Whelped before another "Carnival" is attempted Chatham will have a covered rink properly lighted, so that the managers may be able to see necessary rules enforced. If such an institution were established it is probable that it would pay expenses. All at events, however, it is not to be taken for granted that which attended the "Carnival" ought to reward the preparations that were evidently made by those who patronized the rink on Monday night, for there is little satisfaction in groping about in the dark in full "sign" of gipsyous diversion.

Notes from Kouchibouguac. The appearance of my last note produced a whirl of excitement in this quiet village. The ADVANCE was enquired after as eagerly as the New York Herald in was a copy. It was read and re-read, and the result was that it was to be put in a box and sent to the Editor of the ADVANCE.

AN OVER-CALCULATING SCHOOL SECRETARY. NORTH BRIDGE, MAR. 20th, 1877. To the Editor of the Miramichi Advance.

Dear Sir:—A number of Ratepayers would like to know your opinion on a matter growing out of a mistake, or an oversight, which took place at our general School Meeting in this District. The Secretary of the Trustees had his accounts before the Meeting, and they were found to be correct, with one exception which was that he had not credited the District with the County money which he had received. He said he had not got the money until a few days before the Meeting, and after he had his accounts made out, but he admitted he had the money—his account amounted to something over $200—on hand. This amount was then added to the balance, as shown by the accounts, and the total balance on hand was something like $400. One of the Trustees then asked the Secretary if he had any bills to pay out of this balance. He said he had, and he presented a bill for his last month's services, which claim being $15. Now, this sum was already charged to the District in the account of the $15 that was deducted from the balance on hand and a new balance was struck. The mistake was overlooked at the time and the account passed the Meeting. It seems that the Secretary had not the amount over to the Teacher, but this was no reason why it should be charged a second time to the District. This Secretary is out of office and out of the District and does not feel inclined to pay back the money. Now, I would like to know how we are to recover it, or if we can recover it at all. Mr. Ramsey said that the Trustees of last year were responsible for it as they should have met some time before the meeting and got their accounts ready; this they did not do. Again, he said that the Secretary's accounts are responsible for the amount. Hoping you will give us your opinion on the matter, I remain, yours truly, H. W. HUNTER.

It is provided in Sec. 91 of the Charter of Consolidated Statutes relating to Schools, that no proceedings of any School Meeting shall be impeached before any Court, but any party complaining may appeal to the Inspector within fourteen days after the act complained of, and he shall be in writing and to set forth specifically the grounds thereof. The duty of the Inspector is to examine and decide the matter in appeal forthwith and if he does not do so in a satisfactory manner an appeal may be made to the Chief Superintendent. If an appeal is referred to the Inspector, or if the case was presented to him, it seems to me that he should have directed that account to be made by some Ratepayer of the District under the seal of the above-named Chapter which says:—On complaint under oath of any Ratepayer of a District that any person whether as Trustee, Secretary or otherwise, has improperly withheld from the Board of Trustees money or other property belonging to the District, the Inspector may in writing require such person to deliver over to the Trustees within a time limited by him such money or property, and if such order is not complied with within the time so limited, a County Court Judge may on application of the complainant, and on proof of the above facts, summon the person so charged, and make inquiry into the matter, and may deal summarily therewith, and make such order as he may see just, with or without costs, which orders shall be enforceable as other orders of the Court. The fourteen days limitation in Sec. 91 does not interfere with the right of any Ratepayer to proceed as set forth in Sec. 92. The fact that the Trustees' accounts do not appear to have been audited a fortnight before the School Meeting as the law requires, and that a mistake was made by the Meeting does not shut the District out from causing the Inspector to proceed against the delinquent Secretary, who, apparently has $15 in his possession which does not belong to him, but to the District, and can be recovered as such. At least it seems to be the clear construction of the law on the subject.—[Error.]

