Death of Lord Monck.

LONDON. Nov. 30 .- The death is announced of Viscount Monek, a former Governor of the United Provinces of Canada. The Right Hon. Charles Stanley Monck was born at Templemore, Tipperary, Ireland, Oct. 10, 1819, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and called to the bar in | physicians. 1841. He sat in the House of Commons as a Liberal member for Portsmouth from July, 1852, to 1857, and was an unsuccessful candidate for Dudley in 1861. He was a Lord of the Treasury from 1855 to 1858, and was appointed Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of Canada, and Governor-General of British America, Oct. 28, 1861. His Lordship was formally reappointed under a fresh act of Parliament governor of the United Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick n June, 1867, but resigned in November, 1868. Afterwards he was one of the commissioners appointed to carry out the provisions of the act disestablishing the Irish Church in 1871. He succeeded his father as the fourth viscount in the peerage of Ireland on April 20, 1849, and was made a peer of the United Kingdom on July 12,

The Eastern Quarrel.

Unofficial advices received at Washingcon state that the negotiations for peace between China and Japan with the United States Ministers at Pekin and Tokio as the med um of communication are proceeding satisfactorily. The report that Great Britain purposes making a great naval demonstration at Chusan falls flat in diplomatic circles. A dipatch from Chee Foo asserts that terms of peace between Japan and China have been very nearly completed through he intervention of the United States Goverument, and that the feeling of security is now so strong that many foreign ladies are returning to Pekin. Japanese mail advices to the 16th show that the commanders of the Japanese forces on land and sea planned their attack on Port Arthur wisely. The attack to the very day and hour was made in accordance with the campaign laid down by the respective commanders days before. It is understood in Japan that the first army corps is to advance steadily and that the second army corps is to attack the army irregularly whenever opportunity offers. The first army corps will march on gradually through Manchuria, keeping communication open by telegraph and postal service and maintaining a route for transportation of stores. In the meantime the second division is to advance on Pekin, attacking the enemy en

The London Times' correspondent in Kobe, Japan, says that the whole nation seems to be intent upon the prosecution of the war, and that preparations for the winter campaign proceed rapidly. The native newspapers in Kobe assert that Japan will refuse to receive any peace envoy from China.

R. G. DUN & CO.'S REPORT. NEW YORK, Nov. 30 -R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: The complete success of the Government loan and the replenishment of the gold reserve have not perceptibly affected business nor prevented an advance of foreign exchange near to the exporting point. As January interest has soon to be met, and the operations of the syndicate are thought likely to prevent much selling of bonds to foreigners, some exports of gold are not im-

Meanwhile domestic trade and industry have been but little influenced by the heavy defalcation in one bank and minor disorders in two others, nor by the failure of the

The court rose at 1:30. After luncheon ex-Ald. W. J. Hill's cross-examination in the interest of ex-Ald. Maloney, was taken up, but nothing new was elicited. James Ross, of Montreal, a director and heavy shareholder in the Toronto Street Railway Company, said he did not know Ald. Hewitt, and did not, as a rule, lend money to people he did not know, but the transaction in which Friday morning, caused the destruction of he took up a mortgage on Hewitt's prophis barn and five horses. Loss about $500. erty was a curious one. The money had been diverted from another loan that had been made by him to the C. G. Smith Combe held in Orillia, beginning on Tuesday pany. He did not know why the transevening Dec. 4, and continuing for three action was not put in his name, but Mr. MacKenzie had power of attorney to act on his behalf. > Mr. MacKenzie, president of the street railway company, was examined for threequarters of an hour, the examination not being concluded when court rose. In general terms he denied all knowledge of corrupt relationship between the company and the aldermen, either personally or by any member of the company on his behalf. The only thing he admitted was that Noel Marshall had paid ex-Ald. E. A. MacDonald the sum of $4,500 to drop the cefebrated injunction against the company. Marshall had done this while he (witness) was out of the city, thinking he had done him a service, whereas it was really an injury. Marshall had, however, acted in good faith, and on his return witness had recouped him for the expenditure. As to the $13,000, invested by Mr. Ross in the mortgage on Hewitt's property, witness said they came to him to take up the morigage. He had not the money, but Mr. Ross had lots in the bank, and witness invested some of it. The property was good, and it was entirely a business transaction. He knew nothing of the draft for $7,000, made by Coleman on Mr. Everett. The court then adjourned till Monday.

THE TAX TROUBLE.

It is the opinion of some of London's manufacturers that exemption of taxes is not right, and at last night's meeting of No. 1 committee Mr. F. Noble, representing the Loudon Foundry Company, and Mr. Wortman, of Wortman & Ward, appealed against the action of the council in exempting competitors of theirs. They did not complain of paying the taxes, but wanted everyone else to do the same. The committee recommended the council to draw up a bylaw to cut off from exemption all who were not carrying out their agreement. The final audit on the city of London Trust was received from Andrew Dale. In connection with this matter Messrs. A. B. Powell and Robt. Pritchard appeared asking compensation for their eight years service. The matter was referred to Chairman Judd and the city solicitor to report on Monday night. Mr. John Watson wanted remitted some $131 25 taxes he had paid on the Green property, which he now occupies. As the taxes belonged to 1893 the committee defrom Mr. Mitchell and eleven others for the renting of a small room for club purposes in the East End hall was left in the hands of Ald. F. J. Fitzgerald. The matter of the expenditure of the Aged People's Homes was left in the hands of Inspector Bell to report upon. Inspector Bell's report on the case of Mrs. J. W. Elliott was received and the committee remitted the last installment. W. H. Seccombe and Geo. Beach asked for remission of 1893 taxes, Filed; no power. Rebecca Yeo, Mrs. Hickson and Sarah Johnston's cases will be looked into by the inspector, and Mrs. McKee's taxes will be remitted. A detailed statement of the street watering was received from the engineer. The moneys which the treasurer has received from outsiders, together with extras, will be handed over to the contractors. The city clerk sent in a report in the matter of J. P. G. Reid, manufacturer of land-rollers. It was filed for reference. A Toronto shoe firm requested the city to their ideas of exemption and benuses, but as London is well supplied with boot and shee factories, the city clerk will write them that the city would like to have them ere, but the statute prohibits bonusing in these cases. Sixteen thousand dollars is the amount the Hospital Trust want with which to build the new addition for paying patients. As the matter is to be more fully dealt with the communication was referred to the council, asking the Hospital Trust to be present. Re Westminster township and City of London, the township objected to the action of the city in collecting $1,500 back toxes on property in South London. The sub-committee will get the opinion of the city solicitor in the matter. large batch of accounts passed, includi $797 70 for registration expenses. Two Children May Die from Inhaling Cayonne Pepper Fumes. NEWBURG, Nov. 30 .- Two colored children are dangerously ill from the effects of inhaling the fumes of cayenne pepper. A Church Thursday night, and an athletic club held a social session down stairs. Some members of the athletic club got cavenue pepper, placed it in a pail, and heated a poker, and with it set the pepper burning. The fumes of the pepper escaped into the hall where the Sunday school entertainment was taking place, and caused the hall to be vacated in short order.

Many of the children were made sick. It was feared yesterday morning that at least six would not recover, but there are but two seriously ill. An investigation is in progress, and ar rests will tollow.

CANADIAN SUGAR TRUST

Annual Meeting-A Startling Statemen -Kicking by Some of the Shareholders.

HALIFAK, N. S., Nov. 30 .- The second annual meeting of the shareholders of the Maritime Sugar Trust was held here yesterday afternoon when some startling facts were brought out. The company has a capital of $3,000,000, and the total net $7,693 for the past fourteen months. Not withstanding this the president and the funds to the amount of $8,516. It is understood heavy losses were sustained on the stock on hand at the time the trust took over the refineries, the loss at Woodside alone amounting to $128,000. Some very plain language was used at the meeting by a few of the shareholders regarding the incompetence of the directors. A shareholder who has over $50,000 worth of stock in the concern said he would willingly sell out for 50 cents on the dollar. The president, J. F. Stairs, M.P., decided to retire, and Thomas Kinney, M.P., wa elected in his place.

Seeley's Downfall

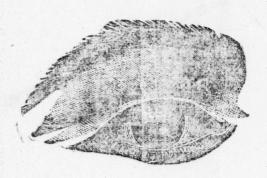

NEW YORK, Nov. 30 .- Samuel C. Seeley. the missing bookkeeper of the Nationa Shoe and Leather Bank, whose enermous defilcation caused a universal sensation, was a man whose personal habits and characteristics previous to the astounding revelation of his crime would refute any intimation reflecting on his integrity of opesty. He had the confidence of his superiors to such an extent that no examinawhat superficial scrutiny by a State official was ever thought to be necessary. Every detail of his private life, too, tended to strengthen the good faith reposed in him by his employers. He was remarkably regular in his habits, was never known to have frequented clubs or saloons, and although not a member, he rented a pew in the Central Congregational Church on Hancock street, Brooklyn, and attended the services in company with his wife. Ten indictments were handed in today by the grand jury against Samuel Seeley. A reward of $5,000 is offered for his cap-

TORONTO HOME FOR INCURABLES, Nov. 24,

B. Lindman, Esq., Toronto: My Dear Sir-I am 67 years of age, and for the past twenty-five years have been a sufferer from a large left Ingunal Hernia. During that period I have tried almost everybody's make of truss under the sun, and have derived very little satisfaction and no relief. I had come to the conclusion that there was no relief for me until I was recommended by my physician to be fitted with a Wilkinson Truss. I did so about three months ago, and can truthfully testify that it is the only one that has given me any permanent satisfaction whatever. I have no hesitation whatever in giving it the strongest possible recommendation as to its worth to me, and can say to all sufferers from a like cause that while there is life and a Wilkinson Truss there is hope. If I were not in a position to replace the Truss you have fitted me with I would not part with it for its weight in gold. to great has been the benefit to me, such a sufferer for over a quarter of a century. You are at liberty to use this in any way in which it might help to alleviate the sufferings of others, and I shall personally always have a good word to say for the Wilkinson Truss. I D. C. McKINNON. am yours sincerely,

Artificial Lyes and Glasses A SPECIALTY AT L. D. Trumpour's

160 DUNDAS STREET.

He Strongly Disapproves the Personal Property Provisions. Address Before the Board of Trade-

Ontario Manufacturers at a Disadvantage, He Claims-Mr. Murdech on Colonial Trade.

At the regular meeting of the Board of Trade last night Mr. Alex. W. Murdoch, of Murdoch, Barber & Co., Toronto, addressed the members on the subject of colonial trade, in which, he contended, there were tremendous possibilities. The delegates of the Colonial Conference here have been shown specimens of Canadian manufactures and admitted that there was a large opening for them in their countries. A system of bureaus was being established in the colonies where samples of Canadian goods would be placed and trade tested. The manufacturers of Galt and Cornwall were even now combining to send an experimental shipment to the colonies. The intercolonial banking facilities, said Mr. Murdoch, were perfect. The C. P. R. were already offering rates, and other roads would do the same. He pointed out the remarkable expansion of commerce in Cape Colony, where the volume of trade had increased in five years from £3,000,000 to £9,000,000. They had two agents from Toronto located at Cape Town. A line of steamers to this colony from Canada would be subsidized when Parliament opened. As to Australia the C. P. R. were willing, if they thought trade would warrant it, to put on a dozen more steamers. They had to refuse freight now.

Mr. McClary - How do freight rates from New York compare with those via Vancouver. Mr. Murdoch admitted that they were against Ontario, but if sufficient influence were brought to bear on the Canadian Government to put on further steamers, then the Canadian railroads would find it to their interests to reduce the rates. Mr. Murdoch was thanked by the board.

He will be in the city a tew days to interview manufacturers. MR. M'CLARY ON ASSESSMENTS. Mr. John McClary made an address i which he strongly disapproved of the pro visions of the Ontario Assessment Act with respect to personal property. The manufacturer of Ontario with a tax of 40 per cent on the earning power of money could not compete with his rival in Montreal, where capital was exempt. There was \$7,000,000 in the savings banks of London. Two per cent tax on that would produce \$140,000. If that tax were applied would the money remain there? No. Even a tax of $\frac{1}{8}$ per cent — \$8,750 — would drive half of it out. The earning power of this \$7,000,000 at 4 per cent would be \$280,000. Two per cent of this would yield \$5,600, which was the most it would stand without disturbing it. The income tax in England was a penny in the pound. At this rate \$7,000,000 would yield \$1,150. No manufacturer could succeed and pay 40 per cent of its earnings in assessment to the corporation. There was no Province outside of Ontario where a manufacturer was taxed 2 per cent on his capital. Quebec's law was a reasonable one; there was no personal property tax, but merchants paid a tax of 71 per cent on the rental. The most that active capital could stand was an ALL RESERVED SEATS,.....250 assessment on its income. Mr. McClary referred to the time. asked the City Council to limit their assessment to \$100,000 while the company would increase their capital to \$500,000. The council got more taxation by this and the proposition was satisfactory. He (Mr. McClary) then looked forward to a change in the Ontario law, but it did not come. The company two years before the expiry of this period asked a continuance of that fixed assessment for ten more years. Mr. McClary then read an extract from the

> to January, 1893, to show what the company contempleted doing in case their petition was refused. It concluded thus: "An assessment of 2 per cent on the capital would as effectually drive it from the Province as the same law applied to capital invested in banking and loan societies, whose average earnings are much larger than money invested in manufacturing. Fully understanding our position, should the City Council refuse to carry out the undertaking of the former council, we look on it as absolutely necessary to take such steps as will enable us to remove our head office from this Province to the Province of Quebec, and endeavor to dispose of our plant here on the best possible terms, anticipating a large loss on the plant. Failing this, to promote a limited company with a small capital, with a view to purchasing the plant in this city, while our present company would be used more largely as a purchasing and mercantile than a manufacturing company. This appears to us the most reasonable solution of the problem, should the council fail to carry out its former reasonable under-

annual report of the McClary Company up

The board considered the subject one of great importance, and may discuss it fully at a special meeting. In the meantime the secretary will ask the opinions of other boards, notably Toronto, with a view to Do Justice to St. Andrew's Society's Annual Dinner.

Characteristic Congratulations from Sister Societies.

Spirited Addresses by Veterans and Recruits, Citizens and Guests-Spiced With Sentiment and Song-A Great and Genial Gathering.

Scotchmen, Scottish music, Scottish mirth, Scottish wit, Scottish poetry, Scottish lore, Scottish dialect, Scottish edibles, and Scottish good nature mingled around the festive board of the City Hotel last night, when the annual dinner of St. Andrew's Society was in progress. Even the lassies who waited on the tables caught the infection and wore Glengarry bonnets on their heads and tartan in their belts. The accommodation of the commodious dining-room was taxed to its utmost by a very representative gathering. The room itself was draped with pendant streamers of red, white and blue. FUR 5c. Around the walls were hung the banner of St. George, the Canadian flag, the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes, Mr. Fred L. Evans presided at the piano, and Messrs. George Angus and Roseile Pococke were present with their violins. When the excellent music furnished by the trio ceased Pipers Geo. Augus and Alex. Milne were ever ready to take up the strain.

THE NEW PRESIDENT. Before commencing supper the retiring president, Mr. J. D. Clarke, arose and introduced the newly-elected head-Mr. R. K. Cowan. The applause was great as Mr. Clarke said: "The new president is a gentleman who will do full honor to the situation, and is a worthy son of a worthy sire. Continuing, Mr. Clarke read the list of other officers elect, as follows:

First Vice-President -- Col. Macbeth. Second Vice-President-Dr. McLaren. Secretary-Mr. Oliver Leslie. Treasurer-Mr. J. W. Jones.

Collector-Mr. Donald McDonald. Relief Committee-Messrs. A. Tytler, A. Macpherson, James Shand, T. A. Rowat, E. A. Cooper, J. L. Barron, and George

ROBERT McKAY, President. From Brantford—
May Grit and Tory baith agree,
Tae let their differs bide a wee,
And join together h-nd in hand,
And sing auld Scotia's heathery land.

REPLIES. The following replies were sent by President Cowan: To Cornwall-On the hill o' life may ye seldom meet a brither gangin' doun. To Windsor-We're a' sae weel i' the noo, dae ye see, a' things gae richt that we try.

To Brantford—
Aye, let Grit and Tory a' agree,
This very nicht,
To shed on Scotland's brilliant page

The strongest licht. To Toronto-Let thistle and maple leaf aye wag the gither, and Canada need fear nae foe, never, REGRETS.

Letters and telegrams of regret were received from Sir John Carling, Thos. S. Hobbs, M.P.P., H. T. Smith (president St. George's Society) and Rev. W. J. Clark (senior chaplain of the society).

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS. President Cowan in his address spoke feelingly of the absence of the former senior chaplain, the late Rev. J. A. Murray, and an ex-president, the late Col. "I return thanks for my election," said Mr. Cowan. "I deem it a great honor to represent St. Andrew's Society. When I look through the list of past presidents I notice among themboth the living and the dead-some who have occupied very prominent positions in London. And the survivors, whether in London or wherever else they be, still occupy the very highest positions." (Applause.)

THE TOAST LIST. Mr. Cowan then briefly introduced the toast of "The Queen an' a' Her Bairns." The toast was honored with the singing of the National Anthem.

Col. Macbeth, first vice-president, proposed the toast of ."The Governor-General an' Lady Aberdeen." It was cheered to the echo. Mr. Tod then sang a beautiful tenor sole, "Macgregor's Gathering."

The toastof "The President of the United States an' a' His Bairns" was spoken to by Dr. McLaren, the second vice-president. "I am glad to say that I am a Scotchman at least once a year," said Mr. Jacks, United States consul, in replying. Continuing he said: "Mr. Cleveland, President of the United States, is still the champion of tariff reform and sound currency. He is the strong advocate of pure politics and of good government. He believes in enforcing the laws of his country as he finds them on the statute book." (Applause.).

"St. Andrew's Day," the toast of the evening, was proposed by President Cowan in felicitous terms. A VETERAN.

