Scientific American Supplement

In the current issue of the Scientific American Supplement, No. 2022, for October 3rd, will be found an interesting account of the use of searchlights for war purposes, especially as developed in France. An unusually valuable article to those interested in the manufacture of iron and the facts given in which are also undoubtedly applicable to a considerable extent in other lines, is Electric Driving for Rolling Mills, which gives facts and figures as to the application of the system to mills now using steam drive, and shows remarkable economies in both cost and space. Recent Developments in Marine Propulsion reviews the history of the turbine, and tells how it is now applied to secure both economy and efficiency, and also has something to say about the Diesel oil engine. The history of the Automobile Torpedo will interest everyone in view of the recent sensational use of this comparatively little known war engine. The problem of controlling big ocean steamships is always a vital one, and the description of the Westinghouse Bridge Control indicates a wonderful advance. By means of a comparatively simple combination of devices, operated by compressed air and oil under pressure the officer on the bridge is enabled to start, reverse, or stop the turbines which drive the vessel, and to regulate their speed, as occasion requires. It is a most ingenious and valuable device which has improved its efficiency in practical tests on the U. S. collier "Neptune." The Experimental Plotting of Electro-Static Fields covers a subject which is explained by its title, and has a practical as well as an experimental interest. Wireless Equipment of Aircraft describes in simple language that can be understood by anyone how wireless messages are sent, and tells of the difficulties of operating to and from aircraft. Birds and the weather diseases theories connected with the migration of birds. A review of a new atlas of Finland gives much interesting information about an attractive country of which we know but little. The address on Heredity, by Prof. Bateson, is concluded in this issue, and there is the usual assortment of smaller but valuable articles.

Mrs. D. M. Outhit expects to attend the Convention of the Women's Missionary Aid Society at Middleton during the present week. Others from Melvern will probably attend as well.

Several of our Melvern ladies attended the millinery openings at Kingston last week, the millinery being exceptionally stylish and beautiful this season, in spite of the war and the cry of "hard times" in the air.

Among those who spent Thanksgiving at their homes here, were: Miss Muriel Lantz, teacher at Port George, Miss Myrtle Morse of Acadia Seminary, Miss Georgie Brown of the Lawrencetown High School, and Miss Lavina Goucher of Halifax.

On Saturday last the Methodist Mission Band was reorganized for the next year, with Miss May Phinney as President, Miss Hazel McNeil as treasurer, and Miss Louise McIntosh, secy., to meet at the home of Mrs. Timothy Phinney once in two weeks.

Quite a number from here attended the exhibition at Kentville during last week, among whom were: Mrs. D. M. Outhit, Mrs. Joseph Brown, Col. Spurr, Kenneth McNeil, and Alden and Freeman Brown. Others attended, whose names we have omitted, but all seem much pleased with the Fair, and the exhibits shown.

A branch of the Middleton Red Cross Society was organized here on Monday, Oct. 5th, with Mrs. A. E. Wheeler as President, Mrs. F. S. McNeil as vice-pres., Mrs. M. Sprowl, treas., and Miss Hortense Spurr, secy. Others are helping with heart and hand, and much interest is manifested in the good cause. May this work prosper! The people of this community have also responded liberally in aid of the Belgian Relief Fund, the contributions being left in the care of Lt.-Col. McNeil, who will eventually forward the goods.

A Thanksgiving Service was held in the Baptist Church here on Sunday afternoon, and was largely attended, several strangers being present in the congregation. The church was tastefully decorated, the bright Autumn leaves blending well with the profusion of fruit, vegetables, flowers, etc., while high over all, our British flag unfurled, reminded us of the great struggle going on in other lands. The service, conducted by the Rev. A. E. Wheeler, was appropriate, the music well rendered, and a collection taken in aid of the Belgian Fund. At the close of the service Rev. Wheeler sang a solo, and Miss Hortense Spurr gave a reading in her usual good style, which was much appreciated by all.

Brothers in Death

August 8th saw the first formal burial in British soil of heroes killed in the war. By a curious fatality German and British heroism was represented equally in number of simple coffins—four of each—that were taken with all honor, but with a certain rusticity which enhanced the pathetic impressiveness of it all, to the quiet churchyard on a slight hill overlooking the river Orwell, and the pleasant pastoral lands on either side.