Bas Settling in Napan. Napan, Mar. 19th, 1877. Mr. Editor:—I observe in the ADVANCE of 14th inst., an article headed, "Bas Settling in Napan," in which the Editor says: "This requires, that a petition has been signed by all the leading people of Napan, praying the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to prohibit seining for bass, as that mode of fishing destroys large quantities of young fish." Will the ADVANCE please tell me who these "leading people" are. Perhaps it may yet learn that the Napan people will scarcely accept of the signers of the petition. The ADVANCE, as I suppose, will not be marshalled into line by a pilgrim's staff or gavelled up by a daring deed. The petition was not got up in Napan, but all, but by parties residing on the bay shore, who have been in the habit of catching bass in September. Of course if a stray salmon came along these useful fish men will let it go, perhaps—some where. Now, Mr. Editor, a great many people do not petition were only boys, leading boys of course, and if they lead along all the other boys as well as the Inspector of Fisheries can lead the Editor of the ADVANCE, and Messrs. Mowat and Hickson, they will accomplish a wonderful success. The Inspector did not call on the aid of three of the most intelligent and practical officers of this District in his pretended investigation of fish matters, as he knew they had opinions of their own. He was, however, more fortunate in the Editor of the County and the ADVANCE, as he had a paper said yes or may with as much assurance as if his Editors knew anything about the matter they were treating of.

The bass are so plentiful in our River as they were twenty or thirty years ago, and if they require more protection it is on the Northwest where many are caught and not in Napan, where they are only got for a week or two and are, notwithstanding what has been said to the contrary, a better fish, being now in from the salt water and not from a muddy lake. Those who have that in the Northwest all winter. If any more protection is needed let the close season extend to the first, or even the last of October, and it may be proven safe as well as lawful. There can be no objection to that. There can be no objection to that. There can be no objection to that.

When next the ADVANCE gives its readers the Napan news ought to acknowledge that the Editor of the ADVANCE and boys who reside in Napan and perhaps can explain to its own satisfaction at least how the bass were destroyed in fishing with a five inch mesh. Yours, ONE OF THE NAPAN PEOPLE.

Mr. Ramsey said that the Trustees of last year were responsible for it as they should have met some time before the meeting and got their accounts ready; this they did not do. Again, he said that the Secretary's accounts are responsible for the amount. Hoping you will give us your opinion on the matter, I remain, yours truly, H. W. HUNTER.

It is provided in Sec. 91 of the Charter of Consolidated Statutes relating to Schools, that no proceedings of any School Meeting shall be impeached before any Court, but any party complaining may appeal to the Inspector within fourteen days after the act complained of, and he shall be in writing and to set forth specifically the grounds thereof. The duty of the Inspector is to examine and decide the matter in appeal forthwith and if he does not do so in a satisfactory manner an appeal may be made to the Chief Superintendent. If an appeal is referred to the Inspector, or if the case was presented to him, it seems to me that he should have directed that account to be made by some Ratepayer of the District under the seal of the above-named Chapter which says:—On complaint under oath of any Ratepayer of a District that any person whether as Trustee, Secretary or otherwise, has improperly withheld from the Board of Trustees money or other property belonging to the District, the Inspector may in writing require such person to deliver over to the Trustees within a time limited by him such money or property, and if such order is not complied with within the time so limited, a County Court Judge may on application of the complainant, and on proof of the above facts, summon the person so charged, and make inquiry into the matter, and may deal summarily therewith, and make such order as he may see just, with or without costs, which orders shall be enforceable as other orders of the Court. The fourteen days limitation in Sec. 91 does not interfere with the right of any Ratepayer to proceed as set forth in Sec. 92. The fact that the Trustees' accounts do not appear to have been audited a fortnight before the School Meeting as the law requires, and that a mistake was made by the Meeting does not shut the District out from causing the Inspector to proceed against the delinquent Secretary, who, apparently has $15 in his possession which does not belong to him, but to the District, and can be recovered as such. At least it seems to be the clear construction of the law on the subject.—[Error.]

