apply to the Quebec small businessman in the same way as they apply to businessmen in the rest of the provinces, and I promise that the taxpayers and the people of Quebec will be treated just as well as, or in the same way as, people in any part of Canada.

The way I look at it is this: confederation is not a question of dollars and cents; it is a question of whether we build up Canada together with the people who come from other countries, and this is what we must continue to do. We cannot measure that in dollars and cents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETRO-CANADA

POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF CORPORATION IN OIL REFINERY AT COME-BY-CHANCE, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister tell us whether his department has been approached by the government of Newfoundland concerning the possible involvement of Petro-Canada in the idle oil refinery at Come-By-Chance and, if so, has he instructed Petro-Canada to study the feasibility of its involvement in this project?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): There has been some communication between our two governments with respect to the refinery at Come-By-Chance. I do not recall a specific reference to Petro-Canada, but I will refresh my memory as to the correspondence and get in touch with the hon. member.

ENERGY

STEPS TO REDUCE CONSUMPTION OF HOME HEATING OIL

Mr. Tom Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it relates to a question I addressed to him on November 13 while his estimates were being considered in the House.

I asked him what his government intended to do to help alleviate the impact of the rising cost of heating by fuel oil in areas of Canada where it is not possible to switch to natural gas because it is not available. The hon. gentleman mentioned a new nozzle designed to reduce consumption of fuel oil. I understand the Canadian Standards Association has not as yet even received a proposal in connection with this device. Has the minister anything further to announce to the House to help 30 per cent of Canada's population who face this problem?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hon. member will recall I told him that in our energy package we are trying to bring about a substantial transfer to natural gas. This, in itself, will improve security of supply to those who stay on oil. On the conservation side we shall be taking certain very substantial initiatives. With respect to the retrofitting of oil furnaces, this will be encouraged by tax incentives. In addition, we intend to greatly expand our conservation program through CHIP. So we are taking a number of initiatives which will apply across Canada but which will have special application to those who continue to use oil-burning furnaces.

THE BUDGET

REASON TAXI DRIVERS NOT GRANTED TEN CENTS A GALLON TAX REBATE ON GASOLINE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

Surely the minister knows that before the presentation of the budget taxi owners were entitled to a refund of 7 cents on a gallon of gas. Surely the minister is aware that if he does not change his decision, taxi owners will suffer a loss of about $2,000 a year, and in the Montreal region alone about 700 taxi drivers will be unemployed. Could the minister tell me why he did not give taxi drivers a refund of 10 cents on a gallon of gas, as he did to farmers, commercial fishermen and public transport systems?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the general excise tax increase is to apply to everyone. Three exceptions have been made for certain reasons—urban mass transit, farmers and fishermen in connection with work on their farms or their fishing boats—and we cannot allow further exceptions. Taxi drivers will, of course, have to increase their fares to cover their increased costs. There is no way of avoiding this. It has happened in the United States, it has happened in England, in Germany, in Japan, in Italy, in France; we cannot avoid it. I am sorry, but I cannot give the hon. member any other answer than that.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR MEASURES OTHER THAN TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR ENTERPRISES

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

The budget being totally devoid of measures to increase Canada's effort in research and development, in spite of his party's election campaign promise to give tax breaks of about $125 million to businesses to encourage them to spend more money on research and development, could the minister tell the House whether the government intends to use other means than tax write-offs for businesses, to promote further research and development in Canada?

Hon. Heward Grafftey (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the hon. member that a few weeks ago we voted an increase of $40 million to universities in support of research and development. It is true that there are no incentives for research and development in the budget. We put down some plans a few weeks ago with respect to incentives for research and development. In the meantime, I can assure the hon. member we are going to act very shortly in the area of research and development with direct help to industry, but not necessarily through tax incentives.

FISHERIES

INVESTIGATION OF LICENSING POLICY

Mr. Charles Haliburton (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The minister has on a number of occasions indicated his desire that hon. members and others should express their views and participate in the making of decisions relevant to fisheries policy, particularly licensing policy.

● (1450)

In view of the fact that departmental studies are under way or completed, can the minister advise when the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry might be asked to examine the proposals of Messrs. Levelton and Sinclair affecting the licensing on our respective coasts?

Hon. James A. McGrath (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has indicated, I have ordered a complete fisheries policy review and I would like very much to include this House in that policy review. To this end I have been endeavouring to have the two reports referred to by the hon. member—the Levelton report on licensing on the east coast, and the Sinclair report on licensing on the west coast—referred to the standing committee where they would form a reference so the committee can involve itself directly in this policy review.

Unfortunately, the official opposition has not co-operated with us to that end, in that they have not been able to agree on the order of reference to the committee. I am hoping that they may, perhaps, find it in their hearts during the Christmas season to allow one of our motions under Standing Order 43 to pass so that the committee can get on with its study.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDS FOR MANITOBA INDIAN BROTHERHOOD

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of the fact that this government owes the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood $270,000 for third-quarter core funding, and that although the MIB has settled their internal difficulties this government has still refused to give them the money which it owes them, would the minister tell us when he will give the money to this organization, so that it can pay its phone bills and pay the salaries that are owing, before Christmas as well as make sure that this organization can work on behalf of the Indian people of Manitoba?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the hon. member for Churchill that the point he makes, that the Government of Canada owes the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood that amount of money, is not correct. I had a meeting with representatives of the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood today, along with my colleague, the Secretary of State. We agreed this morning that tomorrow at nine o'clock, representatives of the MIB and representatives of the two government departments would sit down in Winnipeg to look at the bills that have to be paid immediately, as well as to establish a very clear plan of action in terms of how repayment can be made as well as future operations of the MIB covered. That was agreed to this morning and the plan will go forward.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, it is the second time in the House that the minister has told me meetings will take place. I hope that these meetings will really take place.

My supplementary question is addressed to the Secretary of State. Since his department owes the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood over $250,000, and that amount is owing, will the minister confirm that he has refused to pay this money; and will he also confirm that he has ordered his junior minister, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, not to pay the money owed by that department?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the habit or ordering anybody, and certainly none of my colleagues. I think the hon. member should understand, as I am sure he is well aware, that there has been a very difficult situation with respect to both the organization of the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood and their financial situation.

What my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I have tried to do today is to work out a plan that is both sensible and helpful in the situation. I think it was a very useful meeting with the representatives and the chief this morning. Tomorrow there is to be a full-scale meeting, and I believe that by the end of the day tomorrow we will be well on the road to putting things in order so that the MIB can function effectively.

EMPLOYMENT

THE BUDGET—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Does the budget proposal to allow men to gainfully employ their wives represent the sum total of the entire employment strategy for women long promised by the Conservative government and, if not, when can the women of Canada hope that the minister's many previous pious utterances on this subject may acquire some substance?

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The point to which the hon. member has referred in the budget address of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, is an important one, but she well knows that it is not by any means the only commitment to the employment of women that this government has made and will be making. I suggest to the hon. member, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member stay in the House later this afternoon, when she may well hear further details of the employment strategy of this government relating to women.

THE BUDGET

REASON FOR INCREASING TAX ON GASOLINE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The Prime Minister said in the House in 1975, when he was still member for Rocky Mountain, that an excise tax on gasoline is "very unfair", "inequitable", and would be something that would "hit the little guy".

I want to ask the minister why the government is imposing a tax increase of 18 cents a gallon that, to use the Prime Minister's own words, is unfair, inequitable and would hit the little guy, since even when the proposed refundable tax credit is fully phased in, it would return less than half—perhaps a third—of the amount collected in excise tax, and the full credit would not be paid at all to taxpayers, to the little guys of this country, until two years have gone by.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in 1975 the hon. gentleman's government imposed a 10-cent excise tax on gasoline—8 cents less than the tax we are planning to impose in our budget—without any tax credit relief to the Canadian people; and when they did that I did not hear the hon. gentlemen moaning, groaning, wailing, gnashing their teeth and spilling crocodile tears as they are now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHETHER WOODSMEN WILL RECEIVE TEN-CENT EXCISE TAX REBATE ON GASOLINE

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

I would like, first of all, to thank the hon. Minister of Finance and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion for having included in the budget the suggestion made by my colleagues and myself concerning tax incentives for the Gaspé peninsula and the Atlantic region.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether the rebate for farmers, fishermen and local public transit systems will also apply to forest workers. Let me explain: as you know, these workers are either full-time farmers who work as woodcutters occasionally or full-time lumbermen. In my area, the North Shore—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member ask his question?

Mr. De Bané: Will forest workers benefit from this 10-cent rebate on the excise tax as well as the farmers who also work as lumbermen?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the exemption applies to farmers in connection with their off-highway activities, to fishermen in connection with the operation of their fishing vessels, and to urban mass transit systems. It does not apply to forest workers. We had to ask everyone to bear an equal part of these increasing costs, the same as do forest workers in the United States and other countries who have to bear these increased costs which are, due to a vanishing resource, becoming more and more expensive.

BROADCASTING

TELEVISING OF FORTHCOMING LIBERAL CONVENTION

Mr. Bob Lane (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the Liberal party convention was booked into the Winnipeg convention centre prior to December 6 of last week, and in view of the fact that a recreational vehicle dealers show was booked into the centre for March 20 to 23 and was asked, on December 6, to cancel their show because the CBC said they would not televise the convention if they could not get in two weeks ahead of time, would the minister advise the House, first, why the televising of a political convention by a Crown corporation takes precedence over a private enterprise program and, second, can he tell me whether the corporation will reimburse the recreational vehicle association for their brochure printing out of their $4 million budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I would assume, Mr. Speaker, that both recreational events can be looked after adequately, but I will check with the corporation to see whether or not there is a problem with this location.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House will recall the slight delay at the beginning of the question period. The last question to be recognized will be at five minutes past three o'clock.

THE BUDGET

IMPACT OF RISING OIL PRICES ON NORTHERN RESIDENTS

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are totally dependent on oil as an energy source, and whereas the severe climate makes residents of these territories the highest consumers of heating oil in the country, will the minister agree to revise the budget to include measures that will cushion the impact of rising oil prices on northern residents?

● (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member no doubt knows, the measures announced in the budget have no effect: there is no excise tax involved with respect to heating oil. With respect to the question of future increases in oil and gas prices and their effect on the people of that area, certainly that is something we can take into consideration. If there were to be a program to assist in that area, the difficulty is boundaries because, of course, there are northern areas of Canada right across the whole continent; there are areas which are more south that are just as cold as the far north, and other problems of that nature.

Mr. Ittinuar: Mr. Speaker, the minister allowed super depletion allowances for frontier packages in exploration, yet he is deplete of answers for northern residents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Lane.]

Mr. Ittinuar: On October 29, 1979, the minister told the House that he was very sympathetic to the economic problems of northern residents. Today I received a telegram from Yellowknife, in the western Arctic, which is a Conservative riding—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Ittinuar: Can the minister explain why oil prices are being cushioned in the Atlantic provinces while residents of the Arctic are left to fend for themselves?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I can only suggest that the hon. gentleman wait until the full plentitude of our energy program is outlined.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Did the minister say "platitude"?

Mr. Crosbie: They do not like this, Mr. Speaker, because they are afraid we might do something that they will be happy about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The proceeds from the energy tax will be used in many ways to help in the area of conservation and energy alternatives generally.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

RENEWED FEDERALISM—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL SOON ADOPT CONCRETE MEASURES

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a document in my possession indicating that the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations recommended, at one of their caucus committee meetings, that they put forward proposals regarding symbolic actions the government can implement to promote the concept of a renewed federalism.

[Translation]

My question is as follows: Could he assure the House that in view of the judgment of the Supreme Court he will stop speaking about symbolic action and will very soon do something concerning renewed federalism?

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I believe that we have taken concrete action as a government since May 22 and that some of our other initiatives are also important for Canadians. We have made some progress. I am not sure which document the hon. member has in his possession, but I would like to see it. I think the hon. member will agree that other things such as symbols are also very important.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FUNDS TO CONSTRUCT MORE ADEQUATE FACILITIES IN TORONTO

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications. It concerns the antiquated and scattered facilities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the city of Toronto.

Would the minister please indicate to the House and to the nation whether the government is considering an appropriate allocation of funds within its present financial program to permit the CBC to construct a single, modern facility in Toronto and when a decision on the project can be expected; and would he not also agree that the construction of such a centre would create many badly-needed construction jobs in metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member well knows that the question of new and improved facilities for the CBC in Toronto has been a matter of concern to the corporation for many years. Of course, it is an issue of great expenditure, and I know the corporation is working toward eventually establishing such facilities. But I cannot indicate in more precise terms whether that is likely to happen with greater speed this year.

FINANCE

INQUIRY WHETHER MINIMUM WAGE WILL BE INCREASED

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. I would like to remind him that a few weeks ago, in answer to my question, he said he would help those persons who really need help in Canada. Therefore, I want to ask if he deliberately forgot to announce in his budget that he would raise the minimum wage, set at $2.90. Can the minister tell us if he intends to raise this minimum wage, which is now set at $2.90, or does he simply intend to go on making the rich richer and the poor even poorer by his decision to lay the burden of taxation on those who always end up paying, namely, the medium-income people.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the present minimum wage is one that was left with us by the last administration. I am sorry to hear that the hon. member is disgusted with it: he never expressed that view when he was a member of the other government.

An hon. Member: Of course he did.

Mr. Crosbie: This is an issue which is under review by the Minister of Labour. I am sure that he will bear every consideration in mind, including the callous disregard of the last government to do anything about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POINT OF ORDER

MR. REID—LEVEL OF LIGHTING IN CHAMBER

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, as one of those who raised some concern about the light levels, I want to say that the experiment is a success, and I hope Your Honour will keep the light levels down as they are now.

An hon. Member: Perhaps it is a success over there, but not back in this corner.

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated to the House earlier, we are experimenting with a set of lights that are higher up which hopefully will produce the same illumination with less glare. We will try it for a short while.

An hon. Member: It does not improve the view.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order with respect to business of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) seeking the floor on the regular Thursday question of House business?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has given me notice of a question of privilege which I gather does not arise out of the proceedings today but out of previous proceedings. Therefore, perhaps it is appropriate to recognize the regular Thursday point of order on House business first and then hear the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council what the business will be for the remainder of the day. In the unlikely event that the House will be sitting tomorrow, would he consider the appropriateness of continuing with the budget debate until all outstanding motions or amendments are disposed of?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not share the same pessimism as my hon. friend about our being here tomorrow. As a matter of fact I was going to inquire, if the light is so nice on that side, if we might experiment with the light on this side—

An hon. Member: Come over here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —so that we would have the advantage of lights on both sides of the House as we proceed toward Christmas next week.

I should like to indicate our intentions with respect to the legislative program into the balance of this week and next week. Tomorrow—

Some hon. Members: What about today?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Tomorrow it is our intention to call Bill C-20 for the one sitting day allotted under Standing Order 75C for Committee of the Whole stage. Beginning next week we will commence third reading of Bill C-20 and passage at all stages of the main estimates.

An hon. Member: What about today?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, with respect to House business, I wonder if I may ask the President of the Privy Council if he plans to make any further statement to the House, either on statements by ministers or at some point, concerning the status of those income tax forms which we were told have been put in the mail. In view of the fact that I know of no one having received his income tax form, can the minister say whether there is any plan about that? Will he be making any statement to the House on that matter?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, certainly I will make some inquiries with respect to the position. If I had had some notice of the hon. member's intention to ask me that, I could have given the information. I will make some inquiries with respect to that matter and I will report back to him. Perhaps we can talk about that later.

• (1510)

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a question of the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government House leader. For some months now we have had a motion on the order paper for the creation of a Senate-Commons committee to inquire into nuclear energy. I wonder whether the House leader would be kind enough to give the House some indication as to when he might be calling that?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among the parties in respect of the appropriateness of the terms of reference. I know the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody has taken part in that discussion and has indeed written to me. We are taking this up and, as a matter of fact, a ministerial meeting is being scheduled for tomorrow to review the representations of the hon. gentleman. It is my intention, if we can settle the terms among us all so that they would be acceptable, to take that matter up as soon as the House returns in January.

[Translation]

Mr. Guay: Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the House leader. In view of the fact that we are going on with the regular business of the House, I would like to point out that motion No. 9 under my name and dealing with the re-establishment of Canadian merchant marine should normally be debated next Monday at five o'clock. I would like to know if the right honourable Prime Minister or the minister responsible will be present in the House to state his position in clear, unequivocal and specific terms, with respect to a Canadian merchant marine?

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I know how important the hon. gentleman's question is to him and, indeed, to members on this side of the House. I want to assure him that there will be a person here to indicate clearly the government's position, which I think is already known to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I would like to stand the question of privilege until tomorrow, if I may, please.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be some particular subject which hon. members have a great desire to discuss today. I wonder if I might invite them to do so behind the curtains or in the corridor so we can hear the business that is on the floor of the House.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BUJOLD—PROGRAM HOSPITALITY CANADA—ALLEGED LACK OF INFORMATION ON GRANTING OF CONTRACT TO CP AIR

Hon. David MacDonald (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it was drawn to my attention a few moments ago that on Tuesday the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold) raised a question in respect of the operation of Open House Canada and its unfair utilization of Canadian Pacific Airlines as opposed to Air Canada.

This matter is somewhat complicated, Mr. Speaker, and I do not want to get into detail here on the floor of the House. I think it is perhaps fair to point out, however, that there is no positive pursuit of any policy in respect of Open House

Canada that favours one airline over another. Indeed, Open House Canada tries to achieve maximum effectiveness of both airlines.

There has been some problem during the course of the summer in respect of the central travel service of Air Canada, which I think is what led the member to believe there was some direct bias in favour of the direct travel service of Canadian Pacific. Just so the record can be clear, the member indicated some figures on Tuesday which would indicate a rather disproportionate share of the business being directed toward Canadian Pacific. The fact is that Canadian Pacific is not the only or the biggest carrier of Open House Canada participants. On a national basis I would have to report that in fact the groups using Air Canada do significantly outnumber those using Canadian Pacific. The hon. member referred specifically to five western cities, I think, where Canadian Pacific had been, indeed, more active, but on a total basis actually Air Canada has been more active in respect of the travel program of Open House Canada participants than anyone else.

I think that statement was needed just so there will be no thought that I had, even inadvertently, misled the member or the House.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—CHARLOTTETOWN

Question No. 456—Mr. Herbert:

How many buildings are presently occupied by the Department of Veterans Affairs in Charlottetown, and what is the (a) name (b) address (c) number of square feet of space in each building?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works): Three buildings are presently occupied by the Department of Veterans Affairs in Charlottetown.

(a)	(b)	(c)
Florence McKay Building	Grafton Street	434 M^2
Dominion Public Building	Queen Street	1,887.7M^2
Heritage Canada Building	Great George Street	55.7M^2

Question No. 458—Mr. Herbert:

1. Were architects selected to prepare plans for the Department of Veterans Affairs building in Charlottetown, P.E.I. and, if so, who are they?

2. Has a suggested design been submitted and, if so, what was the architect's estimate of the cost of the building?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Minister of Public Works):

(1) Yes, Consortium Designers Incorporated.

(2) A preliminary design was produced for site No. 9. No design work has yet been done for site No. 15 and no estimate of cost has been developed.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS BOARD ACCOUNT

Question No. 463—Mr. Herbert:

In each of the past five years, what amount was transferred to the Agricultural Products Board account?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture):

None. However, the amounts necessary to recoup the Agricultural Products Board account were:

1974-75	$ 97,744
1975-76	414,841

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 12, 1979, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government; the amendment thereto of Mr. Gray (p. 2294) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Rae (p. 2304).

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to complete the speech I started yesterday. I was pleased to hear the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) state a few moments ago, in answer to my hon. colleague, that he would announce this afternoon the specific measures the Progressive Conservative government intends to take. We have been waiting for the Tory promises for seven months now and I dare hope that there will be substantial and really significant measures for the unemployed in Canada. I see that the minister is smiling, and we shall all be here to listen carefully to what he has to say.