There was never a hint that the British dead were entitled to more honor in their country than those who had died because they were enemies. The same last respect was paid to both. Each was "Our dead brother here departed" at the graveside, where British bluejackets sprinkled earth upon the coffins.

Almost the only people who witnessed the solemn ritual of the communal were a few groups of villagers. At the head of the procession walked the Ganges burglar, with the Ganges firing party following, their arms reversed. There was a two-horsed country wagon driven by a typical old rustic, in which the two groups of coffins were laid side by side. Over the one group was the black German ensign of the Black Eagle, over the group the Union Jack.

The British bluejackets carefully arranged the two flags over the first of each of the lines of four coffins, and the Ganges boys bore them to the graveside. The naval chaplain read the essential parts of the burial service separately over each coffin, men of the firing party, standing with downcast heads and rifles reversed, were called to attention by Petty Officer Foster, drawn sword in his hand. Three volleys spat in the air over the sequestered graves, and the haunting bugle call of "The Last Post," thrilled and trembled the quiet countryside.

Official duty to the dead of both countries has been done with the fine nobility of soul that has ever been associated with the British Navy.—Ex.

Care of the Ewe and Lamb

The Live Stock Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa has issued a very practical bulletin on "The Care of the Ewe and Lamb." It constitutes a shepherd's presentation of the details of management of the breeding flock, more particularly during the Winter and Spring months. It takes up, among other things, pasturage, feeding, docking, castration, the raising of pet lambs, and the simple and more serious ailments and accidents met with in the ordinary flock, concluding with a series of paragraphs termed "Leaves from the note-book of a successful Shepherd."

The bulletin, which is helpfully illustrated was prepared by T. Reginald Arkell, who has charge of the Sheep and Goat Division of the Live Stock Branch. It is designated as Pamphlet No. 5 of the Live Stock Branch. Copies are available to those who apply for them to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Through Europe on the Eve of War

A RECORD OF PERSONAL EXPERIENCES

From Constance to Constance—An Eventful Journey

Monday morning at nine o'clock, eighty delegates, including Americans, English, Germans, Norwegians, Swedes, Danes, Dutch and Bulgarians, were at the station at Cologne. The French and Swiss delegates had been allowed to cross the frontier into Switzerland. The Scandinavians had voted to go on to London to the adjourned meeting of the Conference. There were two special cars provided for us by the courtesy of the German government, and they were billed to go clear through to Flushing. At the station the confusion was such that it was with difficulty that the cars could be reached. Hundreds of families besides ourselves were trying to get home to England. The station was piled mountain high with baggage and the officials could promise nothing except to stick the label Cologne on it, which was as far as the train itself was to go. There was no time to weigh it, so we paid a lump sum of six hundred marks to the stationmaster and he promised to send it on the second section of the train. The proprietor of the Hotel Heil had been most obliging to us. He trusted us to pay the big hotel bill some time in the future, when checks could again be collected in Germany. He put up eighty lunches in four great hamper, with eighty bottles of Apollinaris water. We saw those hampers put into the luggage van, but when we were to get them in Offenburg they had disappeared. The train to which this car had been hitched was full of soldiers being transported to Cologne, so that it did not require much mental exercise to imagine where those eighty lunches had gone. Our party just about filled the two special cars comfortably, but the crowds of travellers and soldiers striving to secure seats was so great that in five minutes they had boarded our cars and filled the aisles as full as the compartments, and at every station more poured in.

The experience of English and Americans crossing Germany on this eventful day were varied and, in many instances, quite opposite, and led to much discussion in the English papers. One man would report his treatment as most brutal, while another received only kindest treatment. Mr. William Cleveland-Stevens, of London, who crossed Germany from Bayreuth, where he had been attending the Wagner Festival, states that about nine o'clock on Sunday morning his party, consisting of three ladies, the chauffeur and himself, set out by motor-car from Bayreuth. He continues:

"It struck me that an extraordinary change had already taken place in the attitude of the people in Bayreuth toward us, and the impression gained on us very strongly as we passed through the various villages on our way. Groups of reservists and their admirers were collected in every village, and the friendly nods and greetings we had hitherto met with were ominously lacking. Thanks to a number of false directions, which we subsequently realized had been given on purpose, our progress was slow, and when we had got about twenty-five miles, in accordance with directions given at a previous village, we came to a place in Saxe-Coburg-Gotha called Weidhausen.