Bas Settling in Napan. Napan, Mar. 19th, 1877. Mr. Editor:—I observe in the ADVANCE of 14th inst., an article headed, "Bas Settling in Napan," in which the Editor says: "This requires, that a petition has been signed by all the leading people of Napan, praying the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to prohibit seining for bass, as that mode of fishing destroys large quantities of young fish." Will the ADVANCE please tell me who these "leading people" are. Perhaps it may yet learn that the Napan people will scarcely accept of the signers of the petition. The ADVANCE, as I suppose, will not be marshalled into line by a pilgrim's staff or gavelled up by a daring deed. The petition was not got up in Napan, but all, but by parties residing on the bay shore, who have been in the habit of catching bass in September. Of course if a stray salmon came along these useful fish men will let it go, perhaps—some where. Now, Mr. Editor, a great many people do not petition were only boys, leading boys of course, and if they lead along all the other boys as well as the Inspector of Fisheries can lead the Editor of the ADVANCE, and Messrs. Mowat and Hickson, they will accomplish a wonderful success. The Inspector did not call on the aid of three of the most intelligent and practical officers of this District in his pretended investigation of fish matters, as he knew they had opinions of their own. He was, however, more fortunate in the Editor of the County and the ADVANCE, as he had a paper said yes or may with as much assurance as if his Editors knew anything about the matter they were treating of.

The bass are so plentiful in our River as they were twenty or thirty years ago, and if they require more protection it is on the Northwest where many are caught and not in Napan, where they are only got for a week or two and are, notwithstanding what has been said to the contrary, a better fish, being now in from the salt water and not from a muddy lake. Those who have that in the Northwest all winter. If any more protection is needed let the close season extend to the first, or even the last of October, and it may be proven safe as well as lawful. There can be no objection to that. There can be no objection to that. There can be no objection to that.

When next the ADVANCE gives its readers the Napan news ought to acknowledge that the Editor of the ADVANCE and boys who reside in Napan and perhaps can explain to its own satisfaction at least how the bass were destroyed in fishing with a five inch mesh. Yours, ONE OF THE NAPAN PEOPLE.

Notes from Kouchibouguac. The appearance of my last note produced a whirl of excitement in this quiet village. The ADVANCE was enquired after as eagerly as the New York Herald in was a copy. It was read and re-read, and the result was that it was to be put in a box and sent to the Editor of the ADVANCE.

AN OVER-CALCULATING SCHOOL SECRETARY. NORTH BRIDGE, MAR. 20th, 1877. To the Editor of the Miramichi Advance.

Dear Sir:—A number of Ratepayers would like to know your opinion on a matter growing out of a mistake, or an oversight, which took place at our general School Meeting in this District. The Secretary of the Trustees had his accounts before the Meeting, and they were found to be correct, with one exception which was that he had not credited the District with the County money which he had received. He said he had not got the money until a few days before the Meeting, and after he had his accounts made out, but he admitted he had the money—his account amounted to something over $200—on hand. This amount was then added to the balance, as shown by the accounts, and the total balance on hand was something like $400. One of the Trustees then asked the Secretary if he had any bills to pay out of this balance. He said he had, and he presented a bill for his last month's services, which claim being $15. Now, this sum was already charged to the District in the account of the $15 that was deducted from the balance on hand and a new balance was struck. The mistake was overlooked at the time and the account passed the Meeting. It seems that the Secretary had not the amount over to the Teacher, but this was no reason why it should be charged a second time to the District. This Secretary is out of office and out of the District and does not feel inclined to pay back the money. Now, I would like to know how we are to recover it, or if we can recover it at all. Mr. Ramsey said that the Trustees of last year were responsible for it as they should have met some time before the meeting and got their accounts ready; this they did not do. GOING TO THE BATH.

BY EDWARD TAYLOR.
CHAPTER IV.
What Minnie Adams found herself alone, she fell into a deep and pleasant reverie.

