THIRTY-FOURTH PARLIAMENT

OPENING OF THIRD SESSION

Parliament having been summoned by Proclamation to meet this day for the dispatch of business—

The Senate met at 3:30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

COMMUNICATION FROM GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a communication had been received from the Secretary to the Governor General, as follows:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL AND HERALD CHANCELLOR

May 12, 1991

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will arrive at the Parliament Buildings at 3:35 p.m. on Monday, the 13th day of May, 1991.

When it has been indicated that all is in readiness, His Excellency will proceed to the Chamber of the Senate to formally open the Third Session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament of Canada.

Yours Sincerely,

Judith LaRocque
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

At 4:00 p.m. His Excellency the Governor General proceeded to the Senate Chamber and took his seat upon the Throne. His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and, that House being come, with their Speaker, His Excellency was pleased to open the Third Session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament of Canada with the following speech:

Ladies and Gentlemen, Honourable Members of the Senate,

Ladies and Gentlemen, Members of the House of Commons.

It is my great pleasure to greet you as you begin the third session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament.

In the past fifteen months, my wife and I have had the wonderful privilege of meeting thousands of Canadians at Rideau Hall, La Citadelle and in our visits to all of Canada's provinces and territories.

Whatever our background and wherever we live, Canadians share the same basic hopes and aspirations. We are proud of the great country we have inherited. Above all, we are determined to leave it a better and stronger place for our children.

As Gerda and I meet Canadians, we are moved by the special regard they have for the Queen and for the role she has played in our history. In the nearly forty years since she ascended the throne, she has been served by all seven Canadian Governors General—and she remains a living example of the continuity and stability that are fundamental to our system of government.

Therefore, it was a genuine pleasure this year, on your behalf, to congratulate Her Majesty and wish her well on the occasion of her 65th birthday.

This session will be a turning point in Canadian history. Let no one doubt the seriousness of the challenges we face as a country. You will have the responsibility and the opportunity to forge an historic accommodation that embraces all Canadians, overcomes division and discord and charts a course for prosperity for generations to come.

Last July 1st, when Her Majesty came to celebrate Canada Day with us, she said that the unity of the Canadian people is the paramount issue we face, just as it was at the time of Confederation. And, she went on, "There is no force, except the force of will, to keep Canadians together." I believe that Canadians have that will.

I am confident that, as long as we adhere to the values on which this country was founded—belief in human dignity, respect for differences, civility in our dealings with each other—we cannot fail.

Canada's history is the history of builders and achievers. Together, Canadian men and women have created a society that is as free and fair as any on earth; ours is one of the oldest functioning democracies, a beacon of freedom to people everywhere. Around the world, Canada is respected for the constructive role we play in global affairs, for the protection we accord human rights, for our tolerance of diversity, for our environmental sensitivity, and for our cultural accomplishments.

Canada is also envied for our economic prosperity; we rank only thirty-first in population but we have built the world's eighth largest economy. That economic strength allows us to maintain some of the most advanced social programs in the world.

Millions of people around the world would gladly give up everything they have for the privilege of living in Canada. That is a reality and a response to those who would question the value of Canadian citizenship.

Canada will celebrate its 125th birthday during this session. Let us ensure this celebration will be looked back upon as a milestone on the road to a united and prosperous future. Let us mark the occasion with the same spirit of confidence and the sense of accomplishment with which we all commemorated Canada's Centennial and Expo 67. We believed then that the potential of Canada was unparalleled. It remains so now.

To realize our great promise, we must rebuild Canadian unity and overcome the acrimony, apathy and incomprehension that currently undermine it. In light of the global economic revolution of the past quarter century, we must make the reforms necessary to earn the prosperity that until recently seemed our birthright. And we must address urgently the doubts that have been expressed about the capability of our institutions and processes to achieve these goals.

Proposals will be put before you, therefore, that address these three major concerns of the Canadian people and of my government—unity, prosperity and government responsiveness. I am confident that the importance of these issues will persuade all Parliamentarians to put Canada first, set partisan motives and calculations aside and work together for a stronger country.

Canadian Unity

We have been confided the stewardship of this great nation, constructed across an entire continent by generations of men and women determined to make a home for themselves and a future for their children. They were inspired in their sacrifice by the conviction that tolerance and fairness, courage and compassion, and individual enterprise and neighbourly cooperation could overcome all obstacles and erase all doubts.

Now it is the turn of our generation to overcome obstacles, erase doubts and strengthen Canada to meet the challenges of the 21st century. In doing so, we must safeguard the rights of all Canadians and maintain those standards of citizenship that distinguish the Canadian way of life.

Some reforms can be achieved through legislation or policy; others require changes to our attitudes; and still others require changes to our constitution.

A constitution should unite a nation. Canadians across this country should be able to see themselves and their hopes and aspirations mirrored in their constitution. It is the one document that all Canadians should refer to with pride. That is not presently the case in Canada. And no task is more important than making the constitution a more faithful reflection of who we are, what we represent as a country and what we aspire to be as a people.

The Citizens' Forum on Canada's Future was constituted to give Canadians an opportunity to express their hopes and views on the kind of country Canada should be, so we can continue to prosper as we cross the threshold together into a new century. The Special Joint Committee on the Process for Amending the Constitution was established to allow Canadians to be involved in finding a better way of making constitutional changes. Both have increased understanding among Canadians of how much we have in common—as well as awareness of what we stand to lose. Canadians are moving beyond focusing on problems to suggesting solutions.

My government looks forward to receiving the recommendations of the two committees by Canada Day, July 1st. The committee reports, together with the work of similar commissions in several provinces and the soundings you have all taken of the views of your own constituents, will give you the understanding you need of what Canadians want done.

My government will formulate new proposals to focus public discussion on the goal of a more united and prosperous Canada. The proposals will suggest changes in federal and provincial powers and responsibilities and in national institutions. My government will be guided by a number of basic principles:

- that Canada has already proven its worth; we seek change in order to improve Canada, not to discard what we have accomplished together;
- that the Government of Canada represents all Canadians; and that change can be achieved only through reasonable compromise and enlightened accommodation of the interests of all Canadians;
- that Quebec's unique character must be affirmed and that the particular interests of the West, the Atlantic provinces, Ontario, the North and aboriginal Canadians must be recognized, as well; and
- that the tests of constitutional reform will be fairness, effectiveness, efficiency and the protection afforded to the rights of all Canadians.

In September, my government will refer its proposals to a joint parliamentary committee that will be established to consult with Canadians. The committee will be asked to travel in order to hear the views of men and women across Canada. In each jurisdiction it visits, the committee will be mandated to meet in public session with its counterpart provincial or territorial legislative committee or, where no such committee exists, with counterpart legislators. It will, also, meet with aboriginal groups. The committee will be asked to report back to the government within five months.

After receipt and consideration of the committee's report, my government will propose a plan for a renewed Canada for consideration by the people of Canada. You will be asked to approve enabling legislation to provide for greater participation of Canadian men and women in constitutional change.

My government will work to create a climate in which Canadians can deepen their understanding of their history and traditions and their appreciation of their country's rich diversity. Events planned for 1992, the 125th anniversary of Confederation, will contribute to this greater understanding.

The ability of Canadians to live together in harmony and the ability of Canada to make a major contribution to world affairs depend upon our understanding of who we are as a people. To reduce Canada's vulnerability in an age of rapid, even turbulent, change and of growing interdependence, it is more important than ever that we speak to the world with one, clear and united voice. My government will conduct an active foreign policy in support of the full range of Canadian interests around the world—economic and security, environmental and social. My government will continue to promote democratic values and to defend human rights in the conduct of its foreign and development assistance policies as the best means to ensure progress and stability in a changing world environment and to safeguard Canadian security and prosperity.

Participating in Prosperity

My government will invite Canadians to participate in fashioning a new agenda for prosperity. The goal is to build a prosperous society in which all men and women have an equal opportunity to participate, in which benefits and responsibilities are fairly shared and in which the most vulnerable among us are protected.

There is much more to Canadian unity than amending the constitution. Our unity is strengthened by a strong economy. And prosperity is enhanced by a united country. But disunity in the face of the global economic challenge invites decline.

Economic recovery depends on reducing interest rates. To bring interest rates down, government finances have been put on a sound base. My government is controlling its spending and has established low but achievable inflation targets. That is the way to restore the confidence of Canadians in their future.

Restored confidence means new investment and new investment means meaningful jobs and a better life for all Canadians. With this fiscally disciplined approach, the economy will recover in the second half of this year and will grow strongly in 1992.

Looking to the longer term, Canadians are asking themselves what the future holds for themselves and for their families in a world that is changing so rapidly and profoundly. Deficit reduction, tax reform, free trade and productivity growth are all part of my government's plan to secure the future of Canadians.

Canada is inescapably part of the global economy. As citizens of a country that depends for its prosperity on the sale abroad of almost thirty percent of all it produces, the importance to Canadians of being able to compete effectively in international trade can scarcely be overstated. We guarantee our future, not by running from global competition, but by meeting it head-on, by equipping ourselves to compete with the best, by giving ourselves the economic conditions we need to be competitive and by making world markets accessible to our products.

The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement has helped to secure the Canadian economy in difficult times. Private, non-residential investment in Canada, as a share of our gross domestic product, has been taking place at record levels. For the first time in sixteen years, Canada has been attracting more direct investment—the key to job creation and job opportunitiesthan has been going abroad.

My government believes North America-wide free trade is a logical next step—and one that would increase the prosperity of all Canadians—if an acceptable agreement can be negotiated with Mexico and the United States. My government will, also, cooperate with Canadian business to take advantage of the growing opportunities for sales and investment abroad as a result of the integration of Europe and of the extraordinary economic growth in Asia. A successful outcome to the multilateral trade negotiations in Geneva would be the best means to guarantee access for Canadian products in markets around the world; achieving that goal will be a high priority for my government.

At home, my government will work with provincial governments to ensure that Canada becomes a single, integrated market from coast to coast to coast. We need to eliminate:

- policies that favour a province's suppliers over lower cost producers from other provinces;
- regulations that often make it simpler for producers to ship their products abroad than to sell them in neighbouring provinces;
- hiring policies that give preference to provincial residents over those from other provinces; and
- occupational standards that restrict the work opportunities of residents of other provinces.

By one recent estimate, there are approximately five hundred barriers to interprovincial trade in Canada. My government's goal is to see barriers to interprovincial trade, services and investment come down by 1995, so that Canada becomes a single, integrated market. The savings to taxpayers and consumers of creating such a market could be as high as six billion dollars—about one thousand dollars a year for a household of four. And a larger home market would allow more Canadian companies to achieve the size and competitive edge to launch themselves successfully into world markets.

Today, investment and technology flow with ease across international boundaries, markets for goods and services are specialized and decisions on production are made on a worldwide basis. In the interdependent world we live in, prosperity is more and more a factor of knowledge, skills and innovation. The nations and firms that are succeeding and will continue to succeed in this environment are those whose people are educated, productive and able to adjust to rapidly changing circumstances. The risk for Canada is not so much to be undercut by developing countries with low-wage economies but to be outperformed by technologically advanced countries with highly paid, highly skilled workers.

Increasing our productivity across the full range of Canadian industry—manufacturing, resources, and services—is the only way to secure and enhance our prosperity over the longer term. Productivity is the difference between prosperity and decline. The prosperity of all Canadians and our ability to maintain social programs depend on the productivity of Canadians. Increasing productivity requires the collaborative efforts of governments, business, labour and individual Canadians, in all regions. To focus this effort, specific targets will be set.

Canadian business, workers and governments will be asked to work together to generate at least two and a half million new jobs by the year 2000 and to raise the real incomes of Canadians by at least twenty-five percent, by the same year. These targets are realistic and achievable in a united Canada, whose population will approach thirty million people by the end of the century and whose gross domestic product will approach one trillion dollars.

My government believes that building Canadian prosperity and securing Canada's natural environment are fully compatible goals. International experience demonstrates conclusively that the most economically prosperous nations are also the most environmentally conscious nations. To safeguard our natural heritage, my government introduced this country's first comprehensive environment plan—the Green Plan—during the last session.

Over the coming months my Minister of the Environment will be implementing a wide range of Green Plan initiatives. These initiatives, in concert with action on the part of the provinces and the private sector, will ensure that Canadians, today and tomorrow, have the clean air, water and land essential to sustaining human health and enhancing our quality of life. They will also encourage the development of "environmentally friendly" products for which there are growing markets abroad.

We must, all of us, come to grips with the fundamental issues involved in integrating environmental and economic considerations into our decision-making. My government will, over the coming months, consult with provincial governments, industry and environmental leaders to explore means of complementing current regulatory approaches with innovative instruments that would achieve positive environmental results without prejudicing economic prosperity.

Increasing economic prosperity is first and foremost an issue of people. Canada's ability to prosper in a global economy will be determined by the level of Canadians' educational achievement, by the sophistication of our management skills and by our attitudes to work and to change. In the dawning knowledge age, how well we live will depend on how well we learn.

Canadian men and women must have access to both the skills and the lifelong learning opportunities necessary to improve their job prospects and ensure their own prosperity. But Canadians are questioning whether this country's approach to learning, despite the great dedication of so many talented educators and administrators, is adequate for the times.

The issue is not exclusively, or even primarily, money. Canada already spends more money per capita on education than almost any other industrialized nation does. Every year the federal government alone spends about eleven billion dollars, directly and indirectly, on education and training. The issue is results.

- Three out of ten students drop-out of high school before graduating.
- Four out of ten adults cannot read or do math well enough to perform everyday tasks.
- Canadian industry spends less than half as much on training its employees as American industry does, a fifth as much as the Japanese and an eighth as much as the Germans.

This is not the kind of performance that will guarantee increasing prosperity for our children; in fact, it has given rise to concerns whether the next generation of Canadian men and women will be the first to have a lower standard of living than their parents.

The time has come to reach a national consensus on performance, goals, partnerships and priorities for learning. As part of my government's new agenda for prosperity, a discussion paper on learning will be published to stimulate and focus discussion on education and training.

My government recognizes that education is a provincial responsibility under the constitution and respects that fact. My government also recognizes that Canadians are concerned about education, and would like to see Canada-wide goals established, with provincial endorsement and cooperation, for the year 2000. These goals could include:

- cutting illiteracy rates in half;
- ensuring that ninety percent of Canadians attain high school diplomas or the equivalent by age twenty-five;
- doubling the number of post-secondary graduates in mathematics, the sciences and engineering; and
- quadrupling the training provided by employers to their employees.

Students and parents, employers and employees, educators and governments will be asked to work together to develop a "learning culture," just as we have developed an environmental culture. My government will, also, ask the newly created Labour Force Development Board to present proposals in this area. The objective is to equip Canadian men and women to participate fully in creating and sharing Canadian prosperity.

The full participation of Canada's aboriginal peoples in Canada's economic prosperity and political life is a goal shared across the country. To put itself in a position to respond more effectively to the needs of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, my government will appoint the Right Honourable Brian Dickson, former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, to serve as a special representative of the Prime Minister in order to consult widely on the terms of reference and membership of the Royal Commission announced recently and report back to my government.

Particular care will be taken to ensure that the Commission neither delays nor negates constitutional, legislative or other reforms already under way. These reforms include land claim settlements, community development initiatives, education and other activities launched during the second session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament. In cooperation with Indian people themselves, my government will explore alternatives to the Indian Act, especially concerning land, monies and self-government. Finally, my government will consult aboriginal Canadians on changes in the system of administering justice. The goal is to work with Canada's aboriginal peoples so that they control their own lives, can contribute to Canadian prosperity and can share fully in it.

Our children are the most important yet most vulnerable members of our society. Last September, at the Children's Summit in New York, the attention of people everywhere was focused on children at risk. Seventy-one leaders pledged that that moment would last a decade. My government will bring forward a plan to implement the commitments it made that day; the objective is to see Canadian girls and boys better educated, better protected and better nurtured so that they can make their own contributions to Canada's future. In addition, my government will review its policies in relation to the family, the most fundamental building block of Canadian society. And my government will appoint a blue ribbon panel of concerned Canadian men and women to inquire into the serious problem of violence against women in our society.

My government will lay before you proposals for programs and policies to remove the barriers still faced by disabled Canadians to full participation in Canada's political life and economic prosperity. The government plans to implement a five-year strategy that will resolve issues such as access to employment, training, housing and transportation, public sensitivity and community integration.

You will be asked to approve a number of other important legislative initiatives to advance the economic, social and international interests of Canadians. You will, also, be asked to appropriate the funds required to carry on services and expenditures authorized by Parliament.

Changing the Way Ottawa Works

Change is the hallmark of our age; in Europe, in Asia, in Latin America, old assumptions are being discarded and new principles are being adopted. In Canada, too, new problems require new solutions. There is a need for change in the way Parliament does business and in the way governments conduct their affairs. The goal is to ensure that Canadians' agenda is Parliament's agenda.

In the Thirty-Third Parliament, a committee of the House of Commons proposed far-reaching reforms to enhance the role of private members. During that Parliament, you implemented more than eighty-five percent of the committee's recommendations. And, at the end of the last session of this Parliament, further changes were passed to make it possible for members to spend more time at home with their constituents so that they can be more effective in representing the wishes of their constituents and more efficient in the conduct of House business.

Canadians exercise their democratic freedom by electing their representatives through secret ballot. During this session, you will receive the report of the Royal Commission on Electoral Reform established by my government. Canadians want to know that their elected representatives have the power and authority to represent them. My government will propose further reforms so that all Members of Parliament can fulfil better their obligations to their constituents.

The respect of the people for Parliament and Parliamentarians is essential for a healthy democracy. But the appearance, and sometimes the reality, of excessive party discipline and over-zealous partisanship, of empty posturing and feigned outrage have eroded that respect in Canada. Members will be asked, therefore, to consider new procedures for assessing legislation, for raising grievances on behalf of constituents and for questioning government. This will further enhance the role of individual members and afford them greater independence.

Change is also necessary in the ways governments conduct their affairs. Governments must be both effective and efficient, implementing necessary programs at the lowest cost to taxpayers. Canadians understand that their governments simply cannot afford to do everything that is demanded of them. In the past six and a half years, through prudent management, the growth of government operations has been curtailed. My government has privatized and eliminated twenty-four Crown corporations and streamlined virtually all government departments and agencies. Since 1984, ninety thousand employees have been removed from the payroll of the federal government and its agencies.

During this session, my government will take that process further. A draft spending control bill to cap federal program spending will be referred to a parliamentary committee for consultations with Canadians. Legislation will also be introduced to create a debt servicing and reduction fund so that GST revenues, as well as monies from further privatization of Crown corporations and from voluntary contributions, will be used to service the national debt.

Streamlining of government structures and operations to serve Canadians better and to save taxpayers' money will continue to be a priority of my government. Better ways to conduct the business of government are being examined. Improvements in the management of the public service, started under the Public Service 2000 initiative, will continue. A public service reform bill will be introduced into Parliament in support of this renewal program. Additional special operating agencies will be created to provide better service to Canadians through more autonomy and a sharper focus on objectives. My government will, also, continue to privatize those government activities best done by the private sector, as well as wind up and consolidate other agencies in order to provide Canadians better value for their tax dollars.

Conclusion

You are meeting at a pivotal period in the life of Canada, a time to reinvigorate our country and to bring Canadians together in a renewed accommodation. My government will work with Canadians to achieve its goals of unity, prosperity and responsive government so that all Canadians feel themselves a part of this country, so that all Canadians have an equal opportunity to share in its bounty, so that all can see themselves reflected in its constitution and so that all will find the fulfilment of their aspirations in its future.

Honourable Members of the Senate, Members of the House of Commons, Ladies and Gentlemen, you will play a decisive role in the strengthening of Canada. History will be the judge of the decisions you make on these critical issues.

May Divine Providence be your guide.

The House of Commons withdrew.

His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

RAILWAYS BILL

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE RICHARD HATFIELD, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, our friend and colleague, Senator Richard Hatfield, died April 26. He was 60 years of age. Thirty of those years had been spent in the public life of New Brunswick and Canada. He had been in the Senate only seven months. He regarded his appointment to this place as a new lease on his political life. It was to be a further opportunity to help shape the future of this country which he loved so passionately.

Senator Hatfield had joined the Special Joint Committee on the Constitutional Amendment Process just before he fell ill in January and he had spoken to the Prime Minister and me to offer to take the chairmanship of a Senate committee on Aboriginal affairs. Senator Hatfield's death deprives the Senate of a colleague of truly national stature, and those of us who knew him are truly bereft.

Senator Hatfield's 30 years in political life have been well documented: His election to the New Brunswick Legislature in 1961, to the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party in 1969, and to the premiership in 1970. Under his leadership the Conservative Party of New Brunswick won an unprecedented four general elections before losing office in 1987.

[Translation]

History will retain the numerous social and political reforms he made as well as the important progresses he contributed to in matter of human rights.

We will also remember the leadership role of his province in the major national issues. Richard Hatfield was the only premier to take part in every constitutional conference, from the one in Victoria in 1971, to Meech Lake in 1987.

During the 1982 constitutional round, he obtained the entrenchment in the Constitution of the linguistic rights of New Brunswick's anglophones and francophones. In his Legislative Assembly, he piloted Bill 88 recognizing the equality of both linguistic communities of New-Brunswick.

He was always strong and presuasive in his struggle to do away with regional disparities.

[English]

I believe that one of Richard Hatfield's finest hours in public life came before he was elected Premier. It was in 1969 when, as Leader of the Opposition in the New Brunswick Legislature, he led his Conservative MLAs, all of them anglophones, to a unanimous vote in support of the Official Languages Act brought in by Premier Louis Robichaud. His premiership was marked by many accomplishments, but none required more courage and more political skill, as Senator Robichaud knows, than that significant gesture of solidarity and of statesmanship on Richard Hatfield's part from his place on the opposition benches.

[Translation]

We all know that constitutional guarantees are not enough to ensure unity and mutual respect in a country like ours, so we must have leaders whose innate sense of justice and equality lights up their political life and who get the most out of other people.

Richard Hatfield was such a leader. As he liked to say, he was Acadian in his soul and proud to represent his people.

[English]

In the 1982 provincial election during a rally in the Acadian Peninsula, he was delighted to see people wearing buttons reading "Mon pouvoir; J'y crois". He wanted all New Brunswickers and all Canadians to believe in their power, their worth and their dignity as much as he believed in his own; and he wanted them to respect and understand and appreciate the power, the worth and the dignity of each other as much as he did theirs. Characteristically, one of his Christmas cards simply told his wide and diverse circle of friends "Love one another; Aimez-vous les uns les autres".

It is true that administrative routine held no fascination for him, but he did have a wonderful eye and ear for all the significant details of life. Nothing that affected the tone, temper and quality of life anywhere in New Brunswick ever escaped his attention for long or failed to arouse his interest. Long before he became Premier, and many elections later, he still seemed to know everything that was going on in New Brunswick, or he could find out. Every individual he met was important to him. This shone through, and people responded to him with warmth and trust.

In his Lament for a Nation, George Grant listed as one of the sources of the kind of Canadian patriotism that could meet the challenges of the 20th Century "small town politicians who remembered". Urbane and sophisticated though he was, Richard Hatfield was proud to be a small town politician, and he remembered. He remembered the best qualities in the nature of our country and, reforming politician that he was, he knew how to apply these qualities to complex modern issues.

He was a formidable politician—tireless, brave, stubborn, impatient, visionary and creative. No one ever heard a word of rancour or bitterness from him towards an opponent; and when, in an overwhelming defeat, he and his government were voted out of office, the first words that came to his lips were to thank the people of New Brunswick for their generosity and support over the 17 years of his premiership. As a person he was understanding, forgiving and generous, always himself, and always a delight to be with.

Exactly a week before his death, he moved from the Ottawa General Hospital to a palliative care unit in the Elisabeth-Bruyère Hospital here in Ottawa. His first question was whether there was a view of the river from his room. There was not, but brought to his room there were three favourite paintings: a Goodridge Roberts scene of the Saint John River Valley; and two by his friend and neighbour Molly Lamb Bobak—one of skaters on the river near Fredericton, the other of the lighting of the Christmas tree outside the New Brunswick Legislature. Someone brought a tape recording of some of his favourite music; friends dropped in briefly, and in such warm and almost familiar surroundings he spent the last five or six conscious days of his life, before slipping away from us for the last time.

There was a funeral service for his family and friends in his home town of Hartland, New Brunswick on May 1 and a memorial service in Fredericton on May 3. Queen Elizabeth sent a message expressing her sorrow at his death and recalling with pleasure her many meetings with him over the years. The Prime Minister delivered a moving and affectionate eulogy. New Brunswick artists performed. The poetry of his late friend Alden Nowlan was read. Among others, Mr. and Mrs. Stompin' Tom Connors sent flowers—Richard, after all had attended their nationally-televised wedding some years ago. Hundreds of New Brunswickers lined up in pouring rain to try to get into the church, or into the Legislature where they signed a memorial book placed there by the provincial government. It was an unforgettable but entirely fitting farewell to an unforgettable man whose highly personal political leadership changed the history of his province, and of his country, for the better. We shall always miss him.

[Translation]

Hon. Louis J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, in the Spring of 1971, when I left the New-Brunswick Legislative Assembly for a "quieter" world, the Primier Minister of the day made a comment to the effect that during my mandates I had built many bridges in my province but that the main one was the bridge between French-speaking and English-speaking people of New Brunswick. That made me proud and I silently wished that my successor would also pursue policies of bilingualism, equality of chances for all and biculturalism.

Twenty years later, I can say with admiration and gratitude that my wishes have been largely met.

Richard Hatfield did indeed build bridges on that narrow river separating both founding peoples of Canada and those bridges must also accommodate the native peoples and the varied cultures that form the Canadian mosaic. It was not an easy task but the Premier succeeded, confident that the traditional British fairplay could only prevail. His optimism was limitless and his convictions were deep. He championed the rights of the minorities even if he knew that he was thus alienating some of his own supporters and those who are not used to sharing.

On May 3 of this year, I witnessed something that would have been inconceivable 50 or even 25 years ago. At what was called the "Celebration of Richard Hatfield's life", I was witness to an oecumenic, bilingual, serious, humourous and extremely captivating service. I am not usually partial to funeral services. I always find them too long even if it is often not the case. Richard Hatfield's was short!

But who would have thought, 25 years ago, that the Gospel according to Saint "so and so" could be proclaimed in French in the very Anglican Christ Church Cathedral of Fredericton, in a ceremony celebrating the life of a Baptist from Hartland. As far as I know, nobody batted an eye. And that is because Richard Hatfield had devoted all his life, all his political career to preparing Canadians for such a possibility. He may have paid the price but History will prove him right.

At the national level, even though he was a Tory, his positions were unshakeably reformist and flexible provided that the great principle of a Canada ad mare usque ad mare remained the objective. I believe I can say that he harboured no ill feelings towards anyone but that he did not like to associate with those who wanted to split our country or destroy our great institutions, whether they came from the East or the West. He used to preach for unity (mostly in English) but when he was stuck, he would try to say it in French just as well, but not better than Diefenbaker or Pearson would have done.

There was no doubt in his mind that Quebec separation from the rest of Canada would mean sooner or later the disappearance of the French language outside Quebec, including the Acadian minority he cared so much for. He was a great Canadian, he died too young!

[English]

A couple of years ago, his friends and loyal supporters congregated in Fredericton to thank him for his many years of service to his province and his country. On that occasion, I sent the following message, which is still appropriate:

> Very few Canadians have served as heads of government for more than fifteen years in this century. We can name King, Duplessis, Smallwood, Trudeau and Hatfield. Most were bachelors most of the time and that did not prove to be a handicap. Also, in most cases, as happened in our society in general, the respect for the sixth commandment has loosened up considerably since the era of Queen Victoria, which did not prove to be a handicap either.

[Translation]

> Be that as it may, these men of high calibre have stood out on the political scene of the country or their province with dignity, integrity, justice, devotion and competence during all those years. The majority is never wrong. Vox populi, vox dei.

[English]

> Our own Richard Hatfield was premier for seventeen years during which his constituents were never given the occasion to question his sense of justice for all. At his own peril he promoted the cause of mutual understanding between the two linguistic groups in our province and abroad to a degree that all fairminded people admired his courage and tenacity. His legacy in government is one of humanistic concern, fairness and the constant striving to provide equality of economic opportunity to all New Brunswickers.

> It is fitting that his friends would organize a tribute to Richard Hatfield, the man whose constituents outnumbered those of Louis Robichaud, Robert Higgins, Joseph Daigle and Doug Young. Please convey to him my best regards with kind wishes for a happy retirement from a very hectic life.

After that, he was summoned to the Senate and served for a few months, and the rest is history. To all members of his family, I offer my sincere condolences.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, it is with profound emotion that I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to Richard Hatfield, a remarkable individual.

As you know, before having the honour and pleasure of sitting in this august chamber with him, I had the great privilege of being a close colleague for over fifteen years as a minister in many of his Government of New Brunswick cabinets.

Richard Hatfield was an extraordinary man.

Some men are said to have a great deal of heart. Others are said to be intellectuals, while still others are judged to be capable individuals.

• (1420)

[English]

Richard Hatfield embodied all of these qualities. He was a man of noble spirit, full of joy, hope and gratitude. One cannot say that he was a partisan politician in the everyday sense of the word. Quite simply, he lived as he saw it, among his own people. However, he was always concerned about getting involved in matters for the sake of the welfare of the province, whose destiny he guided for 17 years and irrevocably altered.

[Translation]

Richard Hatfield did indeed reshape the province of New Brunswick, from the moment he took office, he reformed the process of political fund-raising and instituted a system of single riding representation.

Being a very open-minded person, he recognized that the equal opportunities program launched by his predecessor, our eminent colleague, Senator Louis Robichaud, was a vital initiative and he wholeheartedly endorsed it and continued to do so throughout his career.

He was also a staunch believer in the promised virtues of the Official Languages Act and he moved to implement fully its provisions as quickly as possible. Furthermore, to ensure that Acadians would never again feel that they were at the mercy of others where language was concerned, he saw to it that these rights were entrenched in the canadian constiution, thereby guaranteeing them in perpetuity.

Richard Hatfield never accepted or tolerated that New Brunswick's Acadians should be treated as a linguistic minority. Rather, he believed in the existence of two majorities, each one legitimate, each one distinct.

He wanted francophones, after decades of struggle and trials, to assume responsibility for their own system of education. Thus he established a dual education system and oversaw the creation of homogenous schools and school boards. He knew that education was the key to the people's survival and believed that as long as Acadians were not the masters of their own education, they would remain powerless in the face of others' thoughtlessness.

By assigning this responsibility to Acadians, he gave them back some measure of power and in the ensuing period, Acadians have found renewed strength and confidence and their influence has grown.

[English]

Had this been the full extent of his contribution, it still would have been exceptional. However, those who were acquainted with him knew that he was not a man to stop in mid-course. Richard Hatfield wanted all politics in New Brunswick to beat to the new rhythm of linguistic equality. He wanted all of his province's dynamic forces to work toward building the tolerant, modern society he so wanted for New Brunswick. He prompted his province to move in new and more contemporary directions.

[Translation]

He stepped in personally and publicly to see to it that the services of Radio-Canada were finally made available to Acadians already isolated as it were by history and geography.

Recognizing the danger of assimilation faced by Acadians living in predominantly English-speaking communities and the validity of their linguistic demands, he worked tirelessly for the creation of francophone community centres in Fredericton, Newcastle and Saint-John.

He insisted that New Brunswick participate fully in all activities highlighting the international francophone community and that Acadians have a voice at francophone summits.

In 1984, to commemorate the centennial of the Acadian flag, an event occuring at the same time as the province's bicentennial, he had the Acadian flag flown over the New Brunswick legislature and on all provincial government buildings in Acadian regions and in regions with significant French-speaking minorities. This gesture was meant not only to underscore the contribution Acadians have made to New Brunswick's social, economic and cultural life, but also to honour the indisputable reality of the political force the Acadians represent.

Finally, history will record that he wanted this sociopolitical development to be concretely embodied in legislation that was unique in the annals of Canadian history, namely legislation recognizing the equal status of New Brunswick's two official language communities.

I had the privilege to be closely associated with him in carrying out this initiative and I am grateful for the confidence he placed in me.

This piece of legislation articulates the fundamental principles on which all political activities of the province of New Brunswick rest. It recongizes the right of each official language community in the province to have its own economic, social, educational and cultural institutions. Furthermore, it stipulates that the government must bear this fact in mind when carrying out its programs and allocating public funds.

In light of the new Developments, objections and resistance surrounding the Canadian constitutional debate which are rattling the very roots of our federation, this legislation, which in New Brunswick is commonly referred to as Bill 88, stand as proof of Richard Hatfield's political and humanistic foresight. Furthermore, it could serve as a source of inspiration for all Canadians who want Canada to embrace an approach based on tolerance, open-mindedness and pluralism.

[English]

All of us know how enthusiastic and energetic this great individual was when it came to Canada's future. His numerous, untold efforts in our national search for compromise and consensus on a broad range of delicate issues, whether it be the Aboriginal issue, the language question, regional disparities, Senate reform, the distinct society, to mention but a few, have all found their inspiration in the same generosity of spirit and heart, and in the sincere desire to give each and every person his or her rightful place in the sun.

[Translation]

It has been said of Richard Hatfield that he was an unconventional man and that he never sacrificed the freedom this afforded him. He lived up to this formidable challenge and we all know that he emerged victorious because throughout his life, he demonstrated exemplary, unshakeable faith. He was faithful to himself, faithful to his strong belief in life, true to this principles of compassion, respect and love of others.

In return, throughout my long, fruitful collaboration with him, I found in his faith the strength needed to continue with the work undertaken, even during turbulent political times.

Today, I want to pay tribute to Richard Hatfield, to acknowledge all that he has given me. It is a modest contribution to the tributes that have rained down over the past ten days at the mere mention of his name, but it is a token of the confidence and joie de vivre for which Richard Hatfield was so well known.

And when we are all back into our daily routines, and the flood of tributes has ebbed, we will be left to find in our daily lives signs of Richard Hatfield, the man, of course, but also of his love of life and people, a love embodied in his own everyday life.

[English]

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, so much has been said about Richard in the last 10 days that one wonders what one can add in a few minutes in the Senate this afternoon.

Richard did so much for New Brunswick. In so many ways he was New Brunswick. In an interview about two years ago, when asked what New Brunswick meant to him—and some honourable senators may have read these comments in one of our local papers—he mentioned things like lobster pounds and fiddleheads; the catching, cleaning and eating of cod caught off the peninsula; his love of herring and the wild violets at Chocolate Cove.

New Brunswick to him meant crags and fishermen, farmers and forests. It also meant late night gatherings with friends, talking long into the night about a variety of topics. Whether he was talking with artists, the press, or his political friends, Richard understood New Brunswick.

Honourable senators, he taught us very much. He taught us respect and compassion for those whose lives were difficult and less fortunate. He taught us tolerance and understanding within our two communities.

Richard loved political life, and he enjoyed his private life. He understood his province and his country better than any provincial political leader I have ever known. He enjoyed people wherever he was. He learned from them, as they learned from him.

I will especially remember Richard Hatfield for the very positive leadership that he gave our province. Political leaders can choose to give either positive or negative leadership. Richard, of course, chose the positive high road. He was not interested in the American system of plebiscite, polls and lobbyists affecting his decisions.

As I pointed out to some of my colleagues a week ago, when we give negative leadership we often look at the issue as a two-sided one. We have one side of the coin and others have the opposite side of the coin. Richard knew that major issues were never that simplistic. He chose to look at the major issues in New Brunswick as a many sided, multi-faceted prism. So he had to look at the arguments from all sides and from every angle of that prism. He would polish each side carefully. Once he understood the arguments and the issues on each of the various facets of the prism he then made up his mind; and he never backed away from his decision once he knew the direction in which he was going. Delegations might be screaming and shouting at him and marching in the streets, and the press might not be kind to him, but once he believed what he was doing he pursued that course. He pursued that course with the language policy in our province. He knew he was right. He also knew his responsibility as an elected politician in our Canadian system, that his responsibility was continually to explain to the people to make them understand what the issues were all about.

In Canada we do not use plebiscites to determine how the world turns. We follow the British system, where the leaders learn their responsibilities and the issues and then go to the public, to teach, to talk to the people, to inform them of the issues.

New Brunswickers, like all Canadians, are reasonable people. So when that process is followed, they follow that positive leadership. It is easy to provide negative leadership. We can simply put our ear to the ground and say, "Oh, oh, that poll says that", or "maybe that we should have a plebiscite or something". It is a cop-out in our political system. So I thank him for the positive leadership that he gave our province, because it was so very important.

Honourable senators, like our oceans that he loved, and as with all of us, Richard Hatfield had his high and low tides, and, also like the oceans that he loved, he was a constant, refreshing force.

Richard Hatfield was devoted to the people of New Brunswick. He was compassionate and understanding. For me, working with him all those years—I sat with him in opposition for three years, then in government until I came here—it was a joy, because he knew the bottom line. He was always well prepared. On the development of social policy, especially in a province with very little money, it helps a lot when your leader understands what is needed. It was a joy to work with him.

Thank you, Richard, for helping us. Certainly we will miss you.

[Translation]

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, very briefly, I would like to pay tribute to the Honourable Richard Hatfield. I knew that whatever I wrote or said would already have been said or written by someone else this afternoon. I simply wish to join those who spoke previously in paying tribute to a man, a senator, who is no longer with us.

I knew Premier Richard Hatfield proably as well as if not better than anyone else in this Chamber. I sat with him in the legislature for about as long as Senator Robertson, which means about 20 years. I remember when he started his career in the legislature on the Opposition backbenches, when I started mine on the government backbenches. I watched his career progress.

I would like to mention two or three anecdotes from the time I sat in the legislature with him.

I remember the initial reaction of the Premier who went down to defeat in 1970. I must say that neither my colleague, Senator Robichaud, nor I were very sorry to lose the election. Many of my colleagues were. My leader was smiling as if he had won. I remember him telling me: If we have to be beaten, I would rather be beaten by Mr. Hatfield than by any other politician I know. So this was actually a compliment to Richard Hatfield.

Senator Robichaud knew as well as I did that the many programs we had introduced would not be cancelled by the Hatfield government. History bore this out.

I also dabbled in provincial politics for a number of years. As interim leader of myb party, I was invited by Mr. Hatfield to a federal-provincial conference which, I feel, reflected the fact that we knew and respected each other.

Perhaps I may add another anecdote for the benefit of Mr. Hatfield's colleagues here in this Chamber. During the first year of his term as Prime Minister, when the legislature was in session, Hatfield would see me in the hall and come up and talk to me. He would ask some questions, and we would have a friendly chat. Since this happened quite often, someone said that some of his colleagues might be rather jealous. They wondered why Richard Hatfield was so anxious to have these little talks. I know he did this out of friendship and also because he realized that I had had some experience in government.

However, it would be remiss of me if I did not say that Richard Hatfield did a great deal for New Brunswick. As was pointed out by previous speakers, he did a great deal, to make New Brunswick's linguistic communities understand the difference between the present situation in Fredericton, compared with what it was in 1960, when I was told in the street to "speak white".

When I attended the religious service for Richard Hatfield, I heard French spoken. I attended a number of religious services in Christ Cathedral when I was minister, when I was a member of the legislature and also when I was acting leader of my party. I never heard French spoken in the cathedral. This is good, when one is an Acadian, in New Brunswick. One feels the impact of the work of Richard Hatfield.

I must point out that I cannot say that he was the greatest premier of New Brunswick. In my opinion, that premier is still around.

I join my colleagues, and especially his colleagues, who will miss him, and all my English-speaking and Acadian colleagues and friends whom I met at Mr. Hatfield's memorial service, in extending the condolences of all Acadians and residents of New Brunswick. We were lucky to have Richard Hatfield as our premier.

Hon. Norman K. Atkins: Honourable senators, I, too, want to talk about Richard Hatfield.

I often wondered why he was so revered by the media, which has written so generously of him since his death. To me, the answer is simple: He was one of those rare public figures to whom candour and honesty were seen as just that by men and women whose business it is to detect a phoney. Richard was no phoney, and they knew it.

I met him 40 years ago when we were both students of the political process. One of our first jobs was tending bar in a hospitality suite. Obviously, no job was too large or too small for us to take on. From time to time, when we were students at Acadia University, I marvelled at his curiosity and interest in so many different aspects of life and his genuine feeling for people, his family and friends. He especially loved children and always took the time to follow with interest the young people he came to know. It was as if he were the Pied Piper.

Richard was a visionary. Some would say he was ahead of his time. But he was prepared to take risks, to introduce reforms and to make changes if he thought they would ultimately benefit the people he served. He was only partisan when he was determined in the causes that he pursued, but he always kept things in perspective and, rather than polarize situations, he simply let them play out until people came around to his point of view. I remember in particular—and it was mentioned by Senator Simard—the situation in Fredericton over the French Cultural Centre that was eventually built. There was a lot of resistance to it from some people in his government and caucus, as well as from people in the city itself. But Richard's good judgment prevailed and the centre is now flourishing to the delight of francophones in southern New Brunswick.

As Dalton Camp wrote in a recent article: "What impressed some of us, who were among his friends, was his tolerance for his opponents and his nearly total obliviousness to his critics." It seems that everyone who knew Richard, both friend and foe, had his own favourite story to tell about him. Only now are we beginning to hear some wonderful tales of his generosity and his adventures.

Richard came to the assistance of many people who needed help—more than anyone will ever know. He would always find a way to be helpful, doing so as a thoughtful gesture and never expecting any credit or acknowledgement. That is why it was not surprising to see so many people turn out for the memorial service in Fredericton. Yes, there were many notables in attendance, but there were also many others, whom he had known and assisted over the years, who simply wanted to pay their respects to their friend. It was not only a memorial—it was a celebration.

Last summer I spent hours with Richard sitting on my porch at Robertson's Point. It was such a great pleasure to have that time with him, and it was really a lot of fun too. At that time, as he reflected on many things, including his election defeat in 1987, I had a feeling that he was relaxed and at peace with himself. I believe that what bothered Richard the most about losing the election was that so many members and candidates, who were his colleagues, had paid the price for their loyalty to him.

He was looking forward to his impending appointment to the Senate and was curious to find out as much as he could about what he should expect. To me it was obvious that he wanted to get on with his life and was ready to make a useful—maybe unique—contribution to this honourable chamber at this historic time.

Honourable senators, Richard loved New Brunswick and he loved New Brunswickers. He believed that New Brunswick could and would set an example for people in other parts of Canada, and he hoped that the country would find the way to remain united.

Richard Hatfield has made a difference. He will be remembered as one who "was there," and I suspect that, apart from the incredible contribution he made to public life, he will become an important part of New Brunswick folklore. For that, I am sure, he has to be smiling.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, the fact that our late colleague and friend, the Honourable Richard Hatfield, began his life's journey on the banks of the Saint John River at Hartland in our province of New Brunswick, and that his voyage concluded here in Ottawa along the banks of the Rideau is, I believe, but another symbol of his deep roots, great care, and great love not only for New Brunswick but for Canada. Having been the human rights commissioner for our province when Richard Hatfield succeeded our colleague Senator Robichaud as Premier, it was my privilege to work closely with Richard in the areas of equality rights and social justice. As one of his advisors on the patriation of the Constitution and the Charter, I, like so many others, became accustomed to briefings anytime after 11 p.m. at night, whether at Elmcroft Court in Fredericton or his court on the top floor of the Four Seasons here in Ottawa.

Honourable senators, it was clear to Richard that we must continue to build Canada on the foundation rock of democratic values and the principles of human rights. He never hesitated to defend and promote the linguistic rights of the Acadian community, for he saw these rights as Canadian rights. The black community in Saint John and Fredericton also knew they had a great friend in the premier. Our Maliseet and Micmac communities and peoples saw him as their brother and honoured him with the title of Chief Rolling Thunder.

His curiosity, which was remarked upon by so many, was highlighted for me when I was Vice-Rector of the University in Fredericton. We had invited His Holiness the Dalai Lama of Tibet to the graduation ceremony, and at the graduation dinner we observed Richard, leg folded underneath himself on the chair, deeply engrossed in conversation with His Holiness the Dalai Lama, seeking an explanation of the mystery of how the Dalai Lama was the fourteenth reincarnation of the Buddha.

Honourable senators, his vision of Canada was the generous vision. He understood that there are many ways of being Canadian. So the distinctiveness of Quebec was easy for Richard to embrace. He recognized that the values underlying our citizenship are common to many democratic nations. However, he was comfortable in the realization that in Canada we express them in a way that is uniquely our own—indeed, they can only be our own—and are influenced by our individual and collective experience. For Richard, as Senator Robertson indicated a few moments ago, in his own words there were the influencing memories of the lobster pounds, the fiddleheads, the new potatoes, Miscou Island, the Tracadie Wharf,

Donat Lacroix, the Maliseets and the Micmacs. There was also his comment that "it does not matter where you come from, if you call New Brunswick my place, mon foyer."

Yes, honourable senators, Richard taught us that we Canadians have more in common with each other, notwithstanding the richness of our diverse memories and experiences; that we have more in common with each other from sea to sea to sea. So, it is proper that the record of this honourable chamber should reflect our tribute to him.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I should like to add a few words to what has been said about our former colleague, whom I still call Premier Hatfield. My acquaintance with Senator Hatfield began well before our political careers, when I was teaching in Fredericton in the late 1950s. I think the man who introduced us to each other was our good old political friend, Ralph Hay. In fact, it is perhaps as Minister for New Brunswick for a number of years that I worked most closely with him.

[Translation]

Through my frequent contacts as a minister in the service of our common province, I very quickly came to the conclusion that our partisan role and our duty to serve our fellow citizens should not, at all costs, rub off on one another.

We went through some difficult situations, like the creation of school centres—and I think in particular of the one in Fredericton which our colleague Senator Atkins touched upon, but also of the lesson we learned from the difficulties we experienced when we had to do the same in St. John and in Chatham-Newcastle. Finally, all this has been possible because we had established a relationship of mutual respect and trust which allowed us to work together, even sometimes when it was not very comfortable for our own people on either side.

[English]

A number of times I was proud to hear Premier Hatfield speak for me as a New Brunswicker, but it was his plea for understanding of the impatience of the native peoples of our country which moved me the most. I have always thought of my province of New Brunswick as a rather special place, but I think that feeling owes a lot to the fact that for more than 25 years New Brunswick was privileged to be led by premiers such as Louis Robichaud and Richard Hatfield.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on an occasion like this, and in the presence of such impressive tributes to such an impressive political life, it is difficult to avoid superfluity. I did not know Richard Hatfield very well. We were not friends. I would not say that we were even friendly, although not unfriendly. So I do not speak from the depth of knowledge and friendship that some of you have.

However, I do ask your indulgence to allow me to record one very vivid personal memory I have of him, when I was a member of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. Some of the commissioners, including Gertrude Laing and, I believe, Jean Marchand—and I am not sure whether or not Mr. Laurendeau was there—went to visit provincial capitals. My recollection is that at that time Mr. Van Horne was the leader of the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Frith: I should say of the Conservative Party.

An Hon. Senator: What a mistake!

Senator Frith: Certainly, the record will show that I made a mistake. I do not recall very vividly any pleasant memories as to Mr. Van Horne's attitude towards the work of the commission, but I do have very vivid and positive memories of the attitude of Mr. Hatfield at that time, and that was perhaps the cause of my mistake, because I went away thinking—and honourable senators will forgive me for remembering him this way—of his having a very liberal approach to politics in general and to the question of bilingualism and biculturalism in particular. He made a very strong impression on all of us. That would be, I suppose, some 25 years ago.

● (1500)

He was a young man but, as those of you who have spoken today have shown, even then a very impressive politician. I am glad to have heard Senator Murray and others mention his collaboration with Senator Robichaud in the historically important declaration of New Brunswick as the only bilingual province. That took place before the commission's report and it is impossible to measure the momentum it added to the commission's work.

I am glad to have heard today in detail, what I had observed from a greater distance, how that initial first impression of the beginnings of a distinguished and important political career was justified by his later life. So, I thank you for letting me add this modest wreath to the monument his friends and admirers have built for him today.

Hon. senators: Hear! Hear!

Hon. John Buchanan: Mr. Speaker and honourable senators, just a few words to add my tribute to those that have already been made on the passing of our late colleague, Richard Hatfield. I believe those of you who were present at the memorial service a week Friday past would agree that it was rather an extraordinary service in that it was a manifestation of Richard Hatfield's life. The people who were there spoke about his life in terms of one who understood New Brunswick, who understood people, who understood minority groups and who understood Canada. It was, as Senator Atkins mentioned, a celebration. It was a unique tribute to a unique politician.

I knew Richard for over 30 years. I sat with him for about 10 years around the table of the Council of Maritime Premiers, at federal provincial conferences of all kinds, conferences of the New England governors and Atlantic premiers. I know from personal knowledge that his experience in public life, gained over 25 years, ensured that his comments were listened to by premiers and prime ministers from 1970 to 1987.

Richard Hatfield made extraordinary and very positive contributions to federal-provincial conferences on the economy, and more particularly with respect to the constitution. His contributions to Canada certainly have earned him a place in Canadian history. He was a fervent New Brunswicker and a fervent Canadian. He understood this country. He understood it probably better than many of us who sat around those same tables for many years.

Richard endeared himself to the Acadians, not only of New Brunswick but of Nova Scotia and P.E.I. He was always a champion of their linguistic and cultural rights. That, of course, is manifested in legislation, not only in New Brunswick but in Nova Scotia and P.E.I.

Senator Atkins has said that many stories could be told about Richard, and there are many of us who could relate those stories. I recall one that indicated how unique and wonderful this man was. At Christmas a few years back, the CBC had a conference call set up for the maritime premiers to discuss how we were to spend Christmas. Angus MacLean, the premier of P.E.I, myself and Richard were on this four-way hook-up with CBC. Premier MacLean was asked, "How will you be spending Christmas, Premier MacLean?" and Angus said, "Well, in the traditional way. I will be spending Christmas on my farm with my family, and doing the things that we have been doing for years at Christmas". They then asked me the same question, and I said, "Well, I will be at home before Christmas, on Christmas Day and after Christmas, visiting friends and doing the traditional things such as going to church on Christmas Eve, and eating turkey and everything that makes Christmas the wonderful time it is." Then the commentator said, "Premier Hatfield, what about you? Where will you be spending Christmas?", and Richard's answer was typical. He said, "I am not going to tell you where I am spending Christmas. I told you last year I was going to Morocco and you broadcast it all over North America. So this year I am not telling you". That was very typical of Richard Hatfield.

Richard Hatfield, statesman, politician, fervent Canadian — some have already said he was preparing to work again from this chamber for his native New Brunswick and for Canada. The unity of Canada was always uppermost in his mind, and he will be missed.

Hon. senators: Hear! Hear!

Hon. James W. Ross: Honourable senators, I would like to join colleagues in this tribute to Richard Hatfield, a friend and a leader whom I admired enormously. It was Richard Hatfield, along with former Premier Robichaud before him, who launched my province of New Brunswick into the modern era, and who brought about so many measures for social, political and constitutional betterment that others now seek to follow his vision.

I do not intend to give an appreciation of Richard Hatfield's life and political accomplishments. I would rather mention some of the qualities of character which made him stand out as unique among the public figures I have known and worked with over the years. Richard had a mental toughness which enabled him to endure misfortune and even personal tragedy without being discouraged or bitter. He had the wonderful ability to think things through and an aptitude for politics which placed him far ahead of his peers. He had a joy for living which was not changed by success nor dimmed by failure. Most of all he had a generosity of spirit that enabled him to keep in focus the big picture, the global view of all our needs and aspirations as Canadians living in New Brunswick.

It was well known that Richard was easily bored with detail, but he did not allow himself to get bogged down and very ably kept his focus on the real stuff of political leadership, setting the course, inspiring his people and caring deeply about the ordinary circumstances of the countless New Brunswickers and Canadians who came to know him simply as Richard.

As gifted and as worldly as Richard was, there was no M.L.A. who knew his constituency and the life of his people so well. His big heart was affected by what happened to his Carleton County neighbours: those who were sick, those who might have lost their jobs or their potato crops, those who could not get by on their pensions or those who just needed a word or a card of encouragement.

Thus we are paying tribute to a man who served Carleton County and Canada faithfully and well. Most of his life was spent in public service. Although some of it was spent fending off storms of criticism and hostility, Richard was able to rise above it all and achieve his main goals of helping to build a New Brunswick and a Canada characterized by fairness, justice and understanding.

• (1510)

Richard was, to my mind, an extremely forgiving man. In fact, it always amazed me just how forgiving and understanding he was of those who were attacking or criticizing him. I admired him greatly for that.

Richard Hatfield was one of the greatest New Brunswickers we have known. His inspiration survives and will grow into the future as we reflect on his truly outstanding qualities and accomplishments.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have the honour to inform the Senate that the petitions against the GST continue to arrive with regularity at my office. The first is from Alberta and contains 23 names from Grimshaw, Fairview, Peace River and Manning. This is again citizens of Canada petitioning senators and MPs to do everything possible to abolish the new goods and services tax and to demand a general election immediately.

The same wording is on one petition from Grand Falls and Campbellton, New Brunswick, containing 11 names. From Quebec there are 14 petitions petitioning us to do the same as the previous petitions have. They are from Montreal, Laval, Aylmer, Faberville, Senneterne, Barrante, Malartic, Val D'or, Riviere-Heva, St. Edmond, Alma, St. Leonard, Didyme, Normandin, Granby, Rougemont, Palmarolle and Saint-Laurent.

In this batch there are approximately 275 names. The number of Canadian petitioners I am presenting to honourable senators today totals approximately 310.

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, May 16, 1991, I will call the attention of the Senate to the 200th anniversary of a most significant event in Canadian constitutional history, namely the passage of the Constitutional Act, 1791, and the advisability of making a request to the British government that the record copy of the Constitutional Act, 1791, be permanently in the keeping of Canada.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN IN CANADIAN SOCIETY

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, May 16, 1991, I will call the attention of the Senate to violence against women in Canadian society and the desirability of investigation of the subject by a Senate committee.

THE CONSTITUTION

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON AMENDING FORMULAE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h) I move:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consult broadly with Canadians and inquire into and report upon the process for amending the Constitution of Canada, including, where appropriate, proposals for amending one or more of the amending formulae, with particular reference to:

(i) the role of the Canadian public in the process;

(ii) the effectiveness of the existing process and formulae for securing constitutional amendments; and

(iii) alternatives to the current process and formulae, including those set out in the discussion paper prepared by the Government of Canada entitled "Amending the Constitution of Canada";

That five Members of the Senate and twelve Members of the House of Commons be the Members of the Special Joint Committee;

That, notwithstanding Rule 66, the Honourable Senators Beaudoin, Comeau, Gigantès, Kirby and Nurgitz act on behalf of the Senate as members of the Committee;

That the Committee have the power to appoint from among its members such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable, and to delegate to such sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the Senate;

That the Committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate;

That the Committee, or a sub-committee, have power to travel, and hold public hearings, within Canada;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee be empowered to authorize television and radio broadcasting, as it deems appropriate, of any or all of its proceedings or of proceedings of its sub-committees, pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons;

That the parties represented on the Committee be granted allocations for expert assistance with the Committee work in proportion to the representation of the said parties in the House of Commons;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the service of professional, clerical and stenographic staff as deemed advisable by the Joint Chairmen;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject during the Second Session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament be referred to the Committee;

That the Committee submit its report not later than July 1, 1991, provided that, if the Senate is not then sitting, the report will be deemed submitted on the day such report is deposited with the Clerk of the Senate and with the Clerk of the House of Commons;

That changes in membership of the Committee for Members of the House of Commons be effective immediately after notification thereof, signed by the Member acting as Chief Whip of any recognized party, has been filed with the Clerk of the Committee;

That the quorum of the Committee be nine members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken so long as both Houses are represented, and the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when six members are present so long as both Houses are represented; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose and to select, if the House of Commons deems advisable, Members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with respect to the adjournment motion, the motion is that we adjourn today and meet again on Tuesday next. The reason for that is that I have no indication that anyone else on either side wishes to participate after the address and reply to the Throne Speech is moved and seconded today. This certainly does not preclude anyone from participating next week or whenever.

Therefore, since there is obviously no legislation coming from the other place, a new session having just started, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g) I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 21st May, 1991, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

INVESTMENT CANADA

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION RESPECTING FOREIGN TAKEOVERS OF NEW BUSINESSES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate which he will not have an answer for and which I could have put on the Order Paper in written form, but it will have the same effect because it is information I want him to get from a colleague.

As a brief preamble to explain its context, I have been following, as many other senators have, no doubt, the information from Investment Canada about decisions, notifications and acquisitions of new businesses. Will he obtain from his responsible colleague the total of foreign takeovers by acquisition of new businesses per annum since 1984 and the percentage of Canadian-owned versus foreign-owned businesses that result from those totals.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will try to obtain that information for my honourable friend.

THE SENATE

EFFECT OF PROROGATION ON DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Prior to prorogation there were a number of questions put to him, of which he took notice, and he promised that he would reply in due course. Are those questions now off the record? Do we have to start all over again?

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators. While motions and written questions, and so forth, disappear with prorogation, I have taken the position that outstanding oral questions, and indeed one outstanding written question, should be answered. As a matter of fact, Senator Doody has some delayed answers today.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PRESENCE OF METAL BARRIERS FACING PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if we are to have as a permanent feature on the hill those metal gates or barriers next to the sidewalk facing the Parliament buildings. They have been in place for some time and many people find them rather annoying. It gives the impression to the public that this place is under permanent siege. I am not sure the leader knows of what items I am speaking, but there are "bedsteads" right across the main thoroughfare in front of the building. It seems to me that there is no need for that on Parliament Hill.

This is one of the homes of democracy in Canada. Not only is it not pleasing to see those fixtures there on a permanent basis, but I question whether their very existence on that spot is justified. Are threats, terrorist or otherwise, of such a nature that we must maintain those gates there on a permanent basis? If not, why not have them removed?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): They are barricades; they are not gates.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is the kind of question that might appropriately be discussed by the Standing Committee on Internal Economy when it is reconstituted. I trust the members of that committee have taken good notes of Senator Corbin's intervention.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, it is more than just a matter for the Internal Economy committee. In fact, the Internal Economy committee has no jurisdiction whatsoever outside the perimeters of the Senate proper. Public Works Canada, the National Capital Commission, the RCMP and assorted other bodies administer the precincts of Parliament Hill, as we have been led to understand in the Internal Economy committee.

The point I want to make is that we are not a police state. I have yet to see justification for maintaining those barricades day in and day out and having squads of RCMP special battalions waiting on the sidelines at the back of the Senate every time a group of Canadians want to manifest their opinions here on the hill. What is the justification for that? We did not have that situation in the past. If there is justification, the government might perhaps take us into its confidence and explain those matters to us.

I do not like to see the way Parliament Hill is going. There was a time when members of Parliament were not allowed to park their cars in front of the buildings near the East Block; but now everyone does it. On the other hand, we have these barricades there—but to remind us of what? What is it that bothers the enforcement or law authorities that justifies them in maintaining those barricades in place permanently? Surely not only I as a senator but also Parliament deserves an answer to that?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate the points made by my honourable friend. I could undertake to pursue the matter by obtaining a reply or a commentary from the appropriate minister or ministers. I do, however, revert to my earlier suggestion that the Internal Economy committee is a good forum in which to discuss the matter. It is something that concerns both houses of Parliament, and the chairman of the committee may wish to consult with his counterparts in the other place. Upon consideration, the committee itself may wish to make recommendations. It simply occurs to me that we could go into the matter in more detail and more satisfactorily in a forum such as the Standing Committee on Internal Economy. But, if my friend wishes, I can send an inquiry forward and see what it elicits. However, I think that what such a process will do is simply give rise to further questions and inquiries.

Senator Corbin: Well, honourable senators, why not? This is a place for debate. But if the Leader of the Government would make an inquiry, I would appreciate it. I am sure that if he were sitting in this place as a private member, the sort of situation that we are facing now out there would raise his eyebrows as well as mine.

IMMIGRATION

LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether there is a so-called legal fast-track procedure to expedite applications for landed immigrant status by people seeking to come to live in Canada.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not aware of any.

Senator Haidasz: Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate then tell us why Mohammed al-Mashat, a former Iraqi ambassador to Washington, was able to come to Canada and, before doing so, received landed immigrant status in a short time?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, this matter was the subject of a very full statement made this morning by my colleague, Mr. Valcourt, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Mr. Valcourt's statement was accompanied by a detailed recitation of the facts and chronology of the events which led up to the former ambassador's admission to Canada. I will be glad to obtain the statement and the chronology and table it in this place at an early date.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us this afternoon whether there was a mistake made by anyone that has initiated this fast-track procedure for Mohammed al-Mashat and his family, and allowed them to come to Canada as landed immigrants?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think my friend would be better advised to read the statement that my colleague, Mr. Valcourt, has made and the recitation of facts and chronology which accompanied the statement.

There have been some anomalies associated with this situation, in particular the fact that responsible ministers were not advised in a timely manner of what was going on. But all this is dealt with in some detail in Mr. Valcourt's statement and the accompanying document.

Senator Haidasz: Could the minister tell us "yes" or "no" as to whether the landed immigrant status of Mohammed al-Mashat and his family is legal. That is, could he tell us whether their landed immigrant status is legal—in other words, whether everything was done according to the laws of Canada.

Senator Murray: The answer to that question is in the affirmative.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have several delayed answers to questions. I would ask that these answers be printed as part of today's proceedings, and I have duplicate answers for distribution to the senators.

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NEW BRUNSWICK POTATO—ERADICATION OF VIRUS—FINANCIAL SUPPORT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 9, 1991, by the Honourable Lorne Bonnell regarding Agriculture—Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick Potato Farmers—Eradication of Virus—Financial Support—Government Policy.

On April 30, 1991, an agreement was reached between Agriculture Minister Bill McKnight and the provincial Minister of Agriculture for Prince Edward Island, Keith Milligan, on the elements of a harmonized compensation program for potato growers affected by the PVYn virus eradication program.

The compensation package of $7.9 million, which was announced in March, will be increased. Agriculture

Canada will assume the costs of the composting program developed by the province to eliminate infected and suspect lots. Agriculture Canada will also compensate growers for losses within zones 1-4 which resulted from restrictions of movement of P.E.I. seed. Growers who lost access to traditional United States markets will also be compensated.

P.E.I.'s involvement in the compensation program will focus on promotional activities designed to re-establish confidence in P.E.I. seed, and this has already started. The province will also compensate growers for a portion of transportation losses incurred as a result of restrictions on P.E.I. seed.

THE BUDGET

CUTS TO GRANTS AND CONTRIBUTIONS—PROGRESS OF REVIEW COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 9, 1991 by the Honourable Lorna Marsden regarding The Budget, 1991—Cuts to Grants and Contributions—Progress of Review Committee.

(The answer follows:)

The review of the federal grants and contributions currently being undertaken by the Honourable Harvie Andre is before the Federal Cabinet. The Government expects to complete its exercise as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT COMPANY—SALE TO EUROPEAN CONSORTIUM

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 10, 1991, by the Honourable Peter Bosa regarding Transport—de Havilland Aircraft Company—Sale to European Consortium.

The Government announced its privatization program in the "Agenda for Economic Renewal" in November 1984. The program is built around three goals: to manage Crown-owned assets more efficiently; to make markets more competitive and fair; and to offer new opportunities for Canadians to share in the growth of these companies. Crown-owned de Havilland was analyzed and assessed as a company that could be better managed and more efficiently run by private owners. The aircraft industry is a dynamic and risky activity that requires aggressive and knowledgeable managers. Boeing was selected as the best candidate from among the many buyers that expressed an interest in de Havilland.

The French and Italian governments also have privatization programs, but have chosen to maintain state ownership of their aerospace conglomerates. Both these countries have historically had higher levels of state ownership than Canada and are moving first to privatize state-owned enterprises that are key to their respective industrial infrastructures. There is a general move in Europe to reduce the amount of government subsidies and support provided to aircraft companies. This may be the first step in a general move to reduce government intervention in the aircraft industry.

It is interesting to note that Alenia is about onethird owned by private parties and has shares that trade on the Italian stock market. This has brought some of the discipline of the marketplace to bear on the operations and management of Alenia.

On December 1985, the government announced the features of the sale, in addition to the price of $155 million. They included the following undertakings:

—to keep de Havilland in Ontario;

—to pay royalties on existing products;

—to assign de Havilland a world product mandate with respect to its commuter products;

—to develop new activity at de Havilland and to work with Canadian suppliers all across the country;

—to conduct new R&D;

—to develop new products and make maximum use of existing facilities and manpower at de Havilland;

—and, to develop de Havilland's defence-related production capacity.

Boeing is a private U.S. company and can conduct its business in Canada as it sees fit, subject to Canadian laws and regulations.

The Investment Canada Act requires that specific types of foreign investments be reviewed to determine whether they will yield net benefit to Canada. In the case of the proposed Aerospatiale/Alenia acquisition of Boeing Canada's de Havilland Division, a review would be required. However, an application for review has not yet been filed by the two European companies.

A review of such a transaction would take the form of a comprehensive and rigorous analysis of the direct and indirect impacts of the business plan that the investors would develop for the consideration of the Government. Aerospatiale and Alenia have had meetings with government officials to assist them in developing plans and undertakings that would fully satisfy the net benefit test.

TRANSPORT

DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT COMPANY—JOB PROTECTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 10, 1991, by the Honourable Peter Bosa regarding Transport—de Havilland Aircraft Company—Job Protection.

(The answer follows:)

The Government is interested in obtaining the best possible deal for everyone concerned with the de Havilland transaction. However, it cannot, nor can any government guarantee every job under all circumstances.

TRANSPORT

DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT COMPANY—OFFER TO PURCHASE BY BRITISH COMPANY—CONSIDERATION BY INVESTMENT CANADA

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 10, 1991 by the Honourable George van Roggen regarding de Havilland Aircraft Company—Offer To Purchase By British Company—Consideration By Investment Canada.

Investment Canada reviews transactions once an agreement has been reached between the investor and vendor, and once the investor files an application for review. While the purchase agreement between Aerospatiale/Alenia and Boeing was announced by the three parties on April 10, 1991, they have not yet filed an application for review under the Investment Canada Act.

British Aerospace has announced publicly that it was ready to make a bid for de Havilland, but that Boeing could not discuss the matter since the U.S. company had signed an exclusivity agreement with Aerospatiale and Alenia. British Aerospace, or any other interested buyer, can make representations to Investment Canada setting out how they would conduct the operations of de Havilland were they given an opportunity to acquire the company.

FORESTRY

PLIGHT OF FOREST PRODUCTS INDUSTRY—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave, I give notice that on Thursday next I will call the attention of the Senate to the plight of the forest products industry in British Columbia and in certain other areas of Canada.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Her Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, moved:

That the following Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Ramon John Hnatyshyn, a Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, One of Her Majesty's Counsel learned in the law, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

She said: Honourable senators, first of all, allow me to thank my colleagues for entrusting me with the task of presenting the motion for address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Honourable senators, some have called this Speech extremely ambitious for a government which is already half way into its mandate. Others would have wished for more details on the government plan of action to achieve its goals. It should be noted, as those of you who are familiar with this British parliamentary tradition know full well, that a Speech from the Throne sets the general policy the government wants to follow for a given time taking into account the prevailing political, social and economic conditions.

On this subject, I think we would all agree that the Constitution, the economy and government efficiency are priority issues in the eyes of the Canadian people. Of course, these are not abstract concepts. Quite the contrary, very concrete problems crop up in connection with them which require an immediate solution. Otherwise, the realization of the key goals will be jeopardized. That is why changing negative attitudes is as important to resolving the constitutional deadlock as cutting illiteracy is to improving our economic performance and working towards eliminating many social problems.

The general policy of government comes as no surprise. It flows from other government actions undertaken several years ago.

When it came into office in 1984, this government inherited a major constitutional problem that could not be ignored. The dangerous state of our national finances also required both a courageous and vigorous adjustment. This government did not shy away from its responsibilities, in spite of the disappointing results on the constitutional issue in particular, especially considering the efforts that were put in. Today however, I think the government must be congratulated on resisting the temptation to set out on a course that might be beneficial in the short term because they would bring in more votes in an election, but would inevitably plunge the country into nearly insolvable financial and social problems. The choice the government is making takes clear-thinking and a sense of responsibility, but the challenges are nonetheless tremendous.

The first part of the Speech deals with Canadian unity. It states that "This session will be a turning point in Canadian history. Let no one doubt the seriousness of the challenges we face as a country." Having myself taken part in discussions on the Constitution in others provinces on a number of occasions in the past few months, I share the feeling that the challenge of achieving an agreement that will bring round all Canadians is tremendous. There is too little understanding and too much agressivity for that. Partisanship, waiting games, indifference, a schedule that is likely too tight, public services that will insist to either give nothing up or make gains, will all hinder the formulation of solutions. Some will criticize the government for not having made public its position on the constitutional issue yesterday, as if it could have layed one down when the various commissions set up by the provinces are not done with their investigations. The idea is not to make the people dig in their heels, but to respect their progress while keeping in mind the urgency of the situation. Would it be too much to ask from the Quebecers to show some flexibility with regard to the timetable they have set? Because this timetable will be almost impossible to respect unless they are willing to show flexibility in the face of a significant and contructive movement in the rest of Canada.

As much as we can undertand its impatience, would it not be better for Quebec in the long run to show it is also capable of flexibility, without going as far as accepting stagnation or giving up its aspirations and reneging on its obligations as the only predominantly francophone society in North America. I think it is fair to say that, both in the Allaire Committee and in the Bélanger-Campeau Commission, many participants would have liked for the deadline to be 1993. As things stand, a piece of legislation to be tabled before the national assembly today or tomorrow will confirm October 1992 as the possible date for a referendum.

Meanwhile, the government of Canada did not remain inactive. As the citizen's forum on the future of Quebec and the Special Joint Committee, led by our honourable colleague Senator Beaudoin, on the process of amending the Constitution are about to table their reports, a group of senior officials is at work, examining the division of powers between the federal government and the provinces.

[English]

Furthermore, these actions taken so far are the result of the direction the Prime Minister indicated in December, 1990 in an address he delivered in Buckingham, and I quote:

> I believe that the challenge of re-Confederation can be just as positive in 1990 as it was in 1867 when the original founders and builders of this country accomplished their great work. We should not be afraid to take a new look at what is best done by the federal government and what by the provinces—what we want to do together, and what we prefer to do separately. The distribution of powers devised by the Fathers of Confederation admirably suited Canada's needs for many years. It is entirely appropriate to review this to determine how best Canada can accommodate new realities internally while preparing to confront ferocious international competition for investment, technology, trade and prosperity. And negotiations surrounding such changes are of necessity a two-way street. But we must never forget that this is a vast and diverse country and we do not want everything run from Ottawa—which is often perceived as remote and isolated from the concerns of Canadians. On many questions the voices of the regions should be encouraged and not ignored . . . promoted and not stifled. I believe in a modern and flexible federalism, a federalism that reflects the true diversity of Canada. Ottawa cannot claim to know all or control every field. I have absolutely no doubt that we can achieve substantial savings—to pass on to taxpayers—

That's what everyone wishes—

> —by eliminating the waste and inefficiency resulting from the duplication and overlapping of federal and provincial programs. Nor do I doubt that significant changes in the division of powers could accommodate the legitimate aspirations of the provinces, make our system more efficient and move decision-making to the people.

● (1540)

I think that we can find in the Prime Minister's address and in the Speech from the Throne relatively precise indications or meaningful signals about the Government's intentions.

Finally, even if the people of Quebec felt very bitter about the Meech Lake failure, one must not forget that an overview of Quebec history shows that it is based on a will to be united with the rest of Canada, together with a desire to be more autonomous in the areas of activity essential for the enhancement of its identity and its culture. The Speech from the Throne, in fact, indicates that the unique nature of Quebec must be expressed while acknowledging the specific interests of the West, the Atlantic, Ontario, the North and the native Canadians.

Some people seem prompt to blame the Prime Minister of Canada for his decision to make this round of négotiations a Canadian round and not just a Quebec round. I think I agree with this approach, when we consider an in-depth reorganization of the federal system.

The Speech from the Throne also indicates that certain reforms may be made by adopting legislation or policies, a clear indication that at the administrative level, significant and substantial progress may be made. At least, that is my interpretation, while others will demand changes in attitudes or amendments to our Constitution. The three groups I mentioned earlier have set the stage for the next phase.

In concluding my comments on the important issue of national unity, I hope that the non-partisan stance now apparently being taken by the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party to give these plans to save the country a chance to succeed, will be maintained. I also hope that those who will be responsible for the joint committee of Parliament mentioned in the Speech from the Throne will be able to work to a tighter schedule.

I believe that waiting till 1992 to submit a proposal that will certainly elicit a certain reaction and then be revised to produce what may be a better version, leaves us very little time, if we consider that we would have from February until October, including the summer, which is not always a very good time for discussions. In any case, that would be my request to those who will be responsible for this joint committee.

The government has linked national unity to a vigorous economy. Amending the Constitution is not enough to achieve national unity. A vigorous economy is also a factor of unity, and conversely, unity is a factor of prosperity.

In fact, some people agree that the present uncertain constitutional climate is not favourable to investment. Furthermore, the federal government, which introduced severe restraint measures to put public finances on a sound base, including measures that will have an impact at the provincial level, has aroused feelings of frusration which are the source of much of the conflict between both levels of government. In so far as the federal government applies these budgetary cutbacks to itself and introduces measures to make its own administration more effective, I think that the sustained efforts by the government to reduce its cumulative deficit should be recognized as positive and necessary measures. However, this is not enough. The government wants to maintain and develop Canada as a player able to compete on world markets, by creating the right conditions for being competitive and opening world markets for our products.

Many economists, who are far better qualified than I am, have produced studies on the subject or have made countless suggestions about what should be done to revive the Canadian economy's weak productivity, which has been recognized by a number of people, including a journalist writing for a business magazine, who remarked:

> The general refrain is: Canada is no longer competitive. So we have to find a culprit: the value of the dollar, the national debt, and high wages.

However, I would like to refer to Mrs. Sylvia Ostry, a former director of economic and statistical studies at the OECD, who anlaysed the Canadian economy's performance.

Between 1960 and 1973, Canada followed about the same course as other industrialized countries. In the 1980s, while productivity increased by 0.6% to 0.9% in other OECD countries, it only rose by 0.2% a year in Canada. Of course, according to Mrs. Ostry, that can be explained by the high value of the Canadian dollar, our national debt, high wages, etc. But she thinks we mostly lag behind in technology development and acquisition. She also suggests two ways to correct that: firstly, by purchasing physical technology, that is machinery, and secondly, by gaining knowledge.

This can be done through research and development, but also by obtaining licenses and results of various public scientific research, and purchasing other technology-oriented companies. Training, integration of software in the working process and improved marketing can also help.

According to Mrs. Ostry, Canadian companies have a serious deficiency in that area. They have hardly increased their research and development effort over the last 25 years, while their competitors greatly intensified theirs. The total number of R-D projects in Canada barely amounts to a third of what is being done in other countries, such as Japan, Germany, Sweden, and even South Korea. We even have fewer than in India!

Again, according to Mrs. Ostry, the private sector is mostly to blame. The government has research going on in its institutes and universities. However, private companies do not have the brain power to absorb it all. Hardly 70% of Canadian companies have engineers on staff. I do not recall the exact figure, but that number is, for example, very high in Japan.

Training, which is another component of the intangible investments of companies, is also lacking. We deplore the erosion of our once excellent education system. Mrs. Ostry mentions the fact that only Canada, among all OECD countries, has no national education policy. Naturally, Mrs. Ostry based her judgment on foreign standards. I do not know if the government followed that piece of advice in the Throne Speech.

According to a recent survey, 38 per cent of Canadians have functional illiteracy problems. The functional illiterate cannot understand the operation manual for a machine with a certain degree of complexity.

For that matter, I read somewhere that an increasing number of illiterates have to cope with reading and writing functional problems, which they had always succeeded to hide up till now but which the development of technology and even some rather simple things are now forcing them to face up to.

When reading these studies one easily understands why the Speech from the Throne deals at lenght with the issue of training, with the problem of illiteracy or with the drop-out problem. In private life as well as at work, not knowing how to read nor write nor count or so little put some incredible limits to the performance and the development of people.

We must not isolate the illiteracy problem and forget that it is strongly related to that of poverty. Great efforts can be made to fight illiteracy and must be made. But if at the same time we do not do something about other factors, progress on illiteracy might become temporary but not durable.

Those real problems do not warrant however that the federal governement, through its spending power, interferes directly in the area of education. Surely, it is the area where Quebec is more jealous of its autonomy.

In that regard, I would like to read again a passage concerning education and culture which is found in what was called in Quebec the Beige Book, entitled A New Federation, which had been released in 1979 by the Liberal Party of Quebec:

> In both areas of education and culture, we want to maintain the historical position of Quebec, which has always stated the primordial role of the province and has always viewed rather unfavourably the federal initiatives. The Constitution of 1867 fully supported that attitude. Quebec has prime responsibility for the protection and the development of its French cultural heritage. Its government is in the best position to determine which measures are required in order to maintain the originality of Quebec's society and to help it develop.

But, eventually, there could be discussions on education objectives related to job training. However, responsibilities would have to be clarified.

In a context where all provinces, including Quebec, accept a free flow of goods, people and capital through the preservation and reinforcement of the economic union, it would still be possible no doubt to find a forum, but the formula is yet to be found.

This objective of prosperity for the greatest possible number of people will probably be criticized in view of high unemployment rates and the state of poverty in which a lot of people live. However, the government could legitimately be held responsible for greater problems in the future if it refused to consider solutions which may not yield immediate results but, in the longer term, would put the country in a better position economically.

While pursuing that objective, we have to remember that not all our fellow countrymen will have the opportunity to enter the world of technology and competitiveness. We have to be careful not to lose too many people on the way. We cannot sacrifice all the social programs that Canada has given itself, our social safety net, nor the exploration of other avenues which will allow those who often live on the fringe of society, because of a physical, intellectual or mental handicap, to be part of the mainstream as fully as possible. I was happy to see that concern in the Speech from the Throne.

A balance must be maintained between the pursuit of economic progress and social objectives that a democratic society must continue to support.

I would like to quote from an article written by Mr. Harvey Enchin of Globe and Mail. When talking about competitiveness, one cannot speak in terms of bottom line only. I think one must also have a more comprehensive vision of what a country offers its people.

Mr. Enchin says:

• (1550)

[English]

Canada wins high marks from scorekeepers like the World Competitiveness Report not only for its abundant resources but for its less tangible attributes. Stability, security and a predictable policy environment cannot be plotted on a graph. But they are highly valued by competitiveness analysts and thousands of immigrants spilling onto Canadian shores. The Canadian health care system, although maligned by conservative ideologues, delivers services at less cost than the overbuilt, fragmented health care system in the United States. Canada's infrastructure, built at taxpayers' expense, is the envy of the world.

It is no accident that Canada is a world leader in telecommunications and transportation equipment, construction and engineering services. Canada's social safety net has earned the country a reputation for compassion, a spiritual value that cannot be measured by traditional statistical methodology. But traditional statistical methods also fall short when they try to measure accurately competitiveness or productivity.

[Translation]

Social concerns about families, violence and youth also have been alluded to in the Throne Speech. Again, these are under provincial jurisdiction. I support the need to act vigorously in these areas, but we will have to find the communication channels and the ways to address those concerns that will not put the two levels of government in competition, but on the contrary, that will insure the best possible consistent action in order to reduce significantly, among other things, child poverty. Efforts towards better education and better integration in the workplace will greatly remain useless, because poverty is the source of ill health, of school failures and dropping-out, in other words, of the development of the poverty subculture with all its consequences.

I will deal with the theme of government efficiency solely with regard to the Senate. I will be very brief. I think there is no need to show some evidence. In the past few months, we have lived some moments that I consider to be exceptional. They still had the positive result of putting in question the internal operation of the Senate.

We also received the report from the Auditor General. He made to us some very relevant remarks concerning this control of expenditures and administrative efficiency that we should be concerned with, as much as the government should be concerned with the whole government machinery.

The Throne Speech is no doubt ambitious, but nevertheless realistic about the problems it has identified and the objectives it has established. However, the government cannot do everything alone. It must get the support of the citizens by giving out as open and complete information as possible.

I accepted the invitation of the Prime Minister to sit on the Senate because this country had arrived at a constitutional crossroads. I told myself: maybe I could add my modest contribution to the unprecedented efforts that would be made to insure the future of Canada while allowing the provinces and regions to fulfill the dreams of their citizens.

I want to assure the Prime Minister of my complete loyalty and my unqualified support for the fulfilment of the government objectives. I also assure my honourable colleagues of my cooperation so that, together, beyond partisan considerations, we can help resolve the constitutional problem, the most acute, undoubtedly, that this country has ever faced. Thank you, honourable senators.

[English]

Hon. Michael Arthur Meighen: Honourable senators, may I say at the outset—somewhat ritualistically perhaps but, nonetheless, with the utmost conviction—that I am honoured by the invitation to second the motion for an Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, at the beginning of my remarks, may I also extend my most sincere congratulations to my colleague, Senator Lavoie-Roux, for her eloquent and balanced speech. Even if I am an Ontario senator, I was born in Quebec. I am convinced that all the senators in this House agree with me to say that we are blessed with an abundance of Quebec talents. Nobody embodies this fact better than Senator Lavoie-Roux.

[English]

I have risen only twice, and very briefly indeed, since arriving here last October to what might be charitably described as an unusual, if not stimulating, reception. On one occasion I had an interesting exchange in the middle of the night with Senator Kirby on the subject of the relationship, if any, between the perceived merit of a legislative measure and the timing of its introduction—a subject which, I am sure you will all agree, is best dealt with at 3 a.m. On the other occasion, I was moved to suggest that we senators appointed under section 26 were entitled to the same rights and privileges as any other senator—a novel thought for some—unless and until the courts should decide that we were not legally entitled to sit here.

I know that Senator Grafstein, for one, would have preferred that this matter be referred immediately to the Supreme Court of Canada, but now that the Ontario Court of Appeal has rendered the latest judgment—I believe the court of appeal is the highest court yet seized of this matter—his wish may, presumably, soon come true. In the meantime, I think it fair to say that, in baseball parlance at least, we are batting four for four, which is not a bad average in any league.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Meighen: I should also like to say, very briefly, that I wish to associate myself with all of the remarks made and the compliments paid to my friend Richard Hatfield.

I, too, knew Senator Hatfield for over 25 years. Richard Hatfield was an honourable and an exceptional man. I was brought up to believe that politics was an honourable calling, and it came as a great surprise to me to find out that everyone else did not share that conviction; but the honour of politics and my faith in it was restored in no small measure by knowing Richard Hatfield.

He was also, as I said, an exceptional man. It is said that the exception proves the rule. Some people would maintain that, in order to get to know a people and its culture, en profondeur, you have to speak the language fluently, but, as Senator Robichaud and others have attested, anyone who was at the memorial service in Fredericton would know the truth of what Richard meant when he said: "Dans mon âme, je suis acadien". As some of our colleagues here today would know, his French would never be cited by Larousse or by l'Académie française, but he did know the people of New Brunswick: he loved them; he was proud of them; and, in good times and in bad, they too were proud of him. As some have said, I think history will be increasingly kind to him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, while I was preparing these remarks, I read of course the speeches made by previous movers and seconders, like the Senators Ottenheimer, Barootes, Cogger and Bolduc. I found some remarks which were at the same time incisive and prescient.

For example, my old friend, Senator Cogger, ardently wished the following on October 2, 1986, and I quote:

> In this field, it seems to me that we must step up our efforts to put an end to the alienation telt by the Province of Quebec as a result of the 1982 Accord. We must also strive to fulfil the commitments concerning native people which the federal government and nine provinces made pursuant to that Accord.

What tragedy it is that we, Canadians, have not yet taken up either of these challenges.

[English]

In rising today, I do so conscious not only of my own responsibilities as a member of this place, but also of the continuity in history that all of us gathered here represent as we enter what will surely be one of the most important and historic periods in the history of our country. Honourable senators will allow me for a moment to beg their indulgence to cite my own sense of continuity with a former Leader of the Government and the Opposition in this place, Arthur Meighen, who also served twice, albeit briefly, as Prime Minister of Canada and, for a longer time, again on two occasions, as the Leader of the Conservative Party.

As Eugene Forsey, another distinguished former member of this house, often commented, my grandfather was a man of immense intellectual and rhetorical reach. Regrettably, at least for me, these talents are not necessarily transmitted from generation to generation, and so I often ask myself what he might have said or done in circumstances such as those we face today. While one can never be certain of what his response might be, except that it would be precisely and elegantly phrased, one can be determined to serve today with the focus, presence of mind, and principle that he would have expected of himself.

I am therefore enthusiastic about rising today to second the motion for an Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne because of its focus on rebuilding national unity in a fashion designed to overcome acrimony, apathy, incomprehension and, I would add, ignorance.

We Canadians can no longer afford the luxury of widespread ignorance. Ignorance in the form of illiteracy is bad enough, and all of us would agree that it should not be tolerated in a society which holds itself out as being the eighth largest economy in the world. In this connection, I know that Senator Fairbairn, cognizant as I am of her unstinting support for Frontier College over the years, would enthusiastically endorse the government's objective of cutting illiteracy rates in half by the year 2000. Similarly, ignorance of the essential skills with which we must equip ourselves to face the 21st century is simply not acceptable in Canada. However, there are other forms of ignorance which are more insidious, and perhaps even more dangerous: ignorance of the justifiable envy with which we are regarded by other nations; ignorance of the high regard in which we are held around the world; and, most of all, our ignorance of each other, of what we possess together as Canadians. That is a collective failing which can and must be banished from our national character.

I am particularly pleased that the program laid out yesterday creates a substantial and focused linkage between our economic best interests as a country and the need to get our constitutional house in order once and for all.

Since 1867, we have had endless debates about various constitutional options and changes, most of which have not resulted in a successful conclusion. Some have, but historically they have been the exception. During most of that time, we have had the economic luxury of knowing that the massive export of our natural resources would generate huge amounts of economic capacity with which various levels of government could stitch in the patches, fill in the spaces, and ensure that the quality of life in this country, which we have come to expect, was not in any way diminished by whatever our constitutional problems may have been.

Today, however, we face a far more competitive and interconnected world, a world of global consumer and industrial markets, a world with a global capital market and a world of rapid advances in information and communication technology. In this world of the 1990s, all of the commodities which we produce and export on a primary basis are sold in very competitive marketplaces. It is a world in which one's ability to be productive and economically focused largely determines one's capacity to produce the wealth necessary to sustain a peaceable and socially-progressive society.

In this country in particular, the Constitution cannot exist in any sort of isolation. As people such as Sylvia Ostry—who seems to be our favourite source of quotations today—have said, our ability to be productive and competitive as a society also relates to our ability to run a government in a fashion that is competitive and productive without undue burden upon our people. The linkage, therefore, is precise and direct. The Speech from the Throne makes that linkage apparent and real for all to see and for all to govern themselves accordingly as a result.

As I am a Conservative, honourable senators will understand my affinity with the proposition that we must earn our prosperity in this country. It will no longer be delivered to us on a silver platter by foreigners who need our natural resources. If we are to maintain the prosperity that sustains our important and necessary social programs, we will earn it because we are more productive, because we are more innovative and because we are better at doing some things than are others who compete with us. A fundamental unity of purpose and focus is absolutely essential if we are to achieve this.

[Senator Meighen.]

[Translation]

The Speech from the Throne clearly says that some reforms will come through legislation or policy, but that many more will result from the involvement of Canadians in the process of reassessing their expectations of governments. Some reform will take place because we rely longer on government to solve all our problems, and we would rather try to create the conditions which would help us solve ourselves our problems.

I am convinced that the Citizen's Forum and the Beaudoin-Edwards Committee, so skilfully co-chaired by our colleague, have contributed enormously. We await with great expectations their respective reports, conscious of the fact that they will play a significant role in the drafting of proposals for changing the powers and responsibilities of the provinces and the federal government, as well as national institutions.

[English]

Clearly, what our Constitution provides for, on the one hand, and what amending instruments are available to us, on the other, are both part of an equation that relates to our efficiency as a society and to our ability to deal with self-government effectively.

The path laid out by the Speech from the Throne yesterday—namely an orderly development of proposals and options, a laying out of those options before the public and a broad means of participation by the public in the evaluation and assessment of those options—is a constructive path which, while not without controversy, will afford all Canadians a chance to participate in the process and be part of making this country whole. This is obviously not, honourable senators, as some would have us believe, a process of politicians merely talking to politicians. It is, and properly so, in my view, a process which, while moved ahead, shaped and ultimately implemented by those who are elected by, and accountable to, the people of Canada, also invites the participation, direct and indirect, of Canadians at every stage. However, not only does the Speech from the Throne advance means of participation by Canadians, it also advances a method by which the government might act, through direct public involvement, to deal with any deadlocks or irreconcilable differences that may emerge.

We are not talking, honourable senators, about concessions to any part of Canada; we are talking about a resolution of grievances in a fashion that makes the country stronger, because our constitutional process will be more sensitive to the different realities that shape this country while preserving a firm national framework within which Canadians can advance and prosper. The round we are going through is not a Quebec round; it is not a western round: it is a Canada round. It is a round through which we sort out exactly how we work together in this country, what our priorities are, and how quickly we can put these constitutional issues behind us so as to get on with the social and economic issues which really are the priorities facing the people we serve.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Meighen: Yesterday's focus on literacy, on maximizing the completion of high school by more and more of our young people, on dealing with family violence and the concerns of native Canadians, and on dealing above all with the fundamental competitiveness of our economy, indicates to me that this government, while properly focused on the constitutional and unity issue, has no intention of allowing those issues—which, as you all know, can be all-consuming—to remove us from our collective focus on the social and economic situation that really will determine our quality of life as a people.

Honourable senators, I commend the throne speech to you because I believe it to be a balanced plan for today, a plan that deals with economic, social and constitutional priorities in a pragmatic and effective fashion. I also hope, honourable senators, that the process it underlines, particularly with respect to matters of the Constitution, is one that sufficiently sets aside partisan self-interest for all of us to join together in this house to work hand-in-hand for a constructive resolution of those issues.

There is no cause to which we might be committed that would be of any greater significance than that one. While we have our partisan differences and our partisan affiliations—and, heaven knows, there has been ample proof of that in recent months in this chamber—I put it to you that this is an opportunity for us to let the other part of who we are shine forth and indicate that we believe in a common commitment to Canada, and that we have a common belief that there are certain issues, concerns and matters which go far beyond partisan division and over which we can, in fact, if we want to, be largely and generically united.

What will be required of all of us is a collective commitment to achieve that measure of reconciliation, cooperation and determination to ensure that this country survives and that the productive capacity of our people is enhanced and expanded.

Honourable senators, there can be no debate more hollow than one over the distribution of powers between various levels of government when none of those levels has the financial capacity to do anything with those powers because one's economic productivity has diminished. There can be no debate more meaningless than one that focuses on the divisions between levels of government at the expense of enhancing the ability of individual citizens to build their own lives, to advance the lives of their families and loved ones, and to pursue a measure of satisfaction and happiness which this country has traditionally offered.

I believe that yesterday's speech offers an avenue of approach by which the gap between rich and poor, between linguistic groups, between those who have the skills necessary to survive and prosper and those who must acquire those skills, can be meaningfully reduced in this country, collectively and progressively.

The commitment to keeping the rate of inflation down, to capping expenditures at the federal level, to showing restraint, is not only pragmatic, but it shows precisely that kind of leadership from which we can best benefit collectively as a society. What a pity it is that my own province of Ontario is not similarly inclined.

When the next election comes, we will all have ample opportunity to settle partisan scores in a fashion that is reflective of the keen partisanship and competitiveness that has always been a part of our parliamentary democracy. The shape of this place, the shape of the House of Commons, will reflect what the people wish it to reflect should they wish to make changes from its present composition. However, until that time, we can and should work together in the national interest. We should put the temptations of partisanship, to which I admit I have yielded over my career as often as anyone, as far to the side as we can humanly manage.

I do not for one minute question our ability to do just that. I do not question our collective capacity in this house to marginalize our differences and put this country first. This is a course of action which has been urged upon us, as you will recall, by some of our more experienced and thoughtful colleagues. Indeed, I understood this was traditionally the norm in this place, not the exception. It is a course of action which is true to the traditions of this chamber and true, perhaps, to its very raison d'etre today. It may even be a condition precedent, a sine qua non, to our very survival.

Surely, more than ever, there is nothing to be gained and much to be lost by making of this body a carbon copy, or, as some would have it, a pale imitation of the other place. The Senate was designed to fulfil a distinctive role in the Canadian parliamentary system. Honourable senators need no reminding that our public image could do with a little polishing, to say the very least.

We Canadians have a wonderful country to reshape for the next 125 years. In that process the Senate, if it wishes, has a useful role to play. However, to be meaningful and effective, it must be driven by something more than partisanship.

In this connection, I am hopeful that honourable senators will forgive me if I close by quoting remarks made by my grandfather in this chamber in 1938.

> It is surely for the Senate to stand above both parties and see if we cannot be useful to Canada and to Canada's government, whatever it may be, in relation to the great problems that vex our country.

As the Globe and Mail editorialized this morning, it is time for Canadians to get on with more constructive activity. Surely, honourable senators, this applies to the Senate. Surely it is not too much to believe that the Senate is up to the task.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 21, 1991, at 2 p.m.

THE CONSTITUTION

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE PROCESS FOR AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA—MESSAGE FROM HOUSE OF COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message has been received from the House of Commons:

> That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours with the fact that the House of Commons does unite with the Senate in the reconstitution of the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada that existed in the Second Session of the present Parliament with all the same powers and conditions contained in the Order of Reference dated December 17, 1990;
> That the membership of the House of Commons on the Committee be the same membership as on the last day of the Second Session of the present Parliament;
> That the evidence adduced by the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada in the Second Session of the present Parliament be deemed to have been referred to the Special Committee hereby appointed;
> That the portion of the budget of the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada not expended during the Second Session of the present Parliament be deemed to constitute the entire budget of the Special Committee hereby appointed, unless a supplementary budget is approved by the Board of Internal Economy;
> That all contracts entered into by the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada during the Second Session of the present Parliament be deemed contracts for the Special Committee hereby appointed and be deemed to be in force, unless the Special Committee hereby appointed orders otherwise; and
> That all motions and orders adopted by the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada during the Second Session of the present Parliament be deemed to have been adopted by the Special Committee hereby appointed, unless it otherwise orders.

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Doody, supported by Senator Phillips, message placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by Canadians who are against the goods and services tax legislation.

First, I present seven petitions from the province of Quebec. I should say seven and a half because one petition contains names from Quebec and from Ontario also.

For those who are interested in the contents of those petitions, I will read it once again. The petitioners humbly declare:

> Whereas the new universal federal tax of 7 per cent on goods and services adopted by the Conservative government will create serious, unfair and inhuman hardships for Canadians;
> Whereas this tax will be an unprecedented attack on the already too low income of Canadians, not only because it forces them to pay higher taxes, but also because it will bring about a higher cost of living due to inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment.

[English]

The same message is on the English petitions. This first batch of seven and "a half" consisting of 147 names, comes from Longueuil, Montreal, St. Paul, St. Thomas D'Aquin, St. Albert, St. Séraphine, St. Paul D'Abbotsford, Granby and St. Cesaire. There is also a batch from Alberta coming from Valley View, Fahler, Girouxville, High Prairie, Jasper and McLellan containing 68 names in three petitions, and from Ontario, three and a half matching the other half containing some names from Quebec and some from Ontario. The petitioners come also from Mississauga and Toronto, and there are 83 names.

ADDRESS IN REPLY TO SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

NOTICE OF MOTION FOR CONCLUSION OF DEBATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have another motion, Mr. Speaker. Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, May 22, 1991, I will move:

That the proceedings on the Order of the Day for resuming the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to His Excellency the Governor General's Speech from the Throne addressed to both Houses of Parliament be concluded on the eighth sitting day on which the order is debated.

That is a standard form which we have used here over the past number of years.

QUESTION PERIOD

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER TO HONG KONG AND JAPAN—CONTINUATION OF MOST-FAVOURED-NATION TREATMENT FOR CHINA

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the government leader a question or two with respect to the Prime Minister's visit to Hong Kong and Japan which is now under way. Certainly, raising a positive image for Canada in Asia is an urgent matter if Canadians are to receive favourable treatment and to be competitive in Asian markets. If the Prime Minister's trip contributes anything to that, it will be valuable.

As Senator Murray I am sure knows, Canada has received a great deal of benefit from both immigration and capital flows from Hong Kong, which is one of the destinations on the trip. I should like to confirm to the Senate how concerned people are in Hong Kong with respect to the consideration now being given by the U.S. administration in Congress to the extension of most-favoured-nation treatment to China. Under U.S. rules this treatment has to be renewed annually.

Can the government leader tell us the position of Canada with respect to this matter? Will the Prime Minister be able to assure governmental and business leaders in Hong Kong that Canada has made representations for the continuation of that most-favoured-nation treatment by the U.S.?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will not attempt to ad lib a reply to the important question that the honourable senator has asked. I will ask for a prepared reply from my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, concerning that and other aspects of the Prime Minister's trip to the Far East.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE RATES—EFFECT OF YEN ON CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, perhaps I could ask a question with respect to the Prime Minister's proposed visit to Japan. Tokyo is clearly one of the most significant financial centres in the world. In terms of trends, it is of some concern that the U.S. dollar, and consequently the Canadian dollar under the government's present policy, is undergoing a rally for a variety of reasons in terms of the yen. Economic projections show that most Japanese industry is competitive, at least to the level of 115 yen to the U.S dollar, and the current yen-dollar level is at about 139 or 140 with predictions by some of the leading banks that deal in foreign exchange that the exchange level may go to 160 to the U.S. dollar for factors that are external to Japan-U.S. relations. This, in turn, even at today's exchange rate, creates a highly competitive advantage for the Japanese in the North American market and the result of that will be the generation, over the next year or two, of substantial Japanese capital available for investment in North America.

Will the Prime Minister be discussing currency and balances and their impact on the Canadian dollar and the U.S. dollar with the Japanese Prime Minister, looking towards a proposed agreement for international priority setting and cycling with respect to the yen in the year or two to come?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have not seen the agenda for the meeting between Prime Minister Mulroney and Prime Minister Kaifu. It could well be that the subject mentioned by Senator Austin could come up in the course of those meetings. However, I must observe that this is part of a much broader subject, which is normally discussed among the central bankers and the Ministers of Finance and National Treasurers of the Group of Seven.

STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER RE FRENCH POSITION ON JAPANESE IMPORTS INTO EUROPE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jack Austin: I have one last question, honourable senators, which relates to the Prime Minister's statement with respect to the position taken by the Prime Minister of France, Edith Cresson, with respect to French attitudes and policy dealing with Japanese imports into Europe.

Can the Leader of the Government explain to us the advantage to Canada of statements that are so critical of another government and its policies? I could quote to the Leader of the Government the statement given by the Prime Minister, which is in today's Globe and Mail, but it is essentially something of an international insult to tell the French that the problems of which they are complaining are problems generated by themselves—and this is whether or not the case is true. I wonder what the Canadian ambassador in Paris is being asked to do by way of explanation to the Quai d'Orsy?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret that Senator Austin, who is a Liberal, would not have seen something more positive in the Prime Minister's statement. The Prime Minister has sought to identify a certain tendency in a number of countries, including Canada, to transfer the responsibility for our own high costs, low productivity, or lack of competitiveness, to our trading partners such as the Japanese. This tendency is not limited to France and it exists here in Canada, and notably in the Congress of the United States. In almost all countries where it manifests itself, it takes the form of protectionist pleading.

Senator Austin: I can understand the answer if the Prime Minister referred to Canadians—and there is some merit in the comment—but I do not understand the advantage when he uses a foreign example. Canada has very important, long-term relations with France; it is hardly a good way of starting a relationship with the new French Prime Minister.

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, in fairness I think that the Prime Minister was asked to comment on a statement that Prime Minister Cresson had made on a certain subject. The Prime Minister was not singling out the Prime Minister of France so much as he was identifying that sentiment, which is prevalent in quite a number of countries, and from which he wanted to disassociate himself.

Senator Austin: May I just add that it may well be that there are deficiencies in the policy of Canada, or some other country, with respect to the structure under which it conducts international trade, but the reality is that when you have a very effective competitor against you and the impact on your own economy is negative, then measures need to be agreed to. Even though we may logically be at fault in the way in which our behaviour has brought about a result, nonetheless measures have to be agreed to in this country with that competitor in order to redress balances of a cyclical kind, and perhaps even of a structural kind. Trade is not based entirely on the logic of competition.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate the points that Senator Austin has made and so, too, does the Prime Minister.

IMMIGRATION

DETERMINATION OF REFUGEE STATUS—BACKLOG OF CASES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable Senators, in view of the insensitive attitude of the government to the problem of refugees and self-exiles who are seeking landed immigrant status in Canada, I would bring to the attention of the Leader of the Government in this chamber the fact that there are over 100,000 applications from self-exiles and refugees, some of whom have been waiting as long as six years to have their application for residence in Canada reviewed by the refugee review committee.

Some of these people have been waiting two to 6 years suffering hardship and desperation. Some cases have come to my notice where the refugees have been here two years and were told last month they would have to wait another two years before their applications would be heard by the committee. In the meantime, there have been at least two suicides: I refer to Zbigniew Redka of Hamilton and last week, Jesus Seferino Aguilar, a Salvadoran refugee, who also committed suicide. There are many other such desperate cases and other cases of real hardship.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate when will this government solve the problem of this 100,000 case backlog and thereby reduce not only the bureaucracy, but also the hundreds of millions of dollars that it is costing Canadian taxpayers to deal with these applications in the way in which the government is now dealing with them? Can he tell us whether the government is seeking another way to deal with this intolerable backlog of cases which has caused so much hardship and, recently, two suicides?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Haidasz refers to the "committee". There is a process here that involves the Department of Employment and Immigration; there is a refugee determination system that has been set up involving panels to deal with new cases, and there is a process to deal with the backlog.

The honourable senator asks when do we intend to solve this problem. We are open to suggestions on that matter, if the honourable senator has any. Meanwhile, I can only tell him for the moment that, with regard to new applicants arriving and claiming refugee status, the system is working very well indeed. The backlog is another problem. I can, and will, obtain a fuller report indicating what progress has been made in this respect since we passed the legislation a couple of years ago.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF INTER-CHURCH REFUGEE REVIEW COUNCIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. In view of all these committees about which the minister has told us, there is still a 100,000-case backlog of refugees and self-exiles. This means that the system is not working.

Why does the government not take into consideration the recommendations made by the Inter-Church Refugee Review Council in Toronto whose members are saying that if the government has evidence that some of these applicants are not worthy to become landed immigrants in Canada, then the government should deal with them, while giving a more compassionate and expeditious hearing to those others who are worthy.

The Inter-Church Refugee Review Council has even proposed to the government and to the minister that asylum be declared for many of these cases. Has the government given any consideration to that suggestion?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I presume the honourable senator is talking about an amnesty when he says asylum.

Senator Haidasz: Asylum or amnesty.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the answer to the question regarding an amnesty is yes, the matter was considered and was rejected at the time the legislation was passed. Again I say that the government is attempting to give what the honourable senator describes as expeditious consideration to these cases in the backlog.

In addition to bringing in a factual report on the progress that has been made since the refugee determination system was set up, I should also bring in a description of how the process works so that we will all know what we are talking about when discussing this matter.

Senator Haidasz: I have one more supplementary question, honourable senators. Will the minister promise us that he will ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to widen the scope of the House of Commons' review of the Mohamed Al-Mashat case to include the 100,000 backlog of cases in order to find a better solution to deal with these cases?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will convey the honourable senator's question to my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

I should also tell the honourable senator, now that I have had an opportunity to consult my notes, that a review of the refugee determination system by the Department of Employment and Immigration is now in progress. I should also tell him that, at present, 90 per cent of the cases are receiving what is described as credible basis decisions at the first level hearing. That is what I meant earlier when I said that the government is attempting to expedite these cases as quickly as possible. Of those cases, 79 per cent receive refugee status at the second level.

DETERMINATION OF REFUGEE STATUS AT POINT OF ENTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Peter Bosa: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. Back in 1977, the government put through some legislation to increase the number of immigration judges from 18 to 50 in order to cope with the backlog of refugees, which at the time I believe numbered in the neighbourhood of 25,000. It is obvious that that approach did not solve the problem.

Is the government considering strengthening at least the hearing process at the point of entry, where an assessment could be made immediately whether the individual is an economic or a political refugee? This would at least cut off the flow of what some government officials believe to be illegitimate refugees.

Again, is the government considering declaring an amnesty? There are tens of thousands of people in the backlog receiving welfare. Some municipalities are really hard-pressed for cash. Yet thousands of people are on welfare and are prevented from working. They are going through a mentally agonizing period not knowing whether they will be allowed to remain here or be sent back. As Senator Haidasz pointed out, one of these people committed suicide just last week.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, first of all, the backlog that existed at the time the legislation went through must be cleared up. As the honourable senator has reminded me, we have increased the personnel involved in dealing with these cases in an effort to speed things up. That process has still been going far too slowly. Then there are the claimants of refugee status who have arrived since the legislation was brought in. There is still too great a number awaiting determination of their cases. With regard to these people who have come in since the legislation was passed, there is a two-stage process. The first stage is conducted by the Department of Employment and Immigration in which, as I say, 90 per cent of the cases are now defined as having a credible basis. They are then passed on to the Refugee Review Board, where almost 80 per cent of them are accepted as refugees. That is the situation, and that is the process as it exists now.

The honourable senator suggests, with regard to new claimants of refugee status arriving at our borders, that something should be done to increase the number of personnel devoted to this task. That is one way. The other would be to eliminate the first stage altogether and have the board deal with it. These matters are now under review, and I will let the honourable senator know when that review has been completed or any decision has been taken.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER TO SOUTH AFRICA—REMOVAL OF SANCTIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government advise us whether the Government of Canada is anticipating removing the sanctions on South Africa, since the Prime Minister is going there for a visit to see what is going on?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no information to impart on that subject today.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, would it be possible for a delegation from the Parliament of Canada to go to South Africa, if the Prime Minister is going there and if the sanctions are to be lifted, to see what is taking place and to bring back to the people of Canada their views on what should take place?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it would not be for me to speak for the Parliament of Canada on a matter of that kind.

Senator Bonnell: Can the Leader of the Government tell us what prompted the Prime Minister to decide to make the trip to South Africa?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I saw a press report today—which, I must confess, I did not read in any detail—indicating that the Prime Minister was going to South Africa. I am not aware that anything has been finalized in that respect.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—EXTRA BILLING

Hon. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise us whether the Government of Canada is making a new policy to allow for extra billing by doctors and hospitals under the new medical care program which it will discuss with the provinces next month?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, so far as the government is concerned, the Canada Health Act is still in force.

Senator Bonnell: I understand that, but I do not know that this government has in the past always gone by the rules and regulations. Perhaps there is a contemplation of amending the Canada Health Act.

I understand that the new Minister of Health and Welfare is meeting with Ministers of Health and health professionals in the various provinces to discuss amendments to the Canada Health Act with a view to changing the whole health care system.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I trust my colleague, Mr. Bouchard, is, indeed, meeting with health professionals and others interested in the delivery of health services in this country and that there would be no restrictions on the agenda, of course.

Having said that, I have to advise the Senate that no consideration is being given to amendments to the Canada Health Act.

Senator Bonnell: Is any consideration being given to turning over health care directly to the provinces, as is outlined in the Constitution? As you know, it is only because of an agreement that the federal government is now involved in this area. Is the government considering returning the whole issue of health care and welfare back to the provinces?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator has answered his own question. Constitutionally, health care is a provincial responsibility and, in effect, Medicare is a series of federal-provincial agreements which differ from province to province, although there are certain common features. However, no consideration is being given to the federal government abandoning its role in the health field.

Senator Bonnell: Will the minister assure us that universality, transferability and accessibility will be maintained in any new agreement with the provinces?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not aware of any new agreements now being contemplated or negotiated with the provinces. I can assure the honourable senator that the government remains committed to the principles defined in the Canada Health Act.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Did I hear the minister state that there were different agreements with different provinces related to Medicare?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as the honourable senator will know, the regime differs from province to province. For example, in some provinces certain services are covered; and in other provinces those services are not covered. In some provinces Medicare has been financed out of the general revenues of the province; in other provinces it has been financed out of premiums. The regime differs from province to province.

Senator Thériault: One provincial government may administer Medicare differently from another provincial government but, to the best of my knowledge, the agreement for funding from the federal government does not differ.

Senator Murray: That is set out in the legislation passed by the Parliament of Canada and the same arrangements pretty well apply everywhere.

Senator Thériault: "Pretty well" or do they, in fact, apply everywhere?

Senator Murray: They apply.

Senator Thériault: Thank you.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to His Speech at the opening of the Session.—(Honourable Senator Grimard)

Hon. Normand Grimard: Honourable senators, the Speech from the Throne contains a message calling for unity and entrepreneurship. Some say that this speech is nothing but a repetition of all our old problems. Indeed, why should we invent new problems when those we already have must be dealt with.

In the Speech from the Throne, the Government mentions issues that must be settled, for instance the famous debate on national unity that I will touch upon later on, but also day-to-day problems, which are certainly not unimportant.

We must admit that the government is realistic, since its purpose is to tackle head on not only our present problems but those that we will face in the future. The government does not merely study human and social issues—it takes concrete steps to solve problems like violence against women, concerns related to children, illiteracy, vocational training, job creation, to name but a few. The objectives laid down by the government are proportionate to the efforts it is ready to expend to reach them.

Moreover, its objectives are clearly stated. To solve the nation's social and fiscal problems, the government must of course take care of its financial health, without signing away our children's prosperity.

The fact is that we must deal right now with factors determining our economic security, like the GST, which will ensure a reduction of the national debt, or like the free trade treaties designed to improve our international performance. We must consider without delay these important factors of our country's prosperity. Otherwise, we will no longer have the means to solve any of our problems.

[English]

Honourable senators, the present government is taking to heart our interests, and I should add the interests of all Canadians, not only in trying to resolve our problems today but in fighting to ensure a wealthy nation for our children and grandchildren. National unity is one thing that they will inherit from us. Unity is what will ensure a prosperous nation, and prosperity is what we want to pass on to our heirs. So let us follow this government which has as one of its most important objectives the keeping of us together in harmony.

Renewed federalism will be beneficial not only for Quebec. There is a mistaken tendency to believe that Quebec alone is claiming rights. Every province in Canada is doing the same. Each has specific needs and is calling for powers that will enable it to oversee its own interests. The western provinces, for example, are dissatisfied with their representation in the Senate and want major reforms. Canada's native people also have serious problems to settle.

Honourable senators, the question is, therefore: What must Quebec concede to satisfy the rest of the country, and what must the other provinces accept to keep Quebec inside Canada? In fact, I will say that there is only one question: What must all of us do to save our country?

How is it that we are talking about keeping the Canadian union from breaking up when everywhere else in the world—apart from Yugoslavia, the Soviet Union and perhaps Iraq—the trend is toward unification? While other nations are trying to join together to cope with continental economic competition, in Canada we talk about separating if no agreement can be reached.

We are now in the middle of an emotional debate where no one is listening. We create radical political parties, such as the Bloc Quebecois in Quebec and the Reform Party in the west, with everyone tugging the blanket over to his own side. The press also gets involved by brandishing provocative slogans, and we end up with animosity between English and French without really understanding the other side's claim. The upcoming negotiations will be risky and will constitute a last-ditch effort. A final attempt to renew federalism will be of value only to the extent that Quebec and the other provinces are prepared to give it an honest try.

Changing the Constitution is thus the goal. Since a country's constitution reflects its citizens' aspirations and values, it is crucial that everyone can see his face in that mirror and feel a sense of belonging. I know it will be extremely difficult to resolve, in less than two years, what more than a century has not been long enough to resolve. In fact, we have been wrangling for almost 125 years. It is not easy to rebut this observation but there are surely ways of reaching an agreement. In short, our constitutional structure needs to be revamped. We must come up with a Constitution that will reflect the image of a country that we can recognize.

Honourable senators, we all live in the same house but not in the same room. To preserve a family atmosphere in which living together is possible, respect and tolerance are essential. If Quebec no longer feels at home, if Quebec feels alienated from the rest of the family because no one is willing to make any concessions to it, then anything can happen. Honourable senators, we must not let matters reach that point.

[Translation]

When I heard critics saying that the government does everything for the future and nothing for today, I was flabbergasted. As I see it, what we build for tomorrow we build for today, because what was tomorrow yesterday is now today.

Although it may not be to everyone's liking, I think the Speech from the Throne is a beacon of hope: hope for a prosperous future after weathering a storm, a recession that, quite frankly, would have happened under any government.

Our government realizes it is starting a new session at a time when history will be made. Our government is preparing to meet the challenges facing it and is dedicated to playing a decisive role in building our country. This is clearly reflected in the objectives of unity, prosperity and government effectiveness described in the Speech from the Throne. It reviews our old problems but also urges us to reinvigorate our country, and I quote: "To bring Canadians together in a renewed accommodation".

Honourable senators, we too will be involved in writing these important pages in our history, and the decisions we make will be crucial ones. We must therefore work together with wisdom, tolerance, respect and without political partisanship, to ensure the well-being of future generations.

Hon. Maurice Riel: I have a question for the honourable senator. You said earlier, Senator Grimard, that we were in an emotionally-charged situation. At least that's what I understood. Could we say, among people of good will, I would even say Canadians and Quebecers of good will, since we have known each other for so long, that this psychological situation, as you said, in which politicians, the media and a host of other components were involved, could be dealt with if we tried to moderate the peculiar psychological climate being created by national institutions like the CBC—I don't think I need elaborate—which spread propaganda day in day out to separatist inclinations in people who in their more down to earth moments are far more moderate. That was my first question.

Senator Grimard: Honourable senators, it is for me a great honour to have the honourable senator ask me a question. I have been a member of the Senate since September 27, 1990, and it is the first time you do the Senate and myself the honour of speaking in this House. I consider it a great honour, and it would be my pleasure to answer your question.

You are absolutely right when you say, to emphasize something I mentioned earlier, that there is a lot of emotion involved in the problem we are now facing. I agree that someday the truth will come out. About three weeks ago, I was glad to see, as the results of a public opinion poll made in Quebec on the sovereignty issue showed, that the population is now less interested in sovereignty or sovereignty-association than it is in a more decentralized federal government, with more exclusive or shared powers for Quebec.

I want to thank the honourable senator for underlining an important point I perhaps barely touched upon, and that is the fact that we often are, not only in Quebec but throughout Canada, victims of the press or of propaganda used to add fuel to the flames.

To conclude, Senator Riel, I want to say that the more you study the issue, the more you examine it, the more hopeful you become. But the rest of Canada must show us, if not love or affection, at least some understanding.

Senator Riel: I would like to ask the honourable senator another question, but first I want to thank him for mentioning I do not rise very often in the Senate. But as Yogi Berra said: "You can observe a lot by watching."

I do not agree with you at all when you say the recession would have happened under any government. This is a moot point. We have the Economic Council of Canada and serious institutions, like the Fraser Institute, the Conference Board and so on. Almost all these Canadian financial institutions have declared that it was a made-in-Canada recession. You may have noticed, that the minister of Finance would not even use the "R" word although we had been in a recession for pratically over a year.

Secondly, there was a general complaint about the rate of our Canadian dollar as an impediment to Canadian exports. All this has brought about an absolutely disastrous economical crisis.

I do not agree either when you say that free trade has brought about a lot of improvements. I think, from my own experience, that quite the contrary has happened. Free trade has hurt us a lot. As a result of the increased value of our goods we were unable to export them to the United-States and in many cases, we had import goods from that country.

If you have not heard from me for several months, it is because I was doing like Yogi Berra—observing. I have learned some things. I will tell you more about them a little later. You know that I am quite non-partisan, but I believe that I cannot at all agree with the policy pursued by Finance Minister Wilson and Mr. Crow. I believe this policy lacks subtlety. I do not want to use coarse language; you know me well enough to know that I do not get carried away so easily. With that policy, we are in a precarious situation. Of course, there is a recession in the United States, but unusually theirs came after ours.

I wanted to make those two points to you. I would especially like to say that I will try to explain my reasoning further to you, while leaving you free to think as you like.

Senator Grimard: Honourable senators, since I love baseball, I can give you another of Yogi Berra's axioms, "It ain't over till it's over." That is somewhat the situation we are in with Quebec, Ottawa and the other provinces.

I want to answer your two questions: first the recession and then free trade.

As for the recession, with all due respect and the admiration I have for you, you obviously have a very short memory, if we remember what happened in 1982 when this country was led by your friends. We know that there was a recession then not only in Canada but throughout the world and particularly in the United States. I believe it is not realistic to think that it is the government's fault that there is a recession here. You must also consider that the whole world, with the possible exception of Japan and Germany, has been in a recession, and especially our southern neighours.

I would really like you to tell me how we could have ended inflationary pressures without raising interest rates.

I answer your question by saying that it is not the government's fault; another govoernment in the same circumstances could have had the same recession.

Secondly, as regards free trade, I said in my speech that free trade would be good in the future. I do not think that after two years of partial, very incomplete implementation of free trade we can pass judgement. We will judge it later. I hope that we will both be here in this House in eight years when the treaty will be fully implemented, because we know that it is phased in over ten years. I hope that you and I will be here in this House then. You will probably have to admit that the government was right to bring in that system.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Riel: Honourable senators, we will see each other again in 2000.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Acting Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE RAJIV GANDHI

TRIBUTE TO FORMER PRIME MINISTER OF INDIA

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, permit me to take a moment to express our shock and sorrow at the assassination yesterday of India's Rajiv Gandhi. The grandson of Prime Minister Nehru, son of the assassinated Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, Rajiv Gandhi was himself prime minister from 1984 to 1989 and was a candidate in the elections presently underway in India. His violent death is not only another personal and family tragedy, but one of national and even international significance.

All those who love India and who have rejoiced in her political, economic and social progress against fearsome odds, will be distressed by this appalling crime and anxious about its possible impact upon the fabric of that country. Canada and India have had close and mutually advantageous relations for many years. Our two countries have more often than not worked together on international problems, notably in the Commonwealth and the United Nations. Indian leaders since the time of Nehru seem to have had a real affinity with their Canadian counterparts. The personal friendship and close working relationship that existed between Rajiv Gandhi and Prime Minister Mulroney is the most recent example of this. For all these reasons, many Canadians are deeply saddened by the events of yesterday. The thoughts of Canadian parliamentarians are with our friends and colleagues in India who, in the most cruel circumstances, have lost a national leader and an international statesman.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Petitions against the GST seem to be arriving consistently every day. Today I have one from Quebec with 26 names, three from Ontario with 69 names, and one from New Brunswick with 20 names, all deploring the Goods and Services Tax, asking for its repeal and requesting an immediate election to cure the evil.

GRASSE, FRANCE

COMMEMORATION OF LIBERATION OF SOUTHERN FRANCE

Hon. Stan Waters: Honourable senators, I call the attention of the Senate to the commemoration, on August 24, 1991 in Grasse, France, of the liberation of southern France by the US-Canadian First Special Service Force and the gallant members of the French Resistance. Thank you, honourable senators.

THE LATE RAJIV GANDHI

MESSAGE OF SYMPATHY FROM SENATE TO GANDHI FAMILY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate today mentioned the tragic death of Mr. Gandhi in India. India is a Commonwealth country and the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association has, from time to time, met in India and many of their delegates have attended meetings here in our country.

Therefore, I think it would be appropriate for us, as a parliamentary body, to send a message of sympathy from the Senate of Canada, to Mrs. Gandhi and her family in recognition of their great loss. It is a loss not only to the Gandhi family but to India and to democracy, and it may be a tragic event for the future of India.

As parliamentarians we should take note of the death of this member of our own commonwealth, and a message expressing our sympathy, I would suggest to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, should be sent with the full support of the Senate.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am sure that can and will be done.

OFFICIAL REPORT

CORRECTION

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate yesterday. It is found on page 30 under "Determination of Refugee Status at Point of Entry". I was reported as saying, "I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. Back in 1977, the government put through some legislation to increase the number of immigration judges from 18 to 50". It should be corrected to read "1987".

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATUS OF DEFENCE POLICY

Hon. Stan Waters: Honourable senator, my question is to the Senate leader. I read in the Globe and Mail this morning that a new defence policy is expected in June. Mary Collins, the Associate Defence Minister, stated "everything is on the table". It comes as somewhat of a surprise to me, as a constant observer of the defence scene, that we, the Senate, are the last to know, and the Globe and Mail is the first to know.

I have raised this point on several occasions, and as recently as three months ago, suggesting that somewhere in the system was a draft White Paper or Green Paper or some draft policy which would start outlining where the government intends to go in its defence policy related to its foreign policy initiatives. I would ask the house leader to give us a much overdue report on what the government intends to do about defence policy in Canada.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is an open secret, first, that there is a need for review of Canada's defence policy given the changes in what is referred to as the "geopolitical situation" in the last little while. It is also an open secret, as the honourable senator will have seen from the exchange of correspondence between the resigning vice chief of the defence staff and his superior, the chief of the defence staff, that the military have put forward a statement of their position as to defence priorities in the future.

There is not, however, contrary to what the honourable senator suggests, a draft White Paper in circulation anywhere in the system where it would have come to the attention of ministers. The work of reviewing our defence policy at the ministerial level has only just begun. I share Mrs. Collins' hope that it would be possible to publish something definitive by the end of June, but I am not aware that the government has fixed a firm deadline for the process.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I ask a supplementary question or request that, when the government comes forward with a defence policy, it begin by telling us just what it is we are defending ourselves against. The word "defence" has come to be taken as describing all military action. We do not have a department of war, we do not have a ministry of military affairs, we do not have a ministry of weaponry, and we do not have a chief of staff of any of those. They are all chiefs of staff and ministers of defence. I assume that we are defending ourselves against something. I hope that any defence policy brought forward by the government will start out by telling us what or who it is that we are defending ourselves against. I am not suggesting that we are not, but it seems to have been lost in the shuffle changing the word "defence" into a euphemism for all military action.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the short answer to the question is that we would be defending the values in which we believe and in which we share with a number of like-minded and allied nations.

Senator Frith: No. I am not saying what we defended or are defending; I am saying what we are defending it against. Against whom are we defending those values? That is what I am asking; not what it is we are defending, but against whom?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the role of the military, as the honourable senator knows, extends to the alliances to which we belong, namely, NATO and NORAD. Further, there are peacekeeping operations under the auspices of the United Nations. From time to time, as we saw last summer, there is a necessity to call upon the military to aid the civil power. I would regard all of these activities as being in defence of Canadian values.

Senator Frith: I was not asking about "in defence of." I take it that we will not get anything clearer than that from the government.

Senator Murray: If you want us to write, we will try.

Senator Frith: Stop using the word "defence" to cover all military action; that is all.

RELATION OF DEFENCE POLICY TO EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—POLICY

Hon. Stan Waters: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary to my previous question.

The defence policy flows from an External Affairs policy. What we are facing always is this great vacuum. It is not proper to start tackling defence policy within a vacuum without looking carefully at the External Affairs policy and what Canada has in terms of strategic objectives and goals in its external business. That phase is missing. I would not like to think that we are going to leave this as we did before and wait for someone to feed us here. I cannot see why we cannot take a pro-active stance and come up with some policies relating to External Affairs policy, which will bring some semblance of order into our entire examination of these two threats, namely, External Affairs and defence policy.

THE SENATE

ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, since there is keen interest on both sides of the chamber in the matter of the defence of Canada, and keeping in mind that I introduced an inquiry some time ago recommending that we revive the Standing Senate Committee on National Defence, I wonder if both leaders would give unanimous consent, or ask their caucuses to give unanimous consent, for me to move a motion tomorrow to strike a Standing Senate Committee on National Defence?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): If he will explain what "defence" means.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that suggestion has come forward from my honourable friend, as well as from Balfour and others on both sides of this chamber. We are giving it favourable consideration at the moment.

The honourable senator will know that we are at the present in the process of establishing the Senate committees. I will have something further to report on that, or Senator Doody will, within the next few days.

• (1410)

Hon. Lorne M. Bonnell: Honourable senators, Senator Marshall has asked the question that I was going to ask, for which I thank him. Nevertheless, I should like to say to the Leader of the Government that among the committees that have been sought by the committee chairmen, defence was not mentioned.

In the absence of the Leader of the Government at the opening of the session, it was moved—

Senator Murray: I was here.

Senator Bonnell: —that certain committees be named and struck. If today the Leader of the Government rose in the house and told the chairman of that committee to name a committee on defence, that would solve the problem and certainly there would be unanimous consent on this side. In that manner those who are active in defence and who would like to be on that committee would not be tied up in other work or serving on other committees.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government could move a motion that the committee on National Defence be struck.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Order. This is not the time to do this.

Senator Bonnell: If honourable senators wish, I could move the motion.

Senator Simard: A decision should be made to go ahead with the formation of committees and it should not be done piecemeal.

Senator Bonnell: If honourable senators want me to, I can move. The committee is then formed and it picks the members of the different committees. It could also pick the members of the National Defence committee of the Senate. I would ask the Leader of the Government to do so.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am in favour of having a committee of the Senate to consider defence policy. However, I would not be so bold as to suggest that the feeling is unanimous. I do not know whether it is unanimous. I think most of my colleagues on this side are in favour of having a committee to consider defence policy.

Having said that, it is still open for discussion whether we should proceed by way of a special committee or a subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs Committee or by the creation of a new standing committee, a matter which would take somewhat more time and consideration. But, to me, those are the only questions that remain to be resolved.

THE ECONOMY

CROSS-BORDER SHOPPING—EFFECT ON SMALL BUSINESS IN CANADA—NEED FOR CHANGE IN POLICY—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, may I recall for the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate that about two weeks ago a group of mayors of important towns and cities across the border between Canada and the United States attended in Ottawa on senators from all sides of the house to ask for some consideration of the very difficult position of the Chambers of Commerce and individual businessmen in those border towns and cities because of the very intense cross border shopping that is being done by Canadians.

I have not heard of any action by the government to ease the problem. Certainly, the complaints continue and it looks as though nothing has been done. I wonder whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate might be prepared to tell us how the government plans to deal with what has become a very difficult, almost disastrous situation.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the cabinet minister most directly involved in those discussions is Mr. Jelinek, the Minister of National Revenue. I shall have to ask for an up-to-date report from him.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, there is certainly a consensus in the country, although perhaps not in the government, that it is a combination of the policies of the government, including the high dollar, high interest rates, heavy taxation, and all sorts of other policies of the government, that have caused this heavy cross-border trade.

Dean Wilson, the President of the Automotive Industries Association says, "Cross-border shopping is an increasingly understandable revolt against Canadian prices that are too high because the tax base is too high."

Government officials are now saying that they are quietly forecasting a big cut in the $30.5 billion federal deficit as the GST collects billions of dollars more this year than the $24 billion expected.

Surely there is some room for manoeuvre, for a change in policy, for the government to reconsider the application of the GST, as well as to reconsider the application of some of the excise taxes, to make it possible to alleviate the disastrous situation that has fallen upon these Canadian merchants in the border cities.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not know what my honourable friend has in mind when he talks about alleviating, as he puts it, the application of the GST with regard to businesses within a particular radius of the American border without creating new inequities. In any case, the issue that has emerged in the discussions between the government and interested parties is whether the federal government can find a way to ensure that provincial sales taxes are collected on goods being brought in from the United States by residents of the various provinces.

The honourable senator may have seen that Mr. Jelinek is near to reaching an agreement with the province of New Brunswick on this matter, but that up to the present time he has been unable to do so with the province of Ontario. It will, of course, be a good deal easier in the case of those provinces, such as Saskatchewan and Quebec, which have indicated their intention of harmonizing their provincial sales taxes with the GST.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I have a brief answer to the honourable Leader of the Government in the form of a question. Is he not aware that the GST, as we said all the way through the debate on the subject, is an unfair, regressive tax and should at least be reduced in application as quickly as possible? According to one headline today, "GST windfall brings hints of tax cuts, business says."

The business community is now being told that its taxes will be cut. The GST ought to be cut, because it affects the people of the country as opposed to special interest groups. If you have extra money, one of the things that would very much help the merchants about whom I have been talking would be a reduction of the GST from 7 per cent to 5 per cent, down to a position where it is less regressive and falling less heavily on the ordinary people of Canada.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator has based a question, or, more accurately, has based his representations, on a highly speculative article on the goods and services tax which appeared in the newspapers this morning. I can tell the honourable senator that it would take a year—a good year, so I am informed—before we can draw any reliable conclusions on whether the GST is producing revenues in accordance with the projections we made when we introduced the tax. I can tell the honourable senator that my information from government officials is that, as of now, less than five months since the introduction of the tax, the revenues are on target.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

IMPACT ON CANADIAN POOR—POSSIBLE CHANGES IN REGULATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to ask The Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he is aware of the impact of the GST on what are referred to by Mother Teresa as the poorest of the poor. In the past month I have taken the opportunity to visit those organizations involved in the process of helping the very poorest of them all. I want to tell the Leader of the Government in the Senate that the effect of the GST has been devastating on those people. Talk to the Franciscan Sisters of the Atonement in British Columbia, who feed long lines of men and women eager to have a sandwich; talk to the Salvation Army and to the Harbourlight Mission; talk to the Downtown Eastside Residents' Association in Vancouver, and he will find out what is the impact of the GST on the very poorest of the poor.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: You don't have to shout.

Senator Perrault: I will be heard because the rest of Canada has to understand this. Your complacency and collaboration have brought into law one of the most nefarious acts ever passed by Parliament.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear.

Senator Simard: You be cool.

Senator Perrault: You have been collaborators in this great injustice visited upon the people of Canada.

Senator Simard: Don't shout.

Senator Haidasz: Your government is deaf.

Senator Perrault: It needs to be shouted from every rooftop in Canada. You have totally discredited yourselves with the GST. What were our predictions—that the income yield would be substantially higher than you anticipated, and that the effect on inflation would be substantially greater. This senator who is so vocal from his seat—

Senator Frith: Name him.

Senator Perrault: Senator Simard.

Senator Simard: Kick him out.

Senator Perrault: This collaborator. All the facts are out now and exactly everything we stated is coming true.

Senator Simard: No, no.

Senator Perrault: You are ruining business in the lower part of British Columbia. An estimated $2 billion a year in retail sales is going to the state of Washington. It is said that 20 per cent of milk purchases in British Columbia is being purchased in the United States. Are you happy with that?

Senator Simard: Are you blaming it all on the GST?

Senator Haidasz: And Canadians are being crushed by high taxation.

Senator Perrault: The GST legislation is burdened with inequities.

Senator Stanbury: It was supposed to be revenue neutral.

Senator Perrault: Yet the Conservative Party said it was revenue neutral and was clearly in the public interest.

Senator Simard: What is the question?

Senator Perrault: You are going to meet the people two years from now, and you do not have a chance.

Senator Simard: What is the question?

Senator Perrault: I want to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether or not any changes in regulations are anticipated. I have before me some examples to give him of the effect on poor people. The first example is a person on a Canada disability pension. He gets a T4AP slip and has to pay $434 in taxes. He lost the credit for federal sales tax as he used this to reduce the amount of tax owing to the government. Revenue Canada—Taxation has a form for obtaining a disability credit of $3,327. Due to the criteria outlined in the form, many disabled people feel they would not qualify, or their doctors will not fill it out due to the type of criteria asked. It would seem that the guidelines for obtaining a Canada disability pension and a Revenue Canada—Taxation disability credit should be the same. I am citing this as one of the defects in the measure. Are we going to see any changes? Are we going to see any amendments?

My second example is of a person on welfare disability in B.C. He does not have to pay any taxes and receives the $140 federal sales tax credit. The people in both of those examples receive the same amount of money, but, due to the source of income, one pays taxes and the other does not. The criteria for receiving a Canada disability pension and a Revenue Canada disability credit should be the same so that the person is not penalized for being disabled and unable to work.

There are all sorts of inequities in the goods and services tax. I have another example: A disabled person in B.C. receives $8,328 from the provincial welfare system. Of that money, $4,728 is subject to the GST. This person must eat out as he lives in a hotel with no cooking facilities. The government leader should visit some of these places. It would be a great exercise for the Senate to have a committee to visit some of these areas in Montreal, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, and so on. This fellow lives in a hotel with no cooking facilities, so he must eat out. His whole income is subject to 7 per cent GST. He will pay $330.96 in GST. His rebate for being on welfare will be $233.18. Therefore, the difference of $97.78 will be taken from his food budget to pay for the GST.

I have given these details because the Leader of the Government has every right to say, "It is all right for you to make these generalizations, but what are the facts?" There is a case. This person, who cannot afford to pay, pays almost $100 more even with the rebate. The government leader should talk to these organizations. He should talk to the United Church, the Roman Catholic Church, the Anglican Church, the Salvation Army—talk to them all. They say it is almost impossible to devise a system to deliver these credits to people who really need them, because some of these people are illiterate, some can barely operate, and some are immobile. What is the government going to do to try to bring at least some measure of justice to the GST?

Senator Haidasz: Nothing!

Senator Perrault: I have not seen any move so far except for an article I read in a newspaper in Vancouver that said that certain government officials are pleasantly surprised that the yield of the GST is substantially higher than they had anticipated. Well, the poorest of the poor in Canada are not pleasantly surprised at all! They are paying more than they ever had in their lives and are not receiving an adequate rebate to offset the impact of the tax. It is unfair!

Senator Simard: Question!

Senator Perrault: Honourable Senator Simard, you know what the question is: Is the government anticipating a change in the regulations?

Honourable senators, I want to put this on the record. The Leader of the Government is talking to a colleague during this discussion of the plight of the poor in this country. He is not interested in the poor at all. He would rather have a chat with his neighbour. So let us put this in the record of the Senate. The Conservative Party of Canada has foisted upon the people of Canada one of the most regressive taxes in the history of this nation, and people are suffering as a result of it. We want some assurance that something will be done about it.

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Haidasz: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, good results cannot flow from bad procedure. The honourable senator, in the course of the Oral Question Period, has chosen to make a speech. I am not going to join him in abusing the rules of this place in that way.

Senator Perrault: The Question Period is meant to air the problems and legitimate grievances of the people of Canada, and my comments were totally relevant.

Senator Denis: Leave it to the Speaker!

Senator Murray: I invite my honourable friend to read the Rules of the Senate in that regard. The honourable senator did ask whether any changes are contemplated in the operation of the goods and services tax. Had he been here yesterday—

Senator Perrault: I was here yesterday!

Senator Murray: —or had he taken the trouble to read the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, he would know that the Deputy Leader of the Government tabled a Notice of Ways and Means motion, dated May 17, 1991, to amend the Excise Tax Act and other legislation respecting the implementation of the goods and services tax. It is Sessional Paper No. 343-16.

• (1430)

Senator Perrault: What will be the effect of these changes on the poorest of the poor in Canadian society? Can you expand upon your reply?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the purpose of tabling those documents is for honourable senators to inform themselves on these matters and draw their own conclusions therefrom.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC CANADA—FUNDING FOR PROCESSING FISH ALLOCATED TO THIRD WORLD

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, to change the tone a little bit, I should like to congratulate the government.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Thank you.

Senator Doody: Stop right there.

Senator Bonnell: I would like to congratulate the Minister of Fisheries for the assistance given to the capelin fishermen of Newfoundland so that the male capelin with its high protein content can now be shipped to the poorer nations of the world. There are now millions of Canadian taxpayers' dollars going into this program.

We have in Prince Edward Island a substantial herring fishery, and the roe from the female herring is sold to Japan. However, both the female and male fish are used for fertilizer. Will the government of Canada consider making funds available for the workers in Prince Edward Island to process this fish in order that it might be put to good use and shipped to Bangladesh, to Iraq, to Ethiopia, to all the starving people in the world and, at the same time, make work available in places like Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am sure that Mr. Crosbie will be interested in the suggestion put forward by my honourable friend. Mr. Crosbie is not only Minister of Fisheries, but also Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. In both of those capacities he would have reason to consider the suggestion with great interest.

Senator Bonnell: Will the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate put his support toward the cause to Mr. Crosbie on behalf of the unemployed people of Atlantic Canada and the poor of the world?

Senator Murray: That goes without saying, honourable senators.

EDUCATION

A LEARNING CULTURE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, in the Speech from the Throne we were told that the government proposes to attempt to establish in Canada a learning culture. This learning culture is to be in effect by the year 2000. Some years ago several members of the Senate asked questions repeatedly about what the government was doing with regard to education, particularly post-secondary education, in Canada, and the response at that time was almost invariably that there was to be a conference. As I recall, that conference took place in Saskatoon in the autumn of 1987.

Could the minister have a report prepared on the steps that took place as a result of that important conference so that we will have that report as a point of departure for the next phase of the government's inauguration of a learning culture in Canada?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Yes, honourable senators.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government what program the government has by way of legislation and other activity for the Senate in the next few days and weeks so that we can prepare ourselves accordingly?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Well, honourable senators, either Senator Doody or I could try to deal with the question. There is a bill, the number of which I do not have in front of me at the moment, which concerns the National Energy Board which, it is indicated, may be through the House of Commons as early as tomorrow at second reading.

Senator Frith: Second reading?

Senator Murray: Yes.

Senator Frith: Second reading in the house tomorrow?

Senator Murray: Yes.

Senator Frith: Nowhere near us then?

Senator Murray: No. A number of bills that died at prorogation are in the process of being restored in the House of Commons at the stage they were in at the time of prorogation. This is the case of Bill C-83, trust and loan companies, which was restored at report stage. They are hoping to restore Bill C-73, and to start over with the former Bill C-89.

An Hon. Senator: What are their titles?

Senator Murray: Bill C-89 is described as the money laundering bill. "Proceeds of Crime," I presume, would be a more formal title. Bill C-73 is the dissolution and transfer of crown corporations. Bill C-82, which died on the Senate Order Paper, will be reintroduced in the House of Commons. There is also the hope and expectation that they will be able to restore the former Bills C-26, Railway Act; C-85, railroad transfers; C-58, the Young Offenders Act; and C-78, environmental assessment. I do not know whether they will be able to restore those to the stage where they were at prorogation. That is a matter for discussion between the government and the other parties in the House of Commons.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for that information. As he has said, most of the bills he is referring to, as being the subject of restoration in the other house—in fact, all of them—require unanimous consent, and therefore require discussion among the house leaders. So they do not even appear to be imminent in the other place pending that agreement, and certainly are not imminent here. Even the bill mentioned, the Energy Board bill, I understand is only at the second reading stage in the other place. It has a number of stages to go through.

Can we then anticipate any legislation reasonably within the next two or three weeks? It seems to me not so. Does the government have any other program for the Senate?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there are also bills relating to the implementation of February's budget, which should be brought forward to Parliament. I cannot at the moment predict when any of this legislation will have cleared the House of Commons. Senator Doody and I will try to get a more accurate reading on that situation within the next couple of days, and we will, of course, keep honourable senators informed.

Senator Frith: I understand that it is difficult to make a prediction, but, on the information that the Leader of the Government has given us, it seems that we will not have any legislation before us until the House of Commons has dealt with it. Within the next two or three weeks, is there any other program that the government has for the Senate? Does it intend to keep the Senate sitting while we are waiting for all of these things to clear the other place, or will we be coming here to deal with that legislation when that legislation becomes imminent, which clearly it seems to me, is not at the moment.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it is clearer to my honourable friend than it is to me that there will be no legislation for as long as three weeks. As I have said, I would want to get a more accurate reading of that situation than I have at the moment.

The honourable senator knows perfectly well that I have never been one of those who wants to keep honourable senators sitting in this chamber unnecessarily. I have always been prepared to adjourn the Senate pending legislation from the other place, and also to allow the committees to proceed with their work, where there is work before committees.

Senator Doody reminds me that we do have one piece of legislation to be introduced in the Senate, one of the tax treaties that we see here from time to time, and the deputy leader advises me that it will be ready for introduction in the Senate shortly.

Senator Frith: Then will Senator Doody and Senator Murray be seeking more accurate reading immediately, and might we ask for a report of progress tomorrow?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator will be aware that at adjournment time on Thursday the deputy leader does try to bring honourable senators up to date as to what we may expect with regard to legislation.

Senator Frith: We will look forward to that.

ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION TABLED HONOURABLE JACQUES FLYNN, P.C.

PRESENCE ON PARLIAMENT HILL—CAPACITY AND PAYMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 3 on the Order Paper—by Senator Corbin.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to His Speech at the opening of the Session—(Honourable Senator Everett). (2nd day of resuming debate)

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, in speaking to the Speech from the Throne I would first like to congratulate the mover, Senator Lavoie-Roux, and Senator Meighen, the seconder, on their superb speeches. I was unable to be in the chamber while they were given, but I read them later and, like all senators, was enormously impressed by the intelligent contribution they made.

Honourable senators, the objectives of the speech are set out as being unity, prosperity and government responsiveness. I would propose, in making this speech, to leave the question of unity at this time to others who are more qualified than I to speak on that subject. I propose to deal briefly with the question of responsiveness and concentrate on the government's thrust towards prosperity.

The speech says that unity will be strengthened by a strong economy and points out that Canada is thirty-fifth in population but is the eighth largest economy in the world, and that has given us one of the most advanced social programs of any country in the world.

The speech goes on to indicate that the economy will recover in the second half and will grow strongly in 1992, but it makes the point that that recovery is dependent upon a reduction in interest rates, and that is what catches my attention.

Productivity improvement is a main theme of the speech, which states that prosperity depends on the sale abroad of 30 per cent of our gross national product. It says we must be able to compete with the best. We will, therefore, require the best possible economic conditions and we must make world markets accessible to our goods and services. The risk is not so much of being undercut by low-waged economies but of being out-performed by technically-advanced countries.

The speech goes on to state that we must increase productivity in manufacturing, in resources and in services. It is interesting in all these initiatives that we tend to concentrate on the concept of increasing our manufacturing capacity and our productivity in that particular sphere. But that is not the only element of a productive economy. We sort of look down our noses at the resource sector in a sense because we say that it makes us hewers of wood and drawers of water; but, in fact, in terms of international trade, our resource sector is by far the most productive part of the Canadian economy and will continue for some time, both in non-renewable and renewable resources, to support the standard of living and the social services that we have become used to.

What we really overlook, as a possibility of an earner of foreign exchange and of creating the capacity for the good life in this country, is the effect of service industries. Service industries are not just users, they are contributors, and for too long we have overlooked the possibilities of the foreign exchange earnings of the service industry.

Let me give honourable senators one example. The Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, is a quintessential service industry, but it draws people from all over the United States, from all over North America, and indeed from all over the world, to utilize its services. So it is important that we do not say that for Canada to survive economically in a competitive world we have only to improve our manufacturing capacity. We must improve all the capacities in our economy.

Improved productivity is the greatest contributor, the speech says, to the prosperity of Canadians and to the maintenance of social programs. The speech goes on to see education as the key to productivity improvement. It states that Canada spends more on education than almost any other country on education, but that, as expensive as it is, is failing over and over again. A number of initiatives are suggested for the improvement of the education system, most of which impact on provincial jurisdiction; and again, since I have left the matter of national unity aside, I propose to leave aside the question of national improvement in education because there are others who can speak and with far more meaning than I can bring to that subject.

But the speech points out that Canadian industry spends far less on training its employees than the industries of other countries—one-half of what U.S. industry spends, one-fifth of what Japanese industry spends, and one-eighth of what German industry spends; and the objective of the speech is to quadruple employee training by industry in the next few years.

I am constrained to go back to a report that the National Finance committee wrote on Canada Manpower when I was chairman of that committee. At that time we expressed a concern about the lack of useful training that was done throughout Canada. Most of the training is done through provincial community colleges. The federal government makes a per diem deal with those colleges and trade schools, and they carry out the training. What our investigation showed was that the training was often not relevant to the requirements of industry. What we suggested as a solution was the purchase of industrial training from industry itself—in other words, as a money-making venture for industry. We said that that would automatically make the training more relevant, because industry would not be interested in training employees or future employees for areas in which no jobs were available. We thought that that would be a far better answer to the problem of employee training than anything that is being done today. It was made fairly clear to us at that time that the thrust of employee training had to be changed markedly, to be put in the hands of the employer and taken out of the hands of the bureaucracy. I still feel very strongly that that is a solution that should be looked at.

The speech also goes on to talk about a new responsiveness and new measures for assessing legislation. I, for one, share the feeling of all senators that legislatures should be responsive to the electorate. However there is a vast difference between responsiveness to the electorate and government by referendum. There is a vogue now that legislators should subject to recall; that all legislation should be submitted to a committee of electors in each constituency to decide how the particular member should vote. That is not a democratic solution. That is a solution that will result in nothing but anarchy. I am pleased to see that there is care being taken in the government's suggestion with respect to being more responsive to the electorate that does not seem to go as far as government by referendum.

There is then a comment in the speech on the environment which caught my eye. It is said that the most economically prosperous nations are also the most environmentally conscious. I have no doubt that that is right, but I do not know which comes first. The implication in the Speech from the Throne is that environmental consciousness will somehow produce or be conducive to economic growth. My strong suspicion is that those countries that have grown economically are able to use their resources in a way that preserves the environment to a far greater extent than those that have not. Therefore, we have to be careful. I note that the speech says that, and I am glad that it says that the government wants to achieve positive environmental results without prejudicing economic prosperity. It is extremely important to realize that the enhanced environment will come out of a growing and vibrant economy, not the other way around.

The main thrust of my remarks, however, are related to the government objective to reduce interest rates. Present interest rates are as follows: Three-month treasury bills in Canada have an interest rate of 8.85 percent as against 5.76 percent in the U.S. That is a spread of 3.09 percentage points, or 309 basis points. By contrast, long-term rates in Canada are 9.77 percent, versus 8.29 percent in the U.S. That is a spread of only 148 basis points. The exchange rate this morning in Canada, as published in the newspaper in terms of the American dollar, is 87.06 cents. But it is interesting to look at the forward rates. The rate for funds one year forward is not 87.06; it is 84.93; three years forward, 81.76; ten years forward, 74.70. That does not indicate anything other than that the market perceives an overvaluation of the Canadian dollar and is saying, "If you want to buy forward, the farther you go out, the lower the value of the Canadian dollar."

When we look at an OECD study of purchasing power parity, we find that the Canadian dollar is overvalued by seven cents U.S. in terms of a basket of currencies—that is, over a broad range of countries—and by 10 to 15 cents vis-à-vis the United States dollar. Canada's foreign indebtedness is now $250 billion. That is 35 percent of our gross national product. If you want to compare that to Brazil, their percentage is 30 percent. In 1983, we had a $3 billion surplus on foreign borrowing. In 1990, that had turned around to a $16 billion deficit.

Borrowing in foreign markets is fine if it adds to your productive capacity, but that is not the case in Canada. We have been borrowing in foreign markets to pay for an operating budgetary deficit, and that is bad news. We are in the process today of maintaining an overvalued currency, and we are doing it with high, short-term interest rates. One has to be concerned, when you look at the forward rates and the OECD report, that if there were a loss of confidence in Canada for some reason, the Canadian dollar could collapse very quickly.

Honourable senators will recall that roughly two years ago, the Bank of Canada made a very small reduction in interest rates of certainly less than a point. In fact, I think it was something in the neighbourhood of a quarter of a point, and overnight the Canadian dollar dropped three cents. So that danger, that bombshell, sits there. The adjustment to the Canadian dollar will undoubtedly take place because of the cost structures that exist in the Canadian economy. I just hope it takes place in an orderly manner and not in a manner that is out of our control.

One has to realize that an overvalued currency can be quite useful if inflation is coming from the export-import sectors of the economy. But that is not the case with the Free Trade Agreement in place; it is not happening. Inflation in Canada is coming from regulated prices, from government tax increases, and it is exacerbated by Public Service wage increases. It is not coming from the export industries which, as senators know, are suffering greatly due to our overvalued currency and high interest rates.

Indeed, high interest rates have a devastating effect because they add enormously to the cost of the federal deficit. However, they go further than that. Because they maintain a high dollar, they tend to convert the budget deficit into foreign borrowings. Also, high interest rates, as a portion of the federal budget, tend to crowd out program spending and, most especially, needed social spending.

The Free Trade Agreement should be a great opportunity for Canada and its industries. It should enhance our domestic productive capacity because indeed we are being given the opportunity to feed into the world's largest and wealthiest market. But our policies are having the exact opposite effect. With the Free Trade Agreement Canadian industries are attempting to integrate on a north-south basis instead of an east-west basis, but the Bank of Canada policy is transferring production and employment down to the United States and away from Canada. We are losing a one-time opportunity to expand our productive capacity in this country and that is a very serious matter, honourable senators.

Let us look just at the unit labour costs which are a measure of productivity. Between 1985 and 1990, the U.S. unit labour costs were unchanged. In the same period, Canadian unit labour costs went up by 40 per cent. The lion's share of that increase in Canada over the United States is due to the appreciation of the Canadian dollar and high interest rates.

If we decide that we should reduce the value of the Canadian dollar, we have to be somewhat careful. Our decision must be based on the long-term cost differentials between our economy and the American economy, and it must be combined with policies to reduce those long-term cost differentials. Those differentials, as honourable senators are fully aware, are such costs as the cost of marketing boards, the cost of universality, provincial trade barriers, public wage rates, and the balance between social initiatives and the ability of the economy to pay for them.

Also, if we reduce the value of the Canadian dollar, monetary policy must be able to contain the resulting inflation. Each two to three cent drop in the exchange rate causes a one-time—and I emphasize one time—increase in the Consumer Price Index of approximately 1 per cent. In the recession that we are currently experiencing, we can stand that kind of an increase because I believe it will be offset by price adjustments in other sectors of the economy. I believe it gives the Bank of Canada the opportunity to increase the money supply, and flowing out of that would be a reduction in interest rates and a reduction in the value of the Canadian dollar.

[Senator Everett.]

Conditions today exist that make the policy option possible. The policy would be implemented, as I say, by an increase in the monetary aggregates. There would be a consequent reduction in short-term interest rates and a closing of the spread in short term rates between Canada and the U.S.A.

It is interesting to note that the effect of the lower interest rates on our deficits, and by that I mean our budgetary deficit and our current account deficit, are as follows: 55 per cent of the federal debt is in short-term instruments, that is Treasury Bills and Canada Savings Bonds; $43 billion of our deficit of $30 billion is due to debt servicing. Therefore one can see how dramatic the effect of lower short-term interest rates would be on the size of our deficit. If that deficit goes down, it would mean lower borrowing requirements from the foreign market, and therefore a lower current account deficit.

Certainly, policy initiatives have been taken that make this possibility a real one. For some time the Governor of the Bank of Canada had a zero inflation policy. That has now been dropped, and targets have been agreed upon between the Bank and the Department of Finance stating that the target for inflation in 1992 will be 3 per cent, for 1994 it will drop to 2.5 per cent, and by 1995 it will drop to 2 per cent. Remember, those are not exact figures. They are figures that have a band on either side and they do not include the components of the CPI that tend towards volatility, such as food and energy prices. Therefore what we now have is a situation where monetary policy is a good deal more flexible that it was under the former policy of the Governor.

In addition to that, we have brought program spending under much greater control. Program spending is now producing a $13 billion surplus, which is why I can say that the servicing of the debt is $43 billion in a budgetary deficit that is $30 billion. It is because program spending is adding a surplus of $13 billion, thereby reducing the effect of debt servicing.

As a percentage of Gross Domestic Product, program spending was 19.5 per cent in 1984-85. It dropped to 16 per cent in 1991, and it is to go down to 14.5 per cent by 1995-96. Indeed, in the Speech from the Throne the government suggests there will be legislation to cap increases in program spending.

We are also in the process of reducing our financial requirements which, of course, impact very directly on the amount of foreign borrowing that we require. In 1990-91, our financial requirements were $23.8 billion. The outlook for 1992-93 is that they will drop to $14 billion, to $5 billion in 1993-94 and produce a surplus of $1.5 billion by 1994-95. In other words, we would not have any financial requirements at that time.

The government brought forward in its last budget the concept of a Debt Servicing and Reduction Fund, with the objective that revenues from the GST, privatization and donations to the Crown will all be directed toward debt servicing and deficit reduction. I have heard it said that that is just playing with figures, that if you have an overall deficit then you are just taking money out of one account and putting it into another. The fact of the matter is that if there is control of program spending, and if all the revenues from the GST plus those other revenues are put toward debt servicing and reduction of the debt itself, then the effect is to illuminate how much the shortage is in terms of government expenditures that can be controlled. That makes good accounting sense to me. After all, what accounting tries to do is to tell you what is happening and to give you a clue as to what you can do about it.

As far as the servicing costs on the debt are concerned, they are largely a matter of the economic policy stance at the time. Having made the policy thrust, there is nothing else that you can do. What you can deal with, though, is program spending. By having a debt servicing and reduction fund and channelling all the revenues from the GST to that fund, you can create a situation in which it is clear that the government can reduce the overall deficit, only by controlling program spending and tax revenues.

Finally, there is a cap on federal wage increases. If we were to increase the money supply, reduce interest rates and thereby reduce the Canadian dollar, what we would then have would be a policy that is based on a cost differential between the Canadian and the American economy. It is not a beggar-thy-neighbour policy; by that I mean a reduction in the foreign exchange value of your currency in order purely to encourage exports and to reduce imports. This is a reduction that is related to actual differences in costs between the two countries. Those are not costs that can be worked out in the next week, the next month or the next year. They are costs that go to the very root of being a Canadian. They are costs that are related to the kind of social programs we have, the kind of country that we want. It will take time for us to decide whether we should ever reduce those costs; and, if we should, which ones. If we decide on certain ones, by how much will they be reduced and in how efficient a manner can we do it? Therefore there is a very valid reason for reducing the exchange rate and interest rates.

That policy option is available to us right now. We must be able to take advantage of the Free Trade Agreement. We cannot continue to transfer our productive capacity out of this country and into the United States. Once we make those investment decisions they are very difficult to reverse. If we continue on in the present policy thrust we may well have the effect of reducing inflation, but we may well have taken a good deal of the muscle and sinew out of the productive capacity of this economy.

Under the present circumstances I do not think that there would be a lot of bad fallout from the policy. If we lowered the exchange rate, we would increase our export earnings. We would lower the imports into the country. The result of that would be to increase national income. Our domestic savings would rise. Our trade balance would improve, and thereby we could offset the loss of foreign borrowings. So we are not talking about a situation in which if we lowered the exchange rate we could not replace the foreign borrowings. I believe the situation exists today whereby we would be able to do that. I also believe that if we do not do it those foreign savings will be much harder to come by.

Over the last five or six years—I guess throughout the 1980s—Canada and the United States pretty well had a call on foreign investment. That situation has changed. It has changed very markedly because of East Germany and the requirements of eastern Europe. We will have to compete for those savings. However, if we continue with the present policy, we will find it harder and harder to compete for those savings. We will find it more expensive in terms of our currency and in terms of interest rates.

Now is the time to make the shift. I believe that with the Free Trade Agreement, with the opportunity that is open to our manufacturers, our resource industries and our service industries, conditions are ripe to make the change now. I am convinced that if we do not do it now, it will be forced upon us, and it will be forced upon us when we can least afford it, and when the drop in the exchange rate might be egregious instead of controllable.

I urge upon this government with everything that I have that it get on with the policy change now. Increase the money supply by a reasoned amount, lower interest rates and lower the value of the Canadian dollar in terms of the American dollar. Do it now before it is too late. Do it now before we export too much of our capacity and employment to the United States.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

• (1520)

Senator Everett: Do it now before it is too late; do it now before we export too much of our capacity and employment to the United States.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a question or two. The honourable senator referred to one of the reasons for the monetary policy and how it relates to the control of inflation. He then proceeded to say that three of the important factors behind inflation in Canada are regulated prices, tax increases, and public service wage increases. I believe he said that there were others, but that these were the major ones. I wonder if the honourable senator could tell us in rough terms how much of the inflation he would attribute to regulated prices, to various tax increases, and to public service wage increases? Has he made that breakdown, so that we would know which of these factors ought to be given priority, and so that, as a result of the policy he is now recommending, these factors do not exacerbate inflation. That is my first question.

Senator Everett: It is a very good question and it is really one that I cannot answer very well. I suppose there is some empirical data and I could try to find it. What causes one to think in this direction, first of all, is that a number of economic writers on the subject have indeed said that that is the case. The central bank has had a very restrictive monetary policy over the past three or four years. A lot of the demand part of inflation has been squeezed out of the economy, and we are now in a situation where the increase in prices is largely attributable, not to the demand side of the equation but to costs. Those cost are not coming, for the most part, from private industry where you have a very competitive situation regarding prices. Even in cases where wage increases are being accepted, they are not being passed on to the consumer because the consumer will not pay the resultant higher prices. This is exacerbated to a great extent by what we were talking about earlier, namely the stampede of people down to the United States, to the border towns. That has taken away as much as 10 to 20 per cent of our retail trade in certain sectors, certainly in the area I come from and, I gather, pretty well throughout western Canada. I suppose the same is true for eastern Canada and the central provinces.

Therefore I do not think there is a large demand pull in that situation now because of the central bank policy. What is left is the cost push, and that cost push is in the areas that I have mentioned. If I can find some data on the point, I will most certainly pass it along to the senator. I perhaps should have had it with me, but I can tell him that there are a number of economists who have commented on the subject and would endorse that thinking.

Senator Stewart: The honourable senator drew our attention to the statement of fact in the Speech from the Throne that Canadian industry spends less than half as much on training its employees as does American industry, a fifth as much as the Japanese and an eighth as much as the Germans. He referred to certain studies that had been made by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance some time ago.

I must say that this matter of training has attracted my attention in a more limited way. I have never been able to get a satisfactory set of answers, even from major captains of industry in Canada. One proposition is that, with so many of our manufacturing industries being branch plant industries, the companies prefer to do a good deal of training of their employees for more sophisticated work in the home country.

I wonder if the honourable senator could give us his explanation on the fact reported in the Speech from the Throne. Perhaps at the same time, he could tell me that I am wrong when I say that I do not think that throwing government money at this situation in the way he suggested in his speech, if I understood him, is the answer to the problem?

Senator Everett: I accepted the figures in the Speech from the Throne, much as one would accept a fact published in the daily newspaper. It may be entirely wrong but I did accept it. I referred to the National Finance Committee study on Canada Manpower of a few years ago. I was not so much referring to an increase in expenditures as a transfer of expenditures. The finance committee felt that the use of community colleges to do the training under the manpower legislation was not effective. First of all, there was no control by the federal government. They merely agreed on a per diem rate and they ordered so many days, and that payment was made without any audit whatever by the Auditor General, by the department or by anyone else.

[Senator Everett.]

The second point is that, after going around to different industries and after asking about those trained by the community colleges and how useful they were, we were told, time and again, that they were trained in areas for which there were no jobs, and very often their training was not up to date. We suggested that it would be better to reduce the expenditure to these community colleges and to allow industry to use the same funds on a profit-making basis to train employees. In other words, they would come forward with a plan to do certain training and they would be paid for providing that training on a profitable basis. In fact, we were advised that industry would go for this plan because it would give them a training capacity and it would also be a profit centre for them. We did not think that the government should end the arrangement with the community colleges, but that it would be a good check on the performance of the community colleges and a good check on the performance of industry. Also, that a limited form of competition in that regard would help to alleviate the problem.

I still think, if we are lagging in training in Canada, that that would be the proper way to induce industry to become involved. There would be benefits, not only to industry, but benefits in comparing the efficiency of industry with the community colleges in conducting training and, at the same time, we could compare the community colleges' results with what industry can do.

• (1530)

Hon. Stan Waters: Would the honourable senator permit another question?

Senator Everett: Certainly.

Senator Waters: I found your presentation very interesting but I was puzzled when you said that some items, such as food, energy and some others, are included no longer in the Consumer Price Index. If you exclude such things as food and energy, how can the CPI be an accurate reflection of real costs to consumers?

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I did not say that the CPI did not contain those components. I am saying that, for the purposes of the inflation targets that have been agreed upon between the Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada, as recently published around the time of the budget—and I believe the target established for 1994 was 3 per cent—it is not necessary that they hit the target figure on the button. There is a band on either side. If I recall correctly, I think they removed from the consideration of that 3 per cent figure food and energy prices because they are so volatile. They have gone to what is called the core rate of inflation. While you do not include food and energy prices in the equation, if I recall it correctly, the core rate of inflation nonetheless does reflect what is happening as far as the CPI is concerned. Under ordinary circumstances it probably would not be affected over a period of time by food and energy prices. It is just that when you are establishing a particular target for a particular year, you might have an outbreak of oil price increases as we did during the Gulf War, which could skew the CPI out of line. That is the only reason. The CPI still contains food and energy prices. However, even when it is reported in the newspapers, economists very often will exclude the food and energy prices in order to get the core rate of inflation, because it is a more dependable figure.

Senator Waters: I have a supplementary comment. It might be easier to ensure that you reach your inflation targets by taking everything out of the CPI that affects those targets. In other words, you can manipulate your position so you always make your 2 or 3 per cent inflation target by taking out of the CPI those things that do not fit your parameters.

Senator Everett: A cynic might say that, but I could not possibly comment.

Hon. Nancy E. Teed: Honourable senators, it is a great honour for me to rise in this chamber today and to take part in this debate on the Speech from the Throne. I am particularly honoured to be following Senator Everett who, to use an old cliche, is not an easy act to follow. I was very impressed with your remarks, senator, and I am particularly interested in the length of time you spent in dealing with free trade and foreign policy; areas that you indicated you dealt with because of your expertise and knowledge. Those are areas in which I feel I still have a great deal to learn, and I feel I did learn this afternoon from you.

I should also like to mention your comments in regard to training programs. I think they deserve a lot of merit. That is a subject quite close to me because when I was in government, we put in place some organizations that would retrain employees for the government so that they could indeed deal with problems of today and have the skills necessary to do the work of today. The only disagreement I would have with you in that regard is where you suggested that there should be some profit to those industries and organizations that provide that service or that have those programs in place. I disagree with that. I think it can be done outside of the community college environment, but I would like to see it done by organizations that would not be for profit so it would not cost the government and taxpayers a great of money.

I also want to congratulate my colleagues, Senator Lavoie-Roux and Senator Meighen, the mover and seconder of the Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I concur with those who have spoken before me in saying that both of those speeches were extremely well prepared and very informative to us.

The Speech from the Throne, in my opinion, is indicative of a government committed to improving the quality of life for Canadians, a government with no desire to leave a legacy of debt unbearable for our children and their children.

I believe most Canadians feel that we are living beyond our means. Canadians do want to pay their way. However, Canadians want to see governments become more fiscally responsible. They want to see governments reduce spending. While I very seldom quote from newspapers—in fact, I dare say that, going back over the nine years I spent in the provincial chamber, I did not do it—but in preparing for today, I read an article in the local Telegraph-Journal on Monday, by a gentleman, not a journalist, by the name of Donald Savoie, who said:

> Governments of all political persuasions have failed the test of political courage over the past 30 years in managing government spending in large part because we, the voters, have not insisted that they do so. It is now urgent that we do.
> This has everything to do with necessity and very little with political ideology.

I concur with his remarks. I really do believe that Canadians want to see government reduce spending and become more fiscally responsible. It is imperative that government become more efficient in the manner in which it conducts the affairs of its people. Government must become more inventive in order to implement new and improved programs that are more cost-effective.

Canadians want to hear more about incentives rather than disincentives. The spending control bill to cap federal program spending will, in my opinion, generate some positive suggestions from Canadians as the parliamentary committee embarks on its consultative process. Canadians are people with vision, not people who become bogged down with how things have always been.

I am aware that steps are being taken to arrange for the Ministers of Health and Ministers of Finance, both federal and provincial, to discuss ways and means of continuing to deliver health care services in a more cost-effective manner. That is a very positive step, one that augurs well for the future of the universal medicare system we enjoy in this country.

Another area of the Throne Speech which I support is the government's commitment to protect vulnerable Canadians. All too often governments can lose sight of those living among us who cannot speak or do for themselves. We must continue to initiate programs and services to improve the quality of life for our disabled.

While recognizing that education is solely the responsibility of the provincial governments, the federal government will publish a discussion paper to stimulate and focus discussion on education and training. I agree that the time has come to reach a national consensus on performance, goals and priorities for learning. In order to become a more prosperous country, we must all be well trained to work within a more technically-advanced environment.

The future of our country belongs to our children. We must prepare them well to meet the challenges that lie ahead. Cutting illiteracy in half is an ambitious goal, but I believe Canadians are up to that challenge, and I am sure our colleagues agree. The other goals relative to education and training are also ambitious and attainable.

This government is committed to addressing the serious problems in our country affecting women and children. I am anxious to hear more about the initiatives to prepare our children better to become contributors to Canada's future and, as well, the initiatives regarding violence against women. You will forgive me if I become somewhat parochial for a few moments, but these are issues that were very close to me when I was Minister of Health and Community Services in New Brunswick. If honourable senators believe, as I do, that the use of violence as a way of achieving power or solving problems is unacceptable, then you will agree that we must speak out with confidence against violent and sexist images in the media. We can speak up on behalf of women, children and seniors. We can ask for a greater emphasis on communication and non-violent problem solving in our school curricula. We can stand firm in our conviction that men, women and children have a right to live free from violence.

Only nine years ago, the solitary voice of Margaret Mitchell suggested to the House of Commons that wife abuse was a problem of great magnitude in Canada. How was she greeted? By jeers and hoots of laughter.

In New Brunswick, we responded with an interdepartmental approach among the Departments of Justice, Education and Health and Community Services.