"The telephone had evidently prepared the people for an arrival, for as we slowed down to examine a sign-post five or six men, most of them drunk and all with the most evil and forbidding faces, their leader a drunken uniformed official, came out from a small beerhouse in a state of great excitement. Before we could realize that anything was the matter they demanded with shouts and menaces what right we had to be there. A large crowd had already gathered round the car. We were compelled to turn and drive at a walking pace through the village. By this time at least 300 people had collected round us, and we came to a halt just in front of the Burgomaster's house. Amid excited exclamations of 'foreigners' and 'spies' large trunks were rolled up against the wheels of the car, and a revolver was held at the chauffeur's head to compel him to switch off the engine. Two Russian spies had been caught in the neighborhood on the previous day and our position was not improved by the discovery that our front tires were of Russian make.

"Two or three secondaries clambered into the car and roared up the 'spies' arms and fixed them. The chauffeur and I were powerless to help them, for the least resistance would, I feel certain, have cost us all our lives. When the mob had sufficiently calmed down to look at our papers the discovery that we were English and not Russians caused their fury to break out afresh. It was only the timely arrival of the district Chief of Police that saved us. After spending some minutes in quieting the crowd he removed his helmet and sword and proceeded (rather I think to pacify the mob than to satisfy himself) to subject the car and every article in it to the most searching examination.

"On the other hand Lady Barlow, who was in our party from Constance, sent the following letter to the London papers the day after the above letter appeared.

"To the Editor, 'Daily Chronicle.' Sir: I have just returned from a visit to Germany, where I received as usual the kindest and consideration which I have always found there. The Emperor was holding back a declaration of war in order that every other means might be tried of conciliation. The German conservative papers were restless under the delay, but His Majesty was firm. The feeling was one of dread of the great East-Russia—and the cry was, 'We beg of England to remain neutral to both ourselves and France in face of this threatened invasion of Slavs." I had the opportunity of speaking more than once with a member of the imperial family, and found no trace whatever of the supposed arrogant claims of Germany. At the Protestant Stadt Church of Konstanz on Sunday men and women sat with tears running down their cheeks at the thought of what the future had in store. I do not know what they will feel when they find England added to their list of enemies.

"The kindness of the people is best indicated by the conduct of the proprietor of my hotel, who, when I went to tell him I was penniless, as most of us were, begged me not to be troubled, and added, 'I know that you will pay me some day.'

"The popular impression I find here regarding Germany is quite incomprehensible to those of us who know her.

Believe me, yours truly,
ANNA BARLOW,
Torkington Lodge, Hazel Grove, Cheshire, August 5 1914.

In this narrative I propose to confine myself strictly to what the members of our own party saw. The conclusion we came to at the end of the day was that the German people as a whole were kindly disposed toward even the English, but that the soldiers were brutal in their treatment of everybody with whom they came in contact. Indeed, the soldier is necessarily brutal from his training. He is taught from childhood that Russia, England and France are his deadly enemies and are only waiting the opportunity to subdue his fatherland. He is taught that war is the highest expression of which human nature is capable. Treitschke, whose teachings are the Bible of the German soldier, says that of all sins the sin of feebleness is the most contemptible. 'It is the political sin against the Holy Ghost.' Again he says that 'the devotion of the members of a community is nowhere so splendidly conspicuous as in war.'

For years General Von Bernhardi has been informing the German youth that increase of armaments is not an inevitable evil, but the necessary condition of national health, and that efforts directed toward the abolition of war are not only foolish but positively immoral and unworthy of the human race. Such efforts, he said, threatened to poison the soul of the German people. What Germany wanted 'must be fought for and won against superior forces of hostile interests and powers.' As to England, a pacific agreement with her was a will-o'-the-wisp. At this particular time news had been sent to all the German soldiers that Russia, France and England had all played false against Germany and surprised her when she was desiring peace. This had made them bitter and furthermore most of them were drunk, which is the common condition of the European soldier when he is not actually on the field of battle.