[English]

The Liberal government has in the past made enormous efforts to try and minimize youth unemployment, but I think it is our duty as members of Parliament to try to convince the present government that if we want the young people to believe in a strong Canada we must prove to them that we are preoccupied with their predicament.

I could talk about the numerous aspects of the problem, whether it be the fact that the economic costs involved are difficult to calculate, or comparing young unemployed who live with their parents with adults who have to support families. However, we must take into consideration that since students are not finding the opportunity to obtain jobs after graduation, some withdraw from the labour force and retreat into idleness. Other impacts arise from the frustration that is felt when a two or three or four-year course of study produces no job at the end, even a job which is marginally relevant. Still more problems arise when it is discovered that all but the most menial jobs require work experience, and one cannot get work experience without a job.

[Translation]

According to the traditional approach, it is more important to protect the jobs of breadwinners and it is still partly valid.

However, recent developments in our society tend to promote equal opportunities for all. A good example would be the women's lib movement. There may be cases where young people actually suffer from discrimination, but employers usually turn them down merely because of the structural factors mentioned previously. Obviously, although new entrants may have equal qualifications they will have more problems finding a job than older workers.

One way or another, we must admit that young people have a hard time entering the labour market. Such persistent alienation cannot be dismissed as harmless just because youth is a temporary stage of life, Mr. Speaker. Special programs have to be put in place to help young people enter the labour market provided these programs do not penalize other groups and do not set young people apart even more so than they are now. More practical arguments than merely providing equality of opportunity can be brought up to justify the creation of special youth employment programs. It is highly important to train young people so that they may take over responsible jobs. Disenchantment and frustration on being turned down when applying for a job can lead to a feeling of rejection that may affect young workers for a long time. Unemployment and instability prevent people from acquiring good working habits and tend to isolate them more and more from the labour force.

In certain cases, unemployment among the young leads to an increase in crime. That problem is especially felt in large American and Canadian cities where unemployment among the young results in an increase in the number of suicides, in violence, prostitution and drug consumption. After a while, it is very difficult to pull some young people away from their illegal activities. In some European countries, for example in Italy, there is fear that this type of unemployment will lead to an increase in violence and to anarchy. We could discuss high and low the youth problem, but I would like to deal with other subjects relating to the budget.

● (1520)

[English]

As I said in my speech yesterday, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this budget for the youth of Canada, nothing but repeated promises and vague solutions. No, what we have are measures that will create more unemployment and raise prices to a level that we have not seen since the years when we had Conservative governments, and you know what happened to those governments, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

What we have is a budget that will increase by approximately $380 a year the mean transportation and heating costs of the average Canadian family. And for the average Quebec dairy producer, that means an increase of almost $800 a year. Last April, when he was addressing the Quebec Chamber of Commerce, the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Clark) announced in the middle of the election campaign that he would increase the country's economic growth by 5 per cent, that he would reduce unemployment to 5 per cent and that he would bring the inflation rate down to 5 per cent. Mr. Speaker. However, in this budget the Tories foresee not a growth of 5 per cent but a mean growth of 3 per cent until 1985. And if that is what they anticipate, it will probably be less. For 1980, the government anticipates in its budgetary documents a real economic growth of only 1 per cent.

Instead of bringing the unemployment rate down to 5½ per cent by 1985, the Progressive Conservatives have chosen, as shown by their budget forecasts, to let it rise from 7.3 per cent this year to 8.3 per cent next year, and they do not seem intent on trying to achieve the present rate, even by 1985. Instead of reducing inflation to 5½ per cent, it is now certain that Conservative policies will increase the present rate of 9.3 per cent by more than 100 per cent in the next two years and that there will be a very slow decrease afterwards.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, there is another aspect of the problem to be considered, and that is the area of federal-provincial relations. For the past six months, the new government has been advocating a new era in federal-provincial relations, an era of consultation, of non-interference and of co-operation. With this budget, one can see the results achieved, Mr. Speaker. Several premiers, some of which are even Conservatives, are condemning the budget, while others, such as the British Columbia premier, say that his province is ignored by the provisions contained in the federal budget. As to Quebec, the situation is quite simple and is summed up by this newspaper headline:

[English]

"Budget will help PQ win votes: Parizeau". I quote:

Parizeau said yesterday that the measure makes no economic sense. Politically, it presents Quebec with a "remarkable opportunity" to show how federalism works against Quebec's interests—

Quebec says the gas tax hike will siphon $600 million out of the province, virtually cancelling the benefits Quebec draws from federal subsidies for imported oil.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister was asked to get involved in the referendum debate, we had the feeling he was going to do so on the federalist side. Unfortunately, with statements like those made by Mr. Parizeau, one can see that the separatist forces are more likely to benefit from the situation. With the measures contained in the budget, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative government succeeded in creating a common cause among separatists who were in the middle of a unity crisis. The Quebec minister of finance has stated that he intends to draw maximum benefit from this budget during the referendum period. This, Mr. Speaker, is not the kind of contribution we expected from the Prime Minister. We wanted some support for the federalist forces. For this and many other reasons, it seems obvious to me that all opposition members should do everything possible to defeat this government as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Bob Jarvis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as a new member may I say how proud I am to rise to give this, my first speech in support of the budget of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie). For the first time in over a decade we have a budget, a finance minister and a government which has had the courage and fortitude to be honest and open with the Canadian people. This budget detailed our problems, set forth the sacrifices needed to meet our problems head on, set the course to regain financial responsibility and charted the course to energy self-sufficiency. At the same time it acknowledged and met our obligation and responsibility to assist those in our society who, through infirmity, age or circumstances beyond their control, have been unable to cope with the policies of the past decade.

The past decade was a decade which saw massive unemployment—as high as one million people were unemployed at one point—uncontrolled inflation, over three years of double digit inflation, an unparalleled government spending binge which left Canadians with the highest per capita public debt in the industrialized world, a shattered currency and a balance of payments deficit; all of which has effectively mortgaged the earnings and expectations of an entire generation of Canadian youth.

That is the legacy of the Liberal government, the 1970s. This budget comes to grips with this legacy and holds out the challenge and work ahead of us for the 1980s. The Canadian people are not afraid of challenge, nor are they unprepared to pay off the Liberal debts of the 1970s. All that was required for Canadians was a challenge and a direction for us to follow. The hon. Minister of Finance has set the direction. Now it is up to us Canadians to meet the challenge, a challenge which constitutes our future.

This afternoon I intend to concentrate my remarks on the energy policy portion of the budget. However, I should first like to congratulate the hon. minister for the revisions to the Income Tax Act which will allow small unincorporated family businesses to claim as an expense salaries paid to the spouses. My riding of Willowdale, located in the north portion of Metropolitan Toronto, has 1,374 family businesses located within its boundaries. Most of these families live in Willowdale. Long hours, hard work and sacrifice to own a business has in the past been penalized by the Liberals. The role of the wife and mother in maintaining a family business has not been properly recognized prior to this budget. This change has been long overdue. It is a most welcome and appreciated change in Willowdale.

The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), in responding to the budget address, gave a plea for a return to the 1970s. The thrust of his remarks was a return to overspending, to underproduction, to high debt, to low growth rates and to double digit inflation. Why not; that is all the hon. member for Windsor West understands. Those policies were his training ground and encompass the limits of his span of comprehension. Our government's energy policy as set out in the budget was referred to by the hon. member for Windsor West who said, as reported in Hansard at page 2267, that the budget provisions on energy are an—> —aberration carrying the Canadian economy away from the path of growth and development it was on at the time the government changed on June 4.

First, I should explain to the hon. member that it was May 22, 1979.

[Mr. Jarvis.]

Let us look at the path we were on under the Liberals at the beginning of the seventies. In the 1970s they took Canada from an oil exporting country to an oil importing country. They took a country with almost unlimited and untapped resources and reduced the rate of search for new supply and the rate of research and development to a point where the production of light and medium crude oil is now at 1.2 million barrels per day. It is now forecast that the production of light and medium crude oil will fall to 750,000 barrels per day by 1985 and to 500,000 barrels per day by 1990 without new finds and new programs, of which they had none.

● (1530)

The Liberals stopped the pipeline on the Ontario-Quebec border and isolated parts of Quebec and the maritimes from Canada's energy resources. They took a country rich in resources and left it with a $2 billion deficit or outflow annually to buy oil from OPEC nations.

With the 1970s policy of the hon. member for Windsor West in place, by 1985 the cash outflow from Canada would increase from $2 billion to upwards of $8 billion to $10 billion—just to stand still, to buy OPEC oil to offset the declining production in this country as a result of their policies, and that does not even take into consideration the announced OPEC price increase today of $6 U.S. per barrel. That is what the Liberals have been advocating. They say there is no problem. Of course, from their limited perception there is no problem, because theirs was the perception of the ostrich with its head in the sand.

What are the true facts, Mr. Speaker? Canadians are entitled to know them. How much oil do we in fact produce today? How much oil do we in fact consume? What do we require? Where are we going and how are we going to get there? I should like to direct the balance of my address to the details of these facts for the Canadian people.

In 1978 Canadians produced approximately 1.6 million barrels of oil per day. At the same time, they consumed approximately 1.9 million barrels per day which left a shortfall of 300,000 barrels per day. Money was required in massive amounts to replace the shortfall of 300,000 barrels per day.

Consumption to date in 1979 has been variable, but forecasts have been made for the last quarter which show consumption of 2.06 million barrels per day, production of 1.82 million barrels per day and a shortfall of between 240,000 and 250,000 barrels of oil per day. This shortfall must be bought, Mr. Speaker.

Having isolated the maritimes and portions of Quebec from supply, we are forced to import approximately 600,000 barrels of oil per day to meet their needs. We bring in approximately 250,000 barrels per day to Quebec and 350,000 barrels per day to the maritimes. Thus we find ourselves dependent on foreign sources for 600,000 barrels of oil per day and with no capacity, as a result of Liberal policies, for moving our western supply east.

If we are to have energy self-sufficiency, if we are to have identity as a country, if we are to maintain our self-respect as Canadians, it is absolutely essential that we embark on a program that would hold our consumption at two million barrels per day. To do this would mean we need a number of active programs. These programs include conservation, conversion to new sources of energy, use of other sources of energy including hydro development, a review of the entire nuclear power development industry in this country and turning to renewable sources of energy. This would include solar, biomass, wind and geothermal.

I should like to spend a few moments talking about conservation, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of ways to come to conservation. You can use moral suasion, you can use pricing, regulation, allocation or rationing. To date, Mr. Speaker, moral suasion has not worked in this country because the Canadian people have been led to believe by past Liberal governments that there was an unlimited supply of energy and that we could waste this resource at will. Of course, we just cannot, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to put on the record a figure which is very frightening and which flows directly from past Liberal policies. In his budget address on Tuesday night, the hon. Minister of Finance indicated that to date in Canada, consumption of gasoline has been rising at over 4 per cent per annum, whereas consumption in the United States has fallen by about 4 per cent per annum. The figures for October, which have just been released, indicate that consumption of gasoline in Canada went up by 5.5 per cent, and in the same period consumption in the United States fell by 8 per cent. We are not conserving. We are not using our resource properly and it is essential that we do.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we have allowed our prices to fall below the cost of production. Time and time again we hear Liberals say that there is an unlimited supply of oil out west. Mr. Speaker, there is an almost unlimited supply of some types of oil, but not of light and medium crude oil which is the type of oil we have relied upon to date. If we are to supply our oil needs in the future, it will have to come from frontier oil, from heavy oil, from synthetic oil, from new finds off the east coast of Labrador, in the high north, the Beaufort Sea, the Arctic Islands, the Mackenzie Delta. Mr. Speaker, you do not find that oil for the cost that you found light and medium crude oil ten, five or eight years ago.

The Liberals have been continually telling the people in this country that there is lots of oil. What they should tell the people, who deserve to have the true facts, is that the light to medium crude oil is running out. It is this which is the cheap oil, but we do not have much of it left.

The price of oil has to go up to allow the entrepreneurs who look for this hard to find resource to get out into the high Arctic, to get off the east coast of Labrador, to look in the places where mankind has never looked before. It is in these areas that our true riches, our true resource base, lies and it is in these remote areas that Canadians will find energy self-sufficiency, not in the boardrooms of Liberal policy makers. At the same time, we must raise money in this country to teach and educate Canadians to use their resources more wisely and more efficiently.

We must make moneys available for conversion to new sources of energy and to assist those who, because of Liberal policies in the past decade, find themselves on fixed incomes and unable to protect their standard of living. We must make money available to these people so that they will be able to have heat and transportation in the next decade whilst maintaining a reasonable standard of living. This will require money from the federal government which will come from the increased price of oil.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that debate has raged in this country for weeks over a price increase of $4 per barrel, from $13.75, the present production price f.o.b. Toronto, to $4 above that, which would be $17.75 per barrel. Today the OPEC nations have effectively increased the price of oil on the world market by $6 U.S., or over $7 Canadian to about $28.50 or $29.00 Canadian per barrel. Who are the Liberals kidding when they say that we have lots of oil? The oil we have must be found and developed and brought on stream.

I should like to speak for a moment about the production of oil from the tar sands where there is a tremendous capacity. It takes approximately five years to build a tar sands plant or heavy oil plant. There are two such plants proposed in Canada at the present time. Each plant will require a working population of about 30,000 persons and will require 15,000 man-years of engineering during its construction period. The cost of each plant will vary from $5.5 billion in 1979 dollars to $6.5 billion. That means that $12 billion is required in the economy to pay for those plants. Canadians are not fools, Mr. Speaker. They know that money has to be raised and left in the hands of the private companies that build these expensive plants. These are time-consuming and very risky ventures because of the problems inherent in building in these remote areas of this country.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, we shall have to consider distributing our resources in a more equitable and proper manner. Why in heaven's name a government with any kind of sense at all would have stopped the energy distribution system at the Ontario-Quebec border is beyond me. That is what happened, however. It is now up to this government to find a way to move our resources to other areas of the country. We must move gas into Quebec and the maritimes, and we must find a way of distributing our energy resources on a more equitable basis. We must not leave one area of the country totally isolated and dependent upon foreign supplies in a very volatile and explosive international situation.

• (1540)

Another program that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn) referred to today in question period is the conversion of heating systems from oil to natural gas. There will be a retrofit program announced in due course to which he referred in question period today. We must convince and persuade Canadians that it is in their best interests to change over to natural gas, which is in abundant supply.

The hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde) said it is a scandal that we are selling our resources of natural gas. This is not so at all. We have tremendous reserves of natural gas that were the result of exploration during the period 1975-78, and there has been no return whatsoever to the producers on the billions of dollars spent in finding that natural gas.

I would like to comment on our natural gas reserves for just a moment. In Canada we now produce 2.5 trillion cubic feet of natural gas per year. In Canada we use 1.5 trillion cubic feet of natural gas and we export the balance at the present time to the United States as part of our export program and our trades and swaps program to try to obtain more oil for this country.

We have tapped and proven reserves of 72 trillion cubic feet. In addition, we have proven and probable reserves in the high Arctic. We have proven reserves of about 15 trillion cubic feet and estimated or probable reserves at a 50 per cent recovery rate in the high Arctic of another 150 trillion cubic feet. We have now discovered tight gas with reserves of up to 400 trillion cubic feet. At the price to which oil and natural gas has now moved in Canada following the budget address of Tuesday night, upwards of 40 per cent to 50 per cent of this tight gas can be recovered. These reserves are located in the foothills of Alberta. We have natural gas for all of Canada's current needs and future needs, including all possible conversions from oil to natural gas that this country requires during this century.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis (Willowdale): We should all thank God that we have these reserves because if they were not there, just think of the mess we would have been in with the Liberal oil policy.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Jarvis (Willowdale): At the same time as this conversion program is taking place and Canadians are switching to natural gas, we will have to re-evaluate and reappraise our resources in hydro electricity. We will have to go back across this country to find out just where and how we can use hydro power.

There is a program now in Newfoundland in the lower Churchill area which is under study by the provincial and federal governments and which will hopefully bring more hydro power into the maritimes and Quebec grid. But we cannot stop there. We have to look at all of our capacities in this area.

Also, in the maritimes—we have to use our coal resources to produce electricity. A very scary fact, Mr. Speaker, is that if you go through the maritimes you will find that electricity is produced in the most inefficient and wasteful manner possible. For example, all the electricity in Prince Edward Island is produced by burning oil, not coal, not hydro, not other sources. We must look at the cost of converting all of the oil-fired electric plants in the maritimes to other sources of energy, which will include coal. It is the coal resources in the maritimes that will provide an energy base as soon as we work out the problems associated with the burning of coal and at the same time protect the environment. This must be a first priority.

In addition, we must reappraise and re-evaluate the nuclear question in Canada. Nuclear-produced electricity now provides about 3.5 per cent of the total energy generated in this country. We must look at that program and see whether or not it should be expanded, given always that in any nuclear expansion program we must find proper ways of maintaining and running these plants. At the same time we must find a usable, proper means of storing or disposing of the waste products from nuclear activity. The obligation that is incumbent upon us as a government is to find ways of doing this properly and within the Canadian context so that Canadian citizens understand that we are using our resources properly, effectively and safely at all times.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis (Willowdale): The future does not bode well for the world in terms of energy if we continue to use non-renewable resources.

While Canada is richly endowed, the balance of the world is not richly endowed. There is a world shortage of non-renewable energy or hydrocarbon sources. As I have said, Canada is well endowed but we do not stand alone or isolated from the balance of the world. We cannot build a wall around ourselves and say that we are not responsible for our fellowman. As human beings we are responsible for our fellow man and we must face up to that obligation. Accordingly, it is incumbent upon this government—this is one of the reasons that an energy bank has been announced— to find ways of using effectively, safely and properly the renewable energy sources with which this universe is endowed.

We cannot turn our heads from the biomass process, which is the reclaiming of energy from plant material. We must look closely at solar energy and see if we can effectively use this form of energy. This is one of the reasons that solar energy is being actively pursued in my department, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and in other departments. We must also look at wind and the geothermal process. There are a number of programs in these areas that are in the experimental stage. However, they will require massive amounts of money.

If I could put it this way, Mr. Speaker, there is some good news and there is some bad news. In terms of renewable energy sources, the good news is that Canada is richly endowed. The bad news is that it is expensive to find means of using these sources. That is the down side. But Canadians are not fools. Canadians are not prepared to stick their heads in the sand any more. Canadians want to know that they are facing this challenge head on. That is why the budget of the Minister of Finance is acceptable to the people of this country today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, there are many aspects of this whole matter, but I should like to come back to the issue that seems to pop up from the Liberals time and time again. It has to do with the 18 cents a gallon excise tax increase.

The Minister of Finance on Tuesday evening quoted the price of oil using 1954 dollars and bringing them forward to 1979. I should like to do this exercise slightly differently. I would like to point out to the hon. members of this House and to the Canadian people that if you use a constant dollar—and I shall pick the 1971 dollar—and if you take that 1971 dollar and eliminate inflation and look at what it would buy in 1949, and then bring it forward to 1979, you can get an accurate, graphic measurement of what has happened to the price of a gallon of gasoline.

Taking the month of September 1949 and using a constant dollar, gasoline in this country cost 68 cents per gallon. If you take the same 1971 constant dollar and projected it forward to September 1979, the cost of gasoline in this country would be 58 cents per gallon. It would have gone down 10 cents. As far as I know, gasoline is the only commodity that has gone down in price during this period.

I should now like to take the 18 cents excise tax and add it to the 58 cents. By doing that you come up with a price of 76 cents per gallon, which is still the cheapest price for gasoline in the industrialized world by far. The Americans are now toying with a proposal which will put the effective price as of the new year on their gasoline, in Canadian dollars and using imperial gallons, at over $2.10 per gallon. Yet the Liberals are still complaining over an 18-cent price increase.

