GENTLEMEN,—I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your ASTHMALENE for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 130th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease.

Yours respectfully,

GENTLEMEN,—I was troubled with Asthama for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full sized bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

A Very Natural Mistake.

Miss Deborah Markham stood at her kitchen sink one morning washing a bottle. It was one that had held an acid preparation for removing fruit stains. Almost any other woman would have thrown it on the ash pile as soon as it was emptied, but to Miss Deborah the natural thing was to clean it, and store it away on a shelf in her wood shed cupboard with an army of other bottles. No article ever seemed to Miss Markham to have outlived its usefulness; there was always a possibility that "It might come in handy some time," and it was treasured for the expected need. The ell of the great white house on the main street of East Elmore, which had come into the possession of Miss Deborah at the death of her father more that 20 years ago, was a veritable junk shop, but it differed in one essential from ordinary repositories of wornout and worth-less odds and ends. Miss Deborah's storerooms were scrupulously clean and well ordered, they furnished no retreat for moths or cobwebs, and the floors and windows village in their freedom from dust.

She can afford to be over particular.

For she had the finest house and the largest income in East Elmere. It would be a pity not to keep this bottle," she commented, holding it against the light, "It's such a convenient size and the glass is so clear. I wonder what sort of glue that label was stuck on with; after all the hot water it's been in it hasn't started a mite. I've a good mind not to scrape it off, but

-The Dartmouth civic authorities are considering the advisability of adopting a new method of securing the popular vote on matters that retion Act, a majority vote of the qualified ratepayers. The public meeting has been a failure. It is all right for purposes of discussion, but the vote cast there is ridiculously small and in no manner reflects the sentiments of the majority of the ratepayers. In Ontario, all expenditures The expenditure is first approved of by the council, then a poll of the are opened just as on an election day and every ratepayer has an opportunity to cast his vote. Under this scheme the wish of the people on any particular matter is obtained as nearly as it is possible under existing conditions. There they have no public meetings, save what individual groups of taxpayers choose to call for purposes of discussion. The Ontario plan is worthy of adoption in Nova Scotia, as an improvement on the existing method of obtaining the voice of the people, and if the new regula tions were incorporated in the pro vincial act we believe the change would be a popular one. In the mat ter of borrowing large sums of money for expenditure on public services it is particularly desirable that a ful vote of the ratepayers be obtained and here the polling booth would gather a more representative result than the public meeting. Other pro vincial towns should look into the matter and if the change that Dart mouth seeks meets their approval, the time is opportune for them to

The latest estimates place the United States crop at twenty-three million barrels, a quantity entirely too small to supply the demands of home comsumption, and of course a portion of eastern states before many weeks in this will find its way to the English market before the home markets realize that an apple famine is upon them. It would not be surprising if buyers from over the border made their appearance here soon to secure a portion of the large holdings of winter fruit that are stored in the Valley for later shipment to London and Liverpool. At any rate the shortage of the United States crop cannot but exercise a great influence in keeping a strong English market for our product, and the present outlook points to higher prices for winter fruit than have been obtained for

Because small pox exists within a mile of Bridgetown is no reason why the town should be considered a dangerous locality by the people who usually do their business here. The town is perfectly free from the disease and if small pox breaks out, it is as liable to be brought here from Halifax, St. John or some other distant city as from Carlton's Corner. The town health authorities are exercising every reasonable precaution to prevent its introduction, and the danger is little, if any greater than it has been. The fact that small pox has increased to a considerable extent in the province since last spring is stirring people up on every hand is stirring people up on every hand to the necessity of adopting preventative regulations and preparing themselves for the ever possible contingency. A few months ago Kentville was the only infected place in Nova Scotia, but now Halifax, Yarmouth, Sydney, Wolfville and half a dozen localities in Kings county swell the list and the danger of a further spread is very real. It further spread is very real. It stands the medical men in hand to the crowds who have visited the of

