AT THE LAST.

Three little words within my brain
Beat back and forth, their one refrain,
These little words, whose dull distress
Means everything and nothing less,
Unless I move my lips instead
Of other utterance: 'She is dead!'

How, lingering, we talked of late
Beside the hedge-grown garden gate;
'Till, smiling, ere the twilight fell
She bade me take a last farewell.
'These were the final words she said—
But yesterday—and she is dead!

I see the very gown she wore,
The color I had praised before;
The swaying length, where she would pass,
Made a light rattle on the grass;
There in the porch she turned her head
For one last smile—and she is dead!

Could I have known what was to come,
'Those hours had been blind and dumb!
I would have followed close with Death,
Have striven for every glance and breath!
But now—the final word is said,
The last look taken—she is dead.

We were not lovers—such as they
Who pledge a faith to last for aye;
Yet seems the Universe to me
A riddle now without a key;
What means the sunshine overhead,
The moon below—now she is dead?

See how my grief, its sudden haze
Beside my accustomed ways;
And yet so odd, it seems my heart
Was never from its pain apart;
What was and is and shall be, well
With that one sentence—'She is dead.'

The Standard.

THE ALDINE for June shows what the landscape painters of America can do, when they have a mind to work in black and white. They paint pictures which are seen for a short time in their studios, and then are seen no more, except by their purchasers; being, in fact, as much removed from the actual world of art as if they did not exist. It is otherwise with them when they are drawn on wood, and seen by the thousands of readers of THE ALDINE in every section of the country, who constitute a powerful and obstinate, and in a certain sense a permanent, art-public. Mr. Kusman Van Elen's oil picture, well known to connoisseurs of art; his "View near Grayby, Conn.," in the June ALDINE, makes his talent known throughout the United States.

Mr. Peter Moran contributes two charming animal pictures, "The Bull Call," a barn yard study, and a "Group of Sheep," which are better than any that Verboeckhoven ever painted. From Mr. W. M. Carey we have a Stampedo of Wild Horses, which is a vigorous composition. Then there is—"In the Park"—The Old Mill of Kosler, and a View in Old Amsterdam. The literature of this number is remarkable for its excellence. There are two stories of New England life, either of which would be the literary feature of the month in any other magazine. The first, "Turning the Wheel," by Francis Lee, is a capital study of Yankee character and conversation; the second, "Young Martin and Old Martin" (published in our columns) is also a fine delineation of character. Subscription price $2, including Chromos "Village Belle" and "Crossing the Moor." James Sutton & Co., publishers, 58 Maiden Lane, New York.

YOUNG MARTIN & OLD MARTIN.

Young Martin was the son of old Martin. Both were blacksmiths, and plied their trade in Tacktown, when there was any demand; when there was none, they sat among the iron bars in the shop, or on the timber threshold, "enjoyin' themselves"—as they informed the passers-by—"most to death doin' hotin'."

Old Martin lived in his flannel shirt-sleeves, and wore rusty spectacles; young Martin and a big jock knife were inseparables. He picked his teeth with it in his reflective moments, and whittled when lively. Old Martin was an everlasting talker, and drew the long bow with extreme good nature. With him, a lie was a benefit—to please, amaze, or instruct. At middle age he was seized with a mission, though he did not call it so—pumped his goods, and with his family moved to New London, distant fifty miles. In five years he returned as unexpectedly as he went, unlocked his front door, made a fire of chips, hung over the t-kettle, and sat down before it a happy man; and his soul lugged the forsaken Lutes and Penates. Any, his wife, sat dumb in a corner, taking a vigorous pinch of snuff.

Any, said old Martin, declare for it; if you can't tell me whatever we went away for, I for one, shall be obliged to you.

N—d—d! be under any obligation to me. I ain't the one to calculate the ways of Providence.

Those five years of absence, so to speak, were the battle ground of old Martin's tremendous hair-breadth stories—concerning the Ijones, the English member-war, the troubles in the Revolution, and the rise and progress, sir, of the first families in New London. Young Martin at this time was twenty-two—slight, pale, with thin fair hair and a beardless chin; but he had kind, honest eyes, and a strong manly voice. Somehow, no one doubt, of his good sense and good feeling. These who laughed at him, remembering his old whittling tricks, and his slogging against door-posts, or the fence, began to hear, and believe, that he was something more than a lazy mechanic. Tacktown had advanced; there was more work to do, and it was soon comprehended that young Martin "bossed" old Martin. About this time he added to his vocabulary of wonderful tales—"What has a son could do"—"What they had thought on him when they were obliged to leave New London at dead o' night. Martin was in such demand—plague on them New Londoners!" Any also doled her praise day and night. She fluted from neighbor to neighbor after dark like a fat, gray owl, or stood at her porch door of mornings clucking like a motherly hen. "As good a creature as ever trod in shoe leather" was Martin! She told the man that came along with quines and fall turns that she knew he wasn't as pretty as a picture, but the madder on him was good.