The Canadian people understand that this government was left with massive deficits, over-spending and debts that have to be serviced out of the country and be paid off in time. At the same time they understand that there is a duty and an obligation on all of us to meet the challenge of the eighties and to become self-sufficient in energy.

• (1550)

I am very proud to be associated with this budget. I have no hesitation in saying that this budget is acceptable to the people of Willowdale. I have heard the rumblings. I have read the newspapers. I understand my friends across the floor think it would be a lot of fun to turf us out of office this evening. If that is their course, so be it. However, let me tell them that the people of Willowdale are prepared to re-elect this government with this budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Fabien Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, we have to examine and vote on the budget the minister tabled in this House Tuesday night. We have, of course, to make an objective analysis of it because the decisions that will have to be made in the next hours, in the next days, could be critical in many respects. Mr. Speaker, when one has to examine the budget of a government, it is a bit like having to examine the budget of a business.

It is rather difficult to analyse a budget objectively if you do not have the whole picture of the situation. As far as I am concerned, I still have many things to learn but I have very seldom seen company directors examine their corporate budget without having in hand a comprehensive financial statement which will tell them where they actually stand, and by comparing it with previous financial statements, they can see exactly where they were and how far they have gone. This will tell them whether they are going in the right direction. Only then and not otherwise can you analyse fully and objectively a company budget. So I see here, in this Parliament of Canada, we are denied this important thing. We are not provided with any financial statement on the general situation in this country. We are provided with just a brief analysis, more of a political nature than not, instead of being provided with those broad indications, that financial statement, describing exactly where we stand so as to be able to determine in all objectivity what are the decisions that have to be made and how we must correct the situation so Canada can meet the challenges of the future.

Indeed, to be able to assess a budget properly, you have to examine the situation of the economy. The financial statement is obviously missing. The former government did not care much for that either. We have to look at the country and the various regions to be able to determine where the imbalances are. You have, of course, to look at the world and international situations because we have partners not only among nations but also trading partners. We also have to look at the government's financial situation. I can say, Mr. Speaker, that the government's financial situation is nothing to be happy about but I do not have time to make an analysis of all the decisions that have been made in the past which have led to this financial morass in which this country finds itself.

Let us simply recall an historic fact. I repeat, this is an historic fact. For 50 of the last 60 years, the country has been governed by the Liberals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy (Beauce): I see people shouting "Hear, hear!" on the other side, and I believe they are Liberals. Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder because they have just shown their knowledge and ability, but their complete lack of understanding of the present situation.

Mr. Speaker, we have to outline a comprehensive policy. We need a program for the future. We need major directions. We need comprehensive plans. They only think of voting and of playing petty politics. Mr. Speaker, would you please call them back to order? I do not think that I have interrupted one of my colleagues since I came to this House. I have noted that it is always those who never have the courage to rise in this House to defend the interests of their constituents who keep interrupting me when I have the floor.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I believe that I have often defended the interests of my constituents and I challenge the hon. member to show that I have spoken more often in the House than he did. I totally disagree with what he has just said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please!

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Either the interventions of the hon. member were not relevant or he did not have any influence. Mr. Speaker, what is the state of our economy at the present time? We have an unacceptable level of unemployment. When a country like ours is constantly faced with such an unemployment rate, then all government action is hampered and public budgets are burdened with debts. Because of this, the government deprives itself of a few billion dollars every year when the unemployed ask only to work, be first class citizens and an asset to their families, their area, their province and their country. When we are unable to offer them this possibility, then something is wrong.

Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a record inflation rate. Some will argue of course that we are living in a global context. However, we should not forget that international problems as such do not exist. There are only national problems shifted to an international level. Decisions are not made on the international level, but on the national level. Each country should have enough fortitude to assume its responsibilities and take the necessary steps to have true leadership, the will for action and if the mechanisms fail, to improve them and give institutions the necessary instruments to make them effective and thus bring about results. Mr. Speaker, with respect to our dollar, we were supposed to save, in part at least, the Canadian economy, because we were going to maintain the oil price at 85 per cent of the Chicago rate and the dollar is worth 85 cents. Therefore, if my calculations are right this is equivalent to the value of the American dollar, so nothing has changed.

As far as energy is concerned, what is the government policy? What was the policy of the former government? Are our problems just recent or do they go back to months or years? What about projections? What has the new government done since May 22, when the voters defeated the former government and decided to elect a new government full of good will after having made many promises to give rise to great expectations among the people?

And where do we stand today, as far as energy is concerned? The government starts by reaching into the pockets of the taxpayers before announcing particular programs which remain to be finalized. And yet, our hon. colleagues who are now managing the affairs of our country, after such a long time spent in the opposition, should have had sufficient time to examine the records. In all that time you would think that they saw enough budgets to prepare their political platform. I suggest that they have been in power long enough and have had enough cabinet and committee meetings to be able to announce to the Canadian public at the same time as the budget, if not a few days before, their decision about what is to be expected. All the while the taxpayers are paying, the unemployment rate is high, inflation is rampant, the Canadian dollar is ailing, and the very important subject of energy policy is causing considerable concern to the Canadian public. They are still waiting.

Mr. Speaker, to solve unemployment they are looking for a magic formula, a single formula for Canada as a whole. However the rate is very high in the maritimes, somewhat less but still too high in Quebec, and lower still in other areas. But in fact, in this large country of ours, we have provincial governments that are capable of taking their responsibilities, capable of acting. And rather than infringing on their jurisdiction, we should give them the means to assume those responsibilities. In this way, instead of fighting those governments of whatever political creed, we would co-operate with them, whether they be Social Credit, Liberal—although there are none left—Conservative or NDP governments.

As far as inflation is concerned, there would be much to say. We questioned the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) in the House, asking why he agreed with the governor of the Bank of Canada who had announced a third increase in the interest rates. At the request of the opposition, the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs held sessions, the governor of the Bank of Canada appeared, the Minister of Finance also appeared, and here is what the Minister of Finance said, as appears on page three of his statement:

> A third reason for present interest rate levels is the large and growing deficit in the current account of our balance of payments. That cannot be reduced quickly either, and as long as it continues it must be covered by an adequate flow of capital into Canada.

The minister went on to say:

> High interest rates counter inflation as they discourage excessive spending. As demand drops, businesses come under competitive pressure, and this helps to keep other costs and prices down.
> To the extent that there is a cause and effect relationship directly between interest rates and inflation, it is more accurate to say that inflation causes . . .

—he did not say is the main cause for—

> . . . it is more accurate to say that inflation causes higher interest rates than it is today the reverse.

What is the Minister of Finance announcing? Mr. Speaker, in the energy area the government will have to know that there are inequalities between regions, that the problems are different at that level and that there must be a stop to the siphoning off of huge amounts of money from certain regions for transfers to other regions. There will have to be some compensations, some new formulas, some answers in order to have an economic balance based on values, capabilities and resources which are available in the various regions and provinces which make up Canada. Mr. Speaker, in the world we are entering a new era, characterized by a shortage of resources, and Canada is one of the biggest reservoirs of resources in the world. What are we doing to try to make Canadian resources benefit Canadians?

Do our huge resources contribute to create more jobs for Canadians? Do our resources contribute to lessen the pressures on the government budget to reduce taxes so that taxpayers take advantage of them? Is there a budgetary policy which would enable us to incur smaller deficits than we now have? To each of those three questions, Mr. Speaker, the answer is negative.

There is another factor in the industrial field throughout the world and it is the importance of semiconductors. We know quite well that it has now become the second largest industry in the United States. What is the position of Canada in that area? Those are some of the questions which remain unanswered. We have trading partners who are uncertain. And even after the budget speech, quite apart from the unbearable tax on fuel, there is no certainty. Even if there were a few adjustments, there is no more certainty than before. Why? Precisely because there is no comprehensive policy, there is no comprehensive plan. As for the fall in our growth, Mr. Speaker, it is a catastrophe.

Mr. Speaker, what we needed was a budget which would have helped us fight against unemployment and inflation, improve our deficit in the balance of payments and provide a true energy program. We expected incentives for large scale projects, which would have increased our chances of achieving our energy self-sufficiency. For instance, what did the budget say about the Bay of Fundy? Nothing at all. Eerily silent indeed it was about the north-south pipeline and the east-west pipeline. We were also expecting incentives for the manufacturing industry which would have improved the balance of payments so as to shore up that part of the commercial balance which represents the manufacturing sector.

Mr. Speaker, I have here quite eloquent charts for 1978 and 1979, but I would like to compare the months of September and October, 1979. While the value of our exports of finished products other than foodstuffs was roughly $15 billion in September, 1979, the value of our imports in the same field for the same month is $28.222 billion, which leaves us with a deficit of $13.1 billion. Did that improve in October? In October our exports, always in non-edible finished products, were of $17.166 billion and our imports in the same category were of $31.669 billion for a deficit of $14.5 billion for one month; for September and October the trading deficit for non-edible finished products increased by $1.5 billion. The Minister of Finance was strangely silent on this question which, by itself, would warrant an emergency debate in the House, emergency measures and an emergency program. Our problems are balance of payments problems and our huge budgetary deficits are caused by high unemployment rate. It is because of these deficits that we must bear such high interest rates which are close to being highway robbery. What was announced? We are given a provincial budget. Having debated nine budgets at the Quebec National Assembly, I knew that by provincial jurisdiction, by what authority is given to the provinces, they are limited to fiscal power, and freedom of action is determined by fiscal power. The speech given by the Minister of Finance was an exact replica of the budget speeches given by provincial finance ministers. Because he restricted himself exclusively to the fiscal power. When I made up my mind to run in a federal election, I assumed that in the Parliament of Canada we would be able to look into problems as a whole, that the main economic levers under the constitution were in Ottawa and that in Ottawa also were extraordinary tools which, if used wisely, could set the Canadian economy in motion again, alter the course of our destiny, and that with the new powers now available, the federal government, instead of using its spending power to invade areas under provincial jurisdiction and thus restrict even more the fiscal powers of the provinces, would effectively look toward the future and make sure that the provincial governments are its true partners.

Instead of that, the new government has chosen to pursue the policy initiated by the former government and invaded a fiscal area which until then, with a possible exception in 1920, had been left to the provinces. And these same people are now blaming the government. They had the nerve—I certainly could use more violent words, Mr. Speaker—to move this motion. That motion should read:

And that this House unreservedly condemns the government for its outright betrayal of its election promises—

Mr. Speaker, this House condemns the government for its budget which will place an unfair and unnecessary burden of higher gasoline prices, higher fuel oil prices, and higher taxes on middle and lower income Canadians. Yet, Mr. Speaker, a great deal of care has been taken, great subtleness displayed and even great caution exercized in this matter not to blame the government on a specific point, namely the 25-cent tax, because the former government, the official opposition now trying to defeat the present government at any cost in the hope of replacing it—does not want to commit itself to withdrawing this tax if it ever gets back into power. The opposite side will naturally be accused of having imposed it. Yet they do not want to commit themselves, they act very carefully, very cautiously, very skilfully because they actually do intend to keep it. Let us be frank about it. I did not hear a single member of the Liberal party state in this House he was committing himself to withdrawing it.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite interesting to go back in the past and study the content of the various statements made by the ministers. I am referring to Hansard for July 2, 1975, page 7409. Mr. Turner, who was then finance minister, was speaking about the 10-cent energy tax imposed by the former government, the present official opposition which today pretends to be shocked. However, its members do not dare look at themselves in a mirror, they would be ashamed! Here is what the former finance minister, not the "blue" one but the "red" one, had to say:

It will also contribute significantly to energy conservation, an objective that I believe all Canadians support . . . To effect this objective, the special excise tax on gasoline—which is imposed at the manufacturer or importer level—will be refunded to all exempt users.

Some measures were announced in this regard. And, Mr. Speaker, if I go on reading, I see the then finance minister—I insist that he was a Liberal finance minister—said:

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative leader . . .

Because he was indeed attacking the official opposition—

. . . insisted that oil subsidies should not be funded through an excise tax on gasoline because it would be a source of grudges between eastern and western provinces.

● (1610)

But what is even more surprising—and here I think our Progressive Conservative colleagues will not applaud me, but perhaps the Liberals will—Mr. Stanfield, the then leader of the opposition, said, and I quote:

He recognizes that. So what does he do? He does not try to counter that. He sets out immediately to increase vastly the inflationary aspect of the increase in the cost of energy, recognizing that the increase in the price of oil and gas at the wellhead would be inflationary and would create some inflationary pressure . . . The minister said, however, that he could not give the House an estimate of how much gasoline would be conserved as a result.

The present minister did not do it either.

The ten cents tax—

It was ten cents at the time and they were mad, of course, as we would have been.

—will not aid the supply situation either. It will not encourage companies to go looking for oil or gas. It has nothing to do with easing the supply situation which the minister has always talked about in the past. When he was not blaming inflation or the weather or something that happened in the United States, he was emphasizing the importance of increasing supply in Canada. This ten cents per gallon tax on gasoline is not going to do anything to increase the supply of gasoline in Canada, and I am sure that the minister would not even make the argument that it might.

And further on, I am still quoting from the leader of the Progressive Conservative party, the then leader of the official opposition:

This ten-cent tax, being on a user basis, is very concentrated,—

It is strange how short our memory is.

—very visible, very stark in its effects on the consumer and taxpayer;—

That is a ten-cent tax, but they increase it to 25 cents.

—clearly its tendency will be to encourage the person on a wage or salary to push for a higher increase than might otherwise have been the case.

If a ten-cent tax prompts the taxpayers to ask for salary increases, how can a 25-cent tax not have the same effect? I should like to have an answer from the government side; since they have power, they must also have some knowledge.

[Mr. Roy (Beauce).]

It cannot have any other possible effect. This measure, being in no way conducive to restraint, will have a very clear and stark tendency in the opposite direction.

So the tax at the wholesale level is not just inflationary but it is also an increase in the cost of marketing the product.

A gasoline tax makes sense—

Listen to this one. This was said by the then leader of the opposition, and I am in complete agreement with him.

A gasoline tax makes sense as a road building tax in the hands of provinces. It makes sense if it is considered as a road user tax in the hands of provinces.

The Progressive Conservatives said this when they were in the opposition. They denounced a ten-cent tax, and now, five years later, when they are in power, they increase this tax to 25 cents. What logic! This is what we call consistency in politics. They follow the same old line and then wonder why taxpayers have all sorts of problems. There are many other things that I could quote, but since we shall not have the opportunity to bring up the subject again during the debate, I want to say that the motion introduced by the official opposition is inconsistent and insincere. It is hypocritical and aims only at deluding the population into believing that, after six months, they have seen enough to know exactly what to do.

Mr. Speaker, the truth must be told about the New Democratic Party. The NDP have also introduced a motion, not an amendment pure and simple, but a subamendment because our rules allow them to do so. For our part, we are not entitled to move an amendment or subamendment. Had we been able to do so and if the rules had allowed it, we would have proposed a subamendment and the three other parties would have joined forces against us because they refuse to strike at the root of evil and to tackle the basic problem.

And what does the New Democratic Party's motion say?

And this House unreservedly condemns the Government for its outright betrayal of its election promises to lower interest rates, to cut taxes, and to stimulate the growth of the Canadian economy, without a mandate from the Canadian people for such a reversal.

This is a non-confidence motion, no more and no less.

What is the New Democratic Party's proposal? What would they do, if they were the government, tomorrow morning?

Mr. Speaker, before I came to this House I always believed that the New Democratic Party was serious, but during the time I have been here, they have been attacking interest rates, inflation, unemployment, everything. But I still have to hear a positive proposal from them. Does that party believe only in carping instead of offering solutions? Frankly, this is rather disappointing. Fortunately our debates are televised, the people will be able to find out. I have not heard one single proposal from the New Democrats that would tell us what they would do if they were the government. Their approach is negative. They are physicians that know a disease when they see one, but are unable to cure it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. In order for him to continue, he requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Since there is no unanimous consent, I recognize the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Andras).

An hon. Member: Let the hon. member for Beauce continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I have recognized the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon because the time of the hon. member for Beauce has expired and there was no unanimous consent for him to continue. The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: There has been unanimous consent.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): The hon. member for Rimouski on a point of order.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding, when you indicated to the hon. member for Beauce that his time had expired, that apparently there was unanimous consent to let Mr. Roy conclude his remarks within two minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): I will ask the House again. Is it the pleasure of the House to allow the hon. member for Beauce to continue? Does he have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, while I do not intend to take unfair advantage of this leave, I certainly would like, nevertheless, to deal with the essential points which in our opinion the House should seriously take into consideration, because we believe it is the only way to level up the Canadian economy and set our country on the road to progress and prosperity.

Here in Canada, the government has enormous means and extensive powers at its disposal, one of them being the central bank. The monetary policy does not come under provincial jurisdiction. It comes under federal jurisdiction. Where is this country's monetary policy? What means does the government intend to use concerning its potential and actual relations with its commercial partners, with the other countries? Tariffs are there to serve the purpose. Also, the government has all kinds of means at its disposal to pull us out of this economic stagnation. But, Mr. Speaker, we are caught in a vicious circle. The interest we have to pay each year on our national debt is in itself a factor which drags the country still further into debt. Do we intend to get out of it? Why is the management of our national debt not a responsibility of the Bank of Canada? Of course, that would involve amending our legislation, revamping our Bank Act in order to give the Canadian government the authority needed to stop this pyramidal indebtedness which is the cause of this absence of government policies, of the current rate of inflation, of unemployment and of high interest rates, for our budgetary deficit is so high that it paralyses any government action. And this, Mr. Speaker, at a time when we are told that increases, or rather deficits, are expected to reach $10 billion, and the cost of the interest of the national debt $12 billion within two years. May I close my speech, Mr. Speaker, with a quotation from the former prime minister who still sits in this House as opposition leader (Mr. Trudeau) and hon. member for Mount Royal. In an interview he gave Fortune magazine, this is what Mr. Trudeau had to say, and I quote:

> The worst bellyachers are the bankers. They have never had it so good as since I have been leader of the government. I am ashamed of it.

That is what the former prime minister said, the present opposition leader.

> They are growing much richer than the manufacturing sector, or the natural resources sector, or the whole of the service industries.

Mr. Trudeau then adds further that, while complaining about what they call the unwarranted interference of the government in business, the bankers are asking the government to amend the Bank Act in such a way as to better protect them against what competition they now have.

Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt, whom I am going to quote for a second time to the House, said when the United States entered the war that if his country wanted to win the war it would have to demystify the monetary power. If Canada wants to meet the challenge of the future, it too will have to demystify monetary power.

Just as long as the political groups that lead the country refuse to do what is necessary for the central bank to play its true role, so that we can have a real monetary policy, so that the credit of the nation can be cashed in and accounted for in the interest of all Canadians, we will never know any results other than that, whether or not we hold elections, whether or not we go from the Grits to the Tories, and even adding the New Democrats, nothing will ever change. The question is fundamental, Mr. Speaker, and I invite my colleagues on both sides of the House to reflect on it if we are truly interested in the future of our people.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit me to ask him a short question to clarify his position? If the Chair is agreeable, I should ask the hon. member whether he is against the 25-cent a gallon excise tax or whether he is in favour of the maintenance of that excise tax provided it is transferred to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Roy (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, earlier I answered those questions from newsmen. I do not fear at all to express my opinion in the House. We are clearly and categorically against it and I thank the hon. member for allowing me another minute, as the increase from 7 cents to 25 cents on transportation fuels is an extremely important subject. We are fundamentally against it. However, I should like to know what the opposition intends to do and to propose, and whether they are prepared to discuss that tax? Of course, if it were to be changed, and it is not our responsibility, if the opposition agrees and intends to go on working in that direction if the government changes, we should have, of course, to ensure that the tax returns where it comes from, namely in the provinces, and it will be our responsibility.

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would be gratified if I thought I would get the same degree of attention from members in the House today as the previous speaker upon whose every word certain members were hanging, for reasons which, of course, escape some of us. I rather doubt that will happen. If it did, it would be for different reasons. But the mystery did not unfold. We really do not know where the hon. member and his party stand. I guess we will wait for that until later.