● (1540)

We set up crisis intervention teams as a means of handling violent family episodes. The team consists of a police officer and a social worker who would arrive and work together at the scene of the violent episode. It was my belief as minister that a carefully planned approach would have the greatest chance of meeting its objectives and of becoming an integral part of ongoing community service programs. We must launch public awareness campaigns, improve educational programs, improve protective housing as well as address the issue of financial assistance. All too often women who are abused do not have enough confidence in themselves to see their case brought to justice. With the interdepartmental approach, women are given the counselling and assistance they need to see the batterer brought before the courts. This, Honourable Senators, is a step in the right direction. However, we as a society must still address the issue of the sentence these batterers receive. Suffice it to say, I have very strong feelings on this subject and will leave them for another day, or, indeed, I will share them with the blue ribbon panel of concerned Canadian men and women who will enquire into the serious problems of violence against women in our society as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

In preparing for today, I came across a speech delivered by the Honourable Perrin Beatty on April 16 when he was still Minister of Health. In addressing the Rotary Club in Vancouver he said:

> Protection of victims also means that we cannot allow brutality to continue unchecked. We must strengthen our legal system to ensure that offenders are brought to justice. Under the new Initiative, we will be reviewing the Criminal Code, Divorce Act and other legislation with regard to child abduction and the forcible removal of offenders from the home. Judicial organizations will help to develop materials designed to make judges more sensitive to the issues. Police officers, correctional services staff and lawyers will receive specialized training. And research and projects will aim to make the justice system more flexible and responsive to the realities of family violence.

[Senator Teed.]

These are encouraging words, and, indeed, the government's initiative, "A Call to Action", is commendable. For those who have not read it, it is really quite a speech that the minister delivered that day. It gives a specific example of a woman from Manitoba, and is quite a story.

Honourable Senators, much has been said, and much more will be said, regarding national unity. It is well recognized that we are a diverse country built on tolerance. A country with such natural bounty, we are indeed the envy of people from around the world. Yet there are those who suggest that we want to destroy our very fibre. I pray not. This government could easily have handed this problem over to constitutional experts and a few civil servants, but no, it wishes to listen to Canadians, and hence the Citizens Forum on Canada's future, the Beaudoin-Edwards Parliamentary Committee and, soon to be established, the Constitutional Committee. Through these committees Canadians have had, and will have, an opportunity to express their vision, their hopes and aspirations for this great country of ours. The process we are undertaking will help to remind us of our heritage, of our forefathers who came to this country committed to building a prosperous land for future generations. More importantly, the process will give us all time to think about the kind of Canada we want, a time to listen to our neighbours, a time to tell the government the kind of Canada we envision. The end result will be a Constitution made in Canada, by Canadians that reflects a renewed Canada, a united Canada that will continue to be the envy of the world.

Before closing I wish to speak briefly about my feelings for this upper chamber. When summoned to this chamber, it was with some trepidation, but also with the strong conviction that I wished to contribute in a meaningful way—and indeed, I intend to do so. However, allow me at this time to say that I have been inspired mainly by the wisdom of Senators Molson and Everett, who speak so succinctly of how this place functioned but a few years ago.

I feel, honourable senators, that if we have respect for ourselves and our families, and, indeed, for the people we represent, it is imperative that we become more efficient and more effective in conducting ourselves and the business before us. We hear stories of how gentlemanly this place was. We hear about how effective and efficient pre-study was, that whips were not required. Honourable Senators, I trust gentlemanliness will prevail in this place once again soon.

On Tuesday last many senators paid tribute to our former colleague, the late Richard Hatfield. I would like to add a personal note regarding my former colleague and friend. Richard Hatfield influenced my life for almost twenty years. He was the person who invited me into the political arena, and for that I can still say a hearty "thank you." He was a good friend to New Brunswick and to Canada, and I am grateful to have been able to call him my friend. I was the benefactor not only of his counsel, but also of his infamous cards signed "R" from all over the globe, and his early morning calls. This chamber would have greatly enjoyed his wisdom, but mainly his vision for Canada and her people. We would have been much richer had he been granted a few more years. He will be missed.

Honourable Senators, I will be supporting the motion put forward by our colleague, Senator Lavoix-Roux. Thank you.

Senator Frith: A good idea.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Senator Frith: We all agree with that.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

THE CONSTITUTION

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE PROCESS FOR AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA—MESSAGE FROM HOUSE OF COMMONS

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the following Message from the House of Commons:

Friday, May 17, 1991

Ordered,—That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours with the fact that the House of Commons does unite with the Senate in the reconstitution of the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada that existed in the Second Session of the present Parliament with all the same powers and conditions contained in the Order of Reference dated December 17, 1990;

That the membership of the House of Commons on the Committee be the same membership as on the last day of the Second Session of the present Parliament;

That the evidence adduced by the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada in the Second Session of the present Parliament be deemed to have been referred to the Special Committee hereby appointed;

That the portion of the budget of the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada not expended during the Second Session of the present Parliament be deemed to constitute the entire budget of the Special Committee hereby appointed, unless a supplementary budget is approved by the Board of Internal Economy;

That all contracts entered into by the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada during the Second Session of the present Parliament be deemed contracts for the Special Committee hereby appointed and be deemed to be in force, unless the Special Committee hereby appointed orders otherwise; and

That all motions and orders adopted by the Special Joint Committee on the Process for amending the Constitution of Canada during the Second Session of the present Parliament be deemed to have been adopted by the Special Committee hereby appointed, unless it otherwise orders.

ATTEST

ROBERT MARLEAU,
The Clerk of the House of Commons

—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I indicated yesterday, this motion simply deals with a clause that was omitted inadvertently from the order recreating or re-establishing the special joint committee on the amendment of the constitution. That clause simply says that, during the current session of the present Parliament, all motions and orders adopted by the original committee will be deemed to have been adopted by the new second committee.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the motion to which this is an appendix was adopted by unanimous consent. I believe leave was granted on May 13th, or perhaps May 14th, and this seems clearly to be a proper inclusion. Since Senator Keon apparently seconded the motion of Senator Doody, I resort to the metaphor that if we are to revive the body, we might as well revive it with all its organs intact.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY—TERMINATION OF DEBATE ON EIGHTH SITTING DAY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, once again I move the motion of which I gave notice yesterday.

I move:

> That the proceedings on the Order of the Day for resuming the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to His Excellency the Governor General's Speech from the Throne addressed to both Houses of Parliament be concluded on the eighth sitting day on which the order is debated.

It has been a standard for the past several years in this place that we put a limit on the length of time that we dedicate to the address in reply. In other words, we have eight days to debate the address and reply, but that does not include, of course, days on which the Senate does not sit, nor days on which the issue is not debated.

• (1550)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in the time that I have been here we have always adopted a like motion. I asked Mr. Greene to check on just how ancient is the tradition. Apparently the first of such motions was moved by Senator Langlois and seconded by Senator Roebuck on October, 3, 1969. No one has come up with any reason why we should not continue with the tradition. Therefore, we support this motion.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourables senators, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 349 residents of the province of Quebec who oppose the goods and services tax. They are from Yamachiche, Ste. Clotilde, La Presentation, Plessisville, St. Albert, Shawinigan, L'Assomption, St. Leonard and Montreal. These are 349 people from all over the province.

[English]

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) presented Bill S-2, to implement conventions between Canada and Finland, Canada and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and Canada and the United Mexican States for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax and the prevention of fiscal evasion and a convention between Canada and the United Mexican States for the exchange of information with respect to taxes.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next, May 28, 1991.

PRIVATE BILL

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST CHURCH IN CANADA—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—FIRST READING

Hon. P. Derek Lewis, for Senator Frith, presented Bill S-3, to amend the act of incorporation of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lewis, for Senator Frith, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, May 28, 1991.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

FIRST REPORT PRESENTED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, Chairman of the Committee of Selection, presented the following report:

Thursday, May 23, 1991

The Committee of Selection has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Pursuant to Rule 66(1) (a), your Committee nominates the Honourable Senator Bélisle, as Speaker pro tempore.

Respectfully submitted,

ORVILLE H. PHILLIPS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Phillips, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, the 28th May, 1991, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-fifth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled: "It's Almost Too Late", tabled in the Senate on 31st January, 1991, (Sessional Paper No. 342-973).

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NOTICE OF MOTION TO ESTABLISH STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MOTION WITHDRAWN

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I should like to give notice of a motion to establish a Standing Senate Committee on National Defence—

Honourable senators, the deputy leader has just given me to understand that there is a disposition to establish the committee. Therefore, I shall not proceed with the notice of motion.

Notice of motion withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 28th May, 1991, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: If I may take a moment, yesterday Senator Murray was asked about the legislative program for the coming week. He gave an undertaking that he or I would report to the Senate today on what the program appears to be.

At this point it seems possible that two bills will be available for second reading on Tuesday; certainly at least one bill will be available, namely, the one I just introduced, the Senate bill on income tax conventions. I am told that Bill C-8 is expected from the House of Commons today. That was the old Bill C-73, an Act to provide for the dissolution of transfer of certain crown corporations. We will certainly have these two bills next week. There is a possibility of others, but that word is the correct one to use, namely, a possibility rather than a probability. I would not want to mislead the Senate.

There is also the question of the committees of the Senate. The report of the Selection Committee on the nomination of a Speaker pro tempore has been placed before the Senate today, and next week we hope to make further progress with that and with the selection of committees.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION TABLED

IMMIGRATION

LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Haidasz with regard to the Al-Mashat immigration case. It is a copy of statements by the ministers involved, namely, Ministers Valcourt and McDougall, together with a report by the Deputy Ministers of Employment and Immigration and External Affairs. I should like to table this composite answer.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to His Speech at the opening of the Session—(Honourable Senator Frith). (3rd day of resuming debate)

[Senator Marshall.]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this order stands in the name of Senator Frith; but he indicated yesterday that if any other senator wishes to speak, he would yield. I believe that Senator Chaput-Rolland would like to speak.

[Translation]

Hon. Solange Chaput-Rolland: Honourable senators, it is with a lot of hesitation that I rise to address briefly one aspect of the Throne Speech. It is an issue in which I have been engrossed for almost thirty years, as in the case of many others in this Chamber. I am talking about the place occupied by Quebec in Canada, Quebec's role in our history, and Quebec's substance in this tormented era. I am all the more embarrassed, after having listened to my colleagues from this side, Senators Lavoie-Roux, Grimard, Meighen, to name a few, because I don't know what I could possibly add to their comments that would be original.

[English]

All these who so far have analyzed the Speech from the Throne have shed on it a light for which I am not qualified to comment, but there are in life some self-imposed obligations.

[Translation]

—obligations which one cannot escape without failing to honour one's responsibilities as part of a country that still cares about justice and social peace, although we know how fragile these two aspects of our democracy are, here as in other parts of the world.

However, I can no longer speak of national unity, because the Québécoise that I have become over the years no longer believes in it very much. This unity may be and is an ideal, but it no longer fits our real situation since it sank in the troubled waters of Meech, even though most provinces—

[English]

—have given us the very proof that it could be achieved if all senators had been respected concerning the five modest suggestions of Quebec.

[Translation]

But sticking to the subject of the Speech from the Throne, I think that at this time in our collective existence we must invent a national will in order to continue to make our future together.

I am neither a constitutional nor a legal expert; I am just a woman like many others in Quebec and all regions of the country who has tried for a great many years to communicate with her people and who, I think, has sometimes succeeded because life has taught me that to reach their hearts, you must talk with people and not simply talk at them.

[English]

To speak with people is so infinitely better than to speak at them.

[Translation]

When I was appointed to the Senate, like most of you, I really believed, although I was mistaken, that it would be possible for each and everyone of us, on both sides of this House, to say noble things about our past, our present and our future. However, in less than two months, I had come to realize that Quebec, which is my first but not my last concern, is very seldom alluded to in this institution, which is almost always divided by partisan debates, at a time when the country as a whole is in jeopardy because of our political and constitutional differences. Dear colleagues from both sides of this House, I hope that, in the months to come, we will have matured enough and lived enough personal experiences to work together so that, at last, this House of sober second thought becomes indeed a place of sober second thought. If only we took the time that we spend squabbling and filled it with useful discussions aimed at helping our country get ahead, it seems to me that we would accomplish something useful which would enable us to regain the confidence of our fellow Canadians, for I am not convinced that we still have that confidence.

When we look beyond our borders—

[English]

When night after night we see on our television screens children dying of hunger—the result of some fractured peace, I, as a Québécoise—as with many, if not most, of you, I am sure—cannot look at those horrible pictures without weeping with shame, because, when I look around me, notwithstanding the fact that we too have poverty and sickness, I feel ashamed.

We seem to have inherited social peace as a grace of God, but selfishly we seldom think about what we have; rather, we speculate with an almost visible animosity on what we do not possess,and we seek to obtain with anger instead of compassion and love what we might possess.

[Translation]

Yesterday, I looked back (knowing full well I might open myself to ridicule), on what was then called the Pépin-Robarts Commission, because I am still convinced, fifteen years later, that we could, if we really wanted to, find in one of their publications entitled A Future Together some pieces of the solution to this Quebec-Canada crisis. The Canadian duality, which we recognized and proclaimed in 1979 as part of the basic principles of our federation has become the Canadian duellity, for lack of a better word. The disheartening and silent sadness most Quebeckers feel without your knowing could well turn into loudly-expressed anger if we do not get down to the task of finding some answers instead of doing our best to dodge the issues. If, here and there, people were to vent their anger, we would all be responsible. After all, as a King of France once said: "After all, this country is certainly worth a mass."

Many of us, and I am one of them, have lost in the waters of Meech Lake part of their love for and their confidence in this country which twice accepted the demands of Quebec only to reject them later because of one province and one man. Should I remind you, however, that this country did not begin to exist in 1867 but in 1534, and even long before that since the great native peoples had developed it earlier long before we arrived here. The cross set up by Cartier in Gaspé is still weighing heavy on our shoulders, and for how long? That is why I am telling you clearly that we must stop dreaming in terms of national unity and try to find a national will to recognize and accept what is making us different before looking for what is bringing us together.

[English]

A country is so much more important than a Constitution, and I hope my friend Senator Beaudoin will forgive me when I say that. When a Constitution does not accommodate the people who form the core of the country, then let us acquire the courage to alter it, to change it, to modify it. In Canada we all seem paralysed by the past when, in fact, it is our future that counts for our children and grandchildren.

[Translation]

When one has travelled the country like I have, one understands that beyond any political difficulty, what is deeply dividing us is precisely what should firmly bind us together, that is to say the languages, official or not, of our huge country. For heaven's sake, let us all speak the language of our choice in our every day life, while respecting that of others and maybe we will at last have made that first step towards the great coming together we all long for.

Honourable senators, I for one would like to believe before I leave for some other place or simply to recuperate among my family and friends, that the languages of our country have finally become instruments of culture rather than weapons of division. I thank you, honourable senators.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, for Senator Frith, debate is adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 28, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 28, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CROWN CORPORATIONS DISSOLUTION OR TRANSFER AUTHORIZATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-8, to provide for the dissolution or transfer of certain Crown corporations and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the day for second reading on Thursday next, May 30, 1991.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 136 citizens of New Brunswick who are opposed to the goods and services tax.

INTERNATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF FRENCH SPEAKING PARLIAMENTARIANS

ACTIVITIES OF CANADIAN SECTION

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table in the Senate, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian Section of the Assemblée internationale des parlementaires de langue française.

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the petitions against the GST and the demand for an election to rectify this wrong-doing continue to come in addressed to me. I have the honour to present these petitions on behalf of the petitioners. Of course, I will not read each name—not today, at least. But as usual, I will recite the names of the towns and villages across the province of Quebec, and the cities where they originate.

These come from different municipalities in Quebec: Granby, St. Charles Sud, Cowansville, Dunham, Richelieu, Victoriaville, St. Hyacinthe, La Présentation, Montreal, Tracy, Princeville, Norbertville, St. Leonard and Laval. There is another petition from Montreal, St. Michel, Farnham, Rainville, Otterburn Park, St. Hilaire, Barrante, Roxton Pond, Chicoutimi, Baie D'Orfe, Beaconsfield, Pointe Claire, Rougemont, Asbestos, Terrebonne, Rogue-Brune, Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, Acton Vale, Wickham, Vanier, St. Angele de Mannoir, Cartierville, Rouyn-Noranda and Jonquiere. There is a total of 897 names just received in this one day. All of them, as I said before, set out the evils of the imposition of the GST and ask for an immediate election to remedy the wrong.

Similarly, petitioners from Ontario, in this case from Etobicoke, Toronto, Thornhill, Rexdale, Cambridge, and Kirkland Lake, request the same. That is a total of 253 names, for a grand total of some 1150 names just for this day from Ontario and Quebec.

AGRICULTURE

FARM CREDIT CRISIS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, May 29, 1991, I will call the attention of the Senate to the farm credit crisis that has been exacerbated by the inaction of this government.

THE ECONOMY

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ADDRESS ECONOMIC ILLS—NOTICE Of INQUIRY

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I also give notice that on tomorrow, Wednesday, May 29, 1991, I will call the attention of the Senate to the failure of this government to address the economic ills of Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ADDRESS UNEMPLOYMENT IN CANADA, PARTICULARLY IN ALBERTA—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, thirdly, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, May 29, 1991, I will call the attention of the Senate to the unemployment situation in Canada, and in Alberta in particular.

QUESTION PERIOD

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

DEADLINE FOR REVIEW OF ACT—ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO UNDERTAKE REVIEW

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, on June 27, 1986, we passed in this chamber Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity. Section 13(1) of that Act states:

> Five years after the coming into force of this Act, and at the end of every three year period thereafter, a comprehensive review of the provisions and operation of this Act including the effect of such provisions shall be undertaken by such committee of the House of Commons as may be designated or established by the House for that purpose.

The Act was proclaimed on August 13, 1986, and so that deadline with be reached on August 13 next.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether section 13(1) will be met—that is, which committee of the House of Commons will be reviewing the Employment Equity Act and what will be the deadline for that review?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must confess that I do not know the answer to that question. I shall consult with my colleague, the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons, and bring in a reply later.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, there have been a great many discussions on the House of Commons side about the review of this act. There is more than one committee to which this review might go. There is now a widespread view that a special committee may be established. I wonder if the Leader of the Government is aware of this and has a comment on that possibility?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am afraid I am not up to date on those discussions in the other place. I must take refugee in my answer to the first question and will ask for a report from the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REROUTING OF WESTERN TRAFFIC THROUGH UNITED STATES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Is the government aware of a decision by the Canadian Pacific Railway to reroute a good part of its western traffic outside of Canada and through U.S. lines? This will have a particular effect on the province of Manitoba. The main products involved in the movement are potash from Saskatchewan and some coal which normally was carried on Canadian lines, providing employment for Canadian railway workers, which is now being rerouted through the United States. Is the government proposing to take any action?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Again, honourable senators, I cannot be very helpful with information today. I do not have a note on that particular matter, but I shall ask my colleague the Minister of Transport if he has something to report on it.

THE SENATE

RESPONSIBILITY OF LEADER OF GOVERNMENT TO ANSWER QUESTIONS

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government give us a little guidance on how we should go about asking questions under the new structure—

Senator Barootes: Quietly and politely.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What would you know about that, sir?

Senator Olson: We will do that. It will just be a continuation of the same procedure.

Since the Leader of the Government in the Senate is the only minister here, it is accepted that he is obliged to answer questions relating to all the activities of the government because there is no one else to do so.

I notice that the Leader of the Government is now on six cabinet committees, and he may not have time to be here as much as we would like him to be. As a matter of fact, he takes the Chair on a new cabinet committee on Human Resources, Social and Legal Affairs. That is what it says in this communiqué that was sent out from the Prime Minister's office.

Senator Murray also becomes a member of the new cabinet committee on Canadian Unity and Constitutional Negotiations. He continues to chair the Communications Committee. He is a member of the Priorities and Planning Committee, the Operations Committee and the Expenditure Review Committee.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I cannot think of anything else that he is on. He has social and legal affairs; he has constitutional negotiations; he has priorities and planning, operations and expenditure review. He has the whole gamut.

He does not really need to take notice of anything; he has been at every cabinet committee meeting. He has a responsibility to answer questions in this chamber on everything the government does.

I think the government leader has already ducked three times today. I have been there. It used to be handy once in a while to duck with, "I will take notice of the question," even if one knows the answer. Perhaps he could help us and guide us in how we should go about asking questions when we know he has been to all these cabinet committee meetings. Yet he says, "Well, I will have to take notice of the question."

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the situation has not changed. I have no portfolio responsibilities on which to report to Parliament. As I have done for the past five years, I will attempt to answer a question when it is asked, when I am reasonably confident that my information is not only accurate but up to date and that I can reflect the policy of the minister in question. When I cannot do so, I will have to take notice of the question and bring in a delayed reply from my cabinet colleague.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, if the minister insists that that is the way in which he will conduct himself, I guess we have to accept that. However, I think he will remember in the past when he used to complain.

Senator Murray: No.

Senator Olson: Yes, he did. He complained day after day that he did not get answers.

Senator Murray: Not about that.

Senator Olson: That was when there was a reversal of certain positions in this chamber. Since I have had some experience in this area, I am sure that almost everything that has been asked in this chamber today has been the subject of a discussion in one or other of the committees I have named. Of course, if the minister was there he knows the answer. I hope that he will take a slightly different attitude and that he will be a little more forthcoming. Sometimes we get a quicker answer from the deputy leader, and he does not attend any of these committees. That has happened more than once.

The other problem that I have that I want to complain about is that sometimes it is months after the minister has taken notice before you get an answer—weeks and months. It is as if he never takes notice at all. I hope that he will become a little more forthcoming. Time is of the essence in almost all of these matters, and if the answer from the government does not come until long after, it may no longer be valid or important to the person seeking the information. I hope the minister will assure us now that he will do a little better in this session than he did in the last one, since he has access to all these committees.

Senator Murray: As always, honourable senators, I will make every effort to make sure the honourable senator is well informed.

JUSTICE

GUN CONTROL—STATUS OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a nice simple question to which, I am sure, the government leader will have an answer.

Senator Buckwold: A simple answer.

Senator Doody: Not too complicated.

Senator Stanbury: On several occasions since the presentation of the report of the special House of Commons committee on the now defunct Bill C-80 concerning firearms, the Minister of Justice has assured interested persons that a new firearms bill would be introduced and considered as a priority of the government. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us whether or not his cabinet colleague is now prepared to introduce new gun control legislation prior to the summer adjournment, as she has publicly promised?

[Senator Murray.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can report that my colleague, the Minister of Justice, hopes to bring in that bill, perhaps as early as this week. I hope the honourable senator will not hold me to that, because I am obviously not authorized to make a commitment based on Miss Campbell's hopes, but I can say that the legislation will not be long delayed. Its presentation in the other place is imminent.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Not only has the minister mentioned several times that she will introduce the legislation—and I am gratified to hear that it may be that quickly—but she has assured her correspondents that the legislation will be passed before the summer recess. I wonder, first of all, how that assurance might be given. I suppose it means that it will be extremely attractive legislation. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise us as to the timetable of his government on the issue, and can he tell us whether it is his intention as well that the expected bill will be law prior to the summer recess?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot do that, for the simple reason that I do not know exactly when the bill will be introduced, although I expect it will very soon. Secondly, its progress through the House of Commons would depend on discussions in the other place between the house leaders. The honourable senator may be aware that the House of Commons is required, under its rules, to adjourn for a summer recess on, I believe, June 21, and that, of the sitting days between now and then, there is only a limited number that may be devoted to government legislation. So it will be a matter of discussion in the other place between the house leaders.

Then, of course, even if the bill does clear the House of Commons before June 21, there remains its passage through the Senate, and I presume honourable senators would want to give the bill careful scrutiny here and especially in committee. I should point out that this is the kind of bill that might be amenable to pre-study.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I am aware of those constraints, but I wonder whether the minister is, because of her undertaking that it would become law before the summer recess.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CONTINUED PRESENCE OF CANADIAN FORCES BASES IN GERMANY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, the German Foreign Minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, visited Ottawa on May 21 and held discussions with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Barbara McDougall. One of the topics of those discussions, as mentioned after their meeting at the press conference held by Mr. Genscher, was the question of the continued presence of Canadian military forces in Germany. The German Foreign Minister urged Canada to retain its present complement in Germany. Miss McDougall was present, but there is no record in the transcript of her being asked what Canadian policy is in that respect.

• (1420)

Could the Leader of the Government tell us whether it is the intention of the government to retain the present complement in Germany, or at least a substantial complement?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there has been no change in Canada's policy in that respect.

Senator Austin: Could the minister tell us whether there is anything in the present defence policy studies, which the Associate Minister of Defence, Mary Collins, said would be released towards the end of June, touching on this particular subject? Is the matter now under consideration?

Senator Murray: As I indicated in the Senate last week, honourable senators, the government has embarked—and has only just embarked—on a review of Canadian defence policy. I am not aware that studies are about to be released.

As I also indicated last week, ministers have before them a statement by the chief of the defence staff outlining the views of the military as to the appropriate defence policy for Canada.

However, I think it could be some time before any determination would be made of these issues and, as I did last week, I would encourage honourable senators to take the matter under consideration, probably through a committee on defence policy such as was suggested by Senator Marshall and other honourable senators.

FISHERIES

LEGALITY OF FEES CHARGED TO FISHERMEN FOR MONITORING CATCHES

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government tell us whether the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Justice, or any other department has yet come to a conclusion about whether the Government of Canada had a legal right to charge fees to the fishermen for monitoring their fish catches at the wharfside.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would have to take that question as notice.

Senator Simard: That was answered in committee last week.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have several delayed answers to questions which I would ask to be printed as part of today's proceedings.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

APPEAL OF RULING—POSSIBLE REVOCATION OF AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON TRILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the first delayed answer I have is in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 11, 1991 by the Honourable Senator Peter Bosa regarding the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement—Appeal of Ruling—Possible Revoking of Agreement—Effect on Trilateral Negotiations.

The Government strongly indicated its concerns about the U.S. request for an Extraordinary Challenge Committee.

Prime Minister Mulroney raised the matter with President Bush during his visit to Ottawa on March 4, 1991. Former Trade Minister Crosbie raised the matter with U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills. Ambassador Burney raised the matter with numerous Washington, D.C. interlocutors.

The message conveyed was (1) no grounds existed for challenging the binational panel's actions; and (2) the U.S. request for an Extraordinary Challenge Committee was an abuse of the FTA.

We have a deal with the United States. It will not be renegotiated but we want it respected.

The Extraordinary Challenge provisions of the FTA are not a flaw in the Agreement. However, the use of the Extraordinary Challenge provisions in this pork case is an abuse of the process.

As the Prime Minister said in the House on April 11, 1991:

"We have a deal. It is not going to be renegotiated. We want it respected, and the Government of Canada is going to make sure it is respected."

TRANSPORT

FERRY SERVICE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INCREASE IN RATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the second delayed answer I have is in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 15, 1991 by the Honourable Senator Lorne Bonnell regarding the Ferry Service to P.E.I.—Increase in Rates.

On Monday, April 5, 1991 Marine Atlantic Inc. introduced a system of round-trip ticketing on their Prince Edward Island ferry service. From that date no tickets were required for passengers and vehicles going to P.E.I. Instead, round trip fares were collected on departure from the Island.

This change will reduce staffing, maintenance and operating costs associated with the toll booths and facilitate traffic flow into the Cape Tormentine terminal. A similar change is planned for the beginning of the operating season of the second Island service provided by Northumberland Ferries Limited.

In preparation for the changeover, Marine Atlantic Inc. posted information notices to its customers at the terminals and in local newspapers. As well, the system changes received wide media coverage. The newspaper advertisements informed the public who were planning to travel on or near April 15 to plan their trip to avoid incurring an extra fare. It is possible that, despite Marine Atlantic's efforts, some passengers who chose to leave the Island on or shortly after April 15 found themselves making an unavoidable one-time payment.

Marine Atlantic considered a possible rebate procedure but ruled it out because it would have been impossible in practical terms to administer, relative to the amount of the fare involved. Marine Atlantic believe that most of its customers were aware of the changeover situation and made their plans accordingly.

With regard to the question of a new ship for the Caribou-Wood Island ferry service, planning for this project has been on-going and it is expected that an announcement on the subject will be made fairly soon.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ELIMINATION OF TOXIC WASTE—STATUS OF FEDERAL PROGRAM

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the third answer I have is in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 16, 1991, by the Honourable Senator Colin Kenny regarding Elimination of Toxic Waste—Status of Federal Program.

(The answer follows:)

Instead of siting one incinerator in central Canada, the Federal PCB Destruction Program aims at siting regional PCB destruction facilities. These additional PCB destruction facilities will be sited when regional public consultation efforts have been completed.

Canada's Green Plan calls for the destruction of all PCBs under federal jurisdiction in Atlantic Canada, Québec, and Ontario, by 1996.

As of December 1990, the federal government had 217.4 tonnes of contaminated mineral oil (CMO) in service, and 115.9 tonnes of CMO in storage for disposal.

The total quantity of known CMO in the federal inventory has increased from 120 tonnes in 1988 to 503 tonnes in December 1990 (217.4 tonnes in-use, 115.9 in-storage, and 169.9 tonnes destroyed). The increase is a result of the discovery of new low-level PCB -contaminated transformers through routine testing procedures. It is possible that more contaminated oil containing transformers will be discovered as testing continues.

Over 4,000 tonnes of PCB wastes have already been destroyed at the Alberta Special Waste Treatment Centre near Swan Hills, Alberta, and over 5,000 tonnes of contaminated mineral oil have been decontaminated nationally.

A mobile incinerator leased by the federal government has destroyed 3,000 tonnes (47% by weight of the total federal inventory) of federal PCB wastes, and 600 tonnes of provincial PCB wastes at a site in Goose Bay, Labrador.

[Senator Doody.]

INVESTMENT CANADA

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION RESPECTING FOREIGN TAKEOVERS OF NEW BUSINESSES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the fourth delayed answer I have today is in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 14, 1991, by the Honourable Senator Royce Frith regarding Information Respecting Foreign Takeovers of New Businesses.

(The answer follows:)

Investment Canada has prepared the attached statistical summary on investments by non-Canadians approved or notified to the Agency pursuant to the Investment Canada Act each calendar year from mid-year 1985 to 1990.

During this five and a half year period, there were over 5,000 positive business investment decisions by non-Canadians in Canada, and the cumulative value of these decisions is well over $90 billion.

The data show that most years there are 200 to 300 new businesses reported, and the value in recent years has been $750 million to $1 billion. One major billion dollar project in 1989 pushed the total value of new businesses that year above the $2 billion level.

Each year there have typically been 600 to 750 acquisitions. The book value of the Canadian businesses involved has varied considerably from one year to another from between $11 billion to $24 billion.

Of the Canadian businesses acquired, about one in ten were previously foreign controlled. On the basis of book value assets involved, however, about one-third of the business assets were previously foreign controlled.

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS OF NEW BUSINESSES

TECHNICAL NOTES

1. The New Business data comprises two items: the number of new business notified; and the value in thousands of dollars is the amount of investment which the entrepreneur expects to make during the first two years of his business operations.

2. The Acquisitions data comprises two items: the number of cases (whether subject to notification only, or subject to review and subsequently approved); and the value in thousands of dollars is the value of the assets of the Canadian Business Enterprises being acquired. It should be noted that this value is an indicator of the scope of the business, but is not its present market value or purchase price which may be considerably higher or lower.

3. While the table adds together the values for New Businesses established and Canadian Businesses acquired each year, the derivation of these values is not the same. Hence, the use of such totals brings some imprecision to the individual value numbers.

4. Not all investment proposals approved under the Act are completed. Sometimes this is well publicized (e.g., two bids for a single Canadian business), and sometimes it is revealed during monitoring. Over the five and a half year period, transactions approved but not implemented amounted to 41 investments of the 5,266 total, and accounted for some $5.5 billion of the $98.7 billion total value.

5. These statistics also contain instances where a single Canadian business was acquired more than one time over this time period.

6. The statistics do not reflect the very substantial reinvestment made in foreign controlled corporations operating in Canada.

7. The statistics do not show those situations in which a foreign controlled corporation operating in Canada is acquired by a Canadian controlled corporation.

8. With respect to whether an acquisition was previously Canadian controlled or foreign controlled, the Agency has tracked applications since 1985. However, it was only in 1989 that this data was included on the Agency's notification forms. The statistics with this breakdown are therefore in two time periods:

   mid-1985 to 1988—acquisitions requiring applications

   1989 and 1990—all acquisitions whether applications or notification.

9. The different ratios shown between the mid-1985 to 1988 period compared with 1989-1990 is likely due in large part to the change in the different populations being measured, specifically the size of firms.

INVESTMENT CANADA

ACQUISITIONS BY NON-CANADIANS RESOLVED JUNE 30, 1985 TO DECEMBER 31, 1990 ($ billion)

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella moved the second reading of Bill S-2, to implement conventions between Canada and Finland, Canada and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and Canada and the United Mexican States for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax and the prevention of fiscal evasion, and a convention between Canada and the United Mexican States for the exchange of information with respect to taxes.

[Translation]

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to implement conventions between Canada and Finland, Canada and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and Canada and the United Mexican States for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion and a convention between Canada and the United Mexican States for the exchange of information with respect to taxes.

[English]

Before discussing the details of this bill, honourable senators, I should like to say a few words about the desirability and the role of tax treaties. As honourable senators are aware, tax treaties are useful in promoting international trade and facilitating international investment. In particular, the existence of a tax treaty enshrining the basis, as well as the rate, of the applicable taxes generates certainty and provides a general air of tax stability that can only be reassuring to investors and traders. In short, a treaty rate of tax cannot be increased unless the treaty itself is modified or terminated. Termination is a rare event while revision is a lengthy process requiring the concurrence of the two governments, and in both cases taxpayers will normally receive advance notice of the impending changes.

Tax treaties also reduce annoyance in the operation of the tax system by eliminating the necessity of paying tax on business profits in the source country if there is no permanent establishment in that country, and by providing a mechanism to settle problems encountered by taxpayers. More importantly, tax treaties eliminate or alleviate double taxation in the instances where international transactions are involved that may give rise to the same income being taxable in the hands of the same person by more than one state.

This international juridical double taxation generally arises in three cases: first, where each contracting state subjects the same person to tax on his or her worldwide income; second, where a person is a resident of a contracting state and derives income from the other contracting state and both states impose tax on that income; and, third, where each contracting subjects the same person, not being a resident of either contracting state, to tax on income derived from a contracting state, which may occur, for instance, in the case where a non-resident person has a permanent establishment in one contracting state through which he or she derives income from the other contracting state.

Honourable senators, for the purpose of eliminating double taxation, the tax treaties establish two categories of rules. First, in the case of a number of items of income, an exclusive right to tax is conferred on only one of the contracting states. In this way the other contracting state is prevented from taxing, and double taxation is thus absolutely avoided. Second, for other items of income, the right to tax is not an exclusive one. These provisions confer on the state of source, or situs, a full or limited right to tax, and the state of residence must allow relief so as to avoid double taxation.

The major reform of Canada's income tax legislation in 1971 required Canada to expand its network of double taxation conventions—tax treaties—with other countries. Since that time, negotiations for the conclusion of new treaties or the revision of existing ones have been entered into with almost 75 countries. In this bill, honourable senators, the three tax conventions under review follow the general pattern of the conventions previously approved by Parliament, and the number of Canadian tax treaties in force is presently 49.

Honourable senators, I will now indicate briefly the main elements of these tax treaties. I will deal with the Exchange of Information Convention at the end of these remarks. These treaties generally provide that dividends may be taxed in the source country at a maximum rate of 15 per cent. However, in the case of dividends paid to a company that is a resident of a contracting state, a 10 per cent rate will apply if the company receiving the dividends holds an equity interest of at least 10 per cent—in the case of Mexico 25 per cent—of the voting power in the company paying the dividends.

In the case of interest paid by a resident of one country to a resident of the other country, a general rate of 10 per cent, and in the case of Mexico 15 per cent, will apply. There are, however, a number of exceptions. Interest paid in respect of a bond or similar obligation of the government, a political subdivision or local authority, is exempt in the country in which it arises. In addition, the three treaties contain a provision that would allow that interest paid in respect of a loan made, guaranteed or insured, or a credit extended, guaranteed or insured by certain state entities—an example in Canada would be the Export Development Corporation—be taxable only in the state where the recipient of such interest resides.

With respect to royalties, the conventions provide for a general rate of 10 per cent—15 per cent in the case of Mexico—in the source country. Copyright royalties are generally exempt under the three treaties. However, in the case of Czechoslovakia and Mexico they must be subject to tax in the state where the recipient resides in order to qualify for the exemption from source taxation.

Some of the other matters also dealt with in these tax treaties include the treaty provisions dealing with capital gains and reflect the standard Canadian position enabling the source country to tax gains arising in the sale of real property, business assets and shares in real estate companies. Under the conventions, discrimination on the basis of nationality is proscribed, thereby ensuring nationals of a country equal treatment with nationals of the other country in the same circumstances. However, this does not prevent a country from providing fiscal incentives; for example, the small business deduction on the basis of the residency of the taxpayer.

In the area of pensions, Canada has preserved its right to tax pensions paid to residents of Czechoslovakia, Finland and Mexico. In the case of Czechoslovakia and Mexico, the maximum rate of tax applicable by a contracting state to periodic pension and annuity payments to residents of the other state is 15 per cent. In the case of Finland, the maximum rate of tax applicable to periodic pension payments is 20 per cent. Finally, war veterans' pensions are generally tax exempt under the three treaties.

The treaties provide also that in Canada double taxation of a foreign source of income for Canadian residents is alleviated by way of a foreign tax credit in accordance with the limitations provided for by our legislation.

In addition, dividends received by a company resident in Canada from the exempt surplus of its foreign affiliate resident in a treaty country are exempt from tax in Canada. Reciprocally, relief from double taxation is granted in the other treaty country in accordance with the method recognized by that country.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the convention for the exchange of information with Mexico was signed before the comprehensive tax agreement mentioned previously. It is limited to the exchange of tax information between Canada and Mexico and will complement the provisions on the exchange of information contained in the comprehensive agreement. The Information Exchange Convention will help fight tax evasion. It provides for three types of information exchange: (1) regular automatic exchange, (2) spontaneous exchange, (3) exchange in response to a specific request by the other government.

The Convention contains some provisions guaranteeing that the information will be provided only for tax purposes and only if providing this information is not illegal, does not reveal a trade secret and does not require a government to take measures that differ from its usual administrative practice.

Altogether, the terms of each of these tax agreements provide fair solutions to the various problems of double taxation between Canada and these countries. The Information Exchange Convention with Mexico is a useful complement to the comprehensive tax agreement with that country. Each of the countries concerned hopes to be able to implement the bilateral agreement as soon as possible and therefore I recommend that this House proceed diligently with this bill.

Thank you, honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Buckwold, debate is adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST CHURCH IN CANADA—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. David A. Croll moved the second reading of Bill S-3, to amend the incorporation of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Canada.

He said: The Seventh-day Adventist Church is a Christian denomination which, as its name will suggest, is indicative of the tenets of a church. An Adventist is one who observes the seventh day of the week, Saturday, as the sabbath. Members of the Seventh-day Adventist Church follow literally the commandments of both the Old and New Testament, believing that Saturday is the day of rest from their regular work and labour.

The Seventh-day Adventist Church was organized first in the province of Quebec in 1857. It was officially organized in Canada in 1901. In Canada at the present time there are over 40,000 members of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in all Canadian provinces and territories. There are 317 congregations and 275 clergy. There are, as well, 85 denominational schools and colleges in Canada operated by the Seventh-day Adventist Church. The church operates a degree-granting college in the province of Alberta which caters to students across Canada.

The purpose of the present bill is to amend 1963 legislation by providing for a board of directors to manage the affairs of the corporation. Directors will be not less than six and shall be elected at least once every six years by the members of the delegation of the corporation.

There are a few bylaws that need redefinition, and we are doing so in this bill. The bill is for the purpose of clarifying and tidying up the corporate affairs of the church and to keep them in harmony with current corporate practices and procedures. A convention will be held on June 21-24, 1991. They would like to have this bill passed, if at all possible, before that time.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take the adjournment of the debate. Ordinarily I would send it directly to committee. There is nothing that is contentious or causes any problems with this particular bill, but since the committee to which it would normally have been sent has not been set up, it is best that I take the adjournment and refer it to committee later.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to His Speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament.—(Honourable Senator Frith). (3rd day of resuming debate)

[Senator Kinsella.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I again offer to yield the floor to any senator who wishes to speak. Otherwise, it will not count as a day of debate.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Agreed.

Senator Frith: In that case, I ask that the debate be adjourned, subject to the same conditions, namely that I am ready to yield to anyone who wishes to speak.

Senator Doody: That is agreed.

Order stands.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

FIRST REPORT ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the First Report of the Committee of Selection, presented in the Senate on March 23, 1991.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to make our position clear with respect to this report and its adoption.

First, a brief word of history. The Committee of Selection was set up by a decision of the Senate on the first day of the present session. The Rules of the Senate provide that the Committee of Selection and the Committee on Privileges be set up at the commencement of each session. I am advised that the tradition has been that both of those committees are set up—the one on privilege being a committee of the whole—on the very first day of the session, when the Senate is in session for the reading of the Speech from the Throne with the customary packed house of guests. So it is passed as a routine matter.

This year Senator Doody moved that the committee be set up with the names referred to in the motion he proposed on that day. It carried. The difficulty that has arisen since that time is that, although there is no question that the committee was duly set up since it was the Senate itself that made that decision, an equally solid tradition has been that the Committee of Selection and other committees reflect the standing in the Senate. There has never been a time when either the government or the opposition, whether Liberal or Conservative, has ever taken upon itself to establish a majority on the Committee of Selection when it did not have or enjoy a majority in the Senate. So the present circumstances are unique in the correct sense of the word "unique."

The committee having been set up by the decision of the Senate in the circumstances that I have described, a meeting was held. That meeting, on May 22 last, is the subject of the report before us and Issue No. 1, is the printed proceedings of the committee on the nomination of a senator to preside as Speaker pro tempore. I can say parenthetically that at the meeting the only two items on the agenda were the election of a chairman and the nomination of a Speaker pro tempore.

At that time I took the position, as reported in the proceedings to which I have just referred, that the committee was mistakenly constituted on the basis of five Conservative members and four Liberal members. In the previous session the committee had consisted of nine with the numbers reversed—that is, a majority of Liberal senators, namely, five, against four Conservative senators.

As to the chairmanship, although that was the situation pertaining during the last session, it was agreed that Senator Phillips, though representing the minority party on the committee, would act as chairman. That was, as I recall it, a matter of consensus, unanimous consent, agreement, whatever word one wishes to choose.

The position that I took on behalf of my colleagues at the meeting was that the government should not have a majority on that committee or on any committee. Because of the unique circumstances, neither the Liberal nor Conservative senators could be represented by a majority on that committee because neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives have a majority in the Senate.

The government supporters took the position that they were entitled to that majority and proceeded to elect a chairman, over our objections, and then proceeded to nominate a Speaker pro tempore. There had been no previous consultation on either the choice of a chairman or on the nomination of a Speaker pro tempore. The first that we had heard about either of those subjects was when the names were put forward at the meeting.

Senator Doody quite candidly said in the proceedings that he meant to use the majority, to which we were objecting, to proceed with the business that was on the agenda, namely, the election of a chairman and the nomination of a Speaker pro tempore.

I should say tell honourable senators that at that point, our objection being ignored, we withdrew, having stated that we did not recognize either the establishment of the chairman of the committee or the nomination of a Speaker pro tempore.

In order that honourable senators have a fuller picture as to what took place at that committee, I refer to page 14 of the proceedings of the Committee of Selection to which I have referred. About halfway down it states:

> The Chairman: The purpose of today's meeting—
> Senator Frith: They obviously want to carry on all the proceedings on their own side only—
> The Chairman: . . . is to nominate a Speaker pro tempore. The meeting is open for nominations.

Then something took place that is not recorded. I do not know that it ever is, but if the record reflected what took place as distinct from what was said, honourable senators would know that at that point the Liberal members of the committee withdrew because the committee meant to proceed, although, in our view, incorrectly constituted.

Honourable senators, we did not participate on our side in the election of the chairman or in the appointment or nomination of the Speaker pro tempore. We do not intend to participate in the adoption of the report, consistent with the position that we took in the committee that it was not properly constituted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

GOODS AND SERVICE TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 83 citizens of the Province of Ontario who are opposing the GST. They are from Port Colborne, Port Erie, Tunis and Alexandria.

[English]

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a petition from King's County, Nova Scotia with about 25 names on it. The petitioners are asking us to do what we can to stop the goods and services tax.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a group of petitions to present today. They seem to be arriving every day from across the country. I have 10 petitions to present in all, containing a total of 199 names.

From Alberta I have a petition signed by people living in Rainbow Lake, Valleyview, Falher, McLennan, Grande Prairie, Edmonton and Girouxville. There is a total of 20 names on this petition, all of whom oppose the GST and want an election to rectify this wrong.

From Ontario I have four petitions with a total of 81 names. They are from Lively, Rutherglen, North Bay, Bonfield, Chelmsford, Kirkland Lake—there were also two names on the Quebec list from Kirkland Lake—Kitchener and Hamilton.

From Quebec I have five petitions with a total of 98 names. They are from people in Rouyn-Noranda, Hull, Notre-Dame-du-Nord, Virginiatown, Cloutier, Val d'Or, Amos, Loney, Ste.-Thérèse and Jonquière.

PRIVATE BILL

UNIVERSITY OF EMMANUEL COLLEGE—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—FIRST READING

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold presented Bill S-4, to amend the Act of Incorporation of the University of Emmanuel College.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that the bill be read the second time tomorrow, May 30.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think a bill of that nature usually requires two days' notice, but we have no objection if the senator wishes to proceed tomorrow.

Senator Buckwold: I have no objection to proceeding immediately. It is just that I do not want to upset some eternal plan that may be in place.

Senator Doody: I think the honourable senator misheard me. I said that normally a bill of that nature requires two days' notice, but we have no objection to proceeding tomorrow, if the honourable senator wishes to do so.

Senator Buckwold: Probably that would be better, as I do not have my documentation with me.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

SECOND REPORT PRESENTED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, Chairman of the Committee of Selection presented the following report:

Wednesday, May 29, 1991

The Committee of Selection has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Pursuant to Rule 66 (1)(b), your Committee submits herewith the list of Senators nominated by it to serve on the following select committees:

SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

The Honourable Senators Atkins, Bolduc, Carney, Cogger, *Murray (or Doody), Ottenheimer, Roblin and Waters.

Ex officio* members

COMMITTEE ON INTERAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

The Honourable Senators Cochrane, Comeau, Davey, David, Doyle, Forrestall, Hastings, Kelly, Kenny, Lawson, Lefebvre, Lynch-Staunton, *MacEachen (or Frith), Marchand, *Murray (or Doody), Teed and Wood.

Ex officio* members

SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

The Honourable Senators Bolduc, Castonguay, Everett, Eyton, Kinsella, *Murray (or Doody), Oliver and Simard.

Ex officio* members

SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

The Honourable Senators Beaudoin, Castonguay, DeWare, Doyle, Meighen, *Murray (or Doody), Nurgitz and Teed.

Ex officio* members

COMMITTEE ON STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

The Honourable Senators Balfour, Barootes, Cogger, Doyle, Grimard, Kinsella, Lavoie-Roux, Molson, *Murray (or Doody), and Robertson.

Ex officio* members

JOINT COMMITTEE FOR THE SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS

The Honourable Senators Beaulieu, Buchanan, Cogger, Grimard and Ottenheimer.

Respectfully submitted,

ORVILLE H. PHILLIPS
Chairman

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I did not hear anything about the Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee. Could Senator Phillips please advise me on that?

Senator Phillips: Not all of the committees were selected today. We will be doing the other committees at a later date.

Senator Marshall: Could he also advise whether the Foreign Affairs Committee will be striking a subcommittee on national defence?

Senator Phillips: That, of course, will be up to the committee and, I believe in a certain respect, to the Senate, due to the fact that this question has been raised by the Honourable Senator Marshall in the past.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Phillips: With leave of the Senate, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if the chairman of the committee would explain to me why it is that the name of the Leader of the Opposition is not contained in any of the committees, even though I understand that under the Rules of the Senate the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the Government are automatically members of each committee? I did not detect the name of the Leader of the Opposition. I did detect the name of the Leader of the Government.

• (1410)

Senator Murray: On one of them.

Senator MacEachen: Is it a lapse, or what is the reason for it?

Senator Phillips: I believe the Leader of the Opposition is well aware of the fact that both the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the Government are ex officio members of all committees and, in cases where either the Leader of the Opposition or the Leader of the Government is unable to attend, the Deputy Leader of the Government or the Deputy Leader of the Opposition may attend.

Senator MacEachen: I understand that. What I asked was why the listing was not included in the committees just named.

Senator Phillips: Because they are ex officio members.

Senator MacEachen: When you are an ex officio member you are not listed. You never know, and nobody else knows.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f) that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Leave is not granted.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I do not want to hold up this matter but I did not catch all of the names that were read by the Clerk at the Table. I did not hear my name mentioned as a member of any committee. I hate to think that the province of Prince Edward Island will be left out. I would appreciate an opportunity of seeing that list and, if the whip's motion is agreed to and we do consider the matter later this day, I think a copy of the names should be sent to all senators so that we will know what committees we are on.

Senator Olson: There is some real mischief in there.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, in reply to Senator Bonnell, I would point out that there is already legislation on the order paper waiting for referral to some of these committees. I hope he will recall that yesterday, when his colleague, Senator Croll, moved a motion, we were unable to proceed further with it because not all of the committees had been established.

I would hope that Senator Bonnell and other senators would be inclined to approve the membership of those other committees today so that we may proceed further with another meeting. We have already had a very extensive meeting this afternoon. I am sure that Senator Bonnell's name will come up in the future and that he will be just as happy as he always has been.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I do not want my good friend from Prince Edward Island, Senator Phillips, to get the impression that I am trying to hold up this matter because I am not. If he wants to vote later this day, then that is fine by me; but I would like a copy of these lists placed on senators' desks so that we can know who is on what committee. It seems to me that we have proceeded in a rush. The Clerk at the Table read a whole list of names, and when you get to my age it is very difficult to remember them all and what committee the senators are on. It is unfair to expect me to vote on this matter immediately. In order to give this matter sober second thought, I should at least be able to see the list and to assess whether the province of Prince Edward Island is still a part of Canada.

Senator Phillips: I am perfectly happy with the suggestion made by Senator Bonnell if we can return to this matter later on today. I am perfectly agreeable to that.

In reference to his memory, I would point out that at election time he still remembers how his constituents voted.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is the report to be considered at the next sitting?

An Hon. Senator: The motion is still for later this day.

Senator Frith: The rules require that it be considered at the next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, leave was not granted. Is it agreed that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Phillips, report placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

FISHERIES

LEGALITY OF FEES CHARGED TO FISHERMEN FOR MONITORING CATCHES—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate can advise me today as to the legal status of the action of the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans in charging the fishermen at the wharfside for monitoring their fish catches. Is that legal or not legal? Has he had an opportunity to look into that matter to see what is the legal status of that operation?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a reply to the question asked by my friend yesterday will be forthcoming in due course under Delayed Answers, but I do not believe that it is ready today.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): No, I have nothing.

Senator Bonnell: I noticed that the Leader of the Government in the Senate looked over to his Deputy Leader as if he had a pile of answers for later today. Is that one of the answers coming up?

Senator Doody: I have nothing. I am bereft.

Senator Bonnell: Does the government not know whether it is adhering to the laws of the country and abiding by the Constitution when its officials are asking the fishermen of Quebec, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island to pay a fee for monitoring fish catches? Does the government not know if its officials are proceeding legally or not?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if the government is taking some action of the kind described by the honourable senator, it would be done under the provisions of some statute or regulations, and we would have satisfied ourselves as to the legality of the matter. If anyone wishes to contest the legality of the matter, he, of course, has the recourse which is open to all citizens in this country, which is to go to court.

Senator Bonnell: Is the Leader of the Government telling me that the government now has some statute or regulation to back up its action; that it has done it legally, and that is why it did it in the first place? Or is he telling me that the government intends to check into it now to see if it was acting legally in the first place?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, what I agreed yesterday to check into, as the honourable senator puts it, is the question that he posed yesterday. I can tell the honourable senator that, as a matter of general and invariable principle and practice, the government satisfies itself as to the legality of its actions before undertaking them.

Senator Olson: Oh, oh, be careful!

Senator Bonnell: That might be the case regularly, but, in this case, did it go beyond its authority? Did itgo beyond the Constitution? Did it go beyond its jurisdiction? Did it go beyond legislation? Did it go beyond its powers and pick on the poor fishermen of Atlantic Canada?

Senator Murray: The answer to all of those questions is no, honourable senators.

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kinsella, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill S-2, An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Finland, Canada and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and Canada and the United Mexican States for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax and prevention of fiscal evasion, and a convention between Canada and the United Mexican States for the exchange of information with respect to taxes.—(Honourable Senator Buckwold).

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill S-2, which was very well introduced by Senator Kinsella. This bill, as all honourable senators are aware, represents the tax treaty between Canada and Finland, Canada and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and Canada and the United Mexican States for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax and the prevention of fiscal evasion and a convention between Canada and the United Mexican States for the exchange of information with respect to taxes.

I think that the wording of the title to the bill is quite self-explanatory.

Honourable senators, I find it very difficult to continue talking with the amount of noise in the Senate.

Senator Doody: Too many meetings!

Senator Buckwold: This is an important piece of legislation.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Order, please!

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, as I have said, I congratulate Senator Kinsella for a very lucid explanation of what I consider to be a very civilized development over the past many years whereby we are eliminating a number of problems concerning taxation between countries. As Senator Kinsella pointed out, with the coming into force of these three additional tax treaties I believe there will be 52 countries with which Canada now has tax treaties involving ways and means—and each one is different—of solving a variety of taxation problems of individuals and corporations in relation to various countries, and the income that is reported therefrom.

Treaty-making is a very complicated business which involves royalties, copyrights, capital gains, dividends, interest payments, pensions along with profits and the other monetary procedures that occur when Canadians have financial interests in other countries of the world, and vice versa. Therefore this is a very desirable development and one which I am sure all of us will applaud.

With regard to the proposed legislation, each tax treaty is negotiated with the individual country and each treaty has minor variations although the basic principals remain the same. As far as I can determine, there is nothing new in these particular treaties which cause them to deviate from like treaties of the past; nor is there anything, honourable senators, that is particularly controversial. The Government of Canada continually adds to its list of nations with which such treaties have been signed, and Bill S-2 is the most recent example.

By the way, I congratulate the government in that we are beginning to see "S" bills. In the past about 20 per cent of legislative bills originated in the Senate. It is with regret that I have observed that percentage greatly reduced over the past several years. Nevertheless, the fact that we are beginning to see some "S" bills originated by the government is perhaps an indication that this chamber will be used to reduce the burden on the House of Commons with regard to non-controversial pieces of legislation in that it would enable the House of Commons to dedicate itself to more urgent and controversial legislation.

Let me mention a couple of points, further to Bill S-2, that may be of interest to honourable senators. The titles of these conventions refer to the avoidance of double taxation and to the prevention of fiscal evasion. As honourable senators will recall, the federal government now claws back some or all of the old age pension, yet income tax rules allow non-residents receiving the old age pension to escape this clawback. This is an interesting aspect of the bill relating to the clawback of old age pensions.

It was pointed out, in our committee study of that bill last year, that if one is a Canadian not living in Canada and drawing an old age pension, then the pension is not clawed back; that it is not subject to the income tax that one would otherwise pay on one's entire pension.

Senator Stewart: Then there is Mr. Irving.

Senator Buckwold: Oh, yes, Mr. Irving. He lives where now?

Senator Stewart: In the Bahamas, I believe.

Senator Buckwold: Yes, Mr. Irving now lives in the Bahamas, and the fact that he is not paying back his full old age pension, as indeed Senator Everett and Senator Olson are doing, I am sure will make a major difference to him. I do not want to suggest that anyone should move out of the country, but should you want to save a little money on your old age pension and your income is over $50 thousand dollars a year, I will be very glad to advise your moving out of the country. Then, under this cockeyed piece of legislation, you will not have to pay back your pension.

Senator Everett: May I interrupt the honourable senator on a point of personal privilege? I am not yet receiving the old age pension.

Senator Buckwold: I certainly apologize to Senator Everett. It seemed to me that when he walked across the floor he looked so aged that I was sure he was getting those cheques. I apologize.

Honourable senators, the fact that non-residents escape this clawback probably does not constitute evasion of taxes in the technical sense, but their ability to avoid the clawback does imply some sense of unfairness in the application of that tax, and it is something that treaties do not address. That is one of the relatively minor subjects that may be questioned when this bill goes to committee. It is too important an aspect—although as I say it is not world shattering—to let it go by, in view of our previous interest in the clawback of the old age pension.

The second point that I draw to your attention refers to the taxes involved in the conventions. These conventions are signed by national governments, some of which, like Canada, are national governments in a federal state. These conventions refer to taxes imposed by the Government of Canada, but in some cases the Government of Canada also collects taxes imposed by the provinces, and in some cases provinces collect their own taxes.

The question is whether some federal taxes are covered. My understanding is that they generally are not, but the wording of the three schedules in Bill S-2 is somewhat confusing. Article 2 of Schedule I, Canada-Finland, for example, refers to "taxes on income imposed on behalf of each Contracting State or of its local authorities, irrespective of the manner in which they are levied."

Article 2 of Schedule II of the Canada-Czechoslovakia treaty refers to "taxes on income and on capital on behalf of Canada and on behalf of Czechoslovakia or of its political subdivisions or local authorities, irrespective of the manner in which they are levied." Not only does this schedule include capital in the base, it is also more explicit in reference to sub-national levels of government. But that applies only to Czechoslovakia.

Article 2 of Schedule III, Canada-Mexico, refers only to income taxes imposed on behalf of each contracting state irrespective of the manner in which they are levied. I am pointing this out to you because there is some confusion as to just how far the tax treaty is involved in income taxes that are not imposed by the federal government in Canada, the Canadian government, and those taxes that are imposed by provinces or states or other jurisdictions within the country involved, in the treaty.

In the case of Canada, paragraph 3 of Article 2 of each schedule refers to taxes imposed by the Government of Canada under the Income Tax Act. Taxes collected by the federal government for the provinces are not covered under these conventions, nor are taxes collected by the provinces, such as Quebec, where they collect income tax through their own jurisdiction, or the Ontario, Quebec and Alberta corporate taxes. In practice, though, foreign jurisdictions might allow credits for such provincial taxes. If in the future the federal government withdraws, leaving income tax room to enable the provinces to collect more of their own taxes, the value of these conventions in preventing double taxation might diminish.

Again, these are the kinds of questions that should be asked by the committee. I do not think we have done it in any great depth in the past insofar as the relationship of provincial tax levies as opposed to federal tax levies.

Having made these comments, I am pleased to indicate the support of this side for the bill that is presented, subject, of course, to proper questioning by the committee on those points that I have raised, and that I am sure will be raised by other members of the committee.

[Senator Buckwold.]

Senator Doody: If no one else wishes to speak at this time I will take the adjournment of the debate. This bill should be referred to a committee, presumably Foreign Affairs. Since that committee is not yet constituted, I will simply stand the order in my name and ask that the bill be referred to the committee when the committee is prepared to accept it.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST CHURCH IN CANADA—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Neiman, for the second reading of Bill S-3, An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this bill is in a sort of limbo at the present time. It is awaiting the setting up of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee. When that committee is ready to receive the bill, I will see that this bill is referred to it.

Order stands.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament.—(Honourable Senator Frith). (4th day of resuming debate)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Olson.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I wish to participate in this debate on the reply to the Speech from the Throne for a particular reason: namely, to find out what the new mode of this government is respecting the Speech from the Throne.

For a long time, a Speech from the Throne was brought before Parliament and before Canadians to do a number of things. One was to mention certain anniversaries or progress—something like the State of the Union Address, only not exactly the same. The rest of it was to brag about some things that the government had done over the last year or so. But most important, the Speech from the Throne laid out the proposals of the government for this session in general terms—not hard, detailed, specific terms, but to identify problems that it believed were faced by the country, with which the government was expected to deal. Honourable senators, that is missing from this Speech from the Throne.

So that is puzzling. I want to know what it is that the government intends to do, now that we have it. I know that the Speech from the Throne refers to the problem of unity, and that is important; it talks about the constitutional crisis—and I understand there is some of that going on. The longer this government is in office, the worse the situation seems to get. Outside of naming some more commissions—and, heaven knows, we have enough of them now, if we add up all the federal and provincial committees, commissions, task forces, and whatnot—what will the government do to come to grips with the so-called constitutional crisis? I do not think we need more of them, although the government continues to talk about setting up a few more. There is no hard, specific, or comprehensive mention of what it will do about the economy; nothing.

I do not understand how the government can have the nerve to come to Parliament with a Speech from the Throne and not mention the crisis in agriculture.

Senator Frith: One thing they have plenty of is nerve.

Senator Olson: That at least gives me one indication of what this government has. I never thought of that. One thing it has is plenty of nerve, because the agricultural crisis is not even mentioned and it is worse than it ever was. The farm credit crisis has not improved. Senator Barootes will testify to that. In Saskatchewan it has not improved at all.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Speak for yourself.

Senator Olson: From time to time it is useful to call as a witness some highly respected people like Senator Barootes, because I know that he understands the situation. It is not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It mentions the problem of unemployment as though it were a little problem; but unemployment is worse now than it has been for 10 years.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Not really.

Senator Olson: That is what Statistics Canada says.

Senator Murray: No.

Senator Olson: The figures are 10.3, 10.5 per cent. I have heard the Leader of the Government—I am paraphrasing him a little— say that it has never been as bad as it was before they came into office; in other words, that since 1984 the situation improved all the time—yet it is worse now than in the early 1980s.

Senator Barootes: No, no. In 1981 it was 12 per cent.

Senator Murray: I will put the figures on the record.

Senator Frith: The way they are reacting, it must be right.

Senator Barootes: Accuracy means nothing.

Senator Olson: Let us not argue about a percentage or two. Why is this situation completely absent from the Speech from the Throne? I am puzzled. Is it just a straight cop-out?

Senator Simard: Look at the budget.

Senator Olson: You are not going to do anything about these things. Do you not recognize that the figures are an indication of the state of Canada today? Do you not even believe there is a crisis in farm credit and debt service charges in agriculture? If you do, you said nothing about it in reviewing the Canadian scene.

I had better get back to where I started. I want to know what we can expect in the Speech from the Throne, because different governments have different styles, a different mode of using the Speech from the Throne. For example, I recall that when the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker was Prime Minister, he had a lot to say about the government statements in the Speech from the Throne. He would present an assessment of the situation in Canada, and then, in very broad general but limited phrases, he would describe what the government intended to do or expected to do in the course of the session. More specifically, he described in general terms what legislation would be forthcoming by way of new or amending bills. That is not included in this Speech from the Throne. There are some issues raised, but the important things are not there. There is nothing about the farm crisis, nothing about what will be done to get the economy going again.

Senator Murray: Debt Service Reduction Fund; spending caps.

Senator Buckwold: How about jobs?

Senator Olson: How about jobs, jobs, jobs? I will mention some statistics about that, too. Senators opposite may say that I am wrong, but I looked up the statistics before I came down here. The unemployment rate at the beginning of April was 10.5 per cent, according to Statistics Canada, and it declined probably by .3 per cent, three tenths of one per cent, during April. Ordinarily, April is the month when the whole country is emerging from winter and when all kinds of projects get started. That is the nature of Canada. Construction and all kinds of other activities quieten down in the wintertime, but in April they start to get going again.

● (1440)

Yet what do we have from this government? What are the facts? Three-tenths of one per cent is all the improvement there was during the month of April. Even in that month, according to Statistics Canada, part-time employment rose by 48,000 jobs. Full-time employment fell by 6,000 jobs. I guess that does not disturb honourable senators opposite. You can go on substituting part-time jobs, which are usually at the minimum wage rate, for full-time jobs and try to kid people that you have created just as many jobs as were lost, if not more. The people know better than that. They know that you cannot substitute a part-time job for a full-time job and then claim that the statistics are fine.

I would like to turn now to the case of Alberta, which is why I am particularly disturbed. When I complain about the problems we are having in the economy, the Leader of the Government tells me how great it is in Alberta. I guess it is true. In places such as Calgary, which is a major city, the unemployment rate is lower than in any other city in Canada. If that is his outstanding example, it is not very good.

Senator Murray: What about Medicine Hat?

Senator Olson: Medicine Hat is slightly better than Calgary. Medicine Hat is just a little city of 45,000.

Senator Murray: They have a positive attitude there.

Senator Olson: They do indeed. I know some people who help to contribute to that positive attitude. They go there almost every week to help it.

Senator Buckwold: One is a Senator.

Senator Olson: Alberta's unemployment rate is the lowest in Canada at 8.3 per cent. In the Lethbridge-Medicine Hat area, as the Leader of the Government mentioned a few moments ago, it is even lower than that. It is 8.1 per cent. By comparison we are pretty well off. I cannot understand him believing that that is good. That is my problem.

I wish to use Calgary to illustrate a few other statistics that I want to quote, and the reason is very simple. It is because there has been an effort by some people in Calgary, the Calgary Herald for one, and two or three other members of the media, to gather the recent statistics. This is the most recent data that we have for Alberta. Today, the oil patch has taken one of the worst shocks in lay-offs and downsizing of the workforce of any industry at any time in history.

Senator Barootes: Since the NEP.

Senator Olson: You would be better off not to mention the NEP. What went on in 1986 and 1987 and what is going on in the oil patch today is far worse than anything that happened during the so-called NEP. Some day you will get the story on the NEP right.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chrétien says it was a mistake.

Senator Olson: I admit now that it was the wrong thing to do. But no one knew at the time that there would be a world-wide recession and depression going on at the same time.

Let me get back to what is happening there. It has been announced that there will be a decline of 3,900 jobs in Calgary. Those jobs will be phased out in the next two or three months. Why?

Senator Barootes: They all have to do with the low price of gas exported to the United States.

Senator Olson: What about oil? Do you not think we have any more oil in Alberta? What about a little help from this government to promote the sale of gas into the United States?

In addition, the Canada Packers beef processing plant in Calgary, which operates what is called a boxed beef plant, was closed on May 17. Some 325 people were thrown out of work. The Canada Packers plant in Lethbridge was to be closed on the same day with another 200 employees being thrown out of work. If honourable senators do not think these people believe that has something to do with so-called free trade, they should not kid themselves. They know where the live cattle are going and where the boxed beef is coming from. It is true there was a little over-capacity in the packing plants in western Canada.

Senator Barootes: Small and inefficient plants. How many jobs did Cargill create when it opened its new plant?

Senator Olson: Is that such a great thing?

Senator Barootes: They are competitive.

Senator Olson: Senator Barootes, the rule in this house is that if you wish to make a speech you are supposed to stand up and make it.

Senator Barootes: I apologize to the Hon. Senator.

Senator Olson: There are 20,000 families in Calgary on welfare. Do you know that the food bank in Calgary passed out 7,300 food hampers in April? This, honourable senators, is the city where things are supposed to be good. It is supposed to be the best city as far as employment and prosperity in Canada. Yet, that is the dismal record of what is happening.

I am sad today because of something that was not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. I am not talking about Calgary now. There should have been, at the very least, an acknowledgement that the country is going through a severe depression. Some policies should have been put forward, at least in general terms, of how the government intends to deal with that situation.

I have the Speech from the Throne in front of me. I was not here the day it was read. Some allusion was made to this point. One of the headings in the Speech from the Throne is "Participating in Prosperity". It states:

> There is much more to Canadian unity than amending the Constitution. Our unity is strengthened by a strong economy.

I could not agree more. I do not think that the people of this country will be satisfied, and I do not think they should be satisfied, until the government demonstrates that it can do something about managing the economy in such a way that there is a reasonable amount of prosperity from one end of this country to the other.

Then it states in the next paragraph—and this really gets me:

> Economic recovery depends on reducing interest rates.

This government has not been doing that. I know that Senator Murray will say, "But interest rates have been coming down."

Senator Barootes: By 5 per cent.

Senator Olson: That is true. However, they have not come down enough to narrow the gap to zero between Canada and the United States, which is where it ought to be.

Senator Murray: When was the last time the gap was zero?

Senator Olson: I do not know, but what is the difference? What do I care about the 1950s, the 1960s or the 1970s? I am talking about the 1990s. The people who are out there today are the ones who are interested in what this government intends to do about the economy and what the government intends to try to do about fixing the mess that we are in. But it is not in this document.

I do not know if Senator Barootes is holding up a white flag indicating surrender, or if he wants to wipe my tears.

Senator Barootes: It is a handkerchief for you. You are crying. You are cry-babies.

Senator Olson: Is that what unemployed people are?

Senator Barootes: No, you are.

Senator Olson: I am crying on their behalf. It is about time that somebody did, including some of you people opposite.

May I turn for a moment to the farm crisis? A 1991 report of the House of Commons Agriculture Committee—we must assume that they did a good job—shows that 48,000 Canadian farmers are on the verge of bankruptcy. A very large number of those farmers are in western Canada, particularly in Saskatchewan , because a higher percentage of agriculture there is dependent on grain production than in any other part of the country. That is one of the main reasons. Fortunately, the beef industry has been doing—not particularly well, but reasonably well. I can tell you that Canadian farmers are now in debt to the tune of $22 billion.

The farmers are paying these ridiculously high rates of interest on their loans because of a deliberate policy set out by this government, which was admitted to by the Prime Minister, by the former Minister of Finance and by the Governor of the Bank of Canada. In effect they have said, " We intend to cool out this economy." However, they have been trying to do it with one instrument, that being higher interest rates.

Senator Murray: No.

Senator Olson: The government leader may say that on the fiscal side they have done a number of things.

Senator Murray: Yes.

Senator Olson: Perhaps you did, but you allowed interest rates to go up and up. Every time that happened, it caught the farmers and they had to pay higher and higher debt service charges when, in fact, they were not making any contribution to the increasing inflation that they were complaining about. You may be interested to know that Alberta is the most debt-ridden province in Canada, agriculturally speaking. The average Alberta farm now owes $110,000. Farm land values in Alberta and Saskatchewan have decreased by 35 per cent in the past four years because of severely depressed grain prices.

I do not expect the government to do everything that can be done, but they should do something useful. They have not. As far as I can tell, they have only complained that it is a problem. It is such a severe problem that I know a lot of farmers in southern Alberta and in Saskatchewan who have tried everything. They have tried diversification, in an attempt to lower the amount of debt service charges through many forms of provincial programs and others means, but they are simply going under. It is sad.

Honourable senators, there is nothing in the Speech from the Throne that says that this government intends to do anything about the matter. They do not even acknowledge that the problem exists. How would you like to be the owner of a farm, one of the 48,000 on whom debts and debt service charges are crunching down until you know that you will have to leave, or that foreclosure is coming and that you have no defense? Apparently the government will not even acknowledge that the problem is there.

We appreciate that the government has introduced a couple of programs, such as GRIP, the guaranteed income program that works through an insurance scheme that is coming up later this year. Perhaps a payment will be made under that program by November. I doubt it, but there may be one. Then there is NISA and so on. To give a Speech from the Throne—and I have checked through all the pages—and not even acknowledge that the problem exists, I think, is cruel. The government cannot escape because they, too, have to live with the economic conditions in Canada. The farmers are disheartened, disillusioned and frustrated because of the inaction of this government.

There are a few things the government can do. I have been urging the minister to carry some of these ideas to his colleagues. The government will not be able to out-subsidize the European Economic Community or the United States on a straight export enhancement subsidy to the international market. I understand that, and so do the farmers. Canada, for years, has been something called an honest broker and has tried to find an accommodation when the superpowers got into a fight, in this case a subsidy war that is hurting us. We were successful, and I wonder why we are not doing that now. I do not want to frustrate any of those problems but I can tell you what can happen.

Senator Barootes knows because he was there with me in Kananaskis last week at the Canada-U.S. Parliamentary meeting. The important thing about that meeting is that we had two of the most influential members of the U.S. House of Representatives there. One was representative Sam Gibbons from Florida. Many people in this room who have been to those Canada-U.S. meetings have met Mr. Gibbons. He usually attends, and he is a very powerful and influential person in the U.S. Congress. The other representative was E. (Kika) de la Garza from southeastern Texas. He is chairman of the agriculture committee of the United States House of Representatives. We have to talk to these people and reason with them, as I did and as, I am sure, did Senator Barootes. We have to say to them: "The United States is not winning this war on subsidies and neither is Europe. You are costing the treasuries of both Europe and the United States more and more and, in the meantime, you are wrecking the international market for Canada, Australia, Argentina and all the rest of your friends."

I have to say that I was very happy and satisfied with the response that I received from these two very influential gentlemen. They agreed with me. Senator Bolduc might have heard the same because he was there, but as I recall he was not in the same committee meeting.

Senator Bolduc: I was there.

Senator Olson: Yes, I believe you were. They agreed that it was the wrong thing to do, and they were willing to enter into some discussions with the European Economic Community, with the people who make the difference, in an attempt to back away from this situation that is hurting so many people. We should be doing more of that. We should not be saying, "Aye, aye, George Bush" every time. I do not know whether the United States or Europe started the fight, and I do not particularly care. What I do know is that the situation is hurting our producers very badly and that it is in our interests to see that these players come to some kind of agreement and accommodation so that they can back away and let grain prices move to where they should be.

I do not want to get into a grain or wheat debate today, although the world stocks of wheat are at about 15 per cent of annual supply. That is about half the normal reserve of wheat in relation to a full year's requirement. The world uses about 550 million tonnes of wheat in a year. We have about 15 per cent of that in reserves all over the world. That is about half. Ordinarily, the grain companies and distributors of grain are expected to keep about 28 to 33 per cent. As long as they are in that range, the price does not become depressed. When reserves go below about 28 per cent the price starts to move up. People preach to us all the time that we have to have a market-driven economy. Based on supply and demand, the price of wheat should have gone up a long time ago. It is the subsidy that is holding wheat prices down to these desperate levels. The prices are about 50 per cent of what they were five years ago. We used to receive $5 to $5.50 a bushel for wheat in 1975. That was in 1975 dollars. In 1990-1991, we are receiving $2.65. That is in 1991 dollars. Other costs have gone up 300 to 400 per cent. I am sure you can understand the desperation of the situation.

Both houses of the United States Congress tell me they realize that no one is winning this subsidy war. It has cost Europe about $30 billion a year and it has cost the United States about the same amount. I am referring to all subsidies. However, some time ago the United States took the position that they would not move unless Europe gave them a commitment to enter into and give an undertaking that they would phase out all agricultural subsidies over a ten-year period.

Honourable senators, I am sure many of you have been to Geneva where the GATT administration is located. I am sure, having talked to them, you realize that they will not take that step. Politically, they cannot announce to Europe that they are about to phase out 100 per cent of all agricultural subsidies in ten years. I understand that. In fact, I do not believe any political party in power in the United States could make that statement. They would be thrown out of office at the first opportunity.

[Senator Olson.]

In Europe, this question is a particularly sensitive one. Mr. de la Garza understands that because he has been to Europe and talked to these people on many occasions. He told me that people in the United States do not seem to understand that Europeans do not regard a surplus of food as a curse, but as a blessing. The reason is that Europeans have been hungry. It is true that Americans, so far as I know, have never been hungry, although perhaps, on occasion because of bad distribution, some people in the United States were unable to obtain enough food a few years ago. However, to my knowledge, in this century, the country has never been short of food.

There is a different attitude in the United States. When I mentioned that I felt they should modify their demand, they agreed. I did not expect them to go all the way and say that they would accommodate Europe because Europe, apparently, has offered to withdraw their subsidies by 30 per cent. I believe the figures are 30 per cent in three tranches, depending on what happens to the reserve supplies.

I mention all of these things, honourable senators, to demonstrate that there is room for some very useful discussions with the Europeans. I do not want to do away with their food reserves which I think they value very highly. I know they do not mind paying something to have that reserve of good, wholesome food on hand, and I understand that, but let us not have it wreck the market.

Honourable senators, some time ago I made a speech about this very matter which I will not repeat now. I would just like to say again that it is almost impossible for a grain buyer to go out on the market and buy grain for a country and have any confidence that the price he pays for it now will look good two or three months down the road. I remember one of the senior vice presidents of Cargill telling me at a meeting in Calgary that he knew two buyers who had lost their jobs. He told me they went out and made a commitment, as they normally do, for about four-to-six months' supply of grain and bought it at whatever the price was, and that two weeks later, the subsidy was increased by about $20 a tonne which made them look like fools and so they lost their jobs. As long as these two economic giants are at war with each other, no one can go out on the market and buy their normal requirements under reasonably normal uniform trading patterns in which people can have confidence.

I remember talking to a senator from North Dakota about three years ago. It was the year they had the Canada-U.S. meeting in Tucson. At that time he said that it was rather sad because we would have to wait to see who has the deepest pockets. Honourable senators, what a way to run an international market: seeing who can outspend the other and seeing who can accumulate the biggest deficit. In the meantime, all the farmers, all the producers and all the grain traders everywhere are in a state of depression and confusion.

Honourable senators, Canada has had a great deal of success in this particular area. I do not know about the recent situation, since I am no longer privy to any discussions; I am no longer involved in making the formal agreements. However, I am willing to do everything I can to get the parties together.

I believe another meeting of the Canada-U.S. Parliamentary Group is scheduled early in the month of June, and I believe several senators, including Senator Barootes and myself, will be in attendance. I must say I am grateful that I have been given the opportunity to attend that meeting. In all of the 34 years I have been in Parliament I have learned that, if you want the minister to give you the right answer, you must make sure his advisors give him the right advice. That is a pretty simple formula, and it works. I also know that it is up to the politicians to guide the senior bureaucrats from time to time because sometimes things are done only in the most convenient way, and that applies to senior bureaucrats in the grain trade or those dealing with any other part of the GATT trade negotiations. They need to hear from the politicians as to what happens on the street or in the warehouses where the trading deals are made.

Senator Barootes: Will the honourable gentleman take a question on that matter?

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Barootes: My remark is not so much a question as a request for a comment. In the EEC-U.S.A. battle on subsidies, one subsidy is called an enhancement and the other is called a direct export subsidy. In asking us to act as an honest broker between them, bearing in mind that the Cairns Group is active in this respect, is it not in case, Senator Olson, that this is somewhat analogous to disarmament agreements that have been going on for some years? Both the Americans and the Europeans will say that they will not disarm their subsidies until the other disarms their subsidies first, and everyone is suspicious of everyone else.

Perhaps Senator Olson would agree that there are some agricultural subsidies which do not apply in this country. In Europe the subsidies apply to many other products including wine. In the United States they apply to sugar, cotton and other agricultural products. Our concern may extend to soya beans and corn but it does not extend to those other products. Would the honourable gentleman comment on that?

Senator Olson: I know that the GATT negotiations are bogged down badly on a whole range of goods. In fact, I think the talks have stopped on everything. There have been two or three attempts to revive the GATT provisions, beginning, of course, in Uruguay about four years ago now. However, they are bogged down because the countries cannot come to an agreement, particularly between the United States and Europe, as to what they intend to do about agricultural subsidies.

However, Senator Barootes may be right. It may be that the United States some time ago wanted to give Europe a shock, and so asked for something that was unreasonable. I think it is unreasonable to ask the Europeans to give a commitment for a complete phase-out of all agricultural subsidies over a ten-year period. I agree the Americans should not have gone that far. Perhaps they did it just to shock the Europeans. Apparently, that is still their only offer and I believe that Europe has counter-offered by saying that they will eliminate 30 per cent of their subsidies in a somewhat shorter length of time; they will see how that turns out and then eliminate another 30 per cent.

In any event, we need to be there. We cannot have this standoff. I think the United States—at least the two individuals that I mentioned a minute ago—are willing to compromise somewhat on that demand which seems to be unreasonable. I think we should talk to the Europeans as well to see if they can amend their offer so that the two sides can get together.

Honourable senators, this war between the United States and Europe on trading in agricultural products is not new. It happens to be over wheat or grain now, and that is perhaps because, until a short time ago, Europe was a net importer of grain every year. They never were a seller of wheat and barley in any great quantities. Now they are, and of course the United States is taking the position that Europe will not have any share of their international market. However, the bottom line is that today, in May of 1991, this fight is damaging everyone: the U.S., Europe, Canada and every other country that relies on the international market for some of its income.

Therefore, what Senator Barootes is saying is true. There are other things, and I understand that. However, surely we should be able to approach both sides and attempt to find some common ground on which they can start to come together. The meeting we had at Kananaskis last weekend was, in my view, one of those kinds of meetings that is always a preliminary to a meeting of minds. Someone else, perhaps Canada, can be the honest broker. I do not care whether they call me honest or even a broker, but I would like to be part of the attempt to find a solution to this problem so that they will let the international market find its level on the basis of supply and demand and not on the basis of who is willing to show that they have the deepest pockets for paying subsidies. I think that Senator Barootes agrees that that is probably the right way to handle this situation.

Honourable senators, I also want to say a few things about interest rates. The Leader of the Government keeps telling us that they are coming down—and they have come down a lot. They were up at 14.25 or 14.75 per cent at the peak, and now they are down under 10, although not much under 10. That is quite an improvement, but they are still too high. All you need to do is look at the returns of the banks. The Bank of Nova Scotia had the largest quarterly net profit in history, so we know the rates are good for them. The Bank of Montreal's figures were published yesterday or this morning, and I think they had the second largest quarterly income. Our farmers and our small businesses are paying for that.

I would also like someone on that side—perhaps Senator Barootes or Senator MacDonald—to explain to me what has happened to the link between interest rates and inflation. The government had been giving as the excuse for these high interest rates that they were necessary to get inflation under control. Well, it has not happened. Interest rates have come down from 14.75 to just under 10 per cent, and inflation has gone up. I know that is partly because of the GST. We tried to tell you that that would happen, but you would not listen. The people know now. In any event, I do not believe that the GST was the sole cause of the rise in inflation, although there is no doubt that it made a substantial contribution.

In 1987, inflation ran at 4.4 per cent. In 1988, it was 4 per cent. In 1989, it was 5 per cent. In 1990, it went back to 4.8 per cent. Now, for the first few months of 1991, inflation is at 6.8 per cent. It is up 50 per cent. It is up 2.4 points over 4.8. In January 1991, it was 6.8 per cent. In February 1991, it went up to 6.2 per cent. In March, it was at 6.3 per cent, and in April, it was at 6.3 per cent. So it is stuck. Where is the argument now that when the high interest rates started to back off, we would have lower inflation? The numbers do not indicate that that is what is happening. If there is some great explanation that senators opposite know as to why this situation turned out contrary to what we were told would happen, we would like to know. Perhaps you could tell us.

Honourable senators, I will terminate this speech. I had wanted to find out the reasoning behind the new approach to the Speech from the Throne. If this is to be the new mode, whereby the government does not tell us anything in the Speech from the Throne, then I suppose we will have to get used to that. I am sure that Senator Phillips will remember how Prime Minister Diefenbaker approached this situation. He would come with his Speech from the Throne, and there would be a certain amount in there. Then, every week for the next five or six weeks, a few more things would trickle out.

Senator Phillips: A few more good things.

Senator Olson: These were things that should have been in the Speech from the Throne, but were put out later so that the government could be in the news every week. That is why it was done. I hope that this government will also do that.

Honourable senators, the Speech from the Throne used to give people some hope that the government at least recognized that there was a problem with the economy of Canada. Unfortunately, the people now have no hope because the economy was not mentioned. The government did not mention anything about what they intended to do for the economy, and that is too bad.

The only minister that we now have in the Senate has been promoted, in some respects, because he is now on six cabinet committees. I mentioned him here yesterday. Therefore, he will be attending many cabinet committee meetings where the decisions are supposed to be made. I was hoping that it would help him answer some of our questions. However, the Government Leader does not seem to think that it will have that effect at all, since he still intends to take notice of questions. I hope he changes his mind about that. We really need to know what the rest of the government's program will be for this session in 1991. I pray that it will be one that raises some hopes for some of the people that I have just mentioned, such as the unemployed and the farmers who are in a state of crisis, so that they can have some hope that the government at least recognizes that there is a problem and that there is some plan to get the economy moving again, to give some relief from the interest charges that have been devastating small businesses and farmers across the country.

I want to thank honourable senators for listening so patiently to my plea for some help, and I hope there will be some response coming fairly soon.

[English]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, although it is already later than the sittings of the past week, I will use this day given over to the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne so that at least two senators can speak on the same day.

First, I wish to join those who have already warmly congratulated Senator Lavoie-Roux and Senator Meighen on their performance as mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. They both played their roles in fine style and in the appropriate manner.

The Speech from the Throne tells us that during this session:

Proposals will be put before you that address these three major concerns of the Canadian people and of my government—unity, prosperity and government responsiveness.

We will have various opportunities to express our opinions on each of these concerns.

For now, I will confine myself to the specific topic of education, which especially interests me and is developed at some length as part of the "new strategy of prosperity for all" set forth by the government.

When I was interviewed a week ago on the French CBC program Dimanche-Magazine, I stressed two points:

First, in the present situation as in the recent and not so recent past, I have no problem with seeking a consensus on objectives for education, even though education is in provincial jurisdiction and even if the federal government takes the initiative of proposing national conferences or debates to help find such a consensus. That has already been done and I see no problem with it being done again now—on the contrary. However, identifying action to take and programs to implement to reach the supposedly common objectives is something quite different. At that point, which is the most crucial, the current provisions of the Constitution on the distribution of powers must be respected. In this regard, I have clearly said that it is up to Quebec's representatives in the Senate and House of Commons to see that the Constitution is fully complied with.

• (1520)

This is basically what I said when I participated to that program, Sunday a week ago. Regardless of the interpretations that may have been made in the newpapers, I see no reason to change my comments. In fact, what I said then will serve as a background to the more elaborate remarks that I intend to make now.

First, my comments will of course deal with the Speech from the Throne. They will give you an idea of the kind of reading I do of those paragraphs dealing with education.

Secondly, I intend to discuss the general problem of federal interventions in the fields that are provincial responsibilities, among others that of education.

The Speech from the Throne says:

> Increasing economic prosperity is first and foremost an issue of people.

Is the reverse also true? Is man's happiness first and foremost dependent on economic success? Perhaps it is in modern society, which is based on the consumption of material goods. However, I am not convinced that our society is not just as interested in "real human values", in "better living", that the classic definition of common good links with values that go beyond economic prosperity and that take less tangible forms.

In any event, it has long been recognized that the economy and education are linked, at least in the sense that the economic development is largely dependent on the knowledge and know-how acquired through the training that the education system must provide. The same thing was being said in 1958, at the meeting of the Club of Rome, as well as at the Canadian conference on education, held in the same year. "Education: an investment": That was often the theme for those Education Weeks organized by the Chambers of Commerce, in the 50's and 60's.

In an effort to facilitate the acquisition of knowledge as well as the general access to training, the reform of the education system in Quebec, among others, was based on a principle which, in our opinion, represented the primary objective: All young people should get an education, to the maximum of their skills and motivation; adults should also have the possibility of either completing the training that they did not get in their formative years, or of getting the training required to adapt to a work place that is constantly changing.

It is the authorities in Quebec that proposed such an ambitious and demanding objective to their population. It was then taken for granted that if those authorities were not the only one to do so, they were certainly the first ones whose initiative was recognized.

At the federal level, for reasons of strategy or tactics, the approach was not as comprehensive for a long time. However concrete, the actions taken by the Federal government in the field of education remained, for a long time, isolated initiatives.

Today, those actions are given a new dimension by adopting, in an integral way, the principle that has guided the provincial authorities for at least one generation. That is, actually, what is said in the Speech from the Throne:

> Canadian men and women must have access to both the skills and the lifelong learning opportunities necessary to improve their job prospects and ensure their own prosperity.

And as is added in the sentence that comes immediately after:

> . . . But Canadians are questioning whether this country's approach to learning, despite the great dedication of so many talented educators and administrators, is adequate for the times.

"Questioning whether this country's approach to learning . . . is adequate for the times", those are particularly strong words. I'm not myself in a very good posture to be deeply shocked by those words. I remember vaguely having uttered words as strong as those in substance, if not in form. But that was 30 or 40 years ago. Do we find ourselves today in the same situation as we were in those days, despite having put so much effort and energy in modernizing our teaching systems in order to attain the maximum level of schooling for our youth and adults alike? If such is the case, I have to admit that the situation rather depresses me.

Fortunately the Speech from the Throne reveals a possible cause for the situation that was never mentioned before:

> The issue is not exclusively, or even primarily, money. Canada already spends more money per capita on education than almost any other industrialized nation does. Every year the federal government alone spends about eleven billion dollars, directly and indirectly, on education and training. The issue is results.

According to Minister Valcourt, that represents just a bit more than 20 per cent of the 50 billion dollars that are spent for education by all the public administrations in Canada.

Going back to the time I was referring to earlier, inadequate investment in the development and distribution of the necessary services was the obvious reason so it seemed for the situation. Therefore we should be gratified to learn that it is not, at least not as much as before, a matter of money, but of results and effective return of our investment.

Such being the case, we are being urged in the Speech from the Throne to deal with the current situation from two points of view: the performance indicators, on one hand; the goals, on the other.

As for the performance indicators, three are listed:

> —Three out of ten students drop-out of high school before graduating.
> —Four out of ten adults cannot read or do math well enough to perform everyday tasks.
> —Canadian industry spends less than half as much on training its employees as American industry does, a fifth as much as the Japanese and an eighth as much as the Germans.

Prompted by these three indicators follows the concise and compelling conclusion:

> This is not the kind of performance that will guarantee increasing prosperity for our children; in fact, it has given rise to concerns whether the next generation of Canadian men and women will be the first to have a lower standard of living than their parents.

I should repeat at this time what I was saying earlier, that these are pretty strong words but let us say no more!

So we come now to the heart of the matter, to the second component in the approach we would have to take under the present circumstances.

> The time has come to reach a national consensus on performance, goals, partnerships and priorities for learning.

There is now a broader perspective which goes beyond performance indicators and objectives to embrace goals, priorities and partnersships.

How far will we go in the search for a national consensus, when so many variables are involved?

It is too early to make any predictions, because the government has announced that "a discussion paper on learning will be published to stimulate and focus discussion on education and training".

The examples given in the Speech from the Throne, however, can give us some idea of what the "Canada-wide goals for the year 2000" might be:

—cutting illiteracy rates in half;

—ensuring that 90 per cent of Canadians attain high school diplomas or the equivalent by age 25;

—doubling the number of postsecondary graduates in mathematics, the sciences and engineering; and

—quadrupling the training provided by employers to their employees.

This is not the appropriate time to wonder whether such goals are realistic. I suggest we see them as a manifestation of good will—who could object to that?

On May 21, in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the Hon. Bernard Valcourt commented as follows:

> There are many other goals that Canadians can consider in defining a learning system for life that is among the best, if not the best, in the world. Today, I might suggest two more goals that Canadians could discuss, namely to double the number of Canadian youth who participate in a structured learning program leading to entry-level jobs and to achieve full representation of women in the fields of mathematics, science and technology.

He then went on to say:

> These, and many other goals, will be suggested and examined in the discussion paper. As the Minister responsible, I can inform members today that the discussion paper will be tabled in the House within several weeks.
> The release of this paper will be a first step in a process of consultation and consensus building with Canadians throughout the nation.

As was said in the Speech from the Throne and corroborated by Minister Valcourt, the plan to start consultations and discussions is in no way intended to contravene the present provisions of the Canadian Constitution regarding the provinces' exclusive jurisdiction over education. In fact, the government "recognizes that education is a provincial responsibility under the Constitution and respects that fact".

I will address the government's clearly expressed intention to respect the provinces' constitutionally enshrined jurisdiction over education in the second part of my speech.

The federal government has been involved for a long time, and in many different ways, in the field of "provincial education". If I am not mistaken, this involvement started at least 70 years ago, just before and after the First World War, in the form of legislation on agricultural, technical and professional training.

I will not name the many federal programs that have had, and still have, an impact on education at various levels, including secondary and postsecondary. The current situation was described in articles by Jean-Pierre Proulx, published in Le Devoir on March 26 and 27. I checked with the experts, and the information in these articles is correct. In fact, Minister Valcourt himself listed, in the previous quote, half a dozen programs being implemented by his Department in concert with the Secretariat of State, each dealing with a particular problem.

Because of the debate the Speech from the Throne has already given rise to in the education community, particularly in Quebec, as well as the prospect of further debates that will certainly take place in the weeks and months ahead, I want to share with you a few reflections which might prove useful in the circumstances. They deal with three issues.

First, what is the real extent of the juridiction granted to the provinces under section 93 of the Constitution Act, 1867?

The version of section 93 I am about to quote is taken from the new French version of the constitutional acts drafted by a committe our colleague Senator Beaudoin sat on but has not yet been promulgated. I guess it will be shortly. So, here is the new and more elegant wording of section 93 found in the revised French version:

> 93. La législature de chaque province a, dans les limites et pour les besoins de celle-ci, compétence exclusive en matière d'éducation, compte tenu des dispositions suivantes :

The provisions listed in the rest of section 93 relate to the rights and privileges with respect to denominational schools. but that is not what I want to deal with today. What I want to emphasize is that nowhere in any of the legal material is the meaning of the word "education" defined clearly for the purposes of section 93. The constitutional experts I consulted said that the only reference to the scope of this key word was made by Chief justice Sir Lyman Duff who, in a 1938 decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, expressed his views on the subject as follows:

• (1530)

[English]

> We should perhaps also recall that section ninety-three (as is well known) embodies one of the cardinal terms of the Confederation arrangement. Education, I may add, is, as I conceive it, employed in this section in its most comprehensive sense.

[Translation]

You have to acknowledge that the expression "in its most comprehensive sense", "dans son sens le plus large", is not all that clear. For want of a more rigid definition, it is not improper to use Sir Lyman Duff's expressed view to answer the question I asked. All the more so since it has never been challenged in any way. Consequently, the word "education" in its most comprehensive sense applies to provincial jurisdiction as set out in section 93.

Given that, there is no doubt that throughout the years most if not all of federal initiatives in education came under section 93. The only exceptions being initiatives relating, as the accessory to the principal, to exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government. That would be the case, for example, with Native education and military schools.

That should clarify many questions which were asked, namely whether such aspect was related to education or not, et cetera. I think Sir Lyman Duff's argument is valid. The word "education" has to be interpreted in its most comprehensive sense. For generations now, almost all federal initiatives in education have fallen within the scope of section 93.

My second question is: In which cases are federal initiatives in education and other fields of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, acceptable?

Most of the time, federal intervention in education took the form of subsidies with relatively explicit and restricting conditions attached, which the government tried to justify by saying they were reflecting a "national need" and were based on the federal "spending power" which is very broad, to say the least.

I want to quote from the "Report on Certain Aspects of the Canadian Constitution", tabled in the House of Commons, in November 1990, by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

It deals with a general principle put forward in 1937 (and since we are talking about the 80s, it was still considered current and valid), by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the reference re Employment and Social Insurance Act.

• (1540)

[English]

> That the Dominion may impose taxation for the purpose of creating a fund for special purposes and may apply that fund for making contributions in the public interest to individuals, corporations or public authorities could not as a general proposition be denied . . . But assuming that the Dominion has collected by means of taxation a fund, it by no means follows that any legislation which disposes of it is necessarily within Dominion competence.
> It may still be legislation affecting classes of subjects enumerated in s. 92, and, if so, would be ultra vires. In other words, Dominion legislation, even though it deals with Dominion property, may yet be so framed as to invade civil rights within the Provinces, or encroach upon the classes of subjects which are reversed to provincial competence . . . If on the true view of the legislation it is found that in reality in pith and substance the legislation invades civil rights within the Province or in respect of other classes of subjects otherwise encroaches upon the provincial field, the legislation will be invalid.

[Translation]

To my knowledge—and I repeat, the text was used in 1980 by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs—this text is the most explicit one ever drafted by the highest legal authority at the time on certain constitutional boundaries the federal government may not infringe when exercising its spending power in a provincial jurisdiction as clearly identified as education, for instance.

Constitutional experts may not wish to go as far as I have in my interpretation of this text. However, I think it makes sense to say that a federal program that sets certain conditions on granting a subsidy for provincial education is actually encroaching on a provincial jurisdiction, in which case the program in question is ultra vires.

Our third question: How do we get out of the current ambiguous situation? As I said earlier, these ambiguities have developed over the years.

We are in the middle of an unprecedented constitutional crisis, and many elements and practices of the status quo will have to be reconsidered. I think this is an excellent opportunity to try and get out of the quasi-unconstitutional situation—and I am putting it mildly—which we have had for three-quarters of a century as far as federal intervention in education and perhaps even in other areas of provincial jurisdiction are concerned.

There are three options.

The first one: We take a purely constitutional line. This would mean, for all practical purposes, that most if not all of the money spent today on education by the federal government would be part of the equalization system provided under section 36 of the Constitution Act, 1982, under the heading "Equalization and Regional Disparities". I will just read the second paragraph of section 36, which I think goes to the heart of the matter.

> (2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

It would take too long to measure the impact of this paragraph, but there will probably be an opportunity to do so later on.

My conclusion is this: Reverting to equalization, that typical characteristic of the Canadian federal system, would undoubtedly be the best way to observe the limits imposed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on federal spending powers in areas of provincial jurisdiction. That is the first option.

However, there is also another, a second option, and I am referring to the formula in the Meech-Langevin Accord.

Article 7 of the late Meech-Langevin Accord prescribed following with respect to the exercise of federal spending powers:

> The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

Of course, today's context is entirely different. The situation was radically changed by the demise of Meech. I think we could keep the same concepts but, instead of applying them to future programs, we could open the debate to all current programs.

Always, of course, within today's context, where there will be a rethinking of the current situation. That was the second option. There is a third one.

A third option would be to amend the Constitution so as to legalize and constitutionalize conditional grants the federal government would continue to pay or might consider paying to the provinces for education. As Lise Bissonnette said in her editorial of May 21, the following provisions of the Constitution Act, 1982, would then apply. Remember that in general, the Constitution can be amended with the agreement of seven provinces having at least half the population. Also remember that provinces that do not agree with the amendments most of the others want involving transfer of jurisdiction from the provinces to the federal government can "opt out". I want to call attention to section 40 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

> 40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

In this regard, I recall that the Meech-Langevin Accord extended these provisions to all cases of a transfer of provincial jurisdiction to the federal government. As I recall, no one at the Joint Committee in the summer of 1987 or elsewhere opposed that part of the Accord, not even Mr. Trudeau when he appeared before this House. He immediately admitted, in answer to a question I had asked him, that he himself, in a letter to René Lévesque in 1981, had suggested extending the provision I just read to all fields of provincial jurisdiction.

These are the three possibilities for future discussion, depending on the proposals the government will submit in September, according to what the first part of the Speech from the Throne tells us.

[Senator Tremblay.]

Some will certainly say to me that none of these three options is suitable and that others would be preferable. If that is so, I would be glad to know about them. I am prepared to consider them on their merit, provided they satisfy the underlying principle common to the three I just mentioned: restoring or maintaining provincial sovereignty in education and other fields in their jurisdiction.

At least Quebec's sovereignty must be restored and maintained, if some other provinces are not so concerned about their own.

Honourable senators, for the future of the Canadian federation, this is a vital issue to which we cannot remain indifferent.

Honourable senators, we will surely have an opportunity to come back to it, in particular when the consultation paper mentioned in the Speech from the Throne and by Minister Valcourt is published.

Honourable senators, I apologize for the time I took at such a late hour. Thank you for your attention.

• (1550)

[English]

Hon. John B. Stewart: Would the honourable senator deal with a question?

Senator Tremblay: Yes.

Senator Stewart: I am very interested in the three possible avenues which the honourable Senator Tremblay has outlined. I am having difficulty with the second of the three avenues, namely, the Meech-Langevin avenue, whereby a provincial government which decided to opt out would receive the money it would have received for the program if it stayed in, provided that it had a program or initiative consistent with national objectives. It is the words "national objectives" that concern me.

The reason I ask this question is that the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia, in 1985 or 1986, took the position that, insofar as a program in the field of education is concerned, national objectives mean what the provincial governments say are the national objectives because, under the Constitution, education is a provincial matter. Consequently, neither Parliament nor the Government of Canada can define national objectives in education. I am sorry that Senator Buchanan—

Senator Murray: That was Mr. Trudeau's position years ago too.

Senator Stewart: I remember that Mr. Donahoe, a minister in the Buchanan Government, stated that position. Whether or not it was Mr. Trudeau's position really is not relevant insofar as understanding the Meech-Langevin avenue is concerned.

As I recall, Mr. Donahoe said that neither Parliament nor the Government of Canada can state national objectives where education is concerned, that these objectives can be stated only by provincial legislatures or executive governments.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): They define it and they can take the money and run.

Senator Stewart: Yes, they would define the national objectives, and then, presumably, take the federal money for these objectives. I am wondering if the difficulty Senator Frith has expressed in his own pithy way does not beset the particular avenue. Any clarification Senator Tremblay could give would be most helpful.

Senator Tremblay: I was already informed about the approach of the Government of Nova Scotia and the Minister of Education there.

First we have to clarify the question of the process of common objectives. After all, national objectives mean Canadian objectives, and the process to define them and to agree about them is one point. In that respect it might very well be that the Council of Ministers of Education would be a channel through which all provinces could identify common objectives to pursue. The question of having a federal program to realize those objectives is referred to in Meech Lake. I do not think it can be understood in the sense that it is the one to define the objectives. That is open and that is what I mean when I refer to the process of identifying the objectives and the process through which there is agreement expressed on those objectives. This being done, then the section of Meech Lake does apply. If a province does implement a program which is compatible—in French it is "consistent"—

Senator Stewart: It is "compatible" in English, too.

Senator Frith: It does not matter. The question is, who decides whether it is compatible or consistent? It does not matter what word is used, it is who makes the decision.

Senator Tremblay: I remember someone in this chamber saying that "compatible" is too vague, that it should be more strict than that.

Senator Frith: So make it "consistent."

Senator Tremblay: It seems to me that the word "compatible" has a commonsense meaning. It does not necessarily mean strict conformity, but at least it should not contradict.

• (1600)

Senator Frith: Senator Stewart's question is: Who decides? Pick your word, "consistent" or "compatible." Who decides whether it is compatible or consistent? The province could make the decision because the Fed's cannot get into the field. The province can grab the money and run on its own definition.

Senator Tremblay: If the province wants, let us say, to opt out, then the least that can be asked of the province—if, again, in the process of identifying and agreeing on this so-called national objective the province has been involved—is that it demonstrate that there is compatibility.

Senator Frith: Sure; but who decides in the end?

Senator Tremblay: That is my answer, for the time being at least.

Senator Stewart: I am afraid that we have strayed away from the main question. For greater certainty, let me state what I understood Senator Tremblay to have said in response to my question; perhaps then he will tell me if I have understood him.

As I understand him, he is saying that, insofar as a new federal initiative in the area of shared costs in the field of education is concerned, under the Meech-Langevin avenue, it would be suitable for the Council of Ministers of Education of the several provinces to decide what the objectives of a program would be. It would then be up to the government and the Parliament of Canada to decide whether they would make available money to achieve those objectives. One province might say, "You fellows can go off and do it if you want to, but give us our share of the money. We have a program or an initiative which is consistent or compatible with your definition of national objectives." Do I have the senator's analysis correct?

Senator Tremblay: I am not sure that I have understood the point. Do you want me to define "national"?

Senator Stewart: No. I think, honourable senators, there is a tendency for people to say, "But the Parliament of Canada will decide what the national objectives are."

As I understand the honourable senator, he is saying that in the field of education the provincial authorities could decide the objectives, and then the Parliament of Canada could say yes or no to putting up some money.

Senator Tremblay: Just to make progress in our discussion, I suggest that the honourable senator give me one example of what he is referring to. As long as he discusses it in the abstract, there is almost no way out of such a discussion. If he has one specific objective, which is common and which would have been agreed upon following the proper process or channel, we would then be able to discuss in concrete terms the concept of compatibility of any program.

Senator Stewart: I think, Senator Tremblay, that the ball is in your court, because you put Meech Lake-Langevin forward as an available avenue. I am trying to understand your position. Perhaps, if you could give an example of how it would work through that avenue, it would be helpful to us all.

Senator Tremblay: I think we have heard enough on that question for now. I do not refuse to go farther; rather, I am just thinking of our colleagues.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I have a question that I wish to ask of Senator Tremblay, but it could be that one of our colleagues on the other side would be a more reliable witness on this subject. It has to do with the constitutional resolution passed by the Quebec wing of the federal Liberal Party last weekend.

I wonder whether I have read the resolution correctly on this point. I have read that the new position of the Quebec wing, endorsed by Mr. Chrétien, is that they would allow for a province to opt out of a federal initiative under the spending power in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Up to that point, I believe their position is identical with the Meech-Langevin position. But the Quebec Liberal resolution of last weekend made no stipulation that a province would have to introduce any program in order to receive compensation. It says that they could opt out with compensation, and I saw no stipulation in the resolution that the province would have to do anything to receive the compensation.

Senator Frith: I have a copy of that resolution here in front of me.

Senator Murray: Then perhaps you could help us, senator.

Senator Frith: I can understand why Senator Murray raised the point, because there is a phrase "... the inclusion in a new amending formula of a right of withdrawal with full financial compensation for the provinces." It then specifies more particularly, "... the exercise by the province of a right of withdrawal with full financial compensation from all cost-sharing federal programs initiated in their exclusive sphere of activity when the latter establishes a program compatible with the objectives of the national program."

Senator Murray: They add that?

Senator Frith: Those words are there.

Senator Murray: I stand corrected.

Senator Frith: I move the adjournment of the debate, with the usual offer to yield to any senator who wishes to speak at the next sitting.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, May 23, 1991:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-Fifth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, entitled: "It's Almost Too Late", tabled in the Senate on January 31, 1991. (Sessional paper 342-973).

He said: Honourable senators, I have an inquiry on the order paper which I introduced so that from time to time I could relate to the report of the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, entitled "It's Almost Too Late."

I wish to raise a couple of points today, one of them being the Hong Kong prisoners of war. However, in view of the shortage of time, I will only refer to a paper that came to my attention just yesterday. It was sent to me by the President of the Master Mariners of Canada, who brings to my attention a proclamation made by President Bush of the United States on National Maritime Day, May 21, 1991, having to do with the American Merchant Marine. It states:

> Members of the American Merchant Marine carry on a long and distinguished tradition of service to our country. In addition to promoting the economic development of the United States through trade and commerce, our merchant seafarers have also provided vital support to our armed forces during times of conflict.

[Senator Murray.]

> America's merchant sailors first proved their courage and mettle — and their value in military operations — during the Revolutionary War, when commercial vessels supplemented the 34 ships of the Continental Navy. These merchant vessels virtually immobilized enemy shipping and, in so doing, hastened the end of the war and the beginning of American independence.
> During World War II, more than 5,000 of this nation's civilian seafarers lost their lives as they helped to transport troops and to maintain supply lines to U.S. and allied forces around the world. Today we are proud to salute the brave Merchant Mariners who served this nation during that epic conflict.

• (1610)

Please note that we are talking here about the Persian Gulf War. The president continues:

> Recent events have fostered renewed pride in American's merchant seafarers: Providing essential support for operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, these individuals played a key role in the liberation of Kuwait. More than 90 per cent of the materiel needed by our troops was transported by sea, and in addition to the merchant mariners who served on commercial ships during operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, more than 3,000 civilian sailors manned the ready reserve force vessels that are maintained by the Department of Transportation for such contingencies.

Who are these 3,000 civilian sailors? They are merchant seamen from the United States, who were so scarce that mariners in their 60s, 70s and 80s were being recruited, sometimes from retirement homes, to crew ships. These are merchant seamen who, unlike our Canadian merchant seamen, are considered veterans. Yet we in Canada not only refuse to recognize merchant seamen as veterans but I am stultified in my attempts to introduce a bill that would recognize the remaining 3,500 merchant seamen and save the government money. We should be ashamed of ourselves.

In 1988, the American government recommended that the group known as the American Oceangoing Merchant Marine of WWII, who served during the period of armed conflict, from December 7, 1942 to August 15, 1945, be considered for active duty for the purposes of all laws administered by the Veterans Administration. I simply wanted to put that on record. The Government of the United States had to call out elderly citizens. One of them had the following to say, as recorded in a news article:

> 'It's a bloody shame that they had to call these guys in their 80s,' said Albert Begelman, National President of the American Merchant Marine Veterans. 'It's the same damn thing that happened after World War II. The Merchant Marine deteriorated to practically nothing, and then something happens.'

Begelman retired as a captain in 1978. He said that he was tempted to return to sea to help out, but he could not because his wife would not let him.

At least the United States had the guts to recognize merchant seamen as veterans and to give them all the benefits they deserve. Canada will not recognize these men. I hope that when I reintroduce a bill that died on the order paper in the last session, I will get better consideration in a more humane manner, rather than the outmoded and ridiculous rules of the Parliament of Canada.

Honourable senators, I adjourn the debate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to ask Senator Marshall whether the subject matter of his inquiry will be the subject matter of a private bill?

Senator Marshall: Not necessarily. I am simply bringing up to date, through my inquiry, events as they occur. This matter just came to my attention.

Senator Frith: Does the honourable senator wish to continue the debate, because I would be prepared to adjourn it in my name so that senators on this side will have an opportunity to speak to it? However, if the honourable senator has more to say, I will wait until he is finished.

Senator Marshall: I will have more to say, not necessarily on the merchant seaman but on other matters in our report.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

AMENDED REPORT TABLED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I may, I should like to try to correct what appears to me to be an error in yesterday's proceedings.

Senator MacEachen quite properly called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the ex officios on the other side of the house had not been included in the report from the Selection committee, whereas the ex officios on this side of the house had been included.

It seems to me that is an error pure and simple. It was not even discussed in the Committee of Selection; no one raised the subject nor, in my opinion, should they have raised it since the rules quite clearly call for the ex officio status of the Leader of the Government and Leader of the Opposition or their deputies.

Since this report is in error, I wonder if there is a way that it can be corrected. A new copy with the correction in it can be distributed to honourable senators, if they so desire, which is the simplest and best way of dealing with it, or a motion could be moved when we get to the discussion of the report that these names be added. However, that seems to me to be redundant because the names are automatically part of the committee. It is not a matter of adding or subtracting them. Unless the Rules of the Senate are changed, the ex officio status of the Leader of the Opposition or the Leader of the Government cannot be changed. I would ask the indulgence of the Senate in allowing us to table a revised and corrected copy of the report.

I should add that the omission was not the decision of the government side, the Senate, or the committee, but was really a decision made by the compilers of the report who felt they were acting in the best interests of the interpretation they made of the discussion in the committee yesterday.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on the same point of order. I distinctly recall yesterday in the committee that Senator Doody said he had no wish or desire to vote off the list the nominees of the Official Opposition to committees. It so happened, however, that that recommendation and position was not followed by a member of your group. Senator Balfour made a motion to the effect that the names of Senator Bonnell and Senator Corbin—and I could not be affected personally; I am just talking about numbers here—be removed from the list, and your colleagues, in fact, voted in favour of that motion, which was in total contradiction to the very point you made during the committee that you did not want to vote against individual senators, that you were simply concerned with numbers on the list.

I wonder, therefore, if we could not revisit that issue in the spirit and in the terms that you enunciated before the committee.

Senator Doody: I hear Senator Corbin and I know exactly what he is saying. He is perfectly correct in saying that the Conservative members of that committee made it clear that they had no wish to interfere in any way with the names of selection that were put forward by members of the Liberal opposition.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): And we made it clear that we had no wish to object to any of your members.

Senator Doody: Senator Frith is adding, quite properly and accurately, that the Liberal members made it quite clear that they wished in no way to interfere with our choice of members on the government side of the committee.

Senator Frith: The numbers were the problem, on both sides.

Senator Doody: The problem on both sides had to do with the numbers. Both sides felt that too many names had been submitted, that the numbers submitted by each side were in excess of those that were properly allowed. That point was argued in committee. We suggested that the Liberal opposition delete, in this case, two names to bring it down to the number that we felt was acceptable. We felt that we should not make that decision ourselves, that it was really in the area of responsibility of the opposition to do so.

Honourable senators opposite declined. They refused to revise their numbers for the reasons put forward by Senator Frith. That left us no option but to amend the list by deleting two names. Unfortunately, the names were those of Senator Bonnell and Senator Corbin. They could have been the names of any two people on the other side. These two happened to be the first two on the list, and Senator Balfour selected those two for his motion. That brought the numbers into line with what the majority of the members of the Selection committee felt was proper. Of course, it left the option open to honourable senators opposite, through their whip, to substitute the names of Senators Bonnell and Corbin for any two whom they wished to remove.

It was certainly in no way intended as a slight or a reflection on the capabilities or talents of either of the two senators involved. It was simply the only way that we could see to reduce the number to what was felt to be an acceptable number from that side of the house on the committee total.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Doody for his explanation. It seems to me that if, in his opinion, there were too many names on the list, one does not begin by chopping off the first ones; names from the tail end of the list should be chopped off first. That is simple logic. However, I am not suggesting that should have been done.

For the record I will simply state—and I am not crying over spilt milk; I can get back on that committee any time simply by talking to my beloved whip—that I was rather surprised that a member from western Canada would do that to two of his colleagues who represent here in this house the founding provinces of Confederation. I do not know what we have done to Senator Balfour, or anyone on that side, that both Senator Bonnell from P.E.I. and I from a humble hamlet in New Brunswick would be chastised in this way. I want that on the record.

I would have accepted that he chop off someone from Toronto or Montreal—that is where their usual beef lies—but to do that to us who are humble people, I just cannot understand it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on the point raised by Senator Doody, rule 68 is quite clear. It states:

> The Leader of the Government in the Senate, or, in the absence of that Leader, the Deputy Leader of the Government, and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senator, or, in the absence of that Leader, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, are members ex officio in addition to the number of appointed members, of the Committee of Selection and all select committees of the Senate.

Thus, the rules take care of the question.

Senator Doody is saying that we are faced therefore with a printing error, and I agree with him. I see no reason why we should not add that, because the rules take care of it. It is simply a matter of its not being printed in accordance with the rules.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the report, as amended, be tabled?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Report, as amended, tabled.

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR APPOINTMENT OF A PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF QUEBEC AN ACT TO AMEND AND CONSOLIDATE THE ACTS RELATING TO THE OFFICE OF PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF MONTREAL

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-14, to amend an Act to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec and an Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal, and to validate certain fees and charges established pursuant thereto.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): On Tuesday next, June 4.

• (1410)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask the mover of the motion, Senator Doody, whether we can take it—although I have no notice of what he intends to do with regard to the adjournment at the end of the day—that we will be sitting next Tuesday?

Senator Doody: That is not settled, honourable senators; I am merely following the conventional order. I will, at the appropriate time, which I suspect is Notices of Motions, bring forward a proposition to the Senate and let honourable senators consider which course of action they would like to take with regard to sitting next week.

Senator Frith: So Tuesday was mentioned to make sure that the rule of two days' notice is observed?

Senator Doody: Exactly.

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next, June 4, 1991.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Some honourable senators will be pleased to know that the petitions against the GST and the petition of many of our fellow citizens in favour of an election to correct the GST, among many other wrongs of this government, continue to arrive. Today from Quebec I have 19 petitions with a total—

Senator Simard: All unsolicited.

Senator Frith: Yes, you are quite right. Thank you for underlining that fact. I have not solicited a single one of the petitions that I have put forward. They have arrived, as Senator Simard quite correctly points out, unsolicited. They come from St. Clotilde, Victoriaville, St. Leonard, Montreal, Farnham, Granby, Messines, Gracefield, Gatineau, Maniwaki, Blue Sea, Bouchette, Saint Jovite, Mercier, St. Chrysostome, Chateauguay, Repentigny, Rougemont, Ste. Angele, Hull. Total names, 378.

From Ontario I have two petitions with names of citizens from Etobicoke, Rexdale, Waterloo, Kitchener and Woodbridge. On some of these particular petitions are included some names that are on the Quebec list. There are two petitions from Ontario with a total of 54 names. The total altogether for today is 21 petitions, 432 names.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, my harvest was not as plentiful as Senator Frith's, but nevertheless I have the privilege of tabling a petition signed by 58 residents of Quebec who object to the goods and services tax.

These petitions are mostly from Chicoutimi, Jonquière, St-Hubert and Bromont.

[English]

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a petition from Aylesford, Nova Scotia, signed by citizens of that great province who did not have their names struck off the list and who are protesting the goods and services tax.

Senator Simard: Have they cashed their GST cheques yet?

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, May 30, 1991

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee has reviewed the Telecommunications Policy of the Senate and now makes the following recommendations:

1. The Senate should receive detailed statements for all telephone resources.

The detailed statements for on-net lines and authorization codes are to be obtained by the Director of Finance and forwarded to individual Senators.

2. With respect to Senate staff long-distance calls, these accounts should be verified by the employee's supervisor.

Respectfully submitted,

ROMÉO LeBLANC
Chairman

He said: Honourable senators, I should point out that although the committee has not been formally re-established, this report is made pursuant to Bill C-79, entitled, "An Act to amend the Parliament of Canada Act," which we adopted during the last session.

I also want to show that there is life after prorogation and, in fact, I understand there will be life for this "eternal" committee even after dissolution.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator LeBlanc, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this may be a good time to outline what the business of the Senate might be in the immediate future and to ask senators' opinion as to how we should proceed.

We have two bills to deal with next week, one of which Senator Eyton will introduce for second reading today, and the other, Bill C-14, to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec, will be introduced on Tuesday if we sit on that day. Both of these bills are important, but I do not think either is of sufficient urgency of itself to bring back the Senate.

It is my hope, and the hope of some other senators, that on the completion of the Senate's business today we will adjourn until Tuesday, June 11. Many senators have expressed some dissatisfaction with coming back from Vancouver, Calgary or St. John's for the sake of sitting for an hour or an hour and a half on one, two or three days. I am told that even those from Montreal have expressed some dissatisfaction with the work schedule of the Senate. However, in order to get the Senate working properly after its prorogation, we obviously have to get the committees working. So the suggestion of an adjournment until June 11 makes a number of assumptions. These are the matters that I would like to put before the Senate, to which the Senate may or may not agree.

The first assumption is that the Senate will have dealt with the report of the Selection Committee today. If there is not enough time to deal with it today and further time is needed for debate, we can continue tonight or come back tomorrow or whenever. That is obviously up to the Senate. However, I think it is important that we constitute those committees, which have business pending with which they need to deal.

The Legal Affairs Committee has one bill now waiting to be referred to it. I think Senator Buckwold has a second bill which he will move today. Foreign Affairs has a bill which will be referred to it as soon as it is constituted. National Finance has a set of Supplementary Estimates which were tabled a day or two ago, which I will refer to that committee as soon as it is constituted. The Rules Committee has some matters to consider, matters which senators have looked at and prepared and want to have considered by the committee, to be judged whichever way and at whatever time, and they are anxious to get started on that. So it is obviously necessary to set up these committees as quickly as we can.

The second assumption, honourable senators, is that a motion will be adopted by the Senate today which will permit Senate committees to sit when the Senate is not sitting.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): They can.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, this is a bit peculiar. I think the rule is on page 32, if honourable senators wish to refer to it.

Senator Frith: I thought it was just when the Senate was sitting that committees could not sit. I thought we had straightened that out in the Rules committee.

Senator Doody: I believe there are two rules that apply. The first is Rule 76(2) which says:

> When the Senate adjourns for a week or less, a select committee may sit on those days over which the Senate is adjourned if notice of the intention to meet during the adjournment of the Senate has been given to the members of the committee one day before such adjournment.

That is a peculiar rule, and I really do not want to go into the background of it because I do not know what the background of it is. I only know that it is there. So it would have been difficult to have given notice to the members of the committee before the committee was struck. That is a dilemma. The next subsection of that rule, 76(3), says:

> By order of the Senate any select committee may meet during an adjournment of the Senate which exceeds a week.

However, you have to have an order of the Senate for that to happen. The committees really are kept on a very tight leash by these rules, and to deal with this problem in the past, at least in recent years, a motion has been presented in the early stages of the Senate sitting in a new session to set aside these rules and allow the Senate committees to sit when the Senate is not sitting. I would have to ask leave today to put such a motion forward and to have it accepted so that the Senate's committees can sit next week. That, of course, is assuming—back to assumption number one—that the committee report is dealt with and that the committees are approved by the Senate. So, if honourable senators agree with that, we can proceed.

Senator Frith: Is that it for the assumptions?

Senator Doody: If honourable senators accept my assumptions as being valid and we indeed deal with the committee report today, and if leave is given to pass a motion to allow the committees to sit, then later on today, or whenever honourable senators will allow, I can move an adjournment motion which will allow us to return on June 11 and which will allow these committees to sit next week—and, as I have mentioned, they already have work ready for them. Therefore I would welcome any comments that any senators might have on this proposition, and we will proceed accordingly.

Senator Frith: I think I understand. What the deputy leader is saying is that he is not proposing a notice of motion now. He is saying that he will wait and see how things evolve today and then ask for leave—

Senator Doody: Yes.

Senator Frith: —to revert and ask for leave on some motions as he has told us. Therefore we will wait and see how the day evolves.

Senator Doody: I just want the senators to be clear on the situation before we proceed further. Obviously, I do not expect to have leave now.

QUESTION PERIOD

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

COALITION AGAINST ALL TAXES ON BOOKS—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

During the long debate on the GST in this chamber—a debate that was so rudely interrupted—we mentioned the devastating impact this tax would have on the publishing industry.

Five months after the GST came into force, sales in Quebec bookstores dropped between 15 and 30 per cent, depending on the area and the size of the stores. This was stated, with supporting figures, by the coalition against taxes on books.

Eight bookstores in Quebec have already closed down, as we predicted. Publishers are publishing fewer books—as predicted—and printings are smaller. As a result, it is harder for writers to publish their books and when they do, they receive fewer royalties, which further reduces their meager income. According to the Writers Union of Canada, the situation is much the same in English Canada.

Faced with this threatening situation, the coalition against taxes on books demanded a meeting with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney yesterday. Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate know whether the Prime Minister has agreed to this urgent request or whether he intends to do so as soon as possible, between two trips?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, I will be glad to put this question to my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and ask for a report which I will table shortly.

[English]

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO OKA CRISIS

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sure the leader is aware that there have been repeated calls from the community at large, particularly from parliamentarians on the House of Commons Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and from many of the leaders in the aboriginal community, for a judicial inquiry into last summer's events at Oka. He will also know that a coroner's report was issued earlier this week dealing with the death of Corporal Lemay. That the report deals with serious questions, but because of its limited scope, many of these questions are left unanswered.

My question for the government leader is: When will his government announce a full, proper and public judicial inquiry to look into last summer's events at Oka?

• (1430)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with regard to the coroner's report in Quebec I can only reply that I saw in the newspapers within the past day or so that the responsible minister in Quebec, Mr. Ryan, had indicated, if I understood correctly, that the provincial government will proceed with the judicial inquiry that the coroner has recommended.

INDEPENDENT JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I think perhaps the leader is in error. As I understood the minister, he was suggesting that there might be an inquest, which is quite a different thing from an independent judicial inquiry. It is the federal government which has access to all of the information that would be required to give evidence before a judicial inquiry and it is the federal government's responsibility to see that these facts are made clear.

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate undertake to advise the Prime Minister that the time has come for an independent judicial inquiry?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, one of my colleagues, Senator David, confirms that my reading of the reports is correct and that indeed the Quebec government does intend to have a public inquiry along the lines recommended by the coroner in the Lemay case.

As to any recommendation I might make to the Prime Minister on this matter, I can only say that I would be glad to convey Senator Stanbury's views on the matter to him.

FISHERIES

LEGALITY OF FEES CHARGED TO FISHERMEN FOR MONITORING CATCHES

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government advise me whether the fishermen are being taxed legally on the wharfs of Prince Edward Island, Quebec, the Gaspé, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland by way of paying a fee to have their fish monitored at the wharf? Has the government made a decision yet whether it is really acting under legal jurisdictional authority?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if the government was not confident of its legal position it would not, of course, be taking that action or any other action. If the honourable senator, or anyone, contests the legal right of the government to take a particular action, I think he knows what his recourse is.

Senator Bonnell: Would you repeat the last part of your answer?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, those who believe that the government is acting beyond its jurisdiction, or in an illegal way, have a recourse in this country, and their recourse is to the courts.

Senator Simard: The minister has answered that question in committee.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, when Senator Simard becomes Leader of the Government in the Senate I will let him answer the questions. Up until that time I will ask him to show the courtesy of a member of the Senate by keeping quiet while someone else has the floor. If he cannot do that then I can only tell him that the people of New Brunswick are not very pleased with his actions when he interrupts his own leader while he is trying to answer an honourable senator's question.

Senator Simard: You are just refusing to hear and accept the answer. Smarten up.

Senator Bonnell: If you would stop talking, I might hear what someone else is saying, but you are there mumbling to yourself.

Senator Simard: You be in charge of P.E.I; let me be in charge of New Brunswick. We are satisfied with the answers.

Senator Bonnell: Did you hear him mumbling over there about something? I don't know what it is.

AUTHORITY FOR MONITORING FEE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, it seems to me that if the Government of Canada intends to tax the fishermen of the Gaspé, Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Labrador for monitoring their fish, the Leader of the Government should be able to show me or tell me where to find the legislation, or even a regulation under an act of Parliament, that gives the government the authority to do that. They should be able to quote me under what authority they do this. If they cannot quote to me the act and the legislation, or the regulations under the legislation, then why should a poor fisherman, who is striving to get by, have to fight with all the legal authority of the Government of Canada for his legal rights over the few fish that he is able to catch? God knows there are not that many fish left.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, for the past two days the honourable senator has been asking me whether a particular action taken by the government is legal. What answer does he expect from the minister except an answer in the affirmative? We would not be doing it if we did not have confidence in our legal position.

However, the senator has just asked a specific question, namely, under what legal authority this is being done, and I should be glad to obtain the reply for him.

AUTHORITY FOR MONITORING FEES—ADVICE OF COMMITTEE COUNSEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John B. Stewart: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. Are we to take it that the government has taken into consideration and has rejected the view of counsel to the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments that this charge is not soundly based in the law?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I shall be glad to obtain an answer to that question as well.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, it is all right to say that you will bring in some measures, but Parliament was closed for half a day and a new session began. All the questions before it were lost; we are not getting any answers to them.

Senator Murray: I beg your pardon?

Senator Bonnell: When you say "a few days", that means nothing. The other day you promised me that very soon you would give me an answer. I asked you what "very soon" meant and you said "very shortly."

These fishermen want to know. They are poor people. They are not the elite of this country; they are poor people striving to get by with small families in the rural parts of Canada. Let us get them an answer. Let us tell them where they stand. Why can we not get that information? If the minister here does not know, can he find out from the minister in the other place? If he does not know, then do away with this fee and let the people be free.

Senator Simard: And I think you need—-

Senator Bonnell: Do not let Senator Simard answer the question.

Senator Murray: Senator Bonnell has asked a straightforward question. The question is: Under what legal authority is the Government of Canada taking a certain action? It should be possible to get a reply to that quickly.

Senator Bonnell: An answer?

Senator Murray: I shall undertake to do so.

On the questions and answers in general, let me give the honourable senator and all colleagues the box score. Since September 25, my colleague, the Deputy Leader of the Government, has brought in 169 delayed answers. He has three, I believe, delayed answers that he will table today. There are still nine outstanding, and we are working on them.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

APOLOGY TO CANADA BY GOVERNMENT OF JAPAN—LACK OF FINANCIAL COMPENSATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, yesterday the president of the Hong Kong Veterans Association in Canada cried "outrage" that the Prime Minister of Japan did not add any financial compensation to the apology to those veterans, given in the presence of the Prime Minister of Canada. I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the Prime Minister did, in fact, make any representations or ask the Government of Japan to support or to give consideration to the request of the Hong Kong Veterans Association for financial compensation for their suffering during World War II while in Hong Kong?

• (1440)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I shall take that question as notice, honourable senators.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable Senators, I have three delayed answers to questions which I would ask to be printed as part of today's proceedings.

(The answer follows:)

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER TO HONG KONG AND JAPAN—CONTINUATION OF MOST-FAVOURED-NATION TREATMENT FOR CHINA

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the first delayed answer I have is in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 21, 1991 by the Honourable Jack Austin regarding International Relations—Visit of Prime Minister to Hong Kong and Japan—Continuation of Most-Favoured-Nation Treatment for China.

(The answer follows:)

> The Government believes that Chinese trade with the outside world helps the Chinese people to maintain a window on the world abroad. Sustained Canada-China commercial exchanges are an important component of this open door.
> Canadian MFN trading status with China was established in 1973 and has been renewed by mutual agreement on a regular basis, most recently in October 1988 for a three year period.
> U.S.A. President Bush announced May 27, 1991 his intention to renew MFN status for China for another year.
> Revocation of MFN status for China could adversely affect the environment for Canadian trade and investment in China.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

DEADLINE FOR REVIEW OF ACT—ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO UNDERTAKE REVIEW

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the second delayed answer I have is in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 28, 1991 by the Honourable Lorna Marsden regarding Employment Equity—Deadline for Review of Act—Establishment of Special Committee to Undertake Review.

(The answer follows:)

It is the intention of the Government to have a special order of reference for Bill C-62 at the beginning of the session in September and it will likely be sent to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

We do not expect there to be any deadline for the Committee to report back its findings.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REROUTING OF WESTERN TRAFFIC THROUGH UNITED STATES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the third delayed answer I have is in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 28, 1991, by the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat regarding Canadian Pacific Railway—Rerouting of Western Traffic Through United States.

For many years now, CP Rail has moved potash from mines in Saskatchewan and coal from southeastern British Columbia from the mine sites to transborder gateways in either Saskatchewan or Manitoba. From there, these commodities are carried onward to destination points in the U.S. by interconnecting American railroads, or, from the mine sites entirely over Canadian Pacific's lines, to the port of Thunder Bay for vessel loading and delivery to ports on the Great Lakes. There is no intention on the part of CP to change these traffic routings.

The real question deals with the fact that part of CP's coal car fleet is made up of bathtub gondola cars that were manufactured in Canada and used domestically to export coal to the West Coast. They are also used for the transport of low sulphur coal to power generating plants in Ontario. CP has a surplus of this equipment. These cars are cheaper to operate than the equipment currently used in transborder coal and potash service, so CP applied to the U.S. regulatory authority for approval to operate these cars in the U.S. This approval is necessary because the cars were built in Canada and do not satisfy all the U.S. specifications.

CP has applied for a waiver of compliance on these specifications. They do not compromise the safety of the rail car, but are technically outside the U.S. design criteria. They are looking for the waiver to avoid paying for modifications solely for the sake of modifications.

CP's actions are a response to the competitive advantages enjoyed by the U.S. railroads.

CP feels that its proposal to use these bathtub cars should not result in the loss of Canadian railway employment. Indeed, if the proposal is accepted, CP will generate increased traffic levels.

In summary, the use of bathtub gondola cars is clearly an attempt to reduce the operating costs for the traffic in question. Cost reductions of this nature ultimately benefit Canadian exporters as they help Canadian rail carriers to remain financially viable and thus capable of providing rail service at competitive prices. The Minister of Transport supports efforts to assist Canadian shippers to be competitive in U.S. markets.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kinsella, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill S-2, An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Finland, Canada and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and Canada and the United Mexican States for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax and prevention of fiscal evasion and a convention between Canada and the United Mexican States for the exchange of information with respect to taxes.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this particular matter is one that has to be referred to a committee, and it will have to stand until we get the committee constituted.

Order stands.

CROWN CORPORATIONS DISSOLUTION OR TRANSFER AUTHORIZATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John T. Eyton moved second reading of Bill C-8, to provide for the dissolution or transfer of certain Crown corporations and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased—not necessarily thrilled but pleased—to speak to the second reading of Bill C-8, the Crown Corporations Dissolution or Transfer Authorization Act.

This bill responds to commitments made in the 1990 budget. In that budget, the government indicated that organizations to be wound up or whose functions would be transferred to other entities include Canada Harbour Place Corporation, Canadian Patents and Development Ltd., and the Canadian Livestock Feed Board.

The legislation we are considering names another three corporations to be dealt with. These are Harbourfront Corporation, Canada Museums Construction Corporation, and Mingan Associates.

When the Minister of State (Finance and Privatization) spoke on this bill in the House of Commons, he placed emphasis in his address on the government's views on crown corporations and the rationale for the government's management of crown corporations in general. I believe it would be useful to examine each of these six crown corporations in detail.

I will begin with the Canada Harbour Place Corporation, known as CHPC. That corporation was created in 1982 to design, construct and manage Canada Place, the federal government's contribution to Expo 86 in Vancouver. The corporation maintains a small public affairs program; manages a retail area in the building; maintains public walkways around the building; receives rental payments from long term leases on a theatre, restaurant and parking garage; provides common services of heating and cooling from a central plant on a cost recovery basis; and provides building security. These functions are carried out by 27 employees at an annual cost of $5 million. The corporation is currently operating on a self-sufficient basis but it is not setting aside sufficient moneys for future repairs. The bill before us proposes to wind up the CHPC as a parent crown corporation and transfer its assets to another federal entity.

While the buildings management services and public affairs programs carried out by the CHPC need to be maintained, it does not require the existence of a parent crown corporation to do this. The functions of the corporation will be carried out by whichever entity acquires it, and most of the staff functions will be required by the new authority.

The Minister of Transport will be given the authority to dispose of the government's shares in the corporation, and we expect the CHPC will cease to be a parent crown corporation shortly after this bill becomes law. Government books will show no direct savings from the transfer since the CHPC operated without appropriations and was not a source of revenue to the government in the past.

I turn next to the Canadian Patents and Development Ltd., commonly referred to as CPDL, which was created by letters patent in 1947. The corporation patents and licenses intellectual property which federal departments and agencies develop. It also has a program to educate scientists on the need to protect the technologies they develop.

The company currently has eight employees and an annual budget of over $3 million. This corporation has recently required appropriations—one of $1.2 million three years ago, and $799,000 in each of the past two years.

The Minister of Industry, Science and Technology will be authorized to procure the dissolution of CPDL. With the wind-up of the corporation, departments and agencies will become responsible for managing their own intellectual property, a function that some larger departments and agencies are already carrying out.

We expect that CPDL will be ready to shut down shortly after this bill receives Royal Assent. Departments and agencies will receive all revenues amounting to some $2.2 million from CPDL'S existing licenses. They will also receive a percentage of revenues from future licenses.

The National Research Council will provide a small advisory service on intellectual property to help smaller science departments during a two-year transition period. Departments will be encouraged to hire CPDL employees. Those who have not acquired positions will receive an appropriate severance package.

With the wind-up, the government will save on CPDL's nearly $800,000 annual appropriation. In addition, the wind-up of CPDL will allow a greater role for scientists in marketing the property they develop. Furthermore, since departments will be able to keep revenue from licenses, they will now have an incentive to aggressively research and market technologies.

The next corporation in the legislation is the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, known as the CLFB, which was established pursuant to the Livestock Feed Assistance Act, 1966-67. The board administers the Feed Freight Assistance Program, which subsidizes the transportation of livestock feed from surplus regions to regions that are deficient in feed. It also collects and disseminates statistics and other information on the livestock industry in Canada.

The board has 22 employees, and an annual operating budget of approximately $1.7 million. The Feed Freight Assistance Program distributes approximately $18 million in subsidies per year. All of the costs are covered by appropriations. The costs have remained relatively stable over the past several years.

The programs and functions carried out by the board will be transferred to Agriculture Canada. The Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds will be authorized to do all that is necessary to wind up the CLFB. He will then assume responsibility for the programs and functions now carried on by the board.

The windup should be accomplished shortly after Royal Assent. The CLFB employees would be transferred to Agriculture Canada and would continue to work in their present locations. The windup would be physically easy to carry out, since staff would not be affected, and offices would remain open.

Administrative savings due to the windup would amount to $500,000 per year. The savings would be achieved without affecting the delivery of programs.

The next agency is the Canadian Museums Construction Corporation, known as CMCC, which was established in 1982 to construct new buildings for the National Gallery of Canada and the Canadian Museum of Civilization. It was always intended that CMCC would be wound up after the projects were completed.

Construction of the gallery has finished and construction of the Museum of Civilization was completed last summer. CMCC plans to cease active operations by this fall.

• (1450)

The bill we are considering, honourable senators, provides for a change in CMCC's legal status from parent crown corporation to a subsidiary of Canada Lands Company Limited. Canada Lands Company Limited, which is another parent crown corporation, already holds two of the three shares that have been issued in CMCC. The bill would authorize the company to acquire the third share in CMCC which is held by the Minister of Public Works. The change in status will place CMCC in a holding pattern prior to eventual dissolution by Order in Council.

CMCC will be dissolved once all outstanding rights and liabilities have been addressed. It is too early to say precisely when that might be.

There are no staff implications. Once CMCC ceases operations the corporation will no longer have any employees. The corporation has already made provision for termination benefits.

After CMCC ceases operations, any remaining work, such as settling construction claims and correcting construction deficiencies, will be handled by the Department of Public Works. The objective of the share transfer is to give CMCC a more appropriate legal status once it becomes a shell corporation, and at the same time to ensure that rights and obligations associated with the museum projects are preserved.

I turn now to the Harbourfront Corporation, which was acquired in 1978 to manage and develop lands held by the federal government as a result of a commitment made in the 1972 election campaign. The commitment was to return the waterfront to the people of Toronto.

Harbourfront developed about one-half of the 100 acre site, creating luxury, affordable and non-profit housing at a time when there was an urgent need. The corporation also improved many acres of derelict land, turning it into attractive parklands, venues for cultural activities and sites for development.

At the same time, partially funded by development proceeds, Harbourfront developed widely acclaimed public programming activities which last year attracted something over 3.5 million people attending more than 4,000 events. Harbourfront played an important role in stimulating the redevelopment of Toronto's waterfront, but there were also complaints of overdevelopment.

On March 30, 1988 the federal government appointed the Honourable David Crombie as Royal Commissioner on the Future of Toronto's Waterfront. His 1989 interim report recommended that the cultural programming and land development functions of Harbourfront be separated.

Municipal and provincial freezes were placed on development at Harbourfront, thus closing off the corporation's ability to generate funds to continue its activities. Last year the federal government appointed Mr. Darcy McKeough to develop a plan acceptable to all interested parties. In November Mr. McKeough's report was accepted by the Government of Canada and endorsed by the Province of Ontario and the Mayor of the City of Toronto.

Under this plan the majority of the remaining undeveloped land will be dedicated to public use. Funds from the disposal of remaining assets will be used to complete necessary site work and to establish a trust fund. The proceeds from this trust will be used to fund ongoing program needs.

The crown corporation will essentially be getting out of the real estate development business. The bill will give the Minister of Public Works the authority to dissolve the corporation and to dispose of its assets under conditions subject to approval by the Governor in Council.

A locally controlled non-profit entity is carrying on Harbourfront's programming activities, and I am pleased to confirm that most of Harbourfront Corporation's employees retain their employment in the new structure. The 58 employees whose jobs were eliminated because of the restructuring were offered normal severance benefits.

Harbourfront achieved its goal of returning the waterfront to the people of Toronto. During this time the priorities of the people of Toronto changed, placing parks and accessibility to the waterfront high on their agenda. In this context it is appropriate that the programming activity be the focus of local interest and controlled at the local level, where it belongs. Consequently, the federal government management of programming has been ended.

Lastly, Mingan Associates Ltd. is an inactive crown corporation. The company was acquired in 1983 to permit the recovery of fishing and land rights controlled by Mingan. These rights were transferred to an adjoining Indian reserve and the corporation became inactive.

The bill permits the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to dissolve Mingan. He is expected to implement the dissolution as soon as possible once the bill becomes law. There are no employees and no ongoing functions requiring administration.

Although there are no direct operating savings, ending Mingan's status as a parent crown corporation will reduce paper burden by eliminating the reporting requirements.

To sum up, with this bill the government is getting out of inappropriate roles and allocating tasks where they can best be performed without additional overheads. We are recognizing that when a job is completed, the agency that did the job should be phased out. These are actions that can and should be supported. The savings from these initiatives are modest, but the initiatives are nonetheless a clear indication of a process of critical self-evaluation that should be welcomed.

Canadians are demanding that their governments be more efficient in the delivery of public services and goods. If delivery can be arranged less expensively and more intelligently, then Canadians, I believe, will support such a change.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

UNIVERSITY OF EMMANUEL COLLEGE—BILL TO AMEND SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold moved second reading of Bill S-4, to amend the Act of Incorporation of the University of Emmanuel College.

He said: Honourable senators, I introduced Bill S-20, which is exactly the same as Bill S-4, in the last session of Parliament. As a matter of fact, Bill S-20 was given first reading on March 22 of this year. It was given second reading on April 9. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs reported the bill on April 17, and it received third reading on the same day.

In fact, the bill was all ready to go, but I presume even Anglicans cannot control certain acts of God. Parliament was prorogued and the bill died on the order paper before it went through the House of Commons. It is now rising again in the sense that it is now being introduced for second reading.

I do not think it is necessary to go through the details of the bill in any great way. I remind honourable senators that the University of Emmanuel College is an affiliate of the University of Saskatchewan. In fact, the college was established to prepare candidates for ordination in the Anglican Church of Canada.

The University of Emmanuel College has a very long history for that part of the world. It was originally founded in Prince Albert in 1879 and was incorporated by an act of the Parliament of Canada in 1883 while that part of the world was still part of the territories. It was known as the University of Saskatchewan. However, in 1909 the University of Saskatchewan was established by the provincial government as a provincial university and what had been the University of Saskatchewan—namely, the Anglican seminary—was changed to Emmanuel College and later changed to the University of Emmanuel and St. Chad's. Senator Balfour would know about St. Chad's, which is in Regina. So, as I say, for our part of the world that is a very ancient educational institution and one that has certainly earned the respect and admiration of those involved in the educational process.

The bill really updates the provisions of the act of incorporation. I think it has been carefully prepared. Here are the changes involved, and you will excuse me if I summarize them very briefly: The first change involves the French name being properly expressed. The second clause is consequential to the first clause. Clause 3 amends the university's charter to provide that the principal of the college affiliated with the university be ex officio Vice-Chancellor of the university.

Clause 4 updates section 12 of the university's charter by providing that the Senate of the university be composed of certain designated office holders or persons with qualifications described in the new provisions. Finally, clause 5 indicates that section 14 of the university's charter requires that a formal procedure be followed in the making of a statute, by-law or regulation by the university pursuant to the statutory authority to do so given to it by its charter.

As I said when I previously introduced this bill:

> At this time it cannot be determined with certainty from the records of the university whether the formalities were always complied with in the past when any statutes, by-laws or regulations were made. This amendment would remedy any such irregularity if any irregularity did, in fact, occur.

Knowing how Anglicans operate, you will be assured that no irregularities occurred. But to make sure, they are covering them with this amendment.

Honourable senators, that would be the intent of the bill. It was previously referred to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee where it received approval. It is my pleasure, once again, to urge the adoption of this bill and ask that it be referred to that committee for review.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this bill appears to be, as Senator Buckwold has said, a repeat of a bill we dealt with in the previous session. Nevertheless, it is important that we go through the rules and conventions of the Senate and refer it to committee. So at an appropriate time when we get that committee established, this bill will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Senator Buckwold: Has that committee not been appointed yet?

Senator Doody: Yes. The Selection committee dealt with that particular committee and that report will be dealt with later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: I gather, Senator Doody, that you are adjourning the debate?

Senator Doody: Yes.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

SECOND REPORT—POINT OF ORDER

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Second Report of the Committee of Selection (membership of certain select committees), presented in the Senate of 29th May, 1991.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have certain difficulties with this report from a rules point of view. It may be that my difficulties can be removed by the chairman of the committee and that it would be unnecessary, if that is the case, for me to seek a ruling on the motion before the Senate. Earlier, my sense of uneasiness increased as Senator Doody indicated that in his view the approval of this report would establish and approve these committees and accordingly provide them with the status to deal with bills as if they had been validly constituted. I have difficulty with that view.

In order to illustrate my difficulty, may I refer to the Second Report, or the report that is proposed for adoption. The Second Report begins:

> Pursuant to rule 66(1)(b), your Committee submits herewith the list of Senators nominated by it to serve on the following select committees:

True enough, 66(1)(b) says:

At the commencement of each session, a Committee of Selection consisting of nine senators shall be appointed whose duties shall be to nominate

(a) a senator to preside as speaker pro tempore;

(b) the senators to serve on the several select committees.

That is, in a sense, the mandate or the basis upon which the Selection committee operates.

• (1510)

Rule 67 states:

(1) The standing committees shall be as follows:

(a) The Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament to which shall be appointed seventeen senators.

(b) The Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament to which shall be appointed twenty-one senators.

(c) The Joint Committee on the Restaurant of Parliament to which shall be appointed the Speaker and six other senators.

(d) The Joint Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations to which shall be appointed eight senators.

(e) The Joint Committee on Official Languages to which shall be appointed nine senators.

The rule is very specific as to the number. Rule 67(1)(f) states:

(f) The Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, composed of fifteen members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, which is empowered on its own initiative to propose to the Senate amendments to the rules from time to time.

The rule is clear. It says that the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders will be composed of 15 members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum. Honourable senators, the report proposes a committee of nine members, not 15. I repeat, the rule says that the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders shall be composed of 15 members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum.

I cannot believe that the Senate would be acting properly to establish a committee of nine members, directly contrary to the specific rule of the Senate, and entrust that committee with the duty of dealing with bills, such as has been proposed by the Deputy Leader of the Government.

I expected that today the Deputy Leader of the Government would seek the approval of this report, which would create nine members, and that he would then seek another meeting of the Committee of Selection in order to add the additional members so that the committee membership would be brought into line with the Rules of the Senate. That was my thought, but the Deputy Leader of the Government removed that thought by saying he regarded the passage of this motion as establishing the committees in a juridical way, capable of doing business.

It would be repetitious, I think, to read in detail the subsequent numbers, but perhaps it is necessary. The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration is to be composed of 15 members. Honourable senators, 15 members are proposed in the report and, if the report is adopted, that committee will be validly constituted. The rule states that the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs is to be composed of 12 members, and I believe seven are proposed. The rule does not say that the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs shall be composed of seven members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum. Honourable senators, I wonder how a chairman of a committee would determine what a quorum was if he called a meeting and nine members were in attendance. I do not know. If he looked to the rule, he would realize that the committee must be composed of 12 members, four of whom would constitute a quorum.

According to the rules, honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance is to be composed of 12 members; and the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is to be composed of 12 members. I believe the proposal in the committee report is that that committee is to be composed of seven members.

I hope the government will realize the difficulty that will confront it in pressing forward with the establishment of committees whose membership is not in accordance with the standing orders, and for which it will be impossible for a chairman to establish a quorum if the committee is called. It would proceed by asking the Committee of Selection to resume its work and to bring in a report with the number of members required by the rules.

That is my difficulty, honourable senators. It may be that the Senate has, by unanimity or by consent, agreed to different arrangements, but we are not proposing to waive the rules in this case and, in my view, they must apply.

It has been suggested that subsequently the whip on our side could add the names of the Liberal members. I do not think that is the case. According to the rules, all that the whip can do is change the membership; he cannot add to it.

Honourable senators, that is my difficulty. I hope we will recognize the difficulty at once and try to remedy it, rather than proceeding, perpetuating this situation, and opening a whole new series of subsequent difficulties for all of us. I put forward my opinion, honourable senators, before I press for any kind of a ruling.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Opposition has indicated, there was some disagreement, or lack of agreement, in committee yesterday concerning the proportion of the membership between the parties and the Independents. We on this side would very much like to see the Liberal Party represented on the committees, and yesterday, as chairman of the committee, on a couple of occasions I specifically asked if the Liberals wished to nominate any further senators and, at that time, I was advised that they did not.

I am pleased to see the Leader of the Opposition take the attitude that he wants his party represented on the committees, as do we. We are willing to assist him in that regard in any way we can.

I would suggest that one option would be that the opposition amend the motion, adding their names in the established pattern, and we on this side would be quite happy to accept that amendment. I hope the Leader of the Opposition will find that acceptable.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am not complaining at this point, although I would on another occasion, about the fact that there are no Liberals on the committees. There are Liberals on the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and they bring the number to 15. The deficiency is that the numbers are not in accordance with the rules. I could not complain on procedural grounds if the chairman of the committee had brought in 15 Conservatives. I would raise hell on the other grounds, but I am now making a procedural argument. I do not think that the suggestion made by the whip, however helpful he attempted to be, removes the difficulty, because the committee has to do that job. I cannot make amendments here to the committee report. The committee has to grapple with this.

Senator Phillips: I have some hesitancy in accepting the viewpoint of the Leader of the Opposition that the Senate cannot amend this report. I believe it can. However, in the spirit of generosity that exists here today, I would be quite willing to suggest that the Senate recess for a few minutes while we have the Selection committee sit, allow the opposition to name their members to the committee, and then we could report it later this day and proceed by adopting the complete report.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am not quite sure what spirit of generosity the government whip is referring to, but, if there is such a one, I do not count myself as part of it. I have another concern. It is one with which honourable senators are familiar, because it is a position I have taken in the committee on two occasions and once in the Senate, drawing to the attention of the Senate that the Committee of Selection itself—which, of course, is offering this report for approval—is improperly constituted because it is the result of the government's unilaterally establishing a majority of government supporters on the Selection committee. So, since the committee itself is improperly constituted, one must certainly question whether it would be wise to support a motion to adopt a report from such a committee that is suffering from that procedural or legal vice.

Let me remind honourable senators that there is no precedent for a government or an opposition doing what has been done in this case in establishing this committee. Honourable senators will notice that the committee itself, born in this impropriety, has perpetuated and spread this impropriety through its recommendations contained in this report, because, in all cases, the improper Committee of Selection has put its improper imprimatur on each of the committees by again giving a majority to government supporters.

However, it has gone even further than that—and honourable senators should remember that it is improper because the government does not have a majority in the Senate. There was an occasion where the government had a majority and gave the opposition a majority on a committee, but that situation was one where, with a majority, the decision was made by the majority. This case is unique, as far as I am able to determine, because the present circumstances are that neither the Liberal supporters nor the Conservative supporters have a majority and so neither is entitled to claim or force a majority on the Committee of Selection or on any other committee.

Now, I suspect that the main objective of the government in the Senate with regard to this process is to have a proposal for amending the rules placed before this improperly constituted Rules and Orders committee.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: That is not what you said last week.

Senator Frith: I could not have said anything else.

Senator Simard: I heard you. We argued on our side that you were saying that the committee was improperly constituted and you said no.

Senator Frith: Which committee?

Senator Simard: The Selection committee.

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Simard: You said no, that it was properly constituted, but because of tradition and so on—I guess you are changing your argument today. You are reversing your field. You admitted that the committee was properly constituted last week and you took exception because we were lending you motives or attributing statements to you at the time. You argued about tradition. As a matter of fact, you were making excuses for not raising the issue on the opening day of the house. That is what you were saying.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I took the position, which I maintain, that we could not argue that the committee had not been established by the Senate, because it had been. I have consistently used the phrase "improperly constituted." I am using it today. I used it on the first day of the committee meeting. I used it once again in the Senate. I used it again in the committee and I am using it again today. So I am being quite consistent. With the numbers as they are, that is, with neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives having a majority, this Selection committee has now established in the Rules and Orders committee a relationship of eight to six, or nine to six by accommodating Senator Molson in such a way as to reduce the presently vacant seats.

In the previous session the relationship in the Rules and Orders committee was nine to six. reflecting a status in the house as follows: Liberals, 58; Conservatives, 35; Independents, 5; Independent Conservative, 1, as he then was; and 5 vacancies. So even with a relationship of 41 non-government and 35 Conservatives, if one looks at it on the present basis, neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives have a majority. At that time the Liberals had a majority or 58 to 35 and still gave the Conservatives 6 members in a relationship of 9 to 6. That is what this Selection committee is proposing, with the status in the Senate as it is today.

The tradition has always been that the government would absorb any independent members. In this case what the government has done is to put forward eight Conservatives and therefore left six vacancies, because it has added Senator Molson—not, honourable senators should notice, absorbing the independent themselves but making sure that, without any basis related to status in the Senate, they have a majority of nine to six, which was the arithmetical basis for the status that existed when the relationship in the Senate was 58 Liberals and 35 Conservatives. Therefore, they are not only reflecting the impropriety of the relationship in the Committee of Selection, but they are exaggerating it and forcing it even further with regard to the Standing Rules and Orders committee. I wonder why. I believe the reason the government has done this is to be absolutely sure that it will be able to change the rules in the Senate in such a way as to emasculate the Opposition in the Senate, the same as it has emasculated the Opposition in the House of Commons.

Senator Simard: You said that was a unique situation. What is unique about it?

Senator Frith: Having usurped a majority in the Committee of Selection, the government has not only reflected that majority on a seven/five basis in the other committees, but has effectively made it nine to six in the Standing Rules and Orders committee in order to proceed with the emasculation of the Senate. I hope I am surprised, but I expect that any proposals the government has for the Standing Rules and Orders committee, which it seems hell-bent to get established, will have the intent of changing the rules of the Senate so as not to break the rules as it did in order to get the GST through.

Senator Simard: You had your rules. They exist now.

Senator Frith: Yes, and I think they could be improved upon. The rules in any Parliament exist for the sake of the Opposition, not for the sake of the government.

Senator Simard: Yes. We saw that on September 24.

Senator Frith: Otherwise, for what would you need a Parliament? If the government and Parliament are there simply to agree with whatever is proposed by the government, then what is the need for a Parliament? We now know the extent to which the House of Commons will do anything to prevent the government from having its way. However, we will see. It may be that we will be surprised. Maybe we will find that the rules that are being proposed are not rules that will attempt to squash any opposition and emasculate opposition in the Senate.

Senator Simard: September 24th.

Senator Frith: However, I suspect that having found that it had to break the rules in order to get the GST through, the government will try to change the rules so that it can do that sort of thing with at least some semblance of authority.

That is my objection to adopting this report. Of course, we still have not dealt with the very valid procedural question raised by Senator MacEachen.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, notwithstanding all that has been said—and I understand Senator MacEachen's position on the ultimate number to be nominated to these committees—the report, as I read it, simply says that the committee submits herewith a list of senators who have so far been nominated. Those senators have been nominated to serve on these committees. That is really what the current report of the committee says.

All that is being said here is that there is a motion before the chamber asking that this report be approved. I understand Senator MacEachen's point — it is clear in the rules — as to what the final makeup must be, but why can we not go ahead and vote on this report? This is the report of the committee and it simply lists those who were nominated to serve on the committee.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Senator Kelly, earlier this afternoon Senator MacEachen read the mandate of the striking committee, and, as I read that mandate, the striking committee has no right to put forward the particular document that we have before us. It has a right, indeed the obligation, to put forward a report containing the names of the specified number of senators. So this report is a nullity.

Senator Kelly: With respect to Senator Stewart's point, I do not think that is quite so. It was clear at the Committee of Selection meeting yesterday that there were no further nominations available at that time from the other side of this chamber. In addition, I come back to my basic point that we are all senators here. That could have led the Committee of Selection to bring forward the balance of names from this side of the chamber. It chose not to do that, but, in the interest of moving ahead, it did come forward with the nominations made yesterday. That is what this report says. It seems to me that it is perfectly legitimate for us to vote on this report.

There is the other issue of whether the committees can sit. However, this is the report of the committee. I do not see why we cannot vote on the report itself.

Senator Stewart: The problem, Senator Kelly, is that the rule says:

> 66(1) At the commencement of each session, a Committee of Selection consisting of nine senators shall be appointed whose duties shall be to nominate
> (a) a senator to preside as speaker pro tempore;
> (b) the senators —

Not some senators, but the senators—

> —to serve on several select committees.

In the next rule, the number of senators, who are the senators to serve on the several select committees, is defined. The so-called report is not a report which flows from the authority of that committee. It is hard to see what, in fact, we have before us.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, why do we not let the Senate decide? If the majority of senators here agree with Senator Stewart, or with other things that have been said, they will vote against it and the report will be set aside. If, on the other hand, they agree that this report is worthy of being approved, then they can approve it. We can argue the procedure forever. However, this is a pretty straightforward thing. Why do we not put the question forward and vote?

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Senator MacEachen: Senator Kelly is, in a sense, reviving the technique which he so callously used a few months ago in suggesting that we now amend the Rules of the Senate by a vote on this motion. The Rules of the Senate say that the committees must be composed of a specific number of members. That is the issue before us. I believe that we must have a ruling on whether these committees are being set up in accordance with the Rules of the Senate—yes or no. If we set up a committee today, could any chairman presiding in the circumstances discern a quorum in accordance with the Rules of the Senate? That is the question. If the whole thing were withdrawn, the committee would go back to the drawing board. That apparently, is not, the wish of Senator Phillips. Senator Kelly is suggesting that we vote, and, if the majority decides, then the rule of the Senate is abrogated in that we have nine senators instead of one. If that is the case, then let us throw out the rules, since they are not worth a damn.

Senator Frith: Throw out the Senate, you mean. Why bother with the Senate?

Senator MacEachen: If the Leader of the Government says that, if this motion is passed, we will not hold committee meetings until they are brought up to the numbers required in the rules, then that is another matter; but I have not heard anyone in authority say that.

• (1540)

However, I have heard Senator Doody say that he intends to have meetings of these committees next week to deal with bills, even though the membership is at nine instead of 12. If I had an assurance to the contrary, I would drop the procedural argument, but unless I do, I have to proceed to the only recourse I have, namely for a ruling from the Chair as to whether this is proper procedure, whether committees can function validly when they are set up other than in accordance with the clear rule of the Senate.

Senator Murray: Is the honourable senator suggesting that there is no precedent for a Selection Committee bringing in a report in respect of any committee with less than the full complement of members for that committee? If he is making that suggestion he would be wrong.

Senator MacEachen: No, I am not making that suggestion. In fact I covered that point. I said that by unanimous consent the rules of the Senate can be waived and any number established. But there is no unanimity to waive the rules of the Senate.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I would like to advise the Chair that I am speaking to the motion and require—

Senator Frith: Do you think you are closing the debate?

Senator Phillips: Yes.

Senator Frith: Did you speak to it at the beginning? I do not recall you doing so. I do not think your speaking closes the debate.

Senator Phillips: I do not have to speak at the beginning.

Senator Frith: I do not think this closes the debate.

Senator Doody: He moved the motion.

Senator Frith: No, it is only second reading of a bill.

Senator Murray: And a substantive motion.

Senator Frith: I do not know whether this is considered a substantive motion.

Senator Phillips: I would think this is a substantive motion.

Senator Frith: We do not agree that the debate is being closed.

Senator Phillips: Does anyone else wish to speak? If not, the debate would be closed.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, if that is the view taken by Senator Phillips, I would have to ask for a ruling on whether the matter is validly before the house and whether we can set up committees in direct violation of the rules. Can we have nine-member committees when the rules call for 12? That is the simple proposition.

Senator Frith: Besides, I do not think this is a substantive motion, but that is another matter.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, our friends opposite are asking for a ruling. They are entitled to ask for a ruling and Your Honour will have to consult his advisors and the precedents and authorities and bring in a ruling.

Senator Frith: Since it has arisen, while we are at it we might have a ruling as to whether a motion to adopt a committee report is a substantive motion, because a substantive motion is defined as an independent motion neither incidental to, nor related to, a proceeding or order of the day already before the Senate. I think there is a very moot point as to whether a motion to adopt a committee report is a substantive motion.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, before the Chair makes a ruling on the request of Senator MacEachen, I would point out to the honourable chamber that on a number of occasions last year various committees operated without a full complement of members.

Senator Frith: That has nothing to do with it. You obviously just do not understand the point.

Senator Phillips: I am not so sure you understand it.

Senator Frith: I do, but you clearly do not because no one has made that suggestion at all.

Senator Phillips: Would you demonstrate a bit of understanding, then?

Senator Frith: That is not the point he is raising at all.

Senator Phillips: If there is any change from this report later on in the session as far as complement is concerned, I would like to know what the difference is. I checked the list of membership for the last session of Parliament and I found out that the Liberals had not nominated a single senator to the Joint Senate Committee on the Scrutiny of Regulations. It was quite all right not to nominate on that occasion and it was passed by the house. What is wrong with this report? What is the difference?

Senator MacEachen: Because it was done by consent.

Senator Frith: That is the difference.

Senator MacEachen: When a point is raised the rules have to be observed, that is the point.

Senator Phillips: The honourable senator provides an opportunity for me to raise my second point. If we followed Senator MacEachen's method we would have to wait for unanimous consent. In other words, the chamber would be unable to operate without unanimous consent. Senator Frith suggests that we could operate by unanimous consent. He would give unanimous consent for the committee to be formed, which would be very generous and magnanimous of him, and we appreciate all that, but we on this side take the view that we have the right and the responsibility—which is a word you do not understand over there—to set up our committees and to function, and we do not have to wait for unanimous consent.

Senator MacEachen: Just follow the rules.

Senator Frith: Of course you do not just follow the rules. Just in case the Chair misunderstands the point raised, as Senator Phillips obviously does, there is no question that the committees can be set up by a report approved by a majority vote. However, the committees have to be composed of the numbers referred to in the rules. It is that simple. Just read the rules. You do not have to look at Bourinot or Beauchesne. The rule says that the committees shall be composed of a certain number, and until they are composed of that number they are not composed and not validly set up. That is the point that Senator MacEachen is raising. It has nothing to do with unanimous consent. The only relevancy of unanimous consent is that you could set up the committees and operate without a full membership by unanimous consent, of course.

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I think the rules are indeed very helpful for us in this matter, and in particular the reference to the role of the Senate in receiving a report of any committee, and, in this instance, receiving the report of the Committee of Selection. Otherwise, why would we have in rule 66(3) the confirmation role that the Senate must play? This is precisely the situation that we are in. We have nominations—not elections—being brought before this chamber. That is why the question that is before this chamber is whether we confirm or not confirm nominations that have been placed before us.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Let me try once more. The Leader of the Opposition is asking for some kind of undertaking from me as to what our plans would be in the event that this motion were to pass. If this motion passes with regard to all the committees other than the Internal Economy committee, and if the question is whether we would have a meeting of the selection committee so that the committees could be brought to their full complements, then the answer would be that of course we would, yes.

However, if the question is if this motion passes, will we agree to indefinitely refrain from holding any meeting of the committee while awaiting nominations from the other side, the answer has to be no. We have a responsibility to get on with the business of the Senate, and we could not allow a boycott of the selection committee to interfere with that.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I understand that the obligation of all of us is to ensure that we operate according to the rules of the Senate. All I am asking for is an undertaking that if this motion were passed the committees would not meet unless they were brought up to full strength as required by the rules. That is all. I am not asking you to wait on me or on anyone else. You are free to bring in a report filling the committees to 15 by persons on the other side. You can do that if you want to; you do not have to wait for me. All I am asking is that you follow the rule. In doing that, I hope that you will follow the rule of equity and fairness.

Senator Simard: In the meantime you will boycott all the rules of the Senate?

Senator MacEachen: I have not asked the Leader of the Government, but if these committees meet with a complement of nine when the rules call for 12, you are heading for trouble. It is not just from me and the people on this side; you might have some of those people affected by the tax treaties wondering whether the burdens placed on them had been validly placed when the jurisprudence of the Senate had been violated in levying those taxes.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): May I ask a question for the clarification of myself and perhaps others? Is my understanding correct that if this report is adopted and the Selection committee is called for another meeting this afternoon, this evening, tomorrow, or whenever, that honourable senators opposite will be willing to nominate enough senators to bring the Senate committee complements up to those suggested in the rules? Do we have that undertaking or understanding, or am I incorrect?

The dilemma that I see is that if we do not deal with this matter now and we leave the situation in limbo, then we might very well be heading for a lot of trouble, such as Senator MacEachen has just mentioned. But if there is goodwill on both sides—that is, if both sides are willing to bring the complement of the Senate committees up to 12 or 15 and add to the numbers that are here now by honourable senators representative of the other side—then I think we are on the right road.

Senator MacEachen: While the honourable senator is negotiating or discussing across the aisle, will he reconsider the distribution of numbers that he has proposed on the Standing Rules and Orders committee? I thought that it was a fair proposal, in view of the fine balance between the two sides, to have equal numbers on both sides, and have an Independent as chairman.

Hon. Roch Bolduc: What does that mean?

Senator Frith: You had better repeat that, because he shouted while you were speaking, and we did not hear your point.

Senator MacEachen: Senator Doody has asked a question. He has asked whether we will attend the committee and add our members. Before I answer that question, I want to ask him whether he will reconsider distribution of membership as between parties, particularly on the Rules and Orders committee.

I then went on to say that I had made a proposal that I thought was reasonable and fair, namely that, in view of the situation in the house, the membership of the committee be made up of an equal number on both sides, with an Independent chairman, so that if there were a division in the committee along party lines, the Independent chairman could call the shot. I thought that was a reasonable proposal.

Will Senator Doody reconsider particularly the distribution of members on the Rules and Orders committee so that we may have some assurance that new rules are not shoved down our throats, the purpose of which is to remove the rights of the minority in the chamber? The Rules and Orders committee is very critical. If we had some indication of a willingness to reconsider, then it might be possible to move ahead.

Senator Doody: The difficulty is in the closing statement of Senator MacEachen in which he talked about the rights of a minority in the Senate. Certainly, it is not reasonable to ask that the minority in the Senate have an equal number of seats on a committee with this side which has more members—

Senator Frith: A minority.