People were attracted by old Martin's manner. He was strangely silent, yet he appeared on the point of bursting; he winked and nodded, went from store to store, moving his head from side to side, and making mysterious grimaces, as if some moment was at hand when everybody would be astonished. His secret was revealed the day the frame of a new shop was raised below the ship yard on the shore.

"My son did that," he made everybody hear, pointing to the frame. How New London was surprised! But, Lord, they couldn't keep him! And Tacktown is going to be a big place. Old Martin's spectacles were dim with pride and joy.

Too, sir, he cried into anybody's face that was nearest, I ain't going to give up yet. Martin says he to me, says he, 'Father, 'tain't necessary for you to give another blow to the axvil. Cut up your leather apron to mend the joints in the hen house door, or the pig sty.'—But 'in as capable as ever; I won't eat my son's earnings yet.

To describe Any's satisfaction over the new shop would be impossible—that new shop with stone walls and a belly on top! She prepared with acute joy, and wiped her face till she believed she had the 'chaps.' No matter who went by, she was ready; with the air of an orator who fixes his eyes on a distant audience, she began and continued, the motto in her mind, or rather its spirit, being that Martin must be a living remembrance to everybody.

"Never did I consider Martin a forrard child; but I ain't surprised that he should come out at the big end of the horn at last. He ain't a bright and shining light anywhere, as I know on; but he's massey, do you think that Edgar Willis can hold a candle to him, for vertu and goodness to his parents?"

The shop was finished. Old Martin tied on his apron daily, and hectorated the two apprentices with great comfort to himself. Young Martin busied himself with greater things. He was fortunate enough to please the first merchant in Tacktown, who had had his ship-work done elsewhere till now. Chais, bolts, and all a ship's iron gear, he engaged of young Martin, considering old Martin a doosel fool, and quite in the young man's way. But he was compelled, in spite of himself, to compare young Martin's skill about ence with that of his own son—the gay Edgar Willis, the bean 'par excellence' of Tacktown. Young Martin was not particularly respectful to her father-in-laws, but perfectly so in feeling and manner.

There, old man, he often said, "dry up your sass; you make me sick"—accompanying these words with a pleasant smile, and a tap on old Martin's back, which, if the old man had been a Frenchman, would have made him bestow a kiss on young Martin's face. Sometimes, when he thought the old man tired, he said, "Go home, day, and tell mother I want a short-ake for supper; you've been in the shop long enough. Wash up, you are as black as the ace of spades; and if you ain't white we can't go to Mrs. Willis's party to-night. Which was a great joke, as they were not invited.

Father, I've a mind to cut into a ham. It is sharp to-day; he may have an edge to his appetite.

Well, Any, if you'll brile it; otherwise 'tain't worth while to cut into a whole ham.

See here, now. My quince jelly—I do believe you have most forgot the taste of that. Besides, they tell me it is evergreen good to clear the throat. Singing-school to night, you know.

Talking about a Tacktown band, they be. Where's my old fiddle?

Sho, old man.

I was going on to say, a lile old Martin, testily, when you must needs put your ear in—that Martin might like it.

No, indeed; he is going to blow on something—no fiddle, I think he said.

But the next day old Martin was afflicted with another mystery, which broke like a boil when the stage-driver handed from his box a huge bundle in green flannel to young Martin, who was in waiting. It contained an ophicleide—a dreadful instrument—but it filled old Martin's soul with awe and delight.

What else you, father? asked young Martin. You look as if you had caught something.

Do let it out, Martin.

And Martin did, as full of secret delight as his father was of noisy rejoicing.

The band was formed, and after a summer's practice it played one quick-step, a march, and a Fisher's hornpipe; it then went into severe winter quarters, to learn cotillon music. It was a sight to behold young Martin with his ophicleide, as he was a slight, pale creature, the effect reminding one of a little girl totting a big doll. He was very indolent with his practice, playing off-nights at home, in his little room up-stairs. The groans of the instrument were fearful. Its boom was so dreadful to Any that she tied a thick handkerchief over her ears, pretending she had the earache; but old Martin was gone to the 'a phone; he kept time with a triumphant air, although he could not tell one tone from another. Any noticed that he was apt to go to bed in a hurry, and, contrary to his wont, burned his head beneath the bed-clothes, which proceeding made him sick on one night. Any, driven wild, exclaimed, "Why, father, you better like the off-pigs, and I wish you wouldn't."

It seemed to her then as if the bed-clothes shook—or was it the vibration of the walls? for that night it was a dreadful "storm and stress" period with young Martin. He was overcoming "Hall's Victory."

Little did he know who was outside. The girl he adored, but of whom he had no hope—Matilda Northwood, the tallest girl in Tacktown, with a brilliant complexion, an aquiline nose, bright, dark eyes, a clear voice, and a gay laugh; a violent contrast to him every way. She was the daughter of a rich farmer, who lived on Tacktown Neck. Young Martin had always known her, or thought so, till she burst in upon all his awakened senses one night at the singing-school; but he had never addressed a word to her. She knew him quite as well, and had never bestowed a thought upon him, but in a laugh, and alas! did he but know, she was now laughing at him.