Mr. J. W. Mackintosh sang "A Highlandman's Toast," and then Mr. Robt. Reid, "the father, grandfather and expresident," as President Cowan put it, arose to reply admidst a burst of applause. He congraculated the society on having such an able young Scotchman for president, and was pleased to see so many young men present. It augurs well for the future of the society in its work of benevolence. "I am standing here tonight," said Mr. Reid, "looking back through the vista of 35 years in connection with this organization, and have been present at every one of them to my knowledge, and having something to do in connection with them it would appear that the thing would be stale. But it is not. It is as charming to me to meet you here after 35 years as it ever was in any period of that long term. (Applause.) Mr. Reid proceeded to give some interesting reminiscences of his early days in London, when he and some other bachelors useed to meet in the City Hotel, which was then kept by the late William Balkwell. He was the only Scotchman in the crowd, but they got along exceedingly well together, as Scotchmen and English. men the world o'er generally do, and they had not been meeting together long before they established it as an invariable rule that "Auld Lang Syne" should be sung at every parting.

Mr. Reid proceeded and extoled the good traits of Englishmen and Irishmen in elequent words, and then in the language of Burns he talked of Scotland and Scotchmen, and the natural national pride of Scotia's sons. His incidental historical anecdotes and illustrations, told in his inimitable style, were received with patriotic cheering. It was not necessary, he said, for him to say much about Auld Scotia, after the bragging he had done for her last year. (Laughter.) Scotchmen had every reason to be proud of their country and its history, but still he wanted all Canadians to respect the Dominion the more-to work for her, to regard her as the country that should have their best

Robt. Boston, M.P., spoke very modestly, and told a story which explained in part his condition of bachelorhood. He also congratulated Mr. Cowan on his election to the chair. Mr. C.S. Hyman, M.P., was accorded his customary enthusiastic reception and proceeded to give a laughable account of what a candidate had to do to please everybody. The candidates were just exactly what the people made them. That they were no worse was well, that they were no better was the fault of the average elector. "If I had not a prouder birthright," said Mr. Hyman, "than that of Scotchman, in being a native born Canadian, notwithstanding your bagpipes and haggis, I would be in-clined to be a Scotchman." (Applause.) The toast "The Land o' Oor Choosin" was coupled with the names of Messrs. Geo. C. Gibbons, Q.C., John Cameron and

Mr. E. Devlin gave a solo in good voice. "Canada is our country," said Mr. Gibbons. "Canada is the country that we must make. I love you Scotchmen benone of the fends of your country, but you become true Canadians.
We must by some means stir up a Canadian national spirit that will dominate and pervade the people of this country. We should make these people a people with a history -with a history such as these Scottish sons pessess, that makes all our blood tingle. There must be a general joining together of all classes, of all tongues, of all

Dr. Geo. C. Davis.

I am here with other young Canadians tonight to encourage and foster that feeling.' Mr. John Cameron lauded Canada as a good place to be born in, a good place to live in. Its glorious climate-its wheat lands : pread out to the sun-its orchards and gardens-its educational system-its sentinelled Rockies-its fresh water seas, its noble St. Lawrence—its lakes and islets of Muskoka—its halo of ancient romance, with ups and downs of French and En peoples, in favor of a Canadian nationality.

Its compost life was enriched through its two race The art of differing peoples living togeter would in time make Canadians larg tolerant and broad-minded. Whether hr original descent were Scottish, Irh, English, German or French, let the moo be-Canada forever ! Canada first. "Scotchin deserve the greatest praise for leaving heir feuds at home," said Dr. Davis, "buthere is one thing that you do bring-youbring here the bagpipes, and I den't kny which is the worst. (Laughter.) We ave all the advantages of any other county in the world without any of the disadvatages, and we all as Canadians can learn desson from the Scotchmen. I love Scotemen for their love of their native land I love them because they know the histor of their own country; I love the Scotchen because on every hand they stick up fe the Scotch, and although they have a tenency to exaggerate their virtues I think tat in that regard they are sinning in th proper direction. (Laughter.) We as Chadians do not stick up as loyally and devotedly for our country as we should Altnough in this city we have different ational societies, it is to our shame the there is no society which is distinctly Chadian in its character." (Applause.) ThomasCahill recited and was encored.

He then sing a solo. In response to the toast of "The Learned Fouk" Mr Thos. H. Purdom said that the Canadian par was certainly cosmopolitan. Nationally at the bar or on the bench was not recognized. Mr. MKillop said that the bar and bench of Canada would compare favorably with those of any country in the world, although (anada was not nearly so old s nationas nany of them. Mr. Frank Love told several very funny post-plandal stories, and also had something good to say of the bar and the bench of Carada, When 'Sister Societies' were toasted Mr. Imach replied on behalf of President H. T. Saith, of St. George's Society, who had illess in his family. Mr. Imlach made a spial and witty speech.

Mr. J.B. Cox, secretary of St. George's, recited 'A Farewell to Freedom Forever,' amidst aplause. Dr. Mtchell, president of the Irish Benevolet Society, spoke for Ireland's patron sant, and had a good reception. Mr. Jun Daly also responded in a patriotic train and sang "The Pardon Came TocLate." "The Men o' Siller an' Wark," brought responses from Messrs. John Campbell, Geo. A. Smerville and Geo. M. Reid. Mr. Erde Devlin sang "The Man Who Had an Elphant on his Hand." In response to the toast of "Those gallant lads by lan' an' sea wha' guard oor ain

Now the election is over, citizens generally need bother themselves no more regarding the Provincial lists till the eve of another election-in all probability not for four years to come. Meanwhile, any little flaws in the new act will have been remedied, and the cost of operation-a mere nothing to the individual voter-can be cut down. But we say that even if the revision once in four years does cost a few bundred dollars, if it relieves the citizens and political parties of all anxiety and all expense in the interval, the new law will continue to be a positive boon to the com-

A FIVE MILLION DEFICIT.

Were Ottawa Ministers able to evade the fact that there will for the current year be a Dominion deficit to the astounding extent of some Five Millions of Dollars it might perhaps be fair tactical policy of the uncourageous sort to rush to the country before having to encounter cross-examination on the floor of the House of Commons, whatever one might think of the lack of Ministerial courage in not facing the music and the lack of Ministerial honesty in not letting the people, whose servants Ministers are, know the truth and the whole truth. The incompetency and extravagance of the Dominion Government have brought things to a pass much in contrast with the competent and economical administration of public affairs in Ontario ander the rule of Sir Oliver Mowat.

Let Ministers meet the House like men; not, like cravens, shirk meeting the grand committee of the nation.

The Old Riding Will Stand True to Its Colors-Speeches by the Candidate and Others,

That the old riding of South Middlesex, Liberal for many years, will stick to its West Huron. It is believed, however, that old principles and at the next general election return to Parliament a scrong supporter of the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, is a their burdens. It was discussed for over Cartier and Nagle were also arrested, the Liberals at the general election, as they did settled fact. A general election is believed in 1891. There are far stronger reasons to be near at hand, but though the exact today why they should do so than could be date has not been set, the electors of the adduced in the elections of three and a half constituency made doubly sure not to be taken by surprise, and called a convention for yesterday at Delaware. The motion was greeted with loft cheers. Mr. Joseph Howlett seconded. "And I would also beg to take the nomination unanimous," contined Mr.

Hardy. This, too, was quickly seconded, and amid applause was carried by a solidstanding

As no other names were presided the president called upon the preent and future member for South Mddlesex. Mr. Boston was received with a found of applause in which every delegae joined and continued for several minues. Mr. Boston expressed his sincerest tianks to the delegates for making him the unanimous choice of the convention. Ie went on to tell of how necessary it was for the workers to stand together if they vasted to win, even if it was a "hived" consithency. A Voice-We will, and give your opponents a worse thrashing than the Conservative candidate got in Lindon. (Laughter.) Mr. Boston, continuing, referred to his career in the municipal council of Lobe, and then got down to his career in the House, the Patron platform and the policy that though he had been in the Hose for only a short time he had voted onseveral | ing. No clue. questions and was prepared to sand by his every action. (Applause.) The Government came down with what the called "reformed tariff," but still in the aterests of the monopolies. If they had stock to it as at first brought down it would have been of some benefit, but monopolisis came down to the House and the tariff went back almost to its old place again. the only item which benefited the farmes at all was the reduction of the duty on binders. After dealing with other questions Mr. Boston took up the Patron platferm, saying among other things that the principles and aims of that organization were identical in nearly every respect with those of the Liberals, who had steadily fught for these reforms. "It is somewhat suprising to me," said the speaker, "that they should place candidates in opposition to uch men as Hon. David Mills and Sir Richard Cartwright. These two have been battling in the farmers' interests session after session. The latter at the last House brought in a resolution which ended to a month, but was finally defeated by a vote of 128 to 72. I should think this would convince the Patrons of the country that Sir Richard Cartwright and the Liberal party are their friends." Mr. Boston further showed a ridiculous position into which Sir John Thempson had put himself. The many gross scandals brought to light were being investigated last year, and a resolution was moved from the Liberal side of the House asking that all witnesses examined before the public accounts committee be sworn. This was voted down, but in a few days Sir John Thompson, seeing that the country would not stand it, turned around and decided to consent to the resolution. The result was, the Minister of Railways declared, that men had been robbing the country right and left, the excuse being that the Ministers in charge knew nothing about it. Was that a proper way for any servant of the people to try to escape responsibility? Mr. Boston criticised the extravagance of the Government in many respects, and declared himself strongly in favor of the freest possible trade with Great Britain and the United States. OTHER SPEAKERS. Mr. J. H. Elliot declared himself ready to support any party which would fight such an in quitous tariff as the Government put in force, and he hoped by united work a strong verdict would be given in favor of tariff reform. He did not think any Government had the privilege of extracting money from the masses and placing it in the pockets of monopolists.

Arch. Sinclair coincided with Mr. Elliot on the tariff question, and thought they had the right man as their candidate. The large gathering was a sure sign of success. Mr. Boston was an honest and level-headed man, and knew best what the farmers needed. Ald. Parnell, of South London, made a good speech, in which he declared himself as ready to work for Mr. Boston till the last vote was polled. He attacked a recent statement by Dr. Montague, "that the country was prosperous at the present time, due to the National Policy." "Why," said No. 6 ward's alderman, "it has been the curse of Canada. It has done more injury to the farmers than anything else, and their eyes are opened. Reeve Hardy, of Caradoc, was confident that, judging by the enthusiasm of the meeting, Mr. Boston would be returned by a handsome majority. He also attacked the system of compiling the voters' lists, and spoke in tavor of running all elections on the municipal lists. Secretary Glennie and Mr. John Macpherson, of South London, came to help in nominating a worthy member. "He is not gifted with what is called 'gab,'" said the latter peaker, "as some men are, and you know that such men do not lways win. (Laughter.) We had an installe of it in London not long ago." Mrs. Holliday was almost suffocated, as was her husband, who was also badly burned. The house and furniture was valued at $9,000; insured in the Perth Mutual for $2,500. There was also burned in the house about $430 in cash, besides a number of valuable papers, chiefly notes. These amounted to about $15,000. Mr. Holliday does not anticipate that this will be a complete loss, as he can prove most of them. The cause is believed to have been the dropping apart of the furnace pipes in the cellar.

Little Girl had to be Kept in a Dark Room. Could not See to Feed Herself. Remedies and Doctors All Failed. Cured in One Week by CUTICURA.

My little girl had very sore eyes. I tried everything, but nothing did any good. I took her to a doctor in Atlanta, who treated her for a year, but she kept getting worse. She was close blind and had been kept in a dark room for more than a year; could not see to feed herself; and they have never been as yet the least particle sore or even looked red from that day until this, and it will be three years the first of May. They certainly cured her, and I think of May. They certainly cured her, and I think they are the greatest remedies out. I only used half a box of Cuticura, one cake of Cuticura Soar, and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent; so you see what wonders they did for my little girl. I have read of all of these most wonderful cases, but never before thought that they might be true; but I know this to be the positive truth.

A Source of Dyspepsia. A fruitful source of dyspepsia is the abit of eating too rapidly and washing the food down with drink, instead of chewing thoroughly so as to moisten every article f food with the saliva of the mouth. When serious complications do result calomel and other poisonous drugs should not be resorted to. Eseljay's Liver Lezenges will posilively cure these troubles without injury to the system. They are 25 cents a box, or five boxes for a dollar.

DR. GUELLIOT, of Rheims, contends that cancer is contagious. Before the recent congress of French surgeons at Lyons he cited instances where the inhabitants of a particular district of a town or a group of houses have been especially visited by the disease. In some houses three or four tenants have successively been its victims. The transmission may be direct from the body, but it is effected more frequently through wearing apparel or table utensils.

SECRET OF HIS POWER.

Dr. Heinrich Hensoldt on the Occuitism of Napoleon's Career.

The revival of interest in the Napoleon idea at this particular time is due to the spirit of intense demand in the subcurrents of human thought. What was the meaning of Napoleon's career? What was the secret of his power? Whence did he derive his tremendous force? Was he the child of fortuitous circumstance? Or did the greatness reside in himself, as creator of the marvelous drama of which he was the centre?

Dr. Heinrich Hensoldt, Ph. D., scientist, geologist, explorer and oriental traveler, is just now a rising star above the horizon of western public view whose rising is full of peculiar significance for the future to those whose penetrating gaze can go behind outward events to their occult causes. For he comes as the advocate of the philosophy of causes.

Probably no man living, therefore, can throw such light as he on the hidden springs of Little Nap's career. His treatment of the theme is not a mere rehash of battles, marches, and military strategythe outward panorama of deeply hidden springs of action which escape the notice of superficial observers. It is rather a philosophic presentation, a compact picture of the Napoleonic idea behind the screen of events-in short, the occultism of Napoleon's career.

Dr. Hensoldt's experience in India and

HEINRICH HENSOLDT. ently fitted him for making this entirely new analysis of the fascinating theme which now engrosses so much of public attention. His own career, which makes him fit for the task he has undertaken, is thus spoken of by himself in the Arena: Although the educational advantages were great which as a boy and student I enjoyed in Germany, yet I may say that I owe the store of my information to my own efforts in later life, viz., to an intense craving for knowledge which caused me to enter deeply into various departments of science which under ordinary circumstances are mastered only by specialists working in particular grooves. It has been my fate to travel rather extensively, and this also opened my eyes to many things which are not usually learned from books. I left Germany while still a youth, accompanying Dr. F. Goldschmied, a distinguished archæologist and Sanscrit scholar, to the Island of Ceylon, to explore the ruined cities of Anuradhapoora and Pollanarna, now buried in the jungle, and worth the reason in the tand of water the reason in the tand. spent two years in that land of mystery, of which I could tell a tale. I afterward traveled as a naturalist over the whole of India, then through a part of Thibet, Bhotan and British Burman, and in 1883 from Rangoon to Mandalay, being at that time the first European who ventured through the wilds of the Irawaddy. Of my subse-quent travels in Madagascar, South Africa, and on this continent I will only say that they enabled me to amass a store of knowledge which no amout of book study could have conferred. Doctor Hensoldt's travels in the orient covered a period of eleven years, eighteen months of which was spent in the land of the lamas-mysterious Thibet. To reach that land, walled in by mountains of almost impassable altitude, he disguised himself as a high-cast Brahmin and accompanied by a Hindoo friend as servant succeeded in escaping the suspicion of the Chinese, whose policy it is to prevent the white man from entering that conquered province. While in Lhassa, the capital city of Thibet, he was one day summoned into the presence of the Dailai Lama, or great spiritual chief of the Buddhist world, who dwells in a pyramidal structure called "The Golden Temple." He claims to be the only white man who has been honored with an interview with this great charac-

A few years ago Dr. Hensoldt came to this country and was connected with the faculty of Columbia College in the school of mines as lecturer on geology. His series of papers in the Arena on "The School Doctrine of the Brahmins" and kindred subjects, beginning about a year ago, have won for him not only a national reputation as a writer of marvelous clearness and penetration, but, as one of his critics says, "his fame has gone all over the civilized world" as an authority on the subjects with which he deals. He resigned his professorship in Columbia College that he might devote his entire time and energies to the spreading of this metaphysical science in the west.

Dr. Hensoldt's career from the very beginning has been in the interest of science -materialistic science at first, leading up to occult science gradually, or the unveiling of the casual world.

Dr. Hensoldt's birthplace was Wiemar, Germany, that centre of culture made brilliant by the genius of Goethe, Schiller and Schopenhauer, at which point he made his debut about-well, about thirty-seven

TWEEDS

The ladies of London are sufficiently conversant with the price of Dress Materials to know a genuine bargain when they see it announced. We will give six yards skirt lining, two yards waist and sleeve lining, one yard canvas, four yards binding, shields, steels, hooks and eyes, silk and cotton threads, and a whole suit of beautiful Tweed for $3 22. Never was such a chance, and these are just as good:

250 Buys a 35c Tweed. Great value and the patterns are very pleasing. 356 Buys a 45c or 50c Tweed now. We want to clear, that's the reason. 500 Buys a 60c. 65c or 75c Tweed now. There is comfort in these as well as fashion.

BLANKETS.

Quality of goods considered, no house in the Province undersells us. Everybody feels the need of a blanket these nights, and those contemplating purchasing such articles should see ours first. We quote for $175. Take this as a

(Special to the ADVERTISER.)

TORONTO, Nov. 30.—At the Western cattle market today the feeling was a little firmer for cattle, caused by continued light offerings. Hogs were weak, having fallen about to per ib.

Sheep and lambs were dull and quiet. Sheep and lambs were dull and quiet.
There was no buying of cattle for export.
Receipts today at both markets were 27 car loads, which included 212 sheep and lambs, 1,175 hogs and about half a dozen calves. One or two car loads of stockers and feeders were bought for farmers, prices and freeders were bought for farmers, prices and freeders. ers and recers were bought for farmers, prices paid ranging from 24c to 24c per 1b mostly, one or two choice lots going up to 3c per 1b. The feeling for butchers cattle was firmer, as high partition partition and the price of the partition of of the or two choice lots going up to 3e per lot feeling for butchers' cattle was firmer, as high as 31-2c per lb being paid in several instances. Offerings of good cattle were only meager, which had a tendency to keep the market up, which had a tendency to keep the market up, there was no buying for Montreal, but the local demand for choice butchers cattle was good. One or two picked heifers and steers went up to 3½c per lb, but these were exceptional. Common cattle sold down to 2½c to 2½c per lb. In hogs there was a drop of about ½c per lb, best bacon bogs selling at from 4c to 4½c per lb, and others down in proportion. Stores and thick fat bogs brought from $3.75 to about $3.90 per cwt; good lambs and shipping sheep were on a par at 3c per lb, with slow demand. There was practically no dealing in butchers sheep, those few ging, fetching about $2.50 per head.