Senator Doody: —than the people on the other side.

Senator Frith: But a minority, nevertheless.

Senator Doody: And to pass over the casting vote—that is, the deciding vote—to an Independent defies description. It is not a reasonable proposition. There is an obligation on the side with the most members to make their presence known and to make their decisions in the committees as well as in the chamber. I do not think that a composition of seven, seven, and one would pass a test of fairness in any reasonable group.

Senator Frith: It sounds fair to me. Let us see where we are. Senator Doody, in answer to Senator MacEachen, said earlier, "If we have a meeting now of the Selection committee, are you prepared to nominate or propose Liberal members for that committee?" To which I say, "How many?" And he says, "Well, of course, six." Is that correct? In other words, swallow yourself. Just say "take it all back"; say that it is perfectly reasonable; say that an even balance between two parties—neither of which has a majority—with an Independent, is unreasonable—in other words, two minorities represented equally, with a balance, an independent, is unreasonable?

An Hon. Senator: Yes.

Senator Frith: It is obviously unreasonable to those unreasonable people on the other side. Anyone will recognize that, if you give him those kinds of numbers. A 10 year-old kid will say, "Well, sure, you have two minorities. What's the proposal?" Well think that the two minorities should be equally represented and that it should be balanced by an Independent. What could be fairer? But the offer that Senator Doody is now making is to say, "You tell us. Your position is that we have improperly usurped a majority on the Selection committee; that we have taken that usurped majority and forced a majority on the other committees accordingly, and now we want you to come and say that you were wrong.

You now think that it is perfectly fair to have a split of nine and six on this committee. When that applied on a previous occasion—that is, when there was a split of nine and six—the Liberals had a majority of 53 to 35.

The Conservatives—that is, the government—now say that nine and six was acceptable with a relationship of 53 to 35. You say, "We are saying to you Liberals that nine and six is equally fair and equally reasonable when we are talking about two minorities, with one of those minorities having more."

But they are both minorities. In effect, Senator Doody is making this offer: "Change your mind. Say that everything that you have been saying up to now, namely, that this usurped majority on the Selection committee, and a forced majority on all of the other committees flowing from that, is okay, although you have been saying that it is not."

I have never heard a single argument that has any mathematical basis to it at all. It is just: "There is no damn reason for it; it is just our policy."

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition seems again to be addressing the content of the report and the question of whether or not the report should be adopted. However, a point of order has been raised by the Leader of the Opposition, and he has asked for a ruling. That is where we are at the moment.

In that respect, I want to reiterate what I said earlier about the fact that Selection committees in the past have brought in reports containing the names of less than the full complement for particular committees. Those reports have been adopted, those committees have been set up—

• (1600)

Senator Frith: Adopted without a point of order being raised and by unanimous consent, which is quite different.

Senator Murray: The Honourable Leader of the Opposition says there was unanimous consent. I see in the motions that created those committees, that adopted those reports, no reference whatever to leave having been asked for or granted—

Senator Frith: Or points of order raised.

Senator Murray: I will not detain the Senate with a recitation of year after year, but I have it here, and Your Honour and advisors to the Chair can look it up. I will give as a rather outstanding example the year 1973 where the Foreign Affairs Committee, whose full complement was 30 members, it states here consisted of 18; where the Health, Welfare and Science Committee, whose full complement was 30 members, consisted of 20; Internal Economy, Budgets & Administration, whose full complement was 25 members, consisted of 19; Legal and Constitutional Affairs, whose full complement was 30 members, consisted of 20; and National Finance, whose full complement was 30 members, consisted of 18.

Senator Frith: Was a point of order raised in any one of them, or was there a vote or division on any one of them? Any one?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I see no evidence whatsoever that leave was ever asked for or granted, that unanimous consent was sought or granted, or indeed that a point of order was raised. However, that does demonstrate that it is possible to come in here with a report from a Selection committee containing the names of less than a full complement of a committee, to set up the committee and indeed that the committee can start functioning. However, I will leave that.

I think that any attempt to resolve the substantive matter here this afternoon having failed, where we are now is with a point of order on which a ruling has been asked, and we will have to take it from there.

Senator Stewart: Senator Murray, is it not accurate that the example you have given took place prior to the rule which we now have in the Rules of the Senate?

Senator Murray: What rule is the honourable senator referring to?

Senator Stewart: The one that was quoted earlier this afternoon.

Senator Doody: The rule about the number of members on a committee.

Senator Murray: The rule that the honourable senator is referring to is the rule that establishes the number of senators for a committee.

Senator Stewart: Yes.

Senator Murray: Well, I think not, honourable senators. I have in front of me the 1958 rule book. Perhaps Senator Stewart has a rule book from somewhere between 1958 and 1970.

Senator Stewart: Senator Murray is referring to very large committees for a relatively small house. The present rule, the rule under which we are operating here this afternoon, deals with much smaller numbers. Consequently, the example taken from that earlier regime is hardly relevant.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Murray: I do not think it is irrelevant, honourable senators. I appreciate the point the honourable senator has made about committees with a larger number of members and committees with a smaller number of members, but the complement of those committees that I have just referred to from the year 1973, I think it was, was fixed by the rules. For example, the 1958 rules list them all here and in French it states:

[Translation]

78. Les comités permanents sont les suivants:

1. Comité mixte de la bibliothèque du Parlement, auquel doivent être nommés dix-sept sénateurs.

Et ainsi de suite . . .

5. Comité des transports et des communications, composé de cinquante sénateurs.

[English]

Senator Murray: They did not say "not more"; they established what the full complement was.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I think the point Senator Murray makes is an important one, and I understand how such events occur. The house agrees to a situation which is in apparent contradiction with the rules. Today, if we had said nothing and permitted the committee report to be adopted without comment, it would be a fair inference that we had consented to a reduction in the numbers on the committees, that we had felt it was the thing to do, and that we accordingly had waived the rules. I think that is precisely what has happened in the cases which Senator Murray refers to, that both parties met in the Selection committee and said, "Well, we know the rule, it says 30, but isn't it reasonable to reduce it?", and let it come into the house and waive that rule, as we do formally so frequently.

The difference in this case is that one side is not prepared to waive the rule upon which we rely to protect our interests. I accept the validity; I accept that what Senator Murray says has happened, but I think one has to look behind it to understand its meaning. I believe the meaning is that there was consent rather than that it is possible to pass motions which are in direct violation of the rules. That is my point.

Senator Murray: Very well, but look behind the report that has been brought in here today by the Chairman of the Selection committee and what to you find? Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition also listened to the proceedings on the machine we have in our offices. I heard the proposal being made for certain Conservative senators on the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets & Administration, and the Liberals put forward a list of names.

• (1610)

As it happened, I believe there were 17 names for a 15-member committee. The committee members then proceeded to vote name by name. They eliminated two of the names. We ended up with a committee at full complement, as indicated in Senator Phillips' report.

When the committee came to discuss Foreign Affairs, National Finance, Legal and Constitutional Affairs, it was Senator Frith who insisted that the vote be taken on the full Liberal slate. He would have all of his nominees, or he would have none of them.

Senator Frith: And you did it.

Senator Murray: He insisted that the vote be taken in that way. The committee members voted certainly on the composition of Internal Economy; and they voted on the composition of the other committees. The result is what we now have.

The chairman of the committee has brought forward the only report he could bring forward, which is that the committee has agreed—

Senator Frith: That is not true.

Senator Murray: —on the following senators for the various committees.

Senator Frith: All I have to do is insist on something and they cannot do anything else but what I insist upon. That is a new one. I would like that.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, what I think Senator Murray has illustrated is how maladroit his colleagues on the committee were. If they wanted to achieve their objective, when Senator Petten moved his motion all they had to do was amend it by removing one Liberal. They would have achieved their objective in that way. That is what I thought they would have done. I do not think that it is fair for Senator Murray to argue at this stage there was no other alternative, that Senator Frith by word of authority had established—

Senator Frith: I would like to make that a rule by unanimous consent.

Senator MacEachen: I know how persuasive he is. But it was still open to amend Senator Petten's motion and reduce the numbers. That would have given the proper complement. Surely we ought not to disturb the rules to compensate for a maladroit performance in the committee.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, if my understanding of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition are correct, I believe they have asked for a ruling from the Chair. This chit-chat back and forth is very interesting, but not very informative—

Senator Frith: Not for you, perhaps. We found what you said informative, sir. I am sorry you do not feel the same way.

Senator MacEachen: I can understand why you want to get off this subject.

Senator Phillips: Neither is it very productive. We are not making much progress. With great respect, I would ask the Chair to rule on the request.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have some trepidation about using the rules of the Senate to reduce the size of committees where there is an objection to it. If the Committee of Selection was properly constituted, which I believe it was, I fail to understand why the committee cannot name whatever senators it chooses to be on that committee. I think it can name Conservatives, Liberals and Independents.

It has been the custom in the past to receive the consent of any senator who is to sit on a committee, and for obvious reasons. In fact, there is nothing in the rules that says that consent has to be given. Therefore, I am inclined to wonder why the Committee of Selection does not meet again and choose 12 senators in whatever proportion of Liberals, Conservatives, Independents it desires and then put the report to the Senate. I recognize that will slow the process down. Perhaps that is what the opposition hopes will happen. It is sometimes important to adhere to the rules even though it slows the process down to some degree.

I suggest that we not seek a ruling, that the request be withdrawn, that the Committee of Selection meet immediately and conclude the job that it set out to do. The reason I say that is because I am somewhat concerned that a ruling of the Chair, which will probably come to a vote of this house and therefore be endorsed or not endorsed by such a vote, which states that a Selection committee can by fiat reduce the number of people that are on a committee when a minority objects to that, might be a precedent that we might some day regret.

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, just before the Speaker makes a ruling on this matter, I would like to point out that the report of the committee makes the following suggestion. It states, "... the list of Senators nominated by it to serve on the following select committees:" It does not say that the committees will consist of those senators. It leaves ample room for further appointments to these committees as the opposition chooses.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do honourable senators wish the Chair to rule on this matter?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition can speak for himself. He has asked for a ruling.

The Hon. the Speaker: I will take the matter under consideration. We will adjourn now and reconvene at the call of the bell.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

SPEAKER'S RULING

REPORT ADOPTED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, at the commencement of each session, a Committee of Selection consisting of nine senators shall be appointed whose duties shall be to nominate

(a) a senator to preside as Speaker pro tempore;

(b) the senators to serve on the several select committees.

[English]

Rule 67 of the Rules of the Senate lists the various committees of the Senate as well as their maximum number of members.

In the brief time allowed to me, I have noted that while the Committee of Selection has often provided a list of the maximum number of members to be nominated, it has not always done so. I would draw the attention of the Senate to the Second Report of the Committee of Selection, dated October 9, 1986. In that report, the Committee of Selection nominated only 14 members to serve on the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration although Rule 67(1)(g) states that that committee shall be composed of 15 members. In the same report, the committee nominated only 11 members to serve on the Standing Committee on National Finance although Rule 67(1)(i) states that that committee shall be composed of 12 members. In the same report, the committee nominated only 11 members to serve on the Standing Committee on Fisheries even though Rule 67(1)(n) stated that that committee shall be composed of 12 members.

More recently, on June 6, 1989, the Committee of Selection nominated only four senators to serve on the Joint Committee for the Scrutiny of Regulations although Rule 67(1)(d) states that eight senators shall be appointed to that committee. In that same report, the Committee of Selection nominated only eight senators to serve on the Joint Committee on Official Languages although Rule 67(1)(e) states that nine senators shall be appointed to that committee.

It would appear, therefore, to the Chair that while Rule 67 of the Rules of the Senate sets the maximum number of members which a committee may have, the Committee of Selection is not obliged to nominate a full complement of senators for each committee.

I therefore rule that the Point of Order raised by the Leader of the Opposition is not valid.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I take it the motion before the house is for the adoption of the report of the Selection committee.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, in closing the debate on the motion—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You are not closing the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, you realize that if Senator Phillips speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not realize that at all. In fact, I think that is quite wrong. The rule about closing the debate applies to substantive motions that are independent motions. We are dealing with a motion related to another proceeding, namely a report. I have no objection to Senator Phillips speaking. In fact, I will not have anything to say afterwards, but I think it is quite wrong to say that he is closing the debate. He may turn out to be the last speaker, and I suspect he will turn out to be the last speaker, but he is not closing the debate under Rule 30, in my view.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I will take Senator Frith at his word and accept his promise that he will not speak again. I will not go into the background of the committee and so on at this hour of the evening. I would just like to repeat my offer to those opposite and hope that they would nominate senators to serve on the various committees. If they wish to nominate—

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): The Speaker has just ruled that you do not need us, or the Senate does not need us. He has made a ruling that we are superfluous to the Senate, in his view.

Senator Phillips: The honourable senator can interpret the ruling in that way. I interpret it differently.

Senator MacEachen: That is our interpretation.

Senator Phillips: I invite the Leader of the Opposition to amend the motion before the Senate to bring the committees up to what I consider to be full complement. We on this side will accept the nominations without debate, and we can proceed forthwith.

The Hon. the Speaker: So it was moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kelly that this report be adopted now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Frith: On division.

Motion agreed to and report adopted, on division.

SELECT COMMITTEES

AUTHORIZATION TO MEET DURING ADJOURNMENTS OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e):

> That for the duration of the present session any select committee may meet during adjournments of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we do not support this motion insofar as it applies to improperly constituted committees and committees that have been set up in direct violation of the Rules of the Senate.

Senator Doody: Do we have leave then to move the motion and have it accepted?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Leave to what? Leave was not refused. That is not what Senator MacEachen was speaking to. We have opposed the motion, and I suppose the honourable senator is asking whether the motion can be put. He does not need leave for that, because he has already received it.

The Hon. the Speaker: I have put the motion, and I gather that it is agreed to, on division. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Frith: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

THE ESTIMATES, 1991-92

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the second motion that I discussed earlier today was the referral of the Supplementary Estimates (A) to the Senate Standing Committee on National Finance.

Therefore, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e)

> That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1992.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, for the reasons expressed by Senator MacEachen on the immediately preceding motion, we oppose this motion, and, if it carries, it will carry on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Frith: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would ask that all inquiries stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, may I have leave to revert to Orders of the Day, so that we can deal with the various bills and their respective committees?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and not withstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, June ll, 1991, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED—REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Orders of the Day:

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kinsella, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill S-2, An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Finland, Canada and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and Canada and the United Mexican States for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax and prevention of fiscal evasion, and a convention between Canada and the United Mexican States for the exchange of information with respect to taxes.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On division.

Motion agreed to, on division, and bill, deemed to have been read the second time, referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILL

UNIVERSITY OF EMMANUEL COLLEGE—BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED—REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on Bill S-4, An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the University of Emmanuel College.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

An Hon. Senator: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division, and bill, deemed to have been read the second time, referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

PRIVATE BILL

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST CHURCH IN CANADA—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED—REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Neiman, for the second reading of Bill S-3, An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Canada.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion agreed to, and bill, deemed to have been read the second time, referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

OFFICIAL RECORD

CORRECTION

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege to request a very minor correction, although to my mind it is important. In yesterday's Hansard of the Debates of the Senate, this correction should be inserted in the English version at page 77, in the left hand column, on the penultimate line of the third paragraph, which reads as follows:

[English]

If a province does implement a program which is compatible—and I insisted—

—in French it is—and I think I said "compatible." However, Hansard indicates that I said ". . . it is "consistent—". I believe that correction would make my comments more in line with what I said.

[Translation]

Of course, since this correction concerns the English version, I would appreciate it if the French version were corrected accordingly. Thank you, honourable senators.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 11, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 11, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

RULES OF THE SENATE

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I do so with some apprehension, but consistent with the position I have always taken in terms of my view of the Senate.

I want to draw attention to the fact that last week a notice was published announcing that the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders would hold an organization meeting at 10 o'clock on the morning of June 4. Honourable senators, that did not excite me particularly. We all know how those things take place: a chairman and vice-chairman are elected and a budget is struck. I assumed that is what would take place.

On Wednesday I was in Ottawa, along with Senator Atkins, to meet some students and parliamentarians from Czechoslovakia. While I was here, a little before noon, I heard reference on a media broadcast—I cannot recall which one—to proposed rules for the Senate. That concerned me only because there was no possibility that any recommended rules could have been tabled in this chamber.

I called Mr. Lovelace, the Director of Information Services for the Senate, and asked if he could enlighten me on what was happening. He advised me that he had been informed by the media that a press conference—and those are his words—had been called for 2 o'clock in the afternoon of June 4. The document that was apparently issued to the Press Gallery stated, "The Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders invites you to a presentation on the tabling of new rules for the Senate."

I asked Mr. Lovelace if he would obtain for me the facts concerning what this was all about. He sent me what he described as a "press kit". In that kit I found a bound document described, "Proposed Amendments to the Rules of the Senate".

Honourable senators, my reason for raising this—and I want to make it very clear that I totally support the need for new rules in this chamber. The events of last fall make that absolutely essential, in my opinion—but what I am talking about is a process that I found disturbing.

The first committee I sat on had to do with CSIS, the separation from the RCMP of the intelligence gathering agency, and admittedly that committee, under Senator Pitfield, did call a press conference, but on the evening following the tabling of our report. My concern is that I was being advised of what the committee was currently doing through the media. I felt that it did not show sufficient respect for me as a senator or for this chamber.

My feeling is the same as honourable senators have heard before ad nauseam. We each have our caucuses, and we plot our various strategies, but when we enter the chamber I have always hoped that we could soften those things somewhat and meet together in a spirit of goodwill and mutual respect. If we cannot count on goodwill and mutual respect, and maybe we cannot, I would like to express the hope that the Rules committee will find some way of legislating, in the form of rules, some goodwill and mutual respect so that we can get ahead with the business of this chamber without a confrontational approach.

Simply put, I feel that my privilege has been abused. I would like to receive copies of notices, and the like, at the same time that members of the press receive their copies.

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, I would like to respond to Senator Kelly's point of order. I had some difficulty trying to follow Senator Kelly as he described the events he experienced. The Clerk of the Committee had advised me that all of the notices for the Tuesday morning meeting had gone out on Friday and that they went to the offices of all senators. Whether or not the honourable senator's secretary received one, I have no access to that information. The notices went to every senator's office. Another notice went out at noon hour, as soon as the steering committee met, calling a meeting for 2 o'clock. Another notice was sent to everyone's office before 2 o'clock. I am only reporting what the staff have advised me of the process. In speaking to other senators, I am informed that they did receive their notices.

No press conference was called. The press was invited to attend the meetings of the Rules and Orders committee. There was no press conference. I cannot answer the question you have raised because the press were invited. It was an open meeting. Some of the members did speak with the press after a presentation at the meeting at 2 o'clock by Senator Barootes. Subsequent to that another notice went out, and we met all day Wednesday beginning at 9:30. Ample notice was given of the hours of sitting to senators in every instance. If there was some sort of mixup in the honourable senator's receiving his notice, I apologize. The Clerk of the Committee, Mr. O'Brien, assured me that the notices had been sent out, and again, in speaking with some honourable senators, I know that some of them did receive those notices.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It is all the fault of the officials; that is the line!

Senator Robertson: I wish I could be clearer on the press conference. The meetings were open to the public. None of the meetings were closed.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senartors, in that event, my office has failed to advise me that this document was distributed. If it was, then I withdraw any comment I made about it.

Senator Robertson: On that point, I do know that press kits—

Senator Frith: Conservatives never make mistakes, only the officials make mistakes, and their employees!

Senator Robertson: No, no. I take full responsibility for anyone at the Table, dear sir. However, press kits to explain the process were circulated to the press after the 2 o'clock meeting on Tuesday because the process is very complex, as you know, and we felt that we had a responsibility to the public to advise them of what was going on.

Senator Frith: May I ask Senator Kelly if he is now perfectly satisfied?

Senator Kelly: I beg your pardon?

Senator Frith: Is the honourable senator satisfied with the statement that no press conference took place, when the very thing he read from says, "invites the press" and "a question period will follow immediately after the presentation?" Is he satisfied?

Senator Kelly: My reason for raising the point of privilege was that I had the impression that there had been a press conference. I think the chairman has explained that, and I thank her for it. I was in error, but the appearance was certainly there; but I do withdraw.

Senator Hébert: What a joke!

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, there is a lot more to this story—

Senator Frith: A nice little minuet to start off the proceedings!

Senator Olson: —than has been revealed so far.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order, please.

Senator Olson: As I said, there is a lot more to this story than has been revealed so far. I happened to be in Ottawa last week, too, and I did not get the notices at all that there would be substantive business carried on by the Rules committee. We were advised that there would be an organizational meeting, which I understand was held. The committee elected Senator Robertson, chairperson.

• (1410)

However, when I arrived here on Wednesday morning, June 5, I was surprised to learn that there was a meeting in progress, because I had not receive a notice. We learned from the press or, in fact, from some of the staff around this building that a meeting of the Rules committee was taking place in Room 356-S and tht the committee was working on some changes to the rules. Being interested in that information, my curiosity drove me from my office, which is just around the corner, to the meeting room. When I entered the room, the first thing that struck me was that none of my colleagues were in attendance—not one. Senator Molson was there, but the rest, all six of them, were Conservatives.

Then a member of the staff brought me a black book full of matters that were under discussion. None of this had ever been given to my office or sent to me through the mail, by messenger or any other way. The material in the book was so fascinating that I stayed at the meeting for an hour. I read about all of the rule changes that were to be made. It is my understanding that the press already had a copy of this book but that no one in the Senate, except the privileged few who were there, knew what was in that black book.

Senator Barootes: That is wrong. Explain why you left so precipitately.

Senator Olson: The members of the Conservative caucus may have known what was in the book, but I do not really believe they did because they did not appear to know what they were talking about when they were trying to explain it.

Senator Robertson: Do you?

Senator Olson: Yes. I have been around this place long enough that I understand it better than most.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: The important matter to note, honourable senators, is that someone had been working on that book for weeks—not days or hours but weeks. It was a secret. They were to change the rules by stealth, and that is, in fact, what they are trying to do.

Senator Doyle: It was an open meeting.

Senator Olson: That is the most ridiculous statement. Does the honourable gentleman mean that that book was prepared by senators at an open meeting? Even Senator Doyle does not usually stoop so far as to say things like that.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Does Senator Olson have anything to say? If he is on a point of privilege, he has not said anything about it. On a point of order: Let us proceed with the proceedings of the day.

Senator Frith: You had better raise all points of order while you are still allowed to do so.

Senator Olson: It won't be long before we are not allowed to raise a question of privilege.

Senator Barootes: Do you have a question of privilege?

Senator Olson: You can trample on everyone just so often, even me, but I get tired of it and I react.

Senator Kelly raised a very proper and legitimate question of privilege—that he was not notified that the committee was moving into substantive business. Honourable senators, it was substantive. I would bet that not 10 per cent of the senators yet know what rules it is proposed to change—unless the Conservative caucus has had a great meeting, by stealth, and not let other senators know what is contained in that book they were marching through. It was a sight to behold. The great principles of democracy. The chairperson was sitting there and one after another the members read what had been passed. There was no discussion. I, honourable senators, had never seen these items before and I could hardly keep up to the pace at which they were going through them.

The question of privilege raised by Senator Kelly is certainly valid. It affects my privileges. That is why I am speaking. I believe, honourable senators, that we have an obligation now to strike down those meetings as if they had never been held, because no one know about them.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: No Liberal senators.

Senator Olson: There! He said it. He just said, "No Liberal senators."

Senator Simard: That is because—

Senator Olson: Why don't you sit down until I have finished my argument. That is what you should do. You said we had been notified, and I am telling you straight to your face that my office and all my colleagues were not notified.

Senator Simard: Wrong! Wrong!

Senator Olson: There you are. We never would have known that that secret meeting was taking place except for some of the staff who were walking around here. They asked, "Do you know what is happening to the rules in the Senate? Senators are going to be muzzled and silenced forever." I can tell by the look on Senator Murray's face that he knew what was going on and, with great glee, he intends to silence this Senate with these changes in the rules. So the point is very clear.

Senator Haidasz: It's unconstitutional!

Senator Olson: Senator Kelly has a very legitimate question of privilege regarding the stealth and secrecy that has gone on around this place with respect to the rules. I suppose later today, or in a few minutes, you will bring in the report and move that it be passed, and that will be the end of the effectiveness of this place forever.

Senator Haidasz: The end of free speech!

Senator Olson: You have already done it in the House of Commons, which has been silenced. There is a whole new section that I have not digested yet on allocation of time, for example.

Senator Simard: Order! Order!

Senator Olson: When the government moves a motion of allocation of time, it is not even a debatable motion under its new rules. There they are, the great democrats, the respecters of democracy over there, and yet they are bringing in this kind of garbage. You ought to hang your heads in shame that you would even contemplate these new rules and have a legislative body carry on in such a way.

Senator Simard: You're going to have a heart attack!

Senator Olson: Don't worry about my having a heart attack. I tell you, there is a legitimate question of privilege and I certainly hope that you take your responsibility now and strike down those meetings that were held in secret as if they had never happened—

Senator Simard: Sit down!

Senator Olson: —because senators in this place were not notified that such a thing was about to happen.

Senator Robertson: Honourable senators, I am not sure if I can respond to all of those ramblings. I will try to respond to as much as I can remember.

Senator Olson: Stick to the truth while you are doing it.

Senator Robertson: I intend to. Perhaps you might also do that.

Senator Olson: Try it for a while. Try the truth for once.

Senator Robertson: What I shall do, honourable senators, is contact the Clerk of the Senate and have him bring over to the chamber copies of all of the notices that went out to everyone. If you did not get them, it is not the staff's fault, nor is it my fault.

Senator Olson: The Senate was adjourned when you sent them out! Wasn't that nice of you!

Senator Robertson: The notices went out on Friday for the first time.

Senator Olson: That's nice! The Senate was adjourned and everyone was at home, away from Ottawa.

Senator Robertson: Senator Olson, I tried to keep quiet when you were speaking. Why will you not offer me the same courtesy?

Senator Olson: You're not speaking to the truth; that's why!

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Barootes: I demand that he withdraw that statement!

Senator Olson: Go ahead and demand it.

Senator Barootes: You are the proof for why the rules have to be changed. You are proving it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: Tell the truth for once. To say that notices went out that there was to be a substantive motion is just simply not true.

Senator Barootes: Withdraw that statement! It's unparliamentary!

Senator Robertson: Don't expect apologies from those people. Forget it.

Senator Olson, had you read your mail, had you read the notices of motions that went out, and had you come, you would have known. We were hoping that some of you would come. You have an ex officio member who is even the deputy chairman, and he did not show up. We were disappointed. We brought to the committee the books with the proposed rules. Senator Molson was there.

Senator Olson: Who are the "we" that were doing all this?

Senator Robertson: Senator Molson was there. He got all his notices.

Senator Olson: If you are saying that I was notified, either by mail or by telephone, when I was 2,000 miles away from here, that statement is not true.

Senator Robertson: Your office was notified.

Senator Olson: No, it was not.

Senator Robertson: All right. On to another topic. I will get the notices that were sent out.

Senator Olson: Stick to the truth.

Senator Robertson: I am sticking to the truth. There were no members of the Official Opposition there.

Senator Olson: Carry on, anyway.

Senator Haidasz: How could you do such a thing?

Senator Robertson: Since no one from the Official Opposition would attend, we had the courtesy to at least send you six copies of the document we would be studying, which is more courtesy than we received on the GST report, I can tell you.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Robertson: We sent notices to the leadership of your party, and I am sure that is how you got it. We had extra copies there in case people showed up. We were very glad to see you, and if you did not understand what we were talking about, Senator Olson, why did you not ask some questions? Why did you not bring it up in committee? Why did you not say, "What is this all about; I do not understand what you are doing?" You sat there and did not say a word, and you were never known to be shy.

• (1420)

You only became involved when Senator Barootes asked you a question regarding some advice, and it is interesting that three minutes after Senator Barootes asked you a question, to which you responded—and I was glad that you responded because it showed that at least one Liberal was in attendance for a few minutes — it was as if someone had used a shepherd's crook on you, senator, because three minutes later, you were gone. There was no more participation on your part.

I shall present to this chamber all the notices of motion that were sent out.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: I note that you will be sending copies of the notices to all the senators. Would you also provide the time at which they were sent?

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Would the honourable senator advise the Senate whether or not a budget was struck for this committee before the work of the committee was ordered by you?

Senator Robertson: Before the committee was struck?

Senator Grafstein: No, after the committee was struck.

Senator Robertson: After the committee was struck?

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Grafstein: My question is was work ordered on behalf of the committee prior to the budget being struck?

Senator Robertson: I am sure Senator MacEachen knows the answer, because he would have had his box on. It was explained at the start that many members of our Senate caucus have been concerned for months about the rules or the lack of rules in this chamber, and our caucus drafted broad principles, that we felt should be incorporated in the new rules. Then staff were employed by the caucus to draft rules to fit the principles.

Senator Barootes: And the concepts.

Senator Robertson: I could not draft a rule. I do not know anything about drafting. People were hired specifically to do that, but the caucus set out the broad principles that the Conservative caucus wanted incorporated in the rules. That was the origin of the material that you received.

Senator Grafstein: So the material that was prepared for the committee was all prepared at the expense of the Conservative caucus as opposed to the Senate?

Senator Robertson: It would be at the expense of the Conservative caucus in Senator Murray's office, I believe.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Robertson: Senator Murray can correct me on that, but I would assume that is how it was done.

Senator Grafstein: Perhaps Senator Murray could let the Senate know how much this cost, who was retained, when they were retained and —

Senator Barootes: It is none of your business.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, Oh!

Senator Grafstein: Senator Barootes, I understand from the chairman of your committee that, in fact, the cost was not borne by the committee or by your caucus but perhaps by the Leader's office. There were appropriate questions asked before about the cost of advice that the Leader of the Government in the Senate received with respect to other procedural matters. If there were a cost, we would just like to know what that cost was, who paid it, when it was incurred, at whose instructions, and who received the materials prior to its coming to the committee.

Senator Robertson: Senator Murray would have to answer some of those questions. I never asked who paid whom—I have no idea; but I can tell you that the drafting was done on the instruction of our caucus.

Senator Grafstein: The caucus is an amorphous organization. Who in the caucus instructed that work to be done on behalf, I assume, of the Senate?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not know how these things are done by my friends opposite—

Senator Olson: No one has ever seen it done this way before.

Senator Murray: The Conservative caucus has had a committee, under Senator Robertson's chairmanship, working on rules since after Christmas. That is, I think, pretty well known to everyone on this side. I am not aware that there is any expense involved in any of this. I did not attend a single meeting of the committee. The committee met, and from time to time, reported to our caucus.

With regard to whether members of my staff, in particular legislative assistants and the like, assisted the caucus committee, I would certainly hope so.

Senator Grafstein: Just on the cost factor, there was a press kit prepared. Who paid for that press kit?

Senator Robertson: The press kit was prepared by a communications group and the bill would be sent to our caucus. I do not get involved in paying those bills. I do not know.

Senator Grafstein: I personally have no quarrel with the caucus paying for research, but, in the explanation given by the honourable senator to Senator Kelly, it was implied that the work done in calling this press conference was done at the behest of the committee,. All I am asking is whether the committee in fact, under its budget, paid for the press kit or whether it was paid for by another source, because I assume that he who pays the piper calls the tune.

Senator Robertson: It was not paid for by the committee. Those people work for our caucus, for heaven's sake.

Senator Grafstein: Is the honourable senator advising us that a document was set out, really not on behalf of the committee but at the behest of the Conservative caucus?

Senator Barootes: It certainly was not the Red Leaf organization that paid for it. You know something about that.

Senator Grafstein: If, in fact, the material was prepared on behalf of or for the committee, did the committee pay for that material or was it paid for by the caucus? I assume that if it is material for the benefit of the committee it should be at the cost of the committee. You are telling us that it is at the cost of the Conservative caucus and therefore it is not for the benefit of the committee.

Senator Robertson: On that point, Senator, the caucus wanted its own public relations people working on this issue because they felt it was so very important. After the committee, they had nothing to do with the books, but the press material would be prepared by the public relations people whom our caucus members wanted. There is nothing wrong with that; you people do it all the time, for heaven's sake, or I would assume you do.

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-15, to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports.

Bill read first time.

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next, June 13, 1991.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while it is still possible for the citizens of this country to address petitions to the Senate, I have the honour to present petitions that read as follows—and they are in the same form as those I previously presented. These petitions are, as I said before, against the imposition of the iniquitous GST tax, a petition by these citizens to withdraw or repeal that tax and have an election immediately.

In this case the first batch, honourable senators, are from Quebec. There are 12 petitions coming from—and I am obliged to my colleagues who are able to help me with the pronunciation of some of these place names that I am not familiar with—Chibocamea, Amos, Lac Simon, Val D'Or, Waswanipi, Senneterre, Victoriaville, Rochebeaucourt, Roxton Pond, Cap Madeline, St. Zacharie, St. Come, St. Georges, Rouyn-Noranda, Levis, Stoneham, Bellechasse, St. Charles, Beaumont, Sherbrooke, Evain, Duparquet. The names in this group total 242, including three that were on the Ontario list that I will also present.

From Ontario today I have five petitions from Kirkland Lake, Kapuskasing and Sesekinika. The names total 108. Of the whole number presented today, petitions total 17; names total 350.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have some petitions I would like to present (if that is still possible!). These petitions are signed by 113 Quebec citizens who are, of course, opposed to the Goods and Services Tax.

The petitions are mostly from Victoriaville, Wickham, La Salle, St-Côme, and St-Zacharie.

[English]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I, too, have a number of petitions that I should like to present at this time. I should like to tell Senator Kelly, who showed some interest in this matter last fall, that they are in order and are properly worded. They are humbly praying to the Senate. You can rest assured, Senator Kelly, that they are in order.

The first group I have are some 600 names, largely from the province of Ontario. I have another 295 that came separately. These are mainly from the western part of Ontario, from Brampton and Grand Bend. A further 43 petitions also came separately.

I have a bundle here of approximately 3,000, also from the province of Ontario.

From various areas in my own province of Manitoba, I have some 800 names. I have a group from St. Boniface constituency and others from assorted areas such as Minnedosa, Neepawa, Brandon, Eden, Fork River, Polonia, Mountain Road, Deloraine and Medora. As I say, the petitions are from various parts of the province of Manitoba and all of them, unanimously, are opposed to the GST.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, since, it seems to me, there is a fear that the people might not be able to petition their parliamentarians for further change in the future, I wish to present five different petitions from the province of Nova Scotia, from places such as Aylesford, Auburn, Middleton, and Kingston, with 25 names of those who wish to stop the GST.

I also have another petition containing 25 names from the Province of Nova Scotia, from Wolfville, Greenwood, Auburn, Middleton and other places. These petitioners have signed their names to protest the GST.

I have another petition from Nova Scotia, with signatures of residents of Kingston, Berwick, Aylesford and Mt. Densar, and many others.

I have another petition containing 25 signatures from residents of Wolfville, Berwick, Weston and Kingston, Nova Scotia, and Fredericton, New Brunswick.

I lay these petitions upon the Table and hope that the citizens of Canada will always have the right to petition the Parliament of Canada for justice and equality.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders concerning amendments to the rules of the Senate.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

A Clerk at the Table:

Tuesday, June 11, 1991

The Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Pursuant to Rule 67(1)(f) of the Rules of the Senate of Canada, your Committee makes the following recommendations:

1. That Rules 1, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

[Senator Molgat.]

Senator Corbin: No.

A Clerk at the Table:

UNPROVIDED CASES

"1.(1) In all cases not provided for in these rules, the customs, usages, forms and proceedings of either House of the Parliament of Canada shall, mutatis mutandis, be followed in the Senate or in any committee thereof.

(2) The Rules of the Senate shall in all cases be interpreted as having priority over any practice, custom or usage described in any of the appendices to the Rules. Any conflict between the appendices and the Rules shall be resolved by reference to the Rules alone.

INTERPRETATION

4. In these rules, unless the context otherwise requires,

(1) "bill" means a draft Act of Parliament and includes a private and a public bill;

(2) "committee" means a committee of the whole, a select committee, whether standing, special or legislative, or a joint committee;

(3) "Committee of the Whole" means a committee composed of the whole body of the Senators;

(4) "Government Leader in the Senate" means the Senator occupying the recognized position of Leader of the Government in the Senate or a Senator acting for that Senator;

(5) "Leader of the Opposition" means the Senator occupying the recognized position of Leader of the Opposition in the Senate or a Senator acting for that Senator;

(6) "Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate" and "Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate" mean the Senators occupying, respectively, the recognized positions of Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate and Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate;

Senator Simard: Dispense.

Senator Olson: No.

A Clerk at the Table:

(7) "intermediate proceeding" means any item which would be recorded in the Journals of the Senate;

(8) "inquiry" means the procedure whereby a Senator, after giving notice in accordance with Rules 43 and 44, calls the attention of the Senate to a particular matter for the purpose of informing the Senate of that matter or having it considered or examined by the Senate;

(9) "joint committee" means a committee composed of members of the Senate and of the House of Commons;

(10) "leave of the Senate" means leave granted without a dissenting voice;

(11) "meeting of the Senate" means the times set out in these rules, or as otherwise ordered, for the Senate to meet for the transaction of business;

(12) "person authorized to be on the floor of the Senate Chamber while the Senate is sitting" means any person so authorized by order of the Senate, Act of Parliament, delegated legislative authority or by custom and practice of the Senate;

(13) "motion" means a proposal made by a Senator that the Senate or a committee thereof do something, order something to be done, or express an opinion concerning some matter;

(14) "one day's notice" means a notice given on any sitting day for a motion or inquiry to be made on the next succeeding sitting day;

(15) "ordered by the Senate" or any expression of like import means ordered by majority decision;

(16) "ordinary daily hour of adjournment" means the time provided in these rules, or as otherwise provided by order of the Senate, for the adjournment of the Senate;

(17) "person" or any word or expression descriptive of a person, includes any body corporate or politic, and the heirs, executors, administrators or legal representative of such person, and words importing male or female persons include persons of either gender;

(18) "petition" means a written prayer presented to the Senate, and includes all petitions—

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard Corbin: Honourable senators, I just received a copy of the first report of the committee. Accordingly, I am ready to dispense with the reading of the report, but it is only a personal position.

Hon. Solange Chaput-Rolland: How generous of you, honourable senator.

Senator Corbin: It is generous, but I cannot tolerate that a report be tabled before I officially receive a copy of the report. Those are the sound rules of parliamentary proceedings in Ottawa, honourable senators.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Do honourable senators wish to dispense with the reading of the report?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 133.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Robertson, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, tabled the committee's report concerning the expenses incurred by the committee during the second session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament.

Tuesday, June 11, 1991

The Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, which is authorized, pursuant to Rule 67(1)(f), to propose amendments to the Rules of the Senate, pursuant to Rule 84, that the expenses incurred by the Committee during the Second Session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament are as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$205.75
Other Expenditures	$391.25
	$597.00

Respectfully submitted,

BRENDA M. ROBERTSON
Chairman

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I wonder if those expenses listed in the second report were expenses with respect to the first report, or whether they have something to do with the last session.

Senator Robertson: Honourable senators, it is required in the rules of that committee that we table the expenses of the committee for the previous year. Those expenses are for last year.

Senator Murray: In other words, Senator Molgat's committee.

Report tabled.

THE ESTIMATES, 1991-92

FIRST REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on National Finance concerning Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1992.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "B", p. 169.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Bolduc: Honourable senators, I move that the report be place on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

• (1450)

THE ESTIMATES, 1991-92

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE THE NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, June 12, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1992; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject during the Second Session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament be referred to the Committee.

QUESTION PERIOD

STANDING COMMITTEE ON STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

ABSENCE OF CHAIRMAN FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I have questions I wish to address to the chairman of the Rules Committee in light of the very important document that was tabled. I hope that we can prevail upon her to return to the Senate. Perhaps, while we await her return, we may ask questions on some other subjects.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question, but how will we know whether Senator Robertson is prepared to come and answer questions, as provided for in the rules? I suppose there is no way of knowing whether or not she will come. Can the Leader of the Government tell us? Has she been called away at this rather important moment in her parliamentary career?

Senator Roblin: We can get her.

Senator Frith: Good, Senator Roblin has said that they can get her.

IMMIGRATION

PHANTOM OF THE OPERA—"FAST-TRACKING FOR LEADING ACTOR

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The background for the question is that the Toronto production of Phantom of the Opera, according to its producers, required a new lead. The producers thought that no Canadian was qualified for the role and therefore hired a Mr. Peter Karri, K-A-R-R-I. The problem that arose for him is that he is not a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant. He is British. He was living in Britain at the time, but his application was somehow magically processed in Detroit.

Senator LeBlanc: With Allan Gotlieb's help.

Senator Frith: That is in Michigan, of course. That occurred in a matter of days. So it is an example of fast-tracking and special consideration for a person applying for status that would enable him to play a role in the Phantom of the Opera. I know that this question of fast-tracking is a sensitive one with the government at the moment, but there is no linkage, of which I am aware, between the fast-tracking for Mr. Karri and the fast-tracking for the applicant who has been more prominently in the headlines. I wonder if the leader will find out, if he can, why it was that the fast-tracking took place, resulting, of course, in line jumping for this particular applicant, and if he can give us some of the detail as to how that occurred?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I shall make inquiries, honourable senators.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

DATE FOR REVIEW OF ACT—GOVERMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, on May 28 I addressed a question to the Leader of the Government concerning employment equity and the clause for review, which is section 13(1) of the act respecting employment equity. I am grateful to the Leader of the Government for responding so quickly on May 30. The response raises another question, however. In his response the Leader of the Government said that the government intends to have a special order of reference for C-62 at the beginning of the session in September, and that there will be no deadline for the committee to report back its findings. Section 13(1) of the Employment Equity Act requires that such a committee be struck by August 13 next.

Has the Leader of the Government any explanation of why the government would violate its own legislation in this regard?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I assume that this matter has been the subject of discussions among the house leaders in the other place and that the decision has been reached to proceed in September rather than August because the House of Commons is not expected to be sitting in August. However, all this is conjecture on my part, and I will try to obtain as prompt a reply to today's question as I did to the question the honourable senator asked some weeks ago.

Senator Marsden: Thank you. Honourable senators, unless I am much mistaken, however, I do not think that the house leaders in the House of Commons have the right to violate legislation.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

STATUS OF ATTENDANTS AT MEETING OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Honourable Senator Robertson in her capacity as chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. I want to thank her very much for returning to the Senate and also for the two volumes I received this morning in my office. May I, in passing, compliment the staff of the Senate for producing this voluminous material as quickly as they have.

• (1500)

On going over the document this morning I found a listing of the members of the committee who were present at the meetings. There is also mention of the other senators present, and in attendance were simply the official reporters of the Senate. Yet, as I go through the document, I find frequent references to a "Mr. Webber." Could Senator Robertson tell me who Mr. Webber is and why he appeared at this committee? He is not listed as a witness anywhere. Normally the witnesses who appear are listed.

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Mr. Webber, honourable senators, was one of the people who drafted the documents that you have.

On one occasion a senator—I cannot remember which one—asked if Mr. Webber would explain a particular point. I, being the chairman, perhaps should not have allowed that, and if that is the case, I would apologize. However, Mr. Webber, with the approval of the other members, was asked to explain something, and that is how his comments got into the record. I should not have allowed that intervention and I would apologize to honourable senators. However, I am new at this and I shall learn.

Senator Molgat: I thank the honourable senator for her response, but I, unfortunately, have to correct her, because, while I have not gone through every page of the minutes, I have found at least three occasions when Mr. Webber intervened in the discussion. He intervened at page 1:50; he made some further comments on page 1:56; and at the top of page 1:68 he had some very extensive comments to make. Senator Robertson tells me that on one occasion he made a comment; yet there are at least three occasions, and perhaps more.

Senator Robertson: Perhaps I phrased it incorrectly. Those interventions were related to one rule. I do not have a copy of the transcript of the proceedings that Senator Molgat has, but it seems to me that at one point the intervention related to one particularly difficult rule. I did not notice another intervention but I do remember one. I believe there was trouble with the wording.

Senator Molgat: I have not had an opportunity to read the interventions in detail, but they do not appear to be related one to the other. They appear at separate places in the minutes.

In any case, could the honourable senator tell me: In whose employ is Mr. Webber? Who pays him?

Senator Robertson: Mr. Webber was in the employ of Senator Murray.

Senator Barootes: The office of the leader.

Senator Molgat: Is he paid out of Senator Murray's funds?

Senator Robertson: I do not know.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, some months ago I borrowed Mr. Webber from somewhere in the government. I believe it may have been the Department of Communications. In any case, he works for the government. In one of those arrangements that are made among departments and between ministers, he has been seconded to me since last fall.

Senator Molgat: In other words, Mr. Webber has been sent to us from the outside and is now the expert on what ought to be the rules of the Senate. Is that the conclusion I must draw?

Senator Murray: Briefly stated, honourable senators, Mr. Webber works for me. Mr. Webber has had some experience, in particular in the other place working on procedural matters and rules, which is why, some months ago, I successfully arranged to have him seconded to my staff.

Senator Molgat: That makes the matter much clearer. It is not that he has just come from the outside; he has specifically come from the other place to tell us what it is that our rules ought to be. That improves things very substantially. We are now getting a clearer picture.

PREPARATION OF NEW RULES—PROCESS OF CONSULTATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Can Senator Robertson tell me whether, in the process leading up to this preparation of the new rules, the Clerk of the Senate was consulted? Was he part of the process?

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Leading up to the committee hearings, the Clerk of the Senate was not consulted.

Senator Molgat: The Clerk of the Senate, who is responsible for the rules, was never consulted. Was the Clerk Assistant of the Senate consulted?

Senator Robertson: No, no officers of the Table were consulted. The initiative came totally from the government caucus. It was generated by the frustrations many caucus members felt, and still feel, about the inefficiencies that one experiences in this chamber on a regular basis. No one else was involved except our own caucus members and staff who were chosen by us. That did not include anyone attached to the Senate.

Senator Molgat: Neither the Clerk, the Assistant Clerk, nor any of the Table officers—the people who know about the rules and who have been working with the rules over the years—were consulted. I am glad for them, because at least it takes them off the hook.

Could Senator Robertson tell us who else was consulted? We now know that Mr. Webber was one person who was consulted, but were there consultations with the House of Commons?

Senator Robertson: No, honourable senator. The government caucus had absolutely no contact with the House of Commons.

Senator Frith: When Senator Barootes is telling his neighbour how to answer a question, he should know to put his hand over the microphone.

Senator Barootes: You should put yours over your mouth.

Senator Frith: I understand, from looking at this package of rules, that you would like a plaster put over the mouth of anyone who opposes you.

Senator Robertson: The initiative, honourable senator, was totally the initiative of the government caucus.

Senator Molgat: Am I correct that members of the Conservative caucus in the Senate were the only ones involved in this?

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I am a member of the Conservative caucus and I do not wish to have the proceedings of that body discussed in this house.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Molgat: I am asking a question of Senator Robertson.

Senator Roblin: I am not going to stand here and have the proceedings of my caucus discussed.

Senator Molgat: I did not ask Senator Roblin a single question. Would he please sit down?

Senator Roblin and I have sat across this floor from one another long enough that he cannot intimidate me. We have had many dealings with him in Manitoba, and the poor people of Manitoba are still suffering. He should mind his own affairs. I am asking Senator Robertson a question.

Senator Roblin: I have been more right than you have.

Senator Molgat: I am asking Senator Robertson a question. If Senator Roblin were chairman of the committee, then he should join in.

It is my understanding that there was no consultation with cabinet ministers on this matter or with staff of cabinet ministers.

Senator Murray: I am a cabinet minister.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary on this line. I remember Mr. Webber. He was very active during the negotiations on the provisional rules. Is that the same Mr. Webber?

Senator Murray: Yes.

Senator Frith: I remember that when we were negotiating he would have to check everything. Did he draft these rules? Was he the main drafter of these rules?

Senator Murray: That is a caucus matter.

[Senator Molgat.]

Senator Frith: If you refuse to answer, then that is fine. As I understand it, this document came fully born into the Rules committee from the Conservative caucus; is that right?

An Hon. Senator: Yes.

Senator Robertson: I would not say that it came "fully born" but, certainly, the principles had been well enunciated by our caucus members. The rules were drafted to reflect those principles that they wanted. There were some changes at the committee, as you will note from both the transcript of the hearings and the final document. We came very openly to the committee, hoping to have recommendations and suggestions. I must say that Senator Molson was very helpful, with his broad experience.

• (1510)

Senator Frith: I am sure he was.

Senator LeBlanc: As he was during the GST debate.

Senator Barootes: He was a former chairman.

Senator Robertson: As Senator Barootes reminds me, he was a former chairman of the Rules committee. Senator Frith, as to your questions, I cannot remember them all.

Senator Frith: That is all right. I just wanted to understand—

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Senator Frith, could you, on behalf of your colleagues, explain to us and to Canadians why the Liberals have chosen to boycott the work of that committee? Is this a continuation of the policy established on September 28 last year, which has been the norm ever since?

Senator Frith: Just be patient.

Senator Simard: Are you continuing the boycott?

Senator Frith: Just be patient. Later this day you will hear something about this concept that you have invented about boycotting.

Senator Simard: Is it the same boycott?

Senator Frith: Senator Robertson, I was asking you about the presentation that was made to this committee, which is the package that has now become a report of the committee. I am not being argumentative; I want to be sure that I understand. Was this package, born in the Conservative caucus, the result of a committee of that caucus that drafted the changes, with some help, I take it, from Mr. Webber, and perhaps others, in considering amendments to the rules and presenting suggestions to the Rules committee? Did the committee ever investigate previous methods for amending the rules in the Canadian Parliament? How has it been done in the past? Was there any precedent for amendments to the rules being done by presenting the full package from one caucus? Does she know of any?

Senator Simard: Why is that so important?

Senator Robertson: Are you asking me if the caucus was aware of previous amendments to the Senate rules?

Senator Frith: No. What I was thinking of in particular was this: When very substantial amendments have been made to the rules in the other place, and I believe also in other legislatures, it has usually been the result of all-party conferences, at least at the beginning, and not the presentation of a full package from one caucus. However, perhaps there are other precedents, and I just wondered if she knew of any.

Senator Robertson: No. I have not explored any precedents in that regard, senator.

Senator Frith: All right. That is the answer.

Senator Robertson: It certainly would have been nice to have had such a spirit of cooperation and friendliness in this chamber. It seems that over the last few years it has been missing. As far as the committee goes, it is open and meetings are public. I do wish that some of the opposition members had come to the committee.

Senator Frith: Did you invite us to your caucus? I don't remember that.

Senator Robertson: No, not to caucus. I think that would have been a bit difficult.

Senator Murray: You were elected vice-chairman of the committee.

Senator Frith: Thank you.

Senator Robertson: I am sorry you chose not to come to the meetings, Mr. Vice-Chairman. I think you would have found them most interesting. However, that was your choice.

Senator Frith: It was not. It was yours. You know how absurd that whole process was.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Chairman of the Committee a question. The Leader of the Government in the Senate said that Mr. Webber was seconded to him by ministerial arrangement, and that is known to happen. I would like to know if the salary paid to Mr. Webber was paid from the budget of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or if, as a courtesy, Mr. Webber continues to be paid by his department. It happens sometimes, when someone is on loan to another cabinet minister as an assistant in his office, that the department continues to carry the salary. I want to know who paid Mr. Webber and from what budget.

Senator Robertson: I wish I could answer that, honourable senators, but I cannot. What goes on in our caucus, of course, is confidential, as are caucus activities in the Liberal caucus. Perhaps Senator Murray can add some light to that, but I certainly cannot contribute any information from the caucus.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would have to confirm what the arrangement is. There are various ways, as the honourable senator has indicated, in which this is done. Sometimes the donor department continues to pay the salary of the person in question, but then there is an equal bookkeeping transfer of some sort from the recipient department. Sometimes the recipient department pays. I do not know exactly what the arrangement was in this case, but I shall make inquiries.

Senator LeBlanc: I think that is very important, especially in light of the statement Senator Robertson has just made indicating that what goes on in the Tory caucus is the business of the Tory caucus—with which I agree. In fact, I prefer not to know what goes on in the Tory caucus.

Senator Frith: Especially if this is an example.

Senator LeBlanc: But I think it is very important. In fact, if there is an agreement in writing, I would like Senator Murray to table it, because if the gentleman is paid by his previous department and has been acting as a consultant to the Tory caucus, then I think that is a much bigger issue than we are facing now.

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, the person in question was seconded to my office, the office of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, to provide assistance in respect of legislative matters. My honourable friend is well aware of what are the duties of legislative assistants, whether they are legislative assistants to a minister or to the Leader of the Opposition. They must, and they do, conduct with the caucus considerable liaison on behalf of the leader or the minister, and give advice. No one who has any experience around here would suggest it is otherwise.

Senator LeBlanc: On the contrary, I would suggest that if an official of the government is seconded to a minister's office and is asked to undertake what are visibly and clearly political operations of the type described by Senator Robertson, then that would be a departure from tradition. Certainly, Senator Murray would not want us to applaud the fact that one of his assistants acted as a party hack for his caucus if he was being paid by the department which lent him by arrangement with another minister.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the services that the person in question provided to me and to my office, and, on my behalf, to the caucus, are the services that legislative assistants and procedural experts normally provide. To refer to it as partisan work, or to refer to the person as a party hack, is truly a gross exaggeration. The assistance which he gave to me, and through me to my colleagues in the government caucus, as a procedural expert, was purely technical. There is nothing partisan about it.

THE SENATE

LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT—DISTINCTION BETWEEN ROLE AS MINISTER OF CROWN AND ROLE AS LEADER OF CAUCUS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Murray a question? Does the honourable senator recognize a distinction between the work of his office as Leader of the Government in the Senate, on the one hand, and the work of the Conservative caucus, on the other hand, or are those two operations so completely melded that it is impossible for him to make a distinction as between them?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the situation is, I think, the same as obtains between the office of the Leader of the Opposition, an office which is funded by public funds, and the Opposition caucus.

Senator Stewart: But there is a distinction between a minister of the Crown, on the one hand, and an officer of the Senate on the other hand. Senator MacEachen is not a minister of the Crown. He is Leader of the Opposition in the Senate and, as such, certain sums of money are made available to him to perform his duties. I am relying upon what Senator Murray has told us about employees of the Government of Canada placed at the service of a minister of the Crown, and I am asking the senator if he distinguishes between work done on behalf of himself as a Minister of the Crown, on the one hand, and the work of the Conservative caucus, on the other hand?

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, I frankly have not given the question very much thought. My establishment across the way consists of people who are paid by the Senate.

Senator Stewart: All of them?

Senator Murray: Well, just a moment. The Leader of the Government in the Senate need not be a minister of the Crown.

Senator Stewart: Yes. I understand that.

• (1520)

Senator Murray: I believe some part of my staff is paid for by the Senate and some other part is paid for by the the Privy Council vote. In any case, it is all public funds and I must say that when I get up in the morning and come to the office, I do not try to bifurcate myself, as Mr. Diefenbaker used to say.

There is nothing sinister or mysterious about what I do, or indeed in what my staff does. They are not in the employ of the Progressive Conservative party. Most of them are part of my ministerial staff or my staff as Leader of the Government in the Senate. They naturally provide liaison with other ministers, with departments of government and public servants, and of course with the Conservative caucus of which I am the leader.

In the case of Mr. Webber, far from giving political advice or providing political services, the expertise that he brought to my staff, and therefore through me to the government caucus, was of a purely technical nature.

PREPARATION OF NEW RULES—PROCESS OF CONSULTATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, in my earlier questioning of Senator Robertson, she advised that none of the present table officers were consulted. There are a number of previous table officers who have served in the Senate and who are still around—ex-clerks and various others—who have much experience in Senate rules. Were any of these persons consulted?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Any senator can consult them.

[Senator Murray.]

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: To my knowledge, no, senator. You mean, people who have worked at the table here? To my knowledge, the answer is no. I certainly did not have an opportunity to talk with them.

Senator Frith: You had an opportunity or did not have an opportunity? Was it because you did not have the opportunity?

Senator Molgat: Were there other outside people who were consulted?

Senator Robertson: I can only speak for the Senate caucus and my own activities, and to my knowledge, the answer is no.

Senator Molgat: No one else was retained, then? Mr. Webber is the person exclusively involved in the drafting of these rules with the Conservative caucus. So it is Mr. Webber and the Conservative caucus?

Senator Robertson: Just a moment now. You were asking me about people who had served here at the table.

Senator Molgat: First of all, I asked whether previous table officers were consulted, people who are no longer in the employ of the Senate, but who are still around and who have experience with Senate rules. I believe you said "no" to that. Then I asked were there other people from the outside retained or consulted.

Senator Murray: This really is a caucus matter.

Senator Molgat: Are we to conclude that only Mr. Webber and the Conservative caucus drafted these rules? If that is the conclusion we are to draw from the answers, then that is very well.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, may I have some clarification on comments that were made earlier? I do not want to probe into the workings of the Conservative caucus, but I have a concern about what appears to be a blur between where the caucus ended and where the committee began. I believe Senator Robertson indicated that she would get for Senator Molgat—

Senator Bonnell: For all senators.

Senator Fairbairn: —the notices that were sent out. Would that include the information notice that was sent out and which has been referred to by Senator Kelly? This Notice of Meeting is on a Senate of Canada letterhead, and at the bottom of it are noted the names of Maureen Conway and Louis Lavoie.

It gave notice that the Senate committee would be tabling the new rules. There was to be a presentation of them, followed immediately by a question period. It then states that "all print and electronic media are welcome to attend and record the proceedings". Presumably it was this notice that accompanied the communications package that contained a background of the rules of operation of the Senate and questions and answers resulting from the proposed rules. Also contained therein was some rationale as to why there were not any opposition members.

The Senate committee received a detailed presentation by my friend, Senator Barootes, in both official languages. There were presumably overhead slides because there was a screen there. However, my concern is that other senators clearly did not have any of this information available to them, nor the background material that was made available to the press.

My question to Senator Robertson is, were these public relations people purely doing a job for the Conservative caucus, which is fine, or did this spill over to the committee? I certainly did not have all of the information that the press did. I find this very difficult to understand, especially since the changing of the rules of this chamber is an issue of such widespread importance. I am concerned as well that a precedent is being set for other committees.

Senator Robertson: I believe, honourable senator, that I responded to an earlier question that the public relations people were serving the Conservative caucus. They had nothing to do with the committee per sé. They were working for the Conservative caucus and were retained by the Conservative caucus. They were not retained by the committee. I assume that you have had press people retained by your Liberal caucus from time to time with regard to various issues over the years.

Senator Cools: Never like this.

Senator Robertson: These people were not retained by the committee, and the information that was sent out was public information when it was sent out because the tabling of all the documents—

Senator Frith: I thought you told us caucus information is not public.

Senator Robertson: That is not the information I am speaking of, if you would listen more carefully, senator.

Senator Frith: But it was caucus publicity people that were giving public information on something that was not public.

Senator Robertson: Yes, on something that was public.

Senator Frith: So that was caucus information that was public?

Senator Robertson: Yes. It was all tabled at the beginning of the committee hearings. Subsequently, that information was sent to your leadership.

Senator Frith: She is not listening to what she is saying.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE—PRESENCE OF MEDIA

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Further to that, was it agreed well in advance of when the committee met that there would be, as this notice indicates, an open period during the committee meeting whereby committee members and the press could ask questions and record the proceedings? This is certainly not in accordance with the rules under which committees generally operate unless they have a special mandate to do so.

• (1530)

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: I do not understand "record the proceedings." It was a public meeting, so I suppose they could take down whatever they wanted to take down when the press is there.

Senator Fairbairn: But it has "print and electronic media", and "to attend and record the proceedings."

Senator Robertson: There were television crews there at first, but we asked them to leave before the committee started its work because there was no permission for television crews to be there. I do not know who invited them. They obviously received the press notice. There is nothing wrong with a press release. If the Conservative caucus wants to issue a press release, it can darn well do so.

PREPARATION OF NEW RULES—PROCESS OF CONSULTATION

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Is Senator Robertson telling us that a document, which was prepared by a group of consultants, as she calls them, magically became the property of the committee?

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Yes.

Senator LeBlanc: In other words, the Conservative caucus and the Committee on Rules apparently have become meshed in one person? That would be a strange meeting of the committee.

Senator Robertson: No, that is entirely incorrect.

Senator LeBlanc: But did these consultants contribute to the Rules committee as a charity, like the United Way?

Senator Robertson: No, of course not.

Senator LeBlanc: Does Senator Robertson know that there is a provision under the existing rules that, if a committee wants to hire consultants to prepare a document of that type, either the vice-chairman or the chairman of Internal Economy can authorize that to be done?

Senator Robertson: Yes.

Senator LeBlanc: Why would they want to beg from some consultants?

Senator Robertson: Of course I know that, and, at some point, if the committee decides to have its own public relations people, then fine and dandy; but these people have nothing to do with the committee. They are totally the responsibility of the Conservative caucus.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think I understand now. Are Maureen Conway and Louis Lavoie the publicity people?

Senator Robertson: Yes.

Senator Frith: And they are hired by the caucus?

Senator Robertson: Yes.

Senator Frith: And they were paid for by the caucus and it was the caucus that invited the press; is that right?

Senator Robertson: It was a public meeting.

Senator Frith: It was the caucus, and, as you say, it is entitled to invite someone for a presentation. The difficulty with that position is that the document is as follows:

THE SENATE OF CANADA
LE SÉNAT DU CANADA
NOTICE OF MEETING
CONVOCATION

The Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders—

—not the Conservative caucus—

—invites you to a presentation on the tabling of the new rules for the Senate.

We are not told that these are the Conservative caucus's suggestions for the new rules. No, "it invites you to a presentation on the tabling of the new rules for the Senate" on Tuesday, June 4, 1991, at 2:00 pm, in Room 356-S Centre Block. I am still reading from a document, not on the heading of the Conservative caucus but of the Senate of Canada committee on Standing Rules and Orders about "the new rules for the Senate." It says:

A question period will follow immediately after the presentation.

All print and electronic media are welcome to attend and record the proceedings.

Not "the proceedings of the Conservative caucus", not "the presentation", but under the heading of the Rules committee of the Senate of Canada. It continues:

For further information please contact: Pour plus de renseignements, communiquer avec:

Who—someone acting for the Senate of Canada? Someone acting for the Standing Rules and Orders committee? No, the famous publicity people.

So is the senator, who said there seems to be a merging of the two, mistaken? Senator Robertson has to make up her mind which it was, and I think she has. At least she has told us it was both. It was the Senate Conservative caucus publicity people, Maureen Conway and Louis Lavoie, who, she said, invited the media to the presentation of the new rules for the Senate—not proposed, not suggested, not draft the new rules; and they invited them, on Senate letterhead, under the auspices of the Rules and Orders committee.

It is clear now, but I do not think Senator Robertson is very clear. She was trying to communicate the impression that it was all done by the Conservative caucus. All of the people about whom she was talking are apparently Senate Conservative caucus, but it is on letterhead of the committee.

There was a reference there to a note: "Re: Opposition Committee Members." This was attached to a statement entitled "Senate Rules Committee, Schedule of Meetings."

All meetings of the Senate Rules Committee will be held in Room 356-S Centre Block and are open to the public.

Then it sets Tuesday, June 4. We know about that. That is the presentation, which is an overview. Now they talk about the proposed groups, not in the other invitation. It then lists the various dates and the government members. Then it says, "Opposition Members, 6". I should just say, "Committee Membership;" then "Chair, Senator Robertson."

Do you recognize from what I am reading, Senator Robertson?

Senator Robertson: I have not seen that.

Senator Frith: Oh, some official put it out?

Senator Robertson: No, the public relations people put that out on behalf of the Conservative caucus. I am sorry, I have not seen it. I would like a copy. I have not seen it. I honestly have not seen a copy.

Senator Frith: Senator Robertson says this was put out by the Conway/Lavoie publicity people, but it does not say that. She said they put it out for the Senate Conservative caucus, but that is not what it says. It says the Senate Rules committee.

Senator Robertson: I have to have a copy of it, Senator, but it seems to me they are inviting the press to the committee.

Senator Frith: I have already dealt with the invitation. The invitation to the press is clearly not from the Conservative caucus. It is from the Senate Rules committee. It is very clear. There it is. I cannot believe that you never saw it if you are the chairman of the committee.

Senator Robertson: I have not seen it. I was not personally involved. Perhaps I should have been, but I was not personally involved in the distribution of information by those people employed by the caucus.

Senator Frith: Then who distributed it? The publicity people distributed it?

Senator Robertson: Yes.

Senator Frith: But they distributed it on behalf of a committee of which you are chairman, a Senate committee. Now you are disowning Conway and Lavoie, are you?

Senator Robertson: Not at all.

Senator Frith: Are you telling us that Conway and Lavoie went off on some frolic of their own and issued this notice of a committee of which you are chairman and you did not know about it?

Senator Robertson: What is your point?

Senator Frith: Were you surprised to see the press there? You did not even know they had been invited?

Senator Robertson: Our committee of caucus instructed our publicity people to make sure the press were invited, because that committee had always been closed to the press and we wanted transparency; so we told them to make sure the press were invited.

Senator Frith: I see. It was all done by your caucus.

Senator Robertson: Yes.

Senator Frith: Of which you were the chairman of the committee on rules.

Senator Robertson: Yes.

Senator Frith: But did they tell you they were going to do it?

Senator Robertson: They did it at the instruction of the caucus committee. They were told to advise the press.

Senator Frith: Of which you were chairman?

Senator Robertson: Certainly.

Senator Frith: They were instructed—

Senator Robertson: What is your point?

Senator Frith: I take it that you and your caucus instructed your publicity people, to use your expression, to issue an invitation to the press, on the letterhead of the Senate of Canada—

Senator Robertson: Not on the letterhead—

Senator Frith: Oh, they made that mistake, did they? Here are the officials being blamed again. Nobody makes mistakes. It was only the officials—

Senator Robertson: Come off it!

Senator Frith: You come off it! Are you asking to us believe that you did not know about this invitation, on Senate of Canada letterhead, of a notice of meeting stating:

> The Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders invites you to a presentation on the tabling of the new rules for the Senate.

It indicates where it was to take place and says:

> A question period will follow immediately after the presentation.
> All print and electronic media are welcome to attend and record the proceedings.

And you did not know about that?

Senator Robertson: Are you doubting my word, Senator? I did not read the notice that was sent out to the press.

Senator Frith: Why?

Senator Robertson: I do not know why. I was busy. I did not read it. I was not involved. That is their business. Perhaps I should have. I did not read the notice sent out by the public relations people.

• (1540)

Senator Frith: Are you saying that the public—

Senator Robertson: I want a copy of it, please.

Senator Frith: You did not read what was sent out by the public relations people, remembering that "public relations people" means public relations people for the caucus not for the committee—and that has been clearly established. It has been denied that they had anything to do with the committee. But they sent this thing out; and you are the chairman, but you did nothing about it.

All right, that is your answer.

Senator Robertson: Senator Frith, I knew that they were going to advise them, but I did not see the copy of the notice of advisement.

Senator Frith: Did you tell them to send it out on behalf of the Conservative caucus?

Senator Robertson: No.

Senator Frith: Did you tell them to send it out on behalf of the Senate committee on Rules and Orders?

Senator Robertson: No.

Senator Frith: You did not. You just sent it out?

Senator Robertson: Yes.

Senator Frith: So, as far as you were concerned, you did not care whether it was sent by the Senate or the caucus; it was just the "publicity people."

Senator Barootes: Just people.

Senator Simard: Order!

Senator Frith: Yes, order indeed.

Senator Barootes: Why hire a dog and bark yourself?

Senator Frith: I see. These people, Conway and Lavoie, the publicity people, are otherwise known as the "dogs" that were hired by the Conservative caucus. I take it that Senator Barootes is saying that the committee, having hired these dogs, told them to bark any way they wanted to bark. They did not have to bark for the Conservative caucus; they did not have to bark for the Senate committee. It was up to them.

Senator Barootes: They are professionals and we let them do their job.

Senator Frith: So the chairman of the committee, of whom we are asking these questions, allowed them to go and bark any way they wanted to.

Let us have a look at what they barked. They also put out, apparently unknown to the chairman, a document saying, "Senate Rules Committee, Schedule of Meetings." I take it these were some of the notices that earlier in the questioning the chairman told us that all senators had received.

Senator Olson: And we never have.

Senator Robertson: No.

Senator Olson: No; we did not get them.

Senator Frith: Now we find—

Senator Robertson: On a point of order, honourable senators, I have all the official notices here from the Clerk and will table them whenever you want them.

Senator Frith: I see; and I take it that any notice that was sent out with your authority is among those, but this invitation to the press was not there. You did not expect the press to come.

Senator Robertson: Senator Frith, I have told you 95 times that we instructed these people to invite the press. We did not want closed meetings. We wanted transparency.

Senator Frith: I see. I can tell you that I do not know whether you achieved transparency there, but you are certainly achieving it today.

This other document—and you may not have known about it,so I will tell you about it—has your name on it. It is not just the committee's name; it is not just on the Senate of Canada letterhead; it has your name. It sets out the schedule of meetings. The heading is not Senate Conservative caucus; it is Senate Rules committee. The first one is the 2 p.m. presentation,"Overview of proposed rules."

Senator Grafstein: Who sent that out?

Senator Frith: I do not no. Apparently, I suppose, the dogs.

Senator Fairbairn: It came with the other stuff.

Senator Frith: It then goes down to Wednesday, 10 a.m. to 12 noon; 2 p.m. to 6 p.m.; 8 p.m. to 10 p.m.; Thursday, 10 a.m to 12; 2 p.m. to 6 p.m; 8 p.m. to 10 p.m.. There is then the heading of "Committee Membership: Chair, Senator B. Robertson." Did these people know that you were the chairman?

Senator Robertson: Honestly, Senator, I do not know what document you are reading from. If I had a copy of it, perhaps it would help. Time was the issue. Send copies of it over to me.

Senator Frith: Do you not have your press kit there in your official documents?

Senator Robertson: No, I don't. I have never seen the press kit. Do you believe that?

Senator Frith: No, but thanks for asking.

Senator Robertson: I am telling you that I have not seen the press kit.

Senator Frith: Let me go on to what is in here.

Senator Robertson: I have not seen the press kit.

Senator Frith: Let me tell you what it has. It has "Chair, Senator B. Robertson." It then lists the government members. It then says:

> Opposition Members: 6 not yet nominated (please see attached note)
> Ex officio Members:
>
> Senator L. Murray/Senator W. Doody Senator A. MacEachen/Senator R. Frith.
> Independent:
> Senator H. de M. Molson

Now for the note. Have you ever heard this before? This is what the note, sent out under your chairmanship, says:

> The Committee of Selection establishes the composition of all Committees of the Senate. Composed of nine members, Selection Committee membership has always reflected representation in the Senate. Given the plurality of Government members in the Senate today, Selection Committee membership should be five government members and four other members.

Senator Stanbury: Who says?

Senator Frith: This document, under the chairmanship of Senator B. Robertson.

The next paragraph reads:

[Senator Frith.]

> The Opposition refused to attend the three Selection Committee meetings held and hence, have not yet nominated any members to the Rules Committee.

Were you aware of that note?

Senator Robertson: The press kit was not delivered until after the organization committee meeting in the morning and after the steering committee had its meeting. I know that is when the press kits went out.

Senator Frith: When was it printed?

Senator Robertson: I have no idea when it was printed.

Senator Balfour: Stand up when you ask a question.

Senator Frith: I did; and you do likewise.

Senator Robertson: Senator Frith just wants to control the Senate. He wants to control everyone in it. If he is not giving directions to one person he is giving it to another. I did give instructions, Senator Frith, to the communications people to explain why there were no Liberal opposition members there. I thought that was very fair.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Did you tell them to lie?

Senator Frith: And when they said that the Opposition refused to attend the three Selection committee meetings held, and hence have not yet nominated any members to the Rules committee, did they carry out your instructions? Is that what they were to say? That is what you told the press, according to the press. Is that what you told them? You instructed them to explain. Is that what they were instructed to say?

Senator Robertson: I would have to read it.

Senator Frith: I will read it to you again. It is only one sentence. It reads:

> The Opposition refused to attend the three Selection Committee meetings held and hence, have not yet nominated any members to the Rules Committee.

Now you say you instructed them to explain what happened.

Senator Simard: State its responsibilities?

Senator Frith: Is that what you instructed them to say?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Excuse me, senator.

Senator Frith: No I won't. No, I will not.

Senator Olson: You do not have any right to take the floor. Sit down.

Senator Frith: I am asking Senator Robertson a question. Senator Robertson, let us understand where we are.

Senator Murray: But Senator Robertson is not—

Senator Frith: I am not required to sit down when the Leader of the Government stands up.

Senator Olson: That is right.

Senator Frith: Let us understand where we are. I have the floor and I intend to keep the floor.

When I asked Senator Robertson when this was printed, her answer was, "I told them to explain why the opposition members were not there." My question then was, "When you told them to explain it, is this a correct explanation? Is this what you asked them to say?"

Senator Murray: That is a caucus document; it is not a committee document. You do not have to do that.

Senator Frith: It is a committee document. It states, "Senate Rules committee." It would be very nice to call it that. Look at that. You see how insidious this is.

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Frith: They have now come to believe that a document of the Senate is a document of the Conservative caucus.

Senator Olson: Of the caucus, yes.

Senator Frith: It is clearly not. It is marked with a seal and everything on it. Let us not bother with that nonsense.

Senator Simard: Come on, Perry Mason.

Senator Barootes: Sit down, Clarence Darrow.

Senator Frith: The question is, when they explained it by stating that the Opposition refused to attend the three Selection committee meetings held, and hence have not yet nominated any members to the Rules committee, was that the explanation you asked them to give?

• (1550)

Senator Robertson: Honourable senators, I really can't remember my specific directions, but before I answer any more questions—

Senator Frith: What is your explanation?

Senator Robertson: —I want copies of what you are reading from.

Senator Frith: All right, we will get copies. Someone else who has copies can send them over. We will wait.

Senator Grafstein: May I ask a supplementary question?

Senator Frith: Well, I don't know. Obviously, I have read this to Senator Robertson three times. While she's waiting for a copy, let me ask her the following.

She said she told them to explain the absence of the opposition members. What was your idea, Senator, as to the reason for the opposition committee's membership not being there? You said you told them something. What did you tell them? Can't you tell us what you told them? Have you forgotten that? If you know what you told them, you can tell me whether this is a correct explanation:

> The Opposition refused to attend the three Selection Committee meetings held and hence, have not yet nominated any members for the Rules Committee.

Senator Robertson: I do not understand your point, honourable senator, but I did not dictate a note to them. I said, "In your press kit make sure you explain why the Liberals are not there." That's all.

Senator Frith: What was the explanation; that's what I am asking you.

Senator Murray: Use your imagination.

Senator Doyle: Why weren't you there?

Senator Simard: The Liberal boycott.

Senator Frith: You asked these people to please explain, and they didn't say to you, "Well, what's the explanation?" They said, "Okay. We will go out and make up something." Don't give me that. What is the explanation?

Senator Doyle: Why don't you answer?

Senator Frith: What did you tell them?

Senator Robertson: I told you what I told them. I am not going to repeat myself.

Senator Frith: You left it to them to explain it, or did you tell them what the explanation was? They could make up anything they wanted, as far as you were concerned?

Do you agree that that is an explanation for the opposition absence?

Senator Robertson: I have not seen that.

Senator Frith: Let me read it to you:

> The Opposition refused to attend the three Selection Committee meetings held and hence, have not yet nominated any members to the Rules Committee.

Is that the explanation, as you understand it? Can't you answer that? The chairman cannot tell us her understanding of what the explanation is. ALthough she agrees that she instructed somebody—

Senator Robertson: Are you asking me to tell you why you were not at the committee? Is that what you are asking me?

Senator Olson: You knew a while ago.

Senator Frith: No, I am asking you—

Senator Robertson: I think you are.

Senator Frith: No, I'm not.

Senator Robertson: Oh, yes, you are.

Senator Frith: I tell what you I am asking you. You would love to ignore that, senator. Only 30 seconds ago, senator, you said, "I told them to explain." You did not say, "Go and ask anyone else." You said, "I told them to explain why there were no opposition members." You told them to explain.

Senator Robertson: Yes.

Senator Frith: I am asking you, what did you tell them to explain? What did you think the explanation was?

Senator Robertson: I did not tell them anything. Honourable senator, I think most Canadians know how silly you people are being and why you were not at the committee, for heaven's sake.

Senator Frith: So the answer to the question of what the explanation is—

Senator Simard: Is that the Liberals are silly.

Senator Frith: —to the seals thumping over there, that they feel happy about the fact that the senator's answer to that question is that they think we are looking silly. That's the answer, is it?

Senator Simard: You are.

Senator Frith: Where is the answer to the question of what the explanation is? Do I understand that Senator Robertson had no explanation, that she told her publicity dogs, as Senator Barootes called them, to explain something and she had no idea what the explanation was?

Senator Robertson: Honourable senator, you don't listen very well. You love to talk a lot, but you don't listen. Try listening for once. You are impossibly ignorant when it comes to listening to people, I am sorry to say. I told you that I said to the publicity people, "Make sure you tell the people why the Liberals are not there."

Senator Frith: Why?

Senator Robertson: I did not tell them what to say. I know one of the reasons.

Senator Frith: What was it; that's what I am asking you?

Senator Robertson: I asked you a minute ago and you said, "No, no, I am not interested in what you are going to say." Because you are too stubborn. You can't give up power in committees. That's why you won't attend. That's the reason.

Senator Frith: All right. Now we understand the explanation. Senator Robertson has told us five or six times. I listened. I heard it. She said to the publicity people, "Explain why the opposition members weren't there." I have been trying for 15 minutes to get her to say what is her understanding of the explanation, and now finally we have it.

Senator Barootes: You tell us why.

Senator Frith: The reason, Senator Robertson says, is because she's told them, I guess, explained to them, that they are stubborn and will not give up power.

Senator Robertson: No, you are taking me out of context. I did not give them any direction. I said to explain. I did not put words in their mouths. I know why you were not there and they know why you are not there.

Senator Frith: Tell us.

Senator Robertson: For heaven's sakes, everyone knows why you were not there. You can't bear to give up power; that's the reason.

Senator Frith: That's the real reason, you say. The one they made up, because they did not even say to you, "Senator Robertson, if you want us to explain why, can you tell us what the reason is?" They did not ask that; they just made something up, and what they made up, unlike the reason Senator Robertson thinks, was:

[Senator Robertson.]

> The Opposition refused to attend the three Selection Committee meetings held and hence, have not yet nominated any members to the Rules Committee.

Senator Robertson will not adopt that as the reason. She says the reason is because we are stubborn and refuse to give up power. But this is the one they gave the press under her chairmanship. Of course, it's wrong, just as her reason is wrong. The minutes of the committee of Selection state that the opposition refused to attend the three Selection committee meetings. That is the statement that her dogs made, and made up, according to her. She had nothing to do with what they did. She didn't tell them what to do. "I'm not going to tell them what to say. I just told them to go ahead and explain, to pick their own explanation." So the one they picked out of the air, without any guidance from anyone, was that we refused to attend the three Selection committee meetings.

No one took the trouble to look at the minutes of the committee of May 29, 1991 where it lists at page 2.5 the members of the committee present: The Honourable Senators Balfour—he's not a liberal. Bolduc, he's not, but Corbin—

Senator Corbin: I'm a Liberal.

Senator Frith: I thought so. DeWare, she's not a Liberal. Doody, no. Frith? The last time I checked I was certainly a Liberal. Kelly, no; Lewis, yes; Petten, yes; and Phillips, no.

So there were at the committee meeting Senators Corbin, Frith, Lewis, and Petten. But the document states:

> "The Opposition refused to attend the three Selection Committee meetings held and hence, have not yet nominated any members to the Rules Committee.

So they are wrong that the opposition refused to attend three Selection committee meetings. That's one statement they made. The other statement that "they have not yet nominated" is also wrong. They made two statements and both of them are wrong.

• (1600)

It is no wonder that Senator Robertson does not want to accept sponsorship for this and wants to come up with some other explanation. If honourable senators will read page 2:5, they will find:

> The Committee proceeded with the nomination of Senators to serve on the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.
> The Honourable Senator Kelly moved that the Honourable Senators Balfour, Barootes, Cogger, Doyle, Grimard, Kinsella, Lavoie-Roux, Molson and Robertson be nominated to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

So far they are right; no one has been nominated from the opposition side. Yet the next paragraph states:

> The Honourable Senator Petten moved that the Honourable Senators Bonnell, Corbin, Frith, Graham, Kenny, Lewis, Molgat and Stanbury . . .

All of whom are Liberal, and all of whom are from the opposition. The words are, "The Opposition refused to attend . . . have not yet nominated . . ." This first document is a June document and the other is a May document.

What happened, of course, and the real explanation that neither the publicity dogs, nor Senator Robertson came up with, and which happens to be the truth, is that, first, we attended; and, second, we nominated.

> After debate, the question being put on the Honourable Senator Kelly's motion . . .

That is the one to put the Conservatives on.

> . . . it was, by a show of hands, resolved in the affirmative: YEAS = 6; NAYS = 4; ABSTENTIONS = 0.

Then, what happened to our nominations?

> The question being put on Senator Petten's motion . . .

Which motion was to nominate the Liberals, or Opposition, to use their words:

> . . . was, by a show of hands, negatived: YEAS = 4; NAYS = 6; ABSTENTIONS = 0.

What happened? "The Opposition refused to attend the three Selection committee meetings held . . ."—wrong, absolutely wrong— "and hence, have not yet nominated any members to the Rules Committee." That is wrong.

Some Hon. Senators: Wrong!

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PROPOSED NEW RULES—TESTIMONY OF EXPERTS

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I have a question for the chairman of the committee. I have been shaking my head feeling that the chairman and her committee, and perhaps the entire Conservative caucus, which is under the very firm thumb of people in the other place, really should be more pitied than censured.

They have abandoned the principles of democracy. They have abandoned the rule of law. They have not observed rules around here for a long time. Now they are trying to impose rules on us. They have abandoned the whole tradition of the development of rules by consensus and by all-party action. They have abandoned common courtesy.

They have now given us a set of rules which I understand are a complete revision of the role of the Senate and the destruction of the opposition, and practically the complete destruction of the possibility of there being presented petitions and inquiries, which items are the voice of the public in the Senate.

All of this will raise tremendous questions of constitutionality, Madam Chairman. I cannot believe that what you have done is at all constitutional. From what I have seen already, there are all kinds of constitutional problems in what you have done. It is clear that you did it all without the advice of anyone who knew what he was doing.

Apparently you tried to adopt the rules of the other place, which do not apply in this house. They have an elected Speaker. We have a Speaker who is appointed by the Prime Minister and who answers his call. It is a completely different situation. Now you are imposing upon us, unilaterally, a set of rules which clearly have constitutional problems which will ride with us for a long, long time.

My question for the chairman of the committee is this: Has the committee heard testimony of any legal or constitutional experts as to the viability of these rule changes?

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators,—

Senator Stanbury: Would you like me to repeat the question?

Senator Murray: What was the question?

Senator Stanbury: The Chairman should listen to questions when they are being asked. The question is: Has the committee heard testimony of any legal or constitutional experts with respect to the constitutionality of the amendments which have been proposed?

Senator Robertson: No, honourable senator. I am sorry I was not listening properly.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE—PRESENCE OF MEDIA

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: I should like to bring to your attention a notice that went out to the press that was not alluded to by Senator Frith. It was just handed to me, which accounts for my not listening. I was reading it instead of listening.

It is a correction that has gone out, and it is dated Tuesday, June 4. It states:

> Please be advised that the note regarding the Opposition committee members to Senate Rules Committee which is attached to the schedule of meeting contained in some press kits distributed earlier today should be disregarded as the information is incorrect.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You didn't know about that either. That was just handed to you. How convenient.

Senator Robertson: I just bring honourable senators up to date.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: What was that expression I used before—more to be pitied than censured. I think that is pretty applicable.

Senator Frith: May I have a copy of that, senator, with a copy of the distribution and the date of distribution.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PROPOSED NEW RULES

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. The fact is, I gather that the proposed rules 20 and 35 require a senator who finds a breach of privilege has occurred to wait until the next sitting day to raise his question. This is even more stringent than the Standing Order 48 of the other place, where it is customary for questions of privilege arising during the Oral Question Period to be considered at the end of the Oral Question Period and otherwise to take precedence over all other business of the house.

According to the proposed rule 35(8) and (9), questions of privilege for which there has been one day's notice will only be considered after the Orders of the Day. As a consequence, important public bills may well be considered during a time when there is a significant breach of privilege. Of course, it may never be reached after the Orders of the Day, depending on the action of the government. The government is in a position to prevent a further question of privilege from ever being discussed.

Is there any suggestion by the chairman that it is constitutionally possible to deprive a senator of an unimpeded right to raise a question of privilege?

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, there is a great deal of opportunity in the proposed new rules for privilege and every other matter that normally relates to a legislative body such as this.

Senator Stanbury: No.

Senator Robertson: Yes, there is.

I also want to remind the honourable senator that I believe this debate should continue tomorrow, if I am allowed —

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Robertson: —to speak to this motion. I think this is not the place to do so. If honourable senators want me to, I can dig out all my information on the rules, but I do believe that this is not the place to do that, so I am advised.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I should like to direct the attention of the house to the proposed rule 15(2) at page 13 in the document. It states:

> During any adjournment of the Senate, if the Speaker is satisfied that the public interest does not require the Senate to meet at the time provided in the order of adjournment the speaker shall:
> (a) consult the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or, in each case, their designate.
> (b) determine an appropriate date for the next sitting of the Senate.

• (1610)

There are other sub-provisions relating to notices and what happens if notice is not received by the several senators. I would like to ask Senator Robertson: Does this proposed rule follow the example of the House of Commons or, failing that, does it follow the example of the House of Lords?

Senator Robertson: I would prefer, and I think it is only proper, to debate these proposed rules when the motion is put.

Senator Frith: This is Question Period!

Senator Robertson: This is not the appropriate time—

Senator Frith: Don't be embarrassed!

Senator Robertson: I am not embarrassed at all. That is my favourite rule, and I will tell you why. I am so sick and tired of rushing up here from the Maritimes, as are other senators who come from out west, to come here and sit for 20 minutes and then be dismissed because there is no work.

[Senator Stanbury.]

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Wait until you see what you have with the 15-minute limits, if you think it is a waste now.

Senator Robertson: It is a disgraceful waste of time, it really is. I will not discuss the rules today. It is not the appropriate time. I will discuss every single rule you want to discuss tomorrow.

Senator Frith: The brand new rules are not yet in effect. According to the present rules applying at the present time this is the right time to ask you about the work of your committee. We do not have your new rules yet, so live with the present ones for a while.

Senator Stewart: I would like to ask a question relative to proposed rule 15(2). I preface my question by reading section 34 of the Constitution Act, 1867. It reads:

> The Governor General may from Time to Time, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, appoint a Senator to be Speaker of the Senate, and may remove him and appoint another in his Stead.

In view of the fact that the Speaker of the Senate is not a servant of the Senate but is instead a servant of the government holding office during pleasure of the government, does not the chairman of the committee regard a rule that gives the Speaker of the Senate, he or she being a servant of the government, the power to set aside a decision of the Senate as to the day on which the Senate will resume its sittings as a most significant change, a change so important indeed as to constitute a fundamental alteration of the Constitution of Parliament?

Senator Buckwold: Right on.

Senator Robertson: Honourable senators, I really think this is the wrong time to discuss the rules, but I will try to answer this question. Then, if you really want me to get out all of my information—

Senator Bonnell: Get it all out.

Senator Frith: You will feel better.

Senator Robertson: It is not the proper time.

Senator Frith: You will sleep better tonight.

Senator Robertson: I always sleep well, Senator Frith, and I am not on the stage.

Senator Frith: I would hope not.

Senator Robertson: To Senator Stewart, the Speaker, as you know, with the advice of the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition, can call the Senate back when so required. I believe that is a—

Senator Frith: That is not the present rule.

Senator Robertson: I know it is not, but that is what he can do now. He can call us back with proper advice.

Senator Frith: It is all up to him under the present one. He makes the decision.

Senator Robertson: This one is the opposite of that. He has the ability, after consultation with both leaders, to postpone a sitting of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Consultation is not consent.

Senator Robertson: Consultation. I would not expect you to agree with this view. However, your committee felt quite comfortable with that rule. I see nothing particularly difficult with the rule if there is proper consultation. The consultation would be instigated generally, I am sure, by the Leader of the Government because he is the one who knows whether or not there will be business before the chamber. There has to be a mechanism for not bringing everyone back to the chamber if there is no work. It is a terrible waste of taxpayers' money. It really is. If the taxpayers knew how much those 20 minutes or half hours cost them, they would be absolutely shocked; they really would.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, in her response Senator Robertson says that, in a sense, proposed rule 15(2) is the reverse side of the rule that enables the Speaker, after consultation, to bring the Senate back to sit. Surely the honourable senator recognizes that there is a fundamental difference between bringing a House of Parliament back to sit and saying, "No, we don't want you at all", given the traditional relationship between the Crown, on the one hand, and Parliament, on the other. The Crown is at times not anxious to have either house of Parliament in session and sitting.

Senator Buckwold: Often.

Senator Stewart: It is quite another matter for the Crown to want the Houses of Parliament sitting so as to do government business; we understand that. However, what is being conferred upon the government, as we see under section 34 of the Constitution Act, is that the Speaker is the creature of the government. He or she holds office at pleasure and can, in the words of the Constitution, be removed and another appointed in his or her stead. It allows the Speaker to say, "No, the government doesn't want you back."

I understand what Senator Robertson is saying. She is saying that at times there may not be sufficient business for the Senate to do, notwithstanding that the Senate itself has appointed a date to return. Perhaps she has been misled by that consideration and has not taken into account the fact that a government might say, "Look, the Senate is coming back on July 15, and we do not want them back. There is an immigration scandal case and we do want it discussed. There will be a lot of misunderstanding if they come back and start asking questions. Speaker, you are our creature, so tell them they are not to come back." That is the danger. I say to Senator Robertson and to Senator Doyle, who is very dubious on these matters—

Senator Frith: Because he knows that the government never does anything wrong, only officials!

Senator Stollery: He is the one who wanted to abolish the Senate before he came here!

Senator Stewart: —that what a government, regardless of its political persuasion, can do, it will, in certain circumstances, do. Senator Robertson smiles. Perhaps she, in fact, finds it a little hilarious—

Senator Robertson: Just being pleasant.

Senator Stewart: —perhaps tiresome that this constitutional question should be raised. I ask her: When she prepared this report, when she accepted this document, was she aware of the constitutional significance of the proposed changes to the Rules of the Senate that will allow a Speaker of the Senate, who is not elected, not a creature of the Senate but of the government, to cause senators to stay away? That is the question I ask the honourable senator.

An Hon. Senator: Speak louder; we can't hear you on this side.

Senator Stewart: I guess, Honourable Senator Robertson, the implication of your silence is a no.

Senator Robertson: There was a great deal of discussion among our own members on this particular issue, and Senator Molson was there when this particular issue was raised.

Senator Stollery: Lord Molson!

• (1620)

Senator Robertson: There seemed to be a not too negative response on the constitutional issue.

I am not surprised that this issue was raised, because I expected it to be raised. However, honourable senators, I would like to check the rules that we are working under today. Is it the wish of this house that we go into each rule in depth now, or will that be dealt with tomorrow?

Senator Murray: This is oral Question Period.

Senator Robertson: I see.

Senator Frith: The senator is just asking if the constitutional dimension was taken into account.

Senator Robertson: Yes, it was.

PREPARATION OF NEW RULES—QUALITY OF FRENCH TEXT

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: I do not have a question about the content of the rule changes, but I have a question on the document I am holding in my hand.

The "Gang Who Couldn't Shoot Straight"—the Tory caucus—produced a very interesting document. In fact, I do not think they should be trusted with documents. I read in the transcript of the Al-Mashat business that Senator Murray's own assistant got a briefing note about Al-Mashat that never got to Senator Murray. Alternatively, he may not have read it or maybe he thought it was not a government document. Perhaps he thought it was a document prepared by the experts, the consultants or the public relations boys from Strategic Communications on Sparks Street. It will be interesting to check the public record to see how many government contracts Strategic Communications on Sparks Street have received. They are really Santa Claus-type people. They work for nothing. They advise the Conservative caucus, on which, I might add, the Speaker sits.

Mr. Lavoie and Maureen Conway of Strategic Communications—modern day Santa Claus' helpers—prepared the document that Senator Robertson did not read. If she did not have time to read it because she was too busy with the Tory caucus, I wish, at least, she had shown a copy to Senator Tremblay, or to Senator Chaput-Rolland who is a distinguished author. Certainly, she could have shown it to a number of senators such as Senator Lavoie-Roux, who is a member of the committee, or Senator Grimard, a very literate man who impresses me.

Honourable senators, these volunteers in the cause of the future of the Tory caucus have committed the most serious crime anyone can commit in the French language, which is to fail to have concordance between an adjective and its noun. For example, they say, ". . . tout les médias . . ." and they spell it "t-o-u-t-". Senator David, who is a distinguished intellectual, knows that "tout les médias" does not really wash. It should be "tous". As a former professor of grammar, I would teach that.

Then the document contains the phrase ". . . une présentations . . .". Honourable senators, this is on "Senate of Canada" paper. It is not something that was picked off the table; this is written on the letterhead of the Senate of Canada. We would not allow our officials to release a document written in that type of grammar. Obviously, the Government of Canada has privatized the committees and left that responsibility in the tender care of Strategic Communications on Sparks Street. Honourable senators, "une" means one, yet "présentation" is used in the plural form, "présentations".

Senator Buckwold: Maybe Senator Simard wrote it.

Senator LeBlanc: Once the authors, honourable senators, had reached the end of the "Senate of Canada"-headed paper, then blank, white paper is used for the remainder of the document, but the only language used then is English.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Is this Question Period or what?

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Senator Simard, I don't know what you are driving at, but I will ask you the following question: Is there any good reason why a committee of your caucus, or worse, a document under the letterhead "Senate of Canada" contains, in addition to some very obvious spelling mistakes, a text in English only and why this text was distributed to the media?

Perhaps Mr. Vastel who shouted to Mr. Trudeau from the visitors' gallery, telling him to speak French when he appeared before us, could put that in his article next week.

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Nobody reads it!

[Senator Rom]

[English]

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: On behalf of the committee, honourable senators, I would apologize for the errors in the French translation. I think the suggestion of having Senators Chaput-Rolland, Grimard or David vet these documents is an excellent one.

As you know, this difficulty arises not only with communications people. We have this same problem in translations. However, I appreciate the honourable gentleman's comments. In future, I will ensure that my francophone colleagues in caucus vet the documentation carefully.

Senator LeBlanc: The fact is that in this institution we sometimes complain about the quality of language, but when our officials are allowed to do their job—and they are no longer doing it because the responsibility has been shifted to Sparks Street-they always produce documents in proper French and in proper English. Privatizing the operations of a committee of the Senate may fit the policy of the government, but I do not think it is the policy of the Senate.

Senator Robertson: Thank you very much, senator, for your comments. I am sure your remarks would have had much more impact had we involved the officers at the table in our caucus deliberations. It is perfectly appropriate that caucus employed only these people, and we shall continue to employ Strategic Communications Consultants whenever caucus deems fit.

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Don't do that, if they don't do their job.

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO OKA CRISIS

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I do not want to cut off any of my colleagues who have further questions, and I certainly do not want to disappoint Senator Robertson by not having a question for her. There may be more questions for Senator Robertson, but at this point I would like to pose one question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

On May 30, at page 83 of the Debates of the Senate of that day, I asked the Leader of the Government when his government would announce a full, proper and public judicial inquiry to look into last summer's events at Oka. His response was that the Quebec government intended to ". . . proceed with the judicial inquiry that the coroner has recommended." In saying that, the government leader was answering a question that I had not asked.

I was aware that the coroner in Quebec had ordered an inquest into Corporal Lemay's death. However, this inquest is quite a different matter from the public, independent judicial inquiry that I asked for two weeks ago. The Quebec Minister, Mr. Ryan, has announced that the inquest will deal with one issue only; that is, the death of Corporal Lemay.

Would the honourable Leader of the Government now be prepared to inform this house that, since two weeks ago, he has: One, clarified his understanding of my request and the request of the people of Kanesatake as well as the House of Commons Committee on Aboriginal Affairs for a full, independent judicial inquiry; two, that he has spoken to the Prime Minister about this matter as he undertook to do; and, three, can he now report that this government is now prepared to establish the long-awaited and much-needed independent inquiry?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, I think I undertook to obtain further information on the matter and a statement of the government's position from the appropriate minister. I do not have that information this afternoon but I shall try to obtain it as soon as possible.

Senator Stanbury: I hesitate to suggest that what Senator Murray really said was that he would bring the matter to the attention of the Prime Minister and would report back. I am still looking for that kind of answer.

I am sure all honourable senators will recognize the need for a federal, if not a federal-provincial, inquiry to look into the issue surrounding the Oka crisis.

Furthermore, the Leader of the Government, I am sure, will agree that an inquest that is bound by law to limit its examination to the death of Corporal Lemay cannot possibly provide Canadians with the answers they need.

• (1630)

I am sure I do not have to remind anyone that this crisis extended for 78 days after the tragic death of Corporal Lemay. I will not have to remind anyone that the federal government has the principal responsibility for aboriginal affairs, that four departments of the federal government were directly involved, and that our armed forces were brought in at the request of Quebec to deal with the situation of which provincial authorities had lost control.

Therefore, my question to the honourable Leader of the Government is this: Has his government requested the cooperation of the Government of Quebec in establishing a federal-provincial or independent judicial inquiry, and will his office undertake to establish a comprehensive public judicial inquiry under the auspices of the federal government, or if possible, as the Commons Committee suggested, a federal-provincial inquiry, to give a full airing to the many issues that are far beyond the mandates of any studies, committees or commissions currently constituted?

Senator Murray: There again, honourable senators, I hope to be in a position to bring in a full response to Senator Stanbury's question very soon.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

PROPOSED NEW RULES—EFFECT ON OPPOSITION

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, could I return to the rules? I had not realized that Senator Stanbury was moving to another topic. In reading the proposed rule 20, it appears to me that the government is deliberately trying to establish a mechanism under that rule to silence the opposition. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if my impression on first reading of the rule—and I just read it today—is correct.

Under the proposed rule 20, the section dealing with order of business, reading of petitions, notices of motions, and non-government notices of inquiries comes last in a long list of items that are collectively subject to a 30 minute time limit. If one takes the rule at first blush, the government could continue to prevent the opposition—even if the opposition were a majority for the moment—from getting to those items. If the government proceeds at length on tabling its documents, government notices of motions and first reading of government bills, and if the government, which has priority, uses up the entire thirty minutes, the opposition would be shut out. Essentially, the other items would be foreclosed, and the last item under the rule is presentation of petitions. Under these proposed rules, if they are implemented, the government could properly, in effect, prevent senators from presenting petitions. That strikes me as silencing the opposition and essentially goes to the heart of the Senate and Parliament. We had a great debate about that in the past and I thought that there was a clear understanding on both sides that petitions ran to the heart of Parliament. I wonder whether or not there was some oversight on behalf of the Rules committee on this matter, or was this a deliberate attempt to silence the opposition or to take away the right of the opposition to present petitions?

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Thank you, Senator Grafstein. No, it certainly is not the intent to silence the Opposition. If anything, it is just to give good order to the process, the Orders of the Day. You can note, if you consider what we do now with the tabling of documents, presenting reports and so on, that those are strictly tabling exercises without dialogue. We get through those very quickly. If you check back and see how long it takes us to go through those items, it certainly is not long unless there is a deliberate attempt to prevent the government's notices of motions or government bills from being discussed, and the whole purpose here is to have the government business dealt with in an efficient manner, but certainly not to silence the opposition. I believe that if you read that whole section carefully, you will find that there will be ample opportunity for opposition participation in all of those items.

Senator Grafstein: Again, just reading at first blush, on page 22 of the first report, section B, section 6, it gives a list of priorities of documents. The Leader of the Government in the Senate could, as could other senators, by introducing the first reading of government bills, presenting reports, presenting government notices of motions, introduction and first reading of government bills, introduction and first reading of Senate public bills, first reading of commons public bills, very quickly use up 30 minutes. My only question is that the government, if it chose to, could unilaterally foreclose the opposition from proceeding with notices of motions, notices of inquiries or presentation of public petitions, even in a cursory fashion. They could do it endlessly.

Senator Robertson: I think not, honourable senators, any more than the opposition, as the rules stand now, would prevent the orders from proceeding.

Senator Frith: Of course, if they tried anything like that, the Speaker would jump all over them!

Senator Robertson: Oh, well, I doubt that very much. The rule is quite specific. The tabling of documents no longer has to be read the way Senator Doody does it now. They can be tabled with the clerk without the process they now go through. There are some other items there that will save time. I doubt that you would not get to your other business. I really do.

Senator Grafstein: On a fair reading, the government is not prevented from introducing briefly a number of government bills or public bills, but in sub-section 7 as appears on page 23, it says, this:

> Not later than 30 minutes after the first item is called in accordance with section (6) above—which sets out the order of business

> —regardless of the progress then made on the items listed therein, the Speaker—and here the Speaker has no discretion

> —shall interrupt any proceedings then before the Senate and shall forthwith call for the following:
> Question Period.

So, in effect, whereas before we had endless or perpetual petitions, we could now have an endless stream of government explanation, completely foreclosing the opposition from its historic right to present a petition. It would be perpetual foreclosure.

Senator Olson: They don't care about that.

Senator Robertson: I understand what you are saying, senator, but I certainly do not see that in the rules. I understand where you are referring but, certainly, 30 minutes should be most adequate for these particular orders. I shall do some more work on it tonight and try to find the average amount of time for those things and just see how it works out. However, I know that has been done and the committee was advised that that certainly would be adequate time, unless there was something very unusual, to get to the presentation of petitions, and from whatever time is left over you can have all the time you want to present petitions until the 30 minutes is used up. If you come down to, say, 15 minutes, you may have half the time, and I would be surprised if you went through that order in 15 minutes.

Senator Grafstein: Is the chairman of the committee, who is concerned with balance in the Senate, not concerned with providing the opposition with an appropriate mechanism to bring matters to public attention? What we are doing here by these so-called efficiencies is, in effect, ruling out or foreclosing the appropriate role of the opposition to present meaningful discussion and meaningful concerns of the public. The petitions that we presented during the GST debate—which I know presented horrendous difficulties to the government—essentially were not something that we created. They arose from an outcry of the general public, and foreclosing, in effect, this opportunity in the Senate goes to the constitutionality of a second chamber. There would not be left open a place for cris de coeur of last resort. Is that not a concern to government members on that committee?

Senator Olson: Not when they are in office.

Senator Frith: Those angels? Not a thought.

Senator Robertson: I think not, senator.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE—NOTICES TO SENATORS

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, if I may, I have some information from the Clerk of the Committee that I would like to table, in which senators may be interested. It is regarding the notices. It gives each office to which they were delivered, and so forth. The notices were delivered on Friday, May 31, 1991, at 2 p.m. A yellow notice was sent out announcing a meeting of the Rules committee for Tuesday, June 4, 1991, at 10 o'clock in the morning. The agenda shows it was an organization meeting. The list of all the rooms to which this notice was delivered by the messengers is attached, and all yellow notices are distributed to these rooms. I have a list of all the senators.

Senator Barootes: Is Senator Olson's name there?

Senator Robertson: Oh, yes.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Senator Frith: This is everything you have to table?

Senator Robertson: These are all the copies of the notices, yellow and white, that went out.

Senator Molgat: Does that include the press kit?

Senator Robertson: I do not have the press kit.

Senator Frith: She disowns the press kit.

Senator Molgat: Would it be possible to have the press kit tabled?

Senator Robertson: Yes, certainly, if I can get one.

Senator Frith: On Senate letterhead. That is the caucus document on Senate letterhead. That is the one we do not get.

• (1640)

Senator Grafstein: The honourable senator indicated earlier in responses to Senator Frith and others, that it was an accident. I believe she used the word "accident".

Senator Frith: About the committee letterhead.

Senator Grafstein: It was "accidental" that the Senate stationary was used by the public consultants for the Tory caucus. If that is the case, the media, many of whom may not read the documents here or the questions and answers here, have obviously been misled, and the public through the media have been misled. Therefore, would it not be appropriate, now that the senator has acknowledged the accident, that that be corrected and a new kit be sent to the media indicating that it was not a Senate matter, that this kit dealt with subject-matter of the Tory caucus. They could do that at caucus expense.

Senator Robertson: Thank you for that suggestion, senator. I will be meeting later with some of my caucus members. I want to review the press kit. As I said to Senator Frith earlier, I have not seen the press kit. I want to see if the documents in the press kit compare with the documents sent over by Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: What?

Senator Robertson: Let me look and see what is there; but that is not a bad idea.

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR APPOINTMENT OF A PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF QUEBEC AN ACT TO AMEND AND CONSOLIDATE THE ACTS RELATING TO THE OFFICE OF PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF MONTREAL

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Michel Cogger moved second reading of Bill C-14, to amend an Act to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec and an Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal, and to validate certain fees and charges established pursuant thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, this happens to be the second time that I have had the honour to move second reading of this bill. Indeed, I spoke on the very same subject on December 20, 1990. The bill subsequently died on the Order Paper, wherefor its current reintroduction.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): We remember how articulate and persuasive you were.

Senator Cogger: In view of that fact, I will not insult fellow senators by repeating some of the things that I said then and which I am sure are still vivid in their minds. I believe that it was a Friday morning, December 20, on which I spoke, and the audience was numerous and attentive.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I was there and I agreed.

Senator Cogger: Essentially the purpose of Bill C-14 is to correct a few anomalies that are reflected in the governance of the harbours of Quebec City and Montreal. Both harbours or ports are directed by wardens who act under the authority respectively of the Board of Trade of Montreal and La Chambre de Commerce de Quèbec. The moneys necessary for the operation of the offices of the various wardens is to be generated from the fees they collect on cargoes. The system, as we currently know it, has been in place respectively since 1882 and 1871. Needless to say, it is rather archaic and cumbersome.

For instance, a change in the fees levied by the wardens requires the authorization and the approval of the Governor General in Council. The proposed new legislation would dispose of those archaic provisions and modernize the operations of the offices of the wardens in both harbours.

Honourable senators, the second objective of the bill is essentially a housekeeping amendment. It will bring the offices of the wardens into the late 20th century and facilitate the operations. This bill is no more controversial now than it was in December of 1990 when I first introduced it, and I invite colleague senators to give it speedy consideration and passage.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, Senator Cogger is perfectly correct in that it was the 20th of December. I and a number of my colleagues were there, and, if you will recall, we sought the answers to a series of questions. We put our questions to the chairman of the committee and said that we on our side felt that we could not proceed with the debate until we had the answers.

We still do not have the answers to those questions and we have virtually the same legislation as Senator Cogger has spoken about. Therefore, I would like to put the questions on the record now.

Senator Cogger: Would it not be the appropriate procedure that I first move that the bill be referred to a committee?

Senator Frith: No. This is second reading debate. He is telling you the basis upon which he wants you to make that motion.

Senator Davey: Let me read the questions and have them on the record. Then, Senator Cogger, we will look forward to having the answers provided by you or your colleagues on that side. We do not feel that we can proceed with this bill until we have received the answers to the following questions:

> Could you provide all documents pertaining to all contractual arrangements entered into by the Government of Canada with VS Food Services of Toronto? For how many years has Versabec Inc. had the food services contract at Montreal Ports Corporation? Is this contract renewable annually, every two years, every five years?
> When Versabec Inc. first signed a contract to provide food services facilities at the Port of Montreal facilities:
> (1) Was there a tender issued?
> (2) How many bids were submitted?
> (3) Was there a committee established to review the bids and recommend action on these?
> (4) Who were the members of this committee?
> (5) What other companies submitted bids? If no bids were submitted, how was the decision taken to enter into a contract with Versabec Inc.

> At any time during their dealings with Versabec Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of VS Food Services Ltd., were the directors of the Montreal Ports Corporation aware that a senator of the Parliament of Canada is the Chairman of the board of Versabec and a director of its parent company?

Has the contract for food services at the Port of Montreal been renewed since 1985? If so, when? Would this be a decision taken by the Board of Directors? If so, what members were present at each meeting where this contract was renewed? Is there a committee of Board members that make such decisions? If so, please provide the membership list for this committee from 1985 to 1990.

When was the last time the food services contract for the Port of Montreal was renewed? If it hasn't been renewed since it was entered into, why not? What is the policy of the Montreal Ports Corporation overseeing such matters?

Are the employees of Montreal Ports Corporation satisfied with the cafeteria and catering services presently being provided by Versabec Inc.? When was the last time a comprehensive survey was conducted? How many employees have access to food services provided by Versabec Inc.?

Did the Montreal Ports Corporation ever enter into a contract for insurance coverage with Pratte-Morrissette Ltd.? Since 1984 what disbursements if any have been made from the Montreal Ports Corporation to Pratte-Morrissette Inc., Chardul Ltd, Charbonneau-Dulude and Associates, Peerless Insurance Agencies Ltd. Charbonneau-Dulude-Lalonde and Associates Inc., and in each instance what date, what amount, for what purpose and by what authority? What type of insurance did Pratte-Morrissette provide? For how long was this contract in effect and when? Who recommended Pratte-Morrissette? At what precise date? Are the minutes of the Board meetings where the Pratte-Morrissette insurance contract was deliberated available?

Did the Montreal Port Corporation retain the services of Charbonneau-Dulude and Associates in 1984 or in any subsequent year and if so for what purpose, under what terms and conditions and what report and/or recommendations were presented to the corporation and on what date? If so was this by invitation or by open tender. If by invitation, what other companies or individuals were invited to tender and who did? If by open public tender, who tendered? In all instances what were the bids or offers of service, who administered the tendering process, and was this process repeated annually?

During their dealings with Pratte-Morrissette were the directors of the Montreal Ports Corporation aware that a) the Chairman of Pratte-Morrissette was a Senator of the Parliament of Canada, b) that Pratte-Morrissette was a wholly owned subsidiary of Marsh and McLennan Ltd. on whose advisory board, sits the same senator and c) of the existence of a contract with supposedly prohibited said senator from aiding either companies from obtaining government business?

Approximately how much in total premiums did the Montreal Ports Corporation pay to Pratte-Morrissette for the duration of the insurance contract signed between these two parties? What were the totals for each year?

At the time that the directors of the Montreal Ports Corporation decided or ratified the decision to retain the services of Pratte-Morrissette Ltd. on the advice of Charbonneau-Dulude and Associates (later to become Chardul Ltd.) were they aware that the parent company of Pratte-Morrissette Ltd., Marsh & McLennan Ltd. had, or was in the process of buying a part of Charbonneau-Dulude and Associates?

Has the Government entered into any contractual arrangement with a computer services company called Thomson — CSF Systems Canada Inc.? If so, what service or material is being provided? What is the amount of the contract(s), what departments, Crown Corporations or agencies are involved and what is the duration of the contract(s)?

Senator Cogger, those are the questions and we on this side are very anxious to have the answers. We know you will be able to provide them.

On motion of Senator Davey, debate adjourned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented on Thursday, May 30, 1991.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I move that the report be adopted.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not wish to delay the proceedings but I would like my honourable friend to assure me that this motion deals with implementing economies in the use of the telephone resources in the Senate. If that is the case, I heartily approve of it, because it has been my opinion for some time that we have not been scrutinizing ourselves as carefully as we could in this respect.

My question has to do with the first item of this report which deals with on-net lines and authorization codes. I am not acquainted with the terminology involved and I would appreciate it if my friend could tell me, in language that I can understand, exactly what this phrase means.

Senator LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I am not sure that my technical knowledge will be up to the "exigences" of Senator Roblin, but I will try.

The senator might remember that some years ago there were two systems. Under one system you dialled into what was called a government network and if the line was available you were put through by an operator. Eventually that was moved into the Bell Telephone on-line system which allows direct access by dialling which is computerized and, in fact, is given to the Government of Canada at—I do not want to use a figure because I am afraid of being wrong, but I think it was given at something like 60 per cent of the normal telephone cost because of the very large volume that the government telephone organization buys from the telephone company. I am walking on very thin ice here and I do not want to be accused of misleading the Senate. That is the figure that comes to my mind but would I have to check the facts.

Anyway, the telecommunications proposals that are before you, and which were discussed some months ago in the Committee on Internal Economy, were intended to bring some control to the use of telephones and some vetting of telephone use by employees of the Senate through their managers and eventually through Internal Economy. Also, and probably most important, each senator will receive, in a private envelope, because we think there is a privacy element in telephone communication, the record of his telephone calls in order that he will know the cost of the operation of the telephones in his office. That is the intention of what we have brought forward.

Senator Roblin: I thank my friend. That is very helpful. I appreciate what he is doing.

On motion of Senator LeBlanc, report adopted.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament.—(Honourable Senator Frith) (5th day of resuming debate)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator MacEachen.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, better a Tuesday than a Thursday. That is the only merit I see in beginning a speech in the Senate on a Tuesday afternoon at 5:07. I do want to make at least some initial comments today on the motion for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the 3rd Session of the 34th Parliament.

The Speech from the Throne which opened this session is not what one might call a routine document. We are now past the halfway point between two general elections, conceivably a good deal beyond the halfway point if one is to believe Senator Murray when he said that:

> . . . only political cowardice or contempt for the democratic process could explain . . .

a government's refusal to announce a general election after four years in office. If that is accepted, we are well beyond the mid-point.

• (1700)

For the first time since 1984 the Canadian government is starting a new session with a majority or plurality in both chambers of Parliament and with an opposition from whom there has been removed, or is about to be removed in this place, the ability to perform as an effective opposition.

It is clear to me, after a cursory glance at the new rules proposed by the Rules committee, that the opposition will be virtually powerless in performing a useful legislative role in the Senate. Maybe that is the intention; I hope it is not. If the sole intention was to modernize or make the system more efficient, then certainly the result has been overkill of the most draconian kind. However, that is just a side comment that I might expand upon on another occasion.

The government has been in a strong position in Parliament and is now even stronger in the Senate. With that in mind, after more than six years of experience behind it, and with a new team refreshed by a cabinet shuffle, one would have thought that the government would now be confidently mapping out its plans for the future of Canada. But, as we know, these are not ordinary times. After more than six and a half years in office—during which the government had ample opportunity to achieve its goals and prove its worth—the government today has lost the confidence of the public in every region of Canada. The Prime Minister himself is not exactly the most popular political figure in Canada. I know that perhaps members on the other side are hurt about all of this—it would be understandable—but I hope that they are not taking out their frustrations and expressing their hurt feelings by this thrust against the opposition in the Senate, because whatever happens in the Senate will not have any discernible impact on the future course of Canadian political history. I wonder why the acrimony. Why create this acrimony at this particular time?

The country is in a deep recession. Some say that instead of getting better it is getting worse. Certainly we are in a recession, and one produced in Canada, with differences of opinion as to the extent and the depth of the recession, and very great differences of opinion as to when precisely the country will emerge from the recession.

On the political side, many Canadians have in good faith come to the view that Canada is no longer working or is a house divided against itself. Our future as a united country is being questioned; the trust that Canadians have traditionally put their government has been dissipated by repeated manifestations of contempt for public opinion. The government has operated on the basis that it is good for a government to be against what the public thinks, because rarely does the public know what is good for it but the government does. We have had many instances in this chamber when policies put forward by the government were opposed by the public. Nevertheless the government persisted.

One of the failings of government is the refusal to be flexible or to bend. We often hear ministers, especially, saying, "Well, we are the government. We are here to govern." The public opinion may be adverse, but it will come around by the next election. Former governments have done unpopular things and they have survived. There is no doubt about it. Some of those involved in the Meech Lake constitutional process would freely admit that the public was opposed to what they were doing but felt that they would survive the feelings of the public. So it is a delicate question for governments—that is, how often and on what occasions they disregard the public. That has been happening in this country. We are led to believe that democracy exists only at election time. That is an unsophisticated view of a modern, democratic society. It is very unsophisticated to believe that the public can have its way only every four years, if we are to believe Senator Murray—

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Or Mr. Trudeau.

Senator MacEachen: —or every five years, if one were to make a prediction. In between, the public can be disregarded. That is not an expression of full democracy. One thing that I learned in the Senate, after listening to so many public interest groups, was that the Canadian view today is not that democracy is expressed at election time solely, but that democracy has to be expressed time and time again in the course of a mandate of a government. Their views must be registered in between elections.

• (1710)

Why is it that the Reform Party is surging? Why is it that the institutions of government and our national institutions are in such disrepute? I am not the only one who has said that. The Minister of Constitutional Affairs has been the first to acknowledge, or among those who have acknowledged, that today is not a good season for political people. Why is that? Why is Preston Manning making yards everywhere? Certainly not because of the appeal of his agenda to the moderate middle of Canada. It is because Preston Manning is taking advantage of the views so prevalent that parliamentarians are not listening any more, and that a new Reform Party would bring about changes in institutions so that the view of the public would be registered frequently, not just every four or five years.

That is a feature of Canadian life. I would have thought that in these circumstances the government would be seeking ways to listen rather than seeking ways to muzzle. The muzzling has occurred in the House of Commons and it is now occurring in the Senate.

I intended to say a word about how people in other countries feel about Canada. I think that generally they have still an admiration for this country and for the people of Canada. They are puzzled and confused at why it is we have made such a lousy job of running our affairs, and why are we so incapable of forming important consensus in the country.

[Senator MacEachen.]

I think it is fair to say that the government cannot disclaim responsibility for this state of affairs. After six and a half years in office with a majority, and with its main objectives completed in the economic front, it cannot say, "Well, we couldn't get our way or we were stopped", because the government has had its way. It has had its way on bills that I opposed and which we opposed on this side, and which I think the public opposed, including the GST. Has the GST made the government more popular? Has the passage of the Unemployment Insurance bill made the government more popular? Has the passage of the pharmaceutical bill made the government more popular? Has the passage of the free trade bill made the government more popular?

All of these items were declared objectives of the Government of Canada. In almost all of them large sections of the public said, "We don't want that", and the government said, "Well, we will take the pain now because it's good for the country. The government believes the public is incapable of knowing all the facts; that the measure is good for Canada and by the time the election comes around they will change, they will be sweet, and maybe that will work." But certainly at the moment the government is not doing very well. It should ask itself what it has been doing wrong, and maybe it might have been better had it listened a bit in the course of the past six or seven years.

I expected the government, in the Speech from the Throne, to lay out some new goals for the country, some new thoughts, a new vision; but it was the same old stale stuff, shop-worn, recycled in the Speech from the Throne which you heard and which I read when I returned to Canada.

I am tempted to take a look back to November, 1984. That was quite a time, let me tell you. I know it ss a call on your recollections to look back and think of the mood prevailing then, but it might be useful to tell us all how fleeting those moments of glory are and how much we should snatch to ourselves the euphoria that comes so rarely. That speech was crafted by a brand-new government recently formed with a strong mandate from the polls. In the speech's own words there existed, "a magnificent opportunity to build a renewed national consensus." It affirmed that this was "the beginning of a new era of national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice." The key goals were "to breathe a new spirit into federalism and restore the faith and trust of all Canadians in the effectiveness of our system of government; to harmonize policies of our two orders of government, to ensure respect for their jurisdiction and to end unnecessary and costly duplication." That was in 1984—to end unnecessary and costly duplication. Finally, "to complete the 1982 constitutional agreement by making Quebec part of the accord."

That was Constitutional renewal. There would also be economic renewal based on reducing the budget deficit, and controlling the growing burden of the public debt. Investment in research and development would be increased, social justice would be improved, and a renewed Canadian internationalism would be achieved. As could be expected from a new government, pride and prejudice were oozing out of every paragraph of the 1984 Speech from the Throne. But, at best, the impression was created that here was a government that meant business; here was a government that had the resolve to deliver on its own chosen agenda.

That impression was still continued or perpetuated or propped up by the 1986 Speech from the Throne which contained no less than 39 articulate and special proposals for action.

Even in 1986 I had formed an impression that the glory hours and the glory days were fading. I said that the 1984 Speech from the Throne rested principally on three pillars of wisdom: reconciliation, economic renewal and renewed Canadian internationalism. I added that one might say tha the pillars are there but the roof is caving in.

• (1720)

When I look back to 1986 I cannot fail to have a feeling of nostalgia, because we had at least some pillars left. But now we turn to the desolate scene around us, where the pillars have disappeared and have crumbled to dust. What comes to mind are Shelley's immortal verses in his poem entitled, Ozymandias.

> . . . Two vast and trunkless legs of stone
> Stand in the desert . . .
> And on the pedestal these words appear:
> 'My name is Ozymandias, king of kings:
> Look on my works, ye Mighty, and despair!'
> Nothing beside remains. Round the decay
> Of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare
> The lone and level sands stretch far away.

Well, we would not naturally expect a Speech from the Throne to emulate Shelley, but the tone was remarkably subdued, and the substance is almost inaudible.

I want to thank Senators Meighen and Lavoie-Roux for launching us into this debate. In the circumstances their speeches were appropriately restrained and consisted, in part, of an appeal to senators to put aside partisan differences in the interests of Canada. Well, I have not seen any progress in that direction since those speeches were made, certainly not on that side of the house. However, I am prepared to say a word about nonpartisanship insofar as the Constitution is concerned, and to probe as to what the government means by a new period of nonpartisanship.

Let us look first at what was known in 1984 as "the beginning of a new era of national reconciliation" and what is now called "Canadian unity" in the latest Speech from the Throne. The chairman of the Communications Committee no doubt concluded that it was necessary to pour the wine into differently contoured bottles.

I wonder why "national reconciliation", this fundamental pillar of wisdom, was dropped from the government's vocabulary. Surely not because the government in 1984 had misjudged the challenge facing Canada. The 1984 Speech from the Throne clearly stated that "it is obvious that the constitutional agreement is incomplete so long as Quebec is not part of an accord". That was the main challenge. I suggest that the phrase, "national reconciliation" has been dropped out of the government's vocabulary because it has been killed by ridicule.

In 1984, as is now clearly on the record of history, we were not at the beginning of a new era of reconciliation; we were at the beginning of a new era of national adversity. I am conscious of the words that Senators Meighen and Lavoie-Roux used on the subject of nonpartisanship, and my words, which I will utter on this subject, have been restrained, taking into account their advice.

Senator Lavoie-Roux did not fail to note that the constitutional problem was inherited, which may have been her way of saying that a new government starts its management where the outgoing government leaves off. But she was busy in another place and may not be fully aware of what particularly happened in Ottawa, which is so familiar to many of us, and to others who were not in the Canadian Parliament but in the provinces, such as Senator Buchanan.

The constitutional program of the Liberal government—to which a number of us belonged, Senator LeBlanc, myself and others—called for the patriation of the Constitution, the Charter of Rights embedded in the Constitution, an amending formula, and a revision of the allocation of powers between federal and provincial governments.

The first three elements of that program were achieved with the support of the opposition and of a vast majority of Canadians. What I say next and the way I put it will not be said in the same way by others. I say, regretfully, that the Government of Quebec did not accede to the patriated Constitution in circumstances with which we are all familiar. The challenge before the new Conservative Government in 1984 therefore was to obtain Quebec's assent to the Constitution and to achieve the last phase of the Liberal constitutional program, a revision in the allocation of powers designed to modernize our Constitution.

When the Meech Lake Accord was proposed in the Senate chamber and across the country I did make some comments in the Senate briefly, and then I made a long speech in which I said:

> All along, we on this side have fully supported the objective of achieving Quebec's assent to the Constitution. Quebec is now willing to accept it and anxious again to take its full part in the constitutional process. We welcome their move because it is of great significance to our future.

We all know the outcome which Senator Lavoie-Roux calls "disappointing results." The Quebec issue is still unresolved. The country is more divided now than it has ever been since Confederation. After six years are we nearer, I ask, to a review of the allocation of powers?

Political circumstances have become probably more difficult and public opinion is now fatigued, to put it as quietly as possible, of constitutional issues as we embark on a new round of constitutional negotiations. Each of you must have the same experience that I have at witnessing the great amount of energy that is now exerted on the constitutional question. There are discussions, meetings, conversations and committees. Canadian politicians are spending a very large amount of time on the Constitution at a time when the Canadian public seems to be asking: Please, spend more time on the economy. Certainly it is safe to say that the political preoccupation is concentrated on the Constitution and less concentrated on the Canadian economy.

Well, we have made some progress. Certainly, the Speech from the Throne reveals that the government has had an important and welcome change of heart on the need to consult and to build up a fair degree of consensus among Canadians before closing in on a constitutional deal. We think that should have been done at the time Meech Lake was formulated.

The report of the joint committee that Senator Beaudoin co-chairs will soon be available. Keith Spicer's report will soon be available, and the government will develop new proposals in time for the proposed joint parliamentary committee, to be used in September for consulting Canadians until February of next year. In the meantime, the new Minister Responsible for Constitutional Affairs is also consulting his provincial counterparts. These are positive moves inasmuch as they allow a degree of participation by Canadians in the constitutional process.

This new approach requires answers to two important questions. The government is inviting cooperation from the opposition on the vital issue of national unity. What does the government mean by a nonpartisan approach? There should be no doubt from the statements made by Mr. Chretien and others that we on this side of the house intend to work with an open mind and to the best of our ability to achieve Canadian unity. As Mr. Chretien has said:

> We have to have principles and standby those principles. We will help the government if it does the same thing . . . We want to help the government to solve the national problems . . .

Presumably, nonpartisanship is not a dogma that would prevent honest differences of opinion on what constitutional change will and ought to be. Mr. Chretien has enunciated a number of principles which may not be acceptable to the outcome and which may be a matter of debate; I do not know. However, to characterize a debate expressing strongly held views as partisanship is not in the best interests of creating the goodwill that will be necessary to solve these problems.

I know that Senator Murray and I have had differences of opinion on the events surrounding Meech Lake, but I well recall that the Meech Lake proposals had plenty of cooperation from the national parties. It is not as if Mr. Turner and Mr. Broadbent said to the government, "We will oppose your proposals." Mr. Turner, in my view, went a very long distance in supporting the Meech Lake Accord in the House of Commons and within his own party even though every amendment put forward by the opposition in the House of Commons was defeated. Not a single idea was accepted by the government, for reasons which were stated at the time. It was a "done deal", it was a "seamless web."

We in the Senate had the temerity to make some proposals that were not enthusiastically received in this chamber by supporters of the government but which today look even better with the passage of time, because they are the very items that must be included if we are to have a successful Canada round.

I should like to refer briefly to them. We wanted to include, as a fundamental characteristic of Canada, the recognition of our Aboriginal Peoples, the recognition of regional identities and the advantage of lower trade barriers between the provinces. We wanted to offer more protection to official language minorities by ensuring that Parliament is responsible for promoting as well as preserving official minority language rights. We proposed that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms take precedence so that the basic rights and freedoms of Canadians should not be diminished in the event of conflicts with other clauses of the accord, especially the rights to equality for women. We proposed moves toward an elected Senate through the election of senators to vacant seats and recognized the right of citizens of the Yukon and of the Northwest Territories to senatorial elections. Among other things we proposed clarification of the clause concerning compensation to provinces opting out of national shared-cost programs to ensure greater consistency and minimum stands.

I should complete the list so that it will not be felt that I have left out anything to suit my own convenience. We proposed the elimination of unanimity for Senate reform and a return to the seven-province, 50 per cent population, formula. We proposed that provincehood for the Yukon and Northwest Territories be resolved by those territories and the federal government. We proposed that Aboriginal rights should be a priority in future constitutional conferences. There is nothing left to be said except to speculate on what impact the adoption of a number of these proposals, if not all of them, could have had on the ratification of the Meech Lake Accord.

Mr. Turner, our leader at the time, supported the accord, notwithstanding the government's refusal to entertain any of these amendments. I think, now that Mr. Turner is no longer leader of our party, that he paid a very heavy price in Canadian public opinion and in his own party for his nonpartisanship support of the Meech Lake accord. That is history and politics; I leave it at that. Of course, in the spring of 1990 all the parties made a very big effort to reconcile their differences through the Charest Report. Consensus was achieved, but then the consensus failed. I shall not refer to my amendment when the proposal was made here for the joint committee, an amendment that would have drawn the attention of the committee to one particular amending formula. That was rejected by the government in what was not exactly a show of nonpartisanship, because the amendment, if I may say so, was quite innocuous, important but innocuous.

I wonder how does the government propose to carry forward its view of nonpartisanship. We have from Mr. Clark a first answer when he said in the other place:

> I understand fully that the nonpartisan approach requires the government to involve all of Parliament in basic decisions.

Does that mean that the call for nonpartisanship will extend to all parties, including the Reform Party and the Bloc Quebecois? Does it mean that when the proposed joint committee of Parliament is formed, the co-chairman will be drawn from the opposition parties, contrary to what was done for the joint committee co-chaired by Senator Beaudoin?

• (1740)

Referring to the non-partisan approach, Joe Clark also said:

> That is why the Prime Minister stated explicitly yesterday our willingness to accept sensible proposals from any party or parliamentarian.

I could go along with that. When I was a minister I would accept sensible proposals—any of us would. That does not define "nonpartisanship" which is a very difficult question.

We all know that the Liberal Party has already developed some thoughts on constitutional issues and they can be found in Mr. Chrétien's submission to the Bélanger-Campeau Commission, in his Montreal speech of April 21 and in the resolution of the Quebec party at the May 24-25 convention in Sherbrooke. Is the government prepared to use those thoughts as a basis for discussion and cooperation reaching beyond party lines? If one looks at how the principle of nonpartisanship may be expected to operate in a practical way, does it not mean that the government, in exchange for a nonpartisan approach, should be prepared to proceed only on the basis of consensus? Is it prepared to do that? I do not know; I am asking. That would be true nonpartisanship of the kind President Bush was proposing to the Congress when he told the opposition, in relation to the fast-track authority for the Mexican trade agreement, that they would be involved at every stage of the trade negotiation. He needed a nonpartisan approach to get that fast-track authority and he said that he told Congress he would involve them in every decision, at every turning point in the negotiations. That would be a lot.

How long would this nonpartisanship last? Would it be up to and including the next election? Will nonpartisanship spill over into other related fields? I am raising these questions because so much has been made of it by the government in the Speech from the Throne and by the two senators who moved and seconded the Address in Reply.

I read with interest the comments of Senator Meighen about his grandfather. One of the things I did when I became Leader of the Opposition was to examine the conduct of former Leaders of the Opposition, including Arthur Meighen. I can say that there is no activity which I have undertaken as Leader of the Opposition for which I cannot find an exact replica in the political career of Arthur Meighen as Leader of the Opposition, sometimes as Leader of the Opposition in majority in the Senate. It was a good model.

Senator Murray: He went back and ran for the House of Commons.

Senator MacEachen: Yes, he did. I do not know what that has to do with the argument. He certainly had a view of nonpartisanship which I found compatible with my view of nonpartisanship.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator MacEachen: It gave me great amplitude in my activity. I also know that he espoused another form of nonpartisanship which was also intriguing—that senators of either party ought not to pay much attention to the views of their colleagues in the House of Commons. It is a fact that, when he was Leader of the Opposition here, the leader of the party, Dr. Manion, wrote him complaining that he, as leader in the Senate, not only failed to support him, but diverged strongly from some of the positions which Dr. Manion took. He said, "Don't you understand the difficulties this is causing me?" There was a reply from Senator Meighen to the effect, "Well, I understand all of that, but we have a different role in the Senate and our calling is higher than the calling of partisans; so I call the shots as I see them and as we see them in the Senate. We cannot be dominated by the views of the members of the House of Commons."

Personally I think that if the Senate becomes an elected body—as I hope it does—and if it has a regional mission, it cannot fulfil that regional mission unless senators from the regions are prepared to put their party affiliations to one side and to put regional interests ahead of party considerations. Unless that happens in an elected Senate, we will have a carbon copy of the party system as it operates in the House of Commons, and we do not need a carbon copy. I believe that as we consider our constitutional future—and if we believe in an elected Senate—we would be making a great mistake if we carry on into the future the practices that have dominated us in the past.

Honourable senators, there is one other issue that I want to raise at this point, and that is the timing of the government's moves. What is the deadline? Is there a deadline? The Meech Lake Accord was founded on a constitutional deadline. Is the government proceeding leisurely? Is that risky? I was interested to notice that Senator Lavoie-Roux said that this deadline had to have some elasticity. However, I wonder if the government is taking a serious view of the deadline set by the Allaire report and the implementing Quebec legislation. Joe Clark, as reported in the Globe and Mail, said, of the possibility of a Quebec deadline, that it—> —certainly concentrates the mind, but I think it would be wrong to suggest that we are operating against that deadline.

He also said:

> I am not going to pretend that we can do in a short time everything that we need to have done. It is just impossible.

I think that says that the government wants to extend this.

The Prime Minister seemed to support that view when he said:

> The only deadline we face is the time needed to build a consensus among Canadians on how to improve Canada.

Honourable senators, we know that some Quebec spokesmen exhibit a much greater sense of urgency. The Honourable Benoit Bouchard certainly expressed a much greater sense of urgency. He said that only 16 or 17 months were left to negotiate a constitutional deal. He said:

> Whether we like it or not, the countdown has begun.

If, indeed, the countdown has started, there is no time to be lost.

• (1750)

The Leader of the Opposition in the other place, when responding to the Speech from the Throne, put the issue squarely before the government. He said:

> If the Prime Minister does not act quickly, we will again have our back to the wall.

Mr. Chrétien urged the government to put a constitutional proposal before Canadians on June 1, a target date which is now behind us. In a speech in Montreal Mr. Chrétien proposed that the Joint Committee of Parliament should consider these proposals, and he also proposed that within six months, after full consultation with Canadians there be a national referendum early in 1992 in order to avoid a lengthy period of uncertainty. Well, if the Allaire report deadline is not to be as tight as suggested by Mr. Benoit Bouchard, I would say that we still should not waste any time in putting constitutional issues behind us. Other pressing matters have to be addressed. One of them is the economy, and I would like to deal with that. Honourable senators, I should like to move the adjournment of this debate.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 107)

STANDING COMMITTEE ON STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FIRST REPORT

Tuesday, June 11, 1991

The Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Pursuant to Rule 67(1)(f) of the Rules of the Senate of Canada, your Committee makes the following recommendations:

1. That Rules 1, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

UNPROVIDED CASES

"1. (1) In all cases not provided for in these rules, the customs, usages, forms and proceedings of either House of the Parliament of Canada shall, mutatis mutandis, be followed in the Senate or in any committee thereof.

(2) The Rules of the Senate shall in all cases be interpreted as having priority over any practice, custom or usage described in any of the appendices to the Rules. Any conflict between the appendices and the Rules shall be resolved by reference to the Rules alone.

INTERPRETATION

4. In these rules, unless the context otherwise requires,

(1) "bill" means a draft Act of Parliament and includes a private and a public bill;

(2) "committee" means a committee of the whole, a select committee, whether standing, special or legislative, or a joint committee;

(3) "Committee of the Whole" means a committee composed of the whole body of the Senators;

(4) "Government Leader in the Senate" means the Senator occupying the recognized position of Leader of the Government in the Senate or a Senator acting for that Senator;

(5) "Leader of the Opposition" means the Senator occupying the recognized position of Leader of the Opposition in the Senate or a Senator acting for that Senator;

SITTING TIMES FOR THE SENATE

"5. (1) Unless otherwise previously ordered,

(a) except as provided in sub-paragraph (b) below, the Senate shall meet for the transaction of business at 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon;

(b) on a Friday, the Senate shall meet for the transaction of business at 9:00 o'clock in the forenoon.

(2) Not later than fifteen minutes prior to the times provided in section (1) above, the bells to call in the Senators shall be sounded and shall cease when a quorum is seen.

(3) At the times provided in section (1) above, the Speaker shall enter the Senate Chamber, whether a quorum is then present or not.

(4) As soon as a quorum is seen the Speaker shall forthwith proceed to prayers.

DAILY HOUR OF ADJOURNMENT

"6. (1) Except as otherwise provided in these Rules or as previously ordered by the Senate, if the Senate is sitting at 12:00 o'clock midnight, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then before the Senate and shall declare that a motion to adjourn the Senate has been deemed to have been moved and adopted and shall leave the Chair until the time provided for the next meeting of the Senate.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in these Rules or as otherwise ordered by the Senate, if the Senate is sitting at 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon on a Friday, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then before the Senate and shall declare that a motion to adjourn has been deemed to have been moved and adopted and leave the Chair until the time provided for the next meeting of the Senate.

(3) Any item of "Government Business" as provided in Rule 21(1) which was under consideration when the Senate adjourned in accordance with the provisions of sections (1) and (2) above, shall be deemed to have been adjourned and shall be placed on the Orders of the Day for the next sitting of the Senate.

(4) Any item of "Other Business" as provided in Rule 21(2), that was under consideration when the Senate adjourned in accordance with the provisions of section (1) above, shall be deemed to have been adjourned and shall be placed for the next sitting of the Senate at the top of the Order of Business for the consideration of "Other Business".

SUSPENSION OF SITTING

"7. (1) When a standing vote has been deferred, pursuant to Rule 51(1), and is to be held during a sitting at 5:30 o'clock p.m., if the Senate completes its business on that day before this time, no motion to adjourn the Senate shall be received until after the deferred vote has been taken and business pursuant thereto has been completed.

(2) When the Senate has completed its business for that day prior to the time for the taking of a deferred vote, the Speaker shall suspend the sitting until 5:15 o'clock p.m., whereupon the bells to call in the Senators shall be sounded until 5:30 o'clock p.m. and the Speaker shall proceed to take the deferred vote in accordance with the provisions of Rules 49(3) and 51(1).

PROCEDURE ON FIRST DAY

"8. On the first day of each session of Parliament, a bill is read pro forma and the Speech from the Throne is reported by the Speaker.

QUORUM

"9. (1) A quorum, consisting of fifteen Senators, including the Speaker, shall be required for the Senate to transact business.

(2) During any sitting of the Senate, when a Senator draws the attention of the Senate to the possible lack of quorum, the Speaker:

(a) shall order the bells to call in the Senators to be sounded for not more than fifteen minutes; and

(b) summon the Senators who may be in the adjoining rooms.

(3) If no quorum is seen after the time provided in sub-paragraph (2)(a) above, the Speaker shall adjourn the Senate until the next sitting day without the question being put.

(4) Except if the item before the Senate is a motion moved in accordance with Rule 48(1), the item of business under consideration when the Speaker adjourns the Senate pursuant to section (3) above, shall be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate."

DINNER HOUR INTERRUPTION

2. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by deleting Rule 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"12. (1) Except as provided in section (2) below, and elsewhere in these rules, if, at 6:00 o'clock in the afternoon, the business be not concluded, the Speaker or the Chairman of the Committee leaves the Chair until 8:00 o'clock, the Mace being left on or under the Table, as the case may be.

(2) If at the time provided in section (1) above, a standing vote has been ordered, the Speaker or the Chairman shall not leave the Chair until such standing vote has been taken and any formal business immediately consequent thereon has been completed."

ADJOURNMENT MOTIONS

3. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following new Rule immediately after Rule 13:

"14. (1) A motion to adjourn the Senate, unless otherwise prohibited in these Rules or unless otherwise ordered by the Senate, shall always be in order.

(2) A motion to adjourn the Senate can only be moved when the Senator moving the motion has the floor to speak to a question before the Senate and not on a point of order.

(3) When a motion is moved, in accordance with the provisions of sections (1) and (2) above, the Speaker shall put the question forthwith without debate or amendment.

(4) Any standing vote, requested pursuant to Rule 49(3), in relation to any motion moved in accordance with section (1) and (2) above, shall not be deferred but shall be taken in accordance with the provisions of Rule 50(1).

(5) If the Senate resolves in the negative on a motion moved pursuant to section (2) above, no second motion to the same effect shall be received until some intermediate proceeding has taken place."

POSTPONEMENT OF SITTINGS

4. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by deleting Rules 14A, 15, 16 and 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"15. (1) During any adjournment of the Senate, if the Speaker is satisfied that the public interest requires that the Senate meet at an earlier time than that provided in the motion for such adjournment, the Speaker may call such a meeting. In so doing the Speaker shall send a notice to each Senator at the address last filed by the Senator with the Clerk of the Senate and to the Senator's office in Ottawa. Such notice shall indicate the time of the meeting of the Senate.

(2) During any adjournment of the Senate, if the Speaker is satisfied that the public interest does not require the Senate to meet at the time provided in the order of adjournment the Speaker shall:

(a) consult the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or, in each case, their designate;

(b) determine an appropriate date for the next sitting of the Senate; and

(c) cause to be sent a notice to each Senator, at the address last filed by the Senator with the Clerk of the Senate and to the Senator's office in Ottawa, setting out the time of the next sitting of the Senate.

(3) Non-receipt by a Senator of the notices referred to in sections (1) and (2) does not affect the validity of the notice.

(4) In the absence of the Speaker, or when the office of the Speaker is vacant, the Clerk of the Senate may act for the purposes of this Rule.

ROLE OF THE SPEAKER

"16. (1) The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum in the Senate. In doing so the Speaker may act without a want of order or decorum being brought to his or her attention. Furthermore, the Speaker shall be authorized to act on his or her own initiative to interrupt any debate to restore order or to enforce the Rules of the Senate. In the case of grave disorder, the Speaker may suspend the sitting of the Senate for a period not to exceed three hours.

(2) The Speaker shall decide points of order and when so doing shall state the reasons for the decision together with references to the rule or other written authority applicable to the case.

(3) When the Speaker has been asked to decide any question of privilege or point of order he or she shall determine when sufficient argument has been adduced to decide the matter, whereupon the Speaker shall so indicate to the Senate, and continue with the item of business which had been interrupted or proceed to the next item of business, as the case may be.

(4) Except in accordance with the provisions of Rule 31(5), all decisions of the Speaker shall be subject to appeal to the Senate, and such an appeal shall be decided forthwith, without debate.

(5) When the Speaker rises, all other Senators shall remain seated or shall resume their seats.

DECORUM

"17. During any sitting of the Senate,

(1) Neither Senators nor any person authorized to be on the floor of the Senate Chamber while the Senate is sitting shall pass between the Chair and the Table, nor between a Senator who has the floor and the Chair.

(2) When entering, leaving or crossing the Senate Chamber, Senators shall bow to the Chair, symbol of the authority of the Senate.

(3) If Senators have occasion to have private conversations in the Senate Chamber, they shall go below the Bar, otherwise the Speaker shall order them so to do.

(4) No person, nor any Senator, shall bring any electronic device which produces any sound, whether for personal communication or other use into the Senate Chamber, whether on the floor, inside the Bar, outside the Bar or in the galleries.

(5) The provisions of section (4) above shall not apply in the case of sound amplification devices used to aid hearing, so long as such devices cannot be heard by other Senators.

"STRANGERS"

"18. (1) If at any sitting of the Senate, or in Committee of the Whole, a Senator shall take notice that strangers are present, the Speaker or the Chairman (as the case may be) shall forthwith put the question "That strangers be ordered to withdraw.", without permitting any debate or amendment.

(2) When the Speaker or the Chairman shall think fit, either of them may order the withdrawal of strangers from any part of the Senate, without a prior order of the Senate to that effect.

(3) When the Senate orders the withdrawal of strangers, the galleries shall be cleared, but those authorized to enter the Senate Chamber and to be on the floor of the Senate while it is in session shall continue to have free access to the Senate."

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

5. That Rule 19 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"19. (1) At each daily sitting of the Senate, at the times provided in Rule 5(1) and immediately after prayers, as provided in Rule 5(3), except as provided in section (2) below, the Speaker shall call for "Senators' Statements".

(2) During any sitting, when an application for leave pursuant to Rule 47 has been received and disposed of, the Speaker shall not call for "Senators' Statements" but shall forthwith proceed with Routine of Business laid out in Rule 20(1) below.

(3) When the Senate is considering "Senators' Statements" any Senator, who has previously given notice to the Clerk of the Senate in accordance with the provisions of Rule 35(3) or (4), may give oral notice of a question of privilege he or she intends to raise later in the sitting. Priority shall be given to Senators who have given such notice, in accordance with the provisions of Rule 35(10).

(4) When "Senators' Statements" has been called, Senators may, without notice, raise matters they consider need to be brought to the urgent attention of the Senate. In particular, Senators' statements should relate to matters which are of public consequence and for which the Rules and practices of the Senate provide no immediate means of bringing the matters to the attention of the Senate. In making such statements, a Senator shall not anticipate consideration of any Order of the Day and shall be bound by the usual rules governing the propriety of debate. Matters raised during this period shall not be subject to debate.

(5) Senators wishing to draw the attention of the Senate to the presence in the gallery of a distinguished visitor shall do so by prior written notice to the Speaker. The Speaker shall, when the visitor is in the gallery, rise and draw the attention of the Senate to the presence in the gallery of that visitor.

(6) Senators making interventions during this time shall be limited to speaking once for no more than three minutes; however, a Senator may seek leave to extend his or her remarks.

(7) If a Senator has asked leave to extend his or her remarks, the Speaker shall ask whether such leave is granted and, if such leave is granted, the Senator may continue his or her remarks until not later than the end of the time provided for "Senators' Statements".

(8) At any time during the time provided for consideration of "Senators' Statements", either Whip may approach the Speaker and request that the time provided for the item be extended. If such a request is received, the Speaker shall so inform the Senate at the next opportunity and shall, at the end of the time provided for the item, ask if the Senate grants leave to extend the time provided for the item and, if such leave is granted, the time provided for the item will be extended for a period not to exceed thirty minutes.

(9) If the time provided for the item is extended pursuant to section (8) above, and the Senate has not completed its business prior to 6:00 o'clock p.m. on that day, the Speaker shall not leave the Chair as provided by Rule 12 but shall remain for a period equal to the time taken for the extended consideration of "Senators' Statements", whereupon the Speaker shall leave the Chair in accordance with the provisions of Rule 12.

(10) During the time provided for "Senators' Statements" no standing vote shall be permitted and the provisions of Rule 26 shall not apply.

DAILY ROUTINE OF BUSINESS

"20. (1) During the time provided for the consideration of the Daily Routine of Business and the daily Question Period, it shall not be in order to raise any question of privilege or point of order. Any question of privilege or point of order to be raised in relation to any notice given during this time can only be raised at the time the Order is first called for consideration by the Senate.

(2) The Introduction and First Reading of Government, Public and Private Bills are pro forma stages of consideration and shall be decided without debate or standing votes. In such cases the provisions of Rule 49(3) shall not apply.

(3) Except as provided in section (4) below, any standing vote requested during the consideration of the Daily Routine of Business shall stand deferred until 5:30 o'clock in the same afternoon.

(4) The provisions of section (3) above shall not apply to dilatory or procedural motions, which can be moved without notice and must be decided without debate. In such cases, the provisions of Rule 50(1) shall apply and the time required for the taking of the standing vote shall not be considered as part of the time provided for the Daily Routine of Business in section (6) below.

(5) Except as otherwise provided by order of the Senate, or as provided elsewhere in these Rules, when the Senate is sitting:

(a) at 8:00 o'clock p.m. if the Speaker has not called the Orders of the Day, he shall do so. If the usual order of business is interrupted for the consideration of a motion moved in accordance with the provisions of Rule 36(1) or 48(1) or for consideration of a question of privilege in accordance with the provisions of Rule 35, at 8:00 o'clock p.m., the Orders of the Day shall be deemed to have been called and been interrupted for the consideration of the said question or motion;

(b) at 12:00 o'clock noon on a Friday if the Speaker has not called the Orders of the Day, he shall do so. If the usual order of business is interrupted for the consideration of a motion moved in accordance with the provisions of Rule 36(1) or 48(1) or for consideration of a question of privilege in accordance with the provisions of Rule 35, at 12:00 o'clock noon on a Friday, the Orders of the Day shall be deemed to have been called and been interrupted for the consideration of the said question or motion.

(6) Except pursuant to Rule 19(2) and (7), not later than fifteen minutes after the Speaker has called for "Senators' Statements" regardless of the item then before the Senate, the Speaker shall interrupt the business then before the Senate and shall call the Daily Routine of Business in the following order:

Tabling of Documents

Presenting Reports from Standing or Special Committees

Government Notices of Motion

Introduction and First Reading of Government Bills

Introduction and First Reading of Senate Public Bills

First Reading of Commons Public Bills

Reading of petitions for Private Bills

Introduction and First Reading of Private Bills

Presenting Reports from Inter-parliamentary delegations

Notices of Motions

Notices of Inquiries

Presenting Petitions.

(7) Not later than 30 minutes after the first item is called in accordance with section (6) above, regardless of the progress then made on the items listed therein, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the Senate and shall forthwith call for the following:

Question Period.

(8) Not more than 30 minutes after the Speaker calls for "Question Period", regardless of progress made on the items listed in section (6) and (7) the Speaker shall call for:

Delayed Answers

Orders of the Day

Inquiries

Motions."

SENATE BUSINESS

6. That the Rules of the Senate be amended, as follows:

(a) by deleting Rule 21 and substituting the following therefor:

"21. Unless otherwise ordered by the Senate and except as provided elsewhere in these Rules, the Orders of the Day shall take precedence over all other business according to the following order of priority:

(1) Government Business:

(a) Orders of the Day for the third reading of government bills;

(b) Orders of the Day for the consideration of reports from committees in relation to government bills;

(c) Orders of the Day for the second reading of government bills;

(d) Orders of the Day for the consideration of government motions; and

(e) Orders of the Day for the consideration of other government business.

(2) Other business shall be considered after government business has been disposed of for that sitting in the following order of priority, except as provided in Rule 8(3):

(a) Orders of the Day for third reading of Senate public bills;

(b) Orders of the Day for the third reading of Commons public bills;

(c) Orders of the Day for the third reading of private bills;

(d) Orders of the Day for the consideration of reports from committees in relation to Senate public bills;

(e) Orders of the Day for consideration of reports from committees in relation to Commons public bills;

(f) Orders of the Day for the consideration of reports from committees in relation to private bills;

(g) Orders of the Day for the second reading of Senate public bills;

(h) Orders of the Day for the second reading of Commons Public bills;

(i) Orders of the Day for the second reading of private bills;

(j) Orders of the Day for the consideration of adjourned debates on substantive motions other than government motions;

(k) Orders of the Day for continuing adjourned debates on inquiries;

(l) Orders of the Day called and not proceeded with; and

(m) Orders of the Day not called when the Senate adjourned.

GOVERNMENT DESIGNATES SEQUENCE OF CONSIDERATION

(b) by adding the following new Rules immediately after proposed Rule 21:

"22. (1) Except as otherwise ordered by the Senate or as provided elsewhere in these Rules, government business shall have priority over all other business before the Senate. Government business shall be called and considered in such sequence as the Leader of the Government in the Senate or the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate shall determine.

(2) Except as provided in section (3) of this rule, or unless otherwise previously ordered, all Orders of the Day, if not disposed of before the adjournment of the Senate, shall stand on the Order Paper for the next sitting.

(3) Unless previously ordered, any item under "Other Business", "Inquiries" and "Motions" that has not been proceeded with during fifteen sittings shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

"23. (1) Whenever an Act of Parliament, or any resolution or Rule of the Senate, requires that a return or report be laid before the Senate, the same may be deposited with the Clerk of the Senate. When so deposited, such return, report or other paper shall be deemed for all purposes to have been presented or laid before the Senate.

(2) A record of any paper tabled pursuant to section (1) shall be entered in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the same day.

(3) The Leader of the Government in the Senate or the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate may lay upon the Table, at the time provided in Rule 20(6), other papers dealing with the administrative responsibilities of the government. Such papers shall be deemed presented and laid before the Senate for all purposes.

(4) With the leave of the Senate, at the time provided in Rule 20(6), any Senator may lay upon the Table any paper relating to the business before the Senate, whereupon the same shall be deemed to have been laid upon the Table for all purposes.

(5) A record of any paper laid upon the Table pursuant to sections (3) and (4) shall appear in both the Minutes of the Proceedings and the Debates of the Senate of the same day."

RECOGNITION OF SENATORS

7. That the Rules of the Senate be amended as follows:

(a) by deleting Rules 26 to 28 and substituting the following therefor:

"26. (1) When two or more Senators rise to speak at the same time, the Speaker shall call upon the Senator who, in the Speaker's opinion, first rose.

(2) In the circumstances provided in section (1) above, before the Senator recognized by the Speaker has begun to speak, a third Senator may rise on a point of order and propose a motion naming another Senator who had risen and proposing that this other Senator "be now heard" or "do now speak", and the question on such a motion shall be put forthwith without debate or amendment.

(3) If the Senate adopts a motion moved pursuant to section (2) above, the motion shall be deemed to be an order of the Senate that the Senator named in the motion be given the floor. The Senator so named shall have the floor until that Senator's intervention has been completed or the Senator's time has expired, and no further motion to the same effect shall be received until that time.

(4) If the Senate does not adopt a motion moved pursuant to section (2) above, the motion shall be deemed to be an order of the Senate that the Senator first recognized be given the floor. No further motion to the same effect shall be received until the Senator, first recognized, has completed his or her intervention.

RULES OF DEBATE

"27. (1) Only one Senator shall have the floor at any one time. However, a Senator may yield the floor to another Senator.

(a) If a Senator wishes to seek leave of the Senator who has the floor to speak, that Senator shall not be recognized unless the Senator who has the floor first says "I yield the floor to Honourable Senator _____".

(b) If the Senator first recognized yields the floor, then that Senator shall not again be recognized in that debate. That Senator will be deemed to have spoken and may speak again only with the leave of the Senate.

(c) The Senator to whom the Senator first recognized yielded the floor would be able to speak for the remainder of the time allotted to the Senator from whom he or she received the floor and would be considered as having spoken in the debate and could not again speak in the debate except with the leave of the Senate.

(2) The provisions of section (1) shall not apply if a Senator yields the floor for a question.

(a) In such a case, the Senator first recognized would be recognized again after the questioner was finished, but the entire exchange would be considered as part of that Senator's time for that debate.

(b) If a Senator is recognized to ask a question, that Senator is not considered to have spoken in the debate unless the Senator of whom he or she asked the question yielded the floor as provided in section (2) above. If the Senator merely asked a question, he or she would not be considered as having spoken and could be recognized to debate the question before the Senate."

SPEECH LIMITS - SENATE BUSINESS

(b) by adding the following new rules:

"31. Except as otherwise provided in these rules, or as otherwise ordered by the Senate:

(1) No Senator shall speak more than once. However, if a material part of the Senator's speech has been misunderstood, the Senator may speak again in the same debate. In such a case, the Senator, with leave of the Senate, shall be permitted no more than one period of five minutes to explain that part of the speech which was misunderstood. In so doing, the Senator shall not introduce new matters.

(2) The Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate shall be permitted unlimited time for debate.

(3) The sponsor of a bill and the first Senator speaking immediately thereafter shall be permitted not more than forty-five minutes each for debate, inclusive of any question or comments from other Senators which they may permit in the course of their remarks.

(4) Except as provided in sections (2) and (3) above, no Senator shall speak for more than fifteen minutes, inclusive of any question or comments from other Senators which the Senator may permit in the course of his or her remarks.

(5) The Clerk of the Senate shall keep a record, which can be consulted at the Table, of the time taken by each Senator in each debate. The Clerk shall inform the Speaker whenever a Senator is about to exceed the time provided for his or her remarks. When a Senator is about to exceed the time limits provided in these Rules, or as ordered by the Senate, the Speaker shall call the matter to the attention of the Senator. When the Senator's time has expired, the Speaker shall call that Senator to order and that Senator shall not again be recognized to debate the same question before the Senate and the Speaker shall recognize some other Senator, or if the debate is then concluded, shall put the question.

ALLOCATION OF TIME

By Agreement

"32. At any time while the Senate is sitting, the Leader of the Government in the Senate or the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate may state from his or her place in the Senate, that there is an agreement among the representatives of the parties in the Senate to allot a specified number of days or hours to the proceedings at one or more stages of any item of government business. At the same time, without notice, the said Leader or Deputy Leader may propose a motion setting forth the terms of such agreed allocation and every such motion shall be decided forthwith without debate or amendment.

ALLOCATION OF TIME

Without Agreement

"33. (1) At any time while the Senate is sitting, the Leader of the Government in the Senate or the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, from his or her place in the Senate, may state that the representatives of the parties have failed to agree to allocate a specified number of days or hours for consideration of any stage of consideration of any adjourned debate on any item of government business. If so, at that time the said Leader or Deputy Leader may give notice of the terms of a motion to allocate a specified number of hours or days of debate on the said stage of consideration of the said item. Such motion shall be placed on the Orders of the Day under "Government Motions" for the next sitting day.

(2) In the event of a motion being moved pursuant to section (1) of this rule, the motion shall provide for at least:

(a) a further six-hours debate on any substantive motion, except as provided below;

(b) a further six-hours debate on a motion for second reading of a public bill;

(c) one calendar day (in the period Monday to Friday) for a standing or special committee or a Committee of the Whole to report a bill back to the Senate failing which, at midnight on that day, the bill would be deemed to have been reported back without amendment; or

(d) a single period of a further six-hours debate, in total, to dispose of both the report and the third reading stages of a public bill.

(3) Except as provided in sub-paragraph (2)(d) above, no motion moved pursuant to Rule 33 shall allocate time to more than one stage of consideration of any item of government business.

(4) Except as provided below, the provisions of Rules 50 and 51 shall apply to the taking of any standing vote in relation to every Order of the Day to which time is allocated for debate, pursuant to Rule 32 or 33 and shall be considered in accordance with the following provisions:

(a) except as provided in sub-paragraph (b) below, when debate on such an Order of the Day is concluded, or when the time provided for such a debate expires, the Speaker shall forthwith put the question without any further debate or amendment and any standing vote requested in relation thereto shall be deferred until 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon of the next day thereafter on which the Senate sits.

(b) if debate on such an Order of the Day is concluded or the time provided for the debate expires prior to 5:30 o'clock p.m., the Speaker shall forthwith put the question and any standing vote requested in relation thereto shall not be subject to the provisions of Rule 51 and shall be deferred until 5:30 o'clock p.m. of the same afternoon.

(5) When an Order of the Day has been called, to which a specified period of time has been allocated for its consideration, is under consideration:

(a) at the ordinary daily hour of adjournment, the Senate shall not adjourn but shall continue consideration of the said Order of the Day until the debate has concluded or the time provided for the debate has expired, whereupon the Speaker shall proceed to put the question or questions;

(b) when the question is put pursuant to sub-paragraph (a) above, the Speaker shall thereupon declare that a motion to adjourn the Senate has been deemed to have been made and adopted and leave the Chair until the time provided for the next meeting of the Senate;

(c) when the Senate would otherwise take its dinner hour interruption in accordance with the provisions of Rule 12, the sitting shall not be interrupted until the debate is concluded, or the time provided for the consideration of the Order of the Day has expired, whereupon the Speaker shall put the question or questions necessary to dispose of the Order of the Day;

(d) whenever the question has been put pursuant to the provisions of sub-paragraph (c) above, any standing vote requested in relation thereto shall be taken in accordance with the provisions of Rule 50;

(e) when such an Order of the Day is under consideration at the time provided for taking a deferred standing vote, such consideration shall be interrupted and the Senate shall resume consideration of the said Order of the Day immediately after it has completed all business related to the item to which a standing vote had been requested in accordance with Rule 49(3).

(6) When consideration of an Order of the Day, to which a specified period of time has been allocated, is interrupted for the consideration of a motion moved in accordance with the provisions of either Rule 36(1) or 48(1), once the said motion or motions have been disposed of, the Senate shall immediately proceed to resume consideration of the Order of the Day.

(7) When an Order of the Day has been called, to which a specified period of time has been allocated for its consideration, the same shall not be adjourned and no amendment thereto, nor other motion, except that a certain Senator be now heard or do now speak, shall be received.

"34. (1) When an Order of the Day for a motion to allocate time for the consideration of any item of government business, is called:

(a) the same shall not be adjourned and no amendment thereto, nor other motion, except that a certain Senator be now heard or do now speak, shall be received;

(b) the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then before the Senate and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion not later than two and one half hours after the order is called; and

(c) any standing vote requested in relation thereto shall not be deferred and shall be taken subject to the provisions of Rule 50(1).

(2) During debate on the motion:

(a) no Senator shall speak more than once;

(b) the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate may each speak for no longer than thirty minutes;

(c) except as provided in sub-paragraph (b) above, no Senator may speak for longer than ten minutes; and

(d) whenever the debate is interrupted pursuant to Rule 12, the debate shall be resumed when the sitting is resumed."

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE

8. That Rule 33 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"35. (1) The preservation of the privileges of the Senate is the duty of every Senator. A violation of the privileges of any one Senator affects those of all Senators and the ability of the Senate to carry out its functions outlined in the Constitution Act, 1867. Action to ensure such protection takes priority over every other matter before the Senate. However, to be accorded such priority, a putative question of privilege must meet certain tests. It must, inter alia,

(a) be raised at the earliest opportunity;

(b) be a matter directly concerning the privileges of the Senate, of any committee thereof, or any Senator;

(c) be raised to seek a genuine remedy, which is in the Senate's power to provide, and for which no other parliamentary process is reasonably available; and

(d) be raised to correct a grave and serious breach.

(2) If the matter is not raised at the earliest opportunity, the Senator raising the matter may put it on notice, but the matter cannot be proceeded with under the terms of this Rule.

(3) Except as provided in section (4) below, a Senator wishing to raise a question of privilege shall, at least three hours before the Senate meets for the transaction of business, give a written notice of such question to the Clerk of the Senate.

(4) A Senator wishing to raise a question of privilege on a Friday shall, at not later than 6:00 o'clock p.m. on the immediately preceding Thursday, give a written notice of such question to the Clerk of the Senate.

(5) Immediately upon receipt of a notice required in sections (3) and (4) above, the Clerk of the Senate shall arrange for the immediate translation and dispatch, to each Senator's office address in Ottawa, of a copy of the original notice and the translation.

(6) The non-receipt by any Senator of a copy of the notice required to be distributed pursuant to section (5) above, shall not affect the validity of the notice, nor can it be raised as a reason to delay the consideration of the question of privilege.

(7) A Senator having given a notice, in accordance with sections (3) or (4) above, shall be recognized during the time provided for the consideration of "Senators' Statements", for the purpose of giving oral notice of the question of privilege. In doing so, the Senator shall indicate that he or she is prepared to move a motion either calling upon the Senate to take action in relation to the matter complained of or referring the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges, Rules and Orders.

(8) Except as provided in section (9) below, the Senate shall take up consideration of whether the circumstances constitute a question of privilege at not later than 8:00 o'clock p.m., or immediately after the Senate has completed consideration of the Orders of the Day for that sitting, whichever comes first.

(9) On a Friday, consideration of whether the circumstances constitute a question of privilege shall be taken up at not later than 12:00 o'clock noon or when the Senate has completed consideration of the Orders of the Day for that sitting, whichever comes first.

(10) The order in which the notices were received by the Clerk of the Senate shall determine the order of consideration of questions of privilege.

(11) Debates on distinct questions of privilege shall be taken seriatim, with the debate on the first being concluded prior to the next being raised. The Speaker shall regulate the debate in accordance with the provisions of Rule 16(3).

(12) The Speaker shall determine whether a prima facie case of privilege has been made out. In making a ruling, the Speaker shall state the reasons for that ruling, together with references to any rule or other written authority relevant to the case.

"36. (1) When a prima facie case of privilege has been established, the Senator who raised the matter may move a motion calling upon the Senate either to take action on the matter or to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders for investigation and report.

(2) Such a motion can be moved only immediately following the Speaker's decision and it shall be considered in accordance with the provisions of sections (3), (4), (5), (6) and (7), below.

(3) Except as provided in section (4) below, the debate on any motion moved in accordance with section (1) above shall commence on the same day at not later than 8:00 o'clock p.m. or when the Senate has completed consideration of the Orders of the Day for that sitting, whichever comes first.

(4) On a Friday the debate on any motion moved in accordance with section (1) above shall commence at not later than 12:00 o'clock noon or when the Senate has completed consideration of the Orders of the Day for that sitting, whichever comes first.

(5) When a motion is moved in accordance with the provisions of section (1) above during debate on the motion, no Senator shall speak more than once, nor for more than fifteen minutes.

(6) During a debate on a motion moved in accordance with the provisions of section (1) above,

(a) a motion to adjourn pursuant to Rule 37(1) may be received. If the debate on the said motion is adjourned, it shall be placed on the Orders of the Day in accordance with the provisions of Rule 21(2)(j);

(b) if the debate on the motion is still before the Senate at its ordinary daily hour of adjournment, the Senate shall not adjourn but shall continue with the debate until the time provided for the same has expired or the debate is concluded, whereupon the Speaker shall put the question on the said motion and any standing vote requested in relation thereto shall stand deferred until 5:30 o'clock p.m. on the next sitting day.

(7) After not more than three hours of debate, the Speaker shall interrupt, if necessary, and put forthwith and successively every question necessary to dispose of the motion without permitting any further debate or amendment. Any standing vote requested in accordance with Rule 49(3) in relation to any such question shall be subject to the provisions of Rule 51.

(8) If the Senate had previously completed consideration of the Orders of the Day for that sitting, after the debate on the motion is concluded and the question has been put, a motion to adjourn the Senate shall be deemed to have been moved and adopted.