The side street was a dark, crooked road, with houses scattered along it, and ending in a broad field which had that very afternoon been the scene of the performance of a travelling circus, attended by Matilda. There had been some fighting among the men, and much savage swearing over the heavy loading of the wagons, till the proprietor, who happened to be partially intoxicated, lost patience. He struck with his whip at one of the drivers, who instantly jumped into his seat, and, swearing he would take no more on, lashed his horses into a gallop along the road.

The proprietor sprang into his buggy, and dashed after him, with the intention of stopping his wagon. Martin heard the noise, opened his window, and ran down stairs. A wagon lurched round the corner, and rolled by. He heard a scream, and saw a figure flying over the fence—safe inside—Edgar Willis, then he saw a buggy swaying toward him, and toward Matilda; he cried out in terror, seized her in his arms and almost threw her over the fence toward Edgar. Then he picked up the proprietor, who was thrown out but not nearly so much injured as his carriage and horse were. Matilda, wondering whether young Martin had observed his cowardice, could not help altering a proverb for his benefit. I have heard, she said, about people laughing on the wrong side of their mouth, and now I am going to laugh on the right side of the fence.

I thought the wagon folks did not see us and I sprang over without knowing it hardly Matilda. I could have helped you; but good gracious, you never could have expected me to lift your weight over the fence. I am not a blacksmith.

That speech killed all the riches and family position of the Willis family forever with Matilda. She turned to Any young Martin still standing beside her in silence, and, as Edgar Willis walked slowly down the street, said, I will go in, Mrs. Pell, for a few minutes. I think your son must be used up, trying to put me over the fence. You did it like lightning, turning her face toward him.

You see, my son strikes when the iron is hot, said old Martin.

Mother, asked young Martin, can't you give Miss Northwood some refreshment?

Oh, I am so put by! What will you have—a cup of tea?

Nothing in the world, thank you. Do you suppose that my brother William will hear anything from Mr. Willis, and bring the wagon for me?—I expected to meet him at Mrs. Miller's about this time.

Martin might go round with you, said Any. I am afraid your folks' way down on the Neck will worry if you are late. I should worry if I had such a dart r out all alone—

The sharp old woman looked at young Martin and he knew that then and there she divined his helplessness as a creature. Matilda also intercepted these glances, and was astonished and distressed. Old Martin got up for his pipe, and embarrassed young Martin, telling him to sit still, and not to let a match for him to light it. Well, it was something to see this little fellow so gentle, and through goodness so elated, Matilda thought, rising to go. She held her hand out to Mrs. Pell, and then kissed her. There were tears in Matilda's eyes; why, no mortal could guess.

Shall I wait upon you to Mrs. Miller's?—asked Martin, simply.

If you please.

And the pair walked down the yard. Old Martin pounded on his knee with his fist, and broke his pipe.

Lord, I used to smash pipes in New London. But it's no use, Any, we ain't high enough up in the world for them Northwoods. Martin must hev blown out his brains with that darned ophicleide; he has gone from one big thing to another, and now if he ain't trying to reach up to that six foot gal!

I'll tell you what he's got to. He put that gal over our fence when he thought she was in danger, when that Edgar Willis jumped over, and let her behind him.

Matilda shook hands with young Martin at the Miller's door, and saying the simplest thing she could just conjure up, told him that but for his impulse that night she might have been much farther off—and showed him the skirt of her dress; there was a rent in it which turned him cold to look at.

Yes, he replied, I thought the horse was bearing down you when I caught you. Oh, heavens! and he clapped his hands together with passion—I am all gratitude. But you mustn't thank me. Yes, you may—but I only did what I thought to have done for any help less person.

And Edgar Willis?

He is not a blacksmith, and is to be excused. This was Martin's first sarcasm.

Well, good night—and Matilda put out her hand again; she only felt the very tips of his fingers, and could not decide whether his hand was rougher than her father's.

The world went on the same afterward—Martin drove work like the very old creature, old Martin remarked to Any; but he led off on his married evenings, appearing restless at nights, and went about in rags. One night he brought home a bean new suit of clothes, with a blue necktie, and told his mother that he had just met the Cottilion party. Every week there was to be one, and he had engaged to play in the band alternate weeks; the other nights he should go on the floor.

Now who was that plaguy chap in New London, said old Martin, musingly—who used to cut such tremble's pigeons wings?

Martin, said his mother, sadly, I almost wish father and I had stayed in his New London; it might have furnished your plans, and you been the better for it.

You see, interpreted old Martin, he has got stammered, and stammered, and a sinking fog of character, which we haven't.

Never you mind, old man—got been, haven't you? Smoke it. Mother, just go right on hating me. It's all right, I tell you. Where's my lile shirt?