In telling Sir Frederick Randall that she had fallen in love with him at first sight, she had spoken nothing but the truth, and she might have added that she had never loved before. True it was that a girl so beautiful and so accomplished could not, of course, have passed through years such a mannered as she had done, but when the passion of society had fallen to her lot, without attracting great attention, and without becoming entangled in a few harmless flirtations.

But in none of these had Minnie's heart been engaged. She liked to dance, to ride, to talk, or to sing to certain eligible young men; but when the passion of the hour was ended, they passed completely out of her mind, and she never gave a thought to any of them again. So that she was completely free and untroubled as she met with this fascinating English baronet, and subjected by his good looks, his aristocratic bearing, and his elegant manners, she was prepared to yield up to him her heart, on which no other human being had ever made a serious impression.

No other human being! Well, she confessed to herself during her reverie she certainly had seen very fond of Henry Willamette, but that was years ago, and she was now a mere child, not more than fourteen years old, and she was quite a youth at that period, much too young to think of marrying, at least according to the European views on that subject. And full of her new conquest, Minnie professed to herself an admiration of the role which she played that the husband should be somewhat older than the wife.

How silly it was of her and Harry, she thought, "ever to have talked of love! They were but two children, who ought to have been punished for their profligacy. And yet—and yet, how handsome Harry Willamette was, how chivalrous and noble in his bearing, what a perfect gentleman in the best acceptance of the word!"

She recollected how her heart had throbbled within her when she read of his deeds of daring in the war, when she heard him everywhere extolled for his personal bravery in the field, and the clearness of his intellect at the council fire.

Poor Harry! She had seen him once on the terrace at Homberg, while she was walking with Sir Frederick. He had recognized her, and seemed as though intending to approach her, but when he saw the company she was with, he merely raised his hat and passed by.

What will Harry think of the next that she is going to marry this English aristocrat? she wondered.

And just at that moment her reverie was broken in upon by the entrance of a servant, who handed her a card.

On the card was printed, "Colonel Henry D. Willamette, Esq., at home, returning in a few minutes and adhering to the new visitor."

A young man of about six-and-twenty, very little above the middle height, of a slim and wiry build, with dark complexion and jet black, curly hair; his features small and regular, his thick, shaven with the exception of a thick, overhanging mustache, he had large, melancholy eyes, fringed with long, dark lashes, and the general aspect of his countenance was intellectual and refined, grave and earnest.

His left coat-sleeve was empty, and he looked on to his breast—the good limb which it used to contain had been splintered by a spent ball and rendered useless, as he was fighting by Meade's side at Gettysburg.

Colonel Willamette entered the room with a somewhat embarrassed air—so different, Minnie thought, from Sir Frederick's easy manner—and bowed to her politely but somewhat frigidly.

"This is a very unexpected, but very welcome visit, Colonel Willamette," said Minnie, advancing towards him and holding out her hand. "Pray be seated."

"But a day or two since," he replied, "I have been loitering at Vienna, until I have nearly outlasted the holiday I had allotted to myself, and now I am on my way home."

"Home to New York?" she asked.

"To New York first," he replied with a grave smile, "but I shall not stay there long. I shall push on to my old home on the Hudson, which I have so often described to you."

"And which is so close to the Catskills that I even pictured you as a youthful Rip Van Winkle in his gloomy recesses," said Minnie, laughing. "Why do you not take some one with you to relieve the solitude of that gloomy old house, Colonel?"

"Take some one with me," repeated the Colonel.

"Yes; did you see no Viennese maiden with bright blue eyes, and a silver arrow stuck through her abundant black hair, with whom you could have fallen in love, and whom you could have persuaded to become the mistress of Crown's Nest?"

Colonel Willamette's expression was even more than usually grave, as he said: "I am sufficiently American to prefer my own countrywomen to foreigners, Miss Adams. If I can get no American lady to share my lot, I guess Crown's Nest will remain without a mistress during my lifetime."