(9) If the Senate had not previously concluded consideration of the Orders of the Day when the debate began on the motion, moved in accordance with the provisions of section (1) above,

(a) when the time provided for the consideration of the said motion has expired or when the debate on the same has concluded, the Speaker shall forthwith put the question, whereupon the Senate shall resume the consideration of the Orders of the Day where that consideration was interrupted when the motion was moved;

(b) the rules regarding the ordinary daily hour of adjournment shall be suspended thereafter for a period not to exceed the period taken during the consideration of the said motion for the purpose of considering the Orders of the Day;

(c) if consideration of the Orders of the Day is concluded prior to the expiry of the period of time provided in sub-paragraph (b) above, the Speaker shall declare that a motion to adjourn has been deemed to have been moved and adopted and shall leave the Chair until the time provided for the next meeting of the Senate; and

(d) not later than the expiry of the time provided in sub-paragraph (b) above, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings then before the Senate and declare that a motion to adjourn has been deemed to have been moved and adopted and shall leave the Chair until the time provided for the next meeting of the Senate."

ADJOURNMENT OF SENATE BUSINESS

9. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by deleting Rule 36(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"37. (1) A motion to adjourn a debate on an item, other than an item of government business, shall be deemed to be a motion to postpone that debate to the day specified in the motion, or, if no day is specified, to the next sitting day. In either case, the said item shall stand on the Order Paper in the name of the Senator who moved the adjournment, or another Senator, if so indicated.

(2) A motion to adjourn the debate on any item of government business shall be deemed to be a motion to postpone that debate to the next sitting day. In this case, the item shall not stand on the Orders of the Day or the Order Paper in any Senator's name and may be called pursuant to Rule 22(1)."

NOTICES

10. That Rules 45 and 46 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"45. (1) One day's notice shall be given of any of the following motions:

(a) to suspend any rule or any part thereof;

(b) except as otherwise provided in these Rules, for the third reading of a bill;

(c) for any substantial amendment to a bill reported by a committee;

(d) for the appointment of a standing committee;

(e) for the reference of the subject-matter of a bill to a standing or special committee;

(f) for an instruction to a committee;

(g) for the adoption of a report from any standing committee;

(h) for an adjournment of the Senate, except the ordinary daily adjournment as provided in Rule 6(1) or (2) or under Rules 14 and 36(1);

(i) for the making of a substantive motion;

(j) for any purpose to which neither Rule 44 nor Rule 46 applies.

(2) Where a Senator wishes to correct irregularities or mistakes in an order, resolution, or other vote of the Senate, the Senator shall give one day's notice, and a correction shall not be made unless at least two-thirds of the Senators present vote in favour of such correction.

"46. Notice is not required for:

(1) An amendment, or an amendment to an amendment, to a question;

(2) Referral of a question to a committee;

(3) Postponement of consideration of a question to a certain day;

(4) The previous question;

(5) Reading of the Orders of the Day;

(6) Adjournment of the Senate pursuant to the provisions of Rule 14;

(7) Adjournment of a debate in accordance with the provisions of Rule 37;

(8) Consideration forthwith or at a future sitting of Commons amendments to a public bill;

(9) Appointment of a Committee to prepare the Senate's reasons for disagreement with a Commons amendment;

(10) Raising a question of privilege;

(11) Introduction of a bill;

(12) First reading of a bill;

(13) Postponement, discharge, or revival of an Order of the Day;

(14) Consideration of any matter at a future sitting which is on the Table of the Senate;

(15) Consideration, while in the Committee of the Whole, of any clause of a bill already agreed to;

(16) To resolve the Senate into a Committee of the Whole;

(17) Immediate presentation of papers proposed by the Leader of the Government in the Senate or another Senator who is a Minister of the Crown, except as otherwise provided in these rules;

(18) Other motions of a merely formal or uncontentious character."

EMERGENCY DEBATES

11. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by adding, immediately after Rule 46, the following new Rules:

"47. (1) A Senator wishing to move, "That the Senate do now adjourn" for the purpose of raising a matter of urgent public importance, shall seek leave by providing a written notice, at least three hours prior to the time provided for the meeting of the Senate, to the Clerk of the Senate. If the application is to be heard on a Friday the notice must be delivered to the Clerk not later than 6:00 o'clock in the afternoon of the Thursday next preceding that Friday. Such notice shall briefly outline the situation which the Senator claims to be of urgent public importance and shall outline the reasons why it should be so considered. The matter proposed for discussion:

(a) must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for urgent consideration by the Senate;

(b) must not revive a discussion previously taken up in the same Session pursuant to this Rule;

(c) cannot raise any question which, according to the Rules of the Senate, can only be debated on a distinct motion under notice;

(d) cannot raise matters which form, in substance, a question of privilege.

(2) When a notice is received in accordance with section (1) above, the Clerk of the Senate shall arrange for its immediate translation and distribution to each Senator's office in Ottawa, and shall ensure that the same is distributed in the Senate Chamber to all Senators.

(3) The non-receipt by any Senator of a notice required to be distributed pursuant to section (2) shall not affect the validity of the notice, nor can it be used as a reason not to proceed with the consideration of the application, nor to cause a delay in the proceeding.

(4) When the Senate meets, after a notice or notices has or have been received and distributed pursuant to sections (1) and (2) above, the Speaker shall, instead of calling "Senators' Statements", recognize the Senator or Senators who gave notice, in the order in which their notices were received.

(5) Subject to the provisions of section (7), below, the Senator raising the matter shall give reasons why leave should be granted to put the regular Order of Business aside to consider the matter contained in the notice.

(6) In seeking leave, the Senator shall speak once, for no more than five minutes, to explain why the matter should be given urgent consideration and:

(a) how it concerns the administrative responsibilities of the government or could come within the scope of departmental action; and

(b) give reasons why the Senate will not likely have another opportunity to consider the matter within a reasonable period of time.

(7) The Senate shall consider whether the situation, outlined in the notice and the reasons given pursuant to sections (1) and (5) above, meet the criteria for other business to be put aside. During such a debate:

(a) no Senator shall speak more than once or for longer than five minutes; and

(b) no other motion shall be received.

(8) After not more than fifteen minutes of consideration of the Senator's application, the Speaker shall, if necessary, interrupt the debate and declare whether the situation constitutes a matter of urgent public importance as provided in sections (1) and (6) above.

(9) The Senate shall consider all notices dealing with the same situation together, subject to the provisions of sections (4) and (8) above. Subject to the provisions of Rule 48(6) below, notices dealing with distinct situations shall be taken up seriatim.

"48. (1) When leave is granted to move a motion to adjourn the Senate for the purpose of considering a matter of public urgency, except as provided in section (2) below, at 8:00 o'clock p.m., or when the Senate has completed the consideration of the Orders of the Day for that sitting, whichever comes first, the Senator who gave notice shall move "That the Senate do now adjourn" and debate on the motion shall be subject to the provisions of Rule 31(4).

(2) If leave is granted on a Friday, consideration of the motion moved pursuant to section (1) shall commence at not later than 12:00 o'clock noon or when the Senate has completed consideration of the Orders of the Day for that sitting, whichever comes first.

(3) If the Senate had completed consideration of the Orders of the Day for that sitting, when the motion was moved, pursuant to sections (1) or (2) above:

(a) except as provided in sub-paragraph (b) below, after the debate on the motion is concluded, but in any case, at not later than 11:59 o'clock p.m., the said motion shall be deemed to have been adopted; or

(b) on a Friday after the debate on the motion is concluded, but in any case, at not later than 4:00 o'clock p.m., the said motion shall be deemed to have been adopted.

(4) If the Senate had not previously concluded consideration of the Orders of Day for that sitting when the motion was moved, pursuant to sections (1) or (2) above:

(a) except as provided in sub-paragraph (b) below, when the debate is concluded, but in any case, at not later than 11:59 o'clock p.m., the Speaker shall interrupt the debate and the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn and the Senate shall resume consideration of the Orders of the Day where that consideration was interrupted when the motion was moved pursuant to section (1) above; or

(b) on a Friday when the debate is concluded, but in any case, at not later than 3:59 o'clock p.m., the Speaker shall interrupt the debate and the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn and the Senate shall resume consideration of the Orders of the Day where that consideration was interrupted when the motion was moved pursuant to section (2), above.

(5) If the Senate had not previously concluded consideration of the Orders of the Day for that sitting when the motion was moved, pursuant to sections (1) or (2) above:

(a) when the motion moved pursuant to sections (1) or (2) above, has been withdrawn in accordance with section (4) above, the Senate shall resume consideration of the Orders of the Day where that consideration was interrupted when the said motion was moved, for a period not to exceed the period of time taken for consideration of the said motion; and

(b) at the end of the time provided in sub-paragraph (a) above, for the consideration of the Orders of the Day, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then before the Senate and declare that a motion to adjourn has been deemed to have been moved and adopted. The Speaker shall then leave the Chair until the time provided for the next meeting of the Senate.

(6) Not more than one motion to adjourn, moved in accordance with section (1) or (2) above, shall be received at any one sitting.

(7) During the consideration of any motion moved in accordance with the provisions of section (1) or (2) above, the same shall not be adjourned and no amendment thereto, nor other motion, except that a certain Senator be now heard or do now speak, shall be received.

(8) During the consideration of any motion moved in accordance with the provisions of section (1) or (2) above, no Senator shall speak more than once nor for more than fifteen minutes.

DEBATABLE MOTIONS

"49. (1) Except as provided elsewhere in these rules, the following motions are debatable:

(a) substantive motions, except dilatory or procedural motions;

(b) for the second reading of a bill;

(c) for any amendment, or an amendment to an amendment, to a debatable motion;

(d) for the adoption of a report of a Standing or Special Committee;

(e) for the third reading of a bill;

(f) for instructions to a committee;

(g) for an address to His Excellency the Governor General not merely formal in its character;

(h) for the appointment of a Standing or Special Committee;

(i) for the reference of a question other than a bill to a Standing or Special Committee;

(j) for the adoption, while in Committee of the Whole, of the motion, clause, section, preamble, title or bill under consideration;

(k) for the reconsideration, while in Committee of the Whole, of any clause of a bill already agreed to;

(l) for the suspension of any Rule of the Senate, unless otherwise provided;

(m) for the consideration of an inquiry;

(n) for the adjournment of the Senate for the purpose of raising matter of urgent public importance, moved pursuant to Rule 48(1) or (2);

(o) for the previous question;

(p) for the adoption of a new rule, the repeal or amendment of an existing rule;

(q) for an Order of the Senate for any papers or documents not relating to a bill or other matter appearing among the Orders of the Day or on the Order Paper; and

(r) for the adoption of any other motion appearing on the Orders of the Day or on the Order Paper or moved on Routine Business, as may be required for the observance of the proprieties of the Senate, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, the management of its proceedings, the fixing of its sitting days or the times of its meetings or adjournments.

NON-DEBATABLE MOTIONS

(2) All other motions, unless elsewhere provided in these Rules or otherwise ordered, shall be decided immediately upon being put to the Senate, without any debate or amendment."

STANDING VOTES

12. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by adding immediately after Rule 49 the following:

"50. (1) Unless previously ordered or elsewhere provided in these Rules, when a standing vote has been requested in accordance with Rule 49(3), the bells to call in the Senators shall be sounded for sixty minutes unless otherwise ordered, and with leave of the Senate.

(2) At the end of the time provided in section (1), the Speaker shall proceed to take the standing vote as provided in Rule 49(3).

(3) When, under the provisions of any Rule or order of the Senate, the Speaker is required to interrupt the proceedings for the purpose of putting forthwith the question on any business then before the Senate or when a standing vote has been deferred pursuant to Rule 51, the Speaker shall interrupt the said proceedings not later than fifteen minutes prior to the time provided for the taking of the vote and order the bells to call in the Senators to be sounded for not more than fifteen minutes immediately thereafter. These provisions shall apply, in particular, to the disposition of non-debatable motions and any motion for which a period of time has been allocated to the disposition of the debate.

(4) The doors of the Senate shall not be locked during the taking of standing votes. Senators may enter the Chamber at any time but no Senator shall vote who was not within the Bar of the Senate when the Speaker put the question. Senators shall vote only from their place in the Senate.

(5) While the Senate is in the process of taking standing votes, only Senators shall have access to the floor of the Chamber, and the doors to the galleries shall be locked.

(6) When the bells to call in the Senators for a standing vote are being sounded at the ordinary daily hour of adjournment, the rules governing the adjournment of the Senate shall stand suspended until the said vote and any business relating thereto has been concluded, whereupon the Speaker shall declare that a motion to adjourn the Senate has been deemed moved and adopted and shall leave the Chair until the time provided for the next meeting of the Senate.

DEFERRED VOTES

"51. (1) After a standing vote has been requested, pursuant to Rule 49(3), on a motion which is debatable in accordance with Rule 49(1), either Whip may request that the standing vote be deferred as provided below.

(2) Except as provided in section (3) or as otherwise provided in these Rules, when a vote has been deferred, pursuant to section (1), it shall stand deferred until 5:30 o'clock p.m. on the next day the Senate sits.

(3) When a standing vote has been deferred, pursuant to section (1) above, on a Thursday and the next day the Senate sits is a Friday, the Chief Government Whip may, from his or her place in the Senate at any time before the time for the taking of the deferred vote, again defer the vote until 5:30 o'clock p.m. on the next day thereafter the Senate sits.

(4) When a deferred vote has been taken and there is subsequent business to be disposed of, any standing vote requested in relation thereto shall not be deferred and the Speaker shall proceed to put forthwith and successively every question necessary to dispose of the business.

(5) When a deferred vote is requested on one question that is the first of a series of questions to be put to the Senate without further debate, the bells to call in the Senators shall be sounded once; they shall not again be sounded, at that sitting, in relation to any subsequent standing vote on the same item of business.

(6) Except as provided in section (3) above, or elsewhere in these Rules, any standing vote once deferred shall not be again deferred."

PRE-STUDY OF BILLS

13. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following new Rule after Rule 55:

"56. (1) The subject-matter of any bill which has been introduced in the House of Commons, but not read the first time in the Senate, may be referred to a standing committee for study. This may be accomplished either by motion moved in accordance with section (2) below, or by motion to refer the question to a named standing committee of the Senate, moved in accordance with the provisions of Rule 49(1)(i).

(2) At any time while the Senate is sitting, the Leader of the Government in the Senate or the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, may, from his or her place in the Senate, in accordance with the provisions of Rule 45(1)(e), give notice of a motion to refer the subject-matter of the said bill to a standing committee or special committee of the Senate.

(3) Notices of motion made pursuant to section (2) above, shall appear under "Government Business" on the Orders of the Day for the next sitting."

SPEECH LIMITS - IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

14. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by deleting Rule 65 and substituting the following therefor:

"65. (1) The Rules of the Senate shall apply in Committee of the Whole with the following exceptions:

(a) a Senator may speak any number of times;

(b) during debate in Committee of the Whole no Senator shall speak for more than ten minutes at any one time;

(c) any standing vote shall be taken immediately without the bells to call in the Senators being sounded;

(d) arguments against the principle of the bill shall not be admitted; and

(e) no motion for the previous question nor for an adjournment shall be received.

(2) In Committee of the Whole a Senator may at any time move "That the Chairman do now leave the Chair" or "That the Chairman do now report progress and ask leave to sit again":

(a) either motion shall be decided forthwith without debate or amendment;

(b) if either motion is resolved in the negative another motion to the same effect shall not be received unless some intermediate proceeding has taken place; and

(c) if the motion "That the Chairman do now leave the Chair" is resolved in the affirmative, the Chairman shall at once leave the Chair and shall make no report to the Senate. The bill or other matter then before the Committee of the Whole shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

(3) The proceedings of a Committee of the Whole shall be entered in the Journals of the Senate."

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

15. That Rule 67(1)(f) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(f) The Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders, composed of fifteen members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, which is empowered:

(i) on its own initiative to propose, from time to time, amendments to the rules for consideration by the Senate;

(ii) upon a reference from the Senate, to examine and, if required, report on any question of privilege; and

(iii) to consider the orders and customs of the Senate and privileges of Parliament."

IN CAMERA HEARINGS OF COMMITTEES

16. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by deleting Rule 73 and substituting the following therefor:

"73. (1) Except as provided in sections (2) and (3) below, all meetings of Senate standing and special committees shall be held in public and only after public notice.

(2) Except as provided in section (3) below, a standing or special committee may decide to hold an in camera meeting to discuss its business only when the agenda deals with any of the following:

(a) wages, salaries and other employee benefits;

(b) contract negotiations;

(c) other labour relations;

(d) other personnel matters;

(e) consideration of any draft agenda; and\or

(f) consideration of any draft report of the committee.

(3) Meetings of sub-committees of any standing or special committee:

(a) except as provided in sub-paragraph (b) below, shall not be subject to the provisions of section (1) or (2) above, and may be held in camera at the discretion of the sub-committee members;

(b) when clause-by-clause consideration of any bill is before the said sub-committee, shall be in public.

(4) The provisions of section (2) shall not apply to the deliberations of any standing joint committee or special joint committee.

(5) Whenever a committee is not sitting in camera, the public may attend such a meeting, unless otherwise ordered by the committee in accordance with sections (1), (2) and (3) above."

ROYAL ASSENT

17. That the Rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following immediately after Rule 113:

"114. (1) The Sovereign, His Excellency the Governor General and His Deputy or Deputies shall have undoubted and unimpeded access to the Senate Chamber at all times and, in particular, while the Senate is meeting.

(2) When the Speaker receives a message indicating that any of the Personages outlined in section (1) will be arriving at the Senate at a given hour to give Royal Assent to certain bill or bills, to prorogue or dissolve Parliament, or for any other reason, that hour shall be fixed for the beginning of the procedure.

(3) When the Speaker receives a message, in accordance with the provisions of section (2) above, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then before the Senate and read the said message. If a message is received during the taking of a standing vote the Speaker shall read the message immediately after having declared whether the motion before the Senate is carried or lost. The time taken for reading the said message shall not be deducted from the time any Senator, who was speaking at the time the Speaker interrupted, is permitted to speak, nor shall it be deducted from the overall time remaining in a debate to which there is a time limit either established by these Rules or by motion or other order of the Senate.

(4) If the Senate has completed its business for the day prior to the hour fixed in the message received pursuant to section (2) above, the Speaker shall suspend the sitting until not later than five minutes before the time set for the arrival of the Personage outlined in the message. When the sitting resumes, the Speaker shall order the bells to call in the Senators to be sounded for not more than five minutes.

(5) When a message has been received pursuant to section (2) above, no motion to adjourn the Senate shall be received and the rules regarding the ordinary daily hour of adjournment, or the provisions of any prior order of the Senate regarding the hour of adjournment that day shall be suspended until the procedure laid out in the message has been completed.

(6) When a message has fixed a time, pursuant to section (2) above, and a standing vote is requested for a time which would otherwise be taken at the same time as the arrival of the Personage outlined in the message received in accordance with section (2) above, such standing vote shall stand deferred, if applicable, until immediately after the departure of the Personage in question.

(7) Any deferred standing vote which would have been taken at or after the time fixed in the message received, pursuant to section (2) above, shall be further deferred, if applicable, until immediately after the departure of the Personage outlined in the message.

(8) When the Senate is sitting at the time fixed in the message, received pursuant to section (2) above, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then before the Senate for the purpose of admitting the Personage outlined in the message. Such proceeding shall not be again taken up pursuant to section (9) below, until the proceeding outlined in the message has been completed and the Personage has departed the Senate Chamber thereafter.

(9) Unless otherwise provided in these Rules, and if Parliament is still in session, immediately upon the departure of the Personage outlined in the message received in accordance with the provisions of section (2) above, the Speaker shall recognize the Senator whose intervention had been interrupted pursuant to section (8). The time taken for reading the said message shall not be deducted from the time allotted to any Senator, who was speaking at the time the Speaker interrupted, nor shall it be deducted from the overall time remaining in a debate to which there is a time limit either established by these Rules or by motion or other Order of the Senate."

TRANSITION

18. That the Clerk of the Senate be authorized to print a revised and renumbered edition of the Rules of the Senate integrating the changes contained herein and making any necessary editorial changes to the Rules in consequence thereof, or relating thereto and to make such changes to the Orders of the Day and the Order Paper as may be required to give effect to the new Rules.

19. That changes in the Rules of the Senate, contained in this Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, come into force when the Senate next meets after the adoption of this report by the Senate.

Respectfully submitted,

Brenda M. Robertson
Chairman

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

FIRST REPORT

TUESDAY, June 11, 1991

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee, to which Supplementary Estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1992, were referred, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, May 30, 1991, submits its report as follows:

Supplementary Estimates (A) are the first supplementary estimates for the 1991-1992 fiscal year and consist entirely of five proposed expenditure items for the Department of Agriculture, totalling $428.0 million. Three of these items, totalling $188.9 million, are for operating and capital expenditures and contributions under the department's Agri-Food Program, while the other two, amounting to $239.1 million, are for operating expenditures and contributions under the Grains and Oilseeds Program. Your Committee met on Thursday, June 6, 1991 to review these supplementary estimates. Officials of Treasury Board Secretariat and the Department of Agriculture appeared as witnesses.

The proposed expenditures in Supplementary Estimates (A) increase the estimates tabled so far in the 1991-1992 fiscal year from $157.903 billion at the time of Main Estimates to $158.331 billion currently. All of the proposed expenditures are budgetary and non-statutory, which means that they increase the deficit and must be voted by Parliament. Total proposed budgetary expenditures now amount to $157.956 billion and fall within the framework of $159.0 billion in the government's fiscal plan, as described in Part I of the 1991-1992 Main Estimates.

The $428.0 million in these supplementary estimates would increase the estimates of the Department of Agriculture from $1.888 billion in Main Estimates to $2.316 billion, an increase of 22.7 per cent. By vote, the increases are, in percentages:

Vote 5: Agri-Food Operating	0.2
Vote 10: Agri-Food Capital	0.1
Vote 15: Agri-Food Contributions	39.9
Vote 20: Grains and Oilseeds Operating	12.2
Vote 30: Grains and Oilseeds Contributions	529.6

The fivefold increase of $237.5 million in Vote 30 would increase the total vote from $44.8 million to $282.3 million.

The proposed expenditure items in Votes 15 and 30 include contributions under the Net Income Stabilization Account (NISA) ($15.5 million in the Agri-Food Program and $193.6 million in the Grains and Oilseeds Program), the Gross Revenue Insurance Plan[1] (GRIP)($145.0 million in Agri-Food) and the Cash Flow Enhancement Program for 1991 Crops (CFEP)($9.0 million in Agri-Food and $43.9 million in Grains and Oilseeds). The remaining $17.84 million requested in Vote 15 for Agriculture Development consists of $7.64 million in assistance to promote improved use and management of land, soil and related water resources and $10.2 million towards the long-term adjustment of the horticulture industry.

Information supplied to your Committee by Agriculture Canada, together with the testimony of the department's witness, indicates that the proposed expenditures in Supplementary Estimates (A) represent funding for a new, temporary Farm Support and Adjustment Measures (FSAM) package of programs. These programs, which were developed

1. This initiative is incorrectly described in Supplementary Estimates (A) as the Gross Revenue Insurance Program by committees of industry, federal and provincial representatives, will alleviate the short-term income deficiencies of producers of grains and oilseeds and of horticultural crops. In so doing, they will provide incentives to farmers and provincial governments to participate in GRIP and NISA, which form a new national safety nets system designed to meet farmers' needs for long-term predictable income. The FSAM programs are also designed to encourage producers to adjust to long-term market and production trends. The GRIP and NISA programs were developed as part of Agriculture Canada's ongoing Agri-Food Policy Review.

The Net Income Stabilization Account (NISA) program allows a famer to deposit up to two per cent of his eligible sales in an individual account, to be matched by contributions from the federal and provincial governments. He is then entitled to withdraw payments in a future crop year in which his farm's gross margin falls below a five-year average or his net income falls below $10,000. The program applies to grains, oilseeds, special crops including grain consumed on the farm, and certain horticultural crops, all of which face declines in their market prices. The FSAM program will make NISA more flexible and attractive by increasing the federal contribution to producer accounts for the 1990 and 1991 taxation years, reducing the provincial contributions over the same period and permitting farmers almost immediate access to their NISA accounts.

The Gross Revenue Insurance Program (GRIP) will provide comprehensive revenue insurance to farmers on their eligible crops. It consists of a crop insurance component and a new revenue insurance component. 50 per cent of the crop insurance premiums will be paid by the producers, while the federal and provincial governments, will pay 25 per cent each. Premiums for the new revenue insurance component are shared 33 1/3 per cent by producers, 25 per cent by provinces and 41 2/3 per cent by the federal government. Under FSAM, for the 1991-1992 crop year, the federal government will reduce producers' revenue insurance premiums by 25 per cent and will also pay 10 per cent of the provincial share of premiums. The additional costs of these two premium reductions are estimated to be $112 million and $33 million respectively.

The Cash Flow Enhancement Program (CFEP) provides interest-free, non-taxable cash advances of up to $50,000 to producers eligible under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the Advance Payments for Crops Act. Under FSAM, CFEP is being extended for the 1991-1992 crop year. Horticulture products will be eligible for both NISA and CFEP as well as for targetted short-term assistance and special long-term adjustment measures. The estimated cost of the total package of the horticulture industry is $48 million.

The FSAM package includes a number of land management initiatives. A major element is the Permanent Cover Program (PCP), which is designed to enhance soil conservation and alleviate soil erosion problems by removing marginal land from annual crop production and placing it in permanent cover such as forage or trees. The goal for this year under FSAM is to remove 600,000 acres of marginal and erosion-prone land in the Prairies from production, at a total estimated cost of $50 million. Programs will also be developed with the provinces to promote sound land management practices in Eastern Canada and British Columbia, at a cost of up to $22 million.

The new national safety nets systems will help offset income deficiencies and improve stability of farmers' incomes. Agriculture Canada estimates that the Farm Support and Adjustment Measures will increase total realized net farm income to $3.31 billion in 1991, 10 per cent higher than in 1990. Of this $3.31 billion, only $794 million or 24 per cent will come from net market income after depreciation. The remaining $2.516 billion or 76 per cent will consist of payments from existing government programs and from the new FSAM package. In 1981, market income represented 73 per cent of total farm income but the proportion has been falling steadily over the past ten years. The Committee is concerned about this increasingly heavy reliance of the agricultural sector on government support and finds it difficult to reconcile such reliance with the emphasis in the department's Agri-Food Policy Review on market responsiveness and greater self-reliance.

The Standing Committee on National Finance, in its review of the 1990-1991 Estimates, went to some lengths to investigate the relationship between program evaluation and resource allocation. In its report of January 1991, "The Program Evaluation System in the Government of Canada," the Committee recommended that "at a minimum, bills to establish new programs (and estimates requesting appropriation for such programs) should include evaluability criteria and any other evaluative information that may cast light on the merits of the proposed programs (page 19). In this regard, before recommending substantial new funding for the FSAM package, members of your Committee would like to have been provided with substantive information on the evaluation by Agriculture Canada of its farm support and adjustment programs. The case for the FSAM initiatives could have been strengthened considerably by the addition of effectiveness information on related and predecessor programs and by an explanation of the increasing role of government support in maintaining the level of farm incomes.

Respectfully submitted,

Roch Bolduc

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 12, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE DAVID A. CROLL, P.C.

NOTICE OF DEATH

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is with deep regret that I have to inform the Senate of the death of our colleague, Senator David Croll P.C., who passed away last night.

In remembrance, I ask all honourable senators to stand and observe one minute of silence.

The members of the Senate then stood in silent tribute.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like to give the following details with respect to Senator Croll's funeral: The funeral service will be held at Beth Tzedec Synagogue, 1700 Bathurst Street, Toronto, at 1 p.m. on Friday, June 14, 1991. Condolences may be expressed to the Croll family, care of Mr. and Mrs. David Mouckley at 213 Rosemary Road, Toronto. Donations to Senator and Mrs. David A. Croll Endowment Fund, Mount Sinai Hospital, 600 University Avenue in Toronto, would be appreciated by the family. This information will be sent to your respective offices today.

Is it the wish of honourable senators to adjourn out of respect for the memory of Senator Croll?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, for those who wish to attend the funeral on Friday, arrangements have been made for an aircraft to fly from Ottawa to Toronto and back. Meanwhile, honourable senators, out of respect for the memory of our late colleague, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

THE LATE HONOURABLE DAVID A. CROLL, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, our late friend and colleague, Senator David Croll, began his life on March 12, 1900, in Moscow. When it ended, he was half a world away, Privy Councillor, Dean of the Senate of Canada and a revered political figure. Needless to say, the intervening 91 years were not uneventful, starting with his arrival in Canada as a five-year-old child.

David Croll's interest in political life came early. On July 26, 1919, he attended a conference of the Liberal Party of Ontario and listened as Mackenzie King and Arthur Roebuck spoke of Canada's social needs: health care for children, unemployment insurance, mothers' pensions, a minimum wage, an eight-hour work day. It has been reported that this meeting "became the political baptism (or, more correctly, the bar mitzvah) of one of the most effective, dogged and colourful men in Canadian public life." Though his career then took David Croll down many roads, the sense of social justice that was so early instilled in him remained the driving force.

He entered the practice of law at the age of 28 and two years later, in 1930, was elected Mayor of Windsor, a job he held until 1934. He was the first Jewish and, at the age of 30, the youngest man elected mayor of a Canadian city. He was elected to the Ontario Legislature in 1934 and simultaneously held the positions of Minister of Public Welfare, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Minister of Labour in the Hepburn administration. He was the youngest cabinet minister in the Commonwealth. In 1937 he disagreed with his leader over the right of workers in the Oshawa General Motors plant to choose their own union and resigned from cabinet saying, "My place is marching with the workers rather than riding with General Motors." His friend, Arthur Roebuck, Attorney General, agreed and also resigned.

During the following eight years David Croll served another term as Windsor mayor, was reelected to the Ontario Legislature, enlisted in the army as a private, served overseas and returned to Canada as a colonel. One would think that David Croll had, by then, accomplished enough for a lifetime, but he had just begun. In 1945 he was elected to the House of Commons and reelected in 1949 and again in 1953. On July 28, 1955 he was summoned to the Senate, becoming the first Jewish member of this chamber.

How did he find his early years here? He said, "When I came to the Senate after ten years in the House of Commons, I was bored and frustrated. It was an intolerable situation . . . people come to the Senate to use their talents but become part of the fixtures." Well, Senator Croll became no fixture. His best known contribution to the Senate's work is the 1971 Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada. It is the work of this special committee, which he chaired, that is invariably mentioned by the defenders of the Senate who stress its investigative role.

But poverty was not the only issue he pursued in this chamber throughout his 36 years here. He advocated the abolition of capital punishment, more support for the elderly, an end to compulsory retirement, a new deal for Canada's Aboriginal peoples, lowering the voting age from 21 to 18, greater participation in politics by minorities, and Senate reform, including a national referendum to determine the Senate's future and a code of ethics for senators.

So passionately did Senator Croll advocate his social justice agenda that he did not hesitate to cross swords publicly, even with his own caucus colleagues. When a colleague of mine in the cabinet suggested that the minimum wage be rolled back so that Canada could better compete with American industry, Senator Croll declared that the minister was "right out of his mind." Though loyalty to party was important to David Croll, fidelity to self, to his principles, remained paramount.

In concluding, I wish to return to David's close association with Arthur Roebuck. As an impressionable 19-year-old youth he was moved by Roebuck's oratory on liberalism and social justice. He and Roebuck served together as cabinet ministers in the Hepburn government. Together they resigned from that administration in 1937 on a matter of principle. Arthur Roebuck was elected to the House of Commons in 1940. When in 1945 Croll was himself elected to the House, Roebuck was summoned to the Senate. Croll joined his friend there in 1955. They became seatmates and Roebuck served on the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada chaired by Senator Croll.

One week after the committee tabled its report, Senator Roebuck died and David spoke of his friend and mentor in the following words:

> Ninety-three years is a long time. For Arthur Roebuck it was a good long time. What did these years bring to Senator Roebuck? They brought him success and honour beyond his brightest young dreams. They brought him joy and sorrow, laughter and tears. Yet he clung to noble values, the mark of dignity and character. What did he give in return? Honesty, devotion to duty, and hard work with sympathy, understanding and respect for his fellow man, especially the underdog. He understood the problems of the unfortunate, the underprivileged and the unhappy. His was indeed a full and generous life.

I return these words to David Croll, for when he spoke them of Arthur Roebuck he, in my view, described his own career more beautifully than I could today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, 11 or 12 years ago, as his eightieth birthday approached, a number of honourable senators passed the hat to commission the excellent portrait of Senator Croll that now adorns one of our Senate committee rooms.

Fifteen months ago, on the occasion of his ninetieth birthday, senators paid tribute to him here and later, joined by a number of distinguished Canadians, at a gathering in the Speaker's chambers. Prime Minister Mulroney recommended that Senator Croll be made a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Canada, and some of us joined a group of his family and friends for the swearing in ceremony in the presence of the Governor General at Rideau Hall.

These were, after all, small honours that we paid to a great man. Now that he has gone forever from our midst, it is touching and somehow gratifying to recall that David Croll had enough natural human vanity and humility to have been proud and delighted by these gestures of recognition, indeed to have enjoyed every minute of our brief tributes to him. "You have made an old man very happy," he said to some of us, and one could only remark that Canada could do no less for such an illustrious son.

• (1410)

All of us who took part in the events of 11 years ago or 15 months ago are glad and honoured today that we had those opportunities to tell him in person how much we respected and admired him.

[Translation]

During sixty years of public service, during which he gave unstintingly of himself, he made his way, as was mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, from the municipal council of Windsor to the Parliament of Canada.

He is described by many as a man who throughout his public life was dedicated to helping the poor and the needy. As a social reformer in Parliament, he has earned a place among the great figures of our history. He is one of those men whose efforts and example have left a lasting imprint on the lives of ordinary Canadians.

[English]

As a social reformer in Parliament, his name is with the greatest in our history. As a parliamentarian, and as a public man, he is one of those relatively few of whom it can be said that his efforts and his example have made a difference in the lives of ordinary Canadians.

I extend, on behalf of the Prime Minister, the government and all of my colleagues on this side, our condolences to his family and to his colleagues in the Liberal Party. For them, for us, and for a great many Canadians, the memory of this great and good man will long be treasured.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, just about 36 years ago next month, the Right Honourable Louis Saint-Laurent appointed 13 people to this chamber. It was an interesting list in that it differed from the usual practice in Parliament. There was one Progressive Conservative, John T. Hackett, an ex-MP; one Independent Liberal, Donald Cameron, who founded the Banff School of Fine Arts; one who claimed no political affiliation, namely, Calixte Savoie from Moncton, the publisher of L'Evangeline; and myself, an Independent. As well, there were some well-known figures such as Chubby Power, Jean-Francois Pouliot, D'Arcy Leonard, Elsie Inman and others.

David Croll was on and near the top of that list. He and I were the last survivors of that group of 13, which was the largest group appointed at one time up until that date.

Dave Croll and I had little in common, with the exception of six years service in the Armed Forces during the war. He set an example when he enlisted as a private in the army at age 39. It is another mark of his ability that he ended the war as a lieutenant colonel. This devotion to Canada should be the subject of reflection to all people of younger age who did not find it possible to serve as he did.

After we came together here in 1955 I developed an affection and a great respect for David Croll, in spite of the fact that our interests were not always the same. I am not going to list his many achievements and qualities because they have been acknowledged and well documented.

David Croll was a courteous man, always a gentleman, who set a fine example, again and again, in his good manners in this chamber. He was always concerned and actively working for the underprivileged or the poor or the aged. In his years here he did a remarkably good job in getting great attention and improved benefits for those who were in need of help.

I had several conversations with David in recent weeks, the last one only several hours before he died. He told me that he was extremely unhappy about the developments in the Senate, particularly the deep animosity which continues and the fact that the voices of moderation were not being listened to. He told me that his views were not completely accepted in his own party, and he was sad.

However, he had the great good fortune, which all of us would envy, of going out while still playing his full part in Parliament and without a period of long and painful illness. I am sure all of us, in spite of our sadness, are grateful for that fact.

To his daughters and members of the family, I join in paying my great respects and offering my sincere condolences. To the Senate and to Parliament, I say we have lost a great member and a great Canadian. I will miss him, you will miss him, and Canada will miss him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, it was a very sad day for me yesterday when I heard the news of the passing of my fellow senator and, perhaps even more important, a dear friend, a long time friend, in the person of Senator David Croll.

When I first came to the Senate he was the man who took my arm and guided me to the Table, and he was a mentor who helped me along the way. Some may think it was not the right way but, in any case, it was along the way, and we have been very close ever since. Somehow his passing has affected me perhaps more than it should, but I am sure honourable senators will understand.

To his last hour he continued to serve his constituents. Just before he left the building on Tuesday he asked me to make certain that I represented him at a meeting of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee which had been cancelled to another time and which may have precluded his attendance. He wanted to make sure that his Private Member's Bill S-4, an Act to Amend the Act of Incorporation of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada, was properly explained to the committee, in view of the fact that I also had a bill on behalf of the Anglican Church. I don't know what two nice Jewish boys are doing in these particular fields but, in any case, I think it is rather symbolic that there we were, both of us, ready to appear before that committee. Senator Croll's last words to me were to make sure that I was there in case he was not able to present his case.

That was my last conversation with him.

Honourable senators, the personal contribution made by Senator Croll to the social development of this country is unmatched by any other individual politician or political leader. It is not my intention on this occasion to recount his Horatio Alger story, the story of the rise to fame and influence of this poor immigrant Jewish boy. That has been told before and, quite properly, will be repeated today.

David Croll was a man committed to helping others. He dedicated his entire political life to this objective. He exemplified the basic precept of the Jewish faith: the pursuit of justice. Our ancient teachings taught "Justice, justice shalt thou pursue." He was a modern day Jeremiah, speaking out against those aspects of today's society that are not considerate of the less fortunate, the poor, the handicapped, the elderly — indeed all those who, through no fault of their own, lead lives of misery, ill health and poverty. His heart bled for those who suffered. He understood the agony of the aged, the burden of the unemployed, the lonliness of the widow, the suffering of children raised in poverty, and the humiliation of our native people.

● (1420)

He was dedicated to the premise that it was the responsibility of society to care for the sick and the less fortunate. He believed in a Canada that was a haven for those from far away lands who wanted a better life.

He also fought the battle against prejudice, racial discrimination and anything that impeded the right of every Canadian, regardless of origin, to a life of equal opportunity and full acceptance as a first-class citizen.

[Senator Buckwold.]

What he accomplished in his lifetime did matter. The results of his crusades have been effective. Canada, as we now see it, is a much more caring and supportive community thanks to David Croll. He was the first to admit that there is still a long way to go in achieving his full objectives; but Canada is the better as a result ofhis passionate pursuit of justice for every citizen.

Honourable senators, I am indebted to Rabbi Roger Pavey, the spiritual leader of my home congregation in Saskatoon, for passing on to me some of the inspirational wisdom recorded by our Jewish sages. These were men who spent their days studying and commenting on the ancient holy writings. I quote:

> No man is ever impoverished by being just—nor is evil or harm ever caused by it.
>
> Whomever has compassion for the poor, the Holy one, praised be He, has compassion on him.

A chasidic sage said:

> Three pillars support the world: study, worship and good deeds. And, as in the world itself, the first two will shrink, and only good deeds will continue to grow.

Finally, Rabbi Milton Steinberg wrote:

> One wears out his mind in study - and yet has more mind with which to study. One gives away his heart in love - and yet has more heart to give away. One perishes out of pity for a suffering world and is the stronger therefrom.

So it is possible at one and the same time to hold on to life and to let it go.

Honourable senators, in reading some of the Debates of the Senate recently, I came across these words of Senator Croll on the occasion referred to by Senator Murray when we honoured him on his ninetieth birthday. I wish to cite his words from March 13, 1990, remarks which I think are symbolic of the man. He said:

> These days I look back a bit, but I also look forward. Even today I see the causes that we still need to fight for. I want you to know one thing: no man can say that he alone was responsible for the advances we have made. Similarly, no party can say that they alone were responsible for them. Even those in opposition make a contribution.

Finally, honourable senators, he said:

> The little wisdom I have achieved over my 90 years tells me that we can never stop fighting for social justice. Social justice is the most important aspect of our life in Parliament; everything emanates from that. We, as politicians, are eminently capable of dealing with the problem because we in this Parliament understand what it is all about, as do other Parliaments.

Honourable senators, our country has lost a great Canadian. His memory will live on because of the permanence of his contributions. My sympathy is extended to all members of his family who share the grief of his passing.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, Canada and the Canadian Senate have lost a great human being. Senator Croll was a good friend of mine, and had been for a long, long time. He and I met in 1957 when both of us were appointed to, and were serving on a joint committee dealing with consumer credit. It turned out to be much more than simply a study of consumer credit, which was perceived to be a problem in Canada at that time. That committee travelled across Canada, and that is when I came to appreciate what a great human being Senator Croll was. I was then a member of a different party, but we found a great deal of common ground on which to pursue the plight and problems of the disadvantaged. Of course, he was a great teacher to me, a newly elected member of Parliament.

More than that, Senator Croll and I were members of the first delegation from the Canadian Parliament invited to the Soviet Union—in 1965, I believe. While there, we travelled to where he was born in the Soviet Union. A request was made to go, I believe, some 300 miles away from our regular travel route from Moscow to Tiflis, Kiev and other places, and he managed to persuade the Soviets to arrange for that travel.

Senator David Croll had been my seatmate for the past seven or eight years. I will to be brief,but I want to endorse all that has been said about his career. Certainly it was one of the more outstanding political careers in Canadian history—there is no doubt about it. Senator Croll will be remembered, properly I think, as Canada's greatest advocate of public policy for the disadvantaged. It did not matter to him what the disadvantage was, whether it was the poor, the disabled, or members of one of the minority groups—he was totally involved in looking after the interests of those people.

In conclusion, I want to say something that I have heard many times, but which I think is worth saying and putting in Hansard. Senator Croll has passed on in the way he would have wished. He did not want to be a burden to anyone. Honourable senators will recall that the day before yesterday he worked a full day—I do not exactly know how long, about 10 or 12 hours. He had dinner with one of his friends, and within three hours of the conclusion of that dinner his life was over. He was not a burden to anyone, and that is the way he would have wanted it to be. Canada is a much better place for everyone—not just for the wealthy, the rich or the privileged, but for everyone—because of the activities of Senator David Croll; he did it in such a manner that he made hundreds of friends along the way. I do not think one can give a better tribute to anyone.

• (1430)

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, there was a time last fall, not long before Christmas, when the bottom fell out of goodwill-toward-men in this place, which some of our critics like to describe as, "the garden where the cronies grow." It was not a time which many of us recall with pride, or even equanimity.

There was a point back then when no Liberals and very few Conservatives would speak to a guy, even in an elevator that was supposedly upward bound. I said no Liberals would speak to me and that, of course, is an exaggeration. In an elevator, in a corridor, even on the floor of the chamber, Senator David Croll would speak. "How are you making out in all this?" he would ask, and his hand would come to rest on my shoulder—the physical touch of genuine concern. "It's a lot of foolishness, you know," he would go on. "But don't you worry, don't be hurt by the things that people say."

I have known Senator Croll longer than most of his Ottawa friends. He was the one man in this place who could make me feel giddy with expectation. He only needed to touch that shoulder and say, "Why, you're just a young fellow. You can do anything," and I would agree.

Once, a few years ago, when I was writing a book about The Globe and Mail, I went to see him about George McCullagh, that paper's modern founder. What had puzzled me was the fact that George, in the heady days of his political love affair with Mitch Hepburn, had never turned against Croll for walking out on the Ontario premier. Oh, the Globe criticized the famous speech when David said he'd rather walk with the workers than ride with General Motors, but the really big salvoes were saved for other friends of the union movement.

"Why?" I asked Croll in 1988. "Oh, the Globe was always fair to me," he explained. "It really began when I was mayor of Windsor. This hotshot came up to Windsor from Toronto one day with a crew of young guys who were going out to sell magazines in our territory. Now, those were depression days, and coming into our turf was not only against the bylaw, it was a capital offence. Well, the young hotshot was in real trouble and he came to see the mayor about it. He said his name was George McCullagh and he'd never been in trouble before". Well, as we all know, McCullagh was in trouble many times before his untimely death, but there was never again any trouble with Croll. "You see," said David, "we were friends."

I met the great man on Christmas day in 1942 in the mess of the Oxford Rifles, the regiment he commanded, which was, at that point, stationed in Prince George, British Columbia. I was the only man wearing blue in that sea of khaki. Well, anyone who came from Chatham was almost from Windsor, and he saw to it that I was well fed and entertained.

I saw him many times, in many places, after that. He and his great friend, Ralph Hyman, the writer and editor, had much to do with my early romance with Canadian political journalism. He was one of the first to welcome me when I came to the Senate. That day, someone was about to introduce us when I felt that arm on my shoulder. "You'd better watch out, David," said our friend, pointing to me. "He's a Tory." "Oh, no." said Davie. "You see, we are friends."

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I have counted the Honourable David A. Croll as a friend since 1952, when I became the president of the York Centre Liberal Association and he was the member of Parliament from Spadina. After Mike Pearson appointed me to this place in 1968, our friendship grew and continued, and as often as possible I sat beside David Croll in our caucuses and enjoyed his company very much.

Senator Croll's generosity of spirit, demonstrated by his open-handed counsel and support to young people in the Liberal Party, by his military service to his country and by his lifetime devotion to the poor people of Canada, can safely be said to have been without equal among his contemporaries.

A profile of David Croll written some 30 years ago stated that his political career was devoted to removing fear and insecurity from the lives of his fellow Canadians. What a simple but apt description. His influence on social policy in Canada over the last 70 years has borne witness to this devotion. His limitless energy and imagination during those many years have left Canada and Canadians the clear beneficiaries and have established his place in Canadian history as a political icon to many. A true man of principle, conviction and conscience, he was living proof that one person can make a difference.

Speaking of his days during the depression when he was Mayor of Windsor, David Croll said, "I had to provide for people. That was my destiny. From then on that's what I did, that's what I devoted myself to." David Croll has indeed been the champion of those who needed a champion. He always lived by his early creed: "The cause of the little man and his affairs is as a trumpet blast to me."

I should tell honourable senators that I was particularly touched when Senator Croll chose to support and speak to a motion that I put forward in the Senate last December. He gave us all much to consider. He said:

> Unless we take off the boxing gloves and get down to business, the remainder of this regime will be even worse than it is now . . . in the end, honourable senators, the Senate will lose.

His parting words on that day, words that require our consideration today, were:

> I say to you: Make your peace quickly.

An editorial written in the Globe in 1965 said, in part:

> When David Croll was sent to the Senate there was hope that he would be a one-man reform movement in the red chamber—that he would link the people to an institution that has rarely fulfilled the purpose for which it was created.

I would say that Senator Croll succeeded through his own energy and initiative in garnering a great deal of respect for this place. I am proud to have been a colleague of David Croll's.

He was blessed by the quickness of his passing, but the same event has left those of us who loved him in a state of shock and sadness, that mortality should rob mankind of one of its most treasured members.

[Senator Stanbury.]

I wish to express my personal sympathy in his loss to the members of his family, to his wide circle of friends and to the people of Canada.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, David Croll dedicated his political life to the protection of the unprotected. He was a dedicated partisan, but he always observed the rules and the spirit of those rules. No matter how rancorous the debate, he was unfailingly courteous to all.

In short, David Croll defined the qualities that only the great in politics can aspire to.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, Senator Croll was an enormous credit to public life, a great credit to his faith and an unassailable rock of principle through the sea changes of 60 eventful years. On occasions beyond count, Senator Croll would offer his wise counsel to members of his own party and to those who held other views. When decisions were required, he invariably came down on the side of the disadvantaged, those in need, the persecuted and the oppressed.

Senator Croll was a great help to many of us, and a great help to me when I served as Leader of the Government here, always urging balanced consideration of any subject or issue. Yet he held no narrow partisan beliefs and obsessions, as has been pointed out by other speakers. He was a man of the people, a person of transparent integrity. He has left us at a time when many Canadians seem to be disenchanted with public life and with those who serve in politics. He has left us a legacy of principle, a legacy which demands that all of those in Parliament, whether they serve in the House of Commons or in the Senate, shall continue to have the liberties and the freedom to speak out on behalf of good causes and those in need. He stood for fair play for the opposition and fair play for the government as well.

Let his life of dedication and service be an example to a new generation of young Canadians who will offer their services in public life, who are willing to withstand the vicissitudes of politics at various levels of service in order to make this a better country.

I join with others in extending my condolences to his wide family of friends and relatives.

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I rise to pay tribute to the memory of David Croll. As you know, the late senator had been the Member of Parliament for Spadina, which I had the honour to represent a few years later on. I had a very early knowledge of David Croll because my father was a great admirer of his, and I heard about him in approximately 1943 or '44, when I was a boy. He was held out to me then as a great Canadian and a great Canadian Liberal. When I came to Ottawa about 18 or 20 years ago, it was a great honour actually to meet a man who had been such a hero to my late father.

I think that a side of Senator Croll which should be mentioned is the tremendous contribution that he made to the National Liberal Caucus. I was chairman of that caucus for some years in the 1970s. The chairman, of course, has to make sure that he has speakers on important public business, and I always made a point of ensuring that Liberal senators had an opportunity to speak on public business. David Croll was one of the most enlightened members of our caucus and always started a lively debate, always participated in the important issues that we dealt with, and was one of the reasons that Liberal senators have always made an active contribution in every national caucus meeting that we have.

Honourable senators can understand what an honour it was for me to have David Croll nominate me at my last nomination meeting as the member of Parliament for Spadina, for the 1979-80 election campaign, in which I was successful. It will always remain one of the honours of my political life to have been nominated as the Liberal candidate in Spadina by my great predecessor, David Croll.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, how many politicians can aspire to become legends? Rarer still, how many politicians become legends in their own time? David Croll transformed himself, by dint of his own efforts, into a legend in our time. Jew, immigrant, lawyer, politician, soldier, hero, partisan, liberal, zionist, fighter, visionary David Croll was all of these. Yet David Croll was essentially a loner. He fought his way from the bottom to the pinnacle of each career he chose: from immigrant to boy mayor of Windsor, from member of the Ontario legislature to Ontario cabinet minister, from volunteer private to lieutenant colonel of his regiment in wartime, from member of Parliament to senator to privy councillor. Only one goal, one public office eluded him: it was his dream to be a member of the federal cabinet.

David Croll was a politician of conviction. His conviction was based on choice. He chose between competing ideas of Canada, competing visions of Canada, that haunt us to this day. We have heard echoes of these competing ideas in this very chamber this week. David Croll made choices: he chose between "Everyman" and the elites, between the poor and the rich, between the dispossessed and the possessors, between the powerless and the powerful, between the disabled and the capable, between immigrants and the establishment. He always took the side of the weak against the strong.

During a vitriolic, now-celebrated, strike in Ontario in the late 1930s, when he was a cabinet minister, he again made a choice. In the midst of that strike, which was deeply dividing a province still suffering from the dregs of depression, he resigned, declaring that he would "rather march with the workers than ride with General Motors." Those words became the battle cry for workers across Canada, and they still resonate across the land over a half a century later.

He chose. He always chose. He refused to go along with conventional wisdom. Perhaps because he was a prickly performer, but certainly because he was a Jew, he was denied admission to the federal cabinet. At that time in 1945, David Croll had just returned from overseas, a war hero. He was the only elected Liberal in Toronto in the Spadina riding. Yet he was refused admission to the federal cabinet by Mr. King. Mr. King, that great racist in the old Canadian tradition, simply refused to appoint him. King is reported to have said words to the effect that Croll "would not be a compatible companion". One was too many for King. So, too, for Mr. Saint-Laurent. Later in 1955, Saint-Laurent appointed David to the Senate. All his life Croll fought against racism. Yet he was the victim of racism, foreclosed from achieving the one great goal of his life.

In Toronto, in the Spadina riding, that microcosm of modern Canadian society, every race and every ideology flourished. David Croll fought the left. He fought the right. He fought communists. He fought fascists and socialists alike. He fought for the people. He fought against radical solutions, for the Liberal way, the consensus way, the middle way. He was a reformist who believed he had to bring people along.

He became an architect of our modern social welfare system, and when he came to the Senate, he piloted benchmark studies on aging and the poor that replenished the national pillars of our modern social welfare system. He fought against racist ideas. He fought for reform. He was a Lloyd George Liberal, and the fires of reform burned in him brightly to the very end. He never gave way.

I first heard of David Croll as a young boy in my home town of London, Ontario. He was then, for many of us, a great exemplar. He was to become for me an early role model. Later, when I came to Toronto to attend law school, I met him for the first time. I had admired him from afar for his public reputation and especially for his performance as a stump political speaker. I had heard him speak many times in smokey basements, crowded restaurants, and in halls packed with veterans. He could on occasion be electrifying.

I joined his law office as an articling student and learned then never to refer to David Croll as a senator. He was called simply "the Colonel". He was the great simplifier. He was practical. He taught me, and taught many of us, that common sense was the best way to promote one's causes.

David Croll all his life was a record setter: youngest mayor at age 30, first Jewish cabinet minister, first Jewish senator. From 1930 to 1991, for over 60 years, spanning most of this century, he served Queen, country and party without pause. Therefore, he became a living legend. David Croll became the quintessential Liberal and the quintessential Canadian.

David, bearer of that royal name, passed away this week doing what he liked to do best: working, arguing, speaking. His spirit lives on: restless, dissatisfied, seeking change, seeking reform, seeking betterment for the little people. David Croll was a man small in stature and he always identified with little people, but he had a grand spirit and a giant will.

In the Jewish tradition, we do not mourn the dead. We celebrate life. For me, and for most of us, David Croll, the man and his ideas, is alive and well. In the words of David the great psalmist, "May his soul be bound up in the bonds of life . . . in thy light do we too see the light".

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: We do not have many heroes in Canada today, but if ever there was a legitimate hero, particularly for the less fortunate and disadvantaged of this country, it was our late colleague, David Croll.

Senator MacEachen referred to the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada which Senator Croll chaired. Senator Murray referred to the occasion when friends gathered at the time Senator Croll was made a privy councillor and he said, to quote Senator Murray, "you have made an old man very happy".

Senator Doyle referred to the Globe and Mail, and I want to make reference to an article in the Toronto Star, which made an old man and a young girl and some others very happy. I am referring to the front page of the Toronto Star, November 3, 1969. If I may be permitted, I should like to quote from that story:

• (1450)

> Tish Graham made David Croll cry yesterday.
> Tish is a pretty 15-year-old. She's bright, popular and a leader of class 11-A at Sydney Academy in Sydney, N.S. The kind of girl a man hopes his daughter will be.

I can vouch for that. She's still pretty. She is a little older. She happens to be my daughter.

The article goes on:

> David Croll is a 69-year-old senator with white hair. All his life he's been fighting for reform of social legislation. The kind of man a girl would like her father to be.
>
> "The war on poverty should be a hot and furious war," Tish told Croll and his colleagues on the special Senate committee that is trying to find out what has gone wrong with plans that were supposed to have ended want long ago.
> "The action fronts in this war must be multiplied and broadened to cover every affected corner of the nation," Tish Graham said.
>
> "We need a just society," she said, "but it must be just for all".
>
> When Tish was finished the color rose in Croll's face until it was beet red. For a long time he said nothing and then passed a hand over his eyes.
>
> "A sense of pride is what does it," Croll said finally, referring to his tears.
> It was pride, Croll said later, that kids weren't as bad as they often seemed and pride that a white-haired grandfather from Toronto could find something in common with a 15-year-old schoolgirl from Sydney.
>
> The class at the Sydney high school had spent three weeks gathering statistics, interviewing poor people as well as bureaucrats and then setting their findings and recommendations before the committee.
> They decided to do the poverty project instead of term papers on the French Revolution and religious history. Their brief was 29 pages long, had 31 specific recommendations. The committee spent more time with Tish Graham and her classmates than it did earlier with the academics at the Institute of Public Affairs at Dalhousie University who came in with a submission five times as long.
>
> William Neil MacKenzie, class 11-A's history teacher, said the poverty project had proven to the students that establishment institutions such as the Senate are willing to listen to young people if they have something meaningful to say.
>
> "It shows that if young people want to speak to the Senate in Canada they can," MacKenzie said. "They are still interested not in having Molotov cocktails for breakfast but in having senators in for lunch."
> When they arrived, Croll told the committee and about 50 spectators in an auditorium at Dalhousie University being used for the hearings: "I'm delighted by the example being set by these young Canadians."

Honourable senators, when it comes to setting an example, no Canadian that I know has ever set a better example than our late colleague David Croll.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I join with other colleagues in lamenting the loss of our friend David Croll, but I am also comforted by the fact that, when the time came, he left us quickly and without suffering. He also left confident in the knowledge that on that very last morning he had given, yet again, a stirring reminder of the principles of liberalism and social justice to his colleagues on this side of the house during our Senate caucus meeting. I hope I may be forgiven by my colleagues for mentioning that his last words to us were, "For God's sake, Canadians are afraid they are going to lose their medicare. Don't let it happen." And he looked ominously at each of us around the room to let his message sink in.

He was a remarkable Canadian, as those who have spoken before have noted, and I have always felt it was a privilege just to have known him and to have benefited directly from his wisdom. A year ago in Calgary, at our national Liberal leadership convention, it was indeed an honour to be asked to escort him to the podium as the thousands of members of our party took time out from that convention to honour him for a lifetime of service, with thunderous applause ringing through the Saddledome.

As has been said, the small five-year-old boy who came to Canada from his native Russia in the early years of this century not only lived through, but participated in, all of the great national debates and, particularly, the social struggles of the last six decades.

Senator Croll believed, above all else, in the rights of individuals and in a system of government the goal of which was to contribute with sensitivity to the basics of their personal wellbeing, thereby offering to each of them the opportunity to serve and to contribute to the collective wellbeing of our country.

There is no doubt in the mind of any of us that some individuals and groups of individuals in Canada are treated less equally and less fairly unless a special effort is made to include them and to force a national consciousness and will with regard to their concerns. Senator Croll was a public figure who chose to force such a consciousness and a will in certain areas where it is very easy for society, government and politicians to look away from citizens because they have no voice in places of power and influence.

Over the years, among many other things, Senator Croll chose two areas in particular, poverty and aging, on which he levelled a passionate and a persistent focus. No one has done it better. On family allowances, Old Age Pensions, labour laws, unemployment insurance, health care, guaranteed annual income and the rights of the Aboriginal peoples he spoke for millions who have very little voice and limited access in our society. He saw this as a personal mission and he leaves us with a responsibility that we dare not ignore as individuals and as representatives of political parties.

Obviously our system has not worked for the poor of all ages in Canada and we continue to let the gap widen between wealth and poverty; and obviously the system has not worked with enough care, sensitivity and foresight in ensuring an active role for seniors at a time when they are, and will continue to be, one of the largest components of our Canadian population. Senator Croll's fight for their security—financial, social and political—never ended, not even on the last day. He leaves a tremendous vacuum which we must fill.

The continued strength of our country to meet its future with confidence depends fundamentally on the real ability of its citizens to participate. That is the simple but very powerful message which Senator Croll transmitted to us both as a challenge and a legacy.

Honourable senators, I join with everyone in this house in offering sympathy to his family at the same time that we rejoice in the memory of an extraordinary life. He will be sorely missed.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

TRANSPORTATION—PORT OF VANCOUVER LOCKOUT LEGISLATION

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to make a brief statement relating to the business of the Senate.

• (1505)

There is a possibility that the House of Commons will have passed through tomorrow all three stages tomorrow of special legislation to end a lockout at the Port of Vancouver. If that is the case—and I expect to know later this afternoon whether consent has been obtained in the other place—the government would be asking the Senate to pass that bill tomorrow through all stages so that it could receive Royal Assent.

Briefly, the situation is that the union and the management of the Port of Vancouver—and I am speaking now of the grain terminals—have been in a legal strike position since May 7. The situation has deteriorated over that period of time. The union ceased to work overtime sometime ago, as a result of which grain shipments to and through the Port of Vancouver were reduced. Last Sunday, management locked out the union. As a result, the grain shipments through the Port of Vancouver are completely paralysed.

I am advised that if this situation exists for any period of time there will be a loss by the farmers of almost 300,000 tonnes of grain shipments per week. I know, because honourable senators have had to face these situations in the past, that I need not describe to you the potential problems this creates for farmers' incomes, for the transportation system, and so forth.

Mr. Danis, the Minister of Labour, made an attempt to bring the parties together. He made an attempt to secure what I might call a truce in the situation while he appointed an Industrial Inquiry Commission, or something of the sort, to look into the problems. Those efforts by the minister and his officials earlier this week failed.

The government has agreed on legislation. The only question now is the rapidity with which that legislation can be passed through the House of Commons. The Leader of the Government in the other place is now engaged in discussions with his opposite numbers in the opposition parties with a view to obtaining their consent to pass the bill through its three stages tomorrow. If that happens, the Senate would be asked to do likewise.

I am aware that we are in a situation of particular difficulty because many of us intend to go to Senator Croll's funeral tomorrow. I understand that an aircraft is leaving Ottawa at 10 o'clock in the morning and that the funeral is at one. We can discuss later what arrangements will need to be made if this bill passes through the House of Commons. We could put off the bell calling senators until quite late in the afternoon. That would still give us the afternoon and the evening to debate and deal with the bill, if necessary, in Committee of the Whole.

In any case, I will obtain further information as the afternoon goes on, and I will advise honourable senators. I simply wanted to take these few minutes to alert you to what the situation is.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have today's issue of petitions from the citizens of Canada against the GST, asking for its revocation and for an election to enable them to prevent, they hope, further iniquities from this government. They consist of 50 petitions from Quebec, and they come from Roxton Falls, Durham, St. Hyacinthe, Granby, St. Leonard, Adamsville, Bromont, Alma, Hull, Aylmer, Jonquiere, St. Jean-Baptiste, Chicoutimi, Victoriaville, Marieville, Anjou, St. Michel, Wickham, Princeville, Acton Vale, St. Angèle, Richelieu, Montreal, Mercier, Lachine, La Salle, Evain and Rouyn-Norand, with five names on the Ontario list from Evain and Rouyn-Noranda. Total number of petitions, 50; total names 1,032.

From Ontario I have two petitions from Larder Lake and Kirkland Lake. Total petitions, two; total names 41. The grand total of petitions for today: 52, with 50 from Quebec and two from Ontario. Total names, 1,073. From Quebec, 1,032; from Ontario, 41.

SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS

FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Michel Cogger: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Joint Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations.

The Clerk at the Table:

The Standing Joint Committee for the Scrutiny of Regulations has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee reports that in relation to its permanent reference, section 19 of the Statutory Instruments Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-22, the Committee was previously empowered "to study the means by Senator Cogger: Dispense.

The Clerk at the Table:

Respectfully submitted,

MICHEL COGGER
Joint Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, I move that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, are we going to get a copy of this report today?

Senator Cogger: Yes, of course. I assume the officers of the Senate will see to that, Senator.

Senator Corbin: I am not asking whether you assume. Are we going to get a copy now, the way we usually do?

Senator Cogger: As far as I am concerned, I asked the clerk of the committee to make the necessary arrangements.

Senator Corbin: They dispense with reading the report and now they ask us to postpone consideration until the next sitting of the Senate.

We should at least know what is in the report before giving our consent.

Hon. Thomas H. Lefebvre: Absolutely.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: If the report is not tabled immediately or pretty soon, it will be postponed until the next sitting.

Senator Cogger: Mr. Speaker pro tempore, if Senator Corbin feels his rights have been breached because I asked the Clerk at the Table to dispense with reading the report, in that case, so Senator Corbin will not feel frustrated, I will show my respect for proper parliamentary procedure and ask the Clerk at the Table to read the report.

Is Senator Corbin satisfied?

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I don't understand why the senator is getting on his high horse! All I ask is some respect for parliamentary procedure.

He belongs to that group on the other side of the chamber that wants to strangle us with their new rules, and so he keeps asking to dispense with this and dispense with that.

I don't feel my rights have been breached, Senator Cogger, but I think you should show some respect for an institution that is more important than my rights or yours. There is a certain way of doing things.

I simply asked whether we were going to get the report today. I don't know why you proceeded with an attack on me personally. I don't know why you presume to make the suggestions you made.

I was simply talking about respect for parliamentary procedure. That is all.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the Clerk Assistant of the Senate has just advised me that copies of the report will be here in two or three minutes.

Does that answer your question?

Senator Corbin: Mr. Speaker pro tempore, I wish to thank you for the information. You make eminently good sense.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

On motion of Senator Cogger, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

TWENTY-FIRST CONFERENCE OF THE CARIBBEAN, THE AMERICAS AND THE ATLANTIC REGION IN PORT OF SPAIN, TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, inshallah, June 18, 1991 I shall call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-first Conference of the Caribbean, the Americas and the Atlantic Region of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association held at Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago from May 12 to 18, 1991.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

EIGHTY-FIFTH INTER-PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE, PYONGYANG, DEMOCRATIC PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF KOREA—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, June 18, 1991, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Eighty-fifth Inter-Parliamentary Conference in Pyongyang, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, from April 19 to May 4, 1991.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had intended at this time to move the adjournment motion for Monday next. Obviously that cannot be done now because of the information that Senator Murray shared with us a little while ago. I will have to ask leave to revert to notices of motion when the situation becomes more clear.

QUESTION PERIOD

TRANSPORTATION

PORT OF VANCOUVER—LOCKOUT LEGISLATION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he could help us a little more with the explanation respecting the legislation ordering the resumption of activities at the grain terminals on the west coast.

I am not requesting the details, certainly, but perhaps he could tell us what is the essential part of the legislation that, in this case, would order the companies to cease the lockout and, at the same time, order the workers back to work.

The reason I raise this is because I remember a time when the pressure was on, and the pressure is always put on very heavily for the government or Parliament to act. That happened before this government was in office, so it is not unique to this situation. I remember a time when the grain companies let a work stoppage carry on for seven weeks before they made an offer that they knew was required to get the union back to work. In this case it was at Thunder Bay.

I just want to be assured that, if we go through this very quickly—and I am not arguing about the justification of the request—it is not one of those situations where these same grain companies are asking the government to take on a task without providing some balance between the position of the unions and that of the grain companies. I do not want to belabour this, but they have a reputation for doing this type of thing. The last offer they made was way short of what they knew they had to make to get the unions to obey the back-to-work order coming from the Parliament of Canada. I would hope that in the legislation there is some balance between the two positions so that it is not a one-sided decision by the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, obviously I have no brief for either of the parties, certainly not for the companies that caused the lockout. I think the elements of the legislation which we will present will be quite familiar to my honourable friends and others who have been down this road before.

Briefly stated, we intend to extend the life of the collective agreement for a certain period of time and to provide for arbitration of the dispute. I do not think I can go further that that for the moment because Mr. Andre would be doing no more than giving notice of the legislation in the house today.

• (1525)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I can understand that this is difficult to deal with. It seems to me that Parliament has learned that it should not get involved in settling a labour dispute in which one side or the other stands to win a great deal as a result of delaying the implementation of any back-to-work order. If there is some arbitration later which will, in fact, have the force of law with respect to reaching a reasonable settlement between both sides, then I would not hesitate to support the government in doing this. I suppose that is what the government is trying to do, and I would be there to support it.

As I have said, I can remember when settlements were brought in and the legislation did not provide for a redress by arbitration afterward concerning both sides in the dispute. Therefore, one side could win by delaying further.

Senator Murray: I appreciate the points made by the honourable senator. He will have an opportunity to make them again when the legislation is before us and, as I have said, if necessary, to question the sponsoring minister, who would be Mr. Danis, in the Committee of the Whole.

Having said that, I think I should repeat again that those parties have been in a legal strike situation since May 7. Various attempts to bring them together have failed, and I refer not only to the one this week on the part of the minister and his officials. At one point the parties even brought in an experienced private sector mediator, a man by the name of Mr. Ready, who walked away after a certain time. Attempts to reach a negotiated settlement of the dispute have simply failed.

THE ECONOMY

VALUATION OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On several occasions I have spoken about what I consider to be an egregious overvaluation of the Canadian dollar and the consequences of that overvalued dollar both for our manufacturing industries and for across-the-border shopping.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether in negotiating the Free Trade Agreement there was any undertaking given to the Unites States that the Canadian dollar would be maintained at a certain level, or at a range of levels.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my advice on that matter is that there was no such undertaking.

[Senator Murray.]

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS
THE ECONOMY

CROSS-BORDER SHOPPING—EFFECT ON CANADIAN COMMUNITIES—REPORTS OF PROPOSED ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN—REQUEST FOR DETAILS
CROSS-BORDER SHOPPING—EFFECT ON SMALL BUSINESS IN CANADA—NEED FOR CHANGE IN POLICY—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to questions asked in the Senate by honourable senators. I would ask that these answers be printed as part of today's proceedings. The first delayed answer I have is in response to questions raised by the Honourable Senators Perrault and Stanbury regarding the effects of cross-border shopping on Canadian communities, and on small business in Canada.

(The answer follows:)

Cross-border shopping is just one element of Canada's international trade. The Government recognizes this and has a number of efforts underway or under consideration to ensure that Canada and Canadian businesses are able to compete, while guaranteeing Canadian consumers access to competitively priced goods and services.

The Government is working with communities, private sector business groups and others to assess the many and complex factors which determine the competitiveness of Canadian suppliers. This spirit of cooperation will ensure that the results will be balanced and effective. Internally, Industry, Science and Technology Canada, National Revenue, the Department of Finance and other concerned departments are working closely together to ensure that the federal response is well considered and coordinated. These departments are also in touch with various provincial governments.

The question of collection of PST at the border is under consideration by the Government at this time. Provincial cooperation and requests would, of course, be needed.

Price differentials between Canada and the U.S. are not only attributed to the higher margins collected by the retailers. The structure of the distribution chain, scale economies, competition levels, operating costs and costs of goods sold are other factors in price discrepancies. These preliminary findings will give direction for more detailed research and consultations with industry.

Canada lives in a competitive international marketplace and Canadian consumers have the right to make their own shopping choices. The Government's goal is to ensure that Canada is so competitive that they will choose to shop here. This may take some time, but it is the fair and efficient objective we must pursue. At a recent meeting organized by the Retail Council of Canada, participants, including private sector interests and all levels of government, agreed that closing the border was not a solution to the problem of balancing our competitiveness with U.S. retailers.

Under the FTA, Canada and the U.S. are obligated to maintain rates of duty no higher than those specified in the agreement, and to reduce these rates according to an agreed schedule. Any increase in Canada's customs duties on these products would violate the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, as well as the GATT.

Erecting administrative barriers, or for goods subject to import quotas (e.g. dairy, poultry, eggs), any reduction in the amount that same-day travellers are allowed to import might raise similar questions regarding our international trade obligations and provoke a strong reaction from the U.S. and other trading partners.

The Government has released the Ernst and Young Preliminary Study of the Competitiveness of Distribution Channels, and a number of other initiatives are underway (Departments of Revenue Canada, Tourism, and Agriculture) but this will not be solved by one single political announcement. The Government will continue to move on a wide range of fronts to build competitiveness in Canada, and results will be seen over time. However, it will take time to correct the problems, but we have the will, and a broad range of cooperation to succeed.

In 1989, the Minister of Agriculture initiated a major review of agricultural policy, including the establishment of poultry and dairy task forces to recommend supply management systems improvements when they report later this year. These industry-wide groups representing producers, processors, distributors, and consumer groups are specifically examining pricing as an integral part of their mandate. Agriculture Canada studied grocery price comparisons in Canadian and U.S. border communities, the results of which will be used, in consultation with industry, in developing its marketing strategies.

Customs and Excise is dedicated to developing new approaches to improve both service to travellers, and enforcement of the legislation. For example, Customs and Excise has already taken several initiatives to facilitate customs procedures such as: automated cash machine, a pilot project at Douglas B.C., and express lane pilot projects in Niagara Falls and Windsor, increased staff at busy locations, and improved shift scheduling. Canada Customs two key responsibilities are to facilitate the cross border movement of travellers and goods, while providing equitable enforcement of collection of duties and taxes owing to the Canadian Government.

Tourism Canada has commissioned Coopers & Lybrand Consulting Group to study how Americans view the prices and benefits of visiting Canada to allow us to move strategically to address any real or perceived problems. The Government is actively working with the industry to promote and market tourism in Canada.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PRESENCE OF METAL BARRIERS FACING PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer I have is in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 14, 1991, by the Honourable Eymard G. Corbin regarding Presence of Metal Barriers Facing Parliament Buildings.

(The answer follows:)

The RCMP and the Sergeant-at-Arms' office have reached a consensus that the barricades be left in place along Upper Drive for the foreseeable future subject to ongoing assessment of the world and national threat situation.

Although hostilities in the Middle East have diminished considerably, the increasing number, size and impromptu nature of demonstrations will continue. Statistics indicate an upward trend in demonstrations and threats against Parliamentarians for some time to come.

The RCMP has used barricades to help control demonstrations for many years; and continues to do so on an increasingly frequent basis.

A permanent installation of aesthetically acceptable barricades is being considered as the temporary metal barricades now being used are not considered to be the best solution.

IMMIGRATION

DETERMINATION OF REFUGEE STATUS—BACKLOG OF CASES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer I have is in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 21, 1991, by the Honourable Stanley Haidasz regarding Determination of Refugee Status—Backlog of Cases—Progress Since Passage of Legislation.

(The answer follows:)

Employment and Immigration Canada (EIC) received its mandate in December 1988 to clear the refugee claimant backlog using a system similar to the one which became effective on January 1, 1989. The backlog clearance process includes an examination of the merits of each claim and consideration of any humanitarian and compassionate (h&c) factors which may be involved in an individual case. Persons whose claims are determined to have credible basis by a panel consisting of an adjudicator and a member of the Immigration and Refugee Board may apply for permanent residence. Persons whose claims are deemed to have no credible basis face removal from Canada where no humanitarian grounds exist to allow them to remain.

The budget for clearing the backlog is approximately $100 million for processing and accommodation costs, and $79.5 million for settlement and language training. As of the end of March, 1991, EIC had spent approximately $73.3 million, and the Immigration and Refugee Board had spent $10 million for an expenditure total of $83.3 million. At that time, more than half of the cases had been decided with an overall acceptance rate of 65 percent.

The department is also concerned with the delay in clearing the backlog; however, the issue is refugee determination. The hearing of a refugee claim takes place in a quasi-judicial setting. While not as efficient as administrative decision-making, a tribunal allows the claimant the right to counsel and considerable leeway in presenting his case, including the tabling of documentary evidence and the calling of witnesses when required. Many tribunals have experienced a high number of adjournments requested by claimants and their counsel as well as lengthy legal charter arguments. It has become apparent that the majority of delays in the process are a result of fairness taking precedence over expediency.

A review of the refugee determination system by the Department of Employment and Immigration is now in progress.

Since January 1, 1989 over 38,000 cases at the first level have been found to have a credible basis. In 1989 and 1990, 91 percent and 92 percent of claims and in the first quarter 1991, 91 percent have been found credible.

At the second level, since January 1989, over 20,600 persons have been found to be convention refugees. In 1989, 90 percent were found to be convention refugees and 79 percent in 1990. The figure increased to 82 percent in the first quarter of this year.

IMMIGRATION

RECOMMENDATION OF INTER-CHURCH REFUGEE REVIEW COUNCIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 21, 1991 by the Honourable Stanley Haidasz regarding Immigration—Recommendation of Inter-Church Refugee Review Council.

(The answer follows:)

The recommendations made by the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees were presented to the United Nations Committee for Human Rights in October 1990. These recommendations are contrary to the principle of case by case review and refugee determination, both of which form the foundation of the present refugee determination system and the mandate approved by Cabinet for clearing the refugee claimant backlog. The option of an amnesty was rejected then and it is still: the House of Commons Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration has supported this decision. To do otherwise would be unfair to potential immigrants, and to their relatives in Canada, who have followed the lawful process for immigration to this country. Further, applying relaxed immigration selection criteria would have rewarded too many people who had abused the refugee determination system by making claims with no substance as a way of staying in Canada and in fact would encourage further abuse of the refugee determination system.

The process is well-established and more than half the cases have been decided with an overall acceptance rate of 65 percent. To change the process at this stage would achieve no meaningful results, given the time and expense inherent in implementing new regulations and procedures along with the requirement for retraining. Nor would it be fair to those who had already gone through the process as it currently exists.

EDUCATION

A LEARNING CULTURE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer I have is in response to a question asked by the Honourable John Stewart on May 22, 1991 regarding A Learning Culture in Canada—Government Policy.

(The answer follows:)

The National Forum on Post-Secondary Education, held in Saskatoon in 1987, is a good example of leadership and consultation arising from a joint federal-provincial initiative in support of post-secondary education.

The objective of the Forum was "to explore the challenges and opportunities facing Canada's universities and colleges in preparation for the 21st century". More than 500 persons representing a broad spectrum of Canadian society, including the administration, faculty and students of colleges and universities, leaders from business and labour, governments and special interest groups, met for three days of intense discussion.

The National Forum identified four key post-secondary policy areas in which federal-provincial/territorial collaboration was especially important:

—student assistance;

—international students;

—university research; and

—statistics on education.

These issues, and a number of others, had already been on the federal-provincial agenda, but were given new impetus by the Saskatoon conclusions. Since then, important progress has been made through enhanced federal-provincial cooperation in the four areas noted at the Forum.

Student Assistance

The Intergovernmental Consultative Committee on Student Financial Assistance, formed in 1987 by the Secretary of State and the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada (CMEC), has provided a forum for information exchange on the status of student financial assistance in each jurisdiction. Discussion of common concerns has facilitated the coordination of federal-provincial policies and viewpoints, and encouraged harmonization of approaches to assist students across Canada.

As part of the policy review process, an Advisory Group was also established in 1987 to examine policy aspects of the Canada Student Loans Program and offer advice on possible changes. The Advisory group consists of representatives from national associations of students, student financial aid administrators, educational institutions, and lending institutions.

An independent review of the criteria and administrative arrangements for assessing student financial need under the Canada Student Loans Program was announced in December 1989. The purpose of the review is to produce recommendations for improving the fairness and effectiveness of the allocation of student assistance, minimizing opportunities for abuse and permitting better control of government spending on student aid. The report is expected later on this year.

International Students

Although international students come under provincial jurisdiction in terms of their education, certain aspects of their experience, such as admission to Canada and employment regulations, fall primarily under federal jurisdiction.

Collaboration in this area is made possible through the Federal-Provincial Consultative Committee on Education-Related International Activities, co-chaired by officials of the Department of External Affairs and the CMEC. Recruiting and accommodating international students in Canada is on the agenda of this Committee.

University Research

In January 1988, the Prime Minister announced an allocation of $1.3 billion for new science and technology initiatives over a five-year period, beginning in 1988-89. One such initiative is the $80 million Canada Scholarships Program, which recognizes top students and encourages them to pursue undergraduate degrees in the natural sciences, engineering and related disciplines through the provision of up to $8,000 to each recipient over a four-year period. This Program has been the subject of discussion between the federal government and the CMEC.

Another initiative of importance to post-secondary education is the $240 million Networks of Centres of Excellence Program, which promotes university-industry partnership in world-class research to enhance Canada's long-term economic competitiveness. The initial fifteen projects to be supported under this program and involving thirty universities were announced in 1989.

Also within the announced allocation was additional funding of $200 million for the base budgets of the three federally funded research granting councils. The bulk of the direct costs of research undertaken in Canadian universities is provided by these councils. Provincial government operating support to the universities covers the majority of the indirect costs of research. Increasingly, some provinces are also contributing towards the direct costs of research.

Statistics on Education

The CMEC and Statistics Canada established a Canadian Education Statistics Council by Protocol in September 1989. The Statistics Council is developing a statistics program reflecting the priorities of the provincial ministries of education.

The first publication of the Council, A Statistical Portrait of Elementary and Secondary Education in Canada, was released in September 1990. The publication explores the general demographics of school-aged children, trends in enrolment and teaching staff, and the financing of elementary-secondary education in Canada. It represents a consensus among the provinces on the most significant statistics on Canada's elementary-secondary school systems; this consensus is particularly important in the presentation of inter-jurisdictionally comparable data.

There has been considerable international interest in further developing indicators for education performance, and Canada is participating fully in many of these initiatives. The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), for example, has initiated a major project entitled the International Educational Indicators Project which has four country networks and two technical groups reporting to it. Canada has made significant contributions, in particular to Technical Group 2 "Costs and Resources", based on its experiences in collecting and organizing financial data on education.

FISHERIES

LEGALITY OF FEES CHARGED TO FISHERMEN FOR MONITORING CATCHES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 28, 1991 by the Honourable Lorne Bonnell regarding Fisheries—Legality of Fees Charged to Fishermen for Monitoring Their Catches.

(The answer follows:)

The legal authority for the dockside monitoring program is section 7 of the Fisheries Act, section 17(3)(a) of the Atlantic Fisheries Regulations, 1985 and sections 3(1)(a) and 3(4) of the Fisheries Development Act.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

APOLOGY TO CANADA BY GOVERNMENT OF JAPAN—LACK OF FINANCIAL COMPENSATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 30, 1991 by the Honourable Stanley Haidasz regarding Foreign Affairs—

Apology to Canada by Government of Japan—Lack of Financial Compensation.

(The answer follows:)

The War Amps of Canada applied to the United Nations for, and was granted, Non-governmental Organization status which allowed them, on behalf of the Hong Kong Prisoners of War, to apply to the Human Rights Commission at the United Nations for recognition that the treatment they received at the hands of their captors "represents gross violation of human rights and recommends compensation".

Although the Department of Veterans Affairs supported their application to the U.N. for this special designation, the Department has not involved itself further as this would result in their losing their special status at this forum.

Although no amount of money is sufficient payment for what these veterans went through, the pensions and benefits the Government provides are second to none.

Canada has already paid more than $50 million in prisoner of war compensation to former POWs of the Japanese, and this figure does not include disability pension payments.

Canada is unique in paying compensation to former POWs without regard to other disabilities or the economic status of the veterans.

FISHERIES

AUTHORITY FOR MONITORING FEES—ADVICE OF COMMITTEE COUNSEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate by the Honourable John Stewart on May 30, 1991, regarding Fisheries—Authority for Monitoring Fees—Advice of Committee Counsel—Government Position.

(The answer follows:)

The Government has reviewed the opinion of the General Counsel to the Standing Joint Committee for the Scrutiny of Regulations. The position of the Government is that the dockside monitoring program is soundly based in law.

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Normand Grimard moved the second reading of Bill C-15, to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports.

[Senator Doody.]

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise today for second reading a bill respecting different matters related to the transfer of airports to local airport authorities.

This bill will allow the government to finalize negotiations that are underway to effect those transfers and to fulfil the objectives of the government's policy in this matter, keeping in mind that this bill deals exclusively with employee-related matters.

I should like to take a few moments to explore the history of this transfer initiative, to put this bill into perspective for my honourable colleagues. Beginning in March, 1987, the federal government began discussions on an airport transfer policy on the basis of certain broad principles. The terms and conditions for the transfer of federal airports to local interested parties were set up. Supplementary principles to guide the negotiations were approved in May, 1989.

The government's objectives from the beginning were, first, to allow the airports to better serve local community interests; second, to reinforce regional economic development potential; and, third, to permit the national airport system to operate in a most cost-effective and commercial manner.

This policy aims to improve the efficient commercial operation of federal airports through a more locally-responsive management structure. With local authorities at the controls, airports will be able to respond quickly to changing needs and market forces with innovative ideas.

The flexibility that will be afforded to the local airport authorities, or LAAs, will enable them to take advantage of the business opportunities that present themselves, and will help them to directly contribute to regional development initiatives.

As I have mentioned, the 1987 policy statement and the supplementary principles of 1989 were developed to set out the conditions under which airports would be transferred to local authorities.

[Translation]

Two of these are especially important and I would like to take a look at them at this time. First of all, the local airport authority has to provide permanent employees with work as well as wages and benefits equivalent to what they earned as employees of the Department of Transport. Employees must be treated fairly. It is one of the basic principles involved in the transfer of airports. The well-being of employees has to be properly ensured.

Second, on the financial level, the airport's net revenues, both present and anticipated, as well as a share of revenues by the local airport authority must go to the government.

As an integral part of the transfer process, the government has recognized that the well-being of the airport employees should be properly ensured. Transport Canada airport staff are competent and dedicated people. This bill and the principles governing the terms and conditions of the transfer will see to it that they are treated fairly.

Prompt passage of this bill would go a long way towards addressing the concerns of the airport employees by solving their main problems. For instance, the proposed legislation would give those employees one year to decide whether or not they want their federal pension benefits transferred to the plan offered by the new local airport authority.

Under the proposed legislation, the employees' collective agreement would be continued until it expires or a new one is entered into.

Labour relations issues at the time of the transfer and thereafter will be solved in accordance with the Canada Labour Code and the terms of reference of the Canada Labour Relations Board.

Also, in accordance with this Bill on the transfer of airports, local airport authorities will continue to provide services in both official languages in federal airports. But I will deal with this further on.

I just want to say that the airports are not being privatized, they are transferred to local airport authorities which in turn lease the facilities from Transport Canada. Individuals and private companies will not directly own or lease these airports. The federal government firmly intends to follow up on this policy, and the transfer of these airports is one of its top priorities.

Indeed, this whole issue of airport transfer to local businesses is nothing new. I think you all know that this has been done in the United States. A few months ago, I had the opportunity, along with other senators, including senator Molgat, Roméo LeBlanc and senator David, to travel to France with the Canada-France Parliamentary Commission. During our stay, we visited the Satolas airport, in the Lyon area. The Lyon Regional Board of Trade has been operating the airport for 25 years now. We asked the chairman of the Lyon Regional Board of Trade if that operation has been profitable to the region. He told us that it not only has it been profitable, but that they were getting ready to renew their contract with the French government.

• (1535)

[English]

One of the reasons that the government is so eager to see this bill become law is because so much interest has been shown. Indeed, there have been meetings with a number of community groups who are extremely enthusiastic about seeing their airports transferred to local airport authorities. The process is now well established and the pace of progress is gathering momentum. Substantive negotiations are well under way with local airport authorities in Montreal, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver. These four local airport authorities with LAAs—have now received the federal lease-rental formula and financial negotiations have been concluded. They have also presented the Transport Canada airport group site employees with a comprehensive package of benefits as well as formal offers of employment. The draft legal documents to effect the transfers have been provided to the four LAAs and are currently being negotiated. Signature of the agreement to transfer documents to these four communities could take place as early as September or October of this year, with the actual transfer taking place before the end of 1991 or early in 1992.

It should also be noted that substantial interest has also been shown for airport transfers in the following communities: Quebec City/Ste. Foy, Moncton, Windsor, Thunder Bay, Winnipeg and Kamloops.

Honourable senators, this is an important piece of legislation for many Canadians. It is consistent and complementary to the government's desire to bring rationality to national air transportation. The government believes that this can best be accomplished by the application of the spirit of competition that resides in the private sector. This policy, however, will in no way diminish the one fundamental constant in the Canadian transport industry; namely, safety and security. The unwavering dedication to the provision of a safe and secure air transportation system is stronger than ever before at Transport Canada. This has been the constant thread in the tapestry of the department's policies over time. The federal commitment in this regard is sound and well-known.

I hope I can ease concerns that any of my honourable colleagues might have regarding aviation safety. The federal responsibility for ensuring a safe air navigation system in this country is not changed one iota by this bill. Transport Canada will retain authority and enforcement powers with respect to standards of safety and security for the aviation industry and travelling public. This includes full responsibility for air traffic control. Controllers, for instance, will continue to be employees of Transport Canada.

I would like to take this opportunity to briefly address one of the issues raised in the other place; namely the application of the Official Languages Act. I expect that we may be hearing from the Commissioner of Official Languages or his representative when this bill goes to our Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. During consultation with the interested parties, many strongly expressed their view that we should not legislate the application of certain provisions of the Official Languages Act that deal with the issues of, for example, the language of work, which is Part V of the act; participation of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians in Part VI and the advancement of English and French in Part VII. Our first priority has always been service to the public in both official languages. That right is guaranteed fully in this bill.

• (1545)

[Translation]

In theory, it has been deemed satisfactory that all social bodies in the private sector, like local airport authorities, be subject to a similar treatment so as to ensure that their commercial viability or competitive status remain unchanged.

As well, the local airport authorities will form a series of distinct local organizations designed especially to see to their communities' commercial needs. These organizations will be composed not only of former federal employees, but possibly of former employees of provincial as well as municipal governments.

You will notice that at the main federal airports, most services to the public are currently offered through concessions under contract with the Minister of Transport. These concessions are currently operated by the private sector and are not subject to Parts V and VI of the Official Languages Act. However, they must offer services in both official languages and will continue to do so under section 4 of Bill C-15, when the airports are managed by the local airport authorities.

The local airport authorities have been created in order to better serve the economic development objectives of local communities. Some of you may not know this, but the members of most of these local airport authorities are representatives of cities or provincial governments.

For instance, the local airport authorities in Montreal are representatives of the cities of Montreal and Laval, of the Montreal Urban Community, of the Chambre de commerce, of the Board of Trade and of other like organizations.

Consequently, we can logically predict that in keeping with sound business practice, the local airport authorities will continue to be sensitive to the linguistic composition of their staff and to the linguistic choice of individual employees and clients.

It is also worth noting that most of the federal airports that have been transferred are located in areas which are not designated bilingual as far as the language of work is concerned.

To sum up, this bill will allow the government to transfer airports to local authorities. As well, it will improve Transport Canada's capacity to focus on vital aspects of transport in the country.

That is why I am pleased to present this Bill to the honourable senators. Like the Minister of Transport I firmly believe, that this bill, if passed, will be of great service to Canadian travellers.

Hon. Eymard Corbin: Honourable senators, if I may, I would like to put a couple of questions to my colleague. Concerning the enforcement of the Official Languages Act, he made the point, that the Commissioner of Official Languages would probably oppose a few objections during the bill's study in committee. You did not tell us what would be the basis of his objections. Could you tell us a bit more at this stage of second reading?

Senator Grimard: Honourable senators, when this bill was studied by the House committee, the Commissioner testified and blamed the fact the bill did not refer to sections 5, 6 and 7 of the Official Languages Act.

Now, section 5 is the one concerning the working language. I appreciate your question, Senator Corbin, and you should know that four cities are interested now, as I said earlier, and that they are most ready to sign the transfer documents; they are Montreal, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver. Now, of those four cities, Montreal would precisely be the most concerned by the issue of the working language. The Board of directors of the organization that wishes to manage the airport appeared before the committee and explained that section 5, if adopted, would put Montreal in a competitive disadvantage compared to its close competitors that are Toronto, Boston and New York.

That was mentioned by Mr. D'Iberville-Fortier who was present. He made more or less the same remarks concerning sections 6 and 7 of the Official Languages Act.

I respect the opinion of Mr. d'Iberville Fortier—he has a job to do, it is understandable—the Commissioner of Official Languages is there to see that the Act is implemented, that specific things have to be done.

Local airport authorities are not government agencies, they are non-profit private enterprises which should not be burdened by requirements which would make them non-competitive on the marketplace. To the representatives of the four cities who appeared before the committee—Montreal, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver—we asked the same question: "Are you satisfied with bill C-15, formerly was C-85?" They all answered "yes". Would you have any changes to propose? Could you live with the bill as it is? There again they unanimously answered "yes".

I might be venturing a bit far in my answer, but I told you a while ago, Senator Corbin, that people heading these local airport authorities were from Chambers of Commerce, cities, provincial governments or local communities. They are highly competent people there to make a success of their airport authority. The main thing is that, instead of waiting for guidelines from Ottawa which often take months, even years to come, local people will be able to work in the interest of their own airport, with a minimum of delay.

Senator Corbin: I thank the honourable senator, but he talked to me about being competitive, about local authorities and all that, but he did not really answered my question which was about the concerns from the Office of the Commissioner of Official Languages.

If I got the gist of your remarks, Transport Canada puts the emphasis first on aviation safety. We already had that debate during the 1970's, on the issue of aviation safety versus both official languages being used by Transport Canada employees. You may remember that debate or at least parts of it. It was not an easy one for anybody.

Honourable senator, you are from Quebec and I am from New Brunswick. I know fairly well the inner workings of the Official Languages Act. I was involved in the development and implementation of that legislation right from the start. In 1969, I sat on the House of Commons committee which examined government proposals.

During a few years, I sat with your colleague, Senator Murray, on the Joint Committee on Official Languages and had to go through a systematic scrutiny of the Official Languages Act implementation by federal departments.

I am no longer a member of that committee, but I still keep an eye on it and inquire daily about its proceedings. Moreover, I follow with a great deal of interest, just like you do presumably, critics on one side or the other that are echoed in the media.

What causes me great concern is the fact that, in your remarks, you talked about the airport in Moncton as if Moncton had the same problem as Montreal with regard to bilingualism. I am surprised to hear you say that the government is ready to water down the Official Languages Act because we, Canadians, have to compete with airports in Boston and Toronto. A lot of francophones travel via Boston and Toronto. Airlines that have their headquarters in Boston or elsewhere in the United States still have obligations when they want to operate in our country.

I am under the impression that this bill will weaken the general scope of the Official Languages Act and its enforcement. Under this policy, local airport authorities will be responsible for the enforcement of the spirit and the letter of the Official Languages Act, but they may set aside certain provisions of the act in order to give priority to the competitive aspect or the safety aspect.

I am in favour of security and competition up to a certain point. But when Canada is in the midst of a constitutional crisis, I belive it is sending a very bad message to say: "Well, do not be surprised if at the airport of Moncton, Toronto or Windsor, everywhere there are francophones who want to speak their language if possible, it becomes more and more difficult to do that."

The timing of this bill, while we are in the middle of a constitutional crisis, particularly as it pertains to the application of the Official Languages Act, worries me very much. Your words did not reassure me a bit, dear colleague. I do not want to blame you, but up until now you have not said anything at this stage of second reading which can satisfy me as a francophone from New Brunswick. I do not think either that it will satisfy the Acadians of Moncton and its surroundings.

Consequently, I hope that at committee stage we will have more information than we have now. Otherwise, I believe we will have ourselves in the same situation as in 1969 and we will have to fight the battle for francophone rights in this country all over again.

It is clear that English will not suffer from the passing of this bill, but that French and francophones will. This worries me and I wanted to tell you.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.) (6th day of resuming debate)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I intend to make a few additional remarks on the address in reply. In the remarks I made on Tuesday I spent a good deal of time on the question of "national reconciliation" as it was described in the Speech from the Throne in 1984, now described as "national unity" in the most recent Speech from the Throne. I intend today to make a few comments on the economic situation, internationalism and some comments on that portion of the Speech from the Throne entitled "Changing the Way Ottawa Works."

The second great pillar of wisdom erected by the 1984 Speech from the Throne was "economic renewal." Remember that "economic renewal" was to be achieved by reducing the budget deficit, controlling the burden of the public debt and increasing private investment, research and development. That was six years ago, in the context of what was, according to most indicators, a strong and rapidly expanding economy. "Economic renewal" has now been renamed "prosperity for all" in the recent Speech from the Throne, and Canadians are being invited to participate in the elaboration of a new strategy.

What are the building blocks of this new strategy? They are all identified in the Speech from the Throne: deficit reduction, interest rates, tax reform, free trade, private investment and productivity growth. Senator Lavoie-Roux will have seen in this list a manifestation of remarkable continuity in government policy. Failing on my part to find any new elements, I find the recycling of the six-year old plan for economic renewal a manifestation of government management failure on virtually all counts.

I said a good deal during the closing days of the last session in several speeches which turned out to be somewhat of an obituary to Michael Wilson's years as Minister of Finance. By way of a brief summary, let me say that the government has failed to keep the budget deficit below the $30 billion mark despite a long spell of favourable economic conditions. We recall that the first phase of tax reform pumped purchasing power into an already-stretched Canadian economy, with resulting inflationary effects. The government fuelled more inflation with the GST. The result was high interest rates and a recession. In the depth of this recession the economy is still hampered by abnormally high inflation rates and interest rates. We know that Canada's national debt has doubled and, as a country, we have joined the ranks of the largest holders of foreign indebtedness in the world.

Referring to another section of the Speech from the Throne, I would challenge any member on the opposite side to provide justification, in the form of facts and figures, for the unsubstantiated statement in the Speech from the Throne to the effect that the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement has helped to secure the Canadian economy in difficult times. That is a surprising statement. Indeed, government spokesmen have argued with some reason that it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to trace back to the FTA the origin of the loss of jobs, investment and productive capacity to the Canadian economy. It now appears that it is easy to trace back nondescript benefits to the FTA.

• (1605)

As to the statement that for the first time in 16 years Canada has been attracting more direct investment than has been going abroad, it should be read in the context of Canada's dwindling share of the global stock of foreign direct investment, of the lower proportion of direct to portfolio investment and of the large share of direct foreign investment flowing into foreign acquisitions and takeovers in Canada. All of these points were made, and I hope documented, in my speech of April 9 on foreign indebtedness.

Those with long memories will have noticed that one feature of the 1984 economic renewal plan was dropped from the new strategy, namely, investment in research and development. On this score the government record of cuts and broken promises is so clear that the silence on the subject comes as no surprise.

I want to say one good thing about the economic portion of the Speech from the Throne. I am referring to its advocacy of a single integrated market for Canada. That was urged upon the government at a time when the government itself was totally pre-occupied with its FTA negotiations with the United States and failed to pay any attention to the necessity of integrating the Canadian market. We will want to watch closely how the government intends to make up for lost time.

Just a word about Canadian foreign policy: The last great pillar of wisdom in the 1984 Speech from the Throne was renewed Canadian internationalism. In subsequent years the government did include, in Speeches from the Throne, observations on foreign policy which reflected its preoccupations of the time.

It is not my intention to make a long speech and to discuss the record of the government in foreign policy. My point is that at no time since 1984 has the state of the world held greater promise of change and progress. I have in mind the end of the cold war and the beneficial effects on Eastern Europe. I also have in mind the opportunity to deal with aggression thanks to a worldwide security system based on the United Nations. I have in mind the lessons of the Persian Gulf War and renewed efforts to bring peace to the Middle East, and, perhaps of greater importance than all, the progress of the cause of human rights and of democracy as foundations for a new world order.

I am sure we all agree that these are challenging times and that Canada should be at the forefront of a new quest for peace and security as it always has been. Perhaps the most disappointing aspect of the Speech from the Throne is that the government should have chosen this time to ignore or, worse, to cover in a couple of trite sentences the world dimensions in which our future as a country will be shaped. This will serve probably as a dramatic reminder of the changing Canadian position in, and sense of responsibility towards, the world.

The government did remind us that Canada is inescapably part of the global economy, but it has done so solely in an economic context in which the competitiveness of others is viewed as a threat which we must meet with increased productivity. If this is indeed the end of how we should feel towards the rest of the world, then let me say that we have already lost the Canada we were proud of. This inward-looking stance is not compatible with the recent discourse of a government which recently brought Canada into war allegedly on behalf of the United Nations.

We also should be somewhat concerned about the statements made recently by the Prime Minister in Hong Kong and Japan in which he denigrated before an international audience financial policies and performances in Canada. Such statements made abroad do damage to Canada and carry a heavy cost to our reputation. Probably as an indication of what appears to be disorder or disarray in the management of foreign policy we have the disgraceful Al-Mashat affair, with ministers refusing to bear ministerial responsibility for their department's operations after their own fumbling has been amply demonstrated. We have unsightly finger-pointing among senior officials who seem to have lost, under ministerial pressure, a professional sense of responsibility towards their own colleagues. What a lamentable insight into the state of disrepair and moral bewilderment that is afflicting a department that once ranked among the finest instruments of Canadian government policy.

There is much more to be said in the field of foreign policy. Perhaps at a later date I will attempt to stimulate a discussion on foreign policy.

However, in conclusion, honourable senators, I want to deal with that portion of the Speech from the Throne entitled "Changing the Way Ottawa Works." Among the statements made in that section there is, first, a statement:

> There is a need for change in the way Parliament does business and in the way governments conduct their affairs.

Later on:

> My government will propose further reforms so that all Members of Parliament can fulfil better their obligations to their constituents.

It may be that a purist like Senator Olson would argue that senators are ,embers of Parliament. I agree with him, and probably this sentence is applicable to senators as well; but whatever doubt may exist about that sentence, the next paragraph makes the relevance of the Senate very evident in the section, "Changing the Way Ottawa Works." I quote:

• (1615)

> The respect of the people for Parliament and Parliamentarians is essential for a healthy democracy.

I believe that to be correct. I believe also that respect for Parliament and parliamentarians has declined, and I touched upon that in my speech on Tuesday. The Speech from the Throne goes on:

> But the appearance, and sometimes the reality, of excessive party discipline and over-zealous partisanship, of empty posturing and feigned outrage have eroded that respect in Canada. Members will be asked, therefore, to consider new procedures for assessing legislation, for raising grievances on behalf of constituents, and for questioning government.

The Senate is now being asked to consider new procedures for assessing legislation, for raising grievances on behalf of constituents, and for questioning the government. All of these new procedures are contained in the report which is now before the Senate and which contains fundamental and sweeping changes to the way Parliament does business and certainly to the way the Senate will do its business.

For that reason I would like to spend just a moment on that particular aspect of "Changing the Way Ottawa Works." There is a sequence of events in what is happening to the Senate. The government, not satisfied with attaining a plurality in the Senate through the addition of eight new senators in a manner which was roundly condemned as immoral by the majority of the people of Canada, still insecure in its ability to manage the Senate with a new plurality, having acquired the total acquiescence of the Speaker in all of its desires, now proceeds to concoct in private what the Speech from the Throne describes as ways in which Parliament should do its business.

These new proposals were concocted in secret by a Conservative caucus, which makes one laugh when the word "transparency" is used by the chairman of the Rules committee. There is no precedent in the history of the Canadian Parliament for its rules to be changed in discussions conducted solely in private by one party in the chamber. There is absolutely no precedent for that. If these proposals are accepted they will change dramatically the nature of the Senate and they will make it virtually impossible for a meaningful opposition to exist. A nominal opposition will exist but if we believe, as we have done historically, that an Official Opposition should have ways and means of influencing events through the rules of Parliament, then that possibility virtually disappears.

Senator Robertson, I think unfairly, told us the other day that we have expressed our indignation at events simply because we were losing power in the committees. Well, that does not do any credit to us or to her, because all of us understand the realities of politics and we understand that power shifts—and it ought to shift in any organized political system. In my view, any single senator who would get outraged over losing power in committees is clearly quite an amateur in politics. That is not what bothered me and that is not what bothered my colleagues. What bothered us is the fact that the government assumed unilaterally a majority on the Selection committee without consultation with the opposition, without having a majority in the Senate, having only a minority. That is the source of the difficulty.

That assumption of that majority on the Selection committee and on the other committees, is not justified by precedent or by fairness. Let me briefly recall for honourable senators the situation with respect to the Senate and representation of parties in 1984 when the first session began on September 30. In the Senate there were 64 Liberals and 23 Conservatives. The Liberals had the majority, not only overall, but it had 41 more members than the Conservative Party. In a spirit of what I still think was generosity and fairness, the committees were established with membership of 12, assigning seven Liberals and five Conservatives. With 23 members in the Senate it was arranged that the Conservatives would have five representatives on the committees. I think it was generous and, at the minimum, fair, maybe excessively fair.

We come to the new situation in this session when the Conservatives, at that time, had a majority of four—not 41—and they take a majority on the selection committee, without consultation, and take a majority on all the other committees.

Forty-one to four, that is the difference. That is why we feel we were screwed, to put it bluntly; and that is the source of the indignation, because fairness and parliamentary practice were not observed.

Honourable senators, just to make it clear again, as Senator Frith made it clear, the Liberals did attend the Selection committee and Liberals did nominate members for each of the committees. The Conservative majority defeated all those nominations except in the case of the committee on Internal Economy when they decided to reduce the number in accordance with their own prescription for what ought to be the system. But not a single person was nominated for any of the other committees by the Selection committee.

Senator Murray: At Senator Frith's insistence.

Senator MacEachen: Despite Senator Frith's insistence, the Internal Economy committee at that point did the mature thing in nominating a slate for the Internal Economy committee. Had good management, goodwill and good judgment prevailed in the councils of the majority the same thing would have happened for all the other committees. Instead, we had all the other committees reported without a single nominee from the Selection committee.

Senator Murray: It's not too late.

• (1625)

Senator MacEachen: When the report of the Selection committee came to the Senate, I appealed to the government to send that report back, rectify the omission and place Liberals on the list. But that was turned down by the government.

Senator Murray: We offered to do it on the spot.

Senator Barootes: Twice.

Senator Murray: Twice.

Senator MacEachen: That offer was turned down. All the government had to do was say, "Yes, we will send this report of the Selection committee back to the committee for reconsideration." That was not done. I then appealed to the Speaker on a Point of Order. We have the incredible result that, in order to reach a favourable judgment for the government, the Speaker imported a new word into the standing orders. The standing orders were rewritten to accommodate the result.

Senator Frith: He is an old hand at that.

Senator MacEachen: No attention was paid to the argument of consent; no attention was paid to what I consider still to be a very legitimate question: How can you have a quorum in a committee of nine when the rule clearly states that it must be a quorum in a committee of 14? That is all brushed aside. Well, all right, I can understand that, in the Selection committee, matters move very rapidly. The report landed in the Senate and here an opportunity was missed to rectify the situation.

The Standing Rules and Orders committee then met in circumstances that we all would like to forget last Tuesday, when Senator Robertson was made chairman of the committee. Senator Corbin, as chairman of our caucus, wrote to the chairman and appealed to her not to proceed with the work of the committee until the Selection committee could nominate Liberals to the committee. It was a last chance. I will read the letter to you. It states:

> Dear Senator Robertson:
> Now that you have been chosen Chairman of the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, I am writing you to request that you not begin work until the Senate has dealt with nominations by the Committee of Selection of Liberal Senators to sit on your committee.

That was an appeal to rectify the omission—that is to say, "Put some Liberals on your committee through the Selection Committee."

Senator Simard: That was a stalling tactic.

Senator MacEachen:

> There are presently sitting in the Senate 49 members of the Liberal caucus. Today, it is 48. Not one of them has been nominated by the Committee of Selection and subsequently approved by the Senate to serve on the committee that you chair.

Senator Perrault: Unbelievable. Dreadful.

Senator MacEachen: That is a statement of fact. The letter then goes on to say:

> To proceed with the work of the committee, without remedying this imbalance would be to ignore principles of fair play and adequate party representation on committees.

In this letter Senator Corbin was not relying on technical rules, he was asking the question: Is it fair to proceed with a sweeping change of the rules in the absence of a party which—at that time—has 49 senators sitting in the Senate? Is it fair and is it in accordance with parliamentary democracy that the rules can be revised in the absence of the major party in opposition, which is only short of equality by four members from the party with plurality? How could you ignore that?

The chairman of the committee refused to deal with that matter. She wrote a letter in which there are a number of factual errors. But she rebuffed this further appeal that we made to be put on the committee so that we could participate.

It is interesting that there was powerful symbolism on that Tuesday in Ottawa. In the Senate there was a one-party committee changing the rules; in the House of Commons there was a witness from the top level of the government testifying that ministers had met and had written an apology for bureaucrats, which was presented to them for their acquiesence. A powerful symbolism occurred, because here in Canada we were re-enacting those vile practices that now have been abandoned even in Eastern Europe. The one-party rule and the public apology.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Simard: You did not have to do that.

Senator MacEachen: The public apology was made in public—

Senator Baroutes: What imagination!

Senator MacEachen: —extracted in private. That is what happened that day. There is no possible reason for Senator Baroutes' reaction except that he is ashamed of what went on—andhe should be.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator MacEachen: That is what happened. The one-party committee on this side and the extracted apology on the other side.

Senator Frith: Exactly.

Senator MacEachen: They are all symbols of a form of government that is now disappearing. But you do not like that. Of course you do not.

Senator Simard: Is that your best shot today?

Senator MacEachen: No. That is not even a shot. That is a fact. You had a one-party committee working on this side and you had an official on the other side testifying that two servants of the government had been told they had apologized, which they had not. They were asked to condone the release of an apology that they had not made. Those are the facts.

Senator Frith: And they find it funny.

Senator MacEachen: Those are the facts. It still bedevils the government.

Senator Frith: They find it amusing.

Senator MacEachen: The conduct in the Al-Mashat affair is destroying the government on the other side.

Let me get back to this situation: If you want me to lower the tone, I will do it.

You have produced the rules. You have produced them in your caucus; pushed them through a one-party committee; and now you are putting them before the Senate. We on this side have been totally excluded from the process. We have not been part of it.

Senator Simard: You were not at the first meeting.

Senator MacEachen: We have not had an opportunity to participate in the committee. We have not had an opportunity to inform ourselves fully about these rules. In fact, we have been told indirectly that these rules must be put through before the end of next week. That is what we have been told indirectly.

You have built for yourselves minefields all over the place. Even a cursory reading of the rules shows that you have built into them a number of potential minefields which will sow confusion, ambiguity and possibly chaos in the Senate. That's what you have done. Those of us who have participated, as I and Senator Stewart have in basic rule changes in the House of Commons, know perfectly well that even the work of an all-party committee extending over months does not remove all of the difficulties and that some of them have to be removed after prolonged debate in the House of Commons. Our Conservative friends believe that they can do all of this in private. They do not even consult the Clerk. They have a private official, about whom we know very little, to advise them, and these are to become the rules of the Senate.

• (1635)

Let me give an illustration of how it works. Let us suppose these rules had been in effect today. How would we have conducted our business when I rose to pay my tribute to Senator Croll? Let me tell you. I would have to rise under "Senators' Statements"and I would be limited to three minutes. If I wanted to go beyond three minutes I would have to seek the consent of the Senate and any one senator could deny me that consent. As it happened, I spoke for more than three minutes and Senator Murray spoke for more than three minutes. However, if these rules had been in effect, both of us would have had to interrupt our tributes to ask permission, which could be denied by any single senator. That is the removal of a very important right that senators now have; but it is to be removed, and if I wished to speak beyond three minutes in tribute to Senator Croll I would have to ask for the consent of every other senator, one of whom could say no. Under the rules, the period for "Senators' Statements" is limited to 15 minutes. The tributes would have to end after 15 minutes. At that point Senator Molson was two minutes into his comments. At that point, as I followed the proceedings, his comments would be abruptly stopped by the rule which allows only 15 minutes and he could resume them the next day.

Is that what we want? I do not think it is. Senator Molson could not even ask the Senate for permission to continue. Under these rules the only person who could ask to go beyond the 15 minutes is either of the whips, who would have to go to the Speaker and say, "Will you extend it beyond 15 minutes?" After having received the request, assuming that somehow Senator Molson was able to communicate his request to Senator Phillips, Senator Phillips would go to the Chair and request that the Chair ask the Senate if we could have more than 15 minutes. We could go to a maximum of 45 minutes.

Senator Frith: Then he has to put it to the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: Then the Speaker has to put it to the Senate and any one of us could say no.

Suppose that we did not say no and said to go on to the maximum, which is 45 minutes. That could happen; but by my reckoning today Senator Molson would have been cut off two minutes into his speech and any one of us could have prevented him from continuing, even if one of the whips agreed to ask the Senate.

In any event, under these rules, no matter what leave was given, Senators Grafstein, Graham and Fairbairn would have had no chance whatsoever to speak—none at all. Now, is that what we want? What was wrong with how we conducted our business today? That's one example. There are many others that I could produce.

I say there are all kinds of difficulties here, all kinds of problems. I think it's a very unhappy state of affairs for all of us. I think it could be salvaged. I think you ought not to proceed with this motion now, but that you should hold it over until the fall.

Senator Simard: Which year?

Senator MacEachen: This year. If I may make a suggestion, this period will have a number of benefits. The first benefit is that it will ensure that senators have an opportunity of understanding how their rights may be affected by these rule changes. I have given one example: Whereas Senator Molson normally would have an unlimited right, he would be cut off, or would have to obtain consent through a whip, which could be denied by any single senator. That is a the loss of a big right. Is it necessary? Why should we want to cut him off, or cut anyone off? Do we need more time? What do we need all this time for? Why must we cut down to three minutes. What is it for? To do what?

I suggest that honourable senators look at the Senate sittings this year. On January 14 the Senate sat for one hour and 30 minutes. Are we cutting this down so that the sitting that day would be 45 minutes? In the month of January we sat 9 or 10 days for a total of 37 hours. Do we want to cut down the few speeches that were made in that period to three minutes so that we would sit not 37 hours in January but 32 hours or 29 hours? In the month of February we sat for eight hours and 20 minutes. Do we need to cut down the length of speeches in order to reduce that time?

I think there has been no relationship between the institutional facts and the rules. If we were sitting to the maximum, if we were even putting in an eight-hour day and a 40-hour week, we might say to ourselves that we were talking too long; but I do not know of many senators who speak at length here. I am probably the worst; but I do not speak every day, sometimes weeks go by when I do not make a speech. Others rarely speak, and now we are proposing cutting it down. I do not understand it.

• (1645)

I think we all should understand this a bit more and that we should not proceed with it right now. Why can you not put it over until the fall so that we can understand what we are doing. I do not think that rule changes should be rushed through at any time, and they certainly should not be rushed through unless their consideration has had the benefit of every party and every senator in the Senate. You have not had the benefit of our views at all. I think the Selection committee should meet again. It should put Liberals on the committee and that the reinvigorated committee should look at some of the fundamentals involved in these rule changes. Is it right that the Constitution of the Senate is being changed? We all ought to look at that issue more leisurely.

So I am saying that the situation can be salvaged, and that it can be salvaged in the way I have described. If it is, we would not have the uncertainty we have today as to the impact of the proposed rules, and we would not have the kind of result that I have described that would have occurred today had the new rules been in effect during the paying of tributes to the late Senator Croll. I have exhausted my three minutes.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I intend to move the adjournment of this debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, but before I do so—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are you closing the debate? Did you start the debate?

Senator Murray: No.

Senator Frith: And you have not spoken?

Senator Murray: No. The debate will not close until the eighth day. Normally, the Leader of the Opposition and I speak two days after the Throne Speech is delivered on leaders' day.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government would allow me a few minutes to continue this particular item under the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it would normally be the case that once the Opposition has spoken in a debate of this kind, then the government does. I had intended to make a few very brief remarks and then adjourn the debate, as Senator MacEachen did the other day, and resume my comments the next day that we debate this matter. What is the honourable senator proposing?

Senator Frith: He wants to join the debate. This is the sixth day.

Senator Buckwold: I appreciate the courtesy of the Leader of the Government in this particular matter, probably one of the few courtesies we have seen extended in this chamber recently.

Senator Frith: It is quite unnecessary; you still do not need his permission to speak, unless it is under the new rules.

Senator Murray: I could have moved the adjournment.

Senator Buckwold: I spoke earlier today on a rather sad and depressed note as a result of the passing of a dear friend. I want now to talk about that part of the Speech from the Throne entitled "Ways Parliament Should Do Its Business," and I find myself not just depressed but feeling almost disconcerted after a lifetime of public service which seems to be, under the proposed rule changes, at a dead end. Of what purpose is this second chamber to the citizens of Canada when every aspect of any possible muscle in the chamber on the part of the opposition has been removed in a vindictive and unprecedented manner with these poorly-thought-out procedural changes in the proposed rules?

Not long ago we supported the Senate as an institution because we all said, at one time or another, that without a Senate, even with our limited ability to do do what we would like to do in some cases, there would not at least be that potential to protect the citizens of Canada from the unrestrained power of a Prime Minister with a majority, a majority that follows the dictates of his whip.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Speaking of a majority, is the honourable senator talking about the Liberal majority that was used on September 27, 1990 in the committee over which he presided? Is this the Liberal political morality that you are advocating?

Senator Perrault: You are just embarrassed with the whole mess!

Senator Buckwold: I will tell you something: Any criticism of me as the chairman of that particular committee—

Senator Simard: You should be the last one to talk about oppression!

Senator Buckwold: —in comparison with the way that Senator Robertson has carried on with her committee has to make me look like a two-bit piker. Believe me, I am just a beginner on how to override the rules and wishes of this assembly.

Let me continue. I started out by saying that there is no more powerful political leader in the free democratic world than a Prime Minister in Canada with a reasonable majority in the House of Commons.

Senator Simard: Talk about your own actions last year!

Senator Perrault: Stay on the subject here!

Senator Buckwold: We will come to that.

Senator Cools: Senator Simard wants to speak.

Senator Buckwold: Why do I say that? Because the minute anyone in the caucus of the government in the House of Commons is not prepared to follow the line on a reasonably important issue, out he or she goes. We saw that during the GST debate where two members were expelled because they would not support the government. Of course, in the House of Commons members of cabinet are literally sworn to cabinet solidarity. Any cabinet minister who does not support his Prime Minister will automatically lose his cabinet position.

Honourable senators, the only potential restraint that we have in the Canadian system today is this chamber. I am not talking about Liberals, Conservatives or any other political party. All I am saying is that surely there should be the opportunity for full discussion and no unreasonable curbing of debate. There should be the opportunity to carry on discussion, ad nauseam if necessary, in order to protect the interests of the citizens of this country and to provide the kind of good government to which they are entitled. Under the rules proposed, as I see them, we might as well go home. We will go through a few motions, do our little song and dance, go into our little committee and, after a few minutes, everything will be over. There will be no opportunity for amendment; none.

• (1655)

You are wiping out any opportunity for reasonable change to legislation to protect the interests of the people of this country. I am astounded that reasonable people who sit on the other side, in a vituperative kind of get-even philosophy, will say, "This is what we are going to do because we don't like the actions of the opposition as we have seen them proceed." Believe me, that is a small price to pay to protect the interests of the citizens of Canada in the legislative process that goes on in this country.

Following along the lines of the remarks made by Senator MacEachen, I would say that a good deal more thought had better be given to those rules. It is unthinkable to me that with no discussion, with no wide review and no expert advice, we should suddenly be presented with a list of rule changes that completely destroys the effectiveness, the purpose, indeed the destiny, of this chamber. I do not know why we would draw our salaries here to go through the kind of procedures that the government is anticipating in this Senate knowing that legislation will go exactly as the government wants it to go. If that is a rule, then I do not anticipate that this, will be a very effective chamber.

I plead with those on the other side to consider the representation made by Senator MacEachen to have an opportunity to cool off a little bit and to take another look at the suggested rules. Indeed, senators opposite should talk to the opposition and give us an opportunity to look at this because there will be a day when they will be in opposition.

Senator Cools: Soon.

Senator Buckwold: And I hope it is soon. The fact is that this chamber will have to live with those rules that are being imposed unilaterally in a manner that is completely dictorial and, in my opinion, unacceptable.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

(Later)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as I indicated earlier, I intend to move the adjournment of this debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I certainly do not intend to anticipate, as the Leader of the Opposition did, and as Senator Buckwold has just done, the debate which, I trust, will begin in a little while.

Senator Corbin: It was a legitimate intervention.

Senator Murray: I quite agree, but I do not intend to anticipate that debate. I hope I will have the opportunity to take part in it in due course.

I do, however, want to make one or two brief comments in respect of Senator MacEachen's earlier remarks.

First of all, I think it is important to state for the record that on three occasions, up to May 30, we asked the opposition to nominate members to the various committees. At the Committee of Selection the Internal Economy committee was constituted at its full complement because the members went down the list and voted, as I recall, eight Conservatives, six Liberals and one Independent member to that committee. I listened, through the machine on my desk, to the proceedings and, when the time came to deal with the other committees, Senator Frith insisted that there be two votes, that the votes be held on the slate, and that there be no question of going senator by senator and nominating five or six Liberal senators to the committee. He insisted on proceeding by voting for slates, and the Chair acceded to his insistence. That is the way it was done.

Quite apart from what happened in the committee, on two occasions here during the debate on May 30 it was suggested that either the Senate might adjourn for a few minutes while the Selection committee met to bring those committees to their full complement and receive nominations from Liberal senators, or that honourable senators opposite might amend the motion to add the names of Liberal senators to the various committees. I simply want, for the record, to read to senators the exchange between Senator Phillips and Senator MacEachen at page 98 of the Debates of the Senate from May 30, where Senator Phillips, in part, said:

> I would just like to repeat my offer to those opposite and hope that they would nominate senators to serve on the various committees. If they wish to nominate—

Then Senator MacEachen intervened by saying:

> The Speaker has just ruled that you do not need us, or the Senate does not need us. He has made a ruling that we are superfluous to the Senate, in his view.

Very shortly after that Senator Phillips said:

> I invite the Leader of the Opposition to amend the motion before the Senate to bring the committees up to what I consider to be full complement. We on this side will accept the nominations without debate, and we can proceed forthwith.

That request was rebuffed by the opposition with the results that we had.

Senator MacEachen: It was a proposal that could not be put into effect. Under the rules it would have to go back to the committee.

Senator Murray: Of course it would have to go back to the committee, and we spoke of adjourning for the length of time it would take to convene that committee and to get six or five good Liberals on it.

• (1705)

Senator MacEachen: That was a totally rhetorical offer.

Senator Murray: No, it was not a totally rhetorical offer. It was a very sincere offer.

Senator Frith: You already had your majority, and then you said, "Let's invite them." We know what you are saying. What a crocodile offer!

Senator Murray: The honourable senators will have to choose sooner or later. Yesterday, notice was given by the Chairman of the Selection Committee, Senator Phillips, of a meeting to be held today to nominate members to two other important committees of this place, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. The Liberal Party boycotted the meeting.

Senator Frith: Come on! If you want to put the facts on the record—

Senator Murray: No Liberal was present at the meeting of the Selection Committee.

Senator Frith: Come on! I will give you some facts on the record. You phoned and asked us. We said we had already settled a caucus meeting for the morning.

Senator Murray: A few of you could have attended the Selection Committee meeting. There will be other meetings of the Selection Committee and honourable senators opposite will have every opportunity to attend, and I trust they will take advantage of them.

Senator Frith: With the number that you will permit, yes.

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, there is no point crying about the make-up of the Selection Committee.

Senator Frith: No. That's right! You have usurped that one.

Senator Murray: I can take honourable senators back and show them the composition of the Selection Committee in the Senate and the Striking Committee in the other place under various minority and majority situations here and there, and they will find that there is ample precedent for a situation such as we have today.

Senator Frith: None!

Senator Murray: My friend has said that several times on the record, and he is wrong.

Senator Frith: I am not wrong. There has not been a situation with that balance.

Senator Murray: I will bring the precedents in.

Senator Frith: You know that is not true. It is in the records.

Senator Murray: When I resume the debate, I will bring the precedents.

Senator Frith: Please do, because you are wrong. You take the position that there was one time when there was a majority in the opposition, and that is not the precedent.

Some Hon. Senators: Order! Order!

Senator Frith: When someone stands up and says he wants to put the facts on the record and then stops doing it, I intend to interrupt him.

Senator Cools: Good for you!

Senator Frith: If he wants to say he will put lies on the record, then that would be fine.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will not pursue the matter now.

Senator Frith: Good.

Senator Murray: But when I resume the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I will present the precedents from this place and from the other place. In any case, I will tell the honourable senator now, as Senator Doody told him in the committee, that it makes absolutely no sense, in a situation where we have 53 senators and they have 49, to expect that on the Selection committee it would be 50/50.

Senator Frith: You didn't mind it in 1984, I noticed! You didn't mind taking your five when you only had 24 members.

Senator Murray: It makes no sense at all. However, again, I do not wish to anticipate the debate on the report of the Rules Committee.

Senator MacEachen mentioned a situation such as we had today with tributes. He knows, as I know and we all know, that there has never been a time—and never will be a time—in this place when an honourable senator is cut short in attempting to pay tribute to a deceased colleague.

Senator Frith: That's not right! Don't worry about abusing the rules. As the Tories say, "We will never abuse them."

Senator Murray: If the honourable senator wants to relate the rules to the way we did business on a particular day, I invite him to go back to Tuesday, when honourable senators opposite took almost three hours in the oral Question Period to anticipate a debate on a motion which was still a notice of motion—cross examination and debate on a committee report which was down for debate the next day!

Senator Frith: In your opinion.

Senator Murray: Almost three hours in the oral Question Period! Now, if that does not show the need for new rules in this place, I do not know what does.

Senator MacEachen: What was wrong with that? What was wrong with a three-hour Question Period? We did not sit beyond 6 o'clock.

Senator Frith: What would you be saying?

Senator MacEachen: Were we supposed to get out at 2:30?

Senator Murray: What was the purpose of a three-hour Question Period about a report that was down for debate on the next day?

Senator Frith: Because it is down in the rules. I know exactly what was wrong with it: You did not like it.

Senator Murray: In any self-respecting parliamentary body, there are limits on Question Period and there are rules on the Question Period.

Senator Frith: Nothing to do with saving time.

Senator Murray: If my friends opposite would abide by the present rules governing the Question Period, we would have had no need to bring in a stricter regimen, but they will not abide by them.

Senator Frith: Oh, yes! You were provoked!

Senator MacEachen: What do you intend to do with all of this time you are saving?

Senator Murray: If honourable senators want to go back even prior to Tuesday, they should go back to last fall. It is true that if these new rules go through, it will no longer be possible for honourable senators to read thousands of names and addresses into the record for the sole purpose of preventing the Senate from ever reaching Orders of the Day.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: That will be impossible under the new rules.

Senator Frith: Now we are finding out. Keep it up! The truth is now coming out! This is a good time for confession. Now we understand. You're getting down to the facts.

Some Hon. Senators: Order! Order!

Senator Murray: Nor will it be possible, in the guise of questions of privilege, to go on for days and weeks with never a motion being made, no resolution of the question of privilege, all in the interests of preventing the Senate from getting to the Orders of the Day.

Senator Olson: You are too suspicious!

Senator Murray: No longer will it be possible, if these rules go through, to ring the bells from Thursday to Tuesday. That does not make sense in any self-respecting Parliament.

Senator Frith: No Tories ever did that! Tories would never ring bells! That's what provoked you? Tories don't like the ringing of bells, your colleagues having done it for weeks? Talk about transparency!

Senator Murray: It will no longer be possible for honourable senators to give the Senate that good dose of anarchy that Senator Frith boasted and bragged about last fall when he was speaking to the media.

Senator Frith: It will all be through the goose, as requested by the government.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again, I hope to have the opportunity of participating in the debate on the rules, but in short, if these rules go through, we will have given ourselves in the Senate the basic rules that exist in every other Parliament and in every other legislative assembly that any of us have ever been in.

Senator Frith: I hope when you come back, you bring some facts.

Senator Murray: I move the adjournment of this debate.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, that the debate be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Senator Corbin: Is this a motion that is votable under our current rules?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I didn't ask for a vote. I simply moved the honourable senator's motion.

Senator Corbin: You want to know whether we agree?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Yes, Senator Corbin.

Senator Corbin: So this motion is votable according to our current rules?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: As long as the new rules have not been adopted, the Senate is sitting according to the old rules.

Senator Corbin: Under the new rules, would the procedure be the same, Mr. Speaker?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The question is premature, so I won't answer that.

Senator Corbin: Very well.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before I forget, I want to say a word about the business for tomorrow.

The latest report I have indicates that there will probably be a House Order in the other place this afternoon respecting the debate on the bill to end the lockout of the grain handlers at the Port of Vancouver. I understand the minister, Mr. Danis and representatives of the other parties in the House are meeting, or were meeting a short time ago, with regard to the order of debate and so on for tomorrow. That being the case, unless I hear otherwise in the next little while, prudence would dictate that we make arrangements to meet here tomorrow at the appropriate time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Did the Leader of the Government say he heard about a House Order?

Senator Murray: I understand that there probably will be one, but one can never take anything for granted.

Senator Frith: When will they deal with it?

Senator Murray: They will deal with it tomorrow through all three stages.

Senator Frith: At what time tomorrow?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is what they are talking about now.

Senator Murray: At the appropriate time this afternoon, the Deputy Leader of the Government will move that we adjourn until 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. I suppose we could meet earlier, but our hunch, on the basis of experience, is that they will not have passed that legislation much before mid-afternoon.

Also to be considered are the travel arrangements in connection with Senator Croll's funeral.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

On the Order:

Consideration of the First Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders (Recommendations concerning the Rules of the Senate), presented in the Senate on 11th June, 1991.—(Honourable Senator Robertson).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question of privilege relating to this order. I can most succinctly put it before you by quoting and putting on the record a letter that I sent today to Senator Robertson, Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Greene. It is dated today and it reads as follows:

I understand the records of The Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, improperly set up by the Committee of Selection—

Senator Simard: What a joke!

Senator Frith: I will take as long as you like.

Senator Simard: This is a demonstration of your respect for the rules?

Senator Frith: I believe Senators Simard and Doyle have a little more mumbling left in them. I cannot hear what you are saying, Senator Doyle.

Senator Doyle: I know you can't, and that is very frustrating for me!

Senator Frith: So it seems.

Senator Corbin: You are interrupting. Keep quiet!

Senator Barootes: The kettle calling the pot black!

• (1715)

Senator Frith: It is addressed to Senator Robertson, Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Green.

I understand the records of The Committee on Standing Rules—

Senator Simard: Dispense with it. Table it.

Senator Frith: It is addressed to Senator Robertson, Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Green.

I understand the records of The Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, improperly set up by the Committee of Selection, show me as Deputy Chairman.

I am not.

In my opinion the Committee itself has no status, and even if it had, my status would only be under Rule 68 as an alternate to Senator MacEachen.

[Senator Murray.]

Those purporting to sit on this so-called Committee had no authority to "elect" me Deputy Chairman.

I want it to be clear that I am in no way associated with this "Committee", its proceedings or "Report" attempting to impose a thoughtless Senate Conservative Caucus' package of arbitrary and unconstitutional rules on the Senate".

That is my point of privilege.

Senator MacEachen: Well said.

Some Hon. senators: Hear! Hear!

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: I wish to respond to that question of privilege, honourable senators, because I just received the senator's letter. I think it must be on the record that ex officio members have been elected deputy chairmen of Senate committees before. In fact, the honourable senator was the Deputy Chairman of the Internal Economy Committee at one time, and Senator Doody was the Deputy Chairman of Internal Economy in the last session.

If you would like to check Beauchesne's Fifth Edition at page 192, Senator Frith, citation 582 provides for the election of members in absentia.

Of course, any member is free to decline the position, as Senator Frith apparently has done by means of this letter. If he could bring this letter to the next Committee meeting, we will accept his resignation. We were just trying to get the Liberals involved in the work of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am prepared to virtually leave it at that. I do not believe that Senator Robertson has really dealt with the main points that are contained in my point of privilege. However, we have her observations, we have mine and I wanted that clarified for the record.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

CONSIDERATION OF FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, (Recommendations concerning the Rules of the Senate), presented in the Senate on 11th June 1991.—(Honourable Senator Robertson).

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson moved the adoption of the report. She said: Honourable senators, on Tuesday I had the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders to the Senate. The Rules Committee is vested with the important task of examining and reviewing the rules for the operation of the Senate. As a Committee, we met for nine hours and five minutes in public sessions over the last week and reached a consensus on the task before us. We wanted to bring forward proposals for amendments, where required, and recommend new rules which would improve the overall efficiency, effectiveness, accountability and transparency of the Senate.

I thank Senator Molson for his valuable contribution and appreciate Senator Olson's brief attendance. However, it is regrettable that other members of the Official Opposition deliberately chose not to participate in the work of the Committee.

While it was beyond our mandate to discuss Senate reform in a broader constitutional context, the Committee considered that it was essential to make meaningful change where we could. Honourable senators, I would suggest to you that now is the time for change. The proposed amendments and new rules are important, not only to the Senate as an institution and to senators, but to the Canadian public who have, of late, lost a good deal of faith in their governing institutions. The Senate is certainly no exception. Our effectiveness and credibility has suffered no less than that of other government institutions.

The Rules of the Senate have traditionally been characterized by a large measure of flexibility, and were, with the consent of all senators, open to a good deal of interpretation. When the Senate operated on a consensual basis, the business of the Senate was conducted without much concern for the strict application of the rules. Indeed, in the strict application, they were rarely followed. The order and the completion of Senate business was based on commonality of conduct and consent.

As anyone who has followed Senate activity over the past two years can attest, the Senate has become much more partisan, and that is unfortunate. Consensus is, at times, difficult to achieve. The existing rules have proven to be outdated and inadequate for dealing with legislation where consensus cannot be reached. A good deal of time, effort and money have been wasted over the last two years because of the inadequacy of the rules. If the Senate is to work effectively, it must be equipped with the means to do its job. While there may be some dispute over what exactly our responsibilities are, there can be no doubt that the Senate, as one of the three constituent parts of Parliament, has a duty to reach decisions brought before it.

The proposed rules, as I will discuss later on, address the challenges of dealing with legislation in a more partisan Senate. They clarify and update the rules and reduce the need for endless and countless interpretation. They address the concerns of Canadians by ensuring that their tax dollars will be more wisely and efficiently spent. The proposed amendments bring more transparency to Senate rules so that everyone—senators, the media, the public—will have a better understanding of how the Senate functions. The proposed rules also provide more opportunities for senators to participate in debate and discussion, and after full discussion and debate, the proposed new rules will allow decisions to be made on Senate business.

Your committee believes the proposed rules will be acceptable to both the opposition and to the government. Speaking for the committee, we believe in and support the intent of the proposed rules, as such. We are prepared to respect them whether we sit on the Speaker's right or the Speaker's left, irrespective of the numerical position.

The committee gave careful consideration to the need to ensure that the proposed amendments and new rules are balanced, fair and contribute to a more efficient, effective and open Senate.

Turning to some of the proposed amendments contained in the Rules committee's first report, I will spare you the technicalties and the intricacies. However, I think it is important to provide a brief overview of what the proposed amendments will mean to a typical day in the Senate. While the current rules allow for sittings every day of the week, including Saturday and Sunday, the proposed rules would permit sittings on only Monday to Friday. This would not affect the longstanding Senate practice of sitting from Tuesday to Thursday, of course, if necessary, the Mondays and Fridays could be used. When the Senate sits on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, it would continue to meet at 2:00 in the afternoon.

• (1725)

The proposed rules would see the bells ring at 1:45 for the 2:00 sitting, and the Speaker would be required to enter the Chamber at 2:00 and wait in the Chair until a quorum is noted. This would avoid lengthy delays at the commencement of the sitting. Presently, it is sometimes 2:30 before we get started. After prayers, senators' statements would be called for and would generally be over by 2:20. The daily routine of business would then be called and would probably last until around 2:50, or approximately half an hour, at which time Question Period would be called. The Question Period itself would last for no longer than 30 minutes. Question Period would be followed by delayed answers and Orders of the Day.

Surely, honourable senators, government business must be a top priority. On Thursday, the Deputy Leader of the Government would announce the scheduled business for the next week, allowing senators ample time to prepare. This would permit more concentrated debate on legislation during a given sitting.

If the Senate sits on a Friday, the bells would ring at 8:45 a.m. for the 9:00 a.m. sitting. The routine of business would be the same as that for other days, except that the Senate would generally adjourn at 4:00 in the afternoon, unless the business was concluded earlier. Also while the adjournment could be postponed, it would generally not be extended beyond 10:00 in the evening.

With regard to standing votes, if a standing vote is deferred on a Tuesday, the process of taking the vote would begin at 5:15 p.m. on the Wednesday. The Speaker would interrupt the business at that time and order the bells to ring until 5:30 when the vote would be taken. If the Senate had not completed its business for the day by 6:00, the Speaker would leave the Chair and resume the sitting at 8:00 p.m. The Senate would then continue to consider the Orders of the Day or other business for any length of time until the proposed midnight adjournment. If the Senate sits until midnight, it would adjourn automatically at that time without the need for a motion to that effect. Under certain circumstances, the midnight adjournment could be postponed to complete debate or to continue with Orders of the Day.

These proposed amendments, honourable senators, will allow for more effective planning of Senate business and will result in more orderly and efficient use of time. I am sure that all senators will agree that it is frustrating when we are called back to work only to be dismissed a short time later with nothing accomplished. This lack of certainty has resulted in a great deal of wasted time and taxpayers' dollars, and that situation should be reduced or eliminated with the adoption of the rules in the report.

For example, with regard to the Speaker's postponing the sitting of the Senate, he would exercise his authority only after having consulted with the leaders of the two parties and would do so on the authority of the Rules of the Senate. There is no question that the Constitution provides the Senate with the authority to fix its adjournments and sittings. That being the case, it is equally clear that the Senate can delegate such authority to its presiding officer, and impose conditions on the use of that delegated authority.

The proposed rules require the Speaker to consult with the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the Government. The purpose of such consultations is to seek agreement on an appropriate date for the Senate to meet. Obviously, the Speaker would not act on his own initiative to determine what the date for the next sitting of the Senate should be. If no agreement can be reached, obviously the Senate would meet at the time provided in its adjournment motion.

The report also recommends that the existing practice for initiating pre-study of bills be incorporated in the rules. The proposed amendments would allow for a procedure whereby the subject matter of a bill can be referred to a committee for pre-study. Pre-study of bills will allow for more efficient use of time as a matter thus can be referred to a committee before being introduced in the chamber. Once the bill reaches the Senate, of course, most of the recommendations will have been arrived at in the pre-study mode, allowing for more meaningful debate in the chamber.

One of the ways in which the proposed amendments would contribute to more meaningful debate with the participation of more senators, of course, is the provision for time limits on speeches. By limiting the length of speeches, more senators would have more input into the legislative process. With some exceptions, senators will be permitted 15 minutes to speak to a question. We are recommending that the sponsor of bills and the respondent be given 45 minutes, including any questions, and the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition would have unlimited time.

As honourable senators know, most of the legislatures in Canada, including the House of Commons, have time limits on speeches which ensure that the majority of representatives in any body have an opportunity to participate in the legislative process. Time limits on speeches also ensure that there will be an efficient expenditure of time.

Addressing concerns of openness and accountability, the proposed rules recommend that all meetings of the Senate standing and special committees and sub-committees be held in public, with the exception of those dealing with contract negotiations and the consideration of draft agendas or reports. This also enhances the transparency of Senate operations.

As I stated at the outset, the Rules committee has spent a good deal of time studying the existing rules and drafting the proposed amendments to the rules. Our work has been driven by a desire to propose meaningful amendments which will benefit all senators and will result in a much more efficient Senate and a more effective use of time and money. While we do not know what the future holds for the Senate as we know it, we do know that these proposed amendments will address the serious concerns expressed by many senators and Canadians alike, and they will do so now.

Honourable senators, we are duty bound to ensure that our task of thoughtful review of legislation is carried out to the best of our abilities in an effective and efficient manner. It is a responsibility that none of us takes lightly. It has been apparent to many of us over the last few years that the existing rules make it much more difficult for us to fulfil our obligation to the taxpayers.

The Senate requires new rules which will ensure that our work can be carried out effectively and cost-efficiently. In order to do that, we require clearly defined rules and procedures which are understood by all senators. I would ask, in the interest of this institution, that all members of this chamber put aside partisan motives and take these proposed amendments and new rules into serious consideration. These proposed amendments and new rules will lead to a more effective Senate.

Rules are, by their very nature, meant to ensure order and to protect the interests of everyone whose behaviour the rules are meant to govern. I know we will all agree that there is little point in having rules in place which lack clarity, and therefore are misunderstood, and do not serve the interests of Canadians.

We are an important part of the parliamentary process and, as such, it is imperative that we take our role, and the rules that should govern our institution, seriously. We must operate within a framework of rules which allows us to deal with matters that have to be dealt with in a reasonable timeframe. With this report we have the opportunity to make meaningful changes that will benefit us all. We have the opportunity to demonstrate to Canadians that we are serious about getting our work done. We should seize this opportunity to work toward a more transparent, efficient, effective and accountable Senate.

After those remarks I intended to sit down, honourable senators, but since Senator MacEachen read into the record the letter to myself, as chairman of the Rules committee, from Senator Corbin, I feel it is proper that my response also be read into the record so that all senators will know and understand.

On the same day that I received Senator Corbin's letter, I sent this reply back to him:

Dear Senator Corbin:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter dated June 4, 1991, which I have brought to the attention of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

The committee has instructed me to respond as follows:

> Your committee notes the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders was established by the Senate on May 30, 1991. As you may be aware, a point of order was raised in the Senate on that day to the effect that the Committee of Selection Report on various committees could not be received because it did not contain the nominations of Liberal Senators. The Speaker made a ruling on this point of order to the effect that the Committee of Selection was not obliged to nominate a full complement of Senators for each committee in order for those committees to begin their work.
> The Committee of Selection has nominated a certain number of members to serve on the committees and a quorum in those committees now exists. Moreover, since the report of the Committee of Selection has been adopted by the Senate, all conditions necessary for the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders are now in place, so it can begin its work.
> The "imbalance" to which you refer results, solely, from the fact that the opposition has not yet seen fit to make any nomination to the committees notwithstanding several opportunities to do so. Accordingly, I must point out that the Liberal Leadership in the Senate has the remedy for the "imbalance", you allege exists on this committee, in its own hands.
> While the work of the committee can obviously now proceed, I am instructed to confirm to you that the committee welcomes the participation of any Senator. While the Committee is extremely pleased to have the participation of an Independent Senator, as confirmed by the adoption of the report of the Committee of Selection, it looks forward to receiving nominations of Senators from your Caucus.

I trust that this is satisfactory.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I understand that senators opposite do not wish to participate in the debate at this point. However, there is one of our colleagues who would like to participate, and I would appreciate his being given that opportunity, after which Senator Frith can move the adjournment.

Senator Frith: Yes, of course.

• (1735)

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, thank you very much for hearing me. I particularly wish to thank Senator Frith for the courtesy of allowing me to speak at this time.

I rise to speak on the first report of the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. As a member of that committee I am confident that all members of this chamber will see the wisdom of adopting these new proposed rules.

Senator MacEachen: You are reading non-confidently.

Senator Barootes: I am quite confident, chiefly because I trust to the rational intelligence of my friends opposite.

Although the legislative process in Canada has seen an enormous increase in legislation and work in the past decades, the rules governing our Senate have not kept pace. Various revisions have been of a housekeeping nature. In 1986-89 some changes were made, but the Senate has changed character since then. The flexibility of the existing rules is often open to interpretation and has led to misunderstanding, which should be avoided.

The proposed new rules are designed to be clear, less equivocal and to stand alone as far as possible without need to refer to appendices, references, or practices of other institutions. No doubt they are not perfect and they will not cover every exigency, and will in the future require additional amendments as we see how they work out.

It should be emphasized that they are not meant to be a reform of the Senate.

Senator Cools: Oh!

Senator Barootes: They do not change the powers of the Senate.

Senator Perrault: Oh yes they do.

Senator Barootes: They are a modernization of our operation, management and procedures—

Senator Cools: Organization?

Senator Barootes: —to facilitate legislative efficiency, improve accountability, offer transparency and allow more senators to engage in more debates.

Senator Perrault: I never heard more insults in my life. This is an insult.

Senator Barootes: These changes are internal modernization of our procedures and rules, all within our purview and are not constitutional changes in the Senate.

Senator Cools: Stalinism anticipated!

Senator Barootes: Constitutional changes are left to the people of Canada, who are our masters and our employers.

Senator Perrault: You better make some political changes pretty soon, too.

Senator Barootes: In the partisan Senate of today the lack of clarity in these rules has made for not only endless interpretation but also a good deal of waste of time and money. In May, as was pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition, we met for only a total of 10 hours in nine days of sittings. We need new rules which will bring a more efficient and effective Senate.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear hear!

Senator Barootes: We need rules which everyone—senators, public and media—will understand. We need rules that will permit adequate debate but allow the business of the Senate to be completed in a reasonable time.

Senator Perrault: A more compliant Senate.

Senator Barootes: The proposed rules should not only make for a more efficient use of our time but also a more effective use of taxpayers' dollars, and make us accountable and open to public scrutiny.

The Standing Rules and Orders committee was ever mindful, during the process of developing its recommendations, that any rules must be fair and balanced, taking into account the interests of all senators whether in government or opposition. I believe that the proposed amendments to these rules meet this test, that they are fair and balanced. I and my fellow Progressive Conservative members are fully prepared to live with these rules whether we sit in the government or in opposition, and whether we are in a minority or majority position on either side.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Perrault: Those words will come back to haunt you.

Senator Barootes: However, I should like to—

Senator Frith: A bit more applause to make sure that they get that down.

Senator Barootes: —address the concern that has been expressed by the Liberal opposition regarding the manner in which these rules were created.

Senator Frith: I hope that the record will show that the undertaking just given was greeted with great applause on the other side.

Senator Barootes: What was that? I cannot hear you. I am partially deaf. Thank God I am partially deaf.

Senator Perrault: Too bad you are not blind, to be reading something like that!

Senator Barootes: The Standing Rules and Orders Committee, consisting of eight PC members and one independent, considered these proposed rules over the course of nine hours in public meetings. All of our colleagues, including those in the official opposition, were notified of, and welcome to attend, any of these meeting.

Senator Perrault: Sounds like a paid commercial!

Senator Barootes: The information regarding the proposed amendments to the rules—

Senator Perrault: A paid commercial; that is all it was.

Senator Barootes: —was sent to the leadership of the opposition as soon as it was tabled in the committee. They chose not to participate.

Senator Perrault: Oh dear, yes.

Senator Barootes: One exception was my friend, Senator Olson—

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Barootes: —who participated briefly.

Senator Cools: Take him back!

Senator Barootes: As soon as he was heard to speak—and he was obviously heard via a squawk box in some Liberal's office—in came a gremlin, Senator Buckwold, and snatched him from our midst, and he disappeared.

Senator Buckwold: Some gremlins!

Senator Barootes: I contend that every senator had more than ample opportunity to have input into the process of creating these proposed new rules. It is regrettable and disappointing to me—

Senator Perrault: You look disappointed.

Senator Barootes: —and, indeed, disgraceful—

Senator Perrault: You look heart-broken.

Senator Barootes: —that because of some petulance or imagined pique, the advice and assistance of Liberal senators was not made available to the committee. They boycotted the committee. It is especially regrettable because their forte in this house in the past few years has been demonstrated as interpreters of rules. As we know, by convoluted logic and argument, they have been able to make a Philadelphia lawyer blush with envy as they used their expertise to use and sometimes misuse the present loose rules to the political advantage of their group—

Senator Perrault: Philadelphia lawyer, indeed.

Senator Barootes: —sometimes delaying the consideration of legislation to the point where we could not proceed with the work of the Senate.

Senator Perrault: You are selling the Brooklyn Bridge, too, are you?

Senator Barootes: This activity is available to all sides of the house and also Independent senators.

But the ultimate indignity, the final blow that destroyed all customs, conventions, civility and propriety in this house came to a head with the infamous Buckwold precedent of September 1990 regarding the GST bill. It will become a day of ignominy and shame in the future.

Senator Perrault: Who wrote that stuff, your creative counsel? What public relations agency created that?

Senator Barootes: It became the final element that pointed out the need for internal reform of our Senate rules. It became obvious, when Senator Buckwold dictated the edict as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and that was our final blow to consensus, orderly debate and cooperation. To me it was a devastating incident in the history of this chamber. He chose to draft his committee's report on the GST behind closed doors, without consulting the government members of his committee nor, for that matter, without consulting his own opposition colleagues on the committee. Then to add a little insult to that injury, a limit of no more than six or seven hours was placed on the discussion of a tome of over 300 pages.

Senator Perrault: What bill are you speaking to over there?

Senator Simard: He is counsel for Senator Frith, too.

Senator Buckwold: Will the honourable senator take a question?

Senator Barootes: And then to table that report the next day in the Senate—

Senator Cogger: No.

Senator Barootes: —this action, as far as I can ascertain, is without precedent.

Senator Buckwold: Will the honourable senator entertain a question?

Senator Perrault: No. They are doing away with Question Period.

Senator Barootes: I am not prepared to take questions now, but I would be delighted to hear your views—

Senator Perrault: You are panic-stricken; that is why.

Senator Barootes: —when you participate in this debate on the report of the committee. Please allow me to finish, as we are reaching the end of the hour.

Hon. John B. Stewart: A point of order, Senator Barootes.

Senator Barootes: This action by my dear friend is unprecedented.

Senator Frith: Order!

Senator Stewart: Under the standing orders—that is, the proposed standing orders—your time has expired and I do not give unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

• (1745)

Senator Barootes: Thank you very much. We will entertain comedy at Yuk Yuk's downtown, if you want to try it down there.

To add insult to injury, no more than six or seven hours of discussion were allowed on this tome and it was tabled in the house the next day. It was an unprecedented action, in my opinion.

Senator Frith: And ruled in order by the Speaker.

Senator Barootes: In this action, I can recall our dear friend, the popinjay, the Honourable Deputy Leader of the Opposition, switching from his role as the unreasonable facsimile of Clarence Darrow into one of assuming to be Judge Learned Hand, sitting by our Chairman Buckwold and advising him, by whispers in his ear, as to how he should handle any motion from the government, all of which was ruled out of order.

Senator Frith: And ruled in order by the Speaker.

Senator Barootes: Asking for a little extra time to consider the voluminous report was denied, and all questions of privilege were ruled out of order.

Subsequently, for almost two months, no discussion on the substance of that bill was possible, the opposition taking advantage of their interpretation of the rules to block and paralyse any work on that bill.

Senator Perrault: You did not want a discussion of the substance.

Senator Barootes: The proposed rules in our first report just rendered are meant to rectify the situation in which convoluted logic and fancy interpretations of well-meant rules designed for a Senate which operated previously largely on consensual basis are wide and open, where someone or a party can hijack the Senate to meet their political motives—of your party our ours.

So, honourable senators, as we reflect on the events, the Buckwold putsch of September 1990, let us agree that we require a new process of management and new rules to govern our activity in the Senate.

For efficiency and to ensure that government legislation and government business can be attended to each day, the work of the Senate is going to be divided into two parts: government business and other business.

After the usual routine of business of the day and question period, the government business shall be given, according to the proposed rules, priority in the Orders of the Day. This must be so if we are not to postpone worthwhile legislation which has come to this house.

Had members of the Official Opposition chosen to participate in the committee meetings, they would know that the proposed amendments are meant to allow the business of the Senate to be debated fully and a decision be made to reject, adopt or amend legislation, exactly as the duty of this chamber is outlined in our Constitution. We are a workshop, not a theatre.

It became apparent last fall that the present rules under which the Speaker of the Senate operates will not permit him to maintain order and decorum in certain circumstances. Using the Liberal interpretation of the present rules, a group in the Senate can create the kind of chaos that existed in our chamber last fall for weeks and months on end. Do you really think that democracy was well served by that exhibition?

Senator Cools: Are you asking us? Do you want an answer to that?

Senator Barootes: I do not want to outline examples, but does any one believe that it was a good use of our time and of our taxpayers' money in the chamber?

The Speaker, powerless to intercede except on the request of a senator, found it impossible to maintain propriety and order. The limited changes that we have proposed to the Speaker's authority would permit him, under such circumstance of disturbance, to call for a three-hour recess and allow the passions of the moment to subside.

All other decisions of the Speaker remain subject to appeal, maintaining the longstanding relationship reflected in the current rules between an appointed Speaker and the appointed senators.

Had the Liberals chosen to participate in the committee meetings, they would know that the proposed rules regarding the limits of speech are not meant to stifle or to muffle debate but, rather, to obviate the long speeches which are given by one or two members so that it allows more senators to participate in more debates more meaningfully.

As senators will observe, the speeches of the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition have no limits.

Senator MacEachen: That's a mistake.

Senator Barootes: I would like to correct the assertion of a Liberal senator on Tuesday that the senator's right to raise a question of privilege will be denied under the proposed rules. Indeed, the proposed rules do not deny any senator's right to raise a question of privilege.

Senator Doody: How much longer does the honourable senator feel he will be? May we stop the clock?

Senator Barootes: I would beg the indulgence of honourable senators for about five minutes.

Senator Frith: Drop the word "about" and you are on.

Senator Barootes: I thank honourable senators for their courtesy and generosity of spirit.

I would like to correct the assertion of a Liberal senator about denying questions of privilege. Indeed, the proposed rules do not deny any senator's right to raise a question of privilege. The proposed rules do, however, impose certain reasonable conditions on senators raising questions of privilege. These are: Three hour's written notice, oral notice at the opening of the sitting, and the debate when the Orders of the Day have been completed or at 8 o'clock, whichever comes first. The procedure ensures that all other senators will have ample notice of the question in both languages so that they can prepare to participate in this very serious procedure in the Senate. The proposed procedure permits them to raise these questions of privilege at the earliest opportunity and they will get their hearing. It also ensures that these can be disposed of in an orderly manner.

The practice of requiring a Speaker's finding of a prima facie case for privilege before permitting a motion to be presented to the Senate has already been dealt with by the Senate in the Speaker's ruling of October 4, 1990.

In addition, this is a longstanding requirement in the House of Commons, and is a practice that was made necessary by the regrettable activities that we experienced in our chamber last fall.

I would like also to clarify the right of senators to present petitions. The daily routine of business provides 30 minutes for the presentation of all notices and petitions. During this period, notices and petitions cannot be debated. Under normal circumstances there would be ample time for those senators who wished to present their petitions, and that applies to senators on both sides. Therefore, during the routine business, the practice of reading lengthy lists is being discontinued under the provisions of rule 23. The proposed rule would permit such reports to be deposited with the Clerk and deemed to be tabled. Therefore, the rules will permit more, not less, time for senators who wish to present their petitions.

Had the Liberals chosen to participate they would have known that we also made provision for orderly and definitive voting hours on debatable motions so that these are now postponed until 5.30 p.m. the following day. This will permit those senators away from Ottawa to present themselves and to record their opinion in a vote.

• (1755)

Had they chosen to participate, senators would have known that the provisions for allocation of time would only be used if inordinate delays occur. The government could ask for a time allocation motion to be debated. If approved, it would permit at least a further six hours of debate. Bear in mind that this would be in addition to the preceding lengthy debate which obviously had taken place. Under these rules this would require a five-day process for the fulfilment of such a procedure after full debate. It is important to keep in mind that this is also a procedure which has already been used in the other chamber.

I would point out to honourable senators that between 1980 and 1984 the Liberal administration in the House of Commons used time allocation no less than 27 times. The proposed rules regarding time allocation are essential if we are to conduct ourselves in an efficient manner and finally come to decisions which is the duty of this chamber.

Between 1965 and 1984 the Liberal Senate did not contest any measure proposed by the Liberal government, including the highly controversial National Energy Program which was debated and passed in this chamber in one day. Between 1980 and 1984, under the compatible Liberal majorities in the House of Commons and the Senate, only two bills were delayed in the Senate for more than one month—only two bills. On the other hand, between 1984 and 1988, after things changed, with a Conservative House and a Liberal-dominated Senate, 27 bills took longer than one month to pass. In the last two years, 23 bills have exceeded the one month timeframe.

Between 1980 and 1984, one bill passed in the House of Commons was amended in the Senate. Between 1984 and 1991, no less than 20 bills passed in the House of Commons have been amended in the Senate.

Senator Perrault: Is that information from Statistics Canada?

Senator Buckwold: I call attention to the Chair that it is six o'clock. The honourable senator's five minutes are up, and I cannot stand this trash any longer.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Barootes: Thank you for the compliment.

For the record, the patent bill, C-22, took 196 days to pass. Bill C-60, the copyright bill, took 115 days; the immigration bill took 309 days.

Senator Perrault: Because we were doing our job, that's why.

Senator Barootes: Bill C-18, the transport bill, took 63 days; C-19, took 56. It took 154 days for the customs bill. This cost this country and its people a great deal of money. I could go on and on.

I believe that as long at the Senate exists as it is today we all have a responsibility to ensure that the debates are conducted in an orderly and efficient manner and ultimately brought to conclusion.

I support the rules, as they will make significant improvements in the day-to-day operations of the chamber. They will allow and ensure as full and thorough discussion as possible on legislative matters.

We also recognize that the pre-study aspect is important. In fact, the delays that I spoke about in passing bills was due, to a large extent, to the fact that we were denied pre-study options in the recent past.

It is our purpose and responsibility to see that our work is done in an elite, good manner, and that we pass our bills, reject them or amend them in the proper way.

Senator Perrault: You have been helping the "elite" ever since you have been in here.

Senator Barootes: I beg honourable senators to see if we can fulfil our responsibilities and obligations in this regard. I hope that, with this modernization and changes in procedure, we can perhaps put the rancour and past bitterness behind us so as to serve the people of Canada to the best of our collective abilities.

I want to thank honourable senators for allowing me to go past six o'clock.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think—

Senator Simard: Do you want to go until 7 p.m?

Senator Frith: No. On a serious note, I would point out that, essentially, Senator Barootes fulfilled his undertaking.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that all remaining orders and inquiries stand.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

THE ESTIMATES, 1991-92

THE NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ended the 31st March, 1992; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject during the Second Session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament be referred to the Committee.

He said: Honourable senators, these are the Main Estimates which had been referred to the Standing Committee on National Finance, which held some meetings but which were interrupted by prorogation. The Appropriation Bill will be coming to us, probably tomorrow, but we will have it here on Monday anyway. It would be proper that these Estimates be referred to the National Finance committee so that they can be looked at before we deal with the Appropriation Bill.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I indicated to honourable senators earlier, it had been Senator Doody's intention to move that the Senate adjourn until 5 p.m. tomorrow afternoon. I have received, in the course of the afternoon, a series of dispatches from the front, the latest of which indicates that there is an agreement among the parties in the other place that they will deal with the bill in all three stages tomorrow. There is an agreement, it says here, that the bill would be through all stages by 1:30. I have been told with some certainty that they intend to rise tomorrow at four after having passed the bill.

Senator Frith: For the week?

Senator Murray: Yes.

Senator Doody: Not for the summer recess.

Senator Murray: I would be pleased to move a motion that we stand adjourned until five tomorrow afternoon. That would give honourable senators—

Senator Frith: I would like to speak to that.

Senator Murray: —who are attending the funeral in Toronto the opportunity to get back here for 5 p.m. Or, on the understanding that our friends in the other place have their bill through by 1:30, I could move another motion that we meet at, let us say, 2 p.m. and if the bill is here we will deal with it. If it is not, we would adjourn until the call of the bell, or some such arrangement.

• (1805)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I support the second suggestion. I say so because my information is that there are about 11 of us attending the funeral. That includes Senator Murray, myself, and some eight or nine others. It seems, therefore, that it would be unnecessary to schedule our time on the basis of making sure that anyone attending the funeral is here, unless any of them feel that it is a matter of privilege that they must be back here to deal with the back-to-work legislation. Therefore, I suggest that we adjourn until 2 o'clock and that we make it clear that those who are attending the funeral are not expected to attend here, because we are making the arrangement on the basis that those staying here will be able to do so. We will certainly see that someone is here to deal with the bill and to deal with the Committee of the Whole.

Senator Murray: I thank the Deputy Leader of the Opposition for those suggestions, and we shall proceed in that fashion. For myself, I think I will have to be here. Senator Doody is in Newfoundland tomorrow. In any case, I remind my colleagues on this side that it is the responsibility of the government to keep the quorum. The bells will ring for the Senate at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, as provided for in the rules. I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, June 14, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BRITISH COLUMBIA GRAIN HANDLING OPERATIONS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-25, to provide for the resumption and continuance of grain handling operations in the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert, British Columbia.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be read the second time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as colleagues are aware, earlier today the House of Commons passed through all three stages Bill C-25 to provide for the resumption and continuance of grain handling operations in the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert, British Columbia.

It is never a happy occasion when Parliament has to intervene in the collective bargaining process. However, the government has the conviction—shared, it appears, by members of other parties in the House of Commons—that legislation is essential at this point in order to ensure that economic hardships being visited upon western Canada's grain producers do not cause further dislocation, in particular with regard to the transport of grain shipments to destinations beyond our borders.

Honourable senators, there is no doubt that our country's reputation as a reliable exporter is at stake as a result of this dispute, which shows no signs of an earlier resolution. The impasse in question involves the B.C. Terminal Elevator Operators' Association representing five grain elevator companies in the Port of Vancouver and the Grain Workers' Union Local 333 which represents some 650 grain handlers.

The previous collective agreement expired almost 18 months ago and, despite efforts since that time, the two sides have been unable to reach an agreement. The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service of Labour Canada has exerted its efforts to help the parties to arrive at a resolution of the outstanding differences. As I told the Senate yesterday afternoon, even the assistance of private third-party mediation was unable to establish sufficient common ground to settle this dispute. In fact, the mediator withdrew from the negotiations because he felt that the two sides were too far apart on the key issues of hours of continuous operation as well as wages and pensions.

Subsequently, the elevator operators, responding to a work slowdown at certain elevators, implemented a lockout of all of its facilities late last Sunday.

[Translation]

Since then, senior officials from Labour Canada have been concerned that a lengthy work stoppage at the port of Vancouver would have serious consequences on the overall economy in Western Canada and create serious problems for grain producers.

[English]

However, the parties remained intractable. They were then advised by Mr. Danis, the Minister of Labour, and his officials that the federal government would not sit idly by and watch while paralysis set in with respect to exports that were so vital to the economic wellbeing of such a large part of the country. Shortly after that, the Minister of Labour determined that there was very little prospect that the existing chasm between the two parties could be narrowed in the foreseeable future. As a consequence, he recommended to cabinet that, no matter how regrettable, there was no alternative option to the action that is being proposed today to bring a halt to the stalemate.

As I indicated to the house yesterday in reply to a question from Senator Olson, the legislation before the Senate provides for the immediate resumption of grain handling operations at the Port of Vancouver and provides for the appointment of a mediator-arbitrator to deal with all matters remaining in dispute between the parties. The bill also extends the term of the collective agreement to include the period beginning January 1, 1990 and ending December 31, 1992.

I may say that this legislation also makes reference to two grain handling disputes: The one I cited at the Port of Vancouver, and another between Prince Rupert Grain Ltd. and the Grain Workers' Union, Local 333. The Prince Rupert dispute is now at the conciliation officer stage, but it bears quite remarkable similarities to the more pressing Vancouver case. Having said that, I think I should advise the house that earlier today, when the bill was going through the House of Commons, the Minister of Labour stated that Part II of the bill, dealing with the Prince Rupert situation, would not be proclaimed now, that the government would wait to see what transpired in what remains of the collective bargaining process at Prince Rupert, and we would not proclaim it before holding consultations with the opposition parties. I am sure Mr. Danis will repeat that assurance when he is before us in this chamber for Committee of the Whole a little later on.

While the bill will bring an end to the current debilitating work stoppage, it nonetheless provides both parties with an alternative to an imposed settlement. The government hopes that both sides will avail themselves of this opportunity to reach an accommodation on the matters that are still in contention. They should grasp this chance to demonstrate their flexibility by negotiating in the spirit of collective bargaining, persevere beyond the issues that divide them and come to an arrangement that will lay the foundation for future accords.

[Translation]

The government is strongly recommends opting for the mediation process proposed in Bill C-25, which means they would avoid having a settlement imposed by arbitration.

[English]

As I indicated at the outset, it is never a pleasant task for the government to introduce legislation of this kind. However, both parties have assumed irreconcilable positions and Parliament consequently has no choice, in our view, but to protect Canada's overall reputation as a reliable supplier of grain while also safeguarding the interests of its often beleaguered agricultural sector.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, as soon as the opposition critic has spoken on second reading of this bill, I will be ready to invite my colleague the Minister of Labour, Mr. Danis, to appear before the Committee of the Whole to explain and expand on the provisions of this bill.

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, as a former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, I have studied this bill, I have listened to the justifications advanced by the government, and I believe this is one of those occasions when we should support this measure from the government. In saying that, I find no joy in the immediate task before us. It represents, perhaps, a failure of the collective bargaining process. As the Leader of the Government has pointed out, at issue is the conflict between the B.C. Terminal Elevator Operators' Association and the Grain Workers' Union to expand the present workweek of the Vancouver terminal from the present five days to seven days. There is an enormous volume of grain going through that port. Therefore this matter is absolutely vital not only to western Canada, but to the entire nation.

● (1410)

The Elevator Operators' Association has locked out workers at five terminals. This happened, as the Leader of the Government has said, on June 9, 1991. On Tuesday, June 11, Labour Canada mediators were sent to Vancouver to find a resolution to the dispute, but no solution was found, although I believe a valid and sincere effort was made by them to find one. The mediators returned to Ottawa just after one day.

On the management side, the Elevator Operators' Association is trying to expand the workweek to seven days from five. At the present time terminals operate on a five-day workweek with overtime on the weekends. Ships and rail systems operate seven days a week. Management would like to have workers work four 12-hour shifts with four days off. That would bring a worker's week to 42 hours as opposed to 40 hours at present.

There are many ships waiting in Vancouver for the loading of grain. I understand there are now over 20 ships waiting, and this results in bad publicity and bad business at a time when our country is facing tougher international competition.

Labour takes the position— and may I point out that the Grain Workers' Union has a very enlightened union— that on the west coast they have all sorts of programs of great importance to the public interest. For example, they have a program to help young people get through school by trying to find them part-time work. I have known many young men who are today medical doctors as a result of the Grain Workers' Union on the west coast helping them find ways to supplement their income in order to pay their way through medical school.

We have here a very responsible trade union. We have also responsible terminal operators, and it is sad to see any failure to achieve agreement involving those who basically are responsible people. The Grain Workers' Union does not want to have its workers work 12-hour shifts. A question I was asked in Vancouver last weekend was, "How would you like to work a 12-hour shift?" Well, I can recall working something like a 36-hour shift a few months ago when we were involved in the GST dispute.

The workers are saying there is a danger to health here, that their coordination is somewhat diminished after an eight-hour period. They are saying, "At least study our claims. Can you promise that it is not going to have a detrimental affect on our families, our health and our productivity?"

I believe that is a fair request, and I understand the government has expressed sympathy for that position and that some study will be undertaken to attempt to determine whether there is validity to the concerns expressed by the Grain Workers Union. They do not want their workers to lose overtime pay. The union says that management's plan would mean that grain handlers could lose an average of 15 thousand dollars in lost wages a year. If that is a fact, then one can understand the opposition of certain members of that union. The current hourly rate is $18.72 an hour.