LOGAL BREVITIES.

-Water Commissioner Jones, who has been ill, is able to be out again. -Fifty new electric lamps will be lighted Dec. 15, making the total number in the city 274. -Mr. James Malloch has been asked to stand as alderman in No. 4 ward, and has promised to consider the matter. -Guy Bros.' Minstrels paraded the streets this morning, and furnished some good music. The feats of the drum major were clever. -Mr. W. L. Blaikie, the popular tenor, will sing "The City Beautiful," by Paul Rodney, in Queen's Avenue Church tomorrow evening. -The revision of the London West voter's lists will take place in the Temperance Hall on Wednesday. Judge Edward Elliott will preside. -The little Misses Lillian and Beatrice Shand, the well known Scottish dancers, of this city, took part in a St. Andrew's concert at Guelph last night. -Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bartram have returned from Niagara Falls, where they attended the funeral of Mrs. Bartram's brother, Mr. George Barker. -One of the diphtheria cases reported on Wednesday since has proved fatal. Diphtheretic croup is placarded at 699 Dundas street, and scarlet fever at 729 Elias street.

-The case of John Hall, of East London, charged with selling liquor to Oneida Indians, was heard before Squire Lockwood at Delaware yesterday. Judgment was reserved.

-Wells Sholdice, of McGillivray, was bailed today, giving a personal surety for $800 and two bonds for $400 each. His trial for the Exeter mill robbery begins next week.

-The entertainment committee of Court Magnolia, A. O. F., gave an oyster supper in the Ontario House last night, to which the court's many friends who had assisted in making the first anniversary so successful, were invited. -A horse belonging to a rag peddler named Haywood dropped at the corner of King and Wellington streets shortly after noon today. It was unable to rise, and was killed with a blow from an axe and carted off to the boneyard. -Mr. John Sutherland, miller, was dusting the machinery of his mill, just north of the city yesterday, when he had the misfortune to lose a thumb and part of the index finger of one of his hands. The accident was a very painful one.

-At Osgoode Hall on Monday the cases of London West vs. Bartram and Bartram vs. London West will come before a court of appeal comprising Chief Justice Hagarty and Justices Burton, Osler and Maclennan. An effort will be made to have the judgment for the village upset in the former case, while in the latter the question of costs will be argued.

-The returns from the recent entertainment given by the young people of Dundas Street Sunday school, under the direction of Miss Bell Brown, of the Conservatory of Music, and Miss Keenleyside, show the net proceeds to have been $127, which will go to the fund for the new Sunday school uilding. It may not be generally known that Miss Nellie Burnip, whose singing so It was a vegetable and provision market, captivated the large audience, is a pupil of and although the farmers' wagons Miss Brown, and although not yet 12 years were arranged with great regard to old her enunciation, clear phrasing and easp production of tone was commented on by many. Her performance certainly re-

-Last evening the "Pearl Gatherers" Mission Band" in connection with the Colborne Street Methodist Church Sabbath school held a pleasant entertainment, at which some beautiful missionary choruses were given by the band. The rest of the programme was as follows: Recitation, John Sinclair; song, Katie Bedgegood; dialogue by four little girls, "How four dollies went as missionaries"; instrumental, George Burr and Percy Madden; recitation, Ella Switzer; dialogue, "The Light of the World in Jesus," illustrated by ernamental lighted candles, which had a very pretty effect; Mrs. McMechan, an excellent address of encouragement to the band; resitation, Wallace Crawford; song, Miss Niall; recitation. Eva Crawford; duet, George Burr and Percy Madden; the selection, "Glad Tidings." A flag exercise de-lighted the audience, and the band have been requested to repeat it in another church. The arrangements were successfully carried out under the efficient superintendence of Miss Patricia Murray and -An enjoyable social was held at the Miss Knapp.

school room, Christ Church, Wellington street, last evening, in aid of the Church Improvement Society, the Rev. Mr. Moorehouse ably presiding. A large audience patronized the entertainment, and the school room was tastefully decorated. Miss T. Wright obliged with two solos, which were rendered in a very pleasing and finished manner, and Miss McDonald's violin solo exhibited good command of that difficult instrument. Clarionet solos by Mr. Geo. Platt were appreciatively received and encored. The Rev. Mr. Moorehouse proved to be an able reciter, at times fairly convulsing his auditors. Miss Evelyne Wennesheimer also recited in a very feeling manner, her work on this occasion showing considerable promise. Harmonica selections by Messrs. Arthur Platt and Mr. Geo. McCann received deserved encores, and solos by Mr. J. Welch and Miss Watson were acceptably given. Altogether the affair was a great success, and we understand will be repeated n the near future.

It has been definitely decided that the dates on which General Booth shall visit the Forest City are Saturday, Sunday and Monday, January, 26, 27, and 28, 1895. The general has had some marvelous receptions in various towns and cities he has visited in Canada and the United States, but it is certain that none will eclipse the enthusiastic welcome he will receive from the citizens of London.

They Stole a Ride. William Ralph, David Winters and Arthur Saunders, three youths who claim Bay City, Mich., as their home, were arrested by G. T. R. Constable Barnwall on the arrival of the L. E. and D. R. train last night. They had stolen a ride from St. Thomas to this city, and were charged with trespassing on railway property. At the Police Court this morning they said that they were on their way to Toronto, where they could get work; and asked to be allowed to continue their way. Mr. Barnwall said he would not press the charge if they stayed away from G. T. R. property. They promised to do this and were discharged. A North End Burglary.

A bold and daring robbery was perpetrated in the North End at an early hour this morning, and that the amount stolen was not larger was no fault of the burglars. About 2:30 o'clock some one entered the house of Mr. James Egan, inspector of weights and measures, who resides at 812 Talbot street. Entrance was effected by means of a rear window which had not been made fast. The burglar appeared to be after money, as he did not carry anything away but Mr. Egan's clothes. He rifled these on the street outside, and a policeman found them on the sidewalk shortly afterwards. A few dollars that were in one of the pockets was all the booty that was secured. The Market Was Large.

The market this morning was probably the largest so far this season and was the forerunner of the large-sized markets that are always noticeable just before Christmas. space the square was by no means large enough to accommodate the crush. The hay dealers had to be content with the flects great credit on Miss Brown's training | south side of King street. The quantity of potatoes and apples on was remarkable. The first named sold low at 50 and 55 cents, and apples had a dull sale at 50 to 75 cents a bag. The meat market was glutted and prices slumped considerably. Beef could hardly be given away at 4 to 5 cents a pound, lamb sold at 51/2 to 7 cents, and dressed hogs brought from traffic in dressed hogs was lively, and about half the hogs on were sold for shipment to Montreal, where the demand is good. The supply of grain was good, considering the state of the roads, but prices were no better than usual. Wheat brought from 90 to 95 cents; cats, 85 to 86 cents; corn, 90 to 95 cents; barley 80 to 90 cents, and beans (quiet) at 80 cents to $1. Butter was a little lower at 14 to 20 cents a pound according to quantity. Strictly fresh eggs were 1 cent up and sold from 15 to 21 cents a dozen. The supply of poultry was extremely large and prices low. Spiendid turkeys sold for 75 and 80 cents and upwards, and chickens brought as low as 35 cents a pair. FAREWELL TO MR. NELLES.

A Tribute From the Y. M. C. A .- Given an Address-Other Association No: es. The board of trustees of the Y. M. C. A. met last night for the purpose of saying farewell to one of their number, Mr. H. E. Nelles, manager of the Dominion Savings Company. Mr. Wm. Bowman presided and in a few well-chosen words referred to the long faithful service rendered the association by the retiring treasurer and called upon the secretary, Charles R. Sayer, to read an address, which was presented to Mr. Neiles on behalf of the association with a life membership ticket. The address expressed the deep regret felt by the members of the board at the removal of Mr. Nelles from their midst, with the hope that his health might be spared and that he might enjoy many more years of service in the Master's vineyard.

Mr. Nelles replied in very feeling words. Along with other institutions the association will feel the removal of their faithful and efficient treasurer very much. The address was a beautiful piece of work, nicely engressed and framed, and was a credit to the designer. Mr. Nelles and family leave shortly for San Diego, Cal. ASSOCIATION NOTES.

"The Heavenly Vision" is the topic on which Rev. Anna Shaw will speak tomorrow in the Grand Opera House. Doors open at 3:45 sharp. The board of trustees will take seats on the platform. Men only will be admitted.

Rev. Anna Shaw will also speak on Monday evening in Queen's Avenue Methodist Church on the "Ideal Home." This meeting is open to all, and no doubt the church will be filled to hear this talented lady. A silver collection will be taken at the door. A rare treat is in store for the public on Tuesday evening, Dec. 4, when Rev. R. G. Boville, of Hamilton, will give that bright, humorous narrative of his own personal incidents and adventures in his remarkable journey from Suez to Sinai. Doubtless the Talbot Street Baptist Charch will be well filled to hear this address. Some magnificent views will be shown, and there will be some special music.

Suicide in Montreal.

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 1. - A guest at the Windsor Hotel, H. C. Faile, of Jersey City, committed suicide by cutting his throat. He was a prominent manufacturer, who came to Montreal to seek rest. He seemed in constant fear of losing his property through strikes and this unbalanced his mind. About $160 was found in his

"Yes, I will," said John North. "I don't think as much about it as I did," he added. "I should wish to forgive everyone and everything before I go, Fanny; and my turn mayn't be long now. I forgive it heartily; heartily," he repeated, thinking to content her. "Fanny, I never thought you'd go

"God bless you! God reward you," she murmured. "There was no ill intention, you know, John.' John North did not see why he merited reward, neither could he follow what she was talking about. It might be, he supposed, one of the haliucinations that sometimes attend the dying.

"I'll take every care of Eilen Adair; she shall come to the Hall and stay there," he said, for that he could understand. "I promise it faithfully, Fanny."

"Then that is one of the weights off my ind," murmured the dying woman. There were so many on it. I have left a document, John, naming you and Richard her guardians for the time being. She's of good family, and very precious to her father. There has been so short a time to act in; it was only three or four days ago that I knew the end was coming. I did not expect it would be quite so soon."

'It mostly comes when it's not expected," mormured poor John North; "many of us seem to be going very near together. Edmund first; then Bessy; now you, Fanny; and the next will be me. God in His mercy grant that we may all meet in a happier world, and be together for ever!"

Richard North had remained below in the dining-room with Ellen Adair. The heavy erimson curtains were drawn before the large garden window, a bright fire blazed in the grate. Ellen in her black dress, worn ior Bessy, sat in the warmth; she felt very chilly after her journey, was nervous at the turn the illness seemed to be taking: and every now and then a tear stole silently down her sweet face. Richard walked about a little as he glanced at her. He thought her looking, apart from the present sorrow, pale and ill. Richard North was deliberating whether to say a word or two upon a matter that puzzled him. He thought he would do so.

"I have been across the Channel, you know, Ellen, since you left for Eastsea," he began. He had grown sufficiently intimate term of idleness, to drop the formal

"Yes, we heard of it. You went to engage Workmen, did you not?' For one thing. When I returned home. I found a letter or two awaiting me from Arthur Bohun, who was then at E. sea.

Madam had opened one of them. Ellen looked up, and then looked down again immediately. Richard North saw a change pass over her face, as though she were startled.

"I could not quite understand the letters; I think Arthur intended me not to fully understand them. They spoke of some— some event that was coming off, at which he wished me to be present. Ellen saw that he did understand; at least, that he believed he did. She rose from her seat and went close to him, speaking in agitation. "Will you grant me a request, Richard? I know you can be a firm friend; you are very true. Do not ever think of it againdo not speak of it to living man or woman."

"I presume it did not take place, E.ien."

"No. And the sooner it is altogether forgotton, the better."

He took her hand between his, and drew her to the fire. They stood before it side by "I am glad you know that I am your firm and true friend, Ellen; you may trust me always. It is neither idle curiosity nor impertinence that makes me speak. Madam stopped it, I conclude."

"I suppose so. She came and fetched him away; James Bohun was dying and wanted him. Since then I-I hardly know. He never came down again. He has been very "Yes, very ill. Let him regain his health, and it will be all right. That's all, my dear. I should like to take care of you as though you were my sister."

"Care!" she replied. "Oh, Richard, I don't see what will become of me, or where shall go. They say Mrs. Cumberladd will not live till morning; and papa, you know, Is so far away."

Jelly appeared with some coffee; and stayed for a minute or two to gossip, after the bent of her own heart, The carriage and the horses were waiting outside in the rain. Dr. Rane came in and out, in his restless-would—how willingly!—have restored his mother for a time, had human skill alone been able to do it. Before the interview with Mr. North was over-and it did not last twenty minutes-Mrs. Cumberland had changed considerably. Her son went into the room as Mr. North left it; and he saw at once how fallacious was the hope he had entertained of her lasting until morning.

Poor Mr, North, broken alike in health and heart, weak in spirit a most as a child. burst into tears as soon as he entered the ining-room. Richard spoke a few soothing words to him; Ellen Adair, who had rarely, if ever, seen a man shed tears, stood aghast.

"They are all going, Dick," he soubed;
"all going one by one. Fanny and I were almost boy and girl together. I loved the shild: she was as pretty a little thing as whild; she was as pretty a little thing as you'd ever wish to see. She was younger than me by a good deal, and I never thought she'd go before me. There'll be only you left, Dick; only you."

Ellen touched Richard's arm; she held a cup of coffee in her hand. "If he can take it, it may do him good," she whispered.

M. North drank the coffee. Then he sat Mr. North drank the coffee. Then he sat awhile, breathing cut ever and anon with

A change indeed. Even as the words left A change indeed. Even as the words left his lips, some slight commotion was heard in the house, following upon Dr. Rane's voice, who had come out of the chamber. The last moment was at hand. Ellen Adair went up, and Jelly went up. Mr. North said he must wait a little lenger.

In five minutes all was over. Ellen Adair, brought down by Dr. Rane, was overcome with grief. Mr. North said she should go back with them to the Hall, and bade Jelly back with them to the Hall, and bade Jelly put up what she might immediately require. At first Eilen refused; it seemed strangely sudden, almost unseemly, to go out of the house thus hurriedly; but when she came to reflect how lonely and undesirable would be her position if she remained there, she grew eager to go. To tell the truth, she felt half afraid to remain; she had never been in personal contact with death, and the feeling lay upon her as a dread. So a small portmanteau was hastily repacked-not an hour had elapsed since it was unpacked — and taken out to the carriage, Jelly undertaking to send the larger box in the morning. And Ellen was driven to the Hall with Mr. North and Richard.

"I am g'ad to come," she said to them, in her emotion. "It is so very kind of you to receive me in this extremity."
"Not at all, my dear," answered Mr. North. "The Hall will be your home until we receive instructions from your father. Mrs. Cumberland has appointed me and Richard as your temporary guardians; I was telling Dick so when you were up-

But there would be words to the bargain; they had not taken madam into consideration. The idea that she would object to it never occurred to Mr. North or Richard; madem was so very fond of having company at Dallory Hall. When the coachman, tired of being in the wet, dashed up to the door, and they descended and entered into the bluze of lights, and madam, standing a little back, saw the young lady and the luggage, her face was a picture.

"What does this intrusion mean?" demanded, slowly advancing.
"It means, madam, that Mrs. Cumberland is dead, and that she has left Miss." "Remarkable Cure of Dropsy and Dyspepsia."-Mr. Samuel T. Casey, Belleville, writes: "In the spring of 1884 I began to be troubled with dyspepsia, which gradually became more and more distressing. I used various domestic remedies and applied to my family physician, but received no benefit. By this time my trouble assumed the form of dropsy. I was unable to use any food whatever except boiled milk and bread; my limbs were swollen to twice their natural size; all hopes of my recovery were given up, and I quite expected death within a few weeks. Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY having been recommended to me, I tried a bottle with but little hope of relief; and now, after using eight bottles, my Dyspepsia and Dropsy are cured. Although now 79 years of age I can enjoy my meals as well as ever, and my general health is good. I am wellknown in this section of Canada, having lived here 57 years; and you have liberty to use my name in recommendation of your VEGETABLE DISCOVERY, which has done

A BUSINESS MAN'S TROUBLES. So Badly Crippled With Rheumatism

That He Lost All Power o Feet and Legs-How He Was Cured.

Mr. M. E. Douglas, says the San Francisco Chronicle, a young man who owns a harness shop in this city, tells a tale of a remarkable cure of rheumatism after he had suffered for years and had almost given up hope of being cured. The story told the reporter is as follows:

"About four or five years ago I began to be much troubled by severe pains in my feet and ankles, and it annoyed me so greatly that I could only keep at work with difficulty. I tried hot water bathing, and also used mustard water. I got some relief from the bathing, but it was only temporary and my trouble was constantly increasing. At last I went to a physician, and he gave me a prescription, but it did no good. I was now so badly off that the acute pain had gone up beyond the calves of my legs. I used to have to sit down very often, and frequently when I would try to stand ap I would fall right over. I completely lost power over my feet and legs, and was almost paralyzed. My father, mother and I used to live at Woodstock, Ont. We got the Woodstock Sentinel-Review, which contained a number of reports about the wonderful properties of a medicine called Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I thought that if one-quarter or one-tenth of what was said about them was true they might do me We got $2 50 worth of them and I began to take them. I was also suffering from a severe attack of piles which gave me a great deal of trouble. After I had been taking the Pink Pills awhile I noticed that the piles left me, and then my rheumatism just went away from me so easily that I hardly thought of it until it was gone. I had given up all other treatment and was taking nothing but the pills, so it must have been the pills that cured me. I cheerfully recommend the Pink Pills, and I think that any one who takes them is sure to receive benefit. As I said, we still keep the pills in the house all the time and would not be without them.' Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $250, by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N. Komoka Council of the Royal Templars, is still flourishing. They initiated eight new members at the last two meetings, and have now a membership of 40. They celebrated their second anniversary by having an oyster supper at the residence of Sister Pender. The desire of all the members was to have a happy and social time amongst themselves and a few invited guests, of whom Miss Ladd, of Delaware, and the celebrated Hicks Band, of Komoka, ably assisted in the pleasing programme provided by rendering some choice musical selections, which added greatly to the en-joyment of all present. After two hours of literary enjoyment refreshments were served. After this the programme was returned to with renewed zeal.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Death the Invariable Result of Neglected Kidney Disease.