Even at the risk of giving up a little partisan turf in this debate, I must admit that I had been looking forward for the last couple of months with some hope and modest expectation to the budget. As a minister who has had responsibility for the Treasury Board and later for the board of economic development ministers, certainly I am aware of the developing problems over the last decade of controlling expenditures and having sufficient economic development in the country, which is the only way that expenditures of the government can be financed.

Especially as I was serving on the board of economic development ministers I became more and more convinced that the tools that were once developed by Keynes and by others, originally to rescue a world that was sunk in the morass of economic deprivation and moral despair, into which it was dragged by the famous or infamous excesses of Conservative orthodoxy in the thirties, and which later served this and other countries rather well during a period when economic progress was ever onward and upward, had finally outlived their usefulness, and we certainly needed something new and different.

I would say that if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) had chosen to publish in his background papers to the budget the other night some of the details and figures of the record of the last two or three years of the previous government, it would have been convincing evidence that at the time of its defeat last May that government was already on the way to keeping expenditures within the bounds set by the rate of inflation, added to the rate of real growth, below the GNP nominal growth rate. There is no doubt about that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: Hon. members opposite can giggle over there, but if they look at the facts they will find that is true, and I am sure they would prefer to deal with truth than fancy.

Indeed, we were putting in place economic measures that I think were improving the economy. At any rate, unemployment rates had been receding during the past two years, and early in this year the inflation rate in Canada was at least three points below that of the United States.

Given our feeling, our conviction, that the correct economic measures to meet the new times were in place and working, my colleagues and I were somewhat distressed to see members of the present government, when seeking office, announce their set of notorious and, thank goodness, by now largely abandoned list of election promises. In that we saw an attempt by the Conservative government to grab power through the simple expediency of pushing past an electorate a platform specifically concocted to pass in its absurdity and in its irresponsibility all previous examples of folly perpetrated by the Tories or even, I think, of any other party that got elected in this country.

The election took place. We came back here. We waited for months and months and months and months for the new government to take office and get rolling. I certainly sighed with some relief, although with a considerable degree of concern about the cynicism inherent in his comments, when the Minister of Finance just stood up and said: "Of course, we accept the doctrine that nothing said by my party during the election campaign meant anything". As we listened to some of the other things they were saying we were rather glad that he went on to say, by implication, that any further senseless pronouncements by anybody, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark), his leader—anybody in the government—could equally be ignored.

We had some difficulty then over those months wondering what the new occupation of this new Conservative régime might be since it had abandoned all its promises in its platform enunciated during the election campaign. In any event, as I said, I came here the other evening to hear the Minister of Finance present a budget with some hope and some modest expectation. I can only say after hearing it and reading it over, and after looking at the documents, in most of my private sentiments I am bitterly disappointed.

Here is a government finally seizing the occasion in which to unveil its view, its 17-year long deliberation, about the Canadian economy in its first budget in 17 years, as the Minister of Finance told us the other night. This is a budget presenting to the expectant electorate of this country all the treasure of all its expertise and its experience and its hope about our national future about which they had thought over the 17 years. They gave that precious gift they bore us the other night the title of "Achieve Our Potential Budget".

What is the vision they offered to us? As far as I can discern, in their desire to put it all out and to let it all hang out for the next four or five years on the records they are offering to this country, which already has too high an unemployment rate, a consistent, continuing and even higher unemployment rate.

An hon. Member: Lower than yours.

Mr. Andras: Oh, is that the case? Is that right? Let us just examine that for a moment. The projection of the Conservative government is to see unemployment, and they are aiming for it, at a rate of 8.3 per cent next year. What has been so far only the occasional monthly high around that figure they have now set out as a projection, their target, which becomes the norm lasting for the next two years. After that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: You can take your medicine now so things will improve later. The best thing you can look at in their five-year projection is that at the end of the five years, and for the last three years of that period, they are accepting 7.5 per cent unemployment as their target.

We have inflation on the one hand and unemployment on the other hand. One looks from that, having been disappointed, about unemployment, to what this great new plan of theirs is going to do for the cost of living and inflation. What do they promise us? Next year they promise 11 per cent and the following year 10.1 per cent. That is, of course, in the low range. Do not look at the high range of their forecast which is probably more likely to be the realization. Eventually, after five years, in 1983 or 1984, they say we are going to get down to 6 per cent, if you can believe them. Frankly, I say that anybody who would accept that kind of a forecast five years ahead, in the face of the international shocks that we face from time to time, is really very naive.

This new face and new vision of Canada, this new version of how to run the economy that they have promised to our confederation, has turned out to be a death mask. It is a face of a government obviously with a death wish, because I do not think the people of this country or the members of this House can very long permit the survival of a regime which can offer as its most optimistic scenario for the next five years a fate for this country that is worse than anything we have experienced in the recent past or, indeed, as bad as anything we have experienced in this country since the 1930s. That is their own projection. That is what they say when they set it all out there in all these documents that reveal their program for the future. They do not even keep it a secret. It is all in there and it is manifest in every page of the budget when you read it, Mr. Speaker. In fact, they are even increasing taxes on some cosmetics, risking probably the only chance they had to disguise the revised face of this grim Conservative party with its grim Conservative pessimism that they term reality.

Those dismal figures I have quoted from their own documents, the summary of the budget papers, are not really surprising when one looks at the economic doctrine and the techniques that they intend to employ in trying to improve this country's economy. They have two key hinges on which their policy hangs; one is to get the deficit down, with a long-term reduction in the federal deficit, and the other is the so-called energy self-sufficiency policy.

● (1640)

The government has been crying about how they will get the federal cash deficit down. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) is going around slashing, cutting, shouting, making speeches, but he accepts the projection made the other night that continuing increases in government expenditures will be higher than each of the last three years, a 10 per cent annual increase.

An hon. Member: But a lower deficit.

Mr. Andras: I am very glad the hon. member brought that up because I am going to come to that subject and indicate how it will be accomplished by this new government. The President of the Treasury Board accepts government expenditures increasing from $48 billion last year to $78 billion at the end of this five-year projection, a 60 per cent increase. This is the government's dramatic new policy while interest charges rise from about $7 billion a year to about $14 billion a year with higher inflation and unemployment, and real growth expected, even in the wildest of expectations, to be no higher than 3 per cent.

An hon. Member: It is all on your shoulders.

Mr. Andras: Listen to all this nonsense. On Tuesday night the Conservative party finally cut the umbilical cord and is off and flying—or not flying, but crashing on their own. Most of the press people in this country give them no more than seven months to whirl around saying, "What a tough job we have because of the previous government". From this point on the figures will be their figures. This plan is their plan and the plan which contains these projections to which I have referred.

An hon. Member: It will get the cash deficit down.

Mr. Andras: I am glad that the hon. gentleman brought that up.

Mr. Friesen: You cooked them often enough.

Mr. Andras: I am merely referring to the material, or the ammunition, which the government gave us the other night. The Conservative party has boasted that they would reduce the deficit from $10 billion to $4 billion. Their expenditures will go up $30 billion and their tax increases will go up by over $3 billion a year. But yet they still end up with a budgetary deficit of $9 billion.

Do hon. members know that the cash deficit reduction will come from an accidental accrual of pension funds which has nothing to do with that government's policy? Let us not talk about fudging or cooking the books in that game. It is not a reduction in the cash deficit as a result of government expenditure restraint, but as a result of a massive increase in taxes. We all know upon whom the burden of those taxes will fall. The accrual of pension funds was a lucky break.

I do not think that any sophisticated analyst upon reading that document would argue that the government and the President of the Treasury Board are earning their kudos by being tough managers and balancing the books by restraint. Instead, they went in the opposite direction and raised taxes but had a lucky break with regard to pension funds.

The Conservative party neglected to mention in this budget one of the promises which it floated past the Canadian electorate in May, and that is the general tax cut of about $2 billion. There is no sign of it in this budget. With the increase in taxes of $3.5 billion next year, considering that the budgetary deficit will change hardly at all and that the cash deficit will come down by sheer accident as a result of those other cash flows, where is that extraordinary increase in taxes going? It is going into the fetish and priority demand of the Conservative caucus, the mortgage interest deductibility program.

Just a few days ago outside this House, the Minister of Finance said that the mortgage interest deductibility plan was not his priority, and that even though the rest of his party thinks that it is a pretty hot thing, he does not. But the minister came back into the House the next day and said that the mortgage plan was the greatest thing since sliced bread. The government is using closure, before the bill has even gone through committee, to indicate how much they think of that plan. It is a very bad misallocation of resources.

There is very little reference in this budget to international trade. I am glad to see that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) is in the House today. The government wails about the balance of payments, the invisibles and so forth. The only thing that it has done is to export a lot of our natural gas. One would expect from the reputation of the big "C" Conservatives that they would be good at wheeling and dealing abroad, at getting contracts and sparking up the export effort of this country.

I read a speech by the Minister of State for International Trade the other day in which he boasted about a task force on the export policies of the federal government. The minister knows full well that that task force was put in place long before he assumed office. I hope that it works. I have no objection to the government's using these ideas and mechanisms and ensuring that they serve the purpose for which they were intended when we put them in place.

Let us talk about what has happened in the world of international trade. We have the timid trio of trade—the senator in the other place who could not make it on his own, the Minister of State for International Trade and the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Industry (Mr. Huntington). They are bad enough, but then we have the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hnatyshyn), who gets into the act or stays out of it, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss MacDonald) and the Prime Minister, all of whom are making statements. We are now in a fundamental position where one of our most important problems and opportunities is that of solving our current account imbalance.

What is the record of this government in international affairs of this nature? They started off behind the eight ball by having blown millions, if not billions, of potential contracts and jobs in this country by their cynical suggestion of moving the Canadian embassy in Israel to Jerusalem. There is no question that it will take a great deal of work and a long, long time for Canada, because of this government, to recover any basis of negotiation in the Middle East that makes any sense whatsoever. By that stupid, immature, cynical, one, single vote-getting promise they made, they have done a great deal of damage and they know it.

The government talks a great deal about energy self-sufficiency in the 1980s and the 1990s. They are talking about a goal which is ten or 15 years away, and we need oil supplies now. Everyone will admit that there is a possible heating oil problem this winter.

Mr. Wilson: Where were you a few years ago?

Mr. Andras: Where was I a few years ago? Well, I will get into that with the minister. Let us take one precise example. Last spring, the former minister of energy went to Mexico and Venezuela. He went for two purposes. One was to shore up oil supplies and decrease our dependency on Middle Eastern oil for the short-term ahead, the next five to ten years.

Mr. Wilson: He went there to grandstand.

Mr. Andras: Hon. members may want to listen to this because they may wish to adjust their policy and take some constructive advice for a change. The former minister of energy went to Mexico to arrange a contract for 50,000 barrels of oil a day with delivery starting in 1980, and 100,000 barrels a day with delivery starting in 1981. The Mexican government was not all that eager to make such a commitment because they were not ready to mass distribute their oil supplies until they had the financial arrangements worked out. Because of the special relationship between Canada and Mexico, they agreed to make this commitment, and not at gouging prices.

The other purpose for going to these countries was to establish a framework for a reciprocal trade agreement with regard to Canadian exports. We are talking about $6 billion both ways in this contract. That is not a small sum. The framework was there. The agreement was initialled and negotiated with the President of Mexico and the former minister of energy, mines and resources. It had only to be ratified and implemented. The President of Mexico had been invited here for that purpose but his visit was understandably interrupted by the election.

A country like Mexico that is going to grow, that has a special affinity, respect, affection and a high priority for Canada-Mexico trade, was treated this way. My information is that there has been no denial of this from across the floor. Since May 22 until a few days ago when we raised it in the House, the only communication this government had with the Mexican government was to send them a signal about the oil agreement, telling them to scratch out the word "Petro-Canada". There had been no formal contact with the President of Mexico to renew the invitation to him to come to Canada until a few days ago when we raised the matter in the House.

Mexico is a special trading partner of Canada. If that is not enough, on November 26 in Guanajuato, Mexico, a bilateral trade meeting between the Canadian Association for Latin American Trade and high level ministers of the Mexican government discussed trade between our two countries. The Mexicans considered this to be extremely significant. In spite of the insistence of the Canadian ambassador to Mexico and the Mexican ambassador to Canada, however, that we send one of our timid trio of trade to Mexico to help the Canadian delegation and to meet with the President of Mexico and his senior officials, those ministers said they were too busy to go. Instead, we sent the director general of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Mexicans were insulted and offended.

This is just one of a series of inept performances by this government which is beginning to cool relations at a time when we are involved in negotiating a $6 billion exchange of trade, to say nothing of getting relief from our dependency on Middle East oil. The Mexicans like and respect us and are willing to deal with us.

Time will not permit me to go over the sad saga of similar gaffes and examples of ineptitude and indifference by this government in the area of international trade which is so important to us.

One of these days I shall put on record the performance of the Minister of State for International Trade with regard to international trade with Argentina. I know the problems with that contract, and because there was a loss it is doubly important that we capitalize on that very expensive lesson about the development of our nuclear technology. Before May, AECL had the inside track in Argentina but this government procrastinated. There was some disagreement between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister and others about nuclear sales.

As a consequence, they did not make up their minds until they met in Jasper in August, although meetings in Argentina had been arranged and there was a deadline for the contract. I am told that the minister waited—I will accept any correction and I should like to hear about this from him some time—for ten days before he went to Mexico. They had expected two ministers, a senior minister and an inner cabinet minister, and I am told that the junior minister who arrived instead had a great deal of trouble getting an appointment with the janitors.

Mr. Wilson: That is not so.

Mr. Andras: Let us get it on the record, then. I have put down a request for the production of documents on the Mexican fiasco so I shall do the same thing with regard to the Argentinian contract.

The reputation this government is getting in the Middle East, Argentina, Venezuela, Mexico and, I am told, Japan, is shocking. Many Canadians would expect that the Conservatives might be able to do a job in this field.

I see my time is nearly up, Mr. Speaker, but I must say I have not seen anything in this budget that is on the right track. The government has a fetish about the reduction of the deficit, and, frankly, it has a commitment to objectives which I share. But, of course, I do not agree with their methods. They said they would accomplish everything by restraint but they have not. I think we are faced with the highest single increase in taxes since World War II. The taxes are regressive and oppressive and set Canadian against Canadian. I do not see how some hon. members opposite can live with their conscience and with this kind of budget. They should not try to tell sophisticated Canadians that they are balancing that budget and reducing cash requirements through tight expenditure control. They have accepted an increase in expenditures of $30 billion in five years, a 60 per cent increase. They are accepting a 10 per cent annual rate of increase in expenditures. They are playing games with their story about the budget reduction because actually their budgetary deficit comes down very little. After all these bitter pills they are asking us to swallow, this is the result.

It is sadly amusing, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has at least one thing going for him—he has a delightful wit but it is wearing thin, Mr. Speaker. After Tuesday night no one is laughing at that joker any more. In his speech he boasted that his great grandfather had presented a budget in Newfoundland 51 years ago. That takes us back to 1928, Mr. Speaker. Shortly after that, Canada had its most dismal experience of a Conservative regime through the thirties. I am also told that five years after the budget was presented, Newfoundland went bankrupt.

Mr. Speaker, this government has to straighten up and fly right very soon. There was tolerance in the country to let the new boys learn their job but the evidence we had the other night shows that tolerance to be fast disappearing. A great deal of damage can be done, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think this House of Commons has much choice about what should be done with this budget.

Hon. Ron Atkey (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am participating in this crucial debate today in my capacity as the minister responsible for employment policy in the present government. And I preface my remarks by saying frankly to this House that I am very much aware of the awesome problems that face the government in this field. They are awesome problems that have been left largely in neglect by our predecessors and they are crying out for direct and proper attention.

Today in Canada we have a double problem involving a paradox. We have an unacceptably high level of unemployment in general—no one disputes that—but at the same time we have a shortage of workers with specific skills. This government intends to act to meet this challenge.

There is another challenge too, that of securing justice for those groups within the economy that have traditionally faced special problems in the job market—youth, women, native peoples, the handicapped and others. We intend to do something about that too.

[Translation]

Besides, it is clear that the demographic changes in our country and the necessity for our economy to adapt to the energy crisis and to the new physiognomy of international trade will provoke upheavals in the labour force and the labour market in coming years. Therefore, the government must adopt a flexible and balanced approach to take up these challenges.

[English]

The immediate problem of young Canadians seeking to establish themselves in a tight labour market has been at the forefront of our considerations in determining the nature and scale of our employment programs for 1980-81. Our concern stems from two main sources. First, youth suffer much more than their fair share of existing unemployment. For example, in November of this year, while youth made up about a quarter of the labour force, they also accounted for almost half of the total unemployment figure. In fact, of the number of Canadians who were looking for work, 15.4 per cent of those aged 15 to 19 and 10.7 per cent of those aged 20 to 24 were unemployed, compared with 5.3 per cent aged 25 and older. I am inclined to the view that these figures probably underestimate the problem because young people are perhaps more easily discouraged from looking for work when they sense it is difficult to find.

● (1700)

The second concern of the government stems from recognition of the importance that finding and keeping meaningful jobs has for the self-esteem and future labour market experience of young people.

[Translation]

It is well known that the first experiences of a worker have a determining influence on the rest of his active life and on his income level. The young people of the post-war baby boom now represent over a quarter of the labour force and during the years to come they will rapidly join the ranks of adult workers. For example, it is anticipated that in 1985 they will represent only 23 per cent of the labour force compared to over 26 per cent in 1980. Under these circumstances, it is particularly important that they now get the training and qualifications they will need to lead an active, significant and productive life as adults. Because above all, the government does not want to breed another generation of unemployment insurance and social welfare recipients. Our young people can do better than that, especially in a country as rich as ours in human and natural resources.

[Mr. Atkey.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker, although solid work experience in real jobs is important to all youth, the truly vital factor, especially for young people who have not had the advantage of higher education or formal skill training, is simply to land that first job. This can be critical to his or her ultimate success because it provides that all-important starting point. In that connection, I firmly believe that an authentic job, a real job, in the private sector will be more credible to potential employers than a job on a government make-work project.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: It is about those make-work projects that employers tend to be skeptical, if not downright negative.

We are also aware of the concern of parents for their children who are unable to find work or who drift between dead-end jobs and government support programs without learning to stand on their own feet. In fact, many parents feel that they have done everything possible in terms of educating their children and they ask themselves where they have failed or where they have gone wrong. Of course, the answer in most cases is that no blame can be attached to the parents. The problem has been the failure in the past to provide adequate incentives for the private sector to provide sufficient jobs. In the past, there have been a number of measures designed to alleviate youth unemployment. However, these measures, which existed in several federal departments, lacked a clear policy direction. The public was often confused by what appeared to be a hodge-podge of programs.

As announced in the Speech from the Throne, we will be establishing a youth employment secretariat to provide the direction that has been lacking in the past under the previous government. This secretariat will monitor existing programs and co-ordinate them to ensure that duplication is reduced and that they are meeting the real needs of Canadian youth. As an additional means to make sure that youth employment programs provide the best value for money invested in them, the youth employment secretariat will work to harmonize federal youth employment programs with those of the provinces. I might say there are many good programs in the provinces. One of the first tasks of this new secretariat will be to ensure co-ordination of temporary employment programs for the spring and summer of 1980 to accommodate the thousands of young students expected to come onto the labour market at that time.

Our commitment to youth, however, does not exclude other groups who face particular difficulties in the labour market and who do have a valid call on our energies and available resources.

The participation of women in the labour force is a matter which came up in the question period today, and I thank the hon. member opposite for raising it. This has been a problem which has been rising rapidly and continuously since the post-war period. Unfortunately, the trend of having enough jobs for women who want to get into the labour market as a permanent proposition is going to continue for some time.

Although this human resource is one of our strengths as a nation and of our economy, for too many years the talents and abilities of Canadian women have not been fully used. One measure of this is to be found in the fact that although women account for over 39 per cent of our labour force, they also make up about 47 per cent of our unemployed. Moreover, women frequently suffer from job segregation and low wages when they do start to work.