At every station there were trains being filled with soldiers, with reserves, and with young men from the fields and shops. Great crowds of women with their babies and children were at the stations to see the soldiers off. They tried to cheer, but they mostly wept, while the innocent children ignorantly cheered their fathers off to death. At one station we saw one young man suddenly go crazy as he was torn from his wife and little baby, so that he had to be pitched into a freight car by half a dozen men and held firm by strong arms. We are told that this was a frequent occurrence and that these men would simply be taken out of the regiment and put to menial tasks. As the train rolled along we saw columns of soldiers winding over the hills, the line looking like a great snake in the distance. The railroad was everywhere patrolled by soldiers and the tunnels carefully guarded to prevent spies or some enemy blowing up the track or wrecking a train. For half an hour before approaching a station and for half an hour after leaving we were ordered to close every window. We never knew whether that was for our own protection or a matter of precaution taken by the military authorities. But some of the soldiers at the station eyed all foreigners with ugly glances, evidently suspecting spies on every train. Indeed, the further we got into Germany the more evident it was she had lost her head, had got into a panic, and was fast becoming irresponsible. This was borne out by the news when we reached London, where we found that she had recklessly drawn every great nation of Europe into war against her, and shut off her food supply on every side. The immediate violation of the neutrality of Belgium was a sure sign that she had lost her head, for she knew that England, which up to this time had remained neutral, must then take up arms against her. The signs of this frenzy were everywhere. There happened to be a Russian on the train with us who was endeavoring to get his wife and little baby safely through Germany into Holland or England. At Mayence he was discovered by some German soldiers, who immediately suspected a 'spy,' and they pulled him out of the train and at the point of several bayonets he was carefully searched for papers. Not satisfied with this they then roughly jerked his wife out of the train and searched her. She was so frightened that, although they were reluctantly permitted to go on, her milk ceased flowing, and the poor little baby got nothing to eat for twenty-four hours. The next day, on the boat from Flushing to England, Lady Barlow found an English mother with a nursing baby, who shared her bounteous breasts with the little Russian baby. It was pathetic to hear the scream of delight with which the little thing leaped to his dinner. These are they who suffer most in war and only few wars are worth the suffering of a dozen of them. But men seem to care not at all how much they make these millions of babies and children suffer, how much they orphan their own children, if they can only gratify their lust for killing somebody of another land.

As we went down the wonderful Rhine at evening time it seemed hard to believe that those beautiful hillsides would soon again be devastated and bathed in blood; that the pretty villages would soon be burned and laid in ruins. At every station trains were being filled with soldiers and horses, often the men and horses jammed into the same car. Many of those being packed into the cars seemed nothing but boys. At one station I saw three young men, flushed with drink, leap from the car standing on a side track and try to pull three young girls into the car onto the straw. An officer heard their screams and drove the soldiers into the car, amid much laughter from the others. The violation of women by soldiers will amount up into thousands during this year, as it is sort of taken for granted that this special privilege condoned in those who 'defend their country's honor.'

It was impossible to get any lunch on the train and it was difficult to get anything to eat at the stations, so great was the rush for food. I managed to subsist on an occasional sausage, some grapes, pieces of chocolate and bottled waters. Many had to stand from nine in the morning until we reached Cologne at nine in the evening.

At Cologne there was less confusion, as the military authorities had cleared the station and were already seizing all the trains for soldiers. We would probably have been dumped there had it not been for the passport Dr. Siegmund-Schultze had secured, and the special protection we had received. After much debating Dr. Siegmund-Schultze and the conductor, who accompanied us from Constance, persuaded the authorities to let our cars go through to the Dutch border town of Goch, while they telegraphed to the Dutch railroad to meet the train, as it contained two carloads of the most distinguished men of England and America. Here we began to see further signs of war, for on every side we could discern searchlights sweeping the heavens for a ships, and that very night two ships had been shot at by the German guns, especially constructed for this purpose. Here Dr. Siegmund-Schultze said farewell to us. I think he would have gone on with us to Flushing, but no German could get out of Germany that night. His parting with the Englishmen, Mr. Baker, Mr. Dickinson and the others, with whom he had been working intimately for five years to bring about good feeling between Germany and Great Britain, was pathetic. They had become the warmest friends and deep affection existed between them. They had lived in each others' homes. Together they had striven for the good of humanity, and nothing makes such close and abiding friendships as these friendships that reach far above those based upon nationality. And now they had to part, not knowing if ever they should meet again; not knowing what the future might bring forth. But they were hopeful in their parting and did not lose faith. Their work had not been in vain. While their governments are fighting each other, there is a group of churchmen in each country who have risen above this sort of thing, and when the war is over they will be fast friends and ready to take the work up again where it has been rudely broken off. As for me, knowing the fine sensitiveness of this noble young German, and knowing that I would this sudden outburst of strife and passion had inflicted in his heart, I could say nothing as we parted, only tears would come. Finally I said, 'We shall meet again next Summer unless the world comes to an end before that time.' He left us with his beautiful and gentle little wife, to hurry to his babies in Berlin. No greater commentary on the irony, farcicalness, absurdity, yes, childishness of war could well be found than in the parting of Mr. Baker and Dr. Siegmund-Schultze. Here they were, ardent followers of the same Master, consecrated servants of the same cause and humanity's devoted friends, esteeming each other much more highly than each esteemed many of his own selfish, ignoble countrymen, and now, because one happened to be English and one German, they must each hasten home and prepare to kill one another! But how about refusing to bear arms against one's brother of another land in an unjust cause? Well, on the day following this a friend of mine was in a little town in Europe where four men refused to bear arms against their brothers in another land. In my friend's sight they were stood against the side of a house and four bullets put through them without any words.