LOWER JORDAN BAY, N. S., Dec. 1.-The majority of human ailments can be traced, either directly or indirectly, to a diseased condition of the kidneys. Kidney disease may not be suspected for the reason that these organs have few nerves of sensation, and may be even in a condition of advanced disease before the true condition is discovered. Ninety per cent of all diseases may be prevented by using Dodd's Kidney Pills. Samuel Locke's case, which caused such widespread interest throughout this Province, is a case in point.

Fortunately the freight had been removed. The warehouse is now hanging over a bank with but about 40 feet of it left intact. A large crack in the made ground has appeared 50 feet in front of the depot. The indications point to a general cavein of all artificially. made land at the north end of the ward. Important to Men .- Almost every human being strives in some way or other to improve his or her looks. A lady will use entling tongs and spend hours in front of the micror trying to arrange her hair in a way which will improve her appearance. This will not improve the looks of a man, nor will a long shaggy beard. The best way is to step in to Tracy's and get a good clean shave and have your hair teimmed

BERLIN, Nov. 20, 1894. I take great pleasure in writing this testimonial, more especially as I was considered by our medical men to be incurable. I was very badly troubled with my liver and kidneys; my system was completely run down. I was a mere skeleton. The doctors told me they could do no more for me. The chief agent for Williams' Royal Crown Remedy induced me to try that medicine. In a very short time I began to improve, and finally I was completely cured. There are a great many others who were bad cases that I have recommended the remedy to who have been completely cured. I might mention that I was also very much troubled with asthma and bronchitis, and have been greatly benefited in these complaints from the same valuable "Royal Remedy"; in truth I am not troubled much with them at present, and fully expect to be entirely cured with the "Remedy" in a short time. TWO DIAGRAMS ILLUSTRATING HOW BEEVES ARE CUT.

After Reading This Article Carefully No Housewife Can be Swindled by Dishonest Butchers-Row to Tell Well-Seasoned Meat.

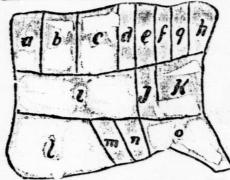

The beef is cut into four parts; two hind-quarters and two fore-quarters. The hind-quarter is the most valuable part of the animal, although the Jews discard it. In different sections of the country the side is divided differently. In the Boston markets the two short ribs are cut on the hind-quarter, whereas in New York and the Western States these ribs are left with the others on plete without its stout ash sticks and the fore-quarter. These two ribs are called in Boston the tip end of the sirloin; in New York and the west the first cut of the ribs. The different methods of cutting beef are so confusing to the housekeeper that it is well to be content with learning only the method practiced in her own locality. The two diagrams illustrating this article may help her. I have outlined only such cuts as are common all over the country. After having carefully studied these diagrams, take them to your butcher and he will locate the cuts that are not given here.

In section d, on the hind-quarter (see plate No. 1), the greatest diversity of modes of cutting exists; therefore, I have not given all the minor cuts, but have left this part clear for your local provision man to mark. Where the names are different in New York and New England and the west, I have given the New York and western names first. The New York and western prices are lower than in New England for prime cuts, but the dealers make up for this by cutting a larger amount of the cheaper parts with the prime cut. For example, in the best markets in New England a rib of sirloin is cut short, only a little part of the thin ribs, or the flank, being left on. Outside New England these pieces are cut long. As a rule, the shorter cuts at the higher price are the more economical. In most parts of New England, the sirloin steak is what is called porter-house in other parts of the country. The sirloin steak of New York is in the section marked d (see plate No. 1.) Some of these steaks are fine, but often there is only a small part of tender meat on them, the butcher cutting them so as to take in the veiny part of the round. If one be paying the price of round steak there is no great injustice in this, but to pay for a high priced steak and get such a cut as this is not right.

The quality of beef is indicated by color, texture and odor. Good beef will have a generous amount of meat in proportion to the bones. The lean meat will be firm, fine-grained, and of a rich, red color. The fat, a pale straw color, firm and dry; the suet will be dry and crumble easily.

If the beef has been hung long enough it will be a dark, purplish color when first cut, but after a few minutes' exposure to the air it will turn a bright red, and tiny beads of moisture will collect on the surface. Beef that is coarse-grained and dark generally comes from old animals. Very small beef, with a pink rather than a red color, is apt to be from cows. Although this beef is never rich in color and flavor, it is usually tender and sweet-flavored. Beef that has dark, yellow fat, with the suct tough and clammy, is not from a are that the seat for a child should healthy animal. A Female Recruiting Sergeant. England has a woman recruiting sergeant. She is Miss Gould, of London, and she differs from the usual recruiting sergeant in that she does not lie in wait for young volunteers at publichouses and attract them by the brilliancy of her attire. She has worked among the poor for many years, and has lately turned her attention to young thieves. Having once got hold of them she never feels safe about them until they have accepted the Queen's shilling.

Scarcely a "New Woman." Mrs. Hardison, of Caribou, Me., is scarcely a "new woman," for she is seventy-one years old; but the "new woman" may point to her achievements with She is a farmer and has a large dairy. Besides managing her farm and doing her household and dairy work

CHOICE CUTS OF MEATS. HOCKEY FOR THE GIRLS

A VIGOROUS OUTDOOR SPORT FOR THE COLD WEATHER.

The Duke and Duchess of Westminster Set the Vegue in England-Seme Points It is Well to Know and to Bemem-

Hockey is not played by young women to any great extent in this country, although quite a popular pastime with English girls.

It is only a matter of time, however, before a knowledge of hockey on land and on ice will be necessary to every girl's athletic education, and no arrangements for a house party will be comrubber balls in readiness for play.

The Duke and Duchess of Westminster recently gave a large house party, and among the amusements, besides tennis, golf and hunting, was the exhilarating and vigorous game of hockey.

It is a pastime especially adapted for cold weather on account of the amount of running necessary, and racing about in the cold weather sends the players home in a glorious glow.

The game is played with a stout ash stick, with a crook at one end, and a tennis or rubber ball. It is manipulated in a field; there are two goals, facing each other; each side seeks to drive the ball between the posts protected by the other. Two are chosen as captains. The leader of the side in raises her hockey stick as high as she likes and gives the ball a vigorous drive off. After that no one is feet resting upon a sloping cricket, which steadies the legs. The forearms should rest two-third lengths on the table. This position keeps all the muscles and bones in the proper place. As this is the correct way to sit when older, it is well to train every child after this manner from a common sense standpoint, as all laws of physical culture are founded on practical reasons.

That many cases of lateral curvature of the spine are due to this laxity at school and at home with children who, having weak backs, assume continuous faulty attitudes there is no gainsaying.

A Berlin physician, having examined 200 school children who were writing, found in 160 cases that the trunk inclined. In 24 the trunk inclined toward the right, but the body twisted toward the desk.

The sport possesses plenty of opportunities for skill; it also possesses advantages for schoolgirls, as between hours quite a number of goals can be scored. Before playing backey on the ice a knowledge of skating is of course neces-

SPINE STRENGTHENING.

Why So Many School Children Suffer Martyrdom.

Between a faulty position in sitting and standing and lateral curvature of the spine there seems a great gulf fixed, but those who study the secret science of a condition say there is only a small stream and that is bridged over.

As the twig is bent, so the tree grows, is claimed to be as true of physical as of vegetable life. That is to say the bones of young children are soft and will take the position in which they are habitually placed. Therefore much is to be heard as to the attitudes children should be made to take at school in writing or studying, or practicing at home on the piano. Recognizing the serious effects of carelessness in this line, physicians have looked thoughtfully into the matter and devised desks that should remedy the evil if possible. Orders they give not be deeper than the length of the thigh or higher than the length of the leg; its back ought not to be above the shoulders and should be arched so as to fit in the hollow of the back; a hard cushion or a false back made of leather stiffened with steel would meet the requirement nicely. The back of the chair should slope backward slightly, forming an angle of 100 to 110 degrees with the seat and should serve as a support to the whole of the spine when a child leans backward. The distance from the top of the seat to the top of the table should be one-eighth the height of a girl or oneseventh of a boy. The edge of the table should be just over the edge of the chair, and the slope should be two inches to 12 in height.

So much for the desk and seat. Next in importance is the attitude in Troubles that arise from faulty positions are what the surgeons term proxiing this intrepid performer. One, more mate causes; the predisposing causes ingenious than the rest, catches her are rickets, want of nutrition, inheritstick in her own, while another dribbles ance and poverty that brings about so it off in triumph. Once more the ball is much of the deformity of the world. These can only be remedied; the other can be averted.

Even older people, those whose backs are weak and continually "drooping," when they assume a sitting positinn can strengthen them marvelously by a system of gymnastics. The best recommended is to lie on a lounge with the head drooping over the end; in this position use dumb bells. It will be found to develop the muscles about the

These curvatures are more likely in school girls than school boys; the former eat less, and the back is never so strong. The way to sleep is another anxious question with the doctors. The method of the Indian is always the best; flat on the back with little or no pillow.

Nothing is so restful as this attitude, as anyone will find out by spreading a rug on the floor and lying down this way an hour before dinner. In no other attitude are the muscles so completely relaxed.

BEATRICE WAS INTERVIEWED. A Story Which Miss Harraden Enjoys Telling on Herself. Beatrice Harraden, according to an article in Demarest's Monthly, had a somewhat remarkable experience with an interviewer, but she had to pay tribute to his skill and ingenuity. "One young man who wanted to interview me and whom I declined to see," said Miss Harraden, "waited about all day. Towards evening my friends informed him that I was going to the photographer's on the following day, and, of course, it would be useless for him to call. He simply asked the name of the photographer and went away. He was very intelligent, my friends said, and added that he was a Harvard man.

"The second morning after that imagine my surprise at seeing a three-column interview with me in one of the big dailies. It was a very discreet interview, nothing in it to offend me, and gave in my own words my views of my book on religion, politics, woman suffrage and no end of things. The interview was signed by the young man who had waited about so patiently and whom I had declined to see.

"But how did this strange writer get this interview containing my own words? Where had I uttered them? Ah! I began to have some suspicions. The young man who had assisted the photographer in taking my picture the day before asked me some very intelligent off-hand questions, and I talked with him freely. Recalling the conversation, I recognized its exact reproduction in this three-column interview. Then I remembered that as the young man conversed with me, now and then suggesting a different pose for my head or hand, and so one, he glanced frequently towards a small inner room, where another young man sat writing, apparently posting account books. What! Could this be the young man? I had never seen him, remember. Well, by next mail my suspicions were confirmed. Yes, it was he. He made a sweeping confession. The assistant photographer was actually the newspaper representative who had determined to interview me; the young man in the adjoining room, who seemed to be a bookkeeper, was really a stenographer. The one talked, the other took down all that was said."

And was Miss Harraden vexed, and did she call the clever reporter a "disagreeable man?" Instead, she frankly confessed that she didn't mind it.

She was married to Peter Bordner in 1810, and their married life extended over a period of seventy-one years. He died Sept. 11, 1881, lacking but a few months of being one hundred years old. He was born July 4, 1782. It is doubtful if there is a parallel case in the United States.

Mother Bordner's one hundredth birthday five years ago was the occasion of a great family reunion, all the living children being present, together with a great number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The total number of Mrs. Bordner's descendants is not exactly known, but this is nearly correct: Children, 13; grandchildren, 102; greatgrandchildren, 228; great-great-grandchildren, 26-total, 369. After the death of her husband Mrs. Bordner made a journey te Texas almost every winter to visit her children who live in that State. She made her last visit there in her one hundredth year.

Mother Bordner's hearing is still good. her eyes are bright and clear and her voice strong. In the last few weeks, however, she has begun to fail rapidly, though she still walks about the house unassisted. She has been a constant smoker for more than twenty-five years. THE GIANTS WHO ARE TO FIGHT AGAINST THE CHINESE.

They Can Lift 300 Pounds of Solid Bone and Muscle as Though the Task Were Nothing-Queer Ways of Getting Into Condition.

I see that the most famous wrestlers of Japan have offered their services to the Emperor in the war with China. They have sent a delegation to him at Hiroshima, asking that they be sent to Corea and be given a place in the Japanese army.

These men have done a great deal in the crude wars of the past, but it is doubtful whether they will be of much use in connection with Gatling guns and Winchester rifles. They form a curious class of the Japanese people, and they are like no other athletes on the face of the globe. They have entirely different methods of training from our prize fighters, and John Sullivan or Corbett would laugh at their corpulent frames. They would think them puffy and flabby, and would expect to see them go all to pieces at a blow. Still, I venture to say that the Japanese giants could stand several rounds with either Sullivan or Corbett, and they could probably throw either of these muscular Americans in a wrestling bout.

They seem to be a race of their own. They are taller and heavier than the ordin-

WAITING FOR THE SIGNAL. ary Japanese, and many of them are over six feet in height. The Japanese man is no taller than the average American girl. He has a long body and short legs. He is as straight as a stick, but he is stocky rather than tall. These wrestlers weigh from 200 to 300 pounds, and they are mountains of fat and beef. They eat quantities of meat, while the other people of Japan live largely upon vegetables, rice and fish. They drink oup and beer by the gallon, and Prof. Burton of the Imperial University, who has taken the best photographs of them, told me how two wrestlers whom he was entertaining one day in order to get their pictures each drank two dozen bottles of beer and great quantities of soda water, ginger ale and claret. These wrestlers have features much the same as the ordinary Japanese, though their heads are much larger, and more like cannon balls than anything else. They wrestle almost stark naked, and the only hair I could see on their bodies was under their armpits, and that which was put up in the old Jap anese style on the tops of their heads. They shave their heads from the forehead to the crown, leaving that over the ears and at the back to grow long, and tying it ap on the top of the head in a queue like door-knocker. They are by no means Serce-looking, and when I visited the wrestling matches I was taken among them and chatted with some of them through my interpreter. I felt their muscles, and they were as hard as iron, and what I had supposed to be great lumps of

(at I found to be bundles of muscle.

These wrestlers date back almost to the beginning of Japanese history. The Daimios kept a corps of them about their persons, and when the princes traveled over the country they always had some of these men with them. They gave exhibitions at funeral and wedding processions, and they are mentioned in Lapanese history as far back as 24 years before Christ. About 500 years before Columbus and his band of Spanish pirates discovered America the throne of Japan was the prize of a wrestling match. The Emperor had two sons. Whether they were twins or not I don't know, but they both aspired to the throne Their father told them each to pick out a champion wrestler, and the one who backed the victor should be Emperor. The boys agreed to this, and the successful backer succeeded his father. From that time to this wrestling has gone on all over Japan, and Japanese history is filled with the exploits of wrestlers. There are regular matches held every year in the big cities, and those in Tokio and Osaka last four weeks, and the champions of the eastern and western parts of the empire are pitted against each other. Not long ago wrestling became a great fad, and one of the cabinet ministers, I am told, entered the ring, while the noblest men of the empire were ready to meet all comers. In 1888 Count Kuroda, the Prime Minister, gave wrestling a great boom, and during the last year some of the most famous matches. ever held in Japan have taken place.

I saw famous matches in both Tokio and Osaka, and I spent one day at a wrestling match in the Japanese capital, in which

A FATAL GRIP. 120 of the greatest wrestlers of Japan struggled together. The wrestling began at 10 o'clock in the morning and lasted until 5 in the afternoon, and there was not a minute during this time that wrestlers were not in the ring. But let me give you some idea of one of these Japanese prizefights. Imagine the biggest circus tent you have ever seen, spread out upon a network of bamboo poles so that it covers about 10,000 people. These sit on the ground and 'n boxes or on platforms which are built up perhaps 10 feet above the ground. In the centre of the crowd there is a little pavilion about 20 feet square, supported by four posts as large around as telegraph poles. This pavilion is trimmed with red, and its posts are wrapped with red cloth, while about its top there is a curtain of blue. It has a raised foundation perhaps two feet high and a ring of rice bags runs around its floor, enclosing a circle 12 feet in diameter, which is floored with black This is the famed wrestling ring of are fought. The giants struggle inside the rice bags, and if one can throw the other over these or can fling him to the earth he is proclaimed the victor. At each corner of this pavilion, against one of the red posts, sits a sober, dark-faced, heavy-browed Japanese, dressed in a black kimono. He is raised upon cushions, and sits cross-legged, and he forms one of the four judges in case there is a dispute as to the decision of the umpire. In the centre of the ring stands the umpire, wearing the old brocade costume of the days of the Daimios. He has a black lacquer fan in his hand. He screeches out his voice as though he had the colic and was screaming with pain, but his shrill cries penetrate to every part of the circus, and he is a man whose memories of college and campus of great importance and long training. The spectators squat on the ground back of the ring, and on the platforms. Each has a little tobacco box before him, with some coals of fire in it. All sit cross-legged, and nearly all smoke little metal pipes with bowls as big as a thimble. But let us take a look at the wrestlers. There are scores of them squatting about the ring just outside of the rice bags. They are entirely naked, with the exception of a band of blue silk, four inches wide, which runs round their waists and between their legs and is tied in a knot at the back. This has a fringe about four inches long. which falls to their thighs, but further than this they have no more clothes than had Adam when he was gardening before he had eaten the apple. Here come two into the ring. They are the most famous wrestlers of the East and the West, and the people received them with clapping. What giants they are, and how queerly they act! At the corners there are buckets of water. They walk up to these and gulp down great swallows. They fill their mouths and squirt the fluid into the air so that it falls back in a spray over their cream-colored bodies. They take bits of paper and wipe themselves off, and then they look about on the audience and show their muscles, while a yell goes up from 5,000 throats. They pound their naked chests with their fists. They slap their brawny thighs. They lift their legs up as nigh as their shoulders, and they stamp their feet down on the well-packed earth so that the pavilion trembles as though & cyclone were passing through it.

