The text was: "When shall I awake? I will seek it yet again." Prov. xxiii, 35. The eloquent preacher said:

With an insight into human nature such as no other man ever reached, Solomon, in my text, sketches the mental operations of one who, having stepped aside from the path of rectitude, desires to return. With a wish for something better, he said, "When shall I awake? When shall I come out of this horrid nightmare of iniquity?" But, seized upon by uneradicted habit, and forced down hill by his passions, he cries out: "I will seek it yet again. I will try it once more." Our libraries are adorned with an elegant literature addressed to young men, pointing out to them all the dangers and perils of life—complete maps of the voyage, showing all the rocks, the quicksands, the shoals. But suppose a man has already made shipwreck; suppose he has already off the track; suppose he has already gone astray. How is he to get back? That is a field comparatively untouched. I propose to address 'Inyself' to such. There are those in this audience who, with every passion of their agonized soul, are ready to hear such a discusastray. How is he to get back? That is a field comparatively untouched. I propose to address Inyself to such. There are those in this audience who, with every passion of their agonized soul, are ready to hear such a discussion. They compare themselves with what they were ten years ago, and cry out from the bondage in which they are incarcerated. Now, if there he any here, come with an earnest the church door some Sabbath day, and the usher greets him with a look, as much as to say: "Why, you here? You are the last man I ever expected to see at church! Come, take this seat right down by the door!" Instead of saying: "Good morning; I am glad you are here. Come; I will give you a first rate seat, right up by the pulpit." Well, the prodigal, not yet discouraged, enters the prayer sands of men losing their souls in that way. It is the one round more.

I have also to say that if a man wants to return from evil practices society repulses him. Desiring to reform, he says: "Now I will shake off my old associates, and I will find Christian companionship." And he appears at the church door some Sabbath day, and the usher greets him with a coming from his evil ways, to feel that God puts two omnipotent arms around about him and says, "Young man, I will stand by you! The mountains may depart and the hills be removed, but I will never fail you." And then, as the soul thinks the news is too good to be true, and cannot believe it, and looks up in God's face, God lifts his right hand and takes an oath, an affidavit, saying, "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth."

THANK GOD FOR THE GOSPEL.

Blessed be God for such a Gospel as this! "Cut the slices thin," said the wife to the husband, "or there will not be enough to go all around for the children; cut the slices thin." Blessed be God, there is a full loaf for every one that wants it; bread enough and to spare. No thin slices at the Lord's table. I remember when the Master Street hospital, in Philadelphia, was opened during the war, a telegram came saying, "There will be three hundred wounded men to-night; be ready to take care of them;" and from my church there went in some twenty or thirty men and women to look after these poor wounded fellows. As they came, some from one part of the land, some from another, no one asked whether this man was from Oregon, or from Massachusetts, or from Minnesota, or from New York. There was a wounded soldier, and the only question was how to take off the rags most gently, and put on the bandage, and administer the cordial. And when a soul comes to God he does not ask where you came from or what your ancestry was. Healing for all your wounds. Pardon for all your guilt.

where you came from or what your ancestry was. Healing for all your wounds. Pardon for all your guilt. Comfort for all your troubles.

Then, also, I counsel you, if you want to get back, to quit all your bad associations. One unholy intimacy will fill your soul with moral distemper. In all the ages of the church there has not been an instance where a man kept one evil associate and was there has not been an instance where a man kept one evil associate and was reformed. Among the fourteen hundred million of the race not one instance. Go home today, open your desk, take out letter paper, stamp and envelope, and then write a letter something like this:

The Gleaner.