Unfortunately, at the first party Martin played, perched upon the little platform behind the fiddle, a clarinet, and a flute, he looked very small, and his dreadful instrument very large. It was remarked how very mildly young Martin played that night. Somebody told Matilda Northwood that he was staring his head off at her.

My, exclaimed another, if the musicians are going in for staring, Tilly will have competition.

By no means calmly replied Matilda, turning her full regards upon Martin, who did not happen to be playing at that moment. His quiet, fair face was flushed, and his fair hair, brushed off his forehead was curly with the heat. He was dressed like a gentleman, too; she thought his dress as well fitting as that of Edgar Willis, though the tailors were not the same.

Once, when the company was marching round the hall, she came with her partner close to the side of the platform and stood for a moment near him. He heard her say that she was tired, and warm, and didn't think it was so very pleasant after all. Martin felt so comforted that a great gulp came in his throat so loud that the flute looked at him and asked if that 'ere offside wasn't pulling him down.

Shut up, you fool, answered Martin, or I'll pitch you headlong into the middle of the next dance.

Matilda heard this and she felt better, too. She admired pluck, and every time she came near this little fellow he gave her instance of it.

The second party young Martin joined as a dancer. Nobody knew where he had learned to dance at all; but no man went through his pace with more grace.

He learned on the wail, and old Martin made him dance on the hot iron, I suppose, sneered Edgar Willis.

I was, said Matilda. Nuthin' to Edgar Willis, that Martin Pell heard your speech; but there is no use for you here.

Well, Tilly, if you are going to keep on punning me I must bear it; a fellow can't always control his nerves, he answered.

Matilda was a tug. Martin kept aloof, and she understood that the advance must come from her. Martin was on the alert, and at a motion from her, he was bowing, and asking her for the next set. It was an ordeal for him. Matilda was at the head of the list above the salt which divided those who worked for their living and those who had money enough to live without actual labor. The male and female members of every person in Tacktown was a laborer or trader in some sort; but there was not common sense enough for anybody to blow those airs away, till Matilda and young Martin did that night. Where shall we take our place? asked Martin.

At the head of the first set.

There they stood, the little couple on the floor—all eyes upon them. Matilda kept her face toward him, and smiled resolutely. Her spirit passed into his. He grew. She was fluttering her fan carelessly.

Let me fan you, he said, and took it from her, and no polite dandy could have flitted it with more grace than her young Martin. He twisted it first before her face, and then he twisted a shaft upon his own.

Shall I never! gasped the lookers on. Should think his face would burn! Just like Matilda Northwood to amuse her fans!

But Edgar Willis did not agree to this; he felt she was in earnest. They were well aware, Matilda and Martin, that they were the objects of criticism. As the sets slowly formed, they ventured to look into each other's eyes. Martin's face flushed, and he did not need quite so self-possessed. Matilda went pale, but each knew that the look exchanged happily. She wore a pretty bracelet.

How would you like to have no force you one? he asked, as she twisted it round her wrist.

I will wear it, she answered.

What if it be of iron, and I could give you ornaments of no other sort?

All the same.

Oh, Matilda, be careful, I can bear but little. She took the fan too, and a smother their hands to chat.

Not from me, Martin? I might ask you to bear a great deal from me.

The tender accent of her voice was unmistakable. She kept her face toward him, and Martin stood very near her, almost face to face; in fact, they were as much one as if they were in the wilderness which blossoms as the rose. The heart alone knows how to discover that in a chaste solitude where Eve is first revealed. Again he began, and so did the violas and flutes.

The other day when I went over to B. G. for this suit of party clothes, I made a resolution. I put something in the way of a bet, and determined that if ever you would dance with me, I would offer it to you, and that if you refused me, I would never wear the suit nor dance again.

He was so nervous that he put his hand to neck tie, as if he would double his neck of the Nessus apparel at once. Matilda was never so moved. Every demonstration that this ob-

London, June 1. The Shah of Persia arrived in Berlin Saturday afternoon, and was received at the railroad station by the Emperor William, several Imperial Princes and Prince Bismarck, and escorted to the palace assigned him during his sojourn in Berlin by a large body of troops. Great crowds enthusiastically welcomed the distinguished visitor.

New York, June 2. The public debt statement shows a reduction of three and a half million dollars during May. The insurance on the property destroyed by the Boston fire, of Friday, amounts to eleven hundred thousand dollars, and the total loss is estimated at one and a quarter million.

London, June 2. A Rome despatch states that the Pope has intimated his approval and support of Cardinal Bonaparte and that prelate's candidature as his successor on the Papal chair in the event of his death.

Continued skirmishes are reported in Spain, resulting generally in the defeat of the Carlists. A despatch from Berlin says the German Government is dissatisfied with President MacMahon's address to the French Assembly, and will not enter into regular diplomatic relations with his Government until satisfied that France will faithfully adhere to the Treaty of Frankfurt.