Look at that man's arm. It is as big around as Grover Cleveland's thigh, and the belt of the champion would loosely fit the waist of Wilson Shannon Bissell. He looks more like a man with the dropsy than a great athlete, and his body seems to be padded with great bunches of fat. He has a front like a saloon keeper and his face shines like a butcher's. He is the majesty of years and white hairs. champion of the east and the man from the west is almost as large. Now the two giants walk to opposite sides of the ring They bow to the umpire and judges, and then squat down on their heels and look a mind ripened rather than impaired by at each other. They come to the centre of age, and a judgment keener and sharper the ring. They bend over and rest their fists on the floor. They poke their great and turned to pure whiteness, curled about heads to the front, and their big almond eyes almost burst from their buttonhole sockets. How they stare at each other! They are watching for the signal to close

DOWNED AT LAST. the dirt from the ring and rubbing it under their armpits and over their bodies. Ther they kneel and glare again. The umpire watches them closely. He waits until the breathe together, and then gives the signal As he does so, they crouch like tigers and spring into each other's arms. Each tries to grab the belt of the other. They wrat their arms round one another, and you al most hear their ribs crack. The bunches of fat have become mountains of muscle, and both arms and legs look like iron Their biceps stand out. Their calves quiver Their paunches shrink in. Now the giant of the west has reached over the straining back of him of the east, and has grasped the band of blue silk which runs round his waist. He lifts that 300 pounds as though it were nothing, and he throws him a jerk over the rice bags. How the people yell! Some of them tear off their clothes and throw them into the ring, and will redeem them with presents of money at the end of the day. They call out the name of the victor, and some of them hug each other in their delight at the success of their man. There is no sign of pool-selling, though I am not sure but that some betting goes on. The defeated gathers himself up and walks away with bowed head. The victor goes to one side of the ring and squats down on his heels while the umpire holds up his hands and proclaims him successful. The prize is awarded and the apron of silk embroidered with gold is shown to the people. The vio tor receives it, and with his seconds behind him he marches away.

Then another couple enter the ring, and the same sort of struggle goes on. Some matches last no more than a minute, but other men are so evenly pitted that they strain for a quarter of an hour before one is victorious. The snakes of the Laocoor never gripped their victims more tightly. and ribs are often broken, and men have been killed in these terrible struggles. Some wrestlers throw their opponents from one side of the ring to the other. Now and then one strikes a post and his skull is cracked open. There is no striking or hit ting, and the rules are as rigid as those of our prize fighters. There are 48 different falls, and the umpires stop the matches at a single mismovement, and they now and then call a halt in order that their belts may be more tightly tied.

The Japanese have very queer methods of physical training. These wrestlers pound their muscles to make them strong. They butt with their shoulders against posts, and they stamp the earth to strengthen the muscles of their legs. They have a wonderful strength of back and wrist, and a common test of strength is what is called wrist wrestling. Two of the men will sit opposite each other, with a little table between them. On this they will rest the bare elbows of their right arms, and grasping each other's hands will twist and turn, and see which can break the hold of the other. The acrobats can bend themselves into all sorts of shapes, and their little boys go about through the streets and perform acrobatic feats which would be considered wonders in our circuses. The jinricksha is used all over Japan, and this is always pulled by men. It is, you known, a baby victoria on two wheels. It is, in fact, human muscle that still runs the land of Japan. FRANK G. CARPENTER.

SOMETHING OF FAMOUS PRESIDENT'S INTERESTING PERSONALITY.

A Man Well Known to Very Many Canadians-He Had Great Force, a Kindly Heart, a Scotch Brogue and a Quick

The death of Dr. James McCosh, for twenty years the honored and much beloved president of Princeton College, had long been expected by thousands of former students in every part of the country, life are indissolubly mingled with pleasing and sometimes humorous recollections of the self-willed, white haired old gentleman, whose sway was so absolute and whose ways as seemingly tyrannical as his heart was kindly and gentle.

Nevertheless, the news of his end was a distinct shock, and it is likely that for many a long day to come "Jimmy," as the students lovingly called him, will be the subject of endless chat and reminiscence. Dr. McCosh was a tall, broad man of imposing presence.

In the later years of his presidency-he resigned in 1888-he was decidedly stooped, the result of much labor at his study desk. But he lost nothing of his majesty for that reason, for his face, always very impressive, then took upon it the added

As he grew older his complexion paled to whiteness, but his cheeks retained the glow of healthy manhood. His eyes never lost their brilliant directness, and bespoke and more unerring. His hair, worn long a broad, high and majestic brow, the more impressive for the wrinkles that grew deeper year by year, and the curling white whiskers that straggled a short distance down his cheeks added to the force and picturesqueness of a strong and remark-

His dress befitted his bearing. He always wore, except in the hot June days toward the close of the college year, a long sweeping Prince Albert coat over black waistcoat and trousers. He often wore a silk hat, but varied this sometimes with a derby, which, if not always in the mode, was invariably of dignified proportions. His walk was rapid for one of his years and indicative of the physical vigor which he retained long after he was entitled to

He was fond of a broad old fashioned collar, which, with his usual white lawn tie, accorded admirably with the rare dignity of his presence. Gold rimmed glasses usually dangled from a chain or ribbon around his neck.

Until the end approached Dr. McCosh seldom carried a cane.

Dr. McCosh's tongue always remained intensely Scotch. His brogue was as rich in the later days of his sway as it was when he assumed the presidency in 1868. This was particularly true in conversation, and it served to mark his personality all the more strongly.

It helped to endear him still more to the students, too, through that mysterious principle which makes a foreign flavor, if musical, attractive to the ear. Dr. Mc-Cosh's brogue was always musical. It seemed also to add serength to a manner of speech already commanding by reason of the quality of mind that prompted it. His home was the fine old Potter mansion, of historic fame in the early century, which was purchased by the college to become the residence of its successive presidents. From here he went every morning early to the college chapel, where he presided over the morning service, and then plunged into the dav's labors.

He taught regular classes in psychology and philosophy, and organized several optional classes for special students, which he presided over himself. He was seen much around the campus through the day and was much in the library. He was always present at faculty meetings, and assumed the personal direction of everything in college management, even to the matter of hearing and disciplining delinquent students. To be summoned before the faculty in those days was an experience that no student longed to have. The delinquent was led into a small room lined with chairs, in which sat grave professors in solemn and silent state. The charge upon which he was arraigned was read and a member of the faculty proceeded to question him

If the student attempted to excuse himself, Dr. McCosh, who sat in a big chair at the head of the room, could never restrain himself. With flushing face he would abandon his judicial capacity, take the role of prosecutor summarily from the hands of the official who held it, and, in the student phrase, "jump on the neck" of the offender, often browbeating him unmercifully. But if the delinquent made frank avowal, even without confessing penitence, the sometimes hot headed president would look at him sternly, but with a suggestion of kindness in his gaze, and dismiss him with a lecture that generally began fiercely and ended temperately.

The character of these "judgment day" faculty meetings is well indicated by the first question which an offender's fellows invariably put to him on his reappearance on the campus. It was never, "What did they do to you?" but "What did Jimmy

Hot headed and at times unreasonable as the president was, he was the students' idol. The boys fairly loved him.

Sometimes they took advantage of his vanity for some sly fun, as, for instance, when he, enumerating the great names of philosophy, would modestly omit his own. Then the class would cry out in unison,

'And McCosh; don't forget to mention McCosh!"

This would please the Doctor amazingly, and he would say, in a deprecating way, Thank you, thank you, gentlemen," and go on with his lecture, while the class would smile joyously for half an hour afterward.

But this sort of fun was kindly: and there was no other sort in "Jimmy's" class

A Canadian minister who graduated at Princeton recently visited him. At that time he said his health was fine. It was age alone that was making him crumble. He was very happy, he said.

"And my chief happiness," he added, "is in following the careers of me boys in the big world. Me boys are making names for themselves, are they not?" RUBINSTEIN.

The Illustrious Musician and Greatest Pianist Next to Liszt.

With the death of Anton Rubinstein, which occurred at Peterhof near St. Petersburg, one of the greatest figures in the history of music passes into immortality. Both as a composer and an instrumentalist he occupied a position so distinctive, so individual, that he may be said to have had neither predecessors nor contemporaries. He was a Hebrew by birth, a German by education, a Russian by baptism, sentiment and sympathy. His native place was Wechwotenez, a Bessarabian village. Until a few years ago he believed that his birthday was Nov. 30, 1830, but a search of the village records proved conclusively that the correct date was Nov. 28, 1829. The discovery is of so recent a date that few biographical dictionaries will be found with the correction.

Rubinstein was a year old when the Czar Nicholas issued his famous ukase which would have deprived the Russian Hebrews of all their possessions. Roman Rubinstein, Anton's grandfather, a man of great force of character, assembled at Berditscheff, in the Government of Kiew, the whole of the family, numbering some sixty persons. His authority as head of the family being recognized, he commanded them all to be baptized as Christians in accordance with the law. There were no musicians on the paternal side of Rubinstein's family. Those anxious to prove that all special tendencies are due to heredity will be gratified to learn that his mother, Clara Levenston, was a good pianist. He was only six when his mother began to teach him to play. Other teachers followed-men of eminence-but Rubinstein never forgot the first, and even at the summit of his career he valued the criticism of his mother above that of any

In Moscow, whither the family had moved, Rubinstein became the pupil of Villoeng, a Franco-Russian, who had studied under John Field, the pianist and composer, who spent the greater part of his life in Russia. As a tot of ten, Rubinstein, whose industry in his piano studies had been remarkable, made his debut. The era of infant prodigies had reached what seemed then to be its apogee-it was the epoch of Palmer, of the sisters Milan. olo, of Sophie Bohrer. Rubinstein was a success. His professor took him to Paris. There he tried for admittance to the Conservatoire, but was refused. He then visited London, Copenhagen and Amsterdam. After a three years' stay in Moscow, on his return he went to Berlin, where Dehn, the master of Glinka, gave him lessons in composition. In 1846, still a stripling, he was in Vienna teaching others. In 1850 he was back in Russia, and his first opera was then produced in St. Petersburg. In 1854, thanks to the patronage of the Grand Duchess Helena, wife of the Grand Duke Michael, brother of the Emperor Nicholas, he founded the Societie Musicale de Russie, of which the Conservatoire is a branch. In 1858 he made a tour of all the European capitals. For eight years he remained in active management of the Conservatoire. Then commenced again his peregrinations, which continued till his death. This country he visited in 1872. His personal appearance was one that left a deep impression on one's memory. Bachvogel has thus written about it: "He has the head of an inspired sphinx, upon whose face not even the paroxysms of enenthusiasm call forth a smile. Did not the color of life illumine it, it might be of

Head and face were leonine, and resembled those of Beethoven, while they suggested Tolstoi. His eyes were small, but piercing in expression. Beetling brows gave a touch of extreme severity to his face, softened somewhat by the beardless cheeks, lips and chin.

As a pianist Rubinstein reached his pinnacle of greatness. Liszt alone of all the great names is ranked above him. In mastery of tone, in perfection of technique and in absolute authority of style Rubinstein will ever be a standard by which others will be judged. As a composer, in which capacity he was prolific, he never obtained a recognition equal to that he gained as a pianist. He composed in every form. It was of him that it was said that he possessed "the fatal gift of fluency." Limited success was all that came to him as a composer, and that fact embittered his life. The reasons are, perhaps, to be found in the variance of his music from the doctrines of the musical intelligence of the day.

Among his operas are "Dimitri Dons kol," "Les Chasseurs Siberiens," "La Vengeance," "Tom le Fou," "Les Enfants des Bruyeres," "Lalla Rookh," "Nero" and "Ivan Kalashorikoff." His oratorio, "Paradise Lost," has been performed with great success, notably in La Salle de la Noblesse, at St. Petersburg, Dec. 17, 1876. His sacred drama, "The Maccabees," was produced at the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, in 1878.

In 1869 Alexander II. ennobled the composer, and in 1877 France decorated him with the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

Faine's Celery Compound Cures M C. F. Kevill, of Dunsferd, Ont.

Most Important Testimony From the Cured Man-Kidney Disease Was Dragging Him to the Grave-Intense Sufferings Borne for 15 years-All the Ordinary Medicines Had Failed to Meet the Case—A Trial Was Made of Paine's Celery Compound-Two Bottles of the Life-Giving Medicine Banished Every Trace of Disease.

The world has never had a grander or nobler benefactor than Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL D. He was the discoverer of Paine's Celery Compound, that marvelous curing medicine that has dragged so many victims of kidney disease from the brink of the grave.

Thousands of cured men and women have already contributed their grateful testimony to the extraordinary curing powers of the great medicine in cases of kidney and liver troubles, Bright's disease, palpitation of the heart, dyspepsia and indigestion, nervousness, loss of sleep, depression of spirits, sick headache, loss of vital forces, heumatism, sciatica and neuralgia; and new testimony is coming in every day from all sections of Canada.

MR. C. F. KEVILL, DUNSFORD, ONT. Paine's Celery Compound is doing a work among the sick and diseased that no other medicine has ever done; it cures the worst cases and raises up those who have been pronounced incurable. The following testimony from Mr. C. F. Kevill, of Dunsford, Ont., is strong, convincing, cheering and comforting:

"I wish to testify in favor of the wonderful curative powers of Paine's Celery Compound for two reasons; first in justice to the proprietors; and secondly, for the benefit of suffering humanity.

"For the past fifteen years I have been troubled with diseased kidneys. I am engaged in the manufacture of cheese, and am obliged to work more or less in a stooping posture. At times I found it almost impossible to work owing to severe pains across my kidneys. Of en, after working in a stooping condition for a time, I would find it very difficult to straighten up at once, and could only do so after repeated efforts.

'Of late years, while laboring under these severe attacks, I became very n rvous, and continually had tired, worn-out feel ings. My rest at night seemed to do me no good, and I always felt tired cut in the morning. "I had been taking various medicines and was getting worse all the time. At last I decided to give Paine's Celery Com-pound a trial. I procured a bottle, and took it according to directions, and found its effects wonderful. Before I had used the fi st bottle I began to improve; after I had used the second bottle I felt as well as ever I did in my life. It had banished all aches and pains, my nervousness was all gone, and the tired and worn-out feelings were banished. I can go to bed now and sleep well, and rise in the morning rested and refreshed.

"I have recommended Paine's Celery Compound to my friends who were suffering from the same troubles as I had, and all have been greatly benefited. Knowing what it has done, I can cheerfully recommend it to any person suffering from kidney disease.

PLANS are under consideration for the establishment of a cordite factory in Ireland. It will be located in the Arklow district near the seashore on land belonging to the Countess of Wicklow.

SUPPLEMENT TO DAILY ADVERTISER --- SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1894.

Notto for the Week:

We shall never agree in opinion, but we may agree in love. We shall never agree in politics, but we may agree in patriotism. Let us find our unity in our spirit and not in our framework .- [Joseph

The article on "The Hamilton Scold and the London Election," on he fourth page of to-day's Howe GUARD, should be credited to the Lonion Daily Advertiser.

The Dominion Alliance, over the signature of its president, Mr. J. R. Dougall, has petitioned the Quebec Legislature to provide for the taking of a vote in that Province on the question of entirely prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor. It is, however, doubtful if the Legislature will respond to the request in the affirmative.

The Roman Catholic clergy of New York city have given notice that if an attempt is made to open the saloons on Sunday, as has been foreshadowed, they will aid in every way to prevent Archbishop Corrigan, in the course of a letter addressed to the members of the committee, says: "I cordially approve the efforts you are making to spread the cause of temperance, and especially commend the means which you take to cultivate the total abstinence sentiment, and by insisting that all members of local temperance societies be assiduous in the practice of their religion. I trust, therefore, that the reverend clergy of the diocese will give their sanction and hearty co-operation to your zeal and such as the Christian Guardian, the devotion and aid you efficiently in promoting so good a work."

Rev. Dr. Hole, dean of Rochester, is one of the popular and well-known lecturers and preachers of England. He does not believe in either total abstinence or prohibition-his views being somewhat antiquated on both these subjects-but he does believe something more ought to be done to stop drunkenness, which is now one of the great hindrances to the success of the church. In a popular lecture in Toronto a few evenings ago he declared his belief that the men who get drunk "ought to be whipped." He would not deny the drinker the personal liberty of drinking, but still would infringe on his liberty of drinking as much as he wants to, having the recent election in this city are once commenced. His position reminds us of the late Dr. Jewett's remark, that to allow a man the full facilities for drinking and then to punish him for getting drunk is very much like giving a man an emetic and then blaming him for getting sick at the stomach.

Dr. Hole would also have the seller whipped who makes a man drunk. Here, too, a very nice line has to be drawn. To acknowledge a seller the full right to sell right up to that point and then punish him for any results beyond, is about as arbitrary, and more illogical, than prohibition from the outset. By such a rule it would be all right to sell one man four glasses, who never gets drunk on that, and all wrong to sell another man just the same amount and at the same time, because he can't stand that much and keep sober. Surely such a system would require the invention of some gauge to demonstrate each man's strength. Many a man is much "the worse of liquor," as far as judgment, self-control, and moral sentiment are concerned, who can stand well on his feet and cannot be called drunk at all. A line must be drawn somewhere, and who can decide where the danger line is in each man's case? Better to draw the line at dealing in the business at not," is a safe rule in such cases.

From a Business Standpoint.

Temperance advocates have made the mistake, we think, of looking at the question from an almost sentian economic question, an siness question, as well as everyday sentimental one. Life inmpanies want to deal with surance ners now, not from any mental ideas, but because ience has demonstrated

An ably conducted American journal companies find the moderate drinkea more dangerous risk and his mor tality greater, hence refuse to insure him at ordinary rates, or at all. Mercantile agencies find that business conducted by moderate drinkers is more precarious and followed by a greater firms low as to responsibility. Raillosses increase under the care of moderate drinkers; that the income and stability of the road are diminished, compared with the same service by discovers by figures and statistics, which have no other meaning, that under the care and control of moderate or excessive drinkers the losses, perils and risks of business are increased."