The run from Cologne to Flushing was begun with considerable anxiety. Rumor reached us that Germany had decided to break the treaty insuring the neutrality of Belgium. We could not at first believe it, for this is the greatest crime of which nations are capable. If the neutrality of Switzerland, Holland and Belgium is to be violated at the opening of any war, or at the convenience of any nation that so chooses, there is no faith left between nations. Furthermore, only a nation that had gone crazy would do such a thing, for it meant that every nation party to the treaty must defend its integrity. If the rumors were true it meant that England, up to that evening neutral, must wage war against Germany for breaking her holy vows. Unfortunately it was only too true, and our train that night passed through the very territory where only two nights later the first great battle of the war was raging. For it was at Liege this first great battle was fought.

We had hoped that our cars would be carried through to Flushing. But it drew on toward midnight when we reached Goch, the little frontier town of Holland, a few miles south of Antwerp, and every car in Germany was to pass into the hands of the army at midnight. We at least hoped we might not have to do what others we afterward met in London were forced to do—get out eight miles from Goch and then reach the frontier as best we could. But here our imperial patronage and the telegram which had been sent ahead helped us. We carried into Goch and there transferred to a Dutch train awaiting us. After an hour we started through the sleeping country of Holland. It was about one a. m. and most of us had no sleep. We were about to dispose ourselves for a few hours' nap when one of our party who had been through the cars came to me and said, 'Bishop Hendrix and Dr. Spencer are missing.' A search was instituted and, surely enough they were not there. The next day we learned that they had fallen so fast asleep on the way to Cologne that they had not heard the orders to change cars. The cars they were in had gone off to the south while they were innocently sleeping. The next day they somehow got back to Flushing and got the evening boat to London, arriving twelve hours after the rest of the party. A little way out of Goch we came to the Dutch customs office. They paid no attention to our baggage, but they scanned every passenger carefully to see that no Dutch youths were leaving Holland. For even then Holland was getting frightened, fearing that Germany, if she paid no attention to the neutrality of Belgium, might gobble up Holland next. Consequently, Holland was mobilizing to protect herself from Germany, as was Switzerland far off to the south. At last our party, tired, hungry, sleepy, reached Flushing. It was about seven a. m., and as the boat did not sail until eleven o'clock we had time to get the first real meal in twenty-four hours. How refreshing a big cup of hot Java coffee was! And our party ate all the rolls and eggs there were in Flushing. It was now that the smokers began to bewail their lack of money. For the Java cigars are so cheap in Holland that one of our party said, 'It is a waste of money not to smoke.' Cigars equal to fine Havanas sell in Holland for three or four cents each. It was a question of conscience with me whether to let these eminent divines have money enough to buy a box or two each to carry to England, where, so they told me, the cigars were vile and expensive. But finally I decided I could not act as conscience for these men, but would charge them interest on the loan. I am afraid I shall never get the interest.

Crowe, instructing them to send an additional five dozen pairs of their hosiery to the Belgian Relief contributions at his expense. Through an oversight, the name of one of the contributors to the Lower Granville Belgian Relief Fund was omitted from the list given in last week's paper. Among those mentioned should have been Capt. Some Basic Principles of Agricultural Chemistry

A pamphlet has been issued by the Central Experimental Farm entitled "The Farmer as a Manufacturer." It has been prepared by Mr. A. T. Stuart, B. A., Assistant Chemist, who has presented a number of simple illustrations of the chemical processes that take place in vegetable and animal life.