THE LOSS OF THE "ATLANTIC"—Of the man who has been brought most prominently before the public in connection with this disaster, Rev. W. J. Ancient, the following letter appears in the London Guardian:

I am sure your readers will feel interested in hearing more of the Rev. W. J. Ancient, whose gallant conduct at the wreck of the "Atlantic" is described in the Guardian of this week, and by bringing his name again before the public you will assist me in my endeavors to get him the Royal Humane Society's medal. I take a peculiar interest in "Bill Ancient," as they called him in old times. He was a blue jacket in H. M. S. Mars, with me from 1839 to 1863. I had a Bible-class for the men at night, and he was always there. On "the paying off of the ship he left the service to become a Scripture-reader for the R. N. S. R. S., and ultimately received holy orders.

It is well for the refined to have before them the examples of the self-denial and indomitable pluck of young Deacon and Bishops Selwyn and Patteson; but I can assure you that, taking into account all the difficulties he had to encounter on the lower deck of H. M. S. Mars amongst his shipmates, many of whom were ruffians from the slums of London—"bounty men" instead of men brought up in the service—considering all the difficulties and want of advantages, I say it is my belief that the Rev. W. J. Ancient deserves to be classed with our brightest modern saints, as well as to get the Royal Humane Society's medal.

S. W. PAYNE, Chaplain, R. N. Devonport, April 12, 1873.

The state of British trade is causing serious apprehension in England that a reaction from the prosperity of the past has already begun. The exports of Great Britain show but a fractional increase in value and a positive decrease in quantity. In the month of April the exports were of a value of £21,343,026, against £21,033,516, being a gain of only £310,000, or one and a half per cent. The increase in value of coal and iron alone accounts for more than £1,300,000 of the value of this year's exports for April, so that the aggregate of quantity must be smaller. Of the eighteen principal articles of export of home produce all but six show a decrease in quantity; and of these six, only six manufactures stand in the first rank of production. There was a decline in alkalis, coal, linen goods, iron, silk, woolen and worsted goods.

Last year it was predicted by several prominent physicians that the summer of 1873 would prove sickly and the cholera might be expected. There is already reason to believe that the prediction will prove true. Already a number of deaths have occurred from cholera in New Orleans and the disease is prevailing at other points in that section of the country. The best preventive against epidemics is cleanliness, and with this timely warning it is hoped the medical boards of the northern cities to commence the work of investigation at once in their respective localities, and see that proper sanitary measures are taken to ward off the approaching danger. Many lives may be saved by timely action in this direction.

Gen. Canby died poor. His private charities, it is said, were absolutely without stint, and his widow was left with nothing but a pension of thirty dollars a month. An Oregon newspaper states that Mr. J. B. Montgomery, a contractor on the Northern Pacific Railway, learning this fact, collected from the leading citizens of Portland in three hours a purse of $5,400 in gold, and presented it to Mrs. Canby.

Attorney General Barlow's report to the New York Assembly says there can be no doubt that the issuing of bonds by the Erie Railroad Company and their conversion into stock was illegal, fraudulent and void, but it is impossible now to discriminate which is the stock tainted and which is not. The Attorney General concludes that the only remedy for such violations of law, if it can be called a remedy, is criminal punishment of the guilty officers of the railroad and summary proceeding of forfeiture of charter.

Death of the Honorable Joseph Howe.

Telegraphic advices from Halifax announced the death of the Hon. Joseph Howe, Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia. He departed this life at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, at his official residence, having occupied but a brief period the highest office in his native Province. His death is the loss to Nova Scotia of one of her most distinguished sons, and it takes from the roll of editors, orators and statesmen one who has ever deservedly held a leading position. The veteran was all through his life an active worker, and died as he lived in his country's service and with the harness on. His death will be deplored wherever real genius and true worth are justly esteemed, and wherever disinterested patriotism is properly appreciated. Men of all parties in Nova Scotia, forgetting past differences and disputes, will draw near his bier and shed a tear of regret over the remains of what all will acknowledge was, in the truest sense of the word, a great man. Everywhere throughout this wide Dominion, and indeed far beyond its borders, the news of his taking off will be heard with profound regret.—Daily News.

SAINT ANDREWS, JUNE 4, 1873.

United States Companies—How they fleece the Government.