Some Misrepresentations Exposed.

The Hamilton Templar, the organ of Mr. Marter, seems impressed with the idea that it can best promote prohibition interests to defame and shake confidence in a large number of temperance workers outside of its own immediate circle. Within the past few months such well-known and longtried workers as the Hon. G. W. Ross, Joseph Tait, ex-M.P.P., Mr. Newton W. Rowell, of Toronto, Dr. J. J. Maclaren, W. H. Orr, ex-Mayor Fleming, of Toronto, Sidney Fisher, ex-M.P., Rev. Dr. Dewart, and a large number of others, have been pointed out among unreliables, and a considerable number of the old and weilknown temperance journals, including Canada Presbyterian and a number of it. So did Mr. Essery, the Opposition old-time dailies and weeklies over the country have been characterized as found wanting regarding their dut y. Fortunately all such are not standing in need of a certificate of character from that source. To some, however, who may not know them, and who take their impressions from the source referred to, a very curious impression has been conveyed, and a great injustice has been done. It is no wonder that this journal has also been placed in the same company. We have hesitated to notice remarks and insinuations made, time and again, which have been simply slanderous, because we have not desired to give even the appearance of an evil habit of quarreling with co-workers.

The Templar's remarks regarding much in keeping with its course regarding a number of other elections during the present year. We shall not attempt to characterize them here, or even to refer to them further than is necessary to correct downright misrepresentations. The recent election of Mr. Hobbs, a Liberal, over Mr. Essery, a Conservative, and the action of a large number of leading London temperance electors is denounced as "this very demonstration of tyranny, perfidy and moral rottenness of party methods," and a considerable more to that purport. All this comes about because certain temperance men, in their wisdom, thought it better to support the election of Mr. Hobbs, who the measure, while, on the other hand, has given the most satisfactory assurance that he will give hearty and loyal support to the Mowat Government in carrying out its prohibition pledges, Ross "listened without a word of rewhich even old-time and prominent buke." Conservatives declared to be "eminently satisfactory" when given, and which the great majority of the temperance people of this Province have deemed such ever since.

Mr. Hobbs is represented as an antiman and a consistent Prohibitionist. We do not wish to detract one word courts, and he gave the affirmative assurance in writing, which was satisfactory to all his temperance supporters. Just previous to the recent election the secretary again wrote him. this time submitting the series of questions recently adopted by the Alliance pays much better to executive, and these Mr. Hobbs fully, elass than with a class of frankly and publicly answered to the

And yet temperance workers it undertakes to "Save us from pretended, but false or has just been saying: "Life insurance all this is palmed off as an independent keep well informed? and impartial criticism in the best interests of prohibition!

The remarks regarding the Hon. G. W. Ross are also exceedingly unfair and unjust. He addressed a public meeting in the city the same night that number of failures, hence rate such Mr. Hobbs first gave his prohibition pledge on the public platform. He did road companies find that accidents and not, under the circumstances, discuss the prohibition question. This silence the Templar declares to be "treason to Prohibition," and "a dreadful humiliation to any man of principle." The total abstainers. Capital everywhere fact is pointed out as evidence that the Mowat Government does not stand for Prohibition! Fortunately Mr. Ross or the Government does not need to go to that source for a character, or they would have stripped of such long ago. The Mowat Government stand committed before the country more strongly to prohibition, to the full extent of their powers, than on any other one public question. It is the only question on which the Premier has given a written assurance and handed that assurance over to the Prohibitionists for safe keeping and future reference. Attempt to explain that away, or shake confidence in it as much as their detractors will, the facts are well known and understood all over the country. "Why then did not Mr. Ross go on and discuss it?" That was simply unnecessary. Mr. Ross and Mr. Dryden, two members of the Government, came to London to answer objections that had been urged against the Government's acts and policy. No objection had been made against their prohibition policy. Mr. Marter, as leader of the Opposition, declared himself in favor of that policy and a supporter of candidate. Where was the need of defending a policy that was not attacked? The intelligent electors of London well enough understood that.

This journal did not deem it necessary to make any strong prohibition appeals when both candidates declared themselves for the measure, and the Templar coolly assures the public it was because it "did not dare" to do so. It required very little courage to "appeal" for support for a measure which both candidates pledged themselves in favor of. And yet our silence, Royal Templars are told, "is in itself remarkably significant." How mole hills are magnified into mountains when a case must needs be made out!

Regarding Hon. Mr. Dryden's remarks concerning Mr. Marter's position the same censor goes on to assert that he "sneered at Marter's manly utterances" and Ross "listened without a word of rebuke." What Mr. Dryden did was to point out, in a straightforward way, the difference between the two parties on this question. Mr. Marter declared for prohibition, personally, as did Mr. Essery, but he took pains to say that he spoke for himself and not for his party, as the new Conservative members had not yet decided on one line of policy on the question. Mr. Dryden clearly showed that, under the circumstances, there was no assurance whatever that a Conservative Government, should one be formed, would stand committed to the Mowat Government was thoroughly committed to it. The difference was a very significant one. No wonder Mr.

Glaring Inconsistencies.

The following letter on the recent London election is of more than local interest. It is addressed to the Montreal Witness: and a Prohibitionist of long standing, with considerable experience in temada having the courage and manliness to make prohibition a part of the Government policy, and agreeing to stand or fall by it, which seems very inconsistent for temperance men, and most suicidal to the cause of prohibition.

I have no doubt the advice was sincerely given as a friend of prohibition, but, nevertheless, it was, I think, a mistake. As coming from a friend, it will do much more harm than if from an open and avowed enemy.

The practical effect of this advice, if acted upon, would present the curious and absurd spectacle of Prohibitionists voting so as to deteat the first Government we had ready to carry that by making it a Government measure; and staking the existence of the Government on the issue, and might result in the defeat of Sir Oliver Mowat; and of prohibition, too, and would throw it back a quarter of a century by the action of its professed friends.

It is clear from what the Witness states, as well as from other information, that Mr. Marter does not and cannot promise that his followers or even a majority of them will support prohibition, or that will, if attaining power, make it a Government measure, by which he will stand or fall; he has made no such promise for his party; they may do as they like; and his appeal to the temperance people of London, announcing himself as a personal abstainer and Prohibitionist was a blind to get temperance votes to defeat Messrs. Hobbs and Mowat, and prohibition as well; and in that case, he did currence of these terrible liquor tragedies not and could not guarantee that he would be in a position to give us prohibition; it was asking us to throw away the substance and grasp the shadow. It elected him, and defeated Mr. Tait, a candidate, and not Mr. Marter. loses much of its importance when it is recollected that he was said to be the hero, and was elected a few years ago in Muskoka, by the notorious time except the attraction all. Of the 75 members of the new Glasgow Council, 40 of the number are members and subscribers to the Scottish Temperance Association; 35 are personal abstainers, and 22 are favorable to temperance reform. Only 18 are opposed or neutral. In Dundee, two leading liquor men, the one a brewer and the other a publican, were defeated by abstainers. A list of localities is given where temperance men have been elected.

GENERAL. -Rev. Bryan Roe, a leading Engiish Wesleyan Missionary in Western Africa, in a recent address in England strongly denounced the importation of rum and gin, principally from Germany and Belgium. He stated that he knew villages of native Africans where, through the introduction of these liquors, the average age of the inhabitants had been brought down from 70 and 80 to 30 and 40 years.

If asked what is the remedy for the deepest sorrows of the human heart-what a man should chiefly look to in his progress through life as a power that is to sustain him under trials and enable him manfully to confront his afflictions - I must point him to something which, in a well known hymn, is called "the old, old story," told of in an old old book, and taught with an old, old teaching, which is the greatest and best gift ever given to mankind .- [ W. Flower Mission Work.

The World's Fair was a hot-bed for ideas-an educator whose force and potency this generation cannot estimate. Our children's children will have to set it in its proper niche in time's great work-shop. Progress in all kinds of effort, spiritual and material, was an outcome, not alone of the visit to the White City, but of the travel incident thereto, for everywhere new inventions, or a new putting of old ones, seemed to be the order of the

A bright thought for flower missioners was noted by one of our London White Ribboners and is appended as she tells it:

Dear Sisters,-Many of you are interested in flower mission work, and may be pleased to hear of a flower re-ceptacle that I saw this summer on the daughter of the late Lucy Stone, platform of the Boston station.

A table about four feet long and two wide had been fitted round the top Cox, of Washington, and Miss Frances with sides about four inches deep, thus forming an oblong box. This was lined inside with zinc, and had a vent in the bottom, into which a plug was fitted. Over the top of the box and securely fastened to its sides was stretched loose meshed wire netting. The receptacle thus made was filled with water, which was changed daily; the netting formed a "holder" for the flowers and prevented their sinking too

So many people, now-a-days, travel with flowers; and many others coming bring them, and would be glad to send their sweet-scented treasures where they would be so sure of a welcome, therefore this "station mission" ought to find many imitators outside of Boston. H. HERALD.

The National Convention.

Before it adjourned at Cleveland, O., last week, Miss Frances E. Willard was unanimously re-elected president of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union.

Mrs. Campbell, of Wisconsin, gave notice that at the next annual convention she would move to amend article 4 of the constitution by the substitution of the words "vice-president-atlarge" after the word "president." After this notice was given Mrs. E. Sturtevant Peel, of California, rose and announced that Miss Jessie Acherman, round the world missionary of the union, was seated with the California delegation, and Mrs. Peel desired that she be given a seat on the platform. Miss Acherman was by vote made a member of the convention and was escorted to the platform. When the escorting party reached the platform Miss Willard took a valise from Miss Acherman's hand and said, holding it up for the inspection of the audience; "This is the bag that has traveled 150,000 miles in the last seven years. These are not the most interesting facts in regard to it. It has contained 20,ooo pledges from men and 9,000 membership certificates from women all around the world." The convention applauded vociferously and Miss Willard rapped vigorously with her gavel "not for order," she explained, "but for applause." Miss

Willard then said: A certain custom originated with the first president of this union. It is thought now it is a good custom to drop. This custom has been for the president to don her wraps and sneak down the back stairs and stay out until she's elected. It really looks as though the president was sure of reelection. So I am not going out.

After this little speech Rev. Anna Shaw, of Pennsylvania, rose and said she hoped Susan B. Anthony was present, as she (Miss Anthony) was always compelled to go out during her election. She had always rebelled, and Miss Shaw observed that "Aunt Susan" would be much pleased at this action on Miss Willard's part. The election preliminaries were then begun get nothing to give chair. Mrs. Clara Hoffman was unanimously elected assistant secretary, and she followed with a brief address of thanks for the honor. Next came the election of treasurer, and Mrs. Helen M. Barker was promptly elected by a rising vote.

If the characteristic of the morning session had been intense excitement, that of the afternoon session was deep solemnity, the feature of the afternoon being the exercises in memory of Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, late recording secretary of the national organization, who died about a month ago. The first exercise of the afternoon was the devotional service, led by Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, of Oregon. After spoke, as did also Hrs. Henrietta S. Kellon, of California; Mrs. Della H. others of less note. Mrs. Helen Bullock, of New York, took charge of the memorial service. Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Missouri, spoke; Mrs. Alice Harris, of Boston, sang; Miss Frances E. Willard led in address public meetings. On Nov. prayer; Mrs. Henrietta Monroe, of Ohio, spoke, and Rev. Anna Shaw pronounced the benediction.

The following resolutions were adopted prior to final adjournment:

We disapprove of such exercises, of such games of football as require the presence of a physician, as being inurious to physical well-being and brutalizing in their moral tendency.

We protest against the custom of inter-collegiate athletics as demoralizing to the legitimate work of college life and calculated to encourage the spirit of gambling.

While friendly to all institutions having for their object the restoration of the drunkard, we do not recognize in them a cure for the saloon evil. We do not encourage local unions to adopt this work as any solution of the temperance problem so long as the

When we remember that the ready to respond, "Here am I, send Greatest Nuisance?" ability to do involves the responsibility of doing, then we can understand sends to us, no matter whence or how why all are held responsible, for to the call comes. each is intrusted the ability to do something. Every woman's personal judgment will recognize what her own best gifts are in the way of ability.

The great question is not so much what ability we have, as what use are solved to be ready to take up the first we making of that which we have. To do with our might everything that our hand finds for us to do is very far removed from looking with indifference at the work before us. Let us rather have opposition than indifference. Opposition may be met and refuted, but indifference only weakens our cause.

Whatever our capacity for service may be, we may bring it to Christ and to our union work. If we would hear the Master say to us "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou has been faithful over a few things, I will make be able to bring out of our weakest, thee ruler over many things," we must use every bit of the ability he has given humblest, service.—Maggie V. L. Macpass upon the character and tendency donald. They all belonged to the eastern section of Upper Canada, representing divisions then in working order in Brockville, Kingston, North Augusta, Farmersville, (now Athens) Coleman's Corners and Gananoque. At that time there were, 1,032 memers reported in the Province. The first session was held at Brockville, Oct. 10, 1849, when John L. Macdenald was elected G. W. P., and W. H. Ellerbeck, G. Scribe. The two following annual sessions were also held in that city, and in 1852, when the session recognized in every section of the Province.

THE OFFICERS .- The office of G. W. P. was long considered an honorary one, and the honors were frequently distributed. Among the early "Patriarchs" were John L. Macdonald, W. S. Burnham, A. B. Pardee, W. H. Ellerbeck, Rev. J. E. Ryerson, J. A. R. O'Reilly, Dr. John Beatty, Rev. Dr. T. Short, Abraham Farewell, John Wilson. All of these have gone to their long home, we believe, except the venerable Dr. John Beatty, of Comayor of the town of Cobourg and was, for years, professor of natural science in Victoria University. There are yet gray haired "old boys" of "Old Vic." scattered all over Canada who retain a kindly remembrance of their old time teacher, who was always their friend.

A. B. Pardee was a resident of North Augusta, near Brockville, and the father of the late Hon. Mr. Pardee, of Sarnia, for years a prominent member of the Mowat Government. The elder Pardee was a reformed man, having gone to the very depths of inebriety and had, in his own experience, a vivid realization of the evils of the drink system, which gave him a zeal and an eloquence which did the order grand service for years.

Rev. J. E. Ryerson was also a reformed man, a nephew of the late Dr. Egerton Ryerson, and was a man of rare eloquence and zeal. Rev. T. Short, D.D., was a Church of England the order and the temperance cause with rare Willity and zeal. GRAND SCRIBES.—The order seems always to have recognized the fact that the scribe should be an experienced and well-fried officer. No doubt the success of the work largely depends on his efficiency. W. H. Ellerbeck, of Brockville, was the first grand scribe and held the office two years. He was followed by H. W. Jackson, who was also twice elected. Then came Edward Stacey, of Kingston, who was elected in 1853 and held the office for thirteen years. Next week we hope to give full facts and figures from the official reports.

A TALE FROM WINNIPEC.

How Two Prominent Citizens of the Prairie Capital Regained Health.

One Suffered From the Effects of Malaria and Indigestion, the Other From Nervous Prostration-Their Story as Told a Tribune

Reporter. (From the Winnipeg Tribune.) The modern world is decidedly skeptical, and in the case of cures by advertised medicines, it is sometimes remarked that they occur at long distances. Recently, however, the Tribune was told that a Winnipeg gentleman had passed through an experience as remarkable as any of those published, and inquiry into the matter revealed the fact that several prominent citizens of Winnipeg had been greatly benefited by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. One of these citizens is Mr. W. A. Charlesworth, the well-known contractor, who Wicklow, Northumberland county, and during his residence in Winnipeg has added died a few years ago at the great age of to the beauty and wealth of the Prairie Capital by erecting some of its finest and most substantial buildings. Naturally what Mr. Charlesworth would say as to the merits of a medical preparation would be read with interest by the many citizens who have met him in business and socially, and a Tribune reporter was detailed to get from him some particulars in the matter. Mr. Charlesworth was seen at his beautiful and cosy home on William street a few days since, and while unwilling to attract publicity, yet for the benefit of those suffering as he once was he consented to give a simple statement of his case. About thirteen years ago, while living in the southern part of Illinois, near Cairo, he had several attacks of malarial fever and ague, which left his blood poor and thin, and so deranged his system that for about ten years after he was a sufferer from chronic indigestion. He came north after residing there for some years in order resident of Montreal, the agent of the to try and shake off the effects of the Bible Society there. He was followed malaria, but without much success. He has not had, while in the north, another real attack of ague, but every season he has had incipient attacks, which were twenty years, and whose name and only warded off by the prompt use of quinine. Bilious fever also threatened in the same way. He also suffered severely from indigestion. Determining to make a decided effort to get rid of his complication of disorders, he began in the fall of the annual session at Bowmanville 1891 to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, the some ten years ago, and has had tang- advertisement of which he had read in the newspapers. Mr. Charlesworth began to use the pills in October, and for the first dence of the members in re-election month scarcely felt any improvement.

However, from that time on improvement wishes just here to say that from no was rapid and the effect marvelous. The wishes just here to say that from no other officer of any temperance organother officer of any temperance organmembered, was intense, and yet so great was the toning up of the system and the such prompt information regarding enrichment of the blood, that he scarcely every department of work during the feit the cold at all that winter. His indigestion was removed, and since that time he has not had another attack of malaria fever. He continued taking the pills up to about the middle of January. In closing his interview Mr. Charlesworth sald: "However, do not rely upon my authority alone, but see Mr. Fairchild, who has used the pills." The Mr. Fairchild, it is needless to say, is Mr. Frank Fairchild, the largest dealer in vehicles and farm machinery in western Canada. Mr. Fairchild's name is too well known to readers of the Tribune to need any further introduction. He was also seen and fully confirmed what Mr. Charlesworth said. Some years ago Mr. Fairchild suffered from nervous prostration brought on by overwork, and suffered also from a dull pain in the back of the head. After spending some time at a famous Chicago sanitarium he was advised to take something to build up his blood, the doctors mentioning Pink Pills in their list of things advised. At first he took a fluid preparation, but as he found this unhandy to take with him as he traveled, he decided to try Pink Pills, as Mr. Charlesworth had strongly recommended them. He found great benefit from their use and continued taking them until restored to health. He has no hesitation in recommending them as a great builder up and purifier of the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills maybe had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., Schenectady, N. Y., 59 cents a box, or six boxes for $250. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive, as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

Thanksgiving in the Poultry-Yard. (By Mary Allaire.)