Such barriers are gradually being removed and my department is embarking now upon a major campaign to speed up the process. We are encouraging women to train for all kinds of jobs, including many which for too long have been regarded as male preserves. A good idea of the potential of this exercise can be seen at such projects as Syncrude in Fort McMurray, Alberta, where women in hard hats are an integral and essential part of the work force. That is the sort of thing we are going to see in this country.

Those of us who have had good fortune and good health too often forget not only the problems but the employment difficulties of those who are physically or mentally handicapped. These must be brought to the fore. We cannot continue to shunt occupationally handicapped persons to employment outside of the mainstream of Canadian life. The new programs must and will make provision for their employment in meaningful jobs in the private sector.

Although there are no accurate statistics which fully describe the labour market situation of Canadians of native ancestry, our experience clearly indicates that the problems they face are serious indeed. The disproportionately faster growth of the working age population of native youth, together with structural factors such as low levels of educational attainment, limited job skills and geographic isolation, contribute to all these problems.

I would like to emphasize the role that affirmative action can play in helping to ensure that women, natives and the physically disabled obtain a representative share of jobs within a company or organization. Affirmative action, which is a relatively new approach to this problem in Canada, involves an employer developing a comprehensive, results-oriented plan to remove those employment practices which act as a barrier to these groups but which are not work-related.

Already eight medium and large-sized Canadian firms have recently agreed to develop affirmative action plans with my department, and I understand another 12 agreements are under negotiation. This is all as a result of effective action by officials in Canada Employment and Immigration since June 4 who are working together with the private sector to achieve a worth-while objective.

In January, the government and cabinet will be reviewing the effectiveness of the present voluntary approach in terms of federal contractors; that is, people who want or already have contracts with the federal government. This review will be with a view to ensuring compliance with the affirmative action concept and ensuring that compliance is widespread. Whatever decision is taken by Cabinet in January, I can assure this House and the people of Canada that affirmative action to reduce systematic discrimination will be a major priority of this government and will be most vigorously pursued.

On Tuesday evening the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) indicated in his budget speech that my department will be launching a number of new initiatives to stimulate the creation of additional jobs and to help individual Canadians obtain meaningful and rewarding employment. I would like now to describe generally these initiatives and the principles upon which they are based.

It is, and must continue to be, the private sector which generates most of the real employment opportunities in this country. It accomplishes this as a by-product of producing the goods and services which people demand through their purchases. In other words, the priority objective is production of goods and services with a real economic value, rather than make-work job creation.

The aim of start/stop programs such as the local initiatives program, OFY and Canada Works, may well have had some validity in the early 1970s when unemployment was seen—wrongly, as it turned out—as a short-term phenomenon which could be treated almost entirely by temporary palliatives. The Liberal concept is to take a gob of money, throw it at job creation and somehow everything will be all right in the long run. To continue with an emphasis of this kind when it is obvious that short-term or easy solutions are not the answer to the problem of unemployment would be irresponsible. Such programs discourage the kind of mobility needed in the labour force and generate dependencies on government support programs in general. They also divert attention from the need to find more permanent solutions to chronic problems. I am convinced that our intention to move towards longer-term solutions by recognizing the primacy of the private sector when it comes to generating real and truly productive jobs is fully in accord with the preference of all Canadians for regular and secure jobs.

[Translation]

Far be it from me to suggest that the private sector alone is responsible for ensuring that there are enough jobs for all those who want and can work. It is indeed clearly the responsibility of the government to provide the required parameters, and to be the prime mover in the creation of jobs. All in all, what I am talking about is the necessity of real co-operation among government, employers and labour.

Mr. Speaker, over the last few months I was most impressed to see that the representatives of employers as well as labour and all levels of government have a very positive determination to combine forces to define the problems and work towards solutions. In such a spirit of co-operation, the government can and must act in at least three areas. First, we intend to help establish a social and economic climate conducive to the prosperity of the private sector and to help that sector take initiatives that will produce permanent jobs, as provided for by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) in his budget. It is also an area where my department intends to make its contribution as I shall explain later on.

[English]

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we will encourage the private sector to play its full role in employing people, whatever their sex, age, ethnic or cultural background. We will be doing this in complete realization of current and future social and demographic changes. Some examples are the increasing participation and rising expectations of some in the labour market, the aging of the baby boom generation, alterations in family size and structure, and the aspirations of native Canadians.

Finally, we will be helping individuals increase their employability in situations where they are willing to work but where lack of information, lack of funds or lack of opportunity prevents them from obtaining the training and experience they need. At the same time this will help employers get the skilled people they need. We must also recognize that there are some individuals so lacking in basic qualifications that they are not acceptable to employers even when economic conditions are buoyant. For such individuals, we intend to provide assistance which will allow them, in time, to make their own way in the labour market.

The key to resolving the employment problems of young Canadians and others who have difficulty obtaining employment is more jobs. And, as we all know, the expansion of the private sector is the key to creating more jobs. That is why working in partnership with the private sector is at the centre of this government's approach to our future expansion. It is also why I am today giving notice of a ways and means motion setting out the income tax changes necessary to support a major new program of private employment incentives. Pursuant to Standing Order 60 I wish to table a notice of ways and means motion, and I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to designate an order of the day necessary for the consideration thereof. The incentive will be a tax credit of $80 per week for each eligible worker for a minimum of 13 weeks up to a maximum of one year. A work week must be a minimum of 35 hours subject to any collective agreement regarding a normal work week.

We hope to have the private employment incentives program in effect early in February, 1980. I hope that the motion will be considered by this House very soon after conclusion of the general budget debate. If the motion is accepted, it is my intention to introduce the necessary legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order. Is it the pleasure of the House that the minister should table a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Atkey: The basic intent of the legislation is to stimulate employment by allowing employers to claim the $80 weekly tax credit in return for providing jobs under certain conditions. In the event that an employer would not be able to use the tax credits in a given year, it would be possible to carry them forward for up to five years.

[Mr. Atkey.]

The two elements of the program will be concerned with, first, the incremental employment of youth, and second, with improving or maintaining the employability of people with hiring handicaps, particularly youth, natives, older workers, women re-entrants into the labour force and the disabled. These elements are to come into effect in early February, 1980. If the private sector responds as I anticipate, we will be able to place in private sector jobs before the next fiscal year draws to a close up to 105,000 unemployed young people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: Of this total, 89,000 young people will be placed in new private sector jobs that did not exist before; an additional 16,000 young people with severe difficulties in obtaining continuing employment will also be placed in private sector jobs. On top of all this, some 15,000 older Canadians who have had such severe difficulties will also be placed in private sector jobs.

Whether we reach the placement ceilings under either the incremental element or the employability element will depend a great deal on the response we get from the leaders of business and industry. We will be appealing to them to join with us in an all-out effort to create employment opportunities for Canadians, and especially young Canadians.

In addition to forging a partnership with the private business and industrial sectors, we want to co-operate with the voluntary sector in creating jobs directly for youth. Although the voluntary sector has demonstrated a tremendous capacity to perform an invaluable service function, as witness their efforts in the case of the Indo-Chinese refugees, such organizations have been largely untapped as a potential source of concrete work experience for young men and women.

● (1720)

Through a new national youth service program I expect that about 14,000 young people will, by the end of the fiscal year 1980-81, be enlisted by the voluntary sector to render a service to their country, their province or their community rather than having to depend on unemployment insurance benefits or welfare. We should make special efforts to seek the active participation of women's groups in this program. The national youth service program is to be funded at a level of at least $70 million in the year 1980-81.

[Translation]

We especially want to help the young people who are really disadvantaged and who are in great need of assistance. We do not want to repeat some of the mistakes of the Opportunities for Youth and Local Initiatives programs where, in many cases, middle and upper class young people financed their own little projects with public funds without the country or the community being able to benefit from it. By obtaining the participation of recognized organizations which have already proven that they can bring their services to those most in need, we believe that the emphasis will be placed less on innovation for its own sake and more on better opportunities to implement projects which will have long-term beneficial effects and will provide a valid job experience for young people.

[English]

The government will also be setting aside $50 million, obtained through reductions in some programs, to finance economic development projects in areas of high unemployment, a significant proportion to be directed to regional areas, primarily in eastern Canada. The specific projects are now under final review and details of the federal proposals, subject to further consultation with the provinces concerned, will be announced soon. They will include small craft harbours, fishing vessel assistance, fish-handling facilities and technological development in Quebec and the four Atlantic provinces.

Let me talk for a moment about the shortage of skilled labour in Canada. Immigration may be an appropriate response to assist the private sector when there is absolutely no other way to fill an immediate labour force need. But a much better and longer-term solution is to give high priority to the training of Canadians in the highly skilled occupations which are or will be in short supply.

Despite the need for restraint in other areas, this government will be maintaining the regular industrial and institutional skills training programs which have proven to be so valuable. In 1980-81 we shall be allocating about $610 million, plus up to $196 million in unemployment insurance benefits, to support industrial and institutional training. Moreover, this government will be increasing financial expenditures to help industry overcome critical trade skills shortages. The critical trade skills training initiatives will be funded at $20 million over the next fiscal year, double the amount provided by the previous government. Under this program the federal government will make financial support available to employers willing to train Canadians. For such employers the support will be for a maximum of two years or half the training time, whichever is less.

As with many programs, the success of this one depends on the willingness of employers, with the support of union leaders, to establish a training capability and to select workers for training. I have already indicated that there is a demonstrated willingness on the part of employers, the labour movement and governments to work together and plan for the future. A good example of this is the establishment in Ontario of a large number of local industrial training advisory committees during the past year. These groups are charged with identifying manpower problems and working toward their resolution at the local level. This is the type of initiative to which we intend to give out full support.

In keeping with the government's intention to ensure that key activities come back to this House at regular intervals to justify their continued need to exist, a sunset evaluation report on our new private employment incentives program will be laid before Parliament after two years. This means, in effect, that there will be the option to end the program after two years. Whether the program continues or not will depend on the results of the evaluation and on what Parliament feels should be done. In any case, it will lapse automatically after three years unless Parliament resolves to continue it for a further period of time.

I mentioned earlier that there are individuals who many employers are reluctant to employ. For such individuals the local employment assistance program is functioning successfully as a vehicle to increase their self-sufficiency. It has been shown that participation in a project funded by this program increases the employability and earnings of more than half the clients. A recent cost-benefit study of the program indicates that for every dollar invested Canada is getting over two dollars in return. That is why we are continuing this program. It is clear that the local employment assistance program is an extremely worth-while program which merits the expansion planned. This program will be a major element of my department's programs for native Canadians. More than half the program funds will be allocated in such a way as to encourage the development of long-term jobs in native communities.

By developing these programs and by ensuring that the major components will be subject to sunset review and lapsing clauses, we have maintained the flexibility which will be needed to shift the balance between programs, and the specific problems they address, as circumstances change. One of the things we can foresee now is that the labour force will "age" as we move into the 1980s. The "baby boom" generation will enter the adult age group, reflecting the birth rate decline which started in the 1960s. It will not be fully replaced by new youth of working age. The critical nature of the youth unemployment problem can be expected to ease as a result of these developments, as well as because of the programs we are initiating. As this occurs, it will be necessary from time to time to reassess the situation and possibly to shift the balance so as to direct emphasis to other priority areas.

As my colleague, the Minister of Finance said last evening, the eighties are not going to be easy years. The impact of major changes in the labour market in both the rate and nature of technological change and in the needs of Canadians as they go through the life cycle will generate substantial challenges. This government is ready to meet these challenges and I believe the measures I have just described will move us firmly in the right direction.

Above all, however, I would like to underline that although this government is prepared to take policy initiatives and back them up with dollars, the government cannot do the job alone. In the final analysis it is up to the entrepreneurs and businessmen of Canada from both large and small businesses to generate the economic activity which will open up employment opportunities. Our function as a government is to play a supportive role and help create a climate in which individual Canadians are willing to make the judgments and take the risks which will allow the real potential of our economy to be realized. I am sure all members will agree that given this country's combination of human and natural resources, our potential is considerable indeed.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. minister accept a question?

Mr. Fox: I rise on a point of order!

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member for Longueuil on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question of the hon. minister?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): The hon. member can put a question only with the unanimous consent of the House, since the minister's time has expired. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Could the minister tell me the full amount that he has set aside for job creation and the total number of jobs that he has created?

● (1730)

[English]

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, the program which was announced today is largely a program for the fiscal year 1980-81. The targets I gave you for the creation of jobs was some 105,000 jobs for young people, and an additional 15,000 jobs for persons who are not young persons but nevertheless handicapped in the total sense of having severe difficulties in obtaining continuing employment. On top of that there will be training positions for some 120,000 young people and many more training positions for older Canadians, the total number of which is not fully clear. On top of that—and I am repeating the contents of my speech—there will be 14,000 persons in the national youth service program. The total cost of our job-creation program is, in dollar terms, exactly the same amount of money provided by the previous government. I can assure the hon. member that for the same dollars we will be getting twice the value.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask the minister a brief question. Did he say that the Department of Employment and Immigration is now going to take over the small craft and harbours program entirely, or it is going to play the role that it played traditionally of supplementing the job that was done for the Department of Fisheries?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): Order, please. I should like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that this is not the question period and that this question, like the former one, can only be asked with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, may I repeat this again. In the eastern alternatives employment program referred to by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, in the budget debate the other night, there is a sum of $50 million which has not been allocated in any specific way but which will include a number of projects, such as small craft and harbours. Those projects need not necessarily be funded directly by my department, but one of the principal criteria for their funding is that they be labour intensive.

Hon. Francis Fox (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, it is not every day that I have the pleasure of speaking following the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey). In the past few weeks it seemed that I had always preceded him. But in this way I may in some way have the last word.

While it is a pleasure to be following him, it is also a major source of disappointment for me to have to speak in this budget debate following the type of announcements that the minister has just made. We have been waiting for a long time for the minister's employment strategy. In fact we have been waiting since June 4 when he was appointed. Since that time we have been treated to a number of speeches and, in spite of our repeated questioning of him in front of parliamentary committees, we have obtained no information from him. It seems that he has a lot more confidence in the various service clubs to which he speaks across the country, because what he told us today he revealed in great part to most of the service clubs.

We on this side of the House would have much appreciated it if the minister had had the courtesy to send us advance copies of his speech so that we could have had a look at it before he unveiled it in the House, and analysed it in greater detail. I will respond to some parts of the minister's speech, and other parts of it I will leave to my colleague, the critic for women's employment, the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni).

First of all, I would like to look, before considering the employment program which the minister put forward before the House, at the economic setting in which we are acting. The minister's department has a very special responsibility within the Government of Canada, one of stimulating employment in times when the macro-economic policies of the government are perhaps not working. If there is one thing that comes out clearly from the budget, it is that the macro-economic policies of the government are not working and they more than offset the type of job-creating opportunities that the minister brought forth tonight. In that sense I want to extend my sympathy to him, because he knows full well that in spite of the $7 million he will be spending in the job-creation field, he knows his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), will destroy more than 135,000 jobs between now and 1981. Those are not my figures, those are the figures of the Minister of Finance.

So what is the setting? We have had this government in office for six months now and the setting is one of a slowdown in the Canadian economy and a slowdown in the U.S. economy for which this government is not responsible, but where does the responsibility begin to try to offset in this country, by economic tools at their disposal, the effects of unemployment in Canada or of the U.S. recession? We have rising interest rates for which they now must take responsibility, we have slow growth, which is projected in the Minister of Finance's projections for the next five years, we have the U.S. recession on the horizon and, as a matter of fact, as the minister knows, cuts in his job-creation program since he came to office. That is the setting.

We must look at that setting first of all in connection with the promises that the minister's party made before coming to office, because they made a number of substantial promises. They had miracle solutions to the problems of the Canadian economy in the spring, but those budding promises in the spring have turned to the deadwood of winter even before the snow began to fall in this country.

What were they telling us in the months of April and May? They told us that unemployment could be reduced by 5.5 per cent in 1985. That is far from being the type of projection that the Minister of Finance tabled in the House the other evening during the course of his budget speech. In reality we are looking at 8.3 per cent unemployment by 1981. They spoke of creating 1.5 million jobs by 1985, but according to the Minister of Finance's predictions, they will be destroying 135,000 jobs before 1981. They spoke of a growth of 5 per cent in CNP by 1985, but now they are talking about zero growth in the economy for the second time in a number of years. They are talking about zero growth in a country like ours, with the potential we have in terms of human resources, in terms of natural resources, and in terms of our strategic position in the world community. They also spoke of a number of other initiatives.

They told us they would be reducing taxes by $2.5 billion. We all know that through the very regressive, unfair way of bringing in revenue to the coffers of the Government of Canada, they have decided to tax the people who needed the money most in these times of high inflation, people who own automobiles which consume gasoline and people who are working and who have to pay unemployment insurance premiums.

They will get about $2.8 billion out of the pockets of the Canadian car owner, about $800 million out of the pockets of employers and employees who are paying unemployment insurance premiums, and they have decided to push that user-pay concept to its extreme limit by telling people that in the future as soon as unemployed people obtain jobs, they will have to pay for all the services provided by employment agencies under the jurisdiction of the minister. The minister did not speak about that tonight. He put out a press release yesterday. I for one believe this is a scandalous situation where the Government of Canada is telling people that services will no longer be provided for them, that their cost is to be covered with money which accrues to individual workers and employees in this country.

When we add up those two or three figures, we see the government will be taking $3.5 billion out of the economy.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fox: Let us look at those projections in the budget brought down by the minister the other night. He spoke to us about increases in the unemployment rate which would go from 7.5 per cent this year to 8.3 per cent in 1980, and remain at 8.3 per cent in 1981. What does that mean in terms of people, because I think in this House we lose sight of the number of people who are actually involved in this type of process? At an average unemployment rate of 7.5 per cent, we are talking not in terms of percentage points but rather of some 850,000 Canadians who are seeking employment and cannot find it.

What did the government promise to do for Canadians in the years to come? The minister talks about the role of the private sector, but what will the government do to enhance the private sector, to let it expand so as to create the jobs that the minister talks about? The minister's colleague, the Minister of Finance, speaks of the rate of unemployment rising from 7.5 per cent to 8.3 per cent, which means it will rise from 850,000 unemployed this year to 963,000 unemployed Canadians in 1980, and to 986,000 by 1981.

An hon. Member: Unacceptable.

Mr. Fox: That is if the minister's projections are correct. They are succeeding in doing this at a time when the growth rate in the labour force is declining, that is, at a time when the growth rate is declining the over-all economic policies of this government are leading to an increase from 850,000 unemployed Canadians to 986,000, according to their own figures, in the short period of two years.

• (1740)

What are they promising in terms of inflation? Now they talk in terms of a rate from 11 per cent to 11.4 per cent by 1981. Indeed this is a novel way of looking at job creation in this country.

An hon. Member: We will have to change that.

Mr. Fox: My colleague is quite right. We do have to change that. When I look at some of the things the Minister of Finance said, and when I read his budget speech, I realize that he had a few positive things to say about the Canadian economy. He said that job creation has been impressive. He is not talking about his job creation. He is talking about the job creation by his predecessors in that portfolio. He said the following:

> Job creation has also been impressive. About 440,000 more people were employed in October, 1979, than in October, 1978.

I am not too sure if the colleagues of the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration were quite as forthcoming in the last election campaign to mention the type of record levels of employment created in the country over the past few years by his predecessors.

In his budget the Minister of Finance said the following:

More than 135,000 of the new jobs were in the manufacturing sector.

Then he looks to the future, the future for which he and his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, are responsible. He said the following:

Our prospects for 1980 are clouded by the recession which now appears to be under way in the United States . . . This means that fewer jobs will be created in Canada in 1980 . . . and that our unemployment rate is likely to increase to about 8¼ per cent.