The Credit Mobilier conspiracy has opened the eyes of the Government of the United States that there has been a systematic plan adopted to rob the Government of lands and bonds, and everything else these companies can lay their hands on. The frauds which have recently been exposed exhibit a most corrupt state of affairs in the United States. The Union Pacific Railway frauds seem to have no limit, as will appear from the following:

"The bill in equity filed by Attorney General Williams against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, sets forth that the company is indebted to the United States in the sum of over six millions for interest for the benefit of the railroad company, with the agreement that the company should pay principal and interest as they fell due. This balance is rapidly increasing, and the company's first mortgage bonds, to the amount of over twenty-seven millions, constitute a prior lien on the property, so that it is in the power of the managers, if they choose, to allow the interest to mature without payment and have the road sold under the mortgage, leaving the United States without security for advances amounting, principal and interest, to over thirty-three millions. The bill also recites the issue by the company of ten millions of land-grant bonds, ten millions of income bonds and two millions of bridge bonds, and the contracting of a floating debt of two millions, and claims that all the property granted to the company by the United States was a trust fund, and that the trust has been abused by the defendants for their own advantage by fictitious contracts, the illegal creation of pretended liabilities, and by unlawful dividends of stock and bonds, and prays that the managers may be enjoined from the payment of sums alleged to be due on such contracts and pretended debts, or from further transfers of stock and bonds, and that the holders of stock and bonds bestowed under the pretence of making dividends may be required to pay therefor in cash for the benefit of the United States as a creditor; and that the defendants may be required and compelled to account fully for the sums expended by them and to make reimbursement in cash for all illegal and improper or unreasonable expenditures. An injunction is also asked, to prevent the defendants from making any such disposition of their revenues as shall deplete them from the payment of the interest on their first mortgage bonds."

THE DEATH OF THE HON. JOSEPH HOWE, the Lieut. Governor of Nova Scotia, is announced in another column. It took place at Halifax on Sunday morning last. Mr. Howe was one of the foremost statesmen in America. Having acquired a knowledge of printing in his father's office, he afterwards purchased the "Nova Scotian" newspaper, which he edited for several years, and while in the discharge of his duties had occasion to dress down the Magistracy of his native County, for which he was sued for libel, and personally defended himself in Court, making his first great speech, and gaining his case, as the Jury unanimously acquitted him. He was afterwards elected several times representative for the city in the Legislative Assembly, of which he was appointed Speaker. He was a member of the Executive Council, and held various government offices, was a delegate to England on several occasions, and was leader of the Liberal party. He was afterwards appointed to the Privy Council in the Dominion Government, of which he was President; afterwards Secretary of State for the Provinces, and at the time of his death had been but a few weeks sworn in as Governor of his native Province. As a writer, speaker and statesman, he had few equals in the Dominion.

Truly, a great man has departed,—one whose the universal Press of the Dominion will lament as having been one of its brightest ornaments. He was an affectionate husband, indulgent parent, a warm friend and generous rival.

NEW MASONIC BUILDING.—Our Brethren of St. Mark's Lodge have purchased that excellent site on the corner of Water and Frederic Streets, and are having a foundation laid to place the large building upon, recently purchased by them from Henry Osburn, Esq. The lower flat is to be fitted up for a Store, and the upper part is to be finished for a large Lodge Room, with ante-rooms. The site is a central one, and will fill up a gap for many years vacant. We congratulate our Brethren on the selection of location, and the prospect of having a suitable building of their own.

FIRES IN THE WOODS.—Since Saturday the atmosphere has been filled with smoke from large fires which were raging in the woods in the State of Maine; and on Sunday last dense volumes of smoke came rushing down the valley between the Chocomaug and Boaboc mountains. We learn that much valuable woodland has been burnt, the fires having leaped over open fields destroying the grass and grain crops on some farms. We regret to state that some of Mr. James Orr's grass and grain fields were burnt. For some distance on each side of the Glenelg road, the woods present a cleared mass of blackened trees.

EMIGRANT CHILDREN.—It is reported that Miss McPherson sailed from England for Quebec on the 24th ult., with 150 boys; and one of her assistants was to sail on the 29th with 100 girls. It is to be hoped that they are of a better class, and will turn out better than some of those brought out by Miss Rye. Children from Workhouses are not generally the kind adapted to the requirements of the Province.

The Hon. S. L. Tilley, Mrs. Tilley and family are expected here by train this evening, to remain during the summer at their villa. The family of Sandford Fleming, Esq., will also make St. Andrews their summer residence.

ACCIDENT.—While some boys were playing Cricket yesterday, two of them ran to catch the ball, and struck each other so forcibly, that one of them, son of Mr. Robert Shaw, was knocked senseless, and remained so until a doctor was sent for. We learn that the little fellow is somewhat better to-day.

A little row took place in the office of a high legal officer, yesterday evening, between two individuals who had business with him; and at length they attempted to settle their difference by a resort to fistfists, for which they were promptly furnished with lodgings in the "stoons brig."

"THE UNION JACK" is the title of a new candidate for public favor, published in Fredericton by Mr. Miller. It is chiefly filled with well written literary articles, neatly printed, and is worthy of patronage.

EMIGRANTS.—A number of Danes arrived at St. John, on their way to the new settlement of Heliopolis. Ten men and women from England came in the same steamer and proceeded to Fredericton.

HUGH McADAM, Esq., was elected Mayor of Heliopolis, on Monday last.