"Well, what does this mean?" and two turkeys, young and not very large even for their age, looked at each other in perfect amazement, and with some evidence of fear. "What have we done," they asked each other, "that we should be imprisoned?" No wonder they asked. All their lives-not long, to be sure—they had behaved as wellbred, well-cared-for turkeys were expected to behave, and suddenly they found themselves shut up behind bars, inside of a big box turned on its side, with all their companions-chickens, ducks, geese, and turkeys-gazing at them in pity or sympathy, or jeering, as they expressed their dispositions, just like little children,

"It is the strangest thing," said a lovely white chicken who was a great favorite with every one of this poultry community. "I-" and she could cay no more. A number of the feathered folk who heard her hung their heads and drooped their wings, except those who always saw fun in others' r sfortunes—you know that kind. I by always laugh when you fall, or spall ink on your new apron, or drop your slate and get a bad mark for making a noise. Such folks are the same whether they wear feathers or clothes.

The imprisoned turkeys were the more puzzled at their imprisonment because they were fed much oftener than the other feathered folk. They had warm mashed potatoes; then warm Indian meal mash, seasoned just right with pepper; cracked corn was on the floor of their prison all the time. Thick milk was kept in new tin pans fresh every morning for them. They grew so fat as to be uncomfortable. There was nothing for them to do but eat, and after a time they became proud, and were inclined to treat their most intmate friends condescendingly. must be something extraordinary, much finer than these other fowl, to be kept so exclusively and cared for so constantly. Besides, why does John (the man who fed them) exclaim l'hey are beauties!' if we are not more valuable than these other creatures?" Then they would spread their tails, stretch their necks, and give "gobble! gobble!" with what they believed to be aristocratic languor. Even the white chicken, whom everybody loved, shook her head sadly as she was forced to admit that the imprisaned turkeys were no longer agreeable. And thus the feathered folk lost interest. Once in a while, when the mornings were cold, and the other people in feathers would appreciate a warm mouthful of meal, there was a feeling of resentment when the pan of smoking potatoes or meal was put down inside the bars. The jeering folk would then crowd up to the bars, and humbly ask for a mouthful or two to be pushed through the bars. But they were treated with scorn, and the other folk smiled meaningly when they came back to huddle in the sun.

One morning, when it was crisp and cold, and a warm breakfast was fully expected by these two selfish, pamone in the feathered community who expressed any sympathy was the white chicken. "Really, it is too bad," she said. "When you have had a warm breakfast so many mornings it must be very hard to go without. I wish I put out her hand and said quickly: could get it for you." "Thank you," they said, humbly. "We do feel faint. Even a cold breakfast would be acceptable." "Oh, dear," said the white chicken, "how I wish I had hands! I would bring you some corn." Both the turkeys hung their heads. How often during the past weeks would it have been possible for them to have thrown out warm potato or meal to this sweet little friend, but they had not once ! While they still looked humbly down, the white chicken, whose name was Snowball, called out joyfully, in the language of the feathered people, "Goody, goody? here comes John!"

The turkeys pressed tightly against the bars and waited for John. To their surprise, he had nothing in his eyes. hands, and Mike, the other man, was with him. They walked right up to the cell of the turkeys, and John pulled out two of the bars. "My, shure, but they are fat!" said Mike. John put his hand in and grabbed one ne turkeys by the leg. "But s'posin' her name's something else," said Carrie, quickly.

Jean looked mystified. "'I guess that was for example,' like Miss Frazier says, I guess—you're to say her name, whatever it is," answered Jean, doubtfully.

"The Darkness Behind the Stars."

The title of this article was suggested by a passage in Rider Haggard's "Montezuma," indicating that the stars of the universe are set in a dark background of what we may conceive as infinite starless space into which no light penetrates from the stars of this or any other universe. There may be other universes; there may be an infinity of universes separated by an infinity of voids of impenetrable darkness; but the universe to which the Solar System belongs is limited in area, and although the task may be a laborious and difficult one, it is quite within the range of possibility that all the stars of any considerable magnitude may be counted.

There is an article on the subject by J. E. Gore, F.R.A.S., in The Gentleman's Magazine, October, in which the facts and arguments for this conclusion are set forth very clearly. The following extracts contain the gist of the argument: "It is certainly true that the larger the telescope used in the examination of the heavens, the more the number of stars seems to increase. But we now know that there is a limit to this increase of telescopic vision. And the evidence clearly shows that we are rapidly approaching this limit. Although the number of stars visible in the Pleiades at first rapidly increases with an increase in the size of the telescope used, and although photography has largely increased the number of stars in this remarkable cluster, it has recently been found that an increased length of exposure - beyond three hours-adds very few stars to the number visible on the photograph taken at the Paris Observatory in 1885, on which over 2,000 stars can be counted.

"On a photograph of the great globular cluster, Omega Centauri, recently taken in Peru with a telescope of thirteen inches aperture, the individual stars composing this superb cluster can be distinctly seen and counted, although to the eye it seems to be a mass of 'innumerable' stars. The enumeration has been carefully made by Mr. and Mrs. Baily and gives 6,389 for the number of stars in this cluster. They are of the opinion, however, that the actual number is really greater, and we may conclude that it really contains about 10,000 stars. If the whole sky were as thickly studded with stars as in this cluster-which of course it is notthe total number visible in the whole heavens would be, I find, 1,650,000,-000, a very large number of course, but until he saw his mother help herself to not much in excess of the present his plate slowly toward the forbidden human population of the earth, and I am not aware that the number of the "Well, if you are going to die, I earth's inhabitants has ever been demight as well die, too. Gimme some scribed as infinite. . . . Taking the comparatively poor regions in the sky into consideration, as well as the rich regions of the Milky Way, it is now generally admitted by all astronomers who have studied this particular question that the probable number of stars visible in our largest telescope does not exceed 100,000,000." A calculation is then entered into to show that this would give about 500 stars to each space of sky equal in area to the full moon, and the argument is further pushed, on mathematical grounds, to demonstrate that if the stars were infinite in number, the whole heavens would shine with the brightness of the sun. "We should have the diminished light of the stars exactly counterbalanced by the increased number at any given distance." Finally, Mr. Gore weighs the evidence for the various theories that have been advanced to explain the facts, and sums up as follows: "It seems to me the most probable hypothesis is that all the stars, clusters, and nebulæ visible in our largest telescopes form together one vast system which constitutes our visible universe, and that this system is isolated by a starless void from other similar systems which probably exist in infinite space. Another hypothesis, which also seems possible, is that the luminiferous ether which extends phere does at a certain distance from senting the burning of a block of exist altogether, and ending in an absolute vacuum, which would of course Mr. Herlihy surveyed the picture for arrest the passage of all light from darkness behind the stars'"

How It Feels to Drown.

It is only natural that men should indulge a somewhat morbid curiosity regarding the sensations of those who are just about to pass from this world to the next. Perhaps, fortunately for us, the dying man usually does not experience the full measure of such characteristic sensations till he is too far gone ever to return and describe them. In one class of cases, however, this rule does not hold good. The drowning man may be and often is resuscitated after he has completely lost consciousness and has, as far as his own feelings are concerned, stepped upon the threshold of the next world. The British Medical Journal, Oct. 13, in an article on the subject recalls the fact that there are several authentic records of such experiences.

One of the most interesting is that of Admiral Beautort, as described by himself in a letter to Dr. Wollaston. When a youngster he fell overboard in Portsmouth Harbor, and before relief reached him had sunk below the surface. All hope had fled, all exertion ceased, and he felt that he was drowning. We give his account of his sensations in his own words:

"'From the moment that all exertion had ceased, a calm feeling of the most perfect tranquility superseded the previous tumultuous sensations-it might be called apathy, certainly not resignation, for drowning no longer appeared to be an evil. I no longer thought of being rescued, nor was I in any bodily pain. On the contrary, my sensations were now of a pleasurable cast, partaking of that dull but contented sort of feeling which precedes the sleep produced by fatigue. Though the senses were thus deadened, not so the mind; its activity seemed to be invigorated in a ratio which defies all description, for thought rose after thought with a rapidity of succession that is not only indescribable, but probably inconceivable by any one who has not himself been in a similar situation. The course of these thoughts I can even now in a great measure retrace—the event which had just taken place, the awkwardness that had produced it, the bustle it must have occasioned, the effect it would have on a most affectionate father, and a thousand other circumstances minutely associated with home were the first series of reflections that occurred. They then took a wider range. In short, the whole period of my existence seemed to be placed before me in a kind of panoramic review, and each act of it seemed to be accompanied by a consciousness of right or wrong or by some reflection on its cause or its consequences; indeed, many trifling events which had been long forgotten then crowded into my imagination, and with the character of recent familiarity.' "Two minutes did not elapse before he was hauled up, and he found the return to life much less pleasant than drowning. Admiral Beaufort adds that he had heard from two or three persons who had a similar experience that their sensations had closely resembled his own. Sir Benjamin Brodie relates the case of a sailor who had been snatched from the waves and lain for some time on the deck of his ship insensible, who on his recovery declared that he had been in heaven, and complained of his restoration to life as a great hardship. In a wellknown passage of the 'Confessions of an English Opium Eater,' De Quincey relates that he was once told by a near relative that having in her childhood (aged 9) fallen in a river, and being on the very verge of death but for the assistance which reached her at the moment her whole life, clothed in its nothing is done. forgotten incidents, arrayed before her as in a mirror, not successfully but simultaneously, and she had a faculty developed as suddenly for comprehend- to almost any complexion, the deeper ing the whole and every part.' An blue is very trying to the most delicate; American gentleman, Mr. C. A. Hart- and however grateful the escape from ley, has recently given an interesting rightful responsibility by having it asaccount of his sensations when drowning. He lay at the bottom of a river in a state of semi-consciousness, in which he saw his relatives and friends all about him with their eyes full of tears. All the events of his life, from infancy upward, passed buy, sell, beat, or expel his property slowly before his mental vision; he felt from her home, as his will or temthat he was drowning, and he remembers thinking, unlike Clarence, that it was not pain to drown. He was able even to speculate whether his body would be found, and he pictured his and he had visual perceptions of the most marvelous combinations of colors. Next all was peace around him; he had a peculiar feeling of well-being in a the world spread out at his feet. such perfection. Lastly came mere darkness and oblivion till he tound himself stretched on the river bank and being subjected to the disagreeable process of restoration to life. ### China the Fountain Head of Woman's Wrongs

Dr. Rachael Benn, writing from Tien-Tsin, China, to the Woman's Journal says: "From whence came these false doctrines of woman's subjection?" was a question with me unanswered till I came to live among the heathen. How many times, in the past four years' residence in China, have I exclaimed: which has always been presented to us in the delicate tints and shades of "chivalric courtesy," the natural protection of the weaker by the stronger," has flashed out in the prismatic colors of its origin!

They are always the daughters of peers who, if not themselves connected with the royal household, are personal friends of the Queen. A letter is sent to the parents of the young woman selected requestthe favor of her attendance at court, and the request is never refused. The social cachet is absolute, the salary is $1,500 a year, and, though existence is dull in court circles, it is endurable in the light of its ulterior advantages.

When an Honorable Miss or a Lady Somebody arrives for her first "wait" she at once receives her badge as maid of honor. This is a miniature picture of the Queen set in brilliants, which she wears hung from a ribbon. Her duties are not severe—there would be less ennai probably if there were more to do-and consist chiefly make-up, while the character for Queen's right hand, unless royal guests

Nor will the Queen touch any but freshly-coined money, so such members of the household as play with her have to be provided with coin that has never been in circulation. ### Colonial Women.

In the current number of the New Review, Mr. Gilbert Parker draws a pleasant picture of "colonial women." He maintains, and with much reasonableness, that the colonial woman is as well educated and as well informed as and "up to date." "There is a keen gation, and he openly stated that he could sincerity in these colonial women," he writes. "They have not yet turned a two-days caucus of his supporters had life into a game, its pleasures into a been in session at Toronto! fever," and he goes on to remind us that to be cultivated, well informed, and really broad-minded is a very different thing from being acquainted with the latest thing in fads or fancies or London slang, and that, with good literature available for ail, colonials, whether men or women, have as good a chance of attaining culture as the English at home. He has not failed, however, to discern that what weighs most heavily on the colonial woman and proves the greatest bar to intellectual life is the burden of domestic work in districts where labor is dear and female helpers are scarce. In such districts women slave their souls out under the strain of work from early in the morning till late at night. The picture, Mr. Parker admits, is not a cheerful one, and he thinks that only the superior adaptability of colonial women enables them to go successfully through the ordeal.

"Hold its Hands."

Mr. William Canton, the manager at Messrs. Isbister's, recently published to whom a baby is still a strange, perplexing, insoluble, and unmanageable mystery, and then Kate Field suggests the tollowing: embodies the principle involved

The Hamilton Scold and the London Election.

Hold Thou my hands !"

Among the humors of the recent campaign, not the least humorous has been the scolding of the Templar-a weekly journal published at Hamilton-against all and sundry of the men and women of London who would not vote against Sir Oliver Mowat by voting against his candidate. Scoiding, did we say? One quotation, indeed, suggested that those who had not voted to suit our esteemed Hamilton contemporary should be "cursed bitterly." If the sense of good humor were not upper most, a controversialist might request the Templar to produce its credentials as accredited Curser-General of all who do not happen to take its opinions at secondhand. A philosopher might here chime in and point out that a pen habitually lacking in good nature is as little likely to commend any good cause to manly men and womanly women as a vituperative tongue. Whether is moral indigestion that disturbs the moral stomach of our esteemed Hamilton contemporary, or, unhappily, something in the nature of the fashionable new "fixture", been for a considerable period strangers to the sanctum of our Hamilton contemporary. The hallucination of Mr. Marter's Hamilton organ appears to be that the people of London should have voted against the Provincial Premier as a sort of reward for his having granted the plebiscite; for his pledge of legislation to the extent of what the courts might show to be within his jurisdiction; and for his many admitted services to the cause of moral reform during his 22 years' premiership! That is not the view of the people of London, as has been made manifest by the magnificent majority of 803 votes polled in favor of the candidate who pledged himself to uphold the hands of Sir Oliver Mowat.

Nothing whatever had occurred since Sir Oliver Mowat gave the plebiscite, and promised to abide by its mandate to the extent to which the courts should decide that the Province had legislative powernothing, we say, had occurred that in the slightest degree made the duty of fealty to Sir Oliver Mowat less a duty on the 20th day of November than it confessedly was on the day that the Toronto Convention obtained and accepted the Provincial Premier's promise, and inferentially if not actually pledged him their support until he should prove himself un-

The people of London are not people of one idea. They have shown by large majorities in the past their interest in the cause of moral reform; but they honor Sir Oliver Mowat also as the man who has kept a surplus in the Treasury; whose Government erected a great public building without jobbery-the first time on record; who saved to this Province 100,000 square miles of valuable territory; whose Minister of Education carried off the international honors for the best school system on the globe; and who has given Ontario nearly a quarter of a century of good government which has made it the envy of the world. Let us briefly recapitulate once more the situation as to the prohibition and license

1. Sir Oliver Mowat granted a plebiscite, and promised to abide by it-to the extent of the jurisdiction that should be found to

2. The question of jurisdiction is now before the courts.

3. It may be found (a) that the Dominion has the chief power to prohibit; (b) that the Provinces have the chief power; or (c) that the power is divided between the Dominion and Provincial authorities.

4. Meantime the Crooks Act-the best license law yet devised-is in force, and will be administered by Sir Oliver Mowat.

5. The public have much knowledge of Sir Oliver Mowat, and much confidence in both his integrity, his judgment and his statesmanship. There is well-founded confidence that he will do what is right and best, according to the circumstances of the case, when the courts finally indicate what

A HERO'OF EIGHTEEN.

England's Famous Boy Captain Tells How He Saved a Ship.

The pages of the sea have given us no finer tale for many a day than that of the boy captain and the Clyde sailing ship Trafalgar. It is a story that might have been written by Robert Louis Stevenson or Clark Russell, or by

It hardly need be said that the boy captain, as we have got to call him, is Mr. William Shotten, the son of a sailor, Capt. Stephen Shotten, and a member of a Sunderland family. Among the lanes of Gloucestershire, where Capt. Stephen Shotten now has his home, I had a chat with the boy captain one fine afternoon recently. He is a modest, charming lad of eighteen, as natural as a sailor should be, yet capable at a pinch, I should think, of holding his own in the most difficult circumstan-

"Since I came back to the old country I have been having a holiday," he told me, "but I shall be off to sea again by and by." He might have added that he now carries his certificate as a junior officer, and the fates look as if they mean to make him a full-blown skipper before he gets a beard.

"You might tell me, so I may ask one or two questions on them, the main facts of your skippership of the Trafal-

"Briefly they are these: We were sailing from Batavia for Melbourne in ballast. Capt. Edward died of Java fever while we were lying in Batavia. We left two men ill in hospital and two had deserted, so we sailed with a crew, all told, of twenty-three hands. Mr. Roberts, who had been first mate, was now in command; we had got a new first mate. Mr. Norwood; a seaman from the fo'c's'le had been made second mate, and I was ranked third mate."

"And so you put out on October 29 last, I think, for Melburne?"

"Yes, taking the fever with us, I'm sorry to say. I had been ill of it myself. and suffered a two-hours' attack almost every day until we reached Melbourne. But I was spared, although while the at tacks were on I really don't think 1 should have cared how it went with me. Well, first an able seaman died, then

Mr. Roberts and the carpenter, then Mr. Norwood and then the cook. A desolating business it was, and sadly demoral ized the crew, especially as they were left with myself—an apprentice just out of his time, a boy-as the only one on board who could navigate." "But didn't the prospect appear tremendous-looking one to you?" "Really, I can't say that I ever thought of that; perhaps because I had not time; perhaps because while Mr. Roberts and Mr. Norwood were lying ill I had already been navigating the ship. You see, the third mate, with whom I took watch and watch about from the time we lost the other officers. could not navigate; but, frankly, I hadn't any fear about being able to take the Trafalgar to Melbourne, and I told the men so, They wanted to make for the nearest port in Australia, but I set my face against that, because it would have involved great expense to the owners. Besides, as I argued with them, if I could navigate the ship to the nearest port in Australia, I could navigate her to Melbourne."