"I would advise you not to lay down any strict rule, Colonel," said Minnie, playfully, "as you will, no doubt, depart from it. Why not, for instance, delay your return, and remain here; our English cousins are very lovely and very domestic, and I should think you would not have much difficulty in finding one exactly suited to your tastes."

"Do you know what you are doing?" said Colonel Willamette, suddenly rising from his chair and approaching her: "do you understand the amount of fortune you are thus heedlessly sacrificing to me? No," he said, after a pause, "you do not, for you are still a mere child, and too good, and too pure, willingly to hurt any one."

"I am very sorry," said Minnie Adams, looking at him in surprise. "I assure you that it was merely jesting, that I had no idea of wounding your feelings."

"Of course you would not, how should you," said the Colonel shaking his head, "and yet, child as you were, as you are even now, you have sufficient womanly penetration to enable you to guess my secret. Miss Adams, I was bred a soldier, and nothing, I suppose, will ever rid me of the bluntness and outspokenness of my profession, hence my visit to you to-day. Years ago, when you and I played together as children, though I was much the elder, I conceived an affection for you which I have never been able to shake off; it has grown with my growth, and strengthened with my strength, despite the utmost efforts which, not knowing it to be acceptable to you, I made to stifle it; but all was in vain. I thought at one time I had conquered it, for by lay dormant for months, until I met you last summer at Homberg, then it burst forth with renewed fury. There—there are circumstances about that meeting which made me particularly desirous to forget you, but it was not to be, your image haunted me ever since, and now, before I return home, I have come to ask you whether there is any chance of that which was the dream of my whole life, being accomplished?"

He paused and looked eagerly at her, with earnest, strained gaze, and quivering lips.

Minnie met that gaze firmly, though her voice was tremulous in its tone, as she replied: "Harry, for I must call you by the old familiar name, I am deeply pained to hear the words you have just spoken; believe me, I had no idea of this, but I teased you just now, but I have never had an idea of the existence of any such feeling on your part; we were childhood friends. The feeling I entertained for you in those days, Harry, I entertain for you now, and I would be to you as your sister—but nothing more."

"Nothing more!" he repeated, with a hollow voice.

"Nothing more," she said. "Believe me, dear Harry, it pains me to say this to you, seeing the effect it has on you, but it would be worse than idle to tell you hopes which could never be realized."

Instantly the Colonel's face grew black as night.

"Is there," he exclaimed, passionately, "is there any one else who is preferred—I beg your pardon, Miss Adams," he added, stopping himself by a violent effort, "I have no right to ask you any questions."

"Quite agree with you, Colonel Willamette," said Minnie, with dignity, "it is time that this painful interview was brought to an end."

She rose from her chair as she spoke, and the Colonel bowed and retreated towards the door. Then suddenly turning, he came swiftly back, and wrote to her husband; "and what is more, a perfect lady, well educated, and of excellent manners. I do not think her life is a happy one; she is laboring under some great trouble; but she does not venture any confidence, and of course I can not attempt to pry into her domestic affairs. She never speaks of her husband, and I have had two or three observations, which she has unwittingly dropped, that he is a bad man. How many women have had husbands like him, Walter, how happy ought I to be in mine!"

"And that is—"

"And that is, if ever you would want my assistance—no matter where you may be, or in what way you may require it—you will not hesitate to send for me."

"I promise," said Minnie, giving him her hand.

He pressed it for an instant between his lips, and then respectfully raised it to his lips and went silently away.

CHAPTER V.—KITTY.

The shades of evening were falling fast upon the village of Braaxholme, and the wide space of ocean which lay at its feet was blushing red in the departing rays shed by the declining sun; he ran beneath the waves. Braaxholme is a fishing village on the Devonshire coast, a cluster of houses swarming up a cliff, and overhanging the top of a huge side.

Beyond the fishermen and their families, there is little regular population, the few more pretentious cottages being occupied by the clergyman, the doctor, and some quiet-going people, mostly elderly, who have settled there, either for the sake of the seclusion or for the cheapness of the living.