Well, that is the Minister of Finance. He is looking back and says that there has been a great record of employment creation in the country, not to mention that it was done under the previous administration. Then he looks forward, into the future. He is responsible. He has the economic tools in his hand. It is up to him to try to stimulate the economy in a period of time when interest rates prevent the private sector from doing so, in a period of time when the recession in the United States also prevents the private sector from doing so. But, what does he do? He takes about $3.5 billion out of the economy and puts some back, but reduces the general stimulation by about $750 million. What does that mean in general?

I know there are people looking at us out there. When they hear politicians discussing matters, I know they do not always take their word for the dire economic consequences which will come about. But I have gone over some of the comments which have been made about the economic policy of this government. This government has been in office for six months, and already it is bringing us to the brink of disaster to such an extent that members on both sides of the House feel it is about time the life of this government was brought to an end, so that we can get back to some sort of rational economic policy-making in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Jerusalem will remember you.

Mr. Atkey: You will not be smiling at ten o'clock tonight.

Mr. Fox: I should like to quote to the Minister of Employment and Immigration from a newspaper which is published in his home town, the Toronto Star. It refers to his colleague's budget as "a totally misguided budget". Those are not my words. Those are the words of the Toronto Star. I am not making them up. They were in the Toronto Star today. It indicated:

Mr. Crosbie has come up with measures that are guaranteed to give us even less growth, higher inflation and more unemployment . . .

That is an indictment of the type of economic policy the minister is trying to support in the House. The minister responsible for employment supported his colleague during the budget debate for coming up with measures which will guarantee less growth, higher inflation, and more unemployment.

I stay in the hon. minister's home province of Ontario. I looked at what the three main political parties in his province had to say to him and his colleagues yesterday. I am referring to the Liberals, the NDP, and the Conservatives, his blood brothers. They all came to the conclusion that the budget the minister is defending might trigger a recession while fuelling inflation and unemployment. We are not saying that in this House for political partisan purposes. We are trying to give the minister an objective view of how his budget is perceived by the Toronto Star and the three main political parties in the province of Ontario.

The Quebec minister of finance is quoted in The Gazette this morning in Montreal, speaking particularly about the excise tax on gasoline, as saying that this measure makes no economic sense. I should like to quote from this morning's edition of La Presse.

[Translation]

Tax conservatism does not make any sense at a time when economic stagnation is expected for next year. He will step on the brakes precisely when the economy is braking much too hard.

[English]

The same theme is taken up in the French press in Montreal.

[Translation]

The theme is the same. The main dailies in this country, in both Ontario and Quebec, all make the same lecture. The Toronto Star speaks of an absolutely ridiculous budget. Commentators in La Presse say that the measures put forward by the Minister of Finance and I quote:

—globally make of this budget a tax hole that will be useless in giving new impetus to the economy and illusory in the fight against inflation.

Le Devoir said this morning, and I shall quote again, Mr. Speaker, because I want to prove this is not political narrow-mindedness on our part. These are objective, independent observers, who see the situation from the outside, who have come to the conclusion that the budget does not make any sense. I quote:

One must wonder if the time was really ripe to whip, energetically, a languishing economy whose state might worsen with the American recession.

That is their conclusion. So there! Governments in power, in Ontario as well as in Quebec, condemn the measures put forward by the colleague of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The great dailies in this country, Le Devoir, La Presse, the Toronto Star all agree. One of the large investment dealers also reaches the same conclusion. I mean Wood Gundy, who says, and I quote:

[English]

Wood Gundy, the largest firm of investment dealers in Canada, came out with the following statement:

Fiscal Conservatism is triumphant and will bring Canadian growth in real terms to zero . . .

An hon. Member: That is true Conservatism, destroy Canada.

Mr. Atkey: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: I will finish the quote. I am sure the hon. minister is interested in hearing the end of the quote. In fact I will reread it: "Fiscal Conservatism"—I have trouble pronouncing those words because I do not particularly like them. It reads as follows:

Fiscal Conservatism is triumphant and will bring Canadian growth in real terms to zero or below in 1980.

Mr. Atkey: Wood Gundy liked the budget.

Mr. Fox: Well, if you like a budget which brings us to zero growth in 1980!

I should like to get back to the minister's basic premise in the speech which he made to the House this afternoon. It was the primacy of the private sector to the exclusion of the public sector. I think the minister is making a very serious mistake. We in this country do not simply need measures to encourage the private sector. We need a mix, and the minister knows it. In his heart he knows that we need a mix of policies.

We need temporary job-creation policies which can only be funded by public funds and which can be used effectively by local groups, such as municipalities and a number of groups that do not have the profit motive as their sole objective. Of course we need a number of measures which will incite the private sector to undertake job creation, but I tell the minister that fiscal policies which will lead to zero growth in the economy are not of a nature to lead industry to expand.

Now I should like to come to the minister's job-creation measures. Since the minister did not favour me with a copy of his speech, I had to make a few notes during the course of his speech. Of course he spoke about the primacy of the private sector and his program to incite job creation in the private sector through the use of a tax incentive, the main thrust of his program. I think the minister will agree with me on that. The main thrust of his program is to use tax incentives to create jobs in the private sector. I am not in disagreement with him. I think it is a good way to go, but I do not think it is the full answer to the problem. In doing so, he is really continuing along the lines of the Liberal job-creation program which was started last year when the previous government put $100 million into tax incentives to encourage the creation of jobs throughout the country.

The real problem in this country at the moment is not one of bringing young people into the labour force, the real problem at the moment is how the minister is going to prevent people from losing their jobs. What this government's policies have led to is plant closures and lay-offs right across the country. The Globe and Mail this morning mentions 3,600 workers of the St. Catharines Foundry and Engine Plant being laid off tomorrow. They are not the people the minister's $80 a week incentive program is going to help.

The point I am really trying to get across to the minister is that, in spite of his efforts to create something like 135,000 jobs in the short term, because of the general policies of this government they will be destroying more than that number of jobs over the next little while. We have all these lay-offs, and the minister knows as well as I that there have been a number in a number of areas right across the country. The job at the moment is really one of using existing capacity rather than how to increase it.

I really cannot understand how the minister's tax incentive program is going to help the young worker coming into the labour force in Windsor or in Ste. Thérèse, Quebec—how it is going to help him get a job with General Motors. They are laying off men right across the country. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Wilson) was here earlier and he knows full well the state of the automobile industry in this country. It seems to me the government would do much better in trying to bring forward a fiscal framework that would encourage the creation and expansion of jobs rather than going at it the opposite way.

The minister is very proud of his program. He tells us now that he wants to do away basically with any job-creation program that relies on the public sector for job creation.

Mr. Atkey: That is not true.

Mr. Fox: That is certainly the main thrust of the minister's program. He has cut a number of programs.

Mr. Atkey: There is the national youth program.

Mr. Fox: Let us consider the national youth program. The minister tells us he is going to be creating something like 14,000 jobs with the national youth program. If I look at the document that was published by the minister's department in September, 1978, I see that there already is something that is called the Youth Job Corps which cost $50 million and which, according to these documents that originate with the minister's department, was to create something like 16,500 jobs. What is the minister talking about?

I know it is Christmas time and that the hon. minister has a temptation to take some of these programs that have been effective under past policies of his department and wrap them up in tinsel to go with the Christmas season, putting tags on them and calling them by different names. However, his national youth service corps which is going to cost $70 million to create 14,000 jobs does not look much different from this youth program that is already in existence and which cost $50 million to produce 16,500 jobs.

The minister has difficulty in holding back his comments on certain things. We have had examples of that over the course of the summer when he was talking about certain kinds of animals, and noises in the night. We on this side of the House all hope that behind the word "bark" lies some timbre, but up to now he has not shown that he really has any timbre at all. I really do not know what political advantage the minister finds in this process of trying to insult everybody in this society.

I have here an extract from the Montreal Gazette which quotes the minister as saying in Toronto, specifically in relation to the youth corps program, when asked how his proposals differ from the previous Liberal government's job corps, that participants would work for a year at minimum wages and create some services of lasting benefit. He then went on to say, and I am astounded that he would make this kind of comment, that the second difference is that the plan is not for middle class unemployed youths looking to coast along for a year, but for the chronically unemployed people. I think that is a crying shame.

We have $50 million of public funds being expended to create employment for 16,500 Canadian youths, and this minister instead of trying to improve the program and motivate the young people to do things which are of value to their communities, as they are in a number of areas in the country, goes out and insults them.

Just yesterday I received a letter from the minister's colleague, the Solicitor General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Lawrence), telling me what a great success the Youth Job Corps program has been. He gave me as an example some programs that have be funded in my own riding. Why does this minister find it necessary to go out and insult the youth of Canada? That is really beyond me. If he wants to help them obtain jobs then I am with him and I will support him. Of course I wish him luck and success in his job-creation programs. I must say that to date he has not impressed us very much in that regard.

During the course of the debate last week when we were talking about another program, the Canada Works program which the minister has promised to eliminate and take completely out of the spectrum of job-creation programs, he went out of his way, along with his parliamentary secretary, to come out with a number of high profile projects that were unsuccessful, failures. Once again, the minister's job is to try to refine and fine tune programs, and to eliminate projects that are not successful. His job is to come up with projects that are successful. There is not one member who sits on this side of the House who could not point out to the minister a couple of highly successful programs in his own riding.

There are a number of members here from New Brunswick and from Quebec, particularly from the Gaspé area, who can point to wharves having been built, arenas having been built and community centres having been built, all with the help of Canada Works Program money being put into the hands of municipalities. What the minister is doing today is telling these municipalities that in the future they can no longer count on federal funds to help them meet local objectives.

In that regard I disagree quite fundamentally with the minister. He is putting all his eggs into one basket, and that basket is the private sector. He should put a substantial part of his program and proposals in that area, and I agree with that. That he should eliminate the public sector from job-creation programs, and eliminate the Government of Canada from a presence in ridings across the country, I fundamentally disagree.

[Mr. Fox.]

[Translation]

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, we must conclude that after a few months in power this government has no idea of the directions in which to go when it comes to job creation and economic policy. What we have today is almost a joke, Mr. Speaker. Last Tuesday night, the Minister of Finance presented a budget in which he announced a whole series of measures whose sole effect will be to take an additional $3.5 billion from the pockets of consumers across the country, and policies which will directly contribute to the destruction in the Canadian economy of over 135,000 jobs within 18 months.

Today, the Minister of Employment and Immigration to ease the ridiculous and pointless policies announced by his colleague, the Minister of Finance, announced a job-creation program which will not even create the same number of jobs as his colleague destroyed. That is why, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance was forced to indicate clearly in his budget of last Tuesday that despite all the measures that this government wants to take, the only effect between 1979 and 1981 will be an increase in the employment rate from 7.5 to 8.3 per cent.

An hon. Member: Economic activists—

[English]

Mr. Fox: The main problem with this budget and its lack of stimulus is that it will not be directed toward new hiring, or in the prevention of lay-offs. Only a Conservative budget could ensure rising unemployment at a time when the rate of growth in the labour force is declining. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCain): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-29, granting Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1980.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment thereto (Mr. Gray) (p. 2299), and the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Rae) (p. 2304).

Hon. Francis Fox (Blainville-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, in the two or three minutes which are left to me I would like to wrap up and summarize my speech. I would very much have liked to have had the opportunity to continue to address my remarks to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey) who does not seem to be with us at the moment.

This government has been leading the nation for six months. In that short period of time, it has led Canada to the highest levels of interest rates in living memory. For six months this government has led unemployed Canadians to believe that they would be able to find a job under a Tory government. But the Conservative government has shown its true colours in the budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) brought down on Tuesday night.

What the Conservatives are really leading this country to is an inflation rate of 11.4 per cent before 1981. They are leading this country to higher taxation imposed on those least able to pay it, and a much higher rate of unemployment. The budget which was tabled by the Minister of Finance indicates, in his own figures, that from a rate of unemployment of 7.5 per cent and with his leadership and his fiscal and monetary policies, he will take this country up to a level of 8.3 per cent unemployment by 1981. In human terms this means that, in spite of the announcement of the job-creation measures of the minister of employment today, we will proceed from a situation where we now have approximately 850,000 unemployed—men, women, youth and older people—to a situation where in 1981 we will have 986,000 unemployed. Those are the figures contained in the documents filed by the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

So there, Mr. Speaker, after six months in power this is the only record of the Progressive Conservative government: the highest interest rates that members in this House have ever seen and an unemployment rate—as the result of measures put forward by the Minister of Finance who does not seem pleased that we already have such an unemployment rate—that will make it impossible for 850,000 Canadians to find a job. In addition to that figure, the policies of the minister unavoidably lead to the unemployment of 986,000 Canadians in 1980. I will end on those comments, Mr. Speaker. Such is the record of the government. It is time that we put an end to it and that we close the books.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired. However, he may proceed with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in this, my first speech before this House, I would be remiss if I did not begin with a tribute to my predecessor from the constituency of Prince Albert. For 26 years the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker represented my riding. The former Prime Minister dominated politics in our part of the country. That dominance eventually reached all of Canada. We may not have agreed with his politics or his position on many issues, but we could not dispute his agility as a politician, or his ability to catch the imagination of the nation right up to this Thirty-first Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: During his career I crossed Mr. Diefenbaker's path many times. As a boy, I met him with my father when he was my father's lawyer. As a university student I listened to him in mock parliament. As a professional educator and administrator, I was Mr. Diefenbaker's host when he, as Prime Minister, opened the town of Inuvik. I was his host again in 1965 when he presided at the opening of the John Diefenbaker Elementary School in the city of Prince Albert.

When I conceded defeat to Mr. Diefenbaker on May 22, he very generously wished me well by saying to his gathered supporters, "We may not be from the same party, but we are here for the same reason, because we believe in Canada".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: He said that the election process is a part of Canadian democracy. Although I did not often agree with the Chief, either politically or ideologically, I respected him. The Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker served Prince Albert and Canada well. He believed in the strength of this Parliament and he trusted the parliamentary system. It is now my honour to represent Prince Albert. I will not betray that trust.

Prince Albert had other distinguished parliamentarians. First we claimed Sir Wilfred Laurier who, though he did not live there, was elected to represent that riding. Prince Albert was also represented for many years by the Right Hon. Mackenzie King. He moved there when he was defeated in Ontario. Prince Albert was then considered a safe Liberal seat.

• (2010)

An hon. Member: Those days are gone.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. King was defeated by the CCF in 1945 in a close election that hinged on the soldier vote. There is many a veteran in Prince Albert who proudly proclaims that his vote sent Mr. King back east.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the constituency of Prince Albert. It is basically a rural constituency with 60 per cent of the voters living outside the city. It is an historic city, the oldest in Saskatchewan, situated approximately in the center of the constituency on the banks of the North Saskatchewan River in the parkland area of the province. It is a beautiful city in a beautiful setting, small enough to be friendly and large enough to provide facilities for the good life. Although forest products and northern development are now contributing considerably to the economy, Prince Albert is very closely connected to the agricultural communities which surround it. The constituency includes some of the best farm land in Canada, Domremy, where I was born, Birch Hills, Kinistino, Wakaw, Shellbrook; Blaine Lake—where Jack Horner was born—Debden, Rosthern and Waldheim.

Prince Albert is the gateway to the north of Saskatchewan, where you will find some of the best fishing in Canada. An international playground, it includes the Prince Albert National Park. That area also has tremendous possibilities for development.

After the Red River rebellion, Mr. Speaker, many of the Métis moved to Saskatchewan and settled on the southern branch of the river. The two Saskatchewan Rivers meet about 20 miles east of the city. The Métis settled in St. Louis, St. Laurent, and Batoche. Duck Lake, Carleton and Batoche were, of course, the sites of some of the battles of the Riel rebellion. Scattered throughout the riding are 12 Indian reserves, mostly Cree, and one Dakota Sioux.

The Indians of northern Saskatchewan are strong, prosperous, and well organized. They contribute a great deal to the communities of that area.

I could spend a great deal of time detailing the hopes and needs of the people of Prince Albert on an individual and group basis. For instance, the Indians would like better housing and more freedom to control their own destiny. They are hoping to have the Saskatchewan formula implemented in dealing with their land entitlement claims. I support all those hopes and needs, and encourage this government to proceed as quickly as possible to their fulfilment.

The farmers of Prince Albert are being squeezed by increasing costs and insufficient prices for their products. Fuel price increases and high interest rates are hurting them. Besides that, the whole industry is being squeezed by the inability to transport grain, and by the abandonment of rail lines which are necessary for the economic delivery of grain. The cow-calf industry may look good at the moment but it is still reeling from four bad years. Farmers need legislation which will allow them to survive. The survival of farms, as we know them in Saskatchewan, is the survival of a way of life.

In Prince Albert members of the Public Service Alliance are feeling insecure and uncared for. Morale is low and many positions are going unfilled, to the detriment of the effective work of whole departments. A policy needs to be articulated and implemented which the Public Service considers fair and equitable.

Labour is also feeling the pinch of interest rates and the general depression of the economy. Workers' purchasing power has been further cut by the increase in unemployment insurance premiums and increased costs of fuel. Construction workers are being laid off and look forward to a very dismal future brought on by the high mortgage rates which have curtailed housing starts.

Small businesses are also in need of protection and encouragement. I commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) on the long overdue move to allow the salaries paid to spouses to be deductible. That is some help, but will not overcome the other effects of the budget.

These are some of the groups of people in the constituency who have needs and hopes and look to this government to help fulfil those hopes. Instead what they got is this budget.

This budget does not deal with the real culprits in our system. It does not attempt to deal with inflation to any extent. The major factor in increasing costs now and in the future will be the interest rates being charged. Those interest rates are causing inflation, hardship, and bankruptcy. Let me be more explicit, Mr. Speaker.

During the recent election campaign in Prince Albert, I talked to many home owners who were worried about the effect of high interest rates on their mortgages. Their present rate on a mortgage is 10 per cent or less. Those rates are to be renegotiated, if you can call it that, up to 14¾ per cent or 15 per cent. On $40,000, 15 per cent means $500 interest. Many of their payments will be $500 per month before principal.

Let me be still more specific: one young couple with three children are planning to sell their home because their mortgage comes up for renewal this month. They cannot afford an increase. Their house will go on sale on a buyer's market, due to the sudden drop in the sale of houses. They are not even likely to be able to cash in their five-year equity. There are thousands of other young home owners just like them.

Most farmers on the prairies, regardless of the type of farming or even the size of the farms they operate, depend upon demand loans for operating at certain times of the year. The margin between cost of production and return from sales is very slim in many types of farm operations. The farmer has a choice of cutting back production or losing more money on a bigger operation. The extra 4 per cent to 5 per cent of interest on operational money will cut that margin still further, or may even eliminate it. If the losses go on long enough, the farmer will eventually be forced to sell. One more farmer will have left the industry. One more family will have been forced to change its way of life. One or two more people will be out looking for work that is not to be found.

Small businesses are very important to the economy of Prince Albert. I agree with a statement in the December 11 budget speech which says that "the small business sector is one of the great strengths of this country". Small businesses are good for Canada because they are usually Canadian-owned and operated. Interest rates also have a devastating effect on small business. Again let me be more explicit. In Prince Albert last month, a dealer in carpets closed his shop. He had approximately $100,000 worth of carpets in stock. However, the interest on those carpets increased to the extent that he felt he could not afford to stay in business. There are thousands of stores like his. I predict a rash of bankruptcies among small businesses during the next year.

• (2020)

Interest rates have a domino effect. For example, a lumber mill closed a month ago at Meadow Lake just outside of my riding, which put approximately 100 men out of work. The mill closed down because it could not sell its lumber. The lumber yards quit buying lumber because the construction people stopped building houses. Orders for houses dropped drastically. The lumber yard laid off men because they were no longer needed. The house construction industry was not building houses because sales had dropped off. Again, men were being laid off because few houses were being built. Real estate people were having difficulty selling houses because mortgage rates were too high.