"I believe they didn't work with you just as heartily as they might have done."

"As I have said, the deaths on board and the position we were left in made the men see things very blackly. It was from that fact that any difficulties I had with them arose, not from a desire, I'm certain, to cause difficulties, Anybody who knows what sailors are will easily understand their fidgetiness and the troubles they make as a result of it. If I had been in the fo'c's'le and seen a lad taking the bearings day after day on the quarter deck, and had I known that he was the only frail guide on the trackless sea-why, 1 think I might myself have been a trifle uneasy. All the men could have done would have been to take a given direction-the direction of the Australian continent-and bear up for it. Either that or have trusted to being picked up by a passing ship. In the first case, they must run her aground on the first land they touched. It might have been a barren coast, hundreds of miles from civilization. Whatever happened to them, she must have been lost. As to being picked up by another ship-weil, the comment on that is that we didn't see one on the whole voyage?'

"Naturally, only those on board the Trafalgar could really recognize all that was meant in your skippership?"

"We had a good bit of rough weather when we got into Australian latitudes: had sails blown away and so on; but got to Melbourne all right in time for Christmas—on December 17. Immediately they got foot on shore the men forgot all their troubles and couldn't say too kind things to me, as, indeed, it has been also with other people since. The whole affair was, no doubt, strange -and may never occur again-anyhow, in my experience. Perhaps it was not have 'ot through as we did, you know."

ly-A Great Aid to Lovers.

The bicycle is casting its delicate shadow over literature, art, the drama. It has affected science and religion and revolutionized social and industrial life. Sardou is writing a play in which bicycle is the striking novelty. The Japanese are using bicycles, while the Chinese regard them with a superstitious dread. This is not the reason why the Japanese are wiping up the floor with the Chinese, but it is significant of the difference between the two peoples. The bicycles typifies the higher intelligence; it is the emblem of up-to-date civilization.

Walking along a lonely country road you need never be afraid of a man you meet on a bicycle. But look out for a dark, swarthy man who rides a horse, or a round-shouldered individual with furtive looks who may be, like yourself, a pedes-

The man who rides a bicycle will get there every time unless the pneumatic tire explodes. Ruffians and ignorami (new word) never ride bicycles. The anti-bicycle fiend is one of the most dangerous cranks at large. He is standing in front of civilization waving his hat, The world, in its ponderous onward roll of progress, will not leave the track for this individual. Never try to stop a bicycle which you may see coming down a hill, but sit on the fence and watch it go by. Hardly a day passes but somebody invents a new kind of a bicycle. There are men who know more about bicycles than anything else in this world. Then there is the man who knows the history of the bicycle, and who can tell where and when every new kink and curve of the machine was invented. His whole life is wrapped up in the bicycle and all his thoughts revolve around the ball bearings,

Another queer product of this modern invention is the man who thinks bicycle, dreams bicycle, talks bicycle and who would like to be carried on a bicycle to

Poems have been written to the bicycle and men have made love on the bicycle and gone off on a bicycle tour for their wedding journey. But one of the disadvantages of this is that the girl is too far

Now along comes a man to remedy this defect. He has invented a bicycle cab. The driver in front works the pedals and steers, while a footman, mounted behind, assists the propulsion. This would delight the soul of John Jacob Astor, who in his book looks hopefully to the future when horses will be done away with and everything happens when you touch a button. The bicycle cab is especially adapted to lovers, who hitherto have regarded the bicycle with disfavor, even for the loneliest roads. It is a sort of sedan chair big enough for two. You may pull up a blind behind so that the footman may not gratify his curiosity, and there is no horse to kick in the dashwithout its risks, but if I had set to board at the most interesting point of the doubting about the result we might not conversation, while your arms are not en gaged in driving and are available for valids who go out to take the air. You can get more air on a bicycle in a given time than anything else.

By the way, one of the results of the bicycle cab will be that men will cease to ride "on" a bicycle. They will proceed to ride "in" a bicycle, just as naval etiqutte requires the officers to say they were "in'

A man can hop into his bicycle cab and be tooled uptown from business. If the weather is cold he can put foot-warmers in, or he might even have a small stove. While you may not be able to afford a private carriage, the bicycle cab is within the reach of all. You need only get a couple of men to do the leg work and there you are.

The British Empire.

The British Empire is a political creation unparalleled in the world's history, not only by its extent and population, in both which respects it is slightly surpassed by China, but because, with an area of more than 10,000,000 square miles and with 352,000,000 inhabitants, it is scattered over the whole globe. It embraces all zones from the icy wilderness of Hudsons Bay to the tropical jungles of India and the mahogany forests of Honduras; there is scarcely a product which a British province does not bring forth in excellent quality, and not less various are the degrees of civilization of its inhabitants from the Kaffirs of the cape to the highly cultivated citizens of Toronto or Sydney. We find with Christians of all confessions 200,-000,000 Hindoos, about 70,000,000 Mohammedans, and 8,000,000 Buddhists; and the Bible is printed in 130 languages and dialects represented in the Empire, yet, notwithstanding such promiscuous elements, the Government, with rare exceptions, maintains order and no sign of dissolution is visible.-Forum.

WINTER DRAPERIES.

EFFECTIVE HANGINGS FOR WINDOWS, WALLS AND DOORWAYS.

Gold Embroideries Will Be a Notable Feature of the Winter Furnishing and Oriental Effects Will Be Seen More Than Ever.

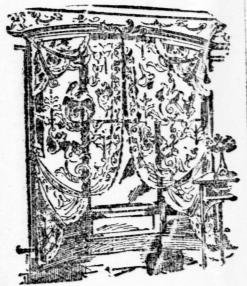

A transformation is going on in every household. The airy, gossamer, draperies that have floated in the summer breezes are being displaced by heavier fabrics of warmth and color. The 'wo man who takes special pride in selecting and superintending her home furnishings, is at present deeply engrossed in the subject.

First and foremost she takes her woodwork into consideration. Where it is in any of the dark, natural tints, delicate colorings may be employed, particularly the clear greens and quiet blues. But if the woodwork be light, far better effects are produced by warmer rose and yellow tints, with the shades deepening in the heavy hangings. Select all your colors with a view to the sunlight. Unless you are furnishing a room that will be used only occasionally, have an effect that will admit of the bright afternoon glow.

You will have but little difficulty in deciding upon the material. There are any number of beautiful fabrics at reasonable prices, the most popular being those which suggest Turkish or Oriental effects. The French silks are woven in to stimulate them, and others show the fine tapestry weaves that are always so handsome.

Skin silk, a reversible material, is very reasonable, and can be draped with excellent effect, since both sides can be utilized. These have large, splendid armorial and heraldic designs,

The velours are better adapted to warmth and weight where little draping and striking results are sought for. They may be lightened by the bands of gold embroidery. Richer materials are , to be very fashionable.

the heavy Spanish satins, the damash brocades in large, flower effects, and the material known as Bolton. Derby satin, a combination of silk and linen, makes exquisite panel hangings. But the economical and tasteful home decorator will get wonderful results from ordinary jute and tapestry cloths, that cost less than a dollar a yard.

There are just as many varieties in the lighter fabrics. Chamelion silk with shot and iridescent impression, drapes beautifully and can be made to subdue and harmonize conflicting tints. There are also the light Japanese clothscrepe and shiffu-Japan and India silks, the new Morris cretonnes, and, if all else fails, the accommodating and soft. ly falling Madras. The Japanese materials are especially good, for they are woven in beautiful Oriental designs, in well-chosen tints, and give the slight barbaric touch which our modern civilization seems to yearn for.

Gold embroideries promise to become a great feature in winter furnishings. And this is not to be wondered at-for they suggest sunlight and happiness when combined with the dull tints of velours and jute. They are done in fine threads of gold, in heavier bullions, or in combinations of yellow silk and gold threads.

All drapery must be judicious. Do not overstock your room. Do not fill it with flimsy scarfs that are absolutely uncalled for. Do not drape a picture or an easel. If you do your room will never be restful. Have all the hangings give simplicity, richness and ensemble.

First of all consider your windows. Here, as many as three, and often four, materials hang. Next to the glass are the sash curtains, generally the fuil length of the panes; after that the shade, and beyond that fall the heavy draped curtains. Sometimes there are two sets of these-a curtain of rich material, and one of lace, but this does not ofter occur. The full sash curtains are made in simple Swiss, finished with a small ruffle, and are of pure white. If a richer effect is sought for, there are more expensive lace materials-guipures and Irish points.

The heavy curtains for the inside come in the materials already mentioned-jutes, velours, tapestries, and the like. Where only the lace curtain is desired, there are the tambours and Brussels varieties; the ecru laces -Marie Antoinette, Cluny, Colbert, Russian and antique; the Persian materials in dotted Swiss; the embroidered Gregorian curtains; and, last of all, but most popular.

the Irish point. In the matter of portieres the home decorator has an infinite number of styles; or she may make her own, always remembering that the long lines produce high effects, and that the simple folds are most restful. An easy drapery is the straight valance, with the sides caught back simply and trimmed with plain bands of braid at the sides. A lighter drapery has the valance slight ly caught up at each corner in a puff and long cords, proceeding from these puffs, catching up the sides (as shown in the sketch.) Half way down each side another and a larger puff is made ism is the beginning of ret.

an easy jabot at the bottom. All mantal draperies are very light. Nothing more than the Oriental or dainty silky scarf is employed. So far as walls are concerned, panel hangings and draperies are very popular. When the draperies are employed, satins, fine damasks and tapestries are the materials. But the flat panels admit of almost any material one cares to employ, barring, of course, the excessively light and dainty ones. Tapestries woven too closely resemble the hand made Gobelins, made large enough to stretch an entire wall, and representing some beautiful group or scene in nature, are coming to be more and more fash ionable. More modest decoration reproduces this fancy in panels only, and these panels, banded with wide plush, make admirable portiers which promise

Most excellent effects are produced from ordinary burlap, in its natural tint, stretched across the wall and painted with stenciled conventional de signs in warm tints. This material comes also in dull Venetian red, making excellent panel effects. A beautiful Italian room, done in the grays and pinkish creams and Venetian reds, has its walls hung with this ordinary burlag in both tints. Where the piano stands in position that exposes its back it should be hung with an unobtrusive material that blends with its wood; and if lounging chairs or a couch can be placed just be low the drapery, an effective background is thus secured and the awkwardness of the flat back done away with.

ON THE FOLLY OF SAVING. Suggestions to the Woman of Over-Thrift;

Habits. Never save anything "for best." The gown you lay away in tissue paper soo; loses its modern touch. The bonnet you put aside 'for best" becomes anti quated. Gloves grow yellow, shoe lea ther cracks, silks wear out in the crease and all saving of wearing apparel for the future is folly wide the mark,

How painfully often one finds the wo man whose wedding gifts include cut glass and silver and dainty napery using coarse table cloths-or oilcloth, often enough, if there are babies-cheap glass and plated ware, not because she does not love the fine things, but because she does, and is "saving" them. She means hoarding them for the cheap gratifica tion of exhibiting them to admiring friends in all the spotlessness and shine of disuse, or the deserved mortification of having the children gaze open eyed and make embarrassing remarks apropos of the unaccustomed splendor when it is brought out for company The things are "too good" to be used she insists, and there are carpets too good for the sunlight, and silk quilts carefully folded away because patch. work is quite good enough for the family, and books which are too good to be handled by the children, whose litera ture, it seems, must be chosen by the outside rather than the inside. The wisest motto that can be adopted by the woman with the love of this particular sort of saving is the couplet from the old gravestone:

What I saved I lost; What I spent I had.

Women With Pretty Feet.

Mrs. Burke Roche and Mrs. Cooper Hewitt both possesses feet lovely enough to inspire poets. They have exquisitely arched insteps.

Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt has a short foot, but extremely pretty in outline; the foot of Mrs. Arthur Mr. Dodge is beautifully shaped, and Mrs. Paran Stevens may justly be proud of that aristocratic little member which she covers with such stylish slippers, boots

Mrs George E. Burt and Mrs. Harry Moore are two fashionable women whose gowns are gorgeous studies and whose pretty feet are always dressed in the most chic manner. Mrs. Moore delights in black and brown suede slippers and ties, which bring out all the expressive Women Not Specialists. woman is seldom enough of a specialist. Whether working for money to know the mysteries of the kingdom of or not, she usually makes her living at a dozen different trades. She must be housekeeper, cook, seamstress, nurse, milliner and upholsterer whenever occasion requires. That is, she thinks she must, though it is usually sentiment and insidious feminine facility, not stern had taught them plainly and without parduty, which carries the day. The result of this narrow view is dreadful to kill Him, but now that the kingdom is fatigue, that takes the sweetness out of to be postponed till His return He tells in life and banishes sleep. The woman parables the characteristics of this present artist, physician, clerk, journalist, any one whose work lies away from the fireside, must educate the family not to the kernel from the indolent and for the expect domestic services from her any diligent. more than from a man. LESSON X, FOURTH QUARTER, IN-TERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 9.

Text of the Lesson, Luke viii, 4-15-Memory Verses, 11-15-Golden Text, Luke viii, 11-Commentary by the Rev. D. M.

4. "And when much people were gathered together and were come to Him out of every city He spake by a parable." In Math. xiii, 2, and Mark iv, 1, it is written that He sat in a ship, and the multitude stood on the shore while He taught them. In Math. xiii, 1, it is said that He went out of the house and sat by the seaside. This going out of the house may be suggestive of His turning from the house of Israel because of their turning against Him, for we read in Math. xii, 14, that they held a council to destroy Him, and it was not till after this that they were taught by parables. The light is never taken from those who are willing to re-

5. "A sower went out to sow his seed, and as he sowed some fell by the wayside, and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it." In verses 11 and 12 we have His own explanation of verse 5 and will therefore take them here and so on through the lesson. The seed is the word of God. In I Pet. i, 23, it is called incorruptible seed which liveth and abideth forever. In Math. xiii, 87, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man, but in the next verse the good seed is the children of the kingdom. 6. "And some fell upon a rock, and as soon as it was strung up it withered away because it lacked moisture." Matthew and Mark say it had not much earth and withered when the sun was up because it had no root.

13. Here is the explanation of the seed on the rocky soil. Compare Math. xiii, 20, 21, and Mark iv, 16, 17. These churchgoers receive the word with joy, possibly talk it over on the way home and at the dinner table, but some one says something against the preacher, a slander old or new, or perhaps one says that higher criticism has disposed of the whole passage which the preacher spoke from, and the foundation of his remarks is thus swept away. Or perhaps next day in the store or office the hearer talks of the good sermon of yesterday and is laughed at by his fellows, who want to know when he turned his back on them and how soon he intends to depart for the foreign field. Thus he is offended, and satan conquers. 7. "And some fell among thorns, and the thorns sprang up with it and choked Mark iv, 7, says it yielded no fruit. 14. This verse, with Math. xiii, 22, and Mark iv, 18, 19, gives light on the thorny ground hearers. These seemed to be really saved people. The failure with them is fruit not salvation. The cares and riches and pleasures of this life, with the lusts of other things, choke the word, and they bring no fruit to perfection. There are many who think that if they can only make sure of heaven that is everything, and having received Jesus as their Saviour they are burdened with business or household cares or carried way with pleasures or other things, as studies or pursuits of various kinds. They accept Jesus as Saviour, but not as Lord. They expect to crown Him Lord of all when they get to heaven, but know nothing of it here. They are described in I Cor. iii, 15, as losing their works and saved as by a fire. They are not abiding in Him for fruit bearing and would be ashamed if He should come

(I John ii, 28; John xv). 8. "And other fell on good ground and sprang up and bare fruit an hundredfold. And when He had said these things he cried, He that hath ears to hear let him hear." Matthew and Mark say that this seed brought forth some thirty, some sixty and some a hundredfold.

15. This, with Math. xiii, 23, and Mark iv, 20, leaves us in no doubt as to who are meant by the good ground. The honest and good heart must indicate the new heart born from above, which was probably also in the last class of hearers. These hear the word and receive it and keep it and with patience bring forth fruit to the praise of His name who redeemeth them. While all true believers are equally sanctified in Christ by His one offering (Heb. x, 10, 14), it is equally true that we are daily being sanctified as to our daily life by His word of truth (John xvii, 17). All God's dealings with His people are in order that they may bear more fruit, for He is glorified when we bear much fruit (John 249 Dundas St. xv, 5, 8). To this end we must remember that Jesus said in this connection, "Without Me or apart from Me ye can do nothing," or, as in Hos. xiv, 8, "From Me is thy fruit found." If we as believers ever find ourselves trying to abide or trying to bear fruit, we may be sure that we are not right, for quietly as the branch abides in the vine and as quietly as the vine bears fruit, through its branches se quietly will God by His Spirit bear fruit through us in Jesus' name when we are fully yielded to Him. We need not plan anything for God, for "we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before prepared, that we should walk in them" (Eph. ii, 10). If we simply and whole heartedly yield to Him, He will work in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure those things which are well pleasing in His sight (Phil. ii, 13; Heb. xiii, 21). Some have not ears to hear these things. They are wise and prudent in their own estimation and want to know why God gave us brains and common sense if He did not want us to be self reliant and plan and work out things for His glory.

9. "And His disciples asked Him, saying, What might this parable be?" Mark iv, 10, it is written that "when He was alone they that were about Him with the twelve asked of Him the parable." So in Mark xiii, 3,4, we find that Peter, James, John and Andrew asked Him privately about certain matters. He still has an inner circle of disciples to whom He tells many things which He cannot tell to all. He is not partial. He is no respecter of persons, but all do not come equally close to Him in whole hearted surrender. All limitations and hindrances are on our side, not on His. 10. "And He said, Unto you it is given God, but to others in parables, that seeing they might not see and hearing they might not understand." This is not as some think, who suppose that He taught in parables in order to make His teaching more plain. Observe, He says that they might not see and not understand. He ables until they refused Him and sought of the kingdom. A parable is like the shell of a nut, as one has said. It keeps