No place in a civilized and densely-populated country like England, could well be more secluded. It is ten miles from any railway, and the only communication it has with the world is by means of the carrier's wagon, which three times weekly jogs over to the market-town, and three brings such letters and parcels as may be awaiting its arrival.

An event which happened during the Summer of this month seemed, however, destined to work a revolution in the fortunes of the place.

A famous London physician, whose wife was in delicate health, which above all things required perfect quiet and pure fresh air for its treatment, chanced to hear of Braaxholme from one of his fashionable patients, a noble lord, whose country seat was in the neighborhood, and ran down to visit the spot.

He found it so exactly suitable for his purpose, that he determined to bring his wife thither at once. The great difficulty, that of providing her with suitable accommodation, being met by an offer on the part of the clergyman of the parish, a venerable man, whose wife had died about two years previously, and who on hearing the state of the case, was willing to place a portion of the vicarage at the disposal of the invalid.

Dr. Travers assented gratefully to this proposition.

There was another objection. Mrs. Travers required careful nursing, and though the doctor's fortune was sufficient to have enabled him to retire from practice, yet he took such interest in his profession that his wife was unwilling he should give it up for the sake of attending to her in a place so ungenial to his tastes.

The old woman who acted as housekeeper and general servant at the vicarage, being stupid, as well as feeble, was clearly unfit for the task.

What then was to be done! The plan which presented so well was nearly fallen through, until the vicar behought him of Mrs. Moreton.

Who was Mrs. Moreton? Mr. Harvey, the old vicar, on being appealed to, could hardly say.

She was a very nice young woman—quite a lady, very pretty, and wonderfully kind to children and to the poor. She had been in the village about eighteen months, and during that time had rendered herself beloved by all, by her kindness and sympathy.

She had some experience in nursing, too; for last year, when a case of small-pox had been brought into the village, from a foreign fishing boat which anchored there, and which was afterwards frightened to land the poor stricken wharf, who was placed in an outhouse by himself, with only the infirmity doctor to visit him, Mrs. Moreton no sooner heard of it, than she took up her place by the sick man's bedside, and never left him until he was out of danger.

"That was bright," the doctor thought, "and showed an amount of heart and a determined will."

"Was she married?"

"Oh, yes," Mr. Harvey said; "but there was something—he did not know what it was—which caused her to live by herself. Mrs. Moreton was, he believed, engaged in some business which kept him greatly from home."

He had never visited Braaxholme since Mrs. Moreton had resided there. At all events, whatever might be between them, Mr. Harvey was perfectly certain that it was not Mrs. Moreton's fault; for a sweeter and better woman he did not breathe.

Dr. Travers was a man of the vicar's earnest simplicity, he could fully understand that Mrs. Moreton might be as good as was represented, and yet have valid reason for living apart from her husband.

Accompanied by the vicar, he walked round to the little cottage where she resided, and had an interview with the lady, the result of which was, that he gave away almost as much infatuated as his elderly companion.

When Mrs. Moreton had the circumstances of the case explained to her, she expressed herself delighted to be of any assistance in a matter in which restoration to health was concerned; but decidedly and promptly declined to take any remuneration for her trouble.

She would be amply repaid, she said if Mrs. Travers's recovery was in any way due to her services; and she was so determined, and so ladylike on this point, that Dr. Travers saw it was useless to press it further.

So Mrs. Travers came to Braaxholme, and was duly tended by Mrs. Moreton, for whose sake she conceived a deep and lasting affection.

"She is the sweetest and most lovable creature in the world," the vicar wrote to her husband; "and what is more, a perfect lady, well educated, and of excellent manners. I do not think her life is a happy one; she is laboring under some great trouble; but she does not venture any confidence, and of course I can not attempt to pry into her domestic affairs. She never speaks of her husband, and I have had two or three observations, which she has unwittingly dropped, that he is a bad man. How many women have had husbands like him, Walter, how happy ought I to be in mine!"