The important issue for senators and members of Parliament, especially those from western Canada, is the impact which the strike has not only on the grain producers and farmers, but on the entire nation. Should the strike continue, lost revenue could be extremely high at a very critical time. At the same time, it should be noted that farmers are being squeezed by a subsidy war between the United States and the European Community and grain prices are subsequently unreasonably low.

I could make the observation that if the government had moved on this issue a few weeks ago it may not have come to this stage, but I have been involved in many of these disputes and I understand that it is difficult to determine the ideal time to take action. So I will not to criticize the government on that point.

The question is whether the rights of the grain handlers in protesting the longer week and lost overtime wages outweigh those of management and the grain producers. It is unfortunate that in this case the bargaining process has not been successful.

As I said before, there is no joy in the action that we must take today. We all have a respect for collective bargaining. We have respect for the workers and their rights, and we understand what it means to have the reputation of Canada further damaged in the extremely competitive area of grain exports. There is no joy in stepping in where collective bargaining has failed. There is never any joy in forced solutions. I think we all agree on that. We are called upon to carry out our duty, and carry it out today we must. Our duty is to restore grain handling services at the Port of Vancouver, which means that we must support the bill now before us to secure the reopening of the grain handling facilities there. As painful as that might be, I believe that duty should be carried out.

As I have mentioned, I know the trade union well, as do most of you, and I have great respect for this particular union and its workers. It is with great reluctance that we interfere in the exercise of union rights, but currently we have a very serious agricultural situation in western Canada. Some of my relatives are in the industry and it has been a very difficult and dreadful time for them.

I do not propose to delay proceedings further, but I may pose further questions when we get into Committee of the Whole. Honourable senators, I wish to express the support of those on this side of the chamber for the measure before us.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I will be brief, but there are a couple of things which I think should be said at this stage. I agree with Senator Perrault that we should expedite the passage of this bill, but there are a couple of things that do not ring true. One is that it has been 18 months since the expiry of the agreement which we are now to extend to sometime in 1992. That tells me very clearly and quickly that there is something wrong which has not yet been revealed to me or to the Senate. I do not know why there was no agreement reached in 18 months. I know that the grain handlers in Vancouver, and indeed in Thunder Bay, have worked several months beyond the expiry of an agreement, despite the fact that the labour unions generally take the position that if there is no agreement there is no work. When the agreement expires they usually shut down until they do get an agreement.

However, these grain handlers' unions have not done that. When the Minister of Labour arrives he should try to explain what happened in those 18 months. What we were told by the Leader of the Government—and I am not disputing him—is that they called for an organized slowdown involving working-to-rule, and whatever else they did.

• (1420)

We then get into a confusing set of statements. One is that the union says that they do not want their workers to work 12 hours a day, as it might cause health problems and various other things. On the other hand, however, they say that they do not want to lose $15,000 per person per year. The only way they will lose that $15,000 per person is that they will lose their overtime. I understand they get paid a little more when they work overtime. Their regular pay averages about $18.72 an hour.

The point I am trying to make is that they cannot have it both ways. They cannot, on the one hand, argue that they cannot work long hours in a week, and then, on the other, complain that they do not want to accept this new arrangement propossed by the employers because they would then lose their overtime. Perhaps we could get some explanation of what seems to be a contradiction here.

Because this has been a serious problem that we have had to deal with several times in the past, the other thing I should like to know is this: When will things settle down so that both sides accept what happens after the legislation takes effect, or even before that?

On pages seven and eight of this bill, it states that a mediator-arbitrator will be appointed. He will have a great deal of power. There is nothing new about that—and I am not disputing it—but on page eight, clauses 19.(3)(a) and (b) describe the use of a mediator-arbitrator. Clause 19.(3) states that the mediator-arbitrator has, with such modifications as the circumstances require, certain powers to do certain things. Those are imperious powers, and mediator-arbitrators are given a lot of muscle.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government would explain just what is involved, because the bill refers to a number of statutes, for example, section 84 of the Canadian Labour Code and other sections that apparently give a mediator-arbitrator some power. When the minister and his advisers come before us, I should like them to explain that.

My reason for asking these questions is not complicated;ld it is simple. We should like to know now when a peaceful arrangement will be arrived at between the employer and the union, because it looks to me as if there has been some difficulty in the past. Sometimes they call it bad blood. I am not sure that that is the right word in this context, but this dispute has gone on for 18 months. They could not find a basis for settling or changing the work relationship, so the union started an organized slowdown. Shortly after that, the company was upset about the costs that were involved with that slowdown and ordered a lockout on June 9.

I give notice now that I would like some explanation of those things, as well as of one or two other things, and I hope that the minister and his advisers can explain these matters to us when they appear before us later today.

In conclusion, I hope that we can find a basis for settling this dispute now or, failing that, for ordering the grain handlers back to work at once. I have some statistics on what this situation is costing. The minister told us it was costing approximately 300,000 tonnes per week. Because of the critical situation in the international grain market, this situation could be far more serious than it appears on the surface. Some customers may go elsewhere to fill their orders and those sales might be lost for many years to come. Therefore, I hope that we can return to being a reliable supplier to the customers we have. In that respect we will try to do what we can to expedite the passage of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, that the bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole and that the Senate do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, that this bill be now referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Heath Macquarrie in the Chair.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, with leave, I would like to ask that the Honourable Marcel Danis, Minister of Labour, be invited to participate in the deliberations of the Committee of the Whole, and that he be accompanied by his officials.

The Chairman: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: While we await the arrival of the minister, I might confess to my fellow senators that this particular task makes me think of Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, that ". . . some have greatness thrust upon them."

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Marcel Danis, Minister of Labour, was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I believe this is the first time that the Honourable Marcel Danis, Minister of Labour, has appeared in the Senate, and on behalf of all colleagues I wish to welcome him.

[Translation]

Mr. Danis represents the riding of Verchères in the province of Quebec since 1984. He was vicepresident and acting chairman of the Committe of the Whole of the House of Commons, minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. He became minister of Labour only six weeks ago.

[English]

The minister has a brief opening statement to make, after which he will be glad to reply to questions from colleagues.

The Chairman: We welcome the minister.

• (1430)

Hon. Marcel Danis, Minister of Labour: Honourable senators, I should first like to introduce my two senior officials who are with me. They are M. Pierre Hamel, Directeur des services juridiques de Travail Canada, and Mr. Mike McDermott, who is the Senior Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour Canada.

[Translation]

As I said, I had hoped to meet you in more favourable circumstances but in the interest of Canada I think we have to present this bill which was passed sooner in the House of Commons.

[English]

As honourable senators will know, this bill provides for the resumption of services at the Port of Vancouver. We have made tremendous efforts in trying to get the parties to agree to a collective agreement.

Just this past week Mr. McDermott went to Vancouver to meet the parties. Members of management flew to Ottawa and I met with them yesterday morning. I spoke at length to the union leader, Mr. Kancs, but after these discussions I felt there was no possibility of a settlement.

There are three issues involved in this dispute. First, there is the issue of continuous hours of work. There is then the issue of wages and the issue of pensions. I believe there could possibly have been some agreement on the issue of wages and pensions. However, on the issue of continuous hours of work both sides remain totally inflexible. They both have valid reasons for the positions they take, something which makes the settlement of this dispute all the harder.

To try to resolve the issue of continuous hours of work, I suggested the setting up of an industrial commission to study the effect on employees of 12 hours of work. The proposal was made to both management and labour. It was well received by labour, but was rejected by management.

When this fact became apparent to me, I felt that we should act. Of course, I do not have to remind honourable senators of the tremendous economic impact that is caused after a shutdown involving grain handlers in the Port of Vancouver. Even though, as Minister of Labour, I do not like to take this course of action, I feel that it is in the best interests of Canada to proceed with the legislation and to get grain moving again.

Thank you, honourable senators.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Honourable senators, as we proceed in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-25 I will follow the usual tradition and ask: Shall the title be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1, the short title stand?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Olson: Mr. Chairman, I do not know exactly where I should ask my question, but perhaps I will do it now.

Could the minister explain to us for what reason the management in this case rejected the proposal? I am not sure what the proposal amounted to. The minister has said that it was a proposal.

Mr. Danis: Management told Mr. McDermott that the issue of continuous hours of work, to use their exact words, "had been studied to death" in many jurisdictions, and they did not feel that further study would be productive. They felt they were right in asking the workers to work the 12-hour shift. They did not feel that it would endanger the health of the workers and they did not see the need for a study.

Senator Perrault: On that point, I have had an opportunity to talk to some of the people involved in this dispute, and I asked them to put their concerns in writing. It is a short statement, which I should like you to comment on.

> The Union has asked the government to submit the Hours of Work demands of the Companies to a neutral committee to investigate the impact of their demands on their employees' health, safety, social well-being, their relationships with their spouses and children.
> We feel very strongly that our family life will be completely destroyed; we feel very strongly that our health will be considerably impaired. We feel very strongly that our safety will be at great risk.
> In 1947-1948, the grain workers worked 12-hours shift and continuous operations, 48-hours a week with no premium pay for Saturdays and Sundays. Now the Companies are demanding that we work this way in 1990-1991. It took 42-years for the grain workers to achieve the conditions so that employees are treated like human beings; now the clock is turned back 42-years.
> Again, we emphasized that a Committee of 3-persons should be set up to investigate and to study those inhuman demands by the grain companies. One of these 3-persons to be a Physician/ Psychiatrist so that his/her recommendations will be taken into consideration.

My question is: Does that represent the views presented to you by the union in this case, and will the arbitrator that you will appoint establish a committee to hear what they have to say about the validity of the workers' charges?

Mr. Danis: Mr. Chairman, the short statement that the honourable senator read is correct. That is, in fact, the position of the union. In fact, it was also my position when I sent Mr. McDermott to talk to the two parties. I personally agree with that demand.

Senator Perrault: It is a reasonable demand.

Mr. Danis: I personally think it is a reasonable demand. On the other hand, I have talked to the other side. The other side's point is, first of all, that they represent the farmers and they are concerned about the price of grain, which is very low at this time. They tell me that in many industries the policy of continuous hours of work is a fact whether it be the railways, shift workers, nurses or whomever. They also feel that it is a reasonable request, which is where the difficulty comes in.

With regard to your second question, if the arbitrator were to ask me, as Minister of Labour, to appoint an industrial commission, such as the one you have suggested, it is within my power under the Canada Labour Code to do so, and, if asked by the mediator/arbitrator, I would certainly do so.

Senator Olson: Mr. Chairman, is that the only reason they rejected the study? They said that the subject had been studied to death, so they feel that they know where it would lead. Was there a projected difference in the cost of operations because of that proposal?

Mr. Danis: Mr. Chairman, definitely there would be a difference in the cost of operations. As I understand the management proposal, people would work four hours on, four hours off, and average something like 42 hours per week, but with no overtime. Right now, of course, they pay overtime, especially since, as I understand it, there are massive shipments of grain at this time of year. The union says there is a health issue. Management does not believe there is a health issue. But I am convinced that there are economic issues on both sides of this case.

• (1440)

Senator Olson: I would expect that the employers, and perhaps the unions too, are convinced that however they work out the arrangements with overtime or four 12-hour shifts, there will be continuous operation seven days a week and, probably, 24 hours a day. It is just a matter of working out the details of how they set it up with regard to how much is overtime and so on.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I would like to mention one thing that puzzles me about the union's position. Believe me, I do not hold any brief for the employers in this case because I had some problems with them on two or three occasions about 20 years ago, but that is not why I am asking the question in this context. I cannot understand why the union would be arguing that working 12 hours, or however many hours a week they would work, involves a health problem, and then complain that they would lose $15,000 of salary if this system goes into effect, because they will then put in enough overtime which may result in this health problem.

Mr. Danis: It is very difficult for me to comment on this. I have spoken to the union leader, Mr. Kancs, and his point of view is that, if a commission were set up and wives and children were able to testify in front of the commission, they would be able to tell the commissioner what effect that type of work system has on their personal lives. It is that type of issue that he wants the commission to consider. With the process of mediator-arbitrator, that will be possible.

Senator Olson: I am not sure I follow you. It seems to me that the same workers are, apparently, prepared to load the ships on a continuous basis but that they want enough of those hours transferred into overtime so that they will be paid overtime rates. I do not know of any other industry that deliberately sets out a regularly scheduled work week that includes significant amounts of overtime. They might consider changing the wages and operate on a regularized basis.

Mr. Danis: The group of people, I suppose, who would most closely resemble the ones you have just described would be the longshoremen. On the issue of wages in this connection, what Local 333 wants is parity with the longshoremen. The longshoremen were able to negotiate their contract at the end of 1989 with a substantial wage increase.

Theoretically, if I could offer Mr. Kancs the same collective agreement as the longshoremen, he would jump at it, but I do not think that would be the position of management and the wheat pools.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 5 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 6 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 7 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 8 carry?

Senator Kinsella: Under clause 8, in terms of the methodology available to the mediator-arbitrator, I am curious to find out whether he would be authorized to use final-offer arbitration.

Mr. Danis: It would be possible for the arbitrator to proceed in that manner, but the legislation does not specifically provide for that. It is possible for the arbitrator to act in that way.

Senator Olson: I would refer to subclause 8(3). During the second reading debate I indicated that I would like to have some further explanation of what ". . . mediator-arbitrator has, with such modifications as the circumstances require, . . ." means. That is fairly loose language. He would merely have to declare that the circumstances require a certain action. I want to know how much power he will have to settle this matter by way of a long-term agreement, although it would not be an agreement; it would be imposed by a man you refer to in some other sections of the Canada Labour Code and other places where, apparently, a mediator-arbitrator already has these powers or would have these powers through laws that had been passed previously.

[Senator Olson.]

Mr. Danis: With regard to the duration, as settled by the act, that would be three years. With regard to the powers, the arbitrator will be given powers to settle all issues in dispute presently in the collective agreement.

It is our hope that since we have chosen the route of a mediator-arbitrator—and it is still our hope even though, every day, the percentages of success are declining—that there would be attempts at mediation by that person with management and union. If not, then we have chosen to give all the powers available to the arbitrator to settle all the issues and disputes for the duration of the collective agreement.

Senator Perrault: Mr. Minister, if we enact this law today, how close are you to appointing that mediator-arbitrator? Do you have a short list? Do you have someone outside the chamber ready to go to work?

Mr. Danis: No, sir, I do not have a short list at this time but we hope to be able to appoint that person within the next few days.

Senator Barootes: He is looking for a job.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 8 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 9 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 10 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 11 carry?

Senator Perrault: Before we leave clause 11, it seems to me that $50,000 seems to be a rather draconian amount. Would that impact on the organization or the individual worker?

Mr. Danis: For the individual worker, the maximum is $1,000. The $50,000 is applicable to the corporate entities, whether that be the unions or officers of the corporate entities.

Senator Olson: Paragraph (b) provides for $1,000.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 11 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 12 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 13 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 14 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 15 carry?

Senator Perrault: Some concern was expressed in the other chamber with respect to Prince Rupert. Did you have a modification to propose?

Mr. Danis: It was raised in the other chamber that the Prince Rupert dispute was still in the process of being negotiated. Therefore, this could be seen as a preemptive strike against either labour or management. I gave my assurance to both opposition parties that it was not the intention of the government to proclaim Part II at this time. Only if there were to be a work stoppage would it be proclaimed, and only after consultation with both opposition parties. After having been given those assurances, they agreed to support this.

• (1450)

Senator Perrault: That is a good assurance to give, Mr. Minister. Thank you.

The Chairman: Shall clause 15 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 16 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 17 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 18 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 19 carry?

The Chairman: Shall clause 23 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 24 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 25 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare: Mr. Minister, before we conclude this, I should like to say that for over four years I was the Minister of Labour for the Province of New Brunswick, responsible for lockouts and disputes in that province. I realize that our population of only 700,000 does not even compare to the 25 million people whom this dispute would affect, but I want to tell you that we did not take lightly circumstances in which we had to stop a lockout. I understand what the government has gone through these last two or three days in making this decision. I know it has been difficult for you, your department and the government, and I want you to know that I realize the economic impact this has on Canada. I commend you for taking this position today.

The Chairman: Shall the schedule carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the short title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall I report the bill?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: I thank the Honourable Minister and his officials for their attention to this duty and their dispatch in discussing this important matter.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill without amendment.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-25, to provide for the resumption and continuance of grain handling operations in the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert, British Columbia, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, with leave, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 17, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have some petitions to present. I know the clock is ticking and I want to get them in while at least part of the Senate is interested in the views of petitioners.

Today I have the usual format of petition requesting a correction of the iniquities of the goods and services tax, among other things, and calling for an immediate election. From Quebec, there are seven petitions. They come from Rouyn, Rouyn-Noranda, Victoriaville and Montreal, and there is a total of 141 names. There is only one petition from Ontario today. The signatures are from Don Mills and Scarborough, with a total of 24 names. So today's package consists of a total of 165 names on eight petitions.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have some petitions from the great Atlantic provinces. I think it is appropriate that I present them today since the governments of those three provinces are meeting today in Nova Scotia to discuss the goods and services tax and how it will affect their work. The people of Nova Scotia particularly are petitioning their government for redress. These are people from places such as Kemptville, Berwick, Aylesford, Wilmot, Kingston and Shubenacadie, Nova Scotia. I ask that these names be presented and that the government take action and try to do what they can to remove the goods and services tax.

I see also that some pig farmers out in western Canada are asking to have the GST rate lowered.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Order, order!

Senator Bonnell: You don't believe they are?

Senator Simard: Just sit down.

Senator Bonnell: They are asking that the rate be lowered to 5 per cent.

Senator Simard: That's not part of petitions.

Senator Bonnell: It is part of my petition.

Senator Simard: Don't break the rules!

Senator Bonnell: I would not break a rule; you know that. I thought the rule said that a senator sitting in his seat should keep quiet and let the senator having the floor speak.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

IT'S ALMOST TOO LATE—REPORT OF COMMITTEE—PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions, which, while the number of names, 378, may seem small, represent a scattering of members of the Seafarers' International Union of Canada. They were delivered to me personally by Andrew C. Boyle and, even though the numbers are small, are an indication of the fact that six months after the tabling of the report "It's Almost Too Late" we are still receiving petitions in good numbers showing the support of the people of Canada for the report of the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, and, in this case, the recognition of the merchant seamen as veterans.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE DETERMINATION—LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS—GOVERNMENT POLICY—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, June 20, I will call the attention of the Senate to the apparent contradictions in the policy of the government wherein certain refugees enter Canada and receive landed immigrant status while others are denied the privilege.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRISONERS OF WAR COMPENSATION—IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS—REVIEW OF ACT—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, June 20, I will move:

> THAT the Senate acknowledges the implied responsibility of the Government of Canada to compensate the Canadian Hong Kong prisoners of war for the suffering they endured in the Japanese prisoner of war camps; and prompts further action
>
> That the government should consider the advisability of seizing the opportunity to provide benefits still denied to other prisoners of war, to which they should be entitled by right, by implementing the recommendations contained in the report of the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, It's Almost Too Late, as a result of evidence given by the following:
> The National Prisoners of War (European Theatre) Association;
>
> The Dieppe Prisoner of War Association;
>
> The Merchant Navy P.O.W. Association; and

The Koncentration Lager Buchenwald Club.

The recommendations are as follows:

6. THAT the rates of compensation provided for under the Prisoners of War Compensation Act be reviewed with the objective of taking into account the severity of the prisoner of war regime forced on veterans by the award of additional compensation for each month deemed extremely severe, and that two additional categories be added at appropriate rates of compensation for those veterans who served 30 months or more as prisoners of war; and

7. THAT for the purposes of establishing entitlement to the Veterans Independence Program, receipt of prisoner-of-war compensation be treated as proof of undiagnosed medical disability.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY VETERANS HEALTH CARE REGULATIONS

Hon. Jack Marshall: I give notice that on Thursday next, June 20, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee On Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine and report upon the Veterans Health Care Regulations (SOR/90-594, August 28, 1990) and on all other matters concerning veterans affairs which may arise from time to time.

NATIONAL FINANCE

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO ENGAGE PERSONNEL

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, I give notice that Tuesday next, the 18th of June, I will move:

That the Standing Committee on National Finance have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical, and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such bills, subject-matter of bills, and estimates as are referred to it.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What is the motion?

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Bolduc, seconded by the Honourable Senator Poitras, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(i), that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to engage the services of such counsel, technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for purposes of examination and consideration of such bills, subject matter of bills and estimates as are referred to it.

• (1410)

Senator Frith: Unless some genius is about to fly the coop before he or she can be hired, I do not know why we cannot wait and deal with it tomorrow.

The Hon. the Speaker: Well, leave was asked for.

Senator Frith: Yes, but I do not see why it cannot be dealt with tomorrow, unless there is some reason it has to be dealt with today.

[Translation]

Senator Bolduc: It is to hire support staff but it is not that important. It can wait for a day.

[English]

Senator Frith: There does not seem to be any reason to deal with it today, and therefore I do not see why leave should be granted.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Senator Bolduc, is it the committee report you tabled in the Senate on June 11?

Senator Bolduc: No, Senator Corbin.

Senator Corbin: Something else?

Senator Bolduc: Honourable senators, when committees meet initially, and I think those of us with some experience understand, a number of decisions are made, which include choosing a chairman and a vice-chairman, and the authority to print papers and to engage the services of certain people, including Library of Parliament staff and others.

That was the only purpose of this motion. The other day at our meeting, we forgot to introduce the motion. I thought I would table it in this chamber. If leave is denied today, it may be taken as notice, that's all.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONTRACT TO REVIEW HEADQUARTERS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On March 12, 1990, the then Minister of National Defence indicated that he had awarded a contract for almost $5 million to Ernst Young Management Consultants to do a complete review of the National Defence headquarters.

Has that report been given to the government? Has it been made public? If not, when will it be made public?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I am sorry, honourable senators, that I do not know the answer to that question. I shall have to consult my colleague and bring in a reply as soon as possible.

[Translation]

EDUCATION

FRANCOPHONES IN SASKATCHEWAN—IMPLEMENTATION OF SUPREME COURT RULING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I would have another question for the leader of the government in the Senate. It deals with the issue of education in French in Saskatchewan. I raise this question because this province has no French-speaking representative in the Senate.

The federal government, after the Supreme Court ruled that the francophones in Saskatchewan had the right to have their own school board, had promised to help Saskatchewan move in that direction.

It would seem, however, that the Saskachewan government does not want to move, while the federal government keeps sending funds their way for this program.

Can the leader of the government in the Senate tell us what his government intends to do to make sure that francophones in Sasakatchewan are indeed granted the rights recognized to them by both the Supreme Court of Canada and the Appeal Court of Saskatchewan, because the government of Saskatchewan was in favour of such idea, in the beginning at least, but things are not moving?

Will the federal government act on this?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, we are presently negotiating an agreement with the government of Saskatchewan regarding not only education services but other provincial services as well.

All I can do for now is contact my colleague the Secretary of State to inquire further. I will report back to the Senate in a few days.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

NEW BRUNSWICK

EFFECTS OF ECONOMIC CRISIS IN BORDER AREAS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the first delayed answer I have is in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 9, 1991, by the Honourable Jean-Maurice Simard regarding New Brunswick—Effects of Economic Crisis in Border Areas. It has to do with cross-border shopping.

(The answer follows:)

[Translation]

Cross-border shopping is only one element of Canada's trade. The government is aware of the situation and is considering or has developed various policies to allow our country and our companies to be competitive while securing access for Canadian consumers to affordable products and services.

With the collaboration of communities and private business groups, the governing is assessing the numerous and complex factors which determine our Canadian suppliers' competitivity. Through this collaboration sensible and effective results will prevail. At the domestic level, the departments of Industry, Science and Technology, of National Revenue and of Finance as well as other departments are working in partnership to make sure that the federal response is well-thought-out and coordinated. These departments are also in contact with various provincial governments.

The government is now considering whether or not it should collect the provincial sales tax at the border. That would of course suppose provincial cooperation and a request on their part.

The price spread between Canada and the United States is not first the result of a higher profit margin by retailers. The structure of the merchandising chain, economies of scale, competition levels, operating costs, and cost of goods sold must all be taken into consideration. With these preliminary results, we will be in a better position to conduct our research and to consult with the industry concerned.

Canada competes on the international market and the Canadian consumers have the right to decide where they want to shop. The government wants to make Canada competitive enough so that Canadians choose to shop here. It might take some time before we reach our objective, but this is the proper and efficient way to go about it. At a recent meeting of the Retail Council of Canada, members, including representatives from the private sector and various government levels, came to the conclusion that closing down the border would not help us compete with U.S. retailers.

In accordance with the Free Trade Agreement, Canada and the United States must adhere to the duties stipulated in the Agreement and reduce them according to a preestablished schedule. Any increase by Canada in the duties on some goods would violate the Free Trade Agreement between our two countries as well as GATT agreements.

Any administrative barriers, or in the case of goods subject to import quotas (such as dairy products, poultry, and eggs) any limitationon goods over a 24 hours period Canadians travelling to the United States can bring back to Canada, could be challenged on the basis of our international trade obligations and could cause quite a stir among our and other American major trade partners.

The government has published the preliminary study of Ernst and Young on the competitiveness of distribution channels, and has taken a number of initiatives (particularly the Departments of Revenue, Tourism and Agriculture), but the issue cannot be resolved only through a political measure. The government will keep working simultaneously on many aspects in order to reinforce competitiveness in Canada, but the results will only start to show after a while. However, we have the will to succeed, and we can rely on the support of many stakeholders.

In 1989, the Minister of Agriculture undertook a comprehensive study of the agricultural policy. This study involved, among other initiatives, the establishment of task forces on poultry and dairy products. These groups were asked to recommend, for this year, measures that would improve the ways to control demand. They are composed of representatives from all sectors of the industry—production, transformation, distribution—and they are helped by consumer groups who specifically look into the price setting mechanisms, as part of their mandate. Agriculture Canada has compared the prices of food products in different border towns in Canada and in the United States. The findings will help develop marketing strategies, after consultation with the industry.

Customs and Excise is trying to find new ways of improving its services to travellers, as well as the implementation of the legislation. For instance, they have already taken a number of initiatives to facilitate the processing of travellers, such as money distributors, a pilot project in Douglas, B.C., an express lane in Niagara Falls and in Windsor, an increase in the number of employees in busy places, as well as a better distribution of work teams. The Canadian customs have two major responsibilities, namely to facilitate the border crossing of travellers and products, and, at the same time, to ensure the fair collection of customs duties and taxes owed to the Government of Canada.

Tourism Canada has asked the consulting firm of Coopers & Lybrand to survey the American opinion in order to find out what they think of prices in Canada and what benefits there are for them in coming to our country. This initiative is aimed at resolving real or perceived problems. The government cooperates actively with the industry to ensure the promotion and the marketing of tourism in Canada.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

COALITION AGAINST ALL TAXES ON BOOKS—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable Senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on May 30, 1991 by the Honourable Jacques Hébert regarding Coalition Against all Taxes on Books—Request for Meeting with Prime Minister.

(The answer follows:)

[Translation]

The Prime Minister is aware of the Coalition's concerns, and he has stated repeatedly that, together with the Minister of Communications, he would closely monitor the effects of GST on books.

[Senator Doody.]

Major rebates are offered to institutions (schools, colleges, universities and municipal libraries) that provide books and enhance learning. Also, registration fees with education services are generally exempted.

The refundable GST credit favours low income families and guarantees them an affordable price on any purchase.

A large tax base and a considerably improved refundable tax credit are the best ways to ensure Canadians with a fair and simple tax system, as well as with a low tax rate. To do away with the tax on books would make the implementation of the tax very complicated for retailers. The government will keep watching closely the implementation of the tax in that area.

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) BILL

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Grimard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, for the second reading of Bill C-15, An Act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employee's pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports.—(Honourable Senator Frith)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, at least one of the sections of this bill should be amended. My reason for saying so is expressed in a letter I received from the former Commissioner of Official Languages. He puts the position about this bill, C-15, and its effect on the Official Languages Act, very clearly and completely expresses my own view.

I propose to share the letter with you and perhaps make some comments on some of the paragraphs. The letter addressed to me is dated June 14, 1991, and says:

> As I prepare to relinquish my office, I wish to draw your attention to my concerns about Bill C-15 (formerly C-85) the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act. Should this Bill be adopted as it now stands, it might constitute an unfortunate precedent for the implementation of official languages policy in this country.
> Section 4 of this bill makes the proposed designated airport authorities subject only to the provisions of Parts IV, VIII, IX and X of the Official Languages Act. The latter concern, respectively . . .

And by that and I assume he means those sections. He goes on to state:

> . . . communications with and services to the public, the responsibilities and duties of the Treasury Board in relation to the official languages of Canada, the Commissioner of Official Languages and the Court Remedy.

I now want to have a look at that section. Clause 4 of the act that is before us reads:

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

4.(1) Where the Minister has sold, leased or otherwise transferred an airport to a designated airport authority, on and after the transfer date Parts IV, VIII, IX and X of the Official Languages Act apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to the authority in relation to the airport as if

(a) the authority were a federal institution; and

(b) the airport were an office or facility of that institution, other than its head or central office.

• (1420)

Here is the particularly offensive section. It is subclause 2. The marginal note is "Construction", and states:

(2) Nothing in subsection 23(2) of the Official Languages Act shall, in relation to an airport transferred to a designated airport authority by the Minister, be construed or applied so as to impose a duty on any institution other than that authority.

When I was a legal counsel to the first Commissioner of Official Languages, a good deal of our time during the first seven years was devoted to making sure that the provisions of the Official Languages Act applied to concessionaires. There is on file a lot of correspondence on the subject.

Let me continue with the quote:

To begin with, I am wondering what will be the scope of Section 4 of this Bill with respect, not to the aeronautical sector itself, but to other services which are of considerable importance to the travelling public. I refer here to services provided by third parties under contract, specifically the various tenants and concessionaires in airport terminals, concerning whom we have received more than 200 complaints in the past 3 years. I think subsection 4(2) of the Airport Transfer Bill is, to say the least, likely to be misinterpreted. It reads as follows:

He then cites the section I have just now cited. The letter continues:

We understand this subsection to mean that the legislator is attempting to transfer to the designated airport authority the responsibility that federal institutions must normally exercise under subsection 23(2) of the Official Languages Act. This subsection deals with the obligation of every federal institution to ensure that services that are provided or made available for the travelling public by another person or organization pursuant to contract with the federal institution for the provision of those services at an office or facility, be provided or made available in the manner prescribed by regulation of the Governor in Council in both official languages.

The rather ambiguous wording of subsection 4(2) of the bill under consideration will cause at least some confusion for those who will have to implement the Airport Transfer Act and Official Languages Act. I therefore strongly recommend that the wording of subsection 4(2) be revised to ensure that third parties under contract be required to provide their services under the linguistic terms currently required by the Official Languages Act and the regulations made under it.

I further wish to bring to your attention the absence from this Bill of any reference to a number of provisions of the Official Languages Act, among them the provisions of Parts V and VI concerning respectively language of work and the government's commitments regarding the equitable participation of the members of the two language communities of Canada.

Another large part of the work I did with Commissioner Keith Spicer was making it clear that the Official Languages Act does not apply just to language of service but also to language of work.

Two things on that subject; the B&B Commission made it very clear in its recommendation in the third volume dealing with the Public Service that reform was necessary in language of work and not just in language of service. Then, the provisions of the original section 2 of the Official Languages Act established the equality and status of the two languages as to their "use . . ." All the language of work regime is based on that three-letter word.

He goes on to state:

In my opinion, the designated airport authorities should continue to recognize the rights of employees with regard to language of work where those rights exist at the present time, since the new authorities will in fact be subject to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. What seems to have been forgotten here is that if this act does apply, the Official Languages Act should also apply, since the latter specifically takes precedence (with a single exception) over other acts of Parliament, on account of its quasi-constitutional status.

In this next paragraph he is talking about language of use institutions. He goes on to state:

Since these non-profit corporations will assume essentially the same functions and responsibilities with regard to these airports as Transport Canada, and since the Bill already provides for the implementation of the provisions of the Official Languages Act concerning service to the public, the designated airport authorities therefore should in my view be also bound to respect the two other major objectives of the Official Languages Act, namely recognition of the rights of employees with regard to language of work and equitable participation.

In case we think that the former commissioner is dropping an unexpected bombshell on this subject, ex post facto, I underline the next paragraph:

As I had previously occasion to mention before the legislative committee of the House of Commons on Bill C-85 . . .

So that this is not the first time he has drawn this matter to the attention of Parliament.

> . . . by eliminating the linguistic obligations of the designated airport administrations to service to the public, the wording of Clause 4 of this Bill in itself constitutes a dismemberment of another federal act, namely, the Official Languages Act. Any dismemberment of a federal act, particularly in as basic an area as that of official languages, can only be perceived as a legislative erosion that is incompatible with the importance of the latter's guarantees to Canada and Canadians.
>
> In conclusion, you may recall that the Act to privatize Air Canada maintains towards this enterprise all of the obligations under the Official Languages Act. I therefore strongly recommend that you intervene in the debate so that Section 4 of Bill C-15 be amended to ensure that all the provisions of the Official Languages Act continue to apply to the designated airport authorities. Any weakening of the current policy would seem to me to constitute an unacceptable and unjustified step backward.
>
> I thank you . . .

The letter is signed "D'Iberville Fortier".

Honourable senators, I received this letter very recently, and I move the adjournment of the debate so that I can prepare an amendment to offer when I continue.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

CROWN CORPORATIONS DISSOLUTION OR TRANSFER AUTHORIZATION BILL

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Eyton, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill C-8, An Act to provide for the dissolution or transfer of certain Crown corporations and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Molgat).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, when, on May 30, Honourable Senator Eyton proposed the second reading of this bill, he started off by saying that he was pleased to introduce the bill but that he was not necessarily thrilled. I am not quite sure what it was that Senator Eyton had in mind when he said he was not quite thrilled, but I suppose I share some of his reluctance.

I do not intend to oppose this bill. I will support its reference to committee, but I think that we have to have a good look at it in committee. Admittedly, some of the proposals are housekeeping and will have no major effect, and may indeed be good from an efficiency standpoint. However, there are two corporations included in this privatization bill which I think we have to consider carefully. One is the Canada Harbour Place Corporation and the other is the Harbourfront Corporation. Both corporations own very valuable pieces of land and I think it is important that, when we consider the bill in committee, we have some very clear indications as to what are the intentions of the government in this regard.

When we look back at some of the previous privatizations—for example, the sale of de Havilland to Boeing—it seems to me that the Canadian public has very good reason to seriously doubt the government's action in that instance. We seemed to be selling that corporation off at a low price. After the sale, the Canadian public was stuck once again with having to cover some additional expenses or costs, and now apparently the company is to be sold again. I am not sure if the Canadian public was properly protected in that case.

There is another, more tragic, case, namely, that of Route Canada, in which the trucking operations of the CNR were sold off. Of course, it was a shocking case where a corporation with a book value of some $75 million was sold for some $29 million and then was absolutely plundered by the owners who bought it. The employees of the corporation were probably the biggest losers because the corporation eventually was wound up. Certainly, however, the Canadian public was also a great loser.

I think we have to be very careful as we look at these privatizations to ensure that the interests of the public are taken care of, as well as those of the employees, and that we do not simply, willy-nilly, privatize companies without ensuring that we are doing the right thing.

This government seems embarked on a general policy that holds that privatization per se is a good thing. I do not necessarily agree with that approach. I do not think that we built Canada in the first instance on that premise. From 1867 on, recognizing the nature of our country, its geography and its history, there was, on the part of governments through most of those years, whether they were Conservative or Liberal, and on the part of the Canadian public, an acceptance that, for a number of things in Canada, we required the involvement of government or those things would not happen. I do not think that that attitude has changed greatly. That does not mean that, automatically, government has to be involved in everything, and it does not mean that, once government has gone into something, it must necessarily stay there. I agree with that. We have to look at these things in the light of events of the particular time at which we are dealing with them, but I have the feeling that the present government operates on the basis that privatization per se is a good thing. With that I disagree. We have to look at each instance in the light of the circumstances of the day and what is good for the country.

I would like to point out something else in the case of privatization. I think privatization essentially helps the two central provinces. The establishment of Crown corporations and government corporations was frequently to ensure that, in those areas of the country where private enterprise was either incapable or unwilling to do something, government could step in and do it. Now, when we come to privatization, what is happening? The pool of capital that is there to pick up on these privatizations does not exist in Newfoundland or in Manitoba. It is found in central Canada. Privatization, therefore, will lead to much more centralization of the economy in the hands, obviously, of those in the areas where the capital exists—Ontario, Quebec, and, I now suppose, British Columbia. The smaller provinces, the weaker provinces, those provinces where there is not a pool of capital on the scene, are the ones which end up losing in privatization. It leads to an increasing concentration of the economic power of this country in the hands of private entrepreneurs in the central parts of the country. Therefore, I think we have to be careful, when we do these privatizations, to keep in mind the question of balance across the country.

As honourable senators know, we have had enough trouble in the past with crown corporations and regional development. I remember only too well the problems we had in Manitoba when the then Trans-Canada Airlines, now Air Canada, was established. Its head office was established in Winnipeg. Throughout the years Trans-Canada Airlines and then Air Canada grew in Winnipeg. Its maintenance headquarters was there, and its head office was there. However, bit by bit, by way of decisions of the board of directors-and, I suspect, decisions that were not really related to the government; I do not think the government was aware of what the board was doing—we, in my province suddenly found that Air Canada, which had been the crown jewel of our economic development for a long time and the base of an aircraft industry in my province, had frittered away and disappeared.

We fought with the government at that point. I happened to be in opposition at that time and my honourable friend, Senator Roblin, who is not here today, was the Leader of the Government. We came down here and fought with governments, both Liberal and Conservative, to try to make them understand the importance of this crown corporation to our province. Even then, we could not get the message across.

It seems to me that if we cannot get the message across to crown corporations that they should at least take the general interests of the country to heart, then surely, once those corporations are privatized, the interests of the smaller provinces will be put at risk.

Therefore there is a broad consideration to be given here to privatization. It is not simply a case of business being able to do something better. In this country we have to look at regional development, something that crown corporations, throughout the years, have been essential in achieving.

So, honourable senators, while I do not oppose this bill, I would ask that in committee we have an in-depth discussion on it and illicit some answers from the government. I think we have to have clear indications, especially with regard to the assets of the two corporations where there is substantial value, that those assets will not be sold except by very public tender. If the price is not adequate, then the government should not proceed with the sale and should retain those values for the people of Canada.

● (1440)

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it seems to me that this bill should most properly be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. However, that committee is not constituted as yet. I believe it is dealt with in a report from the Selection Committee which stands on the Order Paper for consideration later this day.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

CONSIDERATION OF FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Robertson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, for the adoption of the First Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders (recommendations concerning the Rules of the Senate), presented in the Senate on 11th of June, 1991.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I say to the government regarding this report that you ought not to do it. It is a hysterical reaction to events of a few months in the context of 123 years. We on this side have been excluded from the process. The committee records and the Senate record are very clear and establish without question that we have been so excluded. It is totally a Conservative caucus and government package.

Again I say, it is a terrible mistake. You ought not to do it. The Senate ought not to do it, but it is quite evident that you are hell-bent on so doing, thus destroying any usefulness for the Senate in our parliamentary system, and certainly destroying the possibility of any opposition.

For these reasons and for the reasons very clearly set out by Senator MacEachen in the second part of his intervention on Thursday of last week, we oppose this package. We also note that the government has not accepted Senator MacEachen's offer. For all of these reasons, we will be voting against the adoption of this report.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, it has been my practice in these last six years or so to listen very carefully to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. I may not always agree with what Senator MacEachen has to say, but usually I can divine from what he says what his party is all about. I cannot tell you which comes first, the chicken or the egg, but usually the Liberal caucus reflects what we hear from "Allan J.", as he is affectionately known. It is an odd talent of communication that Senator MacEachen has never been able to successfully deputize.

In this curious debate which bounces from the rules to the Throne Speech, and resounds spasmodically in Question Period, we on this side have had great need of a definition of the problem as it is seizing our friends opposite.

To quote Senator MacEachen: "You have produced the rules. You have produced them in your caucus; pushed them through in a one-party committee; and now you are putting them before the Senate. We on this side have been totally excluded from the process. We have not been part of it."

Yes, we have produced proposals for new rules after a number of meetings of a caucus committee and after consideration by the Conservative caucus as a whole.

Yes, we have pushed it through a Senate committee meeting which Liberals refused to attend, and we are now putting those proposed rules before the Senate.

We on this side have excluded no one from this process. We regret that you have not been part of it. That is my direct reply to Senator MacEachen's description of the problem.

We do not believe that a single member of the opposition has been in any way surprised that we tackled the rule book and tried to bring it out of the ignominy in which it was left last winter. Remember, the prime use made of the rule book was as a symbolic club to wave under the Speaker's nose. For 50 years, your party was master of the rules. Our chamber became the last refuge of the speech of unlimited length; of bell ringing that went on forever; of posturing that knew no bounds.

The Liberals knew very well that there was one thing that we would have to resolve in 1991, and that was how we could re-shape the guidelines of our conduct in this place without doing injury to the democratic process which must underpin our Parliament.

• (1450)

Conservatives agree that we had to find a body of rules that we ourselves could live with when we again held fewer seats than the opposition. Our leader, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, asked several of us to sit as a caucus committee and review the rules as they are set out in the little red book. We did this, and when we had gone a certain distance we went before our caucus and said, "Here are a number of changes that we feel are necessary if we sincerely believe, as we said publicly last fall that we did believe, that the Senate should not be a place where important government business is avoided and legislation is killed or obstructed indefinitely."

I might say that there was a good deal of discussion, even debate, in caucus and a good deal of movement back and forth before we reached a point where we were willing to propose to the Senate itself that our revisions be given consideration. We did not for a moment expect that members opposite would agree with all we had to say. It was possible to believe that Senators Frith and Olson would not agree with anything we had to say, but we thought that we had reached that point where some kinds of sensible discussion could be had.

I cannot speak for all of my colleagues, but I can tell you that the chairman and most members of our committee did not expect that you would exclude yourselves from the process, and use the argument of how many players there should be on each side to deter you from naming any members at all to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

Nor did we anticipate that the opposition would make such a vigorous effort to confuse the public about our purpose. But that is what the Liberals did. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition did his best to blur the lines between the work of preparation, which we did through caucus, and the process of consideration, which began in open committee a week ago. I underline the word "open" because that is, perhaps, the most important recommendation that we have made in our proposals for revision of the rules. Only in a very few clearly stated exceptions will these new rules close the door to the public. The media will be free to attend except when matters involving contracts, personnel relations and such are under consideration. We have nothing to hide in the process we have offered. We will have nothing to hide in the process which will follow. Is this the hysterical reaction that Senator Frith says it is?

It is possible to believe that, in spite of what Mr. MacEachen has said, in spite of the feigned puzzlement of his merry members, the press has sensed what we on the government side have been about.

Rosemary Spiers wrote in the Toronto Star on June 8th:

> The Tories want limits on debate of 15 minutes per speaker, time allocation rules so the majority can limit debate and end attempts at a filibuster, and new powers for the Speaker to suspend the Chamber when it becomes disorderly.

Portia Priegert said in a dispatch from Canadian Press on June 5th:

> Call them the kazoo killers. The Conservative majority in the Senate has proposed sweeping rule changes for the upper house that would scrap many of the parliamentary high jinks seen during last fall's debate over the goods and services tax.

Senator Frith wants to know what we intend to do with all the time we will be saving when rules limiting speeches and procedural delays come into effect. He falls back on the argument that even with the good old rules we did not spend much time working in this place. He knows very well that we spent a great deal of time here between September and January and did very little work of any kind. We have done almost no work since we returned this spring because we are dancing with rules that Senator Frith and Senator Olson would preserve. It is not time but waste of time that offends us.

Senator MacEachen says: "You have built yourselves minefields all over the place. Even a cursory reading of the rules shows that you have built into them a number of potential minefields which will sow confusion, ambiguity and possibly chaos in the Senate."

I would say to my friend, the Opposition Leader, that while he was in Brussels last fall his lieutenants laid the minefields, sowed the confusion, provided the ambiguity and delivered the chaos that all of us answer for now. If we are to continue as we did last fall, then bring on the instrument of abolition.

We do not wish to steamroll what we have done if you have something better to offer, but may that something be better than the TV-style cross-examination of the Chairman of the Rules committee, or the wails of being muzzled that came from the wordiest men in the Senate. Just how do you use new rules to muzzle the Senate which will retain the right to change the rules by consent?

Senator MacEachen: Question!

Senator Frith: Question!

On motion of Senator Doody, for Senator Lavoie-Roux, debate adjourned.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

THIRD REPORT ADOPTED

On the Order:

Consideration of the Third Report of the Committee of Selection (membership of certain select committees), presented in the Senate on 13th June, 1991—(Honourable Senator Phillips).

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Phillips, I move the adoption of the report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THE ESTIMATES, 1991-92

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the First Report of the Standing Committee on National Finance concerning Supplementary Estimates (A) which was presented to the Senate on June 11, 1991.

The Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, the Supplementary Estimates (A), the first supplementary estimates for the 1991-92 fiscal year, deal solely with five proposed expenditure items for the Department of Agriculture, totalling $428 million. Three of these items, totalling $188.9 million, are for operating and capital expenditures and contributions under the department's Agri-Food Program, while the other two, amounting to $239.1 million, are for operating expenditures and contributions under the Grains and Oilseeds Program. Your Committee met on June 6, 1991 to review these supplementary estimates and hear officials of Treasury Board Secretariat and the Department of Agriculture appearing as witnesses.

The main proposed expenditures concern contributions under the Net Income Stabilization Account, the Gross Revenue Insurance Plan and the Cash Flow Enhancement Program for 1991 crops. Other contributions are to promote improved use and management of land, soil and related water resources and the long-term adjustment of the horticulture industry.

The proposed expenditures represent funding for the new Farm Support and Adjustment Measures package of programs. These programs, distributed over a two-year period, will alleviate the short-term income deficiencies of grain, oilseed and horticultural crops producers. They will be part of a new national safety nets system designed to meet farmers' needs for long-term predictable income, according to recommendations made by Agriculture Canada as part of its ongoing Agri-Food Police Review.

Details of the Farm Support Adjustment Measures program may be found in the committee's report. Honourable senators, I may add that in 1981, market income represented 73 per cent of total farm income, while only 24 per cent will come from net market income in 1991. The remaining 76 per cent or $2.5 billion will consist of payments from various government support programs, including the $428 million program you are being asked to approve.

However, I would like to point out that the criteria used are not necessarily the best. I think that if we calculate the ratio of program payments to total market income, in other words, the value of sales, we get a figure of around 10 per cent. The committee is concerned about the fact that the agricultural sector is becoming increasingly dependent on government assistance, and although it would have like to have more time to examine the reasons for this dependence, it was unable to do so within the timeframe for consideration of the Supplementary Estimates.

I may also remind honourable senators of our committee's report called the Program Evaluation System in the Government of Canada, which the Standing Committee on National Finance tabled last January concerning the 1990-91 Estimates. The committee did this study because it believed that its conclusions on the program evaluation system might be useful in considering the Estimates. Committee members would have like to obtain substantive information on the evaluation by Agriculture Canada of its farm support and adjustment programs and its plans for evaluating the new farm support program. I believe the committee needs this information if it is to be able to examine government spending on your behalf.

Thank you, honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it the pleasure of honourable senators to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall calling the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-Fifth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, entitled: "It's Almost Too Late", tabled in the Senate on 31st January, 1991, (Sessional Paper No. 342-973). (Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, when I introduced this inquiry I indicated that I would be speaking on it from time to time as matters arose and whether or not progress was made, or if there were any matters that came to my attention that would have an effect on the report: "It's Almost Too Late."

Today I want to refer to recommendations on the residence requirements for veterans under the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. They say as follows:

> 4. that the residency requirement of the War Veterans Allowance Act and Part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act be amended to permit otherwise qualified veterans to apply for benefits from outside Canada;
>
> 5. that the Canadian government take immediate steps to negotiate an agreement with the United Kingdom to exempt War Veterans Allowance from British taxes;

I can see that everyone is extremely interested in this.

When I was over in England last month as a guest of the Canadian Veterans Association of the United Kingdom I was asked to speak to the Canadian Women's Club by the Chairperson, Mrs. Catherine Chubb. The members of that club have been working for a long time to help these Canadian veterans while the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Government of Canada and all past governments have neglected them until some of the things that the subcommittee on Veterans Affairs did over the past three years.

Before I read the annual report of the Service Committee of the Canadian Women's Club—to which I spoke when I was there—I will read the section of the report that deals with the Canadian Veterans Association of the United Kingdom and all our Canadian veterans who decided on their right to live in another country after the war, as well as those who fell on bad times and are now actually living in destitution and poverty.

In order to qualify for the War Veterans Allowance, to which they would be entitled otherwise—and would now be receiving at the rate of $1,200 a month—they have to return to Canada for 12 months and remain in Canada. That is a trip that they cannot afford in the first place or they would not be asking for the War Veterans Allowance. They also have to leave overseas, their wives, who are probably sick. Canada will not repeal the simple section of the act that demands that these veterans return to Canada for 12 months.

I will read this report. It will not take long. The second part of our report entitled, "It's Almost Too Late", deals with this situation. It states therein that:

> In its 1981 report, "They Served, We Care"— and here I am referring to the subcommittee that produced the report in 1981—> your Committee recommended that "the residence requirement of the War Veterans Allowance Act and Part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act be amended to permit otherwise qualified persons to benefit from the legislation while residing outside of Canada."

[Senator Marshall.]

The subcommittee strongly urged the government to act on this recommendation. That was back in 1981. We made seven recommendations in that report and six of them were accepted by the government. The only one that was not accepted was the one dealing with the Canadian veterans overseas.

• (1510)

While the Statute Law Amendment Act of 1980 removed the Canadian residence requirements for widows and children of recipients who die outside Canada, veterans must still return to Canada and reside here for a period of one year before they become eligible for benefits. Once in receipt of an allowance, however, they can leave Canada and resume their residence abroad.

This restriction has been inflicted on them despite the fact that we in Canada are kind enough to allow allied veterans from right across the world to come to Canada, live here for 10 years and then qualify for the War Veterans Allowance. Yet the United Kingdom Government, for which we fought, will not do the same thing on a reciprocal basis. I think that is unfair and ridiculous.

Most veterans find it difficult and often impossible to return to Canada to establish residence in order to comply with the present legislation. Often they are too poor, too old and too ill to be able to travel and to establish a new domicile in Canada for one year.

I visited them in 1988 and saw them again. One woman came to me at the annual conference I attended. She was using two canes, was arthritic and wondered why she had to sign three forms in order to qualify for the disability pension that was awarded to her two or three years ago. She is still not getting the money and they had to go into a trust fund to get £250 for the lady to live until her pension was proved or the award was made. I brought these three forms back and sent them to Charlottetown, P.E.I. to the Department of Veterans Affairs, and a letter has gone to Mrs. Logie saying that her money will be awarded. She will receive almost $4,000 in retroactive pay and a small pension of $88 a month. I will try to get an attendance allowance for her which will help her a little in the few years she has to live.

Frequently these veterans have family ties where they are living that make it financially and psychologically out of the question for them to come to Canada for one year. Most of the veterans involved, especially those living in the United Kingdom and the United States, feel that Canada is ignoring their wartime service by forcing them to return to Canada for one year before they become eligible for benefits.

In 1988, the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs invited the National Secretary of the Canadian Veterans' Association of the United Kingdom, Mr. Percy Mercer, to come to Canada to appear before the Committee. This is the third time I have read that into the record and I will continue to read it into the record until somebody smartens up. He was able to give evidence about the plight of many veterans who were living in absolute poverty. One case in particular was symbolic of successive governments' lack of concern about the welfare of our veterans living abroad.

William Simmons, a Canadian veteran who had spent three years in a prisoner-of-war camp, had died destitute and left a surviving wife in the same condition. He did not know it himself, but he should have been receiving prisoner-of-war compensation since 1976 which entitled him to a pension equal to 25 per cent of the disability pension. Upon his death his widow should have received a pension equal to one-half of his compensation—amounts that would have allowed them to spend their last years in dignity rather than poverty. However, Simmons did not know that he was entitled to prisoner-of-war compensation, nor had the Canadian Veterans' Association of the U.K. been advised of the new legislation. The staff of the Canadian High Commission in London claimed they did not have the responsibility or the budget to seek out Canadian veterans to advise them of changes in the veterans' legislation that might be to their benefit. That is typical of the answers one receives.

As a result of Mr. Mercer's testimony, it became apparent to your committee that among impoverished Canadian veterans and their spouses living in Great Britain there might be others who were entitled to POW compensation and/or disability pensions. It was decided that all those who are listed with the Association and for whom the War Veterans Allowance was being sought should again be interviewed and have their war records studied to see whether they, too, might be entitled to pensions. Mr. Mercer and his colleagues carried out the study and submitted a large number of new applications to the Canadian Department of Veterans Affairs. They did not have to have a commission appointed to pay them hundreds of thousands of dollars to look for them. They are there, alive, and the Canadian Veterans Association did it on their own with my assistance over here.

I went over to investigate the conditions of Canadian veterans living there and the steps being taken to assist those in need. At my request the Bureau of Pension Advocates sent an advocate to the U.K. to interview Canadian veterans on the spot and avoid the delays of correspondence back and forth to Canada and to allow speedier processing.

Over the past two years 61 of these pension applications have been approved. They are pensions that veterans should have been entitled to probably since 1945 after the war. Over $250,000 in pensions—closer to $300,000—has been paid in retroactive benefits to U.K. veterans and spouses of deceased veterans, all of whom now receive regular pension income.

For example, one widow is entitled to a widow's pension of $1,057 a month. She is now receiving that, and also has received a retroactive award of some $36,000. She called up the National Secretary and said, "Is that really my money?" She should have been getting it, or her husband should have been getting a pension, since 1945 or shortly after.

Despite the success in finding entitlement to pension income for some veterans, many others are still living in poverty; poverty that would quickly be relieved if they were eligible for this War Veterans Allowance of approximately $1,200 a month. For some years now, the Government of Canada, to its credit, has made small payments to needy Canadian veterans in the United Kingdom, up to the limit where these payments would begin to affect the veterans' benefits under the British program of national assistance.

Your committee is pleased to note that, following the recent increase in the British limit from £21 to £43, the Canadian Government announced an increase in its support to the full £43. I read the two recommendations that the committee recommends.

There is a group in the U.K. to which we did not give credit. That group assists veterans in getting money, and it should be an embarrassment and a shame to Canada. In London I visited the Canadian Women's Club and spoke to the members for a few moments at their annual meeting. The president wrote to me and said, in part:

> For sixty years we have been able to give some financial help to these veterans, out of the profits of our annual Maple Leaf Ball. Over this period of time our list of those in need has grown extensively, and Mary Sellers, the Chairman of the Service Committee does a superb job of staying in touch with each and every one of them and keeping up to date their individual needs.
> Many of our members have not fully understood exactly why these men do not receive their Veteran's Allowance from the Canadian Government . . .

The president refers to my talk explaining the situation and mentions that they are more aware of what is going on.

In conclusion, I wish to take a couple of minutes to read from the report of Mary Sellers, who is the chairman of the Service Committee. She states:

> Demands on the resources of the Service Committee increase as the veterans of World War 2—

These are Canadian veterans.

> —become older, more infirm, and often fall on hard times. Many are very much alone and depend on us for help and advice. They greatly value the connection with Canada. The average age of the World War 2 veterans is 70, and I can foresee the number on our list steadily increasing over the next 5 to 10 years.
>
> At present there are 88 veterans and/or dependants on our list. This is the most we have ever had. As time goes on and the cost of living increases they will be even more in need.

• (1520)

The report states that three years ago there were between 70 and 75 on this list, and that a slow, steady increase is evident despite the deaths which are reported each year. The report goes on to state:

> In the past twelve months 3 deaths have been notified, and 9 names added. These new names were referred to the Committee, and recommended for assistance by the Canadian Veterans' Association in the United Kingdom and the Department of Veterans Affairs' at the Canadian High Commission. 68 of the total number are helped on a monthly basis. These are veterans judged to be the most needy. Married couples and those with dependant children receive a slightly larger amount each month. Additional small cheques of £5 and £10 were sent on Canada Day, Thanksgiving, and birthdays.

They would not need that money if they were receiving the War Veterans Allowance. It is so simple to recognize that, indeed, they did serve their country and that they had every right under the Charter to live where they wanted to live. Yet we deny them that allowance unless they come back to Canada for a year, something which they cannot do. The report continues:

> There are 11 names on our list of "Specials" who receive cheques only on such occasions. Thanks to the funds received from the Maple Leaf Ball Trust we have been able to maintain this assistance. 8 veterans are "Contacts" only. They are known to be better off financially . . .

That is to say, if one can be better off than poor.

> . . . and have recently been awarded Canadian War pensions paid retrospectively. However, they appreciate continuing contact with the Canadian Women's Club and we keep in close touch with them with cards . . .

She goes on to explain who the members of the service committee are. They are wives of Canadians doing everything that members of charity organizations do such as making greeting cards and woollen crafts, as well as other things to raise funds.

There is also a clothing project mentioned in this report. In that vein it is reported:

> Canadians did much to bring additional comfort and cheer to "our" veterans. Once again the National Chapter of the IODE in Toronto sent food parcels at Christmas - or cash in lieu to those on special diet. Names and addresses of the veterans were supplied by the Service Committee . . .

The report goes on to detail the help that is being given in that regard.

Last year, I spoke to members of some branches of the Royal Canadian Legion, and there has been a result from that. They took enough sympathy to send over money. On that subject the report states:

> In the last year six branches of the Royal Canadian Legion in Ontario—Perth, Cornwall, Petawawa, Deep River, Pembroke and Smith Falls—have sent cheques totalling £6,457 as a donation to the work of the Canadian Women's Club Service Committee.

This money has come from members of the legion, most of whom are themselves on pensions. If they can see enough in their hearts to send money, why then can the Canadian government not help? It has been so generous in other aspects. There are now only about 450 people in this category, as most of the rest have died. Why can we not have removed that stupid clause which denies them the few benefits they would receive in their last few years? The report goes on:

> Thanks to these generous gifts it was possible to send each veteran a cheque for £50 early in December. It was indeed a special Christmas present! It means so much to veterans in the United Kingdom to know they are not forgotten by their Canadian comrades. One widow wrote that she had never received a gift of £50 before, and was completely overwhelmed.

That sets out clearly that the members of this organization who are seeking money are devoted to those Canadian veterans who are poverty stricken because Canada will not recognize them for their service and sacrifice to our country. The report goes on:

> With so many expressions of gratitude reaching the Committee it is not surprising that the members find their work worthwhile and rewarding. The widow of one veteran wrote "I am so very touched with the kindness shown to me from the Canadians. My dear deceased husband would have been so grateful knowing how much you all have helped me in my latter years". And another letter from the son of a Canadian veteran's widow reads "She looks forward to your cheque as most of her Pension (if not all of it) is taken up to pay for her upkeep. She uses it to buy her newspaper each day, some sweets, and the little luxuries which we might take for granted. It is also her personal contact with the outside world. You, your colleagues, and the Canadian Women's Club are doing a marvellous job and you are much loved for it". This is what the Service Committee is all about, and I hope we can go on helping veterans as long as the need is there.

Mary Sellers, the author of this report, will be visiting Canada. I think she should be recognized. I hope that, when she does come over, the Senate will be sitting and we might invite her to come to the committee.

Another aspect of the report, on which I have the opportunity to talk from time to time, is that, on the one hand, Canadian veterans receive a War Veterans Allowance. Those who qualify on the basis of a means test are not entitled to $1,200 a month if married, and approximately $800 they are single. If a veteran is entitled to a disability pension, he does not have to return to Canada to get it. The fellow who is poor and needs a War Veterans Allowance is being discriminated against. In order to qualify for the allowance he must come back to Canada. The fellow who suffered a wound, who has a condition as a result of his war service, is entitled to the disability pension even if he is earning $1 million a year.

The perfect hypocrisy is the example of a veteran with a slight disability, which gives him 1 per cent. That 1 per cent means that he gets a pay-off of $458.25. He is entitled to that without income tax, but, by the fact that he is getting a 1 per cent disability pension, he qualifies for the War Veterans Allowance and receives $1,200 a month. But Canada says, "No, we will give you the $400 once in a lifetime", and he is not allowed to apply for the War Veterans Allowance which he needs, unless he comes back to Canada. They are now all too old. They will never come back now. They cannot, without swimming.

Honourable senators, I thank you for your attention. I hope I will have other examples to show that, despite the fact that Canada is very generous in its veterans' legislation, it is not so generous when it comes to the matter about which I have been speaking today. I refer not only to this government, but to all governments in the past. This matter first came up in 1951, when someone in the Canadian government was approached. I could spend some time speaking on that, too. Despite promises by the great George Hees, Prime Ministers, and everyone else who said, "You can be sure that when we get into government they will not have to come back to Canada. We will give them their rights and their War Veterans Allowance", it has not happened up until this day.

Concerning some of the pensions that are being sent, I am receiving letters from daughters saying, "Thank you very much, but my mother died and we will have to return the money."

Honourable senators, I wish to adjourn the debate.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACT, 1791

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition) rose pursuant to notice of May 14, 1991:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the two hundredth anniversary of a most significant event in Canadian constitutional history, namely, the passage of the Constitutional Act, 1791, and the advisability of making a request to the British Government that the record copy of the Constitutional Act, 1791 should be permanently in the keeping of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, before I begin the main body of my observations I want to place very clearly on the record my indebtedness to Mollie Dunsmuir of the Library of Parliament Research Staff. I wish to say how obliged I am to her for her superb research and for the drafting of the notes for this intervention.

● (1530)

The next thing I want to do is to give you all a warning and a promise. My warning is that anyone who is not interested in Canadian constitutional history will find the next 25 minutes or so very boring. My promise is that those honourable senators who are interested in history, especially Canadian political and constitutional history, will be fascinated by her research.

This year marks the 200th anniversary of a significant event in our constitutional history. The Constitutional Act, 1791, was the third or our major pre-Confederation documents, preceded only by the Royal Proclamation of 1763 and the Quebec Act of 1774. The major significance of the Constitutional Act of 1791 is that it was the first statute to confer representative institutions on the British North American colonies. Although Nova Scotia had enjoyed a popularly elected assembly from 1758, Prince Edward Island from 1773, and New Brunswick from 1784, these had been accomplished through Governors' Commissions and Instructions, and the gradual introduction of British parliamentary concepts. In the case of what is now Ontario and Quebec, however, it was necessary to repeal certain sections of the Quebec legislation of 1774, to which I have just referred, and to define the relationship between the new provinces of Upper and Lower Canada.

So the Constitutional Act of 1791 has two roles in our history: first, as the first statutory recognition of representative government in British North America; and, secondly, as the first recognition of Ontario and Quebec as separate geographical and political units whose separate provincial constitutions are still largely enshrined in sections 69 to 87 of the Constitution Act, 1867. From both perspectives, it is a document in which I think we can take great interest.

Although I am constrained to add that I have never been convinced that we Canadians manifest any deep—certainly not wide-spread and passionate—concern for the history of our constitutional documents and traditions, I know that we are very concerned about the Constitution and constitutional reform. As the journalist William Johnson said, there are few people in the world who display such interest in the question of constitutional reform, and he suggested that our national anthem might well start with the word "Whereas".

However, I am pleased to say that, notwithstanding our manifestation of less than deep and wide-spread interest in constitutional history and traditions, there are some who, of course, maintain a passionate interest in that subject. For example, the Canadian Study of Parliament Group is holding a conference here in Ottawa on November 1 and 2, entitled, "Canadian Constitutionalism 1791 to 1991: A Conference to celebrate 200 years of constitutional Government in Canada". The group hopes to publish in book form a collection of essays presented at the conference. The Quebec National Assembly is also planning a number of events to celebrate the bicentenary of parliamentary institutions in Canada.

Now, I am not suggesting to my maritime friends or implying that constitutional government in British North America began in central Canada, although we central Canadians are often accused of acting as if it did. However, because constitutional government evolved without the need of Imperial statutes in the Maritimes—that is, it evolved without acts of the British Parliament—it is more difficult to find a specific date to celebrate. I offer that as an apology for acting as if our history started in 1791. It started then in the sense that it was the first statute of that kind, and because it is more difficult, as I say, to find a specific date to celebrate with regard to the evolution in the maritimes. For example, in 1882 the Canadian House of Commons requested, through the Secretary of State, copies of the constitutions of various provinces, together with documents relating to political rights and privileges granted by the Imperial Parliament. Mr. Adams Archibald, the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, replied as follows:

> I have now the honour to report, for the information of the House of Commons, that, as far as I am able to ascertain the facts, no formal charter or constitution ever was conferred, either on the Province of Nova Scotia, or upon Cape Breton while that Island was a separate province.
> The Constitution of Nova Scotia has always been considered as derived from the terms of the Royal Commissions to the Governors and Lieutenant-Governors, and from the instructions which accompanied the same, moulded from time to time by despatches from Secretaries of State, conveying the will of the Sovereign, and the Acts of the Local Legislature, assented to by the Crown; the whole to some extent interpreted by uniform usage and custom in the country.

Now, I confess to being very impressed by the sophisticated approach that our Maritime friends had to constitutional evolution, but I hope they will not begrudge Ontario and Quebec our occasional place in the constitutional sun.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator Frith would take a question?

Senator Frith: Well, I suppose so. I will take a question. I do not undertake to answer it, however.

Senator Stewart: Well, Senator Frith is describing two quite different patterns of constitutional development in what we now refer to as British North America. On the one hand, he mentions what happened in the Maritime provinces, where the sovereign himself was directly involved in conferring a form of government, and he then refers to the Canadian experience where the colony was put under the British Parliament, the elected representatives of the English. Why these two separate paths of development? He said earlier that the Constitutional Act of 1791 was necessary in the case of the Province of Canada because of the Quebec Act of 1774, but that begs the question: Why a statute of the British Parliament in 1774 rather than an instrument under the Royal Prerogative? Why statutory initiative in 1774 as distinct from instructions or a proclamation?

Senator Frith: Well, honourable senators, I think there is both a rhetorical and a non-rhetorical dimension to the question asked by Senator Stewart. I do not have the scholarship to answer those questions of why. I leave that to scholars like himself. My daughter, I must say, is an historian, and the 18th Century happens to be her period of interest, so perhaps I will persuade her to give me some notes for a subsequent speech that might deal with the question of why.

However, that does bring me to some professorial or academic and scholarly analysis dealing directly with the question of the Constitutional Act of 1791 in England. I am referring to an article entitled "Celebrating 1791: Two Hundred Years of Representative Government." The author is Professor Janet Ajzenstat of McMaster University, who sets out what she describes as the following "fascinating history" to the Constitutional Act of 1791. By "history," I mean the history in the British Parliament as referred to by Senator Stewart. I quote:

> The bill was introduced in the House of Commons by William Pitt in March of 1791, secured approval in May, and came in effect in the Canadas on December 26, 1791.

• (1540)

The actual anniversary is Boxing Day this year.

> No parliamentarian will be surprised to learn that few changes were made to the bill during its passage through the Commons. What makes the 1791 debate significant is the character of the arguments advanced. As they examined what was in effect a new political constitution for a new society, the Members of the British Commons described and justified British parliamentary institutions. The real subject of the debate was the institutions and political conventions grounding British parliamentary practice. The legislators were intensely conscious—

We are speaking of the legislators in Westminster—

> —of the work of the American and French constitutionalists of the period. They treated the Canada bill as an opportunity to make a British statement about liberal government that would rival those of the revolutionary nations.

That is the U.S. and France.

> The institutions they prescribed for the Canadas were meant to prove to the world that the British form of government could offer all the rights and benefits that free men could desire . . .
>
> The debate on the Canada Bill is well known to scholars. Indeed it is famous, but curiously enough not as a discussion of the grant of political freedoms to the colonies. Its fame derives from the fact that it was the occasion on which Fox and Burke quarrelled about the French Revolution, splitting the Whig party and ending twenty-five years of friendship. Historians usually suggest that the quarrel was more or less irrelevant to the bill before the House when it broke out. Those who write about Whig party fortunes barely mention the Canada bill, while those who treat the 1791 Act usually do little more than hint at the broader issues suggested by the discussion of the French crisis.
> The key to the Act lies in seeing the relationship between the legislators' reluctance to countenance measures to strengthen the democratic branch of government in the Canadas, and Burke's rhetorical outbursts about the evils of the revolution and popular government in France. Burke entered the debate charging that the republican principles springing up in revolutionary France would soon prove a threat to political freedom everywhere, even in England. He reminded his listeners of the arguments in Reflections on the Revolution in France. He told of terrifying events in France. At one point he called the regime in France an "anomaly in government", more terrible even than republican government. It was "A shapeless monster, born of hell and chaos".
> His argument was that if Britain, with all its weight of tradition, might not be able to withstand the onslaught of > republicanism, the new societies of British North American would surely prove vulnerable. In the clause by clause reading of the Canada Bill he supported all measures that would restrain and balance the powers of the colonial legislative assembly, and strengthen the 'aristocratic' chamber. Indeed Burke was one of the members prepared to entertain the idea of fostering a landed aristocracy in the colonies.

>
> Fox attempted to avoid discussion of his position on the French Revolution. Nevertheless he was known to express admiration for the Declaration of the Rights of Man. If disenchantment had set in he was reluctant to admit it in these debates. He is still thinking of a future in which freedom broadened out from age to age. He ridiculed the idea of an hereditary aristocracy in Canada.
>
> He proposed measures to strengthen the Legislative Assemblies of the Canadas—

Quite opposite from the view of Burke, as you can see—> and was instrumental in persuading the government to increase the number of seats in the Assembly of Lower Canada from the 30 proposed by Pitt to 50. Against Pitt's suggestion that the colonial elections be held every seven years, Fox argued for elections held yearly or every three years. In the end it was agreed that the assemblies would be called yearly and continue no longer than four years.

Incidentally, those interested in learning more about the passage of the Act and the learned debates in which William Pitt, Edmund Burke and Charles James Fox participated can refer to Professor Ajzenstat's article in this spring's edition of the Canadian Parliamentary Review. It is from these debates that spring the origins of the Ontario and Quebec legislatures.

In the order of business before the Senate today is the continuation of the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the third session of the 34th Parliament. It is order number 5 on the order paper. In the first Speech from the Throne delivered in Central Canada, in Newark, near Niagara Falls, which was Upper Canada's capital at the time on September 17, 1792—not even a year later. Let us remember that December 16, 1791 was the date of the Act—Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe declared to members of the provincial parliament assembled before him, "I have summoned you together under the authority of an Act of Parliament of Great Britain passed in the last year, which has established the British Constitution and all the forms which secure and maintain it in this distant country". Following the Speech, the 16 members of the Legislative Assembly met to consider the Speech—just as we are doing—and begin its parliamentary business. Its first meeting, since the physical construction of its "House" was not yet completed, is described by W.C. Croften as being "held under a tree, a large stone serving for the Clerk's Table." From such modest beginnings as this backwoods Parliament evolved Ontario's traditions which despite Simcoe's pronouncements, were never an exact replica of the Westminster model.

While basic British parliamentary principles were adhered to, the specifics of its rules showed many variations. The frontier conditions of the province helped to shape the legislative practices used. Elaborate procedures and multiplicity of questions were not found very appealing to a Parliament often dominated by farmers and shopkeepers who wished to return home as quickly as possible to attend to their own affairs. The liberal values of pioneer society such as detachment from custom and tradition and a laissez-faire attitude regarding the role of government, were reflected in the Assembly's simplistic approach to procedure.

Bills and petitions calling for the appropriation of public money did not have to be accompanied by a recommendation from the Crown. There was much change in the Speakership with no fewer than 12 different members occupying the position. Little case law was developed allowing procedure a great deal of freedom from precedent. In the best United Empire Loyalist tradition, Tory members tried to cling to British forms but were not always successful. Jefferson's Manual, disguised as Thompson's Manual, became the Assembly's chief procedural text book in 1828. The Speaker was not wigged as in Britain. Instead, he wore a cocked hat, just as the Speaker wears in the Senate and in the House of Commons in Canada now. In a manifestation of the liberal value of freedom of religion, the Assembly did away in 1832 with the reading of prayers by the Crown-appointed Anglican clergyman.

Now we go downriver to Quebec. Quebec also traces its parliamentary origins from the passage of this act. The legislature of Lower Canada first met on December 17, 1792, just nine days before the anniversary. It met in a seventeenth-century church known as La Chapelle du Palais episcopal in Quebec City. After a Speaker had been chosen and the Speech from the Throne heard and reported, the Assembly received a message from the Lieutenant Governor recommending that the house "establish a quorum and other standing orders, whether the quorum should be by law or fixed upon a Standing Order of the House". The rules which were eventually reported and agreed to form the cornerstone of Canadian parliamentary procedure. Thirty-eight of the present Standing Orders of the Canadian House of Commons, or almost one-quarter of them, since there are at present 159 Standing Orders, can trace their origin and wording directly to the rules adopted in Lower Canada in that first session of the first legislature.

Many of the colony's francophone leaders praised the Constitutional Act of 1791. Professor Ajzenstat claims that one of the early leaders of the house, Pierre Bédard, found in the 1791 act a sound constitution which he described as a "rare treasure". Professor Ajzenstat writes:

> Pierre Bédard, by all accounts the best student of constitutional law in the colonies during this early period, described the constitution of 1791 in terms as laudatory as any used by Pitt and Fox. It was a "rare treasure" he said, a form of government that would bring the inhabitants of the province freedom of a kind they had never known before.

> No one was more aware of the difficulties of the new regime than Bédard. As leader of the majority party in the Assembly, a party consisting mainly of French Canadians, he was constantly at war with the "English" in the Executive and Legislative Councils. Nevertheless he did not believe that war between the branches of government was what the British had intended with the 1791 Act. His study of British constitutional authorities—among them Charles James Fox and Edmund Burke—satisfied him that the legislators of 1791 had intended the colonies to follow the British parliamentary practice of appointing to the political executive men who could command a majority vote on money bills in the lower house. There should have been no quarrel between the executive and the lower house because the Governors should have had to appoint Executive Councillors sympathetic to the Assembly. The whole difficulty in Lower Canada, Bédard decided, had come about because the Governors had been allowed to spend British money on provincial affairs. They could pay their Executive Councillors with British funds, ignoring the Assembly.

The assembly not having to raise the money, the appointment could take place without their approval. Senators will forgive me if I say that it looks as if the London end run that we claim was used last September has very long and deep roots. To continue:

> Bédard remained convinced that there was no flaw in the Constitution Act of 1791.

It was still, to him, a rare treasure. Professor Ajzenstat continues:

> The prescription had been magnificent; only corrupt practice had destroyed it.

History has generally not been kind to this rare treasure, the Constitutional Act of 1791. Many have seen it as very inappropriate to the egalitarian nature of North American life. The act provided for an appointed legislative council, membership in which could be inherited by the sons of councillors—in effect, a replica of the aristocratic British House of Lords. It never worked. Accountability mechanisms of the executive to the elected lower house were not provided for and the two colonies were denied responsible government. Solutions to the two major problems of Lower and Upper Canada in the pre-1840 era could not be worked out, those two being the clash between an elected assembly and an unaccountable executive, and the racial animosity between English and French. I raise a caveat about that word "racial." I never liked the use of the word "race" in the mandate, as it originally was, of the B and B Commission. It was two founding "races" which was changes to the two founding "peoples". I think "peoples" would be a better word here too.

A new constitutional arrangement was sought by which it was hoped these problems could be better dealt, with and thus was born the Union Act of 1840. It would appear that those constitutional arrangements also fared badly by history as it was supplemented by the British North America Act of 1867.

[Senator Frith.]

So senators can see that from 1791—some nine years to the turn of the century—for some 50 years we had the Constitutional Act, changed by the Union Act of 1840; but that lasted for only 27 years.

We are all well aware of the criticisms of that act—that is, the Union Act of 1840. Canada, as a country, with two founding peoples, Aboriginal peoples, and vast regions each with their own particular histories and development, is still seeking to find an acceptable constitutional arrangement.

Speaking for myself, I suggest that perhaps we should not be so hard on the Constitution Act of 1791. Today we are again confronted with a situation in which recent constitutional acts, drafted in expectation of an improved democracy and expanded individual rights, appears to be generating instead increased political attention and strife. It is perhaps appropriate to look in more depth at the Constitutional Act, 1791, and to try to understand where the high ideals surrounding its drafting went wrong.

• (1600)

It is perhaps appropriate to look in more detail at the Constitutional Act, 1791 to try to understand where the high ideals surrounding its drafting went wrong. To turn again to Mr. Bédard's theme or keynote, where did the "rare treasure" go wrong? The British hoped that the 1791 Constitution would lead to stability and good government, presenting an exemplary counterpoint to the United States with its ineffective central government and its formless democracy. Remember that the American constitution began with, and still maintains, the black letter law that places most of the authority with the states. Through the evolution of judicial interpretation, the central government in the United States is now considered to be much stronger than the state governments. The states, for example, in the American constitution have the residual power. In our Constitution of 1867, for example, the specific powers are given to the provinces but the residual power—that is, all the rest or anything not provided for—is given to the federal government.

Honourable senators are probably aware of the argument or thesis that, particularly the 1930s interpretation of the Canadian constitution by the Privy Council in London, resulted in a complete turnabout, and power was shifted from the federal government, over a long period of interpretation, to the provinces. If honourable senators are interested in the subject, it is very well set out, with clear references to all the cases that are the basis for this argument, in O'Connor's report to the Senate. I think it is the best. I remember that it was the "Bible" when I studied constitutional law under Professor—as he then was—Bora Laskin. It is well-known among constitutional lawyers as the "O'Connor Report". Mr. O'Connor was legislative counsel to the Senate and his report was, in fact, a report to the Canadian Senate.

Hon. Paul David: Do you remember what year that report was presented?

Senator Frith: It would be the late 1930S. It would have to be, because I started law school in 1942, and it was still a pretty fresh document at that time. So it would be the late 1930s or early 1940s.

I ask you to pardon that digression, honourable senators. We were looking at an attempt to understand where the high ideals of the Constitution Act, 1791 went wrong. I mentioned that the British had hoped that the 1791 Constitution would lead to stability and good government, "presenting an exemplary counterpoint to the United States with its ineffective central government and its formless democracy." I had thought that some of you might have wondered what I meant by an ineffective government. Constitutionally at that time, in the late eighteenth century, it was an ineffective central government. As Lord Grenville summed up British policy:

> . . . the general object . . . is to assimilate the constitution of [the Canadas] to that of Great Britain as nearly as the differences arising from the manners of the People and from the present situation of that Province will admit.

Instead, the 1791 Constitution lead to 40 years of bitter political divisions culminating in armed rebellions in both Canadas, as we know, in 1837. It simply did not work. A fundamental problem was that the 1791 Constitution provided no encouragement for a working relationship to develop between the executive or the governor and executive council, on the one hand, and the elected assembly on the other; a problem that, I suppose, bedevils all parliamentary democracies because of the tension between the objectives and the exercise of power by the executive and the wish and will of Parliament to act as a check or balance on that executive power. Certainly, it is one that I believe still bedevils us. Links between "His Majesty's government" and Parliament that had gradually evolved in Britain did not exist in the two Canadian provinces. As Lord Durham succinctly summarized the situation in his 1839 report, "the natural state of government in all these Colonies is that of collision between the executive and the representative body." Notice he states, "the natural state of government." It would be interesting to consider what he meant by "natural" and what we might mean by "natural."

In 1850, Lord Elgin, 3 years into his governorship, also attempted a detached and historical assessment of the 1791 Constitution to understand why it had been so trouble-prone and why it had created such unstable political conditions, leading, as I mentioned a moment ago, to armed rebellion in both of the Canadas that were covered by that constitution. He too concluded that the Canadian system, like the one in the 13 colonies, had reverted to the executive and legislature operating in two distinct, antagonistic spheres. Certainly, that is a good description of the American system, where the President is elected by the country at large, appoints his cabinet and then has to struggle with Congress to achieve his executive or government objectives.

For example—many of you may already know this, and I suppose if I had thought about it I would have realized it, too—but a couple of years ago I went down to Washington to study the American committee system. I was overwhelmed by the power of the committees in the U.S. Congress. I remember a comment by one of the committee chairmen when I had asked about bills and the fact that the government had to appear before all of these committees in order to persuade Congress to accept them. In many ways it is separate from party lines because the President of the United States cannot be sure how Republicans will behave, especially in the House of Representatives.

In any event, I was asking about how the government deals with Congress and the committees. This chairman of one of the committees replied that they have to come to the committee. He went on to say, "Yes, they are just like any other lobbyists. They have to come here to us and persuade us." I asked, "If cabinet members are not in the legislative branch, how do they present their bills?" He said, "They have to persuade us to do that, too, and they have to find somebody to sponsor a bill for them." Of course, members of the cabinet do not present the bill to the legislative branch because no member of the cabinet sits in the legislative branch.

So as I was saying, Lord Elgin concluded that the Canadian system, like the one in the 13 colonies, had reverted to where the executive and the legislatures were operating in two distinct and antagonistic spheres. Perhaps we should ask ourselves whether a similar system does not exist today. It certainly existed in 1987 when 11 first ministers devised the Meech Lake Accord in an extreme example of executive federalism. It would be comforting to be certain that the problem was past, that the executive and the legislative branches will now work closely and productively to resolve our present constitutional dilemma. Perhaps the government will truly listen to the voice of Parliament this time and perhaps the new constitutional committee that has been set up, or is about to be set up—I am not referring to the committee on the amendments to the constitution. Is there a name for it?

Senator Doody: It is not set up yet.

Senator Frith: It is not set up.

• (1610)

Perhaps the new constitutional committee that will be set up—or that we have been promised will be set up—will be given an independent mandate to reflect the voice of the legislature and not the will of the government. I am not suggesting that the will of the government or the will of the legislature must prevail over the will of the government, or that the will of the government must prevail over the will of the legislature, but it would be very desirable and comforting to think that, as we enter this stage, the committee would receive an independent mandate to enable it to stand up and say what it thinks should take place with regard to constitutional rearrangements.

As we celebrate the 200th anniversary of the Constitutional Act, 1791, we should be vigilant in ensuring that the executive listens to the legislature, and listens honestly. I state "any executive"; I am not preaching against the current government exclusively. I hope that any government will listen to the legislature, and listen honestly.

An unaccountable executive was largely responsible for the failure of the Constitutional Act, 1791, and an unaccountable executive could still cause the failure of constitutional reform today.

I now want to turn to the second aspect of my inquiry, namely, to call to the attention of the Senate the advisability of making a request to the British Government that the record copy of the Constitutional Act, 1791 should be permanently in the keeping of Canada.

There is a precedent for such a request. In 1990 a bill was presented to, and passed by, the British Parliament to exclude a copy of the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act 1900 from the public records, to which the Public Records Act of 1958 applies. The bill was drawn up in response to the request made by the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia, which asked that the act which brought Australia into being as an independent nation and which had been on loan in Australia since 1988, permanently remain there.

There are two original copies of all acts passed by the Parliament of the United Kingdom. One is held in the records office of the House of Lords as the official record of parliamentary proceedings—as is done here. The other is the Public Record Office copy. An act of the British Parliament would be necessary if our request to return the Constitutional Act to Canada is agreed to, since the provisions of the Public Records Act of 1958 do not allow for gifts or permanent loans of records to be made. The bill introduced into the British Parliament simply stated that "the copy of the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act 1900, which at the passing of the Act is on loan to the Commonwealth of Australia, shall cease to be included in the public records to which the Public Records Act 1958 applies".

The British Lord Chancellor is responsible for the supervision and care of the nation's public records under the provisions of the Public Records Act. On second reading of the Australian (Public Record Copy) Bill in the House of Lords, he—that is the Lord Chancellor—noted, quite properly, the importance of the public records—a complete and unique collection—to the heritage of the United Kingdom. However—and I am referring to the Lord Chancellor still in Britain—speaking in favour of exempting the Australian Constitution, he added the arguments on the other side:

> The effect of this short Bill will be to make possible a gesture which means a great deal to the people and Commonwealth of Australia, a nation with close and long-lasting legislative and constitutional links with our Parliament . . . The gift of a copy of the Act is a symbol of the history, heritage and traditions which we share and of our friendship.

I do not think, honourable senators, that anyone would deny that those words could—and, I recommend or urge—should apply equally to Canada.

Honourable senators, the Constitutional Act, 1791 belongs in Canada, not in the United Kingdom. It is important to our history. I hope that, at least to some extent, I have persuaded you that it holds much meaning for us. Like the Australians, we, too, should ask that this important document be returned to us. We should put it on permanent display here in the Senate foyer for all Canadians to see. It is, after all, the first constitutional document setting up representative government in British North America, or the northern half of North America.

Our Clerk is entrusted with the safekeeping of all acts of Parliament and those of the United Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. I say: Let him be entrusted with the safekeeping of this one as well. If you agree, or encourage me, I will move in due course a motion to that effect if I feel that it will attract the support of members of the Senate.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Senator Frith, may I ask you why, supposing the document were transferred to Canada, you would have it tabled in the Senate, rather than in the House of Commons or between the two, in the entrance hall of Parliament? Is there any special reason to favour the Senate?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as I said earlier, it is because the Clerk of the Senate, as the Clerk of Parliament, is officially the guardian of this kind of document.

As for your geographical suggestions, I said that the document could be tabled on the floor of the Senate, but I am quite amenable to the idea of perhaps placing it between the two chambers. So to answer your question, it is a corollary of the fact that he is the Clerk of Parliament, but we can put the document in front of the Library of Parliament, for instance.

There are four other steps which are very important: First, if you agree with my suggestion, we will have to move a motion or a resolution in the Senate; second, a bill has to be passed in London; third, the document is returned to Canada, and fourth, the document is put in place.

[English]

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator Frith has concluded what I might call his constitutional imperialism. If he is to ask for the Constitution Act, 1791, would he not also consider asking for the Union Act of 1840 and, indeed, the British North America Act of 1867? We then would have the complete necklace or rosary, as it were, of central Canadian constitutional development. Or does he propose this simply as a slender edge of the wedge for his requests, thinking that perhaps if we ask for too much the English might say, "Go away back to the forests of North America".

● (1620)

Senator Frith: First, I do not want to renounce forever my constitutional imperialism by saying that I am through it. However, I am proposing the return of the Constitutional Act, 1791, pretty well for the reasons suggested by Senator Stewart. Everyone will know that I am the most conservative of senators and a great exponent of gradualism.

I believe that we should start with the Constitutional Act, 1791. I would not like to think it is the thinnest of wedges, but the metaphor is not totally inappropriate.

Hon. Paul David: Is Westminster also responsible for the Quebec Act, the original version of 1774?

Senator Frith: I would think all three of them.

Senator David: We should start there, then.

Senator Doody: Add that to the shopping list.

Senator Frith: You understand that there is a certain—I am tempted, and will give into the temptation to say "dramatic" or "theatrical" value to the fact that it is now 200 years. Perhaps we could add these others on and, in the year 2040, ask for the Act of Union. We should not wait that long, but I am tying it all to the Constitutional Act, 1791 because of the fact that this year is the two hundredth anniversary. Anything that flows from that, and leads to our getting back into Canada other Canadian constitutional documents I certainly would not resist.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I am tempted to add a comment to my honourable friend's discourse this afternoon. It was my impression, when I read the resolution, that he would use this anniversary as a good reason for giving us a very interesting account of some of our past constitutional history. I must say that I am grateful to him for that.

Senator Frith: Here comes the but!

Senator Roblin: I do think, however, that his exposition of the connection between the executive and the legislature in modern day Canada left me somewhat puzzled. I have been under the impression, ever since I came to Parliament some few years ago, that, under the Canadian Constitution the executive was responsible to the legislature and that if the legislature did not maintain the executive in its policies, the executive's policies would go and, indeed, so would the executive. So the parallel my friend is stretching to make between the American system and ours, and our present constitutional discontent, requires a little examination.

I would take the view that, whatever else is wrong with our system today—and there are a good many ways in which it could be properly improved—I do believe that the responsibility of the executive to the legislative body is clear, undisputed, and a part of our Constitution. To the extent that Senator Frith casts some doubt upon that constitutional relationship, I raise my eyebrows, but that does not detract in any way from a very interesting discourse.

It prompts me, as a Manitoban, to wonder whether I should not ask my legislature to seek the return of the Manitoba Act of July 15, 1870 which created my province and established its legislature and enabled people like to me to run for office.

I wonder where this particular line of logic leads us. I agree with my friend here that if one to talk of Canadian constitutional documents that had their origin in the United Kingdom, the Quebec Act is the one that is fundamental to the whole process, regardless of the fact that it is more than 200 years old and certainly, in any logical examination of the question, ought to be included in the request that we should make. Although I hasten to say that I do not think this chamber should support such a request because the consequences might lead us I know not where.

If every legislative body that had a relationship with another one, either in terms of time or seniority, were to make the same requests, all the archives would be stripped bare. Perhaps that is a bit of an exaggeration, but there would be a good many original documents that had left their native hearth, having gone to other places where perhaps they are at home or perhaps they are not at home. Judging from what my friend says about the Constitutional Act, 1791, I am not sure that that particular document would fit particularly well into our constitutional views these days, although its historical position is unquestioned and its succession in the constitutional legislation of Canada is, of course, also unquestioned and is indeed important.

I simply say to my friend that I thought he made a very interesting speech. I do not want to follow him all the way, but so far as I could go, I applaud him.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I cannot add much more on the time question. I agree that it is possible that any request for the return of the Constitutional Act, 1791 could lead to requests for all of these documents to be returned. As I said to Senator David, my only basis for singling out the Constitutional Act, 1791 is the fact that this year happens to be the two hundredth anniversary, so it gives us a springboard, an excuse for doing it.

If honourable senators do not feel that it is appropriate, because of the fact that it would mean that everyone, colleagues of Senator Roblin's and others, would say, "What about my act? I want it back, too", then I agree that it perhaps will not fly. I am grateful for Senator Roblin's intervention because I was testing to see whether this move could get support. Obviously, it is not the kind of thing we will have to a vote on. We are all agreed that it would be a good idea—or at least we do not disagree with it.

On the other question about responsible government, certainly constitutionally the executive is still responsible to the legislature. I did not want to open that up, because I do not want to make a linkage between the fact that I made this intervention today and the fact that we are also debating rule changes. So let me leave the Senate out of it for the moment, because the executive is not responsible to the Senate, anyway, in the sense that Senator Roblin and I were using the phrase.

I believe that the changes over the years by succeeding governments in the House of Commons to the House of Commons rules has made the executive less and less responsible to the legislature.

Senator Roblin: It is not the rules; it is the party system.

Senator Frith: This is my opinion. If Senator Roblin were giving the opposite opinion, I would be sitting shaking my head also. I do not offer this as anything but my own opinion. However, my opinion is that the changes to the rules over the years in the other place—and that is all we need to talk about as far as responsible government is concerned—have made the executive less and less responsible to the House of Commons when matters such as time allocation and closure are coupled with a majority government and a system of party discipline. This applies to all parties, not simply to this one.

Any government in Canada, any Prime Minister in Canada who has a majority in the House of Commons is, in my view, not genuinely responsible, except in four or five year intervals, to the legislature. Because that Prime Minister of whatever party controls the cabinet, to which he or she makes all the appointments and does all the firing, and because of the fact that party discipline for whichever party applies, when that discipline is applied in a majority situation, it reduces that responsibility. Therefore, to bring it back to the actual words of my intervention, that situation makes it less important for the executive to listen to the legislative branch.

• (1630)

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am trespassing on the good nature of the Senate, and probably breaking one of the few rules we have at the present time.

However, my friend's second intervention prompts me to make an added comment. I agree with much of what the honourable senator has said. It seems to me that one of the areas in which we should look for a solution to his dilemma is not so much the rules but the tradition of party discipline which we have in this country.

If we look at the United Kingdom, although its Parliament is by no means perfect, we see that there is much greater freedom of private members to exercise their judgment, independent of the cabinet, to present motions to the house or to circulate expressions of opinion that may not coincide with what the cabinet has been speaking about but which definitely have salutary effects on persuading the executive to listen more carefully to the Parliament, as my friend advocates.

It seems to me that this is the point on which I would like to zero in. It is the question of party solidarity, party discipline and establishing a new tradition in this country that only the very major items such as the Budget, the Speech from the Throne and matters that are expressly designated as matters of confidence are matters on which the government should be inclined either to hide its head, to speak or, indeed, to leave office. Many of the other statutes and acts that are put before us, either in this place or in the other, are not matters of that character.

If we could establish a tradition whereby private members could exercise more influence in the formulation, or perhaps in the shaping, of those bills as they come through, then it would do us a lot of good. That is the point I would like to emphasize as being the area where we need to do something about the way in which our institutions work.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is clear that Senator Roblin's intervention is very logical. I agree with him. As I mentioned, one of the important elements to be considered is the combination of control of cabinet, a majority in the House of Commons and party discipline. If I put the party discipline last, it is not because I consider it an unimportant factor. I agree with the honourable senator that it is an important factor.

Concerning the changes in the rules, when discipline is coupled with such changes, that causes this lesser need to listen to the legislature. Of course, Senator Roblin will know because we have discussed this matter on other occasions that that is one of the reasons that I propose an elected Senate on a proportional representation basis. It is not because I am crazy about the system of proportional representation, but because it always seems to produce a minority. Therefore, it breaks down the party system and control, and results in the government not controlling the Senate.

I think that perhaps the government would not be responsible to the Senate, but that the Senate would have control over the legislation. That is to say, it would have its present veto. If that were to happen, instead of party coalitions, as Senator Roblin has said, except perhaps on certain matters, we would see coalitions arranged on regional bases, or on topical bases. In such a Senate, in my opinion, it would not be at all unusual for Senator Roblin, Senator Doody, and, if you can imagine, perhaps even Senator Phillips and myself, to vote together because of the fact that we would be coming together on an issue rather than on a straight party line. Certainly, western senators might also come together in such a way, depending on the legislation.

Without putting too fine a point on it, and without crossing every "t" and dotting every "i", substantially, Senator Roblin and I agree.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

GRASSE, FRANCE

COMMEMORATION OF LIBERATION OF SOUTHERN FRANCE—INQUIRY STANDS

On the inquiry of Senator Waters:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the commemoration on the 24 August, 1991 in Grasse, France of the liberation of Southern France-Canadian First Special Service Force and gallant members of the French resistance.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I understand that Senator Waters was very briefly hospitalized, is now home and is quite tired. He has suffered from some fatigue but is otherwise in good spirits. However, he is certainly not likely to show up suddenly to say, "What happened to my inquiry?"

Inquiry stands.

THE LATE HONOURABLE DAVID A. CROLL, P.C.

ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS AT FUNERAL

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Before we adjourn, I wish to make an observation to correct an impression that might have been created because of something that was said last Thursday.

When we were discussing the back-to-work legislation and the need for senators attending Senator Croll's funeral to return to Ottawa, I pointed out that the official transportation would be used only by about 11 senators. That may have created the impression that only 10 or 11 of us were to attend Senator Croll's funeral. That was not the case. There was a very good representation from both sides of the house at Senator Croll's funeral, which was a most moving occasion. I can report to those honourable senators who were not there that it was a most fitting tribute to our late colleague.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 18, 1991, at 2 p.m.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 162 citizens from the Province of Ontario who are against the goods and services tax.

The petitioners are principally from Rexdale, Glen Robertson, Gloucester, Manotick and Athens.

INTERNATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF FRENCH-SPEAKING PARLIAMENTARIANS

REPORT OF CANADIAN SECTION TABLED

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian section of the International Assembly of French-speaking Parliamentarians, who took part in the association's regional mission at Port-au-Prince, in Haiti, from May 9th to May 12th.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have some petitions to present today. They are from the Province of Quebec and are worded in the same way as those that I have presented in recent days. They are against the GST and they ask that an election be held to remedy, as I have said, other iniquities of this government.

The petitions are from Lawrenceville, St. Valère, Arthabaska, Roxton Falls, Montreal, Lachine and Laval, Quebec. The total number of names on the petitions is 61.

I also have one petition from Manitoba. It is addressed to me, but, in light of the fact that Senator Molgat and I share a common entrance to our offices, perhaps it was intended for him. In any event, it was addressed to me. All the names on the petition are from Winnipeg. The total number of names is 21.

We end up with three petitions from Quebec, one from Manitoba, for a total of four. There are 61 names from Quebec and 21 from Manitoba, for a total of 82 names.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, tabled the committee's report concerning the expenses incurred by the committee during the second session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Tuesday, June 18, 1991

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-3, An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Canada, has in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, May 30, 1991, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with the following amendment:

That clause 3 of Bill S-3 be amended by striking out lines 32 and 33 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"by-laws, a general meeting of the Corporation shall, notwithstanding section 158 of the Canada Corporations Act, be held at least once every six years and"

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Tuesday, June 18, 1991

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-4 An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the University of Emmanuel College, has in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, May 30, 1991, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Buckwold, report placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

THE ESTIMATES, 1991-92

SECOND REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the second report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

I ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For the text of report see appendix, p. 256)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Bolduc, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

KANESATAKE, KAHNAWAKE—EVENTS OF SUMMER, 1990—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, June 20, 1991, I will call the attention of the Senate to the need for the Government of Canada to constitute an independent judicial inquiry that will be both public and comprehensive, into the events at Kanesatake and Kahnawake during the summer of 1990.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STRIKING OF CANADIAN VOLUNTEER KOREAN SERVICE MEDAL—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT TO ALLOW KOREAN VETERANS TO APPLY FOR WAR VETERANS' ALLOWANCE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, June 20, 1991, I will move:

THAT this Chamber commends the Government of Canada in fulfilling a commitment to the Korean veterans of Canada through a petition signed by a majority of the members of the Senate and the House of Commons and further strengthened by the signature of the Prime Minister of Canada calling on the Government to recognize the sacrifices of the Canadian veterans who served in the Korean conflict by striking a Canadian Volunteer Korean Service Medal;

That this Chamber remind the Government of Canada that they have not as yet fulfilled another commitment made and signed by the Prime Minister of Canada on August 7, 1984, that assured that one of the priorities of a Conservative government would be to make Canadian veterans and/or their dependents living outside of Canada eligible to apply for War Veterans' Allowances if by reason of health, financial or other mitigating circumstances they are unable to return to Canada; and

That the government be asked to respond within thirty days.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Before we go to Question Period there is a matter of Senate business that I should like to discuss with honourable senators concerning the tabling of the report of the Joint Committee on the Constitution.

As honourable senators may be aware, it is the intention of that committee to table its report in the House of Commons on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock. A press conference has been called for 11 o'clock that morning. The Senate would not ordinarily be sitting until 2 o'clock that afternoon. However, it would be helpful if we also could table that report in the Senate at 10 o'clock that morning to give Senator Beaudoin the opportunity to present his explanatory remarks then, rather than at 2 o'clock that afternoon. In other words, senators would be acquainted with the contents of the report at the same time as the members of the House of Commons rather than several hours later, after the general public had received the information.

If honourable senators are agreeable, I will give notice of a motion that I will ask the Senate to sit at 10 o'clock on Thursday morning for that purpose. I do not think at this point I want to go further than that. I do not want to suggest that we continue on Thursday morning with business because the legislative flow from the other place is far too uncertain for me to make that request with any assurance that it will speed up the progress of the work of the Senate.

If honourable senators are in agreement, I give notice now that I will move a motion tomorrow that the Senate sit on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock for the purpose I have outlined.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

AGRICULTURE

DUTY ON EXPORT OF CANADIAN BEANS INTO UNITED STATES—DUTY-FREE IMPORTATION OF AMERICAN WHEAT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Fairly recently it was decided that the subsidy to Canadian wheat growers was at such a level that United States wheat could flow into Canada without hindrance, much to the distress of a number of Canadian wheat producers, although at this time it is impossible to see exactly what will be the effect. In any case, American wheat now flows into Canada unhindered under the Free Trade Agreement; however, we find that certain Canadian agricultural products do not flow the other way with the same ease.

I have been advised by producers of white navy beans in my province who have been trucking some of their product into the United States that they are forced to pay one cent a pound duty as they cross the border. If we consider that the value of the product delivered to the American position—in this case Walhalla, North Dakota—is something in the order of 17 cents U.S. a pound, a one cent duty is indeed a substantial duty. Why is it that wheat can now flow into Canada from the U.S. duty free without any encumbrance, yet here is a Canadian product going the other way on which duty is being charged?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret that I am not in a position to reply to that question today. I shall consult with my colleagues, the Minister of Agriculture and Minister for International Trade, and bring in a reply soon.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—REMOVAL OF CANADIAN SANCTIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government could tell us whether, because of the great changes taking place in South Africa in which Apartheid has been more or less done away with by the passage of new laws' we will be removing our sanctions on that country?

[Senator Doody.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no announcement to make on that matter today but I shall ask my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, whether there is any further information she wishes to impart to the Senate on that matter.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a further question. I understand that the Honourable Barbara McDougall has said that this change would lead to the removal of sanctions by Canada. Is there any truth to that statement?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall ask her.

THE BUDGET, 1991

CUTS TO GRANTS AND CONTRIBUTIONS—COMPOSITION OF REVIEW COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, on March 7, and again on April 9, I asked the Leader of the Government if he had any information regarding the committee established under the chairmanship of the Honourable Harvie Andre concerning cuts in grants and contributions of the federal government. I wonder if the government leader has any further information.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am afraid I do not have any information today, but I shall try to obtain a reply to that question in the course of the present week.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, I would be grateful for such a reply because on April 9 the Leader of the Government said he would have information about the matter right away. As most people know, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women tried to meet with the government yesterday, and that would have been one of the questions. There was no meeting and there was no information. If we could get it this week, it would be very helpful.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think the short answer to the question, if I may attempt the short answer, is that there was an objective stated in the budget to find a certain amount of money—I do not recall the exact amount now—in the general area of grants and contributions across all the departments and agencies of government. Mr. Andre went about his work with other ministers and my information is that the money was found and that the reductions—and, again, I cannot remember the global amount, but my friend probably does—were absorbed across the government in its various departments and agencies. I will confirm that with my colleague and perhaps bring a more precise answer to the question tomorrow or the next day.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, that would be very helpful. I have been trying to track this issue and this is the first time I have heard that solution suggested.

Senator Murray: I think that campaign was a success.

NATIONAL FINANCE

CLOSURE OF BASES—FINANCIAL AID TO COMMUNITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lorne M. Bonnell: Honourable senators, I understand that the Honourable Mr. Masse has stated that the five bases that are going to close in Canada, plus two in Germany, will receive financial aid to help those communities after the bases have been closed.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us if that policy will revert back to places such as Summerside and if the town of Summerside will also receive financial support because it lost its base?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there are a number of assumptions in that question, none of which is valid. No decision has been made to close five bases or any number of bases in Canada or anywhere else since the budget of several years ago.

We will be considering defence policy in the normal course of events and if, in consequence, there are decisions to be taken and announcements to be made in respect of specific bases, then those decisions will be taken and those announcements will be made in due course.

However, I repeat that no such decisions have been made as we speak.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I understand that Shilo, Manitoba, is one of those bases, but there has been some talk in the inner cabinet that it might not be Shilo, because the Conservative member of Parliament in that area offered to resign if that happened. Consequently, the decision is not being made until perhaps Thursday of this week. The inner cabinet has to decide on which other base might go instead of Shilo so that they can keep that Conservative seat.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate confirm that as a fact?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend should not confuse the gossip columns of the tabloid press with the records of cabinet discussions.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Can he identify which of the tabloid press?

Senator Bonnell: It is the Toronto Star that is meant by the "tabloid press". Perhaps some of those inner cabinet meetings are nothing better than gossip columns.

However, if that policy takes place and those defence bases are closed, will Summerside be considered for financial support, as these other communities will be?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again there are assumptions, first, that bases are going to be closed and, second, that a new program is going to be introduced to provide financial assistance to communities, as the honourable senator said. Neither of those assumptions is valid.

As I told the honourable senator, we will be considering what changes ought to be made in Canada's defence policy in light of changing geopolitical circumstances, and if, as a consequence of that review, decisions have to be taken with regard to specific bases here or abroad, those decisions and the announcements will be made in due course. My friend should not jump to conclusions in the meantime.

Senator Bonnell: Then will the minister confirm that Shilo will not be closed? In that manner, we can take the pressure off and support Manitoba, because that part of the province certainly needs that base.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can confirm that no decision has been taken to close any base.

Senator Bonnell: Does Mr. Masse have extra pressure put on him because of Shilo? Has there been some concern put on the government and the minister concerning Shilo being closed, and is there a lot of pressure not to close Shilo?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can confirm that there is a lot of pressure not to close anything.

Senator Bonnell: Well, does the government react to pressure?

If the government is considering closing this base in Manitoba, and if financial support is to go to Shilo, will that support come later on to Summerside? Summerside closed the other day; they all wiped away their tears, the planes flew away and the last of the emergency measures people left Summerside.

Will Summerside be able to get the same financial support as these other bases?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again, I cannot answer hypothetical questions, but I do remind the honourable senator that very considerable efforts were made by the government to ensure, through its own offices and through the private sector, offsets to the loss of employment caused by the closure of the Summerside base. The honourable senator is well aware of that. We worked in close cooperation with the Government of Prince Edward Island, with the Town of Summerside, and with the private sector in Prince Edward Island to create as many offsets as we could. That work is ongoing.

My friend is not unaware of the decision to locate a large GST facility in Summerside. This is a direct outcome of the discussions we had following the decision announced in the 1989 budget to close the military base there.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I am glad the Leader of the Government mentioned the GST facility because, as a senator on this side, I know of the pressures that were put on me last fall to pass the GST. My Prince Edward Island colleague and the mayor of Summerside also asked me to support passage of the GST because this facility in Prince Edward Island was to be opened immediately. I now understand the opening of this facility has been put off for another year. In fact, there is some talk that this facility will be opened in another province.

It seems to me that all of these promises will be put on hold until just before the next election when the government will again come to Prince Edward Island and promise the causeway, the fixed link, the GST office and maybe even a Litton plant. Is that the reason why the opening of this facility has been put off?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can confirm that the announcement made at the time as to the GST facility and the employment involved stands. I will check that because I recently saw a letter from the Premier of Prince Edward Island concerning a statement that he attributed to one of my cabinet colleagues to the effect that the GST facility would be running at full capacity at a rather later date than had been originally stated. I saw that letter and I will look into the facts and report back to the honourable senator on that matter.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, we are told that the Leader of the Government saw a letter and that the minister involved saw a letter. Perhaps that letter will get lost. I would like to know if copies of that letter were sent out to other ministers so that, if the letter should get lost, at least someone will have a copy.

I would also like to know if there is any possibility of speeding up the opening of this GST office in Summerside so that some of the local people who are now losing their jobs and who maybe thinking of moving away may fit into new jobs in that office.

Senator Murray: I can give my honourable friend the assurance that a GST facility of the size described in the original announcement will be built in Summerside and that my honourable friend will be invited to the official opening.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear.

Senator Bonnell: I will be glad to see that. However, I hope my health stands up long enough so that I can be there four or five years from now.

IMMIGRATION

FAST-TRACK TREATMENT FOR APPLICANTS FROM IRAQ— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have read in the newspapers that many more citizens from Iraq are making application to emigrate to Canada and that because of the furore over Mohamed Al-Mashat some of these people will not receive fast-track treatment. Is it also true that many more top officials from Iraq have applied to emigrate to Canada and that they will get the fast-track treatment as did Mohamed Al-Mashat?

• (1430)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the honourable senator is asking a question that is in an extremely sensitive area for the individuals who might be concerned. Nevertheless, I will make inquiries to see what information can properly be released at this time in reply to that question.

CROWN CORPORATIONS DISSOLUTION OR TRANSFER AUTHORIZATION BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Eyton, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill C-8, An Act to provide for the dissolution or transfer of certain Crown corporations and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this particular item was stood on the order paper in anticipation of its being referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. If no other senator wishes to speak on the bill at this time, I would make the necessary motion to refer.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1991-92

ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill C-24, An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1992.—(Honourable Senator Phillips).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I should mention, honourable senators, that this particular bill is the Appropriation Bill and it has been the custom in this chamber for the Estimates reports to be received and debated before we look to the Appropriations Bill. So, in anticipation of the consideration of the report of the committee tomorrow, I would ask that this order stand.

Order stands.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FIRST REPORT ADPOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Robertson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, for the adoption of the First Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders (recommendations concerning the Rules of the Senate), presented in the Senate on 11th of June, 1991.—(Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux).

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, it is with particular pleasure that I rise to speak in this debate.

The exercise that we embark upon is aimed at more than the renewal of our parliamentary rules. It is also a sign of a firm commitment towards their modernization.

For the real goal of our endeavour is to introduce a series of recommendations that will allow us to update our rules while taking into account the new environment in which our daily activities are carried out.

It appears that the spirit in which our rules were drafted belong to an era when flexibility and consensus offered the possibility of freely interpreting the rules to the sole purpose of disposing quickly of the business at hand. It made it easier to obtain the consensus necessary to dispose of our affairs.

Regrettably, we must admit that the parliamentary heritage of our predecessors has almost entirely been forgotten by some while it has remained completely unknown to others.

However, it is useless to indulge in regrets or to try to put the blame on anyone. We must look to the future.

[English]

We have the duty, if not the obligation, to fulfil the mandate bestowed upon us to offer Canadians sober second thought on legislation, and this is the essence of the proposal we are tabling with the First Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

[Translation]

I mentioned earlier the fact that this initiative was undertaken with an aim to modernization. Though our rules have been modified a few times since their adoption, they have never been submitted to a thorough examination. Clearly, they are not quite adapted to today's Senate, which must on the one hand deal with a considerable increase over the last few years in the number of bills to be studied and on the other, do so in a partisan atmosphere that has slowly developed.

That is why today's context is more than ever favourable to an update of our rules. You will agree with me, honourable senators, that nothing in our proposals is revolutionary or dramatic. They are intended to favour a better debate, a more productive use of our time and, naturally, a more efficient planning of our work.

[English]

Allow me to elaborate by explaining a few examples from the report. The proposed rules on time limits on speeches is an appropriate example to illustrate the object of improving the quality of debate in this chamber.

[Translation]

If, as we suggested, all speeches in the Senate with the exception of those that are made by the leaders, the movers of bills and senators answering them are limited to 15 minutes, those who will stand up will have no choice but to make sure that they present their point of view clearly and soberly without exceeding the limits of the issue under consideration.

Also, speakers will have to research their subject better.

That will insure a greater participation by senators for, the speeches being shorter, more of our colleagues will be allowed to present their point of view. I must mention that this proposal maintains the rule that a senator may not take part more than once in a debate. I think that would serve only to limit abuses and not the right of expression.

I would also like to mention the rules concerning time allocation as regards the right to democratically express oneself.

If I deal with it in this way, honourable senators, it is in order to dissipate any doubt as to the importance of this measure in our parliamentary process which came about to fulfill the desire for democratic expression.

This measure would provide the Senate with a mecanism by which it could end the debate and come to a decision. Too often in the last years, decisions important for our country have been postponed because of an excessive use of the rules.

I do not think democracy was well served in thoses intances where decisions on many projects concerning our fellow citizens were late coming. I believe that we should instead discharge our responsibility that is, after due consideration of a matter make the results of our deliberations known to the people of Canada within a reasonable period of time. It is exactly what this new instrument will allow us to do, in accordance with our parliamentary practices and procedures. Some will say, of course, that such a tool will limit the freedom of speech and that its use will violate the democratic process.

We must always remember, honourable senators, that this is not such an unusual measure since such means are already available in the House of Commons as well as in other Canadian leigslatures. I want to make it clear for the benefit of the House that it is not so much a question of preventing the debate than limiting it. Indeed, a motion for time allocation will provide for a further six-hours debate.

The rules also provide for the use of this instrument at each stage in the legislative process, while fully respecting our parliamentary tradition.

My last example concerns the role of the Speaker which will be a more active one than it has been so far. I said earlier that the original purpose of the rules had been to reach a consensus without apparent intervention by the Speaker. This uncommon procedure is the subject of an excellent analysis by Professor F.A. Kunz in his book The Modern Senate of Canada 1925-1963. Professor Kunz describes this function in terms that refer back to a time when the Senate managed to discipline itself and agree by consensus, in order to deal with the matters before it.

I am sure Professor Kunz did not foresee that the role of the Speaker would have to be changed and that the Speaker would have to take on certain new responsibilities. However, these responsibilities will be limited to applying the rules of procedure, including those on speech limits and maintaining order. In fact, these responsibilities are minor, compared to those generally assumed by the Speaker in other parliaments.

The proposal regarding the responsibilities of the Speaker is merely intended to reflect changes in practice and the present physical environment in the Senate. We acknowledge that this kind of authority has no equivalent in other Canadian legislatures, where the speakers definitely have far greater powers. Out of respect for the traditions of this institution, we did not try to expand these powers by drawing a parallel with other legislatures. In fact, the committee has consistently tried to maintain the best possible balance between traditions of the Senate and the need to adapt the institution to changing circumstances.

In this respect, I must say the committee welcomes the presence of Senator Molson who was probably one of the few members on the committee who experienced these gradual changes in the Senate and was therefore very sensitive to the need to strike a balance between preserving the traditions of the Senate and the need to adjust to today's circumstances.

● (1440)

[English]

In conclusion, the Speaker of the Senate would still be able to exercise the same authority that he has under the present rules. Nonetheless, it is essential to allow him the appropriate authority to enforce both the existing and the proposed rules.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, precedents exist in all British type parliaments that I know of for the three examples I picked from the set of amendments proposed by the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. As a 14-year veteran of the Quebec national assembly, where I had the opportunity to sit on both sides of the House, I think I got a pretty good idea of the implications of such rules.

When I first got there, the rules had been in effect for quite some time and provided for a time limit to the members' speeches, a limited number of comments and also specific rules for closure.

These, which are much stricter as regards time allocation than our new rules, are used when the government decides that the key players have been consulted enough and that the opposition has been given enough time to make its point; and therefore the government considers it has just cause. Then only, will the government apply closure, but always reluctantly, knowing that it will have to take the blame if it made the wrong decision. Closure is used, in the end, as an expression of the government's determination to govern and fulfil its responsibilities to the people.

Honourable senators, not only is our proposed initiative essential in the normal context of the periodic review of our rules, but it also a sign that we recognize the need to modernize our practices and procedures. Our goal is to an efficient decision-making process in an environment different from the one our predecessors had contemplated in the early days of this institution. Such is our duty to the people of Canada: to give them an efficient and productive Senate for as long as this institution exists in its present form. I am convinced that all the honourable senators will want to contribute to this review of our rules and procedures.

At a time when parliamentary institutions are often criticized and when their reputation is questioned, I think that we will certainly want, all together, to reassert the value of this parliamentary institution, which is an important one among our democratic institutions.

In concluding, I would simply like to repeat what my colleagues have said before me, namely that nothing is perfect, especially when it comes to rules and procedures. Those rules and procedures will have to stand the test of time. However, nothing should keep us, if they prove not as adequate as we would like them to be, to use the flexibility required to adapt them so that they can make that the Canadian Senate as efficient as possible.

Thank you, honourable senators.

The Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Would Senator Lavoie-Roux allow me one question?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Go ahead senator.

Senator Molgat: When she was on the committee, did the honourable senator Lavoie-Roux hear about a long standing tradition, almost a rule, whereby the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders never made any decision, unless both sides were present. The committee would sometimes discuss issues, but if members from both sides were not present, no decision would be made?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I believe that is really what the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders would have liked. To my knowledge, all the necessary measures were taken so that we could reach to the decisions that the honourable senator would like to see.

Unfortunately, I believe that with the exception of Senator Olson, the Liberal senators decided not to attend the meetings of the Committee. This decision was aimed at keeping a committee that had been duly set up according to the rules from doing its work.

I think at one point people must take on their responsibilities. I must say I am sorry the opposition decided not to sit on that committee, because they probably would have been able to make some extremely worthwhile recommendations or suggestions. We certainly were deprived of the benefit of their wisdom.

I think our committee was properly established and that relevant information was forwarded to you on many occasion. You were invited to attend. Senator Olson can testify he was well-greeted, as was Senator Molson, who served as an independent senator. But the die was cast when you made your decision!

Senator Molgat: Would Senator Lavoie-Roux entertain a second question?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Very well, senator.

Senator Molgat: You said we are considering major changes to the Standing Orders. Are you aware that several attempts were made in the past to change the Senate Standing Orders and those attempts were challenged mostly by senators from her side of the house, in particular by Senator Flynn, who was against any change to our Standing Orders.

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I must say I do not know of any objections which could have come from some of my Conservative colleagues.

If such is the case, I do not know what their motivation was then. But personally, I think any parliament must throughout the years make some necessary adjustments, and that is what we are trying to do here.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Lavoie-Roux a question? I think I heard her say that she studied the rules of other parliaments, including the British Parliament. In your research, did you find another parliament where the speaker is designated by the head of the government, often against the wishes of the majority of MP's or senators? Did you find that elsewhere?

Senator Lavoix-Roux: I think the honourable senator knows as well as I do that the role of the Speaker of the Senate, as I mentioned in my remarks, differs in many respects from the role of the speaker in other legislatures in Canada for example.

I do not want to judge our Speaker but, since you brought up the subject, I can say that, to my knowledge, I am not aware of any situation where the Speaker has been unfair to the opposition. I think the Speaker has a responsibility, and it is to ensure that the Senate can proceed with its business. In that sense, he fulfilled his responsibility the best way he could.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senator, Senator Lavoie-Roux has not answered my question. I did not question the Speaker's rulings. In the Senate, the Speaker has always been designated by the Prime Minister, regardless of the majority in the Senate. It is nothing new.

If I refer to the parliaments that I have seen or studied, it is an exception that the majority in this house does not have the right to elect or to refuse the appointment of a speaker.

My question is very simple: In your research, did you find another parliamentary assembly where the same situation applies?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, the honourable senator knows quite well that that procedure is provided for in our constitutional rules. The Speaker of the Senate is appointed by the head of the government. This Prime Minister exercised the same prerogatives his predecessors did in the past.

Senator Thériault: Answer my question. In this situation as you see it, do you think that the Speaker must have, the way it is recommended in your new rules, the same status any speaker has in the National Assembly or any other legislative assembly or in the House of Commons?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I mentioned in my remarks that our Speaker does not fulfill his responsibilities—I prefer that word instead of powers—the same way other speakers do in other legislatures.

Nonetheless, he needs a minimal set of rules in this institution if the Senate is to work effectively.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, Senator Lavoie-Roux said she sat in the National Assembly for 14 years, if I understood her well. Have you ever witnessed, at the time of discussions on the rules of the National Assembly, changes made by one party only?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: No, honourable senators, I think that rules are generally changed in collaboration not only with the official opposition but also with the other political parties that might be represented in the National Assembly. But such changes must be made in collaboration within a framework which is represented here by the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. This framework was used. This Committee has been set up formally, in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Now, nobody can be forced to drink if they do not want to. In that sense, the opposition chose not to participate in the Committee's proceedings.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I would invite you to come in my province, in Eastern Canada, and elsewhere in Canada, to try and explain your position.

Senator Lavoie-Roux: In conclusion, honourable seantors, I would like to say that I would feel totally at ease to appear before any legislature or group to explain the actions the Senate is trying to take. Those are actions taken in the best interests of Canadians and, more particularly, those are actions that allow a reassertion if possible, ever so slightly, of the value of this institution that we are part of and that we have unfortunately debased not too long ago.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I would like to tell Senator Lavoie-Roux that she will perhaps be welcome in my province but she might not be totally at ease once she will have given her explanations to the people of my province.

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: May I ask the honourable senator a question? She has acknowledged that interested parties may not have been called to give their views on these rules. Would it be appropriate, if she feels that there were interested parties, for her to consider the summer vacation to allow the rules to return to a committee so that interested parties such as the Clerk, the Table Officer, constitutional experts and other interested parties aside from those on this side might have their independent views given so that the entire Senate would have the benefit of those who have not been embroiled in the controversy, but could in effect project their ideas to see whether or not the conclusions of the Tory caucus is satisfactory for all of Canada?

Hon. C. William Doody: I wonder if I could undertake to reply to Senator Grafstein's question? I believe there would be absolutely no hesitation on this side of the house to refer the rules, once they are passed. As a matter of fact, you do not have to refer the rules. The Rules committee can seize on them at any time it wishes and make any recommendations for improvements or changes. We on this side would encourage the committee to do so, and I would like to see an ongoing monitoring of its progress when we come back in the fall. I hope the committee will study them on an ongoing basis and continue to make recommendations for improvements.

I do not think any of us in this chamber feel that the proposed rules are without flaws. Certainly there are going to be found some imperfections in them and they are going to need some improvement. We will need the cooperation of all honourable senators working together to make sure that we have a workable arrangement for the business of this place.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Senator Grafstein: What is the hurry?

Senator Doody: If the honourable senator had asked me that last September, I would have been able to look ahead and say that perhaps we need some set of rules to govern our conduct so that we can get on with the business. We did not use them. They were inoperative. They did not work. We are trying to improve the situation, and we hope that all honourable senators will join us in so doing.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I was asked to sit on the Rules committee for, I suspect, two reasons. One was because the Opposition had suggested that committees would better reflect the membership of the Senate if it had an Independent as a member, and the other reason, perhaps, was because I had served for 15 years as chairman of the Rules committee during which time we made massive revisions some years ago.

Senator Thériault: Chaired the committee. That is how it should be now.

Senator Molson: Thank you. I might say that a minute ago it was said that rules had not been studied in depth for some time. In 1968 we revised the rules. If anyone has copies of the old rule books they would not need much convincing to see what enormous changes were made. The 1952 book was like a little pocketbook about a quarter of an inch thick. That carried through to 1964, and the more modern rule book which came out in 1968 had tremendous changes from those old rules.

I greatly regret that members of the opposition were not allowed to take part in the discussions of the committee. Obviously partisan loyalty will prevent agreement on the reason, but I was present when the Selection committee sat and I heard the causes.

However, the time has come for the Senate to make an effort to recover its proper posture, and I ask honourable senators to try to think of the future, to think of Parliament, and to think of Canada.

Party positions, reputations, success and power are the stuff of politics, but I suggest, with great respect, that now is the time when we should try to heal the wounds we have suffered and see if we cannot get this chamber functioning usefully and with dignity once again.

[Senator Doody.]

It is my opinion that the new rules which we are now discussing are overly complicated and I have expressed this view to some members of the committee.

This leads me to the thought that we might benefit from a practice in some assemblies which have at times introduced new rules "provisionally" subject to review at a future date.

• (1500)

Therefore, I suggest two things—

Senator Frith: Subject to review when?

Senator Molson: At a future date. Therefore, I suggest two things: First, that the Liberal opposition nominate their members to the Rules committee; and, second, that the proposed new rules be adopted "provisionally"—

An Hon. Senator: No way.

Senator Molson: —to be reviewed after the parliamentary summer recess. We might in this way meet the wishes, to some extent, of the Opposition to take more time for consideration and, at the same time acquire the experience necessary to simplify and make more effective the new rules.

Of one thing I am certain: The previous rules must be rewritten, because they are useless in an atmosphere where there is deep antagonism such as prevails today in our chamber. For this reason I shall vote in favour of the report.

At the same time, we should benefit from the experience and gain back the respect of all our senators, all our colleagues, for the Senate.

Honourable senators, after every battle or after every war there comes a time for cooling off. May I suggest that now is the time for us to put the reputation and the responsibility of the Senate ahead of all else and take steps to get back on a peaceful course.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Robertson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, that this report be now adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some. Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion the "yeas" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

FORESTRY

PLIGHT OF FOREST PRODUCTS INDUSTRY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, May 14, 1988:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the plight of the forest products industry in British Columbia and in certain other areas of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, this afternoon, I welcome the opportunity to place on record some facts about Canada's forest industry and to present some of the problems. This will not be a partisan speech, because it is absolutely vital that we cooperate to keep this very basic industry as strong and healthy as possible.

The world market these days is mean, tough and competitive. While recently there has been a improvement in lumber sales for some Canadian companies, including some in my province of British Columbia, there are a number of danger signs on the horizon. No one can be complacent about the future of this industry which is of critical importance to the Canadian nation.

Am I overstating the situation? The facts say otherwise. Forestry's contribution to the Canadian economy cannot be underemphasized since it employs almost one million Canadians directly or indirectly in almost all of our provinces. We are custodians of 10 per cent of the world's forests.

In 1989 the forest industry provided for 348,000 direct jobs and 540,000 indirect jobs, or roughly one in every 14 jobs. Wages and salaries paid in 1988 in the forest industry amounted to $9.6 billion. The forest industry ensures the survival of 300 forest dependent communities, and many of these communities are in the provinces represented in this chamber.

The forest industry contributes more than $40 billion in annual shipments. In 1988 the total value of shipments was $49 billion of which 54 per cent was sold domestically and 46 per cent was exported. The net trade balance of $19.5 billion for 1989 in forestry exceeds that of agriculture, mining, energy and fishery combined. That is worth repeating: The net trade balance in forestry exceeds that of agriculture, an important area; mining, a very important area; and energy and fisheries combined.

In 1989 forest products exports totalled $22.8 billion in value. This amounted to 17 per cent of the total Canadian exports and 21 per cent of the total world trade in forest products.

Canada's key forest products exports are wood pulp, 30 per cent; newsprint, 25 per cent; and softwood lumber, 24 per cent. Canada's major export markets for forest products are the United States, 65 per cent; the EEC, 15 per cent; Japan, 11 per cent; and others, 9 per cent.

Forestry provided for $8.9 billion dollars in new investment for the Canadian economy in 1989, the latest available figures.

Since 1984 the forest industry has invested over $2 billion for pollution control and expects to spend an additional $5 billion to meet new environmental guidelines.

I do not think we should be naive, honourable senators, about some of the comments which have been appearing recently in European media and on European television networks. Recently attention has been focused on what is described by some of them as the Canadian forest industry's lack of attention to the environment. I have stated that since 1984 the forest industry has invested over $2 billion in pollution control alone. What have we seen recently? European and off-shore camera crews have been parading through our Canadian forests, photographing what they describe as the rape and pillage of this great forestry heritage. They are so concerned about North America, so concerned about Canada, they are sending their crews in to photograph us. Well, I am not flattered by all this attention, and neither should any of us be.

Some of this activity may be sincerely motivated. It may represent a genuine concern for the Canadian environment and for conservation. However, I am cynical enough to suggest that much of it is inspired by a determination to damage Canada's forest product export sales. Some of these same activists succeeded in ruining Canada's fur industry. All of us can well recall the world effort to prevent Canada from culling its seal herds, and now the vastly increasing number of seal herds are destroying valuable fish stocks in the north Atlantic, endangering the industry itself and affecting the lives of those who work in that Atlantic fisheries industry.

We remember those visitors from overseas, armed with their motion picture cameras. Well, they are back again. They are in British Columbia. Remember them in the seal crusade days with their videotapes, accompanied by their production crews attired in leather clothing. We remember how they used to come in with their leather coats and pontificate about the plight of the seals. After their judgmental outpourings, many of these same visitors saw no contradiction in returning to their hotels and dining on roast rack of lamb and veal schnitzel.

The forest industry is not perfect and mistakes have been made. But, most assuredly, this is true from coast to coast there is much greater concern for the environment and for replanting than there was 20, 10, or even five years ago. We do not need offshore visitors to tell us what is wrong with our industry. We do not need European television specials to tell us what is wrong with Canadian forests.

On one visit to Europe, I remember the incredibly nightmarish sight, in a wealthy central European country, of one forest area completely dead, the tall pine trees reduced to ghostly spectres on the horizon. Nearby, a chemical plant spewed out its noxious wastes; people were literally coughing in the streets. We have nothing in Canada even remotely as bad as that obscenity, and this same country is one of those countries that are sending television crews into Canada, lecturing us about the environment. Perhaps one of our worst mistakes has been that we have failed to encourage CBC or CTV crews to visit that country in order to photograph its environmental outrages. Perhaps we need a couple of offshore missions by our own media to tell them what is wrong in their country.

Having got that off my chest, let me return to a few dry statistics. Half of Canada's land base is forested—roughly 453 million hectares, or an area three times the size of Europe. Approximately one-half of this area is designated as productive land and one-half is considered commercially viable. One million hectares are harvested each year. Studies indicate that Canadians plant two trees for every one tree harvested, planting close to 1 billion seedlings in 1990 coast to coast. That is not a bad record. It could be better and we have to do more. However, in my province—and I know it is the same in certain other provinces—it is great to see the crews of young people going out and replanting our forests. It is a constructive, productive thing for young people to do.

Most of Canada's forest land—about 80 per cent—is controlled by the provinces. Ten per cent is controlled by the federal government and most of that is in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. The remaining 9 per cent is held by 348,000 private woodlot owners.

These are the facts. They seem to indicate that the forest industry is profitable and buoyant, but there is another and more troubling dimension to the picture. Last year in British Columbia, for example, operations incurred a net loss of $9 million compared to net earnings of $1.1 billion in 1989. Results from non-British Columbia operations increased the loss to $10 million. Industry sales declined 12.7 per cent to $11.8 billion in 1990, from $13.6 billion in 1989. The rates of return for British Columbia operations in the forest industry, compared to overall operations, were as follows: As a return on capital employed, 1.7 per cent; and on all operations, 1.8 per cent. This is compared to a return on capital employed in 1988 of 13.9 per cent; and a return on all operations of 12.1 per cent. These figures are contained in an excellent recent Price Waterhouse study which tells us that in the United States, firms achieved a 4.3 per cent return on assets after tax, while in the province of British Columbia that figure was zero.

The industry in eastern Canada posted a percentage figure of 1.1 per cent. We hear all about the talk of the wealthy forest industry and how they are raking in obscene profits. The figures do not support that. Despite all of the comfortable assumptions that British Columbia's main industry is thriving,

B.C.-based companies have generally underperformed other North American companies, even Canada Savings Bonds which is a completely risk-free investment. There is no reason for complacency.

Despite sharply reduced cashflows from operations, capital expenditures amounted to $2.3 billion dollars in 1990, almost identical to 1989's record high. The increase in borrowing raised short- and long-term debt to $5.1 billion, up from $3.9 billion in 1989. Honourable senators, I know these statistics are rather dry, but I think it is important that one of the national chambers gets the facts on the record in order to sound some alarms.

The ratio of debt to shareholders' equity deteriorated from 36-64 in 1989 to 43-57 in 1990. The impact of this deterioration on the industry's financial position has been lowered credit ratings, higher borrowing costs and more difficulty in accessing investment funds.

Of course, as many of you senators who have various forestry operations in your provinces know, the problems with the Canadian dollar have further aggravated the situation. The Canadian dollar strengthened 1.5 per cent against the U.S. dollar last year. This, of course, had a negative impact of some $9.3 billion. In 1989, $10 billion of B.C. forest products were exported priced mainly in U.S. dollars. Revenues would have been $140 million higher in 1990 if the exchange rate had remained unchanged from 1989. This exchange rate situation is just killing some of our forestry operations. Revenues would have been $1.5 billion higher had the exchange rate remained unchanged from 1986 when that memorandum of understanding was signed with the United States.

The industry recorded a net loss of $9 million in 1990, a dramatic—and perhaps we should add the word "traumatic"—decrease from prior net earnings of $1.15 billion. Many factors contributed to this shift. Lumber suffered a $281 million loss because of soft world markets. Adverse exchange rates—and I have spoken about that—increased costs, and continued high stumpage rates all contributed. The lumber sector suffered from significant curtailment in closures. Market pulp experienced lower sales volumes, lower prices, higher costs, and oversupply. These resulted in earnings of $227 million in 1990, down from $694 million in 1989.

Newsprint lost $33 million last year primarily because of lower prices, higher costs, lower operating rates caused by production problems with new machines, and shutdowns for other capital projects. Prices were adversely impacted by substantial increases in North American capacity.

Other operations experienced a general decline in product values coupled with upward pressure and costs. Net earnings were $82 million compared to earnings of $309 million in 1989. Plywood lost $4 million in 1990 after earning $35 million in 1989. The plywood sector experienced continued mill closures and corporate reorganizations. Return on capital employed all but disappeared, reflecting the absence of profitability combined with continuing capital expansion. Altogether, the industry invested some $2.3 billion in new plant and equipment in 1990, including $400 million for environmental control purposes. These expenditures were largely in respect of projects initiated in prior years.

The value of British Columbia forest products sold dropped to $11.8 billion in 1990 from $13.6 billion in 1989. This represents 52 per cent of the total value of manufacturing shipments in the province in 1990, down slightly from 53 per cent in the prior year.

Direct industry employment declined by some 4,000 jobs to 81,000. The reduction was most significant in logging and lumber where the net reduction for these two sectors was 3,000 jobs. This has had a very adverse effect on our province and, certainly, some of the other provinces across the country.

There were minor increases in market pulp and newsprint employment because of 1989-90 increases in capacity. Other operations decreased by 1,100 employees as their profitability declined. Despite the fall in employment, the forest industry still generated 17 per cent of the jobs in British Columbia. Again, if the 1986 exchange rate had prevailed in 1990, industry revenues would have been $1.5 billion higher in Canadian dollar terms.

Honourable senators, I think we can understand why there is absolute unanimity among all the political parties in the province of British Columbia and in all sectors of the economy, labour and management, to get rid of that memorandum of understanding regarding softwood lumber that we signed with the Americans in 1986. I know the government is working on the project. We have been given that assurance and I hope we can report some progress very soon.

Wood costs rose 4 per cent in 1990. The increase reflected, in part, the incremental costs associated with meeting changing harvesting and silviculture requirements to minimize environmental impacts. Reflective of the poor market for lumber and other solid wood products, the 1990 log harvest declined 10.2 per cent from the 1989 harvest. At the same time, there was an effective stumpage rate increase of 4 per cent despite the poor economic market. Stumpage is very insensitive to market conditions. It makes no sense at times. The $605 million raised in 1990 from stumpage, licences, rents and other fees took no account of the solid wood sector's lack of profitability. $605 million compares with $648 million and $647 million levied in 1989 and 1988 respectively. In contrast, the combined results of the solid wood sector on which stumpage is levied dropped to a net loss of $285 million from earnings of $112 million in 1989.

Current taxes, stumpage and other payments to governments fell from $1.6 billion in 1989 to $1.2 billion in 1990. Income taxes and other payments to governments on behalf of employees amounted to $1.3 billion, up slightly from 1989. For every $5 of sales revenue generated by the industry in the province of British Columbia, $1 goes to the government.

Honourable senators those are the dry, statistical facts. What do we do to ensure the economic survival of an industry of enormous importance to this nation? First, we must recognize and acknowledge the importance of the forest sector.

Earlier, I pointed out the great importance of this industry. It means we must work for a coordinated strategy among federal and provincial ministries to replace the current atmosphere of ministries competing for responsibility, resulting in shifting ground rules from governments which detract from the industry's ability to focus on other issues. All of the problems did not start with this government presently in office; I would not make that allegation. Certain problems preceded that. Other governments, earlier governments, made mistakes with respect to this industry.

• (1540)

One of the real concerns being felt by forest companies in the province of British Columbia is the perceived lack of federal attention to the industry. Well, there should also be more provincial attention. It is a serious concern, especially given the magnitude of the forest industry in the Canadian and British Columbian economies. Forest products shipments in British Columbia represent one-half of all manufactured shipments by value, and, as I noted earlier, the forest sector's contribution was roughly $13 billion in 1989 excluding the service sector support. One in five B.C. jobs is directly or indirectly linked to forestry. Forest products in Canada are the largest contributor to the trade balance. The forest sector in Canada represents a much more significant percentage of all manufactured goods shipped compared with the United States, yet the U.S. government appears to be more receptive to forestry concerns.

Canadian forestry has a major impact on all macroeconomic variables such as capital formation, trade balance, currency exchange and labour markets. The complaints that I hear, along with those heard by those in government, in the other place and in this chamber, suggest that there is a lack of continuity of federal response, a lack of understanding, which just did not happen over night, reflecting a general lack of leadership even where matters are clearly within the federal sphere, such as environmental issues, revenue stream development, data base development, and the NSR component of FRDAs. That lingo means "not sufficiently restocked component of forest resources development agreements." In other words, those are the lands in our province and in other provinces which have not been reseeded or have not been replanted successfully to make possible new forests to enable future generations to enjoy the advantages of this forest resource. In some cases, the trees have been planted and then they have died; they have not taken; they have not proved to be viable.

Another matter clearly within the federal sphere, which requires more attention, is education and research. It is felt on the west coast that trade issues have been both an exception to this lack of understanding and an example of an appalling lack of leadership.

On the one hand, a series of five-year agreements and an offshore trade development program have been quite successful. They have worked pretty well. On the other hand, the current memorandum of understanding on softwood lumber will be the death knell for independent operators if the problems created by it are not addressed without delay, due to the changed economic conditions.

It is felt too by many people associated with the industry, directly and indirectly, that intergovernmental rivalry is also a significant problem, both between the federal and provincial levels and among departments at both levels. It is felt that a strong voice is needed at the federal cabinet level to bring some unification to the "see-saw," "whip-saw" approach to forestry issues among various departments.

Changing values in society emphasize the lack of vision or long-term planning by governments to encourage a strong forest industry. There are current concerns for reforestation and forest management, labour conditions and environmental control standards. All of these are worthy and important, but the associated costs and cries of retribution for decades of outdated forest practices are currently stacked on top of increased tariffs, loss of competitive monetary standard and decreased demand.

Now a word about a report which was issued recently, "The State of Forestry in Canada", a 1990 report to Parliament by the government. In some ways it is a very good report. It is over the name of the Hon. Frank Oberle and sets forth some of the real problems that forestry has in this country. I would like to make reference to two paragraphs which talk about competition and our efforts to pursue more liberalized world trade by pushing for the elimination of both tariff and non-tariff barriers in multilateral trade negotiations. The report states:

> While substantial inroads have been made in recent years, Canada's forest products industry still faces a number of trade barriers. In the past, tariffs posed the greatest barriers by making Canadian products less price-competitive in foreign markets. Recent international trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade . . . have generally reduced such barriers, however tariff escalation remains a problem for some forest products. Other non-tariff barriers are also faced by the industry, often in the form of technical constraints, such as meeting foreign building codes and product standards.

As honourable senators know, there seem to be ways in which some countries get around such troublesome things as free trade provisions by erecting other kinds of barriers, such as non-tariff barriers.

> Canada is continuing to pursue more liberalized world trade—and that is good

> —by pushing for the elimination of both tariff and non-tariff barriers in multilateral trade negotiations.

The report continues:

> Similar efforts in the bilateral arena have had some success. The recently negotiated Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, which came into effect on January 1, 1989, provides more secure and open access to Canada's largest and closest market.

We hope it will work successfully.

The agreement contains provisions to phase out tariffs on printing and writing papers and of perhaps greatest importance to the forest products industry, mechanisms to deal with the settling of disputes.

However, a number of bilateral trade issues remain which restrict free and open access to the U.S. market. The memorandum of understanding . . . dealing with the export of Canadian softwood lumber remains a controversial trade irritant. There is also a tariff on shingles and shakes, imposed by the United States to protect its industry in the Pacific northwest. This tariff is expected to expire in mid-1991.

There are other challenges developing. We are facing very much tougher competition abroad. Our solid wood products and pulp and paper industries are looking at very difficult competition. New competitors are appearing on the scene, some with significant advantages in labour and raw materials. Brazil, for example, has extensive hardwood forests and low labour costs. Yes and they seem to be in the process of cutting down an awful lot of those forests. Chile, New Zealand and other countries in the southern hemisphere have plantation forests that can provide fibre for new pulp mills and supply competitive grades of lumber to Pacific Rim countries in the near future. Other competitors, such as Sweden and Finland, have modern pulp and paper mills that are closer to European markets. These are some of the markets up for grabs right now. That may be one of the reasons for the anti-Canadian propaganda offensive by some people in Europe. Unbelievably, it is supported by some of our people right here in Canada who invite these crews in to photograph the worst side of the forest industry. This is a matter of real concern.

Many of Canada's competitors are also investing heavily in research to develop new equipment and products. So we are not without people out there challenging our right to sell to the world. The industry in the province of British Columbia believes, supported by labour, that a coordinated strategy for research, information management and decision-making is necessary, not only for the 1990s but for the 21st century, now less than ten years away. The strategy needs to recognize the cyclical nature of the forest industry and will need to temper capital demands in periods of economic recession. It is to the industry's advantage to take a responsible role in reinvesting in forestry development. What it is asking for is the gradual and incremental implementation of new governmental policies in a manner which allows the industry to adapt.

Ad hoc policies which do not reflect long-term thinking will force businesses into bankruptcy for a net loss to both federal and provincial economies. We will have successfully killed the goose that laid the golden egg. Examples of political and public misunderstanding of the present plight of the forest industry include, first, the panacea of moving to value-added production when the industry infrastructure is based on primary resource exports at the present time.

A second is comparing the recession of 1991 to the downturn of 1982. In 1982, the industry slump was brought on by factors which included undertaking productivity-enhancing capital expansions and peaking debt interest. The 1982 recovery was boosted by the capital expansions, the pent-up demand for housing and lowering interest rates allowing for a roaring recovery. On the other hand, in 1991 the capital costs are to enhance the forest environment, which is good, but these costs are not focused on productivity, hence while important for environmental reasons and supported by the public, they will not contributed to the economic recovery. In addition, the passing of the baby boom wave for housing, the relatively low interest rates and a relatively high insecurity in investment markets indicate a slower recovery than post-1982.

A third example is comparing the North American forest industry to the Scandinavian model. It is done frequently. People who do special reports love to make that comparison. However, those comparisons are not entirely valid. As, in the Swedish example, forest control is much more centralized and the government has developed a long-term strategy to build a strong forest industry, including a period in the early 1980s when Sweden devalued its currency to provide a competitive climate for its forest-related businesses. Honourable senators will recall that devaluation and the effect it had on export sales as far as Canada was concerned.

A final example of political and public misunderstanding of the present plight is the expectation of a new crop of properly educated forest managers when current enrolments in undergraduate forestry programs are dropping off and there are too few Ph.D.s qualified to fill existing research facilities, let alone to address the gaping holes in research and information necessary for an informed forest strategy.

Under the heading of investment, investor confidence in the forest industry is emasculated. Industry trust in governments, without putting a label on the governments, appears to be shattered in some cases. One suggestion to encourage general confidence in the industry is to show that forestry can respond to provide real investment growth in the range of 7 to 8 per cent. Currently the industry average is roughly 5.3 per cent real growth. With proper silviculture research and management practices, the shift from old growth forestry to second growth forest resources will provide the constant supply necessary to weather investor concerns when the market soars on its five-to-seven year cycle.

If pension fund legislation were amended to allow for greater participation of the private funds in forest resource investments, the so-called lift factor of pension fund investment would likely raise the real growth security in forest industries to 7 to 8 per cent, creating a even broader investment appeal. Pension fund investments in forests is already happening in the United States either through cash investments or through actuarial purchase of forest lands with the funds. The intent is to provide government programs which encourage the private sector to do the work.

I want to close by saying a few brief words again about the memorandum of understanding on softwood lumber. It was negotiated, I am sure, in the hope that it would be satisfactory for both the United States and Canada, but the need for its repeal is an issue of immediate and critical concern for many private softwood lumber product companies. The U.S.-Canada MOU and the resulting B.C. stumpage costs must be radically altered. The memorandum of understanding should be cancelled.

There is a crisis. The crisis has arisen from a change in economic conditions between the time of signing of the MOU in 1987 and today including exchange rates, market share and increasing regulations in costs. It is too bad that we made no provision for a change in the exchange rate between the Canadian and U.S. dollars. The MOU allows for no such consideration or amendments to either exchange rates or market share and the potential harm to private forest product businesses in B.C. is real and serious. This is one issue that the industry is absolutely united on, supported by the trade unions. Immediate and continued pressure in Parliament for action on this issue is required. It is felt that if necessary, the 30-day escape clause should be invoked. Perhaps we should start over while there is still an industry left to start over with, as one forestry spokesman said the other day.

On March 7, of 1981 the leader of the Liberal Party the honourable Jean Chrétien, wrote a letter to the Right Honourable Prime Minister. He said:

> I am writing to express my concern regarding the state of the Canadian softwood lumber industry and the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) on softwood lumber signed by your government and the government of the United States on December 30, 1986.
>
> When the MOU was signed in 1986 Canadian lumber producers had a competitive advantage on the U.S. market due to the low value of the Canadian dollar, which encouraged Canadian lumber exports to the United States.
>
> As you are well aware, since the signing of the MOU, conditions in the softwood lumber industry have changed dramatically, industry profits have substantially declined as a result of a lower demand in prices, the value of the Canadian dollar vis-a-vis the U.S dollar has increased, ($0.72 cents in 1986 to $0.86 cents in 1991) and woodchip prices are lower and are continuing to fall. All of the above factors have contributed to mill closures and high levels of unemployment in this sector of the Canadian economy.
> Problems in the softwood industry are definitely aggravated by this 1986 MOU. The Canadians softwood industry has never considered the MOU to be a permanent ongoing agreement and changes in economic conditions have made the MOU irrelevant today.
>
> Furthermore, the MOU required the provinces to implement changes in their stumpage policies at the request of the United States government. This is a clear intrusion into Canadian sovereignty.

That is something that would not be tolerated, I am sure, were the shoe on the other foot.

[Senator Perrault]

> I am aware that negotiations with the United States to renegotiate the MOU have now been underway for more than one year. I am deeply concerned over the lack of progress made to date. It is important that that issue be resolved very quickly. Further inaction will result in the demise of small and independent sawmills, particularly in British Columbia and northern Ontario.
>
> It is in the interest of Canada to have an economically viable and healthy forestry sector. I hope that this important issue will be addressed by your Government with the utmost urgency.
>
> Yours respectfully,
> Jean Chrétien.

Honourable senators, I can remember those heady days of 1986 when the memorandum of understanding on softwood lumber signed by Canada and the United States was supposed to be good news for both countries. I remember the passionate defence of the deal by a succession of government spokesmen. Well what a difference four years makes. Now, government ministers are doing their best, they say, to unravel this iniquitous agreement. The honourable John Crosbie says he is acting as quickly as possible and now agrees that it is a bad deal. Simon Reisman, in his last visit to Vancouver, in a rare moment of candour, suggested that perhaps we should have "hung in tougher with the United States on the softwood lumber deal." To that, British Columbians would say amen; and he added cynically the comment, "Well, we had to give up something."

Does anyone truly believe we should have given up something of such vital importance the number one industry in the country? Honourable senators, we gave up too much. We were outmatched and outgunned by those Yankee traders. The sad part it have is, of course, that some of us warned that this would be the result. Now the nation is paying the price. This miserable and perverse softwood lumber deal has played havoc with the lives of many Canadians—and Canadian companies—yet the forest industry's British Columbia operations alone have generated approximately 348,000 jobs in Canada. This is an important industry that is of life and death importance to many communities across the country. No effort should be spared to get rid of the softwood deal with the United States. There is no points in recriminating about what might have been. We must work together to get rid of the deal.

• (1600)

Honourable senators, despite its size, forestry is an industry which must not be taken for granted.

Senator Frith: Give us the figures again that you gave us at the beginning.

Senator Perrault: They are worth repeating. Despite its size, forestry is an industry which must not be taken for granted. There should be no easy assumption that this industry is safe and secure, that it will be able to withstand any kind of assault. That would be a tragic assumption.

I want to remind honourable senators that as far as the rest of the economy is concerned, and I again want to get this on the record, the net trade balance of $19.5 billion in 1989 in forestry exceeded that of agriculture, mining, energy and fisheries combined. That is an enormous statement. It indicates just how much value this industry brings to our nation, whether it is in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario or western Canada.

I repeat that, despite its size, forestry is an industry that must not be taken for granted. There should be no easy assumptions made that the industry is safe and secure, that because it is a big industry it will be able to withstand any kind of assault. The opposition is out there actively pursuing our markets, modernizing their equipment and putting state-of-the-art pulp machinery and lumber processing machines in place.

The world forestry products markets are tough markets rife with competition from nations lusting after our share of those markets. I believe that part of the propaganda effort which I referred to earlier is designed to disenchant potential European buyers with the Canadian product, to persuade them to buy from European suppliers.

Some of our Canadian forestry operations can claim to be state of the art, and some of our companies have done a great job of modernizing their equipment so that they can compete. Others have a distance to travel in the area of rationalization. The entire industry must be upgraded to enable it to maintain and to expand Canada's fair share of world markets. We need a much enhanced tree-planting program. We are making progress in that regard, but we can improve.

All of us, regardless of party, must work to keep this vital industry healthy and competitive, a viable resource now and for the generations to come.

I thank honourable senators for their attention.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Will the honourable senator permit a question? Earlier in his comments he made the statement that we are now in the position that for every tree that is cut in Canada two are replanted. Does that figure apply across Canada, or specifically to British Columbia?

Senator Perrault: It is a national figure. However, it does not mean to say that that is enough. For example, when a tree that may be 300-years old is cut down, the volume that is taken out of the forest by merely planting two new small trees is no compensation. The planting ratio has to be much higher than that.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: I wonder if I might ask a question of the honourable senator as one who was interested in this subject during the happier days of the Banking, Trade and Commerce committee. When that committee looked at the shakes and shingles problem, we saw that provincial governments became rather important in the overall picture. I do not recall hearing from Senator Perrault, and I may be wrong, about the role of provincial governments in the decimation of this important industry.

What has happened to the 15 per cent surcharge that was imposed? Have the various provincial governments, and especially the Government of British Columbia, done their share in revitalizing this important industry?

Senator Perrault: That is a good question. It would be wrong to heap any blame, if blame is to be heaped at all, on any one level of government. Provincial governments have a greater responsibility in the area of forests than does the federal government. Of course, federal governments are the beneficiaries of vast amounts of revenue generated by the forest industry. I refer to those employed in the industry who pay income tax and those companies which pay corporation taxes, et cetera. Both levels of government benefit immensely from this resource. But there has not been a continuity of policy exercised by provincial governments in the industry. It has been subject to arbitrary attitudes toward the harvesting of timber, for example.

At one point selective logging in the province of British Columbia was said to be the only way to cut down forests. Certain parts of stands were left and the trees that seem to be harvestable were cut down. The proponents of clear-cutting then emerged. Their theory was that everything in a given tract should be cut down, including the young trees, the old trees, the small trees and the large trees. The area is then replanted and a new forest begun. In some cases fertilizer is air dropped on these forests to accelerate their growth. Now, there are severe critics of clear-cutting.

As well, there has also been a lack of continuity of policy with respect to getting revenue out of the forests. As I mentioned in my remarks, the fact is that stumpage rates have been increased in some instances. When the industry has been in a terrible economic condition, this type of move seems to be counter-productive.

Senator Buckwold: What has happened to the 15 per cent?

Senator Perrault: The 15 per cent is now reflected in the stumpage rates charged by the provincial governments.

Senator Buckwold: Do they get the money?

Senator Perrault: They get the money. There is cooperation, and I do not want to use the word "collusion", between provincial and federal governments. The Americans have said, "All right, if we are not going to slap a 15 per cent tariff on the entry of softwood lumbers to the United States, then you will have to put something in place which assures us that this unfair advantage enjoyed by Canadian lumber producers is caught down the line by some action taken by your government."

So the federal government met with the provincial governments and said, "All right, you boost your stumpage rates. That will satisfy the Americans, and it will be the equivalent to imposing a 15 per cent U.S. tariff."

The fact of the matter is that in no point in the entire negotiation were the Americans ever able to prove that they were being dealt with unfairly. The American lumber producers in comparison with the producers in Canada have never been able to make that point. It was only by using political power down there, by launching an incredible lobbying effort, that they convinced the U.S. administration to put on this 15 per cent tariff, which ultimately devolved into a 15 per cent increase in stumpage rates in the province of British Columbia.

That is the tragedy of this debacle. There were at least two or three panels, as well as extensive and expensive research projects to prove that Canada was not competing unfairly. Some of you who are with government will know the details of this.

I see that Senator Kelleher is nodding his head. The Americans were never able to prove that there was unfair competition on the Canadian side.

Senator Kelleher: I am not saying that.

Senator Perrault: They were never able to prove at any of the tribunals that there was unfair competition. It is the same with some of the pork producers in the United States, who are claiming that there is unfair and subsidized competition from Canadian pork producers, when, in fact, the pork producers in the United States are subsidized, as the honourable senator knows. This business of saying that only Canadians unfairly subsidize the forest industry was and is simply not a fair charge.

Senator Murray: The Free Trade Agreement has been very helpful in that respect, do you not think?

Senator Perrault: That is another subject. There are days for other inquiries in this place.

I think it can be demonstrated that provincial governments have not been entirely sympathetic to the real concerns which have been expressed by sectors of the lumber industry and lumber workers, without any question at all. They should not be acquitted entirely from any of the charges that are being made by the industry against levels of government.

Hon. Mira Spivak: I wish to ask the honourable senator a question. I apologize in advance if I have missed some of his remarks. I was out of the chamber.

With regard to the management of the forest resource, and in terms of replacing two trees for every one, I wonder whether my colleague is familiar with the report of the Forest Resources Commission and the Auditor General's report just tabled in British Columbia. As a result of reading those reports, to say that the management in this sector was less than good would be putting a mild glow over it. It has been atrocious.

Second, there is not the personnel in the provincial government. It has been cut back. They cannot monitor because they do not know what is growing. They do not know what is being planted. It is true that now there is a greater effort, a greater emphasis being placed on this subject, but to suggest that everything is fine in the forest is not the case.

Would the honourable senator agree that we really have no idea at this point in time whether we are replenishing and managing our forest resource properly, since there is no inventory and no capability to monitor what is there?

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Perrault: I welcome the honourable senator's remarks because I find myself in agreement with some of the things that she has said. I pointed out that the industry had certainly made mistakes in the past. There is no question about it. I said that two small trees planted for every one taken out of the forest is not enough. There are certain parts of B.C.'s terrain that now cannot be reforested successfully.

Clear-cutting has removed entire tracts of timber from certain steep slopes and, subsequently, rains have washed away planting soil. Those trees cannot be replanted. The honourable senator is quite right. We are still in the area of attempting to explore what must be done in order to ensure the survival of the forest for future generations. That is not a matter of dispute at all. There have been management mistakes; there is no question about that.

• (1610)

Senator Spivak: I wonder what your attitude is regarding the preservation of the old growth rain forest in British Columbia, particularly those on the islands. As you know, there is a great controversy about that issue.

Senator Perrault: As I have said, so many new factors have emerged in recent years which must inevitably affect the decisions of the forest companies: environmental concerns, a concern regarding the heritage values of maintaining some of these splendid old forest areas.

I was in the Carmanah Valley a few months ago. It was an absolutely incredibly sight. It would be a sin to cut down some of those vast trees. There was one chap up there who told me they did a size test on a big spruce tree in the Queen Charlotte Islands. He said they had 40 people in the camp and, linking arms, they could hardly touch fingers surrounding that tree.

Senator Frith: Did you say 40?

Senator Perrault: Yes, 40. It sounds unbelievable, but that was his claim.

Senator Buckwold: They were small people.

Senator Perrault: That is the cynic from Saskatchewan speaking, where they grow very short wheat.

Senator Frith: Jonathan Swift wrote about that in Gulliver's Travels.

Senator Perrault: I can only repeat what was told to me, but I myself did see and photograph the Carmanah trees. To destroy them would be utterly sinful and would be a damaging blow to the preservation of our environment and to our heritage.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this has been a very interesting and informative speech by the honourable senator from British Columbia, Senator Perrault. However, it was contentious in a number of respects. It was certainly rather harsh, I thought, on the environmentalists. As for the Memorandum of Agreement with the United States on softwood lumber, there is an entirely different perspective that can and should be brought to bear on that matter.

Against the probability that one of our colleagues on this side may wish to speak, if only to that matter, I intend to take the adjournment of the debate. Our colleague, Senator Carney, was Minister of International Trade at the time the Softwood Lumber Agreement was signed, and she may wish to say something about that.

Therefore, against that possibility —

Senator Frith: I am glad to hear you are friends again.

Senator Murray: Well, cabinet solidarity — against that possibility, I will move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE ESTIMATES, 1991-92

SECOND REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

TUESDAY, June 18, 1991

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, to which were referred the expenditures proposed by the Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31 March, 1992, with the exception of Privy Council Vote 20 (Commissioner of Official Languages), has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, June 13, 1991, examined the said Estimates and herewith presents its interim report.

Your Committee held one meeting on June 18, 1991 to review the 1991-92 Estimates, at which officials of Treasury Board appeared as witnesses. Committee members requested additional information in several areas, including: the 31 per cent decrease in the estimates of the new Ministry of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship); the 6.9 per cen increase in the estimates of the Department of National Defence; the 6.9 per cent increase in overall program spending; the impacts of the 10 per cent reduction in the management category on the Public Service as a whole, on small versus large departments, and on regional offices versus headquarters; and the levels of living allowances for Foreign Service officers of the Department of External Affairs when posted overseas.

Part I of the Estimates describes the government's expenditure plan, including the Expenditure Control Plan discussed in the Budget of February 26, 1991. Part II, the Main Estimates, provides the outline of proposed expenditures by department, agency and program. It includes several tables: a General Summary of the estimates by department and agency, with 1990-91 amounts included for comparison (pp. 1-14 to 1-23); estimates by standard object of expenditure, including personnel, transportation and communications, information, professional and special services, rentals, purchased repair and maintenance, utilities, materials and supplies, and two capital expenditure items (land and buildings, and machinery and equipment) (the foregoing standard objects 1-9 constitute the operating expenditures of the department or agency) plus transfer payments, public debt charges, other subsidies and payments, less revenues credited to the vote (pp. 1-24 to 1-31); authorized person-years (PYs) for each department and agency for both 1991-92 and 1990-91, with the increase or decrease shown (pp. 1-32 to 1-34); a proposed schedule to the Appropriation Bill, showing the wording and amounts of each vote that Parliament is being asked to approve (pp. 1-35 to 1-56); and the statutory items that are to be spent under previous authorities and are included in the Main Estimates for information only (pp. 1-57 to 1-67).

The Part III documents, which have been prepared for all departments and agencies (but not for Crown Corporations or for Parliament itself) under the supervision of the Office of the Comptroller General, provide additional details on programs, indicating in particular the results expected for the funds being requested from Parliament. In this connection, Part III contains a section on program effectiveness for each program that the department or agency operates. This section provides departments and agencies with their only opportunity to convey information on the results of recent program evaluations as well as those of more general program and policy reviews. Your Committee's recent report on the program evaluation system found that the reporting to Parliament of evaluation activities through the Part IIIs was in need of improvement, although the quality of reporting varies considerably from one department or agency to another.

Consolidated specified purpose accounts include the Unemployment Insurance Account, the Western Grain Stabilization Account and 24 other smaller accounts. These expenditures are not allocated to specific departments; instead, they appear in Part II at the end of the General Summary table as additional statutory expenditures, as well as in the standard object of expenditure table and in various tables in Part I. Consolidated specified purpose accounts amount to $18.124 billion in 1991-92, an increase of 72.2 per cent over 1990-91. This substantial increase is due largely to an increase of $4 billion in the provision for Unemployment Insurance benefits, reflecting the anticipated impact of the recession on employment levels (see Part I, page 25).

Including the specified purpose accounts expenditures and the non-budgetary items (loans, investments and advances), total proposed spending in the Main Estimates for 1991-92 amounts to $157.903 billion. Compared to 1990-91 Main Estimates expenditures on a consolidated basis of $147.963 billion, this represents a growth of 6.7 per cent (for comparison, 1990-91 Main Estimates exceeded those for 1989-90 by 5.1 per cent). This growth calculation, like others for specific departments, agencies and programs, does not reflect the actual level of spending for 1990-91, which includes funds approved under Supplementary Estimates as well.

In addition: $707 million in expenditure reductions announced in the 1991 Budget are not included in the Main Estimates; $1.2 billion of the spending authority requested in these Main Estimates is expected to lapse by the end of the fiscal year; and $3.378 billion has been earmarked for reserves to cover expenditures that will appear in Supplementary Estimates during the year. The sum of these (positive and negative) items, as shown in Part I, Table 2.1, is $159.0 million, which represents the ceiling of the government's fiscal plan and is used to estimate the 1991-92 budgetary deficit. Table 2.2 on page 10 compares these planned budgetary expenditures of $159 billion for 1991-92 with forecast expenditures of $151.25 billion for 1990-91, which include Main and Supplementary Estimates, lapses and the across-the-board expenditure reductions of $350 million that were imposed at the time of Supplementary Estimates (B) to offset the increased allocation of the same amount for the Department of National Defence to defray the costs of the Oka and Chateauguay operations and of the Persian Gulf war. By this measure, expenditures are expected to grow by 5.1 per cent from 1990-91 to 1991-92. The growth rate is also shown in Table 2.2 to have decreased in each of the last two years.

The February 1991 Budget announced a number of expenditure restraint measures that are expected to yield savings of just over $1 billion in 1991-92. These include an effective freeze on departments' operating and capital budgets (Standard Objects 1-9) at the 1990-91 level to save $500 million[1], a $75 million reduction in grants and contributions and a ten per cent cut in the number of senior managers and executives (SM and EX) in the Public Service. As well, funds for CMHC Social Housing, the Canadian Jobs Strategy and the Green Plan are being cut by $32 million, $100 million and $125 million respectively. Finally, the two-year constraint on Canada Assistance Plan funding for Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia and the per capita freeze on Established Programs Financing transfers to all provinces, which were announced in the 1990 Budget and included in Bill C-69, have been extended for another three years to 1994-95. This extension, along with a constraint on Official Development Assistance, will affect future expenditures but will have no impact on those for 1991-92.

The freeze on operating budgets ensures that departments and agencies will not be compensated for the costs of higher wages and salaries resulting from collective agreements that are negotiated after April 1, 1991.[2] Consequently, when faced with higher salary levels, departments will be forced to reduce staff in order to prevent their total salary costs from increasing. Such reductions have obvious implications for the ability of departments to continue delivering their existing programs. The impact of the freeze on operating and capital budgets, amounting to $500 million in total in 1991-92, is shown for individual departments in Table 2.4 on page 12 of Part I and, in greater detail, on pages 19-22 of the Treasury Board's publication, Managing Government Expenditures, which was tabled with the Main Estimates on February 28, 1991.

Your Committee customarily undertakes a major study each year under the reference of the Estimates. The subject of the study and of the final report on the Estimates have not yet been decided. However, an examination of Public Service 2000 and other aspects of the management of the Public Service might form an appropriate sequel to the Committee's study of the program evaluation system during the 1990-91 fiscal year.

Respectfully sumbitted,

Roch Bolduc
Chairman

NOTES

1. Treasury Board officials indicate that this freeze corresponds to an across-the-board cut of three per cent in the operating and capital budgets that appear in the Main Estimates.

2. The government has also indicated that it will not agree to salary awards in new collective agreements that are more than three per cent above the levels for any previous year. An allowance for annual increments and across-the-board increases resulting from the continuation of existing contracts has been built into the operating budgets. As well, retroactive provisions for 1990-91 and earlier years may be covered by funding from Treasury Board Contingencies Vote 5, as will severance pay and maternity benefits that are deemed beyond departmental control. However, a long-standing policy will be continued that departments must fund promotions from their existing resources.

RULES OF THE SENATE

AVAILABILITY OF NEW TEXT—SPEAKER'S STATEMENT

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, you surely know that, following a vote taken yesterday in the Senate, the Rules of the Senate have been modified and these changes take effect today.

[English]

I want to point out that the new rule book has not been reprinted, but it will be ready by Fall when the Senate resumes this session.

In the meantime, I ask the indulgence of Senators and ask for their patience as we work together on adapting to the new rules.

When senators wish to consult the rules, for now they will have to rely on the rule book along with the report of the Rules committee which was adopted yesterday. Extra copies of that report are being distributed for the convenience of senators.

RADIO CANADA INTERNATIONAL

EFFECT OF CUTBACKS—SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, Canada's voice to the world, Radio Canada International, has been affected by a crippling reduction in its operating budget. There is an impression that we have saved the shortwave service, but I feel I must again raise the question: At what cost?

Why have we decided to gut almost completely our most prominent and efficient method of presenting Canada to the rest of the world? There seems to be some confusion about the relationship between the CBC and Radio Canada International. It should be understood that the CBC and RCI are two separate and distinct organizations. CBC is only RCI's administrative home; the priorities of the shortwave service come from the Ministry of External Affairs. It guaranteed Canada a voice on the world stage to explain itself and its policies to a world audience.

For 46 years Radio Canada International has built a reputation second to none. With meagre resources and little fanfare RCI attracted 16 million listeners with honest, balanced journalism. What is the impact of our decision? A budget of $20 million has been reduced to $13.5 million. RCI has been forced to eliminate seven foreign language services: Japanese, German, Polish, Czech, Slovak, Hungarian, and Portuguese to Brazil. In fact, at the present time three quarters of RCI's programming has been eliminated and replaced by rebroadcasts of CBC domestic programming, not tailored to a foreign audience.

For instance, the Prime Minister recently returned from Japan where he showed how important an opening dialogue with Japan and other countries could be. Yet, at the same time that we opened a new embassy in Tokyo and appointed honorary consuls in three Japanese cities, we had eliminated Canada's broadcasts in Japanese.

Furthermore, how do we respond to a shocked international community, including the 16 member associations of the International Council of Canadian Studies, who question whether Canada is still interested in talking to the world?