The party of the matter of the present and the dwelt with satisfaction upon the part he had taken in securing the abolition of the corn laws and other taxes on food. The commerce of the country had, in consequence, been multiplied five-fold, capital largely increased, and wages had gone up fifty per cent. These were results too serious to be tampered with; but the time had arrived when the manhood and firmness of the country would be severely tested. The results spoken of by Mr. Gladstone are not merely fancied, but real, and are worthy the careful cornsideration of the purpose of extorting unjust rents and arrears, imposing inequitable terms of purchase, stimulating evictions and destroying the security of tenants in holdings. A sovereign managing council of lifteen will be elected annually. The league will keep the British public informed regarding the aims of landlords and will assist at bye elections. The Ottawa Free Press says, "a prominent Kingston conservative paid a visit to Sir John Macdonald at River du Loup a few days ago, and had quite a lengthy conversation with the premier over the political situation. The Kingstonian reports that he found his old leader considerably perplexed over the continued agitation for the disallowance of the Jesuit bill, and particularly over Mr. Dalton McCarthy's declarations that the bill can be and ought to be disallowed before the 8th of August; and his threats regarding his future course. After discussing the recent difficulties in the Kingston post office and other matters of local concern, the conversation turned upon the Jesuit agitation, Sir John enquiring particularly what the general feeling was, and as to the attitude of certain prominent conservatives regarding it. After the Limestone City man had given his views, he put the question to it. After the Limestone City man had given his views, he put the question to Sir John squarely:

"Why don't you disallow the bill at once and put an end to the whole row?"

"That is not such an easy matter as you think," was the reply. "I would have to swallow all that I said last session in favor of the Jesuits and their bill, and also stultify all those conservatives who voted to sustain me. Moreover, to reverse our policy now would involve the resignation of Sir John Thompson, leaving me without any assistance. It is also probable that other Catholic ministers would resign. But we have until the eighth of August to think the matter over."

It Alms to Influence Those Who Have Become Estranged from Christianity.

BALTIMORS, July 22.—Parts of the new book," Our Christian Heritage." written by Cardinal Gibbons, Archibishop of Baltimore, which will appear next October, through the courtesy of the publishers, John Murphy & Co., were submitted to the hasty reading of an Associated Press reporter this evening. This book is not polemical. It does not deal with the controversies agitated since the Reformation, nor aim at vindicating the claims of the Catholic Church as superior to those of the separated brances of Christianity. It has nothing to say against any Christian denomination that still retains faith in at least the divine mission of Jesus Christ. that still retains faith in at least the divine mission of Jesus Christ. On the contrary, most of the topics treated still find zealous advocates in Protestant writers. Nor was it written in the hope of influencing professional free thinkers, agnostics, and other avowed enemies of Christianity, but those who, through association, the absence of Christian training, a distorted education, and pernictious reading, have become estranged from the teachings of the Gospel—those who have never shared in the Christian heritage of their fathers.

This book shows that such fundamental truths underlying Christianity as the existence, the providence, and the omniscience of God, the immortality of the soul, the existence of free will, and the essential distinction between moral good and evil, are all susceptible of being demonstrated by our unaided reason, while they are made still more luminous by the light of Christian revelation. It furnishes Christians with arguments to meet the sophistries of free thinkers and seeks to enlighten the sincere inquirer after truth.

the Ripper" had been arrested and had made a full confession shows to what ex tremities the sensation mongers of Fleet street will drive their wits in order to keep public excitement alive and increase the sales of their papers. "Jack the Ripper" has not been arrested, and consequently has not made a confession. Moreover, his identity and his where abouts are absolutely unknown. The chief inspector of police in the murder district assures me that not the slightest clew has yet been obtained. He has under arrest for drunkenness a half-cray man, who claims to be "Jack the Ripper," however. The inspector not only discredits his maudlin statement, but can prove that the self-accused prisoner was safe at home at the time of the last murder.

London, July 20. At two o'clock this morning a murderous attack was made on a woman on the Surrey side of the Thames, about two miles from "Miletchapel, and on the opposite side of the river. The man was armed with a knife. The police, attracted by the shrieks of a woman, arrived on the scene in time to capture the would-be assassin. They locked up the woman and man. The woman may recover. The identity of the man is not established, but hopes are entertained that he may be the Ripper.

mate is shot down he will turn to look at him and seemed pleased. A horse in my battery was once struck by a piece of shell, which split his skull, so that one side was loose. The driver turned him loose, but he walked up by the side of the gun and watched the firing, and when a shot was fired would look away in the direction of the enemy, as if to see the effect of the shot. When a shell would burst near by he would calmly turn and look at it. When he saw his own team going back for ammunition he ran back to his own place and galloped back to the caisson with the rest. When the lieutenant pushed him aside to put in another horse, he looked at the other one sorrowfully while he was being harnessed up, and when he seemed to realize that there was no further use to for him he lay down and died. The lieutenant strongly asserted that he died of a broken heart.