The difference between the marsh deposits on the Bay of Fundy and those along the Atlantic coast south are mainly attributable to the speed of the tidal flow. The rocks comprising headlands fall on the shores and are beaten and are ground into fragments by the action of the waves, and either carried by tides and currents to the nearest beaches or inlets and deposited there in slack water, or else carried by the undertow or bottom current accompanying storms beating on the coast. Where the current is two miles an hoursufficient to carry matter in suspension or roll along fine gravel, a bed is formed a growth of eel grass starts below the water line mark. This growth this they differ from a considerable percentage of old marsh lands, which possessing only a blue soil, raise only broadleaf and other grasses. Along the New England coast the mud flats rise gradually not over three feet above low water and the additions to them per year are estimated at not above a tenth of one inch under most favorable circumstances. At the lead of the Bay of Fundy, tidal waves, as speed of lour miles per hour, carry four per cent. of matter in suspision. Lands one foot below high water have in a season's tide received a deposit of six inches of more of as much as in Massachusetts Baywould be added in sixty years. Why some of these old marsh lots preserve their fertility undiminished generation after generation, when marsh soils adjoining them built up at a much later date have become impaired in fertility and when not renewed by tidal deposits have relapsed into growing fresh water weeds, is a problem not well understood, but it is certain that the former lands possess good drainage. What other country in the world can furnish soil that will stand cropping from century to century without diminution in fertility and without refertilizing.

Under the present system of marsh husbandry such examples are rare could get a carload of beef any day and could be always sure of getting it, and those farmers would be sure and the marsh cultivator has to exercise certain care or his lands will recede to a state of nature. Efficient drainage is the first requisite. Even by fairly good attention to his prime requirement lands do become weedy and produce inferior grasses. The usual remedy is to turn it over and seed it down at periods varying from five to ten years. Sometimes this remedy fails and then recourse is had to the re-lettilizing influence of tidal overflow. Even an inch or two of mud has a magical effect. When the tides are shut off the grasses that appear are usually salt water ones; but in a year or two, if there be a good stratum of red mud below the new deposit timothy will appear in tufts amongst the broadleaf or other grasses and in five years the salt in the soil will have been sufficiently washed out to allow it to be ploughed and seeded with timothy when it is at its highest producing point.

the water line mark. This growth serves to collect at each tide floating matter until the mass reaches a height that is dry at low water. At this point the growth of the grass ceases and other sea weeds and grasses take its place.

These at first form a fringe near the shore line and then extend out step by step as new soil is gathered in from the tide. The swift tides of the Bay of Fundy modify these operations. There carrying power of the water being enormously increased, mud deposits are quickly made in inlets and estuaries above low water mark, and therefore the eel grass and accompanying vegetations met with elsewhere along the Atlantic coast long the service of the subsoil that exists within say three feet of the surface. If the latter is blue soil the products will be second-rate grass. There are thousands of acres of lake and swamp land in the counties of Albert, Westmorf-landand Cumberland awaiting the hand of capital and skill, to be reclaimed and to produce from two to three tons of timothy to the acre. Every block won from nature not only adds to the potential wealth of the country, but serves to increase by so much the cattle raising and darying interests of the community and the develop a farming population marsh deposits along the New England coasts at 200,000 acres, and yet but a few hundred have been reclaimed owing to the difficulty of disposing of floods of fresh water; lazy but it might be advisable for the slow tides provide no natural facilities for drainage work. To reclaim swamps and mud flats there two plans have been recommended. One is the excavations of drainage basins, the other is the removal of surface water by pumps driven by wind mills the same as in Holland.

More than ninety per cent. of our marsh lands derive their value chiefly from drainage work. The early French settlers around our shores diked in lands that had already become hard marsh by natural tidal deposits. They made no inroad on the swamps, lakes and morasses of the country.

swamps, lakes and morasses of the country.

The reclamation of these required drainage works that were not commenced until more than half a century after their expulsion. In many cases lands dyked by the French preserve their fertility to an extraordinary degree. The marsh in upper Jolicure district Westmorland, has been cropped steadily since the days of French occupation without re-tiding. At Onslow, N. S. lands that are foday very productive are ridged up by the plough, as the French owner left them nearly a century and a half ago. Why some of these old

There are some facts to support this latter idea and indeed, there is nothing inconsistent with the two theories, but until the laws of growth are better observed than they have been this interesting problem will not be settled.