The "Scottish American Journal" has commenced publishing a very interesting tale written by Dr. Wm. Chambers, entitled "Ailie Gilroy." The chapters already published of Scottish life are entertaining and life like. Back numbers of this excellent journal can be supplied to new subscribers. This tale alone is worth the annual subscription.

THE JUNE NUMBER OF HARPER'S MAGAZINE opens the Forty-seventh Volume under most brilliant auspices. The number contains sixty-seven engravings, and all its illustrated articles, with one exception, relate to our own country.

The May Number contained a very pleasant sketch of a yachting trip among the Azores. In the current Number a beautifully illustrated article by H. D. Jayes, on "Cheap Yachting," gives pen and pencil pictures of the interesting localities about Buzzard's Bay. The beauties of cheap yachting are graphically portrayed by the writer, who shows that the expense of a delightful yachting trip "need be no greater than that of board of ordinary, unfashionable water-glasses."

Through Mr. Lossing's pen, and the kindness of Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet, of New York, who has placed in the artist's hands his rare pictures from the celebrated Lord Rawdon collection, we have a very interesting paper, entitled "The Marquis of Hastings in America." Facsimiles are given of these pictures, which give accurate views of Boston and New York a century ago; of the Bunker Hill battle field just after the conflict; of the burning of Charlestown; and of other scenes and incidents connected with the Revolution.

Miss Constance F. Woolson contributes a very entertaining paper, excellently illustrated, on the "Wine Islands of Lake Erie." Among other things, she tells the thrilling story of Beall's privateering expedition.

A very characteristic article, giving the details of a tour in the Harz Mountains, or "Toy-country" of North Germany, with nearly thirty novel illustrations of character and scenery, is contributed by Henry Blackburn, formerly Editor of "London Society."

The Editor's Easy Chair, though not yet resumed by Mr. Curtis, contains some very graceful and useful reflections suggested by the four-hundredth birthday of Copernicus. The Editor's Literary Record is a valuable critical summary of recent literature. The Scientific Record, besides a comprehensive summary of scientific progress, brought down to the latest date, contains thirty separate articles of great value and suggestiveness. The Historical Record gives a complete political summary, and important information relating to the issue between the Western farmers and the railroads. It also contains a comprehensive review of the Indian Question.

SINGULAR RIOT IN INDIA.—A strange story comes from Bombay. Near the Towers of Silence, on whose summits the Parsees expose their dead by way of restoring the earthy fabric to the spiritual elements, lies a piece of ground to which their community asserts a claim. Certain persons having obtained possession of it as rightful owners, determined to build upon it, and ran up huts and sheds for the workmen. The lower order of Parsees worked themselves into a religious frenzy, seized upon the disputed ground in considerable force, and after a fight with bludgeons smashed everything they could lay their hands on. Reinforcements of the police having arrived, the rioters shut themselves up in the Towers of Silence, and swore they would kill the first person who dared to enter the holy place. The Commissioner of Police, however, forced the doors, captured the garrison to the number of eighty, and marched them off in irons to goal. The total number of persons seized in overt riot is reported by the papers to exceed 130.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S WEDDING.—The following appears in a letter to the "Times" from Naples, dated the 5th instant:—"There can be no hesitation, after all that is freely reported here, in now speaking of the engagement of the Duke of Edinburgh to the Grand Duchess Marie. Those who should be well informed tell me that they met at Hesse Darmstadt a year or two since, and that from that time an understanding has existed between them. During Prince Alfred's residence in Sorrento, though nominally staying at the Tasso, he has been constantly at the imperial villa from morning till night. His royal highness is now returning to London, but will leave it again shortly, and join the Empress and the grand duchess at Jugenheim, in Hesse Darmstadt. The Emperor will also be there later, and official publicity will then no doubt, be given to the marriage that is to be. One difficulty existed which has been surmounted. It was proposed as a condition that the Duke of Edinburgh should reside a certain period of time every year in Russia, but he refused to bind himself. Something more than rumor says that the Grand Duchess will bring her husband £20,000 a year, besides £200,000; but yet a larger fortune will be the sweet, amiable disposition of which every one about the court speaks."

SUMMARY. Some very astonishing figures are sent from Washington in reference to the postal guards. The number required already reaches 22,000, 000, and the demand is at the rate of over a million a day, that of Wednesday being $1,500,000. Probably this demand will not be permanently sustained, but it is evident that they are to be extensively used hereafter.

The minor details of the new census tables of manufacturer contain matter both instructive and amusing. We find, for instance, that all the people of the United States depend upon one shop for their home-made artificial eyes, and this shop only employs three hands. Think of the consequences to one-eyed people if this shop should burn up, or one or two of these men should die, or they should all go on a strike!

For the Standard. Mr. Editor.—The Band did not intend their performance in the Square on the evening of the 24th inst., as a serenade to any person in the vicinity, but were influenced by a desire to honor the Birthday of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria. By inserting this you will oblige May 20.

THE BAND. Mr. Editor.—Would you oblige many of your readers by copying the truthful and able letter of the Rev. Dr. Cramp, upon the School Question. Yours, F. S.