At the time that Adams', Jackson's and Preston's brigades charged me at Murfreesboro some officer was killed and the brigades were driven back. But the fallen officer's horse had not been taught to retreat, and he did not. He just came at full speed through the battery, and I tell you he looked something grand. He was a large, fine animal, his nostrils were extended wide, his eyes fairly blazed, and he clutched the bit with his teeth as he came on. He came like the wind, and with his saddle flaps flying he looked

Is he clothed in rags? O, sho!
Walk right up an' say "hullo!"
Rags is but a cotton rol!
Jest for wroppin' up a soul;
An' a soul is worth a true,
Hale an' hearty "how d'ye do!"
Don't wait for the crowd to go,
Walk right up and say "hullo!"

Wen big vessels meet, they say, They saloot and sail away. Jest the same are you an' me, Lonesome shipe upon a sea; Each one sailing his own jog For a port beyond the fog. Let yer speakin' trumpet blow, Lift yer horn an' cry "hullo!"

Say "hullo" an "how d'ye do?"
Other folks are good as you.
Wen yer leave yer house of clay,
Wanderin' in the Far Away,
Wen you travel through the strange
Country t'other side the range,
Then the souls you've cheered will know
Who ye be, an 'say "hullo!"

to himself as he stepped out upon the sidewalk. "I was just pitying Maxmann for having such a loud, vulgar daughter, and to think that she is a matter of choice! This is the stage, is it? This is the sort of man who comes in daily contact with Helen Knowlton. Well, she is an angel, so I suppose she can walk through fire without being scorched; but it's a pity she has to do it. If I had a said he should "see that child as sure as there was a Moses in the bulrusha." and said he should "see that child as sure as there was a Moses in the bulrusha." and said he should "see that child as sure as there was a Moses in the bulrusha." and setire into private life."

This time there was no mistake. Rush heard the clear notes of Miss Knowlton's voice as she descended the stairs, and in a moment she was advancing toward him with her hand extended. Such a beautiful hand, too! It felt like a rose leaf as it lay in his for half a second.

"I am very glad to uset you."

Then she sat down on one side of him (Aunt Rebecca sat on the other), and "thock him all in," as she afterwards told him. She saw a tall, well made young san with brown hair, a clear, dark skin, and strong, white teeth that a budding mustache made no effort to conceal. He was certainly handsome, and he had an easy, natural manner, that was very attractive.

About the strike she would rather not say anything, but, as he had taken the trouble to find her and did not want to go back empty handed, she would say the side of the strike she would rather not say anything, but, as he had taken the trouble to find her and did not want to go back empty handed, she would say the side of the side of the say anything, but, as he had taken the trouble to find her and did not want to go back empty handed, she would say the side of the side of the say anything, but, as he had taken the trouble to find her and did not want to go back empty handed, she would say the side of say anything, but, as he had taken the trouble to find her and did not want to go back empty handed, she would say that, although she did not believe in strikes her surpressibles were with the

"Ho pay we play. We tella him hen on pay we no play."

"They did not strike for higher pay," that, although she did not believe in the room. Such a lot of tramps it has, the two that there had been a close approach to serious trouble at the rehearsal that morning—that the musicians, led by the flagoolet, had refused to go on till they got their money, and that Maxmann had said positively he had not a dollar in the bank, but would pay them in full on the first of the month, when he would great an assessment from the directors. They had heard that story before, and refused to put any confidence in it, and would have valked off with the money which was due her that day, and which, she knew Maxmann would have ready for her, because he could not afford to treats her as he had treated the poor musicians.

"Noble creature!" said Rush to himself. "She is as good as she is great." And to think that he was going to see her, and on that very day, too!

He learned from some of the people of the thearter that she drove out with her had better call at her house just before dimer time, when he would persty sure of finding her in. This would give him time to dress, as it was not of them, when he would be pretty sure of finding her in. This would give him time to dress, as it was not of the hearter that she drove out with her had better call at her house just before dimer time, when he would be pretty sure of finding her in. This would give him time to dress, as it was not quite o'clock. So he hurried over to West Eleventh street.