ADVANTAGES ON FUNDY

The facility for drainage afforded by the dropping of full tide from 30 to 50 feet is a factor in the development of Bay of Fundy fresh water and estuarine swamps that but few places in the world afford any parallel. Without adequate provision for the disposal of fresh water draining of such regions, tidal deposits might be of little value. Prof. Shaler, of Harvard estimates the extent of true marsh deposits along the New England coasts at 200,000 acres. and yet

Be Greater than Your Position.

Barton M. Barch, in Success, gives the folowing sound advice to young men; A distinguished theological professor said: "If I had a son, I should tell him many times a day to make himself as big a man on the inside as possible." "Young men too often want to be big men on the outside; to occupy positions which fit them as a turtle shell fits a clam. "Never mind your position young man. Whatever it may be, try to fill it. The duties which you have to perform may seem trivial: but because it is a small position is no reason why you should be a small man.

You may be big inside, you know, if you are small outside. "The young man who applies himself to o find a place where he will be able to use very power he possesses. "At any rate, better be a big man in a mall place than the opposite. A pinch of of noise and drive a bullet a long way. What can it do in a Krupp gun ?"

We want religion that softens the step eye with sunshine and checks the impatient exclamation and harsh rebuke; a religion that is polite; deferential to superiors, consider ate to friends; a religion that goes into the family and keeps the husband from being oross when the dinner is late, that keeps his wife from fretting when the husband tracks the newly washed floor with his boots, and that makes the husband mindful of the scraper and doormat; keeps the mother patient when the baby is cross, and amuses the children as well as instructs them, cares for the servants besides paying them promptly; projects the honeymoon into the harvest meon and makes the happy home like the eastern fig tree, bearing on its bosom at once the tender blossom and the glory of the ripening fruit. We want a religion that shall interpose between the ruts and gullies and rocks of the highway and the sensitive

A somewhat startling, though by to dogmatise on the subject of children, unless it is to predict the weather for the coming week. The possessed of a small Purital descendant, whose every look and act is a reproach. Nobody can tell. On general principles, children are benefitted by having animals to play with and take care of, but it is not one of those benefits which descend like the sun and rain, without trouble to anyone. It has to be worked for. There is a certain amount of the savage in most children, and the savof cancer in its most painful and ma their credit.

The child is necessarily a subject obliged to conform to the will of his superiors, and to do a thousand things which he does not particularly like, and the necessity for which he cannot in the nature of things see. Therefore, his impulse is to "take it out" on somebody. The only somebody at hand, when he is in a bad humor, may be the cat and he consequently takes it out on the cat's tail. If she be a patient animal she will submit, without resistance, otherwise she will give the youngster at lesson which he will not forget. If she submits he is likely to be carried away by the love of experiment and keep on teasing her until she resents it with claws, or until his natural guardians intervene and stop the investigation.

A great deal of the cruelty and destructiveness of children is simply experiment. The infant has all the laws of the universe to discover, and among them are the laws of animal and human psychology. He goes about investigating these in much the same way as his elders do. Few of us have come by our knowledge of suffering for it directly or indirectly. How do we know that men or women suffer in any given situation unless fine particles, which when deposited in a mass are readily penetrated by grass rootlets and plant food abstracted. How this is done is a matter of much speculation. Chemical analysis of tidal mud does not indicate the surprising productiveness of marsh soils. The most generally accepted theory is that the fertility arises from the mechanical minuteness into which the soil is pulverized whereby grass rootlets are enabled to push their way downwards to the depth of three ieet or more. To support this theory is the fact that near the bay shortes and mouths of rivers, where heavier and coarser particles from the tide are first deposited, the grass growth is not equal in either quality or quantity to tnat grown at a distance up where the finer deposits are made. Another theory is that bacteria exist in dry marsh soils and extract from the air mitrogen and more than one child in the finity and each has its share in the fiamily and each has its share in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place the case in the live stock of the place beautiful coffin.