They wrote on July 11, eight days ago—

> The work accomplished by Radio Canada International is extremely valuable and important to the international image of Canada. Furthermore, reducing drastically the programming of RCI at a time when Canadian Studies around the world is undergoing an unprecedented expansion, it is most distressing and discouraging for all of us involved in Canadian Studies. For many of the professors involved in the teaching of Canada around the world, RCI programming is a critical source of information, and, as such, it should be preserved.

On May 26th, Radio Moscow told the world that the RCI cuts was tantamount to "the silencing of Canada." Ironically, what used to be a highly efficient world class service with a relatively small budget has been turned into a expensive relay station—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, according to Rule 19.(6): "Senators making . . ."

Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Perrault: He is in full flight.

The Hon. the Speaker: ". . . interventions during this time . . ." that is, reading statements . . . "shall be limited to speaking once for no more than three minutes; however, a Senator may seek leave to extend his or her remarks."

Therefore, if Senator MacDonald wishes to seek leave—

Hon. Thomas H. Lefebvre: No, no. He voted for the rules; let him abide by them.

UNITED NATION'S HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

RIGHTS OF THE CHILD—CANADIAN RATIFICATION OF UN CONVENTION—SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, Canada has been re-elected to a three year term as a member of the United Nations Human Rights Commission. As honourable senators will know, it was the United Nations Human Rights Commission that oversaw the preparation of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. Today, officials responsible for human rights in the territories, provinces and federally are meeting in Charlottetown. One of the matters being addressed is the question of securing the agreement of all jurisdictions in Canada to permit Canadian ratification of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. Hopefully this ratification will take place in the near future.

Honourable senators will recall that Canada has signed the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, but that ratification has not yet occurred because we must await the concurrence of all provinces and territories prior to this taking place.

Honourable senators, given the longstanding interest of this chamber in the Rights of the Child, whether highlighted by the work of the late Senator McGrand in his study, "Child at Risk", or the recent report of the Senate committee that dealt with child poverty, it would be helpful for the ratification process if honourable senators would support this process in the various parts of Canada.

RADIO CANADA INTERNATIONAL

EFFECT OF CUTBACKS—SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to make a brief statement in support of the remarks made by Senator MacDonald of Halifax. Recently, when on an offshore mission, I was totally embarrassed when the presentation of Radio Canada International was abruptly cut at the 30 minute point, in mid-sentence. When I spoke to the Radio International people later, they told me that the budget restraints were such that they could not afford to broadcast for longer than 30 minutes. That is why they had interrupted the program As It Happens at the halfway point.

I wonder whether there are enough of us in Canada who realize the importance of the link which Radio Canada International provides with the rest of the world, and of how many Canadian travellers bring short wave radios with them in order to keep in contact with their nation when they are on offshore missions. I agree completely with the remarks of Senator MacDonald. I hope that we can mount enough support to change what I think is a totally addled policy.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REDUCTION OF MEDICAL RESEARCH FUNDING—SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, this government pays only lip-service to the importance of research. We have seen a contradiction between government words and government action. Obviously all agree that research has to be the basis of the future growth and prosperity of this country, and I should like to refer to research in the field of medicine.

I recently received a letter from the Dean of Medicine of the University of Saskatchewan, which was addressed to the Prime Minister, in which he very dramatically pointed out the alarming reduction in funds available for medical research. He appealed to me and my colleagues in the Senate to do whatever we could to influence those who make the decision on the amount of funds to be made available for medical research.

I did not bring with me the letter of Dean McDonald in which he indicates the percentage of those who apply for grants for research and the disappointing number who are accepted, a number which is steadily decreasing as the years go by under this present government.

Honourable senators, I feel it is incumbent on all of us to do what we can to ensure the continuation of first class medical research in a country that has a well-deserved reputation in this field.

RULES OF THE SENATE

APPLICATION OF NEW RULES—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, this is my first and earliest opportunity to rise on a question of privilege under rule 35 (1) of the new rules. I was grieved to learn yesterday of the summary passage of drastic changes to our rules in this chamber. Changes of consequence like these, which alter the very fabric of Parliament and the place of the upper chamber in the constitutional framework, surely ought to be taken only after the full advisement of the Senate, and then, in my opinion, only with a two-thirds majority. A two-thirds majority for constitutional changes, even for corrections to bad decisions, has been the traditional requirement in this chamber and in other upper houses in democratic parliaments.

• (1410)

In effect, rule changes such as those that are before us constitute a major rescission of many previous decisions and long-standing traditions. It is most unseemly that they should be changed, especially with the extensive novelties present in the current rule 33 on allocation of time for debates without a two-thirds consent in the house.

Honourable senators, in my opinion there has not as yet been adequate opportunity to assess the long-term implications of the rule changes that were so hastily voted in yesterday afternoon. Our Standing Rules and Orders committee, through which the proposed changes were channelled from the government caucus, failed to present to us any detailed assessment of its own; nor did it provide us with expert assessment of the implications of these rules from the testimony of parliamentary experts and authorities therein. Indeed, upon being questioned in this chamber on June 11, the chairman of our Senate committee—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): May I raise a point of order?

Senator Haidasz: —by expertise on loan from the other place—

Senator Doody: Senator Haidasz has raised a question of privilege. According to the rules under which we are now operating—

Senator Haidasz: —promoted by the Progressive Conservative public relations staff of whose activities—

Senator Doody: —I must point out to honourable senators that—

Senator Haidasz: —had little knowledge —

The Hon. the Speaker: Order, please!

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Sit down!

The Hon. the Speaker: There is a point of order, Senator Haidasz, on your intervention.

Senator Phillips: That is ignorant!

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, concerning rule 35, which Senator Haidasz referred to a few minutes ago, rule 35(3) clearly says:

> (3) Except as provided in section (4) below, a Senator wishing to raise a question of privilege shall, at least three hours before the Senate meets for the transaction of business, give a written notice of such question to the Clerk of the Senate.

I would ask the Table this: If such notice has been given why have the senators present not been informed that the question was to be raised? The exception that I mentioned a minute ago is as follows:

> (4) A Senator wishing to raise a question of privilege on a Friday shall, at not later than 6:00 o'clock p.m. on the immediately preceding Thursday, give a written notice of such question to the Clerk of the Senate.

That is the only exception. If Senator Haidasz has given notice of his question of privilege, then certainly we would be prepared to look at it, read it and study it; otherwise, the honourable senator is out of order and will have to wait for another time to raise his question.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the only problem with the very point raised by Senator Doody is that under these new rules—I suppose we could call them Robertson's Rules—the Speaker just called "Routine Proceedings." These so-called rules say that during the time provide for the consideration of the Daily Routine of Business—which is what we are under—it shall not be in order to raise any question of privilege or point of order.

Senator Doody: Then the senator is out of order anyway.

Senator Frith: But you cannot stop him, because you cannot raise a point of order under these silly rules.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, the main reply—

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I bring this to the attention of the Senate and to the Chair—

Senator Frith: You cannot raise a point of order at this stage of the proceedings under these rules—Rule 20(1).

Senator Doody: —and the Chair will take the necessary action.

Senator Frith: You have to wait until the "Daily Routine of Business," is through. Your own rules—your own crazy rules—provide that you cannot raise a point of order at this stage of the proceedings. These are your rules! That is what it says.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the point of privilege of Senator Haidasz is to question the decision of the Senate that was taken yesterday. I do not think he can do that. Furthermore, rule 35.(2), which Senator Haidasz quoted, states:

> If the matter is not raised at the earliest opportunity, the Senator raising the matter may put it on notice, but the matter cannot be proceeded with under the terms of this Rule.

Paragraph (3) states:

> Except as provided in section (4) below, . . .

This section was just read; it goes on to state:

> . . . a Senator wishing to raise a question of privilege shall, at least three hours before the Senate meets for the transaction of business, give a written notice of such question to the Clerk of the Senate.

I understand that the Clerk has not received that notice.

Senator Frith: Yes; but you can only rise and stop him, as Senator Doody wished to do, by raising a point of order. Your Honour called "Routine Proceedings." For the very first time that we have to deal with these rules, do I take it that you will not enforce them? No one can call order because of new rule 20(1).

The rules—your rules—say that "During the time provided for the consideration of the Daily Routine of Business", which is now, "it shall not be in order to raise any question of privilege or point of order."

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Nor should it be necessary. The rule is very clear. The Honourable Senator Haidasz may proceed, if he has given three hour's notice, and then before Routine Proceedings are called.

Senator Frith: How can you stop him? The only way you can stop him is to raise a point of order, and you cannot raise a point of order, under your own rules at this time, under this heading.

Senator Murray: That is not true. It is up to the presiding officer to enforce the rules, and he should intervene—

Senator Frith: It doesn't say that.

Senator Murray: Of course it does, and he should intervene and rule out of order what the honourable senator is doing, period.

Senator Frith: He does not have that authority, because a point of order cannot be raised at this stage of the proceedings, according to your own rules. So neither you nor the Speaker nor anyone can stop him.

Go ahead, Stan, nothing can stop you. Their own silly rules have produced that result.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators—

Senator Frith: Groan away over there; they are your words.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Haidasz, you are out of order.

Senator Frith: Don't tell me you intend to come at this again, to break even these new rules?

The Hon. the Speaker: Well, I am interpreting the rules.

Senator Frith: What a joke this place is.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, Mr. Speaker—

The Hon. the Speaker: My ruling can be appealed, but, according to my ruling, I find you out of order, Senator Haidasz. You can give notice to the Clerk three hours before the next sitting, but that is what the new rules state.

Senator Frith: The Speaker is now coming in again and telling us what we are to do. You adopted these rules yesterday; they are your rules and they state that a point of order cannot be raised at this stage, period; so go ahead, Stan.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators—

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I am not raising a point of order, but if my friends will look at rule 16(1) to see what the role of the Speaker is—

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sorry, Senator Haidasz, but you are out of order. If you want to appeal the decision, then do so.

Senator Frith: You are not entitled to call them to order. Sit down!

The Hon. the Speaker: I won't sit down, Senator Frith. You are not going to give me orders.

Senator Frith: Keep going, Stan, he can't stop you.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Haidasz, you are out of order. The Senate can appeal my ruling at any time, but my ruling right now is that Senator Haidasz is out of order.

Senator Frith: Don't argue, just keep talking. He has no right to stop you.

• (1420)

Senator Haidasz: Notwithstanding the confusion, honourable senators, as this is my earliest opportunity to raise my question of privilege as a parliamentarian—

An Hon. Senator: Sit down!

Senator Haidasz: It is my privilege, and your privilege. I am defending your privileges, too, to stand up now and say something.

Senator Frith: Keep reading. No one can stop you.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, on being questioned in this chamber on June 11, the chairman of our committee conceded, in—

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Haidasz, you are out of order.

Senator Frith: How do you like your new rules?

[Senator Frith.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Pursuant to rule 16(1), I suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair.

The sitting of the Senate was suspended.

At 3.15 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like, first of all, to apologize for the fact that the ruling is in only one language. My discussions were in English, and I hope that my French-speaking colleagues will not mind. It will, of course, be translated.

During proceedings earlier today, Honourable Senator Haidasz rose to present a point of privilege. While he was doing so, the Honourable Senator Doody rose on a point of order to the effect that under rule 35 (3), notice is required for the presentation of points of privilege. The Honourable Senator Frith, under rule 20(1), correctly noted that points of order cannot be raised under the heading of Routine Proceedings. This rule states:

> During the time provided for the consideration of Daily Routine of Business and the daily Question Period, it shall not be in order to raise any question of privilege or point of order. Any question of privilege or point of order to be raised in relation to any notice given during this time can only be raised at the time the Order is first called for consideration by the Senate.

However, I note under rule 16(1) the Speaker can intervene in the debate in order to enforce the Rules of the Senate. I attempted to do so earlier today.

With regard to the presentation of the point of privilege, I refer all honourable senators to rule 35(3).

Senator Leblanc: What page is that, Mr. Speaker?

The Hon. the Speaker: Rule 35 is on pages 40 and 41. Rule 35(3) is on page 41. It reads:

> Except as provided in section (4) below, a Senator wishing to raise a question of privilege shall, at least 3 hours before the Senate meets for the transaction of business, give a written notice of such question to the Clerk of the Senate.

No notice was received by the Clerk. The point of privilege cannot be raised today. I urge the Honourable Senator Haidasz to comply with rule 35(3) and to give notice. This point of privilege can be raised first thing tomorrow morning after Prayers.

However, I should like to point out to honourable senators that because this is the first day for proceeding under the new rules, if honourable senators wish to extend the courtesy to Senator Haidasz, after Orders of the Day and Business of the Senate, to finish his point, I would urge honourable senators to do so.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I agree, and I do not intend to force the issue at this time. However, I do not want it to be taken that I have waived the point if it arises again. In my opinion, Senator Haidasz was out of order under the new rules. However, because of the way these rules are worded, anyone who stands up during the Daily Routine of Business and does something out of order cannot be called to order because the point of order cannot be raised. That may arise again, and, if it does, I do not want to be taken as having waived it.

The other point I wish to make is that, in my view, the Speaker was not entitled to intervene under rule 16 because rule 16 gives him the authority to interrupt debate, and that was not debate. "Debate" is debate on a question before the chamber and debate is defined as that which takes place—and the reference can be found in Beauchesne; it is not defined in the old rules or the new rules—between the putting of the question and the vote. So what the Speaker interrupted was not debate, and he did not have the authority to do it under rule 16. Subject to its being clear that I do not waive my position on either of those points, I think we have found a solution.

Senator Murray: Nor do we.

The Hon. the Speaker: So, to revert to the Order of Business—

Senator Frith: My indication is that we will go to the mat on it anytime. And in Robertson's new rules, there are many mats and many mines. If it were not so, I would not tell you.

• (1430)

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators—

An Hon. Senator: No, no.

Senator Frith: I thought you were going to let him finish?

Senator Phillips: After Orders of the Day.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Tabling of Documents is the time when the Deputy Leader has been in the habit of reading all the statutory titles that have to be tabled. Under these rules, these documents will be tabled automatically and printed as part of the proceedings of the day.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 222 citizens of the province of Ontario who are against the Goods and Services Tax. These petitions are principally from Rexdale, Dunville, Hamilton, Richmond, Welland, Ottawa and Port Colborne.

I also have a petition signed by 21 residents of Grimshaw, Fairview and Peace River in Alberta, who ask the Senate to reject the new Goods and Services Tax.

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL FINANCE

CLOSURE OF BASES—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEFENCE POLICY

Hon. Gildas Molgat: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate has anything further to tell us regarding the proposed closing of military bases? Senator Bonnell yesterday raised the question of the base at Shilo in my province, and obviously the people in that area are vitally concerned. Has the minister anything further to tell us on the matter?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the situation is exactly as I described it yesterday. The government will be considering in due course the nation's defence policy in light of the changing geopolitical situation in the world and other factors. If there are decisions to be made in respect of particular bases, here or abroad, or in respect to personnel levels in the armed forces, those decisions will be taken and announced at that time. What I tried to emphasize in my exchange with Senator Bonnell yesterday is that no such decisions have been taken because we have not concluded our consideration of overall defence policy.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Senator Molgat: Will the minister then undertake to tell us whether the government will be prepared, at the same time as it announces any closing of bases, to give us the overall National Defence policy? Will the two be presented to us at the same time?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would certainly hope and expect that any decision with regard to the deployment of our forces or with regard to military bases, here or abroad, would be accompanied by a statement of the policy rationale for those decisions. So the short answer to the honourable senator's question is yes.

DEFENCE POLICIES OF MR. ROBERT HICKS, M.P.—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that just yesterday, after the Leader of the Government in the Senate and I had some information passed across the floor about National Defence policy, I understand that a press conference was called. One of the members of the government side in the other place, a Mr. Hicks, presented a paper spelling out the defence policies that he thought were appropriate for the country at this time. Since he is a government member in the other place and the chairman of the committee responsible for defence and NATO, is the policy laid out by Mr. Hicks, M.P., the same policy as the government hopes to accept as their policy as soon as the inner cabinet can deal with the base at Shilo?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must confess that I have not read the document authored by Mr. Bob Hicks, M.P., so I cannot comment personally on it. In so far as the policy of the government is concerned, and Mr. Hicks' position, Mr. Hicks is a valued member of the caucus of the Progressive Conservative Party in the other place; but Senator Bonnell, as a former Minister of the Crown in his province, will understand that Mr. Hicks is not authorized to speak for the government, and his statements do not bind the government because he is not a member of the cabinet.

Senator Bonnell: I understand, honourable senators, that he is not a member of the cabinet, and I understand that his policy proposal will not bind the government; but it seems strange to a Prince Edward Islander that a member of the Conservative caucus can be coming forward, a few days before the government, with a National Defence policy for Canada.

Hon. Gérald J. Comeau: Does the member not have a right to his opinion?

Senator Bonnell: Yes, he has all the right in the world to it, but it seems strange that a member of the Conservative caucus, the head of our NATO organization in the Parliament of Canada, would come out with a defence policy of his own one or two days before the minister comes forth with his policy. Is there any connection between the two?

• (1540)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the short answer to that question again is in the negative. I do not know why it appears strange to the honourable senator that a private member of Parliament, especially one with a good deal of experience with the NATO parliamentarians, would set forth in a written document his views on what should be an appropriate defence policy for Canada. It seems perfectly normal to me that that should happen; but I have to emphasize again that, as a minister speaking for the government, we, of course, are not bound by and do not take collective responsibility for the views expressed by our friend, Mr. Hicks, or anyone else outside the government.

Senator Bonnell: Would the government take advice from Mr. Hicks not necessarily do exactly what he says, but, taking into consideration the experience of this man who seems to know all the answers, would the government take into consideration his policy before it comes out with its policy?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that question gives me the opportunity to correct an earlier statement by Senator Bonnell to the effect that an announcement is expected by Mr. Marcel Masse within a day or two regarding the results of the government's review of defence policy. I do not expect that such an announcement will be made in the timeframe referred to by Senator Bonnell.

Further to that, and with regard to the question he has just put, I can only say that the views of Mr. Hicks are deserving of the utmost respect and attention, and they will receive exactly that from the members of cabinet as we review the nation's defence policy.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I get the impression from the Leader of the Government in the Senate that the implementation of this policy is to wait until after the summer recess. That way, questions cannot be asked about it on the floor of the house, there will be no opportunity to debate the policy, and the press will not be able to get details of all pros and cons beforehand. That does not seem to be the very best method of coming out with a policy for the country.

I am rather surprised, and I suppose that the people of Gander, Newfoundland and Labrador will be disappointed like those of Summerside have been. I would like to see this policy put before Parliament before we go home for the summer; otherwise people will be wallowing around in the mud until September.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can only say that we cannot announce the policy before we have arrived at it.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—REMOVAL OF CANADIAN SANCTIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I noticed today that President Bush has said that the United States will remove the sanctions against South Africa next month. Since the present government seems to be a better follower than a leader, is it true that it will then follow Mr. Bush's lead and remove the sanctions against South Africa after the passage of the bill which did away with apartheid?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if Senator Bonnell would take the trouble to examine statements that have been made by many of the leaders of the Commonwealth nations, and in particular the front line states, he would see that they regard Canada as a real leader in the Councils of the Commonwealth. When it comes to the international battle against apartheid, Canada has been a leader, not a follower, and we insist that the most effective action against apartheid—and I think we have the proof of it—is concerted action involving the entire international community.

Having said that, I can only repeat what I said yesterday that I have no announcement to make on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on that matter beyond saying that we welcome the repeal of the last major pillar of apartheid as a major breakthrough for South Africa. Its repeal is a significant victory for all those who have fought apartheid for so many years. As I indicated, we can take some satisfaction as Canadians that our efforts to bring an end to apartheid are bearing fruit.

The recent repeal, announced by the President of South Africa, meets a major condition of the Commonwealth Foreign Ministers' Meeting in February. Such action was required before the lifting of Commonwealth sanctions could be considered. The other conditions, the freeing of political prisoners, opening the way for the return of exiles and review of security legislation, still have not been fully addressed. We call on the South African government to move rapidly and creatively to resolve these remaining issues so that formal constitutional negotiations can soon begin.

Senator Bonnell: That is a very good statement. However, since he has stated that Canada is a leader in the Commonwealth group, the front line nations of Africa, can the Leader of the Government indicate whether any consideration has been given by the Government of Canada to inviting South Africa back into the Commonwealth because of the great changes they are making in that country?

Senator Murray: That step would be premature at the moment, senator.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ELIMINATION OF NATIONAL HEALTH CARE SYSTEM—
GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, before I am cut off, since there is now a time limit as to how long we can ask questions, I note that I still have a few minutes—

Senator Doody: No, you do not. We are in a hurry.

Senator Bonnell: I will move fast. In view of the fact that the Ministers of Health from across Canada are meeting in Toronto, that the Minister of Health for the province of Quebec, would like to have some more tax points for the province of Quebec and for that province to run its own medicare and national health care system, has any thought been given by the Government of Canada to back out of the national health program, or to do away with medicare as we know it today, and leave the people of the different provinces to fend for themselves?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators.

Senator Bonnell: Not at this time? Do you mean, no, not at this time, or do you mean, no, never?

Senator Murray: I mean, no, honourable senators.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESPONSIBILITY FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS—
GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, some time ago it was announced that Mr. Clark would now be responsible for dealing with the provinces on matters of the Constitution. At that time many of us felt that this was a welcome departure. However, recently the announcement was made that the staff individual responsible to Mr. Clark, indicating a separate structure, had been removed and that Mr. Clark would have as his chief of staff person the individual responsible directly to the Prime Minister.

Does this mean that the Prime Minister will once again be the prime actor in the area of constitutional reform in this country? Will the Prime Minister's Office in fact be in control rather than Mr. Clark operating independently?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend will perhaps know that over the years the responsibility at the public service level for coordinating federal-provincial relations has sometimes rested with the Clerk of the Privy Council and sometimes with a separate federal-provincial relations office. The latter was first established under the Trudeau government with Mr. Gordon Robertson at its head.

● (1550)

A decision has been made to return to the previous situation in which the federal-provincial relations office is under the direction of the Clerk of the Privy Council. I do not know what more I can add to this.

[Senator Murray.]

The honourable senator points out that the Clerk of the Privy Council is responsible to the Prime Minister. All members of the Privy Council are appointed by the Prime Minister and are responsible to him. Is Mr. Clark independent? He is as independent as he ever was, or as any minister is, and the fact of the matter is, as the honourable senator knows, that the Prime Minister is, as the doctrine has it, primus inter pares; he is pre-eminent, especially in areas, I would say—

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Would you stand at your seat? The microphone is not picking you up. I do not want to miss one word.

Senator Murray: I thank the honourable senator for his interest. The Prime Minister is, as the doctrine would have it, primus inter pares. He is pre-eminent, especially in matters regarding foreign relations and intergovernmental relations; so nothing has changed at all in that respect.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, under the Orders of the Day, as honourable senators are aware, under these rules the government side calls the government business with which it wishes to deal. I think the proper way to go about it would be that at some given time during the week, presumably on a Thursday, the government would indicate to the Senate which orders of business it wished to deal with, in what order and on what days, and so on.

In keeping with that statement, I would like to let the Senate know what business is before us and let the Senate decide how much time it wishes to devote to consideration of these matters.

The first and most important item, in my opinion, is the Appropriations Bill which is before us today. That would be called for discussion as the second order of business this afternoon. The first order of business would be the consideration of the report of the Senate Finance committee which is directly linked to the Appropriations Bill since it reports on the consideration of the Main Estimates—an interim report, I might add. The Main Estimates would still be before that committee for further consideration at its pleasure.

I would also like to mention that Bills C-15 and C-14, which are also on the Order Paper, will not be called today. Indeed, it is not our intention to call them until we come back in the fall.

Bill C-8, a bill dealing with a crown corporation, is before the Banking, Trade and Commerce committee and I trust that the committee will find time to consider that and report it back to the Senate so that we can look at it at the report stage and third reading before we take a recess.

I am told that there are three pieces of legislation coming to us when the House of Commons finishes with them today. It is my understanding that the members of the House of Commons will clear up their business sometime today or tonight. They may sit later tonight. The three bills that they will consider and, I understand, have an agreement to pass, are the Energy Board bill, C-2; the arms export bill, which is C-6, and the money laundering bill, which is C-9. I understand that all three of these bills will be with us for tomorrow. It is the wish of the government that all three of these bills be passed before we adjourn.

I would also like to report that there are two other matters with which we have to deal. The first is the appointment of the Official Languages Commissioner and the second is the consideration of the establishment of the joint committee on the constitution. Both of these matters are being dealt with in the Commons today and I anticipate that we will have messages regarding them tomorrow.

That, honourable senators, is pretty much the business that we have before us for consideration before we leave. I know that we will be sitting at ten o'clock tomorrow morning to receive the report of the Beaudoin-Edwards Committee. It may be the wish of honourable senators to continue with the business at that time and try to deal with as much as we can tomorrow, and perhaps tomorrow evening and Friday, or whatever is the wish of the majority of honourable senators present. We are open on that. If it is the wish of the Senate not to put in the extra hours toward the end of this week, certainly we are available to come back next week and, if that happens, we would come back on Tuesday and pick up where we left off.

Having said that, honourable senators, I would now call the first order, which is the consideration—

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: On a point of order, would you permit a question?

Senator Doody: Yes, certainly.

Senator Molgat: I wonder, if it is now to be the standard order of the business of the Senate that we would wait until we reach number 15, as we have today, to find out what is the order of business for the day, or will there be some advance notice to senators as to what we might expect to be discussing?

Senator Doody: I took some pains to say in the beginning that I think the sensible way to approach this new order, as it were, would be for the government side to stand on Thursday and announce the business for the following week and, as much as it can, the order in which it would like these matters to be dealt with—bills, motions, whatever—so that the Senate will know on Thursday how much work it will have to deal with the following week in order that senators can make their time allocations correspond to the work schedule of the Senate. I think that if we do it in a reasonable way it should serve us as a better vehicle for the proper use of our time. I think we can probably do it in a more businesslike way than in the somewhat haphazard system that we have before us now.

This is the first exposure to it and I cannot guarantee at this point how well it will work, but it certainly appears to have the makings of a very much improved system.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I wonder if I could put a question to the Deputy Leader. Bill S-4 is standing in the name of Senator Buckwold. It was his intention to have someone move third reading of the bill today. Does the program that the Deputy Leader has announced this afternoon preclude the motion for third reading of this bill?

Senator Doody: I spoke only of government business on the order paper. Following the consideration of government business there is a section entitled "Other Business." That includes private bills, public bills, and so on. It is not my business to call them or to say in which order they will be considered. They will fall in order, as they normally did, after the consideration of government business. If someone wishes to move the third reading of that bill on behalf of Senator Buckwold after these two government orders are considered, that is certainly in order and certainly proper. Following the consideration of these private and public bills, other business, which includes the consideration of inquiries and matters of that nature, can be considered in the same way they always have been.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: I have a question for Senator Doody, if I may. The case was made that it was necessary to go back to the previous practice of pre-studying bills. I did not hear you today make any suggestion of pre-study of bills now being considered by the House of Commons in order to expedite their consideration when they arrive here in due form.

Senator Doody: I did not mention that because I did not think it was necessary. I have no intention of asking for pre-study on any of these bills. They will be up here for first reading tomorrow. My information is that these are non-contentious bills which will be supported pretty generally in the House of Commons and will receive pretty quick treatment. I see no need for a pre-study on any of them at this point, nor on any of the items that are currently before us.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to be sure my notes are right. I understand that there is some understanding about meeting at ten o'clock tomorrow in order to deal with a report. If I heard right, Senator Doody said that it may transpire that we will continue after that to deal with business. That is the way it stands?

Senator Doody: Yes; there was no commitment from the Senate yesterday, nor I did ask for one, that we will continue on past the receiving of that report, because I really had no information—

Senator Frith: After ten and before two?

Senator Doody: That is right. I had not asked for the Senate to sit during that time because I had no indication of what the order of business might be from the House of Commons. Now that we know what we are facing tomorrow, it may be that senators will want to use that two hours to consider those matters. If so, the government side is perfectly willing, indeed pleased, if that were to happen.

● (1600)

Senator Murray reminds me of an important factor that I did not mention. The ministers responsible for these various bills will be available for consideration of those bills in Committee of the Whole should the Senate wish to go in that direction as we move through them tomorrow, tomorrow tonight, Friday, next Tuesday, or whenever.

The first order that I should like to call is the consideration of the Second Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Main Estimates), standing in the name of Senator Bolduc.

Senator Frith: What number is it?

Senator Doody: It is No. 2 under "Reports of Committees."

Senator Frith is right. Under the heading "Government Business, Bills:" number two is the bill; but under "Reports of Committees" number two is the Finance committee's report. That is the order that I called first.

Senator Frith: Wait until I find it. Where is it?

Senator Murray: It is on page four.

THE ESTIMATES, 1991-92

SECOND REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceed to consideration of the Second Report of the Standing Committee on National Finance concerning the Main Estimates, which was presented on Tuesday, June 18, 1991.

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, the committee met on June 18, 1991, to review the 1991-92 Estimates referred to the committee for consideration on June 13. The President of the Treasury Board was unable to appear before the committee on such short notice, but he was well represented by the Secretary and two Deputy Secretaries of the Board, and by the Comptroller General of Canada. Furthermore, despite the limited time available to the committee to examine the estimates for all federal departments and agencies for 1991-92, the committee's meeting on the subject was very productive and useful. The National Finance Committee will maintain the order of reference concerning the Estimates for the rest of the fiscal year and will schedule further meetings for the purpose of examining the Estimates in the months to come. I would like to take this opportunity to ask committee members for their cooperation in this respect and I would also invite other honourable senators who might be interested to attend the committee's meeting.

[English]

A number of specific questions were directed by committee members to the Treasury Board officials, as indicated in the report. One concerned the increase of 6.9 percent in overall program spending as compared with the 1990-91 Main Estimates. This is mainly due to anticipated increases in unemployment insurance payments resulting from the current recession. As well, Old Age Security payments will rise by over $1 billion in 1991-92 because of the general aging of the population.

The estimates of the new Ministry of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship) will decrease by $48.5 million, or 31 percent. Some $52 million was spent by this ministry for redress payments to Japanese-Canadians in 1990-91 and a similar amount is not needed in 1991-92.

The estimates of the Department of National Defence are to increase by $825 million, or 6.9 percent this year. Much of this amount was allocated when the Persian Gulf War was in progress. The exact cost of the Gulf operations has yet to be determined, but Treasury Board officials assured the committee that any amounts not required would be lapsed and returned by the department to the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

As well, any possible further cuts in defence expenditures, for example, resulting from reduction in Canadian Forces stationed in Germany, are not reflected in the estimates of this department.

Members also requested more information on the 10 percent reduction in the management category of the Public Service that was announced in the February 1991 Budget. In order to achieve this overall reduction, which amounts to some 475 management person-years, most departments were represented by Treasury Board with a targeted decrease of 12 percent. This will exempt small departments and agencies, in particular those having a management complement of 10 or fewer, from reductions that would make it impossible for them to function.

The issue was also raised of the living allowances and other benefits paid to employees of the Department of External Affairs who are posted overseas. Officials responded that the department undertook a corporate review, with the involvement of Treasury Board, that addressed this question among others. The allowances are subject to negotiation with foreign service union representatives but are regularly reviewed by Treasury Board, using data from Statistics Canada and information on the treatment of their diplomats by other countries. The intention is to maintain foreign service officers at a standard of living equivalent to but no higher than, what they enjoy in Ottawa.

Finally, committee members inquired about the use being made of program evaluations when resources are being allocated in the Estimates. This subject is of particular interest to your committee, which, as honourable senators know, completed their report on the program evaluation system earlier this year. The Comptroller General assured the committee that the program evaluation function, although designed as a tool for senior management, is an integral part of the resource allocation process. I am sure that the committee will return to this issue in its future reviews of Main and Supplementary Estimates.

Honourable senators, your committee customarily undertakes a major study each year under its Estimates reference. We have yet to decide on the subject matter for this year's study, although a review of Public Service 2000 and related matters might seem appropriate and timely in view of the legislation on the reorganizing of the Public Service that has just been introduced in the House of Commons. As well, such an inquiry, in exploring particular aspects of public administration, would be a logical sequel to the committee's report on the program evaluation system.

I would like to emphasize that the National Finance committee has achieved an enviable reputation from the studies it has undertaken and the reports that it has tabled over a period of many years. The government has taken our recommendations into account when formulating new policies and programs and redesigning existing ones. Therefore, it is my hope that your committee will see fit to continue this effective tradition by undertaking another substantive and worthwhile study during the months ahead.

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Liberal senators, I was particularly heartened when I read the last paragraph of the National Finance committee's report on the Main Estimates. It states:

[Translation]

> Your Committee customarily undertakes a major study each year under the reference of the Estimates. The subject of the study and of the final report on the Estimates have not yet been decided.

That is what the Hon. Senator Bolduc just told us, for that matter.

> However, an examination of Public Service 2000 and other aspects of the management of the Public Service might form an appropriate sequel to the Committee's study of the program evaluation system during the 1990-91 fiscal year.

[English]

That paragraph is a reminder to all of us concerned with the work done by the National Finance committee in the past that there is a need for this committee to continue to examine, under the order of reference of the Main Estimates, those matters of concern to it.

• (1610)

In March of 1990 the Main Estimates were referred to the committee. The outcome of that referral was a report on the program evaluation system in the Government of Canada. While not equally appreciated by everyone in the Public Service, despite the fact that we were trying to be helpful, the report has had some impact if we may judge from the remarks made yesterday at the National Finance committee by representatives from the Office of the Comptroller General. I wish to quote from the "blues" of that meeting, where Mr. Macdonald stated:

> . . . this committee spent a lot of time reviewing evaluations and issued a report on it . . . I think the evidence that you had an opportunity to review over the past year . . . has indicated that evaluations are in fact used by management.
> There are numerous reallocations within departmental operations that are directly the result of program evaluation studies carried on inside.

A little later, he states:

> I think the evaluations are coming along quite well. We have just undertaken, or are in the process of undertaking, a review of our current evaluation policy and we have been talking to departments as to how they feel about it.

This indicates to me that the program evaluation report has been timely and may well be effective.

At my request some years ago the Library of Parliament prepared a study of the National Finance committee entitled: Bref Historique du Comité Sénatorial Permanent Des Finances Nationales in which it remarked that by the 1980s, the work of the committee had begun to extend.

[Translation]

Allow me to quote from page 27 of the French version of this background prepared by Helen McKenzie and Luc Fortin from the Political and Social Affairs Division of the Library of Parliament. This research was conducted on March 16, 1989, and updated on August 31, 1989. Page 27 reads as follows:

> Participation of the Committee to the Federal Spending Review Process
>
> Throughout its proceedings, the National Finance Committee fulfilled its primary function which is to control government expenditures. In reviewing the Main and Supplementary Estimates, the Committee paid special attention to a number of important issues.
> Since the early 1980s, the regular committee work has expanded tremendously compared to previous years. In addition to reviewing the Estimates, the Committee considered bills dealing with such issues as government loans, wage restraint in the public sector, fiscal arrangements with the provinces, federal public service organization, financial assistance to industrial and regional development.

This is a rather long document. I will jump to the conclusion, on page 39, which reads:

> The nature of the work of the National Finance Committee has changed a great deal over the years since it was established in 1919. It is also more important. The Committee has a number of outstanding accomplishments to its credit regarding the operation of the departments which illustrates what can be achieved through parliamentary committees.

A few of these feats are particularly noteworthy, namely:

> A. Departmental Spending Review
>
> The Committee has produced evidence that government estimates reviews give better results when the entire expenditure structure and lay-out procedure are being considered prior to undertaking an in-depth review of a particular department or program.
> B. Inquiry
> Perhaps for the first time ever, it has been established that a parliamentary committee can carry out . . .

And this is an important point.

> . . . a usefull inquiry into a department or a program without requiring a major outlay of funds for additional staff or expertise.

I will now turn to page 40:

D. Effectiveness

Over the years the Finance Committee has demonstrated a remarkable level of impartiality and co-operation in its activities. The Senate agreed with the precedent of allowing an opposition member to chair the committee.

Although committee members were often highly partisan politicians, they did not allow their personal opinions to undermine the effectiveness of the committee's work as a whole. As a result, bureaucrats started to perceive the work done by the committee as a means of truly improving the operations of their departments and their accountability to Parliament; that is why they agreed to co-operate, which in turn gave the committee better access to the information it needed.

Briefly, the responsibilites of the Senate's Finance Committee, which had consisted essentially in viewing the Estimates and expenditure control bills, were expanded in 1970 to include a review of the general accountability of the executive power to Parliament. According to Senator Everett, the committee managed to prove that parliamentary committees can, through their activities, have an impact on government spending, the activities of departments, the implementation of government programs and even political policy, and all at very reasonable cost.

[English]

A great deal of the preparation following the hearings which lead to the most recent report program evaluation was carried out by the director of research, who, through the summer of 1990, in conjunction with the Clerk of the Committee, contacted heads of departments for their views. There was also, under my direction, extensive correspondence. As I said, that work was carried on throughout the summer months while the Senate was in recess. Summer research is an important aspect of the committee's ultimate work on Main Estimates. It allows progress to be made throughout what are otherwise less active months.

● (1620)

Honourable senators, I would not like the National Finance committee of the Senate to lose the reputation that it has gained over many years. I urge committee members to continue with the research program that they began so that by the autumn of 1991 substantial progress toward the goal of the committee may be reached. Thank you, honourable senators.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, at this point I should like to call order No. 2 under Government Business, Bills, which is the motion for second reading of Bill C-24.

[Senator Leblanc.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Because that is the order in which Senator Doody said he would call the business?

Senator Murray: Yes, because the Deputy Leader of the Government gave notice that he would call the business in that order today.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1991-92

SECOND READING

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-24, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1992.

He said: Honourable senators, for the record, I have several paragraphs to read concerning this bill.

This is Appropriation Bill No. 2. It provides for the release of the balance of the Main Estimates for 1991-92, amounting to some $34.1 billion; and the whole of Supplementary Estimates "A", 1991-92, amounting to $428 million. The total spending authority requested by this bill is $34.5 billion.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the Main Estimates was tabled in the Senate on May 21st, 1991 and referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on June 13, 1991. The Supplementary Estimate (A) was tabled in the Senate on May 30th, 1991 and immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Senior officials from the Treasury Board Secretariat discussed the budget with the members of the committee on June 6, 1991.

[English]

Should honourable senators require additional information, I would be pleased to try to provide it.

The bill is in the usual form with no surprises.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, under the old traditions, the new rules, and everything I know about in the Senate, we have always had the debate on the question of appropriation take place on the report of the National Finance committee and not on the Appropriation Bill itself. Having had the report, the debate on it, and the report having been adopted, this bill should be given second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Murray, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as indicated by the Deputy Leader of the Government earlier, I suggest that we move to Government

Motions No. 1, which is Senator Doody's motion to adjourn the sitting of the Senate until tomorrow at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Hon. Peter Bosa: I understood Senator Doody to say that we would deal with Private Bills and Other Business before we adjourned.

Senator Murray: Exactly. I therefore withdraw that motion for the moment, and I invite Your Honour to proceed down the Order Paper until you reach Private Bills, at which point we would proceed to the motion for third reading of Bill S-4.

PRIVATE BILL

UNIVERSITY OF EMMANUEL COLLEGE—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—THIRD READING

Hon. Lorna Marsden, for Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold, moved the third reading of Bill S-4, to amend the Act of incorporation of the University of Emmanuel College.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST CHURCH IN CANADA—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Second Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, (Bill S-3, An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Canada), with one amendment, presented in the Senate on June 18, 1991.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I move, on behalf of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, that the report be now adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we should have on the record that this report proposes an amendment. I spoke about it to Senator Nurgitz, the chairman of the committee, just before he was required to leave.

Although the amendment is routine, it is absolutely necessary. Part of the private bill provided for annual meetings of the corporation every six years, whereas a section of the Corporations Act provides that they must take place every year. Thus, the amendment was necessary but simple in that it required the addition of the words "notwithstanding" a certain section of the Corporations Act.

The reason we agreed to deal with this matter immediately is because there is some hope that we might get the bill down to the other place and, with luck—and it will take a lot of luck—they might deal with it before they leave and send it back so that the bill, as amended, will have completed all stages before we break.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

● (1630)

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, unless I am mistaken, I think there would be general agreement to have other orders stand and for His Honour to call Government Motion No. 1.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kinsella.

> That when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday 20th June, at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Motion agreed to.

RULES OF THE SENATE

APPLICATION OF NEW RULES—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, following the ruling of His Honour the Speaker, I believe there was general agreement that the question of privilege that I raised at the beginning of the sitting could be finished at the end of the daily routine of business. I should now like to conclude my remarks.

Each one of us should be grieved that this house has abdicated its authority and privileges by artificially elevating powers in this chamber. It is not even within the constituted powers of a Senate to lay down its privileges and its most ancient right; that is, every senator's right to be heard for as long as he or she wishes to speak on the issues before the house. It is, a most ancient and bedrock right that has characterized every such upper house in Parliamentary history. It is a right and privilege which secures for the subjects of Her Majesty a guarantee of fair government. It is therefore, a right based on the Magna Carta that cannot be voluntarily abdicated by this house.

Therefore, the hasty resolution of June 18 courts grave constitutional error and consequent constitutional and legal implications, as well as eventual public disrepute. This, honourable senators, is tantamount to the abortion of parliamentary democracy not only this chamber, but also in the other place, in view of the changes that occurred there earlier this year. We who love and respect parliamentary democracy, especially its freedom of speech, should guard jealously and zealously all our fundamental, institutional and individual rights and privileges.

I thank honourable senators for their patience and I regret any misunderstanding that has arisen.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Murray, do you want to stand everything up to Inquiries?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Your Honour, if I am not mistaken, there are several messages from the House of Commons to be read.

The Hon. the Speaker: No, senator, there are not.

Senator Murray: If not, then I suggest that you put Government Motion No. 1 and then Senator Bolduc's motion and we can go from there.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What is that?

Senator Murray: Senator Bolduc's motion, of which he gave notice, is to the effect that the Standing Committee on National Finance have power to engage the services, et cetera.

Senator Frith: I remember.

Hon. Roch Bolduc: I am standing it.

Senator Murray: Then I suggest that Your Honour put Government Motion No. 1.

The Hon. the Speaker: I have already put that motion.

Senator Murray: You put it, but it was debated by Senator Haidasz.

The Hon. the Speaker: No, I put it and it was agreed to. Perhaps there is a misunderstanding. During my ruling I mentioned that, if the Senate agreed, the Honourable Senator Haidasz could finish his question of privilege. That is what he has done, and I do not think it has had any effect on the motion.

Senator Murray: Then, Your Honour, I think there would be general agreement that the other orders stand. I would move that the Senate do now adjourn, if there are no messages from the House of Commons.

Hon. Peter Bosa: What about Inquiries?

Senator Murray: If an honourable senator wishes to speak to an inquiry, then that would be done, and I would be incorrect in stating that all other orders could stand.

Senator Frith: The problem, among others that we are having difficulty with here, is that the House of Commons, of course, does not call all its orders. All the orders are not called in the other place. As far as I know, for 123 years that is something that the House of Commons has never understood about the Senate; namely, that we call every order every day. That is what we did under the previous rules. It is not quite clear what happens now. I cannot see anything in the present rules that prevents what the government leader is asking to be done. I have just leafed through them. I have not really studied them.

That is the problem. We are used to the fact that all orders in the Senate are called every day. Every order on the order paper is called unless we agree that they stand. We are having trouble getting used to the fact that what we are doing now is what they do in the House of Commons, which does not require all orders to be called. Anyway, whatever it is, let us put the motion.

Senator Murray: In any event, it is certainly not unprecedented here for the Leader or the Deputy Leader of the Government, on the basis of his understanding of the intentions of honourable senators, to move that all other orders stand.

Senator Frith: That is fine.

Senator Murray: I would so do. If an honourable senator wishes to speak to one of the inquiries or one of the other orders then my understanding of the desire of the Senate is incorrect.

Senator Frith: That is fine. I agree.

Senator Murray: I ask that all other orders stand.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, just for my own edification, does that mean that if one does not give notice that one wants to speak under Inquiries, that item will be by-passed and we will go directly to government motions? If we follow the sequence as it appears in the Proceedings of the Senat, we have Government Business, Reports of Committees, and we then have Private Business, Other Business, and then Inquiries. The honourable gentleman went directly to Motions, which is the item after Inquiries.

Senator Murray: Perhaps I can clarify the situation by stating that, with the exception of the adjournment motion that the Senate do now adjourn, the government will not be calling any further government business today, and if honourable senators wish to continue on through the order paper from where we left it, which was at Other Motions, we could read every order and see whether honourable senators wish to proceed with those orders.

Senator Frith: I believe that the motion that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is now making—namely, that all other orders stand—is consistent with our practice under the previous rules, because he has said that if anyone wishes to object and speak to any order, he may do so. In effect, we are following the practice of calling all orders because Senator Murray is asking that they be adjourned or, at least, that they stand, en bloc.

• (1640)

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I that understand it is strictly Orders of the Day, or does that include Inquiries?

Senator Frith: It includes all remaining items of business, except the adjournment motion.

Senator Murray: That being the case, honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I have one more question to help us understand what is meant by this. Does it mean that, if the government wishes to move the adjournment of the Senate by making such a motion, then Inquiries and other business will stand whether or not some members of the opposition wish to speak to those Inquiries?

Senator Murray: The short answer is that a motion to adjourn is always in order, and it always has been.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kelly, that the Senate do now adjourn.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

PARLIAMENTARY GUIDE

INSTRUCTION TO PUBLISHER TO DISTRIBUTE CORRECTION

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, a publication which is bought by the Senate and which is distributed by the Senate to all senators has accused me of a criminal act, namely, bigamy.

Page 114 of the 1991 edition of the Canadian Parliamentary Guide, which the Senate buys and distributes—the "stud book" as Senator Phillips colloquially calls the red book, which we do not yet have on our desks—states that I am married to Sylvie Bédard of Quebec and mentions my three children. It also states that I am married to another lady—I will not name her. She happens to be the wife of a senator, and she happens to be the wife of a Tory senator who has been asking me how did the two of us manage to bring these three children into the world.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): For the protection of the rest of us, will you name the senator?

Senator Gigantès: I do not want to reveal his name or the name of his wife. Libel enough has been committed. I do not want to repeat the libel by voicing it.

This publication is produced by Info Globe. The founder of Info Globe is Senator Doyle. He has been recently engaged in rewriting history, in some ways. I wish he would stop rewriting mine. He has admitted that he has spent many hours in his life sitting at his gloomy desk on King Street in Toronto envying, in his imagination, my running around the world at his expense, as he puts it, wining and dining beautiful women. The lady in question here is beautiful. I think he is carrying it too far by getting his former minions to calumniate a fellow senator—two fellow senators and the wife of a senator on the same side as he is. I don't know what he has against him. Probably he finds him too progressive, not enough conservative. Who knows? Maybe it's the bad influence of his seatmate.

In all seriousness, I move that the Senate instruct the purchasing authorities of the Senate to tell Info Globe that we will not buy the publication unless it sends a corrective sticker to everyone who has bought this publication which has calumniated me.

Bigamy is a criminal act. I am accused of bigamy. It should be corrected. The only good thing I can say about this is that what they are accusing me of is not as bad as what they accused me of last year. Last year, on page 107 of the same publication, which is on the desk there, states "Party: Progressive Conservative."

I would like the Senate to vote on my motion that the purchasing authorities of the Senate be instructed to tell Info Globe that it must send a corrective sticker to all persons who have bought this publication, and to apologise to the lady they have offended by saying she is married to me when she is not, and to apologize also to me and to her husband. Thank you.

Senator Haidasz: Call in the members!

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator's Statements.

Senator Gigantès: Excuse me, I have moved a motion. I move:

> That the Senate instruct its purchasing authorities to tell Info Globe to send a corrective sticker to all persons who have bought the 1991 edition of the Canadian Parliamentary Guide.

I think we are so entitled.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Would the honourable senator agree to having Senator Doyle edit the correction?

Senator Gigantès: I do not trust him since this publication, so, no, thank you.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, according to rule 16(3):

> When the Speaker has been asked to decide any question of privilege or point of order he or she shall determine when sufficient argument has been adduced to decide the matter, whereupon the Speaker shall so indicate to the Senate, and continue with the item of business which had been interrupted or proceed to the next item of business, as the case may be.

Thus, I will take this matter under advisement.

Senator Lefebvre: Why don't you just agree?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF CORNWALLIS BASE—SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Hon. Gérald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, it is very difficult to govern a country as vast as Canada, and our differences of opinion are often to the same grand scale. In 1984, the government inherited a mountain of debt. Since that time, the government has had to make decisions, often painful but necessary, to relieve the pressure of the massive debt left to our children and grandchildren by the previous government. Meanwhile, the opposition parties were changing their policies according to the results of public opinion polls, and the government is now faced with political parties like the Bloc québécois and the Reform Party that are intent on breaking up this country.

The Maritimes are often overlooked in these political battles. The Maritime provinces were very prosperous at the time of Confederation, but that prosperity disappeared, largely due to an artificially protectionist national economic policy that put Maritime goods at a disadvantage.

We are trying to get out of this difficult situation, but now we read in the media that military planners want to close some of our military bases, as a money-saving measure. We realize that the threat of a world war is not as great as it was in the past and that as a result, the military must consider the size of their establishment. However, assuming we will still have to train military recruits, I find it hard to understand why the military should consider closing down the only English-language Canadian Forces training base in Canada.

The economy in the region where CFB Cornwallis is located is in trouble because of problems with the fisheries. There are no other jobs to absorb civilian employees working at the base. Officials will say it is not up to the military to protect jobs in a region where the economy is stagnating, but Canada was not founded exclusively on financial statements.

People in the Maritimes are proud to support the military, and the military should appreciate that support. Per capita, the population of the Maritimes has sacrificed more of its children to the wars in which Canada has participated than any other region. We must not forget that dedication.

Therefore, we urge the military to consider this factor when submitting their suggestions to the government. It is hard to express this loyalty in dollars and cents, but it is probably with far more than the few dollars that might be saved by closing CFB Cornwallis.

The people of the Maritimes have made great sacrifices to achieve the Canadian dream. Yes, our economy is in trouble today, and we would like to do something about it!

That is why I want to ask the military planners and the government to consider all these factors when they make their decision on the future of CFB Cornwallis.

NATIONAL UNITY

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE OF PARLIAMENT—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

HOUSE OF COMMONS CANADA

Wednesday, June 19, 1991

ORDERED—That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to inquire into and make recommendations to Parliament on the Government of Canada's proposals for a renewed Canada contained in the documents to be referred to it by the Government;

That twenty Members of the House of Commons and ten Members of the Senate be the Members of the Special Joint Committee: such Members on the part of the House of Commons to be designated upon the report of the Standing Committee on House Management, which report shall be deemed concurred in upon presentation or, if the House is not sitting at the time of such Standing Committee on House Management Report such report shall be deemed concurred in upon its being filed with the Clerk of the House of Commons;

That the Committee have the power to appoint from among its Members such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable, and to delegate to such sub-committees all or any of its powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the Committee have the power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the Committee, or sub-committees, have the power to travel, and to hold public hearings, within Canada;

That the Committee provide Canadians with an opportunity to participate fully in the development of the government of Canada's plan for a renewed Canada;

That the Committee have the power to hold joint sittings with the committees of legislatures or individual members of provincial and territorial legislatures;

That the Committee develop procedures to ensure aboriginal peoples participate fully in the development of the Government of Canada's plan for a renewed Canada and, in particular, on issues of special interest to them;

That the Committee have the power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee be authorized to put in place mechanisms designed to encourage and facilitate the participation of individuals and groups of Canadians;

That the Committee be empowered to authorize television and radio broadcasting, as it deems appropriate, of any or all of its proceedings or of proceedings of its sub-committees, pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons;

That the parties represented on the Committee be granted allocations for expert assistance with the Committee work in proportion to the representation of the said parties in the House of Commons;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the service of professional, clerical and stenographic staff as deemed advisable by the Joint Chairs;

That the Committee submit its report not later than February 28, 1992, provided that, if the House of Commons is not sitting, the report will be deemed submitted on the day such report is deposited with the Clerk of the House of Commons and with the Clerk of the Senate;

That changes in membership of the Committee be effective immediately after a notification, signed by the Member acting as Chief Whip of any recognized party, has been filed with the Clerk of the Committee;

That the quorum of the Committee be thirteen Members whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken so long as both Houses are represented, and the Joint Chairs are authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and to authorize the printing thereof, when nine Members are present so long as both Houses are represented; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, ten Senators to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ON AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION

FINAL REPORT TABLED

Hon. Gérald A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the final report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Process for Amending the Constitution of Canada.

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Does Senator Beaudoin have leave to speak to his report?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): No.

Senator Doody: He had intended to speak to it now.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No, he cannot. He can speak to it tomorrow.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall the report be taken into consideration?

Senator MacEachen: Tomorrow.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, perhaps I should explain that a press conference will be held this morning at around 11:00 o'clock, at which time the information in the report will be made available to the public. That was the reason that Senator Beaudoin had anticipated giving a short statement here this morning, but if it is not the wish of the Senate to receive it at this time, of course it can be done tomorrow.

Some Hon. Senators: Now.

Senator Frith: No. They are your rules and you will have to live by them.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted to proceed now?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, leave has not been granted to proceed now. We will proceed tomorrow. My understanding is that leave will be granted to proceed with second reading of the various bills that we have before us today, and they will be referred to committee for consideration, some of them in Committee of the Whole, one of them in a select committee. It is also my understanding that the several resolutions that come before us today will be considered tomorrow, and that third reading will be considered for those bills that receive second reading and pass through committee today.

With that plan in being, with the understanding of the senators present, it means that we will finish our business some time tomorrow and it will not be necessary for us to return next week. Since we have to come back tomorrow anyway for third reading of these bills, it would seem prudent, in the light of the rules, for us to defer consideration of the various resolutions and committee reports until tomorrow.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, may I ask a question of the chairman of the committee? I presume a press kit will have been prepared for the press conference. Will we also receive the press kit here in the Senate?

Senator Beaudoin: Yes. I am going at 10:30 a.m.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Why is the press getting that report first? Why are we not getting it first?

Senator Beaudoin: With the permission of the house, and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), may I explain in a few minutes what the report is about? I could also do it tomorrow morning at 10 a.m. I am in the hands of the Senate.

Senator Doody: Senator Bonnell has asked for the press kit, which is not available at the present time. However, I understand that Senator Beaudoin will be available later this morning. However, in light of the fact that the press kit is not available, Senator Beaudoin is prepared to outline the contents of the kit and the gist of the report. Honourable senators are not prepared to accept that at this time; so that, I think, is the end of the matter tomorrow.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I hope we are quite clear about the comments made by Senator Doody. The question was left up in the air yesterday as to whether or not, after the tabling of this report, we would be proceeding with business today before 2 o'clock. In a very short discussion with Senator Doody I told him that we were prepared to give leave to deal with government legislation at second reading today, including, where appropriate, committee hearings and Committee of the Whole, but that no leave would be given with regard to anything else.

Senator Doody: That is correct.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

FIRST REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Gerald R. Ottenheimer, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs presented the following report:

Thursday, June 20, 1991

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee to which was referred the Bill S-2, An Act to implement conventions between Canada and Finland, Canada and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and Canada and the United Mexican States for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax and the prevention of fiscal evasion and a convention between Canada and the United Mexican States for the exchange of information with respect to taxes, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, May 30, 1991, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

GERALD R. OTTENHEIMER
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Ottenheimer, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I give notice that, at the next sitting of the Senate, I will move that, in accordance with section 49(1) of the Official Languages Act, R.S.C. 1985 (4th Supp.), c. 31, this House approves the appointment of Victor Goldbloom, O.C., M.D., LL.D., as Commissioner of Official Languages for Canada.

NATIONAL UNITY

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow I will move:

That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to inquire into and make recommendations to Parliament on the proposals of the Government of Canada for a renewed Canada contained in documents to be referred to it, from time to time, by the Government of Canada;

That ten members of the Senate and twenty members of the House of Commons be appointed to be members of the Special Joint Committee;

That the quorum of the Joint Committee be thirteen Members whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is to be taken so long as both Houses are represented, and that the Joint Chairs are authorized to hold hearings, to receive evidence and to authorize the printing thereof, when nine Members are present so long as both Houses are represented;

That the members, to act for the Senate, on the Joint Committee be named at a later time by the Standing Committee on Selection;

That it be an instruction to the Joint Committee that it provide Canadians the opportunity to participate fully in the development of the plan proposed by the Government of Canada for a renewed Canada;

That it be an instruction to the Joint Committee that it develop mechanisms designed to encourage and facilitate the participation of individuals and groups of Canadians;

That it be an instruction to the Joint Committee that it develop procedures to ensure that aboriginal peoples participate fully in the development of the plan proposed by the Government of Canada for a renewed Canada;

That it be an instruction to the Joint Committee that it submit its final report not later than February 28, 1992;

That, if either the Senate or the House of Commons is not sitting on the day such report is deposited with the Clerk of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Commons, the same shall be deemed submitted;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to appoint, from among its Members, such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable, and to delegate to such sub-committee all or any of its powers, except the power to report to the Senate;

That the Joint Committee, or sub-committees thereof, be empowered to travel, and to hold public hearings, within Canada;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to hold joint hearings with committees of legislatures or with individual members of provincial and territorial legislatures;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence, from day to day, as may be ordered by the Joint Committee;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to authorize television and radio broadcasting, as it deems appropriate, of any or all of its proceedings and of the proceedings of its sub-committees, pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of proceedings of the House of Commons;

That the parties represented on the Joint Committee be granted allocations for expert assistance with the work of the Committee in proportion to representation of the said parties in the House of Commons;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to retain the services of professional, clerical, and stenographic staff as deemed advisable by the Joint Chairs; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have not had a chance to examine this motion in detail, but I do notice that the motion contains the following paragraph:

That the members, to act for the Senate, on the Joint Committee be named at a later time by the Standing Committee on Selection.

I think it would be very wise to proceed to name these members tomorrow, and I would hope that the government would consider amending the motion with respect to the Senate so that the Senate name the members rather than face the difficulty of going to the Standing Committee on Selection. I just ask the Deputy Leader to give that some consideration.

Senator Doody: Thank you. I will, notwithstanding rule 66(1).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, while the Deputy Leader will be considering other matters, I wonder if he might also consider the paragraph that reads as follows:

That the parties represented on the Joint Committee be granted allocations for expert assistance with the work of the Committee in proportion to representation of the said parties in the House of Commons;

Would it not be better to have the motion say the "representation in both houses," in view of the fact that it is a joint committee?

Senator Doody: It is the same as the wording that was used when the last joint committee was set up, and it was acceptable at that time. However, once again, it can be considered.

[Senator Doody.]

Hon. Thomas H. Lefebvre: Honourable senators, I have a further question for Senator Doody. I was distracted momentarily and perhaps someone else has asked this question. However, it is with regard to the third paragraph. From my parliamentary experience, I thought the resolution would say that the quorum of the joint committee would be thirteen members whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is to be taken. It says "so long as both houses are represented." From my own experience in both houses, that means as long as the major parties are present. In this case, both houses could be represented by only one party. Perhaps Senator Doody could look into having this modified as well.

Senator Doody: I do not think that the recognition of the parties in the context that the honourable senator is referring to has been mentioned in previous resolutions of this type, but I will certainly have it researched.

PROCEEDS OF CRIME (MONEY LAUNDERING) BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-9, An Act to facilitate combatting the laundering of proceeds of crime.

Bill read the first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill now be read the second time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, in moving second reading I wish to make a few brief comments on the subject matter of this bill and on the strategy of dealing with this terrible curse.

A national drug strategy was launched by this government in 1987. There have been many initiatives by many governments. I suspect there will be many more initiatives by many more governments because of the evergrowing problem. The objective of the strategy announced in 1987 was to reduce the harmful effects of substance abuse on individuals, families and communities by addressing the supply and demand aspects of the problem in a balanced approach tailored to our own country's needs.

In recent years there has been widespread recognition that to effectively combat drug trafficking and other organized criminal activities, there must be measures in place which will make these activities less profitable. Drug trafficking generates large amounts of cash which must be converted into seemingly legitimate forms. The act of doing that has acquired the term "money laundering". By taking effective action on money laundering, we make these underlying crimes less attractive from a financial point of view and thereby discourage them.

Bill C-61, which amended the Criminal Code, the Food and Drug Act and the Narcotics Control Act, came into effect on January 1, 1989. It was an important milestone in Canada's efforts to combat money laundering. That act made money laundering a criminal offence and it allowed the police authorities, once they had obtained the necessary judicial authorization, to search for and seize property suspected of being the proceeds of crime.

The fight against money laundering must be made with the cooperation of governments and the private sector. For this reason, an Advisory Committee on Money Laundering was established in January 1990 with membership from financial institutions and associations as well as officials from a large array of government departments, including the Department of Finance, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions and the Federal Department of Justice.

At the first meeting of this advisory committee in February 1990, there was unanimous support for a law requiring that adequate records be kept in order to support the investigation and prosecution of cases of money laundering.

• (1030)

In April of 1990, the report of the G-7 Financial Action Task Force was released. This report contained 40 recommendations to combat money laundering. Although Canada was in substantial compliance with the recommendations, it fell short on the matter of record-keeping. Following further discussion among our own advisory committee and private sector associations, and also following discussions with provincial officials, the government approved the introduction of Bill C-89, which was entitled, "An Act to Facilitate Combating the Laundering of the Proceeds of Crime." C-89 was tabled in October of 1990 but died on the order paper when that session of Parliament prorogued.

The bill was revised and introduced recently in the House of Commons as Bill C-9. The revisions make it clear that intent is required to commit the infraction created in the bill. Changes to the regulations will be prepublished in the Canada Gazette at least three months before they are finalized. Finally, the scope of the regulation-making powers of the government with respect to determining the accuracy of the information contained in records is limited to identification of clients. All of these changes are consistent with the intent of the original bill, but actually, I might say, serve to improve it.

There have been a number of other important initiatives in the fight against the drug problem in our country. Canadian financial institutions such as the chartered banks and the major trust companies have developed internal programs against money laundering. These programs include employee training and the recognition of suspected instances of money laundering, which can then be referred to law enforcement agencies such as the RCMP for further investigation. Similar programs have been or are being developed through the financial services industry.

The office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, which is responsible for the supervision of federally chartered financial institutions, has issued a paper entitled Best Practices for Deterring and Detecting Money Laundering. This paper contains guidelines for financial institutions covering such matters as how to deal with suspicious transactions. In addition, a review of anti-money laundering procedures and practices forms a part of the regular review of that department of all federally supervised financial institutions.

Honourable senators, on July 5, 1990 Canada ratified the United Nations Convention Against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. That is referred to as the Vienna Convention. The Canadian government has also passed legislation, Bill C-58, enabling the negotiation of Mutual Legal Assistance Treaties. These treaties are designed to facilitate international co-operation among law enforcement authorities in dealing with criminal activities.

In conclusion, I would note the government's belief that the fight against money laundering requires a partnership and co-operation between various sectors in our society—governmental and private sector. For this reason the government will continue the ongoing dialogue with the private sector and with provincial governments in order to ensure that Canada's measures against money laundering, already considered by many to be reasonably advanced in the world, remain up to date and effective.

Honourable senators, it would be my intention, assuming this bill receive second reading, to ask that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole later this day.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to ask a question with respect to the stage we are at. I understand that the Senate gave consent to give second reading to this bill later this day. We are now on second reading, which would place us under Orders of the Day, but we have not called the other items that would get us to the Orders of the Day. I think we should regularize our procedure so that we get to the Orders of the Day in the proper way and not make a leap over all these other items. If we are to proceed to second reading, we had better go through the Order Paper.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Senator MacEachen is perfectly correct; we are on routine proceedings. There is some time for us to continue with routine proceedings and then we continue on with the regular Orders of the Day and government business as called. Perhaps we could suspend debate on this bill until later this day, and Mr. Speaker could continue with the messages under the routine proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Debate suspended.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-2, to amend the National Energy Board Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day, when we get to its appropriate spot under "Government Business".

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

A BILL RESPECTING THE EXPORTING, IMPORTING, MANUFACTURING, BUYING OR SELLING OF OR DEALING WITH CERTAIN WEAPONS

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. The Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-6, respecting the exporting,importing, manufacturing, buying or selling of or other dealing with certain weapons.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day, when we reach its proper place on the order paper.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators I have some petitions. We continue to be showered by them. When I say that, I am not complaining.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Today I have the usual form of petition against the GST and in favour of an early election to correct its iniquities and others inflicted by this government on the people of Canada.

The people of Canada presenting petitions today are represented, first, from Ontario. One petition comes from Toronto and Don Mills and contains 22 names. Then from Quebec I have two petitions today, honourable senators. They come from St. Damase, St. Clothilde, Arthabaska, St. Albert, St. Valere, St. Eulalie, Victoriaville, Danville and Montreal. The total number of names on those petitions is 40 . All of them are signed, of course. That means that the grand total of petitions is three, one from Ontario and two from Quebec; and the total number of names is 62, 40 from Quebec and 22 from Ontario.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Murray is at a cabinet meeting at the present time. He has indicated that he will be present at 2 o'clock and, if honourable senators wish to have a question period at that time, he is quite prepared.

Senator MacEachen: We will carry on in the normal way.

PROCEEDS OF CRIME (MONEY LAUNDERING) BILL

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, for the second reading of Bill C-9, and Act to facilitate combatting the laundering of proceeds of crime.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: He said: Honourable senators, the bill before us which Senator Nurgitz has introduced so well, Bill C-9, entitled "An Act to facilitate combatting the laundering of proceeds of crime," is a very strong bill and one which has benefited from all-party agreement in the other place. The intention of the bill is to discourage the use of Canada's financial system by criminals and to ensure there is adequate opportunity for police to carry out the appropriate investigations and subsequent prosecutions that have been allowed for in this and other recent legislation.

Specifically, the bill was designed to inhibit the flow of illicit drug funds. It would establish, for the first time in Canada, record-keeping requirements in the financial field. Honourable senators will recall that the legislation that we passed earlier did not require this record-keeping; it was left to the financial institutions to police themselves.

Honourable senators may know that Bill C-9 is essentially the same as Bill C-89 which was introduced into the house last year. For those honourable senators who are familiar with Bill C-89, which died on the House of Commons order paper at prorogation and which had some problems, I am pleased to assure you that this current bill represents improvement in those areas that were identified as problematic in the last bill.

Clauses 2, 4 and 5 set out the record-keeping requirements for financial institutions to be installed into the Criminal Code, Food and Drugs Acts and the Narcotics Control Act. Clause 3 broadens the definition of financial institutions subject to record-keeping requirements to include non-banks such as life insurance companies, trust companies, security brokers and other similar institutions.

Portions of clauses 5 and 6 reflect some of the changes made in this bill from Bill C-89. For instance, Bill C-9 has made requirements for identifying customers more specific and workable. As well, the bill adds the term "knowingly" to the definition of the offence. The intention is to ensure that inadvertent violations of the law would not be subject to the serious punishment proposed in the bill.

Draft regulations have not as yet been introduced with Bill C-9. Department of Finance officials have indicated that these will be changed from those that accompanied Bill C-89 which have been subject to some objections. I am sure the joint committee will do the necessary monitoring of these new regulations.

I would recommend that all honourable senators support this bill and that it proceed to discussion in Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Pat Carney moved the second reading of Bill C-2, to amend the National Energy Board Act.

She said: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few clarifying remarks about the intent of this bill. You will recall that on February 26, 1991, the Hon. Michael Wilson announced in the budget speech the Government of Canada's decision to relocate the National Energy Board from Ottawa to Calgary. Bill C-2, a bill to amend the National Energy Board Act, will make it possible for the government to follow through with these plans.

By way of introduction, many honourable senators know that the National Energy Board was created by an act of Parliament in 1959. For the first time, an independent tribunal was created to provide advice to the federal government on certain major energy matters drawing heavily on evidence put before it at public hearings.

The board wields a broad range of regulatory authorities including the licensing of the export of oil, gas and electricity, the issuance of certificates for international interprovincial pipelines and international power lines, and the setting of just and reasonable tolls for pipelines under federal jurisdiction.

In addition to these regulatory responsibilities, the board, at the specific request of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, serves as a provider of expert advice and information to the government on energy issues and energy markets.

These amendments to the National Energy Board Act contained in Bill C-2 will in no way affect the board's regulatory stature or mandate. The purpose of the legislation is to allow the National Energy Board of Canada to relocate from Ottawa to Calgary; nothing more and nothing less.

Why Calgary? Calgary is generally accepted as the centre of Canada's oil and gas industry. The board spends by far the largest portion of its time dealing with oil and gas related issues. For these reasons alone, most Canadians—and this includes members of both opposition parties as reflected in their comments in the House of Commons on second reading—viewed the relocation to Calgary as a relatively straightforward and sensible decision.

It is important, however, to recognize that there is a much broader context for this move. Western Canadians in particular have increasingly felt that their problems were not always well understood in Ottawa and that decisions were sometimes taken without a full appreciation of their views and perspectives. National policy must be seen, particularly at this time, to be responsive to the aspirations of Canada's regions for a fuller participation in our national life and greater proximity to the making of decisions which will shape their economic future.

Some have alleged that moving the NEB will somehow throw into question the integrity and impartiality of its decisions. This argument, however, is totally preposterous and insults the intelligence of the audience, in particular, western Canadians, and of the board's staff.

The board will continue to hold its public hearings in centres right across Canada in close proximity to the major impact of the project and where public concerns are the greatest. The government is managing the relocation in a manner which is fair to the board's employees, the industry and taxpayers who share the financial burden of the move.

• (1050)

The board, its staff and all those it serves, industry as well as consumers, stand, over the long run, to gain handsomely by this move. Not only will greater proximity to the heart of the industry bring greater awareness of key oil and gas issues, the relocation will also open up a rich reserve of western Canadian human resources from which the board can staff itself.

We can be assured that when the move and transition is fully complete we will be able to point to a national institution which has been greatly enriched by the experience. In short, the move to Calgary will offer a bright new chapter in the history of the National Energy Board, that history which has been one of achievements in the past in terms of the high standards and service provided to the Canadian public. Let honourable senators be assured, it will be one of even greater achievement in the future.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will say, at the start, that Bill C-2, to amend the National Energy Board Act for the purpose of moving the headquarters of the board to Calgary, Alberta, is a move which is supported by our party and our leader as reflected in the debates in the House of Commons. As an Albertan, I certainly welcome this move and say, particularly on behalf of my colleagues in this house from Alberta, that it is long overdue.

The National Energy Board was formed in 1959 at a time when the oil and gas industry was being organized as a national economic instrument for Canada's resource development. The creation of the board was really a natural progression of regulatory developments which stretch back to the beginning of this century. There have been arguments from the beginning that the National Energy Board should operate out of the west, specifically the province of Alberta, which is the heartland of the oil and gas industry.

The board has proven to be an impartial and objective tribunal over the last 32 years of its existence. During that time its mandate has steadily broadened and deepened because of the tremendous expansion of the energy sector. Indeed, it is estimated that over 80 per cent of the National Energy Board's activities now relate to the oil and gas industry. There is a great depth of expertise resident in the province of Alberta and the city of Calgary which will be of tremendous use to the board in its activities.

It is also estimated that 90 per cent of the National Energy Board's—

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. The new rules state specifically that no senator is to cross between the Table and the Chair during a sitting. Senator Doody twice crossed before the Table and the Chair.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Senator Corbin is absolutely correct. It is a rule in the old book, and it is certainly a matter of courtesy. I apologize for any discourtesy to the Senate, the Speaker and to my colleagues.

Senator Stewart: No, it is in the new rules.

Senator Doody: The apology extends to both the old book and the new book.

Senator Corbin: Shame.

[Senator Carney]

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, as I was saying, at the moment it is estimated that 90 per cent of the National Energy Board's operating costs, about $25 million, are funded by the oil and gas industry in western Canada. People seem to think that because of oil and gas, the streets of Alberta, and Calgary in particular, are paved in gold. That is not the case. This industry has endured, and continues to endure, great hardships, as have the cities of Calgary and Edmonton which are so intimately tied to the industry.

There is no question of the symbolic value of this move, as my colleague Senator Carney has indicated. The symbolic value of the move for western Canada, western Canadians and Albertans in particular, is strong in terms of their access to federal institutions and their ability to use their expertise as an input into those institutions of which there are precious few in our part of the country.

In practical terms, it also makes a great deal of sense for the board to be located near the key commodities which it regulates. It also makes economic sense to all those who, in the past, have had to bear the cost of coming to Ottawa out of necessity to appear before the board in its regulatory dealings.

The move to the west will not deter the board from properly executing its role as an impartial national institution. I truly believe that. It will continue to conduct its hearings on such issues as routes for pipelines and electrical transmission routes in the centres in this country, which are close both to the resources and to the public interest which is most intimately involved.

The major negative aspect of the move, which was reflected very pointedly in the hearings that were held before the House of Commons committee, was the manner in which it was announced and its impact on the lives of current employees. Although the move and the suggestion of such a move had been rumoured for some time— indeed, probably for decades—the government dropped its announcement without prior warning to its employees during the budget speech on February 26. Those employees learned about the move from television. It just popped out of the mouth of the then Minister of Finance, Michael Wilson. It was not even contained in the text of the budget speech. Even the chairman of the National Energy Board did not know in advance, and he pointed that out in his testimony to the House of Commons proceedings. He also spoke of the traumatic effect this had had on the people involved in the National Energy Board and their families for a period of a couple of months because they did not have advance time in which not only to prepare themselves but even to get used to the idea of such a move. That is incredibly hurtful to those public servants who have been working so effectively and loyally for the National Energy Board here in Ottawa.

It is always disruptive for families to adjust and to make the critical decisions which are forced by these types of moves. The shock is amplified considerably when the move is 2,000 miles away in a very different type of culture, geography and life-style than exists here in bilingual Ottawa.

• (1100)

I have read the testimony before the house committee and I note the lengths to which government spokespersons and the Chairman of the National Energy Board have gone to stress the efforts being made to ease this transition, both for those who will move west and also, equally as important, for those who will remain here in Ottawa without their jobs. I know the administration and the citizens of the city of Calgary will go out of their way to welcome the newcomers and help them to establish a new life and a new sense of security in that great city.

There is a strong francophone community in the city of Calgary which has pledged to offer its assistance to the some 30 per cent francophone employees of the National Energy Board, many of whom may chose to make this journey west to work in that city. I am also told that the Catholic School Board of Calgary has indicated that the children of these employees will be readily accepted and welcomed into the French language schools that exist in Calgary. Those are positive steps.

We would like to hear a little more detail about the move. We also want to be assured that those remaining here in Ottawa will be shown the same courtesy and assistance by the government, because their lives are equally disrupted. We want to know that they are being given special assistance in accessing new jobs within the public service and that people who are approaching retirement age are being given proper consideration with respect to how they end their careers in the public service. There is an urgency about this legislation because the National Energy Board Chairman, Mr. Roland Priddle, has indicated that they wish to have the board operating in Calgary by September 3. He hopes that the bulk of employees who choose to travel west will be settled in the community of Calgary towards the end of September. Part of the urgency, of course, is because of the school-age children involved in the move. Therefore, we do not want to hold up or delay this piece of legislation. Perhaps its progress could be facilitated by moving later on to Committee of the Whole to seek answers to some of our questions.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

A BILL RESPECTING THE EXPORTING, IMPORTING, MANUFACTURING, BUYING OR SELLING OF OR DEALING WITH CERTAIN WEAPONS

SECOND READING

Hon. James F. Kelleher moved the second reading of Bill C-6, respecting the exporting, importing, manufacturing, buying or selling of or other dealing with certain weapons.

He said: Honourable senators, you can see that this speech has been written by people from the other side because my written notes start off with "Mr. Speaker." In the past, I have been advised that I am not to refer to the Speaker but to honourable senators.

Senator Frith: Well done, sir.

Senator Kelleher: I remember the former admonition of Senator Frith.

Bill C-6 was introduced by the government after careful consideration. It introduces amendments to the Export and Import Permits Act and the Criminal Code which will permit exports of automatic weapons under strict controls to Canada's allies and close defence partners. The effect of the changes will be to make Canadian controls on exports of automatic firearms among the most stringent in the world. The Export and Import Permits Act is being amended to create a new automatic firearms country control list. Exports of automatic firearms will be permitted only to countries included on the list. The list will be made public and all applications to export automatic firearms to countries not on the list will be denied.

Bill C-6 stipulates that the only countries with which Canada has formal bilateral defence research, development and production agreements can be included on the new automatic firearms country control list. Canada currently has defence production arrangements with ten countries of which Sweden is the only one that is not a member of NATO. The NATO allies are the United States, Italy, Norway, Belgium, Denmark, Great Britain, The Netherlands, France and Germany. An arrangement with Spain is under negotiation.

Proposals to include other countries on the list will be subject to an intense case-by-case basis review to confirm (a) that the requirements for automatic firearms is legitimate, (b), that defence cooperation with Canada will enhance regional cooperation and security, and (c), that the country being considered for defence cooperation does not threaten regional or world security and does not maintain an excessive level of armaments.

A country's inclusion on the new control list does not in itself constitute authority to export automatic firearms to that country. It merely establishes the necessary grounds for initiating the standard case-by-case review to be applied to all exports of military goods from Canada. This case-by-case review will, in effect, be a second stage of controls on exports of automatic weapons. It includes the normal intense interdepartmental review in accordance with guidelines adopted by the government in 1986. That is, exports of military goods will be closely controlled to: (a), countries that pose a threat to Canada or its allies, (b) countries involved in or under imminent threat of hostilities and (c), countries under United Nations Security Council sanctions or (d), countries whose governments have a persistent record of serious violations of human rights of their citizens, unless it can be demonstrated that there is no reasonable risk that the goods might be used against the civilian population.

Standard licensing requirements will also have to be met. These include providing an end-use statement and supporting documentation, most notably an international import certificate from the country of final destination. In addition, exports of automatic firearms will be reported in the annual report on exports of military goods from Canada. All production facilities in Canada for automatic firearms will have to be approved by provincial authorities. They also have to meet existing rigorous DND and DSS security standards, and are subject to regular rigorous inspections.

Honourable senators, penalties for offences of the Export and Import Permits Act are increased as follows: (a), for summary convictions, fines are increased from $5,000 to $25,000 and imprisonment for up to 12 months, or both; and (b), for indictment, fines are increased from $25,000 to an amount that is in the discretion of the court—which, in practice, means that there is no ceiling; and imprisonment for up to 10 years, instead of 5, or both. These increased penalties are intended to ensure that an adequate deterrence is provided for taking into account the seriousness of the offences and the value of goods that might be involved. These penalties will apply to all offences under the act, not just those related to automatic firearms.

Honourable senators, Bill C-6 also makes complementary amendments to the Criminal Code to permit import and possession of automatic firearms for "an industrial purpose", and in accordance with the Export and Import Permits Act. These changes are necessary because of an anomalous situation created by the 1977 amendments to the Criminal Code. Those amendments made it a criminal offence for anyone other than the Canadian Armed Forces or Canadian police forces to import or possess automatic firearms. As a result, Canadian industry cannot manufacture, service or repair automatic firearms for our NATO allies or defence partners. Adoption of Bill C-6 will mean that it will no longer be a criminal offence for Canadian firms to import or possess automatic firearms for the purposes of repairing or manufacturing automatic weapons for our NATO allies and close defence partners.

This aspect of Bill C-6 must not be overlooked. As noted by the 1987 Task Force on Defence Industrial Preparedness, vigilance and constant effort is needed if Canadian industry is to contribute effectively to joint allied efforts to cooperate in key defence product areas, including automatic firearms and light armoured vehicles. The requirements of the Canadian Forces are simply too limited for Canadian defence industry to remain viable. Exports under strict controls to our NATO allies and close defence partners are therefore essential to Canada's defence industrial preparedness. In this regard, Bill C-6 will benefit two Canadian defence firms: Diemaco of Kitchener; and General Motors Diesel Division of London.

[Senator Kelleher.]

Diemaco was established by DND in 1976 as the centre of excellence for small arms to ensure that Canada would not be totally dependent on foreign suppliers in times of emergency. Its facility is unique in Canada and is important to DND's long term operational readiness. The awarding of a contract in 1984 to produce the new family of weapons for the Canadian Armed Forces created 300 direct jobs at Diemaco's plant in Kitchener, 200 direct jobs at its 75 Canadian sub-contractors who manufacture components, plus an equal number of indirect jobs. This contract is nearing completion and Diemaco must now be able to secure export contracts. The requirements of the Canadian Armed Forces alone cannot sustain Diemaco over the long term.

Of particular concern is the possibility of Canada's losing Diemaco's $40-million computer-based manufacturing capability, which includes product design, engineering, metal finishing, plastic molding, precision casting, forging and machining, and extrusion techniques. At a time when Canada must upgrade the competitiveness of its industry, it would be extremely unfortunate and regrettable to lose Diemaco's related worker skills and technical expertise.

Diemaco, supported by its numerous sub-contractors, is currently competing for a contract to supply the Dutch armed forces with automatic rifles. The Dutch government has asked for assurances that Diemaco would be able to export the weapons if it won the contract. Owing to the current provisions of the Criminal Code, it may be illegal for Diemaco to manufacture automatic firearms for the Dutch armed forces. Failure to adopt the proposed changes to permit the proposed exports to the Netherlands will jeopardize Diemaco's future, and could mean that the entire small-arms manufacturing capability of the Canadian defence industrial base will be gone before long, possibly by as early as June, 1992.

The only solution is for Diemaco to win selected legitimate foreign contracts, and for the government to permit the company to export its modern, high quality products to our allies and defence partners through the passage of this amendment. Success in winning the Dutch contract will mean an additional 7,680 person years of direct Canadian employment, with the potential for almost doubling over the life of the project. Success will also ensure the ability to continue the development work necessary for new small arms for the Canadian Armed Forces into the next century.

Since receiving its first contract from DND in 1977, General Motors Diesel Division has become a world-class producer. To produce the LAVs, light armoured vehicles, General Motor Diesel Division employs 600 skilled workers at its plant in London, Ontario. In addition, General Motors draws on suppliers and sub-contractors from across Canada, including companies and workers in Richmond and Vancouver, B.C.; Edmonton; Winnipeg; Quebec City; St. John, Centertown and Moncton in New Brunswick; Mulgrave and Bridgewater in Nova Scotia; and St. John's, Newfoundland.

Last year General Motors it won a contract to export light armoured vehicles to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. This capped a marketing campaign that spanned more than a decade. It was first approved by the Liberal government in 1981 and has since been supported by successive Canadian governments. However, the anomalous situation under the Criminal Code may limit GM's ability to those few but important foreign markets to which Canadian foreign policy would permit access.

The government proposes to resolve this anomaly by adopting the amendments proposed under Bill C-6; negotiating a bilateral defence research, development and production agreement with Saudi Arabia; and including Saudi Arabia on the automatic firearms country control list.

Honourable senators, it is our intention to control more effectively, not to prohibit, the sales of military equipment. Canada will be extremely careful in deciding to which countries it should sell firearms. We will also make known which military goods are exported and to which countries. The proposed amendments to the Export and Import Permits Act and the Criminal Code will create the framework for Canadian defence firms that will enable them to compete more effectively under closely controlled conditions. Canada needs a strong defence industrial base to allow per-unit costs and to ensure Canadian sources in times of emergency. With these amendments, Canadian firms will be better able to meet Canada's defence requirements and those of our NATO allies and defence partners.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

● (1120)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Kelleher for his remarks and for his explanation. I appreciate the fact that he is presenting the case for this bill in as convincing a manner as possible, but the case is not a very wholesome one. Those of us who have been concerned about the international arms trade must be concerned about the implications of this bill. It is appropriate for Senator Kelleher to register the economic benefits that will accrue to two companies, General Motors and Diemaco, which, in the absence of this bill, would not be able to make these sales.

The amendment to the Criminal Code in this bill makes possible arms sales which are presently prohibited under the Criminal Code of Canada. It is stated that that prohibition is an anomaly and that the purpose of the bill is to remove that anomaly. Well, no matter how you slice it or how you describe it, the fact of the matter is that this bill facilitates the sale of weapons, to the Netherlands and to Saudi Arabia, which are presently prohibited under the law. That is the purpose of the bill.

There is, tacked on to the bill, another provision which has the effect of amending or changing the Export and Import Permits Act to list a number of countries to which sales can be made, with the ostensible purpose of constraining the minister from, as it were, authorizing sales which he might do in the absence of this constraint. This is basically window dressing because, in any event, the constraint or the list of countries applies only to conventional or automatic weapons, and the minister is free, as he has been up to the present time, to sell other weapons to a country which is not on that list.

I think we should all be concerned about this bill and the implications that it raises. The bitter experience of the Persian Gulf War and the arms buildup in Iraq, which made such a material contribution to it, are still very much on our minds. Even more troublesome is the fact that 1991 promises to be a record year for the sale of arms to the Middle East. That is before the physical damage that has been wrought by the war has been repaired; that is while hundreds of thousands of people have been uprooted from their homes and are searching for a habitation; that is while peace and security have been absent from the area. Despite all of this, the world is now intending ship into the Middle East a record supply of arms this year.

It stands to reason that the international traffic in arms must be curbed. The Cold War and the consequent arms race are over. The debt burden of developing countries makes it insane for them to be investing in more arms. It is incredible that, with the scarcity of international financial resources for pressing social and environmental problems throughout the world, developing countries are devoting such a large portion of their resources to the arms trade. It certainly appears to me that the present stepped-up arms trade is a negation of the so-called "peace dividend" which we were all expected to reap after the end of 40 years of Cold War tension.

In ordinary circumstances, Bill C-6 would provide the occasion for the Senate and the House of Commons to look closely at these broad questions and to situate a Canadian policy within that overall context, but certainly we will not have that opportunity on this occasion. The House of Commons did not have the opportunity because it was necessary to pass this bill quickly, for the reasons which Senator Kelleher has stated, namely to facilitate at least two up-coming arms sales abroad. Instead, the bill is being, shall I say, pushed through both Houses of Parliament. Why? The reasons we are given are threefold. First, we are told it is to remove what the minister in the House of Commons called an anomalous situation resulting from certain 1977 amendments to the Criminal Code. These amendments, as I pointed out, if applied in this case, would prohibit these arms sales, and we are removing these prohibitions. That is the guts of the bill, and the rest is window dressing, as I said.

Secondly, of course, the removal of the anomaly is necessary now; not next month or next year, but now, because Diemaco and General Motors Diesel Division could not otherwise export automatic weapons to the Netherlands and Saudi Arabia without violating the Criminal Code. That is the situation. The third reason is because the Canadian arms export policy is already one of the most stringent in the world.

I do not intend to take issue with that factual description: namely, that we do have a stringent arms export policy, that we are removing the anomaly, and that the purpose of removing the anomaly is to make possible arms sales which are presently prohibited by the Criminal Code. I do not take issue with those factual descriptions, but I do express concern at the timing and the unseemliness of this particular action and the fact that the government is taking a position at this time which seems to ignore, or to turn to one side, the agony through which the world has recently gone.

We took note earlier this year of the Prime Minister's proposal for a world summit on arms control. In February 1991 he made a speech in Toronto that might have been regarded as a public relations exercise, but which was happily followed up by a declaration recently in Bonn last week to the effect that Canada and Germany would raise jointly the arms trade issue at the coming London summit of the G-7. So while we are intending to raise the arms trade issue in London, at the same time we are amending a bill rapidly in order to make arms sales possible. No wonder the world finds political leaders hard to follow.

• (1130)

Certainly Bill C-6 does not line up in support of the Prime Minister. It appears to do the opposite, because Canada's priority in this bill is placed on the side of arms exports; and if GM carries out the Saudi contract—as it is struggling hard to do, and as undoubtedly its employees wish it to do because they want to maintain their jobs—Canada will join other arms exporters in an indecent haste to profit from a revitalized arms business in the Middle East.

The Canadian government, in doing this, is not giving much support to the Prime Minister. Further, the government's position is undermined by its own confusion or incoherence, or the contradictory messages it is delivering. The Prime Minister, in his Toronto speech, spoke of a global summit "on the instruments of war and weapons of mass destruction." Joe Clark gave a more specific definition of "the instruments of war" in a speech delivered in Quebec City on the same day. He spoke of an "integrating framework for systems ensuring the non-proliferation and control of weapons, including conventional weapons." Certainly, semi-automatic weapons are conventional.

I had understood that the Prime Minister's initiative would include conventional weapons, and that view was sustained by Mr. Clark's more specific statement as to "including conventional weapons".

I am satisfied that Senator Kelleher was honestly stating the case when he said that the amendment is to provide an opportunity to two Canadian bidders, but it will appear to those concerned with future curbs on the arms trade as an opportunistic and untimely move.

There are a number of questions raised by Bill C-6 which remain unanswered. The anomaly has existed since 1977, I understand. Why has it not been corrected in all those years? If the purpose of the amendment is to correct the anomaly, why is the government feeling obliged to bring down amendments to the Export and Import Permits Act at the same time? I understand that this particular amendment to the Export and Import Permits Act was put in the bill at the instruction of the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, Joe Clark. His purpose was to put into legislation some constraints on the minister's discretionary authority for the issuance of export and import permits for automatic weapons. Is that not creating another anomaly?

Under Bill C-6, the minister's discretionary authority would be constrained for automatic weapons, but not for much more lethal weapons. If a revision of this act is required, why not do it after careful consideration of all its provisions in the context of a thoughtful review rather than as the by-product of two possible commercial transactions? If the government is serious, as it says it is, and if the policy is as tight as it is alleged to be, why were amendments turned down which were proposed in the other place which would have had the effect of writing into the legislation some of the guiding criteria governing the export of arms policy? Why were amendments turned down which would have provided more opportunity in Parliament to consider and debate the implementation of this policy?

Honourable senators, quite apart from my view that Bill C-6 could be improved upon, I think it is most appropriate to question the government on the timeliness of authorizing the export of military equipment to Saudi Arabia. I understand that the United States will sell arms to Saudi Arabia. Is that a good reason for us to follow suit? Is it the view of the government that the peace process has made so much progress in the Middle East that Saudi Arabia can no longer be regarded as being in a zone of tension or potential conflict?

This is a very serious question. We have also been told that General Motors must be in a position to arm the turrets of the relevant light-armoured vehicles by July and to export them by September. We have to get the bill through if that is the case. There is no defence research and cooperation agreement between Canada and Saudi Arabia—at least that I am aware of. If that is correct, one will have to be negotiated before September at the latest—a rather tight schedule. What assurance do we have that the deadline can be met and, even more importantly, what bargaining position do we have in the negotiations when we are so eager to authorize and facilitate these sales? These are important matters which are of great concern to all of us. I think they deserve a very hard look which we cannot provide in these circumstances.

Those in the House of Commons must have guilty consciences as a result of passing this bill. They know that they have not given it proper attention and they are salving their consciences by saying that a committee of the house will examine the matter later in the fall. That is a pretty clear indication that there is considerable discomfort on the part of members of the House of Commons in supporting this bill.

Perhaps the Senate should do likewise. Maybe it too will salve its guilty conscience by having one of its committees take a serious look at the whole question of arms control. What is the destiny of Canada in the world if we now believe, following the events in the Persian Gulf and the horrendous human misery caused by our arms, that it is our mission to join in renewed arms sales to the Middle East?

• (1140)

I am not taking a holier-than-thou attitude, I assure you, because when I was in the government I did issue licences for the sale of arms, under the stringent controls that we had in place and now have in place. But it seems to me that in these circumstances we ought to give some signal to the world that we are not ready and we are not eager to join in the sale of arms, particularly to the Middle East, and to join in the sale of arms to Saudi Arabia, which is in the very centre of this area of tension. We cannot support this bill. We will not support it because of the concerns which I have stated in my short remarks.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to add a word about how much I support what Senator MacEachen has said and why I cannot support this bill. The reasons expressed by Senator MacEachen are quite adequate reasons, but I want to piggyback a voice, perhaps in the wilderness, citing this as another example of the continued use of euphemistic terms to describe the arms trade and the defence industry.

I believe that the arms trade is a mean, inhuman business. I think most people engaged in it realize that it is and, therefore, ease their consciences by using euphemistic expressions to describe it. The purpose of the arms trade is to produce arms, and arms are tools to kill and wound people. They do not exist to demolish buildings and replace buildings. They sometimes have the effect of demolishing buildings, but they are there to kill people. However, no one seems to say so any more. They use euphemistic words like anti-personnel devices. Well, the anti-personnel device exists, like all weapons, to kill people or to threaten them.

Senator Doody: Collateral damage.

Senator Frith: Yes, collateral damage is another beautiful euphemism. The word "defence industry" means the manufacture and sale of arms to kill people. When one talks about the defence industry one does not mean building an industry to defend ourselves against some attack that will happen tomorrow or at any time that we can articulate. The word "defence" does not mean defence any more; it is simply another euphemism, another attempt to create some sort of mask for the arms trade and for the manufacture of tools to kill people.

I support entirely the analysis and all of the points made by Senator MacEachen, but I just want to add that in my view it would be useful for us to face the fact that when we use these euphemistic terms, we are not talking about anti-personnel devices and "defence", but about devices to kill and wound people and create all the consequences described by Senator MacEachen which flow from that.

I believe that Canada's legislation in this area should not be making exemptions to a structure that puts us in the forefront of nations with strict policies against the arms trade. It should be legislation toward conversion to peaceful uses of these industries that, if we are honest, are designed and committed to the production and proliferation of weapons destined for the killing or intimidation of other human beings.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kelleher, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I intend to move that the Senate go into Committee of the Whole to consider the matters referred to it today, namely, the money laundering bill and the National Energy Board bill.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): When the work of the Committee of the Whole is completed, government orders will have been completed. What is the intention then for today? I know we have business for tomorrow.

Senator Doody: It is the intention, after the business of the Senate is concluded today, to adjourn until nine o'clock tomorrow morning.

Honourable senators, I should like to refer back to the bill which was just under discussion. I am told that the Foreign Affairs Committee has made arrangements to hear the Minister at eight o'clock this evening.

PROCEEDS OF CRIME (MONEY LAUNDERING) BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the Senate resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Bill C-9, to facilitate combatting the laundering of proceeds of crime.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is agreed, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on Bill C-9, Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Senator Doody: I would ask that the Honourable Minister Loiselle be invited to participate in the deliberations of the Committee of the Whole. The minister has two officials with him and I would ask leave to admit them as well.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, while the minister is being brought in with his aides, I wish to thank you for giving me the opportunity to chair the Committee of the Whole. Since this is the first time that we are sitting under the new rules, may I bring to your attention rule 65 (1) (a) and (b):

(1) The Rules of the Senate shall apply to Committee of the Whole with the following exceptions:

(a) a Senator may speak any number of times;.

(b) during debate in Committee of the Whole no senator shall speak for more than ten minutes at any one time;

And there are other rules on pages 64 and 65. It is my intention to recognize those who will raise their hands and I will recognize take them as I see their hands up.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Gilles Loiselle, President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance); Mr. Yvon Carrière, Counsel, Text Counsel Division, Department of Finance; and Mr. James F. McCollum, Chief Industry Analyst Senior Sector Policy Branch, Department of Finance, were escorted to seats in the Senate chamber.

• (1150)

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I am pleased to introduce the Minister, Mr. Loiselle, who will be pleased to answer any questions that honourable senators might have. I understand that he does not have an opening statement but is available for questioning.

I should also like to introduce Mr. James McCollum, Chief Industry Analyst, Senior Sector Policy Branch of the Department of Finance; and Mr. Yvon Carrière, Counsel, Text Counsel Division of the Department of Finance.

Senator Frith: What are we on?

Senator Doody: Bill C-9, the Money Laundering Bill.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-9, an act to facilitate combatting the laundering of proceeds of crime.

Shall the title be postponed?

Senator Frith: I think we will have some questions first, before we proceed to a clause-by-clause study.

Senator Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister some questions?

The Chairman: Yes, you may.

Senator Doody: We will have some questions, Mr. Chairman, before we proceed to the clause-by-clause study.

The Chairman: Does the minister have any opening statement?

Senator Doody: No.

Senator Stanbury: Mr. Minister, all of us appreciate the fact that this bill has finally come to us. We have read clause 2 of the bill, which sets out the object and application of the proposed act. It would be only fair for us to point out that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs made a strong recommendation, when it was dealing with the Criminal Code amendments which came considerably earlier, that this kind of legislation should have been introduced at that time; so that it does not sit well with us to criticize this act very much, because it is doing what we said should be done some time ago.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

There are several things that I should like to ask about the wording of the bill and the application of it as I understand it.

Proposed section 3 substantially broadens the definition of financial institutions. The only problem I see with it is that it opens the door substantially to the government to develop its own definition of to whom it is intending to apply the proposed act. For example, clause 3(h) will let businesses or professions be added by regulation. We have no regulations, so they will not know whether or not they are covered. There is no provision for notice to them other than the publication in the Canada Gazette. It concerns me that there may well be businesses or professions added to the regulations without their realizing they have been added, and therefore will not begin making their records until some issue arises. Can you give us any satisfaction in terms of this problem?

Mr. Loiselle: Thank you, senator. You said that you should have come forward some time ago with regard to this particular bill. I should like to inform you that we have been consulting extensively with financial institutions, the private sector and the provinces in order to ensure that what we were doing was acceptable, efficient and covered the areas that we wanted to cover.

Referring to the definition of the institutions or people to be eventually targeted by this legislation, at the present time it is clear that we are dealing with the banks, the credit unions, Caisse Populaires, life insurance companies, trust and loan companies, securities firms and foreign exchange houses. Inasmuch as money laundering is an ongoing crime that evolves, we want to retain the capacity to act should the RCMP or other enforcement authorities indicate to us that there is a need to extend it.

At the present time we indicate in the bill that it would cover the professionals who handle large sums of money. We have been in touch with and have consulted and discussed—and I personally have consulted with representatives of the legal profession, who are now satisfied that what we are doing is acceptable. They were worried that the relationship between solicitor and client would be affected by this bill, but it is not; also, the intent had to be there. We covered that. Presently we are there. We want to retain capacity to extend to other professions or other groups should indications arise that they have become used more and more for money laundering purposes.

Senator Stanbury: I can understand your need to have flexibility in the matter, but the problem for me is that you are not obliged to let people know in advance that they are involved. Yet clause 4 goes on to say that they have to keep certain records. How will they know whether they are supposed to keep certain records if you are able to add their professions at a particular time when an issue arises, when they have not realized that they were to be added before that?

Mr. Loiselle: You raise a valid point. In the regulations you will have a prepublication. We will do with the new groups what we have done with the institutions. We started with the institutions because they had already been identified as vehicles for the money laundering; but there would be consultation and then prepublication. We would be sure that these groups are fully aware of their legal responsibility. To us, that is important.

Senator Stanbury: That is an important aspect of it. We will have to depend upon the Joint Committee on the Scrutiny of Regulations to draw to our attention anything that seems to be outlandish.

Senator Frith: May I ask a supplementary question?

Senator Stanbury: Yes.

Mr. Loiselle: Before you do, may I indicate immediately that we do share this concern? It is our intention to address this problem with great care because we realize that we cannot immediately move to a new target group and try to catch them off guard. We will have to give them the time to adjust and make information available.

• (1200)

Senator Frith: However, the effectiveness of the regulation and the imposition of responsibility that flows from it will not be dependent or conditional upon notice having been given and received?

Mr. Loiselle: That is right.

Senator Frith: The imposition of the responsibility to which Senator Stanbury and the minister have been referring will take place even in the absence of such notice, unlike, for example, in any official imposition of responsibility by a court where one has to give notice to the person affected. And as for the imposition of an injunction, one has to prove that the person knew its terms and application, which is not—

Mr. Loiselle: A precondition.

Senator Frith: The imposition of the obligation is not conditional upon notice having been given and received. First, is that correct, Mr. Minister? Second, if it is correct, is that the area in which you will be exploring improvement?

Mr. Loiselle: We will use the ordinary or usual means of doing that, apart from the consultation process. These things move very quickly. Whenever we talk about lawyers, for example, representatives of the profession—and very rightly so—immediately ask to discuss matters with us. They have their own journals, so that the information gets out to their members. I repeat that a notice will be published in the Canada Gazette for at least 90 days before the regulation takes effect. That, having been preceded by discussion, consultation and information, should allow us to feel confident that these people will be—

Senator Frith: If anything like that falls between the cracks, the person will be covered and responsible even though he may not have known; is that right?

Mr. Loiselle: Indeed. Once the publication—

Senator Frith: In other words, for the obligation to be imposed, you do not have to prove that notice was given, or that notice was taken?

Mr. Loiselle: The 90-day prepublication will be a legal obligation.

Senator Frith: I understand. You will not go any further than that?

Senator Stanbury: I realize this is not connected, but I thought that perhaps I should draw it to the attention of the minister. Under, Offences and Punishment, clause 6, it states, "Everyone who knowingly contravenes . . .". I assume that that does not refer to knowing that they have such a responsibility, but a question of knowing they were in breach of the act.

Senator Loiselle: You are right, senator.

Senator Stanbury: I keep coming back to the regulations since our main concern is that there are so many open doors and that careful monitoring will be required. For instance, clause 4, which is the essence of the bill, states:

> Everyone to whom this Act applies shall keep and retain records relating to financial activities in accordance with the regulations made under subsection 5(1).

Yet we do not know what those records, the extent or nature of them, will be.

Mr. Loiselle: The regulations will determine what the record-keeping obligations are. They will be established in a similar fashion, I suppose, to those that have already been established in financial institutions, something which was done at their request. I do not see any particular difficulty there. We have to reconcile the full need of the law enforcement agency, in particular the RCMP and other police forces, to have the information they need and, at the same time, the desire not to impose on any institution, group or professional the need to keep useless information that can become very costly. That has not proven to be a difficulty. I would say that most professions keep this information in any case. What is important is the way in which they organize it so that it can be accessed in a more useful and practical way. Again, I do not think that should be too much of a problem. It will be discussed with the groups which will become target groups, and the regulations would provide for that. The draft regulations are presently and publicly available.

Senator Stanbury: I have not had an opportunity to look at the regulations that were developed under Bill C-89, which died at the end of the last session of Parliament. Will the regulations be roughly the same in that particular area?

Mr. Loiselle: I am told that they will be pretty well the same.

Senator Stanbury: Mr. Minister, under clauses 5(1)(a) and 5(1)(d)—and I am thinking now about the measures that are to be used to identify customers or clients who should not be dealt with in these circumstances—I find something rather troublesome. Can you give us any indication as to how that will be determined? How are people to identify the customers and clients with whom they should not be dealing ?

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, I would ask Mr. McCollum to respond, if he may.

Mr. James McCollum, Chief Industry Analyst, Senior Sector Policy Branch, Department of Finance: Honourable senators, the current draft regulations call for client identification in keeping with sound business practices. In keeping with what is standard currently in the industry, for example, in the case of a bank, we are basically concerned with the bank knowing its client. The same applies to the other industries involved.

Senator Kinsella: May I ask a supplementary question? Under clause 5(1)(d) and the regulatory power that the act is to provide, banks can be required to take steps to ascertain the identity of these persons. Can you give us some practical examples, sir? Will you use ordinary means to impose upon the banks or co-operatives measures to know with whom they are dealing in order to identify these people; or will there be extraordinary means such as the use of surveillance?

Mr. Loiselle: No, senator, not at all. The banks themselves, and all financial institutions, have in place a policy within their branch networks to know their clients. If someone comes in with a large sum of money, the banker should have a normal curiosity about that money, unless he has been dealing with that person and knows that he is a businessman who comes in every Friday with a certain amount of cash from his company. So the banks get to know their clients, and they accept that. It is a general definition of a normal kind of relationship with clients. No one comes into a bank with $2 million and drops it on a desk without the banker asking, "So, where does this come from?" The banker wants to know who these people are. It is the ordinary responsibility of institutions to know their clients. This is accepted in the industry without too much difficulty.

Senator Neiman: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions. I received on my desk this morning the June edition of the National, the publication of the Canadian Bar Association. In it was an insert called "Ottawa Report", which is prepared by the Legal and Governmental Affairs Committee of the Canadian Bar Association. You will be happy to know, Mr. Minister, that it says, "C-89 is dead. Long live C-9." I have read through this report, and the gist of it is that the Canadian Bar Association is extremely happy with the changes that have been made in C-9 as compared to the contents of C-89. One thing the report mentions is that C-89 established recording requirements for transactions of $10,000 or more. I have looked through C-9 quickly and I do not see any figures cited. I assume that they will be established by the regulations. How will this be made clear to everyone who might be affected by the bill?

Mr. Loiselle: The United States has an approach whereby all institutions have to report to the agency and other people who have to look at these reports. The international community has looked at this approach and found that it does not produce the results that were expected when that provision was implemented. With this rule anyone can come in at $9,999, just push it through and they do not have a problem anymore. We want all transactions to be reported. So it will be defined in the regulation, but there will not be a number under which you do not report. All transactions will have to be recorded. So if there is a need for the authority, through the proper process of access—a judge who will give access to the information—it will be easier to find a trace, instead of having to go through a room full of documents from all over the place that you do not know what to do with, and that you may work on for a long time without finding a lead. The regulations will define the transaction but there will be no $10,000 limit.

Senator Neiman: Again, this "Ottawa Report" states on behalf of the Canadian Bar Association that the association is quite satisfied with whatever the definition will be as regards the responsibility of lawyers to report just those matters not defined as lawful client transactions. I wonder how that protection will extend to the other groups that you may define under those sections of the act to which Senator Stanbury and Senator Kinsella referred.

Mr. Loiselle: To be precise, it is not reporting. Institutions or lawyers have to keep records of transactions in their offices. In the case of lawyers, because they do not deal as frequently with this kind of thing, anything above $10,000 has to be recorded. So if a transaction by a certain person becomes suspicious, after accessing the information through the legal process, there will be a trace. So they have to keep a record. It will be the same for other groups, such as car dealers, if we find that they have become targets for money launderers.

Senator Neiman: I have one short question. We were given this morning a copy of a motion introduced by Mr. Langdon in the other place amending clause 5 of the bill. I do not understand it. There is simply written on the bottom "Agreed June 19, 1991" and a signature that I cannot identify. Is this an amendment to the act or is it simply a motion that did not carry?

Mr. Loiselle: It is an amendment that was accepted. Basically, it changes the numbers, but not to a point that would cause any particular problem.

Senator Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I have one further question. There has been some concern expressed in connection with the act about the definition of the word "person". Clause 7 says:

> Where a corporation commits an offence under section 6, any officer, director or agent of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to . . . is a party to and guilty of the offense . . .

What about other businesses? For instance, is a junior lawyer, what they now call "an associate", responsible and liable to be convicted of this offence? Generally speaking, what about people in relatively minor roles in other professions or businesses?

Mr. Loiselle: I am told that the law will apply only if they are incorporated.

Senator Stanbury: So, in terms of unincorporated businesses, let us say limited partnerships, associations or professional firms, each person is individually responsible; is that true?

Mr. Loiselle: Yes.

Senator Stanbury: Regardless of their position in the firm or business?

Mr. Loiselle: Indeed.

Senator Stanbury: I thought it would be useful to have that clarification on record.

Mr. Chairman, those are my questions.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to thank you for having received me today. It is always a pleasure to come to this house.

The Chairman: Thank you for coming.

Honourable senators, shall the title be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Mr. Chairman, before the Committee of the Whole reports the bill, I would suggest that the Committee of the Whole remain in session and that we now proceed to Bill C-2. Then both bills can be reported at the same time.

Therefore, with leave of the Senate, I would ask that Mr. Epp and his officials be invited to join us in Committee of the Whole.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole will now consider Bill C-2, to amend the National Energy Board Act.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I would welcome the Honourable Mr. Jake Epp to our committee. He has agreed to answer questions on Bill C-2. He has with him two officials and I would ask him to introduce them. I believe he has a short opening statement.

Hon. Jake Epp, Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources: Honourable senators, although I have a prepared statement, I will not read it; rather, I will give you the general background to Bill C-2.

As all of you are aware, the National Energy Board was created in 1959. Its purpose was to regulate not only the oil and gas industry but also the export of energy both interprovincially and internationally. The National Energy Board has gone through a number of changes over the last several years, not the least of which is that it received environmental responsibilities in the last mandate of this government.

The location of the National Energy Board has been a matter of debate in the country from many years. About 80 per cent of the National Energy Board's activities are now related to the oil and gas sector and, while that may vary slightly from year to year, depending on the types of applications before the NEB relating to the mix between oil and gas particularly, and electricity and electricity exports, that is about the average percentage.

There have been resolutions before the houses for the moving of the National Energy Board dating back to the early 1970s. In fact, if we go back to the inception of the board, there was debate even then as to what should be the location of the board.

With the changes in administration and in the purpose of the NEB, intervenors and applicants were to pay, on a cost-return basis, the costs of the board, and with 80 per cent of the board's work being in the oil and gas field, it became important to reduce costs to those making application before the board.

Bill C-2 changes the designation of the board and its membership from Ottawa, or the National Capital Region, to Calgary—or, if the Order in Council is so approved, a person could live somewhere else. In essence, the board's location would be Calgary.

We have received changes from the Treasury Board with approval for relocation expenses, and that is generally the same now for all members of staff, whether management or support staff. If almost the full complement of people moved, that cost would be about $26 million and that would be returned to the government through the allocation of costs to intervenors up to approximately 85 per cent.

In essence, that is the nub of the bill. Mr. Chairman, if honourable senators have questions, we would be glad to try to answer them.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Senator Stewart: When the minister referred just now to the recovery by the government of about 85 per cent of the cost of relocating members and employees of the board away from Ottawa, he also said something about this 85 per cent being borne by intervenors. Would he amplify his explanation of that point?

Mr. Epp: If an application is made before the board by, let us say, a pipeline company, the cost of that application is now to be borne by those who make the application. Obviously, now the relocation costs will be factored into the cost of running the board, and those costs will be borne by those who make application before the board.

Senator Stewart: Is an applicant now to be assessed a new element of cost—a cost that is not assessed under the present regime?

Mr. Epp: Up to now they were assessed annual operating costs, and this will be an additional cost.

Senator Frith: Mr. Minister, the perspective of my question is related to the adjustments to the lives of employees and, therefore, I will be asking you for specifics about the application of what I believe is called the "Workforce Adjustment Policy." In each instance I will ask you whether special arrangements have been made for a particular group under the Workforce Adjustment Policy.

The first group I will refer to is those who might be highly specialized in their skills and who, for some reason, elect not to go to Calgary and who find themselves in a difficult spot because, in effect, the field where their specialty lies has been transferred many miles west. Is there anything in the Workforce Adjustment Policy to meet their needs?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that is yes. Let me preface my remarks, if I might, by one comment: I believe very strongly that it is important that regulatory agencies, even though there are dislocation issues relating to employees, should be located near the place where the vast majority of the activity is located. The same thing applies whether we are discussing the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Grain Commission in Winnipeg. It is legitimate that they are in Winnipeg at the corner of Portage and Main, and it is going to be legitimate for the NEB to be in Calgary.

• (1230)

There is a workforce adjustment plan under which those who choose not to go will be given job preference through the Public Service, not necessarily only in Ottawa but in the Public Service. A number have already received offers. We should keep in mind—and I think we all appreciate this—that there are possibly not as many job openings in the Public Service today because of restraint programs as there have been at other times. However, EMR particularly has received a mandate to find locations for these people wherever possible, and we are doing that. That does not answer the various adjustment programs beyond the workforce adjustment programs which we received from the Treasury Board when we made special application.

Senator Frith: Then I want to ask you about special measures, which I take it would be part of this policy, such as housing. I may be wrong, and you can tell me if I am, but I assume housing is one.

Mr. Epp: Yes, Mr. Chairman. To put it into quick, succinct terms, we received the workforce adjustment program plus the following from the Treasury Board: First, spousal assistance, to help the spouses of NEB employees find employment in Calgary.

Senator Frith: That was to be my next question, so please continue.

Mr. Epp: In fact, I met with the mayor and the council and other people in Calgary. We created a list not only of spouses but of jobs, careers and specialties that they had, which I conveyed to the people of Calgary, and which they received very openly. They recognized that these were people with great skills and that there would be assets coming to Calgary beyond the National Energy Board. I think that Calgary hospitality has been second to none.

Second was the issue of the French language components.

Senator Frith: That was to be my next question.

Mr. Epp: There could obviously be difficulties in moving from the National Capital Region to Calgary. Keep in mind that we brought in a group from the mayor's office, including his press secretary, who is fully bilingual. We brought them here to Ottawa and they showed us, for example, French language schools in Calgary, French theatre, French social activities and the vibrancy of the French-speaking community within Calgary. They also showed French language immersion figures which are rather astounding when you consider Calgary versus some other cities. I am not saying that we addressed everyone's concerns, but I think we gave to them as good a language package, if I can characterize it that way, as we were able. Additionally, we are providing language training for unilingual French spouses, which will take place at a private language school in the National Capital Region prior to the relocation, and we will continue that work in Calgary.

Third, we provided a return trip option to employees between their second and third years in Calgary. Those choosing the option will have the right to be declared surplus, which brings us back to our earlier discussion about the Public Service.

Fourth, we provided a guaranteed home-sale plan, under which the fair-market value of homes will be established by professional, independent appraisers. There was a factor of about $850 that we built into that as well.

Where I have received criticism, where it is "not quite the same" for everyone—just, perhaps, to answer the question before it is asked—was in an area of what is known as incidental expenses. Under Treasury Board regulations, incidental expenses for the management categories are at approximately 7 per cent. It relates to salary. Others are at 6 per cent. I am sorry to get into such great detail but that is the one area where the package is not fully the same for all; but I think I can say, without any equivocation, that this is probably the fairest deal that we have seen in terms of relocation and its universal application, from those who are in the "X" category to those who are in the support category.

Senator Frith: Mr. Minister, you have anticipated some of my questions. It seems that there are two areas of concern, and you have dealt with both of them. They are the question of cost, and then what you might call the question of ambience or cultural adjustment. I have nothing more to ask you about the cost side. I would like to be assured that you feel comfortable with the program as it relates to adjustment, for example on the issue of the adjustments that francophones will have to make. Can you assure me that you are comfortable that the extent of sensitivity to those needs that you have described will continue? In other words, can you assure me that this is not a policy on which, at a certain point, you will close the door and lock it? Am I safe in saying that, as a part of this move, you will continue to be sensitive to problems that arise as a result of the implementation of existing programs that you have now created as well as to the need for new ones as you review or monitor the effectiveness of the programs you have described?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, the answer to those questions of continuing sensitivity is yes. I fully recognize that a different ambience, a different milieu, is going to create different issues—in some cases, disadvantages; more often than not, I believe, advantages. Keep in mind as well, sir, that, under guidelines for regulatory agencies, there has to be a substantial bilingual capacity. The NEB is subject to that special condition as well.

Senator Frith: Our focus recently has been on people who are moving to Calgary. May we return to the people who have elected not to go? You referred to some special arrangements for them. Do they include things such as the assistance of what I think are rather crudely called "head hunters"? Will there be experts in the Public Service actively hunting for job placements for these people, or will they simply be financially assisted in spending the time doing it themselves?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, in some cases "head hunter" work, particularly where there is a special expertise. If you take a look at those people who are moving, you will find, whether they are board members, EX level or SM level, that we were very concerned about maintaining a critical mass of the expertise that we had at the board, even though I knew that we could hire a lot of expertise in Calgary and the surrounding area. Those percentages run as high as 60, 70 and 80 per cent.

Senator Frith: What percentages are those?

Mr. Epp: Sixty, 70 or 80 per cent of the higher categories are moving to Calgary. Our 45 per cent factor is the percentage of the total numbers of people now employed by the NEB and the tie-in with COGLA.

Senator Frith: In other words, the ones staying?

Mr. Epp: The ones staying were as low as 20 per cent in the service category, people such as secretaries, office staff and so forth. So we are in that 45 per cent range of total numbers. When TransCanada Pipeline moved from Toronto to Calgary, there arose what became known as the TCPL template. In other words, everybody starts comparing themselves to TCPL. TCPL got close to 50 per cent. So I think we are fairly close.

Senator Frith: I am not sure what you mean by that.

Mr. Epp: About 50 per cent of their employees from Toronto moved to Calgary. That became the example to get close to.

Senator Frith: That was considered a high level of success?

Mr. Epp: A benchmark, at least for everyone in Calgary. I will not discuss what the people in Toronto thought, but seriously, that is what we are measuring ourselves against. When you take a look at the 20 per cent category of support staff, while I am not trying to be gender conscious in any way, many of these people are women whose spouses have other jobs in the National Capital Region, often in the Public Service, and are getting a better salary than many of these people. So the economics and the decisions that came within a family unit are very much reflected in those percentages. Therefore, we feel that head hunters are not as important for us as knowing that these people are available in the Public Service bank. These Public Service job openings will arise in the next year. Therefore, we feel headhunters are not as important for us as knowing that these people are available in the public service bank. These public service job openings will arise in the next year.

• (1240)

Senator Frith: So when you are dealing with either those that move to Calgary or those that wish to stay here, are there adjustment policies and help in place and available, not only for the NEB employees in both branches but also for their spouses and their families? In other words, suppose the family makes the decision to move to Calgary—they have moved there, they are there—you do have in place programs to help the spouses and families of the people that move. Similarly, for those who decide to stay, you are taking into account that factor also? Am I being too all-embracing in that question?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, maybe I can answer that question very quickly. There are seven points relating to those that are staying! Number one, a six-month surplus commencing October 1 and ending March 31 which goes back 13 months after the announcement—so, within that year. Two, effective status effective the date the employee decides not to relocate; therefore, that becomes the date. Three, job swapping possibilities; we are looking at that. Four, job search seminars and career counselling are being provided. Five, all other federal departments have been asked to consider NEB employees and have been offered person-years and salary until the end of the surplus period. Six, EMR has agreed to include NEB employees in its internal priority system, which I mentioned. Seven, reasonable training expenses will be paid; and, under this program, 30 of the employees not going have already found jobs.

Senator Frith: That would be a continuing program? That is, for those that are staying?

Mr. Epp: Yes.

Senator Frith: I have another detail involving the family, which seems like a small point but if you are a member of the group that it applies to, it might not seem so. I am thinking, for example, of those who might have custody arrangements if their family is split. I have asked you about the family, and what you do for the spouse and the rest of the family. However, suppose they have not stayed together and there are custody arrangements that might prohibit them from leaving certain regions without having to go back to court, and so on; to use our vocabulary, is your program also sensitive to that possibility?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, this issue has not been raised with me, but officials inform me that there have been some special conditions where the chairman has been, and is, looking at arrangements to be made.

Senator Frith: That leaves one last category; that is, those who decide to relocate and then, for some reason that is not a capricious one but is beyond their control, such as illness, either their own or someone they are close to, they cannot then move. Will they be in the position of being treated as having abandoned their position and therefore, be in effect, be on the street?

Mr. Epp: No, Mr. Chairman. There is a return option. I believe it is between the second and the third year. Under certain conditions, as long as arrangements are made with the board, they can return to Ottawa.

Senator Frith: You have referred to a question I did not ask, but I wish I had; that is, people who move and then have to come back.

Mr. Epp: Who want to come back.

Senator Frith: Yes, thank you for the answer to that. If I had thought of it, I would have asked that also, but the question I was thinking of concerned people who make a decision here in Ottawa to relocate and then something happens that requires—

[Senator Frith.]

Mr. Epp: Oh, yes, before they relocate?

Senator Frith: Yes, before they relocate, something happens that prevents them from being able to relocate, especially where it is not a capricious, or could not be alleged to be a capricious, reason—sickness or something of that kind—and then they cannot relocate. Have you got some program for trying to find them a spot here?

Mr. Epp: I can check, Mr. Chairman, with the board. None of these cases have been—

Senator Frith: There are no such cases?

Mr. Epp: No such case has been brought to my attention.

Senator Frith: Is your program flexible enough to be sensitive to that possibility?

Mr. Epp: I would think, Mr. Chairman, that these people would fall in the same category as those who are staying, and the same conditions would apply to them.

Senator Frith: The last subject heading is the general subject of training. You have put something on the record already about this, but I want to make sure that I have everything. For those who do not move and want to stay, you have a program to try to find jobs for them. Is there any retraining program for them?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, that falls within the Public Service guidelines under training within what is referred to as surplus staff, and that is taken care of through the Public Service.

Senator Haidasz: I do not wish to sound facetious, but I would like to ask the minister whether any services or any part of the National Energy Board will remain in Ottawa, or is everything being moved to Calgary?

Mr. Epp: Everything is being moved to Calgary, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Haidasz: What is the cost of this move?

Mr. Epp: $26 million dollars, if all whom we believe will move, do, in fact, move.

Senator Haidasz: Although Toronto was not in the picture for the new head office for the National Energy Board, I was in Regina in May and while there I was told that Saskatchewan contains abundant energy resources. In fact, it has the best, the cheapest and the easiest-to-mine uranium supplies in Canada, if not in the world. I would like to find out from the minister why was Regina passed by for Calgary.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the honourable senator has raised the matter of uranium. Saskatchewan now produces 20 per cent of the world's uranium supply. It is the cheapest and the best uranium. I am glad to have his endorsement for moving further on the atomic energy side of the equation as well as on uranium. Hopefully there will be some happy announcements before long in Saskatchewan.

Second, I gave you the figure of up to 80 per cent. Even though the applications can vary and these numbers can vary from year to year, if we have a number of electrical export applications, let us say from Quebec Hydro, that number might change slightly year after year; but on average between 70 and 80 per cent is oil and gas. In fact, a pool of expertise is available largely in Alberta; not exclusively, but largely. If you look at the 70 to 80 per cent factor, the logical place is Calgary, just as I mentioned earlier that the logical place for the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Grain Commission is Winnipeg. Maybe the Farm Credit Corporation should be moved to Regina.

Senator Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, can the minister conclude by saying that this move of the National Energy Board to Calgary will increase the security of energy supply for Canadians?

• (1250)

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, Canada has great security of supply in energy. We are dramatically self-sufficient in coal. We are still in an export position with oil, and that is why we are doing megaprojects for increased production. We are now supplying about 10 or 11 per cent of American supply of gas and we still have vast supplies available. With regard to hydraulic power, again we are the envy of the world. Keep in mind that the United States imports 50 per cent of its oil. We export 8 per cent of our surplus.

So the National Energy Board has a mandate to ensure that there are supplies for the contracts that are being made. The market teaches us never to get a board to tell us what we have to have inground. You reduce the amount of reserve you have. Allow the marketplace to get money for what it has in the ground. It will find new reserves, it will find new sources, and that is the best way to go.

Senator Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether this will help to reduce energy costs for Canadians in comparison with the cost in the USA.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I take it the honourable senator is talking primarily about gasoline. Canadians have only one reference point and that is to the United States. I have said very openly and clearly that if you take a look at the differential, other than economies of scale, you can possibly find a factor of 1.5 to 2 cents per litre on economies of scale distribution for the differential between the United States and Canada.

The other differential is tax, pure and simple—federal and provincial tax versus federal tax and stated tax. If you look at Canadian federal tax to federal tax in the United States you will find that Canadian federal tax is less. If you compare a general average of provincial tax in Canada versus an average of state tax in the United States, you will find that we are dramatically higher on the provincial side.

To put it very bluntly, when people cross the boarder to buy gasoline, it might be Canadian gasoline but they are not paying Canadian tax. That is the differential. If you compare it to the world, or even only to Europe, you will find that the reference points change very quickly.

There is a myth that if you raise the taxes you get more revenue, and also you are going to have less personal use of gasoline. Let us look at the Swedish model. In Sweden they are now charging between $5 and $6 in U.S prices for a gallon of gasoline. They call it a green tax. There are a lot of proponents for a carbon tax or green tax. They raised the so-called green tax and reduced the use of gasoline by 2 per cent. Some people assume that by simply raising the price of gasoline you will have a reduction of personal motor fuel use; but that is not the case. Also in the Swedish model they exempt industry from the green tax. They only charge it for home heating or for personal use such as in cars.

I remind honourable senators that just a few weeks ago there was quite a debate in Quebec when it was discovered that Quebec Hydro was giving various companies a preferential power rate because they were massive users of power. Sweden does it all the time. I ask honourable senators and Canadians generally to compare our gasoline costs and our energy costs not only to the United States but to other countries, and to then factor in as well what they do in order that their industry remains competitive.

So let us move down that environmental track, let us move towards stabilization, but let us not play boy scouts. Let us know all the details before we make decisions which might hamper our industry.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions?

Senator Frith: Partly out of curiosity, does the cost of easterners now going west to get to the Energy Board cancel out the cost of westerners who previously had to go east?

Mr. Epp: I do not know if I can answer that, Mr. Chairman. There has been, for example—

Senator Frith: Was it included in the estimate of cost?

Mr. Epp: I will get to that. The Minister of Energy for Ontario criticized me rather strongly and publicly for moving the National Energy Board from Ottawa to Calgary. She said that "this will affect the decisions of the board". The natural rhetorical question is: If that is the case, did the location of the board in Ottawa affect its decisions up to this time against the producing provinces. That is a rhetorical question that could be asked.

I do not buy that. Quite frankly, I think the board is professional and the industry sees it as professional. Keep in mind, senator, that our board hearings now can be very long. I will just give you an example—

Senator Frith: I was not raising any question at all about bias in the board, or alleging it.

Mr. Epp: But I am talking about cost as we move toward that because the argument of the Ontario government was cost and alleged bias. On the cost factor, if, for example, there is a major hydro export application from Quebec, or there is a major hearing or finding regarding a gas pipeline such as Gananoque, which we had just recently, those hearings will take place in that region, which will reduce the cost for the industry that is resident outside of the Alberta region.

We have not been able to calculate all costs, but keep in mind, for example, the Iroquois Northeast hearings which lasted for months. I believe that the board has to be resident where those applications are made in order to reduce costs that way. Obviously it raises our cost; but if you are looking at recovery from those who have made application, you factor that in.

Senator Frith: I just want to put on the record clearly that I was not criticizing either the partiality of the board, nor do I feel that we can ever forget in this huge country that if there is good reason to move something somewhere, the fact that it costs more to do it is no reason not to do it. The question was asked out of curiosity. If there are good reasons to move the NEB to Calgary and it costs intervenors and the taxpayers, a bit more to do it, then that is the price of trying to maintain a big country like Canada, it seems to me.

Senator van Roggen: Mr. Chairman, in answer to Senator Frith's question, the saving in costs will be that those from British Columbia will now have to retain fewer Ontario lawyers.

Senator Frith: Well that may open a whole new branch of questioning. I had not thought of that. That does worry me a bit, but I will not persist.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. There are no more questions? Honourable senators, shall the title be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-2, to amend the Energy Board Act has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1991-92

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), moved the third reading of Bill C-24, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1992.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

FOURTH REPORT ADOPTED, ON DIVISION

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fourth Report of the Committee of Selection (membership of certain select committees), presented in the Senate on June 19, 1991.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, that this report be now adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On division, for reasons that you know.

Motion agreed to and report adopted, on division.

SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS

FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Standing Joint Committee for the Scrutiny of Regulations (permanent reference), presented on June 13, 1991.

Hon. Normand Grimard: Honourable senators, the report was tabled by Senator Cogger who is not in this chamber, but with his permission, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Moved by the Honourable Senator Grimard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bolduc, that this report be now adopted. Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Could we know the general subject of this report?

Senator Grimard: Honourable senators, this is the first report following the organization meeting of the Standing Joint Committee for Scrutiny of Regulations, and there is nothing special except for the list of co-chairmen selected.

Senator Frith: So this is not a report on specific regulations?

Senator Grimard: No, absolutely not.

Senator Frith: Thank you, Senator, Simard.

On motion of Senator Grimard, report concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is the end of government orders. Other Business will now be called by the Table.

For a point of clarification for my own sake, this is called a government motion on this order paper, and I wonder where it can be identified.

Senator Frith: Where is it?

Senator Doody: I do not know. It is a new heading. It is not in the back but it is marked as a government motion. I plead my lack of exposure to the new rules. Can I get some guidance from the Table as to where I can find that?

Senator Frith: It should show up in the Minutes of the Proceedings, should it not?

Senator Doody: It was a motion that Senator Murray stood yesterday, namely, Senator Perrault's inquiry, but obviously it is not.

The Hon. the Speaker: Perhaps what should be done, honourable senators, is that we will look into it and at the next sitting we will either correct it or explain it.

Senator Doody: Yes, but my problem is that it is listed here as a government motion and I do not know what it is. Is it a matter of some urgency to the government that I should be dealing with? Is it printed here anywhere?

Senator Frith: It should be right after "Inquiries" and then motions.

Senator Roblin: After "Reports of Committees".

The Hon. the Speaker: I understand from the table officer that this is the motion put for the formation of the committee, but it should be called tomorrow.

Senator Doody: I see. Thank you.

Senator Frith: That is why it does not appear in the minutes. It would normally appear on page iv, between "Inquiries" and "Motions", and will do so tomorrow.

Senator Doody: Thank you.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

OFFICIAL REPORT—CORRECTION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have one item to raise on Motion No 4. In the Debates of the Senate, there is an error in the explanation. Where it reads "Striking of a Canadian Volunteer Korean Service Medal—Request for Government to Allow Korean Veterans to Apply for War Veterans' Allowance", "Korean" should be removed. It applies to all veterans.

I have never seen this before and I do not know what correction could be made or how it is made, if the Debates are already printed, but it should be listed on an erratum.

RULES OF THE SENATE

APPLICATION OF NEW RULES—MOTION TO RESCIND—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. Stanley Haidasz, pursuant to notice of June 19, 1991, moved:

> That the resolution of this House to adopt the proposed rules changes as presented in the First Report of the Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, passed on June 18, 1991 without evidence of expert witnesses on the constitutional effects thereof, was in error and that it be rescinded.

He said: Honourable senators, yesterday I rose at the earliest opportunity, as provided in rule 35(1)(a) on the grievous breach of senatorial privileges brought about by what I describe as indecent haste and ill-considered adoption of these new rules, rules that contain drastic changes here in our mode of work, and which actually render the Senate a weakened political institution, therefore, reducing not only its privileges but also its powers to carry out its duties according to the present Constitution.

Moreover, these rules, as we have been told, were thrust upon the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders and adopted without the presence and input of members of the Official Opposition in this chamber.

Yesterday, I rose on a question of privilege pursuant to rule 35(2). Apparently there is some ambiguity in paragraph 35(2) because it raised a problem in this chamber yesterday afternoon. I was deemed out of order, nonetheless, because rule 35(3) provides that a written notice is required to be given to the Clerk of the Senate "at least three hours" before the Senate meets. A somewhat facetious question is, whether or not these three hours are three hours on this house clock. Three hours of sitting before I raised the point, the passage of these rules—which is the occasion of my grievance—had not yet taken place.

Of course, I will not press this point since in this instance it makes little difference whether I had been heard immediately following the event in which our privileges are, as I believe, offended. However, it is already an example of one serious failing of these new rules as regards their defence of privilege in general, since substantial business of the house, including final reading of public bills, could be allowed to proceed on the shaky basis of a privilege in breach.

Parliamentary privilege has always taken absolute precedence over other business in every house of a genuine democratic Parliament, especially in the Upper House of a system such as Canada's and other Commonwealth parliaments. The validity and authority of public bills comes into question when they are enacted in a climate of broken parliamentary privilege or contempt of Parliament.

Honourable senators, I am grieved to think that this house has abdicated its authoritative privileges by artificially elevating the powers of the presiding officer of this chamber. It is not even within the constituted powers of the Senate to lay down its privilege. Its most ancient right—that is, the right of every senator to be heard for as long as he or she needs to speak on the issues before the house—is the bedrock of Parliament. It is the most ancient right that characterizes upper houses in parliamentary history. And what is the reason for this longevity, I ask? It abides because parliamentary privilege secures for the subjects of Her Majesty, a guarantee of fair government. It is therefore a right, based on the Magna Carta, that cannot be voluntarily abdicated by this or any similar house. The hasty resolution of June 18, therefore, courts grave constitutional error and threatens to bring the Parliament of Canada into consequent legal and public disrepute.

In the opening minutes of our committee, the newly-elected committee chairman put to members of the Press Gallery laudable objectives when she said, "I am led to believe that the propositions to be presented for consideration address concerns regarding the openness and the accountability of the Senate."

I take special interest in the openness and accountability of the Senate, as the rules now before us could hardly be said to increase these virtues when the manner in which they were foisted upon our committee chairman was so cabalistic. I cannot ascertain who it was that led the honourable senator to suppose the Senate had drifted away from openness and accountability, but it is sure that since her own appointment to the responsibilities and privileges of this house she has not enjoyed a view of the place operating without the strong arm of the Prime Minister trying to tell us what to do.

The Senate was once, as she remarked, "a quiet, sober chamber for legislative review which performed a valuable function." Whatever may have changed the Senate into a "closed, costly and inefficient institution which has not kept pace with the changing needs of the country", or "with the changing reality of the legislative process in Canada", it could not have been the observance of our rules. It was their erosion, really their breakage.

In her opening remarks as chairman, Senator Robertson correctly remarked, "Indeed, the Senate is not well understood." I submit it is not very well understood often-times by its advisors, and on occasion not well appreciated even by ourselves. But, honourable senators, any mystery to our role could hardly be dispelled by drastically altering whatever rules we think ill of, especially in order to self-limit our rights and privileges to debate measures and public bills.

Now that the rules have been butchered, we are in no greater light about our parliamentary function. After all, as it stands, we have tried to make our Speaker a completely new creation, one whose rulings are beyond reproach and which now set precedents—which is very important—as they do in the other house, with one major difference. The Speaker in this house, most certainly answers, I guess, to the Prime Minister and, therefore, he has to serve him. Now, really, the Speaker has unassailable powers. I dare say he is more powerful here in this chamber than is the Prime Minister in the other place. He can, at will, strike down a piece of legislation not on its merits or demerits but because it embarrasses the government. I hope this will never happen, but this is what I think can happen.

Honourable senators, we have, without the proper constitutional authority to do so, created a difficult problem. We learned from the chairman of our committee last Tuesday, June 11, in response to questions from Senator Molgat and Senator Stanbury, that our committee undertook no consultations from parliamentary experts knowledgeable about the Senate rules, their history, or the constitutional impact of the proposed changes to these rules.

• (1320)

A few constitutional questions were raised by Senator Stanbury, and again by Senator Stewart, on the issue of rule 15(2), investing the Speaker with new caput-like powers. These questions remain unanswered; and there are still other equally profound constitutional questions. The primary one is whether the Senate has the authority at all to abdicate its own responsibilities and privileges, which the new rules augur.

The ancient right of those governed by Parliament is vested in the very privileges we enjoy. Historically first and central in these invested privileges is the unqualified right to be heard, as we engage in debate until each is satisfied with a full appreciation of what we are voting for or against in this chamber. Nowhere in the Constitution, the heritage of Canada, or the Mother of Parliaments do we find that we are empowered to deconstitute ourselves or undermine our privileges. That is why, honourable senators, I have on several occasions these past few months, and last year, pleaded for the upholding of privilege, especially as it was upheld in our former rules under rule 33.

With regard to the crucial work of committees, on November 7 last, I stressed our obligation thoroughly and explained how we must assess legislation and other public measures. Otherwise the question definitely arises whether a given law has been enacted by legitimate authority. Such a test is essential to the validity and enforceability of every federal or provincial statute. In the present state of affairs we have compromised our own legitimate authority as though we had as a body some death wish. But, honourable senators, a death wish toward proper authority in the rule of law and parliamentary rule may be quite simply treasonous.

Several of the butchered rules that were absolutely essential, as pertains to the functioning of Parliament, were actually destroyed. When the function of the Speaker is so exalted as to render his rulings so important and beyond effective appeal, we come to a juncture where duty obligates us to think again and consider a rescission while that is still possible. The changed rules that now bedevil us will not brook a rescission of our misguided resolution of June 18 without a two-thirds majority. Now, we did not get a two-thirds majority—the vote was 40 to 30; not a two-thirds majority. I will argue that it is likewise a two-thirds majority which the latest trial rules should require to be ratified. I can only appeal, therefore, to the better sense of all honourable senators present to set aside the resolution of June 18 in favour of these new rules, to give time for a consideration in some depth of the constitutionality of these very rules, preferably in Committee of the Whole where all of us in this chamber can participate.

Accountability has been highly spoken of, but we cannot possibly meet our obligations, nor uphold the privilege of the governed invested in us, by failing to hear expert testimony and engaging in debate in the capacity of Committee of the Whole. This is a matter having the deepest possible constitutional significance. How could we treat it so lightly, on the very prow-wave of current constitutional renewal in our country at the present time of national crisis?

Honourable senators will perhaps detect in my voice a tone of lament. I lament that we have fired off loose cannons and punctured the very hull of our own barque. Unless every man and woman on our deck now sets to bailing and stopping these ghastly holes, we, and the parliamentary freedom for which Canada is envied in an oft-oppressed world, shall surely sink to the ocean floor.

We heard a few days ago a speech made by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition in this Chamber on the two hundredth anniversary of the Constitutional Act, 1791. Earlier this year, on May 3 in Room 200 of the West Block, Professor Norman Davies, a professor of history at the University of London, England, delivered a lecture on the May 3 Constitution of Poland which kept alive patriotism in the Polish people, who finally regained their independence in November, 1918.

At that time he recalled some facts of Polish history of which I think we should be cognizant. There was in 1791, 200 years ago last month, a member of the Polish lower house whose name was Rejtan, who was afraid that the members of the lower house of Poland would vote for the dismemberment of Poland. He thrust his body against the entrance to the chamber and said, "No. It will be across my dead body that you will go in there to vote for the destruction of my country". Unfortunately, the members walked over his body and Poland was partitioned for a third time by Russia, Prussia and Austria. It is only today that Poles are seized finally with the opportunity of having a completely freely-elected Parliament, which is reserved apparently for a date in October this year.

Yes, honourable senators, the very fabric of Parliament, held taut with its checks and balances, has been rent asunder by the way in which the new rules were adopted and finally voted on last Tuesday, June 18.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Haidasz, according to rule 31(5), when a senator is about to exceed the time limits provided in these rules, or as ordered by the Senate, the Speaker shall call the matter to the attention of the Senator. I am told that the honourable senator has about 30 seconds left. His speech is limited to 15 minutes.

Senator Haidasz: This is not an ordinary speech; it is a speech on a motion. It is not a speech on a bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Haidasz, according to rule 36(5):

> When a motion is moved in accordance with the provisions of section (1) above during debate on the motion, no senator shall speak more than once, nor for more than 15 minutes.

Senator Haidasz: In that case, honourable senators—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): If Senator Haidasz has only a few minutes to go I think the house might be disposed to let him continue.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Think of the precedent you are establishing.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

• (1330)

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I could reduce my speech, but it is such a good speech. Could it be printed in the record?

Senator Doody: We want to hear you deliver it. Carry on.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: I will read the last part.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few more remarks. This, again, demonstrates how the new rules are curtailing freedom of speech.

Senator Doody: Get on with the speech.

Senator Haidasz: Okay. Without the freedom of each honourable senator who so desires to make substantial, even exhaustive and intelligent contribution to debate on rules, public bills or whatever, which sometimes have enormous implications, should be able to do so without fear of the clock or fear of censure.

Senator Robichaud: I agree.

Senator Haidasz: Otherwise, the legitimacy of the function of Parliament is dead. Guy Fawkes could not have exacted greater damage than the bloodless changes that have occurred to our rules.

Honourable senators, the deeper implications of these rules must be more critically appraised than they have been thus far in the committee from which they originated. I think that for accountability and openness we owe it to Canadians, and especially to ourselves, to submit an order to a special committee struck for the purpose, or to gather in Committee of the Whole to study these new rules, because there are ambiguities, mistakes, and drastic changes that are incomprehensible. So I submit that we do something about it today.

May I cite again Senator Robertson. She said, "We have a responsibility to restore faith with Canadians in governing institutions, and we would fail in our duty to the Canadian public if we did not recognize and fulfil that obligation." How true. What has undermined the regard Canadians have for the Senate and for Parliament today is our closure and our disregard for the authority that stands behind our own rules. This, honourable senators, we must rectify. We must study the present rules to see whether they are workable; otherwise we will destroy our institution and lose an essential guarantee to safe sailing without oppression or delusion.

We must, therefore, reject this too-hasty resolution to live by these new rules, as they were passed by less than a two thirds majority on June 18; otherwise, we will stumble upon destruction where Ulysses wisely turned aside.

As these new rules were effectively, in large measure, a recision of earlier resolutions of this house, they ought to have been required to have, and I repeat again, that which is present in many constitutions, including our own, the support of a two thirds majority. My motion, therefore, is to rescind the resolution of June 18 on the basis that it does not have that degree of support.

I am sure that many who supported it would, upon a closer, sober look, see the errors and dangers of these new rules. They should be tested for constitutionality under expert examination or authoritative consultation, as I said, in either Committee of the Whole, or in a special Select committee, or even in the Rules committee.

I thank you for your patient attention, and I move:

> That the resolution of this House to adopt the proposed rules changes as presented in the First Report of the Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, passed on June 18, 1991 without evidence of expert witnesses on the constitutionality or the effects thereof, was in error and that it be rescinded.

Senator Robichaud: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I would like to take the adjournment of the debate to study the situation.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am trying to apply these proceedings to rule 35. I take it that the Speaker has ruled that there is a prima facie case.

Senator Doody: This is a motion, not a question of privilege.

Senator Frith: I am aware of that, but a motion is supposed to be made after a decision has been made, as I understand the rule. The notice is given, the Speaker rules that there is a prima facie case of privilege and then debate starts on the motion, and then a motion to adjourn can be received. That is the stage we are at, I take it. That is, a prima facie case has been found and we have started the debate.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): No.

Senator Frith: Well, then, a motion is supposed to be made after the Speaker has made that finding.

Senator Stewart: That is the implication.

Senator Doody: My understanding is that there is no question of privilege before the chamber at the present time at all. We are dealing with motion No. 5 under Orders of the Day.

Senator Frith: The reason that is there is because the honourable senator gave notice.

Senator Doody: He gave notice of the motion and then he went on with the motion. It says nothing at all about privilege, nor was the question of privilege ever put before the Senate. It has not been raised as a question of privilege; it has been raised as a motion. It was done in proper form with notice given yesterday and the motion moved today. The question of privilege that was distributed was never put before the chamber.

Senator Murray: Read page 264 of yesterday's Hansard.

Senator Frith: Yesterday the honourable senator stood to raise a question of privilege and then a question of order was raised. We said that he could not raise a question of privilege or a question of order at that stage. Rule 35 says:

> The preservation of the privileges of the Senate is the duty of every Senator . . . However, to be accorded such priority, a putative question of privilege must meet certain tests. It must . . .
> (a) be raised at the earliest opportunity;

Senator Haidasz claims that he has done that.

> (b) be a matter directly concerning the privileges of the Senate . . .

It is certainly that.

> (c) be raised to seek a genuine remedy, which is in the Senate's power to provide, . . .

It meets that test.

> (d) be raised to correct a grave and serious breach.
> (2) If the matter is not raised at the earliest opportunity, the Senator . . . may put it on notice, but the matter cannot be proceeded with under the terms of this Rule.
> (3) Except as provided in section (4) . . . a Senator wishing to raise a question of privilege, shall, at least three hours . . . give . . . notice.

I take it you gave that notice?

Senator Haidasz: Yes.

Senator Frith: The senator gave that notice and then it had to be distributed. I received a copy in my office.

Senator Murray: The notice he gave is on page 264 of yesterday's Hansard.

Senator Frith: The notice is the one that was delivered to me today.

Hon. Duff Roblin: That has not been dealt with. What we are dealing with is Senator Haidasz's motion.

• (1340)

Senator Frith: If that is the way you want it, that is fine, but the new rules say that once he has given that notice this rule is engaged. He gave that notice. He raised a question of privilege and he followed the rules by giving notice.

Senator Murray: But he has not made his speech.

Senator Frith: Rule 35(5) states:

> Immediately upon receipt of a notice in sections (3) and (4) above, the Clerk of the Senate shall arrange for the immediate translation and dispatch . . .

He did that on receipt. Senator Haidasz then gave notice in accordance with sections (3) and (4), and he is then to be recognized during the time provided for consideration for senators' statements. Was he recognized for the purpose of giving oral notice of the question of privilege? A senator then has to indicate that he or she is prepared to move a motion, which Senator Haidasz did, so far as I know; and I thought that was the motion that was before us.

Senator Murray: No, no.

Senator Frith: You say, "No", but he has certainly triggered this rule. The Speaker himself invoked rule 35 when he asked the senator to limit his speech to 15 minutes. The Speaker must have thought we were operating under rule 35. The Speaker rose and said that under rule 35 the senator could speak only once and that he could speak for 15 minutes. The Speaker obviously thought we were operating under rule 35. If we are, then the Senate has to take up consideration not later than 8 o'clock, which we did. There is also a special provision for Friday which does not apply because this is Thursday. Then the order in which notices are received determines the order in which they will be dealt with. Then rule 35(11) states:

> Debates on distinct questions of privilege shall be taken seriatim . . .

That seemed to be the case if we were operating under rule 35, which the Speaker seems to think we were.

Then, rule 35(12) states:

> The Speaker shall determine whether a prima facie case of privilege has been made out. In making a ruling, the Speaker shall state the reasons for that ruling . . .

"Where are we?" I ask the Speaker.

Senator Doody: We are on the motion of which Senator Haidasz gave notice yesterday and which he moved today. It has nothing to do with the question of privilege. He did not speak about his question of privilege. His question of privilege was never even discussed. Yesterday there was some discussion behind the curtain, to which I was not privy, and an arrangement was made which is reflected in the Hansard of yesterday.

Senator Frith: Where did he give the Notice of Motion?

Senator Roblin: It is found at page 264.

Senator Doody: It was printed in the Order Paper.

Senator Frith: You have it all there, so you should be able to answer these questions. You are certainly quick with other answers. If you have everything at your fingertips, can you tell me where we were at in the proceedings?

Senator Doody: It was printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.

Senator Frith: You seem to know exactly where we are, so why can't you tell me what heading we are under?

Senator Murray: I came in late, so perhaps I should not be intervening, but yesterday Senator Haidasz gave notice, which is found at page 264 of Hansard, that he would move a motion that the motion that adopted the rules committee report be rescinded. He gave that notice and today he debated the motion to rescind.

Senator Frith: Does Senator Haidasz think his motion is a question of privilege?

Senator Murray: No, it was on Motions. We were at Motions when Senator Haidasz spoke.

Senator Frith: I think Senator Haidasz is entitled to give us his idea as to what was the point of his motion and whether he thought it was a question of privilege.

Senator Murray: The motion is number 5. He has just debated it.

Senator Frith: I understand that, but how did we get there?

Senator Murray: The 15-minute rule, to which the honourable senator referred, applies.

Senator Frith: Which 15-minute rule? There is more than one.

Senator Murray: The one concerning the giving of speeches.

Senator Frith: There is one rule particularly related to questions of privilege, and that was raised by the Speaker when he made a ruling.

Senator Murray: We had reached Motions on the order paper today and Senator Haidasz was speaking on motion number 5. It was called, and he spoke. I presume someone has taken the adjournment.

Senator Doody: I did.

Senator Frith: Before he does, we want to know where we are.

Senator Murray: Yesterday Senator Haidasz also gave notice that he intended to raise a question of privilege—

Senator Roblin: He can substitute his motion for that. It is obvious.

Senator Murray: —with a proposal by way of remedy. It is up to Senator Haidasz. If the procedure for privilege kicks in now, then he has an opportunity to explain that and the Speaker will decide whether there is a prima facie case and, if there is, we will debate it.

Senator Roblin: I just want to offer a word of mediation. My friend opposite asked the Speaker to rule, because he is puzzled as to how this matter came on the order paper.

Senator Frith: No, I just do not know where we are on the order paper.

Senator Roblin: In that case, why don't we allow the Speaker to tell us how the order paper was developed and how the motion appeared there? That may resolve the question to everyone's satisfaction.

The Hon. the Speaker: Yesterday, I ruled the question of privilege out of order and then, as a gesture—and I believe all senators agree—we agreed that, after the business of the Senate, Senator Haidasz could stand up, which he did, and give a notice of motion. The notice of motion is what we have just dealt with. I believe it has been adjourned by Senator Doody. That is where we stand.

Senator Frith: Of course, we quarrelled with that ruling about the question of privilege, because no point of order could be raised at that point. But I would like to ask Senator Haidasz if he realizes that he is no longer on a question of privilege.

Senator Haidasz: Yes, honourable senators, I rose on a question of privilege yesterday. I commenced to deal with it and then I was interrupted. The Senate was then suspended and I concluded after the Government Orders of the Day.

Senator Frith: What we are being told today is that it was transformed into a notice of motion.

Senator Haidasz: I gave a notice of motion yesterday that I would speak today on my motion. I finished it. There was a motion, seconded by Senator Robichaud, and Senator Doody adjourned the debate on this motion.

Senator Frith: On the motion?

Senator Haidasz: Yes.

Senator Frith: Why were we served with the Notice of Privilege? Is the senator withdrawing that?

Senator Haidasz: The Notice of Privilege was not served by the Speaker. I sent copies of that to the Speaker yesterday by messenger at 4.45 p.m.

Senator Frith: Why?

Senator Haidasz: Because yesterday I was accused by senators of not giving notice on my question of privilege. I interpreted rule 35(2) which states:

> If the matter is not raised at the earliest opportunity, the senator raising the matter may put it on notice . . .

Senator Frith: Rule 35(2) deals with questions of privilege and I understand the senator now thinks he is dealing with a motion. So it was transformed. Do I take it that the senator no longer has a question of privilege?

Senator Haidasz: That is correct.

Senator Frith: That certainly settles it. One of the reasons I raised the matter is that the Speaker intervened under rule 35, which deals with questions of privilege. I now understand that there is no question of privilege before the house at all.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, earlier today I informed the Senate that the Foreign Affairs committee would be meeting at 8 o'clock this evening to consider the matter referred to it today. I should like to make a correction. I have been informed by the chairman of the committee that it will be meeting at 7 o'clock and not 8 o'clock. A notice to that effect has gone out to all senators, so I am told.

Also, when I move that the Senate adjourn, I understand that under the new rules we will be adjourning automatically until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning. With that in mind, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 9 a.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, June 21, 1991

The Senate met at 9:00 a.m., the Speaker in the chair.

Prayers.

THE CONSTITUTION

PRESERVATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA AS DISTINCT REGION—SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Senator Carney: Honourable senators, yesterday our colleague, Senator Beaudoin, tabled the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the process for amending the Constitution of Canada. I would like to acknowledge the hard work that Senator Beaudoin and his co-chair, Jim Edwards, M.P, put into their task, assisted by many members of this chamber and the other place. The report contains many useful suggestions which I am sure will be of interest to the Right Honourable Joe Clark, Minister for Constitutional Affairs, who is reviewing several reports commissioned by the government in this important area.

However, it will come as no surprise to my colleague that there is one aspect of the report that I, as a British Columbian, cannot accept. That is the concept that the present amending formula, based on the equality of the provinces, be replaced by a regional formula along the lines of the 20 year old Victoria formula. Under this proposal, constitutional amendments would require the approval of the Senate, the House of Commons and each of the four regions of Canada, viewed as Ontario, Quebec, the Maritime provinces and the western provinces.

This view of Canada as a country composed of four regions is unacceptable to British Columbians who view themselves as members of a fifth region, the Pacific region. I can assure honourable senators that this is not a partisan view. I am not alone in that view. NDP MP, Lynn Hunter, attached an addendum to the report stating in the strongest terms— her words —"the concept of B.C. as a region for the purposes of the amending formula". This has been a traditional view of British Columbian politicians and their constituents for many years and has been endorsed by both the NDP and the B.C. Tory caucus.

I am proud to be a westerner, but I represent the Pacific region, which is distinct from the prairie provinces. For the most part, our geography is different, our economy is different, our history is different, and, while we are an integral part of this country, we have our own unique interests, such as trade with Asia, and our own concerns.

I made that crystal clear during the committee meetings I attended. On day one I said, referring to the Victoria formula:

> The reaction of British Columbia to the idea of being part of a western region was met at the time with scorching hostility . . . British Columbia was a full colony when it joined Confederation. It was an equal joining an equal back in 1871; so the idea it would be reduced to some sort of third class citizenship was totally unacceptable.

It was then, honourable senators, and it is now. National unity is not served by seeking to protect one region, central Canada, by sacrificing another, the Pacific region. It caters to British Columbia's most secret fear and certain knowledge that when the chips are down, B.C. will be sold out in an effort to appease the interests of other regions. Therefore, I cannot accept that aspect of the report.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Senator Fairbairn: Hear! Hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The record should note that Senator Fairbairn applauded Senator Carney. I think it should so note because I know that she agrees with what Senator Carney has said.

RULES OF THE SENATE

APPLICATION OF NEW RULES—SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to say a word about the new rules because we will probably be adjourning today for the summer. We have had a taste of these new rules for a few days, but in the fall we will be entering a new era. I believe that these rules are badly drawn. I believe that they are full of problems and minefields. They arrive as a result of no consultation, not even with the Table, not even with the resident experts, let alone with the opposition. It is a bad way to draw new rules, and as far as I know, it has never been done that way in any legislature.

However, they have achieved their purpose, and that is to streamline parliamentary procedures. They have eminently achieved that result because, of course, the word "streamline" means to reduce resistance. A streamlined design is a design that reduces the resistance of air, water or whatever else something is trying to move through. These rules have completed the job of eliminating any resistance in Parliament to a government in power, whatever its political affiliation.

It is clear that they are designed to ensure the government's complete control. The government controls the order of business, it controls the length of time that any opposition is offered and completely controls the agenda. Only at the end, after it has had its way completely, is time, in a patronizing sort of way, given for Parliament to then play in its little sandbox for a few hours, and often not that long.

This situation leaves the only opposition with the media, and they do not seem to be picking up the torch. For example, they do not seem to be taking the matter very seriously. Perhaps it is not serious. Perhaps people do not think it is serious that Parliament is no longer an effective opposition to any government.

In summary, what has happened by means of gradual in the House of Commons, and dramatically and suddenly in the Senate, is that in the fall we will be entering a new era where Parliament is eliminated as an opposition to the government.

In the fall, we will start fully experiencing the dawn of that new era, and begin a new understanding of the word "power", when both the House of Commons and the Senate, will be mere footstools to the will of any government in power, whether Liberal, Conservative, NDP, Reform, or coalition.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, perhaps we could get a little advice from the opposition as to how this matter might be handled, because for many years they had the experience of dominating both houses. The implication of the honourable senator's statement is that either they used some method outside of this chamber to bring resistance to government bills which they did not like, or, he is suggesting by implication that members on this side of the house would constantly be ciphers for government legislation.

Senator Frith: I would be very cheered if the new era shows that they are not.

A BILL RESPECTING THE EXPORTING, IMPORTING, MANUFACTURING, BUYING OR SELLING OF OR OTHER DEALING WITH CERTAIN WEAPONS

SECOND REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Gerald R. Ottenheimer presented the following report:

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee to which has referred the Bill C-6, An Act respecting the exporting, importing, manufacturing, buying or selling of or other dealing with certain weapons, passed, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, June 20, 1991, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

GERALD R. OTTENHEIMER
Chairman

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Kelleher: With leave later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, before we grant leave to deal with the third reading of the bill perhaps Senator Kelleher would be good enough to explain now, or maybe later, the development which has caused the government to take a decision to suspend all sales of automatic weapons to the Middle East for the next six months in tandem with the approval of this bill. It appears to me an even more incoherent position than the one which I outlined yesterday in my speech on the bill. But perhaps Senator Kelleher can clarify the reasoning behind one decision to authorize, through this bill, a particular sale to Saudi Arabia, and, at the same time, placing a moratorium on all other sales. It would be interesting to know the rationale.

Also, is it the intention of the government to provide the Senate with the same opportunity that apparently is to be provided in the House of Commons to examine the whole question of arms sales and Canadian arms policy? I am not withholding leave; I am merely raising these points so that maybe, when we come to third reading, Senator Kelleher will be in a position to deal with those questions.

• (0910)

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Kelleher, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

A BILL TO AMEND CERTAIN STATUTES OF CANADA TO RECOGNIZE THE WAR-TIME SERVICE OF THE VETERANS OF THE CANADIAN MERCHANT NAVY

FIRST READING

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I was to speak when No. 8 of Daily Routine of Business was called, namely, "Introduction and First Reading of Private Bills".

The Hon. the Speaker: I am told that yours is a public bill, Senator Marshall; am I correct?

Senator Frith: It is a private member's public bill.

Hon. Jack Marshall presented Bill S-5, to amend certain statutes of Canada to recognize the wartime service of the veterans of the Canadian Merchant Navy.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, anyone's opinion is as good as mine, but I would have thought that the right place for the introduction of that bill would have been under No. 5, "Introduction and First Reading of Senate Public Bills" rather than "Introduction and First Reading of Private Bills" since, if I understand Senator Marshall's bill, it is a private member's public bill.

I cannot think of any other meaning for No. 5, because it does not refer to government bills. But whether No. 5 includes both government Senate public bills and private senators' public bills, I do not know. But that must be what they mean to include in No. 5. Perhaps we might clarify that at some other time.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): "Government Bills" is the previous one.

Senator Frith: That is what I mean. If No. 4 is "Introduction and First Reading of Government Bills", No. 5 must mean private members public bills.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: You never thought of that one, did you?

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I would not mind getting unanimous consent to revert and introduce my bill again under No. 4!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Offer refused, apparently.

On motion of Senator Marshall, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): It is usual at this time, honourable senators, for me to bring in the adjournment motion, but since I am not quite clear about what it will be, I will ask leave to revert to Notice of Motions later today.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 160 residents of the province of Quebec who are opposed to the goods and services tax.

These petitioners come mainly from Coaticook, Victoriaville, Granby, Montréal, Saint-Lambert, Roxton Pound and Lac-Mégantic.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Some honourable senators, I am sure, will be glad to know that the flow of petitions against the GST and the demand for an election to deal with, as I have said, the GST and other iniquities of this government, still continues—that is, the petitions still flow; there is a long space between the subject and the verb there.

First, from Quebec, 16 petitions from Montreal, Sherbrooke, St. Léonard, Mascouche, Farnham, La Prairie, Bromont, Rivière-Héva, La Motte, Landrienne, Authier, Macamic, La Sarre and Poularies. These 16 petitions contain 332 names.

Second, from Ontario, two petitions from Don Mills—and three of the names were on the Quebec list—from Rexdale, Cambridge, Mississauga, Toronto, Burlington, and Etobicoke. These two petitions contain 52 names.

The 16 petitions from Quebec with 332 names and the two petitions from Ontario with 52 names bring the total to 18 petitions with 384 names.

QUESTION PERIOD

VETERANS AFFAIRS

GULF WAR—KOREAN WAR—OFFICIAL RECOGNITION OF CANADIAN VETERANS

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I note that this weekend, at least here in Ottawa, there is to be a particular celebration in recognition of the Canadian military personnel who contributed to activities during the Gulf War.

At the same time, I understand there may be some formal announcement on the weekend, finally, of a medal for Korean veterans.

● (0920)

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would prevail upon the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and, perhaps, even the Secretary of State for External Affairs to ensure that at some time soon there will be an appropriate separate ceremony for the Korean veterans who, for 40 years, have remained our hidden servicemen and who deserve a great deal more recognition than they have received. They fought not in some small police action but in a vicious war in the hills of Korea. They deserve their own moment of recognition, and not at a time when, justifiably, recognition is being given to others.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the government fully agrees with the position as stated by the honourable senator.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FUTURE OF NATIONAL HEALTH CARE SYSTEM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I note that the day before yesterday the federal and provincial Ministers of Health held a meeting in Toronto. The Leader of the Government is aware, I am sure—and if he is not he is the only one in Canada who is not, that there is a great deal of concern about the medicare program in this country right now.

I should like the minister to inform this house if the ministers have come to some agreement.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have not had an opportunity to obtain a report from my colleague, Mr. Bouchard, concerning the meeting that was held in Toronto.

However, I must add that, to the best of my knowledge, there was no plan to discuss at that meeting changes to the medicare regime, nor was there any expectation that even if such matters were discussed informally, there would be any decision reached.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I do not know of what the minister is aware. I am aware of a statement made by one of the ministers who, in summary, said this: "If the Government of Canada continues to cut medicare funding they will have to stop calling the tune, since the old adage is that the one who pays the piper calls the tune, and that will apply only sometimes."

In a very short while some provinces will have either to change, reduce or restrain their funding to medicare, or the Government of Canada will have to start living up to its responsibility under the legislation and make a proper contribution.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Government of Canada is living up to its responsibility under the legislation. No funds have been cut back under the Established Programs Financing for health and post-secondary education. The financial contribution of the federal government in this area has been increasing certainly faster than spending on any other program.

The question upon which the honourable senator is focusing is whether the federal government and Parliament will be in a position to enforce the Canada Health Act as the cash component of the Established Program Funding dwindles and is replaced more and more by the tax component.

Mr. Wilson, when he was Minister of Finance, provided the answer to that question in his budget. We would certainly find ways to impose a financial penalty on provinces that did not abide by the provisions of the Canada Health Act, and, if we could not impose that penalty through the cash component of Established Programs Financing, we would impose it through other federal programs.

Senator Theriault: Honourable senators, that is a lot of hogwash! That is all you have given us—hogwash! When the legislation was passed the federal government was participating in these programs on a cash-and-tax points basis. For you to stand up here and say that there have been no cutbacks is unbelievable. Everyone knows that in the fiscal year we are now entering there will be a reduction of $3 billion.

Senator Murray: A reduction in what?

Senator Theriault: Between now and 1996 the experts say there will be a reduction of $30 billion. You can transfer tax points to Ontario, Alberta and perhaps British Columbia, but what the heck will this transfer of tax points for medicare do for New Brunswick? For God's sake, where have you been all these years?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator does not know what he is talking about on this subject. There have been no reductions and there will be no reductions of the kind the honourable senator is talking about, and I will bring in the statistics to demonstrate it.

Senator Theriault: The statistics are there. Start telling the truth!

Senator Murray: There may be a difference between what provinces expected they would receive or are entitled to receive and what they will receive. That, however, is an old story. The honourable senator knows that the financial regime governing health and post-secondary education has changed several times since the 1960s when those programs were brought in.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators I have a supplementary question. When the minister replies that there has been no reduction, what he is saying is that the dollars have not been reduced. Surely he is not suggesting that the federal share has not been very substantially reduced.

Senator Theriault: Of course he knows, but he is not telling.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Established Programs Financing legislation is very complex. It was decided way back in—was it 1977 or after that; it was under the Trudeau Government, in any case—that there would be block funding for health and post-secondary education. Then, after that the government divided that block funding into some notional amounts for health and post-secondary education. I recall that we had a debate here on that very matter. I do not think it is entirely accurate to say that the federal share of health costs—I do not think it is possible to establish, as the honourable senator seems to do—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): A subtle but vital shift there.

Senator Murray: —that the federal share of health costs has gone down. What we are dealing with here is block funding for health and post-secondary education. As the honourable senator knows, the federal contributions are made up partly of tax points transferred to the provinces and partly of cash. This is a difficult area in which to extemporize especially when I do not have the figures in front of me but I would be glad to bring them in at the appropriate time and perhaps we can have a fuller discussion on the matter.

Senator Frith: In other words, it is probably true but it is so complicated that we can't prove it!

• (0930)

Senator Molgat: If the minister brings in the figures, would he bring in the total figures showing what has gone on at the provincial level, how the costs have risen, and the comparable grants from the federal government so that we get a complete picture, not simply what the federal government, has been giving in dollars or in tax points?

Senator Thériault: We would like to know what the figures would have been if this government had not frozen the transfer payments and, in effect, reduced them.

Senator Murray: I will try to bring in what the figures would have been if the federal government and Parliament had stuck to the original undertakings given by the Liberal Government of the day.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

RECONSTRUCTION OF NEW BRUNSWICK SECTION—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have two questions which are directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and my first one is as follows:

He is no doubt aware that the Premiers of the Maritime provinces met earlier this week to consider the possibility of a so-called economic union of the three provinces.

After their meeting, they emphasized the importance of building a four-lane freeway in that part of Canada to replace what is commonly referred to as the Trans-Canada Highway.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate knows that I have raised this issue several times in the past three and a half years. Is he now in a position to inform us whether discussion have taken place recently and whether there has been any progress on this matter?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as far as I know, there have been no recent discussions on the subject, but I would have to check with the responsible minister.

Senator Corbin: I thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

KOREAN WAR—SERVICE MEDAL FOR CANADIAN VETERANS—POSTHUMOUS DECORATION

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: My second question is also directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

It concerns the medal proposed to honour veterans of the Korean War.

Will this medal be awarded posthumously to veterans who have died since the war?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in this case I will also have to make inquiries and check with my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

I will report back to the Senate as soon as possible.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, we all know that the Leader of the Government in the Senate will probably not report back to us before this fall.

[Senator Moigat.]

Meanwhile, could he get in touch with the Minister of Veterans Affairs as soon as possible and ask him to make an announcement, because he is expected to make a statement either some time today or in a matter of days, from what I understood from Senator Fairbairn's comments, to clarify the issue I just raised.

Personally, I think this medal should be awarded posthumously to all veterans of the Korean War who died either during or since that conflict.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will certainly bring the comments of my friend Senator Corbin to the attention of Mr. Merrithew.

RADIO CANADA INTERNATIONAL

EFFECT OF CUTBACKS ON TOURISM IN CANADA

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, my question for the Leader of the Government is, in effect, a request for information which, of course, I will wait until the fall to receive.