We all know the story of the battle that was lost for the want of a horseshoe nail. The analogy is clear, Mr. Speaker. The government may lose this battle because it has failed to deal with high interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: I have heard hon. members opposite say that mortgage rates are going down. But, down from where? Interest rates have moved up from 11 per cent to in excess of 15 per cent and then have moved back to 14.75 per cent. I do not call that a reduction.

I want to speak now about the farmer. The farmer has been dealt a triple blow by this budget and this government. First, interest rates were increased by this government. They were not lowered in the budget. However, I have already dealt with that point.

Prices are being increased for farm fuel at a rate of approximately 60 cents per gallon by the end of next year due to the artificial increase in the cost of crude. In addition, the farmer will be required to pay 25 cents per gallon tax on all fuel he buys. Granted he will receive a 10 cent rebate, but he still has to pay the full amount to get the fuel. I hope that the government will consider paying 16 per cent interest on the money that makes up that rebate because that is what the farmer will be paying for it.

Incidentally, this 15-cent tax will cost Canadian farmers approximately $170 million. The farmer is devastated by these extra costs. That is how this government fulfils its promise to protect the family farm. These kinds of costs heaped on farms that are already marginal will cause bankruptcy. The family farm is in danger.

Statistics Canada, that much beleaguered entity, indicated that the number of families living below the poverty line in Canada has increased by only 1 per cent. I stress the word "only" because the Statistics Canada report did so. Most of us are losing buying power through the effect of interest rates and inflation. But those who are on low or fixed incomes are hurting the most because they so easily slip below the poverty line.

It is a sad state when in a country as rich as Canada 700,000 families are living below the poverty line. Again, that figure is from Statistics Canada. This budget will increase that number by pushing up the cost of rent, fuel and other items. Meanwhile, corporate profits increased substantially during the last year, and this budget will not affect them. In fact it is likely to increase the profits of many companies. This budget will increase the number and speed by which people fall below the poverty line. Poverty is not an economic problem as much as it is a problem of lack of will and neglect on the part of the government.

During the last 100 years, people of the western world developed political democracy to a point where we pride ourselves on our freedom. But also during the last 100 years we have contradicted that by losing control of the economy. One hundred years ago, farmers, tradesmen, storekeepers and professionals owned and controlled the means by which they lived. However, the industrial revolution concentrated the machinery of production and of distribution in the hands of those who supplied the capital. While we won the right to vote, we lost control of the economy.

We are subjected to an almost continuous campaign to sell us on the idea of the free enterprise system. However, as Tommy Douglas put it in 1958, "The economic system under which we live is neither free nor enterprising".

We have heavy unemployment, a surplus of most staples and most manufactured goods, and if the free enterprise market system is working, then the cost of living and the price of retail goods should go down. This is the law of supply and demand. Instead, the cost of living continues to rise and retail costs continue to do likewise. The market system no longer works because most prices these days are set by agrcement based on the cost of production plus a fairly hefty profit. The prices are set by the producer in every industry except farming.

While we have become politically free, we have become economically enslaved. It is still true today that he who controls the means by which we live, controls me. Political power follows economic power. People who control the economy take steps to control the political nation, and I want to stress that point—people who control the economy take steps to control the political nation to protect their investment in the nation. When decisions made in this House favour corporations and when budgets favour those corporations, then we confirm that that statement is true. We confirm that corporations that control the economy are protecting their investment by controlling the political action of the government.

We hear much about the dangers of government control of the economy. What is the danger of a country in which corporations control the government? In Canada we have not only accepted the idea of the state being controlled by corporations, but we have even allowed the ownership of those corporations to be non-resident. Canada has more non-resident foreign ownership and non-resident control of its industry than all of the United States, western Europe and Japan together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: That foreign ownership is in excess of $75 billion. The real value is much higher than that, and 80 per cent of it is American-owned.

For many years past and for the foreseeable future, unless this or succeeding governments turn it around, the continued non-resident control of the Canadian economy will come from funds generated in Canada from earnings here. We are cannibalistic. We generate funds and give them to foreign corporations to buy more of our economy. What is the present foreign ownership of some of Canadian industry? These figures are a year old. They own 63 per cent of manufacturing; 91 per cent of oil and gas industry; 88 per cent of electrical industry; and 99 per cent of the petroleum refining industry, though this may be down with the growth of PetroCan.

• (2030)

It is getting worse. Areas of Canada previously exempt are fast going foreign as well. The wholesale industry, the retail industry, the forest industry, and the agricultural products industry are all under attack. Even the funeral industry has begun to succumb. With present moves we are all likely to be buried by a foreign-owned corporation.

Most of the cream from our economy is being skimmed off the top and going to the United States. More than $500,000 an hour leaves Canada. That is $12 million a day, or more than $4 billion a year. No wonder we have a balance of payments problem. No wonder we are in economic trouble.

We must buy Canada back. If we fail, future Canadians will be working in relatively low paid, unsophisticated jobs in foreign-controlled companies, with limited choice, and heavier unemployment. The national debt will be self-perpetuating and backbreaking. Time is running out for our country. It is time we became masters in our own house. More and more money flows from our economy to New York where it is borrowed back by federal, provincial and municipal governments in Canada, at high interest rates.

We are told by the Minister of Finance that we have no alternative but to increase our interest rates. Why? Because we have to attract record amounts of foreign capital to help balance the outflow of money. That money which is leaving Canada for services, charges and profits, is needed here. Yet we have to pay high interest rates to borrow our money back. We have come to a sad state of affairs when money, the so-called medium of exchange, has become so great a power that it overshadows everything we do or hope to do. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this government might better use their time in devising a financial structure which Canadians control, than bringing in a budget which gouges the Canadian public. The devising of such a fiscal structure would put us in direct opposition to Bay Street and Wall Street. It would take courage on the part of the government, particularly this government, because they would be legislating against their friends.

This budget does not attempt even to tinker with the financial structure, and therefore cannot do anything about foreign ownership or inflation. Support of this budget is support of foreign ownership and a sell-out to the multinational corporations. It does nothing about high interest rates, and increases taxation by devious means.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity of speaking to this House on this budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Walter Baker (President of the Privy Council and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this is the second or third time in this House I have had the pleasure and the privilege of extending congratulations to a new member, on this occasion the new member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), on his maiden speech in the House of Commons. I want to do that unstintingly and without reservation in the best traditions of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I want him to know that, whether his time is long or short in this House, new or forever, there is no greater privilege than serving in this House of Commons, regardless of on what side of the House one sits. I am afraid he will be sitting on that side of the House for some time, if he sits at all, but I hope he enjoys it.

The hon. member said something in the course of his speech which I thought was most interesting and which none of us ought to forget. He said that Canadians were feeling the pinch. Canadians have been feeling the pinch of a lack of leadership in this country for 16 years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I hope it does not take away from the sincerity of my greeting on his speech if I say to the hon. member that one of the problems in Canada is, that his party supported consistently the purveyors of that feeling of pinching in Canada.

There is no doubt that Canadian farmers are in a plight. There is no doubt that small businessmen are having some difficulty. Under the government that we defeated at the polls on May 22, 1979, and will again be defeated if we again go to the polls—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —that government caused more difficulties for small businessmen, farmers, who are the best small businessmen, the labour man, the public servant, and the man and woman on the street of this country than any other government in the history of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do not want to accuse the hon. member for Prince Albert of shedding crocodile tears. I am sure he meant every word he said. He cried about the plight of the home owner who is plagued with high interest rates and property taxes. I want to remind him that it is his party that is taking part in the filibuster to deny that same home owner the property tax credit plan.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He talked about the young couple he knew who had three children and were concerned about being able to keep their home. I remind him that there are constituencies in this country filled with people who want to keep their own homes. There are constituencies represented by members in this House, including members on the other side, who would like to have a home of their own. Because of their filibuster, these people will not have the advantage of Bill C-20. I want to serve notice now in this House of Commons that, given the opportunity over the course of the next week, the people of Canada are going to get that bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have listened to the speeches of members of this House, talking about the great things they would do, particularly the Liberal party, for Canada. I have listened to them talking about the great things they would do if they were in office, the great things the Liberal party could do for Canada. Mr. Speaker, the party is so bereft of good fortune, good ideas and good principles that even the Crown Prince would not stand for its leadership!

● (2040)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I see the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Phillips) is in his place—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order. There is a great deal of noise in the chamber. I think the House and the Chair would be better served if we could allow the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) to continue his speech with fewer interruptions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was coming to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre who made more press by saying he was not going to run for the leadership than anyone else. Mr. Speaker, the press welcomes a wise man! The party over there promised duty-free shops, and instead we got Sky Shops.

An hon. Member: Your first campaign speech!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I beg your pardon. The hon. member is new to this House and he can shout all he wishes. But I should like to listen to him if he gets a chance to speak in the debate, and perhaps it might be a good thing if he listened to what the Speaker said a few moments ago. The party over there is very fond of saying that the government under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) has not kept any of its promises. Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with this budget in terms of the promises this party has kept.

An hon. Member: Then your speech will be short.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We made a number of tax-related commitments in the course of the election campaign. Those commitments included long-term tax contracts for firms investing in eastern Canada. The budget delivered on that promise. We indicated in the course of the campaign that we would make substantial capital gains tax relief available to farmers. The budget has delivered on that promise. We said we would give tax incentives to encourage the production in Canada of new vessels for the Atlantic fishery. The budget has delivered on that promise.

We said we wanted to deliver on another promise related to the idea that spouses who work legitimately in the businesses of their husbands are not chattels but are entitled to be treated as persons. We have delivered on that promise. We said we would begin to reduce the size of the federal deficit and of the federal cash requirement, and last night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) began the delivery of that promise. We said there would be a marked improvement in the employment tax credit program so that we could begin to employ more young Canadians, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Atkey), following upon the Minister of Finance, has delivered on that promise.

We said as well that it was a good idea for Canadians to invest in their own society, in their own businesses and in their own country, and the budget produced tax measures to encourage investment in the common stock of Canadian corporations. We said it was high time we were honest with Canadians with respect to the prospects for the future, remembering that the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), when he was minister of finance, gave forecasts which only a fool would believe. We said it was time there was a five-year fiscal forecast of expected expenditures and revenues and that it was time to reduce budget secrecy. And we have delivered on that promise.

Mr. Speaker, we sat on the side of the House for some time and watched the government wallow in rhetoric for 16 years as they promised energy self-sufficiency for Canada—and failed to deliver. Sir, the tax measures and other measures in this budget are designed to implement the promise we made to Canadians that we would move toward energy self-sufficiency by 1990, and we intend to deliver that promise.

Once in a while I listen to the NDP. Their favourite word is "concern". They are concerned about this, they are concerned about that. The only thing they are not concerned about is consistency!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I will say though, that the hon. member for Prince Albert did not do that; he was, at least, straightforward in his maiden speech, and I compliment him on that. He was wrong, but straightforward. His friends in that group claim they are the purveyors of virtue, that they are the only repositories of virtue in this country. I want to point out to them, and to Canadians generally, that there are some worth-while social policies in this budget, policies they ought to support.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We promised something else in this budget; there is a ways and means motion, through which we hope to deliver to Canadians a policy which will shelter lower and middle-income families, a refundable energy tax credit of $80 per adult and $30 per child a year, phased in over a period of two years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This party recognizes that any change in policy has an impact on some groups of Canadians, and the Minister of Finance, the compassionate man that he is, showed his concern about the little man in this country and has delivered on that promise as well.

Of course there are problems with respect to the impact, say, in Atlantic Canada, of higher energy prices. I don't think the people of Atlantic Canada are likely to forget that what caused this impact was not the Minister of Finance but 16 years of neglect by those on the other side. But in recognition of their need, we have provided for grants in the Atlantic region to compensate for the higher cost of electricity generation, grants which will hold down increases affecting families in that region. We want to deliver on that promise well.

We have provided tax incentives to increase job opportunities available to young people. The highest rate of unemployment among any class in Canada exists among young people. We cannot undo in six months the consequences of 16 years of neglect, but we have started.

We want to deliver to a parliamentary committee, which we have established, a paper which will be the basis for an examination of the whole question of charitable donations so that hopefully we can revitalize the voluntary sector. There are measures in this budget to stimulate investment, to stimulate growth, and to stimulate confidence. And for once, and thank God it's happened, there is a government in Ottawa ready to tackle the problems of the country.

I noted as well, in the course of the speeches by members of the Liberal party, the crocodile tears and the misconceptions which have been a burden on the Hansard record of this House. They are trying to tell Canadians now that they are the party of low energy prices, that the last thing in the world they would ever consider is that we should move toward world prices. We have all heard them.

• (2050)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott, Victoria-Haliburton): Order, please. I want to appeal to members on all sides of the House to refrain please from making so much noise so that we can hear the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I appreciate your intervention, Mr. Speaker, but I can understand that members on all sides of the House would shout and complain when they contemplate the record of 16 years of incompetence from the party on the other side. I was talking about the party that would aspire to leadership, the party that would aspire to plunge the country into a winter election. I want to remind them of what they said. They are trying to say to Canada today, and to Canadians, that they are the party of low energy prices, they are the party that does not want to move to world prices. If they think they can fool the Canadian people that that is the position they take, then they have less faith in the Canadian people than we have.

Mr. Breau: You fooled them.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): One of the princes of the Liberal party, Donald Macdonald—we are not sure whether or not Donald is going to run—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There is at least one Crown Prince left, and this is what he said in his budget speech on May 25, 1976:

—the government—

That is the Liberal government—

—has recognized the necessity of allowing prices of oil and gas to rise at a measured pace toward world levels.

That is what they said.

Mr. Breau: What was the world price then?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): World prices in 1976, but when it is convenient, something different in 1979. Remember the speeches that they made in the course of this debate? Donald Macdonald went on to say:

The need to encourage production and conservation and to ease the fiscal burden on government points toward larger and faster increases of energy prices.

This is the crowd who want Canadians to believe they stand up for the little man and low prices of energy. Of course they do not, except that it is convenient for them to attempt to mislead the Canadian people in 1979.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I want to talk again about consistency. There is another man practising law now, properly and appropriately, in the firm of McMillan Binch in Toronto. I do not blame him for practising law in that firm. He took a look at the rag-tag group over there and decided he could not lead them. There is nothing wrong with "Blue Eyes". This is what he said in his budget speech of June of 1975:

When international oil prices rose sharply in the fall of 1973, most countries, particularly those wholly or largely dependent on imported oil, allowed their domestic prices to reflect those fully prevailing in the world market. This is what normally occurs in Canada when the prices of internationally traded goods rise. There are good reasons for allowing this to happen. If a price for a commodity is kept lower in our open market than in international markets, this discourages domestic producers from increasing supplies and discourages consumers from economizing on the use of a scarce commodity.

Speaking of the Liberal government of that day, which is the Liberal opposition of this day, he said:

—it was never the intention of the government to maintain indefinitely the present regime of cheap energy in Canada, while the rest of the world was adjusting to the new realities.

He went on to say:

—we have no practical alternative to continuing a phased adjustment to higher energy prices. This is essential to provide for our future supplies and to conserve the use of this scarce resource.

The finance ministers in that government, at least with respect to the problem of energy and energy self-sufficiency, recognized in 1975 and 1976 that we could never again live in the same regime even though that party today thinks we can turn back the clock. We cannot. What has happened is that there was all the preaching about world prices but no action and, as a result, our exploration went down, our search for new resources went down, and we became captive of the nations that are not so friendly to us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): As a result of the neglect of 16 years, Canada must now face up to the reality that is ours. If we want to become self-sufficient in energy, if we do not want to be hostage to misfortune, if we do not want to be subject to the whims of Arabian nations, of Venezuela and other nations, if, in the words of the hon. member for Prince Albert, we really want to be masters in our own house, then the Arabs will not do it, the Americans will not do it, but the Canadians will have to do it, and the Minister of Finance has pointed out the only way we can do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There is not a person in Canada who wants to pay higher prices for anything. There is not a person in this House or anywhere else who wants to pay higher taxes. Canadians, I believe, are prepared to face up to the truth. I hope this Parliament is prepared to face up to the truth. Let there be no doubt about it from any party or any group in this House, that self-sufficiency by 1990 is our watchword.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): By this budget we have nailed our colours to the mast.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It would be very easy to follow the example of other years, to let the deficit climb, to let us fall further and further into the morass of non self-sufficiency. I am proud to serve in the same cabinet with John Crosbie because he has challenged Canadians. He has more faith in Canada than that rag-tag, leaderless, unprincipled lot that wants to replace this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is the same crowd the country rejected in 1979.

An hon. Member: Talk about the budget.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The hon. member for Prince Albert said it was time to buy back Canada. He is right, it is time to buy back Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is time we let all Canadians share in the resources of this nation. If we want to be self-sufficient, we have to pay for it. I have telegrams on my desk, and I have received telephone calls from all over Canada today. They are saying to us that this is the right direction for Canada—it is tough, but it is the right direction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They said, "It is time somebody took hold, and the Minister of Finance has taken hold, and thank God for that".

Garth Turner was writing in the Toronto Sun today and this is what he said, talking about this budget:

Sure, it's tough. It's what everyone is calling an "austerity" budget. It means most of us will be paying more for almost everything. It assumes the 1980s will be harsh, with higher inflation, more unemployment and slow economic growth. But through all of that, there's a note of realism here. It's nice to hear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2100)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Particularly I point out to my friends in the NDP what the writer went on to say. He said:

The single most important thing we heard last night was that fiscal responsibility might, just might, return to Ottawa. Crosbie's pledge to reduce the federal deficit will have sweeping ramifications. It will lower inflation, and therefore reduce crushing interest rates. It will return capital to the private sector for the creation of jobs and the expansion of industry. That, in turn, will help Canada's trade picture and reduce our current accounts deficit with the rest of the world.

That is why I am proud to serve with the Minister of Finance in this cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What about The Toronto Sun?

Mr. Reid: What about the Star and the Globe?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Perhaps members of this House should face up to what the people of Canada are facing. He added:

It's time to face up to economic realities, he said,... It's time to make the most of this country's opportunity. That can only come through energy self-sufficiency, reduced government spending, increased productivity and investment and an end to deficit financing.

That is the promise of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): These are the things we have to do ourselves in Canada. No one else will do them for us. If the opposition parties do not understand that, then they have broken faith with Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Believe me, Canadians understand this challenge and Canadians are prepared to accept this challenge because they have faith in Canada, faith in its resources, faith in its people, and faith in its potential.

An hon. Member: Forty-three minutes to go.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If this party goes to the country, the country will have faith in this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: Would the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) permit a very gentle, quick question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Andras: I am wondering if the minister who just finished speaking would permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I did not hear the hon. member because his microphone was not turned on.

Mr. Andras: Will the House or the minister permit a quick question, based upon his remarks of a few minutes ago?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Andras: The hon. minister has made many quotations from many documents. I wonder if he has seen the quotation of Dalton Camp which reads:

If the new government were a play just opened on Broadway, it would be shut down tomorrow for bad reviews.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I saw that quotation. If the hon. gentleman and his colleagues want to put us down, go ahead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, my first words ought to be those of sincere thanks to Your Honour, members of the House and all who have been so kind and warm in receiving me here. Especially my thanks go to the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Trudeau), the opposition House leader, the whip, their staff, and all the others who have helped me to become oriented. Indeed, I extend a special thanks to the persons who are responsible for my being here, the voters of the district of Burin-St. George's.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Especially I want to express to them my firm commitment that I shall do my very best to represent them in this Parliament adequately. I want to welcome my friend, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who was elected on the same day as I and who, like I, succeeded a very great Canadian. As Your Honour will know, I succeed in my place here a very great Newfoundlander and a devoted Canadian, the Hon. Don Jamieson.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: It is rare indeed that a man with his combination of confidence, drive and energy is attracted to elected public life in this country. I am honoured to succeed him. I hasten to add that I shall not try to fill his shoes. What I intend to do is to try, to the very best of my ability, to make some contribution to the cause which brings all of us to the chamber. In saying that, of course I am aware that this, my first term here, may be historically brief, but not so my second term as a government member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, as you can see my French is extremely limited, but I intend to do something about it as soon as possible. That is why I have registered for French lessons this morning. So if you find it difficult to understand me in English, do not give up right away. In the near future, after hearing my newly acquired French, you will realize that my English is not so bad.