The processes are indicated by which the farmer, whose raw materials are but air, water and soil, is able to manufacture therefrom an apparently endless variety of products—both plant and animal. It is shown, however, that their composition is to be easily understood, consisting as they do of but four principal constituents. The nature of the raw materials, the process of manufacture and the products are discussed.

Under the heading "Maintaining Fertility" it is pointed out that "the farmer must exercise extreme care if he would keep his soil in the highest condition of productiveness. Soil is the real guardian of the farmer's capital, and the security is absolute. Try as he may he cannot 'break the bank.' He may bring about temporary derangement and dividends may for awhile be suspended, but invariably under better management prosperity can be restored and perhaps even larger profits than ever secured."

The pamphlet, which is Bulletin No. 20, of the Second Series, is available to those to whom the information is of interest on application to the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

Business in Maritime Provinces

That business is very good in the Maritime Provinces is the opinion of J. T. Pendock, Ottawa, who has been on a business trip through the provinces. "I was rather surprised at the tone of business in all the Maritime cities I visited," he said. "I did not find any sign of depression of any importance. Most business men seemed to be doing a good business, and were optimistic about the future. I have been coming down East a good many years, and think that these provinces are coming into their own."—The Busy East.

It so happened that a clergyman had for his companion during a railway journey an unkept collier. The latter, who had a large bottle of whisky, was continually drinking out of it, till at last the clergyman could put up with it no longer. "My good man," said he, in a disgusted tone, "I have lived forty years of my life and never spent a shilling on that stuff." "Aye, noo," said the other, vigorously putting the cork into the hot-heel, "dinna ye think ye kin sponge onny off me."

Try this Thirsty Flour

A very thirsty flour. Absorbs a lot of water. Because it contains so much gluten. Manitoba wheat is wonderfully rich in sturdy gluten. And, think of it, FIVE ROSES is milled exclusively from the very cream of the Manitoba wheat berries. So FIVE ROSES must be awfully thirsty, don't you see. In your mixing bowl it greedily absorbs more water. So you get more loaves than usual without using more flour. You use less. Your flour lasts longer, doesn't it? Less trips to your dealer. That's how FIVE ROSES saves money. Actually saves YOU money. Use this economical flour.

The Rexall Stores of Canada

Contribute to
The Canadian Patriotic Fund

THE Rexall Stores of Canada, 490 of the leading Drug Stores in Canada have unanimously agreed to contribute to the Canadian Patriotic Fund, FIVE PER CENT of their purchases of all Rexall Toilet Goods, Rexall Remedies and other merchandise manufactured or sold by the United Drug Company, Ltd., Toronto, from Oct. 15th to Dec. 31st, 1914.

This action of the Rexall Drug Stores of Canada has been undertaken co-operatively, because as a co-operative organization, they realize how much more can be done than individually, and it has been taken for two reasons—to fulfil a humane duty in raising a fund for the relief work of the Canadian Patriotic Organization, and a patriotic duty in an endeavor to keep a large staff of Canadian employees busy.

The 400 Rexall Stores of Canada make an appeal to your sympathy and support in their doubly worthy cause for increasing the funds of the Canadian Patriotic Organization and for the support of Canadian workmen because—

The fund that would be raised on the basis of last year's business can be tremendously increased if every man and woman in Canada will help a little by the simple process of purchasing Rexall Goods at the Rexall Stores.

No need to give space in this announcement to emphasize the high quality of Rexall Toilet, Medicinal goods sufficient to say that 7,000 of the leading Drug Stores in Canada, Great Britain, and the United States place their personal and collective reputations behind them; that the public in these countries endorse them to the extent of several million dollars worth of purchases a year.

Better goods are not made, and you take no risk in buying, for every Rexall Store will return you your money if any Rexall Product is not entirely satisfactory and do it, too, without the slightest objection.

There's a full list of Rexall products waiting for you at the Rexall Store in your town.

Ask for it—kindly pass the word along to your friends. It is the collective purchases of all that will make this Rexall Store Fund for the Canadian Patriotic Organization work a big one.

The Fund will be collected from each Rexall Store in Canada by the United Drug Company, Limited, Toronto, and will be paid by them direct to the office of the Canadian Patriotic Organization, and the amount so collected will be published in this paper when paid over.