I refer again to the reduction of the budget of Radio Canada International from $20 million to $13.5 million. The other night, while at the Royal York Hotel in Toronto, I was amazed to see the lobby teeming with Japanese tourists. Indeed, there was a shop open in the lobby of that hotel that was doing a thriving business selling Canadian goods including Arctic goods, leather goods, and so on. All the signs were in Japanese. Japanese, as honourable senators know, is one of the languages cut in the recent budget.

I drew attention the other day to the matter of the Voice of Canada being silenced, but now I would like to know whether the minister can find out, over the summer, the value of the Japanese tourist business in Canada and, in addition, the extent of the commerce that may have been affected by these cuts. That is apart altogether from the necessity of explaining Canada to the world. What was the commercial aspect of the cuts? Finally, was the Minister of Tourism, or any other minister involved in commerce with these countries, consulted when the cuts were being determined?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall take those questions as notice.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), moved the third reading of Bill S-2, to implement conventions between Canada and Finland, Canada and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and Canada and the United Mexican States for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax and the prevention of fiscal evasion and a convention between Canada and the United Mexican States for the exchange of information with respect to taxes.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PROCEEDS OF CRIME (MONEY LAUNDERING) BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, moved the third reading of Bill C-9, to facilitate combatting the laundering of proceeds of crime.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Pat Carney moved the third reading of Bill C-2, to amend the National Energy Board Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

A BILL RESPECTING THE EXPORTING, IMPORTING MANUFACTURING, BUYING OR SELLING OF OR OTHER DEALING WITH CERTAIN WEAPONS

THIRD READING

Hon. James F. Kelleher moved the third reading of Bill C-6, respecting the exporting, importing, manufacturing, buying or selling of or other dealing with certain weapons.

He said: Honourable senators, if I may attempt to reply to the questions put to me by Senator MacEachen, and with deference to Senator Doyle, the report carried in the Globe and Mail was not entirely accurate. In an attempt to correct the story which appeared there, I would like to refer honourable senators to the House of Commons Debates from Tuesday, June 18, 1991, page 2030. It is specifically set out therein the terms of the agreement and they are in three parts. It should be made clear that the moratorium that is being discussed refers to automatic firearms only.

There are three elements to the agreement. First:

> The Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade will undertake to study and report on Canadian exports of military goods, defence production policy and policies, to convert Canadian defence production industry to civilian uses, and to make recommendations for amendments to the Export and Import Permits Act, related regulations and the Criminal Code.

The second element of the agreement is that:

> It will submit its report by December 31, 1991 to the Minister for International Trade.

And third:

> Once Bill C-6 is given Royal Assent, and pending completion of the parliamentary report, the government will include on the automatic firearms country control list, only the 10 countries with which it has the required bilateral defence research, development and production agreements, plus Saudi Arabia, assuming that the agreements being considered for that country can be successfully completed by December 31, 1991.

Therefore, the exports of other military goods will continue to be reviewed on a case-by-case basis with the same stringent controls to be applied. There is therefore no moratorium as such on arms sales. Rather, the government has agreed to await the report of the House of Commons committee before considering any further export of automatic firearms to countries other than those with which we already have agreements.

I believe Senator MacEachen also wished to know whether or not the Senate would have the opportunity to debate this issue as has been granted to the House of Commons. In reply to that question, Senator MacEachen, I would say that you are the expert on the rules, not I, but it is my understanding that if you wished to have such a debate, as I understand the rules, that could be initiated by you. I am sure that the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs would welcome a reference by you to that committee for investigation of this particular matter.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I wish to express my reservations regarding the proposed changes to this legislation which would regulate the sale of Canadian manufactured weapons abroad. Traditionally, the policy of this government has precluded the sale of military material to those regions wherein the potential for open hostilities was deemed imminent. The Middle East was, and continues to be, viewed as a region which clearly falls into this category.

Public statements by the Prime Minister, and as recently as yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, calling for international initiatives to reduce the flow of arms to the Middle East reinforces the image of Canada as a country in the forefront of the worldwide effort to halt the Middle East arms race.

The proposed legislation raises in my mind some questions concerning the government's pursuit of this very principled policy, and, while recognizing the need to provide Canadian manufacturers with meaningful access to foreign markets, I fervently hope that the government will ensure that the proposed legislation adheres to the controls currently imposed on our arms exports. Effective bans on the export of arms to countries currently in a state of war or in an imminent state of hostility should be maintained.

In five wars against the State of Israel, Saudi Arabia has contributed both personnel and war material. For the record, Saudi Arabia has recently reaffirmed its state of war against Israel and rejected the proposal advanced by American Secretary of State James Baker to engage in a regional conference with the State of Israel.

Saudi Arabia cannot really be viewed as a country with a lack of surplus weapons. One need only consider the deal signed three years ago for $30 billion dollars worth of U.S. weapons and the more recent ones of $20 billion dollars with the US. One need only consider also that weapons seemingly with a Saudi Arabia end user certificate have been discovered all over the Middle East, with various PLO factions, Lebanon and, ironically, Iraq.

I hope there will be an opportunity in the Senate to debate the entire issue of arms export controls and the buildup of arms in the Middle East. I applaud the governments's initiative to discuss this in the House of Commons. Notwithstanding this legislation, for which I understand the necessity. I hope Canada will continue to maintain its very principled policy in this area.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, as I explained yesterday, the bill before us has caused considerable concern, and some of these concerns have been reiterated by Senator Spivak.

● (0950)

First, however, I would like to clarify with Senator Kelleher that aspect of the report in the press which he found inaccurate. I would take it, from what he has said, that there is no moratorium on arms sales to the Middle East for six months. There is a decision not to sell automatic weapons to the Middle East, except in the case of Saudi Arabia, for a period of six months. I draw from the comments which he has made and from a brief reading of what was said in the House of Commons that in exchange for the passage of the bill, which makes possible the sales, to Saudi Arabia and to the Netherlands, the government has said that we will not sell automatic weapons for a period of six months and, in the meantime, we will make it possible for the House of Commons committee to examine the whole question of arms control and what changes ought to be made in the Export and Import Permits Act.

I appreciate Senator Kelleher's answers, and particularly his receptivity to the possibility for the Senate itself, through one of its committees, to engage in a similar study on this important question. It is extremely urgent, in light of the fact that certain countries in the Middle East were armed to the teeth and that huge armaments in the Middle East contributed to and made possible the outbreak of war and the resulting destruction.

It is a fact that a number of those countries which joined in the international effort to stop Saddam Hussein were among the most prodigious arms traders in the Middle East and that governments which had rallied to the cause of international solidarity, so to speak, were active in the arms trade and created a context in which this situation could occur. It is certainly not a very wholesome situation at present. Even though a major setback has been delivered to the armed forces of Iraq, the human desolation which exists in the area is a continuing reproach to the ability of the world community to deal with these problems.

I mentioned yesterday, honourable senators, that 1991 will be a record year for the sale of arms to the Middle East. In addition to that, the United States is asserting its intention to sell more arms to Saudi Arabia, and Canada is joining in that activity. These are some facts with which you are all familiar and which have to do with the world economic and political situation.

The intent of this bill, as we all know, is to amend the Criminal Code to remove an amendment which was made by

Mr. Allmand in 1977, I believe, which prohibited the sale of automatic weapons, period. It is described as an anomaly, and it is described as such because apparently at the time it was not the intention of Parliament to legislate that prohibition; but it is there, and it has been there ever since. It is being removed now because the GM sale to Saudi Arabia could not otherwise go ahead. That is the purpose of the bill.

It is true that there is brought in, parallel to this purpose of the bill, an amendment to the Export and Import Permits Act in which the minister lists a number of countries and thereby constrains his flexibility in authorizing the sale of automatic weapons. But it is interesting that while there is, as it were, a constraint list for automatic weapons, there is no constraint list in the bill for more lethal weapons, and that, of course, is a new anomaly, but it is there. I would take it that the reason this was put in was, to some extent, to obfuscate the real purpose of the bill, which is to authorize these sales, by saying that we have done something else to tighten up the situation.

That is what the bill is about. It had a rough passage in the House of Commons. Everyone was embarrassed. The government itself had to be embarrassed because the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Federal Republic announced just last week that they were putting arms control high on the list of the economic summit to be held in London; and last February the Prime Minister and Mr. Clark—properly, in my view—sounded the alarm about the arms buildup throughout the world and said that we must do something about it.

In the context of all of this, Canada moves to bring in a bill to facilitate arms sales. No one likes it. The House of Commons did not like it. They struggled with it and finally decided to pass it because of the undoubted economic benefits to the plants producing the weapons which flow from these sales, as described by Senator Kelleher. That is a reality. So the Canadian Parliament said, "Yes we want those benefits, we want those sales, but we will salve our conscience by saying that we will examine the situation in the future."

Then, of course, the government made a further decision not to sell any automatic weapons for six months except to Saudi Arabia. That brings up the question raised by Senator Spivak: What is the policy of selling weapons in that area of tension? These are the issues that have been raised in this bill and they are very complex and very difficult. That is why I said yesterday that we could not support the bill. I do not do it with any sense of moral superiority because it is a fact that arms sales have been authorized by Canada in the past. Bear in mind, also, that even though this bill will be passed, the bill in itself does not authorize these sales because in the case of Saudi Arabia the government will have to enter into a satisfactory defence research agreement with that country.

● (1000)

In addition to all of that, for a single arms transaction to take place it requires a licence, which has to be approved by the minister. Every time one of those requests comes forward to issue a licence, the minister is always placed in a dilemma. The dilemma was expressed yesterday by Senator Kelleher. On the one side there are the economic benefits, and on the other there are the considerations which call us to create a more peaceful world.

There have been enough issues raised by the bill that we should not let the whole subject matter drop. It should be returned to us at a later time to see whether or not we can improve the situation through Canadian efforts in the world at large. Bear in mind also that Canada is not a loose canon in this situation; it does have stringent guidelines and rules. Nevertheless, whatever stringency there exists has not been able to overcome the reality that in this bill we are authorizing sales of arms and we are authorizing their sale to an extremely sensitive part of the world.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, permit me to take just one minute to point out that at least some of the points that were raised today and yesterday by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition with regard to this bill were responded to in whole or in part last night by the Minister of International Trade, Mr. Wilson, in the course of his appearance before the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Senator MacEachen, yesterday and today, has mentioned the anomaly that has been in the law since 1977 and has questioned why, since the anomaly has been there all this time, it has taken so long for government and Parliament to act. I asked that very question on Senator MacEachen's behalf last night at the committee. I was reminded by the minister and his officials that we did not have a legal opinion on this matter pointing out the problem until sometime in the mid-1980s, in the course of negotiations in respect of another contract.

To illustrate the point, it should be mentioned—as Mr. Wilson did last night—that there is a lot of history surrounding this contract between General Motors Canada and Saudi Arabia. Indeed, the history goes back to the early 1980s. General Motors has been in discussion with Saudi Arabia at least since that time. The proposed contract was endorsed by the government of the day and promoted by that government in its intergovernmental discussions and diplomatic relations with Saudi Arabia. It was not until we were on the verge of the contract that it was pointed out to us that the amendments in this bill were the only way to effect or implement the contract and remain within the bounds of Canadian law. That is why we are proceeding with this bill today.

That is all I wanted to say for the moment, except to add that we will be open to suggestions for further discussion of arms sales and government arms policy in general when we get back in the fall. The honourable senator may wish to take this up in the Senate and in the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, because of Senator Spivak's intervention, would you agree to Senator Lynch-Staunton's offer to second this motion instead of Senator Spivak?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Who replaced her?

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Lynch-Staunton as seconder.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh!

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Kelleher, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, that this bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

The Hon. the Speaker: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ON AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Special Joint Committee on the Process for Amending the Constitution of Canada. (Honourable Gérald A. Beaudoin)

Hon. Gérald A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I would like to take a few moments to give a summary of the report of the committee on the amending process.

We had a very specific mandate. We had 135 days to report on the four main points. We had to work very hard, especially when the committee was touring Canada and during the days we were drafting the report.

We heard 23 Canadian and 5 foreign experts in Ottawa, and on the road, if I may use that expression, we heard a dozen or so more.

We also heard testimony from Canadians in all provincial capitals, and also in Montreal and Vancouver, for a total of 200 witnesses, and we received 500 briefs.

I would like to point out that we managed to obtain the endorsement of all three political parties represented on this joint committee—the Liberals, the Conservatives and the New Democrats—on three of the four main items; the Liberals endorsed all the items in our recommendations. The New Democratic Party issued a dissenting opinion on the membership of the constituent assembly. Perhaps I should clarify that: there was no dissenting opinion on the principle of the parliamentary committee as such but on its membership.

I will quickly touch on the five main points of the report. First, the amending formula: as you know, Canada has tried 11 times to reach agreement on an amending formula. We looked at practically all the possibilities. We realized that the 1982 formula, although it had certain merits, was not always suited to constitutional amendments.

All three political parties agreed to keep unanimity cases to a minimum. After a long debate, we decided to keep official languages, language rights, and the monarchy, and we also enshrined the proprietary rights of the provinces. That is what we proposed.

In all other cases, we suggest the formula of four regional vetoes. The debate on these vetoes was fairly long. We had a choice between two or three formulas, including Pépin-Robarts which requires a majority referendum in four regions for a positive result, and the Victoria formula which proposes four regional vetoes, one for the Maritimes, one for Quebec, one for Ontario and for the Western provinces.

Needless to say, the debate went on for quite some time. Finally, the representatives of the three political parties on the committee reached an agreement. I would like to add that according to the intent of the Victoria Charter, some day, a province that has 25 per cent of the population of Canada may be considered a region. I say this because of the long debate on the issue of British Columbia and the territories.

As for the Indians, we suggested that their rights should not be amended without their consent.

We also suggested and recommended that the territorial governments should be represented at the constitutional negotiating table, and that representatives of aboriginal peoples be there as well.

About the referendum, the media reported on this yesterday, and I would like to make a correction. What we are suggesting, and all three political parties agree on this point, is that the federal government be able to adopt referendum legislation. We are opposed to enshrining a referendum in the Constitution.

We will still suggest that the Parliament of Canada should have or pass a referendum act of as a purely consultative tool. The referendum would allow Canadian political authorities to determine whether a consensus exists among Canadians on new federal amendment proposals or if it would be advisable to hold a referendum to overcome a constitutional deadlock.

So, we suggested that a referendum act be passed. The government will be under no obligation to implement this act. It would be up to them whether they hold a referendum or not. Hence, the first condition: that it be at the discretion of the government.

Second—and the three political parties agree on this—a simple majority would not be applied in a referendum. What we are seeking to avoid here is a repetition of what happened in 1942 with conscription and in 1898 with prohibition.

We suggested that a referendum organized at the request of the Canadian government be Canadian in nature, that is nation-wide. However, for it to be positive and conclusive, there sould be a majority vote in the four major regions of Canada: the four Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario and Western Canada.

Quebec has already displayed much hesitation about such a referendum. In any case, we do not want Quebec to be isolated. That would solve absolutely nothing, on the contrary. Nor do we want any other region of this country to be isolated.

Therefore, if there is a referendum, it will be held throughout the country, but only with a majority vote from the four major regions of the country will it be meaningful. That is a very important point.

• (1010)

[English]

The third point was the public hearings, and this was an easy case, if I may say so. Everyone agreed right from the beginning that public hearings should be held at the federal and provincial levels. This would be mandatory. This would not require an amendment to the Constitution, but just an amendment to the Standing Orders of the Senate and the House of Commons or the Standing Orders of the provincial legislative assemblies.

I think the public hearings should be right at the beginning of a proposal to change the Constitution of our country. This was easily accepted by the 17 members of the committee and we have insisted that it be would at a primary time in order that it would be useful.

• (1020)

We have also recommended that the legislative assemblies do the same at the provincial level. For the referendum and public hearings, these are our recommendations, but they do not require amendments to the Constitution of Canada.

Of course, the four regional vetoes would require a major amendment to the Constitution of Canada. We suggest also that the delay of ratification be only two years instead of three years.

Lastly, we had to deal with another point of great importance, namely, the constituent assemblies. We studied the case of Canada in 1864, and we studied the case of the United States of America in 1787 at Philadelphia, where the Americans succeeded in creating their Constitution in four months.

After lengthy research we discovered that the 33 Fathers of Confederation in Quebec, the 37 fathers in Charlottetown, and about the same number in London, in December of 1866 were all delegates from Upper or Lower Canada, and from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. In Charlottetown, of course, representatives of Prince Edward Island were there. Representatives of Newfoundland also attended that conference. The principle at that time was that only legislators be part of a constituent assembly.

As I said, we studied the case of the United States in Philadelphia in 1787. The 55 American delegates were all elected representatives of the 13 states of the United States of America after the War of Independence. Again, only legislators were involved.

Liberals and Conservatives both agree that we should go in that direction if we are thinking of a parliamentary committee or thinking about the question of a constituent assembly. The New Democratic Party agreed with that, but said that it should be hybrid: in other words, if we have 30 legislators we should have 30 persons selected from among the Canadian population who are representative of the population of Canada.

We came to the conclusion that Parliament itself is the place par excellence for the representation of the people of Canada. If the new committee is to meet with provincial delegations, and if the persons selected for the committee in the fall are representative of the Canadian population, then we do not need to go outside the world of parliamentarians. The input of the people of Canada will be in the public hearings or in the referendum, if a referendum is held.

[Translation]

It is in that spirit that we have made our report. People say that we did not deal with this or that. There is a reason to that: Senate reform did not come under the jurisdiction of our committee and neither did the distribution of powers which is so important to Quebec and many other provinces.

Therefore, it should not come as a surprise that we have barely touched on the legislative powers or symmetry of particular statutes.

That is, in short, our report. There is no need to exaggerate the dissidence of a political party on one item of our terms of reference and on the membership of the constituent assembly.

The spirit that presided over the preparation of the report was excellent. We did all we could to go beyond our party lines. Disagreements were on principles.

That is in brief, honourable senators, the report of the committee.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I listened with great interest to Senator Beaudoin's comments on the report of the Special Joint Committee. I want to thank him and other members of the committee for their work in attending so many public hearings and in producing this final report.

I know that a great deal of work has been put into the report, although I have not had an opportunity to read it in any detail. I will take it with me to Nova Scotia, and there it will have to compete with other attractions, and possibly I will get through it in detail.

I am impressed by the quality of the report. It contains a precise and historical account of the main issues related to the processes amending the Constitution and the present situation.

The report is also useful in its account of views which have been expressed by the Canadian people who appeared, and it is useful in setting forth a number of options that have been put forward in assessing these options. I do not find any elements of rancour or partisanship in the report. I think it is a good contribution to the constitutional debate.

I want to thank my colleague, Senator Gigantès, who sat on the committee, for his enormous work. I understand that he spent a great deal of time and effort and contributed, as well as other members, to the outcome.

Honourable senators, I note that the committee has dealt with the question of the veto and has come out in favour of a regional system of veto, that being the four regions of Canada. Senator Beaudoin may remember that when the joint committee was set up in the Senate I proposed an amendment which drew attention particularly to the amending formula proposed in Victoria. The committee has not adopted that, but has gone for a regional system. I still think that the Victoria formula has the merit today which it had at the time of my amendment.

• (1030)

It is interesting that the committee moved in the direction of a referendum. The committee is proposing that a law be framed to provide for a referendum, but the report does not obligate the holding of a referendum. That decision will be left to the government of the day. I believe, honourable senators, that the committee at that point could have moved further and said that we must have a referendum in order to dispose of our constitutional questions.

However, I believe that events will probably provide additional momentum and that the last word on this question has not been said by the report of this particular committee; but it is positive that the notion of a referendum has been elevated further in this report.

Honourable senators, whether the committee has entirely captured the mood of the country cannot be assessed at the moment. In my view, the mood of the country is based upon a desire for greater public participation in the constitutional process. We all understand that the process which was followed previously will not work, and there has to be an opportunity for public input. Senator Beaudoin says that public input will be provided during the hearings of a yet-to-be-formed constitutional committee where the public will come and present its views. But what role will the public have in the shaping of a consensus throughout the country? What role will the public have in structuring a dialogue that will involve the people in every part of Canada and break the solitudes which now exist within Canada among the various diverse groups who are not speaking to each other? How is that to be broken?

Honourable senators, that brings me to the question of the constituent assembly. Mr. Justice Estey and Mr. Peter Nicholson put forward to the committee a very important proposal for what they described as a "citizens' assembly." The modalities of that proposal are another matter, but it was a proposal that would provide for a dialogue and the shaping of a consensus. On that point, the committee lost the support of the New Democratic Party; it lost the support of the Premier of Ontario; and it lost the support of the Premier of Newfoundland.

Within my own party, I have been arguing that we not rule out the possibility of a constituent assembly. I understand the difficulties at the present time because, if a constituent assembly is opposed, for example, by the Province of Quebec, then it may prove to be an impractical proposition. Nevertheless, it seems to me that it does have the merit of providing, not only input from the Canadian public but the possibility of shaping a consensus within the country, and no one has yet provided a formula that will assist the Canadian people to shape that consensus.

Honourable senators, in his summation, Senator Beaudoin reviewed the Philadelphia experience and the Charlottetown experience, but he did not mention the French experience. However, he did say that legislators have always done this job. Surely what is apparent in the country today is that not everyone is willing to entrust totally this process to the legislators. They are not rejecting the legislators, but they want in, and that was the merit I thought the constitutional assembly would provide.

With all the merit which this report may have, honourable senators, it has not yet, nor has anyone yet, provided the key to bring us to a place where the public in all the regions will participate and will help shape the consensus. As to parliamentary committees and governments—the public will testify that that is the end of their role. All I am saying, honourable senators, is that I think we should be open to the possibility of new and original structures that will advance the discussion to the point where people, other than legislators, have a role in this important enterprise.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable colleagues, I want to make a short intervention for the record. I should like to congratulate our colleague, Senator Beaudoin, for a clear and concise summary of a very complicated report. He pointed out that the NDP could not support the provisions of the constituent assembly, but I would like to add that the sole British Columbian on the committee, Lynn Hunter, added an addendum to the report saying that, as the sole British Columbian on the committee, she wished to promote the concept of B.C. as the fifth region. That is part of the report, and I think it should be noted in this part of the record.

Senator Beaudoin spoke about the lengthy discussion over the B.C. issue but, considering the fact that only one British Columbian served on the committee, I want to point out how inconsistent it would be if the role of Quebec in the amending formula were discussed by a committee representing other provinces with one sole representative from the province of Quebec.

It is not Senator Beaudoin's fault, but the issue of British Columbia was compounded by the fact that it was dealt with at the start of the public hearing process and there were a lot of bugs in the very complicated logistics of setting up public hearings which had not been ironed out. The hearings in Victoria and Vancouver were not advertised, for instance, and the attendance was very sparse. In other words, it was not widely known that the committee was holding hearings. Many groups that were scheduled to speak had to cancel because they did not have the time to prepare material.

● (1040)

An example of this is that in the Yukon, which is part of the Pacific region, the advertisement announcing the hearing ran after the deadline for the briefs. It ran on, say, Thursday or Friday for hearings on the following Tuesday. As I say, this is certainly not our colleague's fault or the fault of the committee. It is just the logistics of the country.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator Beaudoin pointed out that, under the Victoria formula, if a province reaches 25 per cent of the population its powers are enhanced. British Columbia and Yukon presently have about 11 per cent of the population, so this is not, at this point in time, an attractive option.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate the committee that was co-chaired par Senator Beaudoin. As Senator MacEachen pointed out, the committee has done an excellent job.

I nevertheless have one regret concerning one of the recommendations. The constitution of the country, you will agree, is the document that confirms, in a democratic system, the sovereignty of the people. That is what a constitution is all about. As for the government, it does not need a constitution.

The government expresses its authority and the constitution is there to remind him that this authority was temporary delegated to him by the people. So, this ultimate authority is not a gift from God, as they used to say in the Middle Ages. It comes from the people.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It is loaned, not only delegated.

Senator De Bané: Exactly; this authority is loaned for a temporary period.

As Senator MacEachen said regarding your reservations about the referendum, we tell people: No, you cannot participate directly to the drafting of the law of the land. What is the rationale behind this? In spite of the fact that you propose having majorities in each of the regions of the country, that is the Atlantic region, Quebec, Ontario and the Western region, you say that the Government of Quebec has strong reservations about this.

Why is that? Is it because the Government of Quebec wants to be the only one to interpret the desires and the will of Quebecers? Why would Quebecers not also have the right to express themselves?

As you know, in 1982, all the polls showed that a strong majority of Quebecers, that is 80 per cent, were in favour of amending the Constitution Act of 1982. Yet, the government said: We want no part of it.

Senator Beaudoin, I would go so far as to say—

[English]

This country will never achieve political maturity until the day when the people of this country can participate directly in the establishment of their Constitution. If there is one lesson we can draw from over 125 years of experience, it is that letting only the premiers define the aspirations of their citizens has lead us to the situation in which we find ourselves today. It is the same as if the Mayor of Ottawa were to take stock of the interests of the people of Winnipeg before making a decision. I would even go so far as to say that he would be negligent in his duties if he went with the interests of people who did not elect him. That is the situation which we face today. It explains how in Canada today the interprovincial tariff barriers have crippled the economics of this country, because each province thinks only of itself.

The citizens of that province, however, wear two hats. They are members of that particular province but they are also Canadians. If they were given a chance to participate in the drafting of their Constitution we would reach political maturity. So I do not understand why the honourable senator says that even if we have a majority in each region it is not binding anyone. I hope that the next committee that will be established will give the people who are interested in the fundamental law of their country the occasion to participate in drafting it. As Senator MacEachen said, the people want to be part of it. This is the great lesson. Constitutions are not for the government; they are for the people. So let us say, as you have said, that we have to take stock of the different sensitivities of the country.

Only when the people have the right to participate directly will we reach political maturity. I have always thought that this country is so extraordinary, and I have felt privileged to be part of it. We are unique on this planet, we Canadians, but perhaps we have not earned it; we do not deserve it. It is time that the people of this country were united, but to achieve that they must have the right to speak up.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I agree with my friend, Senator De Bané. Unfortunately, what he would like is not possible. I, too, would have liked a binding referendum and I would have liked it inserted in the Constitution as the final word in the amending process. However, the existing Constitution, by which the next change in this current round will have to be negotiated, says that the amending formula itself—and the referendum is part of the amending formula, as Senator De Bané would like it to be—can only be achieved through unanimous consent of the Parliament of Canada and the ten provincial legislatures.

So we in the committee, who would have preferred a referendum rather than the decision of the premiers as a means of finally deciding the Constitution of Canada and its shape, bent to the reality, which is that we cannot do it with the existing formula, and we could not as legislators who have sworn to uphold the existing Constitution. The order that prevails in the country suggests a revolutionary means for overturning the existing Constitution. The closest we could get was a consultative referendum that could be triggered by the government itself, without consulting the provinces as to whether or not to trigger it, because it is a federal move empowered by a federal law.

However, please consider the immense psychological power such a referendum would have upon the provincial legislatures. If a deal is reached and nine provincial legislatures or nine provincial premiers agree and one does not, but the people in that premier's province are for the changes proposed, then I submit to you that we should come as close as we possibly can, within the limits of the existing Constitution, to adopting a referendum as a means of letting the people have influence on what our Constitution should be. I wish it could be otherwise. I wish there were a way of saying the decision must be taken by referendum and not taken by the provincial premiers or by the federal government, but it cannot be. We are bound by the existing Constitution.

So we did what we could and went as far as we could. It was a committee that operated without partisanship, that operated with a common purpose, in which the chemistry was excellent and in which all members of all parties submerged their individual feelings, likes, dislikes or theories, in order to achieve a consensus, within our mandate, which was very narrow and which in many ways put the cart before the horse because the decision on the amending formula will be taken after the deals are made on the sharing of power, and within the even narrower constraints imposed upon us by the existing Constitution. We went as far as possible with that referendum recommendation in order to give a role to the people. I wish we could have gone further.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank some people. Everyone has thanked Senator Beaudoin, and Senator Beaudoin deserves all of this praise, but I would like to mention other people who contributed greatly to the success of this committee. First among them is Jim Edwards, the Chairman, from Alberta, scholarly, fair, intelligent, and someone who kept his word. When the NDP was not participating for some time and said they would not even sign the report, there was not any thought of changing passages to which they had agreed or on which the rest of us had made concessions. Mr. Edwards would not have stood for it if anyone had suggested it—not that anyone did. I should also like to mention Ross Reid, who was the team leader—the scrum half, if you like—of the Tory team: intelligent, flexible and trustworthy.

Senator Doody: And a Newfoundlander!

Senator Gigantès: I should also mention Lorne Nystrom of the NDP and, last but not least, André Ouellet, who showed his great capabilities as a lawyer and as a great Canadian in making the achievement of this difficult compromise possible. I thank them all.

Hon. Gérald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, Senator Gigantès touched on the question of the existing formula and the problems that are facing us right now. Unfortunately, the existing formula does call on the various legislatures of Canada, and on the Parliament of Canada, to amend the existing formula. All of the things that we would like to have in there are dependent on these legislatures changing what needs to be changed. So I will not touch on that point.

I would like to touch on the question of the constituent assembly and the fact that the polls do show that a constituent assembly is in vogue at the present time in Canada. We did hear a great number of witnesses say that constituent assemblies are very important; I will not deny that. As a matter of fact, I was very much in favour of constituent assemblies when we first started the hearings. Gradually, though, over time, I changed my mind because the argument that was being made for having a constituent assembly was that people mistrusted politicians, at both the elected level and in the Senate.

I can understand why people might have a mistrust of appointed senators, but I cannot accept that we should acknowledge the fact that elected officials of this country are to be mistrusted. I will not accept the premise that our elected members of Parliament are not to be trusted. I simply do not accept that fact. If you were to carry the argument a step further, if our elected politicians in the House of Commons are not to be trusted, what then do we do about getting together a constituent assembly? Obviously, if they are appointed by the House of Commons, the constituent assembly members themselves are not to be trusted. If, finally, we elect members to a constituent assembly, they then become politicians and are to be mistrusted.

The point I am trying to make is that our elected members of the House of Commons are, in my view, people who represent the people, whether they be of the Tory or Liberal persuasion, or of other parties, and I believe that, once they are elected, they represent the views of their constituents and they do have the trust, and we should provide them with this trust.

On the question of referendums, Senator MacEachen pointed out the fact that he does favour referendums. I, along with a great number of minority groups in Canada, do not favour referendums. I am a member of a minority group, an official languages minority, and I do not favour referendums. On the surface, "majority wins" sounds great. It sounds very democratic because the majority seems to agree. However, it does leave out a number of people who are not in the majority: minorities like myself, ethnocultural minorities, and aboriginals. If you ask these people what they think of referendums and whether they should be entrenched in the Constitution, I think you would get quite a different answer. The answer may not be as positive as some people would like on the question of referendums.

I would also like to make a point to Senator Carney. She pointed to the fact that advertisements were not published in western Canada. I would beg to differ. Advertisements were aired on TV. As a matter of fact, every time I turned on the TV channel over many months it was indicated that there were to be hearings in western Canada, including B.C. Advertisements were also published in the newspapers many months previously. So it is possibly a question of degree, and it is something that Senator Carney might wish to take up again with the clerks.

Finally, there was some discussion on the question of the fifth region. I am not sure just why Senator Carney did not show up for these meetings, where she could have expressed her views and might even have been able to make a difference in what was finally proposed.

The proposals we have made are solid proposals, in my humble opinion. We approached the writing of the report from a non-partisan point of view, as much as possible, and I think it should be supported by the people. There may possibly be some changes, but I hope that honest-thinking Canadians can support our report. Thank you.

Senator Carney: Honourable senators—

Senator Frith: Look out, senator!

Senator Carney: I have been invited by my colleague to respond, and I will do so very quickly. I do not intend to get into the advertising debate. As a matter of fact, as honourable senators probably know, the advertising was increased after the experience in the west when it was realized that the public was not learning about the hearings in time.

As to why I did not show up at the hearings, I was advised by Jim Edwards, as you should be aware, that it would not be appropriate for me to attend the sessions where the report was being drafted since I was not a member of the committee. My views on the fifth region were made repeatedly at the hearings I attended in Ottawa, Vancouver and Victoria, and, as you are aware, I was unable to travel with the committee. It was not for lack of desire that I did not show up; it was that the co-chairman thought it would not be appropriate for me to do so until the first draft was prepared, and, of course, by that time, it was not useful to do so. That might reassure my colleague.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think Senator Carney was probably out of order in speaking twice, but I was so anxious to hear what she had to say that I did not call her on it.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

FORESTRY

PLIGHT OF FOREST PRODUCTS INDUSTRY—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Perrault. P.C, calling the attention of the Senate to the plight of the forest products industry in British Columbia and in certain other areas of Canada.—(Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.).

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable senators, I wish to respond to the very excellent speech that Senator Perrault gave on this subject. I will not be long because I anticipate the anxiety with which my colleagues would like to start the summer recess, but I would like to make some comments on his speech.

First, I think that Senator Perrault has been very helpful in his discussion of the problems faced by the forest industry at the present time, and the importance to our economy. I want to discuss specifically his remarks about the memorandum of understanding in softwood lumber. I would like to assure honourable senators that I may not only enlighten you on this, but I may entertain you as well, because there are elements in this of mystery, intrigue and sabotage.

I also caution you that I am making these clarifications on the basis of memory, because in an astonishing act of bureaucratic vandalism my papers for this and other aspects of my Ministry of International Trade were destroyed by the officials in External Affairs. We know, and they admit, that they were destroyed. Who ordered their destruction and why we have been unable to determine. Therefore, much of what I am about to tell you I cannot fully document, and the tragedy is that our Canadian history will not be able to fully reflect them because this particular material and the supporting material was shredded. My colleague, Senator Kelleher's papers are there; a great deal of mine are not. I think the official file consists of 13 boxes of letters acknowledging correspondence and signed by my signature machine.

Dealing with some of the specific aspects of Senator Perrault's speech, first of all, he has suggested that we get rid of the memorandum of understanding. I wish we could. I wish it were that easy. The important point to remember is that if we got rid of the memorandum — or the MOU as it is known — negotiated with the Americans, we would trigger a countervail and a countervail is a very vicious form of trade remedy. It is much more onerous than the conditions of the MOU. It would drain hundreds of millions of dollars out of Canada, out of provincial coffers, and it would threaten the exemption from the export tax referred to in the MOU now enjoyed by the Maritime provinces.

Therefore, it is not simply a matter of saying, "Let us dispense with the MOU." It will take time. I have been advised that the protectionism in the U.S. in the next six months is still quite dangerous as they climb out of their recession, and timing is everything in dealing with trade remedies.

Senator Perrault also spoke about the perceived lack of federal government attention to the forest industry. That is perception only. Our government established a full-fledged department of forestry and should get credit for that.

Senator Perrault also spoke about the need to alter radically the stumpage system, which is the means of collecting the economic rent from this resource. He himself knows that 80 per cent of the resource is owned by the provinces. Collecting stumpage is the right of the provinces. It is not our right, except for the few percentage points that the federal government owns mainly in places like the Yukon. He is referring to a remedy which is beyond our powers.

He refers in his speech to remarks by Simon Reisman, saying that possibly we should have hung tougher in negotiating the MOU. Simon Reisman was not part of the negotiations, but he sat cheering on the sidelines. As we all know, Monday morning quarterbacking is an art form, but, at the time, Simon Reisman thought we had negotiated the best deal we could.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Monday morning quarterbacking is an art form, although occasionally in an artless form.

Senator Carney: But I can assure you that at the time he was very supportive. He thought we had done the best, particularly given the loss of revenues from our forests. James Baker, who was then the Secretary of the Treasury, expressed amazement that we had walked off with funds that belonged to us as Canadians. These funds would have gone to Washington and would amount to billions of dollars by this time.

The one point that is very important to correct in terms of Senator Perrault's paper is his suggestion that the Americans were unable to prove that they were dealt with unfairly. This is an assertion that the forest industry makes often, and that has not been proved. I want to say that this ignores the fact that we had already lost this case and had a preliminary determination against us, the first steps in the countervail process. It is not helpful for representatives of the forest industry to run around saying that the Americans had not proved that they were unfairly treated. They had a process in place — and I will show you later some justification — where we were found to be dealing with this issue in a way that their trade laws and their trade remedies said was unfair to them.

Between the preliminary determination, which was against us, and which has been rarely overturned in the history of American trade law, and the final determination, we negotiated an export tax where the federal government collected the tax at the border and returned it to the provinces. It, therefore, did two things. It kept the money in Canada and also allowed the provinces the freedom and the flexibility to increase the stumpage for their own needs.

I am not going to comment any more on Senator Perrault's speech, but I will give you a little history of this debate. It has never really been a matter of public record. In 1983, countervail was sought by the Americans against the Canadian forest industry, and the Canadians won. We won, but it was a very narrow victory. We were advised at the time that it was a flip-of-the-coin kind of victory. It could just as easily have gone against us as for us. In what I consider an act of incredible arrogance, the Canadian industry then proceeded to increase its market share from the 27 per cent, that had triggered the first countervail, to 33 per cent, which then triggered a second one in an atmosphere of much more adverse circumstances with the rising tide of protectionism in the U.S.

• (1110)

Therefore they brought another countervail in 1986 and I inherited this unpleasant situation when I became Minister of Trade. Minister Clark was in charge of the file at the time. He called a meeting in Vancouver that was attended by representatives of the provinces, the unions and the forest industry to discuss how we should deal with it. The consensus of the meeting—and history will show whether this was right or wrong—was to go with due process, to put our faith in the American process. The view of the industry was that we had won in countervail before and we would win it again, not a logical conclusion under the circumstances; but at the end of the day the group, which I attended as a B.C. minister, decided that they would put their faith in the process. It was badly placed faith to rely on the American process and one of the reasons that we negotiated the Free Trade Agreement with the U.S. was to put in place ways of settling disputes on a bi-partisan basis, binding in many cases, to get away from the kind of situation that we faced on the softwood lumber issue.

After that, when the countervail was applied, the industry and the provinces asked us to go to Washington to negotiate. The Secretary of Commerce at the time was the late Malcolm Baldridge, who was my counterpart. We went to Washington. Since we do not own the resource but for which we have the responsibility, we went with the signed agreement of the owners of the forests, the provinces and the industry, and we negotiated in good faith. We pointed out that we had entirely different ways of approaching the management of our forests, entirely different philosophical views of how we treat our natural resources, and that we felt that the American way of dealing with this issue was unfair. We left thinking that we had made some inroads into the American policy.

This is where the process broke down. This has never been publicly revealed, to my knowledge, but on our return we were told bluntly that we would to lose this case. We were told, because of the Privacy Act, and my colleague Senator Murray can elaborate, I cannot give you the names of the individuals involved, but one of the American officials told one of our leading officials something along the lines of, "I am taking off my official hat to tell you that you are going to lose this case, and the countervail against you could be as high as 28 per cent." Now, some might say that that was just a threat, just a negotiating tactic. The circumstances were such that I was inclined to believe that the political interference in the American process would cause us to lose the countervail. As a result, in order to retain the funds in Canada and retain the flexibility of the provinces to increase their stumpage, we negotiated the export tax with the consent of the provinces.

There is one important point to remember when Senator Perrault and people of the forest industry talk about the MOU. We were vulnerable because our stumpage was too low. Our stumpage, in British Columbia particularly, was too low for a number of reasons. This was known and quite openly discussed. It was discussed in the trade press. It was discussed by forestry officials. It was discussed by Jack Munroe, the head of the union. Normally a province is not loath to increase its economic rent. I phoned officials to say that the stumpage was too low and to ask why they were not increasing it. I got that magic answer, "Because an election is coming." The idea was that they would increase stumpage after the B.C. election. Another reason our stumpage was too low is that there had been new advances in technology, there was new machinery in the industry. Without giving you the details, because of the technological changes and because of the increased productivity, the stumpage formula lagged behind those changes and we were not increasing our stumpage. So we were not on fully secure ground in dealing with the issue of subsidies and a stumpage that was too low.

I think that the industry has opposed the MOU for many reasons, one of which, of course, was the fact that they were in favour of freezing the stumpage at a level which was too low. Under the countervail, stumpage would be frozen. They were in favour of it because even though the countervail was applied to the U.S. market the American consumer would pay and that left them free to sell in other markets like Japan, with a reduced stumpage rate. So they had an economic interest in having a frozen stumpage through a countervail process. It was not in British Columbia's interest and it was not in Canada's interest.

It may not have been the best deal. I can only assure the Senate that it was the best deal in the circumstances. It achieved our objectives of flexibility. In terms of sovereignty, it is less intrusive then a countervail. Under a countervail the Americans can look at the books of Canadian companies. The Americans can dictate practices much in excess of what is in the MOU. It was also supported by the provinces who owned the bulk of the timber, 85 per cent of it.

I can assure the house that I would be supportive of any changes in the MOU that could be negotiated, but we should be aware of the fact that it was negotiated under difficult circumstances to support clear Canadian goals and that its early removal implies quite a risk of triggering new trade actions.

I want to thank my colleagues for listening to me on this and to thank Senator Perrault for giving me the opportunity to put this on the record.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Will the honourable senator permit a question? At the opening of your comments you mentioned that the documents had all been lost. I think your presentation this morning is extremely useful to get this on the record. Has there been any attempt to get the other ministers who were involved at that time to write down whatever they recall of the events in order that this could perhaps be published? I think it is very important, in the light of our trade initiatives with the United States and the FTA, that we have, to the extent possible, all of this in writing.

Senator Carney: That is an excellent suggestion. I will explore the possibility of asking the other participants if that could be done. Unfortunately, Malcolm Baldridge died in a tragic accident shortly afterwards, so it may be only a partial record from the Canadian side; but I think the idea has merit.

The Chairman: If no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

NATIONAL UNITY

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move:

> THAT the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to inquire into and make recommendations to Parliament on the proposals of the Government of Canada for a renewed Canada contained in documents to be referred to it, from time to time, by the Government of Canada;
> That ten members of the Senate and twenty members of the House of Commons be appointed to be members of the Special Joint Committee;

That the quorum of the Joint Committee be thirteen Members whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is to be taken so long as both House are represented, and that the Joint Chairs are authorized to hold hearing, to receive evidence and to authorize the printing thereof, when nine Members are present so long as both Houses are represented;

That the members, to act for the Senate, on the Joint Committee be named at a later time by the Standing Committee on Selection;

That it be an instruction to the Joint Committee that it provide Canadians the opportunity to participate fully in the development of the plan proposed by the Government of Canada for a renewed Canada;

That it be an instruction to the Joint Committee that it develop mechanisms designed to encourage and facilitate the participation of individuals and groups of Canadians;

That it be an instruction to the Joint Committee that it develop procedures to ensure that aboriginal peoples participate fully in the development of the plan proposed by the Government of Canada for a renewed Canada;

That it be an instruction to the Joint Committee that it submit its final report not later than February 28, 1992;

That, if either the Senate or the House of Commons is not sitting on the day such report is deposited with the Clerk of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Commons, the same shall be deemed submitted;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to appoint, from among its Members, such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable, and to delegate to such sub-committees all or any of its powers, except the power to report to the Senate;

That the Joint Committee, or sub-committees thereof, be empowered to travel, and to hold public hearings, within Canada;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to hold joint hearings with committees of legislatures or with individual members of provincial and territorial legislatures;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence, from day to day, as may be ordered by the Joint Committee;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to authorize television and radio broadcasting, as it deems appropriate, of any or all of its proceedings and of the proceedings of its sub-committees, pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of proceedings of the House of Commons;

That the parties represented on the Joint Committee be granted allocations for expert assistance with the work of the Committee in proportion to representation of the said parties in the House of Commons;

That the Joint Committee be empowered to retain the services of professional, clerical, and stenographic staff as deemed advisable by the Joint Chairs; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

• (1120)

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have little to say on this motion, but yesterday, when I presented this notice of motion, several questions were raised by honourable senators opposite. Senator Lefebvre suggested that the current quorum arrangements could perhaps be improved on. The current wording provides for a quorum of 13 as long as both houses are represented.

I undertook to do some research for him on this point. I am told that this arrangement is consistent with long-standing practices of joint committees. I have some examples. The Molgat-MacGuigan Joint Committee in 1970, the Hays-Joyal Joint Committee of 1980, the Tremblay-Speyer Joint Committee of 1987, and the Beaudoin-Edwards Joint Committee of 1980 were arranged just as this present proposal suggests. I see no reason at this point to change that, but if honourable senators wish to make representations in the future, then perhaps it can be looked at for future joint committees.

Senator Molgat suggested that the current wording provides for allocations for expert assistance based on the representation of parties in the House of Commons. He suggested that perhaps we should change this to base allocations and representation of both houses, but once again this arrangement is consistent with prior arrangements. Certainly it is identical with the wording of the Beaudoin-Edwards committee. If honourable senators wish extra assistance, perhaps some arrangement can be made with the Internal Economy committee to work it out. Certainly there is assistance available to individual senators, and I am sure that an arrangement could be made for committee members.

Senator MacEachen suggested that it would be preferable to name the members of the committee here in the chamber today rather than go to the Selection committee, as is suggested in the resolution. I have no problem with that. We can do it here today. We would undertake to name our six members, but it would have to be done in such a way that the whips could change them when they wanted to because our side has not had an opportunity or been in a position to allocate the seats on the committee from our side in terms of regional representation or whatever other considerations would be taken into account. So that if we go that route—and I do not see why we should not—we would undertake to take the first six names alphabetically from our membership list here and change it at a later date when the leadership decides which way they want to go.

If that is satisfactory to honourable senators, we would move an amendment to the motion along the lines that I have just suggested.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I appreciate what Senator Doody has said. I have an amendment here, which I will move, which achieves my objective and preserves the possibility of the government's naming its own members later. I do not mind which way it goes, but it would save some possible difficulties if we got this out of the way now—at least from our point of view.

This is what I had in mind as a possible amendment, which can be changed to incorporate the idea that Senator Doody had. It would be an amendment to paragraph four, which is the naming paragraph. It reads:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting the fourth paragraph thereof and substituting the following therefor:
>
> That the members, to act for the Senate on the Joint Committee be the Honourable Senators MacEachen, Frith, Gigantès, Molgat, and others to be named at a later time by the Standing Committee on Selection;"

Do you want to do it that way, or add your own names?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Yes, provided always that the Senate Committee on Selection would not have to come into the Senate if it is decided to launch the committee sometime before Parliament resumes. I could manage that with another amendment.

Senator Doody: This is such an unusual occurrence, and it is delightful to see all of this. The point that I should have made is that if the Selection committee does meet and considers the nominations of the Conservative side, then the custom is that it would have to report back to the Senate so that the report could be adopted by the Senate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I see. Then read your alphabetical list and then the whip selection.

Senator Doody: So that it would be silly to call the Senate back to receive the report of the Selection committee.

Senator Frith: I understand.

Senator Doody: Perhaps we could add our names to the list that Senator MacEachen will propose to the amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting the fourth paragraph thereof and substituting the following therefor:
>
> That the members to act for the Senate on the Joint Committee be the Honourable Senators Atkins, Balfour, Baootes, Beaudoin, Beaulieu, Bélisle, Frith, Gigantès, MacEachen and Molgat.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, is it not necessary to state the further proviso "which names can be substituted therefore by the whips of each party?

[Senator Doody.]

Senator Frith: Our rules provide for that.

Senator Doody: Yes, the rules provide for that.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion in amendment agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the main motion, as amended?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MOTION TO APPOINT COMMISSIONER—DEBATE SUSPENDED

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella, pursuant to notice of June 20, 1991, moved:

> That, in accordance with section 49(1) of the Official Languages Act, R.S.C. 1985 (4th Supp.), c. 31, this House approves the appointment of Victor Goldbloom, O.C., M.D., LL.D., as Commissioner of Official Languages for Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I speak for all the senators when I say thank you to Mr. D'Iberville Fortier, the ex-Commissioner of Official Languages, for his dedication and the exceptional services he provided the State throughout his brilliant carreer of 40 years.

• (1130)

[English]

Mr. Fortier first joined the public service in 1952 and served in Canada and in diplomatic posts world-wide until his appointment as Commissioner of Official Languages nearly seven years ago. On behalf of all honourable senators, we extend best wishes to Mr. Fortier for the years to come.

Honourable senators, it is a great pleasure for me to address the appointment of Dr. Victor Goldbloom as the next Commissioner of Official Languages.

[Translation]

Dr. Goldbloom's background and his expertise in so many areas make him eminently suited to taking the duties of Commissioner.

Dr. Goldbloom chaired the language rights committee of the Court Challenges Program. He is a native of Montreal and a graduate of McGill University. He practised as paediatrician and taught paediatrics for many years before entering public life.

He became chairman of the medical economics committee and was, successively, president of the Association des pédiatres de la province de Québec, the Quebec Medical Association and the Canadian Medical Association. In this latter capacity, he travelled—

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that some senators seem to be disregarding rule 17(3), which states:

> If Senators have occasion to have private conversations in the Senate Chamber, they shall go below the Bar, otherwise the Speaker shall order them to do so.

[Translation]

Senator Kinsella: To come back to Dr. Goldbloom's background, and his involvement in the Quebec Medical Association and Canadian Medical Association, this last responsibility gave him the opportunity to travel across Canada, and to become acquainted with the health care systems and social problems of the provinces and territories.

In 1966, he was elected in the new riding of D'Arcy McGee as its first representative. He represented the riding in the National Assembly for nearly 14 years.

In 1970 he was appointed minister and became the first member of the Jewish community to sit in the Quebec cabinet. Subsequently, he became Quebec's first Minister of the Environment.

In February 1973, he took over the Municipal Affairs portfolio, and in 1975, he also became the minister responsible for the Olympics Installations Board.

Re-elected for a fourth term on November 15, 1976, he resigned his seat in the Fall of 1979 to become president of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews. From 1982 to 1990 he was president of the International Council of Christians and Jews.

[English]

Honourable senators, it is well known that Dr. Goldbloom has been Executive Director of the Fonds de la recherche en santé du Québec since 1990. He is active in community life and participates in numerous voluntarily associations such as the Canadian Council for Native Business, John Lesage Foundation, Jewish Public Establishments Coordinating Committee, Canadian Medical Association's Subcommittee on Environmental and Occupational Health, and chairs a task force for the Canadian Pediatric Society on environmental aspects of day care.

His accomplishments are well known and widely respected. He is an Officer of the Order of Canada and has received the Government of Canada Award for Race Relations. He is an Officer of l'Ordre national du Québec.

The role of Commissioner is an important one: he is an ombudsman and, it is important to underscore, a servant of Parliament, responsible for ensuring the recognition of both official languages and the compliance with the Official Languages Act by federal institutions.

[Translation]

And this mandate, Mr. Goldbloom will have to fill it at a particularly crucial period of our history. The next Commissioner of Official Languages will no doubt want to take an active part in the definition of our country as his predecessors did. Thank you, honourable senators.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Kinsella has eloquently and appropriately put on the record good reason why this motion should be supported.

I only want to add that I agree that Dr. Goldbloom has been associated with, indeed active in, the cause of official bilingualism policies and national unity for many years. I remember, during the days of the B&B Commission hearing him spoken of by many of my colleagues, such as Mr. Laurendeau, Dunton, Lacoste and others. His name was always raised with the greatest of respect and esteem. He is coming into this office, therefore, with an excellent reputation and at a time when the office is particularly and when the whole question of official bilingualism is entering a new era because of the political and constitutional context of our time. This is a good appointment and should be supported.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard Corbin: Honourable senators, I think Senator Molgat also wants to speak.

Honourable senators, I am surprised at the alacrity with which the Speaker wants to dispose of this motion.

Honourable senators, I want to say at the outset, with the reservations I will express later on in my remarks, that I welcome the appointment of Mr. Goldbloom to the position of Commissioner of Official Languages. Without going into details, I can say that I had the opportunity to work with him several years ago. He is, in my opinion, eminently qualified to fill the position left vacant by the departure of Mr. D'Iberville Fortier.

I have noticed that the government merely mentioned the departure of Mr. D'Iberville Fortier. They thanked him in three short sentences, period. When the session resumes in the fall, some of my colleagues will want to get back on that.

Senator Frith: I am sorry to interrupt you, Senator Corbin, but may I have your indulgence. I have to leave, and there is one matter I want to deal with quickly.

Senator Corbin: Certainly, senator. We can suspend the debate for a few minutes.

Debate suspended.

• (1140)

[English]

THE SENATE

TRIBUTE TO DEPARTING PAGE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I appreciate very much that the Honourable Senator Corbin is allowing me to interrupt him, because I have to leave.

I wish to draw the attention of the Senate, as I have on other occasions, to the departure of a Page, Steven Tipman, who has been a Page here since 1989.

He lives in Ottawa. Since he is born of a military family he has lived all across Canada, from British Columbia to Newfoundland, from Victoria to Gander in fact. He has finished his third year of Commerce at the University of Ottawa and will return in the fall to complete his fourth year; but he will not be with us at that time.

I want to express our appreciation to him, for I know that all of us have learned to admire and like him and wish to thank him for his excellent service to the Senate. I am told that he will likely spend the rest of the summer, as much as possible, improving his handicap. I take it that means his golf handicap. Of course, improving your golf handicap depends on your point of view. If you improve it by making it lower, you are liable to lose money; and if you improve it by raising it, you might win some money. I will leave that up to him.

I express our thanks and congratulate him for having joined that distinguished alumnae of former Pages of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I certainly wish to associate this side of the house with the remarks made by Senator Frith and to wish our friend the very best in the years to come. We hope that he has a very successful career.

NATIONAL UNITY

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—CORRECTION OF DRAFTING ERROR

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, while I have the chance, and if Senator Corbin will be generous to me, I would ask to be allowed to bootleg in an item.

It has been brought to my attention that in the motion concerning the joint committee that was adopted a few moments ago there was a drafting error which left out the clause dealing with the aboriginal section. It states:

> "...and in particular on issues of special interest to them."

Perhaps the Clerk can make that correction. I do not think we need to do anything here about it. I wanted to bring it to the attention of the Senate.

I thank honourable senators, and Senator Corbin in particular.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: I was sort of clipped in full flight by both Senator Doody and Senator Frith, but that is not unusual and I do not mind it.

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MOTION TO APPOINT COMMISSIONER—DEBATE RESUMED

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: In any case, as I was saying when I was rudely interrupted in the middle of a sentence, some of our colleagues on this side of the House will want to mention the service record of the retiring Commissionner of Official Languages, Mr. D'Iberville Fortier, and his accomplishments during his term of office. The government representatives have yet to do so.

[Senator Frith.]

It is understandable that the government would be reluctant to appraise the measures taken and the recommendations made by a retiring Commissioner. It could even be embarrassing for a government.

In any case, one can only wonder why the government waited until a couple of hours before the end of this part of the session to suggest the name of Mr. Victor Golbloom. As was pointed out in the other place, we have known for quite some time when Mr. D'Iberville Fortier's term of office would end.

It is very clear that his term could not be extended. But in this case as in so many instances before, the government waited until the last minute and then asked us to expedite matters.

I wonder what became of the decision Mr. Mulroney made some years ago, when he made a suggestion later approved by his Party—that a measure providing that all senior management nominations be subject to review by a parliamentary committee before being ratified.

Of course, the Commmisioner of Official Languages is a parliamentary official, a public servant as we call them. He is a public servant also in that he is in charge of enforcing the provisions of the Official Languages Act and related parliamentary resolutions.

Personally, I would have liked to sit on a committee appointed to question Mr. Goldbloom, but not on his background.

I for one, would have liked to be part of a committee in order to be able to question Mr. Goldbloom, and not on his previous history. We commend him, and rightly so, on the many positions he occupied, in his professional life and on the cultural scene. I have nothing to say about that.

I would have liked to know how he intends to carry on his mandate. Mr. Warren Allmand, the Montreal MP, was pleased with the fact that Mr. Goldbloom was not only the first Quebecer to fill this position, but also the first bilingual Montrealer. Why should we not rejoice with Mr. Allmand and others.

Of course, we want to maintain as much as possible the principle of alternating nominations based on language. I believe that it has been partially adhered to. Of the four previous commissioners, only one was francophone.

It has always been one of the "boys", whether they came from the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario. No one from a linguistic minority outside these two provinces has ever got the job. As if we, French Canadians of the Diaspora, were not capable to do the job! This would surprise me a lot, by the way. Senator Molgat and me, and many others, know distinguished people who all have the required qualifications to perform the duties entrusted to the Commissioner of Official Languages.

However, I am not criticizing Mr. Goldbloom's nomination. On the contrary, I support it. But I hope that one day we will finally see the Canadian reality in its entirety.

If someone deserves in this country the special attention of the Commissioner of Official Languages, if there are groups, communities who deserve his special attention, it is indeed the French Canadians outside Quebec.

I hope that next time another government will take this into account.

Le Devoir reported, as others did, that Mr. Goldbloom's appointment is a good thing for the English-speaking community in Quebec. I have no quarrel with that. I wish I could have questioned him in committee, to ask him how he sees his role towards French-speaking communities elsewhere in this country. This will not be possible in the circumstances.

We will be able to do it after his appointment has received the assent of both Houses, during his first appearing before a Joint Committee on Official Languages, if one is established.

Mr. Phillip Edmonston, M.P. speaking on behalf of the New Democratic Party, suggested that Mr. Goldbloom, a men known for his smoothness, his diplomacy as well as other fine qualities, carry out his mandate with "great patience and humility".

I hope that, while maintaining this personal style, Mr. Goldbloom will become aggressive in the carrying out of his mandate, that he will make sure that the provisions of the Act and all other statutory instruments relating to it are abided by.

After 22 years of implementation of the Official Languages Act, there are still areas, regions and considerations that deserve a little more attention, I would even say lots of it, from the Official Languages Commissioner.

It is why I expect that Mr. Goldbloom, as an officer of Parliament, does not object to our telling him that he will have to carry out his mandate with aggressiveness. No matter what parliamentarians will say, no matter what the Quebec National Assembly or the Alberta Legislature will say! He must act in the best interests of the country.

Last weekend, the Fédération des francophones hors Québec decided to change its name. I always objected to that designation of "francophones hors Québec". I recently had an opportunity to say it in the Senate.

French Canadians who do not live in Quebec no longer want and most of them never wanted to be defined in relation to Quebec. Quebec booed them at times.

• (1150)

We have had premiers in Quebec who said: The francophone minorities of the country are agonizing; they are dying. Why should we take an interest in them? When other provinces adopt linguistic measures that have a negative impact on those whose speak French, Quebec just looks on; it does not do anything anymore.

I think it is time that the Government of Quebec and Quebecers come out of their shell. This whole constitutional exercise has been an exercise in escaping the Canadian reality.

Canada used to be the name of Quebec. Why is Quebec fleeing before the greatness of this country and the opportunities that it offers? Why is Quebec dropping us? Why is that province letting francophone minorities of the country slowly die?

Of course, our cousins from Quebec were had by separatists, by those who live in the past, by those who never accepted the conquest and who never accepted the reality of the Treaty of Paris of 1763.

There are beguilers in this House!

There are some in the other Chamber, who continue to tell their people in Quebec that it is Quebec or nothing, that there won't be a Canada anymore. I find this regrettable.

I believe it is important that, as a French Canadian from New Brunswick, I say so. We are fed up with what has been going on for decades. We are fed up with this malicious gossip, this so-called independence of Quebec. Ladies and gentlemen, come out of your shell! You are a part of Canada. Take advantage of those opportunities and of all the possibilities that are offered to you. Stop scribbling on documents that, most of the time, mean hardly anything! Canada is also the product of Quebec. Be part of that country once and for all.

In any event, we were talking about Mr. Goldbloom. I wish him the best of luck. I anticipate that I will meet him personally. I presume that he will want, like his predecessors, work in close cooperation with the Fédération des communautés francophones et acadiennes du Canada. That is the new name of the FFHQ.

I congratulate those Canadians for having given a definition of themselves based on the country, and not on a part of it. It was about time.

Honourable senators, this is what I wanted to tell you today.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I want first to thank warmly Mr. D'Iberville Fortier for the work he did during that period as a commissioner. It was a difficult period, he was sharply criticized at times, but I think he did his in an honourable way and I thank him for that. I am afraid that we are now entering an even more difficult period than the one M. D'Iberville Fortier had. We hear everywhere that the Spicer group will say that bilingualism must somehow be reduced in Canada. We have organizations like the new Reform Party which, without saying it clear and loud, talk about Quebec being French and the rest of Canada being English. The media all over Canada, and Senator Beaudoin might have heard the same in his committee's hearings are saying more and more that it is the direction we should take. If that is true and if provinces are given the responsibility of protecting minority rights, my dear friends, we can kiss farewell to the French minorities in our country. For us, the Official Languages Act is essential and the job of Official Languages Commissionner is of foremost importance. My friend, Senator Corbin, mentioned that the province of Quebec sometimes kept quiet when the rights of French-Canadians in other provinces were threatened. Unfortunately, on some occasions, it was worse than that because Quebec, even in the West, opposed some important positions that we, francophones, had taken, and supported instead what the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta intended to do, which was depriving us of certain rights, and Quebec went along with them. Therefore, I am very happy to hear of Dr. Goldbloom's appointment. I must admit that I do not know him personally, but all I have heard about him shows that he is undoubtely a very capable, understanding and courageous man. Consequently, I am most happy with this appointment.

However, I cannot ignore that Senator Corbin was saying that, surely, very soon, someone who does not come from Ontario or Quebec could be named to that position. I think it is important we realize that this position, being crucial for out-of-province minorities, might someday be filled by someone from these minorities.

However, I am not criticizing Dr. Goldbloom's appointment. I have heard nothing but praise in this respect, and I am delighted. However, I want to emphasize how important it will be, considering what is happening in this country today, for the Commissioner to be his own man, and, as Senator Corbin said, a man who does not give in to Ottawa or to the provinces, but always puts his position and official languages first.

Hon. Claude Castonguay: Honourable senators, I would like to add a few brief comments on Dr. Goldbloom's appointment to this important position. I had a chance to work very closely with Dr. Goldbloom when he and I were members of the Quebec government in 1970. At the time, Dr. Goldbloom started as Minister of State for Health, when I held the position of Minister of Health.

I also had occasion to consult him when I chaired a commission of inquiry on health care and when Dr. Goldbloom had become a very respected member of the medical profession.

I followed Dr. Goldbloom's career and saw how he coped with very difficult circumstances, for instance when he was given responsibility for the Olympic Games facilities.

I can assure you, honourable senators, and this for the benefit of those who have not had a chance to know Dr. Goldbloom personally, that it would have been difficult to find a man of greater integrity, a man who is more conscientious and better suited to fill this very difficult position, especially considering the present and future debate on our official languages policy and the protection of minority rights.

In a word, this is an excellent appointment and I support it wholeheartedly. Thank you.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

[Senator Molgat.]

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
K1A 0A1
THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

June 21, 1991

Mr. Speaker:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Charles D. Gonthier, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 21st day of June, 1991, at 12:10 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,

Judith A. LaRocque
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h) I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 17th September, 1991, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, according TO the new rules for Royal Assent, rule number 114(4) states:

> If the Senate has completed its business for the day prior to the hour fixed in the message received pursuant to section (2) above, the Speaker shall suspend the sitting until not later than five minutes before the time set for the arrival of the Personage outlined in the message. When the sitting resumes, the Speaker shall order the bells to call in the Senators to be sounded for not more than five minutes.

Therefore I shall suspend the sitting and we will ring the bells at 12:05.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Right Honourable Charles D. Gonthier, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to facilitate combatting the laundering of proceeds of crime (Bill C-9, Chapter 26, 1991)

An Act to amend the National Energy Board Act (Bill C-2, Chapter 27, 1991)

An Act respecting the exporting, importing, manufacturing, buying or selling of or other dealing with certain weapons (Bill C-6, Chapter 28, 1991)

The Honourable John A. Fraser, The Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending 31st March, 1992 (Bill C-24, Chapter 29, 1991)

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

• (1220)

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on moving the adjournment, may I wish my colleagues on both sides of the house a very pleasant summer and thank the staff for their efforts during the year. I hope that next year will not be quite as strenuous for you as this one has been.

Hon. William J. Petten: If I might echo the thoughts of my colleague on the other side, I hope we all have a pleasant summer and that when we come back it will be to a kinder and gentler place.

The Hon. the Speaker: You might all want to celebrate that in my chambers after this motion passes.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 17, 1991.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, September 17, 1991

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE SENATE

STATEMENT BY THE HONOURABLE RHÉAL BÉLISLE ON HIS APPOINTMENT AS SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to say thank you to all of you for giving me the privilege and the honour to preside over your deliberations. I am your humble servant at all times. I will be very patient and impartial, but I need the cooperation, the assistance and the tolerance of the two leaders, the deputy leaders, the two whips and every member of this honourable house, be it senators or those who serve us in this assembly.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to express our thanks for what the Speaker pro tempore has said, and to tell him and colleagues that we are encouraged by his promise of impartiality. We have heard his invitation to cooperation. We on this side had no objection to his appointment as Speaker pro tempore, but since he chose to put something on the record on that subject it should also be put on the record that we were not at any time consulted about that appointment.

THE LATE HONOURABLE AZELLUS DENIS, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I regret the necessity of rising at this time to pay tribute to the memory of our late colleague, the Honourable Azellus Denis, who passed away suddenly during our parliamentary recess and whose funeral we attended in Montreal a week ago Saturday. As honourable colleagues will recall, Senator Denis was in his seat in the Senate in the last days before the recess and even though he had been ailing, he certainly had not complained or given any external sign of his illness, at least to those of us who were not close to him in that sense.

I can only refer to Azellus Denis' parliamentary career because that, in a sense, represents his entire life. I do not know of any other parliamentarian who has had a career spanning almost 56 years, both in the House of Commons and in the Senate. He was elected in 1935 at the same time as other notable Canadian figures such as the Honourable Paul Martin, who is still with us, and served in the House of Commons under the Hon. Louis St. Laurent. Subsequently, he was appointed to the cabinet after the Hon. Lester Pearson became Prime Minister.

Undoubtedly, as was pointed out at the funeral service by his successor in his constituency, Marcel Prud'homme, Azellus Denis has always been an able constituency advocate, and he maintained the confidence of his electorate in that constituency from 1935 until his appointment to the Senate by Mr. Pearson in 1964.

Azellus served as an active member of the Liberal caucus and was a critic of postal matters in the Diefenbaker administration. He became Postmaster General in the Pearson government. Presumably he wanted to come to the Senate, because he held that post for a very short time before he was summoned to the Senate. He remained among us until his recent death.

Azellus referred to the possibility of being summoned to the Senate in 1963, just a year before that event occurred, when he said, "Some people want to send me to the other place and others want to keep me here. I cannot cut myself in two and I suggest that the decision should be left to those responsible. Then we will know if the House loses or the Senate gains."

Honourable Senators, he did come to the Senate and I believe that the Senate did gain by his presence. In his maiden speech, he expressed his pride at being summoned to the Senate when he said, "Honourable Senators, I want to say how proud I am to be among you. I am grateful for the warm welcome you gave me and I intend to show myself worthy of such a distinguished company." He certainly proved himself worthy of the company and worthy of his post.

I can say that, since I became Leader of the Senate, relatively recently, Senator Denis was among the most faithful servants of the Senate. He was here all the time. In examining the records of the Senate, I believe that, certainly as far as this side is concerned, he had the best attendance record of any and, I believe, the best voting record. He was always here, every day, and he gave us the benefit of his support and his service.

Those of us who went to his funeral in Montreal were struck by the feeling expressed at that event by those who attended and by the warm tributes paid to him by Marcel Prud'homme. I was filled with reminiscences, not only because of the event and the long time I had been associated with Senator Denis, but also because of the number of former parliamentarians who suddenly appeared to attend the funeral, including Paul Tardif, Gaston Clermont, and Guy Rouleau.

• (1410)

I travelled to Montreal with Senator Petten, Senator Lefebvre, several former members of the House of Commons and the Black Rod. I want to thank the Black Rod for his co-operation and courtesy in arranging our attendance at the funeral. I can only say that Azellus was well loved and was given a grand farewell.

I had the opportunity of meeting his bereaved widow, who spoke to each of us as we entered the church, and once again I extend to her, on behalf of all of us on this side, our condolences.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, we all mourn the passing of the dean of Parliament, a colleague who first came here at the age of 28 and who left us at the age of 83. He spent 56 years in Parliament, divided, as the Leader of the Opposition just told us, almost equally between the House of Commons and the Senate. In 56 years, Azellus Denis made only friends on Parliament Hill. His humour and good sense made the debates and question periods more lively and colourful here and in the other place.

He was a nationalist and a federalist, a proud Quebecker and a proud Canadian. He had very firm opinions that he expressed very clearly on the great national issues.

He was proud to serve in Parliament. It was edifying to see this octogenarian, after more than half a century on Parliament Hill, still taking immense satisfaction in serving the public.

Over the years, he became wise, with no illusions, but never cynical. The hearts of his family and friends were no doubt warmed that so many of his former constituents showed their affection and respect for him and their sorrow when he died. They expressed their gratitude to the man who had served them so well.

Marcel Prud'homme referred to that in his excellent speech at the funeral in Montreal.

Réal Caouette, the former leader of the Créditiste Party in the House of Commons, once said of Azellus Denis that he was a Liberal to the bone, but a gentleman. He will all miss him.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I would like to take a few moments to recall in this chamber my friendship with Senator Denis. I met Senator Denis when I arrived here in 1979, but I must admit our initial conversations were not about important national issues.

Over the years, Senator Denis became a man whose advice I cherished. He was a typical French Canadian, just I imagined them as a member of the New Brunswick Legislature. In fact, I had met a number of members of the Quebec National Assembly but very few federal members or senators.

He was charming, intelligent and wise. He was an actor, a singer and a story teller. He was above all a Canadian. He was also a Quebecer. He was a member of the Liberal Party but had conservative instincts. When I went to his office, he would often say: Just look at the waste in government, the mounds of paper work! He couldn't stand that. He was conservative that way but he was an active member of the Liberal Party.

In losing Senator Denis, I think Quebec, has lost a man it will be difficult to replace.

The young elite of Quebec the academics and journalists would do well to read again what Senator Denis said during the 50 years he spent here in Parliament. Canada has lost a great Canadian, Quebec has lost a great Quebecer and I have lost a dear friend.

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Senator Denis. Those who were in the Liberal Party in Quebec during the past 50 years all knew Senator Azellus Denis. Senator Denis was elected in 1935, as was said by one of my colleagues. He was a member of the House of Commons until 1964, a total of 28 years. From 1964 to 1991, he spent another 28 years in the Senate. So he spent 28 years in the House of Commons and 28 in the Senate. That is quite a record.

He was a populist MP. He represented the riding of Saint-Denis in the north-central part of Montreal. In those days, people were often referred to according to the Roman Catholic parish to which they belonged in the French Canadian part of Montreal. Azellus came from the Saint-Denis parish. He followed in the footsteps of an older brother or an uncle who was a physician. It was a long-standing family tradition.

I said that he was populist, but he was also popular, having been reelected so many times. In fact, he never had any difficulty winning votes.

Some of you may recall that the Depression was not over yet in 1935. There was nothing to do. Few people had radios. There was no television.

Senator Molson will surely remember that the Forum was empty. I was in my first year of high school at the Collège Sainte-Marie and students were invited to the games free at the Forum. That is how I got to see Howie Morenz, Pit Lépine and all the great players of that era.

What was there to do but to get together in parish halls? They had no money, so they played cards.

If Azelus Denis handled cards so skillfully, as some would point out from time to time, it is out of his dedication for his constituents. Every Saturday and Sunday, he would visit parish halls in his riding to meet them and take part in the most commonly played game: a game of cards.

Senator Azelus Denis can certainly be praised for his good work as a member of Parliament and for having put forward throughout his career truly people-oriented ideas, for he spoke frankly, without beating around the bush or theorizing. He spoke to his constituents as he spoke here, in the Senate, and as he did before in the other place.

After such a long career, Azelus Denis indeed deserves to be remembered. I was unfortunately out of town and could not attend his funeral. I am all the more grateful for this opportunity to pay tribute to this great man, whom I hope will be remembered as a dedicated member of Parliament.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform the Senate that the time for statements has expired. However, if there is unanimous consent the time can be extended.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to add briefly to the homage and regrets aimed at our colleague, Senator Azellus Denis.

My association with Senator Denis goes farther back then his being called to the Senate and naturally, mine. It goes back to the time when he was Postmaster General. I was a freshly elected member of the provincial legislature of Manitoba. But even at that time we had occasional problems with the post office. I must admit that they were not nearly as common as they are today. I had the opportunity to come to Ottawa and visit the Postmaster General. What impressed me in this man was his understanding of people and their needs. Later, when I came to the Senate, he had already been a senator for a while and I could renew our past friendship.

I continued to see, once again, in Senator Azellus Denis that man who understood the Canadian people. Since then, I often told myself that Canada and all of us would have been better off if we had listened more often to Senator Denis' advice.

THE HONOURABLE JOHN LYNCH-STAUNTON

APPOINTMENT AS DEPUTY LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, on another matter, if you allow me, I would like to inform you of the very recent appointment of our friend, Senator John Lynch-Staunton, as Deputy Leader of the Government.

It has long been an open secret that Senator Doody wanted to leave his position. Finally, we have been able to find him a successor worthy of the tradition.

[English]

Senator Lynch-Staunton, as all honourable senators are aware, is a businessman from Montreal who is experienced in the private sector and in government, having been Vice-Chairman of the Executive Committee of the City of Montreal, which is where I first met him back in the mid-1970s. I am very pleased, as I know all of my colleagues on this side are, that he has agreed to accept this extremely difficult position.

There are very few here who truly appreciate how complex and difficult is the post of Deputy Leader of the Government. Senator Doody held it for seven years. Senator Frith was Deputy Leader of the Government in this place from 1980, if I am not mistaken, until 1984, and he has served as Deputy Leader of the Opposition since. It is, as all honourable senators know, a post that requires enormous dedication to duty, tremendous reserves of patience, goodwill, and good humour. Senator Doody was never lacking in those attributes. I hope to have the opportunity to pay a more elaborate tribute to him on his return from the Commonwealth meeting in India, where he now is.

For the moment, I simply welcome Senator Lynch-Staunton to these duties and express the hope and expectation that all senators will find him a delightful person to work with and that they will cooperate to the fullest extent with him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

UNITED SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLIC—DISMANTLING OF COMMUNISM—INDEPENDENCE AND SOVEREIGNTY OF BALTIC STATES—EXPRESSION OF SUPPORT

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, pursuant to the new rules I, too, wish to make a statement at this time. I believe that most if not all of us in this chamber followed with astonishment the breathtaking, momentous and historic political events in the U.S.S.R. following a revolution by the people resulting in the dismantling of the former communist power in that country—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable Senator Haidasz, the time for statements is over. You will have to present your statement under Motions, but not now.

Senator Haidasz: Then I shall wait until you call Motions.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, I thought he was making a statement and that the Chair had extended the time for statements to 30 minutes.

Senator Haidasz: I wished to make a statement, just as other senators made statements earlier this afternoon.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I may, I think the rule provides for an extension in such cases and given the importance of the subject matter—

Senator Frith: But you have already given an extension.

Senator Murray: —that Senator Haidasz wishes to raise, we on this side would have no objection whatever to his doing so.

Senator Frith: Perhaps we had better understand how this rule is to work. Fifteen minutes was called at the time Senator Molgat rose to speak under the heading "Statements". I was looking at something else at the time, but I thought I distinctly heard someone say, "Shall we extend?", and I heard others say, "Yes". That means that the time was extended for 30 minutes.

Senator MacEachen started at 2:07. Thus, 30 minutes from then should add another 10 minutes before the period has fully expired. I do not think it should be done one by one. If it is extended for 30 minutes, then it is extended by 30 minutes.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I am only following the instructions of the Table Officers, and I was told that the time had expired.

Senator Frith: I have read these rules and I am learning something new about them every day. Are we suggesting that under the heading "Statements" the Table Officers tell senators when they can speak? All they do is tell you, Mr. Speaker, when the 15 minutes is up. Then, if there is to be an extension under Rule 22, it is extended to 30 minutes. If it is extended to 30 minutes, it is extended. We do not have to keep doing it for every senator.

• (1430)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not know quite what the justification is for the interpretation the honourable senator has put on the rule. When the 15 minutes expired we extended it to hear Senator Molgat speak in tribute to Senator Denis.

Senator Frith: Did I say that? Is that what the record shows?

Senator Murray: I confess that I entered the fray with a statement concerning the appointment of the new Deputy Leader of the Government.

Senator Frith: You did not ask for leave for that, and you did not need it.

Senator Murray: I think ordinarily I would need leave, and I think the practice in legislative assemblies working under these kinds of time limits has been that extensions are given to hear a particular speaker or for a particular speaker to be allowed to complete his remarks. I have no doubt that that is the way we will function here in future. Having said that, I am aware that Senator Haidasz wishes to make a brief statement on matters that are, as he indicated in the few words he managed to get out, of global importance. I believe the house would be disposed to extend the time to hear him.

Senator Haidasz: Thank you, honourable senators. I believe that most, if not all of us in this chamber—

Senator Frith: What is your impartial ruling on this point, Your Honour? Shouldn't we know? Does it go for 15 minutes? We will follow the rules.

Senator Murray: Not necessarily.

Senator Frith: Does it go for 15 minutes and then you are notified and then leave is given to each individual? That is fine with me if that is the way it is. The rule says that the time can be extended, as I understand it, up to 30 minutes. What is the practice? Will you give us a ruling on that? If the time is extended, does it extend for up to 30 minutes or does every individual senator have to have individual permission?

Senator MacEachen: Perhaps Senator Robertson will tell us.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: An extension was requested and I asked if permission were granted.

Senator Frith: Permission for what?

Senator Haidasz: To extend.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Senator Haidasz did not take his time until Senator Murray rose—

Senator Frith: They are your rules. Is the extension that you granted an extension of the period to 30 minutes, or is it an extension only for each individual?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I did not say 30 minutes. I gave an extension based on the unanimity of the house.

Senator Frith: Your Honour, I am not asking what you said. My question was: When you granted the extension, does that mean the time is extended for 30 minutes for the whole period, or are you only extending it for each individual who asks for an extension? That is a straightforward question.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I should like to inform my honourable colleague that whenever a new subject or new item comes up, if the house gives unanimous consent it will be granted for 30 minutes.

Senator Murray: Up to 30 minutes. Perhaps it would be useful to put the rule on the record. Rule 22(8) reads in part:

> . . . if such leave is granted, the time provided for the item will be extended for a period not to exceed thirty minutes.

A period not to exceed 30 minutes, as the honourable senator knows, can be anywhere from one to 29 minutes.

Senator Frith: And the item spoken to can be extended for a period of 30 minutes. So each item can go up to 30 minutes.

Senator Murray: You should read the rules.

Senator Frith: I have read them, and you have just given us an interpretation. I expect the Speaker is listening to the honourable senator. He is prepared to listen to whatever the clerks have to tell him, so I am sure he is prepared to listen to you. So the Leader of the Government has told us that the time for each item is extended for 30 minutes.

Senator Murray: No, the period.

Senator Frith: It is not each item; it is the whole period. The whole period is extended for up to 30 minutes.

Senator Murray: Yes.

Senator Frith: Of course it is up to 30 minutes. We may not wish to take advantage of the whole 30 minutes, but the question is: Is the period extended for 30 minutes or is each item? Anyway, we will see lots of these pearls of careful thought and lucid expression of rules in the months to come, I am sure.

Senator Haidasz: Thank you, honourable senators. For the sake of continuity I shall repeat what I said a few moments ago.

Having given notice earlier today to a clerk at the Table that I wished to make a statement at the opening of the session, I now take the opportunity, with your indulgence, to make the folloing statement. I believe that most if not all of us in this chamber followed with astonishment the breath-taking, momentous and historic political events in the U.S.S.R. following a revolution by the Soviet people resulting in the dismantling of the former communist power in that country.

I believe we also followed with great satisfaction the formal restoration of the independence and sovereignty of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. Although the Secretary of State for External Affairs, on her way to Moscow and Kiev, did not visit these Baltic countries, we welcomed the visit of the Minister for International Trade, my co-chairman on the Parliamentry sponsoring committee of the annual Baltic cultural event on Parliament Hill, who visited Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania along with representatives from the Estonian, Latvia and Lithuanian communities of Canada.

While there, he carried out, on behalf of the Canadian government, the re-establishment, finally, of diplomatic relations with Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania and, at the same time, announced Canada's ambassadors to those countries. I believe it is important for all Canadians to urge and support the Canadian government in offering assistance to those countries in the building of democratic institutions and the development of trade relations and cultural exchanges with Canada.

Today, on the occasion of the opening of the forty-sixth General Assembly of the United Nations in New York, I invite all honourable senators to unite with me in expressing joy on the admission of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania to that international body and on their joining the world family after 51 years of foreign domination and violation of human rights perpetrated against the Baltic peoples. Long live Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania!

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Presentation of Reports from Inter-Parliamentary Delegations:

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, under the old rules, when we wanted to present a report on an interparliamentary delegation, we put it down as a Notice of Inquiry. If that is necessary, I will be glad to do so.

The only reason I raise this now is that Senator Barootes and I were involved in parliamentary association meetings that took place in Turkey and the Soviet Union. We both learned some things at those meetings that we think should be on the record. Therefore, at this stage, I would give notice under Item No. 9 or, alternatively, under Item No. 11, which is Notices of Inquiries. I am not asking for a ruling on this matter today, but for future reference I should like to know whether this comes under one item or the other. I do not want to miss this opportunity to give notice. If I am informed that all that is required is to give notice now, then in future I will bring it up under Item No. 9. However, if it is required that I give notice under Item No. 11, then I shall also be glad to do that.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I am in the same position as my honourable friend. I attended an interparliamentary meeting in respect of NATO last spring and I should like to table a short report on the proceedings of that activity. I suspect that all I need to do is ask permission now to do so. If that is the case, then I would ask permission to table my report and have it added to our proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is permission granted to both requests?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What were we being asked permission for?

Senator MacEachen: It has to do with reports of interparliamentary delegations.

Senator Roblin: In rising on this item on the Orders of the Day, I wish to advise the Senate that I was a delegate at a parliamentary meeting at the Hague and I would like to acquaint the Senate of my report. My suggestion was that I be allowed to table it and have it added to our proceedings for the information of anyone who wishes to read it.

Senator Olson: My purpose in rising was slightly different. I understand Senator Roblin has his report ready today. I do not have my report ready today but I wanted to give notice, if that is what is required under the new rules, that I will subsequently — and it may not be tomorrow, but some day later on — put in my report. I raised the question of whether I am required to put it under Notices of Enquiries and my understanding is that I do not. I understand that, by giving notice, I can introduce this under Item No. 9.

Senator Frith: If that has now been accepted, and I guess it has, I should just like to note that, if we are going to permit people, in effect, to table their speeches, it would be quite a departure from our normal practices. If all we are talking about is that someone can table a report from an interparliamentary delegation and then speak to it, that is quite different. I take it we are not talking about tabling our speeches, because, if we are, that is a major departure. It is something we have always refused to allow. Senators and Representatives in the U.S. Congress can stand up and table a speech, or even a bill, and have it sent out to the constituents. As far as I know, that has always been resisted in the Parliament of Canada. I hope that is not what we are agreeing to and, if we are, we know what we are doing. I hope the matter is still open as to whether we have changed the practice so that senators can stand up and table speeches. I think it is not a good practice and I hope we have not established that practice or just jemmied the door open a bit so that we will be able to do it in the future.

Honourable senators, I should also like to clear up a point we were dealing with earlier under these new "tablets of stone" that we got from Moses — I am sorry, not Moses, Brenda. The question of extending this 15-minute period is specifically dealt with in the rules. As honourable senators know, the new rules generally allow 15 minutes for all senators' statements — all 104, or 106 as it is now. We are allowed 15 minutes in total to make statements. I do not know if anyone has a computer and can divide that to find the average amount of time allowed for 104 people.

The provision is found in Rule 22(8) which specifically states in the margin:

Leave to extend time for "Senators' Statements"

The rule states:

> At any time during the time provided for consideration of "Senators' Statements", either Whip may approach the Speaker and request that the time provided for the item be extended. If such a request is received, the Speaker shall so inform the Senate at the next opportunity and shall, at the end of the time provided for the item . . .

This is what the Leader and I have a disagreement about. Is it the item being spoken to or the item on the agenda? That is certainly not clear. The rule goes on to state:

> . . . ask if the Senate grants leave to extend the time provided for the item . . .

If it means the item I am speaking to, then it would mean I could extend it for 30 minutes; or does it mean the item on the agenda which, in fact, I assume it means? It goes on to state:

> . . . and, if such leave is granted, the time provided for the item will be extended for a period not to exceed thirty minutes.

Does that mean tht I can get an extension of up to 30 minutes for my item? I admit that I was reading the rules, but I did not notice either Senator Petten or Senator Phillips approaching, clutching their forelocks to the Speaker and asking if this could be extended. Perhaps they did, but I must have missed it.

In any event, I do not believe that the question of the word "item" is as clear as Senator Murray likes to think it is, but I must say that, in the interests of freedom to speak in this place, I like his interpretation, namely, that my item is extended for 30 minutes rather than the whole item on the agenda.

Senator Murray: That is not my interpretation.

Senator Frith: Oh, I would not have thought so.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED CANADIAN AID TO SOVIET UNION AND CURRENT CONSTITUENT REPUBLICS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, the 18th of September, I will call the attention of the Senate to the proposed Canadian aid to the Soviet Union and its current constituent republics. I am not sure that that is clear, but I do not know how else to describe it at the moment.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN GRAINS—ANTICIPATED LOW MONETARY RETURNS—EFFECT ON FARMERS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next I will call the attention of the Senate to the prospects for the sale of Canadian grains, and the effect on farmers of the anticipated low monetary returns from those sales.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I would like to clarify what has happened here. Under the heading Notices of Inquiries, Senator Olson gave notice of an inquiry. My good friend across the way tabled papers, and in both cases the Speaker asked if there was consent by the assembly. Must one now obtain consent to give notice of an inquiry?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Bonnell: Why did the Speaker then ask if consent was given for the notice of inquiry?

Senator Murray: Ask him why he did it.

Senator Barootes: Look at page 26.

Senator Bonnell: That is what I am looking at, but I notice the Speaker asked whether leave was given to have this happen. I did not think leave had to be given before a senator could give notice of an inquiry.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have some petitions. If we were coming back to school I would be saying, "How I spent my summer". One of the ways I spent my summer was to receive petitions.

Senator Barootes: I did not quite get the verb.

Senator Frith: "Receive". I did not "solicit" any of them. The verb is "receiving" and not, for absolute certainty, "soliciting".

To save my reading each one, the outside of the petition is addressed to me. The prayer is, as before, a request that the universal 7 per cent goods and services tax adopted by the Conservative government will create serious unjust and inhuman difficulties to Canadians; whereas the implementation of this tax will constitute a unprecedented assault on the income of Canadians, not only by forcing them to pay higher taxes, but also by confronting them with a rise in inflation, interest rates and unemployment; whereas the methods used by the government are unworthy of a democratic society. They are rather the work of lawmakers that want to implement a dictatorship, snapping their fingers at the general opposition of the population.

As you can see, there has been some redrafting done during the summer.

Senator Simard: Is this the prayer?

Senator Frith: No, that is the "whereas". Now the prayer: "Wherefore the undersigned, your Petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the Senators and MPs, the true representatives of the people, to do everything possible to abolish the new Goods and Services Tax, and we strongly demand a general election immediately. Canadian producers—" et cetera. It is the same wording as in the others that I have tabled.

[Senator Olson.]

From Alberta they are from Berwyn, Donnelly, Edmonton, Edson, Fairview, Falher, Girouxville, Grimshaw, Hines Creek, Legal, Manning, North Star, Peace River, Rainbow Lake, Whitelaw, White Rock and Worsley.

There are some signatures in here from B.C. and there are a total of 69.

From Manitoba there is a group from Kildonan, St. Vital, St. Boniface and Winnipeg. Again there are approximately 23 in each and there are approximately 20 total.

From New Brunswick there are signatures from Atholville, Bae-Ste. Anne, Bas-Caraquet, Bertrand, Blacks Harbour, Bonny River, Campbellton, Caraquet, Chatham, Grande-Anse, Kouchibouguac, Lameque, Le Goulet, Lower Neguae, Maisonnette, Moncton, Neguae, Pennfield, Pokemouche, Rogersville, Saint John, St. Isidore, St. Leolin, St. Leonard, St. Limon, St. Simon, Seeley's Cove and Tracadie.

I do not have a total for those but there are 20 to 23 on each sheet and there appears to be 10 to 20 sheets; so there are some 200 to 300 names there.

From Ontario there are names from Belleville, Britt, Burlington, Chelmsford, Chesterville, Cobalt, Copper Cliff, Cornwall, Crysler, Don Mills, Etobicoke, Haileybury, Huntsville, Iroquis Falls, Kapuskasing, Kenabeek, Kirkland Lake, Larder Lake, Lively, London, Marathon, Matachewan, Mattawa, Mississauga, Moonbeam, Morewood, New Liskeard, Nobel, North Bay, North Cobalt, North York, Oakville, Ottawa, Papineau Township—a Quebec one—Pickering, Sault Ste Marie, Smooth Rock Falls, Sudbury, Sultan, Timmins, Toronto, Trenton, Valrita, Varna and Virginiatown.

There are red flags on those names of people from places outside Ontario, perhaps people visiting relatives.

I have a large number from Quebec, as you can see. There must be 50 pages with an average of 20 names. They are from Albanel, Anjou, Arthabaska, Asbestos, Baie D'Urfe, Barrante, Beaudry, Bedford, Beloeil, Blue Sea Lake, Boucherville, Bouchette, Brigham, Bromont, Brossard, Cantley, Charlemagne, Chateauguay, Chesterville, Chibougamau, Chicoutimi, Cowanville, Delson, Dolbeau, Drummondville, Dunham, Evain, Farley, Farnham, Frontenac, Gatineau, Gracefield, Greenfield Park, Hemmingford, Hull, Jonquiere, La Baie, La Plaine, La Salle, La Sarre, L'Assomption, L'Epiphanie, L'Averir, Lac Megantic, Les Cedres, Longueil, Mascouche, Malartic, Maniwaki, Mercier, Messines, Montreal, N.D.G. Noranda, Norbertville, Northfield, Notre Dame de Ham, Ormstown, Pierrefonds, Pointe Claire, Prevost, Princeville, Rawdon, Repentigny, Restigouche, Riviere-Beaudette, Riviere-Heva, Rougemont, Rouyn-Noranda, Roxton Falls, St. Amable, St. Andre, St. Armand, St. Bernard D'Lacolle, Ste. Catherine, St. Constant, St. Eugene, St. Eustache, St. Helene, St. Isidore, St. Jean-Baptiste, St. Joachin, St. Leonard, St. Michel, St. Nazaire, St. Norbert, St. Remi, St. Rosaire, Shawinigan, Sorel, Stanbridge, Thetford Mines, Tracy, Trois Rivieres, Val D'Or, Valleyfield, Vassan, Verdun, Victoriaville, Ville de la Baie, Ville Las, Ville St. Pierre, Ville Saint-Laurent, Warden, Waterloo and Wickham.

• (1500)

[English]

Some of those names are mixed. Those names are flagged. You may have noticed that I read some names from New Brunswick. I have flagged the names that are from outside of Quebec, but most of them are from Quebec. One of the names included in one of the petitions—and I am sure it was included for comic relief—was the name of Brian Mulroney.

Those are the petitions that I present from the summer. It is quite clear that the rage of the people against the GST and the manner in which that GST was rammed down their throats has not subsided during the summer heat.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I did not have as productive a vacation as Senator Frith. Nevertheless, here are some petitions; more will come in the next few days. I have the honour to present a petition signed by 75 young Ontarians who deplore the fact that the GST credit is not available to young Canadians under 19 who do not live with their parents and who pay tax. They ask the Senate to urge the government to correc this injustice. These petitions come mainly from Barrie, Etobicoke, Port Perry, Midland, Orillia and Mississauga.

I have another one here that is more general; it does not focus on the problem of young people but is still concerned with the GST. I have the honour to present a petition signed by 43 Albertans who are opposed to the goods and services tax. These petitions come mainly from Brimshaw, Peace River, Valley View and Dicksonville.

[English]

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, over the summer I, too, received quite a large number of petitions from mainly Indian people across Canada. It was coordinated by the Association of Iroquois and Allied Indians in London, Ontario.

There are about 40 or 50 petitions here with about 25 signatures each. Their concern is also related to the GST. I will not read the whole petition but will indicate that their concern is indicated in the last paragraph. It states:

> The undersigned, your petitioners, call upon the Senate to fulfill its responsibilities to the citizens of the First Nations in Canada by taking immediate steps to rectify the deficiencies of the policy guidelines, including changes which will protect the taxation immunity of First Nations citizens both on or off reserve lands including those citizens who do not as yet have recognized reserve lands.

The petitioners are from all over Canada. That gives us an indication of what our people think about the GST on a national basis. I was going through some of the places on the petitions. There is one from Merritt, B.C.; Thompson, Manitoba; Sturgeon Lake, Saskatchewan; Vancouver; Brandon, Manitoba; Squamish, B.C.; Peterborough, Ontario; and so on.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, there were other people busy during the summer also. I have a petition log that I keep in my office. It contains all the petitions that came in since we adjourned. It runs from June 17 to September 16, 1991. We received 1,042 petitions supporting the report: It's Almost Too Late, tabled in the Senate by the Senate subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, asking:

> THAT the War Veterans Allowance Act be amended to define as a veteran all merchant seamen who made at least one trip through dangerous waters;
>
> THAT the Government of Canada prepare and place in the Peace Tower (of the Parliament Buildings in Ottawa) a Book of Remembrance honouring merchant seamen who died of enemy action in Canadian armed conflicts and, further, that suitable monuments to their sacrifices be erected;
> THAT at the earliest possible opportunity, the Government of Canada introduce legislation to extend full veterans benefits to all Canadian merchant seamen who served in dangerous waters in Canada's armed conflicts;

As honourable senators will know, there is a bill in my name that will cover that last point. However, I want the Senate to know that even though we put a limit on the date for petitions to be received—it was March 3, 1991—they are still coming in for April, May, June, July, August and September, and will continue to come into my office in the days to come.

QUESTION PERIOD

AGRICULTURE

INTERNATIONAL GRAIN SUBSIDIES—CONSEQUENT DETERIORATION OF INTERNATIONAL MARKETS FOR CANADIAN GRAINS

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate dealing with a subject that was referred to the GATT, asking them to try yo sort out what can be done about agriculture subsidies and some of the consequent deterioration of a number of markets, particularly the international grain market, which continuously worsens.

• (1510)

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government to give us some indication of where those discussions are going and indeed where they are at now.

Several times during the recess I read news reports which stated that an attempt was made by some delegate or the leaders of the GATT arrangements to have a meeting, and inside of a few hours those meetings collapsed again. I know this is complicated by the present PSAC strike. I will have more to say on that subject perhaps later on in this Question Period.

Could the Leader give us some indication of whether there are any prospects at all—bright prospects—that we are going to get some determination from GATT respecting this matter?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret that I cannot be very helpful on that matter today. I will attempt to obtain a brief from my colleagues and see if I can have some information tomorrow for the honourable senator.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I appreciate that undertaking.

GRAIN INSPECTION AND HANDLING—EFFECTS OF PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE STRIKE

Hon. H. A. Olson: I wonder if I could ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to obtain some other information that is of vital concern, having to do with the grain inspectors being caught up in the PSAC strike.

I know there are a number of other inspectors such as meat inspectors who have been declared part of essential services for health reasons. They are, in fact, regulators or they enforce the law.

I believe that the grain inspectors who are holding up the grain shipments fall into the same category, although one might not be able to make the argument simply on the ground of human health; but they certainly are regulators and therefore law enforcement officers.

Quite frankly, I do not know who designates which groups fall into the so-called "essential services category." If these grain inspectors were in that category of essential services they would not be on strike.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government could bring in some information respecting that. These grain inspectors should be in the essential services category. They are not the people who do the work. All they do is inspect the grain that is going through to make sure that it meets the quality set out under the Canadian Grains Act.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries on that matter as well.

As honourable senators know, the government tabled back-to-work legislation in the other place yesterday and we opened the debate on second reading today.

Since that time, there have been ongoing discussions with the union and the opposition parties in the other place. What these discussions will lead to I do not know, but let us hope for the best and meanwhile prepare for the worst.

If it is necessary for the Senate to deal with this matter, I would expect we would have to deal with it very early next week.

Senator Olson: I understand that and I accept it and I am grateful for the response, although I am not sure that the minister quite understood my request. I understand the complications that are involved in dealing with the strike. I also know of some offers that have been made by the union which include getting the grain inspectors back to work immediately, but that required that certain conditions be met first.

What I am asking him now is if he can find a way at least to give us the information as to how we can go about getting these grain inspectors, who really are law enforcement officers respecting the Canadian Grains Act, declared essential services so that they do not get caught in it again.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall bring in some information as to the process that is at work in identifying designated employees and groups of employees under the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government, through the Leader of the Government, arising from one of his answers. What are the Deputy Leader's plans for the handling of the back-to-work legislation which is presently in the House of Commons? Does he have any sort of schedule, or draft schedule, with respect to when we might be dealing with it? Does he have any timeframe in mind for that and for other business for this week?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think my information on Bill C-29 is most recent. If Bill C-29 remains on its present track, the government leadership in the other place expect that it would be voted on by late Monday afternoon. In other words, the bill would be here in the Senate Monday evening, if we were sitting. Prudence dictates that we make plans therefore to sit on Monday evening. Indeed, if that legislation is still on track when we adjourn for this week, it would be the intention of my friend, the Deputy Leader of the Government, to move that we adjourn until Monday evening at 8.00 p.m.

As for business for the rest of this week, there is not, as the honourable senator is aware, a varied menu. The items are listed on the Order Paper and we propose to take them one at a time as they come, that is to say, Bill C-15, C-14, and the Speech from the Throne.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

AVAILABILITY OF PETITIONS

Hon. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to put a question to the chairman of the subcommittee on Veterans Affairs.

I noticed that under presentation of petitions he rose and made a very nice speech, which I agreed with, but I never saw the petitions that he presented. Are those petitions going to be presented so tht we will have them here for the records of the Senate, or was the honourable senator making a speech under Presentation of Petitions?

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, as usual my deputy chairman reminds me of my mistakes. I had the log but the petitions were not there. They are now on the way over from my office.

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION—ATTITUDE OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to justify the inflexible, indifferent and intolerable attitude revealed by the Government of Canada in its draconian proposed legislation forcing the members of the Public Service of Canada back to work without even considering the appointment of a mediator in the present labour dispute that is causing so much hardship to these public servants, as well as great chaos in the federal administration and a negative effect on the national economy of Canada.

● (1520)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend will have an opportunity to make his editorial comments on Bill C-29 when it arrives here, and I will undertake to make mine at the same time.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Leader of the Government.

We in this chamber deserve to hear some kind of defence of the government's attitude because it is a matter of such national importance causing not only disruption but hardship, as I have said, in many sectors not only of the national economy but in many families in this country.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my honourable friend and all colleagues can look forward to a brilliant text position of the government on this matter from Senator Bolduc, who will be sponsoring Bill C-29 in this chamber when it arrives.

There are few honourable senators with more experience in the field of public sector labour relations than our colleague Senator Bolduc. We all look forward to his speeches which will open and close the debate on that bill.

Senator Frith: Considering his career, I am surprised that he is even associated with this bill, let alone support it.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CANADIAN AID TO THE SOVIET UNION

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he will initiate a debate on the matter of Canadian aid and Canadian participation in aid programs by the so-called western countries to the Soviet Union through its period of transition and attendant turbulence.

This matter is very serious, and if he will not initiate the debate, will he participate in such a debate? I put forward today a Notice of Inquiry on the subject matter.

The position of the Prime Minister and two or three other ministers is that Canada is reluctant to become involved in supplying consumer goods, especially food but not only food, to the Soviet Union and the constituent republics. I do not think that is the view of the Canadian people. The government could use some guidance on this matter. In my view, it should ask Parliament for such guidance by way of initiating a debate on the matter in order to obtain a more accurate view of what Canadians would like their government to do in these tumultuous weeks and months, especially with respect to the costs and the consequences to Canada and, indeed, the whole world if the wrong moves are made.

I ask the Leader of the Government if he will participate in such a debate so that we can see what the government's position will be with respect to this important matter.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is obvious that my friend will need some illumination on this point. I think he has unfairly and inaccurately characterized the position of the government. If this is a foretaste of the speech that he will make in this debate, then I most emphatically will join it.

Senator Olson: I thank the Leader of the Government for giving that kind of commitment. I hope that he will convey the views expressed by other senators in the debate to the government so that it can be better guided in the future.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF LINE BETWEEN TRURO AND NORTH SYDNEY, NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he will assure the Senate that the government will take whatever steps are necessary to prevent the termination of rail service provided by Canadian National Railway between Truro, Nova Scotia and North Sidney, Nova Scotia.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to look into that question before giving the kind of undertaking that the honourable senator seeks.

Senator Stewart: I gather from the honourable senator's response that he is not familiar with reports that Canadian National Railway proposes to sell the railway line between Truro and North Sidney, Nova Scotia.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I must confess that I am not.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EFFECT OF ALCOHOL ON PREGNANT WOMEN—PROPER LABELLING OF PRODUCTS CONTAINING ALCOHOL

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate about government policy.

During the summer I received some correspondence, as perhaps other senators did, from Mrs. Joy E. Gilmour of South Burnaby, B.C. I will provide that material to the Leader of the Government.

Mrs. Gilmour's concern is with the labelling of alcohol products for Canadian consumption, and particularly problems that result from the consumption of alcohol during pregnancy. The government has been doing some work on this subject. Apparently, it is the subject of quite a lot of legislative attention in the United States. She claims that she is unable to get a clear picture as to what, if anything, the government proposes to do about it. Thus, I ask the Leader of the Government if he will start by trying to find out what he can about the government policy on that subject. I will provide him with copies of the correspondence.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will be glad to ask my colleague, Mr. Bouchard, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, for a report on this matter.

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Grimard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, for the second reading of Bill C-15, An Act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports.—(Honourable Senator Frith)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, when we left off on this matter just before the summer adjournment, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition had stated some concerns about the bill. Also, if memory serves me correctly, he had indicated his intention, or the intention of his party, to propose an amendment to the bill as it affects official languages.

That being the case, I simply wish to inquire of the honourable Senator Frith what his intentions are. Does he intend to propose the amendment of the bill at second reading now, or is it his intention to do so later when the bill goes to committee?

Before we adjourned the honourable Senator Frith indicated that he might try to amend the bill at this stage. I do not know whether that is possible. He is an ingenious parliamentarian and he may be able to find a way within the rules to make his point.

In any case, I am inquiring what his intentions are at this stage. If he does not wish to speak now, and no other honourable senators wish to speak, I expect that my friend Senator Grimard, who is the sponsor of the bill, would, first of all, ask Your Honour to put the motion for second reading. Then, if that passes, Senator Grimard would propose to move that the bill be sent to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators will remember that my concern was a concern raised by the former Commissioner of Official Languages and relates specifically to the question of the applicability of the standards set up in the Official Languages Act to contractors at airports.

• (1530)

I do intend to propose an amendment but I do not intend to delay in doing so. I will get to my books and my paper today or tomorrow. I will certainly deal with it tomorrow, one way or another. Perhaps I will make a speech in support of my amendment and then introduce the amendment, although I think probably the better practice would be to raise the point again in committee and then, if I lose my proposed amendment in the committee, to introduce the amendment again at third reading. One way or another I intend to push forward with the amendment and will be doing so promptly.

Senator Murray: That is entirely satisfactory, honourable senators. Whenever Senator Frith goes ahead, Senator Grimard is prepared to speak for the government on this matter. So we will take it that the item is adjourned until tomorrow.

Senator Frith: Yes. Under the new rules we do not adjourn government business in the name of a senator so it will not be standing in my name. Therefore I take it we are now plowing a new furrow and we will see how these things work. If they work in such a way that the government will call the order whenever it wants, they will now know that I intend to speak at that time.

Order stands.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I would like to table the Petitions that I presented earlier.

Hon. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable senator how many petitions he has there?

Senator Marshall: Would you like to check them?

Senator Bonnell: No. It looks like about 1,000.

Senator Marshall: There are 1,042 names.

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF QUEBEC AN ACT TO AMEND AND CONSOLIDATE THE ACTS RELATING TO THE OFFICE OF PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF MONTREAL

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret that our friend Senator Davey is not with us at the moment, although he was in the chamber earlier. Perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Opposition can help us on this matter as well. When we left off on Bill C-14 before the summer recess, Senator Davey had posed some 40 questions that he wanted answered by the minister or by the Department of Transport.

These questions do not relate to the subject matter of this bill. They relate to contractual arrangements between the Port of Montreal and various private companies and, indeed, contractual arrangements between the Government of Canada as a whole and various private companies.

My advice to the honourable senator would be that he put the questions on the order paper. They do require detailed replies. We will do our best to answer them, but I do not think it is reasonable for him to suggest what he might be doing; that is, to hold up progress toward second reading and referral of the bill to committee until he has these questions answered. Again, I suggest he put the questions on the order paper, and we will do our best.

I do not want to mislead anyone. There are problems with some of those questions. The problems relate to the fact that not all the information sought here is, by any means, government information. A good part of it is information that belongs to private individuals and companies. I may say that the guide the government uses in dealing with matters of this kind is the standards of the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act. By these guidelines we would be governed in answering questions of that kind. So I do not want anyone to be misled when I suggest that our friend Senator Davey should put the questions on the order paper. In any case, the questions are not related to the subject matter of the bill, and I hope he will agree that we should proceed to the vote on second reading of this bill and, if it succeeds, a motion to refer the bill to committee.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there are three points to be made on behalf of Senator Davey and our side. First, the question of the strict legislative relevance of these questions to the bill: I do not agree that there is no relevance, no logical or legislative connection between these questions and the bill. The questions relate, as he has said, to contracts and commercial relations between the authority and private persons, and—

Senator Murray: Between the Government of Canada.

Senator Frith: —include one of our colleagues, Senator Charbonneau, as one of the contractees, or so the questions attempt to discover. So the view that when a government authority asks for amendments to its legislation, its manner of dealing and doing business in the past should not be considered strictly relevant is obviously one point on which we disagree.

The next point is, if it is strictly relevant in that legislative sense, whether it is politically relevant, this being a political body and institution as well as a legislative one. Of course, I speak of small "p" politics, not capital "p". So are matters involving small "p" politics matters into which a political institution or legislative institutions should inquire? I think so.

The third question is: Even if I am right on the preceeding questions, can the government provide the information? That is the third point, or at least an additional point raised by Senator Murray. I cannot argue with that point: I just do not know. One place to find out, of course, would be in the committee where details of the points raised by Senator Murray could be provided by witnesses on behalf of the port authority, who could say, "We can tell you about that but not about this. We could tell you about this but you should get it under access to information.", et cetera.

Taking those three points, were does that leave us? It seems to me that we wish to continue with the connection between the two and will therefore include a connection between the two in our debate. There is then no reason why the bill cannot go to committee where we can, of course, deal with all three points but in particular the third point as to whether— and I suspect Senator Murray is right about this; I do not know— the people whom we would probably have appear before us in the committee can provide all the information requested. Then the committee can decide whether it wishes to sever the questions and provide some of the material and not the rest, which can then be reported back and we can go through the legislative process. That is the context in which I suggest that the bill go through the legislative process. Again, we have no intention of delaying it. We will move the process forward in that context and we will do our best, of course, to get the information.

Senator Murray: I thank the honourable the Deputy Leader of the Opposition for his comments. The committee, of course, is the master of its own procedures and honourable senators are free to try to put what questions they wish to witnesses appearing on behalf of the government. We will leave it as the honourable senator suggests.

• (1540)

That being the case, I would ask the Speaker to put the motion for second reading on Bill C-14.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, that this bill be read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: I thought we were being asked to adjourn the motion. We still want to make a speech on second reading and before the bill goes to committee. We must have misunderstood each other.

Senator Murray: We did. It is clear what Senator Frith is suggesting, and I have no objection. As we did with the previous item, we shall adjourn it, presumably until tomorrow.

Senator Frith: We will try to make our speeches tomorrow but if, for example, we adjourn tomorrow until Monday we may not be able to make our speeches; but we will not delay the matter. We will certainly make the speeches as soon as we can.

Senator Murray: In that case, I would ask Your Honour to stand the item and we will return to it tomorrow.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: It is moved by Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten, that further debate be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Frith: I do not know if, under the new rules, I can do that. Under the new rules the government has to move the motion. Is that not the way it works?

Senator Murray: Yes.

Order stands.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY — ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament.—(7th day of resuming debate)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): This order does not stand in anyone's name either; is that correct?

Senator Murray: These are items of government business, honourable senators, the Speech from the Throne eminently so. They do not stand in anyone's name. I suspect, although I do not remember, that before the adjournment I adjourned this matter because my last recollection is of the Leader of the Opposition's speaking in this debate. We have two more debating days left and I would simply propose that we stand the item for the time being.

Senator Frith: I would like to put on the record that my colleague, Senator Graham, wants to speak to this. If he is not ready to speak to it this week he will be ready next week. He hopes that the two days will not be used up without his being able to intervene.

Senator Murray: We will protect his interests.

Order stands.

A BILL TO AMEND CERTAIN STATUTES OF CANADA TO RECOGNIZE THE WAR-TIME SERVICE OF THE VETERANS OF THE CANADIAN MERCHANT NAVY

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill S-5, An Act to amend certain statutes of Canada to recognize the war-time service of the veterans of the Canadian merchant navy.—(Honourable Senator Marshall)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I believe, honourable senators, we are expecting, sooner or later, a ruling from the Speaker on whether this bill requires a Royal Recommendation and is, therefore, out of order here.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I remember that when this order came up before, I prepared some notes for an intervention on the point of order raised by the Leader of the Government as to the orderliness of this legislation. I will again go to my books, because I wish to make a speech on this before the ruling is made.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: My understanding from the Table Officers is that the matter was raised but debate was not concluded on the point. I believe that is what Senator Frith is saying.

Senator Frith: I will try to complete my research, if I have not yet done so, and I will be prepared to make a speech within the next week or so.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Are we dealing with Item No. 1 under "Other Business"?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Marshall: I was prepared to go ahead with the debate on second reading, but I thought it only a matter of courtesy to give an opportunity to someone on the other side to respond. I was going to ask that the order stand. I did not realize there was any objection to this. This is the second bill I have introduced; the other one expired at prorogation, so I introduced Bill S-5.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, when this is called tomorrow, the Deputy Leader of the Government or the Speaker can give us a report on how it stands.

My recollection is that when the bill, in its original form, was introduced, Senator Murray made an objection saying that it was out of order because it was, to use the general term, "a money bill." I stated that I had some doubts as to whether it was a money bill or, at least, whether certain arguments could be made to the contrary. Then, as Senator Marshall said, the bill disappeared from the order paper. He then reinstated it without the point of order that Senator Murray had raised ever having been resolved.

It seems to me that, whether it technically stands in this position, substantially the position is that it probably carries forward, as a sort of barnacle on its back, the point of order raised by Senator Murray which has to be disposed of before we can go ahead. I suppose that technically Senator Murray could simply review his point of order, but it seems to me that the sensible way to proceed is to assume that his point of order was raised on this bill as it was on the other and, therefore, to some extent the ball would be in my court because I asked to intervene on that point of order.

Senator Marshall: Is that the case even though I introduced a new bill which is similar in nature but with a few changes?

Senator Frith: If the changes were intended to take into account the objections made by Senator Murray, then I think he might want to look at it again, because, in that case, the ball would be in Senator Murray's court to make sure that his point of order raised on the original bill still applies to the bill in its different form. I was not aware there was a sufficient difference to raise that question.

Senator Marshall: As it stands, the second reading of Bill S-5 is in my name and I think I should be able to proceed with it. I believe I have the right to proceed with it today. It is a different bill.

Senator Frith: I withdraw from the whole matter. Under these circumstances, I do not consider the ball to be in my court. I think, perhaps, it is in Senator Murray's court.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, on May 8, 1991 — and I would thank the Deputy Leader of the Government for giving me the page reference — at page 5656 of the Debates of the Senate, Senator Marshall, with leave of the Senate and not withstanding Rule 44(1)(f), moved that Bill S-21 be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate, and the Speaker said, "Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?"

Senator Frith: Is that this bill?

Senator Murray: That was Bill S-21.

Senator Marshall: This is Bill S-5.

Senator Murray: Bill S-21 was introduced on May 8. I am not aware of the history of Bill S-5. I thought it was the same bill.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Perhaps I could interrupt to inform Senator Murray that May 8 was during the old session. This is now a new session.

• (1550)

Senator Frith: Would it not be better for the Deputy Leader of the Government to find out exactly what the status is on that point of order? It is possible that Senator Murray will want to raise that same point of order. Certainly, if he does I will want to respond to it. If he does not, then Senator Marshall should proceed.

Senator Marshall: According to my notes I introduced Bill S-21 on May 18, 1990. It was challenged and it expired due to prorogation on May 13, 1991. I then introduced Bill S-5. That bill was slightly amended by legal counsel, in consultation with experts from the merchant seamen, and we introduced a new bill, S-5, which is the bill we are dealing with now. There was no objection on first reading and now it is coming up for second reading and again I rose in my place to stand the order so that an opportunity could be extended to others who wished to debate it. I think it is the right of all parliamentarians to debate the bill. I stood the order for that reason and perhaps His Honour the Speaker could rule on that point.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will have to have the bill examined in light of the honourable senator's statement and in light of the honourable senator's assurance that legal counsel of the Senate have examined it and expressed an opinion upon it. I do not think I am precluded from raising a point of order when the bill is next called for second reading, and it will be my intention to do so, if necessary.

Senator Marshall: Of course, I have no objection to that but I want to introduce it.

Senator Frith: Would Senator Lynch-Staunton consider taking the adjournment on this matter in his name, since I believe Senator Doody usually did that as Deputy Leader of the Government?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Certainly.

Senator Murray: So the matter stands until tomorrow.

Order stands.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STRIKING OF CANADIAN VOLUNTEER KOREAN SERVICE MEDAL—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT TO ALLOW KOREAN VETERANS TO APPLY FOR WAR VETERANS' ALLOWANCE

Hon. Jack Marshall, pursuant to notice, moved:

That this Chamber commends the Government of Canada in fulfilling a commitment to the veterans of Canada through a petition signed by a majority of the members of the Senate and the House of Commons and further strengthened by the signature of the Prime Minister of Canada calling on the Government to recognize the sacrifices of the Canadian veterans who served in the Korean conflict by striking a Canadian Volunteer Korean Service Medal;

That this Chamber remind the Government of Canada that they have not as yet fulfilled another commitment made and signed by the Prime Minister of Canada on August 7, 1984, that assured that one of the priorities of the government would be to make Canadian veterans and/or their dependents living outside of Canada eligible to apply for War Veterans' Allowances if by reason of health, financial or other mitigating circumstances they are unable to return to Canada; and

That the government be asked to respond within thirty days.

He said: Honourable senators, motion No. 4 concludes by saying that the government be asked to respond to it within 30 days. Since many more than 30 days have elapsed, which is enough time for anyone to respond, I am wondering how I go about getting a response.

Senator Murray: My honourable friend came to Parliament in 1968, as I recall, and has been here ever since. He does not need me to enlighten him on how to obtain answers to questions.

The response that I would give is the same one that he has heard many times from many ministers. I will undertake to obtain a statement on this matter from my colleague, Mr. Merrithew, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, as soon as possible. I will certainly undertake to remind him of the delay that honourable Senator Marshall has sought to impose on this matter.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

IMMIGRATION

ERRONEOUS ISSUANCE OF CANADIAN PASSPORTS

Hon. Lorne M. Bonnell: Honourable senators, my statement is very brief and to the point.

I was upset and disappointed to read in the press that many criminals in Europe and elsewhere are able to enter Canada by means of Canadian passports issued by the Government of Canada. I think it is time that someone in that government department took a closer look at the issuance of those passports, because we do not want any criminals, including drug traders paying anywhere from $10,000 to $25,000 per passport, coming into Canada posing as Canadians.

I would ask that the government take notice of this, do something about it and report back as quickly as possible.

ADJOURNMENT

NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, depending on the progress of our deliberations today, it will be my intention, at the appropriate time, to ask that we revert to Government Notices of Motions in order that I may put a motion to adjourn until next Tuesday at 2 o'clock.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, yesterday, under the heading "Presentation of Petitions" I tabled a number of petitions. Formerly I had always given honourable senators the number of names on the petitions. I either misplaced the list yesterday or did not have it, but in any event here they are.

From Alberta there were three petitions with 66 names. There were four names from British Columbia that were on the lists of other provinces. There were 17 petitions from Manitoba with 377 names. There were 23 petitions from New Brunswick, including 6 on the Quebec lists, with 468 names. There was one name from Newfoundland on the Ontario list. There was one name from Nova Scotia on the Quebec list. From Ontario there were 60 petitions with 1,213 names, and from Quebec there were 158 petitions with 3,417 names, for a total of 260 petitions with 5,547 names from citizens of Canada protesting the G.S.T.

QUESTION PERIOD

AGRICULTURE

INTERNATIONAL GRAIN SUBSIDIES—REQUEST FOR UPDATE ON NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government gave an undertaking yesterday that he would give us an update on the negotiations respecting farm subsidies which are going on intermittently in Brussels or Geneva. Will he do that now?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I did ask to have that reply in hand for today's Question Period. I must confess that I do not yet have it from my colleagues. It may arrive during the day and as soon as it does I will either rise here and read it into the record or send the reply to the honourable senator.

The honourable senator asked another question having to do with the inclusion of grain inspectors as essential services in terms of designating essential services under the Labour Code. I am informed that these positions would not meet the criteria presently set out in the Public Service Staff Relations Act for essential services. The criteria are safety, security and health. It is pointed out, of course, that the importance of grain inspectors and grain handlers is mainly economic and it would take a very substantial change in the spirit and the letter of that law to include grain handlers and grain inspectors as designated essential services.

GRAIN INSPECTORS AND HANDLERS—DESIGNATION AS ESSENTIAL SERVICES

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I appreciate receiving that information. This is not the place to argue the point, but I should point out that these grain inspectors are, in fact, law enforcement officers. Their function is to ensure that, with respect to Canadian law, the grades of grain that are claimed are, in fact, up to the standards expected; so they do meet part of the criteria. It boils down to a matter of interpretation.

Could the Leader of the Government give us an undertaking to ensure that some action is initiated so that grain handlers can be brought under the same rules as meat inspectors and other food inspectors, because, although we can argue some of the fine points, there are a lot of similarities.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate the points made by the honourable senator and I will ensure that his representations are drawn to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Labour.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY—PROPOSED STUDY—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Government Leader in the Senate. It was drawn to my attention today that the government is contemplating, or perhaps has decided on, a study into the future of the sugar beet industry in Canada, a topic which, as honourable senators know, is very close to my heart and those of the farmers in the area that I represent.

Could the Government Leader in the Senate find out for me, on an urgent basis, if this is the case and what are the terms of reference and the tim frame afor this study? I certainly hope it would indeed be within the framework of the future of the industry and perhaps a national sugar policy, and not the demise of the industry, which came so close to happening a few years ago and was the subject of an emergency debate in this house. Happily, it resulted not in the demise of the industry but in a tripartite agreement that would extend over ten years. I would be interested if the Gopvernment Leader could gprovide me with some details.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I will be happy to do so, honourable senators.

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF QUEBEC AN ACT TO AMEND AND CONSOLIDATE THE ACTS RELATING TO THE OFFICE OF PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF MONTREAL

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for the second reading of Bill C-14, An Act to amend An Act to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec and An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal, and to validate certain fees and charges established pursuant thereto.—(Honourable Senator Davey)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, at this time the government wishes to call Bill C-14 in the hope and expectation that honourable senators are prepared to proceed, as indicated yesterday.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as I mentioned yesterday, we wish to proceed with the debate on this bill. I spoke to Senator Davey today. He may very well be working on his intervention now, for all I know, but I told him about the status of this bill and that he was expected to speak on it. I believe that he will be ready either today, tomorrow, or early next week. He was certainly apprised of the fact and gave no indication that he would have any trouble being ready soon. Therefore, I suggest that the debate be adjourned, and I so move its adjournment now.

I realize that I was mistaken yesterday when I said that only the government could move adjournments of government bills. I do not think that is correct. Anyone can move the adjournment, but it does not stand in the name of the senator moving it because the government does not want control of the legislation to be in the hands of anyone other than the government.

Therefore, I will move the adjournment in Senator Davey's name, realizing that when it appears on the order paper next time, his name will not be there but the Leader of the Government or the Deputy Leader of the Government will call it when they want it called.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Would the Deputy Leader of the Opposition agree to postpone discussion of this item until later today, on the assumption that Senator Davey may be ready to debate it today?

Senator Frith: Certainly.

Order stands.

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Grimard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, for the second reading of Bill C-15, An Act to provide for certain matters respecting official languages, employees' pensions and labour relations in connection with the transfer of certain airports.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I now call Bill C-15, item two on the order paper.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the predecessor to Bill C-15 was the subject of debate in the last session and has been reinstated, having, I believe, lost its status after prorogation. At page 220 of Debates of the Senate for June 17, 1991, I drew the attention of honourable senators to a particular section of this bill dealing with official languages.

At that time I shared with honourable senators a letter that was addressed to me dated June 14, 1991, from the former Commissioner of Official Languages. I will read the relevant comments again so that they will appear in Debates of the Senate close to the present debate, so that reference back will not be required.

The letter begins as follows:

> As I prepare to relinquish my office, I wish to draw your attention to my concerns about Bill C-15 (formerly C-85) the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act. Should this Bill be adopted as it now stands, it might constitute an unfortunate precedent for the implementation of official languages policy in this country.
>
> Section 4 of this bill makes the proposed designated airport authorities subject only to the provisions of Parts IV, VIII, IX and X of the Official Languages Act. The latter concern, respectively . . .

He then goes on to state:

> . . . communications with and services to the public, the responsibilities and duties of the Treasury Board in relation to the official languages of Canada, the Commissioner of Official Languages and the Court Remedy.

The general context of section 4 of the act is the privatization of airports and states as follows:

> 4.(1) Where the Minister has sold, leased or otherwise transferred an airport to a designated airport authority, on and after the transfer date Parts IV, VIII, IX and X of the Official Languages Act apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to the authority in relation to the airport as if
>
> (a) the authority were a federal institution; and
> (b) the airport were an office or facility of that institution, other than its head or central office."

The Official Languages Act, during the administration of three successive commissioners of official languages, Keith Spicer, Max Yalden and D'Iberville Fortier applied, of course, to federal institutions. Those are the words in the act. Airports were considered federal institutions. There was a period when there was some controversy about that, but these Commissioners of Official Languages saw to it over the years, through their reports and correspondence with the various institutions, that the act applied to these federal institutions and applied to airports as "federal institutions".

The question then arose, what about concessionaires and people with whom these federal institutions had contracts? If we stopped with the section I just read, the regime that had been set up over a period of some 20 years would clearly apply to the institution, and if the whole regime were taken in and applied to the airports after they became privatized then the Official Languages Act would apply, and the transfer from government jurisdiction to private jurisdiction would not affect the application of the Official Languages Act.

● (1420)

We then come to the offensive section which is subclause (2). The marginal note is "Construction", and states:

> (2) Nothing in subsection 23(2) of the Official Languages Act shall, in relation to an airport transferred to a designated airport authority by the Minister, be construed or applied so as to impose a duty on any institution other than that authority.

In the last intervention I made I pointed out that when I was legal counsel to the first Commissioner of Official Languages a great deal of our time during the first seven years was devoted to ensuring that the provisions of the Official Languages Act did apply to concessionaires. Believe me, it was not simply a matter of saying, "It applies" and that was the end of it. There was a lot of correspondence on the matter. I could probably obtain from the office of the Commissioner very bulky files of correspondence which tried to establish that principle which was finally established.

To illustrate, what it amounts to is this: The Official Languages Act applies to federal institutions, and therefore, people are entitled to service in the official language of their choice from those institutions. We say, "Well, that's fine. If I go to the airport, which is a federal institution, then I will be able to receive service in French or English". Counters usually have signs which state words to the effect that, "We would be pleased to serve you in the language of your choice."

Senator Simard: That will continue.

Senator Frith: That will continue, quite right.

Then, the question came up, "Supposing I go to a Hertz, Tilden, Avis or Budget counter at the airport; are they entitled to say, 'Oh, you can't get service in French or English here. We are not a federal institution, we are just a concessionaire, a private company. I run a car rental agency, I don't run a federal institution. If you want service in French, I am sorry, you will have to go somewhere else. You can't have it, or at least I am not required to give it to you'?"

What we spent 20 years trying to establish was, namely, that they do have to give such service. However, if this section is left in, it makes it clear, in my opinion, that Hertz, Tilden and Avis, the cafeterias and all the services that are not actually manned by public servants can thumb their noses at the Official Languages Act because only part of the regime has been taken over and applied to these airports run by private enterprise. That is why I believe the previous Commissioners of Official Languages, Mr. Spicer and Mr. Yalden, would be opposed to this section. We know that Mr. Fortier is opposed to it.

It seems to me that anyone who says, "Oh well, don't worry, it will be the same," I take it will support my amendment. My amendment would simply remove that offensive section.

In fact, what Mr. Fortier said was:

> To begin with, I am wondering what will be the scope of Section 4 of this Bill with respect, not to the aeronautical sector itself—

I suppose my 15 minutes is about to run out. The Clerk at the table indicates that I have two minutes remaining under the new rules.

I guess all I can do in 2 minutes is to say—

An Hon. Senator: It is not important.

Senator Frith: I know a lot of you are bored by this whole point, which is a bit esoteric, and you probably do not care whether French or English is available from concessionaires in airports. I know that a few of you do care, and that there may be some of you who do not care. However, I am lucky in this debate, but I warn senators that some others of you will not be as lucky. I am lucky because I happen to have previoulsy made a speech on this subject. I can say that if by any chance you are interested in the fate of the official languages as it applies to concessionaires in airports, you can read the rest of the speech, which can be found at pages 221 and 222 of the Debates of the Senate of June 17, 1991. There you will find and be able to read the rest of what D'Iberville Fortier had to say about this section and why it should be repealed. If I had not made the earlier speech, then under the new rules I would be cut off in the middle of reading the Commissioners letter and be unable to continue with any other comments.

I will be voting against this bill in its present form for that reason. Although we are only dealing with the principle of the bill, embodied in this offensive section is a very important principle, important enough that I cannot support the bill unless it is corrected. I will be proposing an amendment in the committee, if the bill goes to committee.

Did I make it in time?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if Senator Grimard speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading.

[Translation]

Hon. Normand Grimard: Honourable senators, I listened carefully to Senator Frith. I must point out that we had also received the very letter he referred to in his presentation.

However, at this point, honourable senators, I believe it is my duty to raise a point of order regarding the proposed amendment.

We are presently discussing the principle of the bill, and if we refer to the new Rule 76 of the Senate, which is the same in essence as the old one, we read that:

[English]

> "The principle of a bill is usually debated on second reading."

[Translation]

When I became a senator, we were given a copy of the Rules of the Senate which I have seen brandished on many occasions. The fact remains that the forms and proceedings contained in this book still apply today. On page 63 of the appendix entitled Forms and Proceedings, you can read the following:

> "Upon an order for second reading of a bill being called, the sponsoring senator moves second reading and explains the bill. The principle of the bill is then usually debated."

And this is important:

> "The types of amendment that may be moved to a bill on second reading are enumerated in Bourinot, Fifth Edition, pp. 509 to 511.
> The practice generally followed is to refer a bill to a select committee after second reading [. . .]."

So, I raise this point of order. First of all, I would invite the Speaker to check what was written by Bourinot, on pages 509 and 511 of the fifth edition of his book.

I would also refer the Speaker to Beauchesne, Fifth Edition, pages 225 and following.

The thrust of this jurisprudence is that, at this stage, namely the second reading of a bill, the amendment as proposed by the honourable senator Frith, is out of order and inadmissible pursuant to our parliamentary rules.

● (1430)

That means that at this stage, I raise this point of order under the new rules and I understand that the Speaker pro tempore will make a ruling.

Depending on your decision, Mr. Speaker, I will—

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I said that I had no intention of proposing an amendment at this stage of second reading.

I intend to move an amendment in committee and finally on third reading, but not on second reading. That is very clear.

I apologize. Perhaps it is because I spoke to you in English only, but I can assure you in French that I have no intention of proposing an amendment on second reading.

Senator Grimard: If you do not intend to move an amendment, of course I take back what I said. I will answer your arguments immediately and as quickly as possible.

I want to tell you that at this stage, there are objections to Bill C-15 because it does not talk about the application of parts 5, 6 and 7 of the Official Languages Act.

Section 5 deals with language of work. Section 6 says that organizations must encourage English and French Canadians to work in their own language, while section 7 says that the organization must promote French and English.

Bill C-15 does not include Part 4 of the Official Languages Act because there is no privatization or sale, but only a rental that will allow local airport authorities to administer airports. The transfer is not to an individual or a private or public company but to a profit-making corporation. That is important.

These organizations are made up of local representatives and the government insists that in all cases, the cities, municipalities and chambers of commerce be represented. So for example, the Montreal airport authority includes representatives of Montreal, Laval, the Montreal Urban Community, the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade and the South Shore.

These six or seven organizations each name three representatives who administer the authority that will run the Montreal and Dorval airports.

Representatives of these companies appeared before the House of Commons Transportation Committee. Representatives from Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton and Montreal told us that they did not want to have to apply the language of work provisions because, especially in the case of Montreal, it would cause them problems in competing with their rivals, the airports in Boston, New York and Toronto.

The language of work issue must not be exaggerated. It applies in only some places, according to the Official Languages Act: namely, in Montreal and New Brunswick.

Honourable senators, I know that when Air Canada was privatized, the House of Commons and the Senate passed a bill providing that Air Canada would comply fully with all provisions and parts of the Official Languages Act.

There is a big difference between Air Canada and local airport authorities. When Air Canada was privatized, the government still owned 57 per cent of the shares. It had a controlling interest.

Air Canada is a national entity which had and still has offices across the country, but today we are dealing with a number of local authorities—in four locations right now, but there are other communities that are interested, and I am thinking of Moncton, Kamloops, and so forth.

Very briefly—and I am getting to the end of my speech—at this stage, considering that the agencies are obliged to implement fully the principle of language of service, and considering that in the lease the government will sign, there will be a clause to the effect that concessionnaires must comply with the provisions for language of work and language of service, there is obviously no problem.

Senator Frith knows as well as I do that although a bill may be only four pages long, the regulations may cover 50 pages. Before the bill was tabled the Department of Transport prepared a draft of the lease to be signed by each local airport authority. The lease contains a specific clause to the effect that concessionnaires will have to comply fully with the provisions of section 4 of the bill. As a result, Senator Frith's reservations do not seem justified in the circumstances, since as he well knows, the regulations arising from a bill are often more lengthy than the bill itself.

For all these reasons, I do not believe that the reservations voiced by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition are justified. I therefore recommend that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, for consideration.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Would Senator Grimard entertain a question?

Senator Grimard: Of course, senator.

Senator Sinard: Senator Grimard, am I to understand that with the exception of Montreal and New Brunswick, the Official Languages Act was not enforced or applied in Canada?

Senator Grimard: I said, Senator, that the only two locations—and I am only talking about airports—where the language of service is compulsory are Montreal and New Brunswick.

Of course there are other locations. I am merely talking about the locations where this legislation will apply. In New Brunswick we have Fredericton and Moncton. In Montreal we have Dorval and Mirabel.

Those are the two locations where, according to the Act, the language of service provisions are compulsory. A distinction must be made between the obligations of the federal government and the obligations of a private corporation, and that is why I make that distinction.

At the present time, language of service is compulsory in two regions: Montreal and New Brunswick. If a group wishes to operate an airport in Montreal or New Brunswick, it must comply with the provisions for language of service, in this case French and English.

Senator Simard: Thank you, Senator.

I know I am not supposed to prolong the debate without good reason . . .

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Senator, the debate is concluded.

Senator Simard: Thank you, senator. We will meet again in committee. We will also need the text of the amendment, which I hope will be tabled before we are asked to vote on this bill, because I take this matter very seriously.

Senator Frith: The amendment will be considered in committee and on third reading.

Motion agreed to, on division, and bill read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Normand Grimard: Honourable senators, I move that Bill C-15 be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, speaking to the motion, I hope that the sponsor of the bill will support my suggestion—and I am sure Senator Simard will—that the committee call Mr. Fortier and other legal advisors so that we may have the benefit of legal advice. We can then discuss the politics and the policy and not have to argue the legal points.

"Mr. Justice Forrestall" had an interesting and relevant intervention for us on this point, I believe.

Motion agreed to, and bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF QUEBEC AN ACT TO AMEND AND CONSOLIDATE THE ACTS RELATING TO THE OFFICE OF PORT WARDEN FOR THE HARBOUR OF MONTREAL

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I notice that Senator Davey has returned to the Chamber; so we would like to revert to Item No. 1 on the order paper which deals with Bill C-14.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for the second reading of Bill C-14, An Act to amend An Act to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec and An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal, and to validate certain fees and charges established pursuant thereto.

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I am about to confirm a fact that many of you have known for a number of years, namely, that I am not a brilliant parliamentarian. In fact, I am not brilliant in anything very much right now; I am merely a very confused parliamentarian because I have already put a series of questions before colleagues concerning Bill C-14.

The last time this bill was discussed we were dealing with Senator Cogger, who made a reasonable speech, I thought; and prior to that we had to deal with Senator MacDonald. In each case, we asked a series of questions. I have the questions before me from the Debates of the Senate of June 11. The questions were put to Senator MacDonald and absolutely nothing happened. We waited a number of weeks for a response.

I hold Senator MacDonald in the highest regard. As a matter of fact, yesterday he was reappointed chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, and I am delighted with that. I congratulate him. I know he is away on some business and that he will be here presently.

As I have said, I thought that Senator Cogger made a very reasonable speech. I asked these questions but have been unable to get an answer. I put the questions to the committee, but the committee just ceased to function. The questions were then put to Senator Cogger, and that is where the matter was left over the summer.

To whom might I put my questions at this time? Perhaps Senator Murray or someone else can tell me how I can get answers to these questions. The answers to the questions relate directly to this particular piece of legislations. The questions, it seems to me, are perfectly logical, but we cannot obtain answers.

If senators so require, I will again read the questions into the record; but I would prefer not to take the time to do that. I would simply refer them to page 125 of the Debates of the Senate of June 11. The questions relate to the Montreal Ports Corporation, and the bill relates to the harbour of Montreal. It seems to me that there is an obvious connection. I believe they are legitimate questions; so why can we not have the answers? When can we have the answers? What do we have to do to get the answers? I wonder if someone opposite can give me some response. I now ask Senator Murray: Why can we not have answers to those questions?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will try, as always, to be helpful.

My honourble friend describes himself as not being a brilliant parliamentarian. I am no judge of brilliance but I know him to be a very experienced and devoted parliamentarian.

With regard to his questions, let me say the following: First, he put the questions into the record during the second reading debate on this bill. The second reading debate is a debate on the principle of the bill; it is not, normally, the place where detailed questions, either on the bill or on any other matter, are dealt with.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Except where there exists such unprincipled activity that we have to ask questions about it.

Senator Murray: Secondly, I must say that, while my friend contends that these questions are related to this bill, I would contend otherwise. This is a very simple bill—

Senator Frith: The famous last words.

Senator Murray: —having to do with the organization of the ports of Quebec and Montreal. Those questions, in some cases, relate not just to contractual arrangements between the port authorities and various private companies but they seek information relating to the Government of Canada as a whole and various private companies.

Again, a discussion of Bill C-14, either on second reading or even in committee, is hardly the place to seek or obtain answers to those questions. The normal course for any honourable senator seeking detailed information of that kind would be to put those questions on the order paper, and they would appear in our Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate as written questions; and the government is, in due course, called upon to provide answers to the questions.

• (1450)

Senator Frith: And they stay there for years and years.

Senator Murray: Well, my honourable friend says they stay there for years and years. The record, for the past six years or so at any rate, suggests otherwise.

Senator Frith: Ask your clleage Senator Marshall about that.

Senator Murray: Having said that, my honourable friend is free to try his luck again in committee, assuming that this bill receives second reading in the Senate and is referred to committee. He can try to obtain those answers from a witness who is brought to the committee on behalf of the government to speak to this bill. If he does not succeed there, he can, as I have suggested, put the questions on the order paper and, as I said yesterday, we will see what we can do.

Permit me now to say a few words about the problems that are posed by these questions. First, not all of this, by any means, is what could be construed as government information. Some of this information is the property of private individuals and companies. To the extent that much or most of it is in the hands of the Montreal Ports Corporation, that corporation would have to consider, in preparing replies to these questions, issues such as whether the information would be confidential from the perspective of a third party or whether disclosure could result in financial loss to a third party, prejudice a competitive position of a third party, or interfere with negotiations a third party may be conducting.

In brief, the practice that the government follows in dealing with questions of these kinds is to be guided by the standards set out in two statutes: the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act. I would remind my honourable friend that a company or third party which provides the government with confidential commercial information is given certain assurances, in section 20 of the Access to Information Act, that the government shall refuse to disclose confidential commercial information provided by a company. For example, if the details in any of these contracts that are referred to in the honourable senator's question have been kept confidential, their disclosure could prejudice the company's ability to negotiate other contracts in the future.

There are quite a number of those questions in respect of which, before providing answers, I think the Montreal Ports Corporation would have to consult third parties who are mentioned in the question. There are other questions relating to the policy of the Montreal Ports Corporation which are easily discloseable and can be disclosed; but, as I say, for anything which goes beyond the corporation, the third party aspect would have to be given serious consideration.

As I indicated, the other type of information which might be contained in answers to those questions is personal information which would be protected under the Privacy Act. Again, if we are to use the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act as a standard for deciding what is discloseable and what is not, we would have to examine some of these questions very seriously in that light. Some of the answers may contain personal information about directors of the corporation and we would have to exercise caution in that context.

Honourable senators, these are complex matters. Second reading debate is not the place to deal with the questions. The honourable senator can try his luck at the committee stage. Otherwise he can put the questions on the order paper, as I have suggested. In either case, I wanted to caution him that we would want to examine the questions very carefully in light of the considerations I have mentioned.

Therefore, I would ask that today we try to close the debate on second reading and send the bill to committee. That would be done without prejudice to anyone's right, especially including my honourable friend.

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, if I might say just a word—

Senator Frith: Provided Finlay closes the debate.

Senator Davey: I was about to mention that. I was about to say that Senator Murray is a brilliant parliamentarian and that his answer was a very capable one. Obviously we will bring these questions to committee and, I guess, if the time comes, we will eventually put them on the order paper. The explanation of the Government Leader was interesting and worthwhile and I will study it when I read today's Debates of the Senate.

However, I do not understand the fear over there about giving us an answer. These questions have been around for nine or ten months and now finally the Government Leader comes forward with a formula saying that if we put them to the committee there will be this kind of analysis, and so on. If that is what it will take, let us do it, and if it has to go to the order paper, let us put it there. We think there are a series of questions which are particularly relevant, but I am quite prepared now to have the matter sent to committee. I would assume that Senator MacDonald would take it to committee, so that is fine.

Senator Murray: If it is agreeable to the Senate, I would suggest that Your Honour put the motion for second reading of the bill.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it was moved by the honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the honourable Senator David, that this bill be read the second time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: I would like to hear from Senator Cogger and, of course, because of what Senator Davey in particular has said, it is reasonable to expect Senator MacDonald to intervene in the debate and comment on these questions and their disposition in committee. Surely we could adjourn the matter until next week until one of them is here to speak and close the debate.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Frith: No. That is what I expected. It cannot stand over until Tuesday. We cannot hear from the sponsor of the bill in response to the intervention made by Senator Davey, or from the chairman of the committee to which it is proposed it be sent, in view of Senator Davey's intervention. It is the usual, right? The usual two words: nyet, no.

Senator Murray: That's one word.

Senator Frith: "No" and "nyet" are two words.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I thought I had spoken rather fully on behalf of the government, whose bill this is, in response to the intervention of Senator Davey. I have suggested that he may wish to try his luck at the committee with the witnesses that come before the committee. If that does not work, he can still put the questions on the order paper and we will do what we can, subject to the considerations I have enumerated.

• (1500)

I do not think that anything can be added. Senator Cogger will not be with us for another month or so. Senator MacDonald is in Italy at the moment on a parliamentary trip, and when he returns he will preside over the committee. The first item of business will be to examine Bill C-14 and Bill C-15. So I would hope that honourable senators would agree to allow the bill to go to committee today so that we can dispose of this item on our order paper.

Senator Frith: That assumes that nothing will occur in committee that will be influenced by the comments or reactions of Senator Cogger or Senator MacDonald. In other words, it suggests that their intervention would be irrelevant to the next stage of the bill, whereas it might be quite relevant. We might want to ask some questions. However, we would not want to inconvenience those two senators. It is inconvenient for Senator Cogger to be in the Senate to deal with legislation; it is inconvenient for Senator MacDonald to be in the Senate to deal with government legislation. Therefore, the government will say, "I am sorry. What you want is not what counts. What happens, what works and what is important is the convenience of our senators on our side and what we think should be happening." You are right.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Do not draw any conclusions.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I will repeat what I said. It was moved by the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, that this bill be read a second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Frith: No it is not. On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communication. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in view of the debate and a number of things said by the Leader of the Government, I hope that we will have support in the committee for witnesses who will be able to furnish the information or refuse to do so. But at least they will be able to go on the record as refusing to provide the information, either because they just do not want to or for reasons that were suggested as possible good reasons by Senator Murray, namely that the information is either not at their disposal or for some reason they cannot disclose it because there are some statutory regulatory provisions, policies or other reason not to do so.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. Is it your pleasur to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Motion agreed to on division, and bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

A BILL TO AMEND CERTAIN STATUTES OF CANADA TO RECOGNIZE THE WAR-TIME SERVICE OF THE VETERANS OF THE CANADIAN MERCHANT NAVY

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Second reading of Bill S-5, An Act to amend certain statutes of Canada to recognize the war-time service of the veterans of the Canadian merchant navy—(Honourable Senator Marshall)

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, because Senator Marshall is not here I will not elaborate on this particular item, but he has been advised, and I will advise him again, that we will raise a point of order on this particular item to suggest that it is irregular and should not be proceeded with.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You had better say that you are raising it now, not that you will later.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will raise it now as long as I do not have to explain it. Therefore, I raise the point of order. I would rather that Senator Marshall were here before elaborating on it, however.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 24, 1991, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, September 24, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Also visiting is Mr. Thomas Davies, Chairman of the Regional Municipality of Sudbury.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

PRESIDENT OF RICHELIEU CLUB INTERNATIONAL

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Visiting as well is Mr. Rene Pitre, President of the Richelieu Club International.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have four similar notices of motion for pre-study certain of legislation.

INSURANCE COMPANIES BILL

NOTICE OF MOTION TO PRESTUDY BILL C-28

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, the 25th of September, 1991, I will move that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject matter of Bill C-28, an act respecting insurance companies and fraternal benefit societies, in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

COOPERATIVE CREDIT ASSOCIATION BILL

NOTICE OF MOTION TO PRESTUDY BILL C-34

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, the 25th of September, 1991, I will move that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject matter of Bill C-34, an act to revise and amend the law governing cooperative credit associations and to provide for related and consequential matters, in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

TRUST AND LOAN COMPANIES BILL

NOTICE OF MOTION TO PRESTUDY BILL C-4

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, the 25th of September, 1991, I will move that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject matter of Bill C-4, an act to revise and amend the law governing federal trust and loan companies and to provide for related and consequential matters, in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

BANK BILL

NOTICE OF MOTION TO PRESTUDY BILL C-19

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Finally, honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, the 25th of September, 1991, I will move that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject matter of Bill C-19, an act respecting banks and banking, in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I would suggest to our friends opposite that when we debate these motions we debate them together since the four bills are related to each other and we understand that when they go to committee they will be treated as one package.

Senator Frith: No comment, except a boo and a hiss at this moment.

Senator Murray: Let the record show "Boo" and "Hiss".

Senator Frith: It is a nefarious process. Let the record show that, too.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 25 young men and women from Kamloops, B.C., who deplore that the GST credit is not available to young Canadians less than 19 years of age who do not live with their parents but do pay taxes.

They pray that the Senate ask the government to correct that inequity.

Honourable senators, I have the honour to present other petitions signed by 230 men and women from Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

Those petitions come mainly from Peterborough, Penetanguishene, Hamilton, Cambridge and North Bay.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have some petitions to present. The heading on each one of them is: "Petition to the Honourable Senate of Canada". It goes on to state:

> We refuse the dictatorship of the GST.
> The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable Senate will therefor provide a remedy—

I wish that assurance were well founded. It goes on to state:

> Whereas the new universal 7 percent Goods and Services Tax adopted by the Conservative government will create serious, unjust and inhuman difficulties to Canadians; whereas the implementation of this tax will constitute an unprecedented assault on the income of Canadians, not only by forcing them to pay higher taxes, but also by confronting them with a rise in inflation, interest rates and unemployment; whereas the methods used by the Government are unworthy of a democratic country. They are rather the work of law- makers who want to implement a dictatorship, snapping their fingers at the general opposition of the population.

It goes on to state "wherefore the undersigned humbly pray . . . ." and so on.

In today's batch we have petitions from, in Quebec: L'Assumption, L'Epiphane, Montreal, St. Leon, and Sullivan Mines; and, from Ontario: Don Mills, Downsview, North York and Toronto. The summary for numbers, honourable senators, is: From Ontario: Number of petitions 7; number of names 163. From Quebec: Number of petitions five, number of names 105, for a total of 12 petitions for today—that is, a total of 268 names.

QUESTION PERIOD

JUSTICE

JURISTICTION FOR PAYMENT OF LEGAL AID FEES— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government advise me whether the Attorney General of Canada is prepared to pay the legal fees of two individuals who allegedly brought $20 million worth of marijuana into the province of Prince Edward Island. They are now before the courts with no Legal Aid, no support and no legal advisors.

This matter falls under federal jurisdiction. I think the judge in the lower court threw the case out of court, so that there is a possibility that these persons might get off scot-free.

• (1410)

Senator Frith: You mean they are charged, not that they did it?

Senator Bonnell: They did it and they were charged. At least, they are alleged to have done it.

Senator Frith: That's better.

Senator Bonnell: It is alleged that they were caught doing it.

Senator Frith: If I were acting for them, I would be glad that you were not on the jury.

Senator Bonnell: I think if I were on the jury I would convict them, but I am not on the jury.

What I want the Leader of the Government in the Senate to do is to ensure that these people are given legal advice and defended in the court so that at least they will have a fair trial.

Senator Frith: Before you convict them?

Senator Bonnell: Before I convict them.

Senator Barootes: You have condemned them; how can they now have a fair trial?

Senator Bonnell: That is why I want a lawyer to speak for them, and I want the federal government to pay for the lawyer.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise me if the federal government is prepared to pay for legal aid for these two alleged criminals?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if the matter is before the courts neither I nor my honourable friend should be making any comment about it in this place. The rules forbid us to do so.

Senator Frith: That is only as to the merits of the case, not as to its defence.

Senator Murray: Second, with regard to legal aid I would have to look into the specific matter, but my impression is that the federal government shares with the provinces, including the province of Prince Edward Island, the cost of providing legal aid to those who find themselves in need and before the criminal courts.

Sentor Bonnell: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government could look into this matter a little further and find out if the federal government put a freeze on the funds available to the provinces to pay for legal aid? Consequently, since this could become a very long proceeding costing thousands of dollars, the province of Prince Edward Island has refused to pay for legal aid, because this matter falls under federal jurisdiction.

Will the federal government ensure that these individuals do have a lawyer to defend them and give them an opportunity to be heard before the courts?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will look into the matter. That is the short answer to the question.

Legal aid is not within the federal jurisdiction, as the honourable senator states. I believe we have agreements with the provinces to help fund legal aid programs in those provinces.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SRI LANKA—POSSIBLE IMPEACHMENT OF PRESIDENT—HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES—EFFECTS OF CIVIL WAR—ECONOMIC AID AND DEVELOPMENT—CANADIAN ROLE

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate on a matter that I have raised before but on which I have never received a full response.

Today, the Parliament of Sri Lanka is dealing with a motion to impeach the president of Sri Lanka. I do not know what the outcome of that debate will be, but it raises again the ongoing problems of the civil war that is affecting the people of that country.

As everyone knows, there are a great many people in our country—and particularly in the city where I live—of Sri Lankan origin who might be affected by the outcome of this matter. I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could tell us if he knows what was the outcome of the debate?

Secondly, could the government leader tell us what approach his government is taking towards the civil war in that country and what role Canada could play in relieving human rights abuses and providing economic development and aid to a country that is in dire straits?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret that I am not in a position today to discuss those matters in any detail. I shall have to ask for a report from my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

AGRICULTURE

SPECIAL PAYMENTS TO PRODUCERS OF GRAINS AND OIL-SEEDS—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could give us any indication of the government's intention on the provision of special payments to our grains and oil-seeds producers in this country—and particularly in western Canada—who are in a state of utter desperation. I ask this question on a day on which we are considering, in particular, a new process on the Constitution in an effort to keep Canada together as a united and sovereign nation. In many countries of the world the ability to produce and to protect the food supply of the citizens of that country is considered to be an integral part of a nation's sovereignty.

There is no mention of anything along this line in economic proposals linked to the constitutional discussion. Thus, I am asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether or not the government will come forward this fall with some assistance to a sector of our economy that represents part of our sovereignty and which is not only diminished but is in many respects disappearing in the Prairie region of this country.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, any further announcements of government policy or programs would have to be made by the responsible ministers, Mr. McKnight and Mr. Mayer.

All I can say is that, as the honourable senator knows, some $2 billion in assistance will be going out to farmers over the next year through various federal-provincial programs, including GRIP, the Gross Revenue Insurance Plan, and NISA, the Net Income Stabilization Account. In order to assist farmers in making the transition to these new programs payments are being made under the Farm Support and Adjustment Measures Program which was announced in the spring. More than $500 million of the $600 million in this program will be paid out by the end of this year.

Although the honourable senator did not ask a question about this, needless to say we are also working hard and, as I think is generally acknowledged, showing leadership in the GATT and under other international fora with a view to reaching an agreement that would lead to fairer market returns for Canadian grain producers.

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT PROGRAMS—NEED FOR INTERIM MEASURE

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: I appreciate the comments of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

When the new support programs GRIP and NISA were going through we noted, in our discussions with ministers in the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that these measures would not take effect at a time when it was predicted that the western farmer would need a considerable amount of support to stay in business. At that time it was acknowledged, by government members who appeared before our committee, that a response, in terms of a so-called third line of defence, would be needed—that is to say, an interim measure was needed rather than the longer term efforts at the GATT or payouts from the new programs in the legislation that was passed earlier this year. It is that interim line of defence for which western farmers are now absolutely desperate.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I appreciate the point made by the honourable senator. In fact, "third line" committees are now looking at the real impact on people and communities of the continuing downturn in income derived from the production of grains. We hope to receive from these committees the type of recommendations upon which we can act responsibly.

Senator Fairbairn: Would the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate be anticipating any such announcement within the next three or four weeks?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I simply cannot say.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. The Leader of the Government mentioned that Canada was taking the lead—I think that is the term he used—in the discussions at GATT. I have asked on several occasions where those discussions are heading. Since he believes that Canada is taking the lead in these matters, perhaps he could tell us what has happened, or bring us an update. There have been no reports out of Brussels or Geneva, or wherever the meetings are being held. On September 18 the Leader of the Government gave a further undertaking that he would give us an update on the matter.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, a reply to my honourable friend's question will be brought in later today by the Deputy Leader of the Government under Delayed Answers.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FEDERAL SUPPORT FOR TRIUMF-KAON PROJECT—EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators having questioned the government leader sharply in the past concerning the decision, which was pending, of whether to fund a KAON particle facility in British Columbia, I rise simply to express my personal thanks and that of many in British Columbia for the support of the federal government in this project.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I thank the honourable senator, and I shall convey to my colleagues his congratulations and the expression of his satisfaction over this development.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to 13 questions. I would ask that these answers be printed as part of today's proceedings.

IMMIGRATION

PHANTOM OF THE OPERA—FAST-TRACKING FOR LEADING ACTOR

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on June 11, 1991 by the Honourable Royce Frith regarding the Fast-Tracking Process—Application of Mr. Peter Karri for Canadian Citizenship.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Can I hear the answer to that one?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It reads as follows:

> Visa officials have the authority to determine if an application for immigration to Canada merits processing on a priority basis. There may be any number of humanitarian or national interest reasons why expedited processing of an application might be warranted. For example, if there is an urgent labour market need to be met and it is in the interest of workers or businesses in Canada to have an applicant processed expeditiously, visa officials attempt to respond.
>
> In the case at hand, Canadian visa officials determined that Mr. Karri's presence in Canada was important to ensure the continued success of the production. The visa officials responded to this legitimate economic need by processing his case on a priority basis.
>
> Visa and immigration officials also respond to other urgent situations with equal speed, for example in humanitarian cases. One rarely hears about such cases. In recent times, many Central Americans have been issued Minister's permits to allow them early entry into Canada because of dangerous conditions in their home country. The most recent case was an applicant from Guatemala who arrived in Canada with a Minister's permit only three days after visa officials became aware of his situation.
> Mr. Karri's application was processed in Detroit. Any immigration applicant is free to submit his or her application at any Canadian visa office abroad. Such an application need not be submitted in his or her home country; however, the applicant is required to meet all of the legislative requirements, namely health and security checks, before an immigrant visa can be issued.

Senator Frith: That is an interesting analogy about the applicant from Guatemala, but anyway, thank you.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

DATE FOR REVIEW OF ACT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senator, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on June 11, 1991 by the Honourable Lorna Marsden regarding the Date Set For Review of the Act Respecting Employment Equity—Government Policy.

(The Answer Follows:)

Section 13 of the Employment Equity Act provides that five years after the coming into force of the Act (i.e. after August 13, 1991) a comprehensive review of the provisions, operation and effect of the Act must be undertaken by a committee established or designated by the House of Commons. Accordingly, the earliest time the motion to establish the review committee can be made was the fall of 1991 when the House reconvened after the summer recess. The Honourable Senator can be assured that, at the first opportunity, the Minister will be asking that a committee undertake the review.

Members of said committee will specify the methods and time frames for the review, subject, of course, to the usual parliamentary requirements.

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO OKA CRISIS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on June 11, 1991 by the Honourable Richard Stanbury regarding An Independent Judicial Inquiry into the Oka Crisis.

(The answer follows:)

Establishment of a judicial inquiry is a specific recommendation of the report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs titled "The Summer of 1990".

The Federal Government is finalizing its response to the Report which has to be tabled on October 4, 1991. At this stage, any response to the question should await tabling of the government's response to the Standing Committee's Report.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONTRACT TO REVIEW HEADQUARTERS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on June 17, 1991 by the Honourable Gildas Molgat regarding the Contract to Review DND Headquarters -Status of Report.

(The answer follows:)

As a consequence of the 1989 and 1990 Federal Budgets, the National Defence Headquarters Functional Review was instituted in March 1990.

As a result of the Functional Review, the Department of National Defence determined the relative priority of the activities by NDHQ personnel on the basis of effectiveness and cost.

In addition, the Functional Review identified those activities which could be eliminated or reduced in scope to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of NDHQ without impairing the ability of the Headquarters to fulfil its assigned role and responsibilities.

Based on the findings of the Functional Review, a reduction in Headquarters personnel was announced on May 17th, 1991.

The reduction is being carried out carefully so as to protect DND personnel to the fullest extent possible. A National Employment Program for civilian employees affected by the NDHQ Functional Review has been implemented to provide maximum employment activities for affected and surplus employees.

On May 23rd, 1991 the Department of National Defence released a Backgrounder announcing the results of the Functional Review of National Defence Headquarters.

SASKATCHEWAN

FRANCOPHONE EDUCATION—POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the delayed answer to the question raised in the Senate on June 17, 1991, by the Honourable Gildas Molgat regarding Francophone education in the province of Saskatchewan reads as follows:

In 1988, the federal government and the Government of Saskatchewan signed a special agreement, providing $57M over 10 years (1988-1998) and consisting of four components, including management of schools by Francophone parents.

The Saskatchewan Minister of Education has repeatedly given the Secretary of State, Mr. Ray Meiklejohn, the assurance that he would amend the legislation on schools to enable Francophone parents to manage their own schools.

The minister has instructed his officials to consider various approaches to implementing this type of school management system.

The school management component of the agreement between the Department of the Secretary of State and the provincial government provides for annual federal contributions of up to $3M per year during the first five years of the agreement, and up to a maximum of $26M during the ten years the agreement will be in effect.

In the past three years (1988-1989 to 1990-1991), the Department of the Secretary of State has paid $1.7M in response to request by the province. The sum of $550,000 was approved for the current year (1991-1992), for a total federal contribution of $2.3M to date.

The purpose of the federal contribution is to enable the province implement a system for the management and control of educational institutions for Francophone minorities and to take the necessary steps to provide for such management and control, including any amendments required to existing legislation and regulations relating to schools.

To date, federal payments have financed the operations of the Co-ordinating Committee (Gallant Committee) which is responsible for making recommendations to the provincial cabinet. The committee submitted its report to the Minister of Education in June 1989, and in August the provincial cabinet adopted the report's recommendations. Federal payments were also used to fund the activities of an implementation committee created by the Minister of Education as well as the activities of a committee responsible for disseminating information to French-speaking communities in Saskatchewan.

DUTY ON EXPORT OF CANADIAN BEANS INTO UNITED STATES—DUTY-FREE IMPORTATION OF AMERICAN WHEAT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on June 18, 1991 by the Honourable Gildas Molgat regarding Duty on Export of Canadian Beans into United States.

(The answer follows:)

With respect to wheat, Article 705 of the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement (FTA) requires Canada to eliminate import permit requirements for U.S. grains and grain products commencing at such time as government support levels for these grains in the United States become equal to or less than government support levels in Canada. The calculation of support levels is carried out each year. The base period for the calculations is the two most recent crop years for which data are available.

Based on this year's calculations, the Canadian government support level for wheat is higher than the U.S. government support level. Canada was therefore obligated to remove the import permit requirements for U.S. wheat and wheat products. For barley, the Canadian government support level is lower than the U.S. government support level and therefore import permits will continue to be required for U.S. barley and barley products.

It should be noted that the United States maintains no import restrictions on Canadian wheat and wheat products and that Canadian exports of wheat to the United States exceed $60 million in this crop year.

Regarding white and navy beans, the Canada-U.S. Trade Commission agreed last spring to eliminate the tariffs applying to white and navy beans imported into the United States from Canada, in advance of the schedule set out in the FTA.

This result came as part of the second round of tariff elimination negotiations undertaken by the two countries at industry request, as allowed under Article 401.5 of the FTA. The complete elimination of the U.S. tariffs on white and navy beans originating from Canada, subject to final approval by the Canadian and U.S. governments, went into effect on a provisory basis on July 1, 1991.

IMMIGRATION

FAST-TRACK TREATMENT FOR APPLICANTS FROM IRAQ—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on June 18, 1991 by the Honourable Lorne Bonnell regarding Immigration—Fast-Track Treatment for Applicants from Iraq.

(The answer follows:)

The Government of Iraq recently relaxed exit controls for Iraqi citizens who wish to leave that country. This has resulted in an increase of applications from those citizens who wish to establish permanent residence in Canada.

Applications continue to be processed in accordance with the priorities established in the Immigration Act and Regulations. Members of the family class, convention refugees seeking resettlement, and members of designated classes are given the highest processing priority.

For applicants who believe they are in a life-threatening situation, visa officials have and will continue to assess each applicant's circumstances to determine if grounds exist to warrant special consideration.

SOUTH AFRICA—REMOVAL OF CANADIAN SANCTIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on June 18, 1991 by the Honourable Lorne Bonnell regarding South Africa—Removal of Sanctions.

(The answer follows:)

There is now for the first time in place a program for the removal of sanctions as the situation evolves. At the meeting of the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers on Southern Africa which was held in New Delhi on September 13, 1991, the Committee recommended to Commonwealth heads that they adopt the following program when they meet in Harare in October 1991.

1) The immediate removal of people-to-people sanctions, including restrictions on visa issuance and on the promotion of tourism, boycotts on cultural and scientific contacts, and the ban on direct air links;

2) The removal of economic and trade sanctions when all parties in South Africa are able to participate fully and effectively in constitutional negotiations;

3) The removal of financial sanctions when there is agreement on the text of a new democratic constitution for South Africa.

An important and delicate balance has been struck in these recommendations. The Commonwealth has shown that it remains at the forefront of world opinion and action on South Africa.

NATIONAL FINANCE

CLOSURE OF BASES—FINANCIAL AID TO COMMUNITIES—OPENING OF GST OFFICE IN SUMMERSIDE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on June 18, 1991 by the Honourable Lorne Bonnell regarding The Opening of a GST Office in Summerside, P.E.I.

(The answer follows:)

You will find listed below information on the current disposition of the Goods and Services Tax facility in Summerside, Prince Edward Island—more specifically, a listing of the project phases including their tender award and completion dates. In order to accelerate the delivery schedule as much as possible, the tendering for this project will be done in phases. The scope of work for each phase will be established to permit processing capability in August 1993.

CANADIAN AID TO SOVIET UNION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on September 17, 1991 by the Honourable H.A. Olson regarding Foreign Affairs—Canadian Aid to Soviet Union.

(The answer follows:)

Canada is implementing its technical assistance programmes both at the level of the Centre and at the level of Republics such as Ukraine.

Canada has also offered export credits of C$150 million to the USSR for food purchases and has reserved up to C$50 million in credits for Ukraine.

G-7 countries are paying particular attention to the food supply situation in the USSR and have agreed to make assessments of the emergency requirements that might arise. In this connection, a Canadian delegation of public and private sector officials will travel to the USSR during the week of September 22.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EFFECT OF ALCOHOL ON PREGNANT WOMEN—PROPER LABELLING OF PRODUCTS CONTAINING ALCOHOL

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on September 17, 1991 by the Honourable Royce Frith regarding Effect of Alcohol on Pregnant Women— Proper Labelling of Products Containing Alcohol.

Senator Frith: Would you read that one? I think it would be good to have it on the record.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I might have my own thoughts on this matter considering where I come from.

Senator Frith: You can put those on the record too, if you wish.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The Department of Health and Welfare is closely monitoring the American experience with regard to mandatory health warnings on the labels of alcoholic beverages. At the same time, it is pursuing other approaches (i.e., education) that are directly targeted to the most at-risk groups, such as pregnant women in order to deter them from inappropriate or unwise consumption of alcohol.

Currently, the Department is placing more emphasis on providing targeted information on the adverse effects of maternal alcohol use on the development of the foetus, including fetal alcohol syndrome, by way of prenatal and parenting programs and the distribution of publications. These include the Post-Partum Parent Support program, which is implemented in community hospitals throughout Canada, and "Canadian Mother and Child". An updated version of this publication will be distributed to community health organizations across Canada this Fall.

In addition, Health and Welfare has provided funding, through Canada's Drug Strategy, to enable communities to address Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS) issues. A family drop-in centre operated by the YWCA in Vancouver, for instance, will receive $140,000 over a two-year period to increase local awareness of the potential hazards of mothers who are raising children afflicted by fetal alcohol syndrome. Local awareness programs to promote responsible alcohol use have also been funded in various communities throughout Canada. Also, the National Native Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program has provided resource materials to support native FAS information campaigns.

In November 1989, the United States introduced a mandatory health warning on the labels of all alcoholic beverages. At the time of introduction, there was no evaluative information on the effectiveness of such warning labels. However, a number of well designed studies are now in progress to assess the impact of this labelling measure.

SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY—PROPOSED STUDY—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on September 18, 1991 by the Honourable Joyce Fairbairn regarding the Sugar Beet Industry—Proposed Study— Request for Details.

(The answer follows:)

The Minister of Agriculture launched on September 10, 1991 a Special Measures Committee to study the sugar beet industry in Canada.

The Committee is created under the new Farm Income Protection Act (FIPA). This legislation permits the Minister to take special measures to assist particular commodities experiencing difficulties.

The focus of the Committee will be on the industry's competitiveness, and the examination of policy alternatives for consideration by governments. It will study the effectiveness of the current National Tripartite Stabilization Plan, the possibility of producers being better served through the new safety net programs and the feasibility of a national sugar pricing policy. The deadline for the completion of the study is March 31, 1992.

Comprised of industry and provincial government representatives from Manitoba and Alberta, in addition to federal government officials, the Committee will be chaired by Linda J. Keen, Regional Director General (Prairies) with Agriculture Canada's Agri-Food Development Branch. The first meeting is scheduled for October 24, 1991.

INTERNATIONAL GRAIN SUBSIDIES REQUEST FOR UPDATE ON NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on September 18, 1991 by the Honourable H.A. Olson regarding International Grain Subsidies—Request for Update on Negotiations.

(The answer follows:)

Discussion on agriculture resumed in Geneva last Monday, September 16 under the chairmanship of Mr. Arthur Dunkel, Director General of the GATT.

The Canadian position has not changed since October 1990 when it was announced following intensive consultations with the provinces and industry.

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

Canada will continue to pursue actively its four key objectives in this negotiation:

—A reduction in tariff and non-tariff import barriers;

—elimination of export subsidies and a substantial reduction in trade distorting internal subsidies;

—effective GATT rules equally applicable to all contracting parties, including the clarification and strengthening of Article XI and improved disciplines on countervailing duties; and —a system to minimize the adverse trade impact on health and sanitary measures.