AN EMBARRASSING QUESTION.—One naturally supposes that post-office work has a good deal of routine in it, but sometimes post-masters as well as other people have to deal with embarrassing questions. A curious example is afforded by a matter now before the Post-office Department at Washington awaiting the decision of the Postmaster General. A man in Massachusetts, it seems, has invented a cage, composed of wood and wire netting, to send honey bees through the mails. The trap is a block of wood about six inches long and two inches wide by an inch deep; in this three large holes are bored nearly through, and the under side is covered with a fine wire netting. Seven bees, including a queen-bee, are placed in each compartment, and are introduced through a hole in the side of the block, which is plugged up by a piece of sponge soaked in honey. The postmasters and clerks object to these packages, for the alleged reason that the honey soaks through the paper placed over the holes, and daubs other mail matter in contact, and, besides, as one postmaster complained, "the clerks in his office did not get through examining and studying the contrivance until the bees stung every one of them; and in showing them how it was made and how to handle it without injury, the blasted things stung him, too." Acting Assistant Postmaster-General Matt, several weeks since, decided that these packages could not be admitted to the mails, upon the ground that they injured other mail matter; but Gen. B. F. Butler, as attorney for the inventor, appealed the case to the Postmaster General, and the latter is now deliberating what disposition shall be made of the matter.

RAILWAY TO YARMOUTH.—The extension of the Railway to Yarmouth at an early day we think may be now regarded as a fixed fact. A resolution passed the Dominion Parliament, on the last day of the session, authorizing the Government to enter into negotiations with a reliable company, for the transfer of the portion of the Government railway from the Junction to Wind-or, on condition of extending the railway from Annapolis to Yarmouth, subject to the approval of Parliament at the next session. This gift, while it will take nothing from the public treasury, (as the road has yielded no profit to the Government,) will be a valuable acquisition to the company, and with the subsidy granted by the Local Legislature, can scarcely fail to ensure the early accomplishment of an object in which the interests of the western section of the Province are so deeply involved.—Yarmouth Herald.

Leading Oppositionists in the Upper Provinces are said to be very much down in the mouth at the intelligence of Sir Hugh Allan's success among English capitalists in behalf of the Pacific Railway. The intelligence is undoubtedly a sore discouragement. They apparently felt sure they had destroyed his credit as a Railway projector in the English money market. To be disappointed after having gone so far and done so much to accomplish that object is distressing to them in the extreme.

scure little young Martin made pleased her more and more. She slyly put out her hand to take his gift. It was a ring, and he not only slipped into her hand, but on her finger. It was pretty ring, too—an emerald circled with pearls.

You know what I mean, he whispered. How becoming your suit is, she answered, do wear it. The next dance is yours—Hull's Victory—and the next—All Matilda? Every one. Balance? I should the conductor.

A New York girl had a man arrested and put under bonds for $1,600 for persecution. He persisted that he should marry her and followed her continually to persuade her, but she was obstinate, and after three years of ineffectual effort made the police look after him.

SIR WILLIAM FAIRBAIRN ON IRON SHIPS.—Sir William Fairbairn (as the Manchester Guardian) writes to give the weight of his authority to the now prevailing view as to the weakness of long-shank like ships. Such vessels may hold more cargo and sail faster from port to port than those properly constructed, but they also go more rapidly to the bottom. Sir W. Fairbairn does not hesitate to say that the Atlantic had, only been 210 feet instead of 420 feet long she would never have broken to pieces on the Menhaden rocks. He trusts that the Commissioners now sitting will include in their recommendation to Parliament some definite law in regard to principles of construction. There may be certain commercial advantages, Sir W. Fairbairn admits, in the new mode of shipbuilding, but there is danger to human life. This consideration should have some weight, for it is now being endeavored to be established that the safety of the living cargo of a vessel cannot be wholly secured under the head of "owner's risks." A firm, as Mr. Pimball has asserted, can afford to lose one unworthy ship for what it wins with the rest. A man whose life has been sacrificed in accordance with this interesting law of averages has unfortunately no margin for a further continuance of experiments.

Why the Valve Jar is Superior to all Others for Preserving Fruit.

1. Because it is the only one in which the contents can be securely fastened, and sealed while this jar is in use, without the aid of any stopper.
2. It is the only one that is automatically sealed, therefore, the only one that is perfectly safe in the market.
3. It is so simple that no skill is required to use it.
4. It is so securely fastened when placed in the kettle, and being immersed, the impregnation of the contents is confined in the jar, a more perfect vacuum produced and the heating of the hot jars entirely avoided.
5. It is well known that fruit jars which are closed with stoppers, fastenings burst by expansion, and the effect upon the content, surrounding is well understood by many housekeepers.
The Cover of the Valve Jar being a perfect seal, it valve makes an expansion impossible, and entirely excludes every possibility that takes in other fastenings. For sale by