Never before did this young man dress him she had better call at her house just before dimer time, when he would be pretty sure of finding her in. This would give him time to decorate the state of the state of the proposed state of the street of the stre strikes, her sympathies were with the strikers in this instance.

his stock of shirts with the eye of a Brummel. The collar of one was too high, the collar of another too low. Finally he completed his toilet and set forth. His landlady met him in the hall. "Bon jour, Mme. Pinot," he said, gayly, as he ran downstairs; but Mme. Pinot was so struck with his changed appearance that she could not find words to return his salutation.

"Well," said she, in French, for she said it to herself, "something has happened; he doesn't look like the same person I saw this morning."

"Is Miss Knowlton in?"

"I will inquire if you will be good enough to send up your card," replied the man, with the evasive answer of the well trained servant of a public person, at the same time ushering Rush, who handed him Mr. Musgrave's note of introduction, into a gem of a drawing room. A grand plane stood in the middle of the room, which was adorned with fine paintings and some rare portraits of distinguished singers. Flowers in baskets and in vases filled the place with a rich perfume. Easy chairs and bricahrao abounded. The whole atmosphere of the room was one of luxury and good taste. "This is her home," thought Rush, looking about him; "these are the rugs her tiny feet tread upon; these are glide." In this way he amused himself until he heard the rustling of a woman's gown on the stairs. His heart stopped beating and seemed to grow so big that he was afraid he could not speak when she entered. Ten thousand thoughts flew through his mind. He arose from his chair, and, shutting his eyes, said to himself: "When that door opens I shall see the most divinely beautiful creature that treads this earth; one for whom I would lie down and die—nay, more, for that treads this earth; one for whom I would lia down and die-may, more, for whom I would stand up and live."

A sort of ecstasy took possession of him. The door swung back on its hinges, he opened his eyes and Aunt Rebecca Sandford entered the room. Rush started. If he had been struck in the face he could not have had a harder blow. It took him a few seconds to recover his wite. If he had had to speak first he would certainly have disgraced himself, but Aunt Rebecca began at once.

"She's very busy just at this moment" (Miss Sandford had an ugly way of saying "she" or "her" when she meant hen lice, forgetting that there were any other shes or hers in the world, "and asked me to step down and see you. The Highest Praise.—I used a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters formy Dyspepsia and it proved a perfect cure, and I was blessed the day I got it. I would not be without it now for a good lot. It is worth its weight alone professed to teach. Bessie Archer was never more alarmed in her life than on her first visit to Mme. Parapoff's "bungalow," as the latter called it. She had never seen such a looking woman before; her face repelled her, but her manner was reassuring. The Russian was a thorough woman of the world, and she saw that in this visitor she had a fish of a new sort to deal with, who could not be caught with the common bait thrown to the men around her. Only the choicest morsel would attract her. She must be careful not to offend her by speaking too plainly before her at first, and she must not give her her

She must be careful not to offen dher by speaking too plainly before her at first, and she must not give her her famous pamphlet, "Naked, and not Ashamed," to read until she was quite sure of her. Bessie had induced her useful cousin, Archie Tillinghast, to accompany her to Mme. Parapoff's. Archie didn't want to go at all, but he was convinced that Bessie would go alone if he didn't go with her.

"Rum girl, Cousin Bess," he said to Rush; "bright as a dollar, but slippery as an eel; you never can tell where she is going to bob up. Beastly place, that Parapoff's. But Mrs. Hopper-Walker thought that the others needed further proof; for she continued to present them with stastistical evidence for half an hour longer at least. In the mean time Archie found the president of the club, Mrs. Merrie May, who gave him a programme of the evening's exercises and a printed synopsis of the different speeches. Uncle Was Willing. A young man known as "a gilded youth" sent the following note to a rich uncle the other night: "Not one word—if you do not send me $2,000 before midnight I shall cease to live." A similar demand had been received earlier in the day, so the fond uncle replied: "In response to a former favor I have already forwarded you my revolver. It is in good condition and loaded."

"I think that the young men of the present day are very deficient in mental culture," said a young lady; "don't you, Mr. Strok-ohr?"

"Very," was the reply. "Why, the other day I actually met a young man who didn't know what I meant when I said that Kelly fumbled a foul ball."—Merchant Traveler.