All major participants recognize that it would be very difficult to conclude a GATT agreement later than the beginning of next year due to the U.S. election campaign.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Meighen, for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament.—(Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.)(7th day of resuming debate)

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, under the new rules of this chamber my time is limited to 15 minutes. Until today, approximately 10 senators have participated in this debate. By my calculations, the speeches of all 10 have exceeded 15 minutes—some by a few and some by many minutes. I should like to warn honourable senators in advance that, if I speak on this item today, I will go beyond 15 minutes.

However, with the cooperation of all honourable senators, I will not go beyond 30 minutes. Therefore, I am asking for leave of the Senate to speak longer than 15 minutes.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): We certainly agree. However, we do so without accepting the argument that because the debate started before the rules were changed, that is a valid reason to allow for their suspension; otherwise such suspensions could apply ad infinitum to all legislation presented before the rules were changed. Because the Senator who is about to speak is known for his erudition and the solidity of his arguments, I suggest that we certainly make an exception in his case.

• (1430)

Senator Frith: That would be a reason too, then. Accepted. Anyone who has erudition is not bound by that rule.

Senator Graham: I thank all honourable senators for their cooperation.

There is a well—known inscription on a plaque in the legislative chamber in Charlottetown. The words are from Milton's Paradise Lost and have a particular poignancy for me as I contemplate the present state of our country. The inscription reads: "Providence being their guide, they builded better than they knew."

Today, Canada's soul truly wanders. We lack direction. We forget that our accomplishments as Canadians have been far more substantial than our differences. We have not built a great country by accident, luck, or circumstance. We have rejected virulant forms of national identity. We have eschewed the aggressive nationalism which has dominated much of the world throughout the last century. We have pursued a different path. It can be argued that we are a tenuous creation because we have relied on the pursuit of common values and common purpose to serve as the national glue. So for that reason, we are a nation still in the process of formation.

Canada is a daily act of will. We have endured because we have known this to be true, and successive national governments have worked to make this effective. Together, Canadians have built, in partnership with their respective governments, one of the most unique, beautiful and complex countries in the world. We have entered into a social compact reflective of our collective will to nurture and sustain a good neighbourhood. We have understood that "national association" means mutual respect and support, and we have known that the central role of government has been unequivocally to preserve and protect our unique social compact, our good neighbourhood. In this way, Canada has endured.

Something new was created here north of the 49th parallel. Our history serves as an important chapter in 20th century international chronicles. We are a distinctive and unique national community. We are an experiment in what John Holmes so well entitled "responsible radicalism" both at home and abroad. We have been proud to call ourselves a social and economic democracy. It is upon these foundations that we have built a society which is the envy of the global community.

Perhaps Providence has been our guide. I believe we have built something even better than we know; but, today, our national soul and sense of common purpose seems lost, or at least longing for direction and leadership. Our historic struggle for national consensus is a proud and brave testament to the will, strength and vision of our forefathers, but it is a day-to-day struggle.

The central role of government is to further the collective will to live together. If the central government lacks credibility in the eyes of the majority of its people or is drained of its power to act in the national interest, it can no longer serve as custodian of our distinctive and national community.

I take no pleasure in echoing the sentiments of my fellow Canadians that the current government lacks credibility. I take no pleasure in stating that the present government has dropped the mantle of leadership.

Honourable senators, nowhere are the storm clouds of our national discontent darker than in Atlantic Canada. Due to geography, relative size — both in terms of population and economic influence — the Atlantic provinces are particularly vulnerable to the vicissitudes of our national, constitutional and economic difficulties. While we contemplate constitutional changes to heal the soul of our nation, I am sorely disappointed that the Speech from the Throne did not attend to the other gaping wound in the national body, that of economic disparities.

I am the first to acknowledge that the Atlantic region is already a visible recipient of the benefits of federalism, but the truth is that other areas of the country are beneficiaries of shared tax dollars and associated tools of economic development. Many of these areas are referred to in the report to the Council of Maritime Premiers entitled "Standing up to the Future: The Maritimes in the 1990s" by Dr. Charles J. McMillan.

I do not begrudge for one minute anyone's prosperity. I recognize that the federal government must act for all Canadians; but the simple fact remains that macroeconomic policies conceived at the federal level have not narrowed the disparities gap between Atlantic Canada and Central Canada but have, in fact, increased those disparities. We have been gravely hurt by restrictive fiscal and monetary policies. Economic opportunities in Atlantic Canada, as elsewhere in the country, have plummeted as the government increased interest rates—all this in order to dampen the inflationary pressures emanating from an overheated southern-Ontario economy. The recovery will be slow and painful.

Let us translate all of this. The central role of government is the preservation of our good neighbourhood. We have understood that national association means mutual respect and support. The terms of our unique social compact have been internationally acclaimed. This has been so because successive governments have nurtured our good neighbourhood by placing people at the centre, by putting people first. But you cannot place people at the centre; for example, if cuts to Established Programs Financing seriously impair opportunities for students to pursue post-secondary education.

I happen to believe that Established Programs Financing and equalization are critical stabilizers for our regional economy. You cannot place people at the centre, if agencies like the Department of Industry, Science and Technology isolate Atlantic Canada from the economic and technological advances of the future; and you cannot place people at the centre if you persist with macroeconomic policies injurious to their interests, which kill the products of their local industry and which stifle their dynamism; and you cannot place people at the centre if you accentuate the structural biases in this country which persistently favour Central Canada and which sap the energies and self-esteem of our innovative citizens.

● (1440)

I think most honourable senators will agree that the economic environment has changed in a number of significant ways and that any new strategy must be cognizant of those changes. We face very tough conditions in a fiercely competitive international trade environment; there are constraints evident within the budget itself; the threat of countervail from the United States continually looms over our heads, and I remind honourable senators that the Free Trade Agreement did not rid us of this central concern.

Given these new constraints, I would have expected the Speech from the Throne to have mapped out a new role for the federal government in economic development. To their credit, the Maritime provinces are working through the Council of Maritime Premiers to revitalize the local economy by tearing down trade barriers and pursuing collective goals in transportation, education, energy and health care. Leadership in fostering co-operation and co-ordination will help the Atlantic region reach its full potential.

Over the decades, we as Atlantic Canadians have really tried to make the compromises needed in the interests of national association. We have believed that national association means mutual respect and support. We know that nation-building is a daily act of will that requires all Canadians to recognize the true value of all regions, a value that cannot be measured simply in economic terms but must also acknowledge the richness of our diversity, our culture, our heritage and our geography.

One of our finest native sons, James Layton Ralston, a former Minister of National Defence, articulated the Maritime view of our federal association as follows, and I quote from Hansard of April 4, 1927:

> We in the Maritime provinces have had no quarrel with the rest of Canada in anything that this Dominion has done to benefit other sections of the country . . . When the province of Quebec added to her domain what was virtually an empire, when her railways were subsidized, her canals deepened, and Montreal made an ocean port; when Ontario had her area trebled and her canals built; when Manitoba was doubled in area and means were afforded whereby the products of that province could be marketed at a cost 25 per cent lower than could the products of the country immediately to the south; when Alberta and Saskatchewan, in view of special circumstances, received substantial annual subsidies to facilitate their entry into the Dominion in at least comparative affluence; when, in the interests of British Columbia, the construction of three transcontinental railways was authorized and the province had extended to her certain special treatment in relation to railways; when all these benefits were received by the other provinces of Canada the people of the Maritimes gladly acknowledged the right of their fellow citizens to generous treatment.

Honourable senators, our shared vision must, as Ralston suggests, be a truly generous one, not a vision characterized by constitutional bottom lines and provincial bartering. I believe that this generosity of spirit of which Ralston spoke still remains true, as Atlantic Canadians continue to believe that we are contributing to the evolution of a distinctive experiment north of the 49th parallel. We see ourselves as the condition necessary to a great country. Sir George Etienne Cartier reflected upon this in a speech he gave in Halifax in 1864. "What nation", he asked, "has ever been powerful without the maritime element." As I have said, if any peoples have understood that nationhood means a daily act of will, it is Atlantic Canadians.

My feelings are shared by fellow Cape Bretoners such as the Committee of Concerned Citizens which recently published an urgent agenda for economic renewal in Cape Breton. The report graphically illustrates the near crisis conditions haunting the island insofar as unemployment figures are concerned. The authors point out:

> We find ourselves in 1991 in an even worse economic condition than in 1985. A higher real unemployment rate, with major uncertainty surrounding Sysco and Devco, new plants constructed with Enterprise Cape Breton financial aid closing at an alarming rate and with large numbers of our most potentially productive working population leaving the Island.

The agenda, honourable senators, serves up lots of charts and graphs. The numbers translate into great pain for many families in my part of the world. The committee is correct in its observation that physical privation is bad. Yes, unemployment insurance, welfare payments and food banks help, but this does very little to alleviate what the authors call the "starvation of the spirit."

In an urgent appeal for economic renewal the Committee of Concerned Citizens has emphasized that Cape Bretoners must take on the responsibility for their own destiny. The report therefore recommends that government must shift the initiative and the responsibility of economic renewal from itself back to the community. Its authors call for a comprehensive development organization based on the combined energies of local practitioners to develop a framework for renewal. The Committee of Concerned Citizens of Cape Breton has recognized something very important about our people, honourable senators: that U.I. and welfare will not build the circumstances of our new dynamism; that demoralization is a large source of our present discontent. It maintains that many of the industrial incentive grants designed to deal with our unemployment problems, as well-intentioned as they may have been, did not achieve their full objective or may have been ineffective.

The Committee of Concerned Citizens of Cape Breton is representative of a populist mobilization which has begun to take root in the psyche of Atlantic Canadians. It knows that the assault on discouragement must take place at the community level. It believes that government must facilitate, not engineer, this assault.

The architects of economic renewal are not dealers in the dramatic or the apocalyptic. These are ordinary citizens from all walks of life who know that our people want to work. They are aware that the greatest threat to our self-esteem lies in unemployment. They are convinced that the solution lies in the Atlantic spirit of independence and self-reliance; and they are driven by the certitude that regional disparities will worsen over the next decade unless something dramatic is done and that the major casualties will be our people. They insist that government take up its central role, which is to protect and nourish our good neighbourhood. Loosely translated, it means that government must open the portals to the collective wisdom of our local practitioners.

Our people are developing community development programs which are serving as important levers to economic and business development. The Economic Council of Canada labelled this people- driven approach "From the Bottom Up" in a recently published statement. Local community development means an assault on disparity launched by our innovative citizenry at the grass roots. These are citizens of disadvantaged communities who have seen that local action can mobilize key resources in regions previously noted for depletion and economic stagnation.

Honourable senators, these are people who understand that migration is not our birthright, that idleness is not our propensity, that economic hardship must not be our lot. These are people who believe that relationships acquired within a local community are catalysts to meaningful enterprise. These are people who are guided by the assumption that regional development means the engagement of the productive capacities of Atlantic Canadians in community mobilization from the bottom up.

Honourable senators, local development remedies have concentrated on the improvement of regional productivity in the interests of facilitating competition in outside markets, for it is only through this market competitiveness that these enterprises can survive.

One of the reasons why small businessmen in isolated communities are unable to find capital is simple enough: more often than not they do not have the basic information needed to acquire it. Local development organizations are starting to provide financial services in areas where they were previously nonexistent.

We lack information about markets and resources in Atlantic Canada. We lack access to capital in Atlantic Canada. The recent wave of globalization in financial markets does not bode well for small scale entrepreneurs in less-developed regions. For these reasons, community development corporations have been experimenting in levering private capital through the private banking system. There have been a number of techniques employed to do so—for example, revolving loan guarantee funds and, as well, the concept of the linked deposit, whereby the funds of the community development corporation or its allies are deposited on condition that the bank will finance targeted ventures.

• (1450)

Honourable senators, community development organizations are incubators for commercial ideas and intriguing pathfinders to a future business base which, happily, may not be subject to the recurrent swings of international commodity markets. Psychologically and socially, these kinds of alternatives constitute dynamic boosts to our self esteem.

Much more needs to be done to ensure that many of our talented young people who make substantial contributions to business and society elsewhere in Canada have an opportunity to make these contributions and to pursue real business opportunities closer to home.

A century ago, one of the fathers of Confederation, Nova Scotia's Sir Charles Tupper, put it this way:

> The human mind naturally adapts itself to the position it occupies. The most gigantic intellects may be dwarfed by being cabin'd cribbed and confined. It requires a great country and great circumstances to develop great men.

Honourable senators, we have a great country. No peoples in this beautiful land have been prouder to be called Canadians than Atlantic Canadians. However, we need a national government to assist us in our efforts, and an economic plan which will complement the energies of our people.

While I continue to believe that the national government must provide for equalization as set out in section 36 of the Constitution Act, I also believe it is time to give the provinces more program delivery responsibility for regional economic development. Even more importantly, however, we must devise a fairer means of arriving at balanced decisions within our federal state. An elected Senate with equal representation from the provinces will ensure that federal decisions are approved by the component parts of our federation. I am fully in favour of this fundamental constitutional change.

What we are seeing today in Atlantic Canada is a great challenge posed to government by the community-based activism of its own people. The government is asked as never before to facilitate, not engineer the dynamism of our dealers in new ideas. This dynamism can be fostered by community loan funds, regional development banks, employee share ownership plans, business development centres and the like. We must recognize that community economic development means the encouragement of viable businesses as well as the construction of a good neighbourhood for people. I believe the government must support local development organizations which link social goals with business goals. This is the way in which good neighbourhoods are built. Atlantic Canadians recognize, perhaps more than most, the value of "community".

Honourable senators, we cannot ignore the fact that significant changes have taken place in the world economy. Specialized knowledge is now the central factor in generating high earnings in global industries. High value businesses are attracted to the basic dynamic of knowledge-intensive zones. Capital will seek out intellectual capability. Capital will seek out climates receptive to problem-solving. It will seek out dealers in new ideas. It will be those regions which nourish human resources, which laud strategic brokers of new technologies and markets—it will be those regions which will take best advantage of the transition from this age to the next.

Given its tremendous advances in technology and communications in recent years, the barriers to investment from high value businesses are not likely to be wages, geography or distances. Location incentives do not necessarily serve as drawing power. Private capital will keep company with a skilful, energetic and committed citizenry, with those who can make the vital connections between ideas and markets. Capital will seek out brokers and new ideas; it will go where it will if the playing field is level.

It is, then, the quality of the human resource which is the catalyst to the 21st Century. Robert Reich speculated on the evolution of the intellectual capital of a nation's work force in last February's Atlantic Monthly. He predicted that a work force gradually generates its foundations of a knowledge-intensive zone through what he calls "a virtuous cycle". Reich envisaged the cycle this way:

> Thus a virtuous cycle can be set in motion: A work force possessing a good basic education, which can efficiently bring the fruits of its labours to the global economy, can attract global capital for its performance of moderately complex tasks. The experience gained by performing these tasks generates additional on-the-job training and experience, which serve to lure global capital for more complex activities. As skills build and experience accumulates, the nation's citizens receive more and more from the rest of the world in exchange for their services—which permits them to invest in better schools, transportation, research and communications systems. As their problem-solving, problem-identifying, and brokering skills grow, and their links with the world steadily improve, their income rises.

Honourable senators, such a "virtuous cycle" set in motion in Atlantic Canada would usher the region into the emerging global economy.

Let me focus finally on my own people in Cape Breton. We have a major coal resource with a billion tons in proven reserves. We have the potential to establish a "knowledge-intensive zone" in our region. We have a work force with great intellectual potential. We know that coal liquefaction and metallurgical coking are only a few of the illustrations of the potential inherent in a new age; they are signposts to the future.

We must also look at the case of our steel industry in terms of the new dynamism at work in the global economy. Sysco has modernized plant facilities, but the industry is in decline. Yet the potential exists if only we can fire up the problem-solving capabilities of our people. We must remember that the whole concept of distinction between goods and services has become less applicable to the new global economy. Steelmaking itself is becoming a service industry. Services are an important part of the final product when alloys are moulded to a precision tolerance. Steel service centres are part of the new wave. We must set the virtuous cycle in motion—in fishing, in forestry, in all of our basic and primary industries, as well as in the service industries of the future.

Honourable senators, our people want government to help liberate our energies; to unleash the full spirit of our creativity. We are aware of the wisdom of T.C. Haliburton's words in Sam Slick written in 1836, and I quote, "if the sea was always calm, it would poison the universe." Atlantic Canadians know the hypnotic effect of calm seas. We are inventing the circumstances of our own new dynamism. All of this will take leadership and commitment. We invite all Canadians to book passage with us in the churning waters of our transition.

Senator Molgat: Honourable Senator Graham, your region, the Antigonish region, through St. Francis Xavier University, was a leader in the development of the caisse populaire and the co-operative movement. In fact, other provinces such as my own benefited from such movements.

How much of a role have these organizations played in regional development in your own region?

Senator Graham: In our own region, the St. Francis Xavier extension department and the Coady International Institute specifically play a very important role. I can give you countless examples where local financial ventures have failed but the credit union has come to the rescue. For example, there is one specifically in southern Labrador, which does not happen to be in my province, which was mentioned recently in the article, "From the Bottom Up" where a bank went out of business and the credit union came in and rescued the local economy.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I thank the honourable senator for making an excellent speech. I would like to say how much I appreciated his reference to a former member of the House of Commons from Prince Edward Island, the Honourable J. L. Ralston.

I also noted Senator's Graham's reference to the inscription on the plaque honouring Confederation at Canada's 50th anniversary. I was wondering if he had looked it up only to discover that, according to the then Premier of Prince Edward Island, the inscription was from John Milton, as Senator Graham mentioned, but the second line was from James Russell Lowell. I do not know why they thought it important to have one from the old world and one from the new. I have not researched that. I should have looked it up carefully before I even asked the question but I am getting old and forgetful.

I also noticed and approved of his mention that Prince Edward Island have the same number of senators as every other province, although Premier Ghiz said the other day that those who think that way are dreaming in Technicolor. However, as the Prophet Joel said, "Your old men may dream dreams."

[Translation]

Hon. Claude Castonguay: Honourable senators, I would like to take the opportunity provided by the continuation of the debate on the Speech from the Throne to say a few words on the proposals for the renewal of Canada that were tabled this morning in the House of Commons by the Prime Minister.

Although my examination of these proposals is only preliminary so far and of course I intend to read the document much more seriously and closely, nevertheless an examination of the proposals shows that they are extremely elaborate and touch on all issues that now concern Canadians.

In my opinion, these proposals are valid and will fortunately make it possible to continue the process of constitutional renewal that is under way. They are obviously the result of a great deal of effort by all who helped prepare this document. I think that we should congratulate them on the work they did. It was obviously an extremely difficult task. We know the differences of opinion that exist within the country, from region to region, among the people and they succeeded in doing what at first seemed practically impossible.

What attitude should one take towards these proposals? I think that before reacting, it is extremely important to understand what they involve so that we can all contribute to a better understanding and ensure that the public and all who want to form an opinion on these proposals do so on the basis of the best knowledge possible and not prejudices or a misunderstanding of what they involve.

We must not forget in this exercise that we are going through an extremely difficult period in our country's history. I think it is no exaggeration to say that Canada is going through the most difficult period in its history. I think that we must always keep this aspect of the question in mind.

I also think that in examining these proposals and considering the stage that we are embarking on, we should put recriminations behind us and look to the future. We should consider the proposals before us and see how they can be improved.

In recent months, indeed in the last two years, we have heard a great deal about what is not working in our country and what divides us. I think that starting now, we must concentrate on what is working and how to make our country work better and also how to make us less divided and more united in future.

This morning, I listened attentively to the speech by the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Chrétien, and the speech by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, Ms. McLaughlin. I must say that I was extremely impressed and encouraged by their speeches.

[English]

I listened carefully and I was very pleased to hear what I heard from both. The general thrust of what they said, as far as I could understand, was that they want to participate fully in the next phase of the process. They want to improve the proposals that have been put before us. I can assure you that this is exactly the spirit in which I will approach my own work as co-chairman, if I am elected tomorrow as co-chairman of this committee.

• (1510)

[Translation]

The Joint Committee is to meet for the first time tomorrow afternoon, as far as I understand. The task at hand is enormous. The responsibility that we share as members of this committee is supremely important, not only in developing recommendations, but also as regards the image we will project to the public during the proceedings.

I feel that we can play a useful role in this process just by the way we approach our work.

On that point, I was encouraged by the quality of the committee's membership. I am pleased to see that the Liberal Party will be represented by the leader and deputy leader of the opposition in the Senate. In my view, that goes to show how seriously the official opposition takes the work of this committee and I am very encouraged by it.

Of course, the role of the committee will be to listen to the representations from our provincial counterparts, from various organizations and from the public. I think that we will have to make a special effort to hear as many witnesses as possible in the relatively short period of time at our disposal.

It will also be our responsibility to provide information to the public on the content of the proposals before us. I believe that our role is twofold: to listen and to inform.

[English]

We will be developing a program which will, I hope, enable us to do as much as is humanly possible within the relatively short period of time at our disposal. If I understand the mood of the population correctly, it must be kept in mind that we must go through this phase of the process so that people know what the proposals are, and so that they may have some input to improve them.

At the same time, it is felt that this part of the process should not be too long. The population is expecting some action. It does not want to wait forever, or much longer at least, to see some action on this front.

[Translation]

Personally, when I was asked to become co-chair of this committee, I said I would accept, provided I agreed generally with the contents of the document and felt comfortable with this document.

As I said before, I had a chance to read the text and it seemed to be a valid document. I accepted this responsibility with some trepidation, and I also felt humbled by the fact that the task facing us is quite impressive. I realize it is a very heavy responsibility.

I will therefore need the support of all my colleagues here in this chamber and especially the support and understanding of committee members.

In return, I can assure you I will try to keep a very open mind and be as non-partisan as I can. I think this is an exercise in which we should forget our party affiliations and concentrate on the mandate we have been given and the proposals before our committee.

My objective during the months to come will be, with your help and the help of committee members, to make this a very positive experience and to obtain the broadest possible support across this country. I also hope that by the end of our mandate we will be able to draft, with maximum support from the committee itself, a number of recommendations that will enhance the proposals we have before us.

[English]

To conclude, I wish to repeat that, in my responsibility as co-chairman of this committee, I will take as open an attitude as possible toward all the suggestions that will be made. Again, I intend, as much as possible, to take a non-partisan attitude. I believe that the task in front of us is of such importance that we should look at the proposals which have been presented and work in a way that is above partisanship.

With the help of the members of the committee, and whoever wishes to make suggestions to us as we go along, my objective will be to go through this stage of the process in as positive a way as possible and to obtain as wide a consensus as possible from among the population, from all those interested in this most important question. It is my wish that on completion we will be able to submit recommendations that will improve on these proposals with the widest possible consensus within the committee.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre DeBané: Honourable senators, our very distinguished colleague, Senator Castonguay, invited suggestions. I would like to make one.

[English]

In a genuinely democratic country a constitution is nothing less or more than a document in which the citizens state how they have decided to govern themselves. Essentially this is how Canadians have decided to govern themselves.

One wish that I would like to put forward for the consideration of Senator Castonguay, a man whom I hold in high esteem, is that he will pursue a formula that exists in several other countries, such as Australia, France and Switzerland, and was suggested by the Pepin-Robarts Commission, of which two of his colleagues, Senators Beaudoin and Chaput-Rolland, were members—namely that the citizens of this country should have a say in the formulation and amendment of the Constitution.

[Senator Castonguay.]

It must be decided once and for all what is the basic constitutive element of this country. Is it the citizens of Canada which constitute the country or is it the provincial and federal governments? If it is governments alone which constitute Canada, then only they should participate in deciding how to amend the Constitution.

I am telling you respectfully that if you ask the people of this country whether they would like to participate in the process, you will find that an overwhelming majority will want to get involved. That is what we have learned from the Meech Lake debate, from the Belanger-Campeau Commission and from the Spicer Committee. The people want to get involved. My only wish is that you will say, as have many other countries, that no amendment will be finalized without the stamp of approval of the citizens of this country, so that finally our Constitution will be a document in which Canadians have stated how they want to govern themselves.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Senator Castonguay: Honourable senators, just a few words to thank Senator DeBané for the suggestions that he has just made. I can assure him that I took good note of what he has said and that, in our works, I will try to remember this very important dimension of the question. Thank you, honourable Senator DeBané.

[English]

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, debate adjourned.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ON AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Final Report of the Special Joint Committee on the Process for Amending the Constitution of Canada, presented in the Senate on 20th June, 1991.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I must inform the Senate that if Senator Beaudoin speaks now, his speech will close the debate on this report.

Hon. Gerald A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I am aware that if I speak now to the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Process for Amending the Constitution of Canada, I will close the debate.

As you know, the committee was created last January, as far as the Senate is concerned, and submitted its report on June 20.

The committee completed its mandate within five months on four main points: the amending formula, referendums, constituent assemblies and public participation in the amending process.

In the course of this very brief report I would like to take this opportunity to thank the senators who sat on this committee: Senators Kirby, Gigantès, Comeau and Nurgitz.

I was delighted to see that some of our recommendations were accepted by the committee of 18 ministers, chaired by the Right Hon. Joseph Clark, and endorsed by the Mulroney government. I am thinking more specifically, as was mentioned in this morning's report, of the delegation of legislative powers.

The work done by this committee will be useful to the Special Joint Committee on the Renewal of Canada. In fact, the Castonguay-Dobbie Committee has been given a sweeping mandate, and it has all the latitude it needs to reconsider the constitutional amending process.

I would like to express my full support for the two co-chairs and the members of this new committee.

In concluding, I would like to say that I am glad I was asked to sit on this very important committee.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if I may be given an opportunity to ask Senator Beaudoin a question, inasmuch as I cannot take the floor myself to speak in a separate speech. I take it that Senator Beaudoin would agree that this document, or the proposal put forward today by the committee of ministers, has not made any reference whatsoever to his proposal that there be put in storage, or in the stockroom, a bill to establish a referendum at a certain point. As I recollect, his committee recommended that a referendum bill be prepared which would be available to the government at a later point.

Am I correct in saying that that proposal does not appear in this document? I have not been able to find it. Am I also correct in saying that this document has put to one side the principal recommendation of his committee on the amending formula in the sentence which reads, "The recommendation has failed to attract the unanimous support which would be required to change the amending formula." It then goes on, after having put the principal recommendation of his report to one side, to put forward alternative ideas. I appreciate that the honourable senator has found, rightfully so, some resonance of his document in this proposal of "Shaping Canada's Future Together". Am I not correct in drawing those conclusions? If not, I would like to be corrected.

Senator Beaudoin: First, let me deal with the formula of amendment, which is referred to in this proposal. As you know, in changing the formula of amendment we must respect the rule of unanimity. It is too soon to say how the new committee will react to this question. The only thing I can say at this stage is that it is within the mandate of the Castonguay-Dobbie Committee to come to that question at the appropriate time. We cannot at this stage prejudge anything in that regard, except to say that it may be considered. Whether it will be like the Meech Lake formula for amendment, whether it will be like the formula we put forward, or whether it will be another formula remains to be seen. I cannot go any further on that point.

With regard to the referendum, I have not read all of the document yet. I have only glanced through it. However, it has been said, in some speeches at least, that the question of the legislation on a possible consultative referendum may be contemplated by the Government of Canada. That is all I can say at this stage on those two questions.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Perhaps I can help on the question of a referendum bill. It is the government's intention to bring in such a bill in the next little while. Mr. Clark has confirmed that today.

Senator Frith: A bill dealing generally with referendums?

Senator Murray: A bill that would give government the authority to hold a national referendum. I cannot go any further than that, but Mr. Clark may wish to do so. In any case, he will be the sponsor of the bill.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The debate is now terminated.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, just a note before we move on; a small one, perhaps. I doubt that Senator Beaudoin's intervention closed the debate, because it is an item headed "Resuming Debate on the Consideration of the Final Report". Under Rule 36, the final right of reply which closes debate, applies to second reading of a bill, a substantive motion or an inquiry. A substantive motion is an independent motion neither incidental to, nor relating to, a proceeding or order of the day already before the Senate.

• (1530)

I do not think there was any motion involved. There certainly was an inquiry. There certainly was no second reading. Therefore, in passing, I note that his intervention would not have closed the debate. In fact, he did not have the final right of reply.

A BILL TO AMEND CERTAIN STATUTES OF CANADA TO RECOGNIZE THE WARTIME SERVICE OF THE VETERANS OF THE CANADIAN MERCHANT NAVY

POINT OF ORDER—SPEAKER'S RULING SUSPENDED

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the last time this came up, I said that I would raise a point of order on this particular bill. I waited, hoping that Senator Marshall would be here when I developed it.

Just to recapitulate, this bill was first presented on May 8 in a slightly different form known as Bill S-21. When second reading was proposed, Senator Murray raised a point of order to argue that the bill could not be introduced in this house because of its being a money bill. Senator Frith then asked for opportunity to reflect on it. Prorogation followed. A new session began on May 13. The amended bill, now known as Bill S-5, had first reading on June 21. It is now being called for second reading, but not before the point of order is developed.

Once again, the bill is the same as Bill S-21 except that clause 15 has been added; but even with the addition of clause 15, the arguments developed by Senator Murray remain valid in our opinion, and I will just summarize them.

The basic argument against acceptance of this bill, which substantiates a point of order, is that the prerogative of a money bill is that it have a Royal Recommendation. Senators know, as all parliamentarians must, that money bills originate in the House of Commons and they must have a Royal Recommendation attached to them. This is specified in Section 53 of the Constitution Act of 1867, as well as in the Constitution Act, Section 54. We find it again in our own rules, under rule 82, formerly rule 62; and there have been rulings by the Speaker as recently as February 27, 1991, in which he has given examples from authorities of matters addressed in legislation which require a Royal Recommendation.

Before developing this argument, I want to say that any of our comments on this point have absolutely nothing to do with the merits of the bill, and certainly even less to do with the sponsor, who has been very vigilant and active on behalf of the veterans of this country. Indeed, his work has allowed countless veterans and their families to receive additional benefits and additional recognition from their country.

Hon. John B. Stewart: That being true, go away and get a Royal Recommendation for the bill to the other place.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I am glad you are supporting my point, honourable senator, but I wanted Senator Marshall to know this, whether the veterans have an echo of it or not.

In the bill there are at least three clauses which amend the Pension Act, there are two clauses which amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, and two other clauses which amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. These amendments clearly extend the purposes and objects of the currently authorized program expenditures under the Pension Act. So it is quite obvious that this bill would have the effect of appropriating public revenues and would involve new charges under the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

There are many rulings on the subject of money bills. There is the one on June 16, 1980, in which the Acting Speaker of the Senate ruled an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act. There is also another, on June 13, 1989, which concerned two bills then presented by Senator Marshall.

So, briefly, this is a summary of the argument presented by the Leader of the Government. My submission is that this bill infringes on the financial initiative of the Crown, and it requires, as the Constitution specifies, a Royal Recommendation. It therefore cannot be introduced in the Senate.

● (1540)

Again, I want to reiterate that this stand has nothing to do with the merits of the bill or the intent of its sponsor, but, rather, it concerns the upholding of a fundamental prerogative of the Crown.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you rule on this particular matter.

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, if Senator Marshall is agreeable, there is an easy way to solve this problem. With the government having indicated support for the principle of the bill, Senator Murray could be substituted as the proponent of the bill, if Senator Marshall agrees, and the matter could proceed. Senator Murray, being a Privy Councillor, could introduce the bill.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Money bills must be introduced in the House of Commons, not here.

Senator Stewart: If that is the only problem, Senator Murray can speak to one of his colleagues in the other place. We were told this afternoon by Senator Lynch-Staunton that there is no difficulty with the substance of the bill and that the character of the senator who introduced the bill is, in itself, a powerful factor recommending the bill to the government. Senator Murray has only to speak to his colleagues in the other place, and that silly little formula they now regard as a Royal Recommendation can be provided.

I am sure the bill will advance through the other place quite rapidly. Senator Marshall will then ensure the bill is dealt with quickly in this chamber, and the benefits, of which the minister has told us the government approves, will flow to those deserving people whom Senator Marshall and other senators wish to assist.

There may be a constitutional point but, given the position of the government as stated by Senators Murray and Lynch-Staunton, let us not be stopped by legal requirement that the government can easily overcome.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall certainly take note of that helpful suggestion and the spirit in which it is offered, and I shall speak to my colleagues about the matter. I am sure they will want to take the matter under consideration.

Hon. Jack Marshall: I thank everyone for the support they have given me, but I wish to quarrel with the fact that it is out of order in its implications as a money bill.

Before dealing with the money bill, however, I want to draw your attention, honourable senators, to certain aspects of procedure in the chamber which I feel will demonstrate conclusively that the point of order raised by the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate is not valid.

Senator Lynch-Staunton alluded to the background of the bill, and I want to make it clear, on the record, what happened. I remind honourable senators that I introduced private bill S-21 on May 8, 1991. The bill was put forth to amend certain statutes of Canada to recognize the wartime service of the veterans of the Canadian merchant navy. Immediately after the bill was introduced, the Leader of the Government, Senator Murray, rose on a point of order to challenge the bill on the grounds that it was a money bill. The matter was taken under advisement by the Speaker for consideration at that time. However, due to the fact that prorogation was announced on May 13, Bill S-21 expired. I then reintroduced the bill with substantive changes, not, as referred to, as "slight changes", and it is now called S-5. It was given first reading on June 21.

I want to remind honourable senators that no objection was made by the Leader of the Government at that time nor, indeed, by any member of the Senate on the introduction of this bill.

• (1550)

My response centres on two relevant sections of Beauchesne. Section 319 clearly states that the Speaker's attention must be directed to a breach of order at the proper moment, namely, immediately it occurred. It seems clear to me that the proper moment for my colleague to have raised such a point would have been at the moment it occurred on June 21 when Bill S-5 was introduced at first reading.

Honourable senators, I repeat that no member of the Senate raised any sort of breach of order when Bill S-5 was introduced, including the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I note, from his reference to the bill in the Debates of the Senate of September 17, that he said, "I thought it was the same bill." The Speaker interceded to remind him that this was a new bill in a new session. It is clear, therefore, that I can introduce another bill containing changes to verify, confirm and to give justice to what I had previously introduced.

In any case, it is clear that the point of order is now being raised at the wrong time under the terms of section 319 and for the wrong reasons.

There is another section of Beauchesne which is applicable, section 321, which states that a point of order against procedure must be raised promptly and before the question has passed to a stage where the objection would be out of place. Senator Lynch-Staunton's procedural problems are being raised three months and two days after the time when such a point of order could have been considered raised properly.

I recognize that we were in recess for the summer but on June 21, when I introduced the bill, no one rose on a point of order.

I feel that honourable senators are entitled to hear the second reading debate on Bill S-5. It has been on the order paper for some time now and the entire question of the bill is now at the stage when honourable senators should be giving it their full scrutiny with open, meaningful and substantive debate. I am confident the Speaker will rule in accordance with sections 319 and 321 of Beauchesne and that the point of order raised by Senator Lynch-Staunton was not raised at the proper time; it was not raised promptly and the matter at hand has passed to the stage where the objection is entirely out of place.

Turning now to Bill S-5, which is alleged to be a money bill, I would remind honourable senators that contained in the bill is clause 15, to which the deputy leader alluded, which specifically and undeniably ensures that Bill S-5 cannot be erroneously interpreted as a money bill. The clause reads as follows:

> No payments shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to defray any expenses necessary for the implementation of this Act without the authority of an Act of Parliament for such purpose.

Legal analyses by respected and well-known legal and legislative experts provides further reinforcement on this point. It is stated that Bill S-5 is a special act introduced by a senator in his capacity as a member of the Senate of Canada. The stated purpose of the bill is to obtain recognition of the wartime service of veterans of the Canadian Merchant Navy by amending those acts of Parliament from which flow the tangibles of that recognition. All that we are doing is asking the government to consider those who are classified as "civilians" for some strange reason or another, to be classified on the same basis as veterans who served and who are entitled to benefits under the Pensions Act or under the War Veterans Allowance Act. Bill S-5 is primarily directed at extending the recognition by putting the wartime service of merchant seamen in the same position as the wartime service of Canadian navy veterans and the cost of the improved status of the merchant seamen will have to be authorized by other legislation.

I liked Senator Stewart's idea and I am pleased that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is willing to consider that.

Clauses similar to clauses 15 have been used in the House of Commons for the past few sessions. I believe they are trying to change the fact that a private member cannot introduce a money bill. For example, Bill C-213, specifically clause 3, which was tabled on May 31, 1991 and has not been ruled out of order, reads:

> No payment shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to defray any expenses necessary for the implementation of this Act without the authority made by Parliament for such purpose.

I have also discovered that this same type of clause has been used successfully in the legislature of the province of Alberta over the past 13 years and, in fact, was ruled in order by both Speakers Amerongen and Carter.

The case, honourable senators, is clear. We, in this chamber, by considering this bill, would be accepting our responsibility to represent the cause of a minority group of Canadians to gain their rights.

I appeal to Your Honour to consider the purposes of the bill, which is to grant due justice to that group of merchant seamen, too long forgotten, by allowing second reading of Bill S-5 to proceed with the end objective of recognizing their services and sacrifice for Canada before it is too late.

I might say, honourable senators, that regardless of the rules—and we have just changed the rules, supposedly for the better—and if we are responsible for minority and individual rights, since the government seems to be able to do anything, including changing the rules to suit a particular purpose, then why cannot we? It is for a good cause. It is now 71 years since some of them served, and some of their widows are destitute. I have letters to that effect which I would hope to read during second reading debate.

Honourable senators, we must apologize to the Canadians who served their country under the most dangerous conditions. Let us show them that we, the Senate, can really do something for those Canadians, as is our responsibility. I remind those who will be dealing with this committee that they should consider this change.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

Senator Stewart: May I ask Senator Marshall two questions? Am I correct in thinking, as a result of having read the bill and hearing the honourable senator, that the effect of this bill would not be to authorize payments to these merchant seamen but to recognize that the service which they rendered Canada was comparable to that of certain other categories of persons who have the good fortune by reason of their previous service, to be receiving certain benefits?

Senator Marshall: That is absolutely right.

Senator Stewart: I now ask my second question: The honourable senator referred to a private member's public bill in the other place, Bill C-213, which, as I understand it, was not ruled out of order in the other place. Section 54 of the Constitution Act says:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or of any Tax or Impost, to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General in the Session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address or Bill is proposed.

The fact that the bill in the other place has not been ruled out of order would seem to indicate that a bill in the same form as the one now before us, is not regarded as an appropriation bill in the House of Commons because, if it were, it would have been found unlawful in the House of Commons and would have been set aside. Consequently the question is why we are more sensitive on this point than the House of Commons.

• (1600)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Especially since the only rule that applies is a rule of the House of Commons.

Senator Stewart: Exactly.

Senator Marshall: I wish I could answer the question. All I know is, they are contemplating changes in the House of Commons and I understand there is deep interest in allowing a member of Parliament to introduce a money bill. I would have to bow to our legal counsel, Mr. du Plessis, who is more aware of the details of it. I am not a lawyer. I bow to your intelligent question and I hope we can clarify that through him.

Senator Stewart: Senator, any changes they are contemplating in the other place are hypothetical. The truth of the matter is that a Private Member's public bill has been introduced in the other place that contains exactly the same words as the clause in this bill and so far it has not been found out of order in the other place. So even under the existing constitution and existing rules of the other place, a bill comparable to yours has not been ruled out of order. The point of my question is clear, is it not?

[Senator Marshall.]

Senator Marshall: I agree with you.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I want to intervene on the point of order. It is now 11 minutes to four, which would give me till four minutes after four. I wonder if the Clerk would let me know when I have five minutes left, because it is going to be difficult to make all the points I want to make within 15 minutes; at least, I think it will be. If I have a five-minute warning bell I could then perhaps speed up.

The basis of the point raised by the Deputy Leader of the Government is rule 82:

> The Senate shall not proceed upon a bill appropriating public money that has not within the knowledge of the Senate been recommended by the Queen's representative.

Let us accept that this has not been recommended by the Queen's representative in the usual form. His point therefore must be that this is a bill appropriating public money. He referred to a previous ruling on the aboriginal bill, as we called it at the time, where the Chair pointed out that the rules of the Senate provided that the Senate will not proceed upon a bill "appropriating public money," and which does not have attached to it, of course, the Royal Recommendation.

The point of order raised in the case of Bill S-8 — that is, the aboriginal peoples bill — was that the bill had clauses in it that infringed upon the — and these are important words — "financial initiative of the Crown." The ruling of the chair accepted that statement and went on to state that certain clauses of that bill — which ruling was cited by the Deputy Leader of the Government as a precedent — clearly imposed new statutory duties on the minister and hence on the department. They therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, "infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown" and are not in order. Those words, "financial initiative of the Crown," are not in rule 82. I think we have to distinguish between two phrases which are used in discussions on this matter, often loosely: first, appropriating public money, which is in rule 82, and, secondly, the financial initiative of the Crown. Both of these phrases are often referred to by the description "money bills," and people frequently repeat the cant that the Senate cannot initiate a money bill and, if pressed to define what a money bill is, are hard-pressed to do so.

The first phrase, the phrase used in rule 82 — that is appropriating public money — comes from section 53 of the Constitution Act which reads: "Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue or for imposing any tax or impost shall originate in the House of Commons." So to avoid confusion in the latter discussion of the kind of money bill referred to in section 53 of the Constitution, I am now going to refer to a section 53 bill as a supply bill appropriating public money; and we notice that section 53 does not make any reference to recommendation by the Queen's representatives. There is no reference in the Constitution, section 53, about a Royal Recommendation. That reference comes from section 54 of the Constitution which was referred to by Senator Stewart. It is the one that does not talk about any restriction on the Senate; it talks about a restriction on the House of Commons, and says that the House of Commons cannot adopt any vote for the appropriation of any part of the public money that has not been first recommended. So the "Royal Recommendation" phrase is used in the Constitution only in section 54, not in section 53.

That section, however, also refers to a supply bill, because it talks about appropriating public money. Again, rule 82 of the Senate refers also in its marginal notes to "supply bills." So that section clearly seems to be referring to bills for appropriating, or supply bills — as I believe that, if we are going to be precise about any debate on this subject we should be clear as to what we are talking about.

Where do we get this phrase upon which the point raised by the Deputy Leader of the Government must be based? It must be based on the words "financial initiative of the Crown." In fact, he kept referring to impinging on the prerogatives and financial initiative of the Crown. Well it probably comes from Standing Order 80 (1) in the House of Commons.

I am now reading, not from any section of the Constitution, not from a Senate rule, but from a standing order of the House of Commons.

> All aids and supplies granted to the Sovereign by the Parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons, and all bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit and appoint in all such bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.

Thus spake the House of Commons. Thus did not speak the Constitution of Canada. Thus did not speak the rules of the Senate. Only a standing order in the House of Commons is the basis for the point raised by the Deputy Leader of the Government. That standing order of the Commons no doubt originated with a resolution in the U.K. That order protects the prerogative of the Crown in financial matters of government and is undoubtedly the source of the expression "financial initiative of the Crown," which are the words that can be the only basis for the point of order raised by the Deputy Leader of the Government. The terms "money bill" and "money clause" are used to describe a bill or a clause of a bill that infringes upon the initiative by imposing a new charge upon a minister or department of government. Remember, that was the key to the earlier ruling on the aboriginal bill.

When referring to the U.K. for precedent, however, we have to be careful to distinguish between the rules applicable today in respect of money bills which have a different meaning in some instances from our use of the expression. Therefore, if it is taken that a money bill or clause attributable to the financial initiative of the Crown refers to one that has its derivation in the standing orders of the Commons, it ought then to be conceded that an appropriation of public revenue is the money bill to which rule 82 of the Senate applied. Indeed, the marginal note supports the view in its reference to supply bills. It is thought unnecessary to use that rule to apply the Commons standing order 80 to prevent a bill, not being a supply bill, from proceeding in the Senate.

It is within the capacity of the Senate to limit its jurisdiction if it so wishes. But one ruling of the Chair already referred to and not later expressed in the rules— and by that I mean the knew rules—does not constitute a precedent; so that, rule 82 of the Senate referring to the circumstances set out in section 54 of the Constitution, as reflected in the standing orders of the Commons, is not the homologue of the Commons' Standing Order 80(1).

• (1610)

Would Bill S-5 fail in the House of Commons because it offends Standing Order 80(1)? In this connection we should note that Bill S-5 appears to involve itself even more with the financial initiative of the Crown perhaps than Bill S-18 did in the last session. The latter bill imposed statutory duties that were seen as imposing a new charge on the department concerned. Bill S-5 deals with pensions and allowances provided for under a number of statutes, and also can be said to impose a new charge upon the public revenue. In this respect it would appear to fall within the description of a limitation set out in a 1918 Senate report. It would create an added expenditure on the public revenue if it merely provided that merchant navy veterans were to receive the higher and more extensive benefits of pensions and allowances under the act being amended to do so; but the bill amends the relevant statutes to recognize the war time service of the veterans of the Canadian Merchant Navy, as stated in the long title of the bill. It avoids imposing an expense on the public revenue by providing in clause 15 that "no payment shall be made." This is the change to which Senator Marshall referred. It states that:

> No payments shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to defray any expenses necessary for the implementation of this Act without the authority of an Act of Parliament for such purpose.

Another act of Parliament is required to provide the expenses that would result from Bill S-5. That other act would have to originate in the House of Commons and be recommended by the Governor General under sections 53 and 54 of the Constitution, and Standing Order Number 79 of the House of Commons.

Clause 15 of the bill places reliance upon paragraphs 613 and 614, as found in Beauchesne and referred to by Senator Marshall. I would ask senators to look at those paragraphs in case I run out of time. In effect they deal with a bill that does not involve a direct expenditure but merely confers upon the government a power for the exercise of which public money will have to be voted by parliament, which is exactly what Senator Marshall is asking for. It is not a money bill and no Royal Recommendation is necessary as a condition precedent to its introduction.

A bill designed to furnish machinery for the expenditure of a certain sum of public money—and this is the case—to be voted subsequently by Parliament may be introduced in the House without that recommendation of the Crown.

Now we get to the other point raised— and I think I might make this point on time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Senator Frith, I can show you the relevant rule.

Senator Frith: Who is asking that? I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but not on my time. Any interruptions and questions are included in the 15 minutes.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If you hear me out you might alter your attitude. There is no time limit on your remarks under rule 18(3). On an important point of order I am not inclined to cut you short on your argument.

Senator Frith: The clock is not ticking now, I take it. I am obliged to your Honour for that, because I must admit that I certainly did not learn that—in fact, I find these rules so hard to choke down that I am having difficulty learning them.

Rule 18(3) states:

> When the Speaker has been asked to decide any question of privilege or point of order he or she shall determine when sufficient argument has been adduced to decide the matter, whereupon the Speaker shall so indicate to the Senate, and continue with the item of business . . .

That is worse, is it not? I am glad that I have a benevolent person like Your Honour in the Chair, because I would not even be entitled to the 15 minutes. In other words, I could have got up and said, "I want to speak on a point of order." Under the new rules the Speaker could stand up and say, "Sorry, I have heard enough." Then I am through. At least I get 15 minutes.

All right; I had better keep going. Thank you. I take it that you are not saying that you have heard enough yet.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Not quite yet.

Senator Frith: That is right. Let it be noted that he said "not quite yet."

Notice that under the new rules—and we have a good example before us now—the Speaker, still appointed by the Prime Minister and not elected by us, can cut off any speaker on a point of order or a point of privilege when he or she thinks enough has been heard. I know that that suits you fine over there for the present, but that might not always be the case.

On December 14, 1988, Bill C-201, entitled An Act respecting Referendums and Plebiscites in Canada on Questions of Public Importance was introduced in the House of Commons. That bill provided in clause 167(4) that the fees, costs,and so on, made pursuant to subsection (1) of that clause be made out of any money that Parliament would appropriate for such purposes. It seems that the bill was allowed to proceed because—just like this bill—it did not say, "You are to do it." It stated, "Make the classification and then you may have to pass a bill that would appropriate money."

It was allowed to proceed. Still, with regard to the exculpatory clauses such as that in Bill C-201 or clause 15 in the bill before us, Bill S-5, it was recorded in the Commons Debates of November 8, 1978, pages 975 to 977, that "similar clauses, whatever their purposes or object may otherwise be, will not be given any consideration in determining whether or not there is an infringement of the financial initiative of the Crown."

There are those words again. Remember that "financial initiative of the Crown" is not found in the Constitution or in the Senate rules, but only in the House of Commons rules. The incorporation of such a clause in a private members bill "cannot be interpreted by the Chair" as an acceptable way of eluding the requirement for recommendation where such recommendation is required—for example, when the bill containing the exculpatory clause is actually a supply bill.

If what I have said is correct—and I believe it is—it may be that this bill might have some trouble in the House of Commons without a Royal Recommendation; but it should have no trouble in the Senate, because there is no constitutional reason for it to have that problem, there is no rule of the Senate under which it should have the problem. If it has a problem in the House of Commons, let it have a problem in the House of Commons. Under the Constitution and under our own rules the Senate is clearly competent to pass Bill S-5 to seek its procedural fate in the House of Commons under the procedural rules of that House—and not the procedural rules of that House brought into the rules of this house.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on Senator Marshall's contention that the point of order itself may be out of order because it was brought up over three months after a first reading of the bill. He suggests that perhaps a point of order should be raised at first reading, which, obviously, it cannot be.

The point of order cannot be raised until this moment, because second reading took place only recently, Senator Frith having objected to second reading on June 21, 1991. The appropriate pages of the Debates are pages 305 and 306.

Senator Frith: He went back even further.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I would like to have that considered in the assessment of Senator Marshall's argument.

Senator Marshall: I have to respond on Bill S-21. Senator Murray arose on first reading, not second reading. We never reached the stage of second reading, because it had expired, and on June 21, according to Beauchesne, you have to bring up your point of order at the moment. No one brought up a point of order.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the Chair will take this point of order under advisement and render a ruling at a later date.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before Senator Lynch-Staunton moves the adjournment of the Senate, is there anything in particular that we should prepare for tomorrow's business?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we had hoped, and had strong indications late last week, that we would receive some legislation from the other place; but, as of this afternoon, the indication is that there will be nothing sent over this week.

At the end of the sitting tomorrow it is our intention to move that we adjourn for two weeks.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, September 25, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> THAT when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 8th October, 1991, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Before you put the motion, Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to alert honourable senators to the possibility that we may have to return prior to October 8, 1991. Honourable senators are aware that there are labour negotiations going on, between the Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance of Canada in one stream and between Canada Post and its unions in another.

These negotiations may be coming to a head in the next little while. While we all hope for the best, if the negotiations do not succeed the government will have to consider its position and we may wish to recall the Senate before the October 8 date.

I would therefore ask your Honour to put that motion, after which I have an announcement that I wish to make to the house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE LATE HONOURABLE STAN WATERS

TRIBUTE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is my sad duty to advise the Senate of the passing earlier today of our colleague, the Honourable Stan Waters, the senator from Alberta. I suggest that we now observe one minute of silence in honour of our late colleague, after which I would propose that the Senate adjourn out of respect for him.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, let us observe one minute of silence in respect for our late colleague.

Honourable senators then stood in silent tribute.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, out of respect for our late colleague, Senator Waters, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 8, 1991, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, October 2, 1991

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE STAN WATERS

TRIBUTES

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable Senators, all of us are deeply saddened by the death of our colleague, the Honourable Stan Waters.

Senator Waters was a pioneer in this place. While he was appointed in the usual way, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, he first went through the unprecedented process of being elected by the people of Alberta.

While his final days were painful, it is somehow fitting that he was alive at the time of the tabling of the government's constitutional proposals, including proposals for Senate reform. Senate reform was, as we know from every intervention that he made in this place, a subject very close to Senator Water's heart.

As honourable senators know, Senator Waters had a distinguished career in the Canadian military where he served with the King's Own Regiment and later with the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry and the First Canadian Force Brigade as well as with various United Nations peacekeeping forces. He retired in 1975 as a Lieutenant-General and went on to become a prominent Calgary businessman. He was one of the founding members of the latest new political party in western Canada.

While Senator Waters sat on this side of the chamber, his ideas on many issues differed greatly from those of many of us in the ranks of the government party. He held his opinions firmly and voiced them strongly in the short time he was here, and I believe he made a significant contribution to our debates.

Senator Stan Waters was respected, admired and liked by everybody in this chamber. We mourn his passing and extend our condolences to his family.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Murray for opening the tributes that we all want to make to Stan Waters. I want to underline that aspect of his intervention that pointed out how quickly Stan Waters became a popular member of the Senate, although he came here, in his own view, under less than favourable circumstances. He thought that, constitutionally, the circumstances of his being here were auspicious, but he felt he would not personally receive a warm welcome from us. In fact, he is quoted as having said that he expected courtesy from us but did not expect that he would be warmly welcomed.

During his short time here he opposed official bilingualism, the GST, most grants to artists and writers, increases in federal spending and universal social programs, to quote an obituary written by Donn Downey of the Globe and Mail. However, to get to the point I was just making, Stan Waters said he expected a polite welcome but "I think they won't like me."

The obituary also stated:

> He never acquired the politicians' art of equivocal speaking. "No, I don't speak French and no I don't plan to learn," he told reporters. He said he had once been bilingual "but I haven't used the language in 15 years and at my age I have other priorities."

Stan Waters, as you know, turned the negative criticism of being a representative of the "redneck element" into a positive by stating that if that meant having the kind of convictions that he held very closely, and that were a part of his love for Canada, then he did not mind being so identified.

Senator Waters certainly achieved a great deal in much too short a time here among us. I think we were all looking forward to a long and interesting experience with him. I share the views of Senator Murray that we are all sad that it did not so work out.

I would add that there are those on this side who are better equipped and qualified than I am to tell us about Stan Waters. I defer now to them as I second the comments made by Senator Murray.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, on Monday representatives from the Senate joined in the final march in Calgary to say farewell to our colleague Stan Waters. His funeral, which was a magnificent tribute by his military comrades, reminded us of the remarkable background of Stan as a soldier, as a businessman, as an active and concerned citizen, and, finally, as a politician.

Long before Stan Waters made parliamentary history by becoming Canada's first elected senator, he had already touched generations of lives here in Canada and overseas in war and in peacetime. He was direct. His views were strong and often unequivocal. However, behind that distinguished bearing was a warm and concerned gentleman with a twinkle in his eye and a truly great sense of humour.

Stan Waters cared profoundly about the health and welfare of his country. That deep sense of personal duty motivated every aspect of his career from the armed forces where he carried the rank of Lieutenant-General, to the business world where he rose to the top of the corporate ranks of the Loram

Group of companies, and to public life which found him in the vanguard of the formation of the Reform Party of Canada.

Stan was a true westerner who felt strongly about the issues that have fuelled the notion in that region that we are not plugged into national decision-making in a meaningful way. When the legislature of Alberta passed a bill in 1989 to permit a Senate selection process involving a direct election, Stan jumped into the fray. He campaigned vigorously, and more than 250,000 Albertans gave him a resounding majority victory.

In the fall of 1990 Senator Waters took his seat in this chamber just in time to do battle against the GST. I recall Stan saying to me at the time as he prepared his speech in that remarkable debate that he was all set: It was blunt, it was to the point, and it would not take up any time, at which point I said, "You're not in the military any more, Stan. What we need is a very long and very circuitous speech." He laughed and said, "I may be 70 years old but in this place I am very young, and I need all the guidance I can get".

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senator, your three minutes have expired. However, I was informed by one of the whips who approached the Chair that honourable senators are willing to grant an extension.

Is it agreed, honourable senators, to grant such an extension?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will not impose on the time of the chamber other than to say that Stan Waters made no secret of the fact that his primary goal as a senator in this place was to have an influence in reforming the Senate as an institution. For him, that meant having a Senate that was elected, truly effective, and having an equal number of senators from each province in Canada. With that in mind, instead of retiring, he cheerfully entered the fight. Last week, just before he died, there were reports—and I am told he was aware of this—that the door was about to open to a new phase in constitutional reform that might bring forth part of the Senate reform for which Stan Waters had fought so hard.

• (1410)

When Stan Waters lost his final battle with cancer a week ago, he was surrounded by his family whom he truly cherished. We all join Senator Murray and Senator Frith in offering our prayers and our sympathy to his wife Barbara, their children and grandchildren.

Honourable senators, from a personal perspective, Stan Waters became a very good friend to me here in Ottawa and in Alberta, and I personally will miss him a great deal.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I was in Rome when I learned of the death of Stan Waters. The news cast a pall over the 75 Canadian veterans of the 1943-44 Italian campaign who had gathered there on a commemorative trip. Included in the group were two of Senator Waters' comrades. They were members of a group who, as you may not know, were the only Canadians to lead the Allies into Rome on July 4, 1944, making Rome the first Axis capital to fall, two days before the invasion of Normandy.

As Rome was liberated by the American Fifth Army, they were led by a handful of Canadians who were members of the First Special Service Force. Historians speak of this force as the "elite of the elite". It was the only parachute-ski commando unit of World War II Allied armies. Originally 1,800 in number, the force had a dual nation makeup. Specially selected soldiers from the Canadian and the U.S. armies, wearing the same uniforms, served together without regard for nation of origin, under the direction of officers from either nation.

The specifications for joining this group called for rugged outdoorsman-type soldiers for hazardous duties. The group suffered enormous casualties. As a young lieutenant newly commissioned from PPCLI, Senator Murray tells me—I thought it was the Calgary Tank regiment—Stan Waters volunteered; he was accepted and eventually rose to the command of one of the two battalions of this force. One of the most notable achievements of this group took place on December 2, 1944, when the force was literally roping its way up the massive, formidable Monte la Difensa. This mountain had previously defeated two full divisions. Senator Waters' force took the mountain in two hours, driving the Nazis from the heights and holding the mountain for six days against vicious counterattacks. It was the key to breaking the German winter line, and the entire American Fifth Army moved forward once again.

Then Senator Waters' group were called to Anzio, and spent 99 straight days in the line without relief. It was here that the force was given its German nickname, the Devil's Brigade, after books and movies of the same name. It is no wonder that the remaining small, ragged band of Canadians were to be given the honour of leading the American Fifth Army into Rome. There were other exploits before the force was finally abandoned, launching Major Stan Waters into a courageous and illustrious career.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Hon. Senators, is there leave to allow the honourable senator to complete his remarks?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator MacDonald: Forty-seven years later, much has been forgotten. I wish I had known Stan Waters longer and I regret that I arrived home too late to attend his funeral. In expressing my condolences to his family I wish to assure them that he will be remembered.

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, it is a strange twist of fate that Senator Stanley Charles Waters died on the day he did, for on the preceding day the federal government tabled its new constitutional proposals for a reformed Senate. This had been, as we all know, Senator Waters' raison d'etre ever since he made his political debut two short years ago. One can only speculate on how satisfied Stan would have been with the proposals, but one thing remains clear: Stan Waters broke ground in running a tireless campaign and in emerging victorious in the Alberta Senate election.

Born in Winnipeg in 1920, Stan joined the King's Own Calgary Regiment as a private after studying at the University of Alberta. He volunteered for the newly-formed Canadian Parachute Corps and was assigned to the crack U.S.-Canada Commando Unit, the First Special Service Force. After the war he commanded the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry and the 1st Canadian Infantry Brigade. He had U.N. peacekeeping assignments and was with NATO in Europe. When he retired in 1975 he was a Lieutenant-General and Commander of Mobile Command—the Canadian Army.

From there, Stan Waters joined the Mannix organization in Calgary and shortly after became president of Mannix's Loram group, the umbrella organization that controls Mannix's assets. He continued in various senior positions until his retirement in 1989.

During the same year, the Reform Party of Canada asked him to run for the Senate. His election was a resounding success, due in large part to his memorable personality traits. Although not always conventional, in the end they added up to a distinct charisma.

Honourable senators, Stan was one of those people who stuck to his principles. He did not just say what he knew people wanted to hear; he said what he felt had to be said with little concern for how it would affect his popularity. Stan Waters was an optimist of the highest order. One aspect of this, and underpinning his political philosophy, was a belief in human ability and in its limitlessness. This led to his having high standards for himself and others. He was once described as having an interesting combination of both patience and impatience. He had patience for just about everyone as long as they were trying their best, and he had no patience for the system or bureaucracy or anything that interfered with getting the job done.

If Senator Waters had a hallmark trait it was that he was a doer. He was not afraid to tackle anything, and never left a job half done. This is one reason why, when he became involved in an organization, Stan often found himself the leader.

Stan Waters applied all of these qualities to his involvement in the community as a whole. Amongst other roles, he was president of the Calgary Chamber of Commerce. He will be remembered for his role in setting up Calgary's first self-help native opportunities committee, to deal with native alcohol abuse in downtown Calgary.

• (1420)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, according to the rules, a senator making an intervention during this time shall be limited to speaking once for no more than three minutes. I know that approval has been given to extend that time to thirty minutes, but I must ask you again, do you want to further extend this time?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Kenny: Senator Water will also be remembered for a letter he sent to the Calgary Herald, galvanizing the community into action over the financial troubles of the Calgary Stampeders.

On a more personal note, I was a friend of the Waters' family for more than twenty years. Stan's daughter Claudia is godmother to my youngest son, and Stan and Barbara have always gone out of their way to make my family welcome in Calgary. A few years ago, I recall making a short visit to Calgary and accidentally bumping into Stan on a street corner. Typically his first words were, "Does Barbara know you are in town?" He then insisted that we meet Barbara and the family the next morning at 8 o'clock at Lake Louise. We arrived at Lake Louise the next morning at 8 o'clock, and 10 hours and 24 kilometers later, we had hiked through Moraine Lake, up through Larch Valley, over Sentinel Pass, around Lake Annette and down through Paradise Valley.

Honourable senators, Stan Waters' career was marked by bold initiative and well-deserved honour. As a man, he leaves an equally lasting impression: A tireless worker, compelling, honest, genuine and personable. At this sad time, our thoughts are with his family, his wife Barbara and children Claudia, Mark, Virginia and Caroline.

THE LATE HONOURABLE JEAN BEETZ

TRIBUTE

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Today I wish to pay tribute to a great member of the legal profession who has passed away, the honourable Jean Beetz, who was a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada for 15 years.

Mr. Justice Beetz was a man of many talents. He was an expert on constitutional law, administrative law, civil law and many other areas within the legal discipline.

His greatest contribution, however, which will certainly go down in history, was on the subject of Canadian federalism and the division of legislative powers.

His judgments and opinions on emergency powers, residual powers, labour relations, health, the Criminal Code, trade, administration of justice, the amending formula, constitutional conventions, property and civil law, the principle rules of interpretation the division of powers, and patriation of the Constitution, will be quoted for years to come.

Very few judges of the Supreme Court have given such a clear definition of emergency powers, residual powers and the concept of national interest. Very few have given such a brilliant analysis of a concept that may be a threat to Canadian federalism and a balanced division of powers.

In constitutional law he is part of a solid tradition that includes Sir Lyman Duff, Bora Laskin, Ivan Rand, Louis-Philippe Pigeon and Brian Dickson, to name only those who have already left the Supreme Court of Canada.

Because of the clarity of his style, his elegant turn of phrase, the depth of his knowledge and his brilliant mind, he will go down in history as one of our greatest judges.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I support everything that Senator Beaudoin has said about Mr. Justice Beetz. Let me quote directly from what Chief Justice Lamer said in a statement on the occasion of Mr. Justice Beetz's passing, because it is so perfect and concise a description of Jean Beetz.

> He was a fine judge of this court and a fine human being.
> The rigor of his reasoning, the precision of his penmanship, the clarity of his composition and the elegance of his expression as well as the impact of his integrity will be missed by all Canadians.

Jean Beetz was indeed a fine judge and a fine human being. I can attest to the validity of both those attributions. Moreover, Senator Beaudoin has told us why we can all attest to his status as a judge.

I did not know Mr. Justice Beetz well, but he was a valued acquaintance and, I should like to think, friend. I used to see him, outside legal circles, at Le Cercle Universitaire where he, being a bachelor, would often dine by himself—usually reading, but not law books. As I often did the same thing—that is, I would dine at Le Cercle—it became a sort of tradition that I would stop by his table or he would stop at mine, as either one was leaving, and we would chat not for a long time but, for me, a rewarding time. Over the years I came to admire and respect him greatly.

Our conversations usually turned to literature. I am obliged and indebted to him for the many directions and recommendations he gave to me in the field of French literature. He was a man of very evolved and finely tuned intellect and sensibilities; a man of excellent character and manners—indeed an inspiration.

The rule of law is an important aspect of the life of every civilized community. Certainly it is an important part of Canadian life and an important part of our heritage. Canada and the rule of law have lost a truly great jurist, and all Canadians have lost a fellow Canadian of the highest character, intellect and sensibilities. Our society is thus diminished.

FELICITATIONS TO NEW LEADER, DEPUTY LEADER AND WHIP OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION—TRIBUTES TO FORMER LEADER AND WHIP OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, on Monday, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, Leader of the Opposition in the other place and national leader of the Liberal Party, issued a press release in which he informed us of certain appointments related to the leadership of his Liberal colleagues here in the Senate.

Senator MacEachen and Senator Petten leave the duties which they have performed with such distinction for quite a while.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Frith is promoted to the position of Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, Senator Molgat is appointed Deputy Leader of the Opposition and Senator Hébert becomes Chief Whip of the Opposition in the Senate. I wish to congratulate all those affected by this change: those who are leaving for their perseverance over the years and those who are taking over for their dedication.

The responsibilities that fall on the holders of these positions are not easy and are not always pleasant either.

[English]

No one has ever done a difficult job more pleasantly, or made more friends while doing it, than our friend, the retiring Whip of the Liberal Party, Senator Bill Petten.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: He has not only endured a succession of Liberal leaders with good humour and long-suffering, he has also had to work closely with Conservative whips such as Senator John M. Macdonald and Senator Gordon Phillips, and has even been known, once or twice, to bring a smile to the lips of both of those colleagues, which is something that those of on us on this side have sometimes difficulty doing.

Senator Frith has a very long experience in this place. It is not for me to comment one way or another on an appointment which is Mr. Chrétien's prerogative, but I must say that if ability, and loyalty and diligence are to be respected and honoured as they should be—and I say this with great respect to other Liberals—when the time came and Senator MacEachen decided to step aside, it would have been a travesty to have appointed anyone but Senator Frith to that post. I must say that Mr. Chrétien did not ask for my advice in this matter, but had he done so, Senator Frith would have been my choice.

[Translation]

In the same vein, honourable senators, I congratulate Senator Molgat on his appointment. He can boast a long experience as a parliamentarian. He proved himself as a leader in his province of Manitoba where he held the post of leader of the Liberal Party and leader of the opposition in the Manitoba legislature.

[English]

I think it is very good—good for the Senate and for Parliament—that Senator MacEachen is remaining as a member of this place and will continue to speak out as he has done on many of the great issues of the day and on issues of particular concern to Nova Scotia.

I think I have been present in this place for almost all of Senator MacEachen's major interventions, his major speeches in this place. I have certainly tried to be. His speeches are always interesting and valuable because he does us the honour, and Parliament the service, of working on his speeches. They are interesting, not because he has made up his mind on every subject but because he has not, and because in the search for answers his speeches always serve to illuminate the problem and to bring a great thoroughness and a capacity for analysis and an experience to bear on these subjects that is extremely valuable to any discussion of public policy. I look forward to hearing many more of those speeches, whether on social and economic policy, regional development or, indeed, on international affairs from Senator MacEachen in the years just ahead.

Honourable senators, on behalf of everyone on this side, I congratulate all those involved in the appointments on the other side of the house and wish them every success in the performance of their duties, and every personal satisfaction in that way.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, it is probably not customary to have many speeches on an occasion such as this but since I was in at the début of my friend, Senator Allan MacEachen, in my role as Leader of the Government in the Senate, I feel qualified to say a word or two about him.

Allan MacEachen came here trailing clouds of political glory from the House of Commons with a reputation as a serious national politician who was able to provide leadership of no uncommon measure, not only to his own party but indeed to the public interest generally. I found that that reputation was fully deserved because, in the couple of years that he and I shared the responsibility for the leadership in this house, I found him to be an able, competent, and certainly highly experienced parliamentarian in every sense of that word. I join with what my leader has said in an appreciation of the contribution that is involved when Senator MacEachen makes a speech in this house.

I am delighted to know that, although—if I may use a phrase that was suggested to me recently—he has "decommissioned" himself as Leader of the Opposition, he will take a more active interest in the constitutional problems that are engaging us now. I can think of no one, frankly, regardless of politics, who has more to offer in the development of a sound policy with respect to the reform of the Constitution than my honourable friend. I am glad to know that he is continuing his interest in that respect.

I think it is appropriate, while I am on my feet, to echo the words of appreciation to the contribution of Senator Petten as Chief Whip of the other side, to salute the arrival of Senator Royce Frith to his present position, which I think becomes him, and to say that I am well qualified to give an adequate testimonial to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, because we have exchanged views on a multitude of subjects over the years and I know him to be competent and able, and I expect that he will continue to display these qualities in his new position.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I suppose the really impressive thing for me to do on this occasion would be to say nothing. However, I doubt that anyone really expects me to impress them in that way; I am sure they would expect me to try to impress them in other ways.

I find, as perhaps we all do, the task of saying something both appropriate and adequate about Allan MacEachen quite intimidating. Normally, such circumstances would not intimidate me; there are situations that do, but this sort of thing is not one of them—and yet I do find this intimidating. I say that, because Allan MacEachen's career as a Canadian, that is his career in politics, is, I venture to say, not just one of the greatest but perhaps the greatest in Canadian political history. All one need do is apply the criteria: the length of service; the accomplishments; the honour, the respect and, in some cases where appropriate, the fear of troops of Canadians over the decades—and that's what we are talking about: decades.

• (1440)

To put it simply, in my esteem, and I believe the esteem of many Liberals, Allan MacEachen is the chief emeritus of the Liberal Party, the godfather, the patron—reach for a thesaurus, honourable senators, for other expressions equally descriptive in admiration of his career and his person.

We should also record here today, as this is probably the best opportunity to do so, the fact that he is entitled to the credit or, if some honourable senators feel otherwise, discredit of having reformed the Canadian Senate, both internally and in the eyes of the public, more successfully in seven years than generations were able to do in the 120-odd years which preceded. I believe that that reformation has been to the benefit of the Senate and of Canada. I believe all of us as senators on whatever side have gained status in the eyes of our fellow Canadians as members of the Canadian Senate because of the prominence that he gave to us.

In a personal context, I can say that the past seven years spent working for and with Senator MacEachen have been the best seven years of my life—and I have had a pretty good life. I have done a number of things that were exciting and stimulating. Yet, none of them reached the depth of enjoyment that I experienced in working with Senator MacEachen.

I have learned much from him. I am sure I have not learned enough. However, I feel I will be able to continue to learn, because one thing I learned from him was strategy, and one of the first strategies I implemented was to ensure that he sit right next to me so that I can continue to learn.

During my career I have instigated a number of undertakings. Among them, and I have mentioned this to my colleagues, I have begun a small collection of sayings—not the sayings of Mao, but the sayings of A.J. These include several of his incisive remarks made during the course of our talks over the years. One that came to me during the last few days appeals to me because of its particular application to me now. I do not suggest that it applies to anyone else in this chamber. I do not recall the precise subject we were discussing, but he said: "In politics, one can aspire to the highest office without any reference to either experience or ability." You can imagine how encouraging I found that in the earlier days.

I know that Senator MacEachen will continue to have a great influence on me and, I believe, on our side and on the Senate—certainly on the Liberal Party. I believe his influence will even extend to the country. He will have that influence because of the stature he has gained in the "old-fashioned way": he earned it!

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, may I also say just a word or two about Senator Petten? Because I have known him for such a long time, I wish to acknowledge how much I owe him for all the help he has given me and for all the enjoyment he has given me in working with him; for all the laughs, all the fun and all the work we have done together, if such enjoyment can be called work. Senator Petten took me under his wing when I first arrived. He said to me, "Me son, you'll find around here that the pay's not very good, but the hours aren't bad." I do not criticize him for the fact that it soon developed that the pay stayed exactly as he had described it but that the hours increased significantly for me.

Probably one of the best tributes that can be paid to Senator Petten, because it epitomizes everything that can be said, is that in spite of the fact that he has occupied one of the most difficult jobs in interpersonal relations, namely, whip, for over 17 years, everybody still loves him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I would like to make some comments about Senator MacEachen.

Allan J. MacEachen; what a stirring name and what a stirring personality! Born in impoverished yet enlightened circumstances, by his own wits he became, in turn, brilliant academic, Celtic linguist and historian, theologian, economist, elegant strategist, social reformer, parliamentarian par excellence, master reformer of the Senate, born policy thinker, restoration man, orator extraordinaire, and, of course, Liberal.

Above all, I have come to admire his capacious mind, his original turn of thought and, under the glare of public stress, his poise under pressure that enabled him, almost on his own, to change the public agenda in the context of public debate in the country.

His extraordinary career from academics to politics could be summarized as follows: success, failure, success, failure, success, partial retreat, restoration, success, setback and, finally, unrepentant triumph.

Several years ago, I was requested to toast Senator MacEachen at a dinner and I discovered that the J., his middle initial, stood for Joseph. This Joseph, like his biblical namesake, was fated to lead his flock in the Senate through traumatic times, years of plenty and years of scarcity. He has set the stage for his party's return to the Promised Land not once but twice, the difference of course being that in the Senate he will witness and participate in the second return.

Since the media have a delight in simplicity, they have referred to some of us as "Trudeau Liberals". In the past, we were called "Pearson Liberals". More appropriately, perhaps, the media should designate us here in the Senate as "MacEachen Liberals".

Well, Allan, you are here. You are unrepentant. You are unbowed. The best is yet to come!

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, if I could have postponed this afternoon indefinitely, I would have done so. But I knew that if I stayed away from the Senate for several days that possibly my absence would be misinterpreted. Therefore, I had to face up to what I consider to be wholly exaggerated comments about my career. Nevertheless, I thank those who have spoken, and also those who have not, because they are the ones, probably, who would have told the truth, and were kind enough to restrain themselves.

• (1450)

When the membership list for the constitution committee was put together in June, I allowed my name to be included on the list in the expectation that when the committee began its work I would be free to become an active member. That has happened, thanks to the cooperation of Mr. Chrétien. I now intend to devote as much attention to that important work as I can.

The years that I have spent in the Senate have been eventful years for me. There have been controversies. During those years, it is possible that the sensibilities of other senators and of many people in the media have been injured because they held a view of the Senate which I did not share. My view was to realise the legislative potential of the Senate, and I attempted to realize that potential. Not everyone agreed with my view. Nevertheless, it has been an eventful and interesting time.

However, when we speak of the Senate and of Canada, I prefer to look to that future, rather than to dwell on these past years. They will likely become relatively uninteresting if the constitutional process upon which we are now engaged succeeds. There is a strong possibility that included in those successful negotiations will be a new Senate; a second chamber what will be elected; that will have adequate powers; that will be representative of all the regions of Canada; that will add a new dimension, a new flavour, and a new reality to the Parliamentary institutions of our country.

That is the future that I like to contemplate, that within the next few years we could have in this chamber persons elected; persons with the capacity to have a real impact on legislation; persons who need not apologize or defend their legitimacy in every instance. If I can do anything to bring that about, I will do so. However, that is only one of the challenges that we all face at this time.

Having said that, I would like to thank Senator Roblin and Senator Murray, with whom I have had an active working association in these years. Together we struggled to deal with the problems of the Senate. I found each of them not only combative as required but cooperative as required. I regret that Senator Doody is not present because he provided a humour and a deft, human touch that helped all senators. If it were possible to make the business of the Senate more agreeable at all times, and even at our worst moments less disagreeable, then Senator Doody was the man who accomplished that. I thank him as I thanked Senator Murray and Senator Roblin.

The new team of Senators Frith, Molgat, and Hébert, by their service, certainly deserve the new responsibilities they have undertaken. I hope that they are as excited in taking on their new responsibilities as I am in leaving. I assure you that I look forward to a new phase in my life, and to not carrying the burdens which they will now carry.

Each of them is a purebred senator. I was never a purebred senator because I was hybrid, tainted by the practices and the attitudes of the House of Commons. That was a real handicap when I joined the ladies and gentlemen of the Senate. To think that a commoner would come here and attempt to bring with him the practices of a popular chamber. The new team does not have those disabilities. They have never been in the House of Commons. They are purebred senators and gentlemen. I do hope that they have been slightly tainted over the past seven years. I wish them all success.

All my colleagues have been quite remarkable in their work, in their dedication and in their support. Some are no longer here, having either passed away or reached their retirement. I think of Senator Ian Sinclair who was not a politician in his previous career but was a remarkable senator who joined in and worked until his retirement. There were many other senators who made similar contributions.

I can only say thank you to each one of my friends on this side of the house for their help. Senator Petten has been a wonderful colleague. I thank Senators Frith, Grafstein, Roblin and Murray for their comments.

Honourable senators, I have been asked a lot of exasperating questions by the press such as: Why are you leaving? How does it feel to be riding off into the sunset? How does it feel to be leaving the spotlight? I paused and I answered: "I think I will take it with me."

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I just have one thing to say to my colleagues on both sides of this house: Thank you.

ADJOURNMENT

THE RAILWAY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Railway Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

PUBLIC SECTOR COMPENSATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-29, an act respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada and to amend another act in relation thereto.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we are not objecting to giving leave to proceed with this matter now because we believe it is important that we move it to the Committee of the Whole as early as possible in order to hear the representatives of the union and the Minister on this matter. We are prepared to proceed with leave and then, after second reading, to go directly to Committee of the Whole.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave, I move second reading.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, Bill C-29 before us today was not totally unexpected. In fact, it was the outcome of a long series of unsuccessful negotiations with the Public Service Alliance of Canada. There were 60 days of bargaining and 30 days of conciliation, and then early in September, these 156,000 people went on strike.

The government maintains it bargained in good faith with PSAC, as it did with other unions, four of whom signed agreements that complied with the government's wage policy as set forth in the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance last February.

[English]

We have seen a strike, a return to negotiation, and then a return to strike action. Each of these actions has had serious consequences throughout the country and on a number of sectors of the economy. There comes a time when the government must decide what is in the public interest. In this case it has decided that certain essential services such as transportation, customs, hospitals and the agricultural sector have been disrupted enough.

It should be borne in mind that the government is also responsible for implementing the country's budget and for carrying out its wage restraint program. The need for that program was prompted by our difficult economic situation, an economic situation caused by ongoing inflationary pressure and an overwhelming public debt weighing so heavily on public finances that only a frontal attack on the annual budget would begin to bring it under control. I have no doubt that serious analysts of Canada's economy will recognize that for some time now in Canada, there has been a need for energetic measures if we are to overcome the problems we face. It is not possible to remain indifferent or unconcerned for long when annual wage settlements are in the range of 5 and 7 per cent in the private sector of the economy, while the rate of real growth is 100 per cent lower—that is, between 2 and 3.5 per cent. We can fool ourselves for a year or maybe two, but at some point the moment of truth arrives and we find that the average rate of growth of productivity has declined from decade to decade and we are losing ground among the industrialized nations. At that point the time has come to act because in the long run it is our standard of living that is at stake.

Of course, Canada's position among the developed nations of the world is still acceptable, but in today's world with its intensive competition it is vital at this stage of our economic development that trading nations such as ours maintain their ability to produce a trade surplus.

The government's economic policy has attacked this problem from a number of directions, and Canadian businesses and taxpayers are aware of this. However, it also has to take action within its own expenditure programs. One area in which it can act is in its role as employer, but this is not the only area, as a review of the February budget certainly shows.

[Translation]

All members of the Public Service were publicly warned more than six months ago, in fact, as early as February 20 this year, that any wage increases negotiated in 1991-92 would necessarily lead to a corresponding loss in the number of jobs, at the time estimated at 6,000 out of a total of 225,000, but in any case, no annual increases would exceed 3 per cent. Employees were also told that the next few years would also be subject to the rule of a maximum annual increase of 3 per cent.

Since it proved impossible to cut jobs, it was necessary to impose a zero per cent increase for the first year of the program.

In the public sector, the years of abundance are over but everyone knows where this so-called abundance, which was not altogether genuine, has brought us.

However, Public Service employees should not lose sight of the fact that nowadays, keeping one's job is quite a feat when we know what is happening in the private sector. Last year, 230,000 people applied for jobs in the Public Service, which is some indication that public servants are in an enviable position.

To provide a broader perspective, honourable senators, I would like to submit a few statistics: out of the 156,000 people who are members of the Alliance, 46,000 are designated essential to health and safety and do not have the right to strike. They include the people who issue income security cheques for the unemployed, veterans and so forth. This group also includes employees on duty in hospitals and also nurses, who were prevented from going into work the day before yesterday at the Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue veterans' hospital, for instance.

There are more than 25,000 employees in the Public Service that can't be subject to collective bargaining. This bill is not aimed only at the unionized people: it applies, without discrimination, to 390,000 employees and agents of the public sector, including ministers, members of Parliament, senators, armed forces personnel, RCMP and numerous Crown commissions and agencies enumerated in the annex to the bill which, incidently, give us an idea of the scope of our Public Service.

So, the government is not trying to get even with a particular group. He is doing his share as employer to control inflation, to reduce the deficit and eventually to solve the big problem of the public debt. Honourable senators, let me remind you that a $200 billion debt at a 10 per cent interest rate translates into a $400 billion debt over a period of seven years.

The bill extends for a period of two years every collective agreement and compensation plan. Therefore, any present strike movement becomes illegal. Fines can be imposed to those who do not comply with the legislation, and those fines can be deducted from the membership dues.

You will recall that in mid-september, the government had left the door open to discussions on other issues: benefits, including medicare, disability insurance, dental plan, wage equity, job security and subcontracting. For wage equity alone, the government has already spent $317 million on 73,000 civil servants, and has clearly indicated that an additional $80 million was budgeted for that item. We can only regret the absence of agreements on these issues, especially since the average annual salary is $37,600 in the Public Service and $33,000 for the members of that union. Indeed, in the circumstances, it seems to me that an endless struggle by the civil servants for an additional 1 or 2 per cent is a bad calculation given our tax system. Such a behavior is unexplainable in Quebec for example, when seven provincial governments (Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Newfoundland, New Brunswick and British Columbia), struggling with their own budget, have made decisions patterned on the federal action. I want to emphasize the fact that even in Quebec, where there is a strong tradition of union activities, the three groups of affiliated trade unions have accepted such a measure, that is a 0 per cent raise for the first six months.

• (1510)

[English]

What is sometimes ironic is that the Alliance itself came away from a meeting in April at which its members decided to reduce union expenditures, to increase dues and to eliminate 20 positions. It took these steps for the same reasons that the federal government outlined last February for its own personnel.

The wage control program should allow the government to save $675 million this year and $3.5 billion over five years. This will not solve the problem of the deficit, but it will reduce it that much more.

This measure, along with the others, including the lowering of interest rates, the elimination of 475 management positions, the drop in the growth rate of transfers to the provinces, the freeze on program expenditures, and the elimination of positions within the Bank of Canada itself, should help turn the situation around after the excesses of the past few decades.

Some are saying that members of Parliament have been treated more generously than the public service. In actual fact, since 1984, wage increases in the public service have exceeded those of members of Parliament and, if public service wage increases have been below the average wage increase in Canada, it is because the average wage in the federal public service, including the considerable fringe benefits, was higher at the outset than the average wage of Canadians.

Between 1984 and 1990 the rate of inflation rose 29.6 percent; wages in the public service rose 25.5 percent; and wages of members of Parliament rose 17.6 percent. As for employees at the bottom of the wage scale, an amendment introduced after the tabling of the bill provided for a lump sum payment of $500 to 35,200 permanent employees earning less than $27,000.

To conclude, I wish to repeat that the government, in tabling this bill, is trying to restore order to Canadian public services which were disrupted in September and to put an end to the serious consequences that this disruption has caused to both private and corporate citizens.

Secondly, the wage restriction that the Government of Canada is imposing is part of its plan for economic recovery which, as we all know, has been slower than expected and more difficult than we had hoped.

It is the government's responsibility to set an example of what it has been telling Canadians for a number of years. There is a need for each and every Canadian to make significant sacrifices if Canada is to retain its standing with the best of the industrialized countries of the West.

Lastly, we recognize that this action is not popular among public service union members, but the public interest requires that we adhere to these restrictions which, while difficult, are vital to the public good.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Opposition in the House of Commons and in the Senate— the Opposition in Parliament— has been unremittingly opposed to this bill in spite of everything Senator Bolduc has said. Why? Let us look first at the important highlights of this bill.

The bill precludes any dispute resolution mechanism such as conciliation, mediation or arbitration. These are all mechanisms or processes won after hard fights over the years to establish rights to conciliation, mediation and arbitration in the case of labour disputes.

The bill allows the government to continue to play games with who gets rewarded and who does not, because bonuses are not affected. The Treasury Board can change classifications and exempt any employee or group of employees at any time. Is that fair? Is that a good bill? Does a good bill say things like that?

The wage control policy is being applied rigidly only to the lowest paid employees; hence, the government's political game-playing will ensure that higher levels receive lump sum payments, bonuses and reclassifications.

Another feature of the bill is that by exempting contractors from any aspect of the legislation, the government is clearly showing that it has an interest only in politics and not in the deficit. Contract costs last year far exceeded the total payroll of the employees now on strike. Of course, the government has complete control over who gets contracts. They are not covered.

Although the act will eventually apply to MPs, senators, presidents of crown corporations, senior managers, etcetera, that will only occur next year when inflation is expected to be much lower.

Another reason is because it is felt that this is part of a sinister strategy. Note how it has evolved. As a first step, the government lays the groundwork for its unfair legislation by making a provision in the budget. Having laid that groundwork, the government then comes along and imposes the unfair consequences of the bill and uses as its excuse, "What could we do? It is in the budget." But who put it in the budget? The government put it in the budget, and it then serves itself later by saying "It is in the budget." Has the government been negotiating fairly, in accordance with the traditions of fair bargaining established over the years and fought for over the years, and in many cases assisted by supporters of the government as a necessary and important part of the rights of all Canadians? The government has given mostly lip service, it seems, because, on the afternoon of September 16, 1991, the Public Service Staff Relations Board rendered a decision pertaining to the then current round of negotiations between the Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance.

• (1520)

What happened is that the Public Service Alliance lodged a complaint with the board on September 10, 1991, stating that the Treasury Board had bargained in bad faith and had violated section 51 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The Alliance argued that the employers' negotiators had made it clear that a condition for dealing with any proposal was that the union first had to indicate acceptance of the employers' zero, three, three, wage-restraint program. What kind of bargaining is that? That is the sort of bargaining that says, "We are prepared to talk and bargain but we are not prepared to budge." What is the point of bargaining with no budging on the side of one of the bargainers?

So the Alliance claimed, understandably, that by maintaining the precondition the employer denied the bargaining agent the ability to represent its members during negotiations and frustrated the entire collective bargaining process.

Honourable senators, let us remember that to put oneself in the position of being a bargaining agent is not a simple matter. To acquire the right to sit down and legally to bargain, to bring into play all the mechanisms that have been developed over the years to ensure bargaining in good faith, is not an easy process. The mandate that is given is hard won; it is given as a result of all the effort that goes into establishing a bargaining unit, organizing the bargaining unit, electing an executive and authorizing bargaining. The rights that are acquired are hard fought for and difficult to acquire. Over the years the Alliance has achieved that for the purpose of being allowed to sit down and use the law to bargain in good faith, only to be told by the other party, with all the authority, the stature and all the muscle that a government has, that "This right to bargain, for which you have fought so hard to gain, gives you the following right, namely, the right to sit down at the other end of that table and agree to whatever we want, because we will not bargain." That is upsetting, to say the least. Wherever did the government find the definition of the word "bargaining" that enabled it to say that it was bargaining when it was really saying, "You first have to agree that we will not be budging."

What did the Public Service Staff Relations Board do? It ruled in line with the decisions by the Ontario Labour Relations Board and the British Columbia Court of Appeal, which held that to insist on preconditioning before bargaining for a collective agreement is contrary to the requirement of bargaining in good faith. Is that surprising? It seems perfectly logical and reasonable. It was a reasonable, logical and justifiable position for the Alliance to take. Not only was it reasonable, logical and understandable for the board to so rule, but it was also supported, as one would expect, by precedence by the Ontario Board and the British Columbia Court of Appeal.

The board said:

> The insistence on conditions precedent to negotiating terms and conditions of employment at the bargaining table is incompatible with the requirement to make every reasonable effort to negotiate a collective agreement. Accordingly, the Board declares that the employer has acted contrary to section 51 of the Act . . .

That is, our statutes. It continues:

> . . . and orders the employer to comply with section 51 of the act.

Namely, to bargain in good faith, but having launched this sinister strategy of giving itself an excuse in advance by putting provisions into the budget—and let us remember exactly what that was—the government clearly stated its decision not to bargain in good faith. On February 26, 1991, the Minister of Finance, Michael Wilson, presented his seventh budget in the other place, one which he characterized as a "Plan for Economic Recovery". In other words, after six years and six budgets, he had guided the Canadian economy—what a confession this is—into such a state of disrepair that he now had to come forward with a plan for its recovery. He put into effect a plan to repair the damage that his own prior policy had caused. A short time after presenting this plan, he stepped aside, leaving his colleague, Mr. Mazankowski, to implement it. Though Canadians were undoubtedly relieved that Mr. Wilson would no longer be crafting any more budgets, especially ones that produced these kinds of consequences, nevertheless they continued to pay for his previous failures and to suffer his painful legacy. One group in particular was lashed by Mr. Wilson to the recovery wagon: namely, the public service.

• (1530)

One of the most sinister aspects to this legislation is the inequitable application of the legislation as between those at the top and those at the bottom. In his budget Mr. Wilson observed that since 1987, wage settlements for government employees ". . . . have been lower than those concluded in the private sector and by provincial and municipal governments." That is the same Mr. Wilson saying that in 1987.

Let us now go on "fast forward" to 1991. In his 1991 budget Mr. Wilson said that he was determined that not only would this trend continue but it would be exacerbated. He announced:

> The wage budgets of departments will not be adjusted in 1991-92 for any increases in costs arising out of new collective agreements.

That is the man who said, in 1987, that the public service was behind the private sector and now says, having established that, that there will be no upward adjustments. The quote continues:

> Departments will have to absorb any such higher costs from within existing budgets.
> Each increase of 1 per cent in average wage settlements across the public service could lead to a loss of about 2,000 jobs.
> Over the next three years, the government is not prepared to contemplate wage increases beyond 3 per cent at an annual rate.

This is 1991, and he is telling this to public servants who, he has already acknowledged, are behind the private sector.

But now we find that even this guideline, which means wage increases of 3 per cent per year for the next three years, is not to be followed—at least not by this legislation. What we have before us is a bill that in the first year provides for no wage increases. A wage increase of zero per cent. What sort of double talk is that? Is zero per cent an increase?

Senator Stanbury: Zero growth.

Senator Frith: Yes, it is another of these euphemisms, as Mr. Lapham of Harper's says of our language, that has "gone rotten" in the euphemisms of "bureaucratese", an increase of zero per cent. With inflation running at an annual rate of close to 6 per cent, does anyone, no matter how they feel about this legislation, have any difficulty understanding the frustration of public servants? That frustration does not arise just out of the fact that their wages are being frozen, but, notwithstanding protestations to the contrary, as I have pointed out, also out of the fact that the government is enforcing its policy on a very selective basis.

In the May 9, 1990 issue of Senate Debates of the Senate there is a very interesting answer to a question asked by Senator Olson on the salary range of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. In 1984 the salary range of the governor was $97,090 to $114,060. By 1988 that range had increased substantially. The bottom end of the range increased from $97,090 to $162,000. That means if the governor was at the bottom end of the salary range in 1984, his salary increased by a minimum of $64,910 in four years. The top end of the salary range increased from $114,060 to $243,000. Yes, $243,000; an increase of almost $130,000 in four years. If the governor was at the top range in 1984, his salary had more than doubled by 1988. I can only wonder—and we cannot find out, of course—exactly what the governor's salary range is today.

The point of this dissertation is not to suggest or attempt to prove that the governor of the bank is overpaid. He may not be overpaid. The point is that that kind of increase, earned or not, is not matched in any way by those at the bottom of the scale. That is why we have a large number of very angry public servants across this land. Their anger would be better contained if they knew that everyone had been doing their share.

Can we say that everyone who is in the public service has had their increases, has had their salary dealt with, has had their rewards for their efforts, which are just as well-earned as those of the Governor of the Bank of Canada? Are he and his colleagues the only ones who have earned their salary, and earned their salary increases? Did those people who worked just as hard at their particular jobs not earn increases also? Apparently not.

These people know that everyone has not been doing their share. They know that there is a select group of individuals serving the public whom the government rewards most handsomely—perhaps with good reason, but that that same reason is not applied to the rest. They get the back of the government's hand. Those who really get the back of the hand are the ones who are already down and cannot afford to get along on what they are making at the present time. That is what is wrong with this legislation. We are told that the wage freeze applies to everyone, and so is equitable. Notice the slight, but again very sinister, shift in logic: The wage freeze applies to everyone and thus it is equitable.

If I had been the Governor of the Bank of Canada since 1984, I think I could live with a wage freeze this year. So could I if I were in the category that has had those kinds of increases. But if I were a typical federal public servant whose wage increases have been running at less than those of the private sector, I would feel different.

How do we know that? Because Mr. Wilson told us that; that is how we know. Is this an exaggeration? Are we making undue, unfair allegations? Are we basing our opposition to this legislation on some esoteric, maneuvered and manipulated figures? No. If I were a typical federal public servant my wage increases would have been running at less than those of the private sector and other governments for some years. I know because Mr. Wilson told me so. I would have a somewhat different attitude about a wage freeze were I to become aware that those were the facts that applied to me, but not the doublings and exponential increases granted to the governor of the bank and others.

That attitude would have hardend even more had I learned in March of this year, on the day prior to Mr. Wilson's budget, that 42 senior executives of crown corporations and government agencies were awarded by Cabinet a retroactive 4.2 per cent salary increase. In at least one case, the salary being so increased was already in excess of $300,000. Is it any wonder that our public servants, who admittedly are politically vulnerable and subject to being manipulated by any government or politicians, feel the way that they do?

• (1540)

Public servant/civil servant bashing is a sure-fire, though cheap, political tactic. But is it any wonder that they are saying, to quote a line from the popular, famous film "Network", that "they are darn mad and they are not going to take it any more", when they consider that? Is that not enough?

Well, in case it is not enough, my mood would also not improve if I recalled that last summer members of the other place awarded themselves a $6,000 tax-free housing allowance. As senators, we also know the view of those same members of the other place who had given themselves a $6,000 tax-free housing allowance and what they had to say and felt about what similar allowance the Senate and senators might be entitled to.

That $6,000 tax-free housing allowance—I am now looking at this from the point of view of a public servant not of a senator—is in addition to regular salary increases for members of the other place. Now some of the same people, I assume government supporters in the other place who got this increase, are asking the lowest paid—and you know that we are talking about those who are low paid, honourable senators. When I say "lowest paid" do you think I am talking about a range somewhere around $50,000? Do you think I am talking about a range around $30,000? Can anyone here live on $30,000? Can I go down a bit further to $27,000, $26,000 $25,000, $20,000? How can we expect these people not to be angry? How can we expect anyone not to criticize this legislation, when it is so inequitable? It is asking the lowest paid of the public servants to bear the heaviest burden in the struggle to put the economy back on the rails after it was derailed by Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Wilson brought forward the budget that said we have to get this economy back on the rails and the way we are going to get it back on the rails is to limit to zero any increases—of whom? Those who can get by? Those of us who can get by? The middle class, generally? No. Those who already can barely get by and who we know can hardly get by. Who do we know even, let alone ourselves, who can get along on the kind of money that they are being asked to get along on?

It is not fair and the public servants who were demonstrating outside this building earlier today, earlier this week and across this land, know it is unfair, and I believe the people know it is unfair. I believe even the people who criticize the actions of these public servants—and there are always some excesses—know in their hearts that this legislation is not fair to the public servants of this country. Remember, it applies to all public servants, not just those who belong to the Public Service Alliance.

Honourable senators, the least that should be done to this bill is that it should be amended. The best that should happen to it is that it should be defeated. It should be amended to remedy some of these inequities that I have mentioned. It should be amended to provide for a grievance procedure. It should be amended to provide for a mediator.

The government's gall knows no limits. I know it is very popular to say that public servants do not earn their income. It is interesting, is it not, to hear that. Is it not interesting to hear people repeat the myth that the public servants of this country do not render a valuable service, that they are all fatcats, that they do not do their work and that their work is not really that necessary anyway. Every time anyone talks about improving the deficit or saving money in federal spending the first thing they say is cut the salary and fire all those public servants.

But what happens after two days of a strike by these fatcats who don't do any work and who don't render any valuable service to our country? What happens after two days? Well, read the papers and find out what happened after two days. The same businessmen who claim that the government does not operate on good business principles and who say that we should cut down on all these public servants are screaming that they cannot do business, that the public servants must be sent back to work because the whole country is shut down, they are losing profits and they cannot work without them. Why can't they operate without them? They are always telling us that they do not provide any valuable services. The fact is they do provide a valuable service and they are entitled to be more fairly treated than this legislation treats them.

[Senator Frith.]

The legislation should either be defeated, withdrawn, reworked or amended. I am glad to say that some of my colleagues will have something more to say about each of those topics.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I am conscience of the fact that under our rules at the present time I have 15 minutes to complete what I have to say and I undertake to keep within those bounds.

Senator Frith: If you did not vote for these rules, we will extend it.

Senator Roblin: I want to ignore what my friend said because his heckling habits ought to have been left with his old job and now he should display more calm and solicitous attitude.

I want to tell my colleague, Senator Bolduc, that I recognize the force of his arguments and I think that some observations made by my honourable friend opposite, Senator Frith, are something less than balanced. I do intend to vote for this legislation. However, I want to make a personal statement about it because I cannot approach this task with a quiet mind. I have a serious concern that we are faced once again with this impasse between the government and some of its employees. I acknowledge that, in my view, that is a sad confrontation and in many respects it does not serve the public interest.

I think it is not good enough for us to put this bill through, as I hope and believe we will do, without some serious reflection as to how we got ourselves into this situation in the first place and why these extreme measures, which I think are justified, are placed before us for our approval.

I think it is necessary to do what we can to go to the root of our problem and to acknowledge that the responsibility for the position that we find ourselves in today ultimately rests with the lawmakers of Canada.

If I may cut through all the lengthy argument that might be presented, I want to go to what I think is the heart of matter and remind this house that in the halcyon days of the late 1960s and early 1970s it was the "politically correct" line, if I may use that modern observation, that employees of public organizations and the government should have the same right to strike as any other workers in society. I have to tell you that my views on that subject are perhaps somewhat heretical in view of the development of that policy over the years.

● (1550)

It was alleged, thought and believed that labour relations in the public sector could indeed be assimilated to labour relations in the private sector and, as private sector workers were entitled to strike, so should government workers be entitled to do the same, even though at that time it was recognized there had to be some exceptions. In fact, one-third of the civil service is, I believe, exempted because they perform essential services.

Looking back at the record, what do we see? I think we see something that, as experience shows, this policy that was adopted lo these many years and which has become embedded in our civil service labour relations, fails. We are here today to witness that it has failed. It fails the test of practicality; it fails the test of experience. Indeed, in my view, it fails the test of common sense. I say that because all of us know that the public sector does not work like the private sector.

We are all well acquainted with the fact that the checks and balances of market forces which render it possible to contemplate strikes in the private sector with a degree of equanimity simply do not operate within the labour relations of the public sector. To capsulate the argument, that is so because governments do not go out of business. If they pay more, they simply borrow more, tax more, or cut some expenditures to make good. We find that firm government negotiations on these matters turns the minds of civil servants to civil disobedience, as we see today—indeed, some seem to be cloaking themselves in the mantle of Ghandi and of Martin Luther King—to protest what is to them a genuine sense of unfairness that has rendered their strike actions valueless. Thus, we have problems on both sides of this argument. Neither of those developments, in the long run, serve an appropriate policy in the public sector.

It is not just the present situation that causes me concern, which is really the point that I want to labour. During the past 25 years that this legislation has been in place, when we have agreed that it is appropriate that the public service should have the right to strike, there is a history of legislative acts like the one we have before us now—mandating people back to work. This indicates that neither on the government side nor the employee side, because they cannot agree, is the system working with any degree of effectiveness and fairness.

The government has indicated by its actions what it thinks of the results of these negotiations; and the unionists have been quite frank to tell the rest of the public what they think about the actions of the government.

I conclude myself that the right to strike is not in the public interest with respect to the civil service because, if we look at the various statistics that are provided we see that since 1970, if this figure is correct, and I find it hard to believe, there have been 90 occasions in which public employees in various levels of government throughout this country have been mandated back to work because the system does not operate efficiently. As far as this Parliament is concerned, in the last 25 years there have been 19 occasions in which government has felt impelled to mandate the employees back to work. It is not just this government; it is its predecessors. In fact, if we add up the numbers we see that they have a higher total to answer for than anyone else. It seems to me that it is the fault of the system with which we are engaged.

While we have the unpleasant necessity in my view of passing this bill today, let us use the opportunity to start re-thinking our public sector labour relations policy. Experience has shown amply that free collective bargaining, as it is generally understood, simply cannot be transferred holus-bolus from the private domain to the public domain without substantial modifications. It seems to me that what we are seeking and what we do not have at the present time is a fair dispute settlement mechanism policy. That is what we should be turning our minds to when this unpleasant episode is over since I think it will be vital to good relations among the people of our country in the days to come.

If I am asked what to do, I say that it is clear that some form of arbitration may very well be indicated as necessary. I expect both the civil servants and the government to object to such a policy. The government will not easily give up its financial responsibilities to some third party arbitrator. It will not be willing to allow for control over part of government expenditures to be within the hands of a third party. There are sound reasons why that position should be seriously considered. The civil servants will feel that depriving them of the right to strike has deprived them of a right that goes with the citizenship of this country. Yet, if the current system does not work—and it does not—then something must be done to take its place. That is the gravamen of my plea to honourable senators this afternoon.

I say that both sides will have to give something, if the legislators and the public are to be satisfied. My preference, as I have stated, is for arbitration. I am afraid that if we go down that path it will be a binding arbitration, and I am sure that it will only work if, within that arbitration system, there is a very clear definition as to what the parameters are. It is not impossible to devise parameters that will meet with some of the policy considerations of the government while at the same time dealing justly with its employees.

I think that the design of these parameters can be obtained by looking at what other jurisdictions do. Let civil service pay be comparable to fair pay for the same kind of work in the private sector, but do not neglect to factor into the parameters which I have mentioned the special requisites that civil servants enjoy in this country and in the provinces. To mention a few, there are their inflation-proof pensions, employment security protections, and other wide-ranging benefits which public opinion, and I think reality, would say give civil servants of the country a special advantage in their employment with the government.

We could look at the Province of Prince Edward Island, for example, which has such a system in place. I am told it works very well. There is a system of arbitration in the United Kingdom, but I am not so sure how it works. In the Province of British Columbia there is a gentleman called the Compensation Commissioner who takes a look at any wage settlements which are deemed to be out of whack.

What we are seeking here in the settlement of these problems is the principle of fairness. It is widely perceived on both sides of this issue today that fairness is lacking. The government feels it is being hindered in its proper responsibility to deal with the budgetary problems of the country. The civil servants say that as a result of that they are not being dealt with fairly. It seems to me that is what we should be thinking about fairness as we deal with the problems that are before us.

What I have said today is nothing more than a cursory introduction to a very deep, involved and difficult problem. I do not pretend it be anything more than that. I do not pretend my words to be anything more than my observations that come to me at this time as I deal with this question.

It seems to me fundamental that wise policy is not served by the arrangements that we have today and that we, as legislatures, indeed, as the Senate, might take it upon ourselves to see what we can do to devise a better system in which these matters will be regulated so that the authority of the government to conduct the public affairs and the control of public finances is preserved, as it certainly has to be, while at the same time we have a mechanism for dealing fairly with those who have to accept a situation in labour relations which is not the same as that in the private sector.

After all, it could be a condition of employment in the public sector that these limitations be recognized, as indeed they are by that one-third of the civil service today which is now classified as essential. It is not exactly a new principle, but it does involve a new approach to this problem, one which makes fairness the hallmark of what we are trying to do, but one which, above all, recognizes the lessons of our experience over this past 25 years which indicates to us that something better must surely be done.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the honourable senator a question, with the assurance that it is not a heckle?

In his own view, at the moment, does he lean toward all public servants being designated essential?

Senator Roblin: I lean toward looking into this whole question. I do not feel I am a expert in this matter.

Senator Frith: But what do you learn from your experience?

Senator Roblin: My experience in the Government of Manitoba, if that is what you are asking about, is that there was no legislation to permit strikes in the public service, either in the hands of civil servants, teachers, firemen, policemen and several other bodies. But there was a corollary to it. You could not implement such a policy if you did not proceed with fairness in dealing with the problems which those people presented to an executive government as they did.

• (1600)

I do not wish to recall to mind the history of those events, but I can say to you that, during the time that I had that office, we did not have the right to strike; nor did we have anyone who wanted to strike, because we were able to come to fair solutions to the problems. That was not to my credit or that of my government. It was the way things were done; and it was well to do it.

Many times when we try to legislate or tabulate the rights and privileges of people we find that the results are not exactly what we intended them to be. It is sometimes better to be a little less precise, a little less regimented, and to act with a little more common sense and care.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, this bill, as everyone knows, deals with a Parliamentary decision to order people back to work. I do not intend to deal with what is contained in the bill, but, rather, with the reasons why we have the bill. Senator Frith has pointed out some of the weaknesses, unfairness and injustices, if I may say so, that are contained in the bill.

Honourable senators, the reason why we are faced with this billis simple. It is because the government has mismanaged its labour relations over several months, maybe over several years, culminating in the events of these past few months. Senator Roblin says that we must do a great re-examination and amendment of the structures that are in place to deal with labour-management relations. The government could do that, I guess; but if it has mismanaged it previously, what is the guarantee that it will not mismanage it in future?

The labour management relations of this government have been atrocious. It is inconceivable to me that any intelligent person— in this case, the cabinet and the President of the Treasury Board— could act in this way and yet not be able to completely predict what would be the reaction of the Public Service Alliance.

Last February the government decided that there was going to be no increase in the budget for this group of employees, that even though it was the largest group in the public sector, there would be no increase, and only 3 percent after that.

In labour-management relations, honourable senators, one should at least discuss one's intentions with the other party before making an announcement; but this government did not do that. It did not even go to the Public Service Alliance and discuss with them what its policy would be. It came out with this policy of zero, three and three without any discussion, without any bargaining, without any of the normal consultation and communication between management and labour.

Senator Bolduc is a brave man. He has tried to give the government's explanation of what has happened and how it happened. The government found itself in difficulty in trying to cover all of its expenses. It could not stand any more expenses. There was a huge public debt hanging over the government, and therefore, it was driven into making this announcement. It may be true that the government wanted to establish a policy of zero increase for the 1991 budget, when the existing contract expired; but surely the government could have had the decency, the fairness, to discuss this with the labour union before announcing it. It simply did not do that.

We have to ask ourselves, "How did we get into this mess where we need to pass Bill C-29 to try to resolve it?" It is because of the mismanagement. I cannot understand why the government did not realize what would be the reaction from the union when it singled out these employees but exempted so many others. If these problems, of paying further moneys out of the public treasury, are valid, then why is the policy not being applied evenly to everyone? The government exempted the contractors and certain other classifications of employees, some at a higher level of pay, as Senator Frith has already explained. It is completely beyond me how any government, any intelligent human being, can believe that it can persist in that kind of labour relations. I cannot understand that.

There have been several reasons given why this back-to-work legislation is needed now, one reason being that the grain is not being loaded at ports such as Vancouver. Months ago we tried to get the government to designate categories of essential personnel. The Leader of the Government in the Senate told me that the grain inspectors did not qualify under the criteria used.

Honourable senators, the grain inspectors do not load the ships; they are actually regulators. They make sure that the grain going in meets certain specifications of the grain act with regard to its grading, so that the customer may know that he is receiving the quality he paid for. Canada is one of the only grain-exporting countries in the world that sells grain on a graded basis. When one buys Canada No. 1 or No. 2, or any other grade of grain, it is known around the world that that is the quality that will arrive. Almost every other country has to submit samples before the customer country makes a decision. So this is an important issue.

However, the fact remains that grain inspectors are merely regulators. They are law enforcement officers who ensure that Canada's laws respecting the quality of grain is respected and enforced.

Why does the government have many categories of employees? The farmers are now losing grain income of $50 million a week. That is the only income they have. Grain prices are now lower, in relation to the costs of other products, than they have ever been in this century, and that amount of income for farmers has dried up because of this strike, and because the government refuses to designate the grain inspectors as being an essential service.

The employees who write cheques, whether for unemployment insurance, for old age pensions, or other things, for those people who need their income to be uninterrupted, are designated as essential. The reason they are so designated is because the government wants those payments to reach those people to enable them to meet their living costs. But farmers are not so fortunate.

• (1610)

All that you would do, by designating these inspectors as being essential public servants, is ensure that Canada's laws were being respected and enforced. The consequence would be that the income of farmers could continue to flow in a normal way. I have done a lot of pleading and I know that others in the other place have also pleaded. The government cannot seem to get it through its head that these people are essential for exactly the same reason as anyone else, to ensure the continuity of income. I do not understand that kind of thinking.

I have just visited western Canada for a few days, and you are not getting away with it. You may think that you can pull some smart act like this and just let the farmers go, but you cannot. You are not getting away with it. They understand what this government is doing to them. More than anything else the people out there want an election so they can get at you.

Senator Simard: That is the quick-fix.

Senator Olson: They have had it up to their ears with the kind of administration that leads to this kind of action.

Senator Barootes: Will you take a question, Senator Olson?

Senator Olson: I have only 15 minutes. If I can get a minute or two at the end of the 15 I will be very happy to try to answer some questions.

Senator Simard, of course, rattles away all the time, and I hope no one listens to him because he is not even cohesive most of the time. The people out there who are desperate as a result of the return from the international grain price cannot simply be dismissed. Their income has been completely cut off, as low as it was. Now the government comes along with legislation.

Another incredible thing happened. I used to be chairman of one of those cabinet committees and I know what happens up there. They announced all these bonuses for the senior members of the public service right at the height of the strike, about two and a half weeks ago, or at least that is when it became public knowledge. There was no announcement, but I guess that is the way you do things; you do not make announcements. Anything that goes through that cabinet committee has to be reported in the Gazette. You know that. If you make those kinds of decisions based on the law, eventually it is going to be public knowledge. Of all the unfair and stupid things to do—that is exactly what it was—to rub salt in the wounds already inflicted.

Senator Murray: The only announcement that was made by the government was that the bonuses were not being paid. It turned out to be quite inaccurate and incorrect to say that they were being paid.

Senator Olson: Are you saying you did not pay any bonuses this year to anyone? Is that what you are telling me?

Senator Murray: I am saying that the so-called announcement to which my friend was referring was not an announcement. There was no such announcement.

Senator Olson: Never mind the announcement. Did you authorize any bonuses to anyone? That is the question.

Senator Marsden: Like Mr. Lawless, $84,000?

Senator Olson: Eighty-four thousand dollars to the chairman of the CNR.

Senator Murray: Let us talk about this year. The budget came down in the month of February. My honourable friend took his 3.78 per cent increase on January 1. There were a number of increases that started on January 1. The important point is that for everyone, cabinet ministers, senators, MPs, RCMP, armed forces and public servants, there will be one year with zero per cent raise. That is the important thing. The pay years begin in different months but there will be a zero per cent year for everyone, including my honourable friend.

Senator Olson: I understand that and I accept that. That is not the only important thing. There are one or two other important things. As Senator Frith pointed out, quite properly, there were some very significant increases to some of the senior personnel over the same period of time as you notified these 114 thousand or so people that they were going to get zero. That is what is unfair.

Senator Murray: Everyone will have a year at zero.

Senator Olson: No they will not, because you are paying bonuses.

Senator Simard: Do not say "no".

Senator Olson: I asked you if you were, and you did not deny it. You denied there was an announcement. That I understand. You try to get away with sneaky things like this, but you cannot, because whatever happens in those cabinet committees is bound to be reported and published in the Gazette. That is what it is there for. So you cannot have sneaky governments.

Senator Simard: Stop misleading.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my time is up and I am not going to ask for additional time because I have a hunch I will not get it. It is due to most serious mismanagement of the labour relations that we are here. We have to try to fix up this bill a little if we can. I am waiting to have an interrogation of the principals involved—in other words the president of the union and the President of the Treasury Board—as soon as we can, because this is obviously unfair.

In conclusion I would say, do not think you are fooling anyone. The members of the public know that you have been acting like this and they too do not think it is fair; nor do they like it.

Senator Barootes: Will you answer a question, Senator Olson, now that you have finished your peroration?

Senator Olson: Certainly.

Senator Barootes: I agree with you. I would very much like the grain inspectors to be made essential workers. Will you tell me which administration it was that excluded them from being essential workers? It certainly was not this administration.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I suppose it was the previous government, whatever it happened to be.

Senator Barootes: Thank you, that is enough. I do not need any more of an answer.

Senator Olson: He acts as if —

Senator Barootes: That is enough.

Senator Olson: — the previous government is still governing the country. My understanding is that you have been in office for the last seven years; you are the ones who are supposed to be administering the government now, and we find this weakness. I do not believe the grain inspectors were on strike at any time prior to 1984.

Senator Barootes: They certainly have been.

Senator Olson: No they were not. The grain loaders were on strike, that is private sector; but the government employees who are involved in inspecting and grading the grain have not been on strike.

[Senator Olson.]

Are you not governing the country now? Are you not running things? You want to blame it on something that happened before 1984 but —

Senator Barootes: We have the answer. Thank you very much.

Senator Olson: — the public does not buy that kind of argument any more.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, the leader of my party and Senator Olson have laid out all of the reasons why this is a perfectly odious piece of legislation, and I agree with them. What is really amazing in the exchange which we have just heard is the attempt to make a virtue out of zero, as though, somehow or other, the fact that there would be a year of zero increases made things more fair. As Senator Frith has said, the real underlying problem here is that all zeros are not equal. A zero increase for Mr. Lawless, or indeed for Senator Olson, is not nearly the same as the kind of zero that is being presented to the low-paid public service workers.

It is not only a zero increase that those workers are getting, but it represents a minus. Depending how you add, the rate of inflation, the cost of the GST, the increase in their unemployment insurance premium, and the cut to whatever benefits they might have received through the social programs such as supplements for child care and the government's cuts to transfers to the provinces are wage cuts.

The government has the lowest minimum wage in the country and shows absolutely no intention of doing anything about it. Anyone who is trying to live on the minimum wage in this country is living well below the poverty line.

• (1620)

This so-called zero increase is no zero at all. It is not only a minus increase, it is the worst minus number for the lowest paid workers. Percentage increases are a bad way of approaching wage settlements. Goodness knows, if the government hasn't learned that by this time, after previous governments have backed off such legislation, they certainly haven't learned much at all.

This bill is not only punishing the poorest paid workers, it is a brutal bill to national institutions in terms of collective bargaining. I will not repeat all of those arguments, but the bill is punishing not only to the collective bargaining process, not only to the Public Service Staff Relations Board—which made a ruling that should be respected—but also to the Human Rights Committee which has been pressuring the government for some time to deal with its pay equity mess. The government has shown absolutely no intention of resolving this problem.

After the government has taken all of this money out of the hides of its lowest paid workers, honourable senators can be assured that it will turn around next month, when the Michael Porter study comes out, and urge everyone in this country to become more competitive. After reducing public service morale and the morale of the public by the government's refusal to negotiate a reasonable settlement, the government then turns around and says, "We have to be more competitive.

Look what is happening in the global environment." That is all well and good, but the way to get competitiveness out of producers, workers and business people in this country is to create a climate where that type of attitude is possible. So it is a cycle of punishment and despair.

I come now to a point that I wish to emphasize. Two thirds of public sector workers earning less than $30,000 are women. We all know that the Public service of Canada, which has been a major channel enabling women to enter the public service, has been underpaying women workers for years. Pay equity settlements were agreed upon, and the payment of those settlements has not been made because of the difficult conditions the government has put on pay equity settlements.

Long before there was any talk of this strike, many of us were meeting with people in the public service and the public service union to see what could be done about pay equity settlements. Not only has there been no attempt to settle these issues, but the people of this country are receiving a message from this government. Let us remember that the people of Canada, through its government, ratified pay equity 40 years ago. We are not talking about something new here, namely, equal pay for work of equal value. It is something that is now established in the private sector in the province of Ontario, and yet the federal public service is dragging its heels and being forced into pay equity settlements.

The government has done something which women find encouraging. The appointment this summer of the blue ribbon panel on violence against women includes a number of distinguished people who are experts in that field. One hopes that they will bring some recommendations forward and that the recommendations will be acted upon.

This government has been very good about appointing women to the Senate. We now have a great many more women senators than we had in the past. However, senators should take note that the secretaries to those senators are subject to this pay freeze. The secretaries, as we all know, have been talking about pay equity in the Senate, as well they should. They take a pay freeze, apparently, although they have no bargaining power in this situation.

So the government has shown bad faith before and during this strike on the matter of pay equity. It has shown no attempt to bring forward a negotiating position that included a sliding scale so that the lowest paid workers were in a better position. It has shown no good faith towards settling the pay equity issues with women workers.

The legislation we are faced with today which, as sentors may have guessed, I am going to vote against as often as possible, is wrong in many ways. It is wrong in its principle, because we should not be legislating workers back to work; it is wrong in its content, and it is wrong in the process it has followed. The inequality in this bill for all public sector workers, low paid workers and women workers in particular, tells us more about this government and its attitude towards fairness and equality than can possibly be covered up by any kind of low cost, goodwill legislation that the government intends to bring forward before the next election.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I have the greatest regard for Senator Bolduc, and although I was impressed by the array of statistics he quoted to us, that array of statistics would have been more persuasive had he dealt with the basic issue in this bill.

I thought that I might be able to add something to the debate today by describing what it means to bargain in good faith, by looking at the government's responsibility to negotiate with its employees, and by reviewing how the government has fulfilled that responsibility during its contract discussions with the Public Service Alliance of Canada in the past seven months.

The day that the then finance minister delivered his latest budget announcing the restraints, he made very clear the government's policy about a potential strike. He said they would not "hesitate to use legislation to prevent work stoppages." That was said back at the time of the budget. How prophetic. Cynics might say that it was a self-fulfilling prophecy. He did add, almost as an afterthought, that the government would continue to bargain with its employees.

Let us skip ahead to May when negotiations were still ongoing. Mr. Loiselle introduced the Public Service Reform Act. That legislation was designed to give public service managers more leeway and authority to hire and fire, to transfer workers, as well as to increase the government's power to contract out services to the private sector. Simultaneously, Mr. Loiselle also claimed that bargaining with PSAC had dragged on for too long, and he announced that the public service workers could not be given the option of a 3 percent wage increase in 1991-92 that their salaries would instead be frozen for one year. What kind of negotiations were those? I doubt whether Mr. Loiselle's rhetoric and posturing helped the bargaining process either. At the time he said in the other place, "If these settlements are not reached through agreement, through negotiation, we would eventually have recourse to legislation." This is another self-fulfilling prophecy. I doubt whether this inspired good-faith bargaining.

Besides, what incentive did Mr. Loiselle or his negotiators have to reach a negotiated settlement when given these assurances of the eventuality of back-to-work legislation? I would hardly call that negotiation when one party not only has the power simply to legislate what it wants, but, more importantly, announces in advance exactly what it intends to do. Whether you call it a simple self-fulfilling prophecy or an outright ultimatum, the evidence shows that the government has no intention of negotiating. The union was left with the clear understanding from Mr. Loiselle that they would have to take the government's offer of a freeze or the government would make them take it. Willingly, or by law, either way, the government's position was to be the final state of the contract.

Now, I understand that Mr. Loiselle was probably given an edict from on high to be tough. I am sure that Mr. Mulroney assumed the majority of Canadians would not support the union. After all, his public opinion polls told him that Canadians saw public servants as being fortunate. I would guess that he figured he could gain a fair amount of support for his position. The problem is that he forgot to consider a few other things, such as the law and the fundamental rights of Canadian workers to collective bargaining.

• (1630)

Regardless of whether it was thought to be a popular policy or not, it was fundamentally wrong. According to a ruling of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, a quasi-judicial body provided for by statute, the government failed in its responsibility to negotiate. The government failed to respect the right to meaningful collective bargaining.

Let us be clear about this: I understand that there is a Conservative government in power; I understand that the Conservative ideology lends itself to at least mild disdain for the union movement and the collective bargaining process. So I am not surprised by the government's willingness to subvert the process; I am not surprised that the government is predisposed to disfavour collective bargaining. I understand the ideological inclinations shown. The problem is, however, that these inclinations have been expressed in an unacceptable and fundamentally hypocritical way.

If the government is serious about its disfavour with the process of collective bargaining with the public service in this country, let it do the honest and honourable thing. If Mr. Mulroney is really serious, if he is really committed, then why does he not introduce legislation showing his true colours? If Mr. Mulroney is so set on undermining collective bargaining, why does he not introduce legislation ending the right to collective bargaining? Why does he not stop the hypocrisy and show Canadians where he really stands? Why does he not come out of the closet? Why does he not stop the fraud and bring forward a bill that would encompass his real agenda?

By choosing not to negotiate and by choosing to legislate back-to-work legislation, which provides no alternative process, the government has shown that it has no respect for the process as provided for in law. So why does the Prime Minister not do the honourable thing and make the government's de facto policy with regard to public service collective bargaining the law. If his agenda is to break the union, if his agenda is to kill the process, why does he not try to do it through the Parliament of Canada and see how successful he is? Better yet, why does he not call an election on the issue? Tell Canadians that you want to outlaw the collective bargaining process, and then call the election to seek a mandate.

The country is sick of this government's hidden agenda. If the objective is just to restrain government spending, then that is worthwhile, legitimate and perhaps even popular; but if Mr. Mulroney's objective is to ring a death knell to the employees' collective bargaining rights, then that is wholly unacceptable. Let there be no doubt that an inflexible challenge to the legitimate negotiating rights of government employees cannot and will not be tolerated.

[Senator Stanbury.]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Bolduc speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be read a second time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion, there are several matters that I wish to bring to the attention of honourable senators concerning the process that we will follow in the next few hours. If necessary, I can put these into a formal motion, but I will try my luck at stating what I believe might meet the approval of honourable senators. If we agree, then we can proceed as agreed, and with leave.

First, if this motion passes and we go to Committee of the Whole, we will need 15 minutes or thereabouts before we begin the committee proceedings. This is for a reason I shall come to in a moment.

Second, I would suggest—and I believe there might be agreement—that at 6 o'clock, whether we are in committee or Mr. Speaker is in the Chair, we would not rise for the dinner adjournment but, rather, would continue to meet through the period when we would normally have a dinner break—that is, from 6 o'clock to 8 o'clock.

If we go to Committee of the Whole, I suggest the following:

That during consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole no motion that "the Chairman do now leave the Chair" shall be received;

That a television pool shall be permitted into the chamber to tape the proceedings of the committee.

There is precedent for that and there is also precedent for what follows:

That the proceedings of the committee be televised pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons, where applicable;

That two witnesses shall be called before the committee and shall be permitted to sit within the bar of the Senate; and

That any amendments proposed or any votes to be taken in Committee of the Whole will be taken at the end of the proceedings.

They will be bunched, as it were, and taken at the same time toward the end of the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole.

Senator Frith: Like the television cameras, they will be pooled.

Senator Murray: They will, as the Leader of the Opposition says, be pooled. Those are the only points that I wish to make at this time. I believe there would be agreement on those matters. If there is, then I think we can proceed, with leave and as agreed, unless honourable senators wish me to formalize them by way of a motion.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I listened carefully to what the Leader of the Government had to say. As I made my notes on it, I think it follows right on the discussion that I had with the Deputy Leader of the Government. As far as we are concerned, this suits us. We are prepared, then, to proceed. Quite frankly, I think it is better for us to proceed in this house by agreement in most cases rather than by motions. I am quite prepared to proceed on that basis.

• (1640)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion to refer tohe bill to a Committee of Whole?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The Senate will now adjourn during pleasure until 10 minutes to 5:00. The bells will ring for five minutes.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Gerald R. Ottenheimer in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, Mr. Daryl Bean, President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, was ecorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

• (1650)

The Chairman: Order, please. Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-29, an Act respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada and to amend another act in relation thereto.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I believe it was our agreement that we would be hearing first from the representative of the union, Mr. Daryl Bean, and I would propose we invite Mr. Bean now to come before us and that we would then hear from the minister, Mr. Loiselle.

Honourable Senators: Agreed.

Pursuant to Order of the Senate, Mr. Dryl T. Bean was escorted to seats in the Senate Chamber.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman I propose that Mr. Bean be invited to make an opening statement, if he has one.

The Chairman: It has been proposed by Senator Frith that Mr. Bean be invited to make an opening statement.

Perhaps prior to that, on behalf of honourable members of the Senate I welcome Mr. Daryl Bean, president of the Public Service Alliance of Canada to this meeting of the Committee of the Whole Senate.

Mr. Daryl Bean, National President, Public Service Alliance of Canada: Mr. Chairperson, senators: First of all, thank you for allowing me to address you today on this very important matter.

Today, I am here to plead the case of fully 155,000 Canadians; 155,000 federal government workers; 155,000 PSAC members.

For seven years, PSAC members have received pay increases that have been below the inflation rate, below the increase negotiated in the private sector, and below the increase negotiated in the provincial and municipal sectors. Those facts are known and in fact were contained in the June 29 budget.

Our members have seen their job security eroded since the current government came to power. Since 1984, fully 13,000 public service jobs have been eliminated. Today, the federal public service is smaller than it was in 1973, despite the fact that Canada's population has increased by over 20 per cent; despite the fact that programs have increased and the complexity of programs have increased.

Members of the House of Commons and Senate should understand—must understand—that service to the Canadian public has suffered as a result. I will not bore you with a lot of examples, but I will provide you with a couple.

Senior citizens in this country now have to wait up to three months to receive a response to a routine pension inquiry. The unemployed, some of the people who need assistance the most, must now wait up to nine weeks and longer to have the UI claim they submit processed.

As a result of the declining standard of living for PSAC members, as a result of government cutbacks, and as a result of deterioration of public services, the PSAC took a stand during negotiations with Treasury Board earlier this year. We established wage increases, job security, and equal pay—and I emphasize equal pay—something that has been the law in this country since 1977; something that we have submitted complaints on for a significant number of our members since 1984. Yet, seven years later, we are still waiting to have the matter resolved. These were priority issues for this current round of negotiations.

On February 26, members of the federal government responded to our issues. They did not respond at the negotiating table as per the normal practice. Instead, they responded in a budget. In its budget of February 26, 1991 the government gave an emphatic "no" to the legitimate aspirations of PSAC members. By doing so, they said "no" to service to the Canadian public. By doing so, they said "no" to pay equity; and no to the legitimate aspirations of working women throughout Canada. By doing so, they said "no" to collective bargaining and the democratic traditions that, above all else, bind Canada together.

• (1700)

Today, unfortunately and sadly, marks the end of the process that has seen the Canadian government subvert the democratic process in Canada in a way rarely, if ever, seen in the industrialized democratic world. Today, without exaggeration, is a black day in Canada's history. Today will be a day about which the International Labour Organization will eventually rule—and there is no doubt about it—that Canada and the Mulroney government, once again, have violated the ILO convention signed by previous governments of Canada.

With your indulgence, I would like to outline some of the issues that have created the situation that has resulted in this hearing today. First, there is fairness. The federal government has said repeatedly since February 26, 1991, that its budget as a wage control program was unavoidable because of the federal deficit. The government has said that everyone is being treated equally. Nothing—I repeat, nothing—is further from the truth.

To put the issue in context, the federal government's debt is $400 billion. Interest costs alone are at over $40 billion per year. The wage bill of 155,000 PSAC members covered by Bill C-29 represents only 3 cents—3 cents—of every dollar the federal government spends on interest. Just two days of interest on the deficit would be enough to negotiate a 5 per cent wage increase for PSAC members—just two days.

Senators should consider that the total personnel costs of the federal government have declined as a percentage of total government spending, and declined dramatically since the current government assumed office. In fact, annual personnel costs account for $3.3 billion less today than they did in 1983-84.

Senators should consider that, contrary to what the government has said repeatedly, not everyone is being treated fairly under the budget and under Bill C-29. Workers whose collective agreements expired before February 26, 1991—none of whom, by the way, are members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada—are eligible to receive retroactive wage increases that cushion the zero and three. In addition, Treasury Board has agreed to restructure the classification of wage structures of many of these workers. The government has persistently refused to do the same for PSAC members.

Senior managers and heads of crown corporations were taken care of by this government in a number of ways. The day before the budget wherein the government announced that wage increases for PSAC members would be capped at zero, three and three over the next three years, cabinet approved a 4.2 per cent increase for 42 senior executives of Crown corporation and agencies. All of these people already made between $100,000 to $300,000-plus per year.

Is it fair that the Governor of the Bank of Canada receives an increase of over $10,000 when a federal clerk is denied any increase? Is it fair that the President of CN Rail and of Via Rail receive an increase of over $15,000 when a federal secretary is denied equal pay?

As bad as these increases are, they pale in comparison to increases that cabinet ministers have created for themselves in this period of supposed restraint. Between September 30, 1990 and January 2, 1991, Finance Minister Mazankowski, former Finance Minister Wilson, Treasury Board President Gilles Loiselle and their cabinet colleagues received a compensation increase of over $15,000 in salary and tax-free allowances. Under Bill C-29 most federal clerks will lose over $1,500 in 1991. Is that fair? Is that equality?

The final indignity perpetrated upon members of the PSAC has been the deplorable treatment of our women members. Despite the fact that equal pay for work of equal value is the law in Canada, the current government has refused to negotiate equal pay. Despite the fact that the Canadian Human Rights Commission has said that our women members are discriminated against in terms of wages that are paid by this government, the government refuses to redress this discrimination. Rather than negotiate, rather than heed the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the government stalls.

Senators should understand also that the government is challenging in the courst the jurisdiction of the Human Rights Commission with regard to equal pay. On the one hand they tell us, "You cannot deal with this issue at the negotiating table; you should deal with it through the Canadian Human Rights Act". On the other hand, on the same day as they are making those statements, they go to court to stop the human rights tribunal from dealing with equal pay for work of equal value. So much for fairness.

Democracy—it is a nice word. On February 26, 1991, the Mulroney government issued an ultimatum to the 155,000 members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada: Accept zero, three and three; accept pay inequity; accept more job losses; accept reduced service to the Canadian public, or your employer will legislate controls and cut back programs. From that day forth, negotiations became what can only be described as a joke.

The Treasury Board President has said repeatedly of late that the parties negotiated for 60 days and went through 30 days of conciliation process. History will record a different picture. History will record that the government refused to negotiate unless we accepted zero, three, and three as a pre-condition. History will record that independent conciliation boards condemned the government's bargaining position. History will record that on Monday, September 17, 1991, the eighth day of our strike, the Public Service Staff Relations Board found the government guilty of bargaining in bad faith. History will record that when PSAC suspended its strike to return to the bargaining table, Treasury Board once again refused to negotiate. By doing som the government has held in contempt the democratic traditions of free collective bargaining.

• (1710)

Editorial boards from across this country—a group not normally sympathetic to the labour movement—have deplored the government's bargaining position. For example, in the midst of our national strike, the Globe and Mail stated, in a lead editorial, "The first issue here is not restraint but respect for the legitimate negotiating rights of government employees." Editorial boards have recognized, as have the Canadian people, that free collective bargaining, not ultimatums, are the cornerstone of our democracy.

By contrast, the government has—and I say this with considerable regret—concluded that the only way to implement an unfair budgetary proposal is to enforce it by denying 155,000 people their democratic rights. The government has told 155,000 members of PSAC that they have the democratic right to negotiate, but if they exercise that right, the government will legislate its budgetary proposals. The government has told 155,000 members of PSAC that they have the democratic right to strike but, if they use it, the government will legislate it away. Contrast the government's actions against Canadian workers with its rhetorical support for trade unions around the world. If you do so, you will do as I have and conclude that its systems are hypocritical.

The introduction of back-to-work legislation is always, without exception, a violation of the freedom of association. Bill C-29 is not only repugnant, it is an unconscionable affront to the principles of democracy. I believe that Bill C-29 is the first time that any government has used back-to-work legislation to explicitly impose a political budgetary agenda.

Before closing I would like to draw to the attention of senators a few specific clauses of Bill C-29 that highlight the unfairness and the anti-democratic tenor of this bill. I would emphasize that the specifics I will mention are only a few examples. For the record, the PSAC and the 155,000 members covered by the provisions find the whole bill repugnant, unconscionable, and punitive in the extreme.

Notwithstanding the unfairness of the situation where Alliance members who earn an average of $30,000, are to have their wages capped at zero and three percent over the next two years, senior managers will receive increases. Bill C-29 specifically excludes bonuses from the restraint program in clause 11 under the interpretation of wage rates. As a result, the Minister can, subsequent to the passage of Bill C-29, give these people wage increases.

I should point out to senators that the federal government currently spends over $5 billion on contracting out. In 1984, that figure was just over $2 billion. In other words, the government spends more on contracting out than it does for the wage bill of the 155,000 Alliance members. Yet pursuant to clause 3(4) of Bill C-29, independent contractors are specifically excluded from the provisions of the bill. To put this in perspective, the wage increase of federal public sector workers will be limited to zero and three over the next two years, while the government can increase compensation to contractors by any amount.

In fact, just earlier this week, I received a call from an individual who advised me that people working in various departments under personal service contracts, effective April 1, have seen their payment increased from $350 a day to $360 a day. I suggest to you that while that is not a large increase in a day, it is better than zero. Lawyers who earn over $1,000 per day while working for the federal government can receive increases, unlimited increases, while federal clerks are forced to live on declining real wages.

In what is perhaps the height of insensitivity, Bill C-29 contains a clause, clause 13, that will forever prevent PSAC from negotiating wage increases forever, that would recoup the potential increase lost under Bill C-29.

Finally, I should like to draw to the attention of all senators clause 25. The coming into force of Bill C-29 is problematic for the Alliance. This clause causes PSAC a number of specific problems. First, it will be difficult for us to communicate effectively with our membership if this legislation is assented to at any time between late this afternoon and midnight, since most of our membership will be at home.

• (1720)

Secondly, our members have made it clear that they went out on strike together and they will only go back to work together. When the strike was suspended previously the government agreed to return to work at a predetermined common local time the following day. Quite frankly, the membership is insistent that when they return to work they will return to work together.

Once again I want to thank you very much for the opportunity to present PSAC's position on Bill C-29. Of course, I am more than willing, as I was the last time I sat here, to respond to any questions you may have with regard to the Alliance strike and Bill C-29. Thank you very much.

Senator Frith: Mr. Bean, I have no questions about the details of your presentation. Many of the points that you made were made by me and some of my colleagues in our speeches at second reading. I have some amendments to propose that will be based on that material.

I want to come directly to a point that concerns me and my colleagues on this side. Although we feel that your your position is justified, we have learned through the media that your position is creating some economic hardship for a large number of your members. Because of our procedures in the Senate, we could, in my opinion, delay the passage of this bill for several days. I am only asking you now about the delay aspect, and not about the merits of the bill which we oppose. If the government uses its majority here in the Senate in the same way as it used its majority in the House of Commons, namely by refusing to accept any amendments and insisting on adoption of the bill as it exists, even if there is delay, the bill would eventually pass. In that event, can you see any advantage in delay, as distinguished from opposition? Is there any point, from your point of view, in our delaying this legislation?

Mr. Bean: No, we are not asking the Senate to delay the legislation unduly because we accept, although we disagree, that the democratic process has taken place in the house and that the democratic process will take place here in the Senate. So we do not see any benefit in delaying the legislation. We are simply asking for a fair and open discussion on the legislation because it does directly affect the lives of our members who are out on strike and are not going back until at least after the legislation is adopted. The strike is also impacting upon the Canadian public. I recognize that and I have regretted that and have already apologized for that. We are simply asking the Senate to listen to both parties. We believe that the issue of free collective bargaining merits the consideration of the Senate, but, no, we are not asking you to delay the legislation unduly.

Senator Di Nino: Mr. Bean, first, let me thank you for coming. There are a couple points that I would like to make, followed by one or two questions I would like to ask you.

Your comment about undue economic hardship for members is certainly recognized. I think it should also be stressed that economic hardship is also being felt by many other Canadians, not just inconvenience. There are many people across this country who, because of the PSAC strike, are suffering economically.

I have a bit of a problem, Mr. Bean, with the actions of some of your members. There have been a number of instances of flagrant violation of respect for other institutions such as Sainte-Anne de Bellevue Hospital, a hospital for elderly Canadian veterans. I understand that when nurses—who, by the way, are legally obliged to report to work—attempted to do so, they were pelted with eggs and tomatoes by your members. I can probably list a half dozen other instances of that nature. I would like from you, sir, an answer as to why you would condone such actions on behalf of your members.

Mr. Bean: First, I commented earlier about the hardship felt by many other Canadians. I have shared that from the beginning. Our fight was not with the Canadian people to begin with; it was with the government, and remains with the government. It will remain with the government after the legislation is adopted.

Certainly I do not condone violence, as I have made very clear from the beginning. I will put on the record, although it may be problematic for me, that I do condone civil disobedience. It might be an appropriate day to do that since it is Gandhi's birthday. I do not condone the violence. I am not aware of the eggs and tomatoes being thrown, although it would not surprise me if that happened because there have been isolated incidents. Again, I can only say that this is the anger and the frustration being felt by public sector workers as a result of being assaulted by this government.

Senator Di Nino: Mr. Bean, could you tell me if any PSAC members, notwithstanding the zero, three, three, will be receiving any increases in the coming year, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. Bean: There may be some members who have not yet reached the top of their incremental level who would receive an increase, but they would normally receive that anyway and it is not part of the normal negotiations, whether or not there was a collective agreement. However, the vast majority are now at their maximum level because there have been very limited promotional opportunities within the federal public service since 1984. Again, I cannot tell you the numbers, but those would be the only ones I can think of who will receive anything this year.

Senator Di Nino: Can you guess at the percentage, sir?

Mr. Bean: No, I am sorry, I have no idea how many people are below their maximum rate of pay.

• (1730)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, can Mr. Bean could tell us what remedy he proposes to overcome the problems or difficulties created for the membership by the coming into force clause? I notice that delay is not recommended. Therefore, it would be helpful if Mr. Bean could tell the committee how that could be remedied in a reasonable way.

Mr. Bean: As I understand the contents of the law—I am not a lawyer, so somebody correct me if I am wrong—I understand that it stipulates that the workers are scheduled to return 12 hours after proclamation of the legislation. They are "required to return," I guess I should say. I would propose that if this bill were to pass through the Senate today, there be some type of undertaking, when we make the determination with regard to the return of our membership, to notify the membership of the impact of the law and what the requirements are. The only way I can see of doing that is to have a predetermined time, which we had the last time when we ceased the strike, so that we could notify the membership. That means we have to get close to midday, or thereabouts, so we would have sufficient time to notify the members of the passage of the law and the impact of the law if they were to defy the legislation.

Senator MacEachen: If the bill passed today, and if the minister of the government agreed, would it be possible to establish a time at which the workers would be expected to return?

Mr. Bean: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: In the interim, you and your associates would have an opportunity to notify your membership. Does that mean that if the bill were passed today and given Royal Assent, the workers could return to work tomorrow at noon, say, in Ottawa?

Mr. Bean: Yes, that would be possible. That would give us time to notify people. As I indicated, I talked in terms of local time so that we would have sufficient time to notify people all across Canada. As a matter of fact, we also have people who are working in embassies and commissions around the world. We would also have to notify them of the passage of the legislation and the requirements of the legislation.

Senator Barootes: Thank you, Mr. Bean, for bringing your concerns and views to us. We appreciate hearing them.

Your members, according to my information, earn somewhere, on an average, of $30,000 per year or more. I come from the west. Farmers in this country this year are going to earn less than $6,000 per farm. They have no job security; they do not have any extended medical or dental benefits; they do not have any pensions; no sick leave; no family leave arrangement. They are struggling to get by. Yet, through this strike, these farmers are being penalized an additional $40 million to $50 million per week in total income for the farm community. Do you think that you can justify what you are doing, that it is fair to the farmers of this country? Do you not care about these farm families?

Mr. Bean: First of all, as an individual who comes from a farme, I am certainly well aware of the significance of that. Yes, we care, and we have cared all along. Several times during these negotiations I offered to remove picket lines from places such as airports, custom points and grain terminals on the condition that the government would agree to a mediator. I emphasize "a mediator." There is a significant difference between a mediator and an arbitrator. A mediator can only assist the parties, not render a binding award on the parties. Despite our good faith and offer to remove picket lines, despite the fact that after nine days we removed picket lines and sent people back to work, which is highly unusual in a strike situation, this government came back and tabled an offer for the first time on a few monetary and nonmonetary items last Tuesday. It did not table a counterproposal until Thursday, which contained almost no changes and then said to us, "That is all there is, so you can take it or leave it."

Senator Barootes: Did you respond to that?

Mr. Bean: We set up a meeting with Mr. Capello at 7 o'clock on Friday night. When I went, Mr. Capello asked me—you can shake your head, but I was there; that is the difference—as I came into the room and sat down, if we were prepared to negotiate. I said yes. We agreed to meet at 2 o'clock in the afternoon Saturday when we were to table our counterproposals. Mr. Capello left the room to arrange for that negotiation session. He came back and said "It is set; everything is set to go."

We talked a little more, and I outlined to Mr. Capello that what we were planning on doing was setting aside the monetary and nonmonetary issues that were in dispute and tabling a full pay proposal that would show them how they could maintain their zero and three and yet do the restructuring, the reclassification, as they had done for some other bargaining units.

Mr. Capello then got up and left and came back and told me, after another phone call, that he had no authority to go back to the table. This was after the President of the Treasury Board had claimed—and I say "claimed,"—on Friday that we were not responding to their proposal. In fact, at the very time the President of the Treasury Board was claiming in the House that we were not responding to their proposal, officials who work with me were meeting with Treasury Board officials on the workforce adjustment policy.

So I suggest to you again, that when the truth comes out, and it will, once again we will find that the Public Service Alliance of Canada did agree, has agreed and continues to agree publicly that we were prepared to go back to the negotiating table, that we preferred to have a mediator to assist the parties, but that we were prepared to go back without a mediator and had agreed to do so before Mr. Capello decided he did not have the authority to go back to the table after he had asked me and I had agreed to do so.

Senator Barootes: Is there room for a supplementary?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Barootes: Thank you, Mr. Bean. This has been a rather difficult period for Canadians given the recession and unemployment. Some unions—and I could name a few of them—have seen fit to accept reductions in their rates of pay to assist their industry and to survive. Fortunately for all of us, that is not being asked of us. I am thinking of Algoma and some other organizations.

• (1740)

In your case, did your organization also have to restructure this past year and have authority to let out some 20 of your employees and perhaps offer less than the usual advances in pay that were due through the COLA arrangements each year?

Mr. Bean: I was kind of hoping someone would ask that question because that lie has been perpetuated in the House of Commons also. No, we did not lay off 20 employees; we have not laid off any employees. We have a collective agreement that provides that there is no layoff.

Prior to our convention—which is, I assume, where this information came from, because no one has talked to me about it as an official of the Treasury Board—in April 1991 we had negotiated—in good faith I might add—a collective agreement with our members, our employees, for two years. There was no strike. They negotiated and accepted the collective agreement. So, again, if the individuals who were putting forth this deceit and these lies had bothered to check with us, they would have found that their information was totally inaccurate.

Senator Barootes: What was the increase that was accepted at that collective negotiation?

Mr. Bean: Four percent for each of two years.

The Chairman: Senator Olson.

Senator Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Bean, I noted that you are particularly concerned about what appears to be a serious weakening or destruction of the collective bargaining system. I am curious about this also. I do not know whether or not I heard this at press conferences you had taken part in, but you advised us today that you learned of the government's decision to adhere to its offer of zero, three and three percent. Was there no bargaining or discussions with your unit prior to February 26 and even up to the point that you knew that the government was going to make that announcement?

Mr. Bean: No. There was absolutely no discussion whatsoever with us prior to February 26 with regard to that matter. I should again point out that this government—and I accept that—has negotiated very hard in past rounds, resulting in our accepting collective agreements that were less than the cost of living for the last seven years. But there was absolutely no consultation—I repeat, none—prior to the budget on the zero, three and three.

Senator Olson: What about the 60 days that the President of the Treasury Board is talking about? When did that take place, when he claims that you were negotiating?

Mr. Bean: That 60 days took place rather ironically, beginning about the same day the budget was introduced, on February 26 or February 27. I cannot remember the exact date that the first discussions took place about the new collective agreement. They told us—I guess it was February 26 in the afternoon or maybe February 27 in the morning—that we first must accept the zero, three and three. Only after we accepted the zero, three and three would they then be prepared to negotiate any non-monetary issues. Furthermore, only after that would they be prepared to sit and consider any monetary issues. If they agreed to any monetary issues, then it must come off the three and three in the second and third year. They also told us that they were not prepared to negotiate pay equity at any time. That is exactly why the Public Service Staff Relations Board found them guilty of bargaining in bad faith—that is, because they established a precondition to negotiations which stated that we had to accept zero, three and three before they would talk about any other items at all.

That occurred during the period of time when he refers to 60 meetings. I have no idea whether there were 60 meetings but if that number is accurate, then it spells out all the more clearly that there were no negotiations, as there was basically nothing agreed to during those 60 days because of the precondition that we must accept zero, three and three.

Senator Olson: So that up to February 26 you did not know, from any discussions that you had, that that is what the offer—if I can call it that—was to be, namely, nothing, or zero, then three and three?

Mr. Bean: No, I did not know that that was what the ultimatum would be.

Senator Olson: "Ultimatum"; that is a better word.

Mr. Bean: Yes; I like it a lot better.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: I would like to ask Mr. Bean how he thinks his union differs from other groups, six of which, since February 26, have signed agreements that provide for an increase of zero per cent in the first year and 3 per cent in the second year, and in some cases, for the balance of 1990, increases of four and four and half per cent? That is my first question.

Before putting my second question, I may remind you that according to our information, and I don't know whether the government is lying in this case—in fact, you have often said the government was lying—but earlier this afternoon, you told us you did not know what percentage of your members had not reached the maximum of their category. I can inform you, however, that this is 40 per cent of your membership or 65,000 people who could have been and who will be paid, with or without an agreement, amounts varying between $1,000 and $1,400 annually.

Third, you often mention democracy and workers' right to strike. But what about the legitimate right of your members to report for work and not be exposed to the kind of situation we saw in a few disgraceful scenes on television last week and a little earlier this week, where members of your union attacked their colleagues, not only by throwing eggs and tomatoes and other objects but also by hitting them with their signs, and so forth. How can you reconcile this with your lofty principle of a democracy that works?

Editorials and some newspapers, as you pointed out, condemned the government for bargaining in bad faith. Some editorial writers, commentators and average citizens have condemned your position and failed to fall into the usual trap.

When you say that you are first and foremost against the Mulroney government and want to see it fall, isn't this because you wear two hats, Mr. Bean, one as director of the NDP and one as the leader of your union?

You told us that last Friday you felt you had lost control—perhaps you could conclude on this point—of your members when they almost invaded Parliament.

I am not surprised at all. I think your lost control when you told us last night on Parliament Hill, as reported in today's Le Droit . . . perhaps you would give us an explanation.

> "Minister Loiselle and his government can legislate us back to work, but will continue the strike from the inside, that's all. The strike will not stop because a law is passed or regulations are imposed. The strike will go on until Brian Mulroney and his gang are just a bad memory", Daryl Bean emphasized yesterday.

What do you mean when you say the strike will continue in government offices? Do you intend to encourage your members to poison labour relations? I don't think Canadians want that. I think that if there is a settlement, Canadians feel that despite the scars left by this strike, the employees who went back to work and those who went on strike will work together to give Canadian taxpayers their money's worth.

I would appreciate your comments.

[English]

Senator Frith: A short pithy question!

Mr. Bean: Let me try to answer. I took some notes. I must admit that there were two lengthy questions.

Senator Simard: I did not mind your opening statement, Mr. Bean. You said everything you wanted to say.

Some Hon. Senators: Order.

Senator Corbin: Order. You had your say. Keep quiet.

Mr. Bean: First of all, with regard to other unions accepting agreements, obviously if other unions chose to accept agreements that is their choice, and I will not condemn them for doing that. However, I can tell you that in all the agreements that I know of they accepted, without counting the ones that were imposed by a binding board on the professional institute. In all the agreements I know of there was restructuring, reclassification or up-front pay increases prior to April 1, which, in fact, amounted to wage increases over the period well in excess of zero per cent and 3 per cent. Those have also been reported in the media, and I assume, since you appear to study the media quite a bit, that you have seen those too.

As far as the incremental increase is concerned, I do not know how many employees are or are not at their maximum. Your 40 per cent figure may be right or it may be inaccurate; I cannot respond. I can tell you that the pay rate for those people, whether they are at the maximum or the minimum, is the maximum, not the minimum. It never has been. Yes, people do move up through the incremental steps in some groups, but other groups do not have incremental steps at all. The true pay rate for the job they are carrying out is the maximum rate of pay, not the minimum or somewhere in between. So the government is not doing them any favour by paying them less than the maximum rate of pay. In fact, it is a case of the government saving itself some money, because the job is really to be paid at the maximum.

Senator Simard: They are going to 4 per cent though.

Mr. Bean: Let me respond, because you had a number of questions. You dealt with the concern of people wanting to go to work. Yes, there were people who wanted to go to work and, yes, they did encounter some incidents on the picket lines. I have answered that question before by saying that I do not now condone, nor have I at any time condoned violence on the picket lines.

As for the editorials, again there are more editorials this time. Editorial boards are not normally friends of the labour movement. The Globe and Mail is not normally a friend of the labour movement, but I recall very vividly at least two, and probably three, editorials by that paper condemning this government for its failure to negotiate. There were others in the Le Droit, The Citizen and other papers.

You talk about the fact that I was concerned last Friday about losing control of the membership. Yes, I was. I make no apology for being concerned that the anger and frustration was taking place and I could not stop it. I tried. I tried out here, in front of the house, to get our members, as well as others who were here, to back away so that I could have an opportunity to come into the house to talk to someone and possibly bring some reason to bear so that the government might appoint a mediator to cool things out.

Senator Simard: Are you sure you did not contribute to this anger?

Mr. Bean: Would you let me finish my response?

Senator Simard: Yes.

Mr. Bean: Yes, I am concerned about it. Today, when we had just as large a demonstration as last Friday, if not larger, I specifically addressed the crowd to make sure that nothing happened. I am pleased to report that they listened and that nothing happened.

You mentioned—and again I do not know where you get your information—something about my being a director of the NDP. I am not a director of the NDP. Yes, I am a member of that party, and I make no apologies for that; but I am not a director. I have never been a director and I have never held elected office in the NDP. Nor does my union—and we might as well put that on the record—support a political party. That is by decision of our membership. It is by decision of our leadership.

Senator Molgat: Mr. Bean, I would like to get clarification of some of your statements. I come from an agricultural province. Obviously the farmers in my province were suffering during the course of the strike. Did I understand you correctly to say that you made an offer to the government to remove the picket lines from the grain handlers so that the grain could flow?

Mr. Bean: Yes, I did that on the Tuesday, which would be about September 17. I met with Wayne Easter, President of the National Farmers' Union, and we held a press conference at which we agreed that I would request our members to remove the picket lines. I think it was September 17; it might have been before that. The days run together a little around that time. We agreed to remove the picket lines if the government would appoint a mediator. The government did not accept that suggestion, but subsequently it accepted to return to the bargaining table, after it had been found guilty of bargaining in bad faith. As a show of good faith and goodwill on our part, I then not only removed the picket lines from the grain terminals but from all government buildings, and I returned to the table on September 18. So I think we have done our part. As I say, it is unusual, almost unprecedented, that a union would remove its picket lines and send people back to work part way through a strike.

Again, we wanted to show our good faith and our concern, not only for the farmers but for all Canadians. It could have been done before, with the agreement of the government to appoint a mediator.

Senator Molgat: I believe that was in your presentation, but did I understand correctly that the day before the budget came down the government proceeded to put through increases for other employees of the government?

Mr. Bean: On February 25, the day before the budget, the cabinet approved 4.2 per cent increases for the heads of crown corporations and agencies, whose salary, by the way, runs well over $100,000, and some run up to $300,000.

• (1800)

I am presuming, of course, that on February 25 none of the cabinet was aware of what the February 26 budget would contain, because I do not think they would have approved it otherwise.

Senator Molgat: Quite obviously the Minister of Finance knew?

Mr. Bean: There is a possibility he might have known.

Senator Kinsella: Mr. Bean, this is obviously a very difficult situation for Canadians in general, and for PSAC and your membership in particular, to find themselves in. It is also very difficult for the government and for parliamentarians both in this place and in the other place. However, I suppose we are at the stage where the public interest has to be factored in and the limitation on the right to strike, in which I believe, comes into play and from time to time we have to deal with this type of legislation.

Turning to the bill before us, Mr. Bean, in your opening remarks you drew our attention to clause 7. I would like a further explanation from you. I am particularly interested in the clause where, as I understand it, the non obstante functioning of the clause covers all other acts, except the Human Rights Act. That is to say that the Human Rights Act will continue to supersede this act. Is this clause not there for the purpose of allowing the Human Rights Commission to continue its work in dealing with the questions of discrimination and, more particularly, equal pay and employment equity? Would you speak to that? If the bill is to go forward, would you rather have this clause in the bill or not have it in the bill?

Mr. Bean: In addressing clause 7, I do not recall dealing with the Canadian Human Rights Act. I think I addressed some other clause4s. I could be wrong, but I do not think so. I am looking quickly through my notes and I do not see it.

Obviously, if the bill passes then we would want clause 7 to allow that the complaint proceed ahead under the Canadian Human Rights Act. The fact of the matter is that since 1984 we have had a complaint before that tribunal that has not yet been dealt with. The process is too slow; it is too cumbersome, and there are no guarantees that even when it is dealt with, as it has been with the Library Science Group, the resulting equalization pay will be rolled in as pay for all purposes, as it should be.

In 1989 when the Hospital Services Group went on strike, that again was one of the major issues. When the hospital services and ships crews were legislated back to work there was a binding conciliation board process. That board then ordered exactly what we were trying to achieve: to have the difference in the equalization pay rolled into their pay.

We conducted a five-year joint union-management initiative study on equal pay, andh there was an equal number of union and management representatives on the committees. Two-thirds of the committee had to agree to the rating of the job. These were joint committees and in many cases the disagreement was from union members. Despite that study, and finding the inequities, the government or Treasury Board has continued to fight. First, they said that the study was biased in favour of women. The Canadian Human Rights Commission hired a consultant who looked at the situation and said, "No, I do not find any bias in favour of women. The study is a good study." The government then tried to claim that there were no more payments required other than the down payment which they had initiated. This time, the Canadian Human Rights Commission hired two consultants, and they came back and said, "Yes, there are more payments required. However, there are different ways of calculating what the amount of the payment should be." That is why the Human Rights Commission set up a Human Rights Tribunal which is now dealing with that issue.

At the same time, Treasury Board states that the matter cannot be negotiated at the table, which has in fact happened in the past. In other words, it is now challenging something that was done several years ago, and the rules agreed to, in saying that the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal does not have the authority to deal with this complaint.

Therefore, clause 7 is helpful in the sense that it will remain before the Canadian Human Rights Commission. At the same time, however, in order to avoid making the payment, the government is throwing as many roadblocks as it can in front of the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal. The impact will be that it will probably be another two or three years before we get a final ruling on an injustice that has existed since at least 1984 when we filed the complaint; a complaint that probably existed before then.

That was why we were trying to address the matter in this round of negotiations, in order to correct the injustice that now exixts. This is money that is owed to these workers. Of course, it is not likely that they will be paid interest on the money that is owed to them now, and has been owed to them since 1983.

Senator Kinsella: Certainly, the issue of pay equity has to be addressed and has to be addressed, in my humble submission, front and centre. Ideally, one does this at the bargaining table.

Are you telling us that, for some of the categories of the union clerks or secretaries, there was no approach made to Treasury Board to deal with pay equity?

Mr. Bean: The only approach was made on the Tuesday when we went back to the table, that being about September 24, if my memory serves me correctly, and that was that they did indicate they would incorporate the voluntary payments that they had made for the CRs, clerical regulatory, the secretarial group and the education bargaining unit into the base rate effective April 1, 1992. Those are the payments they are already making. There is no new money involved; it is simply that those payments are to be incorporated into the full pay raise.

It is rather ironic—and if one wanted to be harsh about it, one might even say cynical—that at this time this government is saying that for the $500 lump sum for those people earning less than $27,000, those voluntarily payments are rolled in effective immediately. So they roll them in effective immediately for the $500 lump sum, but will not roll them in until April 1992 for the rest of the pay purposes. As I say, if one wanted to be harsh about it they might even say it is a little cynical.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the minister is waiting outside. Unless there are some more questions of this witness, I would move that we thank him for his appearance and for the information and the impressions which he has left with us. I know they will be very helpful. Perhaps we can then carry on with the minister who is waiting for us.

Senator Frith: Our whip is checking our members. If you have a question, please proceed. Are they questions that should be addressed to Mr. Loiselle? If not, then you should address them to the witness.

Senator Robichaud: My question cannot be addressed to Mr. Loiselle, but it can readily be addressed to Mr. Bean.

• (1810)

Mr. Bean, my question will not be based on the merits or the shortcomings of the legislation that is before us, Bill C-29; it is based on the laws of the land. Should this legislation become law, what will happen in light of the fact that I heard you using the expression "defiance of the law"? I heard you say on television, "We will be on strike until Mulroney and his gang become history".

Regardless of what happens with this bill, it will become the law of the land, passed by a government. We have the governments that we deserve, and I do not necessarily approve of this lot. But the bill will become law, if it is passed. Is it your intention to recommend to your union members to defy the law of the land?

Mr. Bean: I will be making an announcement later tonight when I finish seeing what happens in the Senate.

Senator Robichaud: Why not now?

Mr. Bean: Because I am taking the matter under consideration.

I do know that, yes, we will return to work at some given time, but I want to see what happens with regard to the Senate. I recognize that if the bill is passed it will be law, I can tell the Senate that. There are penalties if we decide to disobey the law, and I understand that, too. I want to await the outcome of what happens in this chamber tonight before making my announcement.

Senator Robichaud: I am not happy with the answer, of course.

Mr. Bean: I understand that.

The Chairman: I am now in the hands of the committee.

Senator Barootes: I must ask one question, sir, that has to do with an answer which I think was, perhaps, misleading, if not mistaken. It has to do with your not having let any of your union employees go, and that you have not reduced your budget.

I am reading from an article in the Toronto Star of April 19, 1991, at which time you were in Vancouver. It is an article written by a journalist named Leslie Papp. The Star is certainly no friend of the government and is certainly a supporter of your activity. I will read part of this article to you. Perhaps it is all wrong and you will correct me. It states in part:

> Delegates at a Public Service Alliance of Canada convention here voted to slash the union's budget by $1.8 million each year for the next three years, leaving 14 staff positions vacant and another six to be cut by attrition.

It also states,

> "Worse, after voting, delegates walked past upset employees . . ."

Making some rude remarks, and it goes on:

> The comments left two of the union's workers in tears, staff members said.

It goes on:

> If the government subjected alliance members to comments made by delegates "they'd be screaming harassment," Ritchie said.

Mr. Ritchie is the Alliance Vancouver regional representative.

> Meanwhile . . . alliance president Daryl Bean denounced the Brian Mulroney government for cutting jobs and mistreating workers.
> Accusing Ottawa of committing "economic crime," Bean said: "This government will not listen to reason". . . .
>
> Later, Bean said he understood why the staff was bitter.
> "They've got to be frustrated," he said, "but we're in a tight situation."

Those are your exact words, in quotation marks. I must have been mistaken in what I heard from you. At that time, Mr. Bean, you could have done what you are suggesting this government does, which is to increase your union dues or borrowed the money to keep your staff on.

Senator Olson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I want to mention that it is absolutely against the rules of this house or the other to ask anyone to comment on the accuracy of any newspaper article. I can dig up the books and show the honourable senator where that has been said. If Mr. Bean wants to answer, that is up to him. But it is out of order for any member to ask such a question. You cannot even ask a cabinet minister to comment on newspaper articles.

Senator Barootes: I bring it up, Mr. Bean, only because you answered in a manner contrary to that which I read in that article.

Mr. Bean: I have no difficulty with responding to the question. Yes, the convention delegates, as is their democratic right, reduced the proposed budget by $1.8 million. I think you can take from my comments that I did not agree with that reduction. Nevertheless, they did pass that motion, and we are bound to live with what is passed by our delegates. Yes, we sat down and reviewed the budget and made other adjustments so that we do not have to—nor could we have—laid off employees because our employees have a no lay-off clause. We sat down and reviewed our budget, and cut back in other areas so that we would not be reducing or laying off staff. There will be some vacant positions that are not filled for a period of time to accommodate that $1.8 million reduction.

Senator Barootes: Thank you, Mr. Bean.

Senator Olson: The question has nothing to do with anything, anyway.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I still have the impression that we are at the end of the questioning of this witness. If I am correct on that, I would like to thank him for being with us and for his presentation and for answering the questions as openly and frankly as he has. With the agreement of honourable senators of the committee, we can proceed to the next witness who will be the President of the Treasury Board.

Senator Thériault: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Would the honourable senator allow me to say, since I endeavoured to make the point before, that I am in the hands of the committee with respect to this witness. If there is not unanimous agreement, then I would have to recognize any senator.

Senator Thériault: I want to make a point, Mr. Chairman. I have raised my hand, and I thought you put my name down. If there are senators other than myself being cut off, then I am prepared to accept that. If I am denied the right to speak and I am the only one, then I would have a hard time accepting that.

The Chairman: As I endeavoured to explain, I have made note of all of those who wished to speak.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It is not a question of cutting off any honourable senator. The minister is waiting and he is on a very tight schedule. We certainly want to allow him the same amount of time as we have allowed the witness we now have before us. It is just a question of having the minister waiting and giving him the courtesy of a hearing as soon as possible.

Senator Frith: Why does the Chairman not ask the question?

Senator Thériault: I am not about to cry because the minister is waiting.

The Chairman: I have two names on my list: Senator Thériault and a senator to my right.

Senator Thériault: I want to ask Mr. Bean a question regarding the $5 billion figure that is being thrown around by himself and other people, and the $2 billion figure of 1984. I understand that, since 1984, the government position has been to try to reduce the number of public employees. Are you telling this committee and the people of Canada that one of the reasons it was possible to reduce the number of employees is because the government has contracted out more work to private individuals and had fewer employees?

Mr. Bean: Yes, that is absolutely right. There is no question that while this government has cut back 13,000 positions the contracting-out budget, as far as we can trace it, has increased at the same time using the same figures—that is to say the same items under the Miscellaneous Estimates—from over $2 billion annually to over $5 billion. I will not try to claim in the Senate or anywhere else that every one of those $3 billion went into the corresponding reduction of 13,000 positions, but a good share of it obviously did, since it is pretty evident that that reduction has required the contracting out of more work.

Senator Theriault: As you look at the budget for 1991-92, do you see a reduction in the amount of money that the government will be paying in contracting out?

Mr. Bean: No, there is no reduction in the budget amount that will be paid for contracting out; and as I have brought to the attention of senators, even in Bill C-29, if they want to pay out more to contractors, it is exempt from the freeze.

Senator Theriault: But you are prepared to say that it is not only for employees, but that other factors are taken into consideration. Do you feel that part of the problem with your membership, and the low morale that exists today in the public service as I read it, is because of the way they feel they were treated by the government?

Mr. Bean: There is no question about that. The government has studies showing that the morale in the public service has gone down considerably, and that low morale is not only within the ranks of the workers but also within the management ranks, I might indicate. That has come about, to large degree, because of the policies and the cutbacks of this government.

The Chairman: On behalf of the members of the Committee of the Whole, I thank the witness, Mr. Daryl Bean, for his presence here and for answering questions put to him.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, if it is the wish of the Committee, I will fetch the President of the Treasury Board and bring him here now.

Pursuant to Order of the Senate, the Honourable Gilles Loiselle, President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance), was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I believe all members of the committee know the President of the Treasury Board who has appeared here in the past on legislation. Mr. Loiselle has a brief opening statement to make, after which he will accept questions from members of the committee.

Hon. Gilles Loiselle, President of the Treasury Board and Minister of State (Finance): Honourable senators, Mr. Chairman, thank you. I would like to take the senators briefly back to the budget of February and to the situation we were faced with. We were in a recession. There was less money coming in and a lot more money going out. There was great danger that our deficit could be threatened, and we have worked very hard over the last seven years to keep it under control and to reduce it.

During the budget, we took a series of measures, many measures. We did not target our unionized employees; we targeted practically everybody. We froze the operating budgets. We cut 10 percent of the managers' positions. We capped the growth of transfers to provinces. We announced that we would be introducing spending caps for five years. We set inflation targets, and we decided that we would put a zero-three-three freeze on the growth of our wage budget for the following three years. It was basically a question of affordability.

We also wanted to show leadership because there was a clear indication that the recession would end in the summer or early fall, but that the ending of the recession could be threatened if the government was to let the deficit slip and so necessitate grabbing all capital available, and thereby cause companies, who have been going through a hard recession, difficulty in accessing capital.