[English]

In my six years as a member of the Newfoundland House of Assembly, and in my many years of watching this Parliament, I saw something tonight which I have never before witnessed. First I saw my good friend, the hon. member for Prince Albert, make his maiden speech, and a good speech it was.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Then I saw the unbelievable, and I wish the minister about whom I am to speak were in the chamber.

An hon. Member: He is never here.

Mr. Simmons: I saw the unbelievable tonight. I saw a minister of the Crown throw normal common courtesy and normal parliamentary decency out the window and launch a vicious attack on a new member, a brand new member.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Simmons: That member is not in my party, but since he has already spoken, I feel as the other fellow who was elected that same day, that I should come a bit to his defence for the despicable display of arrogance we saw a few moments ago.

An hon. Member: Good old St. George's.

Mr. Simmons: If the hon. member is going to say it, he should say it right: Burin-St. George's. Before the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Baker) gets too carried away about the promises he says the Torry government has kept, let me remind him of some promises. Mr. Speaker does not have to take my word for it; he can take the word of the very reputable Toronto Sun.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: "The Promises Go Down Drain". This is not my publication. This is The Toronto Sun, not exactly the voice of rural Newfoundland or rural Canada. It has not been known over the years as being a great proponent of things Liberal. I should like to refer to the version of The Toronto Sun for the benefit of the President of the Privy Council.

An hon. Member: He is not here.

Mr. Simmons: I realize he is not here. I saw him leave. I can well understand why he has to get out fast to go to certain other places, which we will not mention here.

An hon. Member: He is afraid of you.

• (2110)

Mr. Simmons: The promises go down the drain. Here is what The Toronto Sun said the day after this much lauded budget; this thing that has got the President of the Privy Council all worked up, giving him sheer jollies because it is so good, so magnificent, and so perfect. Here is the perfection. I will tell you all about it. Let The Toronto Sun tell you all about it. It says:

Income tax deductions for middle and low income families up to $300.

Reality, he hit us with five tax increases.

Promise:

Cutbacks in unemployment insurance rates.

Reality:

Crosbie increased UIC; increased premiums paid by workers.

I will not take the time since I get no commission for this to read it all. But let me refer to more realities, and quote from The Toronto Sun:

It will cost more to drive your car, heat your home, smoke and drink.

It will make life longer, at least it will seem a lot longer.

Another reality The Toronto Sun outlines:

We may well be self-sufficient in energy by 1991 but at $4.50 a barrel of oil by 1983 who will be able to afford to buy it?

An hon. Member: $4.50 a gallon.

Mr. Simmons: The paper says a barrel, but I am sure it meant a gallon. In Toronto everything is smaller, including the barrels. One more reality from the reputable Toronto Sun and I quote:

And nothing on income tax cuts for middle and low-income wage earners.

Shame! The minister across the way should be the very man to talk about consistency because he certainly will know about it. He preached and lectured us tonight about consistency, but he must have learned it from a book. I say to him, it took the Tories 16 years to get there. Enjoy it; enjoy it for another half hour. It will take the Tories another 16 years before the people of Canada forget what was in this budget.

Now that I have dispensed with the President of the Privy Council, let us come to something far some serious. I refer to the budget speech, because that is what I want to talk about tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) on a point of order.

Mr. Allard: If the hon. member would allow me, I would like to ask him a question.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is seeking permission to ask a question. Is the hon. member ready to accept a question?

Mr. Simmons: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understood that is what he had said, and I would be pleased at the end of my few remarks to entertain any questions.

I want to come to what is for me a very serious document. I want to say to my good friend, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), that what I shall give, I hope, in this chamber tonight during my few remarks is not going to be so much the bias of a Newfoundlander, as he would suggest, but the concern of one Canadian who is not very pleased about what is in this document, and I suggest I perhaps would not feel much different were I from some other part of Canada, even from his own part of Ontario.

To understand this budget Canadians must first understand the man behind the budget. I wish he were here tonight, but that is not my choice, so in his absence I will proceed. I should perhaps take a little time to tell you and, through you, the people of Canada, something about the man who is our Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie), what makes him tick, and why he does not believe in Christmas. I have known him for years, even before it was my task, often pleasant, to shadow him when he was the Newfoundland minister of finance, and even before, I say to the misled member from St. John's, he showed clearly where his loyalties were when he cancelled, as the Newfoundland minister of finance—can you believe it—the mother's allowance!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: I know him, and I knew him even before he sat in my living room 11 years ago and invited me to join his team in his quest for leadership of his party, which at that time was Liberal. He did not win that quest, and that explains why he crossed the floor to the Tories. That, of course, does not explain why he crossed the floor to the Liberals and left his Tory grandfather in the first place.

The Minister of Finance took pains to tell us about his successive electoral victories. I want to talk to you about just two of them to make a point in relation to the budget. One election took place about two months after he had joined the Tory administration in Newfoundland and about three weeks after he had delivered his first budget in which he literally dwarfed Churchill's sweat, blood and tears speech of World War II. In that election the Minister of Finance got 74 per cent of the votes cast.

After having been three years as minister of finance he faced another election, after he had not quite delivered the Utopia he had promised. In that election he got a majority of 437, or 54 per cent of the votes. Not surprisingly, within a year he was running federally. It was a choice really of running or being run out of town. That is a demonstration of that bit of wisdom which says that if you are about to be run out of town get at the front of the crowd so it looks like they are having a parade in your honour!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: I promised I would tell you a few things about the Minister of Finance. He was the deputy mayor of St. John's. He was second to the mayor. He was the second man in Joe Smallwood's Liberal cabinet. He was the second man in Frank Moore's PC cabinet. He is now the second man in the Prime Minister's cabinet. Not that the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) is the first man. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Stevens) is the first man. The Minister of Finance is doing today in this budget what he has done all his life. He is playing second fiddle. In this case the first fiddle is the President of the Treasury Board. I love poetry. "The Origin of The Term Second Fiddle" is a little piece I have. It is anonymous, but I have this little couplet here which states:

I am the dean, and this is Mrs. Liddell.
She is the first and I the second fiddle.

The dean is the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board is like Mrs. Liddell. The Minister of Finance is always the bridesmaid and never the bride, until one day the bridesmaid dreamed about being the bride, and then dreamed she was a bride, and then believed her dream!

Who wrote the budget speech? I do not mean who physically transcribed it, but who dictated the budget? Was it dictated by some of the ministers who do not sit here because they could not win themselves a seat? Was it the minister of small businesses, the minister of international trade and economic development, and the minister of industry, trade and commerce and whatever else? I will tell you how many portfolios he has. If you count all the junior ministers on that side who answer to him, you have fully half the Tory bench. Did he write the budget? If so, I cannot see the Minister of Finance reading it because those two guys, as I hear it, are not on very good terms these days. Did the President of the Treasury Board write the budget? Then again, how could the Minister of Finance read it because he and the minister responsible for the Treasury Board are not on particularly good terms these days either.

Or was it another minister who dictated this budget? Was it the senior minister from Alberta? No, I do not mean the Prime Minister, I mean the senior minister from Alberta, Mr. Lougheed. Who dictated this budget? That is the first question to which I would like to have an answer.

The Minister of Finance has stated his complete strategy on reducing the deficit. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, as one who knows, that he is not without experience in this matter, or at least in a related matter. When he was with the Tory opposition in Newfoundland in 1970 he said, as it is reported in the extract of Hansard which I have here, as an opposition member talking about the scandously high Newfoundland debt on that day which approached something in the order of $600 million or $700 million—he said, in part, and with humour, which is so much a part of him:

I have heard the premier saying—

He is talking about Premier Smallwood.

—I have heard him say, 'we will just roll over this money. This is no problem, we will roll it over'. The theme song of the government seems to be 'roll me over' with respect to the funded debt of this province.

Then he goes on to lament the size of the public debt of approximately $700 million. In truth, by the time this minister became the provincial minister of finance, those shockingly bad Liberals had put it up from about $700 million to fully $900 million. So his great crusade was to bring down this shockingly high public debt. Keep in mind that when he assumed the portfolio of finance, the debt was $900 million. When this provincial minister of finance left that portfolio two years later, it was $2 billion! This is the same man who, after great success in reducing the public debt in Newfoundland all the way down from $900 million to $2 billion—that is a long way down—and after solving our problems down there, has come up here to solve some of your problems, Mr. Speaker. He intends to reduce your deficit for you now, sir!

As one of my friends to my left said earlier this week, the government is having a bit of an experimental program in math, and do not be surprised if reduction means multiplying by two or 2.5 over the next three or four years, that is, if they have the chance to be the government that long, but that is not something we will have to deal with now. Clearly, the Minister of Finance has the experience, and I leave it to hon. members to decide whether it will be helpful in his present crusade to reduce the deficit. I have warned you, Mr. Speaker, not to hold your breath.

There is no doubt that this man has humour. He had it in the quote which I gave, and he has it now. Indeed, I would guess that of all those in this chamber tonight, I, more than anyone else, have rolled in the aisles with his brand of wit and his paralysing invective. I will continue to do so because I like it. But I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what I have discovered about his wit; it does not buy the groceries for the widow or the low income people across this country, on in my riding of Burin-St. George's!

As beautiful as the minister's wit is, it is a veneer, a façade, a style of bravado which is designed to conceal, hide, and distract. Humour is all right in its place, but if there is one thing the mourners in a funeral procession can do without, it is an undertaker who flashes a greasy grin on the way to the graveyard. I will leave it to my colleagues who are more expert in these matters, such as the hon. member and former minister of finance, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) and our spokesman on finance—I will leave it to them to deal with the more technical aspects of this budget, if they ever get the opportunity to do so in this Parliament.

My immediate concern relates to those issues which have a money impact or a pocket book impact on the middle and low income Canadians in my riding and all across this nation. The 25 cents a gallon increase in automobile gas with another 12 cents increase over the next year, the 15 cents increase for fishermen with another 12 cents increase during the next year and the 12 cents extra for people on home heating fuel over the next year, are all bad. I hear the minister talk about the conservation argument. That may well apply in certain parts of urban Canada, but I do not know because I do not represent an urban riding. I will leave that to my colleagues.

How do you conserve fuel in a fishing boat? Do you go half way to the fishing grounds? It is very good to have a car pool in Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver, but can you imagine a boat pool? Can you imagine the boys saying in the morning, "Don't take your boat this morning, George; we will put all the fish in my boat". These people cannot go out on a corner and wait for the bus. They wait two weeks for a boat. We cannot tell them to conserve by taking public transport. They only transport they have is their automobile, if they live near or on a road, or their legs. The latter take little petro, but the cars and boats take a great deal of petro and they cannot conserve it. These people have to use it if they are going to do their work.

I am dismayed at what the government is doing with unemployment insurance premiums. I heard the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) say in his speech yesterday that that is only the tip of the iceberg, and that it is only part of the full review. Why do they not tell us the full truth about what they have in mind? This budget is a Newfy joke because we in Newfoundland, like no others across this country, will bear the brunt of it, and from whom? One of the two men, including the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. McGrath), in that administration upon whom we thought we could depend to put our case in government! They are two Newfoundlanders themselves, and to whom are they socking it most? The people of rural Newfoundland, rural Canada, and all parts of this country!

If that is what the Minister of Finance is prepared to do to his own people amongst whom he grew up, then I shudder to think what he is prepared to do to the people of Canada as a whole. Perhaps the most prophetic statement in this entire document is the one which occurs on page 20 where the Minister of Finance says:

> Fifty-one years ago my grandfather, Sir John Crosbie, delivered his fifth and final speech to the House of Assembly—

He went on to say:

> —they had vision, confidence and courage.

And he could have added, "and a formula for bankruptcy". Sir John Crosbie was a Tory, but not a turncoat. Sir John Crosbie was a Conservative, though not a rank opportunist. His pedigree is that of a Tory, and that is about the only thing he has in common with the present Minister of Finance. They were both Tories by nature and by ancestry.

Let me make one other comparison. There are similarities in the two positions of 1928 and today. In both cases it was each man's fifth budget. The present Minister of Finance delivered a budget to the city council of St. John's, three to the provincial government and one here, his last!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: And it, like the other ones, is a harbinger. It is a harbinger of things to come. It is a frightful message of how bad it will get if this crowd is allowed to run the government affairs of this country much longer.

Finally, and on a pleasant note, let me say that if we do not get home for Christmas—I feel certain that we will with the vote that is about to come—do not blame the Minister of Finance for all the nice things I have said about him. Blame the President of the Treasury Board who, believe it or not, lost his estimates in committee. Perhaps we should put him in charge of the Prime Minister's suitcases. Not only did he lose his estimates in committee, he has not yet managed to find the Atlantic provinces!

• (2130)

I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance did not believe in Christmas. I owe it to the House to say why. He insists his birthday is not until January 30!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Rimouski on a point of order.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the hon. member who has just spoken. He was quite eloquent, but he gloated over too many things. I should like to ask him whether he would have any remedy to apply were he sitting where Progressive Conservative party members are sitting now.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) accepted a question and the question is being asked, if he wishes to answer it.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I reply to my hon. friend in English because my French is inadequate and I would appreciate it if he would repeat his question. I will get my little plug and put it in my ear. We are not technically oriented down my way and it takes a little time to get the plug in the ear.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to start all over again. First of all, I should like to congratulate the hon. member on his eloquence. He speaks so well that it is a pleasure to listen to him. However, he gloated over a great many things, but if he were to speak on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, what solutions would he propose to solve the problems with which we are faced now? If he were sitting where the Progressive Conservatives are sitting now, what would he do? That is my question. If he is willing to answer it, fine.

[English]

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) for the question. First of all, I would not sock it to the low and middle income earners. I would not raise unemployment insurance premiums. I would not make promises about income tax and then reverse them. If the hon. member wants my platform in any more detail, I will be delighted to meet him in the lobby and have a good chat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is a real privilege for me to rise in this House and make my speech at this very serious hour.

An hon. Member: The first and last.

Mr. Gustafson: The timing goes this way, and it is a good proverb—the first shall be last and the last shall not be first.

Mr. Speaker, I represent the people of the constituency of Assiniboia who are very serious people. They are very serious about the situation that faces us now. I represent a people who are a productive people, hard-working people. I do not stand before you tonight as a professional politician; I stand before you to represent a people who know what it is to work hard and to produce. We have seen the production of the hard working people eroded by the socialists who are now hard to discern on the opposite side of the House because the philosophy of the left camp has climbed into the other camp, under the leadership of the former government. It is hard, though, to discern just where that side of the House stands. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada will decide—those hard working people whom we represent.

I should like to tell hon. members something about the constituency of Assiniboia, Mr. Speaker. It produces one-quarter of all the wheat grown in Saskatchewan. There are 1,000 square miles of coal at Willow Bunch, Saskatchewan. In the constituency there are 150 square miles of coal in the Estevan area which also has major oil fields, the Estevan oil field, the Weyburn oil field, the Goodwater oil field, and the Midale oil field. I know what it is to represent people who produce the goods, Mr. Speaker.

The people of Canada tonight are not happy with the flippant mood in this House. Canada is standing at the crossroads, the result of 16 years of government that did not well represent the hard working and productive population, those in the factories, on the farms, in small business. Those people do not think that this is a light matter. On May 22 they voted under conviction, and if we are called upon to go to the polls again, they will vote under conviction this time as well.

I rose to speak on the budget, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to say a few words on that subject. I am very pleased to stand in this House with men like the Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) who gave great leadership, and who will give great leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: I am pleased to stand in this House with men like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) who brought us a good budget, a hard budget, but an honest one, and who will in days to come, God willing, bring us many more honourable budgets. In this very serious moment Canadians are looking for men of determination, men of good will, but men who are willing to do the hard thing and the right thing. In this budget the minister did the right thing.

Leaders and business across the country and in other fields have acknowledged that this budget is right for Canada at this time. I would challenge hon. members opposite that if they think this budget is not right in the minds of the people, let them ask the public of Canada.

Let me tell you what a productive people have done, Mr. Speaker. In the year 1900, 97 per cent of all the people in North America were engaged in agriculture. Today, less than 5 per cent are engaged in agriculture, but that 5 per cent is producing enough to feed all of North America and a good portion of the world.

What did the opposition accomplish in the field of energy, Mr. Speaker? Canada is a strong country. It can produce energy as it can produce food. These are two important commodities that we will hear a great deal about in the future—food and energy. What does the opposition do to bring into being and to help exploration and production in this country? In 1975 we were self-sufficient in oil. But today we are running far behind because there was a lack of vision, a lack to see the tremendous challenge to produce. What has our budget done? What has the Minister of Finance seen and this government seen in the few short days we have had in this House? We have seen the vision of where Canada can go in energy.

● (2140)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: We can be self-sufficient by 1990 with this budget that the Minister of Finance has given us. We can be efficient. We can heat the homes of Canadians. We can put fuel in the tractors of Canadian farmers, and we can produce energy like we have produced food.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: What did the budget say for the farmer? The budget of the Minister of Finance said that we will give some relief in the area of capital gains. I fought hard and long for this, with my colleagues from all across Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: This is a very positive and productive budget. What did this budget do for energy? It ensures relief for the low income families.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: There will be exemptions for fuel on the farms. It will stimulate exploration, and supply this great country of ours with the tremendous benefits of being self-sufficient in oil. It is most important, ladies and gentlemen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: I would like to continue but time will not permit. However, in the few closing minutes that are left to me, I would like to impress hon. members with something of importance to the country of Canada tonight. A statement made some time ago said "The land is strong". I agree, the land is strong. Canada is strong. There is no better country in the world. I have had the opportunity to visit 35 countries in the world and there is none that equals Canada. It is the best country in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: Second, the people of Canada are strong. Canadians are a very strong people. Canadians are productive people. How did the opposition use that production? They wasted on the one hand and they have given away on the other hand. We have come through a decade of socialism. They were interested in giving away the hard-earned production of Canadian citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: What is the future of this country? The future of this country is to give incentives and to give the opportunity to these hard-working people to create wealth for this country. That will be a precedent that Canadians will be proud to hand to their children and their grandchildren.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: I want to tell you further that the government you have today is strong. It is strong because men like the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister and the men behind them are ready to stand up and do the right thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: If we should be challenged at the polls in just a few minutes, the challenge, the cross-roads that the people of Canada will face is: are you willing to do the right thing right now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

It being 9:45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Section 6 of Standing Order 60, to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the amendment to the amendment now before the House.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment. Those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Rae) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I declare the amendment carried.

It being after ten o'clock, this House would ordinarily stand adjourned. I have an indication that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) wishes to gain the floor for the purpose of making a brief comment to the House. Since it is after the ordinary hour of adjournment, he could do so only with consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The government has lost a vote on a matter which we have no alternative but to regard as a question of confidence. I simply want to advise the House that I will be seeing His Excellency the Governor General tomorrow morning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have only two very brief things to say. The House will realize, I am sure, that it would have been most inappropriate for me to anticipate this decision in any way. Therefore I have not arranged and have no intention of making any arrangements for any hospitality.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members would not have expected me to anticipate any result one way or the other, at least I hope so. Therefore, I will not, I repeat, not be in the usual environment after this sort of event.

The second is that this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 10.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 14, 1979

The House met at 11 a.m.

DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Clark) seeks the floor on a point of order.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Prime Minister): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to advise the House that I called on the Governor General this morning and, by proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada dated December 14, 1979, the present Parliament of Canada is dissolved. The date of the election is February 18, 1980.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House that I called on the Governor General this morning and, by proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada dated December 14, 1979, the present Parliament of Canada is dissolved. The date of the election is February 18, 1980.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Thirty-first Parliament was dissolved on Friday, December 14, 1979, by proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General.
